In May of 2017 a study was done to calculate the impact of the seven postsecondary institutions, and the study concluded that the institutions added $8.6 billion in additional income for the region in 2014-15. They also went on to say that over their lifetime the benefit to the region would be $180 billion. The president of Calgary Economic Development stated that, quote, the impact of postsecondary institutions as economic engines in our city is extraordinary and is highly underappreciated, that higher education's benefit is that it inspires Calgarians to the innovative thinking that drives our progress as a great place to make a living and a life that is immeasurable. Unquote. Again, there's no doubt that everyone in this House respects education. We all do. We all do.

You know, there's a quote on Mount Royal students coming from Calgary, that more than 70,000 alumni remain in the city, as stated by the president of Mount Royal University. Given that, it's vital to demonstrate in real dollars how those postsecondaries like Mount Royal deliver value to our local economies like Calgary's.

These two influential individuals praise the effects of postsecondary institutions. They bring numerous benefits to our communities, and we must ensure that they do remain competitive and efficient at training Alberta students.

I personally take great pride in our institutions. I've gone to technical schools, more the community colleges. The rest of my family have gone to universities across this fine nation and around the world, but ultimately they come back home here. They choose the schools here, my family has, because we do provide a high level of education. It is very good quality. But, again, we have to ensure that we can maintain that. It does start with maintaining our education.

Those with postsecondary education benefit from employment stability and often pension plan coverage. This allows individuals to invest in houses and businesses and allows them to donate to the local charities. They continue to participate in our economy. Most new jobs require some sort of skill training with some type of education or training. We're watching our education systems evolve, and we're going to continue to evolve. Other nations have exceeded us in some ways.

As a paramedic I went to a technical school here in Alberta. That was more than two years. It was a 20-month program. Then I went to Australia for a year after. I thought I might be able to get a job there, just part-time or something like that. In Australia they demanded a four-year degree for their paramedics, so for obvious reasons I was not able to apply for a position in that. But it was a good learning experience for me. Our systems are always evolving, and all of our careers that we go into are continuing to evolve. You see the high pinnacle that some places place on some of these aspects, and we're going to continue to see other aspects of our workforce grow in their educational requirements. Again, postsecondary education is very, very good for us. It benefits us, and it helps us become better at what we do.

Obviously, another benefit of the postsecondary growth is the job creation that follows, the replacements needed for all the people that are currently around. It's a continuous evolution, and we're figuring that two-thirds of those people by 2024 are going to require some sort of college or postsecondary or vocational education. In Alberta we need to maintain that high quality of care in order to capitalize on that economic growth that comes from these educational institutions. But, again, it's about being fiscally responsible. It is about ensuring that there's balance in how you spend that money and invest that in our education. I know that Albertans know the value of their education, but, that said, they won't also stay in Alberta if they don't feel that they're getting their money's worth. If our education system degrades, if it slips and our reputations follow and it flounders, that affects all of us here in Alberta. We consider ourselves at the highest level, and we have to continue that.

Obviously, education is correlated with other things, including better health, which I am very passionate about, Madam Speaker. Studies have found that individuals with postsecondary education are less likely to smoke, have lower rates of obesity, and are more likely to lead healthier and longer lives. Parents with postsecondary education may pass on those positive behaviours to their children as well. So, again, we have to strive to maintain the highest standard for our institutions and make sure we are providing the appropriate resources to train our future leaders.

This cap on postsecondary tuition puts our institutions at risk. Unless this government has other ways of creating revenue or of finding some other efficiencies within those institutions – I'm sure we can propose some. I'm sure he's talked to all these postsecondary institutions. They have suggested things to me. They've talked about course development.

Connolly: I thought you didn't want to get bogged down.

Mr. Yao: Yeah.

This whole bill is ultimately just poor judgment. What's more worrisome is that they want to give this minister more power. The government says that we can trust them to make the right decisions, but can we really? No. If there's one thing this bill has right, it is that it is about fee transparency, and I commend the minister for that. He is trying to ensure that our children and these kids that are going to school have some predictability in their tuition fees, because, as we know, that is a large burden on our society. But, again, it's about practicality. Socialism is great, Madam Speaker, until you run out of other people's money, to quote Margaret Thatcher.

The point is that we must have a long-term plan in place for our postsecondary institutions. We cannot maintain freezes year after year, and the Alberta taxpayer can't afford to be picking up the entire tab for postsecondary education. I mean, we have to consider that when most people in this House were kids, like, 20, 30 years ago, we were only paying about 30 per cent in taxes in total: provincial, federal, municipal, et cetera. I mean, in this day and age we're almost paying half of our salaries in taxes, and we're coming close to that half, and that's very concerning. But I digress.

Again, we must have a long-term plan in place for our postsecondary institutions. We all know the importance of postsecondary education, but we have to ensure that it is viable. I would certainly ask this minister to reconsider this or to at least provide us with a longer term plan. I'd like to understand what the discussions are with the universities because I'm sure they're under a lot of duress with the financial restrictions that they have.

Although I understand and appreciate the intent of this bill, I will have to vote against it, and I hope that all members have heard my arguments and will do the same. Thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, I think this is a bill that is extremely important that we are debating today. It's a bill that I'm very proud to be able to stand up and speak for. Frankly, I probably remember what the effects are of having to pay tuition every single year or semester better than, well, frankly, most people in this House but certainly better than almost everybody in the opposition.

Madam Speaker, students having better access to affordable learning that's high quality is one of the most important things that we possibly can do in this Assembly. That's why I believe it is absolutely shameful that the opposition is speaking against this today. When we talk about things like cost for education, we're talking about what the cost of making sure we have a strong workforce is, the cost of making sure that future Albertans have the knowledge they need to excel in Alberta, have the knowledge they need to have good livelihoods, to have strong families. This is what we are talking about when we talk about making postsecondary accessible and affordable for Albertans.

Madam Speaker, I remember that when I first joined university, MNIFs, or mandatory noninstructional fees, were a huge issue. They were such a huge issue, in fact, that we really believed that the Conservative government, our opposition colleagues over there, were basically letting universities use them as methods to circumvent tuition caps. It was basically a method where the universities could hike at will, and it was something that students spoke out on en masse. Students were livid that institutions were allowed to do this under Conservative regimes. I'm glad that our government has listened, that our minister has decided this can no longer go on. We need to be fair to students. When there are fees, they need to be justifiable. They need to be something that we can look at and say: what is the value?

I remember that when I was in university, Madam Speaker, I paid a circulation fee, and the best that we could figure out on what that circulation fee was for was for using the hallways. There was an additional $800 fee every year to use hallways. That's the type of thing that the opposition wants to let go on. That's the type of thing the opposition wants to let rise at rates well above inflation. I think that's absurd. I think we should be fighting for accessible education for everybody. We should be saying that even the student that can't afford to pay $800 to walk in a hallway should still be allowed to learn. I think that is one of the most important things that we can do here.

Madam Speaker, I think that we heard the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo speak about things like: we need to think about our future, and that's why we can't do things like lower tuition right now, why we can't cap tuition, because what's going to happen to future Albertans? That's a really interesting comment. What's going to happen to future Albertans is that they are going to get that opportunity to learn. They are going to get that opportunity to succeed. The opposition clearly does not understand the importance of our education system. They don't understand the importance of bringing in rules that allow students to have sustainable educations.

One of the things that I continue to hear today is concern around international students. International student tuitions are oftentimes quite a bit higher than for domestic students. Bringing in stability for these students – I had a number of colleagues and friends who were international students – along with our domestic students is important because it's what allows our institutions to attract high-quality students. It allows our institutions to bring in people from all over the world, whether that's researchers in Europe, in Asia, and in the United States, wherever they are. They want to come here because they know they can get a top-notch education while also being able to say: I won't have to worry about choosing between going to the food bank or paying for my tuition at the end of this month. That's what we're talking about. We're talking about taking away the uncertainty for those students that don't know whether next year their tuition is going to go up $5,000 and that that means that they're not going to be able to afford rent or that they're not going to be able to afford lunch.

Madam Speaker, that's the type of decision we're making today. When the opposition speaks against that, I cannot honestly fathom why they would possibly believe that we should allow students to continue to have uncertainty, why we should allow students to have to go to food banks. That is the reality. How many campuses have food banks? I would say, actually, a number of campuses. I know the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary have campus food banks, and that's shameful. We shouldn't have to have those facilities. We should be able to tell students: this is exactly what you will need to succeed in university.

I think it's wonderful to see that our government is listening, and I think that Albertans that are watching right now – I know that I have a number of colleagues that are students or were students that are listening to this debate because they care about student issues. They care that we have strong educational institutions. I know that they can see really clearly right now that the opposition is coming up and saying: well, we need to let universities raise tuition at whatever rate they want, we need to let them raise fees at whatever rate they want, and we think students should just suck it up and pay for it. That's what the opposition is trying to say today. What our government is saying is that we listen to students. After years of consultation, we finally came back and said: "This is what you wanted, and we agree with you. We agree that students should be sustainable and have steady and reliable metrics to work with. We believe that making sure that your tuition isn't rising significantly above the cost of inflation is a fair thing to say. We agree with you."

Our government decided that we would side with the everyday Albertans who use postsecondary institutions, the ones who go out there and say: I want to make a better life for myself. We sided with those Albertans. What the opposition did is that they decided that they wanted to side with the wealthy elite. They sided with the wealthy elite. They sided with the 1 per cent. They're going to give huge tax cuts, $700 million in tax cuts, to the wealthiest Albertans and then decide: "Oh, but, students, you guys can pay a little bit more. That's okay. Let's let the students pay well above inflation, but let's make sure that our wealthy friends don't have to pay any more. They pay enough. We can't use that money to fund your education. Your education doesn't matter as much as them." That's what the opposition wants. Madam Speaker, it is something that I really don't understand some days, how they think that Albertans believe them when they say: we need to stand with the rich and let students fail. That's essentially what they're saying.

Madam Speaker, I am so proud to be able to speak in favour of this legislation. I am so proud to be able to say that everybody should be voting for this. It's something that students have asked for for years, and it's finally being granted them by a New Democratic government. I'm pleased to urge all my colleagues to vote in favour. But I'm afraid it sounds like our opposition friends really don't have students' backs.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That was very passionate. I can say that as a past student myself I also went through the hardship of paying for my tuition. To say that I am out against students is a little harsh. To say that Conservatives want to see students fail is even more harsh. I think that we have a good record over the many years of supporting our students. I hear chuckles from the other side. But I will tell you that when it comes to caps, I do have some concerns. Now, what happens is that when we decide that we're going to place caps on it, I'm asking: did the NDP actually do some sort of study to show what the result of this is, an economic impact study, if you will?

Are we going to be making our institutions unviable, to the point where they're going to start shutting down and our students won't be able to go to school? That is a question that wasn't asked to the minister. This is a credible question. I'll tell you that as a past student myself – I went to the University of Lethbridge, and I'm very proud of my time at that university. You know what? Lethbridge will always be a city that I hold deep respect for. I also understood that as a student I needed to support the university both with money and with making sure that the bachelor of management department also had support from me as well as making sure that the government heard that being responsible with its money is important.

How can this, an argument on Bill 19 – it's named An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education – devolve down to: the Conservatives want to harm every student across Alberta? I think it's reckless to be going down that road. I think that by saying that, that also is very inappropriate, and I would ask that member to apologize for it.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What I won't apologize for is standing up for students. What I won't apologize for is saying that $700 million in tax cuts to the wealthiest Albertans would be better spent if we invested that in things like tuition freezes. What I won't apologize for is that Conservatives think they can get away with taking the money that we want to spend for students and using that to line their friends' pockets.

When he talks about things like economic impact, I think the economic impact is that students won't have to go to the food bank anymore. Who can argue against that? I think that what is amazing here is that the opposition has decided that they can't support our students. They can't support our postsecondary students having accessible education. They've decided that this is the hill that they want to fight on, that this is something that they believe is going to allow them to fight against our students' rights to have education and to learn those things. He spoke passionately about how he went to the University of Lethbridge, Madam Speaker, and I believe that University of Lethbridge students would probably agree that they want to know what tuition is going to be next year and the year after that. If you're in a four-year program, well, maybe for all four years you'd like to know what that's going to cost you.

I think that those are the things that our government listened to. Those are the things that most students probably agree with, Madam Speaker. Students agree that knowing what your expenses are going to be is something that's a very fair ask for somebody who has to plan the next four years of their life. We know those next two, four years, depending on the program you're taking, those next years of your life are going to set you on the path for a career for the rest of your life. That's why we believe that investing in this small number of years for students is one of the best investments we can make. It's one of the best investments that we can make, and students deserve that much. They deserve to know for those two years, for those four years. Some students take six years. They deserve to know for the length of time that they're in university. They deserve to have stability.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers to the bill? I'll recognize Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. I'll start by congratulating the government on listening to students and seriously consulting with them over the last two years. Of course, that's only part of who needs to be consulted with, but it's an important part of those who are going to be affected by tuition changes.

It's very clear. My consultations with students revealed much the same information. They don't believe that a freeze indefinitely is in their long-term best interests either. They want to see a gradual, predictable, stable increase that reflects a cost-of-living increase and inflation. I think the minister has clearly heard that. As indicated in the bill, it's going to make things more realistic in the real world.

If there's one little irritant, that would be that you're postponing it till after 2019 as opposed to bringing it in next year, which, to me, would smack a bit of political opportunism. But that's a minor issue in a bill that is really addressing some serious issues with both provincial and national students and also international students, both of those having been a big irritant and uncertainty in the past number of years.

The tuition cap, then, is scheduled to take effect in the fall of 2020, and it's not clear to me to what extent we'll see noninstructional fees increase. It's not clear to me from this bill yet the extent to which a cap might apply to noninstructional fees. I hope the minister can clarify some of that.

The cap certainly appears to apply to all postsecondary institutions and apprentice fees, and individual programs are permitted to increase by 10 per cent. I assume that by "program" we're referring to faculty, because if every program in a university or college increased by 10 per cent in a year, that would be a substantial increase. It's not entirely clear to me what "program" means there, and I'd appreciate some clarity around that.

The tuition cap does not apply to international students, but postsecondary institutions will be required to give them a tuition guarantee at the time of admission. Doing so will certainly prevent international students' tuition from rising inordinately or unexpectedly, again assuming that noninstructional fees will not be allowed to make up the difference in a postsecondary budget.

In passing, I'll say how much I as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View appreciated the support from the ministry in moving the Alberta College of Art and Design to university status. It has been struggling for years with a less-than-equitable budget, a tremendous demand from our students to have a place at the College of Art and Design. This will not only provide much stronger opportunities for outside investments but also a credibility and status that will be more deserving of an organization that's really one of the premier in Canada, certainly western Canada, in the areas of art and design.

It also clearly provides and mandates, in fact, greater collaboration and innovation across our postsecondary systems. That can only improve efficiency and attractiveness and, I would say, excellence in our postsecondary institutions. So I'm pleased to see that as well.

The establishment of at least two student representatives on the boards of each postsecondary institution is, again, a positive statement that recognizes and empowers those who are in these institutions and who have to come to grips with more and more of the responsibility for not only their own well-being but the institution's well-being, finding that balance in terms of affordability and accessibility with the fiscal responsibility of the institution.

I think many of these are excellent decisions. Certainly, I support them, and I will be supporting this bill.

One other question came up. If the minister has the authority to regulate going forward, does that mean that each decision of each program needs to be passed through the ministry even if it's below the 10 per cent?

My information, for the record, is that our average university tuition in Alberta is $5,700 per year. Nationally it's $6,800 per year. So it's not nearly as dramatically different as what my colleague in the UCP mentioned.

Overall, I think this is much needed, overdue. I certainly support the direction that postsecondary education is going, which is our future in all dimensions. Whether it's academic or apprenticeship training, all those dimensions are the key to our economy, to innovation, to a future that is going to move us towards what I would call a more sustainable future, one in which we're seeing much more thoughtful approaches, much more critical voters, much more active citizens, that I would hope strengthen the leadership in government, strengthen the long-term well-being of this province and the prosperity of this province.

It is a critical investment. There is none more important than education, and postsecondary education is a big part of that final phase of formal education. I applaud the government for its efforts to address in a balanced way, I would say, both the fiscal realities and the need to make education a priority and to be seen to be a priority.

I have mentioned in the past that in medical school in the '70s I paid $650 a term. That was under the Lougheed government, and it makes me realize just how much that government valued education and was willing to make it easily affordable. I could earn as much as I needed for the whole year by working for the four months in the summer on a farm.

To say that we have moved away from that level of support for postsecondary education is an understatement. I've long since felt that we needed to encourage, in any ways possible, students to continue their education and find the success and contributions to our society, including taxation, that they will be contributing to everything that we value, as they could.

I'm sorry that I don't have more in the way of details about these noninstructional fees, but I assume that will come up in discussions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before I get started, I want to do a quick shout-out to my friend Tiffany, who is watching from home in B.C. We used to organize together. We worked together at the Simon Fraser Student Society back when I lived in Vancouver, and she and I used to talk a lot about how budgets are political documents.

Budgets speak to priorities, and I would like to just say that our government has made postsecondary learners and their families a priority by freezing tuition fees and with this bill, if it passes, by tying tuition fee increases to the consumer price index. This bill also guarantees a fifth year of a tuition fee freeze in Alberta. I'm going to say that again: a fifth year of a tuition fee freeze in Alberta. Our government has supported students and institutions by backfilling that freeze with $129 million to date, with the amount for 2019-2020 being determined through the debating process of Budget 2019.

Now I want to speak a little bit to the B.C. experience and why that bit of increasing funding to institutions while freezing tuition fees is so critical. In the years before I moved to B.C., the previous government had frozen tuition fees, but they did not increase funding to institutions to keep pace with rising costs. When there was a change in government, the tuition freeze was ended, the cap on tuition fee increases was lifted, Madam Speaker, and in the time that I worked at the students' union, tuition fees increased 30 per cent per year. To put that into context, that means that from when a student started first-year university, all bright-eyed and bushy-tailed, looking towards building that future of theirs, to the time they reached their fourth year of study, their annual tuition fees had doubled.

Our government learned from that example, and that is why we funded that tuition freeze, because, you know, when fees increase rapidly, students are faced with really difficult choices. I knew many students who had to drop out because of the fee increase, a rapid fee increase, because they couldn't afford to keep going. Other students took a year or two off study to work full-time and save up some additional money to finish off that last year of their education. That was the year that we created the student food bank at Simon Fraser. That's not a proud moment, Madam Speaker. Those students shouldn't have needed to go to a food bank while they were pursuing their education and building their futures.

By tying tuition fees and mandatory noninstructional fees to the consumer price index, this bill will allow learners, their parents, their families, and our postsecondary institutions to plan for the future, to know what to expect, and to be able to budget accordingly.

Now, many in this House know that I am the mom to two young kids, and as a parent you get a lot of mail, particularly when you're expecting, from people who want to talk to you about saving for your kid's future. One of those companies estimates that in the year 2036, which would be the year when most babies who are born in 2018 will reach postsecondary education, the cost of the tuition alone for a four-year degree by then will be $84,000. Madam Speaker, that's $12,000 per year in tuition fees alone.

I just want to shout it from the rooftop. I'm so excited that if this bill passes, that means that Alberta families and Alberta parents can rest a little bit easier knowing that under this government their children's tuition fees, their tuition fees will be much lower and their futures that much brighter.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure as always to rise in the Assembly. It's interesting that we talk about postsecondary education today, also for you and me who both have had the privilege of being elected and serving on the same student association in our past. I don't know if you're aware of that. I believe that that is, in fact, true. Though we may be in different political parties in this place, in our previous lives we served in the same organization in student politics at different times, of course.

I am going to today, Madam Speaker, move an amendment. I have the appropriate number of copies for the pages. I will wait for your instructions. I almost didn't send the original, which would have been a problem. I'll wait for your permission to continue.

Okay to go, Madam Speaker? Sorry, I didn't see that. Thank you. I appreciate it.

The amendment I will move reads as follows, Madam Speaker. Mr. Nixon – again, I think we must not have been here for a while. I'm starting to say names inside the House. I see the Chair of Committees laughing at me and probably rightly so. Let me try that again.

I will move that the motion for second reading of Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Madam Speaker, the reason that I move this amendment today – I was listening with interest trying to determine where I would be with this legislation as it progresses through the Assembly and having a look at what the answers of the government to some of the questions coming from the members on this side of the House would be. As you know, we see legislation for such short periods of time when we're in opposition because the government gives it and then calls it. Sometimes we're trying to understand if the government actually has it right, if they have taken the time, of course, to consult with universities. Have they consulted with student groups? What are the other aspects of the bill? As you know, sometimes there are other things that are planted within bills by the government.

Our role, of course, as the Official Opposition is to work with our staff to go and rout that out, to have a look and try to find those types of things, and that takes time. What I did notice was that there were not a lot of answers to some of the concerns that members were asking about today. I question at this point whether consultation has been done all right. I've been talking to some stakeholder groups who I know will be part of this process or will be impacted by the decision of this legislation, and they're indicating to me that they have not had an opportunity to be consulted on this process. I think that halting the process and making sure that consultation can happen is a good idea.

You know, we talk often when we move procedural amendments like this about the fact that the government seems to only want to actually go and consult or actually work through committee processes or those types of things when it's a piece of legislation that they recognize that they can't politically vote no to in this building with the cameras on and everybody watching. They recognize that they can't vote no to it, so they'll send those pieces of legislation to committee, but they won't send other pieces of legislation to committee.

You know, it's interesting. A great example – and we'll spend some time debating this next Monday in this place – is that the hon. Member for Highwood brought forward a private member's bill last session in the spring. We agreed and worked with the government, actually, to send that to committee because we recognized that there were some parts of that bill that probably still needed to have a discussion. That's how the system works. That's the process for making legislation. That's how we designed it. That's why we have standing committees and we have other groups where witnesses can be called, people can flesh out thoughts, talk to experts, talk to people that are involved to make sure that we've got that legislation correct.

In that case that bill went primarily because what was happening, Madam Speaker, was that the government was in a position where they could not vote against firefighters because that's what it would look like, but there were some issues with the bill. We agreed. We got the bill off to committee, had a look at it, and to the credit of the members on there, we recognized that that bill was just not going to work, that that legislation needed to be halted and looked at from a different angle, and the committee recommended that to this House. I don't want to presume where we'll be, particularly because it's private members' business, but I suspect that this House will agree with that as we make that decision in the following private members' days in this Assembly. That's a good way for this process to work.

We've seen it with other pieces of legislation that the NDP government in Alberta were scared to make a decision on inside this place, so they sent it to committee. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler had a bill, pretty famously in the first year of the 29th Legislature, which was sent to committee because you could see the Government House Leader and everybody on the other side at that point go: oh, man, we can't vote against that. So they sent it to committee and then essentially killed that bill, didn't let it go back. We've seen many examples of that but not when it's a piece of government legislation.

The problem, Madam Speaker, is that the government, because they do that, continue to get it wrong. Interestingly enough, each time we've come to this place for a sitting, the government has had to bring forward another piece of legislation to fix their legislation from the time before. Every single time since this NDP government came into power, the following sitting they've had to bring bills forward to fix their legislation: elections financing, election rules, labour legislation, on and on and on. In fact – and I'm sure you won't be surprised – I anticipate that will happen again in the next few weeks. The government will have to bring forward legislation to fix it. The problem with that, then, is that in the meantime you have a law that has been put in place that's not working or something has been missed, which is why I would move that.

We see that consistently with this government. It concerns me because we see it consistently with this government on all sorts of issues, which is why we need to refer this. Bill C-69, something we've talked about a lot, is a House of Commons piece of legislation which, unfortunately, passed in the House of Commons.

Over and over and over in this House we were warning the Alberta government: you've got to deal with Bill C-69. Then across the way, as you know, Madam Speaker – we watched them do it – they would rise and mock the Leader of the Opposition. They would make fun of us. They would say that we were wrong and that we were spending our time focused on Ottawa. Of course, we were spending our time focused on Ottawa. Ottawa was attacking Alberta. It's our job to focus on Ottawa. Then fast-forward several months, what happens? That side of the House gets up and realizes: "Oops, we made a mistake. You guys were right. We were going too fast. We made a mistake."

Another great example: the shut-off-the-tap legislation. The Premier and the Deputy Premier and many other people across from me today made fun of the Leader of the Official Opposition even before he was a member of this place, said hateful and terrible things about him when it came to that legislation. They compared him to Donald Trump, said he wanted to build a wall, said all those types of things and really made fun of him on a regular basis. Then you fast-forward a few months, and they bring in the exact same piece of legislation that the Leader of the Official Opposition recommended to this place.

Now, funny enough, as I've already said in this place before, Madam Speaker, in this Chamber, they had no intention of ever using that piece of legislation, sadly, and we know that history will record that they never did. In fact, they filibustered their own piece of legislation to prevent it being used to protect Albertans because they would rather stand with their close personal friend and ally Justin Trudeau. But I digress for now. [interjection] The Deputy Premier is bragging about that right now. Through you, Madam Speaker, to her: she should be ashamed. She should be ashamed of her behaviour, that she would not stand up for Albertans and brought forward a piece of legislation that they never intended to use. It's disappointing. Albertans don't like that. They deserve better.

Connolly: What bill are we on?

Mr. Nixon: We're not on the bill right now. We are on an amendment to refer it to committee, and we're talking about why we need to refer this type of legislation to committee. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood may want to reread the amendment because that's what we're on right now. We are talking about why this government can't be trusted on legislation.

Again, here we are, the second day into this sitting, listening to the minister and to other members discuss this bill. No answers to any questions. Are they really ready? How do I know? This has always been the problem, Madam Speaker. How do you and I know that they've actually done it this time? The history, the track record when it comes to these types of things with this government is clear. This government has a history of repeatedly getting legislation wrong and either not acting and then watching Albertans face the consequences as a result of their inaction or having to come back to this place, to this Assembly, and fix the mistakes that they made in their last legislation, often mistakes that had been noted by this side of the House and, certainly, mistakes that would have been noted by experts or other people if they'd had a chance to participate in committee.

That is the question that is before the Assembly with my amendment, and the reason I bring that forward is simply this. I think, at first glance of this legislation, that there's some good stuff in it. I have some other questions, serious questions, though, about whether or not they got this right. I think that our universities and our colleges, our postsecondary institutions, are too important for this government to get this wrong.

The other thing that makes this more complicated at this moment, Madam Speaker, is that we know that if the Premier is to follow the law, the election law, which I expect that she would, she may be calling an election before our Assembly could be recalled in the spring. So you could be in a place where they got it wrong this time and there is an extended period of time until it can be fixed.

So we're kind of at a spot now where the NDP pattern of bringing forward legislation, messing it up, and then having to come back here and working to get it fixed ain't gonna work possibly this time. So then what happens to the people that are facing the consequences while that's happening? I want to make sure that we get it right. I think that by following this amendment, we have an opportunity to do that. We have an opportunity to be able to make sure that we get a good piece of legislation out of this that will deal with a very, very important issue.

As you know from your experience in postsecondary student politics – and I don't know, Madam Speaker, if you sat on your university's board in your position; I think you probably did. I know I did. It's complicated, running a university. There are complicated aspects to it, lots of different factors that result in the funding, and making sure you get this right is obviously important. Our institutions can't afford to wait six months for this place to come back to be able to fix the mistakes that, possibly, this government is getting ready to make again.

Now, they might not be, and that's why we should be having a conversation to make sure they get it right. As I go back to my constituency and talk to my constituents, I see the suffering that they've had to go through the last three and a half years as a result of either inaction from this government repeatedly, particularly on the energy file, or as a result of them getting legislation wrong. I don't want to see the same thing happen. I think it is our responsibility as members of the 29th Legislature to stand up and say: you have not shown us that you've not got this wrong. In fact, they're not even answering the questions that members have raised already this afternoon in this place. They just get up, stand up, and go into full on fear and smear attacks that a government that can't run on its own record often does, and that's fine. That's their tactics. Go for it. I get it. But don't get it mixed up with such an important piece of legislation that impacts a lot of people that aren't in the middle of that argument.

I get it. I understand, Madam Speaker. You have a government that is in chaos. It is running nervous. They're very, very worried. They recognize that they've made terrible mistakes and that very shortly they're going to have to go to the ballot box, and the boss is going to decide if the behaviour that has happened from this government in the last four years is right. I get that; I get why they would be nervous about it. But to accelerate a piece of legislation without getting it right, without taking the time to answer the questions and to respect the process that is here – this is not an election right now, and this bill has nothing to do with an election. This government has a responsibility to get it right. So let's send it to get reviewed to make sure we got it right. It could still be done before the next election if the government would co-operate with that process. Certainly – certainly – the government should take some time to actually answer the questions in this place.

I will close with this, Madam Speaker, as I know I'm running out of time. I would encourage all members to support my amendment to help us get this piece of legislation right and to help us help this government, who continues to make mistakes over and over when it comes to legislation. I don't care about this government's credibility – they've lost all credibility where I come from; they've lost all credibility with me – but what I do care about is that when they make these mistakes, they hurt the people that I represent. I want them to stop doing that and to take the time to consult, and I hope they support my amendment to do so.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have to say that when the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was speaking, when I did speak up, it was in agreement that when the member referred to the fact that he was digressing, he wasn't on topic. I do agree that he wasn't on topic.

There were a number of things that he raised that I do want to respond to. One is that he said that when things are referred to committee, it's because this side of the House doesn't want to debate them. Nothing could be further from the truth, Madam Speaker. We've debated many things in this House. Actually, members on this side of the House have voted on every single bill that has been brought forward in this House.

I wish I could say the same for the members opposite. The members opposite rose at every opportunity they had to speak on Bill 9 in the past session. They didn't even bring forward a motion to refer. If that's something that would be so helpful, why didn't they do that? The reason why they didn't do that is because they said that it didn't matter to the people of Alberta, that it wasn't an issue of importance. Well, I'll tell you that protecting women from harassment when they're accessing health care services is an issue of importance to many Albertans. I'll also tell you that protecting students from being gouged when it comes to postsecondary education is also a value that this side of the House and many Albertans think is of crucial importance.

I also want to appreciate that the member opposite talked about his time in student government. I also spent time in student government. I was very proud of that. I googled the member's time in student government, because when he referred to his time in student government, I had a recollection that there was something interesting about that time when he was president of his student association. I have to say that one of the things that popped up was how – there's a piece online about how he violated his own bylaws and how his association violated their own bylaws, without issuing notice of an AGM, while interfering with a student newspaper, pulling the student newspaper's website link down without the managing editor's consent. The assumption is that it was because a student newspaper wrote a piece noting that very quickly, without a lot of notice, the executive itself voted to make their then president and student executive the highest paid student executives in the province of Alberta, Madam Speaker.

I have to say that I will very happily work with student leaders across this province on issues of importance to all students. I find it pretty rich that somebody who, it appears – I think there was a motion to remove the hon. member. The motion was recommended for the member to be expelled from the organization, and that motion was passed. Anyway, it's interesting.

I, too, spent time on student government and am very proud of that. I know that many Albertans have served in a variety of ways. I have to say that the student leaders who spend their time advocating to make life more affordable for all students rather than to raise their own compensation are ones that I'm very proud to work with on things just like this legislation, that indeed does protect all students by bringing in safeguards and protections for students to ensure that they can plan ahead when they enrol in postsecondary. We know that many working-class families and lower income families are reluctant to take on debt, and one of the reasons is because they want to have certainty that they have a plan to be able to repay that. Being able to give certainty to students about what their tuition will be in the future, being able to give them that predictability, I think is vitally important.

Again, students who have advocated for all students to have life made more affordable through having controls around the tuition rates, having five years of frozen tuition fees in this province: those are the voices I'm really proud to stand up for and defend.

That's why I was deeply troubled when I read that instead of doing things that focused on affordability for students, the member chose to increase his own compensation to make it the highest paid of student executives in the province, assuming that the story I've read is true. If it isn't, I'd be happy to be corrected. I guess my question would be: does the member have a different recollection of that story? That would be my question to the hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, on the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to rise and speak to this amendment to Bill 19, my first opportunity to rise in this legislative session. I'd like to welcome everybody back. I'm glad we get to start with some good debate on what I think is an important piece of legislation.

Of course, as the representative for Edmonton-Centre I have three major postsecondary institutions here within my constituency, those being Grant MacEwan University, NorQuest College, and, of course, the University of Alberta at Enterprise Square. Should I have the honour in the election next year to continue to represent the residents of Edmonton-City Centre, that will also, then, include NAIT. So I have the opportunity to speak with many students, Madam Speaker, and indeed with faculty and indeed with the presidents of those institutions, and certainly this has been a topic of conversation over the last two years.

Now, the concern that's been brought forward, under which the member justified bringing forward this amendment, was around the question of consultation. He is concerned that not enough thought has been given to this bill, that therefore it is imperative that we sit down and study this further in committee to ensure that all voices are being heard and all possibilities are being considered.

Now, I find this a bit ironic or perhaps even approaching the hypocritical, Madam Speaker, given that recently the hon. leader of the loyal opposition stood in front of the Calgary Chamber of commerce and stated that should he have the privilege of becoming the Premier of Alberta and should they have the privilege of becoming the government of Alberta, their intent would be to eschew consultation. He said that he did not want to get bogged down in consultation. He wanted to move quickly so that nobody could get a word in edgewise, so that nobody could oppose, no opposition. He said that he would have the right and the mandate to do this because he has been going around the province of Alberta and speaking with all the people that he thinks are important to listen to in making these decisions.

And now, Madam Speaker, their House leader stands here today and tells us that we should slow down because we have not talked to enough people and we have not done enough consultation on making these kinds of changes, nowhere near the impact of the kinds of changes that the Leader of the Official Opposition has been talking about making.

Now let's talk for a moment, Madam Speaker, about the consultation that has gone into this bill. This has been in process since 2016. All Albertans have been well aware of this, and indeed members of the opposition have stood in this House and often asked questions about how this process was going. How were those consultations moving along? Why was the minister not coming forward with a decision and a plan sooner? We took that time because we wanted to ensure the proper consultations were held.

There is not a single educational institution in this province that did not have the opportunity to provide their input on this bill. The Minister of Advanced Education spoke to the head of every single postsecondary educational institution in this province. He spoke to every single student group. He spoke with the faculty at these institutions. We consulted Albertans in general: an online survey, an online process, to which we received over 4,000 responses. He consulted also with the nonfaculty staff at postsecondary institutions. This was a process of speaking and hearing from everyone, Madam Speaker.

I dare say that the minister got pretty much every view on this issue that could be had, in a process that lasted two years, and what has come out of that is the bill that we have in front of us, a bill which, when it was announced yesterday, every single student leader that was there spoke out on and thanked the government for bringing it forward.

Frankly, Madam Speaker, I'm troubled by – I don't know any other word to use – the condescension towards students from the members opposite, that they don't know what's good for them, that they could not possibly understand what they're dealing with here. This is not the same world in which many of the members opposite had the opportunity to get their education. Their education was much more heavily subsidized than that of students today. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View noted that they were able to earn enough in four months to pay for an entire year, an absolute impossibility for the majority of students today. It is a different reality. But you say to those students: "You don't understand what you're dealing with. You need to build better character. You need to learn more about how to earn what you think you deserve. You need to work harder," with perhaps in parentheses, "like I did."

I cannot agree with this amendment. I know the consultation process. I have sat down every single year, at least twice a year, with the leaders of student organizations in the province and heard what they have been asking our government for, and, Madam Speaker, this bill is exactly that. I know that members opposite have sat down with those students, too, because they have happily retweeted the photos of those consultations. They've put them up on Facebook. They've spoken with pride of how they sat down to listen to student leaders.

But they will not stand here today and support what those student leaders have asked for, those student leaders, Madam Speaker, who are incredibly hard working, who understand the modern economic environment, who know that they are not going into the same sort of work situations that so many of the members opposite were able to enjoy during their careers. The ground has shifted. The students know that they are looking at a future often of increased contract work, less benefits, less guaranteed employment, having to shift careers multiple times.

On top of that, members opposite want to tell them that they should pay more. Frankly, Madam Speaker, maintaining affordable education is one of the least things we can do to help young people in the modern world be able to get off to a good start. I cannot think of a better investment that the government can make than to ensure that all students in our province can afford a postsecondary education, not only for the benefit and the improvement in quality of life that it will have for those students but for the economic benefits, therefore, that we receive as a province when people who are better educated are able to go on to better careers, are able to fill the jobs we need, are, frankly, able to create the jobs we need.

I'm incredibly proud to have many organizations here within my constituency like Startup Edmonton, TEC Edmonton, others who are the future entrepreneurs of this province, the people who are building the new economy, frankly, that is going to help carry us into the future with the eventual waning of the energy industry. I wouldn't predict when that's going to happen, but we know it will. Frankly, these are the people that are building the new jobs, the new industries, the new companies that are going to carry us there and help us prosper as a province. Frankly, Madam Speaker, these are people who are students. They're going to school, they're working on their education, and at the same time they are working hard to build new ideas, to take research that they're doing, develop that into new products, techniques, services that are putting our city on the map. Our investment in their education is an investment in that economic benefit for our province.

So when those students come and they say to us, "This is the support we need from our government," Madam Speaker, I'm going to listen, just like we listened to all of the presidents of all of the educational institutions in the province and heard their thoughts and concerns, just like the minister went and listened to all of the staff, the faculty, everybody involved in the postsecondary education system.

This bill may not give everybody within that what they want, but I think all involved in this process would agree that this is a reasonable balance and compromise.

Postsecondary institutions are happy with the flexibility that they're being afforded within this bill. Again returning to the question of consultation, members have raised their concerns about maintaining the quality of education. Madam Speaker, as has been noted by the minister, if an institution feels that the quality of a course or a program is being compromised, they can sit down with the students. They can have that conversation. They can have consultation. I don't think that they'll take the view that such a process is being bogged down. They can sit down with the students. They can have that conversation. They can talk about the value that students would receive, and if they can make a good case for it and students are willing to support it, they can bring that to the minister and the minister can approve it. How much more democratic of a process could you ask for? Far more democratic than the proposal of the Leader of the Official Opposition, should he have the privilege of taking government next year.

Madam Speaker, I cannot support this amendment. The minister has consulted. He has spoken; we have heard. We have the example of other jurisdictions across Canada that have had tuition caps in place. Frankly, it is high time that we provide some certainty to students in this province, to educational institutions and move forward with a fair and balanced plan that is going to ensure that we have an educated generation to continue to move this province forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I stand to support the amendment that my colleague and friend the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre made. It is a responsible amendment and done with good reason and in a spirit of making sure that the legislation that passes through this House is as good as it can be.

Now, we just heard a pretty fiery speech from our colleague from Edmonton-Centre a minute ago about how the consultation has been great and everybody has been consulted and nothing has been missed. You know what, Madam Speaker? If only we could trust that was true, we would probably say: "Okay. Good enough." But the problem is that that's not the history of this government. That's not the history of this cabinet. This government has a track record of coming in here and saying, "We've consulted with everybody," and then when the opposition pushes them and then other people come forward, very often they say, "No, they didn't talk to me," or "They did talk to me, and I didn't get anything I wanted."

A great example – there are so many great examples. Bill 6 is a great example, their farm legislation, but a more recent one, Madam Speaker, where they brought forward a bill – the Municipal Affairs minister brought forward a bill in the last session where we actually pointed out to him right here in the House direct discrepancies within the legislation, direct discrepancies between the legislation and what was currently on the ministry website. By direct I mean exact opposite discrepancies. The minister stood up and berated us and said that we don't care and that we don't listen and that everything was perfect and that if only we loved Alberta we would support this. The same minister the next day walked in with three pages of amendments to a four-page bill.

So you'll have to forgive me, Madam Speaker, if, while I was impressed by the previous fiery speech, I don't trust the content of it. This government has a long, established track record of insisting that they've consulted, and when the facts are checked, it turns out that those facts are not facts at all but rather what the government would have Albertans believe rather than what actually happened. It was an impressive speech. It's just that the government's track record leads me to not trust the impressive speech that we heard ever so recently in this House.

And you know what? It's only a matter of the Official Opposition trying to get it right. As I've often said in this House, very often the government would do well to remember that the best advice they often get in this House comes from the opposition. If they would follow it sooner, they would get in less trouble, they would probably be more popular with Albertans right now, and they would probably have gotten a lot of things right in the last three and a half years that they keep getting wrong. I think what we're offering here to the government is an opportunity to make sure they've got it right. We're not even saying that they got the bill wrong. You know what? That's not what my hon. colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said. He said that we need to know that the consultation has been done before we make such an important decision.

Postsecondary education is one of the main underpinnings of the current, past, and future success of the province of Alberta. Why? Because while it's not exclusively for young people, young people are the future of our province, and – let's face it – they are the main consumers, main users, main beneficiaries of postsecondary education. They go out into the world and actually make us proud. They actually make Alberta the wonderful land of opportunity that it is for 4.3 million people, and we don't want that to stop. We do not want that to stop.

I also found it interesting in the remarks I heard earlier today that the hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia talked about how there's been five years of tuition freezes. Well, I guess I would remind that member and all members of the House that that means that the first two years of those five were under a Conservative government because the current gang has been here for three and a half years. The government of the day, today, actually saw fit to continue a program that the previous Conservative government put in place. History may show that to be a great decision. It may show that to not be a great decision. I haven't researched the remarks that the Member for Calgary-Acadia gave, but if it turns out that they're true, and I have no reason to believe that they're not, it would indeed show that those tuition-freeze years started with the Conservative government.

This is important, Madam Speaker. This is a bill that talks about tuition freezes, limiting the tuition increases to the CPI, all things that, if we are able to send this to committee and check, may turn out to be the right answer. We just want to make sure it's the right answer. There's too much at stake to get it wrong.

When I talked to student groups – and the one thing I do agree on with the hon. member that spoke earlier and gave his impressive speech was that I have talked to these student members and have gotten my picture taken and was proud to put it on Facebook because I talked to those people, and those student representatives from the postsecondary institutions are bright people. They're serious people. They're serious about their future. They're serious about the future of Alberta. They're serious about wanting to make a good living and contribute to the world and be successful, and I'm so grateful for that.

When we have these discussions, they always turn to – you know what? If I was a student, I would want a lower tuition as well. Who wouldn't? If I paid $2 for a loaf of bread, I'd rather pay $1. Who wouldn't? This is much more important. I'm certainly not suggesting that a loaf of bread isn't important because it is, but this is a bigger purchase than a loaf of bread. I think we can agree on that.

Some of the discussion that I often have with those students when I'm together with them is: this is an important decision. This is an important decision, whether you perhaps have a higher tuition and pay for it for four years while you're in university or college – I realize some programs are two and some are eight, but four is a reasonably good average for discussion – whether you pay a higher tuition now with less support from the taxpayer or whether you pay a lower tuition now with more support from the taxpayer and then be that taxpayer and give higher support for the next 44 years.

You know what? I would say to you, Madam Speaker, that if the student says, "No; I want to pay a higher tuition now and lower taxes later," they're right. Here's the funny thing. I would also say that if they want to pay a lower tuition now and are willing to contribute to other people's tuition for the next 44 years, they're also right. It's really a matter of their personal preference. These students understand, because they're smart people, that there is no free lunch. There's no free education; somebody pays for it. They understand, actually. They actually understand the relationship, that there's a certain amount that students should reasonably pay and a certain amount that society should reasonably provide so that young Albertans and all Albertans who want to and can achieve the admission standards get a chance to be all they can be, to make themselves the very best contributor to society and the most successful human being that they can be for not just them but for everybody. They get that.

But what I haven't heard the government explain yet – and this is why it would be interesting to go to committee to talk about that balance of costs in a constructive way, not a partisan way because I don't see this as a partisan issue. Those kids in that university are Conservative, they're NDP, they're Liberal, they're Alberta Party, and politically unaffiliated, of course. This matters for all of our kids and grandkids and all of our future. This is not an NDP issue. It's not a Conservative issue. It's not a political issue in my view. It's an Alberta issue that needs to be managed and taken care of correctly.

Here's what I imagine, Madam Speaker, that we would talk about in committee. We would talk about: does this legislation have the balance right between what part of the costs are paid by students, what part is paid by the institutions themselves through the institutions being able to create revenue in other ways, and with the government itself putting money forward and saying: yes, this is how much we're going to support each of the institutions. It's a complex issue because, of course, what you have are thousands and thousands of students, each with a different financial ability to pay, and then we get into the supports for those students with less ability to pay, which matters because the ability for all Albertans is important.

The discussion I have heard so far doesn't for me, anyways – I think we need to talk about that I'm not sure all the institutions are in a same place. The reason I don't think they're in a same place is because some have stronger balance sheets than other ones do, and we need to probably have that discussion. Will this legislation perhaps limit one institution financially while giving another institution a lot more than what they need? That would be a worthwhile discussion. It would be a worthwhile discussion to talk about the fact that the students are different, the institutions are different, and also it may come down to that different programs require different considerations. These are the things that we could hash out at committee and get it right.

Again, I think it's not the biggest bill we've had in here, but it's biggish. I'm looking here at, you know, 51 pages. We've had it for a couple of days, a day, I guess. This, actually, for the Official Opposition says: "No; you know what? Maybe we should have a better understanding of this before we go forward." I think that's a responsible position for us to take and one that I would hope the government, frankly, would embrace because those kids in school will be all of our kids, all of our grandkids, and all of their grandkids and kids. They're all going to win or lose together based on this thing, and I think taking some time to get it right is a responsible position to take. I would hope that the government sees their way clear to say: "Okay. Let's kick it around together. Let's talk about it. Let's make sure we got it right because there's too much at stake to get it wrong."

That, Madam Clerk – sorry, Madam Speaker. My apologies. You know, I need to get your title right. There's my debate, and with that, I will move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 20 Securities Amendment Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a real thrill today to be able to rise on behalf of the Minister of Finance to move second reading of Bill 20, Securities Amendment Act, 2018.

The Alberta Securities Commission is mandated to protect investors and foster a fair and efficient Alberta capital market. This requires balancing investor protection and the integrity of the financial system while allowing innovation and ensuring a competitive investment climate. Achieving this balance is complicated given the increasing complexity, sophistication, international scope, and technological advances of the securities regulatory landscape.

The following amendments have been developed as part of Alberta's commitment to ongoing reform of the securities regulatory system: implementing a capital market whistle-blower program for misconduct under the Securities Act; creating a regulatory regime for benchmarks and benchmark administrators that will be compatible with the benchmark regime being adopted by the European Union; broadening the scope of provisions for Alberta Securities Commission members, staff, and/or agents that protect them from being compelled to testify about information collected in the course of their duties in third-party proceedings; and implementing consequential and harmonization amendments. These amendments are intended to improve regulation of Alberta's capital market, enhance investor confidence and protection, and keep our securities laws harmonized with other jurisdictions.

I'll just quickly go into some of these that are coming. The first of the amendment proposals is to advance investor protection. An addition of a new part 2.1, whistle-blowing, would allow the Alberta Securities Commission to implement a whistle-blower program similar to those adopted in 2016 by Ontario and Quebec. These amendments would help protect Alberta investors and encourage investors and employees of publicly traded companies to report serious securities- or derivatives-related wrongdoings. Securities regulators such as the Alberta Securities Commission believe that a whistle-blower program will assist in preventing or limiting harm to investors.

The program would protect whistle-blowers who report misconduct in the Alberta capital market by prohibiting retaliation against them, providing them with limited immunity, and keeping their identities and the information that they share confidential. These amendments are consistent with the public sector whistle-blower policy introduced by our government earlier. However, in the proposed program protection would apply to individuals working in the private sector, employed by or otherwise connected to an entity where securities violations may be occurring. The whistle-blower program would also protect the integrity of Alberta's capital market by prohibiting false reports of wrongdoing, obstruction of whistle-blowing, and agreements aimed at restricting whistle-blowing.

The second of these amendment proposals would implement a regulatory system for benchmarks and benchmark administrators. For your information, benchmarks are indexes that include a group of securities, the intent being to represent the performance of a particular segment of the market. An example would be a benchmark that provides an indication of short-term interest rates that are used in setting the floating interest rate on some derivatives and loans. The provisions are designed to harmonize with similar systems for benchmarks now in place in the European Union and most recently put in place in Quebec and Ontario. The new benchmark system will require administrators of designated benchmarks to be registered and identified by the regulator as a designated benchmark administrator, clearly define a designated benchmark, and ensure that a designated benchmark administrator has to comply with the same requirements as an administrator under the EU regulations.

Another harmonizing initiative will further the protection of investor information by no longer requiring Alberta Securities Commission members, staff, and agents to testify in third-party hearings regarding information collected in the course of their duties. This ensures that investors' information, especially from those who come to the Alberta Securities Commission to report wrongdoings, is not provided to a third party who would not otherwise have access to that information. Further, this allows individuals entrusted to enforce Alberta's securities laws to carry out their duties without fear of civil liability. Ontario recently passed a similar amendment, and this change would result in this aspect of Alberta's securities laws being harmonized with Ontario's.

Around section 223: amendments to Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations would also permit the Alberta Securities Commission to make rules regarding the manner and form of material provided to the Alberta Securities Commission under other Alberta legislation such as the Business Corporations Act.

To quickly wrap this up, with these amendments we are ensuring Alberta's securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's markets and evolves with international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives. I would certainly encourage all members in this House to support this bill, and I appreciate the chance to move second reading here.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thanks to my colleague from Edmonton-Decore for introducing for second reading Bill 20, Securities Amendment Act, 2018. I, too, rise to speak to Bill 20. This bill, of course, is bringing forth a number of amendments to the Securities Act. It has only been 24 hours since the bill was tabled, and we're still in the midst of doing a lot of outreach to securities dealers. But at this point, as the intention of second reading, I support the intention of Bill 20, Securities Amendment Act.

I'm slightly concerned about how broad and how important this act may be, Madam Speaker, so I'm hoping at Committee of the Whole to have an opportunity to seek some clarification and some answers, and I look forward to that.

To start, Madam Speaker, I make no secrets: I'm not a fan of additional regulation, more red tape, more paperwork, more work for public servants and regulators. On this side, while the UCP consistently calls for less regulation, less regulation does not mean no regulations. Securities are complex financial instruments, and when not regulated properly, events like the 2008 financial crisis and the great recession can happen.

To back up a bit, on a positive note, Bill 20 does take a giant leap in recognizing the work of Conservatives on the negotiated comprehensive economic and trade agreement, or CETA, with the European Union. We welcome European capital for investment, and our businesses, our families, and our employees look forward to this investment from Europe and investing in Europe. Madam Speaker, the free flow of capital is essential for the workings of Alberta and Canada's economy. Particularly now, with the layers of burden that this government has added in the last three and a half years, the free flow of capital is especially essential.

Canadian securities regulators have committed to implementing a regulatory regime for benchmarks equivalent to the European Union's regime to ensure that the European Union market participants may continue to use Canadian benchmarks. In other words, if Canadian Western Bank makes an overnight loan to Deutsche Bank, they may make it using the Canadian benchmark rate, or Barclays bank may use a Canadian benchmark rate to make a loan to Canadian Western Bank. Benchmarks are interest rates banks charge other banks for short-term loans. In Canada, I'm told, we have the two.

Madam Speaker, you may recall the most famous global benchmark is the LIBOR rate. That is the London interbank offered rate. The LIBOR is an average interest rate calculated through submissions of interest rates by major banks around the world. You may also recall that in 2008 a major scandal arose out of the fall of the world financial crisis when it was discovered that perhaps the banks were falsely inflating or deflating the rates so as to profit from trades or to give the impression that they were more creditworthy than they were.

Couple this with the fact that LIBOR underpins approximately $350 trillion in derivatives. An attempt to manipulate an exchange rate could also be an attempt to manipulate derivatives in violation of law, and because mortgages, crucial things like student loans, family loans, financial derivatives, exchange rates, ETFs, and other financial products will rely on these, the manipulations of submissions used to calculate these rates can have significant negative effects on families, consumers, and Albertans.

Madam Speaker, I hope you're starting to see why it's so important, and I hope it's starting to become clear how important it is that we get this right, that the regulation of securities by the Alberta Securities Commission is right. I thank all the Alberta dealers that we've reached out to that have had the time to get back to us in just 24 hours, and I look forward to their consultation continuing, and I look forward to the process of Committee of the Whole.

This is also where whistle-blower protection comes in. Madam Speaker, it's essential – it's essential – for Alberta employees, Alberta communities, wealth creation, Alberta job creators that our stock exchanges and our security markets be as fair, as transparent, and as efficient as possible. Couple that with the impact that these exchange rates could have. At this point in time I absolutely support the enhancement of whistle-blower protection, whistle-blower involvement. Whistle-blowers need confidentiality. They also need to ensure that the information shared by the Alberta Securities Commission – they also need to ensure that the information they share remains confidential. Whistle-blowers can take a great risk to ensure that markets run fair and smooth so every Albertan has the opportunity to create wealth, create jobs in a free-enterprise Alberta. There needs to be a prohibition on retaliation against whistle-blowers as well.

There also needs to be a prohibition on agreements that purport to restrict whistle-blowing. This is like making sure there is nothing untoward in someone's employment contract. Again, we need to ensure that in a fair, legal way whistle-blowers have the maximum opportunity to come forward in the fairest possible sense. But, just like a whistle-blower, employers need to have a prohibition on false reports of wrongdoing. In other words, whistle-blowers need to be right and know what they are doing when they call for a halt to certain activities.

Madam Speaker, sometimes whistle-blowers are themselves caught up in the crime until they realize something is wrong. That is why there also needs to be limited immunity for whistle-blowers. Yes, the whistle-blower may have come forward when they realized something was wrong, but because they were involved in the crime, they have to be held responsible for that as well, and that has to be balanced with the need for them to come forward versus the need to protect an innocent investing and working public.

I've also just heard that Bill 20 will amend section 222 of the Securities Act such that Alberta Securities Commission members, staff, and agents will not have to testify in third-party proceedings unless it is directly related to something to do with the Securities Act. That seems very reasonable, very fair, and important for liability protection.

Section 223 will be amended so that the Alberta Securities Commission can also decide how securities and companies submit paperwork, whether hard copy or electronic. I believe that this could help modernize the information system and technology that will help track all these critical filings, save time, save money, and I hope not only for our good bureaucrats and front-line workers but also for our investors.

I'm also told that there are some smaller harmonization pieces to this legislation, and I think that's necessary and good, too, as it sounds like Ontario and Quebec have gone there before. I'm especially pleased that it protects Alberta's right to be the free-enterprise leader in Canada. It protects Alberta to have say and control over our own Alberta Securities Commission. For generations Albertans have been the leaders in taking risk, innovating, whether it's agriculture, oil and gas, or information technology. I'm so glad to see that that is continuing.

Madam Speaker, in summary, I support the intent of this bill. I will be voting in favour of it at this point, and I look forward to getting some more feedback from the investors we've reached out to and some more answers to questions during Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I too am very pleased to stand and contribute to the debate on second reading of Bill 20. At a previous iteration of this I stood up and I think I surprised at least the Minister of Finance by saying that I thought this was, at that time, some of the most exciting legislation. Usually securities legislation is seen as quite dry and arcane, even obtuse. I really want to congratulate the Minister of Finance for that previous legislation, which provided a lot of consumer protection and actually strengthened the Alberta Securities Commission in its work.

I really, actually, want to echo the comments of the previous speaker, in that a well-functioning Alberta Securities Commission is essential to the economy of this province. I'm proud to be part of a government that has continued the support of the Alberta Securities Commission and basically protected it from the predations of a national securities commission that would have robbed, in my opinion, the ability of Alberta companies, particularly in oil and gas, agriculture, forestry, mining, other areas that we have particular expertise in in this province and particular interest in terms of the economy.

If we're going to make this legislation work well for the economy of the province, we need to make sure that in particular the whistle-blower protection is solid, and that's one of the things that I'm really pleased with here. Investors, whether they're here in Alberta or elsewhere, need to know that the financial transactions that come out of this province are done above board, and they need to have faith in the Alberta Securities Commission, that it can do the job for which it is set up and for which, actually, our government and Albertans in general pay a large amount of money. The Alberta Securities Commission is a very expensive proposition, and it's a place where I'm pleased to see my taxpaying dollars go to.

When I hear the opposition complain about the inefficiencies of government spending and how they would cut a lot of this sort of stuff, I often wonder how that Alberta Securities Commission would actually be able to continue to function if it didn't have the taxpayers' support to do its job. That's something I'd like to hear more about perhaps in Committee of the Whole, how the opposition might, if they were to get into power – which I'm dreading – how that might actually work out. Anyways, I digress a little bit.

You know, the Alberta Securities Commission needs to be trusted, needs to be credible, needs to be transparent in its activities, and if it is, our economy is going to be much more successful. We are going to be able to tell constituents of mine, who have come to my office and complained about concerns that they've got about some financial transactions that have gone on in the past, that we're actually seeing a way through to the future.

This program is going to protect whistle-blowers who report misconduct by prohibiting retaliation against them, by providing them with a form of limited immunity, and by keeping their identities and the information they share confidential. The previous speaker referred to section 222. Section 222 is being expanded to do just what I've talked about, making sure that a whistle-blower can make a report and institute some action without concerns about being harassed – I'm not sure whether that's the English or American pronunciation.

The whistle-blower program is important. The benchmarks are also important. This is one of the more arcane and obtuse aspects of securities regulation – and I'm not going to get into it, largely because I don't understand a lot of it – but if we're going to have a credible Securities Commission process, we need to have benchmarks. I think that's the simplest way to mention that. These benchmarks are indexes that include a group of securities, the intent being to represent the performance of a segment of the market.

Now, to come back to what I was talking about, how the market here in Alberta is predominantly mining, exploration, oil and gas, forestry, agriculture. Those would be the kinds of segments that we'd need benchmarks in. There are also benchmarks for things like the LIBOR, the floating interest rates. Probably what's most important about these benchmarks is that they're going to harmonize our system with the European Union and recent new legislation in Ontario.

These are just two different examples of why this legislation is very important. I'm very pleased to hear that the opposition is going to support this legislation.

Thank you for your attention.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We are now on 29(2)(a). Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore to close debate.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Chair – Speaker. Sorry. My apologies. I keep getting the two confused.

Very excited to hear, as we're moving through second reading here of Bill 20, the Securities Amendment Act, 2018, that we're getting some support to move this conversation along into Committee of the Whole.

As I had mentioned earlier, the Alberta Securities Commission, again, is mandated to protect investors and foster a fair and efficient Alberta capital market – we've heard the previous speaker for Edmonton-Whitemud refer a little bit to that – of course, requiring a balance to investor protection and the integrity of the financial system. You know, I think as we're moving forward, we're seeing this system becoming more complicated with the complexity, sophistication, the international scope in there as well as all the technological advances that are coming along, and we need to ensure that our securities regulatory landscape is as secure as possible.

As we had talked about earlier, implementing the whistle-blower program in there, benchmarks and benchmark administrators will be compatible with the European Union. We've seen that as we move forward, trying to harmonize all of these systems will allow the entire securities system to move more fluidly, broadening the scope of provisions for Alberta Securities Commission members, staff, and their agents, and protect them from being compelled to testify about information that's collected in the course of their duties in third-party proceedings. We've heard quite a bit around individuals that are getting pulled into litigations simply because they had access to information simply by doing their jobs. Thus, we're protecting information that would not have otherwise been available to these third parties and all of the harmonization that goes forward.

I'm glad to see, as we standardize things across Canada, that implementing similar changes that were already adopted in 2016 by Ontario and Quebec will allow our jurisdictions to interact a lot more clearly rather than simply duplicating processes over and over again throughout all of the jurisdictions, thus making things more efficient. As our friends across the way like to say, "We don't like red tape" so this will allow us to smooth that system out.

I will comment though that with whistle-blowers, prohibiting retaliation against them, there was some great work done not only in this House but also within committees around whistle-blower legislation here in Alberta when, of course, the biggest thing that we had heard was the fear of retaliation from people. By providing them with some limited immunity as well as keeping their identities and the information that they share confidential, it will strengthen that part of the legislation and allow us to provide a system where whistle-blowers will feel confident coming forward and bringing the information that could be of serious consequence, and thus protect them.

Benchmarks, you know, standardizing that system, benchmark administrators: again, just a simple matter of smoothing out the system and allowing jurisdictions to interact with each other in a much faster and more efficient manner.

With that, I'm happy to close debate on second reading.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has moved second reading of Bill 20, Securities Amendment Act, 2018, on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that we have made great progress this afternoon, so I thank all the members for the fantastic debate. I would like to move that we adjourn until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:28 p.m.]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Morning Sitting Cancellation

33. Ms Larivee moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that, notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1), the morning sitting of the Assembly on Thursday, November 22, 2018, be cancelled.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. For the benefit of the House I should indicate that this motion is being moved, as was a similar motion last year, in order to facilitate participation of members in the Rural Municipalities of Alberta fall convention and, in particular, in the ministerial forum which takes place that morning.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, Deputy Government House Leader, do you want to close debate?

Ms Larivee: Sure. Consider it closed.

[Government Motion 33 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 21 An Act to Protect Patients

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an absolute privilege to move second reading of Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients.

As we've seen in recent years, sexual abuse has received a lot of media attention, and it's top of mind in our society. The Me Too movement and other actions are bringing these issues to the forefront of our consciousness while challenging us to do better here in government and in all parts of society. We all know, of course, that this has been an issue for much longer than it's been talked about and that it has taken far too long for our communities to address sexual violence and harassment. This is a very important issue because sexual abuse leaves untold trauma in its wake and damage that can last a lifetime.

This past spring, when I was made aware of a situation where a doctor was convicted of sexual assault and got his licence back, I was shocked when I heard this news, and I was angry because I didn't feel that Alberta patients were being properly protected. The reality is that we hear too many of these stories, and indeed just one story would be too many. My office has heard from Albertans who have experienced sexual abuse or misconduct by regulated health professionals. These stories are gut wrenching, and often they're extremely difficult to hear. But I'd like to take a few moments to share a few today, with personal identifying information omitted, of course, just so you can get a sense of some of the themes that we're here to address today.

A father told me about how his son, living with autism in a mental health unit, was punished for making an assault complaint. We heard about an alleged molester taken to court multiple times, only with arbitration. We heard from a woman assaulted by a nurse who cried for help and no one ever came. We heard from a mother whose daughter told her over 10 years ago that a doctor touched her genitals. The mother never told anyone. She didn't know who to tell. She didn't know what to do.

Madam Speaker, these are the kinds of stories that inspired us to introduce this legislation, because when I dug into the situation, I was frustrated to learn that the tools available to the regulatory colleges in Alberta were inadequate to protect patients. I sat down with my team and I said: we must fix this. We began working with our partners at the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta as well as other regulatory colleges, who govern health care workers to develop the right tools to keep Albertans safe. I am proud to say that the colleges have been willing partners in this work, sharing our commitment to patient safety. Today I am proud to announce the result of that critical work, legislation that will help to protect patients and prevent sexual assault as well as provide greater transparency.

Madam Speaker, Albertans should always feel safe when accessing health care services. Those were the values behind the legislation we introduced in the spring to protect women's choice in accessing health care, and we continue to champion those values today. Albertans place their health and often their very lives with the health care providers. Ultimately, Albertans give their health care providers their trust, and with that trust must come responsibility and accountability. Albertans must know, without a doubt, that they are in safe hands. They must know that the gift of trust they give to their health care provider will be met with respect and honoured. Our government is taking actions through this bill to ensure Albertans feel safe while accessing their health care services. We have zero tolerance for sexual abuse or sexual misconduct towards patients, and it's a significant betrayal of the public trust.

Through the proposed amendments to the Health Professions Act in Bill 21 we are strengthening protection for patients from sexual abuse and sexual misconduct by regulated health professionals in Alberta. We are proposing a number of initiatives through this bill, including imposing mandatory disciplinary penalties for sexual abuse and sexual misconduct, enhancing public transparency by requiring that information about professionals' discipline histories for sexual abuse or sexual misconduct towards patients be published on the college websites indefinitely, and establishing patient relations programs that must include measures for preventing and addressing sexual abuse and sexual misconduct towards patients.

The patient relations program will also help Albertans better understand the complaints process and where they can go to for help. It will include training and an educational requirement for health providers as well as college staff.

The bill will also provide funding for treatment and counselling for patients who have alleged experience of sexual abuse or misconduct by a regulated health professional, ensuring complainants have greater participation in the investigation and hearing process; conducting more stringent background checks for registering health professionals; implementing new reinstatement rules for regulated health professionals who've had their practice permits cancelled due to sexual abuse or misconduct; and mandating the creation of new standards of practice for sexual abuse and sexual misconduct that must be approved by the Minister of Health.

Madam Speaker, Alberta will be the second province in Canada, after only Ontario, to take this kind of targeted legislative action to protect patients from sexual abuse by regulated health professionals. I am so proud – and I think we all should be proud – that Alberta has an opportunity to be a leader on such a crucial issue. There is no circumstance where sexual abuse by a regulated health professional will be tolerated. That's why we are making it clear to perpetrators that the age of impunity is over. These crimes have been confined to the shadows for far too long, and it's time that we bring them into the light. This bill, An Act to Protect Patients, will help protect Albertans, and it will also ensure appropriate penalties are in place.

I want to thank my cosponsors for this bill and for their collaboration and for their leadership on this issue: the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, who, when this issue impacted families in the community she represents, wrote me immediately to find out what she could do to help these families and to prevent this from ever happening again; the Member for Calgary-Bow, who showed tremendous leadership when she introduced her own legislation enabling survivors to break residential leases without penalty when escaping domestic violence. I know how proud she was the day that legislation passed in this Assembly, and I remember how I felt, too, to work at a place that stood up for women and for survivors.

Our government will continue to stand up against sexual assault, harassment, and bullying, whether it's in the workplace, the home, the school, on your way into a doctor's office, or when you're in that doctor's office, because Albertans deserve to know that their government and indeed all of their representatives will fight abuse and harassment and stand with survivors at every opportunity.

I encourage all members of our Assembly to show support by voting yes on second reading for Bill 21, and I look forward to debating this bill with all of my colleagues. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an absolute privilege to be here and to speak to this bill, the protecting patients from sexual assault by health providers act. You know, one of the most wonderful things about what we get to do is that we get to meet a ton of wonderful people – wonderful people – but we also hear some of the most horrible things as well. Thank goodness that when that happens, sometimes it leads to legislation that helps out the people that we represent. The fact that someone in a position of power can abuse at this level and could potentially just leave with a slap on the wrist is absolutely horrible. And the minister has outlined other situations, other than the one that I brought forward in the Legislature, and I am grateful for that. Thank you for sharing.

This is a piece of legislation that I feel very strongly about, and I'm absolutely thrilled that the government has brought this forward. All Albertans have the right to high-quality, timely, and safe health care. As patients we share our most private concerns and are incredibly vulnerable with our health care workers, be that doctors, nurses, lab techs, and this is the way that the system needs to be. The public's trust in physicians is crucial, especially when we're ensuring that when an Albertan walks into a doctor's office, they feel safe and trusting and comfortable to share that intimate information which enables health professionals to diagnose, prescribe, and make informed choices about a patient's health.

Unfortunately, for thousands of dedicated and upstanding physicians, who dedicate their lives to their patients' wellness, there are a few individuals who have leveraged their position as physicians and broken the trust of patients and Albertans. It's unfortunate but true that just one horrible incident can spoil the whole bunch. The consequence for a few select individuals damaging the overall reputation of physicians as a whole has the ability to cause chaos in the health care system. Without public confidence and trust our entire health system can break down.

So, with this in mind, I'm pleased to see this legislation that will return public trust and accountability and openness as well as provide protection and legal recourse for victims of sexual assault and misconduct by health care providers.

The issue first came to my attention last spring, when I was absolutely horrified to read the story of Dr. Ismail Taher, who was found guilty in a court of sexually assaulting an 18-year-old woman during an August 2013 examination in Sherwood Park. The woman, who had concerns about nose piercing, testified that Taher had touched her buttocks and massaged her breast during the visit. About a year later he was found guilty twice of sexually assaulting a nurse in a north-side clinic in June 2018 by brushing her breasts and later grabbing her breasts and then pinching her backside. He was also exonerated of another charge of sexual assault on a clinic manager but found guilty of physically assaulting her.

After this proven track record of shockingly inappropriate behaviour and a record of repetition, Dr. Taher was then allowed to continue practising medicine following a hearing tribunal by the College of Physicians & Surgeons. According to an occupational assessment in the report completed in October 2017, the college found Dr. Taher fit to practise medicine and a low-risk offender.

For the life of me, when I read those words, I couldn't believe it. The college had determined that Dr. Taher could practise medicine as long as he had a chaperone when seeing female patients, participated in a monitoring program, and worked with other doctors who know his discipline history. In what world should a physician with a proven track record of sexual misconduct and assault of female patients be allowed to interact with patients ever again?

Being a doctor is a privilege and not a right. For those that have proven themselves repeatedly unworthy of that privilege, why have they been given such lenience and grace by the regulatory bodies that have overseen them in the past? The ruling from the college was incredibly disappointing. It was because of this shockingly inappropriate response that I asked the Health minister what her government would do to address this on three separate occasions during question period last spring.

While I wish that the government had been able to implement legislation sooner, I do understand what goes into this kind of legislation, and I understand how difficult it is to bring these forward. I'm extremely pleased to see that it is here now and that it will give Alberta patients the protections that they rightly deserve, and I would like to congratulate the minister on taking the time to learn from some of these growing pains that Ontario experienced when they implemented the same legislation. It's important that we get this bill right the first time and that we don't leave any room for these physicians to appeal convictions based on loopholes and technical definitions.

The disciplinary system of the past was one which Dr. Gail Robinson said was a system of protectionism of the professions as opposed to being more concerned about the welfare of patients. I am pleased to see that this legislation will change this to a system that prioritizes the needs of patients and public trust. There are so many important pieces of legislation that will provide much-needed accountability.

The fact that there will now be mandatory penalties for those found guilty of sexual misconduct and abuse is crucial. The current system gives a lot of discretion in sentencing to the college and hearing tribunals, which has led to what I believe to be lenient decisions and a loss in public confidence, and we just can't have that. We saw that in Dr. Taher's case.

I'm pleased to see that Bill 21 mandates educational training on sexual misconduct and abuse for physicians, tribunal members, and the colleges.

In a world, Madam Speaker, where we are still fighting the stigma of sexual assault, in the wake of the Me Too movement, as the minister had mentioned, where there are still many people not aware of the inherent biases in sexual assault cases, it's incredibly important that we are educating our professionals on this issue. Whether this is our judges, first responders, or physicians sitting on tribunals that are overseeing sexual misconduct cases, education is a key piece.

I also think that it's excellent that the victims will now be provided with counselling supports as well through the colleges. Despite amazing efforts of sexual violence counselling centres across this province to address this tidal wave of need, there are still enormous wait-lists in most cities, and the cost of private counselling for victims can be very prohibitive. The colleges are accountable for the actions of the members that they oversee, and they should be accountable for addressing the fallout from unethical behaviour that hurts patients and requires them to need counselling. This being said, these are excellent organizations that will be able to collaborate and cost share on both the counselling and educational components of this bill so that smaller colleges are not disproportionately impacted.

Another piece of this legislation that I think is critical and crucial is the fact that physicians who are convicted of sexual assault or misconduct will be named publicly and available online in perpetuity. While there may be instances in which physicians are rehabilitated, reapply for their licences following a suspension or cancellation, and are able to get back to treating their patients, Albertans must have the right to know if the doctor they're seeing has a history of misconduct. Albertans should not have to depend on ratemds.com to see if they should feel safe going alone in a room with their physician. In fact, this information was previously only available for five years, and that is unacceptable since I can guarantee that those who've been victimized by sexual misconduct by a physician will certainly be concerned and processing that incident, and for some people that takes more than five years.

As I've said, what it really boils down to is the right of an Albertan as a consumer to make an informed choice, which they can only make if they have all of the facts. I'm glad that Albertans will now have access to the full history of physicians with misconduct convictions with no time limits.

Another important aspect of this legislation is that it will end physician amnesty in Alberta. By this I mean that physicians who have been convicted of sexual misconduct or assault elsewhere will no longer be able to flee to Alberta and continue practising. I do have a couple of questions about this after, that I'll say at the end of this discussion. If a physician has been found guilty of misconduct, they should not be able to head to Alberta to continue to be a risk to patients simply because there's no legislation preventing this.

This piece of legislation will address a substantial gap in the current system and ensure that people coming from other provinces do not see Alberta as the land of opportunity in this manner. It is also important that physicians who would like to practise in Alberta are legally required to disclose any of their previous convictions.

In the interest of doing my due diligence, I would like to seek some clarity with regard to some specific questions that I have. This would be greatly appreciated – and feedback from the minister – so I'm just going to bring these up here.

The five-year licence revocation is a process for Health, so what is the threshold that would be used to determine if this professional should have the ability to practise again? Then requirement for health professionals to disclose unprofessional conduct in another jurisdiction: is Alberta requiring the regulatory bodies to check all the existing professionals or just the new ones coming in, or is the professional on an honour system? How can Alberta Health be sure that this is occurring? What if a health professional does not disclose? Is there a penalty for that?

Also, Madam Speaker, section 96.2(1), on page 9, indicates that their permit to practise will be cancelled if the misconduct was sexual abuse and suspended for a specific period of time if it involved sexual misconduct. My questions are: how long is the cancellation for sexual abuse? Who decides the specific period for sexual misconduct? And what is the process for reinstatement of their licence?

Obviously, we support ensuring that Albertans are not at risk from any doctor with a record of sexual abuse, but if doctors who are practising here must suddenly leave their practices because this record has been disclosed, does Alberta Health have a plan to help ensure that Albertans have access to another physician, especially in rural areas? If a doctor has been taken out of there, what's sort of the backup plan to replace doctors in those areas?

Public disclosure on the websites, Madam Speaker: how will Alberta Health monitor the websites to ensure that all colleges are providing the transparency that's required in the bill?

Finally, in section 135.5(1), minister's direction, I just have questions about if there's possible overreach here. I'm happy to hear whatever the minister, obviously, has to say about this, but the section allows the cabinet to change standards of practice for any of the 29 regulatory bodies covered by the Health Professions Act if the minister deems it in the public interest. As I recall, the minister had indicated, in Dr. Taher's case, that she did not have this authority. Is this section included to deal with that particular issue? I'm assuming so. If the minister wouldn't mind outlining the kind of consultation she had with those regulatory bodies regarding this.

In conclusion, I cannot imagine going to my doctor and being violated. I can't imagine how, after enduring something like that, I could ever go to another physician and feel safe again. So to the brave people, the brave women who have come forward against their perpetrators only to watch them get a slap on the wrist and continue to practise medicine: you are so brave and you deserve better. Thank you for your courage, your resilience, and for being the leaders in this issue. Without your bravery this issue may never have been addressed, and I am, for one, extremely grateful for those of you who stood up and said: "No. I will not accept this."

I know that it must have been terrifying to go to court and to discuss and rediscuss your trauma only to be disappointed as you watched those who wronged you continue to live comfortably and continue to work. I know it must have bothered you in the first place, but you must have wondered why the system was stacked against you. I hope that in reading about this legislation, you are able to find some peace, knowing that your outspoken courage changed the system in our province for the better. I'm very grateful to the government for bringing forward this piece of legislation, but more than that I'm grateful to the survivors of sexual assaults and abuse at the hands of physicians and those people who led the charge. My colleagues in the UCP caucus and I are honoured to support this legislation on behalf of those powerful men and women.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to get up in this House and speak. It's wonderful to be back here in session and see all the smiling faces on the other side of the room. It's always wonderful to see them.

I wish I was getting up to speak to something better though. I've got to be honest. You know, with every piece of legislation that comes forward in this House, we have to ask ourselves: well, what is the problem that we're trying to fix? Madam Speaker, this goes a lot further than just patient rights because of course we know for a fact that in our society we are plagued with this problem of abuse of power. That's what this is all about. At the root of what we're trying to fix here is the abuse of power, people who are in positions of authority using their power to sexually abuse, in this particular case patients, but of course this happens in all kinds of scenarios and, unfortunately, relationships. At the real root of this is patriarchy, something that, you know, not all of us in this House would really want to talk about.

This has to do with a culture, a culture where specifically the tendency is that men abuse their power over women. Now, if we ever want to change this culture, then particularly us men – and I know that a lot of the men in my caucus are open-minded. They want to be willing and able to listen to what women have to say and, more importantly, understand where these women are coming from and then learn how we can build a better society that is more just and fair, where everybody can treat each other with the respect and dignity that we all deserve.

I find it heartbreaking that women in this province when they're going to a doctor, a place where they're going to deal with their health issues, a place where they should feel safe, are not getting that experience because there are men who abuse their power.

You know, unfortunately, Madam Speaker, I've had in the last six months two cases – two cases – of young women who have come to my constituency office to talk about how men, in particular, have abused their power and actually sexually abused them; one in a place of work, and another when a nurse, in particular, was invited to a doctor's home where they were supposedly going to be working on some kind of nonprofit initiative. So it breaks my heart. It breaks my heart that this is the case because I know that we can do better.

Now, if we can put forward a piece of legislation that will help move this forward, that will help educate, that will help people learn, but more importantly, say that we will not accept that this will happen in this province, this is something that we are proud to put forward as the Alberta NDP. Here we are making an attempt to establish within legislation supporting a culture of just relations between women and men.

If passed, Bill 21 will strengthen protection for patients from sexual abuse and sexual misconduct by regulated health professionals here in the province of Alberta, and it's going to impose mandatory disciplinary penalties for sexual abuse and sexual misconduct. It will be ensuring that Albertans have a tool to find information about a professional's disciplinary history for sexual abuse or sexual misconduct and establishing patient relations programs that help prevent and address sexual abuse and sexual misconduct toward patients. The patient relations program will help Albertans to better understand the complaints process and where to go for help if they experience something like this. It will also include training and educational requirements for health providers and college staff.

In addition, the bill would ensure that patients have access to treatment and counselling if they've experienced sexual abuse or misconduct when visiting a health professional, and it would also give complainants access to more participation in the investigation and hearing process. On this one I want to take a little bit of time.

You know, I say heartbreaking. I don't know if people actually are listening to what I have to say when I say how hard it is to sit across a desk from a young woman who has gone through an experience of sexual abuse and says: the system didn't help me. Until when? Until when are we going to stand around and just let these things happen, and then, worse, when it does happen, we do little or nothing to actually correct the situation?

This is why I firmly stand behind this piece of legislation. We are promising to do more, to be better. In the unfortunate circumstance where something like this actually happens to somebody, we are going to make sure that there's a full investigation and that there will be a hearing process where that person can then bear witness to what actually happened to them, and they will be listened to. You know what, Madam Speaker? In this Alberta NDP government when a woman comes forward with complaints of sexual abuse or sexual misconduct, we believe them. Our government believes strongly that every Albertan should be able to live free from sexual harassment and assault, and this legislation would make it clear to the perpetrators that the age of impunity is over. We need to do more. These crimes have been confined to the shadows for way too long.

Madam Speaker, I am proud to get up in this House today and speak to this particular piece of legislation. I know that everyone on this side is going to support this particular piece of legislation. I want to urge everyone in this House to do the same.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will now recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to speak on Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients. This is an important issue that I think impacted so many of us when it came to light by my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View just this spring. I'd like to thank the Minister of Health for taking action on this, for doing so many things but, very importantly, sending a message to particularly women. I know that there will be situations of abuse towards men as well, and men and women in this province are being sent a message that we've got their back, that they don't need to be afraid to go to the doctor and have a checkup. My heart just aches for a situation, you know, where I might find myself in, being violated in such a manner by somebody that is in such a trusted position.

I would like to commend and I think that it's important to recognize that there are so many wonderful health care professionals in our province that do such a great job of taking care of us. Madam Speaker, I know that certainly in my community of Airdrie there's a wonderful slate of doctors and health care professionals that are top notch, and I'm so grateful that we have such a wonderful team to rely on in our community. I'm grateful that the patients in our community can look back on this piece of legislation and know that if anything were to go wrong, an assault were to take place, the perpetrator would have some consequences. That's such a significant thing.

What shocks me the most about this whole case that came forward in the spring, Madam Speaker, was that this health care professional, this doctor, was accused and convicted of sexual assault but was still practising, and nobody knew. Nobody knew that this man – his patients didn't know; his future patients didn't know – had a history of assaulting his patients.

One of the things that I do believe is addressed in this bill is that convicted health care professionals will be on a website. There will be public disclosure that can be accessed by patients. Maybe I could be corrected if I'm wrong. Perhaps that doesn't go far enough. Some sort of notification to patients of the conviction would be a good idea. I know that I don't really think of going on a website to see if my doctor has been listed as an abuser, and I don't know if most people do. But I guess now we will. The conversation is happening. It's here, and that will be the case. So I think that's really good.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to applaud the women that did come forward and did use their voices and made a complaint. It's unfortunate that there weren't real consequences for Dr. Taher at the time. That's rather unfortunate, but here we are today.

I'm really pleased to see that a mandatory penalty on those that are found guilty of sexual misconduct or abuse is put forward. There's a suspension for sexual misconduct and a five-year licence cancellation for sexual abuse, and they must reapply after the licence cancellation. I think that's an important point to make in regard to this legislation. It's not an automatic back-to-work. There is a process and an interview at least that takes place before the doctor gets his licence back, Madam Speaker. I'm shocked that in 2018 there was no process – I think everybody in this Assembly was – for the college to take action.

It was great to see some of the college representatives here yesterday when this bill was introduced and see the collaboration that has happened in regard to this legislation with the college and, I would assume, doctors as well in this province. I will appreciate the opportunity to be able to speak with some of the physicians in my constituency. I hope that we're able to evaluate this process and continue communication as it rolls out, make sure that it works as effectively as it possibly can, and should it present any challenges as it rolls out, that we're able to act swiftly in terms of making some of those changes that would be effective for everybody involved.

It's good to see that this is in place. I would imagine that it would also include maybe an evaluation of that five-year licence suspension, if that's an appropriate amount of time for a professional to lose their licence. What about repeat offenders? What is the process for that? Is there an indefinite suspension built into this? What does that look like? I think that's a good question to ask. The legislation doesn't outline how long the suspension will be, just that they will be suspended for a "specified period of time." I think that would be something that needs to be addressed, Madam Speaker.

I don't have a lot of questions around this. I think that members in this House are very likely in agreement with what we're talking about here today. Hopefully, we're in agreement with, you know, being able to check back and ensure that this legislation is working for Albertans and for victims in this province, more specifically, because that's who we need to be thinking about, first and foremost, when we're making any type of legislation that affects victims. That's a significantly important factor in the decisions that myself and my colleagues make. Putting victims first is always top of mind,

Madam Speaker. It's great to see that there are measures in here for counselling for victims in these cases and that the college is picking up that cost. I really am grateful for that type of process being built into this legislation.

Madam Speaker, I would again thank the Minister of Health for bringing this forward. I again would like to thank my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View for bringing this up in the House and also the Leader of the Official Opposition for discussing this in the House as well just last spring. It's good to see that there's some action taking place, and it's good to see, you know, that an issue that the Official Opposition has been pushing forward sees results at the end of the day. We're pleased to see the minister act on this file and on this issue in particular.

I would encourage all members of this House to support this legislation as we go through and as we discuss. I look forward to the debate, more particularly in Committee of the Whole, where we could get some of these questions answered that my colleague raised as well as myself and just some clarity around that so that we all feel good. I look forward to further consultation with the physicians in my constituency, as I'm sure my colleagues do as well.

I, lastly, would like to thank the hard-working physicians in our province that do such a great job. It's unfortunate that not everyone is a good person, and that's why we need legislation like this.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to be able to speak on this piece of legislation. I look forward to hearing from more of my colleagues and continuing the debate. With that, I will take my seat.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm so thankful to hear such strong support for this legislation around the House. You know, we all bring our own experience to the table, and for me as both a woman and as a nurse who worked in the health care field I feel really strongly about the importance of this legislation.

As a nurse, as a health care provider, not a physician but still in a position of trust, I know that when people came into my office, they had an expectation that I wanted the very best for them and that I would do everything I could to make their life better as a result of that interaction. I asked them tremendously personal questions, and they answered me. You know, I think I could have asked them to do a lot of things, and because of that position of respect they would do virtually whatever I asked. That bar of level of respect and understanding is even more so for physicians in this culture. I mean, we very much understand and respect the position of a physician to have a very high bar in terms of wanting to protect our well-being.

As a health care provider in that situation and knowing that level of trust that others have in me that's so extensive, you know, it truly makes me ill to my stomach that there are people who would take advantage of that level of trust in order to, well, take advantage of women typically. I think it's incredibly important that we make it clear to all of those who are in that position of trust that there are expectations, that there is accountability, and that they need to maintain that high bar, and if they don't, that we will hold them to account.

Not only that, I would feel tremendously terrible if it actually impacted the ability of those people going in to see health care providers, if they felt that they couldn't trust their health care provider, if that would actually make it more difficult to provide high-quality care to them. In the interest of ensuring that all health care providers are understood to be in that position of trust, you know, and to continue to provide that care, I think it's so important that we help all Albertans understand that we will make sure they're protected, that we will hold them to a level of account on that.

You know, even more so from the position of a woman, flipping it onto the other side, women in our culture in many ways have been conditioned to be incredibly accommodating and responsive to individuals who are in a position of trust like a physician. Oftentimes we hear stories of abuse, and it's almost always where someone was in a position of power, and physicians do have that tremendous position of power. I think we're learning, and I think we're changing. I'm so thankful that women are starting to be less likely to just go along with whatever someone in a position of power says, but I think we have a long way to go on that. I think our culture has a long way to go for women to feel empowered and safe when it comes to challenging and pushing back against those in a position of power.

Given that there's so much more work to be done in that area, you know, I think it's incredibly important as a government that we take that responsibility on, to ensure that when they share their story, we listen. I'm incredibly proud to be part of a government who's made it tremendously clear that when individuals, particularly women but any individuals, disclose a history of sexual abuse, no matter who is being accused of that, we make it clear: we believe you; we want to hear your story; we will do whatever it is we can to help you to be safe.

As much as we've done great work in providing additional resources to support those who have experienced sexual abuse, the most important thing we can ever do is to invest in prevention. Certainly, a key and important way we can invest in prevention is to take these kinds of measures in which we ensure that physicians are held to account on this and that when we know that they're high risk, we can ensure that they don't have an opportunity to do the same thing to other women.

You know, some of the things we talk about in this House are a bit mundane. I don't think most of us in the House are quite as moved by maybe the securities legislation amendments that we'll be talking about later this afternoon, but there are things such as this on which every single person in this House knows we're being a part of something that is making life better for the people of this province. I'm tremendously proud to be a member of the government that's bringing this forward.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I will call the question unless there's anybody that would like to close debate. No? Okay.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:49 a.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 21 read a second time]

Bill 19

An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education

Mr. Nixon moved that the motion for second reading be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment October 30: Mr. McIver]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will briefly speak to the referral motion made by my hon. colleague yesterday. I'd just like to reiterate that the Official Opposition and opposition members in general in this Assembly have just recently received a copy of this piece of legislation, and there's a lot of information in there. There's consultation that needs to be done in order for members on this side of the Assembly to be able to make an informed decision about the legislation that's in front of us here today.

It's always a good idea to thoroughly consult, as we all know in this Assembly, Madam Speaker. We could do that in a committee and call in witnesses. We can hear from all universities and colleges, students' union groups, other stakeholders that would be interested. Consultation and due process is never a bad thing. We can move swiftly in that process in order to have this piece of legislation in place before the next election, which I'm sure is the goal of the government members.

With that, I urge all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of the amendment. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate you accommodating me to speak on the referral motion on Bill 19. I will rise to speak against the referral motion. I think that this is a bill that was a long time in the making. The minister likes to joke about the definition of fullness of time. It would have been nice, I think, to see, certainly, some of these changes come forward sooner. Based on conversations that I've had with key stakeholders in my constituency, students in postsecondaries in my constituency and beyond, there does seem to be a lot positive in this bill and that does in fact move things forward, primarily for students, which I think is very important. When I talk with student representatives – and I have done so in my time here as an elected member – many of the things that students have been advocating for are reflected in the bill, which is good to see. I'm glad to see that happen.

I think you saw that the response from students who were in the gallery the other day, I believe Monday, when the bill was introduced, was broadly positive. There is still work to do on many aspects, including mental health and other areas, but embedding the tuition increases tied to CPI is very much a positive thing and something I know students have been advocating for for a long time. I won't enumerate all of them, but there are some governance changes on the university side that have a direct impact in my constituency and which I know are a positive thing and I'm pleased to see in the bill.

I will be voting against the referral motion because I think that this has actually gone through a thorough process, frankly, perhaps a process a little too long. But to say that we need to study it further in committee I think does a disservice to postsecondary institutions themselves, does a disservice to students, so I will be voting against the referral motion and in favour of Bill 19.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker, for recognizing me while I am on my feet. It's a pleasure. Happy Halloween, I suppose, is in order, and for the benefit of the House I decided that I would dress up like a politician today. Not only did I dress up like a politician today, but I switched ties with the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake so we could go as each other. It is a pleasure to be with you this morning.

I would just like to briefly comment on the amendment as I do have a couple of quick comments on that, and then I hope to rise a little bit later this morning, should we have the time, to speak in more depth to the bill. I think that at the end of the day it's important that while I disagree with some of the comments from the former independent Member for Calgary-Elbow and the former Alberta Party leader, I might add – I disagree that the consultation has been completed. Now, I do agree that there has been lots of great work done by student advocacy groups and others, and I, too, support much of the work that they have done. There are many positives in Bill 19, and I think that on balance it is quite likely that I will find it in my heart to support the legislation as I think that there is a lot of good work that's been done here, both for the minister's sake as well as for those students who have been quite involved.

Having said that, I did have the opportunity to reach out to some of my friends and colleagues in the postsecondary sector. I know that it might come as a surprise that I have those; friends, that is. But I might just add that the speed at which we are about to proceed or that I think we could expect to proceed on a piece of legislation like Bill 19 could use a pause on two accounts. One, I believe it was Monday – or perhaps it was only yesterday; I don't recall the date, either Monday or yesterday, certainly – that this significant piece of legislation was introduced, and I know that members of administration inside postsecondary are currently working through the bill and what all of the ramifications of the bill mean for them. That's not to say that we need to make all of the changes that they might be concerned with, but it would be very advantageous, I think, to the House for us to be able to hear how the bill is going to impact other parts of the sector, not just students.

For postsecondary to work well, we need a good relationship between those who administer the system and those who are a part of the learning side of the system as well. It would be great, as an opposition member, if this particular piece of legislation was sent to committee so that we could have those folks at committee and be able to present some of their findings, their thoughts, their concerns about the piece of legislation or the successes, the way that the bill is going to have a positive impact on them. I believe that that could be done prior to the end of this sitting.

I'm not suggesting that the legislation needs to be endlessly delayed like we've seen the government do with certain pieces of private members' business, but the piece of legislation could be sent to committee swiftly and promptly and dealt with in a very quick and reasonable manner for the members of the Official Opposition and government members to be able to hear from experts as well as those in the postsecondary industry who would also like to provide feedback in a more on-the-record format than just giving my office a call and providing some of their thoughts, concerns, or successes.

I certainly will be supporting the amendment to send this bill to committee because I know I would like to hear from some of those folks at committee and have a much more full and robust understanding of exactly how Bill 19 is going to impact the system as a whole. We've seen the government make a lot of changes in the past. When they've turned one dial, it has had a negative impact on other dials inside the system. I particularly think about the negative work they've done around the capacity market and the electricity market and how that has had a negative impact. I just want to be clear and certain that the changes that they're proposing in Bill 19 won't actually have a net negative impact over a long period of time on our students having access to the important postsecondary institutions that they would like to.

As many folks in this House will know, the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is home to one of those outstanding postsecondary institutions, so I feel that it is my duty to be able to represent that, both on the student side as well as on those administering it. I think we would be well served to send this bill to committee, and I would strongly recommend, notwithstanding the comments of the Member for Calgary-Elbow, that you support this amendment to send it to committee and that we deal with it in an expedient fashion so that we can get the bill back in the House before the end of the session and quite likely support that piece of legislation once we've had that feedback.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment REF1 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are back now on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak to second reading? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to say that it's nice to be back in the House and to have the capacity to speak to a bill, Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education.

I have to confess that today with this evening being Halloween and with this bill before us, it has brought back some old memories, memories of myself being in university and specifically of a program that used to be quite famous in the Edmonton area and across North America. I think some of us that are old enough – and maybe that's not that many of us in here – may remember the TV program SCTV, and you may remember one of the very comical and lovable characters in SCTV that was characterized as Count Floyd. If you remember the sketch with Count Floyd, you would remember that he was supposed to take a movie that was being shown on the TV and build it up so that they would get viewers. It was supposed to be a scary movie, but often the only ones they could afford to get would be NFB trailers. You might see Bambi walking through the woods, and he would have to come on and say: scary stuff; very scary, scary stuff.

You know, Madam Speaker, I'm beginning to wonder if I haven't been time warped into some scary stuff today, when as a member of the Official Opposition I actually am going to support two government bills in a row. That is scary stuff.

One of the things that I realized when I started looking at this bill was just how important postsecondary education truly is to this province. You know, it made me reflect a little bit on my postsecondary experiences. I know that the minister – and I believe I'm correct in this, that he's an alumni of Concordia college. No? Okay. I thought you were, but I started off my university days at Concordia college, two years there, and learned a lot of really important things in my life. I learned that organic chemistry was not in my bailiwick and that basketball was far more important than organic chemistry, which explains probably why I didn't pass that course. I learned that a small school experience, having come from Jasper Place composite high school, a very large school at the time, and having gone to a smaller postsecondary institution, just how valuable that is to a lot of our students. It was there that I was able to interface my faith with an academic background, and that was really important for me.

Going on to the University of Alberta, I learned that I had a love for teaching and discovered my passion for education. I guess just before we focus in on the bill, I think that we can see that these institutions play a pivotal role not only in the lives of individual students and Albertans but in the creation of the kind of society that we want to have and the prosperity of our society in Alberta. It just plays a really crucial role.

You know, one of the things that I learned when I was in my university experience was the value of hard work not only within the institutions but outside. My family was very middle-class. We were well off, but it was still a situation where as a student I had to work my way through university, and I had to understand what it was like, Madam Speaker, to make sure that I took those four months, that I worked hard, that I saved my money, and that I had enough for the tuition and for all of the expenses that go along with university.

Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education is a very important bill and one that will have my support. Bill 19 will legislate an inflation-based cap on increases to domestic students and apprenticeship tuition based on an annual change in Alberta's consumer price index. I want to thank the minister for having that balance in there. The minister will have the power to set a tuition freeze with this legislation but will not be able to raise tuition higher than the CPI. Exceptional tuition increases on individual programs are capped at 10 per cent. I think he's pretty much hit the mark here on that.

Bill 19 also changes the student representation on the boards of governors by having student representatives at all of the institutions, three if the school has a graduate program. It allows colleges to transition to university status without legislative amendments. I think all of these things are positive moves forward.

Now, in 2015, Madam Speaker, we understand that the New Democrat government here instituted a domestic freeze at 2014 and 2015 levels. Then in 2016 you began a tuition review, and you consulted with students and with stakeholders. We've had conversation in this House already about the length of time and the thoroughness of that review, and we appreciate it. You had a 20-person advisory group that was formed to help the government find ways to create a more predictable system of fees and fee increases. The student groups had been asking for a cap on tuition since the review started, and I think everyone in this House has been the beneficiary of these student groups as they have come before us and as they have lobbied, I'm sure, the government and the Official Opposition, providing us with their valuable point of view on how to move forward on this issue.

Now, the minister's office has indicated that regulations will push noninstructional fees to have more transparency – and we would suggest that that is a good thing – and will force international student tuition to be more predictable, and I think, again, a positive move. Bill 19 will also allow for two student representatives at all institutions and at the degree-granting, three. Again, allowing for student input at the board of governors level is a good idea.

Over the past three years I know that I have met with many university and postsecondary students to discuss the concerns that they have with their postsecondary education, and through that process I have walked away very impressed with the calibre and the quality of the students that have come to help educate us. These students are bright, they're articulate individuals, and they've always impressed me with their insight into their educational experience and how we can move forward to ensure that that educational experience is affordable and that it is world-class. Now, I know it's been a few years since I was in university. While I remember clearly my time there and I value that time there, I don't ever remember being on the ball as much as these students that have come to visit us. I truly have appreciated being able to engage in conversation and to be able to have the results of that seen in a bill that we have before us. These students have been pushing for a tuition framework, and it's good to see that the government has listened to these Albertans on these issues that are important to them.

I know that we have seen at times and we have maybe been critical at times of this government for its lack of consultation, so it's good to be able to stand up and show by example to the province of Alberta that when good legislation is brought forward, this House does co-operate and this House does move together to better the province of Alberta. I can remember trying to explain to my kids over a 30-year teaching career in my social studies classes that the government is to be held to account by an opposition but that that opposition needs to ensure that when good legislation is brought forward, it will support it. So I'm glad to be able to stand up here today and say that there is much good in this bill.

I believe that this government has listened to the students and that in revising the tuition framework, this will give students predictability for what they will pay in tuition. That's always a good thing. These students are hard-working students. They need to have some predictability. They need to be able to know that they will have affordability as they move into and continue their university career.

You know, I'm probably not saying anything that most of us in this House haven't either experienced personally or know, but these students often have to have one or two jobs in order to be able to make it through university. I know that my own kids – and I have three of them – have all had to work their way through university, and some are still working their way through university. For instance, my son Joshua is presently taking a master of philosophy at Concordia University in Montreal, and in order to work his way through, he actually has two jobs. I know how hard he's working, and I know how hard it is on him to try and balance his education with trying to be able to afford to have that education. So I believe that it's an important thing for us to have had this conversation and to have come to an agreement on how we're going to provide some predictability for our students as they are involved in their university education.

Now, you know, I suppose that we could go down a path – and I don't want to go down too far here because this is a very reasonable bill. But the NDP has created some issues, I would argue, with the wider economy and with our students having the capacity to find the jobs that they need to be able to work their way through university. I guess that's at least in part why I think that postsecondary students need certainty and funding.

Part of it is because it's to ensure that Alberta has the capacity and the workforce to be able to move forward into a knowledge-based economy. One of the realities that we have faced over the last three or four years in this province is the need for diversifying and the need for an economy that is going to be at least in part based on information and technology. It is our postsecondary institutions and our universities that prepare our students to be that workforce moving into the 21st century.

So I believe that legislating an inflationary based cap will definitely help postsecondary students. Capping tuition increases on individual programs at 10 per cent, I believe, makes sense. Tying increases to inflation based on the annual change in Alberta's consumer price index, I believe, leaves some capacity for universities to cover inflationary creep while providing some certainty for students moving forward into the future. These initiatives, I believe, when taken together, will provide more certainty for students and for the university's bottom line, and when they assess the financial viability of a postsecondary institution, it's important that we also place that into the equation.

Madam Speaker, I think that increased student representation on boards of governors is something that student groups – I know it's something that student groups have been asking for, and we're happy to see that the government has done this in Bill 19. Increased representation allows for increased dialogue, and it ensures that postsecondary institutions work for all, including students. I just believe that in a democratic society, where it should run in the interests of the citizens that it serves, even in our university institutions, having student representation is a very positive thing.

Now, myself and the opposition are pleased to see the regulations ...

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you. It was a pleasure to hear the inspiring remarks of my hon. colleague from Drayton Valley-Devon. It sounded to me like he was just in the last one or two sentences there. I just wondered if he wouldn't mind sharing with me the last couple of moments of what was an awe-inspiring speech.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, are you wishing to respond? Please go ahead.

Mr. Smith: Well, Madam Speaker, as much as I appreciate the remarks of my colleague, I think that there are perhaps a few students over the course of my 30 years that would beg to differ as to how awe-inspiring I really am.

Madam Speaker, I would like to make just a last couple of points. Number one is that we're pleased as an opposition to see that the regulations will now include noninstructional fees and not just the tuition fees. Student fees: obviously, tuition fees are an important part of the cost that students face, but they're not the only costs. So when we talk about the noninstructional fees, it's a significant thing for students, and I believe that having oversight over those is an important part of that overall picture of making sure that our postsecondary institutions are affordable and that our students have the capacity to move forward in their education to serve this province.

We're also pleased that the minister has said that the institutions will be required to tell international students what the tuition will cost for the entire length of their degree.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Madam Speaker, we have a new institution in Drayton Valley. We call it the Clean Energy Technology Centre, and as a part of that centre we have got a postsecondary institution, NorQuest College. In order to try and ensure the viability of that institution in a small town, we have, I believe, 27 international students from the nation of India that are taking a business administration degree. These students also need predictability. They're travelling from around the world – in this case, India – coming to a place that's very different, a long ways away from the supports that they have at home, and financial worry is not one of the things that they need to be going through. From my constituency I want to say that I believe that this is a positive thing.

You know, we need to monitor, and we need to make sure that we hold the minister and this government to account for what happens with those regulations and moving forward with this piece of legislation, but overall I believe that this is a positive piece of legislation, and it will have my support.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd be remiss not to speak in favour of this bill, and I would be remiss for a couple of reasons. The first is that it is the right thing to do. I've always felt that education is the foundation of our future. The availability of affordable quality learning opportunities, both now and in the future, is essential for the growth of our economy.

The second reason is the information I've received over and over again from students and student associations from both Lethbridge College and the University of Lethbridge, such as stable tuition costs now and not 20 or 30 years from now, when they'd be advocating for their children. They need it now.

Like the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View said yesterday, I believe, when I went to university a few years ago, the cost was pretty close to $600 per year for tuition, and for my first two years that cost was covered by two grants for which I applied. They were covered by my agreeing to then finish my two years and teach for two years. My summer holiday and weekend holiday employment covered the cost of my textbooks, residence fees, or room and board. This would never have happened had I been required to work much longer periods of time to cover the costs of my education.

Now, I shared this because when I heard from students, I heard the feelings that they expressed. They want the full experience of postsecondary education. Having stable and affordable education will allow them to do just this. I believe that it's my duty as an MLA to support legislation which is supportive of my constituents and, in this case, supportive of our economy by setting our students and our economy up for success, both now and in the future.

When I was a student, I participated in sports. I participated in a number of athletic teams, and that ate up my out-of-class time. I also had a bit of a social life. I came from an all-girls Catholic school, so having a social life was actually part of my social growth when I was at university, and I was very pleased that I had that. Because I did those things, they helped me to learn to focus and to really utilize my time efficiently. Because I did this, I actually probably did better in my last few years at university, certainly, than I did in high school because I had to focus on what I was doing.

If I had to work as many hours as the kids at university and college have to do now, I could never have done that. The time that I spent in school would have been less productive for me as a student. I hear that from the students that come and talk to me. So I absolutely support this bill, and I ask everybody in this room to support it because it needs to happen and it needs to happen now.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I just want to start off by saying how disappointed I am. Now, I'm not disappointed in this legislation; I'm just disappointed in my colleagues across the way. Halloween: this should have been their day to have the colour orange, the orange crush, wearing it loud and proud. There's only one colleague over there. She happens to be from southern Alberta, and I'm happy to see that she is wearing the colours loud and proud. Disappointed.

However, I want to start out by talking about the value of this bill. It's been a pleasure to be able to talk with student union groups. They've come to my office. They've come to our caucus. You know, these are people who are absolutely passionate. They are the future, they are the hope of Alberta, they're the hope of our world, and it is such a pleasure to be able to meet with them and to hear how they feel they can make it better. A lot of what I see in this bill – and I have to take my hat off to the minister for listening to these students and for trying to be able to get it right.

There are a couple of things in here that I wanted to talk about, but before I do that, I want to, first of all, say that the cost of education is becoming a barrier for students to be able to get in and get a good education. We know that the people who actually get out there, get better education: it's the best approach for them to be able to get out of bad circumstances they're in.

I came from a home that was, I guess, considered middle class, but I know that everything that I did, I had to earn myself. It was no different when I went to university. I started out at Mount Royal College – at the time it was Mount Royal College, so that dates me – then went to the University of Lethbridge, then down to the States to finish my university. Now, my first degree, a bachelor of science: I was able to basically work during the summertime and work part-time jobs during school to be able to pay for it. I didn't have to incur any student loans at the time. However, when I went back later in life to get my master's in business administration, the cost of that master's was prohibitive. It was very, very difficult for me as a family man to be able to go in and say that this was going to be worth it and convince my family that this was all worth it. Very, very expensive to do, so I did have to incur student loans on that.

One thing that I've said to most of the student union representatives that have come into my office is that, you know, if you are so convinced that education is the right path and the best poverty reduction strategy out there, which I am a big believer in, then you need to be talking to the federal government because those student loan interest rates are way too high. They're actually making money on students on an antipoverty strategy, in my opinion one of the best antipoverty strategies out there. I really believe, Madam Speaker – and I don't speak for my party, and I don't speak for my colleagues – that if we believe in education as the pathway forward for helping anybody to be able to get out of this cycle of poverty, we need to make sure that we're not making money off them.

Now, I know that the provincial student loan interest rates are lower, and I don't really know whether or not we make any money off that. If we do, though, I think that we need to recheck that and question that. That's one of the problems that I still see. It hasn't been addressed. I hope that the minister and the NDP government are lobbying the federal government on behalf of our students to help them realize that, you know, we should not be making money off students. It shouldn't be a business, a money-making business, when this type of a strategy of getting more education is a great antipoverty strategy.

I've always hoped that I would be able to say this in the House, put this on the record that I'm a big believer in education. I know what it's done for my family. I've seen it work in many situations where people have been able to pull themselves up by their bootstraps. They've learned so much from it. I've got two kids right now that are in university. You know, I have to take my hat off to these kids. They work really hard during the summertime, save every penny, sacrifice going out and playing and doing the fun, frivolous things that young people can do. These guys sacrifice because they recognize the importance and value of being able to get a good education. They learn important things, Madam Speaker. They learn the value of work ethic, they learn the value of money sense, and they learn how to be able to plan.

One of the things that I like about this strategy that this bill, Bill 19, actually goes through is the concept of being able to create some kind of certainty. You know, businesses need certainty. I've said this many times, so it's no shock to my colleagues across the way. I don't believe that this government has provided that kind of certainty for businesses, but in this situation I believe that they're providing certainty for higher learning institutions and for students when they allow CPI to determine what the increases are going to be in tuition and costs. The value of that, in my opinion as a Conservative, for universities is that it helps them to be able to have the certainty of: "Okay. Well, we know that if CPI is 2 per cent or 1.6 per cent or whatever it is, we've got to be able to live within those means. We've got to be able to make sure our budget follows those constraints."

The other value in terms of certainty for students is that students now can say, "You know what? When I start out on this process of going for a four-year or an eight-year" or whatever it is that they're actually going to be doing, whether it's a master's or a PhD – they have the ability to say: "You know what? Unless we see something like in the '80s, where inflation was out of control, I think we can actually plan for what the cost is going to be for my education." That certainty is what I applaud and will be voting for in this bill.

However, I do want to say this. And I have to say that I apologize. You know, it is a 50-page bill, so I didn't get a chance to be able to read the whole thing. So if I'm missing something here, I'm sure that 29(2)(a) coming from the opposite side will happen, and I look forward to that. From what I understand, the CPI is capped at 10 per cent, so you can't go any higher than 10 per cent increases. If that's the case, I guess the question that I have in that situation – if I'm wrong, I apologize. Yikes. If we're going to see a 10 per cent inflationary rate in Alberta, that's not a good situation.

To tell you the truth, some of the policies that this government might want to look at in order to make sure that we've got students that can afford education are those inflationary measures that we've seen in the past, Madam Speaker, inflationary measures such as the carbon tax, inflationary measures like a 50 per cent increase in minimum wages. All those costs are passed on to the consumer. All of the costs are passed on to the consumer, so that is naturally going to be an inflationary measure that the student, the universities, the businesses all have to be able to eat. They all have to pay for that.

Again, I've said this many times in this House. I am concerned about policies that the NDP government has brought forward that drive up inflation in our province once again because of policy. Now, inflation happens for many reasons, obviously. Sometimes, because we live in a global economy, those inflationary parts come from external areas, commodity prices and so forth. But if we are going to be serious about helping Alberta be a great place for our kids and for our grandkids, we have to start thinking about this issue of inflation, this issue of passing those inflationary increases on to our children and grandchildren. Now, that's not even bringing in the issue of having a $96 billion deficit, which, obviously, isn't taken into consideration in inflation, but it is later on paid for. It's something that has to be paid for by our children and grandchildren.

It's the big picture that I'm talking about here, Madam Speaker. It's the big picture of being able to say: are we doing something that is going to be beneficial to our children and grandchildren? Is this something that we can be proud of and something that can provide them with a future, a bright future and a bright hope? They are our hope. They are our future. You know, this is a good piece of legislation, and I will be voting for it, but one thing that concerns me is that the other parts, the big picture, I don't think this NDP government has gotten right. The big picture being that – you know what? – when they actually do finish their degree, there is gainful employment for them, that there are opportunities for them to be able to start businesses if that's what they want to do.

Unfortunately, we've seen a decrease of $36 billion, foreign investment leaving this economy, since this government took office. The problem is this: there are no measures to be able to measure what kind of internal investment has actually fled or has not been realized. I have the opportunity as an MLA to be able to talk to many people, many businesses, many people who would like to start businesses. And many, many times I have heard the argument that they are not willing – not willing – to risk their capital and start a business or to grow their business, whether it's adding another pub or adding another restaurant or adding another expansion to their business. They are not willing to do that because they do not believe there's certainty in what the NDP is going to do, because the NDP are willing to change the rules on a regular basis and create that message, send the message to our wealth creators and our job creators that there is no more certainty in this market.

At this juncture what happens is we now have a stagnated economy. Our economy is stagnated, and then we have people who come out of universities that are struggling to be able to find jobs. If that's the case, then I don't think that they're getting it right. I believe that the problem that they're facing is that they might feel like: you know, we want to be able to have voter-facing legislation here, help the students think that we're actually doing them a favour. But in reality they're not finishing the equation. The equation needs to be finished by saying: "You know what? Go in there. Work hard. Get a good education, and at the end of the day, when you come out, there will be a robust economy, that you can be able to go in and get a great job or start a business if you'd like." That's finishing the equation, Madam Speaker. This is the sort of thing that governments are supposed to be doing, in my opinion, for our children and grandchildren.

I got into politics for that very reason. Alberta has been good to my family. We have done well here. This has been a great place for us to be able to raise our family, to be able to have opportunities for growth and development. I love Alberta. It's a great place to be.

I always find it sad when I hear from the members opposite how many things we got wrong, yet what's amazing to me is that they're here. Lots of them came here because they believed that there was something right about this place. Most of the time it was because there were opportunities here. There was work, so they came here from other provinces or other jurisdictions because we had done something right. Yet what I see and have seen for the last three and a half years, unfortunately, Madam Speaker, is a government that continues to say that we did so many things wrong, that we've had it wrong for 44 years, yet this is a government that, in my opinion, has chased away all of the opportunities that we've had here, those opportunities that we had for growth, those opportunities that we had for these kids to be able to come out of university and find that gainful employment that they desire.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? I'll recognize the hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, one of the things I love about being an MLA is the amount of time we spend talking about education. In the last few years we've done so much, not only for the K to 12 system, but we've recognized the importance of postsecondary education for all Albertans. I think this is great because, as we all know, education is the cornerstone for a thriving economy and for success in all areas of our life and in Alberta.

So I am so glad that the Minister of Advanced Education has recognized the importance of education stability and has brought forward this bill, that is going to do what we've been talking a lot in the Legislative Assembly over the last couple of years, is really going to help provide education to the students who are going to power our companies, who are going to lead the innovation in the future, and that will continue to be the workers that our Alberta industries need.

As we all know – and I was just looking at some statistics this morning – a lot of our students are in debt. A lot of our students cannot afford university. I think especially of our students who come from outside Edmonton or Calgary, who have to factor into their education career not only the tuition fees and all of the fees to access postsecondary education, but they have to factor in travel to their homes, and sometimes it can be quite expensive. For example, if you attend the U of A and you live in Fort McMurray, you need to factor in a four and a half hours in a car or a plane ride and also living expenses, rent, and so on.

We all know that if students cannot afford university, they may choose not to avail themselves of opportunities for postsecondary education and be stuck in lower jobs and not contribute as much to the economy. We also know that when you're starting your education – and I have been privileged to actually attend three different universities in my time and to have a son who went to university. I actually also worked for two postsecondary educations, so I understand that once a student starts a postsecondary education, it's really important that that student knows how much they're going to have to spend so they can plan their courses, they can plan when they can possibly work over the summer or do a co-op turn or an internship. They can also plan with their parents, if they have parents who can support them, how they're going to afford the tuition and the living expenses over the last four years.

What I really appreciate about this bill is that it's written – and I know that the Minister of Advanced Education doesn't have university students yet because his students are much lower and, I believe, still in elementary school. But I can really see that when this bill was written, it was really written from considering all of the things that a student needs to consider and his or her parents or guardians or so on in planning for a successful university education and making sure that the student has the time to concentrate on his studies and is not worried about finances all the time.

When I was working at the university of Victoria, I hired a lot of students. I had the kind of position where thanks to research grants I hired students and helped them to get access to employment that would lead to future employment in their area of work. I know, having talked with these students, that paying rent, affording food and even simple things like books – because if anyone in this House has recently looked at a bookstore, you'd realize that academic books can cost up to $200 for one book given the nature of it. Students are forever wondering how they're going to be able to afford to live, pay tuition, the material that they need, and the supplies that they may need for some courses.

This bill is going to allow the students in our province, some of the young people that we know very well because they may be our children or our grandchildren, some certainty as they begin their education career, which will lead them to be involved in the economy of Alberta and to the success that we all see happening in Alberta in our industries.

One of the things that I also like about being an MLA, you know, is that I have the pleasure of meeting a lot of young people in terms of STEP students or co-op students, and I spent this summer, actually, meeting students who had been employed under the government STEP program in industries and nonprofit organizations. I met some really interesting students who had been hired by one of the energy companies in their control room. When I talked to the students, they all spoke about the need that they have around certainty of how they're going to afford to continue to be a student, and that stress, I know, really impacts their studies.

One of the other reasons that I like this bill – traditionally, Alberta students, after they finish grade 12, have had very low levels of attachment to the postsecondary sector. I don't have the statistics in front of me, but I know that Alberta is known as a province where our students, after leaving grade 12, do not have high rates of access to the postsecondary sector, be it university or institutions like NAIT or SAIT. This is something that I think this bill is going to help with. If students do not access postsecondary education shortly after their graduation from grade 12, it's really very hard for them to access postsecondary education in the future. I'm really hoping that this bill will encourage – I'm not only hoping; I know that it will – our grade 12 students to consider applying to postsecondary institutions and accessing postsecondary education.

When I was looking at the statistics around the grants, the provincial and federal grants for students, I also saw that it's not only 18-year-olds and 19-year-olds who are going to benefit from this bill around affordability and accessibility to postsecondary education. There are a lot of people who did not go to postsecondary education after graduating from grade 12 who find themselves now in their 30s – they may be married; they may have children – who now realize that they should go to postsecondary education. This bill will also provide them with certainty and the ability to plan their access to postsecondary education with certainty. I think this is great.

Every time that I have the opportunity of making a speech at a university graduation, I always refer back to those Albertans who have chosen to go back to university to continue their career, to those Albertans who have seen how industry has changed and that they need now to get an advanced degree or they need to get their first degree. This bill is going to allow them to also plan for their postsecondary career.

One of the things that I always find interesting when you look at the students and you look at the diversity of students is that we have a lot of students who face special challenges in the postsecondary sector. We have students who have special needs. They may need a Braille reader, they may need access to deaf or hard of hearing interpreters, they may need access to a tutor or an assistant to be able to participate in postsecondary institutions, so these students face even more challenges than other Alberta students.

Again, by ensuring that our education system does not out of the blue ask students to pay more fees such as – I don't know; I've heard that it's not only access to recreation facilities but that there are all kinds of fees that students have to pay, and sometimes those fees are so out of proportion to what the tuition fees are. I'm thinking of those students who have special needs that already might be paying extra or have financial constraints in accessing postsecondary institutions due to their special needs. I'm thinking of how these students through this bill might gain access to postsecondary education and better jobs.

I think that we also have to be careful that we don't see postsecondary education only as a path to employment. One of the things that I've learned – and maybe it's because I'm from Europe or maybe because I've had the opportunity to study a number of different subjects – is that access to postsecondary education is really important just for our communities. When a student has the ability to study a subject of interest – and I note that one of the members opposite was referring to a philosophy degree. When we encourage students to pursue something they're interested in, something they're passionate about, it results in much better communities because it gives the young person or sometimes the not-so-young person the ability to reflect on how our communities thrive.

One of the things that I really appreciate about postsecondary education, and it's something that's increasingly happening in our K to 12 system, is the ability of postsecondary education students to learn to live with diversity, to learn within a diversity of opinion, a diversity of persons, a diversity of abilities, and to learn how to all work together and to really understand various world views and to not live in the little bubble that they lived in in the past.

I'm really encouraged that this bill will allow more Alberta students to access postsecondary education so that our percentage of students who access postsecondary education will increase. I'm really encouraged that those students will be less stressed, that they will have certainty around the amount of tuition and fees that they will be paying. I'm also encouraged that it might lead to more students with special needs, whatever the special needs might be, now finally having the financial ability to access postsecondary education.

As you can tell, Madam Speaker, I am so delighted with the work that our government has been doing to support students in Alberta. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreeshen: Actually, could the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills go instead?

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. It's just that I had a speakers list and you were next on it, but if you prefer, I could recognize Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills first if you'd rather go later.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, and sorry for the confusion. It's his first day here. [interjections] Okay. It's his third day, and I admire him so much that I'm dressed like him today, as I mentioned earlier.

It is a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. As we've heard this morning from a number of my colleagues, notwithstanding some of my concerns around the speed at which I anticipate this particular piece of legislation to be passed and the fact that a number of postsecondary stakeholders who've reached out to me have some reservations about understanding the full ramifications of what it's going to mean for their institutions and/or their faculty, I think that, on balance, we're moving in the right direction. I think that it would have been a good opportunity for us to consult with them and get some feedback, frankly, prior to even the passing of second reading. Since that's not going to happen, I hope that we'll be able to connect with some of those folks throughout the process and make sure that there's no significant need for major amendments or otherwise.

Broadly speaking, I think that Bill 19 has done a good job in representing a lot of the work that students have been doing on behalf of postsecondary students all across the province. Obviously, student groups are going to be happy with the cap on tuition and increased representation on the board of governors. You know, I think it's important, particularly from a governance perspective, that students, the primary stakeholders of the postsecondary sector, have a voice on the way the postsecondary that they are attending is governed. Students being the majority stakeholders, if you will, in the direction of the institution, I think it's important that they are asked for their opinion and that that is guaranteed on all boards at all institutions. I think that it is a step in the right direction to make sure that it's going to happen.

Coming into force on February 1, 2019, Bill 19 will legislate an inflation-based cap on increases to domestic student and apprenticeship tuition based on the annual change in Alberta's consumer price index, or CPI, starting in the 2020-21 academic year. Obviously, as we've heard from a number of members on this side of the House, this bill will provide the minister the power to regulate noninstitutional fees and international student tuition. The minister will have the power to dictate a tuition freeze within this legislation but will not be able to raise tuition higher than CPI.

Bill 19 also changes the student representation on the board of governors by having two student representatives at all institutions, and this, of course, is a positive step in the right direction.

Now, we've heard at some significant length from student groups that have been pushing for a tuition framework, and it's good to see that the government is finally working on that. I might add that I have also heard from a number of administrators and faculty members across the sector that they, too, are looking forward to what the tuition framework looks like. They may not entirely agree with that framework, but they are certainly looking forward to having a sense of exactly what that's going to look like. The uncertainty of what the minister may or may not do was creating a lot of challenges for boards and administrations to prepare for what the future looks like.

As I've mentioned on a number of occasions this morning, some of those board members, faculty, and administration have reached out to me and have some reservations with the bill, but to have a sense of what the direction looks like will be useful for them and, in particular, as we've heard this morning, for student groups and for them to have a sense of what that tuition is going to look like. Revising the tuition framework will give students predictability for what they will pay in tuition. Madam Speaker, you'll know that predictability in your budget is important. At present you're not a full-time student, and significant surprises in your budget, quite likely, if your budget is anything like mine, don't create more fun but create less fun. I think that it's important that we extend as much predictability to students as possible.

You know, university and postsecondary: I think it's important that sometimes when we speak about postsecondary here inside the House, we tend to focus on the universities and larger postsecondary institutions. I don't think that it's a slight on any of the other institutions; it's just natural that we tend, when we think postsecondary, to think of the larger universities here in the province of Alberta. But I think it's important that we don't do a disservice to some of the smaller institutions or colleges or NAITs and SAITs of the world, that have such a critical role in the postsecondary framework. Now more than ever, the need for those institutions remains strong. I think it's so important that we support each and every one of those institutions and the students that attend there.

In a day and age where we see a significant push towards granting university status to more and more institutions, I get somewhat concerned about the push and what message that might send both to those institutions that would prefer to stay as they are and to the students that attend there, that if you attend Olds College or NAIT or SAIT or a diploma-granting postsecondary or an apprenticeship program, somehow those institutions or those students are less than those that attend university.

I think we need to do our part to ensure that that creep doesn't happen, that we're actually encouraging and supporting those institutions and those students and equally respecting students who attend trade schools or otherwise because in so many ways they are the builders of our province's future. They are the job creators who go on to own contracting firms and otherwise really make our economy churn in so many respects. Sometimes I think that gets lost while we're here discussing postsecondary more broadly. I think it's worth while to stop and just take a bit of a pause to make sure that we equally support all institutions and all students. I think that Bill 19 does do much of that with respect to treating all of those students equally, but I think that it's important that we do encourage those that choose smaller institutions to continue doing so.

While we're on the topic of smaller institutions and improving access and affordability to postsecondary institutions, you know, I think that there's so much that's good in terms of this legislation with respect to making tuition more accessible, creating the certainty and the framework that goes forward. But if the government was truly serious about doing all that it can to make postsecondary more accessible and affordable for all students, there are lots of other things that they could do.

One that comes to mind for me is the significant costs that students pay for the carbon tax and how that impacts postsecondary institutions. I know that institutions like Olds College, who has a massive campus with many, many buildings, including farm buildings, barns – I know that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler will know that if you're having to heat a barn, it's significantly more costly than, say, heating a house or even a tower or a downtown building in any of the urban centres. I know that my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler will know, as you know, Madam Speaker, that the institution of Olds College is a working farm. This year, due to probably three, four weeks of winter right in the middle of harvest, the institution will have incurred some significant costs in the form of drying product and will wind up paying way more carbon tax than lots of the other institutions. In fact, Olds College pays hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in carbon tax, and these costs need to be . . . [interjection] It totally is the fact, and they would be happy to confirm those facts. These costs are now absorbed into the institution.

This particular piece of legislation does speak about noninstructional fees, but when the government is legislating with the right hand but taking away with the left hand, it does create uncertainty for institutions and, as such, students. We've seen in a number of different areas that this is exactly what happens with the government. Listen, I'm going to support Bill 19. I think it's a step in the right direction. I think the fact that we're acknowledging that students need to have certainty and access to affordable tuition is an important step, but I also think that the government can do more when it comes to not punishing the postsecondary sector and the students that attend by doing small things like abolishing the carbon tax on postsecondaries. I think government members will remember that the Official Opposition took steps to try to ensure that that happened, yet the government knows better than everyone else, so we saw that they didn't listen.

You know, there's a lot more to say, but in the interests of time, perhaps I will wrap it up. The last thing I will say is that this bill does provide significant – significant – powers to the minister. I think that any time that we are strengthening the powers of the minister, it does expose some potential risk and lack of transparency in the process. I can assure you that the Official Opposition will continue to hold this minister to account.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to speak briefly to Bill 19 because I think I bring a unique perspective that hasn't really been addressed so far in the debate. Like the Member for Edmonton-South West, I'm actually a fairly recent university graduate. I did not go to university till I was in my 40s, and when I finally was able to go, I had a family to support, I had expenses, I had a mortgage to pay. It was a real challenge. I was able to get some student loans and funding to get myself going, but it certainly wasn't enough to keep me able to go to school and really focus on my education.

In fact, I had a situation where, about halfway through my master's degree, I was actually earning more than the minimum, so when I applied for student loans, I was rejected. I was faced with not knowing how I was even going to be able to finish my education.

But, of course, student loans: I think that's another area that we definitely need to look at. It's not addressed by this legislation, but as my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner pointed out, it is an area that can be a barrier for students, so I'm hopeful that we're going to soon get to a comprehensive review of that area.

Just getting back to the bill, I know how important it is because when I was in university, I had the honour of being part of my student association. I was the president, and I also had the honour of being part of CAUS. With other student leaders at the time, we worked really hard to lobby the government, the Progressive Conservative government at the time. We would go and we would speak to them. Of course, they'd invite us into the office, and they'd smile, and they'd shake our hands and listen to us, and then they'd go away and do absolutely nothing. It really gave us the impression that the Conservative government didn't have a lot of interest in making postsecondary education more affordable and more accessible to us students. So it's really, really exciting to see this legislation because this is exactly what we were asking for. These are things that are going to go a long way towards making things a little bit better for all students.

I think, again, that it's important to remember that the face of what a student looks like is changing. It used to be that, yes, it was high school students – they were young; they were 18, 19 – but more and more we're seeing students like myself who, because of the economy, because of the high cost of education, have to go to work. They have to take a longer time to complete their studies because it's just not accessible anymore. We face other kinds of challenges, and we need a lot more support in different ways from postsecondary education and from legislation. I think this is an important step, and I'm hoping that we're going to continue to go in that direction to make postsecondary education accessible to everybody.

I also want to comment that I am the chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council. As part of NADC we have a very close relationship with the university and college presidents in the north. In the north in particular, it's incredibly important to have access to postsecondary education. It's really a key for us up there because that's how we can improve our ability to recruit and retain, because we're educating people who are already from the north and are more likely to stay there once they've completed their university and college studies. In my interactions with the college presidents they're all in favour of being creative and finding better solutions, how to make it possible. In particular, we're very proud of Northern Lakes College because they do all kinds of things to help make it easier for students to study, to balance those difficult choices between family, finances, and education that are so important.

That's really all I wanted to comment on, but I just want to say thank you very much to the minister for bringing this. As I say, I hope it's just a beginning of really good things for postsecondary education in this province.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreshen: Thank you. I guess we were playing with fire a little bit with the outstanding Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, dressing up like each other. He was not in this Assembly when he was going to speak, so I stood up, so I guess there's a mishap on our part. I apologize for that, Madam Speaker.

I am proud today to rise in this House to speak on Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. Bill 19 seeks to cap increases to domestic student tuition and apprenticeship tuition based on a rate of Alberta's consumer price index. Individual program tuition can be raised by as much as 10 per cent as long as the across-the-board average tuition hike is not greater than the CPI.

Previously the minister had the discretion to dictate how much tuition could go up. Since the NDP has taken office, there's always been a tuition freeze. In the few years prior to that, depending on the year, there was either a freeze on tuition or it did go up by the rate of inflation. So there is already a precedent for the minister to act through ministerial order in adjusting tuition rates. However, I suppose the minister wanted to put this into legislation.

This bill also gives the minister power to make regulations on other matters in postsecondary education, including noninstructional fees and international student tuition. Furthermore, this bill also seeks to increase the representation of students on boards of governors by having two representatives at all institutions plus a third if the school has a graduate program. Previously schools such as Grant MacEwan University here in Edmonton and Mount Royal University in Calgary only had one student representative on their board of governors.

Madam Speaker, I know the struggles that university students face. I'm a little less removed from my postsecondary studies than some members of this House but not all. I took economics and political science at the University of Alberta here in Edmonton. I did try out for their Golden Bears football team but was not good enough to actually make the team. But I do understand the realities of balancing work and life at university.

Albertan students are hard-working. There is no denying that. I know many people who are pursuing higher education who have to work sometimes two part-time jobs just to cover the bills. Many have had extra costs in moving from different parts of the province to their postsecondary school, and many of them are unable to do much else besides study and work. They have put other commitments on hold as they work to create a better future for themselves.

That's part of what being an Albertan is all about, working hard to create opportunities for yourself in the future. Growing up on a farm, I spent many weekends travelling back and forth between Edmonton and central Alberta during seeding and harvest. Again, it was finding that work-life balance that was a great teacher and something that was a great opportunity in university. That's what university teaches us, to make those short-term sacrifices for long-term gains.

Madam Speaker, I commend our university students for putting in the work to get a higher education, and I believe that Bill 19 should help in these efforts. Of course, we need to look at economic opportunities available in Alberta for our youth. University students can't put in all this work if there are no job opportunities that exist after they graduate because then, really: was it worth it?

The NDP's misguided and disastrous economic policies have destroyed many of the opportunities in this province. They've raised the minimum wage. Due to raising the minimum wage, I've heard of lots of friends that have lost their jobs or their hours have been cut back, and it's punishing to people. When you look at the increased red tape pushing investment dollars out of Alberta, it's pushing those dollars to actual common-sense jurisdictions that actually recognize the importance and the value of job creators and the dignity of actually having a job. All of this has made it much harder for postsecondary students here in Alberta to find jobs when they actually graduate. The students that Bill 19 is going to help need to have the opportunity to succeed in the future.

Speaking of economic opportunities, as I said earlier, current postsecondary students often need to work to be able to cover their bills when they are in university. The issue is that the NDP has made it much more difficult to find part-time jobs that supplement their income. [interjection]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Dreeshen: The minimum wage hike has caused employers to, again, reduce hours for employees. Increased red tape has made it more difficult for people to find jobs. And the carbon tax, as was mentioned earlier, has raised costs for businesses, making it more difficult to hire workers and more difficult to give significant hours to employees. The reality is that the jobs that are affected by the NDP's poor government decisions are often the ones that would have been held by university students, the same students that Bill 19 is meant to help.

Madam Speaker, going back to the bill at hand, Bill 19 will seek to cap domestic student tuition at the rate of inflation. Given the struggles that postsecondary students are going through because of this government, as I mentioned, it's a good step that they are taking by limiting the increases to tuition. No student wants to enrol in an institution paying one amount in one year only to have their tuition increase in the second. It would be pretty unreasonable for students to stand by and have so much uncertainty about how much they're going to pay for their own education. Bill 19 will give students that predictability with their finances so that they know for sure how much their tuition is going to go up each year. Predictability and certainty are important.

On the international tuition topic, Bill 19 will give the minister power to make regulations around international student tuition. The indication from the minister is that he wants to give international students the ability to know exactly what their tuition is going to cost throughout their degree. This might improve our ability to attract international students, as we can give those potential students the certainty that their tuition won't be increasing throughout their studies. One less uncertainty for students, Madam Speaker. It's a common-sense proposal and is something that I personally support.

Bill 19 also gives the minister authority to create regulations around noninstructional fees such as athletic facility fees and transit fees. The minister has said previously that the regulations would include provisions that would give more transparency to these fees. I believe that would be a winning issue for all students. Institutions would not be able to hide these fees that they are charging to their students. Rather, they will need to be out in the open so that they would actually be accountable to the students that they are going to be charging the fees to.

These last two points are simple regulations that the minister has said he would implement. We won't be able to see these regulations before this Assembly, so our hope is that the minister gets this right. However, the NDP has gotten so much wrong since they were elected three and a half years ago that it's hard to see how they could actually get this right. From the Bill 6 fiasco, Madam Speaker, to the carbon tax, there have been so many bad policies that this government has introduced that it's hard to trust anything that they say. Just yesterday the government wasn't even able to correct the contradiction in their own budget around increases to the carbon tax. The policies that are coming from the minister seem to be promising, and if the minister does what he says, then that could result in a positive change for postsecondary students.

Bill 19 will also give additional representation on some boards of governors by having two student representatives on every board, as I mentioned earlier. Of course, many institutions already have two representatives, but some schools such as Grant MacEwan and Mount Royal only have one. This change was pushed for by student groups who wanted increased representation of students on postsecondary boards. I don't see any problem giving students a greater voice on the operations of a postsecondary institution. These students are the ones that are going to be most affected by the decisions of these boards, so it is important that their voices are heard.

Madam Speaker, I do wish the NDP would have cared as much about hearing farmers' voices when it came to Bill 6. I do think that Bill 6 will go down in history as the worst lack of consultation that this NDP government has actually ever done. It was purely based on their socialist NDP dogma. Not actually listening to farmers was a great travesty.

Madam Speaker, I do think that it's interesting how when you actually take the time to listen to Albertans – you actually take the time to listen to Albertans – and consult with them and consult with stakeholders, good legislation might actually follow. This is mostly the case with Bill 19, but it has not been the case with previous decisions by this government.

When I speak to my constituents, Madam Speaker, I actually listen to them, and that informs me as a legislator. I can tell you that my constituents are not happy with this current government. Maybe the government should have actually consulted with Albertans prior to when they introduced their carbon tax, especially when they failed to actually mention it during the last campaign. The carbon tax was one of the NDP's worst hidden agenda items, which we now are all bearing the cost of today.

Speaking of a carbon tax, Madam Speaker, I'm not sure if the NDP realizes how much postsecondary institutions are actually paying in carbon taxes. I wonder if the minister has actually asked postsecondary education institutions in Alberta how much they actually are paying in carbon taxes. The carbon tax is a disadvantage for Alberta families driving to work and heating their homes, it's a disadvantage to Alberta businesses competing around the world, and the carbon tax is a disadvantage to our postsecondary schools and even our local school boards.

The outstanding Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was mentioning how hundreds of thousands of dollars in carbon tax is being paid by local school boards around the province, and that's coming out of buses. That comes out of things that students actually need. What this government actually, really, needs to understand is that every dollar that an institution spends on the carbon tax is one less dollar that they can spend on important student services.

There's no rebate available for postsecondary schools. They have to actually get that money from somewhere else, which is either from students or taxpayers, and most of the time that's just a student paying it twice. I would think that any form of comprehensive postsecondary legislation would include something to address the amount of money that institutions are forced to pay on the carbon tax, but I guess not. The government expects that Alberta postsecondary institutions just have to bear that extra cost. Unfortunately, the carbon tax is a cost that is borne by our colleges and universities and not by schools in other parts of Canada and the U.S. This is another ideological move by this government that makes our schools more uncompetitive when compared with other schools in other jurisdictions.

Madam Speaker, Bill 19 does a number of things well, though, and I think students will benefit from its implementation. However, if the NDP government really wanted to help students, they would repeal their carbon tax and get the economy back on track. I know that students obviously care about the rate of tuition and the affordability of going to school. As mentioned earlier, I was proud to use programs that were available to students going through postsecondary schooling, and because it is an important investment to further one's education, it should be available for everyone in Alberta. I think that truly represents the equality of opportunity, and it is very important for students in Alberta.

However, students are concerned about whether there will be jobs when they graduate, whether their degree will actually be worth while, and whether they will be able to build a career here in Alberta. I don't want to see all of our recent graduates leave this province because there are no jobs available here in Alberta. Alberta taxpayers pay a significant amount of money to ensure that our institutions are of good quality. Let's not make it more difficult for our students to stay here and work. Let's actually cut taxes, reduce red tape, and bring back the prosperity that Alberta once had. I want to see the Alberta advantage back in Alberta so that the students that Bill 19 is intended to help are actually able to succeed here in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, Bill 19 has many good aspects to it. Capping tuition to the CPI will have a positive effect on Alberta students and their bottom line. Some of the regulations that the Minister of Advanced Education has spoken about will be good for both Alberta students and international students. I also want to commend the government – yes, actually commend the government – for actually listening to stakeholders and introducing legislation that actually helps Albertans. I would strongly encourage members of the government to continue to do that for the next few months.

While I support Bill 19, much more needs to be done to have long-lasting improvements for university students, which include cutting the carbon tax, reducing red tape, and bringing back the Alberta advantage so that students can actually succeed here in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and respond to some of the comments that were recently made by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I listened with great interest, and it's quite clear that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has been wearing his Make America Great Again hat way too tight and it's impacting his ability to share anything remotely resembling a fact in this Assembly.

I want to address a couple of things that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake brought forward, that claim that we're hurting students. First of all, one of the things that he said was apparently hurting students was the increase in the minimum wage. Now, I don't know – I'm not the son of a rich farmer, Madam Speaker – but I had to pay for my . . .

Mrs. Pitt: You know what? Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mrs. Pitt: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Advanced Education is personally insulting other members in this House, and I'd ask him to withdraw and apologize to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Under 23(h), (i), and (j).

The Acting Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would suggest that there was a lot of inflammatory language in this House in the past little while. I do recognize that it's been taken personally in many ways on both sides of the House, and we should change the tone in this matter. You know, again, I would hope that you would encourage all of us to change the tone, that really has been, I think, rather equivalent within the House this morning.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we were having a great morning. The tone was quite amicable, I believe. I will caution all members in this House that we refrain from engaging in what could be perceived as personal attacks. Recognizing there will be a dispute of the facts on both sides of this House about what is being said, let's keep the tone a little bit more respectful on both sides if we could, please.

Hon. minister, I would ask you to please withdraw the comment.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Of course, let me rephrase. My parents did not have the significant financial means that other people had to support their children while they were in university, so I was in the position of having to work minimum wage jobs, as many students are to be able to pay for their education. Of course, I would have loved to have had a minimum wage of $15 an hour when I was going to school, a time, I would remind everyone in this House, when Alberta actually saw a doubling of tuition.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, can you please withdraw your comment? Although I appreciate you've changed the tone, I'd still ask you to withdraw.

Mr. Schmidt: I've completed my statement, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Minister, I've requested that you withdraw the statement.

Mr. Schmidt: Madam Speaker, I've completed my statement.

The Acting Speaker: Member, I will ask you again to withdraw the statement, or else you can please leave the House.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: I withdraw, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. I'd like to rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising on a point of order under Standing Order 13(1), "The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and decide questions of order," and Standing Order 13(2), "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member."

My request to you, Madam Speaker, is to try to have an understanding as to why the options were given to the member to withdraw the statement or remove himself from the House. As you know and as other Speakers in this Assembly have ruled in this particular case, a member of the opposition was required to withdraw a statement, and when they failed to do so, they were in fact named by the Speaker, not just asked to remove themselves from the House.

I appreciate the position that you're in, Madam Speaker, as the Deputy Chair of Committees. You are rarely in the chair, and I don't want to put this on you in any way, shape, or form because the blame for the inaction of the minister lies solely with the minister.

My question to you is: why is it that a set of rules was applied to the opposition members when they refused to withdraw what were personal attacks and inappropriate statements, or perceived to be by the Speaker on that particular day, but today the member made clearly inappropriate statements, you asked him to withdraw them, yet – yet – he refused to do so and was allowed to remove himself from the House without apologizing to the member or without being named?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I've made my decision. The minister will have an opportunity to apologize when he returns to the House. If not, I will discuss this with the Speaker.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to second reading?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing as we have made great progress this morning, I would like to move that we adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:51 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, October 31, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 32 members of the television and radio arts program from NAIT, here in the city of Edmonton. They're accompanied by their instructor, Lamya Asiff. I'm sure they're going to learn lots of hot tips on how to cover politicians here this afternoon. If they could all please rise. Join me in giving them a warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: I'm not sure if that's good news or bad news.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce to you and through you the students from a school in my riding of Edmonton-Mill Creek, A. Blair McPherson school. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Holly Paranich and Mr. Benjamin Maklowich. If the students and teachers would stand, please, I'd ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several introductions today. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature – please stand when I say your names – Kim Walker, who has worked in the oil and gas sector for 20 years and is a business marketing consultant. As an artist Kim was inspired to create the longest mural in Canada project to revitalize her community and start a new conversation on how public art can be designed. Laura Hack, a resident of Coventry Hills, studied education at the University of Alberta, then taught high school math, science in Regina, Edmonton, and Calgary, and now volunteers as a director with the NHCA and played an important role organizing this project. Lindsay Lantela, a born-and-raised Calgarian who is a homemaker and self-taught freelance artist in Coventry Hills, volunteers her time on the board of the NHCA and other nonprofit organizations in the Calgary area. Finally, Yana Soldatenko, a Kazakh citizen and recent graduate from the University of Calgary's urban studies program. Passionate about Calgary's communities and their development, she is currently working as a community engagement co-ordinator in the NHCA. All the guests were volunteers for the longest mural project in Canada and the subject of today's members' statements. I'd ask them all to rise now and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly a constituent from Edmonton-Ellerslie, Misty Ring. Misty will graduate with distinction from the U of A's visual arts certificate program in 2019, where she earned three scholarships. Earlier this year she curated a show at the Art Gallery of Alberta for 13 emerging Edmonton and area artists. She also volunteered as a lead artist in the longest mural in Canada project, which, of course, my colleague from Calgary-Northern Hills will speak of more later today. I ask Misty to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A great pleasure to stand and introduce to you and through you to the House a long-standing member of the staff here in the Legislative Assembly Office and the library, Ms Ingrid Dandanell. No stranger to the building, not only did she work in the Legislature but 20 years as a librarian, serving the folks before my time. Retired in 2001, she has a keen interest in seniors' policy and is, I'm proud to say, a committed Liberal. She serves on the Senior Liberals' Commission in Alberta. Seated in the public gallery, I'll ask Ingrid to stand so we can give her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fantastic local artist, Mr. Mark Vazquez-Mackay. Mark received his BFA from the Alberta College of Art and Design and has been an instructor at ACAD since 2004. He is currently the artist in residence at Willow Park middle school. His work as a muralist, mentor, and volunteer has made him a great choice as the artist to design a mural in Northern Hills. His other works have been exhibited and collected across the continent. I'd like to invite Mark to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Children's Services and Status of Women.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you guests from the Bent Arrow Traditional Healing Society, joining us today to bear witness to legislation I plan on introducing later this afternoon. Patti Brady is deputy executive director. Senior managers Lloyd Yellowbird and Keleigh Larson, manager Candace Cleveland, Arlyse – and I've not had to pronounce the last name before, so sorry if this is bad – Wuttunee in communications, Lynda Gladue, Crystal Arcand, Christie Pace, and Megan Morin all support the work of connecting families to their culture and traditional teachings. It's my honour to introduce these guests and join you in offering the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Bent Arrow's front-line staff empower young people, including children receiving intervention services, with traditional teachings and cultural connections. Yesterday I joined them in a smudge and a song and listened to how connections to culture make a tangible difference. They truly help indigenous children walk in two worlds. I'm so thankful for the work they do, and I ask that these individuals receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to do two introductions today. First is a group of members from CancerControl Alberta and Cancer Strategic Clinical Network here in Alberta. October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month, as I imagine my colleagues are aware, and breast cancer is the most common female cancer in Alberta. More women are surviving cancer than ever before because of innovative treatment options, increased prevention, and, of course, treatment efforts as well as diagnostics. Thank you to these guests for their tireless work to help patients, support survivors, and find a cure. I ask that all of my guests please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: And if I could, Mr. Speaker, I have a second. Thank you very much. It's my pleasure to introduce Rosella Mandau and her partner, Robin Allison, who are constituents from Edmonton-Glenora. I'm very proud of that. Rosella is a proud owner of one of my favourite shops along 124th Street, Studio Bloom. It's also added recently a café, Wildflower Cafe. I love their beautiful fresh flowers, their jewellery, their coffee, and their giftware. I ask that Rosella and Robin please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly. To our MLAs who aren't from Edmonton, please feel free to stop by Studio Bloom and spend some money in Edmonton-Glenora.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ann Marie LePan, chief executive officer for the Robin Hood Association in my constituency of Sherwood Park and board member of ACDS. Mme LePan has worked tirelessly to ensure that Robin Hood is able to continue to provide excellent programs and services and tend to strong community relationships with private and public partners alike. Thank you, Ann Marie, for your creativity and compassion and for your commitment to working collaboratively to find solutions. Ann Marie, I ask you to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you two exceptional leaders from the disability service community, Ms Andrea Hesse, CEO of Alberta Council of Disability Services, and Dr. Nilima Sonpal-Valias, director of strategic initiatives and stakeholder engagement. The Alberta Council of Disability Services is a network of community disability sector organizations and a critical partner in our work to make life better for Albertans with disabilities. I also want to take this moment to congratulate them on their 45th anniversary, and I look forward to the continued partnership and advocacy. I ask both my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce two constituents of the hon. Minister of Advanced Education. I understand he had a very eventful morning this morning. They are a couple of Conservatives who have done an incredible job right there in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. Chris Rooyakkers is a political science student and a volunteer.

Of course, seated with him is the former Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, a man of great esteem and respect and respect for the traditions of this House, an all-round great parliamentarian, Mr. David Dorward. I invite you to welcome them.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Breast Cancer Awareness Month

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the final day of Breast Cancer Awareness Month. Breast cancer continues to be the most commonly diagnosed cancer and the second-leading cause of cancer-related deaths amongst Canadian women.

I rise today to remember my mother, Janice Goodridge, who we lost to breast cancer over eight years ago, at age 49. I remember the day I found out my mom was diagnosed with cancer. I remember it like it was yesterday. My life completely changed that day. My mom was my hero, my confidante, a small-business owner, an active community member, a feisty fashionista, and, ultimately, a strong fighter. Unfortunately, my mother was diagnosed with HER2-positive breast cancer, which is one of the most aggressive forms of breast cancer.

Had we found her cancer earlier, she might very well be here today. Sadly, the screening that could have saved her life was not easily nor readily available to people in Alberta, including my mother. In fact, in order for her to get a mammogram nine years ago, she had to drive down highway 63 and come to Edmonton. It was too late for us to find a successful treatment plan although I'm very proud to say that she was part of a drug trial that is now the gold standard treatment for women with this form of breast cancer, and she continues to save the lives of Alberta women.

Please take action. Remind every woman you know to talk to their doctor and get themselves checked. Consider making a donation to help fund critical cancer research. But more than anything, I urge all Albertans to personally support their friends and family with cancer with their time and unconditional love. It goes a long way, and you don't know how long you're going to have them around.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

United Conservative Party Membership

Connolly: Mr. Speaker, I'm rising on something that just a few years ago I never thought I'd have to do. I'm speaking to condemn the rise of racism, hatred, and actual Nazis in Alberta Conservative politics. Anti-Semitism and white supremacy have no place in this province, but disturbingly it seems the Leader of the Opposition ignores the extremists in his party.

It's come to light recently that the Leader of the Opposition hired a man to run his leadership campaign's phone bank, a man that has spewed racist, anti-Semitic views, a man whose social media history reveals that he uses anti-Semitic language and accused human rights commissions as, quote, antiwhite institutions. He wrote online: the leftists tend to be fat white women or degenerates, which I always find funny. After all that, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition gave this man a leadership role on his campaign, letting him manage 15 people for months. At the same time he also managed an online store that sells white supremacist paraphernalia, sickening materials, including T-shirts with slogans about shooting black people.

The UCP could have taken action before to stand up to extremism, but repeatedly we've seen the UCP allowing the rebirth of extremism in Alberta politics. The Leader of the Opposition has approved controversial candidates who've shared homophobic, Islamophobic, and racist views online. One compared Muslims to bank robbers. One tried to fund a Nazi meme scheme on Instagram. One shared a video calling homosexuality intrinsically disordered. One said that Islam should be banned, and a candidate in Edmonton posed and smiled for the camera with the hate group Soldiers of Odin.

I don't think that the Leader of the Opposition is racist, but his failure to act and his complacency are sending the message that these beliefs are welcome in his party. When someone shows you who they are, you should believe them, and the UCP continues to show that when it comes to extremists, they've got lots of room to spare in their party.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Peace Area Riding for the Disabled Society

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Peace Area Riding for the Disabled Society, otherwise known as PARDS, is a magical place in Grande Prairie. It is here that children and adults forge bonds with horses which can lead to amazing breakthroughs, and it's here where this magic comes in. These breakthroughs take place when the clients are simply enjoying themselves. Let me give you an example. Jennifer Douglas, executive director of PARDS, says that they have clients with autism who have never spoken, yet they've had a number of clients who start to vocalize at the centre. Their first word is usually "horse."

PARDS assists more than 600 clients a year through custom-tailored therapy programs that involve riding, grooming, and handling. Thankfully, this has strong community support because it doesn't fall under any category that allows them to obtain government funding. PARDS operates a $4 million centre, and operations are covered by donations, fundraising, and revenues earned through public boarding and riding services.

As I've outlined, the human-horse connection is the heart of PARDS. Also, its staff are equally important. Let me give you one more example. A father was concerned about his little girl because her mother had left and his work in the oil field kept him away for stretches of time. He enrolled her in PARDS, and on the first day one of PARDS' miniature ponies adopted her. Soon they were bonded, and the little girl started telling the story of her pony. Her pony, she told staff, was unlovable, and his dad chose not to be with him. Staff immediately understood that this story was the little girl's. They shared the story with her father, and they had suggestions to help her further. Three years later this little girl is thriving. You can see now why PARDS has trotted into so many hearts in my community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Women's History in Alberta

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Make an impact. Emily Murphy, Nellie McClung, Irene Parlby, Louise McKinney, and Henrietta Muir Edwards won through their persistence a great victory for women. On October 18, 1929, women were finally declared persons under Canadian law. On that very day Violet Pauline King was born in Calgary. Called to the Alberta bar on June 2, 1954, Ms King became the first black female lawyer to practise in Canada. More recently there is Beverley McLachlin, the 17th

Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, the first woman to hold that position and the longest serving Chief Justice in Canada. The late Hon. Senator Dr. Thelma J. Chalifoux was the first indigenous woman appointed to the Canadian Senate. A tireless social activist, she led the way for indigenous women in politics. This month two more fantastic Alberta women were sworn into the Canadian Senate, the Hon. Patti LaBoucane-Benson and the Hon. Paula Simons.

Many other women impacted the history of our province: union workers like my friend the late Judy Shannon; Jan Fox, the former district director of the Edmonton parole office; Jan Reimer, the first female mayor of Edmonton; Lieutenant Governors Helen Hunley, Lois Hole, and currently Lois Mitchell; the current Chief Justice of Alberta, Catherine Anne Fraser.

Today Alberta has a gender balanced cabinet, and we are led by our fearless female Premier, the second woman to achieve this pinnacle. We are enacting legislation which is always approached through a feminist, diverse lens. I am privileged to be the second woman to represent the constituents of Lethbridge-East. We must hear women's voices in this Legislature to have legislation . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Provincial Budget Revenue Forecasts

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In April 2018 the Finance minister said: we built pipeline revenues into our path to balance projections; we're confident all the pipelines will be built, so we're just going to keep going down this road. Now, fast forward to yesterday in question period. The Premier says that, in fact, pipelines are "not factored into the assumptions that underline our budget." Who is telling the truth: the Premier or the Finance minister?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me be clear. Our path to balance is intact. It does not rely solely on TMX. The Finance minister will make it clear that we're on track in the next quarterly update, and we've already reduced the deficit by $3 billion. What is clear is that the member opposite has a plan, too, and it's to cut $700 million in revenue by giving tax breaks to the super wealthy. That doesn't help Alberta reach its path to balance; standing up for ordinary folks does.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I see that the Deputy Premier continues to audition for opposition. I'm sure Albertans will give her her wish shortly, but here are the facts. In the budget that was presented to this House, it was clear that the Trans Mountain expansion, the budget numbers, had to be operational by 2021, so something has changed. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition continued to ask – this government could not answer, so I will now ask again – how you are replacing the lost revenue from Trans Mountain not being built in your budget.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier answered it yesterday, I answered it in my first answer, and I'll continue to answer it as we move forward. The path to balance doesn't solely rely on the completion of TMX. We have three pipelines. Two are already in process, and the third is on track. Our Premier, in fact, is advocating today at this very time in British Columbia to make sure that we get this path to tidewater completed. It's not only good for Alberta, and it's not only good for B.C., but it's good for all Canadians. I am proud to have a Premier who's fighting for Alberta instead of spending all of his time thinking about what might happen in 2019.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I never said that the whole budget depends on Trans Mountain. I never said that at all. The Deputy Premier just acknowledged that their projections that they provided to this House when the budget was passed relied on Trans Mountain being done by 2021. What we have simply been asking, the Premier refused to answer. The question now is: what are they hiding? Why won't they answer it? What are you replacing those revenue projections with?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, nobody is hiding. We answered the question yesterday, we'll answer it today, and we'll probably be asked yet again tomorrow. Our path to balance is intact. The Finance minister will give that update to all Albertans with the next quarterly update. In fact, our deficit is $3 billion reduced. That's good news. In terms of hiding, the Official Opposition is hiding the fact that their plan is for 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses to be cut. That would certainly move us backwards, not forward. I get why they're not being open and honest about that, but fortunately the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was recently, when he said that if there's a UCP government, it's going to hurt.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Nixon: Well, let's try something else, Mr. Speaker, because the Deputy Premier continues to hide, obviously. In 2015 the NDP committed to implementing a wait time measurement and wait-list management policy to address long wait times in the health care system. We now know that underneath this minister's watch for almost four years wait times have increased underneath the NDP's watch. So maybe the minister could take some time today to explain her terrible performance on this file.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I have to say how refreshing it is to have a leader's question on health care. It's nice to know that they care about that for a change. All Albertans deserve timely access to high-quality public health care when they need it, and we're fighting to improve health care across this province. More than 280,000 surgeries were performed last year in Alberta across 55 surgical sites, and as our population continues to grow and age, so does the demand for these services. That's why we need to invest in the front lines instead of fighting for a $700 million giveaway to the richest Albertans and making the front-line workers pay for it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. Underneath this minister's watch open-heart surgery wait times have increased by nearly 50 per cent, cataract surgery wait times have increased by nearly 30 per cent, hip replacement wait times have increased by another nearly 30 per cent, and knee replacement surgeries have increased by 23 per cent. That is under this minister's watch. The minister wants to continue to audition to be the Leader of the Opposition. We would appreciate it if she would stand up and be the Minister of Health and explain her failure on this file.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. We're continuing to increase capacity, and while anyone waiting for surgery doesn't want to wait – we don't want them to wait either – cutting resources from front lines would only make it worse. Demand is up. Supply is up, but so, too, is demand. That's why this year in Budget 2018 – I wish the members opposite would have voted for it; fortunately, we're in government, and we were able to pass it – we invested an additional $40 million in wait time reductions for things like surgery: cataract surgeries, cancer surgeries, hip and knee, and the list goes on, Mr. Speaker. We believe that it's important to invest in the people of Alberta, not privatize and outsource to the United States.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the question is about outcomes, not about spending. In fact, the NDP have increased spending by 14 per cent on health care since they came to office, and their wait times have gone up while spending more. That is a fact. Under this minister wait times have gone up. Albertans are waiting in pain longer on wait-lists while this minister continues to get up and just do partisan attacks. She needs to explain what has gone wrong with her ministry and why she has not come through with her commitment to address wait times. Why are you failing on this file?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, there are a number of wait times that have reduced. But for anyone who's waiting, we don't want to see them wait a day longer than necessary. That's why we're continuing to increase capacity. While members opposite call for deep cuts, we're increasing in a sustainable way. They used to have 6 per cent increases; we've gone to 3 per cent. But we've increased those resources on the front lines, expanding access because we know how important it is, improving access for mental health, improving access to EMS, and investing in things like home care, all things that the members opposite would cut. I care about front-line workers, and I care about everyday Albertans. I wish you spent more time focused on those than on the richest 1 per cent and giving them a $700 million tax break.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Federal Bill C-69

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Premier wants to talk about everyday Albertans. Well, let's talk about everyday Albertans. They are being punished because of our energy industry not being able to get our product to tidewater. Justin Trudeau brought forward Bill C-69 in the House of Commons, which will essentially kill all the pipelines built. While this side of the House continued to raise it with that side of the House, they sat on their hands and did nothing for 229 days while that bill passed in the House. Why?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. I'm so proud to be part of a government that has made more progress on pipelines than for 20 years when we had the Official Opposition then in Ottawa and also Conservatives here in Alberta, and they failed to hit tidewater by any stretch of means. Our Premier won't back down. That's why she's in British Columbia fighting for this pipeline. That's why she spends time in Alberta and right across this country, fighting for this pipeline, because it's in the national interest. Instead of the members opposite continuing to cheer that the pipeline fail, I wish they'd get onside and work to make sure that it succeeds because it's a project in the national interest, and it's certainly good for all . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm cheering for Albertans and this pipeline getting built and for this government to stop taking credit for something that has not been done. February 8 this bill was tabled in the House of Commons. March 19 it passed second reading in the House. March 29 the Leader of the Official Opposition sent a letter to the Premier; no response from the Premier. March 22 the committee held 14 meetings in Ottawa; no response from this government. The list goes on and on. All the while our energy critic was talking to Ottawa, they sat on their hands for 229 days. The question is simple: why?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been fighting for Alberta every step of the way. Alberta is, of course, the constitutional owner and regulator over the natural resource development in our province, and that's why we need meaningful opportunities to engage on regulation and policies that are still to be developed in C-69. The Minister of Environment and Parks led a group of key stakeholders to Ottawa last week that met with a number of Senators who will be debating C-69. Our message is clear. It's not appropriate in its current form. We will continue to fight for Alberta each and every day.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that is the point. They sent ministers after the bill had already passed in the House of Commons. Too little, too late. In fact, this minister said on May 16, 2018, in this Assembly, "How is it standing up for Alberta to hop on an airplane and jaunt off to Ottawa every time you get a chance?" How does that stand up for Albertans, she said. So, in other words, she was willing to prop up her close ally, Justin Trudeau, sit on her hands until the bill passed, and then, once the bill passed, finally go down to Ottawa and say that you have a concern with it. It's too little, too late, which is the history of this government. Again, through you, Mr. Speaker, why did it take you 229 days?

Ms Hoffman: If you want to talk about friends with Justin Trudeau, there seem to be no closer allies than the members opposite. What we have an opportunity to do is to move forward on an Alberta plan and an appropriate price on carbon, Mr. Speaker, that ensures that Alberta's interests are taken. Instead, the Leader of the Official Opposition has said: "You know what? We'll challenge it. Yeah, we probably won't be successful. Yeah, it'll probably mean that the feds have to implement their plan." That's not the Alberta way. We're here to fight for one another and to make sure that we get the right plan for the people of Alberta. I'm so proud that our Premier is doing that today and each and every day, and I wish the members opposite would get onboard and start cheering for Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

2:00 Support for Postsecondary Students

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Budget Officer recently reported that the federal government provides $12 billion of the over $35 billion in total funding for postsecondary institutions across Canada. The PBO is concerned that "there is no process to track the CST once it enters provincial accounts." To the Minister of Advanced Ed: what exactly are you doing with the Canada social transfer funds to support postsecondary students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Certainly, we had an important announcement to help support advanced education here in the last 24 hours, which was to freeze tuition rates and to have that indexed to inflation. I think that's a big step forward that's going to help Alberta students right across in each of our 26 postsecondary institutions.

In regard to working with the federal government, certainly, we work closely with them to ensure that we get the very top-quality education for our postsecondary students, and we'd be happy to pursue that now and in the future.

Ms McPherson: Thank you for the segue.

The PBO projected federal funding for student financing needs to increase by 31 per cent and funding for student employment needs to increase by 58 per cent if we hope to develop the talent that we need to grow our economy over the next five years. This government says that capping tuition at CPI is intended to cover wage increases; however, universities' other costs can increase by far more than local inflation. Again to the Minister of Advanced Ed: you've limited schools' self-generating funding options, so how exactly do you expect Albertans to pay for postsecondary education?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say that our government will make no apologies for making postsecondary education more affordable for students. There's no better way to ensure that a student, regardless of their economic circumstance or where they live in this province, gets access if it is an affordable possibility. So many students choose not to go to postsecondary because they just simply don't have the money or their family doesn't have the money. We are opening the doors to make sure we have an equitable and just postsecondary education system in this province.

Ms McPherson: Reducing financial barriers to education is intended to increase the number of students attending, but those students need seats at schools. Full-time enrolment at the U of C increased by 3.2 per cent last year, double Alberta's population growth, and students in their 40s were the fastest growing group of students. How are you going to increase access to postsecondary education for under- and unemployed Albertans like the 8.2 per cent of Calgarians who are out of work right now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, the best way to provide access for students regardless of their age is to make sure that it's an affordable proposition. I'm so proud of the progress that we've made in this regard. You know what? We have funded for education through this recession, during the economic downturn, for elementary students. They're going to move to junior high. They'll move to high school. We are making sure that we get that business done. You can't do that by making $700 million cuts, cutting teachers, and otherwise compromising the quality of education that all Albertans deserve.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I could just draw your attention and remind you yet again that we're now moving to question 5 on the list. Be conscious of the fact that this House appreciates members not using preambles in their supplementals and, secondly, ensure that the supplementals are related to the main question.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

2018 Harvest Support for Agriculture

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard first-hand in my region that this has been an incredibly challenging year for our producers. Dry conditions in the south, a wet fall in the central and northern regions, and smoke through some of the most important growing periods of the summer were just a few of the challenges faced by Alberta's farmers. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what were some of the challenges and the outcomes of this year's harvest so far?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Many of my colleagues on both sides were at an important event last night with farmers. I talked to farmers directly. This year's harvest was indeed a challenge. We had some growing conditions, some hot conditions, dry conditions, and we had early snowfall. But with our farmers' hard work and perseverance I'm very happy to say that 95 per cent of the crops are now in the bin, and I want all of us to thank Alberta farmers for their hard work.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After years of drought and adverse growing conditions early snow the last few years has had a devastating effect on Alberta's crops, which has led to challenges with AFSC payments. To the same minister: how has your department and AFSC adjusted practices and procedures to deal with this issue going forward?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, the staff and board of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation have the same hard-working spirit as farmers and ranchers. In fact, many of the staff and board of AFSC are farmers and ranchers themselves, and they remember past difficult harvests. Last year I asked them to find a way to streamline inspections to help clear the backlog. This year after the September snow we had several good weeks of weather. We stood ready to streamline inspections once again, but because of the good weather, we didn't have to.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The challenges faced by Alberta's producers will only become greater as the realities of climate change become clearer, a fact our friends across the aisle refuse to acknowledge. To the same minister: how does the government support producers when Mother Nature makes life more difficult for them?

Mr. Carlier: Climate change is a reality that our farmers and ranchers see first-hand as the years and generations pass, Mr. Speaker. First frost days are later. Last frost days are sooner. The province is wetter in some areas and drier in others. Along with this change we're seeing new pests and crop diseases on the landscape. We're helping farmers adapt. My department works on ways to guard against new pests and diseases through research at Alberta's postsecondary institutions and through our crop diversification centres. Unlike other governments, we're investing in agriculture through our climate leadership plan, which helps farmers and ranchers invest in energy efficiency. This helps cut emissions and save money.

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Government Services Communication with MLA Offices

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, one of the most important jobs of an MLA is to assist constituents with issues they are having accessing government services. A strong working relationship between MLA offices and local government service providers is essential, and that's what we have enjoyed in Vermilion-Lloydminster for many years. So it's baffling that the staff at Alberta Works offices have recently been ordered to not communicate with staff at local MLA offices. To the minister of social services: why have you hampered our ability to serve Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. It's my understanding that Alberta Works offices are available to all Albertans by walking in, by calling, by way of the web. We also have an MLA contact in our offices who helps MLAs with their issues relating to their constituents.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that many constituent concerns can be resolved quickly thanks to open lines of communication between our staff and local Alberta social services staff and given that the local workers for Alberta Seniors were similarly ordered to have no contact with staff in MLA offices and that all communications now have to flow through the minister's office and given that this edict requiring centralized command and control for all communications hampers services to Alberta seniors, to the minister of seniors: why have you ordered local Alberta Seniors officials to not have any contact with MLA offices?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, seniors built this province, and they deserve to retire in dignity, and we as a government absolutely want to liaise with constituency offices and make that process as accessible as possible. I'm happy to follow up with the member to find out the specifics of this concern. Certainly, our government wants to work to make sure that everybody is collaborating well.

Thank you so much.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, given that all MLAs and their constituency office staff work hard to give the best possible service in assisting Albertans and given that many issues can be resolved quickly and efficiently through good communication with local service providers who are familiar with the cases and the individuals involved and given that the recent change has resulted in a significant deterioration of service to Albertans, to either minister: will you reverse the directive preventing staff in regional offices from communicating with our constituency offices, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I'd be really happy to follow up with the hon. member. I am not aware of any directive. In fact, we've tried to create even more opportunities for engagement. That's why each and every minister has created an MLA contact in their office, to try to help liaise in a more effective way for those who would like to work with our offices. It's not our intent to not have local experts work with local community members or the MLA offices, so we'd be happy to really follow up and clarify whatever miscommunication may have been provided on that because that's certainly not our intent. We're working to make life easier and more effective and more available for the folks who are reaching out for supports.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Federal Carbon Pricing

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a simple question. Is it this government's position that the federal government has jurisdiction to force a carbon tax on the people of Alberta? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I'll take the first one, and then I'll be very happy to share with my colleague the Minister of Energy for supplementals.

Mr. Speaker, even the leader of the Official Opposition has admitted that that's the case. He said that if they go to court and they fail and they have to implement the Justin Trudeau carbon tax, he will certainly have to comply with that. I find it really interesting they're asking that question because their own leader has admitted that that is likely the very outcome, that the federal price on carbon will be implemented if Alberta doesn't act and do one on our own. We're being leaders, and we're moving forward in a responsible way.

Mrs. Aheer: That's interesting because given that last year the government's environment minister said, quote, our carbon price increases will track with the federal legislation that will be in place at that time; we've been clear about that from day one, end quote, and given that the NDP government now claims that this is no longer to be their position, why, then, won't they join with the other provinces in the court challenge that they are leading?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've worked from day one through our climate leadership plan to develop a made-in-Alberta solution, one that was developed in collaboration with industry, with stakeholders, with Albertans, all people who are involved, and we stand with that climate leadership plan. We stand with the solutions we've come up with, and we will continue to work with our made-in-Alberta plan.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Albertans deserve a government that is going to fight for them. Given that the government has just said today that their path to balance is not solely based on TMX and given that this government's budget plan is based on further raises to the carbon tax, perhaps that is the reason that they will not join in the court challenge. Otherwise, how are they going to raise the funds?

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. I said that I would give her the rest, and then I changed my mind.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to clarify that we have a path to balance that has a lot of careful contingencies built in, and that's why we are more than $3 billion ahead of where we thought we would be in terms of our path to balance. We are committed to moving forward on getting TMX, to making sure that we remove the price differential, and to making sure that all Canadians have the opportunity to prosper from this important plan. The members opposite are focused on firing 4,000 nurses, 4,000 teachers, and bringing in a $700 million tax giveaway to the wealthiest Albertans. I think our priorities are aligned with the values of everyday Albertans.

The Speaker: Calgary-West.

Drug-impaired Driving

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta has had years to prepare for the legalization of marijuana. One of its most important tasks was to ensure that police are trained and equipped to deal with the potential spike in drug-impaired drivers. The RCMP have indicated plans to purchase just four of the roadside saliva tests to cover the whole province, and Edmonton and Calgary police are considering – I repeat, only considering – using them. To the Justice minister: how many roadside saliva devices are in use in Alberta today now that marijuana is legal?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, it has always been the case that it was the plan to move forward with several different methods of testing for impairment, one of which the member should be familiar with, which is just to say roadside decision. That's police observing impaired behaviour and pulling the individuals over. In addition, we have increased training of drug recognition experts. One of the methods available to police, should they choose to use it, is a roadside saliva testing device. There are presently two more in testing, as I understand it, with the federal government right now, and police services will make those decisions based on their individual needs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The first supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta has long known that it would need many more police officers trained as drug recognition experts when marijuana became legal and given that RCMP are reporting that only 42 officers have this training, which means that only 37 per cent of Alberta's 113 RCMP detachments will have one of these experts, Minister, this is deeply concerning. Are you not worried that this lack of experts puts public safety at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again for the very important question. We all know that one of the main concerns that came from Albertans with respect to the legalization of cannabis, which, again, was a federal decision, is ultimately that there will be an increase in impaired drivers on the roads. We've been working very closely with the services to ensure that they're able to get access to those trainings and to be able to get funding for the access. In addition to the drug recognition experts, there is other training in terms of observations going forward for officers. But certainly we'll continue to work with those services to make sure that we're putting through as many drug recognition experts as possible.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, what the minister is referring to is field sobriety tests, and that's not even close to what is needed right now.

Mr. Speaker, given that a critical component to ensuring that Alberta can prosecute drug-impaired drivers requires more capability to test blood than in the past and given that only specially trained technicians can perform this task, Minister, are all police detachments able to complete on-site blood tests, or are police forced to take their suspects to Alberta's overburdened hospitals and wait in the hallways along with the paramedics and their patients to collect crucial evidence for marijuana files?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I've indicated, we've worked very closely with police services to make sure that they have everything that they need. Certainly, legalization happened very recently. The province of Alberta, fortunately, was out in front relative to other provinces. In fact, other provinces were looking to us with the fantastic model that we had built. Certainly, as this moves forward, we will continue to work with those services to ensure that they have everything they need in every incident case.

Grain Drying and the Carbon Levy

Mr. Loewen: On Monday Alberta's Official Opposition asked multiple questions regarding the carbon tax and how it affects farmers drying their grain in an exceptionally wet fall. Grain drying is not optional and, in fact, is essential in order to not have grain literally rot in the bins. Unfortunately, the minister's answers were far from clear, choosing instead to talk about the weather and other things that were irrelevant to the questions. Can the minister today clearly explain to Alberta farmers how they will be reimbursed for the cost of the carbon tax on their grain drying?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're absolutely committed to supporting farmers in their quest to reduce emissions, reduce emissions but also reduce their overall energy costs, which will make them, of course, more efficient. Through the climate leadership plan we've devoted $81 million over four years for farm efficiencies such as on-farm solar. We've also introduced a 50 per cent rebate on retrofitting and upgrading their grain dryers. That will go a long way in making sure that farmers are doing what they want to do best: grow their great products and reduce their own greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. Loewen: Given that on Monday the minister attempted to claim that grain drying costs can be recovered through AFSC and given that AFSC compensation received for grain drying did not change with the introduction of the carbon tax and given that farmers that I talked to have told me that such provisions simply do not make up for the high cost of the carbon tax, will the minister admit that the carbon tax places an unacceptable burden on hard-working Alberta farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The member's own colleague last night was saying that if the price of natural gas were higher, then the carbon levy by a percentage wouldn't be as much. Yes, true. Natural gas is a really high cost right now. The carbon levy, you know, is part of our energy efficiency plans, part of our climate leadership plan, which the farmers are embracing. Farmers, when I talk to them, want to do their part. They ask me: what can we do to lower our greenhouse gas emissions, do our part, and as well find those efficiencies to make our operations more efficient?

Mr. Loewen: Given that the minister refuses to answer the question on how the carbon tax benefits farmers and given that farmers accept the fact that some years they have to dry their grain and given that the carbon tax adds huge additional costs to doing business that reduce their global competitiveness, when will this government remove the carbon tax so that the fine farmers of Alberta will not be burdened by these excessive and unnecessary expenses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'll apologize to you if this sounds repetitive because it is. With the climate leadership plan we're devoting $81 million over four years for farm efficiencies and on-farm solar. This is a program that has been well received by farmers for energy efficiencies in irrigation, in solar, in dairy barns, in chicken barns, et cetera. As well, a 50 per cent rebate on retrofitting, upgrading grain dryers is well received by the farmers. That's what they're looking for from this government, and they're getting that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Social Supports in Edmonton

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last year the city of Edmonton initiative the recover project worked to explore how we can best balance urban renewal downtown with supporting individuals living with homelessness, personal trauma, substance use, and mental health challenges. The recommendations came out and were adopted by the city in August. They included prioritizing service delivery, which embraces harm reduction and increased collaboration amongst providers to improve outcomes for those they serve. To the Minister of Community and Social Services, will you take these factors into consideration when deciding future funding for service providers in Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for your question and for your advocacy. All Albertans deserve a safe place to call home and receive the support they need to address the challenges they are facing. We recognize that issues facing Albertans are complex, and that's why our government has taken steps and invested in prevention efforts through our FCSS increase of $25 million, our antipoverty work, and our work with respect to combatting homelessness, investing $191 million. Our ongoing commitment to affordable housing is a key way that our government . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Edmonton city council has clearly stated that their priority in addressing chronic homelessness is to move past traditional models in favour of focused investment in supportive housing and given that the city is in fact currently looking to purchase four apartment buildings to convert to supportive units, to the same minister: what commitments have you made to help fund wraparound supports, and will you work with the city of Edmonton to expand these further?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We have maintained stable and predictable funding for all partners, and also Budget 2018 continues the government of Alberta's historic $1.2 billion commitment to maintain and improve safe, secure, and affordable housing. We are continuing to work with our municipal and community partners, including Edmonton, to find solutions facing Albertans in Edmonton, and we know that this means having their backs by investing in supports and services they rely on and not making reckless . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a report to Edmonton's council this year estimated an overall need for an additional 916 units of supportive housing and given that city staff are now working to identify sites across Edmonton where these units could be built, to the same minister: what steps have you taken to help provide access to the funding needed, and how will you support this construction going forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. All Albertans deserve a place to call home, and that is why we have invested $7 million for over 60 affordable housing units in Edmonton alone, and we have invested in over 300 more supportive housing units in communities, including Edmonton. We know that providing access to additional health and treatment support helps end the cycle of chronic homelessness. That is why we have made strong and predictable investments instead of making cuts that we all know will hurt, as was described by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Grain Marketing, Storage, and Handling

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend the NDP and their supporters came together and passed some policy resolutions. One dealt with grain and the resolution to, and I quote: formally examine the impact to Canada's international reputation that has resulted from the changes to Canada's grain marketing, storage, and handling system. End quote. Minister, in all your travels I have never heard you publicly say that Canada's reputation and, by extension, Alberta's grain growers have somehow been diminished by any recent changes in that federal policy. Have you?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Over the years we've seen increased production from our hard-working Alberta farmers, which is fantastic, but which means more product on the rail lines. We're working with the federal government in their deliberations on changing the Canada Transportation Act, which helps a lot. We know from both CN and CP, the main characters, that they're increasing production. But that concern is still there, that we're able to have the capacity on our whole transportation system, making sure that we can get our products to market, and to continue working with the federal government and the railway systems to ensure that happens.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, given that that resolution goes on to recommend, and I quote, "to put into place any additional government oversight needed to ensure that Canada's grain marketing, storage, and handling system works efficiently to the mutual benefit of all," Minister, to this third generation son of a rich farmer it sure sounds like your party is advocating that Alberta's farmers and our friends across Canada will once again be forced into a 1943-based monopoly, formerly called the Canadian Wheat Board. Is that your government's intention?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, I'm somewhat confused by the question. I'm pretty sure the member wasn't at the convention. He might have been. You know, it was a very large convention, the largest convention the NDP has ever seen in this province. Perhaps he was there. I didn't see him.

No, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are some challenges without a doubt in the transportation. We've seen some great success in both CN and CP ordering a thousand new hopper cars each, new double tracking, new terminals being built across the province. I think we're setting up to be in good shape for the future.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that several farmers, including myself, were thrown into jail for daring to take our own property, our commodity, wheat and barley grown by us, into the U.S.A. and giving it to a 4-H club, Minister, is this how your government would like to rebuild the tattered relationships with rural Alberta farmers and ranchers going forward into 2019?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of this government's work on supporting our agriculture across the province. Last year we saw record export profits of $11.2 billion. I think that speaks volumes. That's over 12 per cent more than the year before that. Agriculture year after year is breaking records. This government is very proud of our record with the agriculture community. I'm very proud of myself as I continue working with the agriculture producers, processors across this province. They continue the good work that they're doing growing and making and selling good products across the country and around the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Victims of Crime Fund

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice recently announced an "increase in available funding" and "new funding" for victims of crime. But it is not new. The surplus in the victims of crime fund has been growing for years. Victims of crime organizations have been prevented from accessing their own money. The money was mandated to benefit victims of crime funds all along. Why has this money been withheld all these years and why is it now announced as new money only months before an election?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the slightly misguided question. We have in fact made additional monies available to the victims of crime organizations. Several of those organizations were standing with me as we announced that. It is the case that over the course of more than a decade now there has been a surplus accumulating. Unfortunately, governments previous to ours had done no work around what the needs of victims were, how to meet those needs, how to measure whether we were meeting those needs, so the Auditor General asked us to do lots of that work before we were able to increase the funding to those organizations. We've now done that work, and we're happy to announce the increase.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Orr: Given that rural communities are in an epidemic of crime that has been escalating for years, rural victims deserve support, yet the access to victims' funds is for five urban municipalities only and no rural regions. This is patently inequitable and unjust. Further, given that the Rural Municipalities resolution this spring called upon the government of Alberta to use the money from the victims of crime to adequately fund provincial victims' services units, why have rural regions been excluded?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There were multiple things that were announced in the announcement recently. Some of them were funding for the most strapped victims' services. We worked with the organization that represents all of the victims' services organizations, and they said where the greatest need was, and therefore we flowed additional funding to those particular instances. In addition to that, there was an increase in funding for certain victims of crime areas that deal with certain indigenous areas as well, so we've increased the supports to those units that are supporting those indigenous areas, which include rural units.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, given that the Auditor General, in fact, has called upon the government to "develop a plan that . . . identifies what the actual current needs of the victims of crime population are and . . . identifies gaps in service" and that much of that victim population is, in fact, rural and given that the crime-ridden rural regions have reduced access to victims' services and depend on heroic volunteers, who are now excluded from this plan, why does this government think it's acceptable to exclude the many repeatedly traumatized rural victims?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There was a lot in there, but I'd like to just say that I'm incredibly proud of the work we've been doing with the victims of crime organizations. As the member has correctly identified, the Auditor General made recommendations arising from the fact that our predecessors had failed to do any of that work to identify the needs of victims. We have now identified that. In addition, I think it's important to note that we are extremely concerned about rural crime. That's why we're funding a plan that's already working. Meanwhile the opposition voted against that plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month at the AUMA convention a very critical issue was raised once again that resulted in a resolution being passed regarding long-term, sustainable, and predictable funding through the municipal sustainability initiative, also known as MSI. To the minister. Your government has had three and a half years to follow through with the 2015 election promise to address this issue and now eight months to consult on and roll out this new program mentioned in the 2018 budget. Minister, given all that time why have you not yet provided clear details to municipalities on this funding?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you to the member for the question. I think our budget was pretty clear, that we extended it to 2022, the MSI funding, and we funded through the downturn to our municipalities so they could build the infrastructure that they needed to support the people in our communities, which we knew was important. We had crumbling infrastructure left for way too long: schools, hospitals, bridges, roads. To help our farmers, help our oil and gas industries out there, we made sure the funding was there. We are continuing to work with municipalities to make sure that they have a long-term, sustainable funding deal, and we'll make sure that that gets done.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, obviously, that wasn't good enough for the AUMA.

Given that with the passing of the former Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015, there are requirements for municipalities, as he's well aware, to do three-year and five-year financial plans and given that, once again, this continued delay in releasing details of this new program is unsatisfactory to the AUMA and municipalities, who are required to do their budget processes in the fall, to the minister: how can they even attempt to start these mandatory plans without being informed of this government's new, precise intentions for MSI funding before their fall deadlines are missed once again?

Mr. S. Anderson: Well, thank you to the member for the question. I don't know what $700 million tax cuts to the rich would do for our municipalities. Nothing very good. But, as I've said, we've made sure the funding is there through to 2022. We've been working with the AUMA, the RMA, and the two big cities on city charters to come to long-term, sustainable deals. We will continue to do that. In fact, I have another meeting coming up with the RMA and the AUMA pretty quick here. It's something that we don't do on Twitter or on Facebook. We work face to face with these representatives from these associations. I've got great relationships with them, and it is a word that I call "consultation," Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the precise details are hard to get today.

Given that after a very thorough consultation with their members the AUMA passed a special, extraordinary resolution at their convention regarding this annual funding infrastructure requirement and given that in my area the mayors and Reeves of southern Alberta have sent numerous letters to the minister in the past demanding that MSI funding intended for the next two years be fully disclosed, Minister, will you commit today in this House to respond to the AUMA's request and commit to communicating this vital, clear information immediately to the municipalities before once again it's too late for fall budgets?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for letting me clarify again that it is in our budget. They know exactly what they have until 2022. We have lots of time to work with them. I do want to get it sooner because I promised them that I would sit down with them, which I'm doing next week. I would like to know what saying the words "it'll hurt" will mean, like the member from Lac La Biche. Will that hurt our municipalities? Will that hurt our infrastructure in our municipalities? I think it probably would. But on this side we consult with the associations. They represent 342 municipalities and eight Métis settlements across this province. I have the best interests of Albertans all across this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Cannabis Legalization and Smaller Municipalities

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Communities in my constituency are concerned about the impact of drug-impaired driving and of other spillover effects from the legalization of cannabis. Municipal governments are already stretched in many of the small communities in my constituency, but for some reason they've been left out of this government's plans to deal with legal cannabis. To the minister: why did you consult with some communities but not others?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually proud to say that our cannabis consultation took in the most Albertans of any consultation ever performed by the government of Alberta. We had two waves of online consultation. We had multiple round-tables. We had consultation with various different groups. That allowed us to create an Alberta-specific plan. We didn't have the choice over whether or not to legalize cannabis, but we did have the choice to put forward a plan that reflected the views and values of Albertans, and that's exactly what we did.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that smaller communities in my constituency have indicated to me that they could struggle to deal with the new issues that legal cannabis will bring and given that they will need to add these new obligations to their existing responsibilities and given that they will too often be faced with the choice between allocating resources to cannabis issues and maintaining their current priorities, how are smaller communities supposed to address this reality?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First, I'll maybe touch on the big picture and go down to the smaller one. You know, we're providing $11.2 million over two years for municipalities to help with the enforcement costs in those municipalities. That's similar to the levels that Ontario and Quebec are providing their municipalities. That means that 52 municipalities across the province will be eligible for this funding, and for those that are smaller than 5,000 people, the province of Alberta is paying for those policing costs.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of the problems identified could have been addressed with appropriate consultation between the government and the smaller municipalities, communities in my constituency have asked if the minister will rescind the program and invite the AUMA back to the table for meaningful consultation to discuss the distribution of excise funding to all municipalities. Is this something the government is willing to do?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. The federal government and the provinces and territories in Canada have agreed to a two-year program of funding and the splitting of excise taxes. This province stood up for Alberta and all the rest of the provinces and said: the 50-50 share in excise tax was not enough; we need more to address the safety concerns, to address keeping it out of the hands of youth. We have a two-year program.

We're going to follow through with that two-year program, and the AUMA and other groups know that.

Advocate for Persons with Disabilities

Ms McKittrick: M. le Président, yesterday the Minister of Community and Social Services announced Alberta's first-ever Advocate for Persons with Disabilities. The advocate position was established through Bill 205, and the community is supportive of this new role. Tony Flores, a para-athlete and long-time advocate for persons with disabilities, has been appointed and starts immediately. To the minister: This important appointment requires further elaboration. What are the key responsibilities of the new advocate's office?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Once again I want to congratulate Mr. Tony Flores on his appointment. We believe that as with all issues facing Albertans with disabilities, we've worked with them, and we consulted with them on this particular office. More than 1,300 Albertans weighed in on the role and responsibilities and priorities for the advocate. What we heard from the community is that the advocate should be listening to the community, providing individual navigation and issue resolution, and promoting inclusion of Albertans with disabilities.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Merci, M. le Président. Self-advocacy efforts of groups like Disability Action Hall, Voice of Albertans with Disabilities, and Self-Advocacy Federation have been very important to my work. To the same minister: how will the advocate ensure self-advocacy efforts are supported and not diminished with this new role?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The advocate has said that he believes in Nothing about Us without Us, and we agree and believe self-advocacy should be supported, promoted, and not replaced. The advocate will work closely in partnership with Albertans with disabilities and advocacy groups to listen, build bridges, and strengthen self-advocacy across Alberta.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know Albertans are very keen to start connecting with the advocate's office. To the same minister: when will the advocate's office officially be opened, and how will Albertans be able to access the support?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I'm pleased to share that the advocate's office will be open to the public this November, and any Albertan with a disability, a family member, or an advocate will be able to connect with this office. We are excited to get to work with the advocate to build on our government's work to make life better for Albertans with disabilities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll continue with Members' Statements in 30 seconds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Premier Peter Lougheed's Vision for Alberta

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it bothers me that members of every party in this House feel free to praise Peter Lougheed as if he was one of their own. They act as if the Lougheed vision evolved from their political heritage. The NDP even had the gall to do this at their socialist convention on the weekend. I have taken the time to speak to key advisers of the Lougheed era as well as other people who were close to this great Albertan. What is very clear to me is that Premier Lougheed was never one to get caught up in a brand. In fact, you may be surprised that what he most valued was good governance, and performing good governance means listening to the people of Alberta.

Because of the general misunderstanding, I'm confident that the vision of this government and other opposition members is likely inaccurate. Peter Lougheed and Ralph Klein were two of the greatest Premiers our province has seen. They both insisted that members of their cabinet and caucus get out from under the dome and listen to the people that they represent and that we represent.

Furthermore, Premier Lougheed had a crystal-clear economic strategy. First, build an entrepreneurial and self-reliant culture which allows for small, smart, stable government and provide the lowest possible tax environment, which attracts massive foreign investment and stimulates greater entrepreneurial growth. We are not even close to that vision today in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we are hurting so much. I believe Premier Lougheed would be disheartened, to say the least, if he knew the state of Alberta and Albertans today. Therefore, if other parties want to claim allegiance to him, they need to rejuvenate his vision for Alberta, not commandeer it in name only.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Longest Mural in Canada

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer over the August long weekend the communities of Calgary-Northern Hills painted the longest mural in Canada. How did that happen? Calgary artist Kim Walker noticed that a fence line along a major roadway in Coventry Hills was deteriorating. Instead of a problem, she saw an opportunity. She envisioned bringing her community together to repair the fence while also creating an 850-metre-long mural that would be naturally lit up by the evening sunset.

Kim got to work. She designed a mural project capable of leaving a legacy and providing meaningful work to strengthen artists' professional portfolios, educational mentorships for aspiring young artists, and opportunities to build community spirit through neighbourhood beautification.

In addition, Kim wanted the mural project to contribute to Calgary's conversation about public art by showcasing the value of art created through community participation. Residents were invited to participate at every step of the process, from concept to creation. Mr. Speaker, amazingly, the fence was scraped, cleaned, repaired, primed, and painted in four weeks.

The mural is now a reality thanks to artist Mark Vazquez-Mackay's expertise and beautiful mural design of the history of Calgary that was guided by public consultation.

Lindsay Lantela, Makenna Millot, Misty Ring, and 23 other volunteers lent their artistic talents; Yana Soldatenko and Laura Hack of the NHCA helped organize the mural project; 35 community partners, who believed in the project's vision, donated resources; and, finally, more than 700 Calgarians came out to help.

Together as a community we achieved something incredible, the longest mural in Canada, that's approximately 6.5 football fields in length. Through this project we have created a proud legacy, and the mural is a focal point of the Calgary-Northern Hills communities, showing us what we are capable of when we work together.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of the report of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, which provides a summary of the presentations received by the committee at its public meeting on September 25, 2018. Copies of the report will be provided to the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment and Parks. Additional copies of the report are available through the committee office and online.

Thank you very much.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time I intend to move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately move to withdraw the proposed Bill C-69, which is a threat to Alberta jobs and pipeline construction.

I have the appropriate number of copies.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 22 An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to request leave to introduce Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities.

This bill will create a fairer, stronger, and more transparent child intervention system for the more than 10,000 children and youth who are in care across Alberta. It will increase fairness for indigenous peoples and improve supports for children in and out of care. Introducing this legislation is a key component of our public action plan, A Stronger, Safer Tomorrow, and a decisive step forward for our province. I look forward to discussion and deliberation with my colleagues on this very important legislation.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Phillips, Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office, pursuant to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act the environmental protection security fund annual report, April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2018.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we are at points of order. To confirm, there were two points of order, both withdrawn, by the opposition. I believe there was a point of order raised by the Government House Leader.

Justice minister, yes.

Point of Order

Questions outside Ministerial Responsibility

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise with respect to rules surrounding question period. I'm citing here page 509 from House of Commons Procedure and Practice. It references specifically that questions should not "refer to public statements by Ministers" not directly related to their department or "address a Minister's former portfolio or . . . presumed functions, such as party or regional political responsibilities."

My suggestion, Mr. Speaker, is that questions with respect to matters having to do with the party are out of order with respect to the government responsibilities of the minister.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it is extremely rich of the government to now suggest that they don't want to talk about party policy ever in the Assembly given that all this government can do is talk about the opposition's party policies. I could pull out reams of Hansard during question period of cabinet ministers referring to UCP policies. Further to that, even today we watched the Deputy Premier and other ministers over and over and over allege policies that, in fact, don't even exist. This is ridiculous.

Let's be very clear. The NDP had a resolution that has to do with bringing back the Wheat Board and causing significant problems for the farmers who have fought against that in our province for a long time. The member is the agriculture critic for the opposition. He's asking questions about government policy and whether or not the minister, who is the minister in charge of agriculture, would support something along those lines. He has every right to ask that and he should ask that, especially considering that today we watched another minister of the Crown get up and insult farmers and say about the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake that his father was just a rich farmer. I know his father well. He's a dear friend. He's not a rich farmer. He's a schoolteacher – this is important – who they insulted and still have not apologized for . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we'll deal with that . . .

Mr. Nixon: . . . and now they want . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm speaking.

Mr. Nixon: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I didn't hear you.

The Speaker: That's because you were speaking. Try and stay away from the other issue and deal with this point right now.

Mr. Nixon: Well, the issue is that this is a ridiculous point of order designed by a government who can't run on their own record and is running scared and trying to stop this member from doing his job.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, you have additional contributions to make?

Mr. Mason: I do, Mr. Speaker. The point is that the rules are quite clear with respect to putting up oral questions in question period to ministers. They don't apply to debate in the House as a whole. It's quite permissible to talk about party politics and all kinds of politics in this House. That's part of what we do here. The rule is specifically to prevent people in question period from trying to get a minister to answer questions outside his or her responsibilities.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, if you'd permit me to reread my question.

The Speaker: Yes. Go ahead.

Mr. Strankman: "Minister, in all your travels I have never heard you publicly say that Canada's reputation and, by extension, Alberta's grain growers have somehow been diminished by any recent changes in that federal policy." It was as simple as that. I was asking the minister if he felt that by change of a policy, Canada's grain reputation had been diminished. I think it's a fair question, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: What the member just read was what I have in the Blues. Let me just first of all ask a question to the Justice minister.

The Government House Leader just referred to a rule. Was he intending to speak to the standing orders of this Legislature? Or was it a reference to Beauchesne or the House?

Ms Ganley: It was a reference to the same section I was referring to in 509. I had apparently not made clear, according to the opposition's argument, that it was rules not around debate in the House in its entirety but specifically around what questions could be put to ministers and, that is to say, specifically questions within that minister's portfolio and not outside of it.

The Speaker: Well, what I have is actually on page 510, not 509. There are a number of issues related to questions in the House. The particular one that I think we are talking about is this reference: "Make a charge by way of a preamble to a question." That may be the other one. I think there's another one in here.

I haven't done this for a while. This one is a question that I'd like to make myself a little more familiar with. Let me defer the matter until I can check. I thought I had my source here, but I did not, so if the House would grant me that opportunity.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: I believe we have a motion by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Federal Bill C-69

Mr. Nixon:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately move to withdraw the proposed Bill C-69, which is a threat to Alberta jobs and pipeline construction.

Mr. Nixon: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My motion is very, very simple. It appears to me that everybody should agree that Bill C-69 is bad, an extreme danger to the province of Alberta. Despite the fact that it has taken the government 229 days to act, it does not mean that they should not take action now. This motion would send a clear message from this House to the House of Commons and to the Prime Minister of Canada and the federal Liberals that this is not acceptable and that we expect them to take action. I call on all members to join me in sending that clear message to Ottawa.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Securities Amendment Act, 2018

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 20, Securities Amendment Act, 2018. It seems we get a securities amendment act every year. While we may get lulled into complacency about such pieces of legislation, the Securities Act is fundamental for the good and orderly working of our capitalist system. Capitalism has done more to lift more people out of poverty than any other economic system, including communism. I should know, just looking at my home country. With record growth people escaped poverty.

Alberta's capital market makes up 25 per cent of Canada's capital market, not bad for only having 12.5 per cent of the country's population. The Securities Act governs the issue of investment vehicles like stocks, bonds, mutual funds, real estate income trusts. This is how regular people like you and me pool our capital resources, assess the risk, make investments, and earn a return on that capital. We need to be able to enfranchise the many in the economic life of Alberta. Share ownership in our businesses is the power of the people according to the late Margaret Thatcher. According to the BBC Four documentary Tory! Tory! Tory! when Margaret Thatcher came to power in 1979, 7 per cent of the people in the U.K. owned shares. By 1990 it went up to 25 per cent. I would like to know what the numbers are for share ownership in Alberta.

When more people own shares, more people understand capitalism. With the salaries we make as MLAs, I'm sure there are members of the NDP backbench who can afford to try share ownership. Once you get the taste of those first dividend cheques, you will drop your ideas about socialism or running to the Ethics Commissioner because I own shares in the companies that I used to work for.

It greatly troubled me to see the pictures of not just socialist materials on sale at the NDP convention but also Marxist and Communist materials. These ideologies have caused the deaths of tens of millions around the world, wherever they were tried or implemented. Later this month we will mark one of those ideologically imposed genocides, the Holodomor, the terror of famine in the Ukraine. The effects of that continue to resonate today with the war in the Donbass, where the ceasefire is broken every day.

If some of the NDP members particularly owned shares in Alberta businesses, maybe they would stop being NDP members and embrace the joys of capitalism. Once you know you need to create wealth to distribute it, that gets some fiscal discipline here, Madam Chair. The free flow of capital is essential for the workings of Alberta's and Canada's economies.

That's why I travelled to India and Hong Kong in September. I went looking for capital to come to Alberta and invest and went looking for places for Alberta businesses to invest their capital in India and Hong Kong. Conservatives went out and negotiated the comprehensive economic and trade agreement, CETA, with the European Union. Europe is a market of 550 million people. The harmonization needed for the benchmarks will allow European banks to access capital from Canadian banks, maybe even Alberta banks like Canadian Western Bank or ATB Financial. Maybe instead of criticizing our oil sands, BNP Paribas would actually show up and set up a branch in Calgary or Edmonton.

There was an argument some time ago about making Edmonton a financial services cluster because we have ATB Financial, Canadian Western Bank, Servus Credit Union, and AIMCo. Yet the Alberta Securities Commission and investment banks like OTT Financial reside in Calgary. Edmonton seems to be missing something.

I would expect that next year we will have another securities amendment act in order to enact provisions of the comprehensive and progressive trans-Pacific partnership, TPP, to allow harmonization with other benchmarks. Can the minister name the two Canadian benchmarks that are affected by Bill 20?

In the fight against acts of market manipulation, insider trading, or trading investors' money in a cavalier way, there are provisions in Bill 20 for whistle-blower protection. Acts of insider trading and market manipulation cause investors to lose faith in the markets. No one wants a rigged game, where the house always wins, Madam Chair. No one wants to invest in Ponzi schemes, either. Can you imagine what would have happened if a whistle-blower had come forward to the Securities and Exchange Commission in the U.S.A. and helped shut down Bernie Madoff's elaborate Ponzi scheme?

Or how about over in London? When it comes to whistle-blowing, I think about the London Whale. The London Whale was the nickname for a trader who lost at least $6.2 billion belonging to JPMorgan Chase in 2012. The Whale earned his nickname for placing gigantic trades in small indexes, where the trades would stick out and everyone would notice. Facing criminal charges for security fraud, he was never formally charged, but his boss was. JPMorgan Chase admitted to violating securities laws, and they agreed to pay fines of more than $1 billion. The bank's CEO, Jamie Dimon, took a pay cut despite the bank still making $21.3 billion that year, Madam Chair, and it turns out that risk limits were breached more than 300 times before the bank switched risk evaluation formulas. A calculation error in the spreadsheet was the culprit.

I wonder if the minister is familiar with any whale-type situations happening in Alberta. Now with this legislation in Bill 20 maybe a whistle-blower will come forward with any whales out there. Legitimate whistle-blowers need to be protected from persecution by their employers. We know employers will try and go after whistle-blowers. At the same time, whistle-blowing should never be used to fight personal grudges or as payback against a broker for earnings below expectations.

Madam Chair, Bill 20 is a very fair and reasonable piece of legislation. I hope the minister was listening and is able to answer my questions on the benchmarks and may be able to provide any information on regulations that will flow from this legislation. I also hope the minister will be able to answer how many Albertans are shareholders.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, amendments? Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. There was a lot going on in that there, but I think I did catch a little bit of a question there around some of the benchmarks that are used. I think that in Canada there are certainly two important benchmarks: the Canadian overnight repo rate average, or CORRA, and the Canadian dollar offered rate, or CDOR. I think that when we look at all these things, we do need to look at a global perspective and understand that some of these changes are making sure that we're harmonized across the country as well as with some of the changes coming internationally.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, amendments? Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to Bill 20, the Securities Amendment Act, 2018. It's quite clear to all of us here that sound regulation is a necessary piece of the puzzle of regulation in the securities industry, particularly when it comes to building investor confidence in the province of Alberta, which is important to all members of the House. It's also very clear to me that we need to be working together with all of our provincial and international counterparts to ensure that compliance with regulations is both simple and straightforward and comprehensive.

Madam Chair, quite frankly, investor confidence needs all the help it can get in Alberta these days as it tries to recover from this government's job-killing carbon tax and its investment-repelling regulatory overreach in countless other sectors. These have been a major impediment to our ability to attract investors in this province, so a structural framework that ensures confidence and trust in our system may go some measure in helping us to achieve and maybe to return to that level of confidence.

The current government has undermined the economic fundamentals of this province as well, and that's created huge problems for investors considering the province, both domestic investors here in Alberta and across Canada but also international investors who have chosen not to continue to look at this as a place to invest. It's created a perceived imbalance of risks versus rewards in this province, Madam Chair, a balance which is all too important to all of us here in this province.

You know, when we look across the world at regulation and opportunities and stability and trust, we have much to learn from vibrant securities markets around the world. From New York to Hong Kong, from London to Tokyo, from Frankfurt to Shanghai we have and must be leaders in having a strong and trusted regulatory environment. In some measure I'm pleased to see that the act promises to protect whistle-blowers when they come forward but also removes incentives for false claims and that it protects Alberta Securities Commission employees from being dragged into third-party disputes. It does create an opportunity for the system to function better, for the trust and the regulatory environment to allow for clarity, and for that system to actually function in a better format in terms of our ability, again, to attract that much-needed investment.

I'm concerned, however, that it might not do enough to protect Alberta's jurisdiction over securities regulations, and I wonder whether we're harmonizing regulations with Ontario or simply accepting the province's regulatory decisions. I hope that we will maintain some independence on that side.

Madam Chair, the free flow of capital is essential for the workings of Alberta's and Canada's economies, whether that's, again, domestic investment, whether that's reinvestment within our province, or attraction of much-needed foreign capital.

I've spoken in this House and we speak across this province about the loss of at least now, to date, $34.8 billion in foreign direct investment. That was actually in the spring of 2017, that number, and I know that we've lost some major investments since then, which concerns me. It concerns me that we are not in a position right now where we are attracting back that investment.

You know, in spite of the scholarly opinion of some of the closest economic allies of this government, I do not believe that the flight of foreign capital is ever good for Alberta or Canada. When we don't attract foreign investment, that very much becomes the canary in the coal mine for local investors. Do they keep their money here, or do they look elsewhere? In many cases we found not just foreign direct investment leaving this province, Madam Chair, but we've seen Alberta companies take their capital elsewhere, to projects outside of the jurisdiction of Alberta. We need to make certain that our regulatory system allows them the opportunity to do that here with certainty.

We've also seen significant divestiture by Canadian and international pension funds. These numbers are a little bit harder to track, Madam Chair, but I've heard anecdotally that this number could be in the hundreds of billions of dollars across the Canadian economy. Many of those impacted in the real estate and the energy sectors here are in Alberta. That also concerns me, that we are not in a position where we are attracting that investment by managing that balance between risk and reward.

My colleague from Calgary-Foothills mentioned that we welcome European capital investment and that our businesses are looking forward to investing in Europe, that exchange of trade and investment that is brought to us by Conservative initiatives – federal Conservative initiatives – to negotiate the comprehensive economic and trade agreement, or CETA, with the European Union. That is important to Canada and to Alberta. As we know, Europe is a market of 550 million people, well over 10 times the population of this country, and these are markets and access to capital which are vitally important to us.

But, Madam Chair, Asia is an even larger opportunity and in many cases represents our future. We can only hope for progress in the future on the TPP and the further facilitation of enhanced trade and investment opportunities with the growing Asian economies and the growing Asian markets for our products. Again, as importantly, the growth of the middle class in those countries which provide capital investment for us here in Alberta: we have the resources, we have the wealth here, the wealth in resources, to attract that in not just the oil and gas sector but in agriculture and forestry and tourism.

I hear that from my contacts in Asia all the time, that they are interested in investing here but they're uncertain about the investment environment here, Madam Chair, the investment environment that has been upset by this current government. So I am happy to see the regulatory environment improve, but I worry about the future and our ability to attract that investment here, where the regulatory environment will matter. You know what? It's good that we have more controls over acts of market manipulation, insider trading, or treating investors' money in a cavalier way, which may cause investors to lose faith in the market.

But, Madam Chair, let's go back to this bill and talk about some of the positive aspects of this, which, again, if we are able to attract back that investment, I think will be vitally important in ensuring investor confidence going forward. There's whistle-blower protection, which helps to restore faith and confidence that markets will function as they should and ensures that buyers and sellers are getting the right prices and the right protection. Legitimate whistle-blowers need to be protected from persecution by their employer, and that's embedded in this as well, and I'm happy to see that.

That's why we have a Public Interest Commissioner for public-sector workers, but workers for the Alberta Securities Commission also need that same protection when third-party cases outside the Securities Act emerge.

Madam Chair, every so often it is essential to update business practices, of course. As we know, new technologies emerge. We need to replace aging information systems that are no longer compatible with international standards, and I'm glad to see that that's being addressed as well.

We need to ensure that the regulatory processes facilitate, without undermining, the free flow of capital in a province known historically for its entrepreneurial spirit, that entrepreneurial spirit which has created opportunities, which has attracted investment, which has created an environment where risk does not outweigh rewards, that sadly we're seeing too much of in the province of Alberta. Risk is a perception, but risk is a reality which must be faced by investors across the world, who are not choosing Alberta now, and we need to make sure that that is an opportunity. Madam Chair, this act in some measure achieves some of the objectives we would like to see addressed to ensure that we are a world-class investment, regulatory, and securities environment, but we have a long way to go to not just improve the regulatory environment but bring a sense of opportunity and free enterprise and respect for investors back to this great province.

Attracting investors is not a perfect science. It's actually an emotional decision in many cases. It's a financial decision in many cases. It's a perception decision in many cases. Again, back to the risk versus rewards, that balance, Madam Chair, I believe, has been upset by many of the actions of this current government. As I often say, not one job gets created until somebody puts a dollar at risk. We need to respect that risk without coveting the rewards that the risk takers have reaped. When they make those rewards, let's make sure that those are shared appropriately with those investors who've taken the risk but also with Albertans.

That, Madam Chair, is how to build a strong, resilient, and robust economy, one that attracts investors, that protects them in a regulatory environment that I am happy to see we are moving forward with here, where we don't just try and tax our way back to prosperity, as is often the case when government policy is not driven by the attraction of investment and the creation of jobs but is driven by a certain world view, a myopic world view that is driven by partisanship and ideology.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 20 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: That's carried.

Bill 19

An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. It's my pleasure to stand up and speak to Bill 19. It was great actually to read this legislation, and it was great to hear about the consultation that took place over a number of years. Tying tuition to the consumer price index to ensure that tuition costs remain affordable and don't spike for domestic students and apprentices is welcome news. I know that myself along with most of my colleagues have probably had opportunities to meet with representatives from the various postsecondary institutions in Alberta. I think their messaging and their advocacy was clear and strong about what they wanted, and it was fantastic to see some of those changes reflected in the legislation.

I'm the mom of two adults that technically are both in university still. One has been in university probably for, like, 15 years now, which is, you know, a little stressful. [interjection] Yeah. I know. He's a fellow at the University of Alberta and technically still a student, I think, a postdoc student or maybe a post-postdoc student. I'm not entirely sure. No offence, honey. But he loves what he does, like many students. They do what they do and they work hard to get to where they want to be because they love what they do and they love what they study. My son studies really old dead stuff. He's a paleontologist, and he studies teeth, actually. But for him, it was a matter of going to school and spending the money and doing the work to be somebody and to be what he wanted to be and to wake up happy every day.

What I do know about students across the country, across Alberta is that most students don't have the ability to look to their family for support. At the time that my son was ready to go to university, I had certainly invested in a registered education savings plan since he was an infant. I saved and saved so that he could go, so he had that to use for his first degree. Little did I know that 15 years later he'd still be a student.

But I also know that he had to work. He had to work during the school year, and he had to work very hard during the summer to save up the money he needed to sustain himself through the year. For the most part he could live at home and commute to school, but there came a point where he had to move away, like most students. He had to go to Toronto to finish his PhD, and that was a struggle. As you can imagine, tuition is high, housing costs are high, everything is high in Toronto. So he needed to work, but he also needed to study. You can imagine that the work in his field is not lucrative work at the point where he's still a student, so he had to work very hard.

I think that if at the time when he was struggling and working, our minimum wage would have even come close to reflecting the need of these people working at those jobs – it would have been a game changer for him to have been able to earn $15 an hour. He was one of those people that had a minimum wage job, but he was trying to educate himself and to better himself and to create a life for himself. So I think it's really important to remember this group of people when we talk about minimum wage and why it's essential to pay a fair wage.

You know, the other really great thing about universities and postsecondaries – not just universities; colleges, technical schools – is that they produce people that change our lives. They create thinkers that change our lives. They create technology and innovation that drive our province, our country, our world, essentially. They're the ones that create the foundation for our future. They're the ones that create Nobel prize winners. They're the ones that create the science that tells us what we need to do and the direction that we need to go. This is our future.

I'm incredibly thankful that this legislation is looking at what's important and is respecting those young people. In some cases they're older people that are going back to school, but we're respecting them enough to give them important roles on things like boards of governors, where they are making important decisions, they're looking at increased costs for some of the other things associated with education.

I was doing a quick little Google search just to get an idea if I could get some more recent information about what things are like for students now. I mean, it's a little different for my kids. Sadly, the youngest child of mine has decided she's going to take that meandering path through postsecondary life that her brother did, and I think she's in year 6. Hey, I'm really impressed with the tuition freeze. No. I'm actually very happy on many levels.

There's a national charitable organization called Meal Exchange, and what they did I think it was in 2016: they said that they surveyed about 4,500 students across five Canadian campuses for over 16 months. They issued a report called Hungry for Knowledge, and what that report said was that 39 per cent of students are going without nutritious food while they are postsecondary students. Now, I imagine it's a little different for students that are at home, but a lot of students are not. Add to that a family that is just unable to help, unable to send groceries, unable to send $100 here and there to help out when things are tight, and you've got a really difficult situation. In many cases you've got young people, students making decisions between: do I take that extra shift so that I can eat, or do I study for my exam or finish this paper? You're pushing people into really stressful situations.

Added to the food insecurity are all of the other things that we associate with poverty. Maybe we don't think enough about our postsecondary students when we talk about poverty, but it is a reality. I think about the struggles around mental health. When we think about our postsecondary students and the real struggles around mental health – sadly, every once in a while we're given that wake-up call when we hear about another university or college student who has died by suicide. These are in many instances entirely preventable. We know that poverty impacts our health, our mental health, everything.

You know, I think about how happy and desk-thumpy we are when we talk about the value of school lunches in our elementary schools or junior highs, because we recognize the value of nutritious food and food security for students. They can't learn if they're hungry, and they can't learn if they're worried about where the next meal is going to come from. I think about postsecondary students. Add all of the other stresses that go along with being a postsecondary student, and you can understand why mental health is impacted.

I believe that any kind of legislation that we can introduce that really respects the fact that our postsecondary students are in positions that are really difficult and they are faced with really tough choices – so let's put them at those tables, at those decision-making tables. Let's put them in a place where they can listen to the arguments that are being made on both sides and add their voices and add their opinion, because they are essential. They're the ones that are impacted.

Again I wanted to thank the minister for his consultation. I was listening intently-ish this morning to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I think he was speaking to the motion, and he was talking about the speed of this legislation and why we need to stop, we need to slow down, and we need to send this to committee, because it's going too fast. Well, I think if you think about one postsecondary student that is struggling and if you think about those students in the future, this isn't too fast. This has been a long time coming, and I think the minister spent a very long time listening and talking to people and getting this information so that we get it right.

I'd also like to add that his leader seems to be pretty proud of the fact that if things change and he is the Premier of the province, which he appears to feel entitled to, he is going to go quickly. There is no need to consult because the election essentially is a consultation, and he is going to speed it up and go through. So I find it a little bit strange that the member would stand up specifically on Bill 19 and say that it's gone too quickly.

I don't think it's gone too quickly at all. I think it's been a long time coming. The fact is that this minister has recognized the need to have student voices at decision-making tables, the need to have realistic caps, the need to look at other fees that are assigned to students, that are really tough burdens to bear sometimes.

So I appreciate the work. I'm happy to support it, and I look forward to hearing more of the debate.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm really pleased to have the opportunity to speak in support of Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. Education is dear to my heart, and elementary, secondary, and postsecondary all rank right up there. I was thinking a lot about it in terms of affordability. As the member previous mentioned, that is really important. It's getting to the point where so many students are impacted by the cost that it is impeding their ability to get a postsecondary education.

I noticed when I was teaching junior high school a number of students who were very capable and quite talented and quite bright students, but they were daunted by the thought of the debt that they would have to incur. The families didn't have a lot of wealth, a lot of extra money, and the thought of having to live in Edmonton or Calgary and the expenses involved caused a number of them to just say, "Well, I'd better not," or "I'd better wait until I can save up the money." For some, that works. For some, they get out, get working, and they don't go back to a formal education, which I think is a loss for our society. We lose people who could really be contributing – I'm not saying that they weren't contributing – in a bigger way if it were more accessible. So, in addition to the affordability, I think accessibility is a major factor. Limiting tuition and the other costs will be a factor, will have an influence.

The other thing is that I was thinking about myself growing up in a pretty blue-collar community, where nobody had much extra money and postsecondary education was not the usual trend. But because postsecondary education back in my day was very affordable, people who were able, who had the marks and the inclination to go and the interest were able to access education, and the world really opened up. A lot of opportunities arose that would not have been possible if the costs were as high as they are now. It's hard to imagine in a world where the simple idea of getting a student loan was overwhelming. Every relative I had was practically apoplectic at the thought of it, but being able to go to university and not have to have the family mortgage whatever was really wonderful, and it really opened up.

I was thinking about the fact that it really added to our society. We talk about level playing fields. Well, this is a big factor in creating a society that has equal opportunity and ability for people to move into all sorts of professions without having to have a rich family or a very, you know, affluent family behind them. A person whose parent, whose primary breadwinner in the family works for a railroad can be right beside someone whose primary breadwinner in the family is, say, a city councillor, for instance, and do equally well and go on to the same academic achievements and accomplishments. A more equitable society, giving people more opportunity, just being able to tell someone who is in junior high or high school that it is manageable, they can do it, and what their dreams are can be achieved in many cases. I'm not going to tell everybody that they can do everything all the time because that's not realistic, but people can accomplish what they want to with some help.

That's what I see in this. This is a help for our students. It's a help for our future. We all need supports. We want good roads and we want good doctors and we want all sorts of good service providers when we are unable to provide them for our own selves. We want people who are qualified and able and want to be doing it. I really like the idea of having city planners who are well-trained people, who have innovative ideas. That's the main thing I was thinking about as I was considering this bill.

The other one was the international students. I think I've mentioned before that I spoke with various international students and saw a documentary film that a group of them had made, which was really moving. It wasn't in English, but it didn't need to be. The students made it really for their own community in my riding, for people to understand what the challenges faced by international students were, with the primary concern being that the costs weren't predictable and they weren't stable. They would enrol in a program, and they would have the finances worked out, but the cost changed. They were left very powerless to deal with the instability and the unpredictability of that. So they would take part-time jobs. Sometimes that worked out. But they would have to be adapting and switching their goals as they went along.

A lot of times it made a difference, as we were talking about before, in how much food they were able to purchase, if they were able to keep themselves nourished. And with their jobs, if the job had to take up more of their time than they could actually afford, it could cut into their performance in their postsecondary institution. That sometimes would make it difficult for them to continue pursuing the program that they began in. So postsecondary students really need that predictability and stability in their funding.

Madam Chair, I just really support this bill very strongly and hope that we all do in this House. Thank you.

The Chair: Further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 19. You know, I have a number of different thoughts, and I'll try as best I can to organize them. I will, I guess, start by saying that I'm in favour of the bill, that I will be voting to support it.

I do have some concerns, and in order to sort of get a better perspective on the bill, I sought some input from a number of different quarters. I spoke with representatives of Alberta students. A number of them I got to know quite well during the course of a recent political campaign I was involved in, and I was proud to have them as part of my campaign team. They certainly are enthusiastically in favour of Bill 19. They've indicated that many of the things in Bill 19 were things that they've been advocating for for some time, especially with regard to the certainties surrounding tuition fees and linking maximum tuition fee increases to the consumer price index. So that part is good.

I also spoke with officials at some of the universities that I know. Specifically, I spoke to people at Lakeland College, which is located, of course, in Vermilion-Lloydminster, with a campus in each of those two centres. There are also concerns expressed there, but the concerns, I would say, are sort of phrased in this way. The officials at those institutions, not just Lakeland College but others, are saying that they appreciate the need for some degree of certainty and stability in terms of costs for students and that Bill 19 provides this.

But concomitant with that is the requirement for the postsecondary institutions to have some degree of certainty with regard to their funding, which clearly is not solely provided by tuition fees, only a percentage, and it's a varying percentage, depending on the institution and depending on the time frame we're looking at. But only a small percentage of the actual instructional costs of a university are covered by tuition fees. Because of that, there is a reliance on behalf of universities to find other sources of revenue. Certainly, the government grant each year is a significant source of that revenue, but there are other sources of revenue that universities have worked very hard to enhance.

I'll use the example of alumni support or extension. You know, one of the things that is a difference between what we have in our culture in Canada and the United States – while for the most part I would take Canadian culture over American culture any day of the week, if there's one area where I wish we could be more like the Americans, that is in alumni support of our postsecondary institutions. They do a much better job of this than we do. And it's hard to really explain. I've talked to extension officers at a number of different universities and colleges and asked: "You know, what is it that makes us different? Why is it that somebody who attends a postsecondary institution in the United States is almost branded and knows the fight song of their college alma mater until the day they die?"

I was attending a hockey game in Anaheim a number of years ago and got involved with a fight song singing contest between supporters of USC and UCLA in the duck pond in Anaheim, where they had to explain to people what icing and offside were. But when it came to the break between periods and the USC Trojan Marching Band came out and performed, the UCLA fans would start singing the UCLA fight song. Then the USC fans would go back and forth, this sort of antiphonal effect that went on within the arena. It was remarkable.

That is something that Canadian universities and colleges struggle with, although I would point out that in recent years we have seen significant, very generous gifts being given to institutions right across Canada. Certainly, right here in Alberta there have been some very significant gifts to fund specific programs, chairs in different fields of study, and I think that's positive.

But I do express a concern with regard to the overall quality and sustainability of our postsecondary institutions. Clearly, this piece of legislation is going to put I'll call it a harness or at least a brake on tuition fee increases. It's clearly going to be a lever that is not available to postsecondary institutions in terms of increasing the revenue, and because, of course, that money comes out of students' pockets, I can understand the need for that. But it is then, I think, more important that we put emphasis on the other sources of revenue and having some stability there, and that's challenging. If you're going to guarantee an international student, for example, the exact amount of their tuition for the next four years but the postsecondary institution does not know what it's going to receive as a government grant for even the following year, it creates some potential problems.

Now, I know there are going to be some in the room that are going to point out that I was part of a government that in the 2013 budget cut the Alberta Advanced Education budget by 7 per cent. I will tell you that that was a decision that, you know, at the time seemed to be appropriate. But in talking to various postsecondary institutions since that decision was made and seeing the difficulties that it created within Lakeland College, I know that that sort of cut – when they're anticipating a 2 per cent increase and, in fact, get a 7 per cent cut, that's like a 9 per cent chasm in their funding – is very, very difficult. That required some very, very difficult decisions to be made at Lakeland College with regard to cutting programs that were very good programs, were well subscribed but, unfortunately, were also very costly to deliver, and there was no way to increase the tuition to try to do a cost recovery on those.

You know, stable funding is something that I think is important, but I wanted to broaden the conversation about postsecondary education a little bit because I think it is important that we put it in the context of what purpose it serves in Alberta society and what our needs are. Alberta has the youngest population in Canada. We've said that the average age of Albertans – I believe the number is 36. Alberta also has the lowest participation rate in postsecondary education in the country. That seems paradoxical, but that's, in fact, the statistic. Alberta has the lowest postsecondary education participation rate.

Now, some have suggested that that's because people can go straight out of high school or even not complete high school and go straight into working in the oil patch and earning very large salaries. While that is a factor, to be sure, it is not the sole reason. The impact of having a low postsecondary participation rate, though, is something that we have to take a look at. It means that in order for us to have the various highly educated tradespeople, highly educated university graduates to be our doctors, our nurses, our veterinarians, our pharmacists, our teachers, and a number of other fields, Alberta has to bring them in from other jurisdictions, from other provinces or from other countries.

Part of the challenge with doing that is that you have to attract them to come here. We know that the oil and gas sector at times, when things are going well, pays quite large salaries, and it inflates the salaries of everyone. Now, most of the time that's a good thing – I'm not saying that that's necessarily a bad thing – but it does require that we take a look at: what is our postsecondary education capacity? Is it sufficient, and what should we be looking at in the long term, in the eight- to 10-year time frame – and that's not really that long term – in terms of: do we need to increase capacity? My answer to that is that, yes, we do, and the number that has been arrived at by Alberta's 26 postsecondary institutions is approximately 90,000 additional spaces to what we have today.

Forty-seven thousand of those is roughly just to get Alberta to the Canadian average for a postsecondary participation rate. Just to get us to the average, not even to the highest. An additional 40,000 is roughly because we have a young and very rapidly growing population, and if we just keep up with population growth, we will need 40,000 additional spaces. If you add that up, it comes to just under 90,000 additional spaces. The planning for that has to go ahead.

The second question that needs to be asked is a broader discussion on affordability and accessibility and asking ourselves the question: what impact do affordability and tuition fees have on access to postsecondary education, and what can we do to lessen that impact? It even begs the question: should postsecondary education be free? I know that's been advocated by some student organizations, including the national union of students. They've suggested that it should be free, and in some countries it is indeed free. I do have some issues with that, and to make that change, especially if it was made abruptly, I think would create some significant issues.

But I will say that Canada, unfortunately, ranks 14th out of 16 OECD countries in providing scholarships to postsecondary students. Fourteenth out of 16. If we're talking about making postsecondary education more accessible and trying to get a higher participation rate, certainly something that we could do is at least look at what we're offering in terms of scholarships, awards, bursaries, grants, and loans. You know, as far as that goes, that's something where we have to look at ourselves: what could we do to improve that?

I'm actually pleased that I contribute annually to two different scholarships at institutions, mostly at Lakeland College, but we've also given to students attending other institutions, one named in memory of my former partner, Dr. Malcolm Gray, for students entering animal health science or veterinary medicine, and a second named in honour of my former classmate Dr. Kenneth Smith, who was an instructor for many years in the animal health technology program at Lakeland College. Kenny passed away a couple of years ago, and a bunch of us that are classmates of Kenny contribute to a scholarship that was established in his memory.

That's a good thing, and I think we should all look for opportunities for doing that and fund students in whatever field of endeavour is important to you. For me it's veterinary medicine. For someone else, it might be social work. It might be education. It might be a variety of different fields. But I think that that is something that we can do, and I think that that 14th out of 16 level is nothing that Canada should be proud of.

Finally, on the support of research and innovation, while Alberta has some of the greatest innovators and researchers anywhere in the world and we do incredible work like the development, for example, of the Edmonton protocol for islet cell transplants for type 1 diabetes patients, which is world leading, absolutely world leading, we unfortunately from the Conference Board of Canada last year got a D grade in their report on research and innovation in Canada. We need to do better. We need to find out what it is that we can do to better support our researchers.

Just last month I visited researchers at the University of Alberta who are working on providing a marker for prostate cancer. That means that for someone who has a high PSA antigen on the test, whose next diagnostic test was a highly invasive biopsy, which, if it didn't actually have the luck of hitting the tumour cells, would come up as a false negative, they're actually developing a test that would just involve a blood test that has a much higher sensitivity and a higher specificity rate for determining whether or not that patient has prostate cancer and whether they have to proceed with additional, more invasive forms of treatment.

That's happening at the University of Alberta. That's technology that is being developed here that isn't being worked on anywhere else in the world. Certainly, the initial findings are very promising. If it works, it is something that the university plans to make commercially available. The cost of doing that test is roughly one-quarter the cost of doing biopsies. You know, just think of the level of invasiveness. We're talking about a blood sample, a single venipuncture in your arm compared to the current means of taking biopsies on men with prostate cancer, which I won't go into the details of here.

Dr. Swann: Thank you.

Dr. Starke: You're welcome.

Madam Chair, I will tell you that I'm proud to be a former student of one of our postsecondary institutions. I attended the University of Alberta for two years in the faculty of agriculture and forestry. I was an aggie. I hated the engineers; they hated us. It was all good. After that, I completed my veterinary studies and went to the University of Saskatchewan. But I will tell you that I'm proud of the experience I had. I'm proud of what we have in our province in terms of postsecondary institutions, our 26 institutions, but I think it's something that we have to look at always trying to make better.

I support Bill 19 because I think Bill 19 does make things better, but I don't think we can stop with Bill 19. I think there are other issues we have to address. I think we have to continue to work with the leadership of Campus Alberta, those 26 institutions across our province, and strive to make Alberta a world leader in postsecondary education, which is, I think, one of the key things in growing and developing and diversifying our economy.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. Fellow members, the future of our province is contingent on building our human capital to meet the competitive needs of our labour market. The ability to achieve this supports the changes that this bill is proposing.

Madam Chair, I reside in Alberta's third-largest city, and on March 1 I had the great pleasure of the announcement that our Red Deer College had been granted the opportunity to begin the journey to becoming a degree-granting institution. This announcement meant a number of wins for Red Deer as well as for all of Alberta. It was paramount to central Albertans as it kept family units together and reduced educational costs, but it also supports retaining our talent in our region as the catalyst to meeting our labour needs. Additionally, it draws students to the Red Deer area, and this migration promotes further chances to build upon our human capital. For this we are immensely grateful.

Education is an endeavour that promotes growth and prosperity within our communities and as a province as well as a nation. This government's foresight to recognize and answer this call serves a number of agendas that empower not only our future needs but, additionally, the current and future changing dynamics of our market.

Our ability to compete globally can be markedly harnessed by the educational opportunities we promote within our communities. My community of Red Deer has championed this 25-year ask, and we are thrilled to be part of the momentum this government is initiating. Fellow members, our province is unique in the opportunities that are offered. We are rich in resource, and if we continue to invest in our information, skills, and abilities, we can strengthen our stance by way of knowledge. Madam Chair, we know that knowledge is power.

Bill 19 supports the strongest Alberta we have ever had. It opens up opportunities with all of our communities. Gauging tuition increases to an Albertan consumer price index is sound fiduciary policy. It is directly correlated to what is affordable, and it aligns with Albertan families' desire to see themselves in a better economic position. Mandating students as voices on boards enables a unique perspective to the changes that meet their needs and rejuvenate the future of education. Governance speaks to accountability, and we are accountable to Alberta students and families, whose dreams fulfill the legacy of our great province.

Madam Chair, I am thrilled to speak to these changes and what they translate to my community of Red Deer as well as to the breadth of our province's future educational needs. We are clearly moving to a resolve that empowers present and future generations of educational mastery, and it is a pleasure to stand and rise to speak to Bill 19.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, amendments? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I want to say that I guess I appreciate this bill, Bill 19, because our postsecondary education in Alberta is so important. Though I didn't take the opportunity myself to pursue a postsecondary education, I do appreciate those that have, and I benefit from those that have every day. I think that as we go through our lives, we often rely on people that have taken that opportunity for a postsecondary education, and of course we all benefit from it. I know that my son in particular – he's a high school teacher in Valleyview – has benefited from his postsecondary education, and so do the students that he teaches. I think it's great that the government is concerned about these issues as far as making sure that postsecondary education is affordable and accessible for the people of Alberta.

There's some little discussion about the speed at which this bill came forward and everything. I think the concern I have is that it hasn't given me an opportunity to consult with students, with universities, colleges, and that sort of thing myself. I've reached out, but I haven't had a chance to have any kind of meetings or discussions with them on this. I do think it's only fair that we have an opportunity to hear what these organizations, these universities and colleges, have to say about this bill. You know, our thought on this is to have this bill pass as soon as possible, too, but taking just a little bit of time and having those discussions with the people that are most affected by this I think is reasonable to ask. Of course, we can do that and still have this bill pass this session.

When I look at the affordability and everything, I wonder about the added costs that this government has burdened postsecondary institutions with. One we look at is the carbon tax, of course, and what effect it's had on postsecondary education and these schools that provide that. So I just wondered if the minister could maybe answer a question as far as: what are the costs that have been incurred by, say, the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, maybe Grande Prairie College because of the carbon tax?

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments?

Mr. Loewen: Okay. I guess no answer to that question.

You know, I think something that we need to keep in mind here is that this government has kind of gone ahead and they're talking about this Bill 19 to improve accessibility and affordability and trying to give certainty to these postsecondary institutions on their costs and their income and that sort of thing, but they did add a carbon tax, that did burden these schools with additional costs. Of course, by doing that, they also burdened students with the cost of the carbon tax.

When we look at the carbon tax and how it's affected students – now, of course, some of the people in my constituency, for instance, live close enough to school that they could just take public transportation or maybe even walk to Grande Prairie College, but many in my constituency would not have that opportunity. They would have to move to the area or drive great distances. Of course, when you're moving to an area to get your education, the cost of living is a huge expense for students. The cost of living has been increased by the carbon tax. The cost for students to travel to these postsecondary institutions has increased. Those are some concerns that we've had as this government has gone forward and passed some of their legislation.

Obviously, we have problems with employment. Youth employment is high right now. We understand how hard students work to get a postsecondary education, and they sometimes work one or two jobs in order to make ends meet. Of course, when the job situation is as poor as it is right now, this makes it harder on these students to procure the education that they desire. It makes it more difficult for these students to cover their tuition and to be able to finance themselves as they go to school.

I think another thing that we are concerned about, too, is that the government needs to ensure that they are creating jobs so that when students get out of university or college, there's actually something for them to do. Of course, we have some serious issues with jobs in this province. Unemployment is high right now, so we need to make sure that these students have something to do when they graduate, because that's what they want to do. That's what they're here to do. They're there to gain an education so that they can make a living and provide for their families down the road.

They talk about sustainable postsecondary education as far as making sure that in the future these colleges and universities can continue to provide that quality of education. We need to make sure not just that we deal with the tuition and everything but that we deal with the expenses that these colleges and universities have.

Again, I appreciate the bill. I appreciate the idea behind the bill and why it's, you know, so important to make sure that these things are set, that tuition fees are something that students can expect and rely on, but we also have to make sure that the colleges and universities are provided with the opportunity and certainty going forward. Now, in my discussions in the past with Grande Prairie College I know that one of the biggest concerns they have, of course, is certainty, knowing how much money they're going to be getting and what they're going to be required to pay with that money.

These organizations can deal a lot with the different things that government can throw at them, but they need to have certainty. This government, of course, brought in the carbon tax, and that added extra costs to the universities and colleges. Now they've come up with this cap and this tuition structure. These things have changed the certainty and have changed what these colleges were expecting. I appreciate that the minister suggested that there's been a lot of consultation with these organizations. I haven't had a chance to check that out myself because I haven't had a chance to have a meeting or discussion with, for instance, Grande Prairie College, which is in my constituency. They want to have certainty going forward, and of course as we keep changing things and changing things, then that certainty is gone, that kind of ability to plan in the future. Though I think something like this could help down the road, it obviously creates a little bit of a situation up front, when it first comes in.

Again, I think we're onto something good here as far as the government wanting to add some certainty for students. I think students deserve to have some certainty, too, as far as their costs and, going forward, what they can expect to pay. I guess I just wish the government hadn't done some of the other things that have increased costs for students and made things less affordable for students and, in fact, all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Prior to continuing with the debate, I'd like to recognize the Minister of Advanced Education.

Withdrawal of Comments

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is, of course, Halloween, and while most kids are going to be eating a copious amount of candy this evening, it appears that my fortune is to eat a copious amount of crow.

I wanted to make some clarifications on some statements that I made earlier today in response to some remarks by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Now, I understand that some members of this Assembly are interpreting my comments as an attack on farmers. Nothing could be further from the truth. I have nothing but respect for farmers, be they rich or poor. My family, of course, farmed in Saskatchewan, were very bad at it, and ended up having to move off the farm because of that.

The point that I was trying to make was that our government is concerned about making sure that every Alberta student has the opportunity to achieve the postsecondary education of their dreams regardless of their financial circumstances. I was trying to underline the fact that I think it's incumbent upon all of us here in this House to recognize that some of us don't have as much privilege as others in this society and that some of us need more help than others to get into postsecondary education. In fact, I was trying to clarify that my own personal circumstances mean that policies like the minimum wage and those sorts of things are personally helpful to me and others like me in those financial situations.

I also wanted to clarify, Madam Chair, that I respect the ruling that you made. In fact, as a result, I withdraw my comments, as you've asked me to do.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Chair: We are now on the debate. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Good afternoon, Madam Chair. Thank you very much for recognizing me so that I can speak on behalf of the families, students, and new Canadians of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. As part of my role as a rural MLA representing a number of municipalities, I have the opportunity to represent seven high school graduations every year, and with them go a slate of high school awards.

Unfortunately, on my way home from Tofield I actually had the unfortunate opportunity of colliding with a deer. While I hope that no one ever has to deal with that, that unfortunately is a reality of driving in rural Alberta. The best thing that happened was that I had a really nice, hard-working family pull over to the side of the road to see if I needed help. They live just a couple of miles over on their own farm. They had just seen me at the high school, where one of their children was accepting an award, and the father actually helped drag the deer off the road for me. That was incredibly kind and just an example of one of the many families that work very hard to be able to pay to put their kids through postsecondary.

On those nights where they are trying to achieve just small amounts of dollars from local businesses, municipalities, and legions, it all goes towards these young children being able to one day fulfill the dreams that they have. So that is who Bill 19 is for, you know, regular families that work so hard so that their kids can apply to and be successful in achieving postsecondary education.

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

I'm thankful for a lot of the work that the government has done, the Minister of Advanced Education, to ensure that there was stable funding, that there was frozen tuition since 2015, that there was mental health funding put into these postsecondary institutions. The dollars that were allocated specifically for the rurally located postsecondary institutions were dollars that were incredibly valuable and had been long advocated for by students. It took a long time, and it took this government to actually put the funding in.

When I think about the people that are in Fort Saskatchewan and surrounding communities – Vegreville, Mundare, Bruderheim – there are new Canadians that have come here to work as temporary foreign workers, and one of those people is a friend of mine. Her name is Cheryl. She moved here under the temporary foreign worker program, and she worked at McDonald's for a number of years and met, actually, her partner in life, Anthony. They worked there, and they started to date. Actually, Anthony had to help create a false schedule with the manager so that it could look like Cheryl was off and Anthony was in fact working. Anthony was actually not working, and he surprised Cheryl at their church, Our Lady of the Angels, and proposed to her with the entire church, and it was on Skype. It was on Skype because they're from the Philippines, so they wanted to make sure that all of their families and friends were able to witness such a lovely and touching moment that they had. They worked together at McDonald's; they worked together at Tim Hortons. Cheryl and Anthony got married in that same church. Cheryl applied to go to postsecondary at NAIT. What I found out is that a person in her position as a permanent resident – oh, I missed a part.

They volunteer with a group called the Kabisig Society. This is a group that helps advocate for Philippine workers that are permanent residents or temporary foreign workers, and they help advocate on those issues. When we were at Turner park one day, she had some very, very incredible news to tell me over hot dogs. I thought that she was going to tell me that she was pregnant because she was so excited. As it turned out, she had gained her permanent residency status.

So she applied to NAIT, and she worked really hard. She worked minimum wage jobs, and Anthony did as well. She worked really hard. If you look over her Facebook feed, you see that they basically do everything. They post pictures of what they eat. They have matching shoes and matching Canadian shirts on Canada Day. When they go to Avengers movies, they always have matching superhero shirts. They're quite adorable. It was there that I found out that she had actually gotten pregnant. She graduated.

She and Anthony are just one example of new people that come to Alberta and want to help build our communities, build our economy, and build families. They come here to build families. For too long under previous governments they were treated like purses as opposed to people. So I'm really glad that we have a minister and a Premier that look at these people as contributors to society as opposed to just a lever. Yes, there are many levers of funding for education that need to be looked at, but to consider a person a lever for that funding is flawed. That's what can hurt the number of people that apply to postsecondary and can affect the amount of participation that we have.

It's expensive. Once upon a time it was $800. Well, it's not $800 anymore. It's quite a lot more expensive. It was out of my reach, you know, as the daughter of a single father, a painter of houses. To be able to put some measures to reel it in so that it's more accessible for the family in Tofield and more accessible for Cheryl and Anthony in Fort Saskatchewan is incredibly important.

I'm really happy that instead of thinking about tax cuts that would in fact gut that really incredible institution that continues to help us to look for those ways that we address the problems in society – Anthony and Cheryl are from the Philippines, a country that gets ravaged often by typhoons. We need to be looking at making sure that we have the brightest minds in our universities and our postsecondary colleges and our trades to actually build communities that can withstand the effects of climate change. These are all very important things that we need to pull together on as we move forward in Alberta and Canada and the world.

I'm very happy to see that an international student will at least know how much that year of tuition is going to be. They won't be surprised. It's still very expensive, but this is a great measure to move towards including people like Anthony and Cheryl in the entire spectrum of society so that they are not only nannies, so that they're not only temporary foreign workers at Tim Hortons – who do incredible service, very honourable jobs – but they're also accountants and they're also lawyers and they're also child care workers. They are also people that just want a shot at doing something that they are passionate about.

So I'm really pleased that this is moving forward, and I look forward to seeing it pass through committee. Thank you.

The Chair: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much. If you'd indulge me, Madam Chair, I've got a specific question regarding this, and then I'd like to carry on with a statement of mine. To the minister. On page 29 under Comprehensive Academic and Research Universities Sector it says under 102.3:

(2) An institution assigned to the Comprehensive Academic and Research Universities sector may . . .

(c) collaborate with . . . post-secondary institutions to support regional access to undergraduate degree programs.

Then the next clause says:

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (2)(c), Athabasca University shall collaborate with other post-secondary institutions to support regional access to undergraduate degree programs.

Is there something specific as to why Athabasca University was kind of singled out that they shall collaborate? Was there something that came up, that happened, that caused that?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for the question. He's quite right. We do have a much stronger mandate in the bill for Athabasca University in particular to collaborate, particularly with the colleges in the region that he represents, the colleges in the region that you represent, Madam Chair. You know, when Athabasca University was initially founded, one of its purposes was to provide university education to rural and northern Albertans, who didn't really have easy access to university education at that time. I think it's fair to say that Athabasca University has drifted a little bit from that mandate. Our government has now reinforced that mandate, to provide access to university education in rural and northern regions in alignment with the original intent of that university, so the strength of that mandate, that requirement is reflected in the language that the member referred to in the bill.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Minister, for that.

I'll carry on. Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. The only problem I really have with the bill is a little bit about the name of it, the accessibility part, because I don't see a lot of information in the bill that relates to accessibility per se. What I'm specifically referring to is, I guess, the number of seats, especially in the medical fields, that we have here in Alberta and the access.

I know personally of a couple of young men who couldn't get in in Edmonton and Calgary or anywhere else in Canada. So they were kind of forced to go overseas to take their training and then came back to find that there's no chance at all of getting a residency. We've tried to address this with the college as well. It's very, very difficult. We've got, you know, some good, well-trained doctors that are ready and willing to work out in rural Alberta that just can't get a residency. So if we could work on the total accessibility and not just the financial, that would be awesome.

I've been a parent of two kids that have gone through post-secondary, one of them 10 years of university to get to the medical doctor stage, and watched the struggles that they had. It's quite expensive, especially being from rural Alberta, putting two kids through university here in Edmonton. We do see the struggle and the advantage that we would have if there was, you know, some control over tuitions as well. I do applaud that, having been through that and watched my kids work through it. But they were very fortunate that in the time when they were going to school, Alberta was in a boom phase, and there were lots of jobs. When you came out for your four months off in the summer, you could go and work. My son worked in the oil patch and did very, very well during the summer such that he didn't have to work through university and the eight months that he was in school. That really gave him a chance to focus on his studies, and I think that's what we're trying to address here.

You know, for a lot of the young people, when they come out of high school and get into university, it's a bit of a culture shock because they go away from the I don't want to say spoon-feeding that they get in high school, being helped along, but when you get into university it's: you sink or swim on your own. Having the ability to be able to afford to just go to school and concentrate on your studies and not have to work two or three part-time jobs just to pay your tuition and your rent and that I think would go a long way. Anything we can do to help students get to that point: I think it's incumbent on us as a government to do those things.

My worry right now with students and the young people that I do talk to is not so much that they're worried about the tuition – I don't think that's the top thing on their minds right now – but it's the fact that when they've finished their engineering degree, there are no jobs out there for them, especially down in Calgary. If you're in petrochemical or oil development, engineering, or geology, it's going to be very difficult to find a job. So, hopefully, we get some turnaround in the province here and get ourselves back to an advantage position, where we fill up those office spaces in Calgary and get people back to work.

As I said, we were very fortunate that our children went through. I had a good job in the oil field, so I could help them out a little bit. It's very expensive putting kids through school, especially from rural Alberta, in the cities.

I frequently hear about workshops and fairs that are put on for students to try to secure a job in a workforce that seems to not have enough jobs to go around, and students frequently are passed over. We want to ensure that we're doing what's best for the students. They need the peace of mind that comes with a capped tuition, and the relief of this worry will help them to focus on their education and on their future careers. As I said, you know, any time that you can put the students into a position where they're focusing on their studies instead of trying to make ends meet, it can be very helpful.

Students have been pushing for a tuition framework, so we were happy to see that the government is finally listening to them and implementing it into this legislation. In fact, reducing the unpredictability of tuition hikes would be the greatest help to students who struggle the most to make ends meet, perhaps working one, two, or even three part-time jobs while pursuing their education. It's good that the government has decided to actually listen to the students, as they have not done so with so many stakeholders in the past legislation that they've brought forward, which has ultimately ended up in making a mess of their respective files. So it is refreshing to see that there has been a lot of consultation with the students.

I'm also happy to see that students will be getting more representation on each institution's board of governors and that this will help all students have a greater say in the decisions that affect them.

Additionally, when it comes to the tuition of international students, there will be increased predictability as students will be able to know the cost of their entire degree. This could prevent unreasonable hikes that can throw a wrench into an international student's education. So many students must work to support themselves through their education, and not knowing what a student has in store for the next year can make it impossible to plan.

However, an exceptionally important way that students plan through their education is for how they will support themselves during as well as afterwards. The jobs available to students as of recently are flickering away due to the government's ideological agenda driving jobs out of the province. Like I said previously, we really need to get our focus back as a government, getting our economy on the upswing again.

As I said before, throughout my son's education he had the ability to support himself working in the oil and gas industry. Right now those jobs just aren't out there for students anymore. It was an opportunity that allowed him to be self-sufficient and debt free while providing him with a real quality-of-life experience to help him when facing future employers.

Unfortunately, what was once a means for so many is no longer a possibility for most students pursuing an education today. Those jobs are simply not there anymore, and for the ones that are, the pool of individuals applying for them tends to far outrank a postsecondary education.

I talked to one lady up in the Cold Lake area that previously used to hire 22 summer students. She used it as an opportunity to help out students and give them a bit of an education in the real world and how to work and build up the work ethic. But because of the increases in minimum wage, she now hires four students and then very quickly weeds it down to two because they've gone far more to mechanization, because they're in an industry where they could actually do that, use a lot of machinery rather than manual labour. They had to make that choice because of those increases.

It's a very prominent fear in the minds of students these days: what happens after graduation? Will I get a job? I addressed that previously with engineering students, especially in the petrochemical and oil industries. They're very, very concerned about going through a four-year program, all the expenses, coming out with a huge amount of personal student debt and no way to pay it off. I think that's going to cause some real concerns for young people in the future.

Although this legislation rightfully protects students during their education, we must give some forethought to the economic environment that they will be stepping into after their education and how to get Alberta's economy back on track. Postsecondary students need to feel secure in the availability of gainful employment as they enter the workforce, degree in hand. Again, you know, I mentioned the engineers. I worked with a lot of them, both young and old, in my experience in the oil field. It was always nice. They used to send out, especially over the summertime, students to work directly with us out in the field for their four months, so it gave them a real insight into what was actually going on in the construction industry that they could take back, then, into their fall studies.

Affordable tuition is at the forefront of a student's mind, but so is the career that they'll be stepping into for the rest of their lives. It's crucial to restore an economic environment with an abundance of available employment for a graduating student to feel secure in. Students must already sacrifice so much when getting a postsecondary education in order to pursue a career of their choice.

They often must put their lives on hold, give up an income, and spend their days, nights, and weekends studying, working to make ends meet, or attempting to live a balanced life.

The stress that a typical student life can bring on may be manageable for some but overwhelming for others. This is why it's so vital to support students in their education and ensure that any unnecessary worries are taken off their plate such as unpredictable tuition hikes. These hikes can mean that students are missing classes and studying time to work longer hours in a part-time job or a second job in order to make up the difference. Missed classes or being unprepared for an exam can have a dire consequence on the grand scheme of an education. That is why this tuition cap is important to students. This is why it's important to support students in their education and why I support this bill.

You know, we talk about the stresses of passing and being at the top of your class, at least in the top 50 per cent of your class, to ensure that you can get a job when you're finished. Anything that we can do, like I said, to ensure that students are spending their time studying rather than working two or three jobs to make ends meet – I think this bill goes a step in that right direction.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to respond to a couple of the comments that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills made in his speech. It was around the issue of accessibility. He suggested that he wasn't sure how the legislation promoted the accessibility of education. So I just wanted to talk a little bit about how what we're dealing with here promotes accessibility of higher education here in the province of Alberta. There are a couple of key things.

First of all, this bill puts Red Deer College and Grande Prairie Regional College on the path to becoming universities without requiring any future legislative changes to the Post-secondary Learning Act. We recognize that right now Red Deer College and Grande Prairie Regional College aren't ready to make that transition to university, but when they are, we won't have to come back to the legislation to do this. The mechanism is already in place to do that.

By allowing Red Deer College and Grande Prairie Regional College to make the transition to offering university degrees – and let me just be clear that they don't intend to sacrifice any of the other programs that they currently offer to the students that they serve; they intend to add on the possibility of pursuing university degrees at those locations – we will enhance the ability of Albertans in central Alberta and northwestern Alberta to get university degrees when otherwise they would have to go to Edmonton or Calgary, far away from home, to pursue university education. By putting Red Deer College and Grande Prairie Regional College – we are enhancing access for people in central Alberta and northwestern Alberta to university degrees that they otherwise would have to leave home and go quite far to get. That's one aspect of accessibility that we're enhancing through this legislation.

The second piece is related to that. It's these collaboration frameworks that the member had a question about earlier. We are requiring other colleges to collaborate with universities in the system to offer other kinds of degrees through the colleges that aren't on the path to becoming universities. Northern Lakes College, Portage College, Keyano College, Medicine Hat: those kinds of places will be able to work with existing universities in the province to come up with a way to deliver university degrees to the students that they serve and also allow students in the rest of the province to have access to university education that they may or may not have access readily to right now. We're enhancing accessibility to university education in that way.

There's a final and not exactly straightforward point in the legislation. We heard quite clearly from students, faculty, and administration at MacEwan and Mount Royal University that their students were having problems going on to graduate studies with a MacEwan or a Mount Royal University degree in their hands because other universities who are assessing their qualifications weren't quite sure how to treat a degree from Mount Royal University or Grant MacEwan University. That's because the governance structures at those two institutions weren't exactly like the governance structures at the University of Alberta or the University of Calgary or other universities in other parts of the country.

We heard stories of students who had graduated from Mount Royal and MacEwan and had difficulty getting into graduate programs because the receiving institutions weren't sure how to assess their qualifications because they weren't quite sure what kind of institution they had graduated from. This bill addresses that issue as well, Madam Chair, by giving Mount Royal University and Grant MacEwan University a general faculties council, the ability of the board of governors to appoint chancellors, and the ability of the board of governors to grant honorary degrees. We are creating the powers and governance structures at Mount Royal University and MacEwan University that other universities have, so we hope that by doing so, we will enhance MacEwan and Mount Royal University graduates' access to graduate-level programming at other universities in Alberta as well as across the country.

So on those three points – enhancing access to university degrees by transitioning Red Deer College and Grande Prairie Regional College to universities, creating strong collaboration mandates between existing universities and the other colleges that aren't on the path to university, and changing the governance structure so that it's quite clear what kind of institutions Mount Royal and Grant MacEwan are – we're enhancing access for students all over Alberta to high-quality university education that will set them up for success regardless of where they go once they graduate. I'm quite proud of our government's movement on those three pieces of accessibility.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to support Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education, and I would like to thank the Minister of Advanced Education for putting this bill forward. I think it's an important one, and I want to talk about why.

I want to talk about back in 2013, when I was attending Mount Royal University. I remember that there was a big rally that happened when the Premier of the time, Premier Redford, made huge cuts to postsecondary, $147 million worth of cuts, and that was one of the reasons why I actually decided to run for office. I was extremely disappointed in that government. I saw our tuition go up because of that. Our programs were cut. Our engineering program was cut. Our midwifery program was cut. Our jazz program was cut. Students didn't know what to do at the time, so they decided to do a rally, and conveniently Premier Redford's constituency office was right across the street from our university, so we decided to march to our constituency office and present to her a petition stating that we don't want these cuts.

I remember some of the chants that some students were saying: "No ifs, no buts, no education cuts" and "education, not edu-cuts." You know, I stand by those slogans. I stand by those words because

I feel that this current minister would never do something like that, so I'm proud to be part of that government that wouldn't hurt students.

You know, we've heard a lot of rhetoric from the opposition on how there will be a lot of pain if they become government, how they want to cut a lot of our budget, and I have no doubt that postsecondary would be on top of that list. So when they stood up just yesterday stating that they don't support this bill, it actually really personally affected me. It brought me back to how I felt in 2013. I don't think that students deserve that kind of treatment, and I'm just so happy that they have a government that is looking out for them and have their backs.

Thank you, Minister, for everything that you've done. Thank you for the consultation that you've done, speaking with student unions, speaking with different schools across this province. They spoke loud and proud that this is a bill that they wanted, and you definitely listened to them, so I just wanted to thank you for that.

On top of this bill, you know, our government has done a lot of extra things to help students in postsecondary, such as a tuition freeze for five years now, and that's something that I've heard a lot of positive feedback on from different students.

I still am technically a student at Mount Royal because I actually never got to finish my degree. I was a little busy campaigning, but you know what? Now I get to be the ambassador and talk about Mount Royal University and all the great work that they do, so there you go.

You know, I talk to a lot of students, and they say that they're very thankful for the tuition freeze because it gives them more predictability on their tuition and how much it's going to cost. I feel like no student should have to worry about that. Everyone should have the right to an education, and everyone should have the right to attend a postsecondary institution if they want to. I feel like tuition shouldn't be a barrier. Because of that I'm so proud that we did this tuition freeze.

I wanted to talk a little bit about the meat of the bill, and I wanted to talk a little bit about the framework. What it says is that it caps each institution's average tuition and apprenticeship fee increases to the consumer price index. It provides increased predictability for international students, allows the minister to regulate mandatory, noninstructional fees and international student tuition – that's actually something I've heard a lot from students of what they wanted, so I'm glad that this is in the bill – and empowers students to have more say over exceptional tuition and fee increases. Also, another thing that it does – and something that I know that the Member for Red Deer-North is really proud of – is that it's going to grant Red Deer College university status, so congratulations to you. It also will grant the Alberta College of Art and Design a transition to university status. That's in Calgary, ACAD. I remember when the minister made that announcement at that institution. They were very happy about that.

You know, this bill is actually going to be impacting a lot of people's lives in a positive way across the province, and I'm very happy to stand here and support it, and I hope everyone else does, too. Thank you.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments? The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to rise and speak to the bill. I do speak in support of it although I would like to make some comments, both supportive and, hopefully, constructive as well. Let me begin by saying that I'm really glad to see the clarification, maybe even the enshrinement in legislation, of the diversity of college offerings or university or independent schools – all the different kinds of education that will be offered here. I really think that that also contributes to the accessibility. One size does not fit all, and different kinds of education are definitely valuable to different students in different sectors of our economy, different parts of our province, so I think that that's extremely important, that we have these kinds of things.

Yes. Red Deer College as a polytechnic university I think was a great step on the part of the government. I give you credit for that. The focus that they have on technical and industry-informed kinds of education, job-ready education, is extremely important in central Alberta and, I think, to certain segments of our economy as well. I think that kind of education and that kind of innovative approach, if I might even call it that, to education is helpful.

Also, with regard to that multisector approach to education I see the fact that there's a significant geographical distribution. That also, as has already been said, is a very key component of accessibility, the fact that students from every corner of this province can find an opportunity for some form of education almost at their doorstep, if I can say that. I think those are very valuable elements of this, and I'm very supportive to see the opportunity there for the diversity and the choice that that creates for students and for our province.

One of the main focuses, of course, of Bill 19 is to create stability, to create a clear sense of where both revenue and expenses are going. I think these things are important. So we have a cap on tuition.

In the past we've seen, actually, some whipsawing back and forth. We've gone from unpredictable hikes in tuition to implementing tuition freezes that would seek to provide stability for students but then, on the other hand, maybe are not sustainable long term for institutions. Now we have something that I think is a little bit more sustainable and predictable and a reliable pattern both for students and for the universities, and I think that there will be value in this. We don't have the tuition freezes or the wage freezes or the kinds of extreme statements or situations that create difficulties for either the students or the universities. When we look at legislation for this, we have to take both clearly into account. We have to remember both and make it a sustainable situation for both. I think this is important. Even addressing the issue of noninstructional fees, which can be a back door to tuition and a back door to revenue, is an important part of what happens here as well.

I do note, too, that the bill also gives the opportunity for exceptional program tuitions to actually be raised in some cases by up to 10 per cent, but those are exceptional situations, and I expect they will be dealt with that way.

Yeah. We've gone through a tuition freeze the last few years, which has been a great boon for students. The students have appreciated that.

The bill also creates some regulatory authority, as I said, to increase transparency and deal with the issue of noninstructional fees.

I'd also like to point out that, I guess, one of the concerns that I might suggest here is that there's a fair bit of authority or, I could say, discretion being offered to the minister directly. Holding the minister accountable for some of those decisions that may happen administratively later I think would be an important part of this. That's just a comment that I would like to make on it.

The fact that the bill increases student representation is important, and I don't think anybody would question that one. I think it's important that students have a voice and that they be heard at the universities.

Another aspect of the bill, though, that I might point some thoughts to is with regard to international students. I do think that it's important that international students also get some stability although it's a slightly different structure. At the same time, I think that one of the struggles we've had in Canada is to balance the issue between: is our education for our own students, or do we offer education for foreign students? Quite frankly, Canadian education has a very high international reputational value. I think we need to recognize that there are many international students who would like to get into university in Canada, and I think that if we were being very proactive on this, there is an opportunity here for us to build a revenue stream and even a business model for international students in a way that's appropriate without displacing Canadian students. I think we should be building capacity for both, quite frankly.

One of the added benefits of that is that then in many, many cases international students stay. They become part of our culture. They become part of our economy. Those university students are in many cases some of the brightest students from around the world, looking for a Canadian education. They become part of our culture, and they contribute to our culture. Some of the folks at Alberta Innovates are exactly in that line: have come from foreign countries, got educated here, and now contribute in very great ways to our economy. So I think there's a real value in actually cultivating international students in a way that's both a revenue benefit to the province but also not displacing or putting out of place some of our domestic students. Yeah. I think those are extremely important issues.

We provide students stability with this bill, which I think will be good both for domestic and international students. But, again, what are the opportunities after students graduate? They need to be able to find jobs, so we also have to couple this with a strong economy.

I actually have in my riding a past student who just graduated a few years ago and has a bachelor's degree. I think it's in either biology or environmental science. I'm not sure which. But he can't find a job, and he's actually working two jobs at two different fast-food restaurants because in his field he has not been able to find work. It is extremely important that we create an economic environment where students can actually have a hope of using their career choice, of stepping into a job where they can support their families, where they don't have to worry about what's going to happen after graduation, where they don't have to worry about how they are ever going to pay back the debt because there's no job waiting for them. What kind of an economy Alberta has matters immensely. We need to open doors for students so that they can go through their education with the excitement of actually being able to move into a career and have success in that as well. I think this is extremely important.

The challenge then, I think, for the universities is that we need to make sure that we continue to fund strong universities. This is always the balance between tuition for students and universities. Every year Maclean's magazine, I think it is, puts out the rating of all the universities. I know that all the students spend hours poring over it. It's one of their higher sold issues each year. Everybody is looking at the ratings of all the Canadian universities, and they're not just looking at how much the tuition is at each university; they're looking at what the university is good at. They're looking at what other students are saying about the quality of that education.

I actually know students who, when they were looking at university just coming out of high school, said to me very clearly: "If I'm going to go to university and spend the money on that, I'm going to the absolute best university I can go to anywhere. I don't care what it costs." I realize that's a challenge for many people, but what I'm trying to say is that the quality of the university is what attracts many, many, many students. There are many students who look for the best university that they can go to because they believe that they will get the best education and because they believe that they will be connected then with the best opportunity for a great career following that.

We need to make sure that we create an environment that is sustainable for our universities, that our Alberta universities are actually the best in the country and have a reputation for being the best in the country, and one that students actually, truly want to attend and will come to from other places. I think that these are important balances that we should take into account: that universities are sustainable, that the quality of education is superior, and that students will choose the highest quality and the highest reputation possible as a place at which they would like to attend university. I just wanted to make some of those comments.

I think that the bill is definitely moving in the right direction. It creates stability for both students and universities. I applaud the government on the efforts that they've made on that. Of course, there's always room for us to continue to improve things.

With that, Madam Chair, I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 19 for the moment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Never mind.

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments?
Seeing none . . .

Ms Ganley: I'm sorry. I believe the hon. member had moved to adjourn debate on this.

The Chair: Oh. I apologize. I had missed that.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 21 An Act to Protect Patients

The Chair: We'll move on to Bill 21. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill-Mackay. Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Good enough.

Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to introduce an amendment to Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients. It replaces the five-year ban from reinstatement upon finding of sexual assault by a professional with a lifetime ban. I'll wait for the amendment to circulate.

The Chair: This will be amendment A1.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms McPherson: I move that Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients, be amended in section 7(b) in the proposed section 45 as follows: (a) in subsection 3 by striking out "until at least 5 years have elapsed from the date that the decision of unprofessional conduct was made by the hearing tribunal"; and (b) in subsection 4, one, by striking out "section 96.2(a)" and substituting "section 96.2(1)(a)" and, two, by striking out "until at least 5 years have elapsed from the date that the decision of unprofessional conduct was originally made by the governing body of a similar profession in that other jurisdiction"; and (c) by striking out subsection (5).

In short, this amendment modifies the proposed section 7. If passed, the amendment will eliminate the ability of a professional who has been found by their college to have sexually assaulted a patient to reapply to practice in Alberta.

I truly believe our job as elected representatives is to be the voice of people who might not be able to speak up, and survivors of sexual assault by medical professionals should be assured unequivocally that the person who offended against them will have no opportunity to assault someone else in those circumstances again. A health professional who abuses their position of trust to assault a patient has lost their privilege to practise. Being able to apply to return to practise after five years is not enough.

Sexual assault is always an act of exerting power over another person. It's an act of violence that uses sex as a weapon, and we should let survivors know in no uncertain terms that we stand with them. They should be confident in the knowledge that we will not allow anyone else to face the same awful circumstances they had to endure, that the perpetrator of the crime against them will not be empowered to offend in those circumstances again.

According to the Criminal Code of Canada voyeurism earns a five-year sentence. A person who violates their trust to commit a sex crime against a young person faces up to 14 years of prison time. A person who commits sexual assault can be sentenced up to 14 years.

Some might say that a lifetime ban on practising in Alberta is unreasonable for harming a patient for a lifetime. Now, the purpose of sanctions in the criminal justice system are punishment, deterrents, rehabilitation, protection, and denunciation. I've had some conversations with people who believe that because we value rehabilitation in our justice system, practitioners should be allowed to reapply for a licence after five years. I assert that anyone convicted of a sexual assault while holding a position of power over a patient is welcome to demonstrate their rehabilitation outside of the auspices of their prior profession. By all means, pursue a career in research, a position in a new career, and show that you are rehabilitated in other ways.

Earlier in October former Canadian Olympic sprinter Desai Williams received a lifetime ban by Athletics Canada for violating the organization's sexual harassment policy for his actions in 2010. Without trivializing the impacts of sexual harassment, the athlete received a lifetime ban for sexual harassment. The bill before us provides only a five-year ban for the far more severe action of sexual assault.

In 2014, when the Minister of Education revoked the licences of teachers who had sexual intercourse with a student or sexual conversations, the teachers' union accused the minister of playing political games because the ATA had only recommended the suspensions.

So we have a precedent for refusing those convicted of sexual assault from working in their previous field again, and we have the knowledge that – sorry. I find this difficult to talk about. We have the knowledge that survivors of sexual assault have already endured enough.

I really urge everyone to show our solidarity with survivors. Please support this compassionate amendment.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the proposed amendment. I'm going to take this opportunity, because it directly relates, to speak in response to one of the questions raised by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, and that was: under what threshold would it be determined if a professional should have the ability to practise again once their practice permit has been cancelled? I think it does directly relate to this proposed amendment.

Under the current draft of the legislation if a practice permit has been cancelled, a health professional could not apply to the regulatory college for at least five years. It is in no way a guarantee that after five years a practice permit will be reinstated. I also want to clarify that if at the five-year mark they apply and are not granted reinstatement, there's a six-month period between applications to apply again for reinstatement. So if you apply at five years, you can apply at five and a half, and six, and so forth, but there, again, would be no guarantee. Even at five, that is the minimum standard that a permit would be removed for a sexual assault. I want to just reinforce that.

Regulatory colleges would be required to assess the application for reinstatement in accordance with the criteria set out in the Health Professions Act as well as in the professional regulations, and such criteria generally includes assessing evidence of good character, considering the record of the hearing at which the applicant's registration and practice permit were cancelled, whether the member is fit to practise, and whether the individual has met the conditions imposed on the individual before the registration and practice permit were cancelled.

I do just really want to reinforce that, like the member moving the amendment, we have no tolerance for inappropriate conduct, sexual abuse, or sexual misconduct, and regardless of the amendment in no way would we be consenting to that or endorsing that in any way.

I do want to say that we looked at other interjurisdictional comparisons, and as was stated in second reading, the only other jurisdiction to have a requirement is Ontario, and it is five years. So if we were to go to a permanent withdrawal, we would definitely be outliers. Even doing this, we're already being leaders in the country, by bringing in this clause and the mandatory minimum of five years, and I do want members to consider that.

I have to say that in the work that I've embarked on with the various colleges over the last six months, they have been very co-operative, and I'm glad. I think they, like all of us, know that any time that sacred trust in a health professional is breached, it is damaging to that individual long term and also to the profession and the trust that folks have in that profession. So I have to say that in working with the colleges and with working with other jurisdictions in doing the interjurisdictional comparison, I think we've landed on the right spot. And I do want to just reinforce that a mandatory minimum of five years in no way assures folks that if anyone is a risk to the public, that they would get their licence back after five years, that the mandatory minimum would be five. So I just really want to reinforce that.

With that being stated, I think I am inclined to vote against the amendment for that purpose. I think that the mandatory minimum is outlined in this legislation, not proposed that it be stricken permanently, forever. Again, there is the possibility that that could happen even by having a mandatory minimum of five based on the circumstances which are being considered.

For those reasons, I'll be voting against the proposed amendment. But I also wanted to take the opportunity to respond to at least one of the questions raised by the Official Opposition earlier. I'll respond to the rest at another opportunity in committee.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I'd like to thank the minister for her comments. I will just reiterate that it's important for us to stand unequivocally beside survivors of sexual assault. This is a very clear demonstration of our support, by saying to them:

"No. We won't stand for what happened to you, and the person that perpetrated will not have the opportunity to be able to offend in those same circumstances again. They won't be able to sexually assault someone that is coming to them for help." And we can do that by passing this amendment. We can do that by saying that across the board, across the province we will not allow a medical professional regardless of their college to reapply to be a part of that profession again. I think it's important that we do that.

I think we have waited so long to even acknowledge that survivors are there, and we have the opportunity to be really clear and to be outstanding leaders in this aspect. Society says that we don't tolerate sexual assault. Let's demonstrate that through the legislation.

The Chair: Any other members speaking to the amendment? I'll first recognize Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a very difficult topic, obviously. Having been a practitioner for 25 years, this is close to my heart. Important positions of trust, respect, training, ethical duty: this doesn't only apply to physicians, of course. There are some 40 different professionals, I think, involved in this. So it involves quite a large sector of the population.

I'm very sensitive to the issues that the member raises in terms of recognizing the tremendous suffering and impact on a victim of sexual harassment, assault, and various levels of misconduct. These are all degrees of injury, and where one draws the line and where one examines the circumstances around which that occurred and whether there were extenuating circumstances in that professional's life that may or may not identify different approaches to the penalties, the consequences for whatever acts were committed, is important.

But I also recognize that we are in a society that for good reason is equally focused on rehabilitating criminals, rehabilitating people who make mistakes, rehabilitating people who got into trouble for various reasons, some of them mental health related, some of them addictions related, some of them deliberate self-aggrandizement and selfish motives. There are all these ranges of motives for doing bad things to people and bad things to property. But we, I think rightfully, have moved to a point in our society where restoration and rehabilitation rather than punishment is also valued. When I think about the thousands of dental hygienists, occupational therapists, physios, forcing them out of their profession because of an egregious violation of a patient is a step too far for me.

I think we need to recognize victim rights and perhaps compensate, provide all the supports possible to the victim for whatever duration is necessary at the expense of that college that may or may not have been involved or at the expense of that individual who perpetrated the insult. But to ban them for life is not, to me, an appropriate recognition of the fact that we are humans, that we do bad things at times or make mistakes at times because of a variety of issues that are going on in life. I feel very strongly that punishment has been too big a part of our culture as opposed to rehabilitation of people who do make mistakes.

So I share with the minister concern that this is going a step too far. Other jurisdictions in Canada, I guess, have also sustained the fact that there is a minimum penalty required, and five years is a pretty significant impact on both your level of training and your loss of income. In a permanent disqualification you're removing somebody, in whom we've invested probably $100,000 in education and training, from work that is needed in our society. And I think that if they demonstrate appropriate penance and do appropriate rehabilitation and are judged by their peers and perhaps others, maybe there should be an independent council that reviews those

Certainly, there should be a very critical look at their appropriateness and then restrictions on their practice. Can they ever be practising alone without another person present? Can they ever deal with women of a certain age? Should they be restricted from dealing with children? Should they be restricted from dealing with particular medical problems like gynecological and those sorts of problems if there is reason to believe that they are not able to do those in good trust? I guess those are the kinds of judgments and I would call them appropriate limits based on evidence, based on what the individuals are demonstrating in terms of their remorse and their ability to change.

I can't support this amendment either, reluctantly, I think. I feel passionately for the victims of these offences as well, but I also believe very strongly in restorative justice, not in lifelong punitive actions of authorities.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a couple of more comments. I would disagree with the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. We should not be equally focused on the perpetrator and the victim of this kind of a crime. There are circumstances where we should just demonstrate complete rejection of somebody's behaviour, and this is one of those circumstances. Restoration: what about the victim in terms of restoration? Have we spoken to survivors of sexual assault to say: hey, are you okay with that doctor going and practising again and having the opportunity to offend against someone else even though he's been to prison and people say that, you know, he's rehabilitated, and he's awfully sorry for what he did to you?

I don't agree. I don't abide by that at all. I don't think it's fair to survivors of sexual assault to expect them to just swallow their pride and accept that the person that perpetrated against them is allowed to even apply for a licence to do the same sort of profession again. It's as though we're saying: "You know, we care what happened to you, but it isn't as important as what is happening to this person that perpetrated against you. So we're going to give them some more privileges, that we could take away, but we've decided that we're not going to take those away, that they've earned them somehow."

It just seems really backwards to me. When we have the opportunity to be able to say to victims very clearly, "We believe you, and we think what you have to say is important, and we're doing whatever we can to make sure that it doesn't happen to anyone else again," we have that responsibility.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, are you ready for the vote?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm going to take this opportunity to respond to questions that were raised by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View earlier in the day and, I think, reiterated by her colleague the MLA for Airdrie. I will try to do this as succinctly as possible.

I just want to clarify that upon royal assent, new registrants would be required to have much more stringent background checks, and this additional information would enhance the registrar's ability to assess applicants' character, reputation, and assist the registrar in determining whether it's appropriate to approve a registration or not.

There was a question around the disclosure of a health professional. If the regulatory college investigated that a member didn't properly disclose, penalties would be made at a hearing tribunal for that health professional under the Health Professions Act. That would be how that aligns.

In terms of the cancellation practice for sexual abuse, I just want to reiterate that the minimum penalty for abuse would be cancellation of the permit for at least five years. Again, that doesn't mean that there would be any kind of guarantee that a member who had their permit cancelled would ever get their permit back, but it does clarify that it's at least five years. Again, that aligns with Ontario, the only other jurisdiction to allow for the same type of mandatory minimum, where there aren't mandatory minimums in any other jurisdictions.

Then in terms of sexual misconduct the length of the suspension would be determined by a hearing tribunal, and again it could go as high as cancelling a permit if that was deemed to be the appropriate response in that specific circumstance.

I also want to reinforce that if a provider lost their licence under this legislation and wasn't able to practice – there was a question raised about what would that mean for the patients of that provider. Alberta Health would work with the health professional's office, with Alberta Health Services, and with the regulatory college to ensure that patient transfers to a new health professional are done seamlessly – this does happen today – or at least as seamlessly as possible. There are times when practice permits are revoked, and that is the practice that's undertaken in that circumstance.

Then there was another question around public disclosure on the websites. I want to reassure all Albertans and members of this House that Alberta Health will continually monitor the websites and work with the colleges to ensure that the requirements are met by at least this upcoming March 31 and that provisions within the legislation allow the minister to require that additional information be added to the website if it's deemed unacceptable.

In terms of questions regarding section 135.1(1) the Minister of Health will have to approve the standards of practice for the profession as we continue to move forward. Previously the Minister of Health could only review the standards of practice set out by the professional regulatory colleges, so this certainly does give more teeth around the standards of practice as we move forward. I want to reiterate that we didn't have that ability previously. We only had the ability in legislation to review them.

The last question that was asked was around the kind of consultation we had with the regulatory bodies. We definitely engaged with stakeholders, including the regulatory colleges, to help develop this legislation, and they are in support of it. Even yesterday we had the College of Physicians & Surgeons. We also had extensive consultation with sexual assault centres and other organizations, including folks with personal lived experience, and I want to say what a positive process it was and how I really feel it brought us to greater certainty around minimum increased transparency, minimum sanctions, and ensuring that the message is loud and clear to anyone who is a perpetrator in this way that the days of impunity are done and that, moving forward, the sanctions will be the strictest in Canada. We will ensure the greatest levels of transparency as well.

I do just want to take this opportunity to say how thrilled I am. I can't help but draw some parallels between the debate we had in the spring around Bill 9 and the debate we're having today. I think it's really important that all members of this House engage in issues that impact women's health and appreciate that while members weren't in a position where they chose to do so in the spring, they're doing so today. I think it's a really important issue, and I think all women's health issues are important and deserve the full and fair discussion by members of this Assembly. I appreciate that all parties have represented themselves through this process on this bill to date.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, amendments?

Ms Ganley: Sorry, Madam Chair. I would move now that we rise and report Bill 20 and that we rise and report progress on bills 19 and 21.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 20. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 19 and Bill 21. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this day for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report, does the Assembly agree?

Hon. Members: Agree.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the time and that it is Halloween this evening and we've made good progress, I would move that the House adjourn and we reconvene tomorrow morning at 9.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:38 p.m.]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect on the things which make us strong, that make us loving, and that give us strength to represent our constituents to the best of our abilities. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate April 12: Mr. Fildebrandt]

The Acting Speaker: Any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Madam Speaker, it is truly an honour to rise today following a long-standing tradition of this Assembly to give my maiden speech. I would first and foremost like to thank my family, friends, and boyfriend. Your support, encouragement, and unconditional love have played such a key role in getting me here today.

Fort McMurray-Conklin is a stunningly beautiful place, containing many crystal clear rivers, peaceful boreal forests, and stunning northern lights. While indigenous people have called our region home for thousands of years, the development of northeastern Alberta was originally due to the fur trade.

Fort Chipewyan was founded in 1788, 230 years ago, as a trading post by Peter Pond for the North West Company. In 1790 Sir Alexander Mackenzie travelled the region and was the first person to document the description of the oil sands. By 1870 Hudson's Bay Company established a post in Fort McMurray. While the indigenous within the region were very familiar with the bitumen, often using it to waterproof and caulk their canoes, it wasn't until the turn of the last century that we saw any commercialization of the oil sands.

It was in 1925 that Dr. Carl A. Clark developed the hot water separation model, a process that's been refined but is still in use today. In 1967 Great Canadian Oil Sands, which is now Suncor, opened their doors, proving that the oil sands could be developed on a commercial scale. In 1978 Syncrude officially opened their doors, and many of others have joined the scene in the years that have followed.

As you can see, the region I am blessed to represent has a rich history that long predates that of this province.

While I was writing my first formal speech for this Legislature, I decided to read and consult the maiden speeches of the MLAs that have served before me. Not only did I learn some interesting facts about the riding but also of the MLAs. For example, members who have served before me have been asking for an all-weather road to Chipewyan since at least 1975, which was when Hansard was officially established in Alberta. Fun fact: there's still no all-weather access road to Fort Chipewyan.

In my research I found out that I am the 21st person to represent this riding, the sixth person to be elected in a by-election, the first person born in Fort McMurray to represent this riding, the youngest person, the first female, but I also have the distinct honour to be the last person to represent the riding of Fort McMurray-Conklin as the boundaries will once again change come the next election to Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche.

I am quite lucky to have had the privilege of being personally mentored by some of the MLAs that have previously served the riding, including Guy Boutilier, Don Scott, and Brian Jean.

Fifteen years ago I became involved in politics through volunteering on Brian Jean's first federal nomination. I've had the honour and pleasure of working alongside him on various campaigns and projects through this period of time. He has become a true friend and an outstanding mentor to me. I know for a fact that I would not be here today if not for his support. It will be tough to fill your shoes, Brian, but I promise to do my best to honour your outstanding legacy. Thank you for your service to Fort McMurray-Conklin, to Alberta, and to all of Canada.

Since 1905 the area that is now within Fort McMurray-Conklin has gone through many changes evolving from Athabasca to the current boundary of Fort McMurray-Conklin and soon to be the new boundaries of Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche.

I'd like to take a moment to recognize some of the notable and remarkable members that have previously served the area: Jean Côté, who went on to become a senator; Michael Maccagno, who was the former Liberal leader; Brian Jean, former Wildrose leader; Norman Weiss, the first but luckily not last Fort McMurrayite to serve our amazing region; Adam Germain, who currently serves as a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench; and Don Scott, who is the current mayor of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. And a sincere thank you to all of those who have served before me for helping pave the road, literally and figuratively. Thank you for your foresight to pave highway 881 and to twin most of 63. It sure makes the travel a lot easier and a lot safer.

To Leo Piquette, un fier franco-albertain, qui a battu pour le droit de s'adresser à la législature albertaine en français: je suis extrêmement fière d'être capable de vous adresser en français aujourd'hui. Je dois remercier mes parents, qui ont pris la décision très sage de m'enregistrer dans le programme d'immersion à partir de la maternelle. J'ai pu compléter mon secondaire en immersion, ce qui m'a donné l'occasion de m'inscrire au campus francophone de l'Université de l'Alberta, le campus Saint-Jean, ou la fac, comme c'est connu affectueusement. C'est ici où j'ai obtenu mon baccalauréat ès arts en sciences politiques.

Now for the rest of you in English. To Leo Piquette, a Franco-Albertan who fought for the right to address this Assembly in French: I'm extremely proud to be able to address you in French today. A big thanks to goes to my parents for their decision to enrol me in French immersion from kindergarten to grade 12, graduating from Father Mercredi high school with both an English and French diploma, giving me the opportunity to enrol in the University of Alberta's francophone campus St. Jean, or as it's affectionately known, The Fac, where I earned my bachelor of arts in political science.

After completing my degree, I returned to Fort McMurray to be with my family. Fort McMurray is and always has been my home. In fact, my family has called Fort McMurray home for almost 50 years. My dad, Gord, has worked in the oil sands for over 40 years now, and I was proudly at his side two weeks ago to see him recognized for four decades of service to Syncrude. His strong work ethic and determination have been guiding principles in my life.

My mom, Jan, owned and operated small businesses in town for almost 20 years before ending her career at Keyano College. My mom was the quintessential definition of a social butterfly. She once told me that strangers were simply friends you hadn't met yet. For my mother almost any outing took at least twice as long as it normally should have taken. She always stopped to talk to people she knew and often even people she didn't know yet. In so many ways it was my mom that allowed me to pursue my passion for politics, and perhaps she's the reason why I'm so good at door-knocking now.

Like me, my siblings Sara, Scott, and Brent are all proud to call Fort McMurray their home. My sister and her husband, Cameron, have two beautiful children Ezekiel and Astrid, and I fully admit I'm a very proud auntie.

To my mother: words will never be able to express how much I miss you, but I am so grateful for the lessons you taught me, the unconditional love you showed me and everyone around you. I will always aim to make you proud.

To my dad: you are my biggest cheerleader, my most trusted confidant, and my best volunteer. Thank you for always fighting for me, believing in me, pushing me ahead, and making me be my very best self.

To my sister, brothers, brother-in-law, niece, and nephew: thank you for making sure that I was always fed and keeping me very grounded.

To my boyfriend, Niall: thank you for being so understanding and supportive.

To all my friends that have encouraged me and kept me positive: thank you for being so considerate and helpful.

To my campaign teams – yes, teams; three in the last six months, ever increasing in size, skill, and enthusiasm to see the NDP defeated in 2019 and restore the Alberta advantage – thank you for your dedicated work and constant optimism.

To the people of Fort McMurray-Conklin: I am honoured to represent you, and I sincerely thank you for trusting me with your vote.

Fort McMurray is a lot of different things to a lot of different people. To many Canadians Fort McMurray represented hope, opportunity, and a fresh start. To the world's leading oil producers we're a tough competitor who refuses to lie down. For far too many elected officials across Canada, we're simply a cash cow. To the fringe eco activists we're the enemy. In fact, Tzeporah Berman, an NDP-appointed member of the oil sands advisory group, refers to my region as Mordor. But to me Fort McMurray has and always will be home. I was born and raised here. I've lived and worked here. Conservatives of every stripe, federal and provincial, have always had our back. They understand that when Fort McMurray works, Alberta works. When Alberta works, Canada works.

I will never back down. Not from the Alberta NDP, not from the Trudeau Liberals, and most especially not from the fringe eco activists seeking to landlock our oil sands. I will continue to be a proud, unapologetic supporter and defender of our oil and gas sector and pipelines. You see, this is our home, and we are going to defend it.

Thank you.

9:10

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to thank the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin for her first big speech in this House, her maiden speech. It was an absolute pleasure to hear about all of the wonderful things that happen in the region that she represents, the economic driver of this province and this country, and the stories of the people that live within that community. I'm just wondering if my hon. colleague could just give us a little bit more insight into the people of Fort McMurray and area and what that means to her and what that means to our province. I think that we would all benefit from that conversation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you for that question, Madam Speaker. Fort McMurray is a very diverse community, as many of you guys are aware. It's one of the most multicultural and also one of the youngest communities in Canada, which is quite fitting for me to be the youngest MLA and the first female. Fort McMurray has a very can-do attitude and a get 'er done spirit, not limiting people by their gender, their age, their education, or their race or religion, something that I'm very proud of and that I hope to continue pushing forward as the MLA for this region.

Thank you so much.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd, too, like to ask one of our newest members – as one of the elder members of the Chamber I'd like to have her explain her wonderful ability of bilingualism. I think that's astounding and shows a greater depth of experience that a lot of people may not understand. I'd like the member to give us some background to her bilingualism.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I stated in my speech earlier, I had the opportunity of being enrolled in French immersion education in Fort McMurray from kindergarten all the way through to grade 12 and then went on to go to the francophone Campus Saint-Jean. It's something that I'm very proud of. In fact, in my most recent by-election I often would end up speaking with people at the doors in French as Fort McMurray has a very rich francophone population, and it was something that was quite an asset. As I've been travelling and have most recently won the nomination for the Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche riding, the francophone aspect has become even more valuable. I look forward to serving Albertans and using my skill to their benefit.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreshen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's truly an honour to stand here today and to give my maiden speech as the MLA for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and as was mentioned yesterday, I have a proud pioneer history in this province, here in Alberta. My family settled and they built a new life in central Alberta, east of Red Deer, just east of the city, right in the middle of the constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. This was all before Alberta was even a province. It was just the Northwest Territories at that time, and it was even before this building was even built.

My great-grandfather was a surveyor for the railroad, and he set up a ranch in the area. My grandfather was a rancher. He also traded with pelts and skins, and he was a hunter, Madam Speaker. On the other side of my family they moved from the United States and broke the land into a grain farm well over a hundred years ago. So I have deep connection to agriculture and to the area of the land in my riding, and I'll always be proud of that.

Representing the community that was built by so many pioneer families: it is truly an honour. At that time for those families there were very limited government services, and I can only imagine what they must have went through to carry just what they could — they came across on wagons or trains — and that was it. They had to build and create a world and a community that they wanted. I think that's a remarkable story and a remarkable history that we have here in Alberta. I don't think it gets celebrated enough, and I think it's something that we should really cherish here.

I know some hon. members like to talk about the incredible or outstanding people in their riding, but I truly have incredible people in the riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. During the Pine Lake tornado in 2000 that killed 12 people and injured hundreds more, it was remarkable to see neighbours that stood shoulder to shoulder helping one another, doctoring the injured, cleaning up the shoreline, and comforting those that lost so much. People were just trying to help out others any way that they could.

Although it was 18 years ago, Madam Speaker, I can still remember a boat that nosedived about 20 yards away from where my family took shelter. As a child I was pulling walls and sinks and debris from trailers out of the water, and I can still remember my father swimming to the resort to help, which from the water looked like a complete war zone. Neighbours would make food, and they would bring it to the local community hall that was set up as a makeshift camp for people that were displaced. It's powerful moments like this that really put life and politics into perspective. I think it really helps us to recognize what truly is important in life.

I have other amazing, resilient communities in my riding, Madam Speaker. The city of Sylvan Lake is one of the fastest growing and has been one of the fastest growing communities in Alberta. It has a beautiful beach, and if members in this Assembly haven't actually been to Sylvan Lake, I would encourage that they go there in the summer. It's a lot of fun. It's a great place with a lot of young families, lots working in the oil and gas sector. Also, as a bedroom community for the city of Red Deer, lots of people will travel back and forth between Sylvan Lake and Red Deer. It's a great place for young families to raise their families.

Spruce View and Bowden are other great communities. They're great farming areas. Actually, the first grand opening I went to as an MLA was in Bowden for a new grain terminal, which was of special significance for me because I worked for the minister of agriculture who got rid of the Canadian Wheat Board monopoly. As a farm kid we actually took our grain to an elevator when the Canadian Wheat Board monopoly got removed, and we dubbed it our freedom wheat. It was in the outstanding Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills's riding, actually, in Trochu. But we delivered our wheat.

It was an amazing moment because so many people and people in this Chamber fought so hard for so many years to get rid of that Wheat Board monopoly and for farmers to be able to have the freedom to sell their property and to sell what they do. It was an amazing, amazing moment. I was even tasked, when I was working with the federal government, to work on legal pardons for peaceful civil disobedient farmers, one of which is just a couple yards away from me today, Madam Speaker.

There are other great farming communities in my constituency. Elnora and Delburne are on the eastern edge of my riding. I went to school at the Elnora elementary school and took shop classes in Delburne. I then went to Innisfail for high school and played hockey and started up their football program there. I think that's a great thing about being from Pine Lake, that you're in the middle of nowhere or the centre of the universe, depending on how you want to look at it, because all these communities are equidistant from Pine Lake.

But these small towns and these public schools still provide great education today, and I think it's important that we can give these schools the resources and prioritize them because it is a great asset to have in a province like Alberta. One of my first roles as MLA was to attend the 100-year anniversary of the Elnora elementary school. More recently I attended the 125th anniversary of St Luke's Anglican church in Red Deer. Even though, yes, we are a young province, we still have amazing history in this province. Again, I believe it's very important that we take the time to celebrate it.

Now, not to dwell too much on politics, but I was humbled to be trusted and voted in during a recent by-election in July. I was given a mandate to serve the people of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and I take that very seriously and will every day that I am here. Having parents and a sister who are all teachers, Madam Speaker, they were the first to point out that I won the election with honours, receiving over 80 per cent of the vote.

Although it doesn't seem to be a popular opinion under this dome, people in my riding do not want a carbon tax that increases the cost of living in Alberta. People in my riding want a government that actually listens to Albertans, not to special-interest groups or special-interest labour groups that increase red tape and financial burdens on farmers. People in my riding want a government that stands up for our oil and gas sector, not that reinvents the record and pays lip service but actually takes steps to defend Alberta's interest.

Madam Speaker, people in my riding are proud to host the CFR. The Canadian Finals Rodeo is coming to Red Deer. Again, if people want to go down to Red Deer, it's an amazing place. Great agricultural and rodeo families come from my area. I know it's almost a political sin to actually name people, but Jack Daines is a legend from my area in the livestock and rodeo world. He's a great family friend, and I think what he's done for the rodeo industry is remarkable. On the topic of rodeo, even my grandfather in the '20s was actually a contestant and an outrider in the Calgary Stampede.

Madam Speaker, it's an honour to take my seat in this Legislature, which I believe is a safe place to debate ideas and to help find solutions that will make Alberta more competitive and successful. A couple of weeks ago I was honoured that at my swearing-in ceremony I could have so many family and friends and supporters and also the Lieutenant Governor, Lois Mitchell. Although as a lifelong Edmonton Eskimos fan I'd rather not talk football with her for the remainder of the season, I was truly humbled to actually be presented with the Grey Cup after my swearing-in ceremony.

I look forward to honouring the traditions of this place, fighting for the people of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and debating and bringing forth good policies for the betterment of Alberta. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for the time.

With that, I would like to adjourn debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 22 An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today on behalf of the minister to move second reading of Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities.

The proposed changes in this legislation will increase fairness for indigenous families and improve support for children in and out of care. It will increase safety and accountability across the system. Most importantly, it will help improve the lives of more than 10,000 children and youth receiving services. Our government is committed to reconciliation and to making practical, common-sense improvements to Alberta's child intervention system. This legislation would address concerns that, as a social worker and a former member on the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, I have heard from children and families across Alberta. Bill 22 would make the intervention system fairer and more supportive for indigenous peoples.

Currently First Nations have no formal role in the court process involving member children. This means that First Nations are never aware that a child from their nation has been adopted by a nonindigenous family or is a subject of a guardianship order. They are given no opportunity to appear in court and to ask to have a say. Under Bill 22, First Nations would be automatically notified and could appear in court whenever someone applies for private guardianship of children of their band.

Currently there are two ways to apply for permanent guardianship of a child in care, through the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which requires a mandatory home study and a cultural connection plan, and through the Family Law Act, which does not. Under this legislation every guardianship application for a child in care would follow the same process. This would ensure that every application meets a child in care's unique needs.

The proposed legislation would also strengthen how we support child safety and well-being throughout the system. Bill 22 would introduce new guiding principles that highlight child safety and make indigenous involvement a fundamental component of that system. These principles would provide a guiding vision of how the system should operate for courts, caseworkers, media, and others. Mandatory decision-making criteria would also require courts and caseworkers to consider every facet of a child's safety and well-being when deciding whether to remove a child from home, grant a guardianship order, and make other life-altering decisions.

Currently children also lose financial supports for permanency if their guardian dies, moves away, or otherwise changes. Under this legislation financial supports would stay with the child to help pay for counselling, respite care, transportation, and other important services.

Our government is committed to accountability and transparency. Bill 22 would create strict new public reporting requirements, including requiring Children's Services to report every death, injury, and serious incident within four days. These changes would ensure that Albertans are aware how government is providing services and know when something has gone wrong. They would make the system more open and accountable than ever before, helping us create the system that children and families deserve.

This legislation is the first in a three-phase review of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. It acts on recommendations from the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention and is part of Alberta's public action plan to better protect children and support families. Bill 22 represents an important step towards a stronger, safer tomorrow, where children are kept safe, where family and cultural connections are better respected, and where children are kept safely with their families and their communities whenever possible. These changes would make the system fairer and more supportive for indigenous people. They would help improve safety and long-term well-being of children across Alberta.

I would like to take this opportunity to encourage my colleagues to support this bill, and I look forward to hearing the debate. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on Bill 22, which is entitled An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. It's been a long road to get here, as you know, Madam Speaker. We served together on the ministerial panel. I just want to take a couple of minutes to talk about this. This whole thing really grew out of the tragedy of young Serenity, who would be eight years old if she was still alive today. We had debates and questions in this House about Serenity, and we may have debates and questions about Serenity's case in the future.

But out of that, Madam Speaker, grew a demand from the opposition to have an all-party committee look into children in care, and I will say that we were, rightly so, I would say, pretty aggressive about wanting to have that committee because it was obvious that some positive changes to the way we treat children in care needed to take place. We pushed pretty hard for that all-party committee, and we didn't get it. But I will say in fairness that the Premier finally did grant us a ministerial panel and even gave this place a new minister to look after Children's Services. As best I can tell, that minister is working very hard to discharge her duties, and I thank her for that.

We got to the ministerial panel, and here's what I will say. I would thank all members from all parties that were on the ministerial panel. In my view, we worked in a very nonpartisan way for the betterment of children in care in Alberta, because it matters.

Now, historically, as I understand it, Madam Speaker, this isn't a new problem. This has been an issue that has been with us for a long time, through this government, through previous governments, including one that I was part of. I will say that I'm not sure that the bill today is going to solve everything, but that doesn't mean it's a bad bill. In fact, in fairness to everybody, as I understand it, there are improvements required in the way that we treat children in care. There are improvements required in all 10 provinces in Canada and, as I understand, in all 50 states in the United States and other places across the world. This is a complex issue that I'm not sure we're ever going to get to a hundred per cent, perfect place on, but it's our responsibility to move forward and to improve where we can and to do better where we can. This appears to be an effort by the government to do so, so I appreciate that.

Now, one of the first impressions of this that I had was from our former colleague Manmeet Bhullar, who I think started to try to address this issue during his brief time as minister. One of the things that he told me that made an impression was that you'd be surprised how much better kids do with their own parents even if their parents don't appear to be what you would call ideal parents. In fact, if they would appear to be poor parents, in most cases the kids actually will do better with them than without them. It seems to be a fact. When you look into it, it seems to hold true. However, there are cases where, when children are in danger, through their parents or for other reasons – perhaps they don't have parents anymore – they need to be put into the care of the government, and it's our duty on all sides of this House to do the best we can to look after those children that are in our care.

Another thing that really was at the core, in my view, of what we discovered and talked about and learned and dealt with on the ministerial panel was the fact that about 69 per cent of kids in care are indigenous, and indeed certainly 69 per cent of Albertans are not indigenous, which is to say that a severely high percentage of kids in care originate from Alberta's indigenous communities, far greater than the percentage that those communities are part of Alberta society. One has to really look seriously at that, and I would dare say that the ministerial panel really did make an effort at doing just that.

Now, one of the pages of the bill that most people don't bother reading – at least, it's my understanding that definitions were changed and words changed – is page 22 of the bill. It says:

33 The following sections are amended by striking out “aboriginal” wherever it occurs and substituting “Indigenous.”

And following that:

35 The following sections are amended by striking out “an Indian” wherever it occurs and substituting “a First Nation Individual.”

Again, as I said, with about 69 per cent of the kids in care being indigenous, using language that's more respectful to First Nations and indigenous people I believe is a very important element of this. I thank the government for making those changes in this bill. I think that's more important than we know today. It will probably prove to be more important than we think in the days and years to come in the future.

We sat on the committee. Here's another thing that I will say. Again, I'm not sure that the bill is perfect, but I will say this. One of the things that we learned and dealt with was that over the last decades in Alberta there were dozens, probably, of reports on children in care that came forward and were passed by this Assembly on which there was little or no action taken. So I will say this. Since the government is taking some action on this, that's a step forward, and they deserve credit for that. In fact, if the bill is not perfect – the fact is that it's one of three, as described by the government; in other words, there are two more to come – then perhaps it would be important to look at the outstanding recommendations from the committee and the deliberations of the committee.

I'd prefer it done in a nonpartisan, across-the-floor way, again, to make sure that when we get through what are purported to be or expected to be three bills to deal with the recommendations of the committee, we cover as much ground as we can and we cover it with a common understanding of what the committee learned and, hopefully, with a common goal, which I believe we all have in this House, of making life better for kids when they're in our care.

Again, I think the most important principle we need to remember as we go through this is that when a child is in care, surely the minister has primary responsibility, but I think all 87 of us in this House bear a responsibility. I think that we ought to share that responsibility and work together to make sure those kids who are our responsibility are looked after in the best way that they can be.

There are several sections here that, again, I'm sure I'll have more to say about as we get into Committee of the Whole and whatnot. I haven't had possession of the bill to look at it for very many hours. The fact that if a child is going to be put in someone's care and they're over 12, they actually have a say: now, it says in the next section after that that the court can overturn that child's decision, but just the fact that even before that happens, a child that's over 12, before they're put in the care of different adults, will actually have something to say about that I think is a positive thing.

Lots of people in this House are closer to the age of 12 than I am. A couple are further away. I would say that most people here are closer than me, but even I can remember that I had some of my own opinions at the age of 12. Some of them were even correct. Many kids today and ones in care will have opinions about where they'd like to be cared for and who they'd like to be cared for by, and I would suggest to you that many of their opinions would also be correct. To have their voice heard is a positive step, in my opinion, a positive thing coming forward.

Now, an element that I think is important is that under this bill financial supports in the future, when the child's condition changes, as I understand it, will follow the child, not the guardian. You know, if you think about it, you think: why did this have to change? Well, it does. It does, and the fact that it is changing as a result of this bill I see as a positive thing and one more thing that I think is worth talking about. Clearly, funds to look after a child are meant for the child. In having the child move to a different home, a different guardian for whatever reason, there shouldn't be a delay with the funding following because, of course, there is no delay in the child's needs. The new guardian should have access to those resources for the benefit of the child right away without delay and without any gap in the care that the child gets.

Again, I touched on it a minute ago with the matters to be considered: recognize the child's opinion. If it's deemed that the child is capable of forming an opinion, it has to be taken into account in relation to decision-making about their interaction with the child welfare system. I just talked about kids that are 12, but kids that are two and three and four and five also know where they're comfortable and where they feel loved and where they want to be. I think that the requirement to listen to a child at any age who's in the care of the government about where and how their care changes, to hear that child's opinion, is no small matter and one that I am happy to see as we move forward.

The guiding principles that provide the context by which the act must be interpreted so that the safety and well-being of the children are paramount considerations should ensure that portions of the act cannot be taken out of context. The principles will be overarching goals of the act.

I like that, Madam Speaker, because I think that if there's one thing that we learned as we went through this, it's that every child is an individual, that every family is an individual, that every guardian is an individual. If you try to get too prescriptive with the rules about how that child is looked after, even with the best, best, best of intentions, it can turn out that what's specifically good for one child is not necessarily good for the next child, and if they're both stuck under the same specific rules with no flexibility in them, then one child gets good treatment and another child doesn't. So I think an important learning of the committee was that rather than severely prescriptive individual rules, overarching, guiding principles I think are what will lead us to looking after kids in care better.

Certainly, we have to put responsibility – and, listen, we put tremendous responsibility – on the people that look after children in the system, both their guardians and the bureaucrats, the public-sector workers that supervise and look after this. It's a weighty responsibility, but using guiding principles rather than severely prescriptive rules actually allows those professionals, in my view, more leeway to do the right thing rather than check the box: the child must be okay because I checked the box. I'd much rather have those professionals saying: in my professional judgment, using these guiding principles, we made a specific decision for the child because we think it's in the child's best interests. In my view, that ought to be much more effective than a prescriptive box that gets checked without due consideration over whether it actually improves the child's life or makes it worse.

Madam Speaker, we spent a lot of time on this. There are a lot of children in care that are depending upon us to do the right thing. There's a lot more to be said, and you can take this as a threat or a promise, whichever you prefer, and that threat or promise is that I'm likely to be saying more about it because this matters to me.

But at this point I will take my seat and hear debate from my colleagues. I'll just say that I think we need to get this right.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to rise in this House and speak on such a very important matter. I'm very pleased with and I'm in strong support of Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. The proposed changes in this legislation will increase fairness for indigenous families and improve support for children in and out of care.

The previous government, in my opinion, failed the indigenous peoples in West Yellowhead. I'm not going to mention any of the case files that I worked on, but there were many. The indigenous peoples in West Yellowhead were told that there weren't any indigenous peoples in West Yellowhead because there were no reserves. You'd hear this from the people I talked to, and the files that we reviewed were many, like I said. They weren't respected, and how can you respect people when these comments are made to them?

Hinton, by the way, has a 25 per cent indigenous population. Then we talk about Grande Cache, with the co-ops and the enterprises. There are a number of indigenous peoples in Susa Creek, as an example.

There are also many indigenous peoples in Edson and Marlboro that were treated this way by the previous government, many case files, like you said. Once people found out that my office and my staff would listen to these people and listen to the concerns and some of the tragedies, I guess, about how these families were treated – and we know for a fact that for some of the children that were removed from these families, in some cases it's pretty clear it was for no apparent reason. I agree that they should be removed in the event of protecting a child from harm. I totally, totally get that and understand that, and even the indigenous peoples understood that as well.

But it's a sad state of affairs when these people would meet with us and you would hear of the stories time and time again, whether it was at the office in Hinton or when we had office hours in Edson. There were lineups in the hallway because they found out that we would listen to them and that we'd present their cases to the minister and say: look, we need to look at these things to try and move things forward.

That's why it's so important that this bill move forward. It will increase safety and accountability, which the system lacked and didn't have. It would improve the lives of many of the indigenous peoples in West Yellowhead. Our government is committed to reconciliation. The biggest problem to get by with this is the fact that a lot of people bring up the issue of residential schools and what happened, and of course you can't ignore the '60s scoop as part of it. Even today a lot of the people will not identify themselves as being indigenous for the fear that we could take their children away. Today it still exists because of what happened. Then when you look at the way these case files were handled, I can understand the fear that these people have. Yet by the same token we did not address these concerns in a real, fair, and proper manner.

When we look at their role in court, they're left by the wayside because they don't understand. It's a white man's system, they say. Because they don't understand, they don't know how to participate, so they're left behind. Like it says, the First Nations are not even aware that a child from their nation is even being adopted by a nonindigenous family or is the subject of a guardianship order until it's too late because they weren't involved in the process. They had no understanding. When they do intervene too late, usually there are unintended consequences where the child is removed from the community. I know a particular case in Grande Cache that was exactly – exactly – as they said. That's exactly what happened to the family. Even though there was somebody there willing to take the child in, because of a failure or for whatever reason, they weren't even given a chance.

Our government is fighting for what matters for everyday Albertans, and this includes our indigenous peoples. It's important that we support this bill. Under Bill 22, First Nations would be automatically notified so that they could be part of the whole process of what's going on with them through the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which requires a mandatory home study and cultural connection plan, and that is important.

I'll bring up the issue of, say, Susa Creek school, for example. I was up there and visited with them. This is where the elders participate even in the school program and they teach the students about indigenous culture. They're right involved in that, so they're involved through the whole process of all these things to make sure that the young people understand about the culture and have participated up there. It was a fantastic opportunity that I had visiting with them at that school. It's just a small community school, but it's fantastic, the things that they do.

Under this legislation every guardianship application for a child would allow due process. This will ensure that every application meets a child in care's unique needs, which need to be respected. This proposed legislation would strengthen how we support child safety and well-being throughout the system, which was lacking for many years, as I said. The case files that we dealt with were something else.

Bill 22 will introduce new guiding principles that highlight child safety, make indigenous involvement a fundamental component of this system, which is very important to these people because a lot of them, like I said, Madam Speaker, just don't understand. White man's rules, they say. So it's important that when we do these things, we involve them.

Mandatory decision-making criteria would also require a course and caseworkers to consider every facet of a child's safety and well-being when deciding whether to remove a child from a home, grant a guardianship order, and make many other life-altering decisions. This is fundamental. It's fundamental to build reconciliation when we're dealing with these people, to understand, to help them so that they succeed.

Under this legislation financial supports would stay with the child to help pay for counselling, respite care, transportation, and other important services that were never there before.

Bill 22 would create strict new public reporting requirements, which is a good thing. These changes will ensure that Albertans are aware of how our government is providing services and know when something has gone wrong. It was ignored for so many years, and it was pretty evident, like I said, by all the case files that we were dealing with. It was so many that it would fill a six-inch binder. That's how bad it was.

This legislation is the first in a three-phase review of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which I pushed very hard with the ministry because it was sadly lacking in the past. Past government, like I said, ignored some of these people for many years. It acts on recommendations from the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention as part of Alberta's public action plan to better protect children and support families, which is really needed.

Bill 22 represents an important step towards a stronger and safer tomorrow where more children are kept safe – that is very important, very important to the indigenous peoples of West Yellowhead and, for that matter, to all indigenous peoples across the province – where family and cultural connections are better respected. We failed them because we didn't respect their culture and their way of life. They were left behind far too long. I applaud the minister for bringing this forward, and I applaud the minister for recognizing and doing the things with this panel that looked at this problem, that existed for many years.

I would like to encourage my other colleagues to support this bill for those reasons that I've mentioned. I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate on this very important bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Wonderful. Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It certainly is an honour to rise on Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. You know, I have a prepared speech here, but I also have, sadly, a lot of experience in dealing with vulnerable kids. Certainly, as the only law enforcement member who was ever on the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness, I can tell you that this was an issue that came up. I think that even a decade ago the disproportionate number of children surrounding the vulnerable population of homelessness that was part of the indigenous community was certainly very, very sad. I see Bill 22 certainly as a step in the right direction. As my colleague from Calgary-Hays indicated, I do believe that there is a lot – a lot – more work that needs to get done.

Madam Speaker, the road to get to this point, of course, has been long. It's certainly been a harrowing one. I feel confident in saying that every one of us in the Legislative Assembly has learned and, ultimately, changed as we've collectively walked through this path. You know, the driving force behind the legislation before us started today with three people: first, the Alberta Child and Youth Advocate, Mr. Del Graff, who issued an investigation review in October of 2016; my friend and colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, who was tenacious in pushing for this ministerial panel to investigate Mr. Graff's disturbing findings – I certainly commend him for everything that he has done – and of course, finally, not lastly, most importantly, little Serenity. It is that case which has stuck in the minds and hearts of every single member in this Chamber. Let me just take a few moments, Madam Speaker, to address Serenity, for she and her family have been a guiding passion for me.

You know, I wear this pin on my lapel that says Children First. A lot of people think it actually has to do with the minister who wore it before me, but it doesn't. When I was part of the Alberta Secretariat, Minister Hancock was the minister in charge at that particular time, and he issued us these pins. It was very much something that was kind of a nice keepsake to have, but it wasn't until the Serenity case that it really started to hit me and, I believe, every single person in this Chamber what that really, truly means.

Many of us here have children. Children need and ought to be first in any of the decision-making that occurs inside and outside this Chamber.

For me it means that when I'm thinking about my portfolio, when I think of my policing, I think about the children and the impact on the families. Certainly, that's something that has been very near and dear to me and my decision-making. You know, before Serenity became a household name in Alberta, many of us always talked about children first, but I think with that particular case people were really starting to realize that those were just words and that action needs to take place.

Again, I commend a bill that is a step towards a goal, a very challenging goal. I think to suggest that any government in Canada, and I would say any government in North America, has this right would be inaccurate. I think there has been a lot throughout time, the last several years – you know, people have made efforts, I think with good intentions, but sadly there have been failures. There have been good things, but it's certainly a system that will require a lot more time, effort, and certainly a bipartisan approach to putting children first.

Madam Speaker, you know, it really wasn't until Serenity reached out through the pages of Mr. Graff's report that we truly understood the importance of what had transpired. That is what we're doing here today as we speak in support of this legislation that we have before us. We're committing to keep Serenity's spirit in our hearts as we take care of some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens.

I don't think I'm speaking out of turn by saying, Madam Speaker, that we failed Serenity. I think we as an Assembly, we as a society, all of us failed her, and we failed her family. I vowed personally to her mother, who came to this Chamber, and her close relatives that also attended here that I would not fail her moving forward.

This is one of the reasons why I'm very proud to stand up and speak to this bill and I'm very proud of, again, my friend from Calgary-Hays for everything that he has done for this very important issue as well. I'd like to give credit to everyone involved, starting of course with the ministerial panel, who spent countless hours travelling around Alberta, hearing directly from those directly involved with the affected child intervention system.

But, Madam Speaker, I would be remiss in not mentioning a component that I did not see in this bill as it relates to a proposal that I previously had before this House related to an amendment to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, that would compel adults – compel all adults – who know that a child is being abused to contact either the police or the child welfare director in their region. I thought it was something that was important. I thought it was common sense. I said that if a child is being abused, if a child is being sexually abused, physically abused, adults need to know that you cannot turn a blind eye – you cannot turn a blind eye – to a child at risk.

Then we had Serenity's mother and family here, and the government, sadly, said no to something that I thought was common sense. Now, the minister had indicated to me that the police just weren't on board with that. Well, Madam Speaker, as a retired police officer I went to the source, and I asked the president of the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. I said, "Hey, do you have an issue with this bill as it pertains to possibly helping children and maybe something could possibly be added into Bill 22, as an example?" and he responded to me and said: "No. The bill that you showed me, that you've just presented to me, I don't have an issue with." I don't have an issue with. I said, "Well, what did you have an issue with that the minister seemed to indicate that the police would not be in favour of?" "Well, Member, I saw a first draft, and in that first draft we had some concerns but nothing that we could not work through.” So it is completely inaccurate that the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police would not be supportive of a change in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act that would compel all adults who know that a child is being abused to contact the police or the child welfare director.

So when the Member for West Yellowhead talks about failures, there’s a failure right there. That’s a failure right there, right in front of your face, and you and your government own that. Now, I promise that minister, that government, the previous government had flaws. No doubt.

When I was a member of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness and just a young constable, I provided recommendations. It was I who identified youth homelessness as an issue in this province, Madam Speaker. Did the government act on it? No, they did not, and that goes back to what I’m saying, the failures of the previous government. They put the committees together, they did not listen, and here we are today.

But Bill 22, ma’am, stands out. What stands out to me in this bill is an overarching principle. The act must be interpreted and administered so that the safety and well-being of children are the paramount considerations. Again, let’s point to the lapel pin. It’s simple. It’s important. Let’s drill down and look at the principles that flow from that particular statement, Madam Speaker. Protection from harm, a child’s best interests, safety and well-being being paramount: if only that had applied to Serenity. But if we adopt this principle, and we ensure that it happens, then these positive steps will help other children today.

Let’s pull out another principle that was critical in Serenity’s case, Madam Speaker. It’s the lasting relationships with family, friends, caregivers, and others whom they have formed connections with. Serenity and her siblings had been thriving when they were sent to a home, where she died and her siblings were traumatized. For that reason, I’m especially pleased that the principle is part of the principles in Bill 22. It’s important.

For the record, Madam Speaker, Serenity’s siblings – we’re in contact with the family – are thriving. They of course experienced enormous trauma in the situation that they were placed, but they’re surviving, and I’m very proud of the positive stories that we are hearing coming from that family.

Madam Speaker, I just want to move to another area under the proposed legislation that makes me very happy, ensuring that decisions regarding a child receiving intervention services consider a number of key matters. I’ll pick out the importance of ensuring that if the child is capable of forming an opinion, it should be taken into account. The Child and Youth Advocate has mentioned this in other reports he has issued as well, and that is a very good thing.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I’m pleased to rise to speak to Bill 22. I was going to say that it’s the culmination of a long process; it isn’t actually, I think, the end of this process. I sincerely hope it isn’t. Having talked with the minister and some of my colleagues in the House, I truly believe that it is not an end, although I think we have to acknowledge that it is a very important step forward and has come out of a lot of the very good work done by the all-party child intervention panel.

The process: I think it’s important to remember how it is that we got here, and this is not something that has just come up. This has been an ongoing challenge for the government of Alberta – certainly, events prior to this government coming into power. I think it’s important to never forget the late and very much missed Manmeet Singh Bhullar and the work that he did on this file, and ministers before and since, every one of whom I think in their heart had children’s interests at the forefront.

But I think we also have to acknowledge that there have historically been some tremendous shortcomings in Alberta’s child intervention system, and nowhere is that more true than in indigenous children’s experience, indigenous families’ experience with the child intervention system, that has for many, many, many years been an extension of a colonial attitude, which is manifest in residential schools and is manifest historically in the ‘60s scoop. And in many ways – we heard this from many indigenous people through the process – it feels like the child intervention system is really no different than those things. It is about separating indigenous kids from their families, and that must end. I believe that Bill 22 is an important step in the right direction. It’s not an end in itself – I don’t think we’re there yet – but I think it is an important step in the right direction.

The process itself was a very, very good process, and I want to thank the minister and the government for agreeing to make this a truly open, all-party, nonpartisan process. It is an emotional issue. It will continue to be an emotional issue. I would hope in the debate on this bill that we continue to do a good job of not making it a hard partisan issue, that we really focus on outcomes for children, which is why I think all of us are here.

I want to take this time on the record and formally to not just thank the minister but to thank the members who were on the panel, Madam Speaker, yourself included, members here in the House today who were part of that process: members from the United Conservative opposition who provided a lot of thoughtful input; the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the Liberal caucus; members on the government side who provided tremendous insight and lived experience working with child intervention. Also, the experts that we had on the panel: Bruce MacLaurin from the University of Calgary, Tyler White from Siksika Health Services, Dr. Peter Choate from Mount Royal University, and the newly made senator Dr. Patti LaBoucane-Benson. They’re very proud of her for ascending to the Red Chamber in Ottawa, and I know she will represent Alberta, Métis people, indigenous people, and Ukrainians very well in the Senate. I’m very proud of the opportunity to have gotten to know all those people.

Most important, though, are all of the people who participated in the process, who came out, shared their deeply personal stories, and the opportunity we had in the all-party panel to travel the province, to travel and meet on-reserve in treaties 6, 7, and 8, to hold open houses around the province, to hear from Métis people, to hear from now adult children who have lived experience in the child intervention system. It was not a fast process. In fact, it needed to be a methodical and thoughtful process, and it was. It was that, so I give the minister and the government a lot of credit going back almost two years now, when this panel was first struck. The first iteration of it, frankly, wasn’t good enough. I was joined by members of the opposition side to call for changes to the terms of reference, and to the government’s credit they heeded those calls.

That process has resulted in this bill. I believe that it has taken us forward and we are in a better place. I would hope that the government would learn from this process that perhaps there are opportunities in other areas where we could follow a similar process, which I think would actually result in a little less noise in the Chamber and a little more in the way of thoughtful governance for our province. I would hope that that’s something we’d see more in the future regardless of who the next government would be. I can assure you that if we find ourselves in that position, that's something you could hold me to. But this process itself was a very good one, and again I want to make sure that everyone knows that I believe it was a very positive process.

The details of the bill and I think where things will be improved for the children who find themselves in contact with the child intervention system and for their families – probably the number one thing that I'm happy to see is an increased emphasis on safety. As the minister has said, the previous Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act focused on survival, just their survival. I think that none of us want to simply survive. I think we want to be safe. We want to thrive. We want opportunity. So changing from the word "safety" being in the old act I believe it was one time – having not had a chance to count every single word – to I think it's upwards of 15 to 20 times that this word "safety" now appears in the amended act, that's a vast improvement.

The Member for Calgary-Hays had talked about the principles that we're talking about here. When we're making laws, we certainly do need to have black letter law. You do need to say that the rules enable you to do this or prevent you from doing that, to say that you must do these things in this order. That's important. It's very important in child intervention. But one of the things that we heard from the front-line child workers – and let me just pause at that point to mention the people from within the system, both the people on the front lines of the child intervention system, the management, and people who are policy makers and who work in oversight, people who work in agencies, foster parents themselves. These are all people who had come and spoken with the panel as well.

What we heard from the front-line workers in particular is that there is a procedure manual that is upwards of a thousand pages, and when there's an unfortunate incident, the thousand-page procedure manual becomes an 1,100-page procedure manual and then 1,200 pages, and who knows where it ends. While it is important that we have actual procedures and that we can't simply have a free-for-all, I think what is more important is that we have a principle that drives the work that we do.

We heard some really compelling stories, where, in fact, a front-line child intervention worker was sitting before the panel, sitting next to his boss, and said, "Here's a situation where I went outside the rules because in the moment it was the right thing to do for that child," and we had a good outcome as a result. He turned to his boss and said: I hope I'm not in trouble. Technically he was outside that thousand-page binder, but what he was doing was the right thing for that child in the moment, and it was a good outcome for that child.

Those are the kinds of things that I hope the 13 new matters to be considered when supporting child safety and well-being that are embedded in the act – I hope that we can move to a place where the best interests of the child, given all of the complexities and all of the context of that particular child's situation, are weighed and considered.

The other thing that we heard time and again from the panel is the importance of cultural connection, so the mandatory home study and cultural plan that's embedded in this act is a welcome change. I had a nice opportunity to talk with Adam North Peigan of the '60s scoop survivors' society yesterday, and he's very encouraged by that particular aspect of the bill, as am I. I think it's very, very important that as this moves forward, the minister, the government, and all of us continue to engage in dialogue with indigenous communities to ensure that, in fact, what we are intending in this bill is actually helping and that walking together and cocreating that future, which is some of the terminology that has surrounded and framed the work that we've done and the reports and the outcomes – these are very important things. They shouldn't just be words on a piece of paper. They must be thoughtful actions that are put into practice every single day. I'm hopeful that that will be the case.

That, then, ties to First Nations automatically being notified of every application for private guardianship. There were cases that we heard repeatedly where indigenous communities would not know, would not be notified when children who were part of their community were subject to a private guardianship or permanent guardianship order. That exacerbated or really, frankly, was an indication of the continued colonial mindset, where kids are taken away. So ensuring that indigenous communities continue or will be engaged in that process is very important.

Then also consolidating all of those private guardianship applications under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act as opposed to splitting them between the Family Law Act and the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, I think, will also help. As the minister said the other day, the best court proceeding is no court proceeding at all. If we can avoid getting to court in the first place, that's always preferable. Sadly, sometimes the courts do need to be involved. But ensuring that notification is a very, very important part of that.

Focusing on the child: you know, one of the things that I've observed in not just the child intervention system but in this huge machine that is government is that when an individual goes within and between different departments or their status changes – you turn 18; you turn 65; you hit a certain income threshold – you fall off a cliff. All of a sudden your supports are gone, or you need to know to apply somewhere else. So the fact that financial supports for permanency will not end when a child's guardianship changes: that in the past was a challenge. Those supports and that funding following the child: frankly, it's amazing that that wasn't the case in the past. It's unfortunate, but this bill would change that. I think that's really, really important.

Also, moving from the 16 matters that should be considered in all decisions offered too much latitude and flexibility. I talked earlier about the importance of principle. Sometimes it is also important to have some black letter laws, so the 13 matters that are to be considered, must be considered, when supporting child safety and well-being are welcome. The fact that those are also updated from the previous 16 is very important.

One area that I noted when I first saw the 13 changes, which I thought was important, was the identification of indigenous identity as one of the matters that must be considered. As we know, 70 per cent of kids in care are indigenous. That is a vast overrepresentation relative to the population of our province. I believe that less than 5 per cent of kids across the province are indigenous, but 70 per cent of those kids in care are indigenous. That's very important. Equally, cultural connections are important to indigenous people, but they're also important in Alberta's multicultural society. We talked about that with the minister when we discussed this bill first: those multicultural connections regardless of what the culture is should also be considered. I'm pleased to see that that is embedded in the bill.

I'll conclude my remarks by saying that the bill is an important step forward, but we're not done. I'm glad to hear the minister acknowledge that there's a phase 2 to this, which would come forward in future legislation and would address the questions that we heard about. The band designate and that role: that work is ongoing in consulting with indigenous communities and band designates to make sure that that is properly resourced and properly considered. While I will certainly vote in favour of this bill – and I am optimistic about the future, and I think this is a turning point – it's important that we keep going. Rest assured, the Alberta Party caucus will continue to be steadfast in our pursuit of making sure that the promise of this bill is realized, that the changes that have been committed to going forward are in fact made, that the principles that are enshrined in this bill are followed.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. I really want to reflect on how we got here before I kind of go into the premise of the context of the bill it's under. It's important as we debate this to know and recognize where we've come from.

Through you, Madam Speaker, I want to acknowledge that there are a significant number of kids in the gallery here today, and through you I would like to say that they're very lucky to be here because we're on our best behaviour right now.

Nonetheless, it's remarkable because when I look at the kids up in the gallery, I am reminded of one thing, which is that when all of us, whether it's myself, the previous speaker, the gentleman in our House wearing the lapel pin – we were never taught about the residential schools. For most of us it was not until we were in university, for many of us it was finding out second-hand or of our own volition, but we were never taught about this.

It was pretty remarkable a year ago, when I took my son to an indigenous event, the launch of indigenous week in Calgary. I sat him down, and I wanted to talk about residential schools with him because I knew that it would come up. I knew it would be a topic that is important for him to understand. When I asked him about it, he had already learned about it. He had learned about it from a lot of the schools, from a lot of amazing teachers, who I see up there as well, who have taken it upon themselves to inform kids about our history, recognizing that there were some positives that came out of the history of Canada and the colonizations and that there were some negative things that we needed to learn from. Unfortunately, residential schools were one of those things. It's led us to a situation where we have a very troublesome child intervention system, where 69 per cent of kids in government care are indigenous children.

It's imperative for us as a House to make sure that we follow through on our commitments with the TRC and with UNDRIP to solve these problems. I know that for our Premier this has been something that has been very important to her since she was an opposition member, and I know that it's important for many members in this House.

So I want to open by thanking all members of the ministerial panel, including myself, including yourself, Madam Speaker, and the members of the House who spent a vast amount of time thoroughly reviewing the process to bring forward recommendations that we have here today.

The Member for Calgary-Hays alluded to it, that this is a long road. It will be a very long road. It took over 150 years for us to get here, and we're going to have to work collaboratively with communities, side by side, to find solutions because we will continue to find hurdles in this. I do want to recognize that many things said here today acknowledge that this is one step, one step of many steps that we need to take to improve our child intervention system. This legislation does continue that path that the ministerial panel set towards ensuring that every child in Alberta has a safe home, that we follow through with our commitments to work with our indigenous communities to allow our children to carry their cultural heritage.

I would like to echo the thanks that we had from the Member for Calgary-Elbow acknowledging Tyler White, Dr. Peter Choate, Bruce MacLaurin, and now Senator Patti Benson, who put in a lot of thorough work. It was really neat because everyone brought a different background to the table. I think that even when you looked at the panel members, from people who have lived experience as social workers to individuals who might not have any social work background at all, like myself, we brought a different perspective to the table as we crafted this and really looked at different ways that we could ask critical questions.

One thing that this piece of legislation acknowledges – and this is something that we all carry, and many of us carry this because, as I alluded to, our education is different than the children in the galleries – is that we carry an innate bias because we didn't learn about the truth of what happened with our indigenous children when they were growing up. As we look towards ensuring that all of the child reviews go through the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, it ensures that as children in care are growing up, they're learning about their cultural background and that we are ensuring that that is taken into serious consideration.

That's also very important because – and it's something that's not brought up as often but has to be considered when we're talking about our indigenous communities in Alberta – half of our indigenous communities don't live on-reserve. Half of our indigenous Albertans are living in urban settings. The Member for West Yellowhead talked about the challenges that he faces in the fact that there were no land settlement claims in his area. We run into a risk where, when we talk about learning of one's cultural heritage and learning about where they've come from and their religious, spiritual beliefs, if we don't look at every perspective, they lose those beliefs.

It reminds me of a constituent I actually ran into when I was door-knocking a couple of summers ago. She was a victim of the '60s scoop. It wasn't until she became an adult that she actually started discovering and researching and trying to determine her identity. It's neat now because she's able to contribute to the community in a very positive way, but not everyone is given that opportunity. So it's imperative, as we place children in care, that we take that into consideration.

We also realistically are looking at ensuring that we're informing our First Nation stakeholders, the responsible bands, about when a child is going into care so that they can have a voice in the conversation, they can be part of the conversation, and then they can help lead us as a government and as a ministry to do what is best for that child in care. When we were in the ministerial panel and we talked with some of our First Nations stakeholders and leaders, it was neat to see this perspective. You know what? I hope I actually grow as a parent by hearing this perspective, where we talked about how the child is in the middle and that we have the community wrapped around the children. That is the approach that as a government we should take, that it's not just governments that have to decide these things – this is how we've gotten into these troubles before – but that we as a whole community wrap around that one child and ensure that that child has the best upbringing and the best living when they are growing up.

The other thing that was very important to take into consideration – and I do acknowledge the alarming rate, that 69 per cent of children in care are indigenous. But one of the things that was added to matters of consideration, which I think really stands out, is that the child's race, spiritual beliefs, colour, gender, gender identity, gender expression, age, ancestry, place of origin, family status, sexual orientation, and any disabilities the child may have are put into consideration. That's important because it also needs to be recognized that there are children from many other cultural backgrounds that are put into the child intervention system.

This was something that we recognized and focused on. Whether this child is coming from a First Nations background or from a different ancestry, if their parents were refugees or permanent residents or immigrants: this gets put into consideration and we ensure that these children are given the resources to know about their heritage and know about their culture. That's, to be honest, what makes Canada so great, that we can all stand up here and celebrate what makes us unique and where we've come from. It's something that I think this legislation encompasses to make sure that we ensure that we do not give up as well.

The other thing that we've talked about, too, is that the director will make sure that we look at serious injuries. That's imperative, too, because in the past we have been very responsive only to deaths that generally occur. When a serious injury or serious incident occurs, it's an opportunity for us to look at the practice and learn from that practice and to grow from that. I remember in the ministerial panel that many members brought up some concerns that we don't necessarily look at the serious incidents and serious responses that happen.

Now, you know, I'd be remiss to not say that I wish we were never in a situation where we would have had to strike a ministerial panel, but the time that we were brought together was a very sort of pivotal time because it was a time in which we had started to move forward with our commitments to the TRC and UNDRIP. But it was also a time where we had learned so much from data analytics, which Bruce MacLaurin brought a lot of to the table, and also a lot of research that we have been able to take from areas of mental health and other academic and field research, that has allowed us to learn about things like the psychological trauma, even the psychological trauma that comes from a child being removed from their parents and from their guardians. What we learned and the emerging practices should always be what guide us when we are writing legislation and we are following through.

Ensuring that every five years an all-party committee is struck to review this legislation is very important to ensure that we carry on best practices in the field, that the field continues to evolve, and that we continue to get the proper feedback from our First Nations stakeholders and from all stakeholders on how to guide this practice, because many of them recognize that it's taken a long time for us to get here. We are starting to see some amazing practices coming out from other provinces that are charting the same path that we are, so it's imperative that we move forward from those.

With that being said, if we talk about the parameters for where we place children, that safety has become very imperative, that we ensure that safety is a key focus, and that we give a bit more discretion to that determination while recognizing innate biases that may exist, our having more explicit safety concerns and feedback is going to ensure that we have a proper system for all children there.

The other thing that we heard consistently in the ministerial panel was about supports to children and making sure that we provide the proper wraparound supports and that these things follow our kids who are in care. That's an important imperative because consistently we do hear about challenges between, across jurisdictions. Ultimately, as we talked about the focus on putting the child in the middle and that we ensure that the supports that our government is providing follow that child as well, because realistically it's about working with that child – whether those supports are done through family guardianship or returned to the parent or if we're even looking at foster care, that will allow for the child to get the best supports needed.

It was also interesting because in our travels with the ministerial panel we spoke with a lot of foster parents. We spoke with a lot of people who had adopted indigenous children. Reflecting back to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act setting up a path to ensure that the child has cultural connectivity, a lot of these parents – some who were nonindigenous had indigenous children – really appreciated having those supports and being able to work with communities and having a guided plan to ensure that their child had that cultural connectivity and that they were able to learn about their heritage and their background because they knew that at the end of the day it would help that child flourish and grow and it would help them as parents to be able to best support their children and, whether as foster parents or adoptive parents, do the best job that is possible for them.

With that being said, I look forward, as we move through the process of this bill, to hearing from all members, and I'm excited to support this as one of many steps that our government will be taking to ensure that we improve the lives of children in care.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. Where to start? There's a lot of stuff in this legislation, that was tabled just yesterday, and I will appreciate the opportunity to have a fulsome debate on this as the days come and be able to take this back to my constituents for some feedback.

I have a few things that I would like to say upon my initial reading of this piece of legislation. First, actually kind of buried near the end of this legislation, it says:

- (d) the response of the Minister's department to recommendations in a report made by the Child and Youth Advocate under section 15 of the Child and Youth Advocate Act, if the recommendations relate to this Act or the administration of it;
- (e) the response of the Minister's department to recommendations in a report made under section 53 of the Fatality Inquiries Act, if the recommendations relate to this Act or the administration of it.

Madam Speaker, I would be remiss to not point out that that is why we are here. When the report on Serenity was tabled in this House and opposition members asked what the minister was going to do in regard to recommendations of the report, the minister refused to give anything except that he has received the recommendations of this report, would refuse to act on any of the recommendations in this report. This Assembly lost it and rightfully so. The public was upset. The opposition was upset. Serenity, a little child who was so badly abused: no one cared. This government wasn't acting like they were caring.

Madam Speaker, I was pleased that after cries from the opposition, emergency debate, this panel was put together. I wish it was a legislative panel and done in a more transparent and open and public way, where all members could participate, if not at the table at least be able to listen, but that was not the case. I'm grateful for the work that the members on that panel did. There was a lot of travelling over the summer months. I do appreciate that.

I'll start at the back of this legislation for the start of my chat. Madam Speaker, I'm just going to point out some of the changes that I see in this legislation and make some highlights for the benefit of this Assembly. One of the changes here, under section 4, is in section 2.

- (d) the benefits to the child of lasting relationships with the people with whom the child is connected, including family, friends, caregivers and other significant individuals.

Madam Speaker, there was a policy that has appeared in a number of government documents that highlights unlimited reunification attempts with child and family, kinship caregiver providers. There is no mention in this piece of legislation in regard to safety in this particular area. During the visits of the child during a reunification attempt, what is the measure? What is the process? Who is checking these homes? Does that matter? I think it does. It most certainly does. At what point do we stop? At what point is it no longer in the best interests of the child to have such an unstable situation over and over and over again?

Madam Speaker, I have a very close personal friend who's been waiting five years to have some sort of stability in their home for an indigenous child that they have been taking care of since he was just a baby. They've gone through unlimited reunification attempts with the family – with the parents, with the grandparents – and the band, that's refused to accept this child although he should be theirs. He's been put in very unsafe situations. He's been put into a visit situation with his father where there have been four other criminals in that home, and no one checked it. This child comes back screaming. His emotional and mental health has absolutely deteriorated because of this situation that has continued to happen. Yet I don't see this addressed in this bill.

Emphasized in here is

- (g) the importance of stability, permanence and continuity of care and relationships to the child's long-term safety and well-being.

That's highlighted in here. That's not what's happening, Madam Speaker.

- (j) any decision concerning the placement of the child outside the child's family must include a plan to address the child's need for permanent, formalized ties to people who care about the child and must take into account . . .

Above all, that should be what's talked about.

It actually took until the government's third speaker to mention the safety of the children. Culture is extremely important, and there are lessons that we have learned more significantly over the past number of years. Culture is important, and I'm so happy to see that that is what's in here. Safety is important, too, Madam Speaker.

- (i) the benefits to the child of a placement within the child's extended family, or with persons who have a significant relationship with the child.

It needs to be clarified: not always blood. Not always blood. There are so many people in our society that have children whom they love and have created long relationships with. We all hear about these stories in our constituency offices, about these children in kinship care, in foster homes, where they have been with these families for 12 years and a long-lost relative is found, and now all of a sudden that relationship is not important. That's not okay. At what point do we ask ourselves and point out that it's detrimental to the child, who should be our priority here?

The part that was omitted from this legislation was in the previous section 2(d) and reads:

A child who is capable of forming an opinion is entitled to an opportunity to express that opinion on matters affecting the child, and the child's opinion should be considered by those making decisions that affect the child.

I know that part was removed and that there's a different section that says that the opinion of a child over the age of 12 is to be considered in a matter of the court. It's good that that age is clarified, but a five-year-old has a very close connection with his mom even though she's not the tummy mommy, Madam Speaker, and his or her decision should be factored in as well.

Perhaps the government could clarify the rationale behind the age that appears later, in section 8.

A private guardianship order shall not be made without the consent in the prescribed form of

- (a) the guardian of the child, and
- (b) the child, if the child is 12 years of age or older.

I appreciate that the guardian of the child is considered to be a voice in this matter whereas the only change from the previous was that they removed:

(c) a director, if a director is not the guardian of the child. I would like some clarity around the age of 12 because I think children have a voice and have a say, and that should be absolutely considered in these situations, Madam Speaker.

Clause (m) in this same section, 4, reads:

There should be no unreasonable delay in making or implementing a decision respecting the child.

How do we provide accountability? I need some clarity on that, Madam Speaker. We know in many, many cases that this has been falling through the cracks and there's been no permanency, there's been no stability for many children who are in care in our province. That's not okay.

That's what's highlighted here, the biggest thing: the act must be interpreted and administered so that the safety and the well-being of children are of paramount consideration. Again, the act must be interpreted and administered so that the safety and well-being of children are of paramount consideration. We have to remember that in every single section of this.

I understand that this is part 1 of 3 in legislation to come in regard to the findings of the child panel. I hope to be able to offer some words of my constituents in regard to the making of that legislation, and I will be putting forward amendments to the legislation that we see before us here today, Madam Speaker.

In section 5, section 52 is amended. Just a question on this.

Notwithstanding any other enactment, a person may not apply to any court to be appointed as a guardian of a child who is [currently] in the custody of a director, or is the subject of a temporary guardianship . . . or a permanent guardianship . . . order.

"Not" is the word that's added. Before it was, "any adult may apply to the Court in the prescribed form for a private guardianship . . ." So why is it now "not"? A question around that. I would like some clarity. I know we can do that in Committee of the Whole. I just don't understand that part of this section.

I would like to highlight what I think is actually really great, the notice to the bands. If a First Nations member is to serve in court, they must be notified within 30 days. I think that's a good move towards stability and permanency in the system. And it's a way to engage family members in the beginning stages as opposed to, you know, five, six, seven, 10, 12 years down the road, when strong bonds are made. Then it gets a whole lot trickier, Madam Speaker.

In section 53.1(1), band participation in proceedings:

A band that is required to be served with notice of an application under section 53(1.1) may attend Court the first time the matter is heard in Court and may make submissions to the Court regarding the band's participation in the proceedings.

A lot of this actually, really, does seem common sense as long as proper notification has happened. If a band chooses not to have a representative at the court during those proceedings, it probably would be unfair for them to attend at a later time, in the middle. However, I question that there may not be room for error, that, as we know, all humans are guilty of, Madam Speaker.

Sorry. I made a couple of notes all over this thing. I absolutely need more time to be able to do that. I will give notice now that I will be putting forward an amendment to section 105.71.

Mental health has not been considered actually anywhere in this legislation. Nothing. There's nothing in there. That's so significantly important. There's a significant amount of trauma, as was actually mentioned by another hon. colleague in this Assembly, that occurs when families are separated, when a child is removed from the home and sometimes put into a culture shock. Either way, it's a traumatizing situation for these children and for the family members in so many significant ways, close ones and distant relatives, Madam Speaker.

(i) "serious injury", in respect of a child is clarified in here. It means

(ii) a life-threatening injury to the child, or an injury that may cause significant impairment of the child's health.

"Or mental health" should be added. We have done great work around advancing and lessening the stigma of mental health in our province and in our country. We talk about PTSD. You know, we talk about childhood trauma. We know lots about early childhood education.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm really happy to be speaking in support of Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. Like many of the speakers before me, I come at this from a point of view of having spent a long time working in various parts of Alberta, a lot of time working in indigenous communities, First Nation communities. A couple of things really made an impression on me, and I was thinking about them as we spoke.

I spent one year working within a First Nations community, working with a member of the community for a full year, working in a portable, you know, where we had, like, 22, 23 children. You get to know people quite well when you're there so much. I grew to just value her understanding and knowledge of the community and her ability to work with children really highly and also came to appreciate so much the importance of listening and working to develop relationships. And I think a lot of what we're doing here is going to come down to that.

We have to have the trust of the people we work with, we have to listen to people and find out what their concerns are, and we have to develop the relationship enough so that we can find out what is important. In the past there have been far too many assumptions made as to how our procedures and laws needed to be enforced, and it just didn't work.

I wound up continuing to keep in touch with the woman I worked with, and she still does fantastic work in the school. She is so highly regarded by all the community. If I were to work up in that area of northern Alberta again, she's the first person I would be in contact with to find out what's going on and who to talk to.

But half of it – and I learned this in a lot of communities in northern Alberta – is listening to people. People aren't going to come straight out, necessarily, and say, "I need this or this or this," but they're going to tell you their stories, and they're going to help you understand where they're coming from and what they're hoping for, especially what they're hoping and what their goals are for their children. If you don't understand that and if you don't understand what they're bringing to the lives of themselves and their children, you're not going to be able to make much of a difference. To make changes we have to learn to listen and communicate, and I think this bill goes a way to supporting those actions.

When I talk about communicating, I was reading through and I was thinking that it's lovely talking about how people are enabled to take part, to go to court, you know, be advised of measures involving children, but then we have to make sure that they understand where they will go if they want to speak on behalf of the child, and how will they get there. Transportation is an issue all over our rural areas, and if people don't have a way to get there and if a family is impoverished and needs help to get gas so they can make it to court, then that's important, and that's a part of the process we need to take to make sure that they will be involved.

We need to make sure we communicate in a way that's understandable to people. I know of many people, not necessarily indigenous, who are intimidated by our bureaucratic communication. They will get a letter from government and just put it to one side because it is gobbledegook to them, and it is really important to recognize when that is an issue. Not to be condescending, not to talk down but to make sure that the meaning is clear and also the forms of communication.

Talking to my former coworker from up north makes me realize, too, the importance of building relationships. When we have our caseworkers and our people that work with children, we need to really work on having consistency so people can develop a relationship with the workers so that they know who to talk to and they know how to go about securing help to find out what they need to know. A lot of the points people made earlier were on the same topic. A lot of it is getting down to human interconnection, interaction.

We have to be flexible, too. We have to have our actions be flexible enough so that if someone wants to come and speak about their concerns about a child or someone they know, their own child or someone else's, but they need somebody to come and be supportive for them, we can make that happen. We can allow that. We have to be really careful not to be overly rigid. So consistency of caregivers, flexibility, developing relationships, and building trust.

You know, it always amazed me and impressed me that all the families I would meet with in northern Alberta did trust the schools to take good care of their children. They would place them into their care for days and years at a time. We have to work to maintain that trust. As Children's Services we have to make sure that they do trust the system. To do that we have to show that we are trustworthy, and we have to make sure that we continue putting our words into practice.

I think this is a good bill. I think it's a really important one. It's really going to be important that people, everywhere they come into this – in Children's Services, if it's the children, the parents, the caregivers, anybody involved – are all part of the process and are all involved and respected.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to stand to talk about Bill 22 and the important principles that are part of this reading because this is about establishing core principles that will serve to guide not only these changes but two future phases of changes.

I was privileged to be part of the ministerial committee and want to join others who are celebrating the hard work of not only the committee itself but the tremendous sacrifices and efforts put forward by the staff of the child intervention system, including those on the reserve and those in the contracted agencies that provide many of these critical services, which, if we are true to the foundational principles of this Legislature, which have been reiterated over the time that I've been here, are to put children first. These are children and families that are critically challenged, and I was very pleased to be part of this important committee review, admittedly spurred by a very tragic incident, the Serenity case, and initiated around the whole death review process and how it still lacks transparency in some eyes.

On the other hand, there were real concerns in the indigenous community that in making names public, they weren't respecting some of the traditions and cultural practices and confidentiality of some of the community and the impacts that making a public statement or a public reference to a child who had either died or was seriously injured in care might have on their families, so wrestling with that in the first instance, with that whole balance between the right of the public to know and the right of families to have some privacy and confidentiality, and the timing that suited their family and their adjustments most appropriately.

This particular bill, Bill 22, focuses almost entirely, as it should, on the first priority of indigenous children because they are such a big part of the children-in-care experience, close to 70 per cent in this last year. It reflects the long history of trauma and cultural genocide that these folks have experienced.

To those in our western culture who still say to me, "They should get over it," I say, "You don't get over the profound loss of everything that makes you human, that makes you a culture, that makes you an identity." The loss of roots, values, communications is so profound that we can't even register a connection to these profound intergenerational losses that leave people rootless and confused and in many ways further traumatized in a series of systems that are so oriented to western white culture that it not only doesn't help in many of the systems that we've developed – education, health care, social services – but it actually further traumatizes in many cases the very people that they say they're there to help, not deliberately but because of the lack of understanding of the tremendous cultural damage that has been experienced by indigenous people.

I want to say a little bit about the foundational issues that I think are missing here. They are mentioned in our recommendations but, again, need to be raised every time we talk about culture and disadvantage and intergenerational trauma, and that is social determinants of health. These folks have not had the educational supports, the environmental supports, the social supports, the health supports, the income, the jobs, the prosperity in their culture that are absolutely foundational to being secure, to being well, to being able to cope with the stresses and strains that we all cope with every day: the losses, the injuries, the traumas that we may experience.

We have resilience because we have many of these social determinants that many of these folks, most of these folks, do not have and that are transmitted, then, to the children. We have this perpetual cycle of lack of supports, lack of security, and the need to intervene with respect to children's safety and health, but in so doing, we run the risk of further traumatizing the family and further separating children from their roots and values.

This bill appropriately focuses on what we can do in the immediate, but it does not, to my mind, say enough about the social determinants of health, poverty, employment, and culturally sensitive education and health systems that would actually start to address in a preventative way the ongoing challenges that we're going to be facing with our fastest growing population, our indigenous population. We must get at the root issues here – not only psychological trauma but ongoing physical trauma, drug addiction, mental health issues in these communities – with wraparound supports and a serious commitment to getting at the root issues that create stability, create health, create the ability to respond to the traumas that are a part of everyone's lives but a significant part of our indigenous community.

The other thing I need to say in relation to the principles involved in this bill is that placing urgent health and safety issues can mean ignoring further long-term trauma from separation, loss of culture, family and kinship support, and fundamental security that contributes to the success over the next 20 or 30 years of this individual, their success in the workplace, their success in family life, their success in work life, and their very self-esteem.

The other issue that this bill does not address and that I want to highlight again because it must not be lost regardless of what happens in the next government is one of the very recurring themes that we heard around the table, and that was the importance of a band designate, a person in each indigenous band that has a responsibility to be a link between the western social support in child and family services and the band child and family support services.

But there's nobody there to make that link and make that communication and plan together about on- and off-reserve. Because many of these children are going on- and off-reserve with either care or counselling or various services that are needed, this band designate stood out as being not recognized, not supported, not consistently present, and frustrated in their ability to deliver on the very services that they were charged with by the chief and council – they're appointed by the chief and council – and frustrated with the families who want to see more co-ordination between on- and off-reserve services.

They are a critical piece of this, and I'm disappointed that the band designate issue could not have been dealt with now, before we get into another chaotic election season and the potential for tremendous changes in government. That was a prominent issue that they brought to us that was critical to making these changes effective and appropriate.

I'm also, I will say, pleased to see the reference to all cultural groups and their sensitivities, their importance in all child services interactions. It's a new, to me, although welcome recognition that culture and tradition and spiritual practices have a very foundational place in recovering a sense of identity, a sense of family and culture, stability. The growth and pride in this culture has to come based on so much of what we heard from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and, certainly, the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. Those are foundational to this, and I applaud the government for building on those in a very significant way in relation to indigenous people but also now in this bill recognizing all cultures as having legitimacy and importance in the child care and intervention system.

I myself have friends working in the various cultural communities and the education system in Calgary who tell me stories that would really shock many of us about the trauma and difficulties of many of the new Canadians and their cultures as well. So it was very important for me to see in this bill the recognition that all cultures have an equal right to having qualified, experienced people in those cultures being a part of the transition planning and the ongoing counselling and service provision and service planning that goes on to reduce failure in the fostering and guardianship processes.

I'll loop back and just talk a bit about what the outcomes of this bill will be because I've simply talked about principles and applauded the government for taking the recommendations of this committee and moving on them in a very substantial way, if in a limited fashion and somewhat – well, almost entirely – focused on the indigenous community.

This bill will require that an indigenous child's First Nation must be formally notified of any application for private guardianship to allow them to make representation. It will require that all private guardianship applications must be made under a single statute, which the bill designates as the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. Presently private guardianship applications can also be made under the Family Law Act. However, unlike the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, the Family Law Act does not require a mandatory home assessment. A shocking realization in my experience on the committee was that mandatory home assessments were not required. Any international adoption and fostering required that, but somehow it wasn't the case here.

This bill will require that anyone who wishes to become the permanent guardian of a child must first undergo a mandatory home assessment by government social workers and be approved. It requires a cultural connection plan to be written for every indigenous child subject to a private guardianship order. Again, I'd like to ensure that that extends itself to other cultural groups as well.

This bill requires funding to follow a child instead of being tied to the guardian so that financial support isn't lost or delayed if the guardian dies or is unable to continue in that role and responsibility for the child moves to another caregiver. It will require courts and caseworkers to consider 13 culturally themed criteria in making a decision involving a child's welfare, including whether to remove them from the home at all. Presently culture is listed as only one of 16 matters to be considered.

This bill will require the government to publicly report every death, injury, or serious incident involving a child within four business days. Again, I think that was a very contentious issue and needs to be revisited at some point to ensure that we're sensitive to each individual family's case and circumstances if we're really interested in protecting the family and those siblings that may be left in the home from unwanted traumatic experience relating to that public disclosure before they're ready, before they have prepared themselves to deal with the fallout.

The bill will require the Minister of Children's Services to post findings and recommendations made after government reviews of every death, injury, or serious incident involving a child within one year and publicly respond to any external recommendations. Much of this will now fall to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate as we have through this committee made recommendations that were quickly adopted and moved to the responsibility of the Child and Youth Advocate, who has a very important role and an independent role, I might add, that is critically important for this to be a credible role at all in analysis.

I would just point out parenthetically that we were hoping that we would see the disability child advocate be independent of government for the same reason, so that this could be a bona fide, independent, credible critic of services to children and youth with disabilities. Unfortunately, the government did not choose to do that, but we will continue to watch that development and do applaud the government for creating the position. Now, let's make it a credible position for the disabled or differently abled children and youth, many of whom actually fall into this category because many of these children, 7,000 I understand in Alberta, cannot find adoptive homes, largely because of their disabilities.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I had the honour of serving with the Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the panel, as I mentioned earlier in my comments. A lot of the things he's talking about, I think, are important. I would like to hear more of his thoughts, specifically on the need for the periodic review and what his thoughts are on what should be in scope for that review, timing and those sorts of things.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you. I'm happy to rise and extend my thanks to my colleague from Calgary-Elbow, who was also a very active and vigorous participant in this committee, contributed a lot.

I was referring to the 7,000 children in Alberta who do not seem to be adopted and do not seem to come into care in a sustained way, in a permanent way, because in spite of many people looking to adopt children, these 7,000 kids with disabilities are not a priority for many families, so many of these will fall to guardianship experiences with the government and, unfortunately, go through many different care settings. There are some unique situations in the province that still need to be addressed in order to try and provide the best developmental opportunities, health and safety and development of these children.

I was also pleased to see in this bill a recognition that we need to review these services. Children must be first. In fact, I think every bill that we review in this House should go through a screening of: how is this going to impact our children, present and future? That should be a fundamental criteria of every policy we develop in this place. And to review this every five years, to me, is a very important and responsible thing to do because clearly this practice is a sensitive one that has many dimensions to it. It says that we've recognized that perhaps one of the most important roles that our government has is the care and management of our most vulnerable children. And that needs to be reviewed periodically.

I'm particularly concerned, though, that we get on to phase 2 and phase 3. Whatever government takes over in the new year or balance of people there are in the Legislature, I hope there will be a serious commitment to following through on phases 2 and 3 of the amendments and changes to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and the Family Law Act, which clearly have some, as the recommendations state, need for amendment.

Thanks, Madam Speaker. That's all I have to say. I welcome further discussion of the principles involved here and whether or not we've covered them and whether this bill covers them adequately.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a question for the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I commented on the lack of any mention in this piece of legislation in regard to mental health, and I was wondering, because you were a member on the panel and attended many of those events and certainly have an expertise in that area: would you be able to maybe answer some questions or share some concerns in regard to the lack of mental health mentioned in this first piece of legislation?

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much. I think that's something close to my heart. Certainly, we did discuss it around the table repeatedly because much of the root of these children needing care had to do with mental health and addiction issues in this large indigenous cohort that we see every year requiring public care.

Mental health and addictions are a recurring theme, and they were discussed as being not appropriate in many cases for indigenous communities. They're western based. They're culturally blind. In many cases our mental health and addiction issues focus on pharmaceuticals. They are still struggling with racism, that many indigenous people communicated was entirely unhelpful when they reach out for help with either addiction or mental health issues. There is a real need for the same kind of cultural lens and cultural learning to happen within health, including mental health and addiction services. A real cultural shift has to happen in our own services to really make appropriate connections with indigenous populations.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill? Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. Here we are, November 1. Welcome to November 1, 2018, everyone. We're in a digital age, yet I notice on our desks we have paper calendars that we still manually move out of our desk. So everybody can take their paper, throw it in the garbage, and now we're in November. It's November 1, 2018, and we're still learning. We're still needing to improve. We still have work to do, and I'm glad to be here to help and contribute to the work that's being done to improve our Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act.

The question is: how did we get here, and where are we going? You know, we take a look at how we got here. This update is as a result of the work that's been done by the Alberta all-party ministerial panel, the child intervention panel, formed after the death of Serenity, a four-year-old First Nations girl who was a ward of the state living in kinship care before she died in a tragic story, in a story that has gripped us all to the point of: we can do better, and we must do better. So where are we going?

I understand this is the first of three stages that the minister has identified for updates to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. The changes to Alberta's child welfare system under Bill 22, this first stage, will largely centre on First Nations needs. According to the Edmonton Journal this morning – I was reading the report from Emma Graney – of the 10,647 children currently receiving intervention services in Alberta, 6,547 are indigenous. That translates into 61 and a half per cent. You know, that number varies, I'm sure, up and down a little bit here and there, but we as a society can and must do better to help serve these children and their families.

One thing that strikes me with Bill 22 is that I believe the bill is around the safety of the children but also around the communications that we have within our society and how we can learn from each other. Even in 2018 we can continue to learn from each other and do better for these children. We all understand that life does have difficulties, and as a society we as communities and as families try and work through these difficulties as best we can. It is incumbent upon us to recognize each of our individual roles in helping to improve the situation. We have a job to do here with helping to improve legislation. There are people that are out on the front lines working day to day with individual cases that have a job to do.

It's very interesting that as an elected official we do have the opportunity, and not everybody in our society has the opportunity, to do a ride-along. My son-in-law is an RCMP officer, and I got to do a ride-along with him this summer and see some of the work that he is also charged with doing within the community. Some of it is dealing with disadvantaged families and some of the struggles that they're going through, to help along with that.

So every member of society has a role. We have a role here today in this House to try bring forward legislation that will help, and I believe Bill 22 is a good start. It's a good step towards improving the recognition of culture in families, in how that dynamic plays out in the lives of children.

I was very fortunate as a young child. I grew up in the '60s and the '70s. My uncle and aunt adopted five children. They were of indigenous descent, and these five are the cousins that I grew up with, playing with day in and day out. You know, we look at that and we say that there was good to that, but there was also negative to the fact that they were removed from their culture. We try and improve and do better going forward. And these cousins – three are alive yet today. I hold them very near and dear to my heart because they were part of my childhood and my upbringing. It was never ever really recognized that they were any different, and they weren't. They were part of the family. So our experience – we can all bring something to the table to try and help to guide the way we move forward, and I value their input in this discussion because they have lived many decades of trying to understand it themselves.

As it stands right now, the First Nations leadership has no role to play in court processes involving band member children. That communication has to start. It needs to be there. Bill 22 will change that. First Nation leaders are also not being made aware that children are being adopted out and off-reserve, often into non First Nations households, or of children being the subject of a guardianship order. Bill 22 changes this with automatic notification to First Nations of court process, adoption, and guardianship of their children. Again, communication. We need to have that open communication and understanding. There is also need of protection of individual rights and individual identification, that type of thing, that we have to work through.

According to the minister at the press conference yesterday every child will be given a mandatory home study, a cultural connection plan, and ongoing supports that meet their needs. Every case is an individual case, and we have to recognize that and try to, as a society, in the best interests of the child and the safety of the child, work together with families and communities identifying what's in the best interest of that child.

In cases where the guardian dies, moves away, or changes, funding supports have not followed the child in the past, and I believe this is wrong. Funding for services such as counselling, respite care, transportation, and others will now follow the child, and that's an important step to move forward, to help recognize some of the pitfalls before.

The courts and caseworkers are mandated to look at every facet of a child's well-being before making decisions to remove them from a home, apply a guardianship order, or make other decisions. Under Bill 22 the Children's Services minister becomes responsible for key reports about children in care, and the department will have four days to post online all deaths, injuries, and serious incidents. So a very tight timeline there, and I believe that's also good.

We have all learned from Adam North Peigan, president of the Sixties Scoop Indigenous Society of Alberta, who was also in the article this morning in the Edmonton Journal on Bill 22.

If we look at the atrocities of the Sixties Scoop and what happened with children's services coming into our communities and removing our kids, it really took the onus off the Indigenous people from any kind of decision-making whatsoever . . .

What this bill does is it allows Indigenous communities to have more input and more decision-making in what's in the best interests of our kids.

In order to properly serve these children as a society, we need to continue to learn from each other.

The updated act will be governed by a set of guiding principles. I believe that these principles are a good starting point to help us develop the system as we move forward. We are essentially, one, protecting children from harm, identifying, highlighting the safety of these children. Two, the importance of community and family in a child's life, recognizing that this is an important part of the identity of that child and trying to protect that. We can recognize that the children benefit from maintaining connections and relationships going forward and try to protect that and keep that as a high priority, a guiding principle. Indigenous peoples should be involved in the planning and decisions impacting their families and their children. These are all good principles to begin with. I suspect we may find that there are more principles that can be added that will help the act to become more fulsome and to continue to evolve over time.

Madam Speaker, this looks like common sense. It is a shame that such common sense became so uncommon in the child welfare system, but I do believe that we continue to learn, even in 2018. We're in 2018, and we're still learning. We're still trying to improve the systems that we have in place, and we will continue to improve and recognize where there can be improvement. I am pleased to recognize in Bill 22 also the review, every five years a review, meaning a wholesome review to make sure that we are not saying, "Okay, we're going to go through these three stages and we're done and we've perfected it," because I believe that we will again find some pitfalls that we can do better. It's important that we identify and learn from mistakes in the past. Under Bill 22 survival of the child is no longer good enough. Safety is paramount.

When we are done with Bill 22, we are not done here. As I mentioned, I am told that there are two more stages coming to update the act. But, more importantly, the debate does not stop. There will be a mandatory review of the act every five years, and that way we are able to assess and evaluate our performance and make the changes that are needed on a continual basis. We will never ever forget Serenity or the other children that have died in our child welfare system who shocked us into making these changes.

Throughout the all-party child intervention panel process stakeholders seemed nervous that we as legislators would not support kinship care. Kinship care is a positive thing. What happened in Serenity's case was criminal, and there were missteps along the way. I think we all recognize that now. It was not an issue with kinship care. It was in our delivery of the system that highlighted this difficulty.

Now, according to the minister's briefing on Bill 22, Bill 22 will now require that all private guardianship applications must be made under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which automatically triggers a comprehensive home study and cultural connection plan. Previously these private guardianship applications could also be made under the Family Law Act, which did not require the home study and cultural connection plan. The question did arise: does this now mean that all children in divorce proceedings and other proceedings such as that will now get a home visit or cultural plan study? I think we could get some clarification on that.

Madam Speaker, as I've said, I believe this is a good step forward. I encourage everyone to have a fulsome discussion. We also recognize that failures have been done in the past, failures are in the present, but we can't be sitting here in the blame game. We need to identify where failures are, own those, and move forward. The best way we can move forward is to work together towards solutions.

I look forward to hearing more debate and learning more about the bill in detail in the days ahead. With that, Madam Speaker, I would move to adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. member, you moved it on behalf of the minister. Would you like to close debate on behalf of the minister?

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been a wonderful morning listening to the discussion and the debate regarding this really important bill, and I look forward to hearing further discussion on it.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a second time]

Mr. Feehan: Madam Speaker, we've accomplished much this morning and noticing the time, I would like to recommend that we close for this morning and reopen at 1:30.

I'd also like to invite everyone in the House and everyone listening to join us for the Métis flag raising occurring at the Federal Building at 12:30 this afternoon. We'd love to see you all there.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm so happy to be introducing to you and through you some of the students from a wonderful school in my constituency, A. Blair McPherson. The students are accompanied by two teachers, Mrs. Amber Kryslar and Miss Aya Furusawa, and a parent helper, Mr. Chris Johnson. If the students and the teachers and the parent could all stand up please, we'd be delighted to give you the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you 33 amazing students from the Centre for Learning@Home. The students are accompanied by their teachers Kelsey Beaudette, Sarah Joseph, Tammy Zimmer, and Judy Kramer along with their chaperones Dana Lickiss, Brian Lear, Laura Sorenson, Beverly Berg, Sigerido Pachelo-Vega, Belinda Brodziak, and Karen Bergstreiser. I would ask them to please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I rise to introduce to you and through you Mr. Mike Zuege and Ramona Vervoort. They are joining us on a special milestone. Twenty-five years ago they moved from Germany to Canada, specifically the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs. Mike volunteers for various nonprofit organizations and continues to assist many newcomers to Canada. I'd like to thank him for his work. Thank you both for sharing your milestone with us today. I'd ask that you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Goehring: I'm also joined today by members of my wonderful team from the Edmonton-Castle Downs constituency office. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Elizabeth Nugent, social work practicum student from the University of Calgary, and Delia Pirie, retired warrant officer, social work practicum student from MacEwan University, and retired Canadian Armed Forces member who has served two tours overseas in Afghanistan. They are here to view our proceedings in the House, and I would like to thank them for taking the time to attend today. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents from my community of Sherwood Park, Evert

Poor and his wife, Gisele Poor. Evert Poor is the recent recipient of the 2018 sovereign's medal for volunteers. Evert Poor has spent 17 years educating Albertans on their shared heritage and facilitating greater civic engagement in local communities. He's a role model in his community thanks to his work with indigenous groups, helping to nurture entrepreneurship, civic engagement, and greater diversity throughout northern Alberta. Evert and Gisele, I ask you to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two good friends of mine from the great town of Rocky Mountain House, the crown jewel of the David Thompson trail for sure, my friend Robert Duiker and his wife, Fran Duiker. Robert, first of all, is the principal of the Christian school in Rocky Mountain House, but he also was the president of the Progressive Conservative constituency association for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. He played a very important role in uniting the Conservative movement in this province, which we're grateful to him for. He currently sits on the United Conservative board in the area and is a great help to us. I would ask that they both stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Jack Neustaeter and Daveed Haidner. Both are grade 9 students in the French immersion program at l'école secondaire Beaumont composite high school. They are at the Assembly today on their PD day. What a good way to spend their day. The proceedings are of special interest to them given the focus of their grade 9 social studies on government and economics and the roles and responsibilities of citizens in decision-making processes. Jack and Daveed are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they stand as you join me in giving them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Mr. Speaker, I think my guests are still arriving from the Federal Building, so if I could delay, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce some of Alberta's pharmacy technicians and members of the Pharmacy Technician Society of Alberta, who are seated in the members' gallery. Pharmacy technicians are leaders in providing Alberta families quality pharmacy services, assisting with safe and appropriate medication use. I ask that Teresa Hennessey, Laura Miskimins, Brianne Feduniw, and Lorén Voice please rise and receive our warm welcome and our appreciation.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is to recognize patient advocates and members of the Alberta Pituitary Patient Society. Today is Acromegaly Awareness Day, an opportunity for health care providers as well as the general public to become better informed about the signs and symptoms of this very rare disease. I'd like to thank the society for its dedication to making each day the best day possible for people who are living with acromegaly. I invite Sonja Durinck, Laura Graham, James McKee, and Mark Terpstra to please rise and receive our warm welcome. Thank you for helping us to increase awareness.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other visitors to be acknowledged today?

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the House the Métis Settlements General Council executive and the settlement chairs on proclamation day for the Métis settlements of Alberta.

On this day 28 years ago the Alberta government worked with the settlements to create a first in Canadian history, a recognized land base for the Métis to call home and the establishment of a law-making authority and system for self-governance. This was the vision of Métis leaders such as Gabriel Dumont and Louis Riel and of the 1975 Alberta federation of Métis leaders, Adrian Hope, Maurice L'Hirondelle, Lawrence Desjarlais, Sam Johnston, and Richard Poitras. It is still the vision of the Métis leaders of today. On November 1 we celebrate everyone in the past, and today we will continue to work toward a brighter future for all settlement members. It is with them that I stand here today to proudly acknowledge and honour proclamation day and the Métis settlements' importance to the past, present, and future of our great province.

Our partnership has led to great work together. Many settlements are taking leadership roles in responding to climate change and seizing opportunities to gain an ownership stake in diversifying Alberta's energy sector. Our indigenous climate leadership initiative programs are working with settlements to protect our shared environment, to create jobs, and to diversify our economy. We're also working together to renew Alberta's Métis settlement consultation policy, further strengthening our partnership and renewing our relationship.

I'd like to acknowledge the Métis settlement leadership here today. With us are Gerald Cunningham, the president of the MSGC, with whom I just had the pleasure to raise the Métis settlement flag at our Legislature Grounds. We also have members of the executive council here, Vice-president Darren Calliou and Treasurer Sherry Cunningham. On behalf of each settlement we have Stan Delorme, chair of Buffalo Lake; Harry Supernault, chair of East Prairie; Irene Zimmer, chair of Elizabeth; Herb Lehr, chair of Fishing Lake; Art Tomkins, chair of Gift Lake; Ken Noskey, chair of Peavine; Greg Calliou, chair of Paddle Prairie; and Dean Thompson, chair of Kikino. Please join me in a round of applause for our guests and for proclamation day for the Métis settlements, a living example of what we can do in partnership together. I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. minister, there might have been an extended preamble with that introduction.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three people from southern Alberta that are a part of my everyday life. They left home early this morning to get here for question period.

1:40

Mr. Cooper: Just for this.

Mr. Schneider: Just for this.

As I say your name, would you please stand. First, Sharon is my wife of 30 years, mother of our daughter, and my biggest supporter. I know that members may find this hard to believe, but Sharon actually watches QP on her computer every day. Folks, can you dig this? My daughter is Kristin Edmonds, and her newly minted husband as of July 28, Devery Edmonds. Now, Kristin works in HR at an accounting firm in Lethbridge, and Devery is a salesman at John Deere in Taber. Mr. Speaker, Devery and Kristin are in town today to go to the Oilers game tonight as they play the Chicago Blackhawks. It's a long drive from Lethbridge, as you know, and I hope the team can pull off a win while they're here. Anyway, please accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I do hope that you paid for the tickets for the new son-in-law yourself.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Acromegaly Awareness Day

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we recognize Acromegaly Awareness Day for the first time in Alberta's history. Acromegaly is a rare condition resulting from excessive amounts of growth hormone, most commonly caused by a benign tumour in the pituitary gland. The condition causes abnormal growth of bones in adults, characterized by the enlargement of an individual's hands, feet, and face and the alteration of the facial features.

Acromegaly is uncommon and can go undetected for many years. It is estimated that up to 16 per cent of Canadians may have a pituitary tumour and not know it. Early diagnosis and treatment can reduce the risk of complications and improve symptoms. Knowledge about the signs and symptoms are key to ensuring early diagnosis. The Alberta Pituitary Patient Society is dedicated to promoting awareness, education, and supporting patients and families.

In March 2017 I introduced my constituent and friend Sonja Durinck to my colleagues in the House. Sonja joins us here today. She is an active and dedicated member of her community and works tirelessly to help improve the lives of others. Sonja is adrenal insufficient and dependent on steroids to live. She has lived with two rare diseases for over 20 years. Sonja and members of the Alberta Pituitary Patient Society regularly visit patients in hospital to help build networks of support. As a founding member of the Canadian and Alberta pituitary patient societies Sonja has done remarkable work bringing awareness to the unique challenges faced by people with rare diseases.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the importance of Acromegaly Awareness Day, and I thank the representatives of the Alberta Pituitary Patient Society for their continued hard work and advocacy across the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Family Violence Prevention Month

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to mark the beginning of Family Violence Prevention Month. Albertans spend November raising awareness for this very, very important issue. Alberta has one of the highest rates of family and intimate partner violence in the entire country, and despite the great work that's being done by both government and nonprofit agencies throughout our province, there is still so much work to be done.

Honestly, I think that one key to preventing the tragic and heartbreaking outcomes that family violence brings is to break our collective silence. It seems that no matter how much awareness is raised, individuals who know someone who's displaying the warning signs or have witnessed concerning behaviours are still hesitant to speak out. Perhaps they think it's not our business, not our place to let that friend know that she has options or resources that could help her out of a terrible situation, that it's not our responsibility to call the police when we hear something or see something going on at someone's house that tells us there is no doubt that someone is in need of help.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is our business. It is our place to speak out, and we do have a responsibility to act whenever we suspect family or intimate partner violence is occurring, and in doing so, we could possibly save someone's life. It's not enough to say to those who might be experiencing family violence: it's okay to reach out for help. We have to help them take that cycle-breaking first step. We have to speak up when we notice the warning signs, and we have to let them know that we know and we're here to help. We have to get them to a safe place where they can access the supports they need to break the cycle of abuse. We have to call the authorities when we know that someone is in immediate danger.

Mr. Speaker, family and intimate partner violence is no longer something we don't talk about. If we want to put an end to it, we must speak out about it.

Political Discourse

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, we've heard, over the last many months and especially over the last couple of weeks, political responses to hate crimes and where political parties are trying to stake their claim. I'm proud to serve as an elected member in a country and a province where people have the opportunity and the freedom to express their beliefs. I totally support the right of Albertans and Canadians to say exactly what they believe and express their passions. I believe in Albertans. This is their province and their future. If we give them the facts, they will chart the course that they want.

But we play an important role as leaders and as legislators. What we say matters. When we speak in our communities or in this Legislature, we can empower those that we lead to be better or we can embolden them to do what is wrong. I will always defend the right for us to disagree, to challenge the government of the day. I fully support that as an elected official I should be challenged. Leadership, regardless of political bent, is and should be about strengthening communities and not dividing them. My experience in this House in serving with a diverse group of individuals is that most of them are here for the right reasons.

That being said, I see people falling because they think that's what will get them elected again. As a father and as a husband and a lifelong Albertan my worry is this: how can we empower Albertans if we hate each other politically, if we see each other as enemies? How are we growing a diverse economy if we hate each other politically? What's the progress on the issues Albertans face if our motivation is just winning the next election? Mr. Speaker, I know we can do better.

Thank you.

Robert Sallows

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, every man dies, but not every man truly lives. This is a quote attributed to Scottish patriot William Wallace, but it is a fitting description of the remarkable life of Robert Sallows. Born and raised in Calgary, Robbie was someone who immediately made an impression, small in stature but large in impact. As an active member of the Progressive Conservative Youth of Alberta he was such a stickler for process that some joked that he wrote Robert's Rules of Order. He only wanted things done the right way, and he had the ability to engage in discussion and have both those who agreed and disagreed with him end up liking him, such was his personal magnetism.

Now, Robert's life had many twists and turns. At the age of 17 he required a double lung transplant. After receiving this life-saving gift, Robert became a tireless advocate for organ donation and served as national secretary for the Canadian Transplant Association. He was instrumental in supporting Len Webber's private member's bill that established Alberta's organ and tissue donation registry.

Last year Robert's health took another turn. He was diagnosed with cancer and underwent surgery and chemotherapy. His initial response was excellent, but this past June the cancer returned and this time would not be treatable. After informing his extensive social media network of this devastating news, he donned his trademark Tilley hat, headed to the Canadian Transplant Games, and proceeded to win the gold medal in doubles lawn bowling. Over the past few months he has inspired hope and courage with his open and honest account of his final, profound journey. Robert passed away October 20. While cancer made his other organs unsuitable for transplantation, he donated his eyes in a final act of generosity.

In memory of Robert I urge all Albertans to register with the provincial organ and tissue donation registry he helped create. Do it now, and tell your family. Do it in honour of Robert Sallows, a friend to many who, though he died, truly lived.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Premier's and Official Opposition Leader's Allies

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last session I gave a member's statement comparing the Premier's close friends and allies with the close friends and allies of the UCP leader. I rise today to provide the Assembly with an update.

The Premier is always making new friends and allies, all of whom she's proud to acknowledge. Some came to say hello at last weekend's Alberta NDP policy convention, close friends and allies like the Alberta Fire Fighters Association, who took to the stage to thank the Premier for enhancing presumptive coverage for certain cancers. The head of the Fire Fighters Association said: Premier, you've had our backs for the last three and a half years, and now we have yours. Lubicon Lake band Chief Billy Joe Laboucan also attended and thanked the Premier for helping to shape their historic land agreement. The Premier also has friends at the United Steelworkers, who congratulated her for her leadership on the Trans Mountain pipeline.

But don't feel sorry for the UCP leader, Mr. Speaker. He, too, continues to make new friends, like close friend and ally Doug Ford, Premier of Ontario. They recently got together and tried to one-up each other on who cares less about both the environment and Alberta's energy industry at an anti carbon tax rally in Calgary. Another Toronto-based friend and ally is Faith Goldy, former Rebel media personality and alt-right Toronto mayoral candidate, whom the UCP leader said is always welcome in Alberta. The UCP leader also made several new friends who sell cars in Alberta, all for the low, low price of promising to remove consumer protection legislation. And who could forget the hate group Soldiers of Odin being photographed at a fundraiser for UCP nomination candidates in Edmonton?

Well, that's my update on close friends and allies, Mr. Speaker. Again, show me your friends, and I'll tell you who you are.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Project Federal Bill C-69

Mr. Kenney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday on live radio the Premier said, quote, of course, the first Canadian pipeline to tidewater in 70 years, Kinder Morgan, is closer now than it has ever been, unquote. First of all, it's no longer called Kinder Morgan. They left. Secondly, how are we closer now than we were prior to the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal, prior to the B.C. government's obstructionism? Why is it that the further we get away from completion, the closer we are, according to the Premier?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I share what I think – actually, I'm going to give him the benefit of the doubt – is the member opposite's disappointment with the Federal Court of Appeal decision that has delayed the Trans Mountain pipeline. That being said, unlike the member opposite, I am not prepared to declare defeat and go home and then dine out on it politically. Rather, my plan is to continue to fight for this pipeline. The Federal Court of Appeal laid out a path forward. That is the path that is now being followed, and we will get a pipeline to Canadian tidewater for the first time in almost 70 years.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the problem is the Premier and the NDP government's tendency to spike the football every time there is a setback and their refusal to actually fight back. I'll give you an example. The NDP's close ally Justin Trudeau has a bill before Parliament. It's the no more pipelines act, Bill C-69. Yesterday the Official Opposition proposed a motion calling on the government of Canada to immediately move to withdraw the proposed Bill C-69, which is a threat to Alberta jobs and pipeline construction. The NDP vetoed this motion. Why? Why did they veto the anti Bill C-69 motion?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, the fact of the matter, as I think all members of this House agree, is that Bill C-69 in its current form is not acceptable, and I believe that all members of this House in different ways have made that point to the federal government. Certainly, our government has been doing that consistently, as the member opposite has heard from us. Our Minister of Energy began engaging on it back in June of 2017, and we have been doing it very vigorously ever since. There are a number of reasons why it will not support Alberta's energy industry. Therefore, we are fighting against it, and we will continue doing that until we get the changes we need.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, was it an error that they vetoed the motion against Bill C-69 yesterday? If they're actually opposed to their friend Justin Trudeau's no-more-pipelines act, why don't they join other representatives of Albertans in this place? We could do this right after question period. Perhaps they just made a mistake. That happens. Could they correct the mistake by supporting later today a motion calling on the Trudeau government to withdraw the no-more-pipelines law, Bill C-69?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we're actually going to do is that given that it is a federal piece of legislation, we are going to advocate with respect to our federal lawmakers, both in the Senate as well as in the House of Commons, to have that bill amended so as to support the ability of our energy industry as well as those who are proponents of other major industrial projects to move forward because that's what we need to do to create jobs and to build economic activity. In the meantime we're also going to move forward on other important pieces of legislation for the people of Alberta in this Assembly while we are here.

Mr. Kenney: I'll take that as a no. The government purposely, then, vetoed a motion in this Chamber asking their ally Justin Trudeau to withdraw Bill C-69. That does not exactly suggest seriousness on the government's part. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Premier just said that they've been advocating against Bill C-69 with the Senate and the House of Commons. The truth is that the United Conservative caucus sent a submission to the House Natural Resources Committee against C-69 but the NDP government did not. Why did the NDP government not send a submission to the House of Commons against Bill C-69?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government, through our ministers, both the Minister of Energy and the minister of environment, has been advocating to the federal government about why Bill C-69 is not good for Alberta business, for Alberta's energy industry, and for moving forward. As you know, the minister of environment just came back from meeting with a range of folks in Ottawa. We are continuing to have actually ongoing conversations with the people who actually hold the pen, and we are confident that we are going to see significant improvements because we are about results, not grandstanding.

Mr. Kenney: Well, that's exactly what the government said when we proposed that they dispatch ministers last spring, after the bill was introduced, to make the case on behalf of Albertans against Justin Trudeau's no more pipelines law, but they said that to send a minister down there would be, quote, grandstanding. Now apparently they've accepted that idea. So, Mr. Speaker, why don't they just accept the idea that we could all, as one, put down the partisanship and speak with a united voice on behalf of Albertans and Alberta jobs with a motion calling upon the federal government to withdraw the no more pipelines act? This is a very simple, multipartisan initiative. Will the government accept it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, I think that all members of the House have very clearly made the case to the federal government with respect to the position that we take on this, and we will continue to do this. We will continue to fight for Albertans. We will continue to fight for Alberta's energy industry. We will continue to point out to the federal government why Bill C-69 in its current form cannot be allowed to pass. That is exactly what we have been doing. That is what we will continue to do. In the meantime we will also do the other business of this House. I think we can actually work on both projects, and I am very pleased to be able to do that for the people . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, the Premier says that the NDP has been working on this since the summer of 2017. The bill wasn't actually introduced till March. Could she please underscore for us: what changes has the government secured in the bill, either before its introduction or since its introduction, as a result of their efforts? I think the answer is: no changes. Isn't that correct, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the first discussion paper that came out on this matter was deeply troubling and deeply problematic. At some point in 2016 the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and others, including us, expressed our misgivings about the initial sort of pass at this, far before the legislation was introduced. Since that time we've been engaging on this file at a bilateral level at every available opportunity. We've made sure that the final product that was introduced in the House was actually, if you can believe this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.
Third main question.

Crime Rates and Law Enforcement

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Police Service has released new quarterly crime statistics that are deeply troubling, which indicate that there has been a 30 per cent increase in break and enters in Calgary this year over last, that there has been a 10 per cent increase in assaults, a nearly 20 per cent increase in sexual offences – in fact, 27 per cent over the last five years – and that there has been a 46 per cent increase in vehicle thefts over the past five years. Does the government share our concern about the growing wave of crime, and what is it planning to do to address this?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I think all Albertans deserve to live in safe and resilient communities, and that's why we need to continue to work with our police partners to address these issues as they come forward. As our police partners have said so many times, a lot of these issues do relate to drugs in the province. We can't address that issue simply by policing our way out of it, so we have been working with the Calgary police and other services throughout the province on a lot of very exciting initiatives that will help to ensure that if the individuals who are perpetrating these crimes need to go to jail, that's the place they go, and if they need other assistance, that's the place they go.

2:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, to continue with these disturbing trends, the increase in break and enters in Calgary over the last five years is 47 per cent, and in assaults it's 33 per cent. The federal government has a bill before Parliament now that would actually reduce penal sentences for some of these very crimes. Will the hon. the Minister of Justice join with other provincial Attorneys General in asking the federal government to withdraw that bill and to ensure that there are meaningful penal consequences, serious time for serious crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, we have been working with our partners throughout the province within our jurisdiction because we think it's important for the people of this province to ensure that we're doing the things we can do rather than complaining about the things that other people can do. We've been working with those partners to ensure that we're able to get information flowing properly. Part of the problem with repeat offenders is that they move between jurisdictions. We've been working with our police partners to ensure that we're increasing communication between those police partners so that they can present all the relevant evidence to the decision-maker so that those who need to go to jail . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, last year the hon. the Attorney General issued a memorandum to the provincial prosecution service essentially instructing them to "triage" prosecutions, which meant essentially dropping many serious offences from prosecution. Does that continue to be the policy of this government, that certain cases do not merit being prosecuted by our Crown prosecutors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, again, when the Jordan decision came down, it was a massive change in the law. As a result of backlogs that had been building up for decades, we needed to do something to make sure that the most serious and violent offences got prosecuted, and we took action immediately. It is the case that we also felt that it was necessary to inject resources into the system, and we did make that injection of resources, an injection, I might point out, that the hon. members opposite voted against. So if we're going to prosecute, we need the prosecutors, and if they're going to vote against that money . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Dementia Care and Long-term Care Standards

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week I asked the Minister of Health for an update on Alberta's dementia strategy. Since that time I've done some homework, and I found that the NDP are falling way short on meeting standards for dementia care and long-term care. The continuing care service standards set the minimum requirements that facilities in the system must comply with. A recent audit of those facilities and standards found that less than half of the facilities in Alberta meet standard 9, which deals with training, and 40 per cent fail on standard 16, which addresses restraint management and secure spaces. To the Minister of Health: is that good enough?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud to be part of a government that fought against significant budget cuts that would have had a significant impact on all folks in Alberta. The leader of that party now was formerly the Minister of Health at the time. Proposing a billion-dollar cut would have certainly hurt a lot of folks. We've protected and invested in public health care, and we've also expanded the number of long-term care and dementia care spaces throughout the province. There's more to be done, absolutely, but we're not going to do it by slashing billions of dollars from the budget, and we're not going to do it by hurting ordinary folks. I'd be happy to follow up with the member more.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I think Albertans deserve an answer to that question. This minister has been Minister of Health for nearly four years now and should take some responsibility.

Now I want to dig further into where the system is failing. Standard 11 deals with infection prevention and control. Standard 12 deals with medication management. The report shows that nearly 80 per cent of facilities fail on both measures. Eighty per cent: that is absolutely shocking, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health. These facilities house some of Alberta's most vulnerable residents. What are you doing to ensure that long-term care facilities are preventing the spread of infection, managing medication, and meeting the needs of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Certainly, making sure that we have an adequate supply of long-term care and dementia care spaces throughout the province is a significant pillar in that. That's why we are on track to build 2,000 more spaces by the end of this term alone. We're also working to make sure that we increase staffing and oversight, because we know that there are a number of folks in this province who are in facilities that are long overdue for upgrades and for additional supports. That's why we continue to work with our front lines in AHS, and that's why we won't cut a billion dollars from the Health budget. We know that fundamental to this is quality front-line care that ensures that we care for all folks that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Clark: If this government thinks that that is quality front-line care, Mr. Speaker, I'd hate to see what constitutes not quality front-line care.

The data that I've been able to find is only summarized in one high-level chart. Albertans living in long-term care, their families, and their caregivers want to know how the facility that they are living in stacks up against the rest, so what I'm going to ask the Health minister is: will you table an itemized, specific report of this audit that shows on a facility-by-facility basis which are meeting the standards and which are not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, we do have audits of all facilities on a regular rotation, but we also have special audits if there's a specific concern that's being raised so that we can bring in additional supports for that. They are posted regularly on the AHS website as well as the HQCA website. I'd encourage anyone who has questions or concerns about their local facility to talk to the local management. As well, they can raise their concerns with AHS or with myself. We're very proud to be investing instead of proposing a billion-dollar cut to health care like that member's party or even more by the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Racism Prevention

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe we need to do everything in our power to stop racism in our province. I know there are a number of not-for-profit organizations that are working hard every day to combat prejudice and bigotry, that risk destroying our great province at its core. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what is your ministry doing to help these organizations?

Miranda: Thank you for the question. Whether it's racist graffiti in Calgary, arson at the Edson mosque, or ultraright rhetoric drifting into mainstream politics in Alberta, racism and bigotry are still problems in our society and even in the opposing party. As part of our government's commitment to address racism, we announced a new antiracism community grant program because we believe on this side of the House that there is no place for racism in our communities, our province, and, especially, our leadership.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will this program help communities combat racial discrimination, foster acceptance, and promote diversity and inclusion?

Miranda: Thank you to the member for the question. Our government has committed a total of $2 million to an antiracism community grant program. Eligible nonprofit organizations can apply for matching grants of up to $25,000 in funding and $5,000 in nonmatched funding. This money will fund training and education programs, the development of informational resources, various support services, and capacity building.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when can groups apply for this grant?

Miranda: Thank you to the member for the question. The next deadline is November 19 for intake, and I would encourage all groups who take on this very important work to apply. On this side of the House we do not promote, endorse, or defend racism. It has no place in Alberta, so our government is committed to fighting it and fostering respect for diversity. The question is not: how much racism is okay? It's really that no amount of racism is ever okay.

Government Policies and Economic Indicators

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, another adverse impact of this government's managed decline of the economy is reflected by the increased cases of unpaid property taxes. The Red Deer Advocate states that Red Deer county is facing $6.6 million in unpaid property taxes, a 20 per cent jump from just last year. This includes $1.4 million from pipelines alone. When property taxes go unpaid, it gets downloaded onto the rest of the community, families, and the county. To the minister: do you have current information on how many Alberta families, businesses, and companies are unable to pay their current municipal taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. Finance minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I think I read the same media report that the member opposite read about the county. You know, we have been through a significant recession in this province, the worst in two generations. It has impacted not only municipal governments across this province, but it's impacted Albertans and companies. We know that there are some challenges on the corporate side in particular. We know also that on the personal side things are looking better because there was an underassessment back in 2016-17. I can follow up on those kinds of questions.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, given that billions in capital flight has resulted in Calgary commercial vacancy rates of over 25 per cent, resulting in city investors losing value and tax assessment value, which, of course, costs all Calgarians their tax base and services, and given that the Calgary Herald reports that this has resulted in the largest hike in commercial tax rates among 11 major Canadian cities, a 9.5 per cent increase, again to the minister: do you not see how your managed decline of the economy, tax increases, and layers of regulation are making it tougher for all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Finance minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, it's not that at all. What it is is the significant recession this province has been through. As I said, it's the worst in two generations. But, you know, things are looking up; I guess you were waiting for me to say that. We're seeing GDP growth up in this province, 4.9 per cent in 2017, and we're going to lead in 2018, '19, and '20 on GDP growth. Just on the business side business incorporations are up. Since the beginning of 2018 more than 26,000 businesses have been incorporated in Alberta. That's going to take up some of the slack that ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the oil and gas industry saw foreign investment drop $15 billion in 2017, due in large part to this government's anti-investment policies, and that, incredibly, the University of Calgary's School of Public Policy warns that a 30-year-old Albertan will pay an additional $50,000 in personal provincial income taxes just to pay the interest on the NDP debt this Finance minister has accumulated, Minister, again, can you not see how your debt, interest expense, credit downgrades, and policies have burdened our municipalities, our cities, and now our youth?

Mr. Ceci: Actually, what I see is that the situation in this province, particularly for oil and gas companies and their lack of investment, is because of the drop in oil prices, Mr. Speaker. They haven't had the capital to invest. But, you know, they would be worse off under that side, that side of Conservatives. All Albertans would be worse off. All Albertans would suffer as a result of a $700 million tax break to the richest 1 per cent that that side is only too happy to give to their friends and insiders. We won't do that. We're going to continue to stand up for Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Power Purchase Arrangements and the Balancing Pool

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a very simple question to the Deputy Premier. How much money did the borrowing pool – I meant the Balancing Pool – borrow from the government of Alberta to cover the losses on the PPAs, and how much will it increase by 2020, when the remaining PPAs will expire?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member well knows, that matter was settled because of the position that this government took, that we were not going to privatize profits and socialize risk. So we settled those matters, and we now have capped electricity rates, the fastest growing renewables market in the country, and are reducing our greenhouse gas emissions and our pollution.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that termination notices for the PPAs were issued in the first quarter of 2016 and could have been terminated by the end of 2016 if not for the NDP government suing itself and given that the Balancing Pool's delays cost Albertans hundreds of millions of dollars that could have been used to pay for 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses, to the same minister: by interfering in the cancellation of the PPAs, did the NDP run the electricity market in a noncommercial manner?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We rely on independent agencies like the Balancing Pool and the MSA, the Market Surveillance Administrator, to effectively manage the electricity system within their mandates. Any suggestion of political interference is completely baseless. Decisions regarding the termination of PPAs has always solely been in the hands of the Balancing Pool and not the government.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the Market Surveillance Administrator, who also reports to the same Energy minister, found that the Balancing Pool broke the law in its handling of the PPAs and ran generating assets under its control in a noncommercial manner in a two-year period, did the Minister of Energy or any of her staff or employees of the department instruct the Balancing Pool to manipulate the electricity market? Was it in a voice mode?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our priority with respect to the electricity system is making sure power bills are affordable and predictable. We've been focused on fixing a broken system that Conservatives left us through a deregulation experiment that put consumers on a roller coaster. Since electricity was deregulated, Albertans were subjected to vast price hikes. We have capped electricity rates. We've opened up the largest renewables opportunities on the continent, with the lowest cost renewables in Canadian history now bidding into our system, and we're reducing pollution from coal and creating jobs in natural gas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Drug-impaired Driving

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year ago I was urging this government to start preparations for keeping our roads safe once marijuana was legalized. Well, yesterday the minister could provide no assurances about the number of saliva roadside devices in Alberta or police access to blood testing or the number of drug recognition experts. Instead she offered this excuse: "Legalization [only] happened very recently." Minister, we've known this was coming for years, so why did you not ensure that all police in Alberta were prepared for this?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think just to clarify a few things here, we have been preparing since we got the message from the federal government, and in fact, as I noted previously, Alberta was out in front significantly, and other provinces have been looking to us because we've done such a good job with our model. That being said, it is a choice that is on police services to either buy those devices independently or to get them through the government, so we don't have immediate numbers in terms of the services that may have gone directly to the federal government to purchase those devices. Again, in terms of the training – I'll just stop.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that yesterday the minister confirmed that "there will be an increase in impaired drivers on the roads," Minister, let me specifically ask about blood testing again. Are police officers able to perform blood tests at their police stations or do they have to take suspected drug-impaired drivers to hospitals for this service?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I think, to be clear, that what I said was that we have been hearing concerns from Albertans about an increase in impaired drivers. I don't like to predict crime trends into the future. That being said, we have been working very hard with our police partners to ensure that we are ready to handle the legalization of cannabis. It certainly is the case that we have been training drug recognition experts. I do know that the RCMP has reported to us very recently that they are on track to meet their targets. With respect to the blood test, again, it depends on the services, as the member knows . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that last May the Justice minister said, "One of our top three priorities is to ensure we are keeping our roads safe as this legalization process occurs" and given that your answers offered no confidence that Alberta has enough roadside saliva devices, blood-testing facilities, or drug recognition experts to keep our roads safe, Minister, the government appears to be grossly ill prepared. Why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'll point out that the Alberta government was the first to have two-phase consultation and to get a plan out there on the ground. Other jurisdictions have been looking to us. In addition, I will point out that we have worked very closely with our police partners. I think they have done an incredible job in demonstrating readiness. One of the things that we're certainly going to need to fight this type of crime or any type of crime is to ensure that more boots are on the ground. We are investing in those services as we are investing in other services. Meanwhile our opposition is voting against them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Student Achievement in Mathematics

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year only 59.2 per cent of grade 9 students achieved an acceptable standard on the math PAT. Most Albertans believe that a passing grade is 50 per cent or better, but the Calgary Herald also revealed that the acceptable standard was only 42 per cent. To the Minister of Education: is it acceptable to you that over 40 per cent of Alberta's grade 9 students were unable to score 42 per cent on the PAT this past year?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the question very much. We made several adjustments to the PAT exams here in the province of Alberta to make them stronger, to fit with basic skills and learning basic skills. The grade 9 part B, no-calculator portion: we knew fully well that the kids wouldn't do so well. Last year we did it with the grade 6s. And guess what? This year the grade 6s went up by 7.2 per cent. So people make adjustments, they learn along the way, and they learn because we're investing in education.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one parent has said, quote, "Parents should be well informed about what constitutes an acceptable grade; cut scores should be well advertised and parents should be provided with the rationale behind choosing that particular cut score," end quote, and given that math cut scores have remained below 50 per cent for five years running and given that trust is earned and easy to lose, is the minister prepared to publicize the cut scores on future PATs and to explain why that cut score was chosen?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we are making great strides, progress in terms of our mathematic scores and diploma scores in general. They are on the rise in most subject areas, particularly in science and in math in grade 12. I'm superproud of what we have seen. And do you know how we've managed to do that? We did not cut the budget of Education during an economic downturn. We made sacrifices in other areas as opposed to the opposition here who would have 4,000 teachers less in our schools. That is a cut if I think so.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: I guess parents will continue to be in the dark.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would ask this: is the minister – after having refused to heed the opposition's warning for many years and yet given that the Alberta parents are saying, quote, "There is a crisis in math education in this province, and students do not have adequate mastery of basic mathematical concepts," end quote, how will this minister earn the trust of Albertans, address the problem of cut scores, and ensure that our students are truly prepared for 21st-century realities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly appreciate that question because, of course, what we are doing here and now is building new curriculum. You can see the new draft curriculum for kindergarten to grade 4 on the website right now. We have literally had tens of thousands of Albertans helping us to build that curriculum, focusing on basic skills. And you know how you do that? You make sure you do have those 4,000 teachers in the classroom; you do not make significant cuts. Seven hundred million in tax cuts: do you know how many schools that would pay for? More than 20 high schools. I would go with the high schools instead of the tax cuts, and I think most Albertans would, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Postsecondary Tuition

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Investment in education has been a key priority for this government. Students are concerned that the end of the freeze will bring a sharp spike in tuition costs. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what are you doing to protect students from the steep tuition hikes, and what has been happening with tuition once the freeze ends?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government has been proud of our record of fighting to make life affordable for Albertans, and that includes postsecondary students. As the member mentioned, we've frozen tuition for five years in a row, and thanks to this tuition freeze Alberta has gone from one of the most expensive jurisdictions for higher education to one of the most affordable, and I'm proud of that. Once the tuition freeze ends, of course, we're proposing that it be capped at the rate of inflation. As the member knows, under the previous Conservative government tuition and fees rapidly outpaced the cost of living, and we're proud to be able to take some steps to prevent that from happening.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Affordability is top of mind for students. With this additional year of the freeze announced before the new tuition framework takes effect, how much will the average student save over a four-year degree?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, the average university student over a four-year program will save nearly $2,000 thanks to our tuition freeze, and that amount reflects how much tuition would have increased under a different set of principles. I think it's important to contrast with the ideological friends of the UCP in Saskatchewan, who slashed and burned their way through a recession with very little positive results to show for it. They cut budgets to universities by 5 per cent, and tuition in that province has increased by over $800. I'm proud of the approach that our government has taken to make life more affordable.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Drever: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that most members of this House have been lobbied by the students' unions for the framework like this one, can you update the House on what the response has been from students on this action?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that students have received this announcement extremely positively. I would venture to say that I am probably more popular with students than I am with the members opposite. I know a member of the students' association who attended Mount Royal University prior to being elected, and I believe that she is pleased to hear about the package of reforms that we're bringing forward to Mount Royal University. That means that Mount Royal University will have a general faculties council, the ability to appoint a chancellor, and will have similar governance structures to give it the same kind of esteem and reputation that other universities across the province enjoy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Oil and Gas Transportation

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pipelines are on the minds of many Albertans and with good reason. Our inability to get our energy products to market efficiently has resulted in a $50 discount per barrel. That means less money for companies, employees, and government programs. The problem has become so bad that we're now seeing an increasing amount of oil ship not just by rail but also by truck. This shows just how desperate companies are to get their product moving. To the Deputy Premier: we're years away from adequate pipeline capacity, so what are you doing in the short term to get this product to more markets?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the Premier very recently was quite clear that we need some action from the federal government with respect to rail capacity, and we will certainly look at our options as well on the provincial side of the House. Another piece of this is, of course, that there is a knock-on effect for any time you have more demand for rail capacity. Then you have issues related to the transportation of agricultural products to market as well. That's also bad for Alberta. There's more to talk about in terms of getting better value for our resources, which I am sure I will be pleased to share with the House in supplementals.

Mr. Fraser: Given that shipping oil by pipeline is by far the safest method of transportation and given that depressed prices and bottlenecked transportation means more and more oil will be shipped by train and by truck and given that more oil being shipped by alternative methods carries additional risks to both the environment and public safety, to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that increased use of nonpipeline transportation isn't posing additional risks to the environment and our public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's precisely why we need co-operation from the federal government on this matter of rail transportation. That is, in fact, a federally regulated matter. They, too, have a responsibility to ensure that Albertans get best price for our resources, that our resources can get to market because we are, in fact, a country, not a collection of villages or provinces. But rail capacity is fundamental to who we are as Canadians. Definitely the feds need to step up, but in the meantime there are a number of other things that we can do as a province, including getting better value for our resources here at home.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many Albertans would be surprised to learn how much oil is moving by truck and given that the Alberta government and the people of Alberta would benefit from a better understanding of exactly where our oil is going and why and given that knowing which destination and methods of transportation deliver the most benefit to Albertans helps us plan for the future, to the same minister: will you provide this House with a detailed breakdown of where our oil is going currently and where we would like it to go?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do believe that much of the information that the hon. member is seeking is available either through the Department of Energy or the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers' website. There are a number of different analyses out there. At the end of the day, the fact of the matter is that pipeline is the safest. Through our government's efforts we've gone from 4 in 10 Canadians appreciating this matter to 7 in 10 now. We've also secured the approval of two pipelines. Of course, Trans Mountain has been in the headlines a lot, but line 3 is moving along and has actually gotten some of its Minnesota-based regulatory approvals.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Unemployment and Job Creation

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's latest annual report claims that more Albertans are working than ever before, but there are still over 177,000 Albertans out of work, 38,000 more than when the NDP took office. Meanwhile a recent Fraser Institute report indicates that over 46,000 jobs have disappeared from the private sector since 2014, accompanied by the flight of over tens of billions of dollars of investment capital. To the Minister of Labour: how do you explain this misguided, managed decline when speaking to the 177,000 unemployed and even more underemployed Albertans in virtually every corner of this province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government is putting jobs and diversification first. That's why we put so much time through our budget investments in those areas, and our plan is working. Though there are still people who are unemployed, the economy in Alberta is recovering, with 90,000 new full-time jobs last year. But we know, as I said, that there's much more work to do. We want to make sure that every Albertan at every kitchen table feels the recovery, and that's why we're standing up to Ottawa to build a pipeline in this province and across to tidewater, and we're making strategic investments.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: A hundred and seventy-seven thousand is some?

Mr. Speaker, given that there are over 39,000 unemployed youth in Alberta, with youth unemployment at 11.5 per cent, the highest outside of Atlantic Canada, and given that it appears that young people have been left behind in your ever-so-fragile recovery, to the same minister: why are young Albertans experiencing such little success from your misguided, ideological, job-killing, investment-repelling NDP world view policies?

Mr. Ceci: You know what won't help the unemployed, Mr. Speaker? Even more people unemployed, because that side wants to kill more jobs, 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses. They want to give tax breaks to their friends and insiders. That's not going to get more people employed; that's just going to get the rich richer in this province. We're not going to do that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Calm it down.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A hundred and seventy-seven thousand would make it one of Alberta's biggest cities of unemployed people.

Given that the government continues to boast about its record of job creation and given that, at 7 per cent, Alberta has the highest unemployment rate in the country outside of Atlantic Canada, to the same minister: if Alberta is recovering so nicely from the recession and the most robust job creation is fully funded by the NDP's red pen on the backs of future generations, what do you have to say to unemployed Albertans and their families struggling to make ends meet?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I know that not every person who lost their job or is working in a job that wasn't their original job now is happy, but things are looking up. We will not rest until every Albertan is satisfied and working to the full extent that they need to, they want to. On that side the opposition would fire more people. They would fire public servants. They would make it tougher because they'd privatize so many businesses that we are standing up for and won't let them do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control and Wildfire Prevention

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again it appears that we have been fortunate in this province that enough moisture fell this summer to lessen the threat of a major fire in Jasper national park. Now, that's small comfort to the population of Jasper townsites as they live in the shadow of an ever-expanding stand of dead and dying trees from the pine beetle epidemic. To the minister of ag: how many hectares of trees have been taken down either by some form of harvest or controlled burn around the town this year?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you to the member for the question. You know, I come from B.C. originally, and I understand the devastation that the pine beetle can do and that it moved into Alberta in a big way. It's something that we've been working on in Alberta with the federal government, and we need to push the federal government to do more, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker. We know that the Member for West Yellowhead has pushed us very hard and advocated – and I know that our minister has spoken to the federal minister about this – and we have lots more to do on it, but we will continue to fight for the people of that area.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the serious nature of the threat to Jasper townsites and surrounding area and given that Jasper is a huge part of tourism in Alberta, as we all know, Minister, what is the ministry's and the federal government's plan to maintain the ecological integrity within the federal park while helping to thin out the infected areas, thus reducing the fire risk in that area?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you very much. You know, on behalf of myself as the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the minister of forestry we have been working hard on such programs as FireSmart, working with the town of Jasper, with the national parks, understanding, through the conservation officers there, what's been happening on the ground, working with the lumber industry, who has been affected quite hard on this, the softwood lumber in particular. We have task forces who are sharing information through us and the federal government and helping the municipalities. We will continue to work on this. The job isn't done. We know that, Mr. Speaker, and we'll continue to support Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the townsites of Jasper is fairly isolated out there in the mountains and given that funds through programs such as FireSmart are available and given that I understand the ministry of ag has increased funding, which I support, Minister, has your office and Municipal Affairs given any thought to changing the building codes within populated centres that may be vulnerable to wildfires in order to make them more fire smart, as many fire experts are now suggesting?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you to the member for the question. That's a good question. As he correctly stated, we did – the operating budget for wildfire management is almost $130 million, and that covers preparation work, training, air tanker bases, and seasonal employees. We have increased funding to FireSmart by $11 million. Working through myself with Municipal Affairs and building codes and safety codes, we do monitor this, and we are adopting national standards. You know, I think we have to adapt as we go as climate change plays an ever bigger part in what we do in this world. We do monitor closely and adapt as we go, and we keep a good eye on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Surgery Wait Times

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services has 13 measures that help them evaluate their performance. Wait times, emergency or surgical, are, interestingly enough, not in any of those 13 measures. They don't use the deteriorating statistics for hip surgeries, where Albertans are now waiting 37 weeks on average versus 29 weeks from three years ago. Knee surgeries have slowed to 41 weeks on average from 33 weeks. Can this minister explain why things are getting worse under this government for Albertans? Can she explain why AHS doesn't use wait times as a performance measure, and is she looking elsewhere to see how they expedite surgeries?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for raising an important question. Certainly, any time anyone is waiting for surgery, we don't want them to wait a day longer than necessary. That's why we increased the budget to do more surgeries. At the same time we're doing more surgeries, more people are on the list asking for surgery, so we're actually providing more capacity. But I do know that some specific areas have seen longer wait times, and that's why it's important that we invest in public health care instead of cutting billions of dollars and laying off 4,000 nurses, as the Official Opposition is proposing. We want to take care of our community, and that requires investment.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the Workers' Compensation Board aims to have surgeries performed within a few weeks. Here's an agency that gets people into surgery in a fraction of the time of AHS. Patients don't become addicted to painkillers. They don't become complacent and demotivated. The patients quickly recover, and they continue to contribute to our society. Have you learned anything from WCB on how to deal with surgical wait times?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I want to be very clear as well that anyone who requires urgent care, whether it's access to an emergency department, urgent surgery, or access to a specialist, will receive it. The UCP certainly don't have a plan to improve wait times. They keep pushing for privatization and for big tax giveaways to the superrich, most high-income earners in Alberta, a $700 million tax cut specifically to those folks. Why? They want them to take that money and go to other jurisdictions and pay privately. On this side of the House we invest in public health care because we want to improve access for every Albertan. Absolutely, there is more to be done.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, WCB utilizes doctors and nurses that work in our AHS system, and they rent space from our smaller hospitals with underutilized operating rooms, like the Leduc hospital. Basically, hospitals run X number of surgeries, and if there's any extra space, WCB reserves that space. How is it that WCB is getting people access to surgeries substantially quicker than AHS while using the very same public health professionals and facilities to do this? How do they get someone into surgery in two to three weeks where it takes you 11 months?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to explain triage to the member opposite. It's actually AHS that's doing those surgeries in AHS facilities. It's 55 health care facilities that we do surgeries in across the province. The reason why we have some folks get in faster than others is because there's a triage system based on urgency, based on need. That's what happens in a public health care system that has an ability to make sure that everyone – it's not based on whether you have a fur coat or no coat at all that you get access to the front of line; it's based on your need and your urgency. I'm not going to apologize for public health care. There's more to do and more investment to be done, but laying off 4,000 nurses won't do the job, you guys. It's time to admit that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Educational Curriculum Review

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, our government has been dedicated to ensuring that students in Alberta are receiving high-quality education. That is one of the reasons our government decided to review the curriculum, as some of it was out of date, more than 30 years old, back when a few of us here were still learning on Commodore 64s in elementary school. Previous timeline targets expected that the new K to 4 curriculum would be written by December 2018. To the minister: can you please provide an update on the state of the curriculum review?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've been working very hard since 2016 to build the curriculum. We have the K to 4 curriculum drafts up on our website now. We've had literally tens of thousands of Albertans helping us to build the curriculum every step of the way, focusing on basic skills like reading, mathematics, numeracy, critical thinking, and so forth. You know, I wonder why the UCP said that they would put the curriculum into the shredder. Now I know. It's because we're going to be teaching critical thinking skills, which go against the basic ideas that they try to push from the other side.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. You spent much of the summer consulting with various groups to ensure that our curriculum rewrite is on track. Who did you meet, and what sort of feedback did you hear this summer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to say that we had more than 100,000 interactions with Albertans contributing to building the curriculum we're at with K to 4 right now. We had round-tables with different industries, the energy industry, financial literacy. The Minister of Finance and I met with banks and credit unions. They put together a beautiful, wonderful way to teach financial literacy in K to 12. You know what? We're using it because we believe in interactions with Albertans for the betterment of our children.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you. To the same minister. I received several inquiries from constituents last summer wondering how far along we were in this process and when we expect to see the new curriculum in classrooms. Could the minister please explain his timeline on that?

Mr. Eggen: Well, sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we have the K to 4 draft curriculum. We'll finish working on it and begin field testing here in the new year. It's a multiyear process, so it's very important to have continuity and a long-term commitment to education to allow this to happen. You will not see a new curriculum to benefit our kids if you make cuts in education, where you lose 4,000 teachers or you take $700 million out of the system. These are not the ways you build good curriculum here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: We'll continue with Members' Statements in 30 seconds.

Family Violence Prevention Month

Cortes-Vargas: Several years ago, before I was an MLA, late one night I got a phone call from an organization that I worked for. It supports people fleeing from family violence. I was told that I was needed as soon as possible to support a new mother with young children who spoke only Spanish. She just needed some support. I got there around midnight. I was there the entire weekend and long after that. I observed the complexities of the paperwork involved, her emotional strength, her resolve, and her dedication to her children. I also saw the deep sigh of relief when she realized that I spoke Spanish as well, that the person who was supporting her was someone that could communicate in her own language.

Mr. Speaker, November is Family Violence Prevention Month, and I am proud to wear a purple ribbon signifying my support for this important month and to bring attention to this issue. I am proud to be part of a government that sees family violence as a serious issue that needs to be addressed, a government that has made it possible for victims to end a lease without penalty and leave an unsafe home, a government that puts significant investment towards prevention of family violence and supports for people fleeing terrible situations, investments like $33 million towards family and community safety programs and a $25 million increase to support community-based prevention services across Alberta. Our government is committed to working with community organizations to support Albertans fleeing violence and looking for safety.

Two important organizations, Saffron and A Safe Place, are doing amazing work for the constituents of Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Today, on the first day of Family Violence Prevention Month, I want to thank them and all of the organizations that support prevention and stand with survivors for the essential work that they do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to tell you that at the appropriate time I intend to move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately move to withdraw the proposed Bill C-69, which is a threat to Alberta jobs and pipeline construction.

I have the appropriate number of copies.

The Speaker: Minister of Transportation, do you have . . .

Mr. Mason: A notice of motion, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Mason: Why, yes, I do.

The Speaker: Great. Good.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I'm rising to advise the House that on the next available Monday written questions 1, 2, and 3 will be accepted. Additionally, motions for returns 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 will also be accepted.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Bill 24

An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights.

The legislation will provide the Alberta Medical Association with statutory representation for physicians in Alberta. The proposed legislation doesn't change existing processes between government and the AMA. It doesn't give the AMA new powers or abilities. The legislation was a commitment the government made as part of its recent agreement with doctors, and we have made good on that promise. I'm proud that our government has maintained a collaborative and constructive relationship with Alberta's physicians, enabling us to stabilize health spending while improving patient care. This legislation represents the next steps in this positive relationship. On behalf of my colleagues and all Albertans I want to thank the AMA and all Alberta physicians for working with us to meet Alberta's health care needs.

With that, I move first reading of Bill 24.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite five copies of two documents: Alberta Health Continuing Care Health Service Standards, that I referenced in my question earlier, updated and amended as of July 2018; and a presentation called The Care Planning Journey, including the chart I referenced earlier, which shows the poor performance on the standards in the continuing care health service standards guidelines. Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, the Alberta Human Rights Commission annual report 2016-17; and pursuant to the Legal Profession Act, the Law Society of Alberta annual report 2017.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we had a point of order, which was withdrawn by the opposition.

Point of Order

Questions outside Ministerial Responsibility

The Speaker: I am prepared to make a ruling on the point of order raised yesterday regarding the main question of the Member for Drumheller-Stettler during Oral Question Period. The question of the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, which you can find on page 1711 of Hansard for October 31, 2018, was as follows:

This past weekend the NDP and their supporters came together and passed some policy resolutions. One dealt with grain and the resolution to . . . formally examine the impact to Canada's international reputation that has resulted from the changes to Canada's grain marketing storage and handling system . . . Minister, in all your travels I have never heard you publicly say that Canada's . . . grain growers have somehow been diminished by any recent changes in that federal policy. Have you?

In her arguments the Deputy Government House Leader referred to page 509 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, which states that members should not ask questions during Oral Question Period that "refer to public statements by Ministers on matters not directly related to their departmental duties." In essence, a minister should not be asked questions that fall outside their ministerial responsibilities. The Official Opposition leader responded by arguing that provincial government policy connected to federal changes in the agriculture sector is an appropriate topic for questions to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Members, I have carefully reread the question asked by the Member for Drumheller-Stettler yesterday, and I did have some difficulty determining what was being asked. The question could have been phrased so that it asked the minister directly about the impact of federal policy on Alberta grain growers rather than asking the minister whether he had made statements regarding those changes. My understanding of the intent of the question was that it was to assess the impact of the changes on Alberta's agricultural sector, which is undoubtedly related to the minister's departmental duties. Accordingly, I can find no point of order in this case.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Now I believe a member of the Official Opposition has a motion for the House. Please proceed.

Federal Bill C-69

Mr. Nixon:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately move to withdraw the proposed Bill C-69, which is a threat to Alberta jobs and pipeline construction.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I have brought forward a motion under Standing Order 42 to do with Bill C-69. I will not spend any time talking about Bill C-69; it's been talked about much in this House, including today. Yet again during the exchange between the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition today the NDP, through their Premier, seemed to be indicating that they are committed to this House and this Assembly standing up to the House of Commons against Bill C-69, the bill to kill all future pipelines in this country that's been brought forward by their close personal friend and ally Justin Trudeau. It seemed to be that there may have been some indication from the Premier that her Government House Leader instructing her caucus to vote no on this motion yesterday was a mistake, so being the courteous guy I am on a Thursday, I would like to give them another opportunity.

I hope all members support us in defending Alberta and our energy industry.

The Speaker: As the House knows, there are no other speakers to the motion. We need to have unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 8

Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 8, Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018.

This act contains many important updates. One result is safer conditions for first responders and Albertans under evacuation orders, another is clarity on how dispute resolution is used when property is damaged during a response, and another is establishment of the authority to create a new regulation that further clarifies emergency management roles and responsibilities with local authorities.

The local authority emergency management regulation will allow for additional direction to municipalities, including offering additional clarity to ensure that everyone understands what role they play in emergency management, providing direction on emergency management training for local emergency managers, and encouraging intermunicipal collaboration ahead of emergencies so that communities are prepared to work together. This regulation will ensure all municipalities across the province are better prepared to respond to disasters and keep Albertans safe.

We're here to help as the provincial government, through the fine folks at the Alberta Emergency Management Agency, to make sure that all communities get the support they need in preparing for and managing emergencies. Ultimately, all these proposed amendments will lead to stronger, more efficient responses to future emergencies.

Over the summer the Alberta Emergency Management Agency engaged municipalities, first responders, and other stakeholders. We held in-person sessions in 11 communities across the province, which were participated in by 174 stakeholders from 92 municipalities. More importantly, stakeholders agreed that these changes will move us forward and help build a stronger emergency management framework in our province.

I'd like to say thank you to the staff and the leadership of the Alberta Emergency Management Agency, including Shane Schreiber, who is the managing director of the AEMA in our province, for all their work on this bill. I'd like to also thank all the elected leaders, the municipal administrators, first responders, and emergency managers across this province who helped us make these updates. I'd also like to thank all members of this House, on all sides, for their thoughtful debate and their questions on this act.

Madam Speaker, we have seen an increasing number of disasters impacting Albertans, and we all have a duty to protect residents of this province when disaster strikes. I'm proud to say that Bill 8 will result in a safer, more prepared, more resilient Alberta.

With that, I move that this bill be read a third and final time. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to third reading? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be brief today. I don't have a lot of prepared remarks for this, but I would like to offer my comments. In the past few years we've seen a lot of horrendous events in this province. I don't need to go through a lot of them, but certainly we can all recall the Slave Lake wildfire, the southern Alberta floods, the Wood Buffalo fires, in my own area the Kenow fires, and almost, again, more fire in that southern district of mine just across from the B.C. border.

I would like to actually offer my compliments to Municipal Affairs and the department for embarking on these changes. We did endure an awful lot in this past decade with a lot of these horrendous situations. I think they've gone ahead and looked through a lot of the things that were important between evacuation orders, dispute resolution, regional collaboration, training requirements for municipalities and first responders, emergency management plans, exercises, and all of these things that will contribute, hopefully, in the future to a much improved system.

With that, Madam Speaker, I close and wish everyone a good afternoon.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in the House and talk about such a very important bill, Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018. We've all seen and heard several times about the big events – floods, fires, et cetera – across the Alberta land base. We're updating the Emergency Management Act so that we can be best prepared for disasters. This update will provide authority, create new regulation that will give clear direction on emergency management practices for municipalities, following consultation with stakeholders to make sure that we get this right.

I'm going to talk about the importance of the Hinton Training Centre, and the reason I'm going to say that is that the Hinton Training Centre is the most experienced centre in Canada for training forest fire fighters. We get forest fire fighters that we train that show up at the Hinton Training Centre from all across the world. The centre also trains water bomber pilots, small bird dog planes that assist with the dropping of water on fires, and it uses state-of-the-art flight simulators. I had a lot of fun in the simulator. Unfortunately, I ended up crashing both planes. Anyway, it was fun. The instructor laughed while we were sitting there doing that. It's quite a program that they have for training.

The other thing that I want to mention is that I sit on the pine beetle committee, which was formed about two years ago with the local mayors, town and county of Jasper, the federal park, forestry companies, chamber of commerce, and of course the government of Alberta Agriculture and Forestry people. The biggest deal with this is supporting FireSmart programs, supporting the removal of pine beetle infested trees, which is very important when we're looking at management of fire issues going forward.

The reason I'm mentioning this committee is simple. We have to have an emergency plan in place. Once again, we all know that we choked in smoke this summer. It followed the highway 16 corridor, and of course when I looked out my office window, you couldn't even see the foothills that surround us. That's how bad the smoke in our area was. It was caused in part by the B.C. forest fires burning basically deadwood from pine beetles, to a major extent. Of course, it burns hotter and it spreads faster because of the deadwood.

West of Jasper park is now dead sticks. It's not red trees anymore. All the pine beetles have fallen off the trees, and all we've got is dead sticks there. Throughout Jasper park it's now nearly all red, as we can see when we travel through there. The eastern part is now turning red. Parts of the Hinton area can be seen like that as well.

Jasper national park has its own issues. It's controlled by the federal jurisdiction that looks after the federal parks, so it creates its own issues in the fact that they determine what they're going to do. We were fortunate to convince them to finally do FireSmart around the community of Jasper. It's the first time we've ever seen logging occurring in a national park, but it was important for the protection of the people in the town of Jasper. They're also logging now in other areas of the park. Whistlers campground will be shut down for a year. I had a long meeting with the manager of the park, and it'll remain shut down for a year. They're also going to do some upgrades, but during those upgrades they're going to remove all the deadwood from pine beetles because they know that it's a hazard and it has to be done.

The pine beetle committee recognizes the seriousness that this situation is creating. We realize that we'd better have a plan in place. The plan must address the limited scope of travel routes in West Yellowhead, including highway 16, highways 40 and 93, and of course the forestry roads. When we get a fire that could be in that magnitude, how do we address it, and where do we go? Evacuation plans have to be developed to cover the communities, random campers, and of course all the tourists that come into the park. We've been trying to work with the federal park to make sure that we address the concerns coming forward. That's why it's so important that we put this plan in place.

We need to ensure that we have plans to cover the winter conditions as well. We've had two bad forest fires in the Hinton area that were during the winter. A chinook comes through, and it wipes out all the snow, dries up everything, and all it takes is somebody being careless with cigarettes or whatever. We ended up with a big fire. Of course, the problem with that is: how do you fight them? Water bombers can't pick up water from a frozen lake, and neither can a helicopter. That's why it's so important that we look at these issues, and that's why I'm in full support that we look at this act and we ensure that we have a plan in place and working out in that situation that we have, that we're facing in West Yellowhead.

I really support this act, and I hope that it gets passed so that we can move forward and protect the communities and the people of West Yellowhead. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? Oh, 29(2)(a) first. Is there anybody else wishing to speak to the bill? Seeing none, would the minister like to close debate?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to say thank you to everybody for the robust debate and the positive attitude on this bill because it's a really good thing that's going to help a lot of people. Thank you very much.

I close debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

Bill 20 Securities Amendment Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move third reading of this bill before us, Bill 20, Securities Amendment Act, 2018.

The Alberta government is committed to ongoing reform of our securities regulatory system. This commitment to ongoing reform means Alberta has a modern, streamlined, and highly harmonized securities regulatory system. The Alberta Securities Commission, or ASC, is mandated to protect investors, to foster market efficiency, and to minimize systemic risks. This requires balancing investor protection and the integrity of the financial system while allowing innovation and ensuring a competitive investment climate.

These amendments were developed to support our commitment to ongoing reform by protecting investors and promoting a fair and effective Alberta capital market. To enhance investor protection, we will create a new regulatory regime for benchmarks and benchmark administrators substantially similar to the benchmark amendments recently adopted in both Ontario and Quebec. The European Union recently adopted a benchmark regulatory regime. To ensure that Canadian benchmarks may continue to be used by EU market participants, Canadian securities regulators have committed to implementing a regulatory regime respecting benchmarks equivalent to the EU's regime.

The amendments will also support the implementation of a whistle-blower program for the Alberta capital market and its participants similar to whistle-blower programs implemented, again, in Ontario and Quebec in 2016. Security regulators believe whistle-blower programs will encourage individuals to report information on serious securities- or derivatives-related misconduct to the securities regulator. Whistle-blower programs have also been implemented internationally, based on a belief that a whistle-blower program may assist in preventing or limiting harm to investors that may result from such misconduct. As whistle-blowing is an inherently risky activity with a myriad of personal and professional consequences, the ASC will create a whistle-blower program that mitigates as much as reasonably possible the risks and barriers that whistle-blowers may encounter.

The amendments will also provide ASC members and staff with protection from being compelled to provide evidence in civil proceedings relating to information obtained during the discharge of their duties at the ASC. That's substantially similar to the amendment adopted in Ontario in 2017.

Finally, amendments to Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations will permit the ASC to make rules respecting the manner and form of material provided to the ASC under other statutes, for example the Business Corporations Act, in respect of relief from proxy solicitation requirements. This amendment will also facilitate the development and implementation of the new information technologies system, allowing a vast majority of material to be filed electronically.

These amendments were developed to improve the regulation of Alberta's capital market, increase investor confidence and protection, and keep our securities laws harmonized with other jurisdictions both in Canada and the EU. With these amendments we are ensuring that Alberta's securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's markets and evolves in alignment with international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives. I'd ask all members of this House to support third reading of this bill.

Of course, I'd like to extend my appreciation to the board and staff of ASC as well as Treasury Board and Finance for making these changes to the regulations and the Securities Amendment Act, 2018, Bill 20, possible.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm going to try and keep it brief for everybody else in the House here today. I think that, certainly, the Securities Amendment Act has sometimes been lamented by opposition members as something we do very frequently or something that members may say is not the most interesting bill in the world, and we have to do it every year. You know, actually, I think that there are certain parts in here which are very important. It's something that my colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud has mentioned before. I think we do a lot of really good and important work in the Securities Amendment Act here.

Last year we brought in many protections for investors. This year one of the biggest things that I'm excited about is this whistle-blower protection program. We're not leading the way on this; it's being implemented across Canada. I believe the CSA has agreed to that. We've already seen it implemented in Ontario and Quebec. It's something that we know is going to help provide a robust securities regulatory regime. It's something that we know is important to have when we want to have a system that people can trust and depend on. As the minister said, whistle-blowing is inherently dangerous, which is why it's important to provide protection and confidentiality for whistle-blowers. I think that that's something that we can be really proud of, that we're supportive of an open and transparent system here.

I think it's also important to note that a lot of the changes going on are harmonizing us with the rest of the country and, indeed, other parts of the world as well. That's really important because it allows investors in Alberta to have confidence that we are working with our partners across the country, and it's important that we can minimize risks and uncertainty for investors. Really, all of these things together lead to a regulatory regime that says: Alberta is stable; Alberta is open for business.

We're also making some changes to protect investors' rights, things like privacy. We speak about Alberta Securities Commission members and their staff. They previously could have been called to reveal confidential third-party information through their job. We're protecting that information now. We're making sure that it can't leak through some sort of third-party discovery process. I think that all of these changes together, when we look at them – yes, sometimes it can seem like there are a lot of small things going on, but when we put them together, it's very clear that this bill is there to ensure that we have a stable system that consumers and investors can both rely on.

I'm happy to support this bill, and I'm happy to encourage all members to vote in favour of it. That's all I have for today. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, would the hon. minister like to close debate?

Mr. Ceci: Close.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, would you have a motion?

Mr. Mason: That we continue to meet until 9 o'clock tonight. No. No.

Madam Speaker, I am almost speechless but not quite about the rate of progress that we've made this afternoon and this week. I would like to thank all members of the House.

I move that we adjourn until 1:30 on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:16 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, November 1, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 5, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. As today marks the beginning of Veterans' Week, may we take a moment to consider the remarkable service, women and men who so unselfishly protect our nation. Also, let us listen to the voices from the past about the pain of war, lest we forget.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature quite a number of the Alberta Education interchange teachers. This is a group of school administrators and teachers from across the province who are supporting Alberta Education to develop and implement curriculum. During their two-year interchange with the ministry they gain knowledge of new curriculum, where it will take us back, and then how we will implement it in the classrooms across the province. It's a very valuable program. It allows us to keep our rubber hitting the road and to make sure that we're building what's very best for our children in education. I'd like to ask them to stand now, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 34 students from Kim Hung school today. I was proud to have been there to open their school last year, when they had great dragon dances and line dances. That's how I know that they're in the greatest constituency in the entire province. The students today are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Jeff Webster, along with their chaperones, Ryan Crackston and Kim Brix. If they'd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today, the Loyal Edmonton Regiment and the Armistice 100

Committee. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly distinguished guests from the Loyal Edmonton Regiment. When the First World War broke out, in August 1914, the 101st Regiment, Edmonton Fusiliers, was charged with recruiting and forming several battalions for the Canadian Expeditionary Force. The 49th Battalion, now known as the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, was the only battalion that was to remain a fighting unit. As we mark 100 years since the end of World War I, our thoughts go to remember 977 soldiers from all ranks and 2,282 soldiers wounded from the Loyal Edmonton Regiment. This afternoon it was my great honour to receive an honour roll from the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, presented to the Alberta Legislature. I would ask that our distinguished guests from the Loyal Edmonton Regiment stand as I call their names: Captain Rick Dumas, adjutant, Loyal Edmonton Regiment, 4 PPCLI, Jefferson Armoury; Honorary Colonel John Stanton, Loyal Edmonton Regiment; Chief Warrant Officer Jay Reinelt, regimental sergeant major; and Colonel, retired, Don Miller. I would now ask the Assembly to extend the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, and thank you.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Oh, another introduction. I'm sorry.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For my second introduction I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group dedicated to preserving and celebrating the memory of the 100th anniversary of the end of World War I, the Armistice 100 Committee. Please join me in thanking this committee for sharing their time and talent to mark this significant anniversary in such a meaningful way. Please stand as I say your name: Carolyn Patton, chair; Lieutenant-Colonel Mark Beare, chief of staff, 3rd Canadian Division Support Group; Captain Rick Dumas, adjutant, Loyal Edmonton Regiment, 4 PPCLI, Jefferson Armoury; Dave Ridley, executive director, Edmonton Heritage Council; Deborah Brandell, volunteer co-ordinator; Tanya Camp, technical support; Jill Wright, military liaison support; and last but certainly not least, our Sergeant-at-Arms, Lieutenant-Colonel, retired, Brian Hodgson. I would now ask that all members of the Assembly extend the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Now the Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you some very special guests who are seated in your gallery. It's my pleasure to introduce three St. Albert firefighters who are also trained as primary and advanced care paramedics. I would ask that they stand as I say their names: Jay Howells, Derek Ellicott, and Kyle Nobles. Please join me in extending these Albertans the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you a friend of mine and a constituent, Josephine Pon. Josephine was a banker for 25 years. Currently she's the vice-president for a chain of five restaurants in Alberta. She was a three-time board chair for Immigrant Services Calgary, a group that has helped over 200,000 new Canadians settle in Calgary. For 10 years she was the chair of the immigrants of distinction award. Josephine sought the UCP nomination in Calgary-Bedlington and lost by just nine votes. She handled this tough loss with much grace, and I feel so fortunate that she has volunteered to help me on my next campaign as she did on our leader's leadership campaign. I would ask all of you to extend the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly to my friend Josephine.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions this afternoon. My first introduction is of two champions for central Alberta and Red Deer College in particular. Joel Ward is Red Deer College's president, and Brenda Munro is their dean of the school of continuing education. Our government was pleased to announce that Red Deer College is on the path toward university status, and I've been proud to celebrate with them as they begin to offer their own degrees. I want to thank Mr. Ward and Ms Munro for their tireless advocacy – I can personally attest to how tirelessly they have advocated for this; I'm glad they don't have my personal phone number – and I invite them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Schmidt: For my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce Dr. Melanie Peacock. Dr. Peacock is the president of the Mount Royal Faculty Association, which represents approximately 800 faculty at that university. Dr. Peacock's work and academic background are in human resource management, and her fourth textbook regarding this subject matter is about to be published. Dr. Peacock's doctoral research focused on adult education and the importance of interpersonal relationship development in postsecondary settings. As well, Dr. Peacock is a sought-after media contributor at the municipal, provincial, and national levels. I ask that Dr. Peacock please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great friend of mine, Perri Garvin. Perri has been the co-ordinator of labour programs for the United Way of the Alberta Capital Region for the past 18 years. His role is unique in educating union members about community resources and how they can help their members access them. His involvement in domestic violence and mental health issues has contributed to a better understanding of unions working with their members. I must say that there is some truth to the allegations that Mr. Garvin 26 years ago might have had something to do with shaping my path and where I've ended up today. I'd ask now that Perri please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two dear friends of mine and of many people in this Chamber, from the great city of Lethbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Zielke, who are two of the most compassionate, nicest people that you could ever meet. Mrs. Zielke is the only . . .

Mr. Kenney: Dr. Zielke.

Mr. Nixon: Dr. Zielke, I should say. Thank you.

. . . cardiologist in the city of Lethbridge, fighting every day to save many Albertans' lives. Recently many of us got to visit them in their home, and they introduced us to cardiologist-friendly pizza, Mr. Speaker. If you're curious as to the recipe, make sure to give me a call. I ask them both to stand up – they won't let us eat bacon, though; it's another issue – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you members of my staff at Municipal Affairs. Specifically, these folks are responsible for much of the work done on An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, which I will introduce in a few minutes. I know this has been a tremendous effort by this very capable team, and I want to commend them for the work they have done. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they rise as I call their names: Cathy Maniego, LaRae Ellis, Angela Markel, Laura Klassen Bullock, Marie Overell, and Alexander Witt. I want us to please give them the warm welcome of the Chamber and thank them for all of their hard work.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests to introduce today? The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this House the community advocates project team. This is an incredible team of advocates who build awareness about family violence and effect positive change. I'm pleased to introduce Johanna Baynton Smith, Chris McCaw, Amanda Fletcher, and Mary Turner. With them are Heather Morrison and Michelle Holubisky from the city of Edmonton. I want to commend this group for the work they do, and I ask them to rise – they already have – and ask the House to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

St. Albert Emergency Service Providers

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Jay Howells is a St. Albert firefighter and paramedic. People in St. Albert and across Alberta may know Jay as the firefighter who delivered two babies this past spring within a two-week period. Jay also assisted in the home birth of one of his three children. I had the opportunity to spend time with Jay Howells and the other firefighters during a ride-along this past summer. This was my second ride-along, and I was once again able to see the remarkable skill, professionalism, compassion, and camaraderie of the St. Albert firefighters, who are also trained as primary- and advanced-care paramedics. And, yes, the rumours are true; they are very skilled in the kitchen.

St. Albert residents also know Jay Howells as part of a team of four firefighters who took to the roof of station 2 fire hall last winter to raise funds for Muscular Dystrophy Canada. This small but mighty team pulled in approximately $75,000 during last year's four-day and -night winter fundraising campaign. Muscular Dystrophy Canada is supported by 800 fire departments and associations across Canada. Their mission is to enhance the lives of those diagnosed with the neuromuscular disorder by providing resources for mobility, seating and breathing aids, access to equipment, and vital research.

A few months ago MD Canada named Jay Howells as the 2018 provincial firefighter of the year. Naturally, Jay always says that he wishes all of his team's names were on the award, so I will share them with you in this Chamber: Derek Ellicott, Kyle Nobles, and Lee Monfette, who couldn't be here today because he and his wife just had a child this weekend.

I feel comfortable saying that all St. Albertans are grateful for our amazing firefighters and paramedics, who are always there when we need them the most. They are part of the fabric of our community, and we rely on them daily. Their jobs are incredibly demanding and require skills and courage I cannot even describe. So for all of this and more, I thank the St. Albert fire department and EMS for all that they do.

Thank you.

Anti-Semitism

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, Richard Gottfried, my name almost to a T, was mentioned in this Assembly and at a synagogue vigil as a victim of the anti-Semitic attack in Pittsburgh. I would be lying if I said that this was anything but unnerving.

I was raised as a good Presbyterian, my Jewish heritage but half of my DNA. But in Hitler's Germany that would have destined me for work camps and ultimately the gas chamber. In the fall of 2016 I learned that the fate of over 68,000 Polish Jews from Lodz, the birthplace of my father, was eventual liquidation. Among those families were all of the relatives I will never know. Shockingly, perhaps miraculously, just 877 Jews survived in that city at liberation, with lives, bloodlines, stories, and history lost forever to anti-Semitism, racism, in one of its historically heinous extremes.

Mr. Speaker, can we live in a complacent world in today's society? Elie Wiesel once said, "The opposite of love is not hate, it's indifference." Can we afford to be indifferent in the face of discrimination and hatred? Last night I spoke at a screening of the documentary Above the Drowning Sea at the Beth Tzedec synagogue. Ho Feng-Shan, the Chinese consul general in Vienna at the time and known as the Chinese Schindler, single-handedly saved over 20,000 European Jews – this at a time when Canada said that none was too many – 20,000 lives saved, embraced by the Chinese people in what became the Shanghai ghetto, rescuing them from the plight of 6 million members of their faith. My personal bridge to China began when Shanghai became a safe haven for my father, a Polish Jew, over 100 years ago. That quite literally saved the only surviving bloodlines of my family.

We must all be vigilant, and we must be strong and principled and fiercely defend against any resurgence of anti-Semitism, racism, and hatred in all its forms across Alberta and around the world. We must all do our part, each and every day, in not being complacent or indifferent to words or acts of hatred in our midst. Mr. Speaker, let's ensure that "never again" is more than just a phrase of conscientious reflection.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

School Construction in South Calgary

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to update the House about the steps my constituents, myself, and our government are taking to make life better for students in south Calgary schools. Last year we opened Ron Southern elementary school and Holy Child school in Silverado to help service the growing southwest communities. Both cases included the funding for two new playgrounds.

We followed through with two new high schools in south Calgary that opened in September. Because of these openings, we've seen a drop of 100 students at Centennial high school this year, and we see a forecast reduction of 200 students over the next couple of years, greatly reducing classroom pressures. The parent council there hosted a dialogue with the minister that brought parents from all over Calgary, who shared feedback about curriculum review and life in south Calgary. The opening of All Saints high school in Legacy means that Bishop O'Byrne is down to levels of students that the school was built for, reducing the count by over 200 students this year alone.

Two new playgrounds opened in my riding, including at Midnapore school, and with amazing work from the parent council at Samuel Shaw middle school this spring, we cut the ribbon for their new playground, both supported by government CFEP grants. Now we've set our sights on a new pilot project, with the leadership from the parent council at St. Teresa of Calcutta school, that hopefully will see a build of a new playground.

I will continue to seek further supports for expansion of schools in south Calgary. Currently there are no K to 9 schools in Legacy and Walden, and that needs to change. However, I'm concerned that with the UCP forecasting 20 per cent cuts for their budget, those cuts will come at the cost of students in south Calgary and those new schools.

I ran in the last election because of the lack of schools in Calgary, and I have worked hard with the minister to follow through on almost over a dozen builds in south Calgary, which has had a positive impact on all of the communities in that area. Now and in 2019 I will run to ensure and preserve and build on the great work that our Premier and our government have done for these students.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Unemployment

Mr. Kenney: Thank you very much. Last week new unemployment stats confirmed a six-month-long trend, six months of higher unemployment in Alberta, 2,700 more jobs lost last month. Mr. Speaker, 184,000 Albertans are looking for work. Is the NDP government proud of this record of growing unemployment, and what is its message to the 184,000 unemployed Albertans looking for work?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that very important question. Of course, our government has been very, very focused on the need to create jobs in Alberta and to have the backs of Albertans as we come out of this most recent oil-price-induced recession. Now, the member knows that, yes, there were some jobs lost last month. We're aware of that, and we think about those people each and every day in the work that we do. He also knows, however, that in August there were 16,000 jobs created and that from month to month the numbers bounce around. Year over year we've created over 90,000 jobs and ...

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, in May of this year the unemployment rate was 6.2 per cent. Now it is 7.3 per cent. The NDP seems to think that that's going in the right direction. Most Albertans believe that more unemployment is going in the wrong direction. In fact, Professor Tombe at the University of Calgary says that if we had the same labour force participation rate that existed in Alberta before the NDP came to office, the current unemployment rate would actually be 8.1 per cent. Does the government actually think that its economic policy of higher taxes, job-killing regulations, and more debt is working for these unemployed Albertans?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we know that there is more work to be done as we continue to focus on creating jobs. We also know that we actually have more Albertans employed in this province than we did before. The reason the unemployment rate is coming down is because more people are coming to Alberta looking for jobs, including people from Saskatchewan, who are not benefiting from the kinds of programs that the member opposite suggests that we adopt. What we decided to do was have Albertans' backs and to invest in growth. That's exactly what we're doing. What we won't do is cut 4,000 teachers or 4,000 nurses.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier just said that the unemployment rate is going down. That is exactly the opposite of the truth. I won't use the unparliamentary language to describe that. I'll just refer to the StatsCan statistics. In May unemployment was 6.2 per cent. It's gone up every month for six months now to 7.3 per cent. In fact, there are 45,000 more jobless Albertans today than when the NDP took office in 2015. Is their recipe more of the same: more high taxes, more high debt, more job-killing red tape?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, in fact, I did misspeak. What I meant to say was that the employment is up. More people are working than they were before, and the difference is that more people are coming in who are looking for work, people from places like Saskatchewan.

We know there's more work to do, Mr. Speaker. We know that as a result of the drop in oil prices in 2016, we hit bottom. It was hard, and it was hard for many, many Albertans. That's why we have invested in Alberta. We have had Albertans' backs. We are working on creating more jobs, 90,000 since last year. We know there's more to be done, but what won't help is cutting jobs for nurses and teachers and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The hon. member.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier corrected herself to say that unemployment isn't going down but that the employment rate is going up. On that, she's wrong again. In fact, the employment rate before the NDP came to office in April 2015 was 69.2 per cent, and last month it was 67 per cent. A smaller percentage of Albertans are actually employed. She clearly doesn't understand the statistics nor the lived reality of Albertans who are struggling to find work. The question is: does the government expect to deliver more of the same – higher taxes, higher debt, and more red tape – to address this jobless crisis?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. What I said, to be clear, was that employment is up. The number of jobs in Alberta is up. What we will not do is cut. We will not give a $700 million tax break so that we can support the 1 per cent. We will not roll back spending to 2015 levels, throwing 4,000 teachers out of work, throwing 4,000 nurses out of work. We will not do what the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills wants us to do, which is: make it hurt. I didn't get into politics for that; nobody on this side of the House did either.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Halloween was last week, so the fear campaign can end. None of that is the policy of the United Conservative Party, but let me talk about the record of the NDP. There are 42,000 young Albertans who are out of work, and this is shocking. The youth employment rate the month before the NDP took office was 62.3 per cent. It's now down to 55.7 per cent, still, three and a half years later, a dramatic decline in youth employment in Alberta. Is the NDP's response yet higher taxes?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we will not do is make it hurt for Albertans, which the member opposite's MLA for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills said in a moment of transparency. That is not our plan going forward. The member opposite is playing around with numbers. He knows full well that the price of oil dropped $30, $40 after we got elected. He knows full well that we were handed an economy that was not ready to deal with that. We have been working with Albertans, investing in Albertans ever since. The dial is moving. We know there's more work to do, and we will be standing there fighting for Albertans every step of the way.

Mr. Kenney: Well, it didn't take long for the Premier to blame oil prices. Isn't that curious, though, Mr. Speaker? In the U.S. states that see a dynamic, growing oil and gas sector, states like North Dakota and Colorado and Texas, the unemployment rate is 3 per cent on average versus over 7 per cent in Alberta, the highest unemployment outside of Atlantic Canada, Calgary with the highest unemployment of any major city in Canada. Does the Premier plan to make that bad situation even worse by continuing to raise taxes on Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, first of all, the member opposite knows that there is about an $8 billion a year tax advantage for people in Alberta. We still have the lowest taxes in the country. Moreover, since the summer of 2017 our economy has created 90,000 jobs, so we are on the right track. The member opposite doesn't want to acknowledge those things. However, we're going to continue fighting for Albertans. We're going to continue investing in their schools, continue investing in their hospitals, having their backs so that everybody comes out of this recession together.

The Speaker: I think we're at the third main question.

Mr. Kenney: For the record the Premier is telling us that in the sixth straight month of growing unemployment, of more people on the jobless lines, this isn't going in the right direction. She told the Edmonton Journal recently that you can, in quotes, expect more of the same. That's what concerns Albertans. When she talks about employment growth, it's overwhelmingly, Mr. Speaker, being paid for by deficit financing: 55,000 jobs in the state sector but 29,000 fewer jobs in the private sector. Is the government's plan to create jobs in the private sector based on yet higher taxes and yet more red tape?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what is not our plan is to fire 4,000 teachers and fire 4,000 nurses so that we can give a $700 million tax break to the richest 1 per cent of Albertans. I understand who the members opposite support, but we are on the side of all Albertans, and we are going to fight for all Albertans. We're going to make sure that they all enjoy the recovery, not just their friends and their donors in the top 1 per cent.

Mr. Kenney: What recovery? Mr. Speaker, 7.3 per cent unemployment, unemployment up for six months, 184,000 jobless Albertans? This is the problem. Those people are listening to their Premier say that happy times are here again, this great recovery where unemployment is going up. I've never seen a recovery like that before. What is the government's plan apart from more of the same, which from the NDP means higher taxes, more red tape, and more debt? What is their actual plan?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we're not going to do is what their friends over in Saskatchewan next door did, and because of that our province is leading the country in economic growth. We led last year. We're leading this year. We're leading next year. There are 2.3 million people working in this province, the highest number of people working in this province's history. Average weekly earnings are, again, higher than they were before the last election. That being said, I'll be the first to admit that we have more work to do to make sure that every Albertan feels this recovery, and that is what we are committed to making sure happens.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, one of the most tragic aspects of the NDP's economic disaster is the long-term unemployed. Alberta used to have the shortest average duration of unemployment. People might lose a job, but they'd quickly find a new one. Now for the last couple of years we've had the longest duration of unemployment, reaching as long as 23 weeks in this province. You know what that does to people's self-confidence? Their skills atrophy. Often it leads to mental health challenges. What is the Premier's message to those long-term unemployed who feel like they can no longer get a fair chance in NDP Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, our message is that we understand how challenging it is for them and their families, and that is why our government has made the choice to have their back from day one. We were not going to throw them out of work. We were not going to cut the services that they and their families rely on. We were not going to pull back on police services and municipal services and all those things that communities need. We were going to have their back, and we were going to invest in growth. As I said, we know that there's more work to do, but we are committed to doing it because we are committed to making sure that all Albertans ultimately feel the effects of the recovery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Alberta Works

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every constituent who's called my office about Alberta Works has mentioned ill treatment, disrespect, and bullying. Constituents have described how caseworkers make them feel like garbage, dirt, not even human, like it's all their fault. Three constituents recently said that they fear giving their names to anyone offering them support with this because they're afraid of investigation and retribution by Alberta Works. To the minister of human services: what policies prevent intimidation of vulnerable clients from bullying by Alberta Works?

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. All Albertans, when they walk into an Alberta Works office, can expect that they will be treated with the utmost respect, and these allegations are very concerning. I would want the member to forward those details, and I commit to following up on these concerns. All allegations of such nature are looked into with due seriousness.

Ms McPherson: One constituent was left out of work because she faced multiple surgeries, and she can't pay her bills. She only receives $700 a month to live on. Her phone is being cut off. She's had to go without heat, and it's wintertime. Alberta Works has demanded several audits of her personal bank account and told her to take budgeting classes at the Kerby Centre. Can the minister please share the budgeting tips that would make it easier for her to live on $700 a month?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have heard from Albertans that these rates were kept low even when oil was trading at $90. What we have done instead of making that situation worse is that we have maintained stable funding to that. I have heard from Albertans about these rates, and we are absolutely committed to making sure that we improve these programs so that Albertans can live with respect and dignity.

Ms McPherson: Another constituent was laid off from the oil industry recently. On Alberta Works' advice and request she provided details of employment retraining, an itemized list of training costs, and proof of an offer for work after she completes her training. Her caseworker denied funding without reason, refused to take her calls, and made a snide comment that truck drivers aren't needed. My constituent's additional requests for information went unanswered; they still are. How many complaints has the government heard from Albertans about Alberta Works' hostility and disrespect for those trying to get back on their feet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, all such concerns are looked into seriously. I would ask the member to share those concerns with my MLA contact, and we will follow up on all these concerns to make sure that Albertans are getting services with respect and dignity.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Rural Crime Strategy

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March the Minister of Justice and the RCMP commissioner announced a $10 million, seven-point rural crime reduction plan. Can the Minister of Justice give us an update on that plan and tell us if it is working?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the incredibly important question. Rural crime is an issue that's been on the minds of Albertans, and it's an issue that's been on the minds of our government as well. It was not quite a year ago that we announced our rural crime strategy, which included investing in front-line services and investing in Crown prosecutors. The RCMP has now reported a decrease in property crime in rural Alberta by almost 11 per cent in the first half of the year. We know this hasn't extended to everyone yet, but we are starting to see the effects, and we're very proud of that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how does this plan keep police in the community instead of behind a desk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, we know that one of the concerns that rural Albertans have is that they like to see police officers out on the streets safeguarding the community rather than sitting behind a desk. That's why our rural crimes reduction plan includes funding for civilians who will input basic investigative things into computers, and that allows those officers to be back out on the street. Comparing July 2018 to 2017, there have been 366 fewer break and enters, 648 fewer vehicle thefts, and 2,358 fewer vehicle thefts across the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Is the minister working with the new RCMP commissioner on continuing to implement the rural crime reduction plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll start by correcting my last answer. It was 2,358 fewer thefts, not vehicle thefts specifically.

Mr. Speaker, I've had a great relationship with our previous commissioner, and I thank him for all his work on this strategy. Our new RCMP deputy commissioner, Curtis Zablocki, comes to us from Saskatchewan, where he shared our focus on this sort of proactive policing. In fact, my early conversations with him indicate that he is very supportive of this strategy, and we will keep moving forward on this issue together. [interjection]

Government Caucus Voting Practices

Mr. Fildebrandt: Gesundheit, Mr. Speaker.

Today the hon. Member for Calgary-East showed incredible courage and conviction when she stated that under this Premier's leadership, quote: every power that MLAs are supposed to have to represent their constituents in the Legislature has been taken away and denied from the start; MLAs must vote the direction of the leader at all times. End quote. Madam Premier, is what your Member for Calgary-East has to say about your leadership and government true or not?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I can say – and I know that the Premier believes this – that we are incredibly proud of our hard-working and very representative caucus. Very proud. Beyond that, the member knows that he can ask questions about ministerial responsibility, about government policy, but it is not in order for him to be asking about party or caucus matters, and therefore I respectfully decline to answer that question.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, the minister respectfully declines to answer every question not written by themselves for their own backbenchers.

To enforce party discipline, the Member for Calgary-East goes on to say, quote: there is also a fear that they'll be isolated and that their political career will be finished and that their nomination papers will not be signed or opportunities given. End quote. I would say to both the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition together: sound familiar?

Mr. Mason: The Premier and I and all members of the government share a deep appreciation for our wonderful, hard-working caucus. The tremendous range of skills, backgrounds, and ideas that come from that caucus is an inspiration to this government every day, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: When the Tory caucus was whipped into abstaining over a dozen times over the Bill 9 attack on free speech, the Premier rightfully condemned the Tory leadership for whipping their MLAs into silence. We now know beyond a shadow of a doubt that the Premier does the same to her own MLAs. Meet the new boss, same as the old boss. Will the Premier admit that when it comes to democracy and free votes in this House, her party is no better than the government that it replaced?

Mr. Mason: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker. This government is very much committed to the principles of democracy and openness. We have opened up services and policy-making to people that the previous government ignored for decades. We are bringing in people that were shut out of government, shut out of policy, and ignored by the previous government. That's one of the shining accomplishments of this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Victims of Crime Fund

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in February of 2016 the Auditor General identified concerns with the victims of crime fund, which had tens of millions of dollars in a surplus that was not making its way to victims. Since then multiple opposition members have asked multiple times about the money in this fund. For years we have been asking about it in this Assembly, in committee, and in the media. The minister kept telling us to wait. Minister, why did you wait so long to make a decision to use those available funds to assist victims of crime?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the member correctly points out, the Auditor General had some recommendations on those files. Those recommendations stem from the fact that those folks over there ignored this file for more than a decade. Our government stepped up and did the work necessary to put these funds in place, and we're very proud of that.

Mrs. Pitt: Three and a half years, Mr. Speaker. Given that it took so long for this government to act and that the fund's accumulated surplus has continued to grow upwards of $70 million, given that the minister finally announced a plan for a mere $4.5 million of that surplus, and given that this is not money in general revenue – it comes from fines and levies – and is earmarked for victims:

Minister, why is this government still withholding from victims 90 per cent of the surplus?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I said in response to the last question, part of the concern was that the previous government, the folks over there, left this file to languish for over a decade. As a result, no work had been done around what sort of money needed to be in reserve for the fund in case money stopped coming in, which is always a consideration. We have done that work now. We've worked with the associations that represent victims. As a result, we have a plan to put in place, and we're very proud of that.

Mrs. Pitt: Ten per cent of the fund over three years, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the government only announced funding for Calgary, Edmonton, Red Deer, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and Wood Buffalo and given that there are invaluable victim support organizations all throughout Alberta – there are other places – including one in my constituency of Airdrie, and they're not included on that list and given that these guys are fundraising in the hopes of just keeping their doors open to support victims: Minister, why are you leaving out so many victim organizations across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to say that in addition to the fairly lengthy list that the member listed, this also goes to support survivors of domestic violence on specific new problems, aiding victims in court when they're testifying, helping to make sure that indigenous communities have access to the same supports, and creating opportunities for restorative justice. That's just some of the work we've been doing on the victims of crime fund. I'm very proud that we were able to move forward on this file.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to news reports Canada and Canadian households lead the world in debt, something that the Bank of Canada warned is a huge risk. Unfortunately, Albertans also lead the country in consumer debt. According to a poll conducted by MNP, 46 per cent of Albertans say that they are within just $200 of not being able to pay their bills should they lose a paycheque. With layoffs continuing and Albertans receiving only $20 a barrel for oil, why is your government focused on making it harder for Alberta workers and families with higher taxes, more bureaucracy, and more interest expense?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. I'd like to begin by pointing out the fact that Albertans pay the lowest taxes in the country. Albertans pay $11 billion less in taxes than the second-lowest tax jurisdiction, which is Saskatchewan, and that's because we have no payroll tax, no PST, no health care premiums. What I can tell you is that in our province we are focused on diversifying the economy and supporting businesses, and we're starting to see the benefits of our government's policies: over 90,000 new jobs created, mostly in the private sector, last year. Let's look at Saskatchewan. They created . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that Ron Kneebone, economist at the University of Calgary, has said, I quote, a fiscal crisis doesn't happen overnight; you need to build a foundation to get there, and a foundation is based on accumulating debt, and given that the NDP has turned a $12 billion debt into $50 billion and that this minister is racing toward $100 billion in debt and given that the department of debt servicing has become your fifth-largest department, putting all of our priorities at risk, why has your government failed to address increasing debt and skyrocketing interest?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, as I said many times in this House, we have a path back to balance. That'll be in 2023. We'll do that without firing thousands of teachers and nurses. You know what? What I won't take advice around from that side is debt. For instance, the Leader of the Opposition's record while he was in Ottawa was six straight deficit budgets, $56 billion in one year. He added $145 billion to the national debt, and there were $309 billion in interest payments when he was there. That made things far more difficult for all the people. He cut services, and other people suffered.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Given that the NDP in their most recent budget claimed revenue from the Trans Mountain pipeline, that now sits unbuilt, and given that the pipeline won't be operational until well past 2020, if it becomes operational at all, and given that the Finance minister made no mention of the impact of the stalled pipeline on his growing mountain of debt for this and subsequent years in his recent quarter 1 update, Minister, will you commit to releasing the updated numbers reflecting our loss of revenue tied to this Trans Mountain pipeline and do so by Thursday?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've cut the deficit by $3 billion already. Our path to balance relies on 2 out of 3 of those pipelines, but we're going to see all three pipelines built. We will get TMX, we will get line 3, and we will get KXL. We will balance in 2023.

PDD Program Review

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the government's persons with developmental disabilities review was announced last January, and I know that key stakeholders want to ensure that the voices of families are not just heard but actually have a seat at the table. Now, I'm not sure that's what the minister wants. The panel does include some great Albertans, all very accomplished in their own right, but virtually no representation from families around that table. To the minister: why have you limited the voice of families currently being affected by PDD services?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We are very proud of our government record for protecting and improving the services for persons with developmental disabilities, and we have put together a panel which represents families, service providers, and all those who have concerns, and nothing can be further from the truth that we have silenced families or advocates. There is representation. I can talk to the member afterwards about who is coming from where.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the panel, you'll see that the vast majority of them represent service providers and not families.

Given that those receiving PDD services speak about Nothing about Us without Us and that the vast majority of those on the panel aren't actually families, to the minister: why haven't more family members or stakeholders dedicated to families been invited to provide feedback outside of the surveys on the PDD website?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. What we have done is a panel which represents the PDD sector, and it's different than what it used to be in the past. They're putting an accounting firm to do the PDD review. They are going across the province in all seven regions to reach out to the families, to reach out to Albertans and all of those who are receiving these services to make sure that we live with that Nothing about Us without Us, and we are absolutely committed to having those voices included in our review.

Mr. Cooper: Well, given, Mr. Speaker, that one thing is the same with this PDD review, and that is that families are being left out from being around the table, and while many of these families are grateful for the wonderful work that service providers have offered and provided, we consistently hear from them that they are concerned that they aren't being included with the Nothing about Us without Us when the panel is clearly proceeding without the key voices of families around the review table daily. What does the minister have to say to these families who are raising this concern?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I was looking for a question. I'm glad you slipped it in right at the end.

Mr. Sabir: I think I will not agree with how the member has described it. The panel is going across this province. There is already a schedule out to consult with the families. When it comes to PDD, I will put my record against theirs any day. We have kicked off the PDD review, filled a vacant appointment for Premier's council, cancelled the support intensity scale brought forward by that side, repealed safety standards regulation, added $150 million, and we don't think, as the Member for Calgary-Hays would describe it, that these supports are giveaways to disabled people.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Sherwood Park.

Sherwood Park Freeway Speed Limits

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really a pleasure to ask a question that I wrote for myself on behalf of my constituents. Sherwood Park residents have asked me over the last few months the reason why the speed limits of the Sherwood Park Freeway have been changed. This road is a major connector to Edmonton. This topic is a hotly debated topic in letters to the editor, Facebook posts, Twitter, and calls to my office. To the Minister of Transportation: why were the speed limits changed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I must compliment the hon. member on her question today. Speed limits on provincial roads, including the Sherwood Park Freeway, are based on national and provincial standards. These standards take into account, among other things, the design of the road, traffic volumes, and the spacing between interchanges. Changes to speed limits occur frequently when additional lanes or interchanges or nearby roads are added to ensure safety. Speed limits are regularly reviewed by Alberta Transportation and will continue to be.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: my residents are also wondering why the speed limit was lowered near the Anthony Henday interchange.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that really solid follow-up. As the member is aware, a section of the Sherwood Park Freeway was expanded to include additional lanes as part of the northeast Anthony Henday Drive project and 17th Street on/off ramps and the Wye Road interchanges. As a result, a speed reduction to 70 kilometres an hour was required for safety reasons. [interjections]

Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really sorry that everybody is laughing about this because this is a very important issue. It's a safety issue, and I think some of the members might be surprised as to who has brought this issue to the forefront in my office. But I understand that there's a review under way of the speed limits. I'm wondering: when will the results of the review be released, and how will constituents be informed of potential changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, based on ongoing feedback from Albertans we are conducting another review of the speed limits on both directions of the Sherwood Park Freeway. This review is expected to be completed early next year, at which point they will be shared with the public. When the review is complete, the ministry will have a better sense of what, if any, changes may be warranted. Safety is always our top priority. I want to thank the hon. member for her ongoing advocacy on behalf of her constituents.

Grain Drying and the Carbon Levy

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Minister of Agriculture if the NDP had any plan at all to counteract the disastrous impact that their carbon tax has had on farmers working hard to dry their grain and save their crops this fall. First he said that it would be covered through AFSC, something farmers have told us offers no additional help to deal with this situation. Then the minister said that energy efficiency programs for farmers would be the magic solution. Could the minister please tell this House how farmers are expected to afford the massive capital costs of such upgrades while shouldering the immediate costs of drying their grain and carbon tax with the promise of slightly reducing costs for future years?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We had some good news recently. We had a very cold September with some snow, but we had some very warming temperatures in October. Mother Nature did her part in making sure that we get our crops in. Pleased to report that 95 per cent of those crops are in, so for all intents and purposes we are done harvest this year, which is good news. It is also true, though, that this is the third September in a row that we've had unusual, wet conditions, so from that we're looking at what efficiencies we could find for farmers in lowering their energy costs right across agriculture, wherever that may be.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Given that farmers have to pay their gas bills that contain the carbon tax now because they can't risk gas being shut off and given that a lot of bills come due during this time of the year, like fuel and other expenses, and given that costs and booking purchases are already being expended for next spring, how can this government expect farmers to pay this carbon tax now when it hurts the most?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Depending a lot on the commodity and on conditions, many, many, many different factors were taken into consideration of what the actual cost might be. On average, you know, to dry a bushel of crop, oil seeds or grain or cereal, would be about two cents a bushel. Yeah, that is an expense, but we recognize that there's also efficiencies to be found as we have introduced through the climate leadership plan money devoted to agriculture specifically, $81 million, that farmers are able to use to find those efficiencies, to lower their greenhouse gas emissions and actually become more profitable.

Mr. Loewen: Given that some farmers have told me that it costs 60 cents a bushel to dry their grain, I think the minister's numbers are way off, and given that the government lauds its energy upgrading and retrofit programs and given that these programs require farmers to come up with capital to initiate the programs and given that the financial impacts on farmers are occurring as we speak and given that even after upgrades farmers will still have to pay the carbon tax for the crime of drying their grain, why won't you just admit that the carbon tax on grain drying is an excessive burden and do something about the problem instead of talking around the issue and making excuses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I for one would never call farmers criminals. I think that was a very poor choice from the member. I know that farmers do some really good work in this province. We're proud of them, proud of the work they do, proud of the backbone that agriculture is in this province, and we're looking for finding those efficiencies. When I talk to farmers and ranchers, they want to find those efficiencies as well. As we know, we've had opportunity to work through Canadian agricultural partnership to find retrofitting and new dryers, to find those efficiencies. We'll find those efficiencies, lower the greenhouse gas emissions, and at the same time save them money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Rural Crime Prevention and Law Enforcement

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that in recent years crime has become a growing problem across all of Alberta. In a recently released analysis from MacLean's, the city of Cold Lake in my constituency was ranked number 6 in Canada in terms of increasing crime over five years. Can the Minister of Justice tell the people of Cold Lake and the surrounding areas what the government is doing to rectify this unacceptable problem?

Ms Ganley: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for an incredibly important question. Absolutely those statistics are of incredible concern to us, and those statistics are from 2017. That's why, on seeing those statistics, our government acted expeditiously to make sure we brought in a rural crime strategy. I wonder whether the members opposite, now seeing the statistics, regret voting against it.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This crime is a problem, and it's not just isolated to the city of Cold Lake. It is a fact that this is reflective of our entire province. Given that Alberta holds the top three spots for a five-year increase in crime, what further measures, in addition to those that have already taken place, does the minister plan to implement to effectively combat criminal activity in my constituency and the constituencies across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, these statistics being from 2017, they absolutely were a concern and are a concern for the government. That's why we acted expeditiously to bring in a rural crime strategy, unlike the members opposite, who wanted four more months to study the issue before making very similar recommendations. In addition, this government has stepped forward not only to fund our rural crime strategy but to fund additional RCMP officers. In both instances the members opposite voted against it.

Mr. Cyr: Given, Mr. Speaker, that too often we see criminals enter the justice system, get convicted, walk out without serving a full or adequate sentence and given that punishment and deterrence must be an integral part of our justice system and given that instead of getting tough on criminals, we see the NDP's allies in Ottawa proposing to reduce sentences for serious crimes, can the minister tell us specifically what actions she has taken to keep dangerous criminals off our streets in Alberta and in prisons, where they belong?

Ms Ganley: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think the most important thing, particularly in the post-Jordan era, is that we are working not only to find efficiencies in the criminal justice system in terms of getting police out from behind desks and ensuring that prosecutors are able to focus on the most serious and violent offences but we're also making sure that we fund that system not only in terms of police, that the members opposite voted against, but also in terms of prosecutors, in terms of judges, in terms of all of those things that make the system run better so that we can focus on protecting all Albertans.

Oil Production, Storage, and Transportation

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, to reduce the oil price differential there are several options, including devoting transportation by pipe, by rail, by road or putting the product in storage or restricting the production. The NDP government has failed Albertans on moving their oil to market. What other options is the Energy minister considering now and at what cost to the taxpayers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government focuses every day on pipelines, on the jobs that energy brings, and on diversifying our economy. We've worked very hard on a number of fronts for that, and the differential absolutely has highlighted the need for access to market.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that last week some CEOs came out asking for oil production allocations and production cuts and given that it is easier to adjust minable oil sands truck and shovel production than SAGD in situ production, was this the nature of the Premier's meeting two weeks ago with the CEOs? If so, what criteria will be used to allocate production quotas, and how many jobs will be lost?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we know that fighting for this sector matters. We're doing that every day with market access for not one but three pipelines. We are holding Ottawa's feet to the fire when we talk about getting the pipelines built. We're fighting Bill C-69 right now because as it is, it is not acceptable to Alberta and to our energy sector.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that last November the Minister of Energy was given the power under the Petroleum Marketing Act to commandeer tank farms and pipelines for the storage of bitumen, bitumen royalty in kind, BRIK barrels, and given my understanding that we are still receiving royalties in cash, not in kind, is the Minister of Energy considering displacing the oil storage of private companies to store the BRIK barrels due to the delays in completing the bitumen train at the Sturgeon refinery?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've had a number of meetings with a number of different folks talking about the importance of energy, market access, and the differential. We've had the crude by rail group. We've had a group talking about natural gas and markets for that. We always engage our industry, as we did in this matter, and we will continue to do so because it matters on this side of the House that we stand up for Alberta workers and for our energy industry.

The Speaker: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Bighorn Area Land Use

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January a copy of a government of Alberta e-mail about the North Saskatchewan regional plan provided a timeline with September as a date to – and I quote – establish the Bighorn wildland provincial park and final Bighorn park management plan. Is it the government's intention to proceed with turning the Bighorn into a park, and if so, when?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite is quoting from an internal options document. Clearly, September has passed, and that thing didn't happen, showing that it was an internal options document. In the spirit of Kananaskis Country we're looking at proposing a mix of land designations that will conserve and protect natural landscapes while accommodating a wide range of economic, recreation, and tourism opportunities in the Bighorn.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the NDP resolution E5 from the recent convention called upon the government to create a Bighorn park, purportedly because it supplies water to Edmonton. Given that the North Saskatchewan water quality at Devon upstream of Edmonton is good and only deteriorates until downstream of Edmonton itself, is it the government's plan to create a park based on this misconstrued logic?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Leave it to the members opposite to not care about the drinking water quality for Alberta's capital city. That's actually shocking to hear, but maybe not given the random promises for deregulation and other activities coming from the other side. Listen, we're looking at a number of different land designations. Bighorn has a number of different options and opportunities associated with it for economic development, for tourism, for economic diversification, and there are a number of different ways that we can achieve those goals and protect the environment.

Mr. Orr: The city of Edmonton has great water, and in fact it's only the NDP fearmongering about bad water.

The quadding community was assured that quad trails in the new Castle park would stay open, but actually many have not. Many areas were closed. Given that the government promised stakeholder engagement but then proceeds with its predetermined plan, on what grounds should Albertans trust what you say now about the Bighorn?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the folks opposite undertook a lot of consultation on the North Saskatchewan regional plan. They held 21 town halls to come up with advice on regional planning, which included unanimous support for increasing protection for parts of the Bighorn backcountry. As for the OHV folks, we provided $200,000 in grants to the Bighorn Heritage ATV Society for OHV trail development, promoting responsible recreation in the area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Domestic and Gender-based Violence Prevention

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Family violence and domestic abuse continues to devastate communities across Alberta, which is why it is so important that during this month of November, that has been designated as Family Violence Prevention Month, we build awareness and demonstrate support for survivors and look to municipalities like Fort Saskatchewan who invest in a family violence prevention officer that helps to support families, including women fleeing domestic abuse. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: what is the province doing to actively address this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Family violence prevention is a key priority for our government, and we believe that no Albertan should live in fear for their safety. We stand with survivors, and have made improvements through our $33 million investment in family and community safety programs and $15 million investment in women's shelters. We know that there is more work to be done, and we are committed to taking action.

Mrs. Littlewood: Mr. Speaker, given key work that organizations like United Way undertake to partner with community-driven groups like the Jessica Martel Memorial Foundation and Families First in Fort Saskatchewan to bring awareness and knowledge around domestic abuse, including the Cut It Out initiative, Minister, what work are you doing to address gender-based violence and to support survivors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. Our government stands with women who face violence and harassment. We have taken action to address gender-based violence and sexual violence. This includes removing the legal time limit for survivors to bring forward civil claims, making it easier for women to get out of a dangerous situation by allowing them to break their leases without penalty, and making an historic investment to combat sexual violence through sexual assault centres.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that rural and remote communities are often challenged with limited resources and isolation, that present unique challenges in providing family violence supports and service, what is your ministry doing, Minister, to support the critical work of these organizations in rural and urban Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We know that rural communities have unique needs, and we are committed to working with them. Our $25 million investment in the family and community support services program, FCSS, supports prevention efforts across this province, including rural communities. We have also invested, as I said, $8.1 million in 12 sexual assault centres across this province, and with that money they will be able to extend their services to 15 new communities in rural Alberta as well. Besides that, we have also invested $6 million in emergency supports.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Municipal Funding for Cannabis Legalization

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In an October 27 address to the AUMA the Premier said, and I quote: we are committed to putting the safety of people and families first in policing and public education and enforcement. She wanted to confirm that, quote, all these things affect you at the municipal level, and we heard your concerns loud and clear. To the Premier: if you heard the municipalities, why did you dash their hopes two days before marijuana became legal?

Mr. Ceci: Well, I think we're talking about the revenue that is coming in from cannabis. You know, our priority number one is to make sure with our partners, like municipalities, that it stays out of the hands of kids and we protect public health. We have provided $11.2 million over two years to municipalities to help with the enforcement costs that they have, and for the ones that are under $5,000, we're providing that enforcement cost, so the province of Alberta, of course, pays for those policing costs. Mr. Speaker, this is a two-year agreement, and we're going to be following . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the AUMA said that 5 and a half million dollars a year is far below the municipalities' needs, especially considering that their local bylaw services will pick up a large burden of enforcement costs. Given that the Premier told municipalities: we will be working together as partners; we would not have it any other way, unquote, to the Premier. Your government has put municipalities in a position of begging for funds. Is this truly how you define and how you would treat partners, by leaving them on the hook?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you to the member for the question. We do treat them as partners, and we do a lot of consultation with them. We do know that cannabis has come in federally, and Alberta is way further along than any other province or territory. I'm glad to work with people like the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance to help municipalities. We've said to them since day one that this isn't a cash cow, but we will look at the data coming in as it goes forward to make sure that we can adapt as it goes along. They know that. I think that when it got instituted, people were a little worried about things. We've seen that that hasn't come to fruition, but we will be there for our municipalities.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, given that the federal government provided tens of millions of dollars to provincial governments with the direction to share with the municipalities and given that the federal government is providing 75 per cent of the excise tax collected on cannabis, so it's shared with the municipalities, to the Minister of Finance: why are you letting the municipalities down? Why are you letting Ottawa down? It is because you are the only one that I know in the free world or any world that can actually lose money selling cannabis.

Mr. Ceci: You know, there has to be a program set up to sell that cannabis, Mr. Speaker. It wasn't here before. They didn't have that responsibility. We've set up warehouses, we've set up an online system, we've set up contact with retailers and contact with licensed producers. This is a two-year funding agreement with the provinces and territories and the federal government, and we will review after two years.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will continue with Members' Statements in 30 seconds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Economic Recovery and Northeastern Alberta

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When we proudly use the term "Canada's oil production," it's important that we acknowledge the players that make up that production and their contribution to our economy. I'd like to give an update on my region in northeastern Alberta.

The Cold Lake, Bonnyville, and Elk Point oil sands produce 730,000 barrels per day, making up 22 per cent of Canada's oil sands production. That is also approximately 15.5 per cent of Canada's total oil production. My area is a major player in oil and natural gas and deserves to be recognized for its ongoing contribution. I am proud that we are part of what has made Alberta so prosperous for so many years.

However, Mr. Speaker, the recovery that the NDP has been boasting has yet to be seen in northeastern Alberta. As I drove to Bonnyville to visit my granddaughter, I counted eight previously thriving businesses that have closed their doors and are sitting empty, and that is just along the highway 28 corridor entering into Bonnyville. Each and every one of those business owners is wondering where the recovery is. Those workers who have managed to keep employment through this shutdown continue to see a 20 to 30 per cent drop in the value of the largest investment, their homes. They would also like to take a peek at this recovery that the Premier brags about.

Mr. Speaker, it's simply not enough to put the words on paper and accept them at face value. You have to leave the dome and get out and actually talk to the employers, the workers, the unemployed, and the failing businesses. From Fort McMurray to Lac La Biche to Bonnyville, Albertans from across the northeast part of our province are still waiting to get their piece of their recovery as businesses continue to close and job creators and investors flee to more inviting jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, how can the NDP possibly keep telling the 184,000 unemployed Albertans that we are in recovery?

Homelessness

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, there is a challenge in our province that I feel doesn't get enough attention in this Assembly, and that is homelessness. Now, several of my colleagues have spoken about the homeless count in the big cities and about the various organizations that offer services in those urban areas, but we know that this is not the full story.

In 2015 the St. Albert food bank estimated that there were 98 known homeless people in the city, up from just 35 in 2011. These numbers are likely too low as most of the local homeless population are couch surfing or sleeping in cars. Many are young, and many more would not identify themselves as homeless; therefore, they don't reach out for help or access services.

Numbers don't yet exist for Spruce Grove, but a number of organizations throughout the region, including my office, have been working to come to an estimate based on who accesses the various services available. The hope is to then develop a more co-ordinated plan identifying gaps in services and advocacy priorities to all levels of government.

Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of reasons someone might end up homeless. For some it's addictions or mental health. For many young people it is a result of an unsafe home. Regardless of the reason, openness, honesty, and understanding are the best tools for getting people back on their feet and can often prevent homelessness before it even begins.

I am proud to be part of a government that is taking real action. We are investing $191 million in the front-line services that vulnerable Albertans count on. We introduced the Alberta child benefit, which will provide $175 million in benefits to families right across Alberta this year alone. Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, a rural member of this House acknowledges that the opposition wants to make massive cuts, cuts that are going to hurt.

We will continue to take action to combat homelessness and poverty and to fight for Albertans. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Heart and Mind of Alberta

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, on Saturday we said goodbye to Mary Elaine Vandavelde, my cousin's daughter. She died at the far too young age of 42. Mary was born with spina bifida. Mary didn't take her first step until five; however, once she did get going, with braces on her legs and arm crutches clasped in her hands, she achieved speeds that belied her condition. Mary had a smile that could brighten any room. She exuded a zest for life that was contagious for all who were privileged to be in her presence. She will be missed.

But Mary's life sheds light on another success story, the story of Alberta's wraparound support services that helped Mary live a fulfilling life. Mary was able to receive some of the best health care around. She was able to receive some of the most compassionate care from support workers. This was what I call the heart of our society.

The heart of Alberta is made up of the dedicated teacher that stays up late into the night trying to figure out a way to reach a student whose grades are dropping for no apparent reason. The heart of Alberta is made up of firefighters who willingly run into burning buildings while others are running out. The heart of Alberta is made up of the tens of thousands of other support workers that work night and day to champion the compassionate side of our society. Mr. Speaker, that is the heart of our society.

But with any living organism, a mind is also needed. I see the mind as a strong, robust economy. Without that strong, robust economy our support workers would not have the funds needed to do this important work. Our province is a great province to live in when both the heart and the mind are working in tandem. We have seen in Ontario how when the economy is neglected, the heart is not able to do its all-important work.

Mr. Speaker, in the spring of 2019 Albertans will have the opportunity to choose between a plan that balances our society's heart and mind or a plan that continues to neglect and hinder our society's economy. I believe Albertans will make a healthy choice.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Bill 23

An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Merci, M. le Président. I'm honoured to rise and give first reading of Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta.

The first bill that this government ever tendered was An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. Then in 2016 my colleague the hon. minister responsible for democratic renewal introduced the Fair Elections Financing Act. Both of these acts legislated getting big money out of elections and ensured that Albertans are the ones who decide who gets elected, not those with deep pockets.

Now it's time that we come full circle on election reform by bringing some of these changes to the municipal level. After consulting over the summer with Albertans, we have taken their feedback and are proposing these updates to get big money out of local elections, make it easier for Albertans to vote, and create a more transparent election process. If passed, this bill will ensure that all Albertans have a fair, democratic, and modern electoral system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had referenced an article in my question period questions today, Canada's Most Dangerous Places 2019. Alberta has made that list 7 of 10 times. Here at the front: Wetaskiwin, Red Deer, Lethbridge, Cold Lake, Whitecourt, Spruce Grove, and Sylvan Lake. We monopolize the top of this list. It's shameful. I table this.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member For Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two documents that I was remiss in tabling last Thursday. The first one is a CTV News Calgary article, Study Finds Alberta's Employment Growth Numbers Buoyed by Government Hirings.

Secondly, I rise to table five copies of a Fraser research bulletin from the Fraser Institute, The Illusion of Alberta's Jobs Recovery: Government vs. Private Sector Employment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, last week I referenced a researcher, engineer, environmental scientist in Calgary at the University of Calgary, Dr. David Layzell, who's proposed an innovative approach to the challenges of melding climate change, energy, and environment. He set up an institution there called the transition pathways research institute. He is suggesting that we broaden the discussion to include collaboration in understanding a range of systems that all have to change if we're going to meet the first requirements of a new and low-carbon future. I have five copies here of his proposal, and I hope people will take a chance to breeze through it. It's not a heavy document, but it really gives us a new perspective on how we might work together in moving towards a lower carbon future.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the Hon. Minister Hoffman, Deputy Premier, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Professions Act Alberta College and Association of Opticians 2017 annual report, Alberta College of Combined Laboratory and X-Ray Technologists 2017 annual report, Alberta College of Occupational Therapists 2017-18 annual report, Alberta College of Optometrists 2017 annual report to government, Alberta College of Social Workers annual report 2017, College of Alberta Dental Assistants annual report 2017-18, College of Alberta Psychologists annual report 2017-18, College of Hearing Aid Practitioners of Alberta annual report 2017-18, College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta 2017 annual report, College of Registered Dental Hygienists of Alberta 2017 annual report, College of Registered Psychiatric Nurses of Alberta annual report 2018; pursuant to the Health Disciplines Act Health Disciplines Board 2017 annual report.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Acting Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Coal Phase-out Costs

- Q1. Mr. Panda:
How much money has been spent by the government from April 1, 2015, to March 31, 2018, on the phase-out of coal-generated electrical power in Alberta, and what costs are forecast for the next 10 years?

Electricity Capacity Market Costs

- Q2. Mr. Panda:
How much money has been spent by the government from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018, setting up the electricity capacity market, and what costs are forecast for the next 10 years?

Electricity Litigation Costs

- Q3. Mr. Panda:
How much money has been spent from May 1, 2015, to May 4, 2018, reaching settlements arising from the litigation concerning the power purchase agreements with the electricity generating companies and the Balancing Pool?

Motions for Returns

[The Acting Clerk read the following motions for returns, which had been accepted]

Rockefeller Brothers Fund Correspondence

- M1. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the Rockefeller Brothers Fund from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

Tides Canada Correspondence

- M2. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and Tides Canada from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

Tides Foundation Correspondence

- M3. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the Tides Foundation, also known as Tides, from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

350 Correspondence

- M4. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the organization known as 350 or 350.org from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

CorpEthics Correspondence

- M5. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and CorpEthics, originally known as Corporate Ethics International, from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

William and Flora Hewlett Foundation Correspondence

- M6. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, also known as the Hewlett Foundation, from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

New Venture Fund Correspondence

- M7. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the New Venture Fund, also known as New Venture, from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

Yellowstone to Yukon Conservation Initiative Correspondence

- M8. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the Yellowstone to Yukon Conservation Initiative, also known as Y2Y, from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

3:00 Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society Correspondence

- M9. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, also known as CPAWS, from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

Love Your Headwaters Correspondence

- M10. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the organization known as Love Your Headwaters from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

Edmonton Community Foundation Correspondence

- M11. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the Edmonton Community Foundation from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the Calgary Foundation from May 1, 2015, to April 30, 2018.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Motion to Concur in the Report from the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Bill 201

Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the House today to speak on Bill 201, the Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018. Bill 201 is my private member's bill which I introduced last spring sitting. This bill would have amended the Employment Standards Code to protect part-time, casual, or volunteer firefighters from loss of employment because they are or have become a part-time firefighter.

Currently employers can and in some cases have terminated employment for missed time due to fulfilling duties as a part-time firefighter. The reasons for me introducing this bill are simple. As I've stated to this House before, I'd been an MLA for less than six months when I received a phone call from a young man from southern Alberta. He had been a volunteer firefighter for one of the municipal districts or counties. I say "had been" because his regular, full-time employer had recently given him an ultimatum. His ultimatum was: quit your job or quit firefighting, because as long as you work here, you aren't a firefighter.

At the time I wanted to rectify the situation and decided to introduce a private member's bill to try to prevent this from being allowed to happen again. I consulted with fire officials in my constituency, who are supportive of this bill, and I imagine fire chiefs across the province would also be supportive of the goals of this bill. Emergency services in Alberta are stretched pretty thin, especially in rural areas. Code reds are a common occurrence. Firefighters, especially firefighters in rural areas, do more than just respond to fires. They also respond to everything from medical emergencies to chemical spills and traffic collisions. Some municipalities in rural communities cannot afford to fill the firefighter hall roster with full-time employees. They rely on part-time and volunteer firefighters in their communities to meet these sometimes life-threatening situations.

Mr. Speaker, as legislators we need to respond to the issues that are affecting Albertans and create solutions that remedy or could potentially remedy the problem. I heard a concern from an Albertan, and I responded by introducing this private member's bill. That was the goal of Bill 201, to help volunteer firefighters have job security. It was also the intent that this bill would have helped rural detachments recruit and retain firefighters.

Bill 201 was referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future, where members were able to study the bill in depth. This is a plan that all government legislation should follow instead of ramming legislation through, as this government has done previously. They need to take the proper time to study their legislation with all – all – stakeholders. Maybe then they would have been able to avoid some of the legislative mistakes they've made previously.

However, Bill 201 was sent to committee, and we were able to look at all of the impacts of this bill at length. Part of the committee's job was to consult with stakeholders and get input from those who would be most affected by this legislation, so input, consultation. Now, a few stakeholders came forward with concerns about some of the possible ramifications of this bill. That's great. That's consultation. That's what the committee's job was to do.

One major concern was that Bill 201 would handcuff businesses and would create an adversarial relationship between fire departments and local businesses. Rural fire chiefs and their departments have been working hard for a number of years to work with local businesses to improve recruiting. It's very beneficial to business if they have a fully functioning fire department. It makes sense. It makes sense that they would work together to solve community issues, issues in mostly rural Alberta. It's a valid concern, and I know that fire chiefs have the best interests of their departments and their staff and the community at heart and in mind.

Another consequence that was brought up was that businesses wouldn't hire firefighters if they felt they would be handcuffed by this legislation. This, of course, would be the opposite of the intent of this legislation. The opposite. It was never intended with Bill 201 to handcuff and make it difficult for volunteer firefighters from the business community to become volunteers. However, it's important that we understand all the consequences of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding these concerns, I believe it is important to state that the work that firefighters do in protecting our communities, the hard work done, is unparalleled. These men and women put their lives on the line to ensure that their communities, their families, their neighbours are safe. Even more significant is the work of volunteer firefighters, who are hard-working, contributing members of their local community. Oftentimes they are small-business owners, tradespeople, farmers. And, more importantly, they're our neighbours. They have decided that they want to serve their community and have made many sacrifices to do so. I have a great deal of respect for these men and women, and we have a duty to represent their interests and find ways for governments to serve them better.

The Foothills county fire department, which is located in my constituency, represents the spirit of volunteer firefighting through their vision statement. It states: "Where there is no line between our firefighters, our community and our family." I will repeat: "Where there is no line between our firefighters, our community and our family." The reality is that, especially in rural areas, communities are tightly knit. You have your neighbour's back, and your neighbour has yours. That's part of what makes Alberta great. Those that are volunteering to be firefighters know the dangers that they could face, but they have the best interests of their communities in mind.

Mr. Speaker, when I think of the dedication of the firefighters in my riding, I can always think of the 2013 floods that hit High River. My good friend Fire Chief Len Zebedee was co-ordinating the response in High River. Chief Zebedee, who has since retired, and his team were working 24-hour shifts to protect the people and their property. Many of those firefighters had flooded homes of their own, but they still answered the call to serve their town.

A more recent example I can bring up happened in Okotoks. In my riding over the Thanksgiving long weekend a call was received by the fire department regarding a fire in a residential neighbourhood. By the time the firefighters arrived, the flames had engulfed the roof of the house. Crews worked quickly to ensure residents of the neighbourhood were safe and battled the blaze to protect the property. Luckily, nobody was at home at the time of the fire, and the Okotoks fire department was able to battle the blaze and keep the damage to only one home.

These are only a few of the countless examples of firefighters demonstrating bravery and putting their safety on the line for the service of others. Mr. Speaker, again, our job as legislators should be to support these first responders, listen to their concerns, and respond with legislation appropriately. I don't think anyone in this House doubts that we need support from those on the front lines, so we should continue to consult and listen to first responders and have their feedback help us determine the best course of action.

That is what we did with Bill 201. Stakeholders came forward with their concerns with this bill, and we were able to listen. That is why consultation is so important. I believe the government needs to continue this consultation and continue to listen to firefighters as there may be a legislative response that may be needed in the future. We'll see if that happens.

We've seen previously with this government that they've lacked proper consultation with stakeholders. We've seen that with them raising the minimum wage without listening to small-business owners; introducing Bill 6 without listening to farmers, my friends, my neighbours; and imposing a carbon tax on Albertans without campaigning on it. Hopefully, moving forward, the government will be able to commit to consulting with first responders, and as the Official Opposition we will continue to hold them to account.

Mr. Speaker, I believe Bill 201 had good intent as I was attempting to address an issue that I had heard from some of the volunteer firefighters.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 201 and the motion. I would first like to thank the Member for Highwood for his passion, compassion, and diligence in doing what he felt was right for some of the rural communities across Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, volunteer firefighters are truly the first line of defence in many communities too small to have a fully paid fire department and thereby very, very important to not only the safety but the sanctity and the protection of not only lives but the property in our communities. These are enthusiastic, courageous men and women who can be called on virtually at any time, day or night, to respond to fires, medical emergencies, chemical spills, accidents, and more. We truly rely on them in this province because of the breadth of the lack of ability for many jurisdictions to be able to afford those full-time firefighters in the communities.

Naturally, it's difficult for many to be working regular jobs while being on call as a volunteer firefighter, and the terms of employment can become contentious. Obviously, the intent here was to take that barrier, to take the conflict of that out of this very, very vital and important role across Alberta. This bill was clearly intended to protect volunteer firefighters from reprisal or dismissal based on their volunteer duties.

Of course, we've had an opportunity – and I think that opportunity was a positive one – for us to go to committee and to consult with Albertans and stakeholders broadly to ensure that we had all of the information. I think it's been mentioned before here that the opportunity for us to consult is something that has not always been done well by this government. This bill, as a private member's bill, created that opportunity for us to engage stakeholders in a more robust manner. After consulting with stakeholders, we have come to realize that there are more implications and that more work is needed to be done to adequately both protect the volunteer firefighters without – and here's the balance, I think, that we should always take into account in all pieces of legislation – unduly burdening their employers and ensuring that there's fairness and a balance there.

It is important in all things learned – and it is, again, something that we've learned – that we need to move boldly forward sometimes, but we also need to be clearly aware of the unintended consequences of legislation, Mr. Speaker. We have seen that happen all too often in the last three and a half years, where the unintended consequences of legislation do come back sometimes weeks, months, or even years later, and we realize that there were some flaws to the approach in the first place or the execution of some of the best intentions in many cases.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Bill 201 proposes to amend the Employment Standards Code – that's a good thing – to protect the part-time, casual volunteer firefighters from loss of employment, quite frankly, for stepping forward within their communities to become a part-time firefighter, a volunteer firefighter. Currently employers can and in some cases have actually terminated employment for missed time due to fulfilling the duties of a part-time firefighter. Madam Speaker, again, balance between community protection and the best intentions of those individuals and the interests of local small businesses is something we always have to take into account, "balance" again being the key and operative word here.

The pros of this bill were very clear. We wanted to ensure that there was an opportunity for local communities to take care of themselves in a way that they could sustain. Again, we've heard that the financial burden on many of these communities would be overwhelming, to the point that they would not be able to meet those budgetary requirements to have paid firefighters do these duties. So what do they do? Do we let property be damaged? Do we take a risk with people's lives? No. We have to do what we have to do in those communities to make ends meet but also to balance those different interests.

It was there to close a bit of a loophole preventing volunteer or casual firefighters, part-time firefighters, who spend valuable time protecting their communities and responding to emergencies, from losing their jobs. This is a very, very difficult time. Madam Speaker, we hear many, many times and I hear daily from people that are very worried about their jobs. Because of that, they're working longer hours, they're putting in extra time, they're very much dedicated. Some of them are even worried about going on holidays because there might be a pink slip waiting for them on the Monday. So here we have a situation again where we have hard-working, dedicated, and very community-spirited Albertans concerned that through their volunteerism they may be putting their livelihoods in jeopardy.

We also have to make sure, as was mentioned by the hon. Member for Highwood, that they're not refused employment because of the duties that they may have from prior commitments to do those part-time and volunteer firefighter duties. If somebody is changing a job, is that an impediment to them being hired by a new employer or possibly taking a higher paying job opportunity or one with more responsibility? You know, it truly would take the worry out of losing employment because of trying to achieve this balance in considering when or when not to become a part-time firefighter, which, again, is very essential to the communities where they live and where they serve and where they are focused on not only being a part of the community but on protecting that community, Madam Speaker.

It would also help the fire departments fill their rosters by having a larger pool of people that they could draw from in terms of doing that, again, the focus being saving lives and protecting property. That's something that I think we have to thank all the volunteer firefighters across this province for doing.

Again, we have to think about the small businesses, struggling small businesses – they are going out of business every day – some of them small mom-and-pop shops, but they have a few employees; some of them more mid-sized employers who have to manage their workforce extremely cautiously and extremely carefully in a very, very difficult economy. Some of them are teetering on the edges of business failure, and sometimes those tipping points can be very fragile. It's within the economic climate that we're living here, which, sadly, has been the result of not only the economy but of some disastrous government policies, that we overlay this issue.

Some of the concerns around this issue are: how, in fact, do we create that balance to not overburden struggling employers, that are struggling to make ends meet, that are struggling to stay in business in many cases, struggling to pay the bills? In many cases what we hear from small business is: not even taking a salary themselves and working extra-long hours. Their employees become extremely important in that formula.

Madam Speaker, you know, I reflect on this. I ran into a former colleague this morning who is a military reservist. I guess one of the things we maybe can look at – and I see we've compared it to that in the past – is the whole issue of reservists and how they're treated in not only Canadian society but in many different countries around the world. I worked with many that were with the British Armed Forces when I was with Cathay Pacific. It was considered not only an obligation for the company but an honour for these individuals to do the reserve services.

I see that the reservists' leave in Alberta is tied to specific duties. To be eligible for reservist leave, they must be employed for 26 consecutive weeks with the same employer as opposed to only the 90 days proposed in Bill 201. So there is some balance that maybe we need to have a look at there as we move forward.

The reservist can take the reserve service leave if they are deployed to a Canadian Forces operation outside of Canada – I think you could argue that the service of a volunteer firefighter is in service to the community in a way that's different but comparable to the type of service that we expect our military personnel to do – and inside Canada if assisting with an emergency or aftermath of an emergency, which, I think, is again key here. In many cases they are responding – they're not going because somebody's cat is up in a tree; they're going because there's an accident, there's a spill, there's a fire in a neighbour's home. There is something which demands immediate attention from that community, and that is done and fulfilled by those volunteers.

But they also have 28 days of annual training per year, which military reservists can do. They're allowed to train – and that's something we haven't talked that much about here – but the training requirements for that volunteer service as well, I'm sure, are in many cases done on their own time, which is again a personal commitment, a personal donation of their time and energy to the communities that they live in and that they serve.

So, Madam Speaker, there are many different implications here. We have to take a look at these balances. We have to achieve, I think, a reasonable balance based on the best information we can get. Of course, what we heard in committee was that there were other implications and there were some concerns, both from the volunteer firefighting departments, from the employers that were consulted as well.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to speak to Bill 201, the Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018. This bill has gone to the committee that I had the privilege of sitting on, and it's been a privilege to meet with members and chiefs and leadership that deal in this area of work in the province. I know that the intentions of the bill were definitely noble, but we learned from those that are right in the middle of it that it could lead to serious and negative consequences. It's important that we were able to do that consultation with fire chiefs and ask everyone that has an interest in the subject to share. But really what we heard was that there would be serious unintended consequences that the bill would cause.

I want to thank all of the members that sat on the all-party committee to discuss this and everybody that put forward submissions and that came to support, to give their expertise on this bill and talk about their recommendations. We were able to hear from individuals, including Peter Krich, president of the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association; Al Kemmere, president of Rural Municipalities of Alberta; Drayton Bussiere, chief, Lacombe county fire service; and Henry Thomson, deputy chief, training and operations, for the St. Paul fire department.

What we heard often was that the hope, through the bill, was that there would be gained employment flexibility and that it would allow more members to respond, but what we really heard from these members that came and presented to the committee, some of whom actually have owned small businesses – that was one of the questions, whether any of them had any business experience, which they, in fact, did. There was concern that to have forced compliance would damage the relationship between volunteer firefighter recruitment and the businesses that they are of course relying on to provide the employees to give that service. The actual owners of these businesses are sometimes generous enough to give of their time to help communities respond to vehicle collisions and assist with structural fires.

We did hear that there were some ideas on having better approaches like having tax exemptions or credits or something like formal recognition. That might be a better approach, something that helps build the relationships together.

Of course, we did hear that this could have serious impacts on small business, especially on farms, where sometimes you have intense periods of activity like calving or harvest. So to force the farm owner to release all of their employees at the same time could have some serious and damaging effects on the farm.

Of course, it's important to establish these positive working relationships, and what we heard, again, from people like the deputy chief of the St. Paul fire department was that what we need is a collaborative approach between the fire service, the municipality, the employers, and the employees. Having things like employer recognition to thank the businesses that actually engage and volunteer their very scarce time to help with this important service would be something that they would support. But there were some issues. There were issues around the terminology, and there was concern that it might not change anything but would actually hurt the potential of having good response times because, of course, everything is built on relationships. That was one of the quotes that was given to us.

We heard from them that there is a program in place, something called Answer the Call, which now apparently enjoys national recognition. What it does is that it helps educate employees and employers and families on what the requirements are of someone that does this very selfless endeavour and sacrifices themselves and their time on behalf of all of our communities. It's that sort of collegial approach that is really necessary. We were provided with some of the material that is handed out to talk about it, and it's really about showing that a firefighter could look like you – you know, on one half of the person they're wearing their firefighter gear, and on the other half it's them just with their normal work attire – doing that sort of building and education that a person that actually goes and faces these dangers head-on can be someone that looks like any one of us.

We did hear that it would be burdensome on employers. The need for protections for workers, of course, is very important.

I just want to share some of the quotes that came from them during this process. Peter Krich, who is the president of the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association, said:

Your family, then your job, and then the fire service. That's how you build a fire service in your community . . . in order to build a fire service . . . you have to have good working relationships with people in your community, that being, number one, your employers.

He also said that employers in our community are the backbone of our fire service and that if we put legislation on employers, it will harm and damage the potential for recruiting and retaining those volunteers.

Mr. Bussiere was quoted as saying:

I don't believe that employers are not allowing their employees to leave for fire calls for any other reason than that it could be detrimental to the operation of their business . . . at the end of the day the volunteer firefighters and their employers need to make money to support their families, and I don't think that we can ask them to put that at risk.

I just want to take a moment to thank all of the volunteer fire services across Alberta, across rural Alberta, that we rely on. They are called on not only for structural fires and grass fires, but they often are the ones that come first on to scene when there are vehicle collisions on the highway. So anything that we can do to help support them in that work and make sure that they're getting home safely to their families is incredibly important. I want to thank all of the families that are still at home and waiting for their loved ones to come home after those calls, because it is quite the sacrifice. These people are amazing, and they are embedded in every part of our communities. Anything that we can do to support them better, I think, we should absolutely make sure that we are endeavouring to do.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak with regard to the motion to concur with the final report on Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018. I had the pleasure of participating in the work that the committee took over the last few months to get a better understanding of how the bill might impact our volunteer firefighting services and if it was going to help or hinder the ability of those operations to attract and retain their firefighters and to get a better understanding of how they perceived the consequences of the bill coming forward, if it would be good or otherwise.

It was a very good process that we went through, I believe, as a committee, the Economic Future Committee. I believe many of us at the beginning of the process believed that the bill came with very good intentions and that this was possibly a good thing moving forward, but as we collected written submissions, as we heard oral submissions, more questions started to arise within our deliberations. It became evident to the committee that the work was not quite finished, that we needed to continue to consult and to work with the firefighter service, the members there, that we can do better and can improve upon what is actually in place at this time.

Throughout the probably four- or five-month process – it was also good for myself – we were able to consult with local volunteer firefighters and the people in our communities that are on the front lines of the service to the community and to ask those questions. Some of the written submissions came forward from fire chiefs within my constituency and also family members within my constituency. It was good to touch base with them and get a better understanding of their perspective.

In our written submissions we received some general support for Bill 201, but then we also received some general opposition to Bill 201. I think the support was recognizing that the bill could provide firefighters employment flexibility and job security. Firefighters need to have the flexibility to answer calls at any time of the day or night, and this bill would ensure that employers would allow firefighters the time and flexibility to perform their firefighting tasks without fear of reprisal.

Another theme that came forward in the general support for Bill 201 in our submissions was that the bill would allow more firefighters to respond during the day, during typical working hours, and many volunteer firefighter submissions responded that they were unable to respond to a fire during normal weekday business hours due to employment commitments.

Then also in the written submissions that the committee received, we saw a couple of themes in there that were in general opposition to Bill 201, that the bill had the potential to upset employers and create an adversarial working environment because the employers would feel forced to comply with imposed legislation. Another theme was that the bill may be detrimental to the recruitment of new volunteer firefighters. It had been suggested that employers would be hesitant to hire volunteer firefighters in fear of human resource issues. If employers are reluctant to hire, the recruitment of more firefighters would become more difficult. Therefore, that would be a negative consequence of Bill 201.

One thing that we did learn also and that I think really, really became evident to me during our oral submissions from members of the Fire Chiefs Association and the Rural Municipalities association – during those oral submissions we got a really good understanding of the work that the Fire Fighters Association does in their recruitment efforts and also in their communications to their community and families, the education efforts that they've done to try and help people within our communities to understand how to have a healthy firefighting organization. It's largely built around building relationships, building relationships with the employers in the communities and building relationships with families in the communities. Part of the training of the volunteer firefighters looked at recognizing that the volunteer firefighters' priority 1 had to be their family, and priority 2 then would be their job, their career. They are trained and educated to understand that their work as a volunteer firefighter must be priority 3. Their family and their jobs would come as priorities 1 and 2 and their volunteerism as priority 3.

What came out of the deliberations is evidenced in the recommendation. The committee decided, I believe unanimously, that Bill 201 not proceed at this time. Largely it was based on the concern that the firefighters felt that it could be detrimental to the relationships that had been built over the years with employers and employees and the good working relationships that are there currently and that they continue to work on going forward. The associations fully understand the challenges that our employers face when men and women need to leave their place of work in order to go on a call. There's always a good dialogue, a healthy dialogue, amongst those stakeholders to ensure that they can continue to be healthy organizations going forward.

We did as a committee also further recommend that the government of Alberta continue to consult with stakeholders to investigate the feasibility of developing comprehensive fire protection and prevention legislation in Alberta that is similar to other Canadian jurisdictions. We had discussions on whether or not that was within the scope of the mandate of the committee and whether or not this was part of what we would have in our final report, but the committee came to the agreement that it would be necessary to recommend that or that it would be good practice to recommend part of the findings that we heard from stakeholders. The Fire Chiefs Association spoke with regard to the fact that they really don't have a template legislation in this province to work from. They work with standards that are developed within the industry. They had asked for possibly more work to be done towards overarching legislation towards the firefighters. We recognize that the government of Alberta is working on this and continues to work on having those discussions with the firefighters.

We felt that it would be prudent to include the recommendation that the government of Alberta continue to consult with the stakeholders and continue to try and find a place where we can land that will be acceptable to all stakeholders within our communities – the volunteer firefighters and the employers and the families – and come up with some legislation to help guide that going forward.

So with that, I am very much thankful for all the work that the committee did but also very much thankful for all the submissions that came forward, both written and oral, from people that decided to take the time to let us know their feelings.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to the motion to concur with Alberta's Economic Future Committee's recommendation that we not proceed with Bill 201, the firefighters amendment act. The work of firefighters, of course, is extremely important. We can never underestimate that. They play a valuable role in the protection of property, but far more than that, in the protection of life. As has been said, they are first responders to many kinds of situations in our communities around the province, so their work is extremely important. That's why I think it's essential that we get this legislation right, that we don't make mistakes, and that we take the time to really think this through clearly and get it right, as it should be.

Volunteers, of course, are the very backbone of Alberta's fire suppression. I did some checking. Just in one county, Lacombe county, for instance, there are six different fire departments and 160 volunteers. If you were to multiply that out over every county in the province, it's a lot of volunteers. Without volunteers we simply would not have functioning fire departments. We simply would not have the protections that they provide.

The Lacombe county fire chief, Chief Bussiere, is in this particular case, actually, a relevant person to reference. I'm very thankful that he had the opportunity to speak to the committee, address them. I think that one of the reasons that he was either called or appointed by the fire chiefs is because he holds a very unique role. He's not just the chief of the Lacombe fire department. He is also the Fire Chiefs Association chair of the recruitment and retention committee, so he has a very, very unique perspective on all of this. I've had the opportunity to speak with him numerous times, and I actually even called him this morning just to confirm that nothing had changed from his point of view, that his testimony to the committee was as he still sees it, and that is the case.

The concern, really, for the Alberta fire departments is over recruitment and retention. I think that's probably the biggest challenge that was brought to light by this bill. The issue of the recruitment and the retention of firefighters is a huge challenge for the fire chiefs; obviously, they have a committee dedicated specifically to that. I think that it's important to understand that the recruitment of firemen from the fire chiefs' point of view is really about encouraging an open conversation, as has been said here numerous times, to build relationships in the community with the municipality and the employers and the volunteer firefighters themselves. The recruitment and retention committee actually strongly encourages any new volunteer firefighters to first go and have a conversation with their employer to talk about it, what the implications for the employer and for their family might be.

There's a really important ongoing relationship-building piece that needs to happen here for the community to function well. You can't legislate a relationship very well; it has to be built through personal engagement. The concern was that this bill as it stood was probably too restrictive, probably even just too legalistic, too restrictive for the opportunity for relationships and co-operation, to have a conversation about creative solutions. When you add that together with other labour code changes that have occurred in recent times that restrict the ability of employees to trade hours and time, it just becomes too restrictive.

It is a very real problem, particularly across the smaller communities of Alberta, and I'd like to just share an example from the Lacombe county fire department. The little village of Mirror needs a minimum of eight to nine members for their fire department to operate safely. They've had a fire department for many years, but unfortunately they've had a struggle maintaining the number of volunteers that they need. Without eight to nine members they're not able to cover absenteeism, they're not able to maintain equipment properly, and they're not able to back each other up safely on a call. It's mostly the safety issue that comes to the surface.

Over the last couple of years their volunteer force has declined to three and four individuals. As a result of that, they have recently been forced to actually disband that fire department. They can't maintain the equipment, as I've said, and they cannot operate safely to back each other up. So there now is no fire service in that community except for the county bringing in fire services from two other communities nearby if and when there is a call. The reality is that in that particular community, yes, lives may be at risk, property certainly is at risk, and insurance costs will escalate. Schools, the retail outlets, the library, the hall: all of these community infrastructure pieces are at risk because they have been unable to get the numbers of volunteers that they need to maintain a functioning fire department.

Fire volunteer recruitment and retention is an extremely difficult challenge across Alberta. We hear that from multiple fire departments, and when that doesn't happen, quite frankly, the community suffers. That's the challenge that we are facing. We need to make sure that we're actually able to support both the fire chiefs and the volunteers that work with them.

With regard to this bill while I think that the purpose and the intent of it was good – it intended to close a loophole with regard to protecting volunteers in terms of being able to have a job, being able to continue to work so that casual and part-time firefighters, who spend valuable time protecting their communities, would not be refused employment or be at risk of losing their job if they're called out too often, too many times – the reality was, though, from the point of view of the fire chiefs, that in fact the bill might make the situation worse rather than better, so it's important that we take into account their consideration.

The reality is that many fire halls across rural Alberta are finding it harder and harder to find people in their communities who are willing to sign up. Quite frankly, many of these communities cannot afford to hire full-time firefighters, and their inability to fill their rosters really is due to, in recent times particularly, our economic challenges and the difficulties that volunteers are having to find regular work, to maintain regular work. They're afraid to create any issues over this, and as a result they back off from volunteering.

There's an article in CBC, May '17, about the difficulty of recruiting and retaining fire volunteers during the recession, and the article reported, as I've kind of already hinted at, that 80 per cent, actually, is the number of Alberta's firefighters that are volunteers. Eighty per cent of our firefighters are volunteers. Without that 80 per cent we would not have fire departments across this province. It went on to explain how the economic downturn really has hit recruitment hard. Rocky View county, for instance, faced a 16 per cent reduction in their fire brigade each and every year. I mean, it's a massive attrition rate that voluntary firefighter organizations are facing. Their fire chief is quoted as saying, "We'll do our training and then we'll print out our roster sheet and we'll already start losing people." These communities just can't afford full-time firefighters, and their inability to fill rosters in many cases makes it impossible for them to function, as I've already said about the village of Clive.

While many employers are often happy to accommodate volunteer and part-time firefighters, who often need to leave their primary employer when they get a call, many prospective volunteers themselves are actually concerned about causing disruptions. Ultimately, if the fire hall can't find the people they need, they can't fight the fires, they can't respond to the emergencies, and the result is longer and longer dangerous wait times for firefighter response times. That's part of the challenge, I think, that Chief Bussiere and others have pointed out.

The Deputy Speaker: Other members wishing to speak to the motion? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's with privilege that I stand today and speak to the motion to concur for Bill 201, the Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018.

I want to begin by sincerely thanking all the firefighters in this province, both volunteer and full-time, for all that they do in keeping this province safe. They risk their lives in their duties as first responders, being first on the scene in events of emergencies and in combating fires to keep our communities safe.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the changing roles especially in our small communities that happen to be along major highways and routes through our province. You know, specifically there have been issues over the years with the Wandering River volunteer fire department being in close proximity to highway 63 and some of the terrible accidents that they've had to deal with on that highway as well as up in my area, the highway 28 corridor, all the way from Smoky Lake through Vilna, Spedden, Ashmont, and the Bonnyville regional fire department that includes Bonnyville and Fort Kent. These folks, they do as much training as they possibly can, but on those major highways, when we do get a wreck, a lot of times there are fatalities. I just commend those folks for being able to go out there day after day, not knowing whether it's a friend or a relative that might be involved in a collision, not knowing until they get there what exactly they're up against.

I do reach out to all of them and thank them for their service. It really is awe inspiring to witness the firefighters putting down their own lives and putting their lives on the backburner and sacrificing so much for us and our families.

Just north of my constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills the fires have ravaged forests and towns, most memorably the Fort McMurray fire in 2016 and, of course, the Slave Lake fires. This terrible disaster decimated the community and burnt through many, many homes and businesses, but what we saw in those trying times was that Albertans banded together, neighbour helping neighbour, and our brave firefighters worked tirelessly and successfully to defeat the fire and avert any loss of life.

You know, from my own community of St. Paul and some of the volunteer firefighters in that area that went up there, they left their families and their homes for days and their jobs as well. A lot of these guys are also small-business owners or self-employed as well, but for those that are working for an employer, I can see where that would put an excessive stress on that employer.

One other thing, you know, when we talk about the Fort McMurray fire and these volunteer firefighters, is that we have no idea what the long-term effects of that exposure are, the multiple days of exposure. Those guys volunteered, ran up there. Like the saying goes, there are people running away from the fire, and they're running toward it. We're going to have to be very cognizant about monitoring those volunteers that went up there and seeing to the long-term effects of that fire.

I'd like to thank the firefighters involved in battling that fire as well as every fire of all calibre that have threatened our beautiful province.

However, the last thing we want is to affect the lives of those volunteer firefighters by making them less employable or damaging their relationship with local businesses. Now, personally, in my involvement in the oil and gas industry up in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake area and St. Paul, we had many guys that worked with us that were members of the volunteer fire departments. Sometimes they would have to leave at the drop of a hat when their pager went off, and I don't recall any instances where anybody was reprimanded or chastised for their duties in that regard, so I would be curious for my own personal benefit to just see what the stats are on how many volunteer firefighters have actually faced reprimand in the performance of their duties.

We have listened to stakeholders express their concerns over how this piece of legislation has the potential to force employers into a corner with firefighter leave. We want to make sure that the businesses do not feel that their hands are tied when they hire a volunteer firefighter and, along the same lines, that volunteer firefighters are not painted as less employable due to the sacrifices they make in keeping our towns safe. It's very, very important. You know, as an employer, when that employee gets that call to go to a fire or to an accident on a highway, you don't know, especially in a small town, whether it could be your neighbour's place or a family member that's involved there.

The intent of this Bill 201 was to ensure the job security of volunteer firefighters when they leave their work and are called to an emergency situation. Oftentimes casual, part-time, and volunteer firefighters risk loss of employment when they must leave work. Again, I can't speak from personal experience because I have not heard that out of any of the volunteer firefighters that I've dealt with. Next time I stop into the fire halls – sometimes they have a social event – I will check with them and see if any of them have had any personal experience in that.

What we have heard from stakeholders, though, is that there is an existing relationship between fire departments and local businesses, and the very last thing that we want to do as legislators is undermine that relationship by handcuffing them with any sort of legislation. We're very happy that stakeholders have brought forth to us these concerns, and it is important for us to take this very seriously and act in accordance with them.

My understanding, not being involved in that committee, was that this bill did actually make it to the committee stage, which we've been trying to push over the last three and a half years on many very, very important pieces of legislation that we felt could have benefited from consultation with stakeholders and the people on the ground that are actually dealing with these situations on an everyday basis. Unfortunately, what we've met with most of the time is being voted down from getting this legislation put forward to committee. Unfortunately, as can be seen by this Bill 201, if it had been just simply passed through the House, the unforeseen consequences can be quite devastating, especially to small businesses and the relationship between the business and the firefighters.

As legislators it's our duty to behave in the best interests of Albertans and those who will be affected the most by the legislation, and therefore consultation is very important. In this case we have heard from those who will be affected that they feel this piece of legislation would not be beneficial to them. Therefore, as per their wishes, we support the motion to concur on this bill.

As I've said before, we've seen what happens time and time again when this NDP government acts without considering the implications for those that hold a stake in their legislation. They deny that their duty is to listen to Albertans, and then we end up with a fiasco like we had with Bill 6, where we had thousands of farm families coming to the steps of the Legislature, sitting up in the galleries, and so many of them watching at 1 o'clock in the morning that they crashed the Legislature live streaming site.

You know, when important pieces of legislation come through and you don't properly consult, you will face the consequences. Bill 6 was a prime example of the government's negligence to consult with those towards whom the bill is addressed, that even when Albertans tell the government exactly what they think of a bill, the NDP's top-down, paternalistic government tells them that they know best. Farmers of Alberta with relation to Bill 6 should have been listened to and should have had a say in a bill that ultimately caused a mess. Then again, we've seen many instances in which the NDP did not consult.

A quick glance at their carbon tax gives another example. It would not be possible to consult with Albertans on a tax that affects everyone but that they did not run on in their campaign. How could Albertans have given their thoughts and feedback if they were not consulted? Would Albertans have signed on to a tax that simply makes life more expensive and drives investment away into other jurisdictions? I doubt very much whether NDP door-knockers during the 2015 campaign had asked individuals at the door whether they would have seen fit to accept the carbon tax with no benefit and no reduction in GHGs, whether they would have actually accepted that and voted for it. I guess we'll see in 2019 what Albertans actually think of this government and the carbon tax. I do believe that the carbon tax will be a major issue in the coming election.

Farmers are saying that the carbon tax is driving agriculture out. We talk about . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak on Bill 201. I see by the notes that I have here that my aide wrote down the word "honour" using the old English verbiage with "u" in it. Madam Speaker, in this case, there's a lot of honour with "u" in it that these volunteers have in the jobs that they do. I commend the Member for Highwood on his presentation of this bill. It's certainly a valuable thing.

Madam Speaker, last spring, when the session broke, I had an opportunity to attend a place in the constituency where a 28-year volunteer was receiving his award. The little community is named Donalda. I can't remember the gentleman's last name, but I do remember standing there giving the award, and my phone was just vibrating excessively in my pocket. At the same time that I was honouring this long-term volunteer, volunteers right at our home, right at our farm, were saving our farm from a prairie fire that had initiated or would appear to have initiated off the local road allowance. My son and others kept us from actually losing our farm. I was able to make note of that to the volunteers, also in another little community, on Saturday night in a little place called Veteran. It's a pleasure.

It's certainly been an interesting process to get to this point, Madam Speaker. I'd be remiss not to thank those firefighters, particularly those volunteer firefighters, who keep us safe. They keep us safe throughout the year every year. These men and women, who make up some of the most selfless volunteers anywhere, risk their lives, their health, both mental and physical, so that we – and I have personal experience of that – can be safe.

When I saw Bill 201 come to the floor for first reading, I thought: “Great. A bill that I would hope all of us, across the bow here, could support.” I read it over, and after first reading I didn’t think there was anything that could be contentious about the bill. There were no concerns or any that I’ve heard around my constituency. It’s been discussed with a variety of firefighters, and we heard their impressions of the bill. To the folks that I’ve talked to, there seems to be nothing contentious. However, the bill has been sent to committee, and discussions have continued.

Madam Speaker, as you well know and as I previously described, I come from an area of small and sometimes remote rural communities that rely on these volunteer organizations and these fire departments to keep our area safe. What I’ve seen is that it takes a lot of these good people willing to take and give of their time to provide protection. It takes a lot more than people; it also takes a great community to stand behind these people. These rural, sometimes remote towns throughout my riding are great communities and have thus far stood behind their firefighters.

Everyone knows that the radio calls can and do go off at any time, day or night. Whenever these volunteers can, they will go out to those calls. Most firefighters are on the road to the call and often in the hall before they even know what they are going to or what the incident is. Perhaps it’s an accident, a structural fire, a grass fire, a medical lift assist. Madam Speaker, the list goes on. You never know what is going to happen, yet these brave men and women go nonetheless. As the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner and the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills have also described, these people are unusual in that they run towards the fire; they don’t run away from it. In my personal life experiences on the prairies I, too, have run to assist to try and extinguish prairie fires.

What I hear around town is that during the day there are fewer firefighters that are able to answer the call because of employment commitments. Some, frankly, cannot make it to the call because they are out of town with their jobs. Some are teachers. In one case I heard of a fellow that taught shop who was limited in his ability to respond because he just could not go and leave the band saws and table saws with unsupervised students working while he went out. He had to make the hard decision to simply turn off that radio when that call came.

Others, Madam Speaker, work daily in the patch or on area farms, others in health care at the hospital, but whatever the case, many for whatever reason simply cannot make the call. Consequently, I understand that, especially in daytime working hours, some halls have issues getting out very many responders to go to a call but usually find enough for a small team. Often the same people are at the calls during daytime hours, and I’m sure that this is a strain on the employer-employee relationship.

Madam Speaker, some felt that this was an important bill because we need to ensure that there is protection for our communities, especially our more rural and, in many cases in our riding, remote rural areas. In our remote rural areas some people are aware of what’s known as the Suffield fire or the Hilda fire, which even your office or representatives from your office attended to visit with those people. Those areas cannot afford to hire a full-time staff or full-time positions other than the senior officers. The cost to hire and staff a full-time fire department is vastly different than that of a part-time or volunteer organization. There are many small communities that, frankly, cannot support this because of their size.

Madam Speaker, it’s believed that this bill has maintained a good balance. For example, the employee needs to have been employed by the same employer for at least 90 days, and that creates employer-employee stability. The bill would give part-time firefighters employment flexibility to answer calls at any time of the day or night, and it would give part-time firefighters job security without fear of reprisal when they leave to answer those calls. Again, the bill would have potentially allowed more members to respond during the day, especially between the hours of 0800 and 1630. Many firefighters, according to our submissions on the bill, stated that they were unable to respond to an emergency during normal weekday business hours due to serious employment commitments. I would personally hate to think that members didn’t respond because they were afraid that they would lose their job, and I would hope that that would never come to pass.

Now, the upside of our continued discussions was that we have a great chance to sit down and talk to others about this issue and other aspects of this proposed bill and to consider other relevant points of view. This bill did not entitle the employee to have pay for the occasional unpaid leave when they need to assist in fire services. From my understanding, though, Madam Speaker, and from some I know, part-time or volunteer firefighters are paid to be out on calls. Hence, the employer didn’t need to pay while they were gone, but the employee was still able to make a meagre wage through that fire department, and it provides proper incentive to the employees to still have a wage and help have the community kept safe. In short, this bill would close a loophole that would prevent any volunteer, casual, or part-time firefighter who spends valuable time protecting their communities in emergencies from losing their job and, with that, job security.

Recruitment and retention are already a huge concern for some fire chiefs. This bill, in some people’s view, helps local fire chiefs with both of these issues, recruitment and retention. Some chiefs told our members that it takes resilient people to do the job – and I can certainly testify to that, Madam Speaker – and people have been able to come out. This bill, I believe, strikes that balance. This bill has looked at several things such as flexibility and job security in an attempt to allow more members . . . [Mr. Strankman’s speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the motion? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise in the House today to speak to Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018. I would sincerely like to thank my colleague for Highwood for bringing up this important issue. The work of firefighters is truly outstanding, and that’s precisely why we need to make sure that we get this bill right.

Having grown up in Fort McMurray, forest fires and car accidents along highway 63 were almost a way of life, often having volunteer firefighters responding to those calls. This bill also hits really close to home for me for so many reasons. In 2016, when a fire ravaged Fort McMurray, destroying over 2,500 homes, countless firefighters put themselves in harm’s way to save our community. These courageous women and men fought day and night to save our community from one of the costliest disasters in Canada’s history. While Fort McMurray is served by a full-time fire department, the rural communities within the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo operate by volunteer departments. It was these volunteer departments that stepped in, stepped up, and helped save countless homes in the region.

For example, Ron Quintal, the deputy fire chief of Fort McKay, one of the many volunteer fire departments that responded to the fire, said that this was the first time in the 10 years that he’d served on the Fort McKay fire department that they’d been asked to make a call in Fort McMurray. The brave men and women from the Fort McKay volunteer fire department drove south on highway 63, heading away from safety and towards the massive fire. Within minutes of Quintal and his team arriving in Fort McMurray, they were dispatched to a neighbourhood and worked for the next 36 hours straight. They saved much of that neighbourhood. Thank you.

There are countless stories of volunteer fire departments providing the much-needed manpower to help fight this massive beast of a fire. This includes many of our industry partners' volunteer firefighters and volunteer fire departments from across the province, including that of Lac La Biche, St. Paul, Westlock, and many, many others. We credit so much to the intensely hard work that was done by the firefighters, including our many volunteer firefighters. None of them quit. None of them backed down. No one fled the flames. They stayed, they fought, and they saved our community.

In total, there were 88,000 people that were evacuated from the area, and in total 1,100 firefighters came to help my community during the fire. The Canadian military was even deployed to help support our region's first responders. The blaze destroyed almost 600,000 hectares and almost 2,500 homes, causing nearly $10 billion in direct and indirect damages, making it one of the most expensive disasters in Canada's history.

Madam Speaker, two weeks ago it was my honour to attend the grand opening of the new Anzac fire hall. The Anzac fire department is one of the many volunteer fire departments within my riding of Fort McMurray-Conklin. This volunteer fire department is also one of the busiest within the region, taking up to 300 calls a year, almost a call a day. The new fire hall offers significantly more space for training for these volunteer firefighters and much more space for their equipment, giving them the ability to better respond to their many calls. I am truly grateful that I am friends with many of the volunteer firefighters from the Anzac fire department. It was quite an honour to see them in action and see them have the new hall opened up. As has been stated, these volunteer firefighters protect many of our rural communities not just within my riding of Fort McMurray-Conklin but right across this province. Their service should be celebrated and recognized.

This legislation would have closed a loophole, preventing any volunteer, casual, or part-time firefighter who spends valuable time protecting their communities and responding to emergencies from losing their job. It also would have prevented part-time firefighters from being overlooked by employers because of their obligation to leave work and fulfill their volunteer duties. It also would have helped communities by increasing the number of firefighters available to respond to fires, which could also decrease response time.

While I truly appreciate the spirit of this bill, upon further consultation with various stakeholders we discovered that this bill would have also had some pretty negative, unintended consequences. Specifically, it could negatively affect rural businesses. We heard that it could create an adversarial relationship between businesses and volunteer fire departments, and in many of our rural communities we cannot afford to have a negative relationship developing between our neighbours. Fire departments have worked tirelessly to build these relationships with local businesses, and they felt like this bill would force the hand of many businesses. While the leave the firefighters would have taken would be unpaid, there would still be serious economic impacts to businesses due to an ever-increasing load of disastrous provincial government policies. We heard that the burden on many of these businesses would be far too high. We truly need to find a balance that reduces some of these unintended consequences.

We need to work on increasing collaboration to build relationships and improve the overall safety of our rural communities, and that's what it's truly about. It's about safety. There is so much value in consulting with subject matter experts when drafting bills and policies to avoid these unintended consequences. Unlike the current NDP government, on this side of the House we welcome and listen to stakeholders from across the province. This bill was not supported by the community and by the stakeholders, and we accepted that feedback.

Being a firefighter means so much more than just battling blazes. Firefighters save people. Firefighters walk into the fire when everyone else runs out, and we are so grateful for our firefighters, who work tirelessly to make a difference in our communities. I would truly like to thank my hon. colleague for bringing this bill forward, focused on making sure volunteer firefighters were treated with the respect and dignity they deserve.

Many stakeholders expressed concerns over aspects of the bill, and I will not be voting in favour of it. We cannot put forward legislation that will hinder our volunteer fire departments. Most of our everyday heroes are volunteer firefighters, and our rural and remote communities are truly indebted to these selfless volunteers who rush into fires while everyone else seems to run away.

Comprehensive firefighting legislation is something that we can look into studying in the future as we continue to consult with stakeholders on this important matter. We have received wonderful feedback from countless individuals across this province, and we will continue to build on these relationships in order to develop the best possible legislation for supporting everyday heroes.

As I grew up down the street from a fire hall, I'm quite familiar with firefighters and it's truly something that is a passion to me. It's very great to see that this bill had the wonderful spirit to protect our volunteer firefighters.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to speak to Bill 201 also. When you look at this bill, of course, at first it looks great. You know, we need to have volunteer firefighters. So many small communities in Alberta depend on a volunteer fire department, and I think it's something, obviously, that we need to protect. We need to have those people in place that are willing to do that. It's obviously not a job that's for everyone, but of course the people that are willing and able to do such an important job in our communities: we need to be able to take care of them. Of course, the importance of their job and their duty makes this bill so important to get right. By getting it wrong, I think we have a lot of risks to have the whole system fall apart that we depend on so much.

Now, this was sent to committee, and I think that was a great opportunity to have this reviewed and have it looked at and to listen to the different groups that came in and stakeholders that came in and talked to the committee so we could get a better understanding of the full impacts of a bill such as this. I think that by having those presentations, we all learned something and some things that we didn't know before as far as the implications of a bill like this.

Of course, the volunteer firefighters, I mean, volunteer to do a job, and it's such an important job in our communities. They volunteer. They take time out of their lives to do this great work.

Along with the firefighters we have the businesses that the volunteer firefighters work for. Those businesses, of course, give up something, too, in order to support the local firefighters, by allowing their employees to go off and help the community when needed. So I think it's important to recognize the important part that the local community businesspeople play in the role of volunteer fire departments.

Now, my community where I live, the community around Valleyview, is served by a volunteer fire department, too. Of course, I know those volunteers. They are people in our community. They're hard working. They're good people. They're dedicated to the cause. I guess, being as I know most of them, I know how often they meet. They have regular meetings where they get together and they discuss the issues and how they can better support the community. They also train a lot, too. They go to different courses outside of town and travel, too, so that they can learn the techniques and the different things that they need to do to do their job properly.

Of course, that's all volunteer time. That's all time they take out of their lives, away from their families, away from their jobs, to serve the community. These people are actually – let's face it – local heroes. These are the people that instead of running from a fire, run to a fire, that go to horrible accidents on the highway, that a lot of times are the first people there because they're ready to go at any time. They drop everything and run as soon as the call comes. We often see our young children – I see my grandchildren sometimes, you know, and they want to wear the fire hat. They want to dress up like firemen for Halloween. That's what these people are. These people are dedicated. They're very giving of their time and their energy, of course, and they feel it's important, and it is important. I think we have to respect that.

I think it's also – again I want to mention the businesses that these people work for, the men and women that are firefighters. These businesses that they work for are willing to take that time when, let's say, they have a firefighter that works on the floor of a store or something like that. They know that when that fire call comes, they're going to lose one employee off the floor, you know, immediately, and they're willing to accept that. When we talk about volunteer firefighters, we have the firefighters that volunteer but we also have the businesses that volunteer, and I think it's important to have that idea that they volunteer that to the community, their employee, knowing that that employee may be lost for a few hours or the rest of the day.

Some of these jobs, of course, that these people have, I mean, are critical jobs. If they drop everything right then, that could cost the business thousands of dollars. You know, that all has to be taken into consideration, and I'm sure those people have to make those decisions each time that fire call comes: can I in good conscience take this call, or do I need to stay at work? But, of course, something like this bill would kind of take away from that opportunity for businesses to have that kind of involvement, to be able to volunteer the part of their business to help the community, too.

I know that our local fire department each year has a hockey tournament. I want to say that it's been 35 years in a row, I think, that they've been having a hockey tournament and raising money. They've raised tens of thousands of dollars to help the community and help the victims, people that have had house fires and that sort of thing. I think it's great that these fire departments are not just a group of people that show up when there's a fire or when there's an accident or anything, but they're actually active in the community and trying to do more than just that job of helping in the time of need.

I spent some time in Fairview with the volunteer fire department there. They had a function there and were fund raising and stuff like that for different things in the community. It was great to see that kind of activity and the community involvement there.

Of course, in Valleyview we have the same thing, and I know that, for instance, the DeBolt fire department is very active. DeBolt is a couple of small communities – we've got DeBolt, we've got Crooked Creek, Valley Ridge, and that area in there – and they have a very active volunteer fire department there, and I know they work hard and they show up when they're needed to. Highway 43 runs right through that area, and at times there are a lot of accidents in that area. The volunteer fire department is quite often the first one there because they are right there. The nearest hospitals are in Valleyview and Grande Prairie for ambulances to come from, but of course that volunteer fire department is right there. I think that it's just a huge blessing to have in our community there, to have those men and women willing to drop everything and be there for the community when something goes wrong.

I spent some time in Bezanson here this fall, too, talking to some of the volunteer firefighters there, and they've got a very active volunteer fire department there, too, and it's great to see that taking place. These small communities that do so much: you know, those are the communities that are in between the centres, where they fill a pretty big gap in services when it comes to emergency services.

Getting back to, you know, the committee's work on this, that allowed for more consultation. I think what came about is realizing that there were some unintended consequences that could happen because of a bill like this. I think it's important to have even more consultation and really get this right because it is something that is critically important for rural Alberta in particular. If we get it wrong, then I'm not sure what could happen. But we do want to make sure we get it right because we can't afford to get it wrong. I don't think these communities can afford to not have those volunteer firefighters, that are willing to come out and do that important work that they do.

Of course, at times I think it can be hard to recruit volunteer firefighters. By having difficulty to recruit – I mean, we don't want to do anything that'll make it harder to recruit. We want to make sure that the people that want to volunteer are there and ready and willing to do it. We also want to make sure that the businesses that these people work at are supportive, too. I think that's an important balance to have.

I think that during the consultation they found out that a number of stakeholders did not support the bill. They're worried that it would damage the relationship between employers and the volunteer fire service, making it adversarial. Of course, I think that's an important relationship that needs to be kept in balance. We need to have that balance both ways there. They also expressed concerns that maybe businesses wouldn't hire volunteer firefighters because they would be kind of handcuffed by this legislation. They wouldn't have that opportunity to say no sometimes if it's, you know, a critical thing at work.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak on the motion to concur on Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018. I thank my hon. colleague the Member for Highwood for bringing this bill forward and raising this important issue in this House and in the committee. The work of the Member for Highwood will not go unnoticed, and we are saddened that he will not be returning to this House after the next election.

By bringing this bill forward and having the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future examine the legislation and call witnesses in to hear testimony, the Member for Highwood managed to spark a discussion among the firefighter community across Alberta. We heard from the fire chiefs. They indicated that Bill 201 was not good enough. They wanted more. They want their own act, not to be part of several acts scattered all over the law books.

Bill 201 proposes to amend the Employment Standards Code to protect the part-time, casual, or volunteer firefighters from loss of employment because they are or have become part-time firefighters. That's a good thing, Madam Speaker. We already allow reservists in the Canadian Armed Forces military leave so they can attend annual training or be deployed on missions abroad. The Canadian Forces Liaison Council recognizes the best employers across Canada for their commitments to military leave. Why couldn't we do the same thing for firefighters?

I have heard that even in the Canadian Forces a firefighter is a trade where people can sign up, train, and be employed. When one is on an air force base, those firefighters need to respond to aircraft crashes on takeoff and landing. When on a ship at sea, everyone is responsible for fighting a fire on the boat or when a helicopter crashes on the deck or when munitions prematurely explode. Sadly, military leave might be two to four times a year whereas firefighter leave might be two to four times a week.

I was surprised and disappointed to hear volunteer firefighter can lose their jobs for leaving their jobs to respond to emergencies. Firefighters are essential to communities. How can we ever recruit additional firefighters for volunteer brigades all across rural Alberta if they are forever faced with this sword of Damocles over their head if they leave their job to go fight a fire? Volunteer firefighter rosters have been dwindling in rural communities due to the economic downturn. When people feel they are not protected through legislation, they choose work over their prospect of not being picked for a job due to their volunteerism.

Now, funnily enough, colleagues in Quebec have a law like this protecting first responders so that they can carry out their duties as a first responder and know their other job will still be there waiting for them. The NDP tried to bring in legislation like this at the federal level to amend the Canada Labour Code, but the bill died on the Order Paper in August 2015. Amending the Canada Labour Code would only protect 4,420 federally regulated firefighters among the 85,000 volunteers across the country.

We heard from the fire chiefs that came in that firefighting develops a brotherhood and that some volunteer firefighters would rather be down at the station training or waiting for a call than be at their own jobs. Firefighting is just one of those jobs where you can develop a passion for the work. Sadly, some municipalities cannot afford to indulge passions and have people sitting around all day.

Parkland county needs 40 volunteer firefighters to manage the new state-of-the-art fire hall in the Acheson industrial park. Otherwise, they have a $6.5 million bill in order to have the firefighters on full-time. This is a large burden for the industries and residents to make up in property taxes.

Most stakeholders at the committee meeting expressed their strong support to have a single fire services act similar to the Police Act and would rather see one larger piece of legislation to encompass all the areas of fire services. You see, Madam Speaker, firefighters don't just fight fires. Firefighters respond to motor vehicle accidents. They use tools called the jaws of life to break open automobiles to rescue trapped accident victims. Many firefighters are trained as paramedics and can administer more than just advanced first aid while waiting for an ambulance to arrive. Firefighters are also the local hazardous materials team and respond to accidents involving dangerous goods that require respiratory equipment in order to handle the cleanup. Think of the material-handling training for all the types of things that our firefighters need to take. Yes, you'll see firefighters out there in haz-mat suits responding to certain incidents.

But, Madam Speaker, because we took the bill to committee and because we got feedback from the firefighting leadership, that's why we will not proceed any further with this piece of legislation. I'll be voting to concur with my NDP colleagues that we can and will do better with the legislation.

Now, if only we could take so many other pieces of legislation to committee to consider and bring expert witnesses to testify and help us do our jobs better. Madam Speaker, I'm hoping that the Government House Leader will consider this suggestion, that we should do the same thing with many other contentious bills that come in front of us, that we take the opportunity to take them to committee and do thorough due diligence and get all the stakeholders to give their input and make those bills better.

With that, Madam Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to speak on this motion. I would also like to thank my colleague the Member for Highwood, who brought this bill forward. Unfortunately, as we all know, he won't return to this House after the next election. I happen to work with him. We both actually ran as Wildrose candidates in the 2012 election, so we've worked together since then. I'm so sad to see him not returning to this House. He served his constituency with so much commitment and dedication.

I actually look forward to the Minister of Municipal Affairs bringing a new bill as soon as possible to meet the needs of the stakeholders heard from in this committee.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, for granting me the opportunity again to address this piece of legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to stand in the House this afternoon and speak to the Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018. Now, I know that I sit on Alberta's Economic Future Committee, and I know that we agreed to send over to the House an agreement as a vote by the committee that we would not at this time support Bill 201, and I agree. I was there to be part of that vote, and I stand beside what the committee decided.

I just wanted to talk about the bill for a few moments. Bill 201, of course, proposed to amend the Employment Standards Code. The intent was to protect part-time, casual, or volunteer firefighters from loss of employment because they are or they have become a part-time firefighter. Currently employers can and in some cases have terminated employment for missed time during fulfilling duties as a part-time firefighter.

Now, I spent a lot of my youth in a small town that at the time probably wasn't much more than a thousand people. I certainly knew all the firefighters and all of their families. I think probably the fire department was a lot smaller at the time because, certainly, the population of the town was a lot smaller. As the fire department grew, the county determined to add a Vulcan and district rural firefighting crew, so they would come in and train with the folks that were on the town of Vulcan fire department. They were two separate entities, but they ended up getting more members, more people to volunteer by doing it that way.

What this legislation proposed was to close a loophole, preventing any volunteer, casual firefighter from losing their job, as I said. It was also doing its best to protect part-time firefighters from being refused employment just because they must leave work from time to time to fulfill their duties. That's the part that I remember about a small town fire department, that it was strictly volunteer firefighters. At that time, of course, many, many years ago, the employers and the employees all understood that firefighters were an important part of that fire department. The volunteers and the folks that were employing them, a lot of them understood that from time to time volunteer firefighters may actually have to leave. Those things I certainly remember. Like I said, I knew every one of them. The people that served plus their families all seemed to serve as time went on, so it was quite an affair.

The legislation also talked about taking the worry of losing employment out of the equation on considering becoming a part-time firefighter. These guys that volunteer to become firefighters don't expect much. They have a passion built right into them, something that is admirable for the rest of us to understand. They pretty much put themselves aside when an emergency comes along, and they become the heroes that we know each and every one of them are.

I think that previously the Member for Highwood did bring forward Bill 212, an Employment Standards Code amendment act, in 2016, which died on the Order Paper. Bill 201, of course, then became the resurrected and updated version, which was to define that a part-time firefighter was to include "a casual, volunteer or part-time member of a fire protection service of a municipality or Metis settlement." That was all done to broaden the scope of the bill.

Now, interestingly – and I think it's been said before – in October of '14 an article was written by someone from Parkland county. The question that he asked in that article was: who pays the cost of dwindling volunteer numbers? When you live in an area that strictly has volunteer firefighters, as maybe you do yourself, Madam Speaker, volunteering to be part of a volunteer fire department is very important, and we're lucky to have those folks.

Each year in Coaldale I'm invited to the Coaldale emergency services Christmas dinner and awards night along with the MP from the area. We do go, and we honour those volunteers that spend their time. We honour the time they spend. We honour the amount of time that they spend. We honour the families of those people that actually are just as much a part of that volunteering as the very person that is out there doing the job.

I was there in 2017, and we talked about the fact that the Coaldale fire department – I just speak of Coaldale because it's the biggest municipality in my riding, and I seem to end up doing a lot of things with the fire department. Anyway, they took their volunteers and went out to the Kenow fire that was at Waterton, and they were charged with protecting the Prince of Wales Hotel. When some of these folks got up to speak about that, tears came to their eyes. They knew what they were charged with. They knew that people were depending on them. They knew that they were doing this for people that they had never met and probably never would meet. But they were prepared to do their duty, and they understood what their duty was as a volunteer firefighter.

I looked on the website of the Coaldale & District Emergency Services fire department, and their credo is to Respect the Tradition, Embrace the Culture, Live the Life. They also talk about integrity being part of what they do at the Coaldale fire department.

Doing the right thing for the right reason, even when no one is watching.

Those are bold words.

Professionalism – In our training, service and how we present ourselves.

Respect – Treat others how you would want to be treated, with respect and dignity, on and off the job.

Compassion – Caring for the people you are serving and your co-workers through compassion and tolerance.

Teamwork – Working together with each other and outside organizations.

Pride – In our community, in our job and in our department.

So these guys have a bit of a code of honour that they determine to live by as they are volunteering for their local fire department.

The Coaldale awards night, that I end up going to every year: the sheer number of service bars and medals and documentations that are presented at that place – I had the opportunity to present a lot of those medals – indicate the steadfast professionalism and dedication that this team takes seriously in assisting others in their time of need. Whether full-time, part-time, or volunteer, their commitment, service, and sacrifice for their community are apparent.

Volunteer firefighters all across this province deserve to have our recognition at all times. They step up when – I think my colleague from Fort McMurray said that when people are running out of a burning building, they're running into it, and those are the kinds of people that I always respect.

I will be voting as the committee suggested. We certainly listened to stakeholders. I actually gave my seat to the Member for Highwood at one of the meetings because I felt it was important that he was able to be part of the conversation with the stakeholders. He did take that opportunity, and he got to ask questions of the folks that were there.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 201, the Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018. Imagine this scenario. You drive into a town for a few groceries, and before you have a chance to park your vehicle, the fire hall is suddenly a bustle of activity. Vehicles are hurriedly arriving, men and women race inside the fire hall, and before long, fire trucks and rescue vehicles are racing out. You know some kind of emergency has occurred, a fire or a serious crash, and that your fellow citizens are jumping to duty. It happens quickly because it has to.

The arriving residents were volunteer and part-time firefighters. They are well known to their fellow citizens for they are the type of people who help out with so much else that goes on in their communities. This community service, though, is of a higher level because they are saving lives while also putting theirs in danger.

When the siren, or today their PDA, alerts them, volunteer firefighters leave their dinners, their farms, or their children's gymkhanas, and their workplaces to save a home, a life, a barn filled with animals. Minutes count, and they are trained to react. And thank goodness they do. Rural villages, towns, counties, and MDs cannot survive without volunteer and part-time firefighters. That's why I'm proud to speak today on Bill 201, introduced by my colleague the Member for Highwood.

This is one of those pieces of legislation that might simply be overlooked. And that is a key point about volunteer firefighters: we often do take them for granted. It's not that we do not appreciate them in this Legislative Assembly; of course we value them, and those of us who live in small communities know how critical they are. Let's face it. What would we do without these volunteers? If we didn't have highly trained first responders heading out on a moment's notice to emergencies, what would happen? Think about it for a moment: what really would happen? It is truly impossible to imagine.

This bill proposed to close a loophole in the Employment Standards Code to prevent any volunteer, casual, or part-time firefighter from losing their job when they are doing this important work on behalf of their community. Clearly, the intentions of this bill were superb. When it was being debated in the House, some valid concerns were raised, and for that reason it was sent to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future for review, once again a good course because the committee can perform far more thorough reviews of legislation than we can do in the short time that bills are before us.

The committee did a great job reaching out to stakeholders, a number of whom raised red flags. The two main red flags noted concern about affecting the relationship of volunteer firefighters and their employers, usually small businesses. The second, of course, was concern that enacting this change might affect the prospects of employment for the volunteer firefighters themselves. We don't want to cause any of these problems when the purpose of the bill was to make everything better. The committee, in its collective wisdom, chose to recommend that the Assembly abandon this well-meaning piece of legislation.

I thank my colleague the Member for Highwood for bringing it forward and raising these issues. By introducing this private member's bill, he has sparked an important conversation in communities about the great value of volunteer firefighters.

Employers may well adopt the proposed change on their own. They could make it company policy, or they could simply welcome a volunteer firefighter to their team and acknowledge their pride in the tremendous service they provide to their community. Let's face it: that's mostly what occurs now. In the communities that rely on volunteer and part-time firefighters, it is stores, lumberyards, hotels, and many other businesses that fall prey to the flames, so most business owners greatly value any employee who performs this important service.

I believe the positive debate we have had in the House, followed by the committee discussions, especially with stakeholders, has served a great purpose. Another positive move that has come from Bill 201's journey is that members of this House have now heard loud and clear the need for Alberta to create a single fire service act. It is important now that we do not lose this recommendation. We must continue consulting about a fire service act, what that might look like, and how it might serve firefighters, municipalities, and citizens.

For Bill 201, though, the focus was on Alberta's volunteer firefighters, and I would like to end on that note. So let me say to any current or former firefighter, and there may even be some here today who could become firefighters in the future: thank you for your service to Alberta and to your community; you jeopardize your time, your health, and even your life to serve us; we do appreciate it.

Now, Madam Speaker, on a more personal note, I'm not sure if there are any other volunteer firefighters in this House. Perhaps there are, but just so you know, I was a volunteer firefighter for many years in my little town of Grovedale. My son also became a volunteer firefighter, my daughter became a volunteer firefighter, and her new son-in-law became a volunteer firefighter. My brother ended up being the chief of our small fire service. Once I became elected as municipal councillor, they deemed it a conflict of interest, so I had to step down from the volunteer position, and my brother became the chief. So I understand, you know, very well the value in being a volunteer fireman. My brother and my son were also first responders. It takes a lot of time and training to become a first responder. I don't think people realize how much training it is. It's kind of like an EMT or a nurse but not quite. Some of them with lots of experience are just as qualified.

From the employer side, one story I can remember. I was already on council when we were harvesting and combining, and some of my colleagues would understand that. I had the job of driving the truck, and I took a load in, dumped it, came back to the field to get another load, and here's my combine sitting there running, the threshing equipment going, the door wide open. I'm thinking: oh, man, somebody is hurt, or somebody is gone. I couldn't find anybody around. So eventually I jumped in the combine and started combining and filling the truck on my own. I was surprised later when my brother came back. He had gotten a fire call. He was driving the combine. He had jumped out of the combine at the end of the field and left the door open. I said: well, at least next time maybe shut the thresher off so it's not sitting there running. I was a little surprised by it, but I understood his dedication and what it meant. He went to a neighbour's place, where a trailer had caught on fire. There were no lives at risk, but they helped to save a lot of valuables for the neighbour. After that, I kind of got used to it. He had kicked out the thresher when he left, but when I came to the field, the combine was running. No big deal; you jump in it and go. So I know what it's like kind of on the employer side or trying to run a business and somebody has to leave, but it was pretty understandable.

I know also that my wife one Christmas morning was a little upset because our son wasn't home. He quite often stayed out late, but this was the next morning and he wasn't home yet. He finally came home at about 9 o'clock in the morning, and she wasn't very happy. But soon he told her that he was on his way home at a reasonable hour and that, of course, on his way home he got a fire call. It was a first responder, and he was in the truck. It was about 30 below on Christmas morning and snowing and very cold. He happened to be the first one on the scene. Somebody had reported lights in the bush, so he went down the bank and found a young man that was impaled.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 201, the Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018, presented by my hon. colleague from Highwood. First of all, I just want to say that earlier today I had the opportunity in my member's statement of talking about the heart of our society. One of the things that I had mentioned – and I'm sure you'll remember this – is that the heart of Albertans is made up of the firefighters who willingly run into burning buildings while others are running out.

You know, having the opportunity of being able to speak to volunteer firefighters in my riding of Cardston-Taber-Warner, when you start talking to them, you start to realize and recognize the kind of people they are: committed, compassionate, caring people that have the best interests of the community at heart. When I first heard about this bill coming forward by my colleague, at first blush I thought: absolutely. For everybody that I can think of, all the businesses, this would be a no-brainer. This is something that they would be wanting to have as legislation. We seem to develop legislation based upon the worst-case scenario. I imagine that a large majority of employers would be good employers and would be able to provide that kind of flexibility for volunteer firefighters. But there are situations sometimes where you'll get a bad egg in the crowd, and then we have to take a look at this possible legislation.

One thing, though, Madam Speaker, that I believe in is the goodness of Albertans and the ability for us to be able to work together collaboratively to come up with a common-sense solution. The nice thing that we've seen . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but the time allotted for that portion of business has now elapsed.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mountain Pine Beetle

506. Ms Sweet moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work with municipal and federal government counterparts to address the impact of the mountain pine beetle on our national parks and tourism and forestry industries.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Motion 506. As you know, life in many parts of our beautiful province revolves around forests. Many industries depend on our forests, from tourism and recreation to the forest product industries. Mountain pine beetle is a serious threat to our forests, affecting a quarter of Alberta's pine forest, with the most severe concentration being in the west-central pine belt. The mountain pine beetle is threatening our economy and our environment. If left unmanaged, mountain pine beetle populations could kill large amounts of Alberta's pine resources, up to 6 million hectares of pine valued at more than $8 billion. This would have a large impact on the forestry industry. Of 25 major forestry companies operating in Alberta, 14 rely on pine to continue operations. Infestation also threatens watershed health, fish and wildlife habitats.

Since 2006 the province has controlled the mountain pine beetle spread by cutting down and burning more than 1.5 million infested trees. Mountain pine beetle infestation is also controlled through a number of best practices such as timber harvesting and prescribed fire. We know that without aggressive control, an estimated additional 564 million trees would be infested and killed.

Our government is committed to minimizing the spread of the beetle north and south and preventing them from spreading further east. Removing infested trees is the most important tool to control the spread. Another strategy is to have the forest industry harvest susceptible pine stands in order to decrease the spread in the long term. Our government is taking this fight seriously. Last year alone the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry allocated more than $25 million to manage the infestation and impact of the beetle.

A main area of concern is the Hinton and Edson area, where mountain pine beetles from Jasper national park are moving to Alberta's forests in great numbers. Of the approximate 95,000 infested trees being controlled this past winter, more than half are in the Hinton area. The Jasper park area has also created increased safety concerns not only for the residents of Jasper but also for those who visit the park. Due to the damage caused by the mountain pine beetle, many of the trees in the national park have died and are now standing matchsticks. We have seen over the past few years the devastation and safety risks that are associated with forest fires, and Jasper national park is the epicentre of the most potential wildfires.

Due to this, our government has provided significant funding for the mountain pine beetle related to research and to impacting municipalities. We provided $500,000 for mountain pine beetle related research in 2017-2018, and in April our government announced it would be investing $600,000 to communities across the eastern slopes to combat mountain pine beetle. Our government also has an agreement in place with Saskatchewan to help prevent the spread to other parts of Canada. Alberta is the main front in preventing the spread eastward.

The huge problem of the mountain pine beetle can only be combated by working together and working co-operatively hand in hand. I've heard from groups like the Alberta Forest Products Association and the mountain pine beetle advisory group in Hinton and the municipalities, and they are saying that more work is needed to contain the spread in our national parks. We need to know more about how the spread can be slowed down. We need a thorough assessment as to how much damage has already been done.

The federal government must look closely at their management of the mountain pine beetle, especially in our provincial national parks, not only to ensure the park can continue to be accessed for generations to come but to also address the safety concerns of the residents that live and visit these areas. I know that Alberta mayors from the affected areas and provincial ministers have sent letters to the federal government in support of our government's ask for this assistance. I know that the Hinton chamber of commerce developed a new policy resolution on the mountain pine beetle that has since been adopted by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

One of the key pieces of this policy is a request that the federal government reinstate the federal mountain pine beetle program with funds equivalent to the scale of $200 million. Funds for such a program would support provinces like Alberta that are already infested with the mountain pine beetle and provide resources for communities and economic diversification and resiliency to communities that are affected by the mountain pine beetle. The policy highlights that federal involvement is needed to support national mitigation plans, community safety initiatives due to the higher risk of wildfires, and of course research and education initiatives.

Simply put, Alberta needs assistance from the federal government to support the good work we are already doing on this front. Since 2004 Alberta has invested nearly a half a billion dollars in order to control this pest, and I know, for example, that the town of Hinton has dedicated efforts to this fight as well. I also know that the Member for West Yellowhead has been a great advocate for this issue and his constituents' needs in this respect. He has been working with municipalities and industry on this issue for a long time.

Earlier this year the province provided Yellowhead county and Hinton with funding to control, suppress, and eradicate the mountain pine beetle on municipal and private lands. The funds are part of the mountain pine beetle municipal grant funding program, which helps Alberta communities minimize the spread of the mountain pine beetle infestation in their areas. Clearly, Alberta has done its part for quite some time. We now need collaboration from our federal counterparts to effectively combat the spread of the mountain pine beetle and the devastation it's caused. Co-operation is essential if we're going to create an effective strategy regarding the mountain pine beetle. Together is the only way we'll win this battle.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to stand up and support this motion. As you know, life in many parts of the province revolves around forestry, and the industries depend on our forests for tourism opportunities and, of course, recreation opportunities and the forest product industries. We talk about the industries, for example, in West Yellowhead. Edson has three forest companies operating. Hinton has one, one pulp mill as well. Grande Cache: one forestry company. We also have a forest contractor working in Jasper national park working on the removal of pine trees and stuff, plus the park has said that they were going to be dealing with Whistlers campground, as I spoke of before under Bill 8.

The thing is that a strong, sustainable forestry sector is very important to our provincial economy, and it's important that we continue to work and deal with this issue with the mountain pine beetle. When we look at the issue we see that was coming to us from B.C., it followed the highway 16 corridor, and it started west of Jasper national park. It gradually worked its way into the park, and now it's beyond. We saw how it was affecting the area, so a whole bunch of us decided that we needed to have a better say and input, so that's why we ended up putting together the pine beetle committee. It's made up by local mayors, towns and county, Jasper federal park, forestry workers, forestry companies, the Chamber of Commerce, firefighters, governments, Agriculture and Forestry, plus the federal member of Parliament was involved. Of course, my office was involved along with FRI Research, which is operated out of the Hinton Training Centre.

It's very important that we support the operation of this committee because they were dealing with the fact that we'd know that this could affect us going forward. The thing is, too, that what we need to realize is that it's not only the forestry sector that could be affected by this; I had mentioned earlier the issue of tourism. We look at the federal park: of course, the tourism that goes to that park every year is huge.

We were fortunate of the fact – not that it's a good thing, but when I talked to the chamber of commerce, they said: well, the smoke that we're getting this summer is actually hiding the view, but it's also hiding the red trees. He said: well, it might be a good thing, but what are we going to do going forward with that? It certainly is an issue that is a problem.

When we look at the whole issue of the committee mandate, when we got going with the committee, the mandate was pretty clear: we're continuing to ensure a thoughtful and sustainable approach to forest management that balances the economic, social, and environmental needs of Albertans and our communities. This, in fact, was a large part of why we put the committee together, that we needed to deal with that in that context.

The other part of it was that we needed to develop emergency procedures. We all knew full well what had happened in other areas in B.C. and of course, like I'd mentioned under Bill 8, the smoke and everything that we're dealing with in our communities. We were looking at those issues. We needed to make sure that we have an emergency plan in place in the event that that should happen.

We tried to urge the federal government to help us throughout this whole process and, of course, it was an issue that they really didn't step up to the plate. They still haven't. We've got to continue to put pressure on them to fully understand the scope of the problem that we have, what is happening in West Yellowhead in particular and the devastation that we're looking at. A lot of people would be shocked about what's going on there. When we look at some of the destruction, the area affected is, say, an 11,000-square kilometre park and is approximately doubling each year. That's how badly it's spread.

The resource conservation manager with Jasper national park, Dave Argument, said in an interview: sections of the forest have turned red as larvae feed on the phloem in the tree trunks and kill them. About 93,000 hectares of the park, 200,000 hectares of pine forest, were affected in the federal agency's most recent survey. Well, I'll bet you the survey this year is going to be even more devastating. And where has the federal government been all this time? Nowhere. They haven't been there. They haven't done anything, really, to really account for and try to prevent the beetles' spread from the park, leaving the park and coming into our area in Edson, Hinton.

In 2017 the beetles that came out of the park literally rained in our community. That's how bad it was. Disgusting. The fact is that the federal park didn't do anything, failed to recognize that it was a problem, didn't put in any ask for federal money to help deal with it there, which they could have, but they didn't. Now, you look at the mess that we've got in the Edson, Hinton area. It is huge. I don't know what the survey this year has produced, but early indications are that it's not good.

An epidemic of pine beetles moved in from British Columbia. Like I said, their survival in higher elevations: they never thought that they would survive up near the treeline. They figured that, no, it would stay in the lower valleys. Well, no, they were mistaken because it's red as high up to the treeline as you can find. The survival rate in the higher elevations around Jasper is enabled by warmer winters resulting from climate change. Climate change is real. The pine beetle is a result of climate change, whether you choose to ignore it or not. That's why we haven't got cold enough winters to keep them in check.

The past practice of extinguishing wildfires in the park has allowed the forest to become denser and older, accelerating the beetle's spread. Of course, that's pretty evident. Researchers now believe that forest fires should be allowed to burn except where lives or property are threatened.

The pine beetle infestation has moved beyond the national park's eastern borders into forest near Hinton, Edson, northern Alberta, and the Lac La Biche area. The beetle had never been seen in these areas before 2006. Caroline Whitehouse, the health specialist with Alberta Agricultural and Forestry, said that the spread could affect 14 logging companies that harvest pine in Alberta. That's huge. It's going to be a huge impact on our economy, on those communities and workers.

The elevated fire risk. I already talked about that, like I said, when I discussed the issue about Bill 8 and the impending issue that can happen. I was driving in from Hinton last night and people were flicking cigarettes . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of the motion and wish to echo the remarks of my colleagues, the members for Edmonton-Manning and West Yellowhead. The mountain pine beetle remains a serious threat to Alberta's forests, and the province takes the threat seriously. To date Alberta has devoted more than $500 million to the pine beetle fight, but populations continue to spread across the province. Many Albertans depend on our forests for their livelihoods but also for recreational opportunities. Forestry supports thousands of jobs in scores of communities, and our forests are home to a diverse flora and fauna, which are tremendously important in their own right.

The uncontrolled outbreak occurring in Jasper national park is significantly affecting Alberta's pine forests. Early indications are that this year a broader dispersal of the pests occurred into the Rocky Mountain House and Brazeau regions as well. More information is being gathered to determine the extent and the severity of the dispersal. We're continuing our aggressive survey and control activities. We'll be analyzing the findings and directing our resources this winter to areas where we can have the greatest effect in terms of limiting further spread and mitigating impacts to Alberta's forest resource and the values it provides.

Surveys show that the pine beetle pest levels have increased in the Hinton-Edson area. For this area our tactic is to divide the forest into two zones, the leading-edge zone and the inactive holding zone. The leading-edge zone is the priority. Infestations within this zone are generally widely scattered and small. Due to the potential for further spread, control of beetle-infested trees in this zone is critical to slow or stop the spread along the eastern slopes and eastward throughout the boreal forest. Our goal in the leading-edge zone is to treat 80 per cent or more of the sites that pose a risk of spread. This year, Madam Speaker, we've devoted about $25 million to pine beetle management, which has helped control about 103,000 trees this year. This is similar to last year. About 70 per cent of the survey and control work will be located within the Edson forest area. As we develop our survey and control plans, we will continue to co-ordinate with forest industry plans to achieve the greatest impact possible with our control program.

As government we make decisions on how best to protect our forests. Forest management is complex and dynamic. We seek to find balance amidst the diverse economic, ecological, and social values Albertans place on the forests. For example, pine beetles tend to propagate in mature pine stands, Madam Speaker, the same pine stands that are favoured by caribou, one of the many iconic species at home in the boreal forest. Under the federal Species at Risk Act we're obligated to show how forest management can continue to self-sustain caribou populations. The motion calls on the government, with municipal and federal government counterparts, to address impact of the mountain pine beetle. We have a close working relationship with municipal governments in the affected areas. We're actively involved with the mountain pine beetle working group with municipal and federal representatives. The Member for West Yellowhead is on that working group.

My department staff is in close contact with municipal governments to address community safety through our FireSmart program, which offers an array of tools to help communities manage the forest and how it interacts with the community. For example, the program helps reduce the amount of fuel that occurs when trees are killed by the pest. In Jasper the program is being used to remove dead and dying trees in the Whistlers campground and on Pyramid Bench. This is being co-ordinated by the federal government through Parks Canada.

As part of our overall strategy we have made a formal request to the government of Canada for $20 million per year over the next five years to enable an expansion of control activities and undertake important research. I have made this request directly to my federal counterpart. I know that many of our forestry and community stakeholders have reinforced the importance of this request as part of the province's overall strategy.

I would be remiss if I didn't thank the people and government of Saskatchewan for agreeing that there's an urgent need to suppress these infestations in order to prevent or minimize further loss and degradation of forests in both provinces. Both provinces recognize the threat of the beetle on our forests and have agreed to work together to minimize it. Since 2011 Saskatchewan has contributed more than 5 and a half million dollars to help reduce the threat.

In closing, I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for introducing this motion. Healthy forests require co-operation between orders of government, which this motion recognizes. I'd also like to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for his continued advocacy for his constituents and all those living and working in forestry towns and to the members who have participated in today's important debate.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise to speak to Motion 506, introduced by the Member for Edmonton-Manning. I know this member has always supported the forest industry. She always comes to the AFPA, or the Alberta Forest Products Association, in Jasper. Interestingly, it's in Jasper, so we can see every year the advancement of the pine beetle over there.

Madam Speaker, I'm a bit alarmed that this motion is before us today. This is not to suggest anything against the member who has brought it forward. She is doing due diligence. The mountain pine beetle is a devastating pest that has been attacking Alberta's forests at a distressing rate for a decade. What is alarming is that a member of a government needs to push her own government to take action on this growing crisis. This motion asks the Legislative Assembly to "urge the government to work with municipal and federal government counterparts to address the impact of the mountain pine beetle on our national parks and tourism and forestry industries."

Madam Speaker, the mountain pine beetle has been a terrible threat to Alberta and all of Canada's pine forests since it began turning the mountains of British Columbia red in the late 1990s. The thinking at the time was that the Rocky Mountains were an insurmountable barrier for the beetles. But 12 years ago they started flying into northern Alberta, and they've continued trying to entrench their populations here ever since.

Up in my area of Grande Prairie-Wapiti our forestry companies have been proactive. They monitored for the beetle, removed hot spots of infested stands, and they've managed to contain it.

The government of the day developed a strong and effective mountain pine beetle action plan to provide a co-ordinated regional approach to controlling the infestation. This important work was being performed on behalf of Alberta's forests but also Canada's because if the infestation destroys the pine in northern Alberta, they would go looking for more trees, and that would take them into the boreal forest that arches across our province and right across Canada. Because these beetles threaten our nation's forestry sector as a whole, the provincial government of the day lobbied the federal government to assist with funding for the fight and placed particular emphasis on controlling any infestation in its national parks located in Alberta.

It should not have surprised either level of government when Jasper's trees started turning the telltale reddish orange colour a few years ago, but our provincial government is acting surprised, which, I suppose, is the reason for this motion. Our provincial NDP government and the federal Liberal government should have been working hard all along to be proactive about the beetles' inevitable march east. Because their lack of action is such a large oversight on the part of our provincial government, I thank the member for bringing this motion forward. I'm sorry, not for myself but for the communities and the industries being devastated by this ferocious beetle, that it has taken this government three and a half years to figure out that the insect is a terrible threat.

Everyone along the foothills from Pincher Creek north to Hinton and Hythe and Rainbow Lake have known it for over a decade. Yet what did our provincial government do? Last year it actually cut the budget for the mountain pine beetle control program. You don't have to believe me. Let me quote from the mountain pine beetle action plan for the central and Foothills mountain pine beetle planning regions. "In 2017-18, the GoA allocated $25 million to MPB control programs across the province, down from $35 million" the year before.

You get the picture. In the midst of a continuing crisis, one that the former government and industry have been proactive on for years, our current government cut funding. This is at a time when the beetles had moved into Jasper national park and were showing up in the foothills outside the park, namely the Hinton area. When the beetles arrived in the national park, it was critical that the province turn its attention there and be proactive. Let up our guard for one moment or three and a half years, and all could be lost. I feel terrible for the people of Hinton and Edson that this tide of beetles is coming down upon them. But I've seen the effectiveness of the proactive measures in the Grande Prairie area. I know they can be effective. You cannot just sit back, however, and jump in and save the day once they have a hold on the forest. That's why Jasper is in such dire shape now. The federal government announced funding to cut thousands of trees around the Jasper townsites just a short time ago. Until then it ignored the problem, and now it's not if there's a fire in Jasper; it's when.

Of everything I've seen over the past three and a half years with this current government and its mixed-up priorities, this one perhaps baffles me the most. All it had to do was continue the good work that was started by the previous government in concert with the forest industry. Instead they almost abandoned it, and now even its own members have to provide it with direction through the Legislative Assembly to do the right thing. For that reason, I will support this motion, which shouldn't have been necessary. Let's hope it hasn't come too late.

In my area years ago I flew with the government of Alberta. They had forestry people and the industry in the area, and they would spot pine beetles in the helicopter. You could see little infestations. They would go in as a company and remove them and control them. I remember flying. There's nothing worse than flying in a helicopter with a bunch of foresters and one says, "Look down here," and the other one says, "There," and the helicopter pilot is flopping from one side to the other. I told him that he'd better fly straight or he'd have a mess to clean up.

I know they've been working hard at it over the years. I know it's not the provincial government; it's the federal government that needs to do something, and I know the province has to keep pushing them. Jasper is a gem in our province for tourism, but if we burn the thing black, it's not going to be that much of a gem, I have to say. Last year we saw what happened in B.C. after all the pine beetle trees get so old and so dry. It's just like Mother Nature's kindling waiting for a spark, and once it starts, you can't stop it. I'm really worried about the Hinton and Edson forest and their forest companies.

Once again, I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing it forward. I'll be supporting this motion, and I encourage everyone in the House to do so as well. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I, too, am pleased to hear about this motion on the devastation, that needs to be addressed in a more active fashion. Again, I am a bit surprised that it has to come from a member when this is the job of government. But that having been said, anything we can do to increase the public support, the government support, the pressure on the federal government is a recognition that this is a very sophisticated attack that has resisted all efforts across the country, across the continent at control. It's part of, you know, the ongoing challenge that we have with organisms, whether it's in the health care system or it's in the natural environment. It's going to require some real vision and leadership.

I'm familiar, in the southern part of the province and the eastern slopes, with the spruce budworm infestation and how much damage that has brought to the eastern foothills in the spruce population. It's devastated a lot of the southern eastern slopes all the way, in fact, to Saskatchewan, across the prairies, and we haven't managed to make much of a dent there either.

I guess I have a question for the minister on the extent to which our planning includes a replanting, a reforestation with resistant populations. To what extent are we simply trying to control a pest which appears not to be controllable given the climatic changes and the lack of armaments that we have to destroy the beetle in its various stages? I would hope that there's an active replanting process going on to develop the undergrowth and to maintain the living systems that will resist not only that particular pest but also, as I mentioned, the spruce budworm, which is out of control in the southwest of this province.

What is being done to ensure that we have resistant plants, trees, other species going in there that will take over for what is seriously going to affect not only the eastern slopes and the parks but also our water supply and, as the member has mentioned, the fire risk? It's going to affect our tourism. It's going to affect, certainly, the recreation opportunities for our population. It has pretty widespread impacts. Focusing on the beetle is one thing, but focusing on the next generation of plants and regeneration that has to happen and whether it's well planned and well implemented: that is the question. Reacting to this devastating thing has shown itself to be relatively simply slowing its spread. It's a relatively ineffective approach to actually stopping and containing it. We need to have a plan B to regenerate and restore new forests and new opportunities both for the industry and for water protection on our eastern slopes and for fire protection.

I don't know if the minister is able to speak to that, but I'd be very interested to know if that's happening as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a privilege to stand in this House and speak, and today is, of course, no exception as we speak to the private member's motion by Edmonton-Manning. It reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work with municipal and federal government counterparts to address the impact of the mountain pine beetle on our national parks and tourism and forestry industries.

Now, as my colleague said, I'm not sure where this comes from, but as an opposition member and the shadow minister of forestry I'm happy to stand and support this motion. I will have no problem whatsoever supporting this private member's motion. What we have seen in Alberta in recent years is a prolific influx of the mountain pine beetle. In 2006 and 2009 significant in-flights of mountain pine beetles in Alberta occurred. These particular influxes of this nasty pest resulted in mountain pine beetle infestations getting into parts of northern Alberta that had never seen this insect before. I think that we all remember that in the years prior to 2006 we were told by I guess they would be called experts at the time that the spreading of the mountain pine beetle from British Columbia to Alberta over our famous Rocky Mountains would never occur. Those same experts also believed that Alberta's colder climate, certainly northern Alberta's colder climate, would not be suitable for habitation by the mountain pine beetle. Clearly, the experts of the day were absolutely and, unfortunately, misinformed or incorrect.

But it's always prudent, I think, to consider facts when we talk about these kinds of topics, so here's a fact. The mountain pine beetle has destroyed essentially 40 per cent of the British Columbia forests. It's dead and it's dying wood. The forests destroyed in British Columbia by this pest are at the root of the creation of wildfire threats in that province. British Columbia's mixed forests are made up of approximately 40 per cent pine. The rest is about 50 per cent spruce and 10 per cent fir. This is all just pretty close, nothing too terribly nailed down here, but I would expect that there's probably some balsam thrown in there somewhere as well. But the point is that 70 per cent of B.C.'s pine, which, remember, makes up 40 per cent of their entire forest, has been destroyed by this beetle. This is a problem of monstrous proportions for British Columbia and, in my humble opinion, has not been handled appropriately in order to keep this pest in check.

Now it's moved into Alberta, and we're seeing a whole lot of our own grief being created by this mountain pine beetle. Now, this small, little creature remains a very serious threat to the health of Alberta's forests. As we have seen in B.C., infestations threaten social, economic, and environmental values. Infestations cause older wood to dry up. At that point the canopy closes, and the trees lose the lower branches that aren't getting sunlight anymore, which, in turn, creates an excellent propellant for potential fires. Let us not forget that dying or dead trees no longer absorb carbon; they actually emit carbon. Their usefulness in the big picture of a forest is nonexistent. Elimination of trees that are of this calibre and trees that are affected by the mountain pine beetle in conjunction with replanting at an unprecedented effort is about the only way to make a forest healthier, to make mountain parks' forests healthier.

If we look in our own backyard, one of the reasons for the Fort McMurray fire was that we had all this old and dying wood. Now, forests naturally want to try and regenerate themselves, but in the instance of the Fort McMurray fire the wood was, once again, old. The canopy above was all green while trying to regenerate, but the wood below it was dried out, once again creating lots of fuel for a fire to get out of control.

In B.C. the pine beetle problem started in overprotected forests, where the trees were allowed to become, once again, old and weak. It's become clear that in order to protect forests and protect communities within forests and protect human life, it's very important that forests are not allowed to get quite to that stage. It's been suggested by some experts in the field that Alberta should take control of its forests and set aside areas that have older wood that is nonproductive, of little ecological value, and starting to absorb less carbon. The idea would be to harvest those areas, then use seasonal workers such as students, for instance, to increase the amount of timber areas through planting seedlings. A sustainable forest actually needs to have more trees that are being grown than are being cut down.

It is imperative that the province of Alberta continue to develop a coherent and cohesive strategy to combat the spread of mountain pine beetle, including co-operative efforts with other levels of government. Now, this intergovernmental co-operation must be a critical part of any strategy of Alberta's, particularly when it comes to the federal government and Jasper national park. Now, we know that Alberta has had an action plan to fight the oncoming effect of the mountain beetle since 2010, but clearly a plan such as this does not appear to be able to exist on a basis that is independent of efforts that need to be taken with national parks.

I hope we all know that mountain pine beetles have not yet and never will be constrained by boundaries between federal and provincial jurisdictions. Pine beetles care little about those borders. A question I would have of most people in this building is: when was the last time they drove through Jasper national park? The majestic pine trees, that make up a huge portion of that area, have been affected and infected by the mountain pine beetle by a percentage of about 50. The fact is that the area affected by the beetle is nearly doubling each year according to resource conservationists, and if you have driven through the park recently, you cannot help but notice the affected areas, that have turned an unnatural bright red. As the members have spoken about here this afternoon, that has spread now into the Edson area.

Practices in the past with this national park have been to extinguish fires, which, as I mentioned earlier, have allowed the forests to become more dense, become older, become weaker, which has allowed the quicker spread of the pine beetle. Before humans of any consequence were here, lightning strikes would start wildfires in forests, and they would just burn up that old wood. Like it or not, it was nature's way of invigorating and rejuvenating its forests.

Just as a quick aside here, current forestry management practices do their best to mimic what forest fires used to do. What these current harvesting methods result in is a forestry area that more closely resembles what a landscape would look like after a fire. A common misconception is that the current practices remove all of the trees when, in fact, many retention areas are left. This also allows for better regrowth of the forest.

It needs to be noted that it is the law in Alberta that harvesting be done in a sustainable manner. Forest companies collect comprehensive data on how trees grow and inventory plant and animal life within that forest. All this data is used to determine how much can be harvested sustainably. Now, I recognize that sustainable harvesting can mean different things to different people, but to a forest company it means ensuring that more trees are being grown than are being cut down. It also means maintaining harvest levels in order to create jobs and sustain forest communities. Sustainable harvesting also takes into account maintaining wildlife habitat, air quality, and soil quality.

As we speak here, infestations of mountain pine beetle in Alberta exist within the central and foothills planning regions. However, without improved efforts for containment, other regions throughout our province could be at risk in the near future. More and more it appears that we simply cannot treat this issue as a provincial problem. Because of improper actions in British Columbia and in our national parks with regard to control practices of this mountain pine beetle, Alberta is now experiencing the pine beetle issue, that clearly transcends borders.

This issue is a national problem, and it needs a national strategy, and the need is now. If the pine beetle issue continues unabated and reaches into Saskatchewan, it could be one of the more devastating natural disasters that we have known. This is a good reason why Saskatchewan actually has chosen to contribute money to Alberta to fight the good fight for this problem.

As I wrap up this speech, I encourage all members of the Legislature to consider seriously the effects of the mountain pine beetle on Alberta's forests. I also encourage all members of this House to support this motion wholeheartedly. Our forests are in trouble, and this is a start to a very large task ahead of us. If this motion is passed, then it is critical that this government make this motion of this Legislature to be more than symbolic.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to take a few minutes to speak on this motion. Right at the start I guess I find it a little odd that we're here to do what it says here, which is to "urge the government to work with municipal and federal government counterparts to address the impact of . . . pine beetle on our national parks and tourism and forestry industries."

I guess I'm curious. We know that the government has been spending anywhere from $25 million to $35 million the last couple of years working on this issue. I'm a little curious as to why, with that much money being spent on it, the government isn't already working with municipal and federal governments. It doesn't appear, based on the motion, that there are any problems with the federal and municipal governments because otherwise we'd be urging them to deal with the provincial government. Obviously, I would think that the provincial government should be working with their counterparts already on this issue.

It does seem to be a bit of a strange thing that we're here talking about this today, but obviously it's good. The pine beetles, of course, don't know the boundaries of national parks or federal boundaries, municipal boundaries, anything like that. They go where they want to go, and this needs to be taken care of in a bigger scheme of things than just the province working on it alone. Like I say, I find it odd that the province would be working on this alone, but if that's the case, then I guess that would make this motion very, very important to deal with at this time.

You know, there are different things, I guess, with the national parks. Of course, they've been suppressing fires for years, and they obviously don't have clear-cutting there. Obviously, that's a prime area for the pine beetle to be working on, and we see the devastating effects in the national parks. Obviously, those are an important part of Alberta, the national parks, as far as tourism and that sort of thing. It's a beautiful part of Alberta, and to see the pine beetle devastating the forest there is not good, for sure.

You know, I'll be voting in favour of this motion. Hopefully, that gets the government working on what it should have been working on for years, which is working with the municipal and federal governments to address the impacts of the pine beetle.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to close debate.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to all members of the House for your comments in regard to this motion. I just wanted to clarify a few things. I have been working closely with the Alberta forestry producers associations, and one of the things that they have been saying whenever they see me is, of course: what is a city dweller so worried about trees for? So I just wanted to give a little bit of history about my background.

I actually grew up in a forestry community. The community that I grew up in was either forestry or fishing, so I spent a lot of time either on the water or in, you know, the forest, camping and doing different things like that. Because of that I recognize the contributions that our different forestry companies contribute to their communities. Without the forestry company that supported the community that I came from, we wouldn't have had fundraisers for our high school graduations because they always donated cords of wood so that we could sell the cords for people's fireplaces. They developed ecological systems that we could use to go camping or to go hiking or to do different things like that. So forestry has always been something that I've had a strong passion about.

Because of that, even though I live in Edmonton, I'm in Jasper in the winter a couple of times, and then in the summer my husband and I are out camping and hiking and doing different things as often as I possibly can within this position, to the point where every time we drive to Jasper, my husband says, "Yes, Heather, I know; there are pine beetles," because I'm always commenting on how green it was the last time we were here versus how red it is now. So this is a passion of mine.

I think part of the importance for me to have this motion brought forward is not only the fact that there's obviously a disconnect between what is happening in the national park and what is moving into the provincial area but that I really wanted to support the government and the minister and the party that I belong to, the government side, to really put some pressure on the federal government. I recognize that we've been doing the work that we need to do within the provincial context. We've been working with municipalities. The hon. colleague from West Yellowhead has been doing great work around that.

But the reality of it is that the federal government needs to step up and they need to come up with a plan. There are areas – Jasper we've specifically focused on, but, I mean, it's moving down into the corridor or into Banff. It's around Rocky Mountain House, down the David Thompson highway. There are lots of different areas within the province that are being impacted that, without the support of the federal government, will continue to spread. We have seen them provide money for other worms and bugs in the east specific to preventing the spread to some of the trees that are impacted in Ontario, so now it's time for them to do the same work here in Alberta.

I appreciate what the minister has done in his advocacy and his work, but I do recognize that there are groups within this province that have written letters to the federal government asking them to step up and put money towards this issue. For me this was my way of supporting the minister to do the work that he needs to do but also supporting our constituents in Alberta around something that I think is extremely important to many Albertans.

So I would encourage all of our colleagues in the House to please support the motion. Thank you very much.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I won't say that it's been an afternoon spent particularly productively, but it has been an afternoon spent. In particular, you know, I'd like to congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for her motion, which I think was very useful.

With that, I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:51 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. Hon. members, this is Veterans' Week, a time to remember the ultimate sacrifice paid by so many to give us the freedom to enjoy and exert our democratic rights, and as our neighbours south of the border head to the polls today, let's take a moment to reflect on the democratic system that brings us here to this Chamber and allows us to represent our constituents from all parts of Alberta.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 24

An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to move on behalf of the Minister of Health second reading of Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights.

Madam Speaker, physicians are a critical part of Alberta's health care system. They provide high-quality patient care, are committed to improving the health and well-being of all Albertans, and are leaders in keeping the health system sustainable in the long term. The proposed legislation recognizes the Alberta Medical Association as the representative for physicians who are authorized to practise in Alberta and provide publicly funded physician services. Proposed amendments would formalize the government's long-standing practice of working directly with the AMA on matters of physician compensation and physician programs. The amendments would also give physicians and the Alberta Medical Association clarity about their working relationship with government and Alberta Health Services.

We are proposing amendments to two pieces of legislation in the bill before us today, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act and the Regional Health Authorities Act. Amendments to the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act would mean that when government consults on the rates of compensation for Alberta's physicians, the AMA will be the exclusive representative of physicians. Proposed amendments will also make the AMA the nonexclusive representative for physicians on other health-related matters that touch and concern physicians such as team-based care or how best to use information technology within the health care system. Making the AMA a nonexclusive representative for physicians means that government may speak to other stakeholders besides the AMA about these matters.

Through amendments to the Regional Health Authorities Act Alberta Health Services will recognize the AMA as the exclusive representative for negotiating certain service agreements with groups of physicians. The proposed legislation doesn't change existing processes between government and the AMA and doesn't give the AMA new powers or abilities. General representation rights have largely been within the current AMA agreement since at least 2003 but will now be enshrined in legislation. Alberta

Health Services has recognized the Alberta Medical Association's representation rights under contract since 2016, but now through amendments in Bill 24 they will be enshrined in legislation, and the scope will be expanded.

Madam Speaker, we are very fortunate to have some of the most talented doctors in North America here in Alberta, and I have had the pleasure of working with many of them, people like Dr. Garnette Sutherland, a neurosurgeon who was awarded the Order of Canada for his outstanding contribution to neurosurgery and was inducted into the Space Technology Hall of Fame for his role in developing an image-guided neurosurgical robot called neuroArm. Dr. Sutherland and I used to try to one-up each other on who had the best evidence on surgical site preparation in order to avoid postoperative wound infection, and it was truly an honour to work with such a brilliant yet humble doctor.

I'd like to use a bit of an analogy on why I'm supporting Bill 24 and why I sought to be a cosponsor of this legislation. By way of explanation, one of the roles for nurses in the operating room, where I used to work, is to be a scrub nurse. The scrub nurse sets up the sterile instruments and hands them back and forth to the sterile field. Scrub nurses sometimes set up two gigantic tables' worth of instruments, very complicated instruments that can be stacked on top of one another. The scrub nurse has to know each and every instrument and how they're used. Since the scrub nurse knows these procedures so well, they'll often be ready to hand the next instrument before the surgeon even asks for it because the scrub nurse is observant, knows what's going on, and can anticipate the next move.

But from time to time a surgeon will sometimes accidentally ask for a different instrument than what the nurse is about to hand them. In reality, the nurse is actually handing them the correct instrument, but they've asked for something different. So sometimes there are these moments of levity, where the surgeon will make a bit of a quip. They'll say: give me what I want, not what I ask for. It's kind of a funny situation in surgery if you can imagine such a thing. But in the case of Bill 24, Madam Speaker, our government is giving doctors what they want and what they ask for. So here we're satisfying the physicians in terms of the things that they've been asking for and the things that they want.

I've been proud to work alongside doctors for much of my clinical career, and I'd like to thank the Alberta Medical Association and all the physicians for working collaboratively with the government to meet Albertans' health care needs and for helping to create a health care system that is the best it can be. This legislation was a commitment the government made as part of the recent agreement with doctors, and now we're fulfilling that commitment.

I'd like to encourage all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support second reading of Bill 24, and I look forward to debating this bill with my hon. colleagues in the days to come. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. The bill looks relatively harmless at a glance, but we need to be reading in between the lines. I believe that we should be referring this bill to committee for further study so that we have time for consultation with more stakeholders. Certainly, I don't have the benefit that you guys do of knowing about these bills ahead of time. I'm still trying to reach out to the AMA, to the college, to all the other affected parties just to get their feedback on these things, so certainly more time would be appreciated.

Now, Madam Speaker, 89 per cent of voting members ratified the agreement that led to the creation of this bill, and those numbers are great. But what they forgot to mention is that only 30 per cent of all AMA members actually voted. Now, you might think that that was an election in Fort McMurray, but it was not. That's within the college. But those numbers aren't great. The legislation is entrenching the Alberta Medical Association as the exclusive representative for physicians in all compensation or benefit matters, and I feel that more than 30 per cent of members should be weighing in on this very impactful agreement. All doctors will have to settle with the agreement that is negotiated by the government and the AMA. Therefore, anyone who has not had a chance to voice his or her opinion, whether in favour of the agreement or against: they need to be heard.

That brings me to my next issue, Madam Speaker. Why do physicians have the right to opt out of the AMA, but they have to accept the terms agreed upon regarding salary? What is the point of allowing physicians to opt out? Why are physicians unable to choose who they want to represent them or to simply represent themselves? As we know, this government does not allow any form of free speech amongst its ranks, but that does not mean that they must enforce that on our health care providers.

Now, do not get me wrong, Madam Speaker. I believe the AMA does great work representing physicians. They make sure that physicians are advocated for and ensure that the highest standard of care is being administered across the province. But they should not be the exclusive bargaining power. We live in a western democracy, and we deserve freedom of association.

While I was grateful to see that existing contracts would be respected, I'm still troubled by the exclusive rights this bill is giving the AMA. This bill essentially creates a superunion for physicians. It's creating a large negotiating power that will be putting pressure on the government. While it will not be recognized as a union, it will be able to use some of the same tactics. As we know, unions are excellent at bargaining for higher wages for their members. At a time of attempted fiscal restraint in health care we have to be cautious of the powers that we're bestowing on others.

Madam Speaker, $5.3 billion: that was the number that was allocated for physicians in the latest fiscal budget. Five point three billion dollars. Our physicians already make some of the highest wages in the country. We can't afford a spike in physician compensation, which this bill could lead to.

That said, though, there is one area where I can agree with this government's bill, and that is the fee freeze until 2021. The government has pegged $98 million in savings in health care costs because of this bill. Great. You do know a little bit of something about fiscal responsibility. Very little, but good on you.

But what about the long-term costs? How will this bill affect the ability to negotiate in the future? How will this affect our future generations? You guys haven't put that factor into any of your calculations when running up our debt and deficits.

In addition to the AMA pact, recent deals with the United Nurses of Alberta and the Health Sciences Association of Alberta have included two years of pay freezes while a new framework for dentists and pharmacists featured fee decreases. I hope the physicians are looking very closely at what happened to the pharmacists, Madam Speaker. For the pharmacists, with their issues over the last year, when they went to negotiations with the government, they only allowed two of the representatives into the meeting. They had to sign nondisclosure agreements, so they couldn't even share the information about what they signed with their own members. Transparency, accountability: things that this government lacks. Now the AMA is just going right down that alley, so good luck to them if this is something that they helped create. They should recognize what a nondisclosure agreement is. They should recognize the bargaining tactics of this government and recognize what could happen to them. So they have been warned.

Does this minister plan to take the same steps for all medical practices in Alberta? That's the question. Will all medical professions soon be forced into a negotiation body that they may or may not want to join? What regulations are being hidden that will actually make negotiation with the AMA more expensive down the road? This bill has a lot of unknowns, and we do need some answers, so we're certainly looking to this government, who is trying to demonstrate that they're transparent and accountable, to share information with us so that we can make an educated choice on this bill.

This government continually passes legislation without doing their due diligence, and we will not let that happen again. Consultation: we've been trying to teach it to you for the last three and a half years. You kind of got it in bits and pieces. It depends on what the subject matter is. It depends on what you like and what you don't like.

I'm curious: what stakeholders did this government reach out to? I'd be interested in knowing what the college of physicians, what the nurses, what the other health professions think of this legislation, how it will impact all of them. We need more time to go through this bill, Madam Speaker. As I said, I don't believe the government has done its due diligence in studying the implications of this bill.

That said, I do have questions for the government side. You have teams of staff behind the scenes that can probably come up with a lot of these answers. I guess I would like to know more about the compensation that our physicians receive. I honestly thought that it was because we had one health organization, Alberta Health Services, physicians would more or less get paid consistent fees for all of the services that they provide, much in the way that dentists have their fee schedule and that sort of thing. I would like clarification on how different physicians in what places get paid differently and for what reasons.

I can understand, maybe, physicians in our far northern communities receiving some sort of financial benefit for working in a northern community, but I'd certainly like to know how much. Up in, say, Fort McMurray for many years the common number that was being thrown out by companies, by the municipality, by small businesses as a living allowance for their people was about a thousand dollars, but it did not matter what profession you were in. If you worked for these companies in general, you were getting that, including the hospital and all that.

Again, I'm curious as to: what is the financial disparity between the fees that are charged through our physicians? If there's anyone there – I'm looking at the good doctor. Maybe Edmonton-Whitemud could provide me with some explanations. I'd certainly like to understand that. It would be disappointing to know that a physician was able to negotiate a higher wage or fee for himself at one point. I might give him credit for that, but I'd also wonder about the balance and the fairness if they're all working under the same mandate.

I don't know if you guys remember when I was bringing up some questions about the WCB. You know, I don't know how much you guys are aware of how they use our own physicians. They contract them out, and it's for, like, 800 bucks more for an operation. The doctor I'm speaking with says that, yeah, he goes in there. He hires his team around him. The next time he's working in the OR, he's like: "Hey, guys, I've got a gig this Sunday. It's at Leduc hospital.

It's a minor hip. He's just got some spurs in there that we've got to take out. Any of you guys available?" He talks to his anesthesiologist. The anesthesiologist says, "Yeah, I can do that." A couple of the nurses: "Yeah, sure, we can do that." That's his team, and on Sunday at whatever, 10 o'clock they go in there, an Alberta Health facility, and do a private surgery. It does not compute, does it? I get a lot of blank stares from across the way. It's disappointing. Again, if you guys could provide some clarity on a lot of this, that would be wonderful so that we can see what the different physicians are getting.

An article from the Edmonton Journal stated that part of the agreement was to also end the retention program. Previously the program paid physicians between $5,000 and $12,000 as an incentive for each year they stayed in the province, and this is where a majority of the savings will be found. It will not be found from the freeze in fee increases but from the cancellation of this program that incentivizes physicians to stay in Alberta. While I'm all about cleaning up our health system, certainly I'm in agreement that a fund like this is unnecessary in this day and age. We can't afford to give extra. These physicians are working in a province and a nation that are beneficial to them and their families. They do not have to worry about certain extraneous things.

For example, my good friend who works for Shell just got transferred to Iraq. He had a choice of Texas or Iraq because Shell, as you guys know – you chased them away – is fleeing Canada. They've got their refinery here, but he had a choice. He got moved from Fort McMurray to Fort St. John, up in B.C., and now they're moving him out of the country. Texas or Iraq, they said. And he figures he had an equal chance of getting shot in either place, but Iraq pays more money, so that's where he's going.

My point is that we aren't under threat here and that any physician that chooses to make Alberta their home will have good schools and good postsecondary institutions. We have a good life. Unfortunately, crime is up, but that's also related to our depressed economy, that you guys put us in. Again, it's an incentive that I don't think we need, so I'm glad to hear that they cut out that incentive. But I am curious if that affects some of our physicians in some of our more rural areas and northern areas – I don't know if those are the ones that are getting a little bit extra – in which case that might be an aspect to consider because we do have to continue to promote good health professionals in our areas where we have more difficulty accessing those health professionals.

I'm pleased to hear that the AMA advocated for rural Alberta, from my understanding. The government often forgets everything outside of Edmonton and Calgary unless it's election time, so it's good to see. Included in the agreement was a rural northern program that provides up to $60,000 a year to doctors who serve in the small communities as well as a business cost initiative that provides a maximum of $146 per day to community physicians to help with overhead. Oh, goodness, I answered my own question here. So there is a little bit of an incentive for our rural people. Part of this agreement is great, and I'm glad the AMA did fight for the rural areas. However, I digress.

This bill ultimately creates a large negotiating body under which all other physician unions must negotiate. The minister recognizes the AMA as the exclusive representative regarding physicians' compensation matters, which will include rates of benefit payable for the provision of insured services by a physician and any funding for physician assistants programs. The act does say that Alberta Health Services is not required to recognize the AMA as the exclusive representative of these groups: managerial services, services provided by resident physicians or fellows when acting in that capacity, and any other services or classes of services prescribed by the regulations.

Again, with all the regulations, Madam Speaker, this government has a hidden agenda with this bill. Everything we need to know is in the regulations. Why is the government refusing to share all the information with us? Again I plead with you guys to provide us with some information. If you want us to support this bill, we need more data, more information, more statistics. I'd like to be in on those conversations you have with the physicians to understand all the nuances of it, certainly, but it is completely unacceptable that this government thinks we will let a bill pass without having all the information. We represent all Albertans here. We need to do our due diligence. If we don't support something, it's not because we necessarily disagree with the underlying issue that you wish to address, but we need to make sure that all facets of that bill are figured out so that we can support Albertans in every way. Otherwise, you risk people falling through the cracks one way or another. Some people might benefit; other people might have a detrimental result from it.

The government also says that this bill will give the AMA new powers. However, this legislation makes the AMA the exclusive representative when governments consult physicians and other health professional unions on compensation and benefits. If they are not given any new powers, why do we need this bill?

There are numerous unknowns in this bill, Madam Speaker, and I do find that troubling. Again, it's about the details. I hope that this government will listen to our concerns and will do the appropriate consultations and research in order to truly understand the possible implications of this bill. While there may be short-term savings from the original agreement struck with the AMA, how does this affect our future negotiations? Could this result in soaring health care costs? We all can agree that we need to rein in and get control of our health care costs. Alberta pays some of the highest rates per capita in the country. Again, our health care rates are substantially more than everywhere else. We're paying approximately 20 per cent more per capita than British Columbia. That does not mean that we're going to cut 20 per cent, let us be clear, but we need to rein some things in. We mustn't be complacent. We must do our due diligence and ensure that Albertans are getting the best possible deal.

My biggest worry: in some other jurisdictions physicians, believe it or not, have actually done strikes. That's the part that greatly concerns me about this empowerment of physicians under the AMA. I'm kind of curious. Heaven forbid a physician strikes. I would call him out on his licence. I seriously would. When we have people that are suffering and in pain and are dealing with debilitating diseases and physical processes, we need our physicians. We rely on them. That is why they get compensated so well, quite honestly. So heaven forbid they take typical Dipper action like a strike. Heaven forbid.

We mustn't be complacent on these things. We need to do our due diligence. We need to ensure that Albertans are getting the best possible deal. We can't afford to make the wrong decision on this bill as the quality of our health care and the health of Albertans are at risk. As I've previously stated, Madam Speaker, we need more time to work through this bill and assess its short-term and long-term implications. There are too many unanswered questions that need to be clarified through consultation and research.

With that, I would ask: certainly, if this government doesn't want to share any of the information that they have – and I look to the nurse across the way; perhaps she can provide me with some insight – ultimately I have to do my own consultations on this. Our team has to do our own consultations, and we're trying to get those consultations done, but it's very hard when you guys don't give us much time. You don't give us much of a heads-up on what these bills actually are, and that's disappointing. Transparency, accountability: those are the things that you are trying to pride yourselves on, but I recognize that you don't have a big vocabulary and that those aren't in there.

Unfortunately, we can't leave it up to this government. You're going to need our help, so give us some time to do this and, again, provide us with some information. Maybe we can ensure that you have a well-balanced bill that ensures the intent that you guys are trying to get across. Certainly, I'd love to hear from the health professionals across the way, now bureaucrats.

Madam Speaker, I want to thank you so much for this opportunity to speak. It's always a pleasure. I look forward to the debate that we'll have today on this particular bill. I look forward to hearing what the opinions are. If you guys can provide me with any of that information, I'd love to hear it, but I'm guessing not. We shall see.

Thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to rise to speak in support of this bill. I have a tremendous respect for our physicians, who work so hard for all of us right across Alberta and provide such an important and integral part of our health care system. You know, as a nurse for many years I worked with them and certainly can speak to working with physicians in rural Alberta. In rural Alberta it's a huge challenge for them. They're there for the entire community. They are on call on a regular basis. It's a small team that works together to ensure coverage of a community, and they have to be everything to their community. There are no specialists in a small town. They can refer out, but they have a tremendously important role to the people within small northern communities in particular and, of course, obviously, throughout every size of program across the province.

You know, I'm really thankful for the conversations we've been able to have with the AMA regarding how we can continue to move forward with a sustainable health care system in the long term for Albertans, and I'm thankful to them for being a valuable partner. Part of that is addressing the fact that, going back to rural Alberta, we have a tremendous shortfall of physicians in northern Alberta and, in fact, in all rural Alberta. All of my colleagues from rural Alberta can definitely speak to that. That shortage is something that we need to work together to address. Certainly, as government we need to do that, but we also need the AMA to be a partner with us in making that happen, in the kind of collaborative conversations that we need to have to come up with the solutions that we need long term to ensure that rural communities have access to the kind of medical care that they need for the health and well-being of their families.

Madam Speaker, you would know that it's a huge issue for the sustainability of our rural communities when we have challenges around physician recruitment. You know, when people can't count on knowing that when they need access to medical care, it will be there, that makes them consider exactly where they want to live. It's an important part of the sustainability of rural Alberta. The kind of collaborative relationship we've been able to develop with the AMA allows us to have the conversations about dealing with this very important issue, so I'm so thankful for the fact that we've been able to get to a position with the AMA to have these conversations and to develop the kind of working relationship we've got.

What we're talking about here, ensuring that the AMA is the representative for physicians, is not a change, Madam Speaker. You know, sometimes legislation gets behind the times, and it's time for us to update it and reflect what the practice actually is. The practice has been, since at least 2003, that this is the case, that when it comes to talking about physician pay, the AMA is the representative for physicians. It's not a change; it's just putting practice into legislation, which is something that makes sense. It's ensuring that the law reflects what's actually happening and is current and up to date.

Most importantly, it acknowledges and validates that relationship that we have with the AMA and our partnership and our respect for physicians. They truly are a critical part of Alberta's health care system. They provide incredibly high-quality care. They work in partnership with other health care providers to provide that care right across this province, and I'm proud to have worked with a number of incredible physicians over my time while I was a nurse. You know, I'm proud to support them in the House to continue to be able to do that great work, and I certainly will continue to support a collaborative relationship with the AMA, which is going to mean that ongoing we have a sustainable presence of physicians in our communities across rural Alberta so that communities such as Slave Lake and High Prairie and Wabasca and Peerless Lake and Trout Lake and all of the communities that I represent in northern Alberta continue to have access to the high-quality medical services that they need now and into the foreseeable future.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. Bill 24 is a big deal. This bill matters greatly even though it is a very short bill, only about 12 pages long. Bill 24 establishes the Alberta Medical Association as a negotiating body, similar to a union, under which all other professional health unions must negotiate. Bill 24 makes the AMA the exclusive representative of physicians on any compensation matters but also gives the AMA the power to represent any group under regional health authorities if the majority of that group formally expresses that wish. That means that lab technicians, nurses, ambulance drivers, and paramedics could one day be represented by the AMA. Alberta Health Services is not required to recognize the AMA as the exclusive representative of these groups: managerial services, services provided by residents or fellows when acting in that capacity, and other services or classes of services prescribed by the regulations.

There is that magical word again, Madam Speaker, "regulations." Just what does the minister have drafted for regulations flowing out of Bill 24 that we are not allowed to see before Bill 24 passes? Regulations are how cabinet gets around bringing changes in law to the Legislature to be voted on. They just do it at the cabinet table. I hope the NDP knows what they are doing here so that they are not infringing on the inherent freedom of association.

Of the 30 per cent of AMA members who voted on this bill, only 26.7 per cent of members overall ratified it, 89 per cent of voting members. Only 30 per cent of AMA members voted on this bill. That is a concern. That is horrible voter turnout. That should bring concern to all of us, that we need to possibly reach out to those that were not participating in this vote to understand their position on this also. I am concerned that we have underrepresentation in this vote and that there could be another opinion out there that would not be in agreement with the direction that the AMA members that voted on this directed their association to go forward on.

But the beauty of Bill 24 is that it standardizes funding for physicians across the province – gone will be the days of two doctors doing the same job and making vastly different salaries in the same province – working towards equal pay for equal work. All of the current compensation contracts will be respected, but once they are over, all doctors fall under the AMA umbrella.

The NDP believes that this bill is going to help save the health care system $98 million and that there will be no fee increases between 2019 and 2021. I would like to see the math on the $98 million in savings. I've seen other estimates by this government on savings that could possibly come to our health care system, yet we see that we continually are increasing the cost of health care, with a continual decrease in the level of service from our health care system. Although the NDP might believe that we will be saving $98 million, I'm not convinced. I am not convinced. That is certainly good news, if we can save $98 million, for those of us who are trying to stabilize health care spending in this province and trying to find ways to do it more efficiently and more effectively.

Any doctor who chooses to opt out of the AMA cannot be represented by another body or themselves, so there goes that freedom of association again. Now the neurosurgeons can't be going out on their own and getting a different agreement than the cardiologists, who would want a different one than general practitioners in family medicine. I hope that all members of the AMA are fully aware of the implications of falling under one association that's doing their negotiating for them. If a doctor can choose to opt out of representation by the AMA but they are still bound by the collective negotiated agreement, wouldn't that mean that there is no reason to opt out if they are still tied by the agreement?

Bill 24 also entrenches the agreement framework between the AMA and the Ministry of Health in legislation. The government's hands will be tied in future negotiations as they must follow the framework laid unless they change those conditions through legislation again. That means changes to physician compensation won't come easy. It will require an act of the Legislature if those changes lie outside of the framework. That could seriously mess up health care reform if an enterprising government chose to undertake such a massive task.

Madam Speaker, I also understand that Bill 24 legislates the sharing of information between the AMA and AHS, Alberta Health Services.

Part of the agreement the NDP government struck with the AMA that resulted in this bill here today was to end the physician retention program. Previously the program paid physicians between $5,000 and $12,000 as an incentive for each year they stayed in the province of Alberta. I wonder what effect this cancellation could possibly have on rural Alberta. Could there be some unintended consequences buried in Bill 24 and the agreement with the AMA? You know, I reflect on the health care delivery in my constituency through the towns of Barrhead, Westlock, Morinville and on some of the difficulties that they've encountered trying to attract physicians into the rural area. We wouldn't want to see unintended consequences buried in Bill 24 that would inhibit the ability for physicians, doctors, to be attracted to those areas.

The questions around Bill 24 are many, and I'm afraid the time that we have here in this Legislature just won't be sufficient to answer all of them. I'm not sure that we have the ability in this process to actually get all the answers that we need, to hear from all the people that will be affected by Bill 24. Therefore, I'm thinking that Bill 24 may need to be sent to a committee for a short study. The Minister of Health could come in with her deputy minister and the president of Alberta Health Services and answer all of our questions. Also, the president of the AMA could come in and take questions. We could also possibly get input from the United Nurses to give their opinion on this going forward, some of the pitfalls or the benefits that they might be able to identify that are within Bill 24.

Madam Speaker, the first glance here seems okay, but the devil is in the details, and I'm not certain that we are getting all of the details here. I know we are, as an Official Opposition caucus, reaching out to stakeholders to try and get some feedback from them. The people in the front lines and on the ground always are able to identify more easily the benefits and the pitfalls with any legislation that comes forward, so it's important to get that input from them. Has this government fully consulted with all stakeholders, or is their consultation just done with the negotiations with the AMA as an entity? It would concern me if that was the limitation that they had or if that's the limit of their engagement with the profession, with the association. Did they get all of the information necessary to make good decisions here, or are they relying on one association's opinion at this point in time?

While my colleagues and I are reaching out and consulting here, Bill 24 is riddled with unknowns. I think we need to make sure that each and every member here understands the ramifications and to not just blindly vote the way your whip tells you to but that we all make a concerted effort to take a look at the bill and to reach out to stakeholders within our constituencies, stakeholders that will be affected by this legislation, to get their understanding or to get their perspectives with regard to Bill 24.

With that, Madam Speaker, I thank you for indulging my thoughts on Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak in favour of this bill. I think that it's really important, when government has a long-standing practice that seems to serve both parties involved, that there is a bit of a formalization of that relationship, and in many ways that is what An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights does.

As another hon. member noted, our government and previous governments have been negotiating exclusively with the Alberta Medical Association with respect to physician compensation for a great many years, going on 15 years, and I think that, you know, having systems like that codified so that both sides can have an understanding of what to expect is really important. It's a long-standing practice that government has had, and it doesn't change any of the existing processes between government and the AMA. It doesn't create new powers or abilities; it simply formalizes the existing practice.

I might also note that this is something that has come to during the course of the last round of negotiations with the Alberta Medical Association. It maintains the current scope of representation rights that the Alberta Medical Association has. It also kind of codifies what government will talk to about what. So when it comes to issues around physician compensation and benefits and things like that, then that conversation happens exclusively between government and the Alberta Medical Association. For other issues that impact physician working conditions, maybe interactions between doctors and other medical professionals, that is something that can be consulted on more broadly, and our government's policy has been to make sure that we're interacting with those other organizations as well.

I also want to comment on how I think this legislation will benefit individual physicians as well, because without an understanding of who it is that is representing them at the table with government when discussing important issues around salary and compensation – it's important for doctors to know who to turn to, and by formalizing this relationship, that really does provide that opportunity for individual physicians to reach out to their local AMA members, to maybe get a little more active in the association and be more involved members in their ongoing discussions both with the AMA and then, through the AMA, with government.

The two pieces of legislation being amended, of course: the Health Care Insurance Act and the Regional Health Authorities Act. It just basically sets out some of the existing relationships through those.

I do want to also take a moment to touch on the issue of the nonexclusive representation on other health matters. That refers to issues around team-based care, how to best use information technology in the health care system. What that means, then, is that government can work with the AMA on that as well as with the other stakeholders, whether that's the nurses' association or occupational therapists, nurse practitioners. It really allows for that well-rounded and interdisciplinary approach to these issues.

I would also note, though, that members opposite had some concerns with respect to rural physical recruitment, and I think that that's a really important issue. It's one that I know the Minister of Health takes very seriously. I can see why they would be concerned when in the past, with, you know, maybe contracts being imposed or cuts to health care budgets that didn't take into account impacts on smaller and rural communities, we did really see a number of physicians making decisions about where they wanted to live and where they wanted to practise. I think that making sure that we continue to have a respectful relationship with physicians and one where we recognize that we're all working together for the benefit of Albertans regardless of where they live and the benefits of working to ensure that Albertans have access to the health care that they need when they need it as close to home as possible is really critical.

I think the issues of rural recruitment, Madam Speaker, are really outside the scope of this bill, so I hope you'll indulge me for a moment to comment a little bit further on that. You know, the Ministry of Health is working very closely with both the AMA as well as RPAP, which in recent years has changed its name from rural physician action plan to be a more broad and more encompassing entity that also looks at the recruitment of nurse practitioners and other medical professionals that can meet the health needs of rural Albertans. Really, that's about bringing physicians and other health care practitioners to those rural areas but also supporting them when they're there. Through consultations with physicians and physician groups one of the messages is that it goes so much more beyond the dollars earned. It's also about the sense of community and that integration in community and feeling like you really belong. Anyone who's lived in a smaller community knows how that's just such an important part of the fabric of that community. Continuing to do that work through those two bodies and through different means is, I think, really critical and something that I know that the Minister of Health is deeply committed to.

I also wanted to take a moment to comment on why this legislation is necessary if it doesn't really change much. I mean, this is codifying the existing practice. Ultimately I think the reason that it is so important is that it really provides that clarity. It spells out for the AMA and for the physicians that it represents the working relationship between government via Alberta Health and through Alberta Health Services, the operator of the health care system. You know, those are two very distinct entities – I know there's some confusion sometimes around that – and ultimately making sure that it's clear who to talk to and when is a really important part of a labour relationship.

I think it's naive to pretend that the relationship between government and physicians is anything other than a labour relationship, ultimately. Through Alberta Health or Alberta Health Services, wherever that physician happens to be employed, sometimes a combination of both, the government is the employer of that physician or is paying for this through the schedule of medical benefits. They do often operate kind of in an independent contractor arrangement. Having that codification and understanding of where to go when one has particular questions is, I think, critically important and also, you know, as I said, formalizing that longstanding practice and letting people know that. I would add that it was an important piece for the Alberta Medical Association to be recognized in this way and to be representative for physicians who are authorized to practice in Alberta and those who receive publicly funded physician services.

As I wrap up, I also wanted to comment on another question that was hinted at or perhaps asked by the members opposite with respect to doctors. Of course, different physicians have different specialties, and within that there can be a range of annual compensation that a physician earns depending on what they're doing. All of that is set out through the schedule of medical benefits, which is, again, completely outside the scope of this current legislation and this bill that we're bringing forward. Ultimately that is something that's negotiated between the physicians through the AMA and with government. I think that by setting that out and making it clear that that's where those negotiations happen, it helps physicians to, again, know who to talk to, know where to express their concerns, but also to make sure that we're reflecting, you know, some of those differences in costs for specialties.

The cost of equipment for one type of specialty or the cost of training is different than in another, and I think that the work being done between the Ministry of Health and Alberta Health and the work between the Alberta Medical Association really does help to address that. In fact, that was where a great number of the savings with respect to physician compensation has come, through that negotiation around the rates of the schedule of medical benefits. Contrary to what was alleged by one of the previous members, we've actually seen a reduction in a number of billing codes as well as some changes to acknowledge the costs to the doctors as well as demands on particular specialties.

Ultimately our government really does enjoy a positive working relationship with the Alberta Medical Association and with doctors. I think that that's because we have entered that conversation respectfully, approached negotiations in a spirit of negotiation and a spirit of bargaining in good faith, which has not always been the case in Alberta and certainly wasn't the case in other jurisdictions, where doctors and government have failed to come to an agreement. I think that the Minister of Health is to be commended for the work that she's done on that.

With that, I will close my remarks and again just reiterate that I think this is a really great bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. As you know, this bill has just recently been tabled and suggests some pretty massive changes in the way that the AMA and the government will continue to have a relationship. You know, there are some good things and there are some bad things in any change of relationship with any organization and government. This bill seeks to do a number of good things, bad and good, or just maybe good and some concerns, I think, would be a better way to put that.

Madam Speaker, we know that this motion was passed by the Alberta Medical Association at 89 per cent approval of the members that voted, but we know that only 30 per cent of the members actually voted and participated. So I would say that that would suggest most certainly that that's not thorough consultation and perhaps maybe more needs to be done.

Madam Speaker, there are many things that I've learned over the last couple of years being a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, and one of those things I've learned is that government doesn't always get it right, quite often, I would say, not. I think that certainly reflects in the polling numbers that we're seeing nowadays. Polls are just polls, a snapshot of the day and time. You know, they'll change, I'm sure. I certainly think that members of the government are crossing their fingers in the hopes that they do. However, I've also learned that this government tends to have a difficult time consulting, so forgive me if I'm a little bit weary in taking the government's word for fact in this Legislature and not offering and bringing forward some concerns that I might have with this legislation.

I would say that from my first read-through of this bill, without having to actually do some consultant work myself, which I assure you I will endeavour to do, Madam Speaker, as I do with all legislation that comes forward to this House despite the time frame that we have and the lack, I would say, of fulsome debate in most cases – Certainly, there's an opportunity in committee where we could further investigate this bill, bring forward witnesses, and really feel confident in the process and in the potential passing of legislation that is the right thing, not the right thing for the government and its members and its election chances but the right thing for Albertans. Always, always, always we must remember that we need to do the right thing for Albertans, all Albertans, not just some of them.

This bill would suggest that members of the Alberta Medical Association would essentially be one bargaining unit with the government and that, most certainly, specialists, in particular, are not having a unique conversation with the government or those that are in charge. I would maybe like to understand a little bit more about that process and how some of those needs coming forward can be addressed, Madam Speaker, just specific cases, more certainly, knee surgeon specialists.

We have an increased wait time. Under the last few years of this government the wait time has increased despite their spending increases. You know, perhaps there should be, most certainly, a conversation with knee surgeons and hip specialists and the government about how to address these wait times and how to bring them down. I don't know if this bill allows for that provision to take place any longer. So that's maybe a concern, Madam Speaker, that I do have with this piece of legislation.

I think it's great that the government says that this agreement will save $98 million. That's excellent. I didn't know that the government believed that they could save money in the health care system without firing nurses and doctors, but they said that it's possible. The opposition has been saying that for a long time. It's good to see that the government may be taking talking points from the opposition yet again, ideas – that's great – and we've got lots more, and we'd be happy to share them with members of this Assembly, Madam Speaker.

I'm happy to see that this could potentially save some health care costs. There's nothing that has been addressed in terms of quality of health care and ensuring that that's maintained through this process, Madam Speaker, and I think Albertans are mostly concerned about the quality of our health care system. You know, Albertans pay a lot in taxes. Alberta spends a lot of money on health care, and we don't have great outcomes. I'm sure you can agree that quality of health care is absolutely a concern.

Madam Speaker, there are a lot of questions around this legislation that I'm hoping will be fleshed out through the course of this debate. I haven't really heard a lot of answers to some of the questions that my colleagues have been raising thus far, and in saying that, I'd like to move an amendment. I'll wait until you tell me to proceed.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading on Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representations Rights, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Madam Speaker, I have addressed some of the concerns that I have with this legislation that was just recently tabled and the time or lack thereof that the opposition has to thoroughly consult through this process. We always do our best, but I think the most appropriate place to delve into the facts and the relationships that are changing under this piece of legislation is in the Standing Committee on Families and Communities. I've been a member of that committee. I no longer am, but I was. And I was fortunate to be able to participate in a number of processes that brought in experts to our committee to testify, and it was amazing, the information that these people brought forward and the work that the committee did in creating a stakeholders' consultation list and that process.

With only 30 per cent of the AMA members actually voting on this motion, that did pass at 89 per cent, Madam Speaker, maybe the other 70 per cent of the AMA members were not aware or were not notified in time of what was taking place. If that's the biggest talking point for the government in terms of bringing this legislation forward, I think it's worth taking the time to delve into why that is what that is and perhaps open this up. I know that during the committee process we take out a number of ads to drum up interest – in the newspaper, on the radio, social media ads – to get that kind of feedback in there as well.

I will be participating in the college of physicians dine-and-dash event tomorrow, I believe, so I will certainly take that opportunity to ask the members at that event particularly about this piece of legislation. And if they have any concerns coming out of that, I will certainly be bringing that forward to this Assembly. So perhaps there'll be an amendment that I would see fit or the people of Airdrie.

Madam Speaker, I would certainly like to consult with the physicians in Airdrie and area. We have a great team. I've talked about the Airdrie doctors before, and they're doing fantastic things in our community, really genuine human beings that care, as I know most doctors do. But I would certainly invite them to participate in the committee process in terms of this legislation because they're the ones that are impacted.

But it's more than just physicians that are impacted by this legislation, like I alluded to earlier. It's the quality of health care, which is something that everybody in Alberta cares about. There are maybe, potentially, unintended consequences from this legislation, and that's something that could be fleshed out during the committee process, Madam Speaker. That's a good thing, right? Taking the time to get these things right is important for Albertans. I know that my children and the children in the community of Airdrie, more specifically, are the ones that give me the drive to ensure that our health care system is getting better for them.

There are a number of seniors in my community as well that rely on a good-quality health care system for their quality of life, not just in emergency situations, Madam Speaker, but the quality of life, right? Waiting 18 months for a hip replacement is 18 months of pain. Once you've gotten to that point, and then we say: wait 18 months, that's not good health care; that's sad. Our seniors don't deserve that. People in Alberta do not deserve to have a very poor quality of life because our government can't figure out how to get it right.

I appreciate, with this piece of legislation, Madam Speaker, that this would be an effort from the government to try and make it better. We see the cost savings that the government claims in their talking points, and that's a good thing, but we need to ensure that there isn't something we're not really thinking of – right? – when debate on legislation in this Assembly only consists of maybe two, three days, you know. Maybe next week, hopefully. There's the weekend to try and reach out and get some feedback.

Madam Speaker, there's danger of passing bad legislation. Nobody wants to pass bad legislation. I know the government doesn't want to pass bad legislation. We could figure that out in committee, for sure, absolutely. Put together a list of stakeholders recommended by all party members represented in the committee, agreed upon. It would have an array of information brought forward. I particularly think that all legislation should go through a committee process to just flush out the bad stuff.

Madam Speaker, could you imagine if Bill 6 went to committee, the farm legislation bill, back in the beginning? First of all, we were all new then. That would have been a fantastic learning process and exercise in democracy. There wouldn't have been thousands of people freezing outside as they were protesting the government legislation that did not include consultation. That would have been, I think, just great for all of us as legislators and most certainly for the people of this province.

So I think it's imperative that when we pass legislation to change the relationship between government and our physicians in this province, we take the time to get it right, we take the time to get all of the facts.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any speakers to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to rise in this House to speak to legislation that is important to Albertans. Of course, today is no exception as we speak to Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. Now, I wholeheartedly concur with my colleague from the fine constituency – is that what we're calling Airdrie now?

Mrs. Pitt: Most fabulous.

Mr. Schneider: Oh, the fabulous constituency of Airdrie.

I completely agree that this bill needs to be sent to committee for some fulsome and deliberate research.

Now, I have sat on the Alberta's Economic Future Committee since I got here in 2015. We certainly had a bill recently, Bill 201, a private member's bill that was sent to committee for research and to hear from stakeholders. Certainly, the members from this side of the House, certainly from our caucus, that were going to that committee to meet with stakeholders were very interested in hearing what the stakeholders may have had to say and whether they would be completely supportive or not. We were supportive when we got to that committee stage, but as we progressed and we had stakeholders come in and be very passionate about what their concerns were, we began to see that potentially there could be some more work done to Bill 201 that would be advantageous to all firefighters throughout the province.

That's a perfect example of why we need to send a bill to committee, and like my colleague from Airdrie said, not just this bill but certainly more than the bills that we do see get referred to committee. As she said – and she's right – things do get fleshed out that potentially were not put down on paper, that everyone could get a grasp on. So I'm all for sending this particular bill to committee as well.

Now, you might be wondering why we believe that it should be sent to committee. After all, from what we hear from the government, almost 90 per cent of the Alberta Medical Association's members have asked for this legislation. In fact, according to the president of the Alberta Medical Association's last missive there was a quote that said, "... a commitment to entrench physician recognition and representation rights within legislation." To me, and I think to the people in our caucus, it certainly sounds like they got what they wanted, which is interesting because I have no way of knowing that for sure as the president's message failed to say what kind of support the bill had among members.

Now, I certainly don't want to imply that I can't take this government at its word on this issue, but I just want to be a little bit realistic here. There are government members that spent the better part of their careers on this side of the House – they sat in opposition – and when bills came to the House that they were concerned about, they stood in some of these very same seats and made the same kind of request, that we need to get this bill to committee so we can further understand what it's all about. This is, I think, a four-page bill. When you sort through the meat and the chaff and the wheat and the straw, the pages that actually have some meaning on them add up to about four.

So if the roles were reversed, I wonder what the government members if they were sitting in opposition would be asking. Would they take the government at their word without saying a word? As the great conservative President Ronald Reagan once remarked, "Trust, but verify." It's a good piece of advice still today.

Now, to my understanding Bill 24 was brought forward as part of an agreement between the AMA and the government, a sort of negotiated gentlemen's agreement, it almost appears like, that in part was in return for bringing this legislation forward: the Alberta Medical Association agreed that doctors would receive no fee increases until 2021. This is where we see in our tech briefing notes that this looks like it leaves the government with a way for them to claim savings of $98 million in health costs.

What we also know is from an article in the Edmonton Journal from May 30 of this year entitled Alberta Doctors Agree to Fee Freezes in Two-year Deal with Province. Now, that particular article talks about the part of the agreement that was also to end the retention program. Previously that particular program paid physicians between $5,000 and $12,000 as an incentive for each year they stayed in the province. Hey, whatever works.

I've been involved in physician recruitment and retention committees for most of my municipal career, and I understand that sometimes you've gotta do whatever you've gotta do to get a doctor to come and, certainly, to get a doctor to stay. I wonder what physicians new to this province feel about that particular quid pro quo that they had to relinquish. Perhaps they don't have an issue with it. Then again, perhaps they do. That's kind of exactly what referring this piece of legislation to a committee could flesh out and give us a chance to find out, Madam Speaker.

I mean, it's not like this question is the only one that bothers – it's not bothering me but bringing me to some of these questions, and I know that my colleagues have got the same.

Here's another one. While that number of 89 per cent of Alberta Medical Association members is a significant number – 90 per cent is a huge number in any kind of discussion when we're talking about percentages – just how significant is that, I wonder, to interpretation? After all, 89 per cent of Alberta Medical Association members that voted supported the agreement that led to this bill; however, only 30 per cent of the Alberta Medical Association's total members voted. I would say that it's hardly a ringing endorsement, unless it was such a foregone conclusion that members didn't bother to vote, which is possible. But it sure would be nice to hear that for myself. I'm sure everyone that's got anything to do with this bill would love to hear that part from those that couldn't be bothered to show up. If they felt this was a foregone conclusion, they didn't feel that they had to vote. It would be nice to hear it from the horse's mouth, I guess, so to speak, Madam Speaker.

You know, we were handed this bill yesterday afternoon. We saw a very brief technical brief late last week, and here we are trying to speak to it today. This bill is a lot bigger than the four pages that actually have details of the bill written on them. My colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock said it was 12 pages, I think. I think there are 12 pages within there, but five of them have nothing on them, and one or two have page numbers on them. So I think I'm closer when I say it's closer to four.

To me, Madam Speaker, the bill seems like, as my colleague from Calgary-Hays referred to it as we were speaking about this bill this morning, a Trojan Horse. When you look at this bill, all four pages of it – now, don't give me that eye – it doesn't seem offensive. From what I can garner from what I actually read, what's happening is that the Alberta government is actually setting up the Alberta Medical Association as some kind of a superunion, certainly maybe not a full-fledged union, as the word states, but they would have the ability to bargain and bargain on more than behalf of themselves. Forgive me, but the words within the legislation are a little bit vague in nature, and I'm not sure what else to think about what's going on here.

I will quote from the bill.

(2) The Minister recognizes the Alberta Medical Association as the exclusive representative of physicians on compensation matters.

(3) The Minister recognizes the Alberta Medical Association as a representative of physicians on health matters that touch and concern physicians.

Nothing vague there at all.

(4) The Minister shall engage the Alberta Medical Association in good faith and consider the Association's representations on matters for which the Association represents physicians.

Now, does that sound like a lot of power being given to one group, Madam Speaker? It sure does to me: a superunion, as we've determined to call this, under which all other professional health unions must negotiate. It not only formalizes the relationship between the government and the Alberta Medical Association; it establishes the AMA as a negotiating body, a negotiating body for all other professional health unions. Wow. Now, to me, that seems like a lot of power for one authority to be handed.

For that reason and that reason alone, I have to suggest that the place for this bill to spend the next little while is in a committee, where committee members can sit down and talk with stakeholders to determine how good of a deal this is for Albertans or, more truthfully, Madam Speaker, whether this bill is a good deal for Albertans.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Acadia, when she gave her speech – and I appreciated it because she certainly has a lot more to do with health care than I do – commented that this was basically a formalization of a long-standing pact with the Alberta Medical Association, but nothing inside of this bill says anything like that whatsoever. So we are to believe that that is just what this bill is. I don't see it written anywhere.

But what she did talk about was funding for the rural physician action plan. I don't think that probably a lot of the government members have ever had to be involved, basically, in sitting on a committee in a 1,500-population town, that actually serves about 6,000 people, to try to figure out how to recruit physicians and have them stay. I as a municipal councillor spent, well, most of the years that I was there sitting on one committee or another, either a retrenchment or a recruitment committee for physicians, to try to get them there. I've got to say that the RPAP gal from Claresholm, I think, that we talked to online at night did a lot of background work for us as well so that we could try and do the good work that people were expecting us to do as we sat on that committee.

Now, what else do doctors give up? Well, from my read-through, of note, a couple of items pop out from that above quote. Doctors must settle with the compensation and benefits in the Alberta Medical Association agreement struck with the government, and physicians lose the ability to negotiate independently or in groups.

I'll just deal with the last first: doctors give up the ability to negotiate independently or in groups. In essence, they've signed up for collective bargaining, which is fine. Lots of people in our province, lots of organizations in the province run under that framework. As long as we can be sure that the majority are fine under the auspices of this sort of new superunion, then everything is well and good.

As I stated a moment ago, this agreement not only formalizes the relationship between the government and the AMA, but it establishes the AMA as a negotiating body under which all other professional health unions must negotiate. What it does, Madam Speaker – and I need to make this point again – is that I guess it makes the AMA the only representative of physicians on any compensation matters, and if I understand, it also gives the Alberta Medical Association the power to represent any group under the regional health authorities but only if the majority of that group formally expresses that wish.

Now, the caveat here is that Alberta Health Services is not required to recognize the Alberta Medical Association as exclusive representation in all situations, which is, at the very least, interesting. Would that very statement not be another good reason to see this bill go to committee and flesh out that very statement right there?

This bill also entrenches the agreement framework between the Alberta Medical Association and the Ministry of Health. The government's hands will now be tied in any future negotiations because now they are forced to follow the framework laid. Is that the intent of what this bill is? Is the intent of this bill to get all that lined up within this piece of legislation so that any future government now has nowhere to go other than the framework that was laid out in 2018 by this government? Now, I don't have any intention, once again . . . [Mr. Schneider's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to talk about Bill 24. It is An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. Now, whenever we have a major realignment within Alberta of any group of individuals, we need to make sure that we adequately address this fact: have all the stakeholders that are involved in this been notified, and have they been consulted?

Now, it appears that the government has done an admirable job of reaching out to the AMA. We have a press release that shows that the AMA is very supportive, and I would like to just read some of the comments that the president of the AMA has made as well as our Minister of Health, because I believe this is important. To quote Dr. Alison Clarke, president of the Alberta Medical Association – I apologize. This is from the press release by the Alberta government on November 1, 2018, Alberta Formalizes Relationship with Physicians.

Going back to the quote here:

Agreements with Alberta's physicians have led the way to improved quality and access to care for patients. They have included advancement of electronic medical records, the introduction and evolution of Primary Care Networks, development of a provincial physician resource plan and programs to promote the most appropriate care. Ensuring clarity and formalizing the roles of the AMA and physicians in this regard is important to Albertans.

Wow. That's a lot, a lot that this four-page document is doing. I have to say that it seems to be a little ambitious to be able to lay all of that on a four-page bill. But you know what? I'd like to just move on, and we'll see what the Minister of Health has to say.

The Minister of Health says:

I'm proud that our government has maintained a collaborative and constructive relationship with Alberta's physicians, enabling us to stabilize health spending while improving patient care. This legislation was a commitment the government made as part of the recent agreement with doctors, and we've made good on that promise. I thank the AMA and all physicians for working with our government to meet Albertans' health-care needs.

So hers isn't as rosy. Summarizing that, what it does say – and I think this is more of an accurate description of what this does – is that it gives the ability to the government to be able to work hand in hand with the AMA.

One of the questions that I have for this government – and I would appreciate it if they would answer this – is that right now I see that there are approximately 10,000 physicians within Alberta. My question here is: how many physicians are registered members of the AMA? Right now we're showing – and this could be a little misleading – that 89 per cent of AMA members supported this deal. Now, if we've got, out of those 10,000 doctors, 9,000 doctors that are AMA members, then this was getting out a very strong consultation, other than the fact that we only had 30 per cent vote in this important vote. What I will say is that if this ends up being 1,000 doctors within this, I am worried that we may not have gotten this message out to the nonmembers of the Alberta government doctors.

We have two pools of individuals that independently contract to Alberta. We have your non-AMA members and your AMA members. Now, if we haven't done the appropriate consultation – and this is what we're trying to do. We're trying to say: let's refer this to committee; let's start looking at getting some of these answers. It appears that the AMA is almost one hundred per cent behind this when it comes to their leadership, and when it comes to the members, there wasn't engagement. With only 30 per cent of the members voting on this, we may not have had the engagement we need, and you would think that with something this important, we would have seen an engagement level of higher than 30 per cent. This would have been closer to 75 or 80 per cent engagement by the members of the AMA that are doctors.

I looked at the website of the AMA, and it shows that they have 14,000 members. Now, what's important to recognize is that this number includes other health practitioners. We don't actually have the breakdown, that I'm aware of, and if that does exist out there, I'd encourage the government to bring that information forward.

Now, when we're talking about referrals, about going to a committee, we've got to make sure we get this right, because if we get it wrong, are we going to end up with doctors across Alberta striking? That clearly isn't in the best interests of the patients, and it's not in the best interests of all of Alberta. So when we decide to move down this road, more or less moving towards – it's not really unionized, but it's an organization that represents independent contractors. This is very unusual, that we would have this kind of restriction or power that is placed over an independent group of contractors.

Usually what happens is that we have a union head on top of union employees, employees of the government or the specific company or private entity that they're trying to contract to. In this case what we've got are doctors, 10,000 doctors across this province who are individually or in a partnership or a joint venture working together to negotiate individual contracts with the government of Alberta.

Now what we're seeing here is that the AMA is suddenly going to inject themselves in between the doctor and the government. This will inevitably add a level of red tape that I think we can all say may prevent our independent doctors from actually being able to do their jobs. Suddenly, instead of focusing on the front lines, they're working to renegotiate some deal. I would say that maybe that is not the best use of their time.

In the end, I myself have an incredible respect for our physicians. I know that for myself and my family every time that I've been to see a physician, they have done an incredible job. I have, again, nothing but respect. I've had my father actually go through a heart attack. I will tell you that if it was not for the EMS and the physicians, my father wouldn't be here today. It is a clear indicator that there are things within Alberta that are just working. There are other things, like wait times, that we can work on, and we've heard from the government that this is an area that does need to be addressed.

Working on a press release from the AMA, AMA Legislation Tabled Today – this, again, is a discussion from the president of the AMA. It starts with:

Dear Members:

You may recall that one of the important provisions of the 2018-20 AMA agreement with [the] government was a commitment to entrench physician recognition and representation rights within legislation. I am pleased to let you know that this legislation was tabled today. It is called Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights.

And then they've got a little place you can click where you can actually see the news release from the Alberta government.

Now, what it is is that this was something that – it appears that the government, in order to get the reduction that they were looking for in spending, negotiated with the AMA to be able to more or less get the body to represent all of the doctors. I wonder how many doctors actually understand what this means and what the possible implications of this are. One of my concerns – and I would hope that the government of Alberta can answer this – is: will there be an impact to the funding for rural doctors?

It is almost impossible now, as you've heard from the government members themselves, to find physicians to go out to rural communities. So if we start to reduce the fees that these rural doctors are getting, that have been independently negotiated, to some base rate that the AMA has come up with, will we see a flight or a bunch of doctors from rural Alberta moving back to the major centres, the urban centres? I am very concerned with the fact that we have a lack of representation now. We will end up with no representation going forward. This is a reasonable question because, in the end, it is important that we recognize what the impacts are when it comes to rural Alberta and our physicians.

I do see that the government has had some discussions with AMA. What exactly has come up on this? Is there going to be one, I guess, standard for all general practitioners? And if that is the case, how are they going to deal with the unique complexities that come with the medical profession? Will we see reduced doctors? That is a question.

Now, I recognize that we are looking at some savings that the government is bringing forward here. They're saying that there's going to be $98 million in savings. My next question is: is that $98 million from rural Alberta? Where are the savings coming from? Is this an area that is more or less meaning that we're going to see cuts, massive cuts, in rural Alberta? Again, this is why it is so important that we refer this to committee because we can ask these questions. It is important.

Let's say that we have specialists in Edmonton here. It was Edmonton that saved my father's life. I will admit that. It was an incredible cardiologist that went through this. If we go to a standard for all cardiologists for their rate of pay, does that mean we will start seeing cardiologists going to other jurisdictions? That is important because I believe that we do have some of the best care when it comes to a lot of parts of our medical system. Obviously, we can always do better. But I will tell you, when it comes to a case-by-case basis, what I've heard, that in the end we need to continue making sure that we have some of the best even though we may not have all of the best results across Alberta.

Now, I would like to say that these are legitimate questions. It is important that you guys across the aisle recognize that there are more questions than answers, and this is exactly why we need to go to the stakeholders.

Now I would like to move on to adjourning debate. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 23

An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and move second reading of Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta.

The first bill this government introduced in June 2015 was An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. It banned corporations, unions, and employee organizations from making political contributions associated with provincial elections. In the fall of 2016 the Fair Elections Financing Act was passed. It ensured that Albertans have a fair, democratic, and modern electoral system by limiting the influence of big money on election outcomes and lowering the cap on political donations.

In the summer of 2018 the government of Alberta held online consultation with Albertans about similar reforms for municipal elections. More than 1,500 Albertans participated in the consultation. We also met with municipal associations, school boards, Métis settlements, Alberta's Election Commissioner, and municipalities. We consulted with Albertans on putting a ban on corporate and union donations, and 90 per cent of responses said that it was time to take big money out of local elections. Eighty-five per cent of Albertans we talked to also agreed that the contribution limit should be lowered to $4,000 to match the provincial limit.

We're also proposing to take steps to even the playing field by reducing the campaign period from four years to one year for local elections, much like what is done in B.C. and Ontario. This is because elected officials should be focused on delivering results for the community, not on building a war chest for an election years away. This proposed reform will ensure that politicians are working for Albertans, not campaign donations. Albertans expect nothing less.

This act will also ensure that Albertans have a fair, democratic, and modern electoral system. For instance, all Albertans should be able to exercise their right to vote, so we're breaking down barriers to voting so everyone has a chance to participate. Making it easier to vote by introducing mandatory advance votes is one of the reforms Albertans asked for, and we're delivering. Mandatory advance votes in communities over 5,000 is a reform that 95 per cent of Albertans we talked to support. Municipal stakeholders like the AUMA and RMA also support this reform.

We also heard from Albertans that they want to see local elections that are more fair and transparent, and that's exactly what these proposed updates will do. Albertans have the right to know who is trying to influence their elections, which is why rules around third-party advertising are vital. Ninety-four per cent of Albertans agreed during consultation that it's time to make third-party advertisers transparent, and we're delivering on what they've asked for.

We're also closing the fundraising function loophole that allows candidates to raise tens of thousands of dollars through fundraiser events without disclosing who donated. These reforms are necessary to ensure our local elections are fair and transparent.

Albertans and stakeholders also told us that we need to strengthen enforcement provisions in local elections to make sure that rule breakers are held accountable. Laws must be enforceable to be effective, and these updates would give new powers to the provincial Election Commissioner to investigate offences and make sure the rules are being followed. Again, Albertans expect nothing less.

Madam Speaker, it's time to update our laws to get big money out of local elections, make it easier for Albertans to vote, and create a more transparent election process. Albertans asked for these reforms, Albertans support these reforms, and we are delivering. Our government made it clear when we updated provincial election laws that we want to take big money out of provincial politics, and now we're doing the same on the municipal level. We consulted with Albertans, and we know that they want to see local elections that are fair and transparent. That's exactly what these updates will do because elections should be decided by big ideas, not by big money. People should be running for election on their ideas, not on how much money is in their bank account.

These rules will create a more level playing field for everyone who wants to run, and these laws must be enforceable and effective. The reforms before us today will do this by giving new powers to the provincial Election Commissioner to enforce local election laws to make sure that offences are investigated and prosecuted.

I can't think of a better time to pass this type of legislation. Municipal and school board elections are set for 2021. Passing this legislation now would give our local authorities time to learn about, train on, and enact these changes so the next set of elections run as smoothly as possible.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is really an honour to rise to speak today to Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. I really am thrilled to be discussing this, and I want to thank the minister for bringing this forward. Thank you. All of us in the Legislature here should be very proud to be supporting Bill 23.

You know, Madam Speaker, we pass a lot of important bills in here, but acting on something that stands up for democracy holds a particular resonance for me and, I think, for many others as well. As you know, Bill 1 of this government was An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, which stood up for democracy at a provincial level and strengthened election financing rules, eliminating corporate and union donations and putting a cap on individual donations, among other strengthening legislation. During the 2017 Calgary municipal election I heard from many Calgarians and many candidates that we needed to do the same for municipal elections, and I'm sure we all agree that it is the right thing to do. Albertans should be assured that candidates are being elected on ideas and not on how deep their pockets are.

There really are four pillars to this bill, Bill 23, Madam Speaker, which are campaign financing and disclosure, voter accessibility, accountability and transparency, and enforcement. Levelling the playing field in elections through financial reform is key to levelling the playing field in elections. I had a look back at the spending of the candidates in the Calgary municipal election, and it seemed that in every instance except the run for mayor, actually, the candidate who earned and spent the most money was victorious. One successful candidate spent nearly $350,000. That's a hefty sum. That's a hefty sum for a single political candidate. To put that into perspective, that is much more than the Alberta Party could hope to get in a quarter, so that's a lot of money.

Campaign financing and disclosure. What that will do is ban corporate and union donations. Contribution limits will be lowered to $4,000 province-wide for municipal elections as well as $4,000 for school board elections. Candidates' spending limits will be set via regulation after consulting with stakeholders. Limits will be based partially on the size of the municipality and school board. Campaign periods will be reduced to one year, and fundraising contributions will be limited to only that period.

Now, voter accessibility is also an important part of standing up for democracy, Madam Speaker, because it helps to ensure that there are fewer barriers to voting and that everyone has a chance to participate. Eligible new Albertans will not have to live in the province for six consecutive months anymore before they can vote, which mirrors the changes that we made in the provincial rules. Wider use of vouching will be permitted, which means a voter with identification can confirm the identity of a person without identification.

Communities of more than 5,000 will be required to hold advance votes to provide more opportunities for residents to cast ballots, and institutional voting will be allowed in more locations, for example in hospices, for people who can't get to traditional polling places.

Accountability and transparency. Madam Speaker, we've heard from Albertans that they want to see local elections that are more fair and transparent, and that's exactly what these updates do. Government will now require transparency from third parties that receive contributions and advertise to promote or oppose a candidate. Third parties will be required to register with each local jurisdiction they intend to advertise in, and campaign disclosure statements would be required from all candidates, including self-funded candidates. Candidates would be required to disclose names and addresses of those who contribute more than $50, which is down from $100 in the current legislation. The definition of what qualifies as an expense under disclosure rules has also been clarified to match the provincial rules. The fundraising function loophole that allows candidates to raise funds without disclosing their donors would also be closed, and campaign activities at voting stations would be restricted.

Enforcement. Madam Speaker, laws must be enforceable to be effective, and stakeholders and Albertans agreed that the enforcement provisions in the Local Authorities Election Act needed to be strengthened. To this end, Bill 23 would empower the provincial Election Commissioner to investigate, prosecute, and enforce rules related to campaign financing and third-party advertising. General administration of local elections would remain the responsibility of each local jurisdiction.

Now, Madam Speaker, consultation is very important in helping to get legislation correct. Unfortunately, unlike the opposition, whose leader has stated his disdain for consultation, this government did a fantastic job consulting on Bill 23 here. It actually goes back to 2016, when Municipal Affairs conducted a limited-scope review of the Local Authorities Election Act that included focused engagement with identified stakeholders. This consultation was completed, and recommendations were drafted for cabinet consideration. However, due to the proximity of the October 2017 municipal and school board general elections these proposed amendments did not proceed.

A further review in the summer of 2018 included broad public consultation through the use of an online public survey and stakeholder discussion guide. There were over 1,500 responses that were received through the survey and discussion guide. Two meetings occurred with representatives from the AUMA, the RMA, the city of Edmonton, the city of Calgary, the Local Government Administration Association, the Alberta Rural Municipal Administrators Association, and many more, actually. Additional meetings were also held with the AUMA, the RMA, and the cities of Edmonton and Calgary to specifically discuss potential solutions and formulas relating to campaign financing and identification of potential concerns regarding third-party advertising. Stakeholders agreed that amendments to the LAEA are necessary to promote fair and transparent local elections. The large majority of respondents to the survey were supportive of these proposed amendments.

The review also identified policy items to enhance the transparency and accountability of local authority elections. The updates encourage alignment with the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act to provide consistency where applicable, of course, in both provincial and municipal elections. It also addressed matters of improved citizen engagement and access to candidacy. The amendments to the act will improve voter accessibility and encourage greater participation through increased opportunity while addressing concerns raised by municipal stakeholders along with Albertans. The passing of the amended act will ensure that policy amendments occur ahead of municipal, school board, and Métis settlement planning for the October 2021 municipal general elections.

With that said, Madam Speaker, I want to thank the minister again for bringing this forward and for the opportunity to speak on this bill and for the opportunity to make municipal elections more fair and transparent. I encourage everyone to vote in favour of this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker, and good morning, everyone. I have some remarks regarding this bill this morning. I see what time it is, so I'll hopefully be able to fit most of it in.

It's a great pleasure to be here this morning to speak to this bill. It proposes a wide variety of amendments to the Local Authorities Election Act, as has already been mentioned by previous speakers. However, unfortunately, we have been given only a limited amount of time to look this one over. It just came out yesterday. We didn't have the privilege to consult with a lot of people in such a short window of time, but I certainly look forward to debating it more as time goes on. Nonetheless, with the little bit of time we have, I haven't formed a solid opinion, nor has our caucus, on just whether we are going to commit our vote in favour or against at this precise moment.

There are a number of questions and concerns that we've identified, and I'd like to spend a little bit of time on some of those this morning. How they're funded is an interesting topic, as was stated just this morning. The rules are fairly relaxed. I can recall that when I was first elected many years ago – it's almost 14, 15 years ago now – we went through some of this. There were a lot of loosey-goosey rules, if I could use that term politely, so it is probably appropriate to be reviewing this now. I agree with that.

Let's start out with some of the things that we're seeing. It appears that currently we have individuals, corporations, or trade unions that have been able to donate up to $5,000 per year per candidate, but under the new rules, apparently, corporate and union donations will be prohibited, and the amount of money an individual can donate would be lowered to $4,000 in total.

The campaign period will also be shrunk from the current four years down to a single year. If you're a candidate running for re-election, therefore, or simply a candidate who's looking to start on a campaign early, you won't be totally prohibited, however. During the first three years the rules will let you spend $2,000 in total on things like door-knocking materials and various promotions. That seems a little tight from our standpoint. If you're a self-funded candidate, your eligible contribution has been lowered from $10,000 to $4,000 as well, matching the new donation limits. Albertans would be able to donate an additional $4,000 as well to a candidate for school board or trustee according to the new proposals.

Another change that is of concern, actually, is: who's going to be enforcing these new rules? The newly appointed Election Commissioner apparently is that person, and he will see his office's authority increase as his office becomes investigator, prosecutor, and enforcer related to campaign financing and third-party advertising. That's fairly interesting. It might be quite a workload, I might suggest. Anyway, if there is wrongdoing found by the commissioner, he can levy up to $10,000 in fines. That's a new change.

Another change around donations that raised my interest a little bit requires that all candidates be nominated before they accept any donations or incur expenses, and they must open a bank account once contributions to their campaign hit $4,000.

On another thought, nomination day, currently set at four weeks prior to election day, is now being extended to run from January 1 until six weeks before election day. This probably should help as nomination day can become a very busy day for municipal staff because every candidate is trying to submit paperwork to become a candidate at that time. So I can understand that.

Other concerns. While this bill does not directly address the issue of spending limits, it includes provisions delegating that to regulations, which the minister insists will be released prior to the 2021 municipal election. While the minister promises that any spending limit will be nuanced and will respect the differences between rural and urban and large and small municipalities, I'm disappointed to see that the government is sending something as important as spending limits behind closed doors to the regulations. There's a lot of this kind of thing, I think, that we need to go over a little bit and see just what is going to happen there. Regulations, as you know, give us a lot of trouble because we don't debate those in the House.

Unfortunately, though, one of the other concerns we've heard from stakeholders and constituents regarding the elections appears to have been not finalized yet as well, which is the proposed amendments in Bill 23 for a candidate to issue tax receipts for municipal school board donations, but officials have said that the issue hasn't been taken off the table completely. We look forward to debating that aspect as well because whether or not municipal candidates or school board trustees can issue receipts has always been a concern of most of the municipalities and the associations. I hope, therefore, because it hasn't been taken off the table, according to their briefing, that that could be further discussed.

I'd like to also point out that Bill 23 apparently seems to have a retroactive clause built in at the back, so if the bill does pass, then a lot of these changes will be effective as of first reading, which actually occurred yesterday. While I understand that timeline before the election and the three-year period and so on and so forth, it is something that I'd like to draw to the attention of all people that may be viewing this debate today and as the bill becomes debated further.

The bill does also propose interesting amendments around increasing voter participation that I think I can support. For instance, any municipality with over 5,000 will now be required to have at least one advance poll ahead of the regular voting day. That has been something, as may have been said earlier today already, that I think is making some sense. There will be some extra costs to municipalities, perhaps, in some respects, but I think this is ultimately about improving turnout and making voting more accessible for the public.

Additionally, along with donation and spending limits is the requirement to disclose who donated and what the money was spent on. Moving forward, candidates will need to file detailed disclosures, apparently, outlining where the money was spent, broken down by category. I'm not sure how those categories will work, but this seems like a lot of extra work for municipal candidates. However, I'm still waiting to hear back from groups like the AUMA and the RMA, and I'm sure that they will have more to say about this in the coming days, as will we.

Something that appears positive, too, is that the bill clarifies that there will be no campaigning allowed on the properties where the voting stations will be located. Whereas before you might have had candidates standing outside in school parking areas and/or right at the doorways handing out literature, as we've seen in some other types of elections, they would now have to move completely off the property. That does seem to make sense, and we certainly wouldn't be against that kind of change.

On another issue, I'm not sure how some people may feel about removing the six-month Alberta residency requirement. I'm concerned that this may be a loophole. I don't know for sure because we've just gotten into the debate on this bill. There have been accusations in the past; as we all know, elections are controversial. There may be a loophole there by those seeking to undermine elections in some regard. I understand this may be impossible to determine in some respects at some points, but it will be worth while to hear what others have to say about that aspect because it is something that raises the ire of a lot of folks.

Another change is the ability for a voter to vouch or confirm that another elector meets all the requirements to vote with that change of removing the six-month residency requirement. In the opposition technical briefing yesterday morning we were verbally told that a person could only vouch for one person total per election. However, after reviewing the legislation, we may have misunderstood what was being presented because it doesn't appear to be the case in the documents. It appears that a person can vouch for any number of people, from what we can tell at first pass. I look forward to having the minister perhaps clear up any confusion there may be on that topic as well.

Madam Speaker, to close my comments today, I will say that, you know, the fact that we've got a hundred-page document and that then we're expected to debate it in full, full detail the very next day: it is very hard and difficult for us to respond in clear detail with a lot of clarity and good debate with such a short window. With the complexity of this bill and the importance of these changes to all the municipalities, candidates, and Albertans, we hope that we can have a more thorough debate during Committee of the Whole and that we can have sufficient time to review that. I'm not sure exactly when that's coming forward, but I look forward to bringing a lot of amendments that we've identified that may have to become debate items at that time.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m. Tuesday, November 6, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an incredible school that I had the pleasure of being at during the grand opening, Ardrossan elementary school, and their chaperones, accompanied by Karson Campbell, Cyrille Wandji – sorry if I’ve mispronounced your name – Brant Halbert, Sydney Munsterman, and numerous parents that are with them here today. It was a pleasure to visit them when we opened their school, but it is a pleasure to have them here at the Legislature. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature members of the Insurance Brokers Association of Alberta: Mr. Paul VanderHooft, president of the Insurance Brokers Association of Alberta; Jonathan Brown, president of the Professional Young Insurance Brokers; and George Hodgson, CEO of the Insurance Brokers Association of Alberta. Along with a contingent of brokers from across this province, they are a dedicated group who work to preserve and strengthen the insurance broker industry throughout the province, and they will have a reception later on tonight. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today, distinguished guests from the Royal Canadian Navy and from the Royal Canadian Air Force. I’m honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly distinguished guests from the Royal Canadian Navy. Commodore Angus Topshee is a naval warrant officer in the Royal Canadian Navy. His diverse academic background includes military and civilian institutions on three continents. While deploying on ships around the world, he has accumulated sea stories involving pirates, sharks, terrorists, volcanoes, whales, fires, and all manner of things that keep life at sea interesting. In July 2018 he assumed command of the Canadian Fleet Pacific, based out of Esquimalt, B.C. Joining Commodore Topshee are Lieutenant Noelani Shore and Chief Petty Officer First Class Sylvain Jaquemot. Please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, and thank you for your service. We don’t get many sailors in this particular province.

The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 39 friends from the Building Trades of Alberta. They’re in the Legislature today to advocate for the workers of our province. The organization’s history dates back to 1906, when they represented local lathers, plumbers, typographers, bricklayers, painters, and carpenters. Today Building Trades represents the interests of 16 Alberta trade unions and 75,000 hard-working Albertans in residential, commercial, and industrial construction, maintenance, and fabrication industries. I’d like to thank them for taking the time to come out and to speak to us about several important issues that affect our trades and our workers. I will not name all 39, but I would like them to all stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, I believe you had some other introductions.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly distinguished veterans from the Royal Canadian Air Force. Beyond their distinguished service in the air force these are members of the Griesbach RCAF Commemorative Society, that has helped to raise $258,000 to have the Ad Astra sculpture and storyboards installed in the beautiful village of Griesbach. The storyboards and the RCAF history are currently on display in the pedway connecting the Legislature to the Federal Building. These distinguished guests truly exemplify the RCAF motto, to the stars. Please stand as I introduce you: Brigadier General Bill Buckham, retired, and Ms Keatha Buckham; Honorary Colonel Bart West and Ms Carole West – on a side note, Carol and Bart’s granddaughter Claire is a page here with us at the Legislature – Lieutenant-Colonel Dave Ives, retired, and Ms Maureen Ives; Captain Ed Lindberg, retired, and Ms Marilyn Lindberg; Lieutenant-Colonel Jim Gillespie, retired, and Ms Molly Gillespie; Major Ken Usher, retired; Mr. Marvin Neumann, director of Canada Lands; Mr. Joe Linzen, CEO of Stainless Dreams Ltd.; and Ms Sue Castall, Griesbach RCAF Commemorative Society. I would ask all my guests to remain standing as they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, and thank you.

To the grandparents of the page, I understand the special opportunity you have to see your granddaughter here at work.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is to recognize members of the Lung Association of Alberta & NWT, who are seated in the members’ gallery. Today is lung health day, and I hope my colleagues were able to stop by the display downstairs to assess how their lungs are working. I encourage Albertans to join me in recognizing lung health month this November and to offer their support to people in our province living with respiratory illness. I ask that Leigh Allard, president and CEO, as well as Deb Anderson, who did my test, rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

I also rise to recognize some of Alberta’s medical radiation technologists, who are also seated in the members’ gallery. I’m honoured to have these health professionals from across the Alberta Health Services, Edmonton zone, join us during MRT Week to celebrate the outstanding contributions of MRTs to the well-being of Albertans. These technologists use their specialized knowledge of image and radiation therapy equipment to support the diagnosis and treatment of Albertans. Certainly, I know that many people who live with cancer spend more time with their MRT than they do any other health professional during that journey. I’d ask that those who are here, including Kim, Darren, Steve, Cuong, Kristy, Runell, Heather, Patricia, Megan, Adwait, Nancy, Fern, Rebecca, Alicia, Deena, Chris, and Tyson, please rise and receive our warm welcome and our appreciation.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of very hard-working individuals from On Site Placement. Today with us we have Patricia Pasemko, executive director; Jeff Howlett, business development manager; program managers Katherine Macdonald and Marian Sanderson; and Tracy Smith, temp agency co-ordinator. Since 1981 On Site Placement has been operating as a nonprofit, with a vision of creating employment placement opportunities by matching the skills and abilities of individuals to contribute in a meaningful way to the success of their business community partners. I would like to thank OSP for their contributions to our community and for attending my A Taste of Decore event for the last two years. I would ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to all members of the Legislature I'd like to introduce Mr. Slavo Cech. Slavo is up behind me. Slavo Cech from Metal Urges in Edmonton has been creating hand-forged artwork for homes, commercial spaces, and public venues such as the Royal Alberta Museum and the Legislature for over 20 years. I'll be presenting a members' statement on the Royal Alberta Museum later today. I'd ask Slavo to stand and receive the usual warm reception of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make two introductions today. First of all, I rise to introduce representatives from the Council of Alberta University Students. They're here at the Legislature this week to meet with me and many of my colleagues in this House about issues that matter to Alberta students. Our government is listening to students, which is why last week we were proud to introduce Bill 19. Our bill builds on five years of frozen tuition by capping future tuition increases to inflation. This is exactly what the students of CAUS have been advocating for, and we're proud to be a government that listens to students. I ask that the following please rise as I say your names: Andrew Bieman, Amanda LeBlanc, Parvin Sedighi, Andrew Nguyen, Victoria Schindler, Reed Larsen, Adam Brown, Sagar Grewal, Anayat Sidhu, and Shifrah Gadamsetti. Please accept the warm traditional greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Schmidt: For my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to introduce an outstanding member of Alberta's apprenticeship family and some folks important to his support system. Arden Callsen received a top apprentice award from my ministry's apprenticeship branch. He is a registered journeyperson, red seal ironworker, and now teaches in the Trade Winds program. He's joined by some important people in his life: his brother Lars, and she is not his younger sister but, in fact, his mother, Mary-Jane. With him is also Gary Savard of the Ironworkers local 720. I ask that my guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two of our city's bravest, who are seated in your gallery. It cannot be understated, the duty of first responders, who Albertans count on to perform dangerous tasks on a daily basis at a moment's notice. While firefighters face personal scares in battling fires, they are also subject to unseen harms by way of exposure to great scenes of tragedy, that can cause the deepest of scars to one's psyche. So I share great pleasure with you in this Assembly in introducing two of Medicine Hat's finest firefighters, who also find the time to advocate on behalf of their colleagues and Alberta rules. I would like to ask two of Medicine Hat's finest department firefighters, Gerald Bodnaruk and Patrick Jerome, to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. It's an important honour and privilege to have you here with us, and I'm glad my peer talked about Medicine Hat.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a tremendous privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Doug Van Helden. Mr. Van Helden is a constituent, a neighbour, and he is my insurance broker. It was wonderful to run into Doug earlier today, and I ask him to now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Mr. Dean Murray, who is a business agent with local 720 of the Ironworkers. He resides in Fort Saskatchewan with his lovely family, who own and operate the Daisy-A-Day floral shop. I will recommend it to all of my colleagues. It not only will help you out in a jam with a loved one, but it also makes some very beautiful arrangements when we've needed them in times of sympathy for our neighbours. If he could stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Royal Alberta Museum

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is blessed with 21 provincial historic sites and museums, which can be found in every corner of Alberta. They are a tremendous resource to Albertans by making our fascinating history accessible to Albertans of all ages and to a burgeoning number of tourists eager to experience our paleontological, geological, indigenous, industrial, and multicultural heritage.

On October 3 the new Royal Alberta Museum was opened. What a tremendous facility. The architecture is stunning, and I was so pleased to see the preservation of the large exterior murals that had adorned the post office building replaced by RAM. On opening day I spent several hours touring the galleries, including the high-profile

Natural History room, with its dinosaurs, mastodons, and dioramas, and the Bug Room as well as the extensive indigenous culture exhibits, which integrate indigenous belief systems into the museum. I was particularly touched by the power of the Manitou Stone.

During my visit to the Human History Hall I came across two exhibits which had particular resonance with me. One of them was an iron lung from the Aberhart hospital. It looks like the boiler chamber from an old-fashioned farm tractor, but it was a life-saving contraption for Albertans like Gary McPherson in the '50s and '60s, who had polio. Gary survived because of the machine and the care of doctors such as Dr. Brian Sproule and nurses such as Val Kamitomo, who became Gary's wife. I think of Gary's heroism a lot, particularly when vaccination campaigns are questioned.

The other evocative exhibit is right next to the iron lung. It's an important relic of west Edmonton's cultural history. The original thunderbird totem pole from the CFRN station on Stony Plain Road has been salvaged and rehabilitated by CFRN employees and the grandson of the original carver, who has ensured that it is a respectful recognition of indigenous culture.

The new Royal Alberta Museum is a world-class facility, and I encourage all Albertans to come and enjoy it.

Diwali

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition I'm pleased to rise to wish all Albertans celebrating a happy Diwali and a happy Bandi Chhor Divas. Alberta is blessed to be the home of tens of thousands of new Canadians and their descendants of Indian origin, so many of whom are part of the ancient Hindu tradition and faith.

I recently had an opportunity, on my fifth visit to India with two of my colleagues, to reacquaint myself with that magnificent tradition, visiting the second-largest mandir in the world at Akshardham, near New Delhi, and also celebrating the Ganesh Chaturthi in a large mandir in Mumbai.

But this week, of course, Hindus around the world will be celebrating Diwali as the festival of lights, a tradition that goes back thousands of years and represents the victory of light over darkness, of good over evil, and of knowledge over ignorance. I believe that on behalf of all members I'd like to wish members of Alberta's vibrant and successful Hindu community a happy Diwali and to members of our Sikh community as well a happy celebration of Bandi Chhor Divas. [Remarks in Punjabi]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mark Sandilands

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I say goodbye to my friend Mark Sandilands. This evening my spirit will be with Leona and all of those whose lives have been touched by Mark. They may be students, skiers, skaters, windsurfers, dragon boat racers, swimmers, those who competed against him and those he coached, political junkies or social activists, who looked forward to his impassioned contributions to the Lethbridge Herald to set the record straight.

Mark was engaged in our community. A professor at U of L for over 32 years Mark served on the University of Lethbridge Faculty Association in many roles. He was a learned man and utilized his knowledge in life through his interaction with many community organizations such as Lethbridge Family Services; the Society for the Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect; Alberta mental health, victims, and families subcommittee; Alberta community corrections as a cofacilitator of educational groups for abusive men; the city of Lethbridge's Domestic Violence Action Team.

I met Mark in 2012, just before Christmas, when he engaged me to get involved at the executive level. I am where I am today in part because he asked me and supported me to run. Despite my sadness at the loss of my friend, I know I have been so fortunate to have known Mark. He gave me his friendship and his sage advice through thoughtful discussion. I felt valued and empowered, as I do today.

He ran twice provincially and twice federally, improving his numbers every time, and was a staunch NDP supporter because he believed, as we do, that governments can work and fight for the people. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Investment in Alberta and Job Creation

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Premier about what plan the government has to address the growing jobs crisis in Alberta with 184,000 unemployed Albertans and six months of growing unemployment. We didn't get an answer, and it sounds like it just means more taxes, regulation, and debt. But that's being reflected – one of the reasons for the unemployment is a crisis of investor confidence. Imperial Oil finally got approval after five years on a $3 billion investment, but they're not sure that they will proceed. What does the Premier plan to do to restore investor confidence in Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member for the question. What we're going to do is continue to do what we have been doing. Let me just, you know, set the context. Cast your mind back to 2015. The folks over there were in power, oil prices had collapsed, and tens of thousands of jobs had already been lost. What did they propose? A new health care levy on all Albertans, and 12,000 students going to school without a new teacher. Fast-forward three years: 90,000 new jobs created, fastest growing economy in the country. Do we have more work to do? Yes, we do, but we're not going to stop fighting for Alberta.

Mr. Kenney: You heard it right there from the Premier, Mr. Speaker. More of the same is their message to 180,000 unemployed Albertans and tens of thousands of others who have given up looking for work. In fact, there are 42,000 more unemployed Albertans today than when the NDP came to office.

Now, EnCana, one of our major companies, has just moved nearly $8 billion of Alberta capital to the United States. Now most of their operations are in the U.S. That is capital that could be creating jobs here in the province. How is the Premier going to bring investment like that back to Alberta with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Madam Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we're going to continue to do is fight for market access for Alberta's oil and gas industry. That is a fundamentally important piece to growing our important oil and gas economy in this province. As the member opposite knows after 10, 20 years in Ottawa, they were unable to get a new pipeline to tidewater. We're going to keep pushing for it. We know that's a fundamental problem with the issues that he identifies, and we're going to keep fighting for our oil and gas industry and for the workers that they employ across this province.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier just repeating ad nauseam falsehoods doesn't make them any more true. The Harper government got four pipelines built, that increased shipments of oil by 1.72 million barrels per day, while this Premier, of course, endorsed Justin Trudeau's veto of Northern Gateway, said nothing about his killing Energy East, and has allowed her New Democrat friends in British Columbia to run roughshod over Trans Mountain. It's not just EnCana that shifted job-creating capital out of Alberta. We've lost a hundred billion dollars of investment. What does the Premier plan to do apart from raising taxes and more red tape?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite talks about taxes, and I appreciate that his primary goal is to give a $700 million tax break to the top 1 per cent. He never talks about how he's going to pay for it.

But what I know is that what we've been doing is we have worked. We have created 90,000 jobs in the last year. Retail sales are up. Manufacturing is up. We're leading the country in economic growth. What we didn't do was throw teachers and nurses out of work to give the top 1 per cent a bigger tax break. I know that's the member opposite's plan. It is not ours.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, our primary goal is to reignite Alberta's economy to get these people back to work, the 184,000 Albertans who are looking for work today. Now, yesterday the Alberta Chambers of Commerce said that the foundations of our prosperity are being eroded. The cost of doing business in Alberta is high relative to other jurisdictions due in part to the carbon levy, onerous labour law reforms, and a burdensome regulatory environment. Why is the NDP, according to the Chambers of Commerce, making a bad situation worse for Alberta job creators?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the member opposite and many people in his caucus do not support the kinds of things we brought forward, for instance the minimum wage. But, you know, I think it really says a lot about a leader of a party when what he wants to do is give a $700 million tax break to the richest 1 per cent of Albertans and at the same time gets up in this House and complains about things like a living wage for single moms, single parents, trying to make ends meet across this province. Three hundred thousand people are now helped by that minimum wage, and we are proud of that.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'll remind the Premier that since she raised taxes on Albertans, they're generating less, not more, revenue from both personal and corporate income taxes. The Alberta chamber, whose opinion, apparently, she doesn't have any concern for, also said yesterday that corporate tax increases along with the provincial carbon [tax] and costlier environmental regulations have resulted in weak job growth, layoffs, and the highest unemployment rate outside of Atlantic Canada.

Is the Premier saying that this organization that represents job creators is wrong?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been very happy to work with a number of key job creators across this province. We've introduced the capital investment tax credit and the investor tax credit. We've actually cut the small-business tax by a third. So, in fact, we have worked very collaboratively with the business community. At the same time we are also doing things like ensuring that there is a minimum wage in this province that allows people to put food on the table and keep a roof over their heads without stopping at the food bank on the way home, and I would suggest that the member opposite ought to start thinking about those folks as well because – you know what? – they vote, too.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, under the NDP's failed economic plan of higher taxes, higher debt, and more red tape, there are more Albertans, not fewer – more Albertans – using food banks. There are more Albertans who are unemployed than before. There's a hundred billion dollars of capital that has fled these policies, leading to this jobs crisis, and her only answer is to raise the carbon tax by 67 per cent and drive our debt to nearly a hundred billion dollars. When will the Premier and the NDP start listening to the people who actually create jobs in our economy and reduce the cost of doing business and creating jobs?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I find it very ironic that the member opposite on one hand is talking about debt and deficit, yet all he wants to actually do is cut taxes for the top 1 per cent of the province. It doesn't add up. You know what? The member opposite should not be focusing so much on unicorn-type ideas. He needs to start being more practical. The reality is that we are working with businesses. We've had Flair Air move their headquarters from Kelowna, B.C., to Edmonton; CN Rail investing $320 million in Alberta for new upgrades; and Nexen investing $400 million to expand their Long Lake oil sands. The list goes on. We will continue to work to create jobs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what doesn't add up is raising taxes on job creators and generating less revenue. We're now three and a half years into the NDP's failed economic experiment: higher tax rates, lower revenues, less for public services. We are spending more. I'll grant the NDP that. We're spending billions more on interest payments to bankers and bondholders instead of on schools and hospitals. Why won't the government listen to Alberta's job creators and stop layering more and more costs and red tape on those . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that in Alberta Albertans enjoy an over $11 billion tax advantage over the next lowest taxed province in the country. So we are maintaining that competitive advantage. You know, the member opposite sometimes likes to picture himself as a master of logic, but it's a little bit disingenuous to fail to talk about the historic drop in oil prices as being a factor in what this government is managing. The previous government left this province unprepared to deal with that drop in oil prices, and we are . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: There we go again, blaming oil prices, Mr. Speaker. I'll remind the Premier that in U.S. states that are similarly dependent on oil and gas, like North Dakota, Colorado, and Texas, the unemployment rate is at 3 per cent or less. In Alberta it's 7.2 per cent and climbing. The NDP can't blame the bogeyman of oil prices anymore. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce, the Edmonton and Calgary chambers of commerce, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the job creators are all saying the same thing: the carbon tax, higher taxes, and more red tape are killing jobs. When will the NDP listen?

2:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we will continue to do is to invest in Albertans and invest in Alberta and continue the path where, notwithstanding the most significant recession in this province's history in the last couple of generations, we continue creating jobs, as we've said, over 90,000 in the last year and a half. Definitely – definitely – more work to do. But the path to better outcomes is not laying off 4,000 teachers, it is not laying off 4,000 nurses, and it is not getting rid of the kinds of things that protect Alberta's most vulnerable workers. All Albertans need to benefit as we come through this, not just their friends and insiders.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the most vulnerable Albertans, every one of them, have to pay the NDP's carbon tax, that they plan to raise by 67 per cent without any increase in the rebate, becoming a massively regressive tax on the poor. So much for the most vulnerable. I'm concerned about these 184,000 vulnerable unemployed Albertans, 42,000 more than were in the jobless queue when the NDP came to office. Is it really the case that the NDP's promise to those people is higher taxes, more red tape, more debt, and less hope?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No. Our promise to these folks is 240 new schools. Our promise to these folks is class sizes in which their kids can learn now and in the future. Our promise to these folks is affordable tuition so that their kids can go to university in the future and create jobs throughout this economy. Our promise to these folks is a health care system that will be there for them when they need it and when their loved ones need it. Our promise to these folks is to make sure that this economic recovery is shared by all Albertans, not just the top 1 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Public Service Workplace Bullying and Harassment Policies

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question for the Premier: if a member of Alberta's public service wanted to raise a question about a culture of fear and intimidation in the workplace, how would they go about it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, our government did bring in legislation to improve our whistle-blower process. That is indeed in place, and of course I believe it has been working appropriately since it's been put in place.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: does Executive Council or the government of Alberta have policies in place to ensure a harassment-free workplace for all public servants, and do those protections extend to Members of the Legislative Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. It's a fundamental belief of our government that everyone deserves to go to work free of harassment, intimidation, bullying, or assault. That, of course, includes all members of the public service, elected officials, and all Albertans. We have no tolerance for bullying or harassment of any kind.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect, we've now had two members of this Assembly raise very serious allegations, including the alleged cover-up of inappropriate behaviour on the part of members on both sides of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hope the focus is on government policy. I hope that's where this is going.

Mr. Clark: Again to the Premier: how can Albertans or those who work in the public service have faith in the antibullying policies that are in place when your own government doesn't seem to play by the same rules?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, let me just say that I'm obviously very disappointed with the decision that was taken by the Member for Calgary-East. But let me also say how proud I am of the team that sits with me here on this side of the House. As Premier I could not be more fortunate. They are doing extraordinary jobs, they act with integrity, and they know that the hard work of change sometimes comes with good days and bad days and hard days and easy days. But they never take their eye off the ball, and together our caucus is fighting for a better Alberta. [some applause]

The Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Promotion of Alberta's Technology Sector

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the tech sector is a burgeoning industry in Alberta. It will help diversify our economy and create good-paying jobs. Can the Minister of Economic Development and Trade tell the House how the interactive digital media tax credit is supporting this very rapidly growing industry in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the important question. Frankly, for far too long previous governments neglected our tech sector. They didn't listen to businesses who were asking for a level playing field. I'm very proud of the fact that we have introduced the interactive digital media tax credit, which is levelling the playing field between Alberta, Quebec, and B.C., that have enjoyed tax credits for many, many years and, because of it, have a burgeoning tech sector. I'm very proud of the fact that our plan is already working. A company called Improbable, a billion-dollar U.K. tech company, is relocating here to Edmonton because of the ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, Silicon Valley is known world-wide as the tech hub. However, given labour costs many leading organizations are looking at moving operations to places with significant talent. Alberta has that significant talent. What are we doing to make sure that Alberta is on the radar of these organizations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only does Alberta have incredible talent; we have no sales tax, no health care premiums, and no payroll tax in addition to the best talent in the world. I'm very proud to work with the Minister of Advanced Education to increase the number of student graduates in the tech space. We also have a new direct flight from Edmonton to Silicon Valley, and recently we hired a company called Connection Silicon Valley to help build those relationships between Alberta businesses and the valley and to attract investment from Silicon Valley back here to Alberta. I'm very proud of that. We are working with companies that are looking at setting up shop here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that women, indigenous peoples, and people living with disabilities have historically been underrepresented in the tech sector, what is the government doing to ensure that as our tech sector grows, historically underrepresented groups are being represented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm very proud of the fact that our interactive digital media tax credit comes with an additional refund for payroll costs for underrepresented workers, the first of its kind in Canada. This way, we are incentivizing businesses to hire qualified, diverse staff. You know what else? Companies that have a diversity of workers and board members do better, they are more successful companies, and they have higher and better balance sheets. I can tell you that we're very proud of this. I'm curious to know why the Leader of the Opposition wants to kill this tax credit and others that are supporting the very job creators in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Liability for Energy Industry Environmental Damage

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current oil well programs – the licensee liability rating program, the Orphan Well Association, and the mine financial security program – are premised on a robust oil and gas industry, that allows companies to effectively defer abandonment and reclamation indefinitely. We know that there are fiscal and environmental liabilities now approaching $260 billion, according to the most recent Energy Regulator estimates, that will otherwise default to present and future generations. To the minister: can you tell the House, after three and a half years, what has changed since your government committed to address these . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we know that Albertans are concerned about aging oil and gas infrastructure and about tailings ponds and that kind of thing, and we absolutely are, too. When we first formed government, we began looking at the whole liability situation and fixing it, and we got a full picture. To be clear, we take it very seriously. For too long in the previous government, as was mentioned, there was no attention to that, and I can assure Albertans that we are paying attention.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: I'll take that to mean that nothing has changed, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the licensee liability rating system is clearly failing to address growing numbers of orphan wells and cleanup costs and that the mine financial security program has on deposit a small fraction of what is needed to cover the costs, why in 2018 has there been no change to honestly and responsibly address these massive looming public liabilities?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, there has been quite a bit of change since we took government. Under our climate leadership plan we have provided incentives for companies to do clean technologies such as CNRL's new technology for dry tailings. Shell and Suncor are collaborating on a new process that dewater mature tailings, meaning faster reclamation, slower growth. And we have revamped the tailings management framework and strengthened reclamation standards to ensure that fluid tailings are trending to long-term reclamation outcomes.

Dr. Swann: With all due respect to the minister, she's ignoring the elephant in the room.

The Speaker: No preamble, hon. member. Keep going.

Dr. Swann: The new Energy Regulator report suggests $260 billion of liability potentially falling to the public after a government's estimate, over many years, of $56 billion. We're talking about a fivefold increased risk, yet the vice-president of the Alberta Energy Regulator said that it's likely to grow as more data becomes available, not cut back. Should Albertans believe . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The numbers that the member is referencing represent a snapshot in time, and the number is closer to $50 billion. The fact of the matter is that regardless of what it is, we have taken four actions: we've provided that loan to the Orphan Well Association, cleaning up wells faster, employing 1,600 people; we've tightened up the rules and the loopholes the previous government left in place; we've made a number of clean tech investments; and four, we are seeking long-term solutions to a long-term problem, calling on the federal government to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act in response to the Redwater decision.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, for the record, this question was not given to me from a minister.

Calgary's 2026 Winter Olympics Bid

Mr. Barnes: In one week from today, though, Calgarians will be voting on whether or not Calgary should proceed with their 2026 Winter Olympics bid. To make an informed decision, Calgarians need transparency and full understanding of costs and potential implications for taxpayers. A 2012 Oxford University study found that, on average, cost overruns for Winter Olympic Games between 1960 and 2012 were 135 per cent – 135 per cent – Mr. Speaker. To the minister: who will be responsible for cost overruns should they occur?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. With regard to Olympic financing, Mr. Speaker, we have been very clear. From the government of Alberta $700 million is all we can do towards the Olympic financing. That has been clear. We've shared that with our partners. We've shared that with Calgarians because we came out with that information 30 days before the plebiscite of November 13. So it's well understood that $700 million is it from the government of Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the federal government has said that they are not responsible for cost overruns as part of their hosting policy and given that they also made clear this week that this precludes any security cost overruns and given that the recent Vancouver Winter Olympics planned $175 million for security but spent nearly five times that, $900 million, to the minister: has the province made any contingency plans should a cost overrun occur, or do they expect cost overruns to be shifted to the Alberta taxpayer?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I've been clear about how much money is coming from the government of Alberta in my last answer. What I can tell you is that contingencies are built into all of the parts of the budget and the budget lines. You know, the BidCo people are the ones who have put that together. We've had people sitting on that as well. We've been clear up front: $700 million is it. You'd need to speak to the other two orders of government with regard to your questions.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the city of Calgary is already facing challenges, including the country's second-highest unemployment rate, struggling to collect property taxes given the depressed downtown property values and given that the $390 million municipal portion has been estimated to result in a 1.3 per cent increase in Calgarians' property taxes and that cost overruns could make that amount even higher, again to the minister: can you tell Albertans if your officials have done any analysis on the economic impact of raised property taxes on the Calgary economy, and would you commit to releasing that to the House, please?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. What I can tell Calgarians is that they'll have an opportunity to vote on whether they want to see the Olympics in their city. Advance polls start today and go tomorrow, and on November 13 there are polls across the city as well. Calgarians have the information from the government of Alberta – $700 million is assured from this order of government – and they have the opportunity to put an X where they want to with the plebiscite.

United States Tariff on Steel

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government did a disservice to Albertans and workers during the NAFTA renegotiations. Their do-no-harm trade negotiation tactic obviously didn't work. Alberta steel producers are left with a carbon tax and a 25 per cent tariff. A local steel producer here in Edmonton estimates that 60,000 tonnes of steel exported to the United States are now subject to this tariff. Given that the NDP's good friend and ally Justin Trudeau today just admitted that the 25 per cent tariff will remain even if the USMCA is ratified, why has the NDP trade minister not made this tariff reduction a priority?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to share with the new member of the House that I've been in constant communication with the federal government talking about the implications of the steel tariffs that the U.S. imposed on Canada, also ensuring that Ottawa is well aware of the implications of Canada's countertariffs and how that's going to impact Alberta, not just our steel producers but also our consumers. That's where and who is being hit very, very hard. I can tell you that the USMCA is a trade agreement that is critical to the future of Alberta and of Canada, and we ensured that we were standing up for Alberta interests and communicating that to the federal government.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, quite simply, will the Minister of Economic Development and Trade commit that he will lobby his Trudeau Liberal allies to not sign the new USMCA trade deal until an agreement is in place to remove this tariff?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if I'm going to agree to that because the USMCA has significant repercussions on a number of different industries. I'd love for the hon. member to go consult with the forestry sector, the agriculture sector, our energy sector, who actually is quite satisfied with the USMCA and the fact that energy is not being either penalized or hurt through this deal. They understood because we worked very closely with them on the potential repercussions of a trade deal. Now, what I can tell the member is that I've written a number of letters to the federal government and will continue to stand up for our steel producers and for our consumers but not at the expense of other industries.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta steel producers export around half a billion dollars' worth of steel to the United States, why is the minister playing politics with the livelihoods of so many working Albertans? Why won't they champion Alberta's interests and stand up against their Trudeau Liberal allies in Ottawa?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Conservatives are saying that we shouldn't sign this deal at any cost, not realizing the billions of dollars that it would cost Albertans, Alberta companies, and Alberta workers and communities. They have no plan to diversify the economy. Our government has been working very, very diligently at diversifying the economy, working with our job creators. We will continue to work with the steel sector as well as every other sector to ensure that Alberta continues to remain competitive, and we will lobby Ottawa on their behalf, but I'm not about to take advice from that side of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Opioid-related Deaths

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 8,000 Canadians have died from opioid overdoses since 2016. Alberta has been hit hard by this crisis. We have the second-highest death rate nationally. In 2016 545 Albertans died from overdoses. So far this year, with two months to go, we already have 609 Albertans that have died from overdoses, and it doesn't end there. This summer the Calgary fire department reported a sixfold increase in their opioid responses from last year. These stats are completely unacceptable. What is this government doing to stop this growing crisis, and more importantly will they finally declare this a crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Certainly, our hearts go out to every family, every community member, every friend who's been impacted by these deaths. These were people that were loved by somebody and who have now died. We certainly want everyone who is struggling with opioids to know that they're not alone, that the crisis continues to have devastating effects on families across the province and the country. That's why we're expanding treatment options throughout our province. That's why today we're opening more supervised opioid consumption services, because we want people to have the opportunity to live another day, and we will continue to fight for them every day in this House and outside.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, if this government considered this a crisis, they would have officials from Health and Justice and human services all working together along with their partners at the municipal, provincial, and federal levels. You're simply a facilitator. Why exactly did this government choose not to work with our confederation to study this issue? Why did you opt out of a national study on this opioid crisis? Why could you not work concurrently with this federal study while you worked on your provincial review? Is multitasking difficult?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are certainly working every day to save lives, and we won't back down from that cause. We have 4,000 more treatment spaces available in Alberta today because this government is fighting every day for the front lines, fighting for folks who are dying, and fighting to make sure that we have more opportunities for them to live another day. We've distributed over 80,000 life-saving naloxone kits, and more than 4,500 overdose reversals have been reported back to us. It's probably even more than that. Supervised consumption services continue to save lives. We're going to keep moving on all of those fronts. We'll continue to work with our partners in the federal government, but Alberta and B.C. are leading on this file, and we will continue to do so.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, this minister claims that she's getting results, that she's addressing the crisis at hand, yet two Albertans every day are dying from this opioid crisis. The government's role model in combatting this opioid crisis, B.C., has seen its life expectancy drop by six months. Tens of thousands of Narcan kits have been distributed, yet we see still an upward trend in overdoses and drug abuse. This government is increasing dependency with these extended...

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

The Speaker: Hon. member, I want to just caution you, again, about the preambles. You're an experienced member of this House and would know that. I'd appreciate it if you'd address a specific question. The last two times you've given quite an exaggerated preamble without the question coming. I would ask that you focus at this point. What's your question? One sentence or less.

Opioid-related Deaths (continued)

Mr. Yao: The problem is obviously getting worse, not better. This government has demonstrated it doesn't want to work with our confederation to study the issue. When will the provincial...

The Speaker: Hon. member. [interjection] Hon. member.

Could I have the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Carbon Levy and Agricultural Costs

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta farmers are part of the climate change solution through the amount of carbon they sequester by using new technology. Alberta farmers practise no till and minimum till, helping to retain carbon in the soil. They practise nutrient stewardship, applying the right fertilizer at the right rate, at the right time, and in the right place. Canadian canola growers have used biotechnology to reduce emissions by 1 billion kilograms, the equivalent of taking 500,000 cars off the road. Yet this NDP government penalizes the agricultural industry with ever-increasing carbon taxation. Why?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the hon. member is quite right that there were a number of examples of climate leadership even before our government put in place our policies. Under the Conservative carbon tax there were a number of offset protocol opportunities for farmers that they took advantage of and that they continue to take advantage of. That's one way that the agricultural sector is certainly doing its part. Another way is through the $80 million worth of reinvestments that we have made of carbon levy funds into agricultural sector efficiency. All of those investments would be cancelled if we do as they ask and...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that carbon taxation adds costs to farm inputs and transportation, making it more expensive to produce food in Alberta, and given that our key competitors around the world are not exposed to carbon taxation, why does this NDP government continue to punish our agricultural industry, a trade-exposed industry, with carbon taxation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, of course, we have a marked fuel exemption. We have the $80 million worth of investments in efficiency that I talked about. All of those investments would be cancelled if we allowed Justin Trudeau to impose his plan on Alberta, as is the preferred strategy by the folks opposite. But, also, we have brought in output-based allocations, in particular for our oilseeds producers. What we're looking for is for that system to prevail and take some national leadership so that we have a level playing field for everyone, because our system was developed in consultation with those industries.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that carbon policy needs to recognize both emissions and sequestration and given that farmers sequester more carbon in farm crops and grasses than they emit and given that I am now hearing that the NDP is devaluing the carbon emission offset credits available for investment under the CCIR, is what I'm hearing true? If so, why is the government increasing taxation on farmers while at the same time lowering the value of carbon credits in this province?

Ms Phillips: Well, the fact of the matter is that our carbon offsets have increased in value, Mr. Speaker, so that's the first place where the hon. member's facts are incorrect. But here's the thing. The entire system will be repealed and a system imposed on us by Ottawa. All of the system that we have carefully crafted in consultation with our fertilizer producers, with our canola crushers, with our farmers: all of that disappears if these folks have their way and they roll out the red carpet for Justin Trudeau to do whatever he wants, because that's apparently the preferred Conservative strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Municipal Election Financing

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the government introduced their first bill to regulate campaign financing, they claimed that they were taking big money out of politics. During the debate on the bill many members of this House pointed out that their bill was actually more likely to just drive that big money into less transparent and accountable areas. Intended or not, your government encouraged the growth of third-party advertisers and political action committees. Big money hasn't left politics; it's just found a new home. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: does your plan to regulate municipal campaign finances address the issue of PACs, or do you want to keep this glaring loophole intact?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you for the question. We've listened hard to people all across this province who want big money out of municipal elections, local elections, and that includes municipalities, Métis settlements, school boards, and irrigation districts. Our focus is on making sure that it's about big ideas and not about big pockets, Mr. Speaker. We've heard it, and we are making sure that we get that done.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that incumbents in elections already have a number of advantages over challengers and given that one of these advantages is the ability to fund raise in a greater capacity and given that municipal donations do not qualify for a tax receipt, making fundraising even more difficult, and given that all of these concerns mean that challengers from minority and underrepresented groups are going to face even more barriers to running, to the same minister. Your proposed changes to municipal campaign finances are going to stack the deck in favour of the incumbent. What are you doing to offset those barriers?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you to the member for the question, Mr. Speaker. This is on the Order Paper right now. The name of it is an Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. We are going to debate that, all of the facts. I will have all that information for him during the debate in the House, and I will gladly make sure that I answer those questions in the fulsome way that I can during that debate, in particular in Committee of the Whole.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that fundraising as an individual is going to get harder and given that third-party advertisers and political action committees have access to more resources than any individual candidate and given that this will provide an incentive for individual candidates to align themselves with PACs and third-party advertisers to gain support and resources, leading to municipal politics being dominated by ideological slates, to the same minister: what, if anything, are you doing to ensure that municipal elections remain free from outside influence by dark money groups?

Mr. S. Anderson: Again, it's on the Order Paper, and we'll be able to debate it in fulsome way during Committee of the Whole. But I don't understand if the member doesn't get what freedom of speech is and how PACs work. It's unconstitutional to ban those types of things. Would he like to put more, you know. . .

An Hon. Member: Parameters.

Mr. S. Anderson: . . . parameters around it? I guess that is probably the word I'll use. Yeah, a hundred per cent we will, and if he'd read the bill, he would know that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Crime Rates

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Leader of the Official Opposition noted Calgary's spiking crime statistics, and the Minister of Justice shrugged him off. So allow me to provide some other crime-related stats which may surprise Albertans and perhaps even the minister herself. I'll start with Alberta's crime severity index. In 2014 it was at 87, and since then it has spiked to 110. Minister, why did the NDP government burden police with carbon tax when they need that money to fight the increase in crime?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, one of the things that our government noticed last year before we introduced our plan to combat rural crime – I understand that crime goes throughout the province, but certainly that's the portion that's within our jurisdiction. We hope that cities will step up and do the same. One of the reasons we did that was because we saw that uptrend in crime statistics and we felt that we needed to take immediate action to help Albertans, as opposed to the opposition, who voted against that money.

2:30

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Now, given that last year Edmonton posted the second-highest crime severity index among Canada's 25 largest cities and given that according to the EPS website this index is continuing its climb in 2018, Minister, if, as you claim, this government is addressing Alberta's crime wave, then why is the crime severity index still increasing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We certainly do know that there have been challenges with crimes, and we know that that rate is coming down. We have good numbers from the RCMP with respect to that, but we know that that is not felt equally throughout the province. That's why we're continuing to work with our law enforcement to make sure that we are investing in front-line services as opposed to the opposition, who voted against 59 additional RCMP officers, against 20 additional Crown prosecutors, against 40 new RCMP civilian personnel, and the list goes on.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that Albertans were the victims of 30,000 break and enters just last year and that that's a 35 per cent increase in the number of B and Es since 2014 and given that when the Member for Calgary-Lougheed confronted the minister just last week with stats outlining Alberta's crime wave she could only say, "We need to continue working with our police partners to address these issues" – Minister, working with police partners is and should be a given, so what are you actually doing to address this issue?

Ms Ganley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think one of the most important things we're doing is that we're continuing to support our municipal partners with more than half a billion dollars in police funding. Interestingly, half a billion dollars is slightly lower than the $700 million tax giveaway that the opposition would like to give to the richest 1 per cent, that would wipe out the entire police budget. So what we're going to continue to do is invest in services, invest in front-line police officers. I wonder whether the opposition regrets voting against those things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Provincial Achievement Tests

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I regret to inform you that the Minister of Education has not achieved an acceptable result in his responses to the questions about why a passing score for the math PATs was set at 42 per cent, also known as a cut score. The minister knows that this is not a problem that will be solved solely by a new curriculum because the PATs are tailored to the curriculum. To the Minister of Education, a multiple-choice question: is the cut-score problem caused by (a) bad resources, (b) bad assessments, (c) bad teaching methodology, or (d) all of the above?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the hon. member has an amusing perspective on what is a very serious issue, and that is around ensuring that we have basic skills for kids in mathematics and in language arts in the province of Alberta. We are doing that. We are building new curriculum. More importantly, we are making the investment in education to make sure that kids have teachers in front of them. You don't improve the situation by taking 4,000 teachers out of the system, which they are planning to do.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta parents have been asking that the cut scores be released and explained and given that this is a reasonable expectation on the part of parents and given that parents are becoming frustrated by the secrecy and evasiveness of the minister, to the same minister. True or false: the Minister of Education will publish and explain cut scores for future PATs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must say that we are very proud of our provincial achievement exam results here in this last year. We saw marked improvements in mathematics in Grade 12 and in Grade 6 and part of Grade 9 as well. We weren't afraid to ask the hard question of kids writing in Grade 9 and now in Grade 6 having a no-calculator section. That's what parents were looking for. That's what basic skills are all about, and you don't achieve those basic skills by making a $700 million cut to the budget to give it to their rich friends when we could actually use that money in schools.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I guess the answer was: false.

Given that the cut score for question period today has been set at 66 per cent and given that the minister's nonanswers to my previous questions mean that he has once again failed to achieve an acceptable result and given that assessments are tailored to the curriculum that is taught, which means that even a perfect curriculum could not magically solve this problem, to the same minister: a homework assignment. What are you going to do to address the problem of cut scores?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must say that when we introduced the grade 6 no-calculator portion two years ago, the kids struggled. This year they ended up with a 7.2 per cent increase in that one part of the exam. I'm not going to apologize for teaching basic skills and having that expectation in our classrooms. If people want to evade that or misconstrue it as anything but an improvement, then that's just not good mathematics, and that's just bad education. You know, I think we are doing an excellent job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Federal Bill C-69

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's energy competitiveness is impacted by the cumulative cost of poor government policy such as not standing up with this side of the House against Bill C-69. Does the government not understand that we will continue to lose over $75 million a week and thousands of good-paying jobs? How is this standing up for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Bill C-69 the province has taken Alberta's concerns straight to Ottawa's doorstep. We are fighting for Alberta. We are engaging at every level, and in fact the Deputy Minister of Environment and Parks is in Ottawa today meeting with senior officials in multiple departments to follow up on the meetings that I had in Ottawa. We're meeting with Senators and anyone who will listen to ensure Alberta's constitutional authority as the owner and regulator of natural resource development is respected.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, to be clear, the government voted twice against standing in unity with us against Bill C-69.

Given that as big energy projects wrap up, capital spending and resource development is falling because the big projects are not being replaced because we are uncompetitive and given that there are bottlenecks to getting our product to market and now we're more reliant on trucks and trains for transport, why will the government not stand up with us in unity to oppose Bill C-69 and get our products to market?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm very proud of the work that the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment and Parks and our Premier have done talking, engaging with Ottawa for the past year and a half, outlining our concerns with C-69. I'll tell you what we have done. Our Minister of Energy has modernized our royalty review to ensure that drilling is even more competitive and to incentivize companies to get going right away. We've also worked with the AER to make it easier to navigate through regulations. We know that we have incredible companies doing incredible work. I can tell you that there's a lot of work that has been done and is ongoing on this side of the House despite the fact that the members opposite . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-69 needs to go away right away. Given that capital is fleeing Alberta, jobs are fleeing Alberta, business is fleeing Alberta, and we are not competing on the global scale because of actions like Bill C-69, why is this government helping to handcuff our people, our resources, and our prosperity?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're working very hard every day for what matters to Alberta families, and that's getting pipelines, that's diversifying our economy, and that's creating the good jobs that the energy sector brings. We've worked very hard on our diversification plans. Inter Pipeline is currently building in Alberta, and they're going to bring value add, more value staying in Alberta for Albertans. We have one more project about to do an FID. This year we introduced Bill 1, which is going to provide a lot more incentives for people to bring diversification here to Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Climate Leadership Plan

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October the UN panel on climate change report had dire warnings for the future if we aren't able to slow the pace of climate change. I'm hearing from Calgarians who are concerned about the impact on future generations and want to see action. Meanwhile crickets from the opposition. I'd like the minister responsible for the climate change office to outline how our government is working to support Albertans to reduce their carbon footprint.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our preliminary data is showing that Alberta was reducing its greenhouse gas emissions last year and even this year largely out of the electricity sector. There are a number of different ways that Alberta is seeing results from the climate leadership plan. For example, with Energy Efficiency Alberta Albertans are saving $10 for every $1 they invest in residential energy efficiency. It's created 3,000 private-sector jobs and added half a billion dollars to the GDP through Energy Efficiency's one year of operation alone. Albertans have saved $400 million in energy costs. That is a massive savings for all Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the changes that individual Albertans are making have an impact on our carbon footprint and on individual pocketbooks, industrial carbon use is also a critically important part of the picture. How has government worked with the industry to address this, and what are some industrial leaders saying?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can only quote from people like Brian Ferguson, who was the president of Cenovus, who said:

We fully support Alberta taking a leadership role in addressing climate change and we believe that one of the best ways to do that is through an economy-wide carbon levy as well as by supporting the development of carbon-reducing technologies.

I'll tell you how we've done that in the oil and gas industry, Mr. Speaker. It's through our methane reduction. We're already seeing companies grow by 1 to 300 per cent, the methane industry alliance advises us, based on the kinds of investments that we've made and the kinds of policies we've put in place.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that members opposite have made it clear that they don't believe in climate change or in the commonly accepted methods of addressing it such as carbon pricing, to the same minister: what are the consequences of rolling back these efforts, as the Official Opposition has pledged to do . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms Payne: . . . and what is the consequence of literally doing nothing in the face of one of the greatest issues of our time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There is no question that a plan imposed on us by Ottawa, as the Conservatives opposite would prefer to have done, would be very negative for Alberta. Investments in the green line and the Edmonton LRT: cancelled. Small business tax cut: cancelled. Policies that increase demand for natural gas in our electricity sector: cancelled. Biggest renewable opportunities in Canada: cancelled. Policies that help oil and gas invest in clean tech investments: cancelled. Policies for Alberta's farmers, our indigenous climate leadership programs – I know that the members opposite don't care – also cancelled.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will continue with Members' Statements in 30 seconds. [interjections] Hon. members.

Official Opposition and Government Policies

Mr. Loewen: For those Albertans who watch question period, it can be frustrating. Questions are asked, and the responses rarely have answers and usually contain a tirade of partisan attacks where the truth is misrepresented and Albertans are misled. Here's a myth. They like to fearmonger about us only giving a tax break to the rich. The truth: UCP will give a $3 billion tax break to all Albertans by just cancelling the carbon tax, unlike the NDP that massively raised taxes on all Albertans along with giving $2 billion plus a year in interest to bankers and foreign investors.

Another fallacy. They say a change in government will mean thousands of nurses and teachers losing their jobs. The truth: these accusations are baseless and completely untrue, and they know it. The UCP will protect front-line workers like teachers and nurses. They always said that the opposition couldn't reduce the deficit without firing thousands, and now they claim to have done it. Obviously, it can be done.

Here is another tale. They claim that Conservative governments could not get a pipeline built. The truth: four major pipelines were built, and every major pipeline proposal was approved. You can't build pipelines that haven't been proposed. On the other hand, two major pipelines have been cancelled under this NDP government and their ally Trudeau, and other pipelines are in limbo. The NDP have watched private pipeline investment flee and can't even get one built when it is backed by billions of taxpayer dollars.

The NDP even have the gall to say that Conservatives are cheering for pipeline failures. The fact is that we've been ahead of the government at every step when it comes to supporting pipelines. In fact, just about every strategy the government has to get pipelines built was taken from the UCP playbook. The problem is that they were months or years too late.

This government even attacks our friends and neighbours in Saskatchewan. Perhaps their NDP friends there forgot to tell them that after decades of fiscal mismanagement and struggling public services, it was Brad Wall who got the books in order, spurred investment, and hired teachers, doctors, and nurses.

The NDP government has said that their policies are making life better for Albertans. If they think that massive tax increases, high unemployment, driving out billions of dollars in investment, attacking rural Alberta, increasing surgery wait times, and failing on getting pipelines built is making life better, then I'd hate to see what making life worse is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Member's Tribute to His Father

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to pay tribute to my father, Junior Rulon Ruthven Shepherd, born in Marabella, Trinidad, on February 14, 1945, the fourth of 10 children. He loved electronics and working with his hands, which led him to vocational school and at 16 an apprenticeship with Texaco for 33 cents an hour. Two of his co-workers invited Dad to their church, where he adopted the faith that would define and shape the rest of his life. He spent six and a half years at Texaco. He taught himself to play guitar and harmonica, which he played at church, sometimes leading singing. You see, Dad had a beautiful baritone. I have many fond memories of sitting in the living room while he led family singalongs.

In 1966 Dad heard about jobs in Canada, and he leapt at the chance for a fresh start, touching down in August 1967 in the city where he'd spend the rest of his life, Edmonton. He quickly found work and became a journeyman electrician. He attended Sharon gospel chapel, where he met my mother, Annette. They started dating in 1969 and married the next year. By 1979 he had three daughters and one son. He worked incredibly hard to support us, including weeks as far away as Yellowknife when work here grew scarce. At 42 Dad enrolled at NAIT to pursue his original dream of studying instrumentation, and that led to work repairing equipment at the Royal Alex hospital, where he worked until he retired. Dad remained devoted to his Christian faith, leading Bible studies, serving as a deacon and elder, tirelessly helping others, and welcoming newcomers.

In '99 Dad was diagnosed with prostate cancer but after treatment enjoyed good health in remission for many years. He was a devoted grandfather, helping raise four grandchildren and ensuring the other nine never ran short of teasing and dad jokes. In early 2016 we learned that Dad's cancer was back. He kept working in his church for as long as he could, and we had many more good days before he passed on June 14 of this year.

Dad and I held very different beliefs, but he taught me a lot. He gave me my first taste of music, my love of the mountains, and a strong work ethic. His memory will always be with me and now will also live in the record of this House.

Thanks, Dad. Rest in peace.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Freedom

Mr. Melver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday morning I was honoured to attend the flag raising at the field of crosses memorial project in Calgary on Memorial Drive. A ceremony happens daily at sunrise, and there is a ceremony at sunset, where the flags are lowered each day. If you go there, you will see 3,400 white crosses, each carrying the name, rank, regiment, date of death, and age at death of a Canadian from southern Alberta who has given their life in the military protecting our freedoms and quality of life.

It is a powerful image, showing in stark terms that our freedom is not free and never has been. On November 11 I expect that all members of this Legislature will find a place to go out in public and honour our women and men who serve in the military while remembering those who have served in the past, creating and protecting our freedoms. Mr. Speaker, we need to hold our freedoms closely every day and not take them for granted during the rest of the year.

Here are some freedoms that are under attack currently. The freedom for a person who tucks a child into bed at night to choose where and how that child is educated. There is a movement currently in Alberta to take away parents' choice in how they educate their children. We must resist this with all of our strength.

The freedom to practise the faith of our choice or indeed to practise no faith at all, if that is preferred, is under attack. Mr. Speaker, we recently saw the aftermath of active hate in Pittsburgh, where a person opened fire at a synagogue where people were peacefully praying. In recent memory innocent people at a mosque in Quebec were murdered out of hate while practising their faith. Many other faith communities around the world suffer unprovoked attacks fueled by hate.

Every time one of these events takes place, all of our freedoms are under attack. In many countries basic freedoms that we take for granted here are not respected. Women, people of a particular sexual orientation, and minority groups are routinely treated brutally in these countries.

Mr. Speaker, my desire is to have all of us think about our freedoms and thank those soldiers, sailors, and aircrew that have provided them, and my wish is that we remember every day and not just on November 11.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have submitted to Parliamentary Counsel a request for an emergency debate, SO 30, today on the $260 billion in unfunded oil patch liabilities.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, do you have some reports as well?

Dr. Swann: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In relation to the SO 30 today are the appropriate number of copies of a PowerPoint presentation by the vice-president of liability, Mr. Robert Wadsworth, of the Alberta Energy Regulator. This has been circulated to members of the Legislature in preparation for this debate. It also highlights the inadequate representation of risk that has gone on for decades in this province, and it would give some very practical and concrete numbers for the members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we had one point of order. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Point of Order

Questions outside Ministerial Responsibility

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I rise on a point of order. I will refer you to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition. I am looking at the section on principles and guidelines for oral questions, specifically page 509, the second bullet point, which I will quote to you: “ask a question that is within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the individual Minister addressed.”

What I have noticed today, Mr. Speaker – and I could have called a point of order several other times throughout the day, but I decided to let it go; on that question it just got so far that I think it’s become a bit ridiculous – is that the government has started each of their questions now spending time talking about what is hypothetically, maybe or maybe not, an opposition policy and then started to ask questions of the minister like: if that opposition policy was a policy, what does the minister think of it? Clearly, the process in question period is to ask a minister about the minister’s responsibilities, not hypothetical situations associated with the opposition, that, by the way, are not true. But that’s irrelevant to this point.

I think the government should, same as us, same as any backbencher or private member inside this Assembly, take the time and ask the minister about situations that have to do with their ministry, as per the process in this House. I recognize that the government doesn’t want to run on their record; however, in this Assembly they should at least participate in the process appropriately.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to this point of order. We do concede that the point of order reflects a concern that a question should be directed toward government policy. It would seem that it is fair that government policy can be questions as to not only what has been instituted but what policies may be instituted or what alternatives are being pursued, as is often a question from the other side of the House in terms of the nature of choices that are made. We recognize that sometimes, in seeking to pursue some of those choices and the decisions that are made subsequent to those choices, our members may slip up and word a question in such a way that it implies asking about policies by others than the members in government.

Knowing that we are on occasion apt to slip up in our words, on this side of the House we will endeavour to ensure that we are a bit more careful when we ask questions about alternative policy possibilities that government are considering. We would acknowledge that in this particular case we need to be a bit more precise in our language, and we will endeavour to do so in the future.

The Speaker: Just for clarity, are you agreeing that you will withdraw the comment?

Mr. Feehan: Mr. Speaker, we will ask the member to withdraw the last part of her question for the record at this time.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms Payne: Yeah. I withdraw that portion of the question. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I think we are now proceeding to the Standing Order 30.

Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Liability for Energy Industry Environmental Damage

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I’m calling the attention of the Legislative Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the protection of Alberta taxpayers from skyrocketing cleanup and reclamation liabilities for the oil and gas industry given that cost estimates could be as high as $260 billion, raising questions about the adequacy of the orphan well program and the mine financial security program and considering that the Alberta Energy Regulator and the Alberta government have provided conflicting estimates that differ by more than $200 billion.

Let me begin by expressing my profound gratitude to Mr. Robert Wadsworth, vice-president of closure and liability at the Alberta Energy Regulator, a true public servant who, at risk to his job, is addressing a private audience in the oil and gas industry and other stakeholders and identified our collective liability of $260 billion. He asserted that this number is most likely going to grow, and it is five times higher than that reported by the Energy department in the past. This is a matter of urgent public importance and, Mr. Speaker, public trust. Albertans are demanding clear, transparent, valid estimates of our liabilities to present and future generations. Coincidentally, the day after this report was made public, Jim Ellis, the CEO of the Alberta Energy Regulator, resigned.

Let’s remember, Mr. Speaker, that the Auditor General in 2015 investigated and raised concerns about the serious inadequacy of reporting by Alberta Energy on liabilities, which potentially in relation to cleanup and reclamation could leave taxpayers on the hook. The minister of environment agreed at the time that the program needed to be reviewed, but nothing seems to have changed since then except the shocking revelation that we have been grossly underestimating these liabilities.

Why is it urgent, even critical that we debate this and put aside House business? Fundamentally, because the magnitude and seriousness of our collective liability in relation to the oil and gas industry in the past hundred years is, I believe, being made clear, albeit in a confidential way where it was presented but has now become public and certainly in the public interest. It contradicts the unverified reports that consistently come out of the minister's office. This represents a potential fiscal, economic, and environmental crisis if it is not addressed appropriately. It begs, Mr. Speaker – not blames, but it begs – solutions, solutions that start with our collective awareness of the true liabilities that present to our economy, to our investors in the oil industry, to the public, and to the environment.

It's now clear that our Energy Regulator has in the past (a) not accurately reflected the public liability for cleanup of oil and gas facilities and (b) has for whatever reasons kept the reality of this liability from the public.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I want to urge you to get to the question of urgency. I hope that's where you're heading.

Dr. Swann: I hope that I'm making that case, Mr. Speaker.

This is a question not only of financial and environmental liability; it is a question of public trust in our Energy Regulator and in this department, in this government. The licensee liability rating for oil wells and the Orphan Well Association were designed to protect the public from liability, and it is based on a system that is easily gamed by overstating the assets and understating the liabilities. That's been clear as we see an orphan well fund that is nowhere near what is needed to clean up orphan wells in this province, let alone large facilities and SAGD oil sands, mines, and tailings ponds.

In truth, Mr. Speaker, assets are declining in value as liabilities continue to increase in this province. The longer we wait, the higher the price. More companies go away. More good people in Alberta, including your and my families, will pay toward a staggering estimate, currently $260 billion.

Another revelation, Mr. Speaker: remediation costs – that is, the cost of cleaning contaminated soils – are not generally included in these costs under the LLR program. There are a number of these unmeasured costs that will add further to this very high estimate of liabilities. If not now, when will we, in these august chambers, address this silent financial tsunami? It includes not only contaminated lands, surface water, and groundwater – I'm just about finished.

The Speaker: Please focus on the urgency matter. If it's agreed in the House, you will get the opportunity to . . .

Dr. Swann: I am feeling a great urgency about this, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I can sense that.

Dr. Swann: I hope you're getting it.

This financial tsunami includes not only contaminated land, surface water, groundwater; it also includes unfathomable fiscal liability for us and our future generations.

It's also a profound financial risk for our banking institutions, including our own ATB, which has been operating on the basis of faulty information and investments. We now must recognize that they have been receiving discredited calculations and annual liability reporting on financial accounts in the oil and gas industry that have not reflected the true risk. The urgency . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Dr. Swann: . . . and the scope of this long-ignored issue speaks for itself, Mr. Speaker. The time for denial and inaction is over.

The Speaker: With the greatest respect, hon. member, we need to address the urgency . . .

Dr. Swann: Have I convinced you yet, sir?

The Speaker: My eyes are blind to the issue.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to the order by Calgary-Mountain View? I have to acknowledge you. The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to respond on behalf of the government to the request made by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for emergency debate under Standing Order 30 this afternoon. I think that this Chamber can all agree that developing Alberta's energy resources is a privilege and not a right. And I think it's also quite evident that this is a long-standing problem for many years. There's no question that the previous government allowed this matter to fester for far too long. They stood back and admired the problem from afar. But, unlike previous governments, this government is seized by the importance of the issue.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Point of Order Urgency

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the issue is urgency, as you've already pointed out to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. The government is now trying to make a statement which may be relevant if you had granted a debate. The problem with that is that if this is allowed to continue, if you don't grant a debate, then other members are not allowed to respond in the same way as the government. The government should be responding to the urgency issue.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I noted that and will continue to focus on that, but the information decision rests with me, and I was gracious before.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I would urge that the hon. minister address the point that the . . .

Mr. Feehan: My comments do speak to the point at hand, and I will speak to the relevant pieces of Beauchesne's that address this. But I need to point out that this government began a review of the liability management system, a review that included meetings with stakeholders from industry, environment, NGOs, landowners, municipalities, and indigenous communities.

The Speaker: Urgency.

Mr. Feehan: Well, it speaks to the fact that there are two sets of rules with regard to what makes something urgent. I'm just speaking to the fact that this government has in fact addressed it, which means that it's not an urgency. The House of Commons Procedure and Practice states very clearly that "matters of chronic or continuing concern, such as economic conditions, unemployment rates and constitutional matters, have tended to be set aside," meaning that they tended to not merit consideration as emergency debates.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of orphan well cleanup is indeed a significant one. It is an issue that has been years in the making, did not pop up overnight, and it is in my view a chronic concern rather than an acute one. The broad review that I believe the member wants, one that will determine long-term, made-in-Alberta solutions, is already under way.

My point, why I was making it, with regard to the statement in Beauchesne's – Beauchesne's further states that one Speaker ruled that the emergency debate provisions cannot be used to debate items which, in a regular legislative program with the House of Commons and regular legislative consideration, can come before the House by way of amendments to existing statutes, which, I have been explaining to you, we have done, or in any case will come before it in other ways.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that there are other avenues open to the hon. member that he could raise this issue. For example, today in question period the member had a question that was raised on this and had an opportunity to debate it with the minister; ergo, he has had the opportunity. He's also had opportunities for Members' Statements. He's also had an opportunity to debate a current bill that this government has put into place, Bill 14, An Act to Support Orphan Well Rehabilitation, which was an important bill that was debated in this House.

Again . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: . . . Beauchesne's says that if there are other opportunities, which I am detailing to you now, he should take the opportunity to avail himself of them. He either has or has not but does not need an emergency debate to do that.

In conclusion, I think that this is an . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: . . . important matter but does not rise to the level of urgency, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Brevity

The Speaker: Hon. minister and Member for Calgary-Mountain View and others in the House, I would draw to your attention: you both referenced Standing Order 30, which does, I believe, make reference to brief comments so that the Speaker might make a decision. Brevity was not in the minister's particular case today, nor yourself, hon. minister.

But we may have a question from the – are there other members who wish to speak to this? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Debate Continued

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do agree with you that comments are to be brief, so I will attempt to be brief. I do not think that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has met the test. That, of course, will be up to you to determine. That does not take away from the importance of this issue and, certainly, the need for the government to address it, but I did not hear anything in the Member for Calgary-Mountain View's remarks that would indicate the urgency that is required.

Dr. Swann: Public trust, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: With respect, hon. member, if I gave yourself another point to speak to SO 30, I fear that it might creep into the debate actually taking place in this House rather than the urgent matter itself.

Dr. Swann: One sentence, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Not even one sentence. I think this is a matter, if you – I think Hansard will adequately address the many legitimate points that you made, and I trust that all of the members will look at that again.

I am prepared to rule on the matter. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has met the requirement, first of all, of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office by providing required notice at 2:46 p.m. yesterday.

The proposed motion submitted to my office reads as follows. I believe you have a copy of that.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the protection of Alberta taxpayers from skyrocketing cleanup and reclamation liabilities for the oil and gas industry given that cost estimates could be as high as $260 billion, raising questions about the adequacy of the orphan well program and the mine financial security program, and considering that the Alberta Energy Regulator has provided conflicting estimates that differ by more than $200 billion.

As stated earlier in my comments, my job here at this point is to determine whether or not the request for leave to move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly under Standing Order 30(2) is in order.

The number of orphan wells in the province and the related environmental impacts raise questions and serious concerns for many Albertans. As you have said – the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View identifies in his request for an emergency debate that there is also a large financial cost associated with the reclamation of these wells. It was reported recently that estimates relating to total liabilities for oil and gas in the province may be much too low. I do not doubt that the quoted figure was concerning to those who read those reports. Because a matter is serious, however, does not mean that debate on the matter is urgent, as was argued by the Deputy Government House Leader and the House leader of the Official Opposition. Because a matter is serious, however, does not mean that debate on the matter is urgent.

As noted in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, pages 695 to 696, "matters of chronic or continuing concern . . . have tended to be set aside, whereas topics deemed to require urgent consideration have included work stoppages and strikes, natural disasters, and international crises and events." Furthermore, I must consider whether there are other avenues for debate in the Assembly on this subject matter, as the Deputy Government House Leader outlined. I note that there is a motion for a return presently on the Order Paper, Motion for a Return 18, requesting correspondence pertaining to the criteria for awarding contracts to reclaim orphan wells. The subject matter raised by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View might similarly be an appropriate topic for a written question or a motion for a return, particularly if the member's concerns relate to the value assigned to reclamation costs. A member might also garner this information during question period.

Accordingly, I do not find the request for leave to be in order, and the question will not be put.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 19
An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It is with a great sense of relief that we reach Orders of the Day. There was a point there not too many moments ago where I thought that maybe we wouldn't make it this far before 6 o'clock, but I'm pleased to be here.

Madam Chair, I rise today to table an amendment to this bill, and I have the appropriate number of copies, that I'd like to submit to you.

The Chair: This will be amendment A1.
Please go ahead.

Mr. Schmidt: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. Since its tabling Bill 19 has received tremendous support on all sides of the Assembly. I'm proud that we're taking such strides towards giving the students of this province more affordable and accessible postsecondary education. Based on the debate to date and further consideration around mandatory noninstructional fees, I am proposing an amendment that further increases the transparency and predictability for students as it relates to these fees and to strengthen students' ability to have a strong voice in the cost of their education.

The amendment that I'm proposing, Madam Chair, reads as follows. Section 32 is amended in the proposed section 61 by adding the following after subsection (4):

- (5) If the board of a public post-secondary institution other than Banff Centre sets a mandatory non-instructional fee, the board shall set an amount for the fee that is less than or equal to the cost incurred by the public post-secondary institution to provide the goods or to deliver the services for which the fee is set.
- (6) The board of a public post-secondary institution other than Banff Centre shall not introduce a new mandatory non-instructional fee unless the board has obtained written approval from each of the public post-secondary institution's students' councils.

Madam Chair, this amendment is brought forward to address some of the concerns that we heard, of course, during the debate at second reading around this bill. The Member for Highwood, I believe, raised some concerns around a lack of transparency when we were putting the processes for the approval of these mandatory noninstructional fees in regulation. So we're moving those into the legislation to enhance the transparency that the Member for Highwood and others on that side raised during the debate on this bill at second reading.

But, more importantly, this amendment reflects further consultations that we had with students since this bill was tabled. Certainly, students expressed some concerns that the regulation didn't offer sufficient protection against actions of future cabinets to change the way that institutions can charge mandatory noninstructional fees. They wanted greater protections in terms of how much mandatory noninstructional fees could reflect the cost of the services that are provided. As well, they wanted to enshrine the students' voice in saying yes or no to those mandatory noninstructional fees in the legislation.

I'm very pleased, Madam Chair, that our government is proposing this amendment to take those concerns into consideration and to address them directly.

With that, I look forward to listening to the debate on this proposed amendment.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure, and I'm pleased to speak to the government's amendment on Bill 19. The amendment looks to be broken into two parts. The first part – and I'm paraphrasing – looks to cap mandatory noninstructional fees at the cost to provide the service which the fee is for. At first glance I don't have any issue with this, no issue with this section of the amendment. Rather, I think it makes sense to keep fees in line with the cost of providing a certain service. This does stop institutions from charging a much higher price for the service than it actually costs and keeping the difference for general revenue.

Now, I don't know how much this is the case with noninstructional fees as it currently is. Perhaps there is some discrepancy between the fee and the cost of the service. However, at this time I'm not aware of any examples. Notwithstanding this, I don't think this part of the amendment should create any problems as it'll keep institutions accountable with the noninstructional fees they charge.

However, even though at face value this looks like a fine part of the amendment, I believe we're doing a disservice to Albertans if we do not give due consideration to all stakeholders that this amendment will affect, and I mean all stakeholders. Before I can support any amendment, I need to hear from all the parties that should be affected by this amendment. I mean, we had all summer to work on this bill.

Madam Chair, I also have some concerns with the second part of the amendment. This part, if I understand correctly, would require the consent of student union groups if a university wants to create a new mandatory noninstructional fee. Postsecondary institutions should consult with their students. I say: should consult with their students. Lord knows, I was a student council president at my alma mater many, many years ago. I sat on that committee, and I sat on the board of regents at my institutions, so I remember. They should consult with all students when they're implementing new noninstructional fees. I would hope that universities would take those consultations seriously. These fees are going to be a burden for students, so it's important that students are given their input.

However, I'm concerned this amendment will affect the operations of the postsecondary institutions. My question to the government: have they consulted with the institutions to determine whether this is an amendment they can support? I think the government needs to give due time for us to seek input from all stakeholders involved in this matter. I can't say what institutions think of this as our caucus hasn't had time to consult with them.

Now, Madam Chair, the government has been consulting with postsecondary students for two years now, and I'm sure they received much feedback. Why is it that this government needs to introduce this amendment at this time? Why couldn't they get the bill right the first time? I'm sure they received plenty of feedback from stakeholders on these postsecondary matters over the last two years. What changed in the last two weeks which has caused them to abruptly amend their own legislation?

Madam Chair, unfortunately, I just cannot support this amendment at this time for the simple reason that we do not have time to properly consult with all stakeholders that this change should be made. Perhaps this amendment will be supported by all sides, and I hope it is, but until I have time to listen to all stakeholders, I believe it would be irresponsible for us to vote and pass this.

Again, I'm not discounting the importance of student unions and the input that students need to have the opportunity to give. Student voices need to be heard by the institutions, and their input needs to be taken seriously. However, due to the short notice and the lack of time given to consult with stakeholders, I'm sorry, but I cannot support this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's important for all members to understand that this amendment is a technical amendment in that we're moving some of the policy decisions that our government made in response to the extensive stakeholder consultation that we've been undertaking for the past two years. We're moving some of those policy decisions from the regulation to the legislation. This amendment that's before us today doesn't reflect any change in the policy intent of our government with respect to mandatory noninstructional fees, how they're charged, and students' roles in approving those mandatory noninstructional fees. All of the stakeholders that the Member for Highwood mentioned have been consulted on this policy matter. Everybody understands that this is coming. The only thing that's changing is that what was in the regulation is now being proposed to be in the legislation.

The Member for Highwood says: what's changed in the past two weeks? Let me be quite clear that our policy intent has not changed in the past two weeks. However, it was only last Monday that the bill itself was tabled in the Legislature, and that was the first time that any of our stakeholders had the opportunity to see the bill as it was written, as it was proposed to the members of this Legislature, and to propose any changes.

With that, of course, we received some feedback from students. They wanted to see some of the policy that was intended for regulation moved into the legislation so that the accountability of the minister around how mandatory noninstructional fees were charged is open to the entire Legislative Assembly and not subject to the decisions that a cabinet would make. We agreed with students that that was the proper place to put this policy decision. You know, it's a testament to the way that this Legislature functions that we had draft legislation tabled, that our stakeholders indicated some ways that it could be improved, and that the government responded to those and brought forward those improvements, Madam Chair.

I'm pleased to support it. I encourage all members of this Assembly to support this amendment, knowing full well that all of our stakeholders have been adequately consulted on all of the policy decisions that we've made that are reflected in the legislation and the regulations and that this simply moves the responsibility for mandatory noninstructional fees and how they are governed to the Legislative Assembly and out of cabinet.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to the amendment put forward here to Bill 19. As has already been brought forward in the Chamber today, it appears that this is broken down into two parts. If I understand it correctly, the first part says that the board shall set an amount for the fee that is less than or equal to the cost incurred by the... post-secondary institution to provide the goods or to deliver the services for which the fee is set.

It sets a mandatory noninstructional fee, and the board shall set an amount for that fee that is less than or equal to the cost incurred.

Madam Chair, I guess that in some ways that makes sense to me. I can understand and I actually can like the idea of taking something from regulation and putting it into legislation. But I guess I do come back to the question: who has actually been consulted when it comes to this amendment to this piece of legislation? We can see that it does keep an institution accountable, and that's a part of that equation. That's a fair thing to do, but I think it's also a fair question to ask: who has the minister consulted specifically? What institutions has he consulted, and what institutions have actually indicated their agreement to this amendment to the bill?

The second piece of this amendment speaks to the fact that they shall not introduce a new mandatory non-instructional fee unless the board has obtained written approval from each of the public post-secondary institution's students' councils.

Now, I can completely agree with the statements that have come before me here in this House, that student councils need the capacity to be involved in these processes, but that also means that in this particular case they're asking to be able to be allowed to approve. It's not just consultation; it's approval. I would be interested in hearing from the minister just who he has talked to as far as the major institutions, and have those institutions in this province actually agreed to the idea that students would actually have approval over the setting of these noninstructional fees? I would look forward to hearing the minister's response.

The Chair: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for his comments. I do hope the minister takes a moment shortly to answer some of those questions. My immediate concern, though, with this amendment is – I have a question to the minister with my concern. He's brought a piece of legislation to this Assembly. This House has not been sitting for several months. I assume the minister knew that this was a bill that he wanted to bring to this House to pass during the fall sitting of the Legislature, a bill that, by the looks of it, is going to have broad support, so that's good. But he now has to amend his own bill. That's great if he's caught something. As I've pointed out before, often this government gets it wrong and has to wait six, seven months and come back again and fix it. So maybe, to their credit, they're actually catching something in advance.

3:30

I guess my question through you to the minister is: what happened? Why do you have to amend your own bill? Did this get missed? What was the thought process? Similar to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon's questions, have you consulted with student associations on this change adequately, to the same level as you did with the bill with the universities, et cetera? Maybe the minister will take some time to answer that as he asks for support for his amendment to his own bill.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I want to address, first of all, some of the questions from the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. I'm disappointed that he made it an open-ended question, not a multiple-choice question, as he asked the Minister of Education earlier today, because usually the right answer for those kinds of things is (c). This way I have to show my work, and that makes it harder to get a good mark.

In his question, of course, he asked which universities we consulted on this policy matter that we're bringing forward. I just want to remind all members of this Assembly that this amendment doesn't reflect any change to the policy decisions that our government has made around how mandatory noninstructional fees are charged and the student association's role in granting approval to those mandatory noninstructional fees being imposed upon them. In conducting consultations with all of the universities and colleges across the province, they were fully aware that it was our intent to do this with mandatory noninstructional fees, and they understood that that was our intent, to allow student associations to have final say over whether or not those new mandatory noninstructional fees would be imposed.

To the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon: I can't tell you which ones agreed to this or not. Certainly, it's not the job of a government to receive unanimous consent from all of its stakeholders on any of the policy decisions that we make. However, I can tell the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon that we received broad support from all of the stakeholders in the postsecondary world for the policy decisions that we're making here with the legislation and the associated regulations.

Now with respect to the question brought forward by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, why we are changing the bill now, Madam Chair, certainly, you know, I am nothing if not a humble and deeply reflective person, dedicated to continual improvement, and that is certainly the case with the legislation that I propose on behalf of the government with respect to this matter that we're discussing today. We certainly heard concerns from the member's own caucus around the processes around mandatory noninstructional fees and concerns that things would be hidden in the regulation that wouldn't be subject to the purview of the Legislative Assembly. I heard those concerns, and I took them into consideration. I actually acted on the wishes of that member's own caucus.

You know, I would hope that rather than gloating that the government has gotten it wrong again and here they go, they would just admit that our government listens when we bring forward legislation to this House. We take all ideas for improvement into consideration, and we act on the ones that actually improve the quality of the legislation, and that's what's reflected in the amendment today. I'm very pleased, as the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre should be, that because of the work of all of the members of this Legislative Assembly, this bill will be improved, and it will better serve Albertans, particularly those in the postsecondary world.

I hope that the members opposite will, you know, understand that their good work has not gone unnoticed by this government and that certainly we are very pleased to work together as a Legislative Assembly to present the best legislation possible for all Albertans and vote in favour of these amendments that we are proposing this afternoon.

The Chair: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, and thank you for that answer, Minister. I just have a quick question regarding this amendment. Are we going to start seeing schools shifting – and I apologize – the mandatory noninstructional fees into mandatory instructional fees inappropriately because of this amendment, sir?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd ask the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to restate his question. I'm not quite sure what he's asking.

Mr. Cyr: I apologize. I understood that my question was a little unclear. Right now I understand that noninstructional fees are going to need to be, more or less – if there are new ones added, the student body needs to accept those new fees. Is there anything in the legislation that prevents the school from deeming those mandatory instructional fees when they're actually noninstructional fees? What if they misclassify, sir? That is what I'm asking. Is there something there that prevents them from doing that? I don't know how else to put that delicately.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for the question. Certainly, tuition is defined as the instructional fees that students are charged. Tuition increases, of course, are subject to the cap on the increase that's proposed in the legislation. Mandatory noninstructional fees are related to goods or services that are provided to students on campus that aren't related directly to the cost of instruction at a university or college.

The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake certainly raises a concern that we heard from student groups all across the province. What's to prevent a university or college from calling something a mandatory noninstructional fee that is actually being used to support instruction in the classroom or some other unknown project or initiative undertaken by the university or college? Certainly, we have cases across the province where it's not clear where the money collected through a mandatory noninstructional fee is being spent.

That's what's required by this legislation. The university or college has to be completely open and transparent about the good or the service that will be provided by the fee that is charged and be accountable to students as well as the government as to where that money is being spent. We will all hold them accountable to make sure that those fees that are collected are spent on what they were intended for.

I hope that answers the member's question. I'm happy to take any further questions if he has any need for follow-up or clarification.

The Chair: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate that. I was hoping that I could inspire the minister to get on his feet one more time. I've just got a couple of questions if the minister doesn't mind.

I'm looking at section (5). It seems to me to be clear that that just means you can't charge a fee higher than what you actually need to pay for what's going on. That actually makes sense to me.

Section (6). The word is not in there, but it occurs to me that this is giving a veto on noninstructional fees to student councils. I want to know whether the minister agrees with that. Without regard for what his answer is on that, about the veto, is there anything to stop the postsecondary institutions, once the students have a veto on the noninstructional fees, from creating a university renewal fee or just putting other words on a new fee?

Those are my questions, and if the minister would be so kind as to try and answer that, I'd be grateful.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The Member for Calgary-Hays can rest assured that he will always inspire me to get to my feet. I'm happy to answer these questions in particular.

The first question that the Member for Calgary-Hays asked was related to the veto that students would have. Certainly, that has always been our policy intent, to give student councils a veto on the fees that they are charged. That hasn't been the case in the past. This is a significant entrenchment of student power on campus, and certainly students will now have a significant voice in determining what the cost of their education is.

The other question, though, that he asked is: is there a loophole that a university or a college can use to circumvent the student veto process? It's our understanding that, no, there is not. A university can charge students either a tuition or a mandatory noninstructional fee. There is no other fee that we are entertaining here that can be charged to students, so we don't anticipate any loopholes that would circumvent a student's ability to say yes or no to the new mandatory noninstructional fees.

The Chair: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. If the government of Alberta or a minister makes a request or a demand of a university to create a mandatory noninstructional fee, is there a way for that university to be able to implement that through this current policy or through this new amendment?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. We don't as the Ministry of Advanced Education have the power to demand that a university or college implement a new fee. It's entirely up to the board of governors of each institution to decide what their tuition and fees are. Certainly, it's not within the ministry's power to request or impose a new fee or tuition charge on students. In fact, that's not our intent. Our intent is to make sure that students have a full and complete understanding of the fees that they're being charged and a yes or no say as to whether or not that's fair and should be part of the fees that they're charged.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess the question that I would have for the minister, with his indulgence. These mandatory noninstructional fees have in the past been set by boards. It looks like now they will be set by student associations. Does this mean that now student councils and student associations would be able to roll back fees that have already been set?

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. No. Students won't be able to retroactively roll back fees. However, it is our intent to work with institutions to provide more clarity around the mandatory noninstructional fees that universities or colleges charge to student associations. It's certainly our intent, once the Alberta tuition and fees framework is released, to work with the institutions to make sure that they communicate clearly to students what the fees are being charged for.

Certainly, the Member for Edmonton-South West raised the issue of a hallway fee that is charged to University of Alberta students. Our intent is to make sure that University of Alberta students, as with all students, have a clear understanding of where their fees are being spent so that they're better able to hold their institutions accountable for the fees that they pay.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?
Are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreesen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise in my very first Committee of the Whole and speak on Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. I would like to take a moment to acknowledge the work that this government has done with this legislation. The tuition review started back in 2016, and the government took time to consult with stakeholders and listened to those that would be affected most by postsecondary legislation. During this consultation I am sure that they had heard from many different groups that offered their feedback on postsecondary matters. As a result, student groups are supportive of this legislation, and I am happy that the government was able to listen to their concerns and introduce Bill 19.

The main piece of Bill 19 that student groups are happy about is the cap on tuition. If the legislation passes, tuition will be capped at the rate of Alberta's consumer price index, meaning that one-year tuition hikes couldn't go higher than the rate of inflation. This is good news for Alberta's postsecondary students, and I think most members of this Assembly can be supportive of it. No student wants to be facing a massive increase to the cost of their education partway through their studies. Students need to plan accordingly and plan their finances according to their tuition. This is nearly impossible for students to do if they don't know what they're going to be paying in tuition fees. We have to understand that oftentimes tuition is going to be the biggest expense for students who are attending postsecondary studies. These same students are often working two or three jobs just to cover the cost of tuition. We have to respond accordingly, and I think Bill 19 does a good job capping tuition at inflation.

I'm also pleased that Bill 19 includes increased representation for students on boards of governors. Student groups have been asking for this, and it is great to see that the government listened to student groups in Alberta and implemented this change. Of course, some institutions already have two student representatives; however, this standardizes it across all postsecondary institutions. This gives students more access to board decisions and the governance of institutions. The board of governors of a postsecondary institution can control things such as noninstructional fees, international student tuition, and domestic student tuition. Giving students additional representation allows for students to have greater input into these matters of the institution. Oftentimes they are the ones that are going to be affected most by a board decision, so it is vital that students have sufficient input into these matters. I believe that Bill 19 achieves that.

Madam Chair, I do have some minor concerns with the legislation that I would like to discuss. First, as my colleague from Highwood mentioned, there are some parts of the legislation that deal with collaboration between different institutions. The way that I read the legislation is that polytechnic institutions and undergraduate universities must collaborate to provide regional access to programs. Now, this is a good initiative. However, my concern is with our comprehensive academic and research institutions and that there isn't the requirement in the legislation that they must collaborate to provide regional access to their programs. I'm sure the legislation was written like that for a purpose, but I am not sure if it is better if all postsecondary institutions are just treated the same way in the same regard. All publicly funded postsecondary institutions receive government funds, so shouldn't they all be treated the same?

Another concern I have is that this legislation gives the minister the authority to have comprehensive community colleges become either polytechnic institutions or undergraduate universities. This concern was also brought up by the Member for Highwood. I'm wondering why the legislation doesn't create a mechanism to transition all institutions to different sectors of universities. What if an undergraduate university wanted to become a comprehensive academic and research institution? Is there a way that this can be done? With this mechanism in place will there be significant increases to the number of polytechnic institutions and undergraduate universities, and if so, what does this mean for the government funding these institutions? Of course, in this legislation the minister has the authority to initiate this, but can we trust the minister to get it right?

I also wish to push the Minister of Advanced Education – push in a metaphorical sense – to make sure that he makes public the results of their consultations with stakeholders over the last few years. The reality is that this government has given us lots of reasons not to trust them. From Bill 6 to the increase in red tape to the carbon tax to the minimum wage changes that have cut meaningful hours at work, this government has done much that has not benefited Albertans. As the Official Opposition we have to hold the government to account and ensure that this legislation is in the best interests of Albertans. Stakeholders have reacted positively to this bill publicly; however, we can be certain that this is the case by having the minister release the results of the consultations so that we all know what the stakeholders contributed. Why else would the government try to hide by not releasing this consultation? To use another schooling analogy, I think all we're asking is to prove their proof.

Madam Chair, another point I can raise with this bill is the amount of power that the minister and cabinet have over postsecondary learning in Alberta. The reality is that the minister could handicap postsecondary institutions and make it really difficult to raise money. Postsecondary institutions are in competition with institutions across Canada to attract students, recruit the best instructors, and acquire research dollars. If postsecondary institutions are not able to raise money, the services they can provide for students go down, which means that fewer students are willing to attend. Furthermore, the quality of education goes down when institutions cannot raise money. As said, institutions need to provide the best education possible for students, and they cannot do that when they have no money to spend.

Of course, this is all hypothetical as the regulations that would govern noninstructional fees and international student tuition have yet to be brought forward, and they won't be brought forward until this bill actually gets passed.

Regarding the regulations, I believe that some of the regulations the minister has talked about publicly could see positive results for Alberta students. As an Alberta MLA I would want to ensure that Alberta has the best postsecondary institutions possible. Alberta has always been a place of opportunity and prosperity, and our institutions should reflect that. Our colleges and universities should be the envy of Canada and attract people from around the world. The regulations need to reflect this and give both institutions and students the opportunity to succeed.

Now, Madam Chair, although there are some concerns with Bill 19, I think overall we are looking at a good piece of legislation. Student groups are pleased with the legislation, and I'm happy that this government worked with them to achieve this. If only they could listen to stakeholders this well on other pieces of legislation that they have brought forward. I call on this government to continue to listen to stakeholders for the next few months in all of the legislation that they do bring forward, that they may actually be able to avoid some previous missteps of the past.

Now, on the regulations I believe that the minister is on the right track with what he said publicly, for the most part. The minister has said that he wants to give international students predictability in their tuition by giving them the entire cost of their degree up front.

This would allow international students to plan better financially as they will have all the information that they require. This may have an added benefit of increasing the number of international students our postsecondary institutions may actually be able to attract, as it will show that we are supportive of international students.

Another regulation the minister has spoken of is to give transparency to noninstructional fees. This means that any fee that a student is having to pay on top of their tuition will include a breakdown and justification for that fee. No student likes paying additional money towards mandatory fees, and if the minister is able to create regulations that give students transparency regarding the fees that they're paying, that would be very beneficial, and I would be highly supportive of it.

Again, it is important that we hold the minister to account so that these good regulations become a reality. However, as I have said before, the most important thing that we can do for postsecondary students is have economic opportunities here for them. We need to get Alberta working again, and students have to have the confidence that there will be jobs for them when they graduate. Unfortunately, too many decisions by this current government have eroded opportunities in Alberta. I'm concerned that too many Albertans are having to leave our great province because they are unable to find jobs.

We need to get good value for our money and ensure that students that we are supporting through universities have the opportunities needed to succeed here in Alberta. So let's bring back the Alberta advantage and bring back the prosperity that we once had in this province. We can do this by cutting taxes, reducing red tape, and bringing back investor confidence to Alberta. If we are able to create this once again in Alberta, jobs will be there for our university students when they graduate. I believe that this is the most important thing that we can do as legislators, to bring jobs back to Alberta.

Madam Chair, in closing, with the exception of a few specifics in the legislation, which I questioned earlier, I believe that Bill 19 will have a positive impact on university students and will be beneficial to Albertans. I look forward to holding the Minister of Advanced Education to account during this privileged time in this Assembly and with the implementation of regulations, to ensure that they respect both the needs of students and the postsecondary institutions. I also commend the government for actually listening to stakeholders this time and producing legislation that is good for Alberta students and good for Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the bill? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just wanted to ask a few questions, if I could, of the minister quickly here. I just wanted to see if he could explain kind of what this bill does as far as the power of students to set administrative fees.

Mr. Schmidt: I just want to respond to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky by asking a question of clarification. When he's referring to administrative fees, is he referring to mandatory noninstructional fees or which? Can you clarify what you mean by administrative fees, please?

Mr. Loewen: I guess the fees that would normally have been set by the colleges and stuff like that, but noninstructional fees in particular. Yeah.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you. Madam Chair, with respect to mandatory noninstructional fees, any new fees that a university or college is considering have to be submitted for the approval of the students' council at that institution and, of course, cannot be approved unless the students' council has said that it grants approval to that mandatory noninstructional fee, a significant increase in the power of student councils over the cost of students' education.

Mr. Loewen: I just want some clarification on that. You said new fees. Does that include an increase of existing fees, too, or just new fees?

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The member raises an important question. Certainly, if the cost of providing that good or service increases over time, which most goods and services do, the institution doesn't have to go back to the students every year to ask for an increase in the fee. However, if the university or college wants to change the definition, change the basket of goods or services that are being paid for by the fee, then they need to go back to the students, explain what additional goods or services they want paid for and what the fee will be, and request students' approval for the additional good or service that would be covered under that fee.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Minister. That clarifies that.

Of course, the bill is one thing, but regulations and guidelines are an important part of something like this. When will the regulations and guidelines be finished for this bill?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, our intent is to introduce the regulations associated with this legislation once the bill has received royal assent.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Minister.

For the process of consulting I just want to know the balance of the consulting as far as how much was with students and how much was with the colleges and universities themselves.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, we've had formal consultations and informal meetings with every student association in the province, every university and college in the province. We've had members of faculty associations and nonacademic staff associations as well give us their input on the bill that's being considered here today. Our consultation with stakeholders has been extensive, and I'm satisfied that everyone has had their chance to give us their input on the tuition and fees framework that we're considering under this legislation.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Minister.

I think one thing that concerns a lot of colleges and universities is autonomy, being able to make their own decisions. Is there anything in this bill – or what in this bill takes away the decision-making process or opportunity for colleges and universities and brings it to government rather than within the college or university?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. The member highlights an important policy decision that was made by the previous Conservative government to entirely remove from the legislation the formula for charging tuition and to turn over the charging of tuition and fees entirely to the universities and colleges, and that put us in the awkward position of having some of the highest tuition and fees charged to students in the entire country. So I will freely admit that we are taking away some of the universities' and colleges' autonomy, but we are strengthening the power of students on campus to have a say in the cost of their education, and we are making sure that the public is satisfied that every student in this province will be able to afford to go to university or college regardless of the size of their pocketbook or their financial circumstances.

This is being done in the interest of promoting affordability of postsecondary education, an issue that the previous Conservative government didn't address. They certainly let tuition, like I said, skyrocket to be the highest in the country. Our government, of course, is concerned about affordability, especially affordability of higher education, and that's why we are taking this step to cap tuition increases and put tight controls around the introduction of new mandatory noninstructional fees, to give students more power over the cost of their education and to ensure that Albertans in every financial circumstance can afford to go to university or college.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the bill? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to deal with Bill 19. I think that our students in the province of Alberta have paid an annual tuition fee of somewhere around $5,744. It's about a thousand dollars less than the national average for tuition, and we know that the government in 2015 put a tuition freeze at the 2014-2015 levels. They did a review in 2016. They appointed a panel, an advisory group of 20 people, to look into producing a more predictable system for fees and services and tuition fees, and this bill is the result of that consultation.

We've stated before, Madam Chair, that we thought we would support the government in the consultation that they've done on this. They've brought student groups to the table, and they've talked with major stakeholders, and we would suggest that much of this bill we can probably support.

Bill 19 will legislate an inflation-based cap on the increases to domestic student and apprenticeship tuition based on the annual change in Alberta's consumer price index, starting at around 2020-2021.

Now, I guess one of the concerns – and it's not really so much a concern – is a concern that I would apply to every bill that comes before this House. You know, as in most bills this bill tends to give the minister the power to regulate noninstructional fees, international student tuition, and the use of regulatory powers. The minister's office has indicated that the regulations will push noninstructional fees to have more transparency – I think we've had some discussion about that today – and that it will have international student tuition far more predictable, which is a good thing for those people that are coming into our education system from outside the country.

Madam Chair, at the end of the day, because we pass legislation first and then we go to regulations, I would just caution the minister to use his judgment wisely when producing those regulations to ensure that he lives up to the standard of Albertans as they trust the judgment of the minister in making those regulations and that he applies prudence and wisdom in bringing those forward.

Bill 19 also changes the student representation on the board of governors, having two student representatives at all institutions and three if the school has a graduate program, again providing students with more input into their education and into the decisions that are being made surrounding that, and we can support that change.

Madam Chair, as for the inflation-capped tuition, it will provide more certainty for students. I think that over the past three years as I've met with some of the student groups that have come through and lobbied our party and the various parties in this Legislature – you know, they're bright, they're articulate, they've made solid points to all of us. I think that we see some of those points reflected in this piece of legislation, so it's good to see the government finally listening to Albertans on issues that are obviously important to them.

Revising the tuition framework I believe will give students some of that predictability on what they will be paying in tuition. Having gone through that stage of life and having seen my kids, for the most part, almost get through that stage of life except for perhaps some of the bills that dad will be picking up, you know, we can see that many of our students entering these institutions often have very limited incomes, and they have little room for surprises and extra expenses that show up in their lives. So predictability is a very important thing. Many of them are living close to the edge as far as their finances are concerned, so anything we can do to provide certainty for our students is a good thing. I understand the need for a tuition framework and for predictability for students in our postsecondary institutions.

I believe our students work hard to try and work their way through university and postsecondary education. I happened to be eating at a local institution here last night and was served by a young lady that's in her fifth year of university. You know, it just served as a reminder to me of how many hours these students can put in after their education during the day and often will have to go back and open the books after they've put in a four- or five- or six-hour shift in the evening. So bringing predictability to that kind of a situation is good.

Now, I understand that the NDP government has had a continuous freeze on tuition since 2015 and that this new tuition framework will cap tuition increases to the CPI, but that's not going to start until the 2020-2021 school year. The minister has indicated that the tuition freeze will be extended to 2019-2020. So, I guess, just a real quick question arises for me. Knowing that the new framework for tuition will be passed as it stands in Bill 19, is the minister prepared to fund the rate of inflation for the 2019-2020 year? How are you going to deal with that capped year that's in there?

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for his question. Yes, we do intend to provide funding for universities and colleges while the tuition freeze remains in place. More details about that will be brought forward when we present our budget in the spring.

The Chair: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to speak on this bill. It's interesting reading about all of this. Just to give you some background, when I was in university in 1989, it was $500 a semester. It went up to $750 a semester while I was in school, and that was a huge increase at that time. I remember how much my meal plan was and all that. I was actually at that time working four jobs, and I didn't end up finishing that particular degree and ended up going into a music degree.

A music degree is one of those degrees in the arts that holds a lot of extra pieces that come along with it. If you're learning orchestra, you have to pay for an instrument, you have to pay for music, you have to pay for a music stand. You have to pay for a lot of different things, whether that's access to music rooms. If we were doing any sorts of larger pieces like oratorio, if you were in an opera background, as I was, you had to pay for all your musicians to come in and play for you for your recitals. It was actually a requirement of making sure that you were able to work with that level of group of people at that level of performance. I ended up actually going to Winnipeg to finish my music degree because I followed an amazing voice teacher that went out that way.

It was a long time ago, but it wasn't that long ago. I remember what it was like and the struggles that were there, being a young person, working all the time. Plus, again, in my music degree you're usually in around nine courses at any given time, which includes performances as well as master classes and other classes that are theory and whatnot. It's a big degree. My point is that what I learned and the resilience that I built at that time in my life, going to school at that time, are lessons that I think to this day have created an ability to work hard. I think that's what so many of us gain in university, that ability for that resilience, that immense strength that you garner when you're doing so many things at once and you know you can if you're encouraged to do so. These are amazing, amazing strengths that come out of a time that also produces a great amount of stress and for some of us a lot of debt that we take on as a result of going to school.

Also, you gain some of the best relationships and things in your life that actually push you forward in your life. For me I met my husband in university when I was 19, and when I was in Winnipeg, had a baby while I was in school. My little boy, when he was born in Winnipeg, was at 40 concerts before he was four months old. I'm sure that's why he is the amazing tenor that he is now. I have to say, having raised him in that area, as hard as it was – and I have interesting stories of leaving him in a viola case with my girlfriend while she played for him when I went up to my lessons. I'm sure she very much appreciated the baby puke that ended up in that viola case while I was away at my lesson. However, wonderful, wonderful pieces of my own personal history and my education. I'm sure none of us forgets too quickly the ramen noodles and macaroni and the incredible things that you're able to do with macaroni when you're on a very, very tight budget. I will never forget that.

Along with all of that, you know, the tuition piece is such a huge struggle for so many students, and I know that some of the youth in my constituency have felt the pinch waiting for their student loans. You know, they're trying to wait for a stretch of summer to be able to work as hard as they can and try and pay down some of their loans. A lot of these young kids are working just as hard. They're out there. They're putting themselves out there into jobs. A lot of them are involved in politics and door-knocking. I mean, for all of us who are here, we know how much youth are involved in the things that we're also doing at a political level, plus they're going to school, plus they're paying for their tuition. They're an incredible group of people, and I think we need to recognize how resilient and how amazing this group of people are.

I completely empathize with the students at the U of A who protested. Watching that whole thing happen, I would like to add my voice to the students of the U of A. I'm very proud that they stood up for themselves. It's especially not easy being the focus and at the centre of all of that. There are a lot of complications that go along with funding schools and funding universities and all of that. However, I'm very, very happy that they felt strong enough to stand up. We are always saying in this House that Albertans have a strong voice and that it matters to us and that we listen. I'm glad that they did that. I'm very grateful that the government listened to these students and that we're at this point here where we're able to debate a piece of legislation. I think the credit goes to the students and their strength and their ability to come forward and stand up on their own behalf.

An extra couple of hundred dollars a year, Madam Chair, makes a humongous difference in the life of a student. You know, this could mean the difference between staying in school and actually dropping out. We know that that money has to come from somewhere, and the government does not subsidize international fees or residence fees. Students understand this. I think that part of the problem is always going to be that when situations come, when tuitions need to rise, quite often this has been dumped on students overnight. There's been absolutely no time to plan for that, right? I think that under normal circumstances there are some students and some people who understand that those fees are going to rise. You know, it happens, but what ends up ultimately happening every time is that the students are not made aware of these changes in tuition, and they are just left stranded, trying to figure out how they're going to make that happen. This is a big concern, and that cap on tuition is going to be a huge game changer in terms of stability as to how much a student is going to pay. The adjustment, you know, protects the bottom line of the business of university as well.

Part of the issue that we've seen on the campuses, like at the U of A, in terms of conflict between students and the board of governance comes from a lack of understanding, too, in that conversation. That conversation was very, very difficult for them to have because the communication lines were not open. There was an inherent power dynamic. That is concerning things where the interactions of the students are not being held up by the board of directors. If that voice at the table is not being heard, then it's going to lead to protests and causes, which ends up with these sorts of issues where students feel that they're not being listened to and that their inherent ability to be able to go to school is being attacked.

I also appreciate in this legislation that it increases the student representation on the board of governors at the institutions from two to three of the school's graduate program. That's actually a really crucial first step in empowering a student to have their voice heard. So thank you for doing that and for mending some of the fences between institutions where this has been an issue in the past.

This bill also provides some much-needed predictability for students financially, as I had mentioned, because you've legislated the inflation-based cap.

I also wanted to mention that there are many international students. So many of them have been sent overseas to this beautiful province of ours and to this beautiful country of ours to receive this incredible education and, especially, to participate in Canada, in Alberta and what we offer here as a country and as a province. While many of them are able to pay for school, there are equal numbers of international students that really struggle – they really do – even just to get by in their own domestic colleges, let alone with the privilege of being able to come to such a wonderful place like Alberta.

The students are facing additional barriers, and on top of that, they're away from their support systems. They may not speak our language well, you know, at least to a level that makes them comfortable to be able to go out and participate in life, which, of course, creates isolation, too, and depression and other things. We're noticing large, large increases in anxiety and depression amongst our university students as well, and isolation is a large part of that. Students are valued members in our society, and they enrich our country so much, too.

My point is that these are not people who should have their tuition just unceremoniously hiked. Like, let's give them at least the opportunity to know what that's going to look like and to have an overall picture of exactly what it is that they're going to pay. We have families that are overseas that are saving up for a lifetime to have their children leave their countries to be able to come to other countries and have their education here. I think it's absolutely imperative that those international students know exactly what they're getting into, exactly what they're paying for so that at the very, very least we're giving them all the tools to be as successful as possible when their families have worked as hard as they have to bring them to this country.

I just wanted to say again: thank you to the government for listening to students. I know the students had to fight really hard to get to this point, and I'm very grateful that they did do that.

Thank you again so much for the opportunity to speak about this.

The Chair: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to rise on the record really briefly. The minister in his comments seemed to indicate that Alberta has the highest tuition fees in the country. You know, some of our members have already talked about tuition being a tough thing to do. We want to make sure that students going into postsecondary are able to afford it. I just think, for the record, that it's important to point out that Alberta students already pay below the national average for tuition, with the average Alberta student paying $5,744 annually compared to $6,838 nationally, which is a little different than what the minister indicated.

With that said, I suspect my colleagues on this side of the House are prepared to vote this out of committee.

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill 21

An Act to Protect Patients

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. It's an honour and a privilege to be here. Regarding Bill 21, I'd like to start things off by moving an amendment, and I have the requisite number of copies here. Would you like me to wait for you to receive the amendment?

Madam Chair, Alberta's United Conservatives supported last week's motion for a lifetime ban if a health professional's licence was cancelled due to sexual abuse or misconduct involving a patient. We were surprised that this NDP government rejected that based solely on the fact that it mirrors Ontario's legislation. That is why, even though we would prefer a lifetime ban, we're bringing forward this amendment to extend the ban on reinstatement to 40 years.

Madam Chair, patients put great trust in health professionals. They depend on them for expertise in dealing with critical personal issues, and for that reason patients are in a very vulnerable position when they seek treatment for their physical and mental health. If in the course of treatment a health professional takes advantage of their position of trust to sexually abuse their patient, they are committing an unconscionable breach of trust.

The United Conservative Party strongly believes as legislators in ensuring that health practitioners who have had their licences cancelled because they preyed on patients face sanctions reflective of Albertans' expectations. How can we tell Albertans that we are protecting them from predatory practitioners, who have been sanctioned by having their licences pulled, when just after five years they can walk back into the college with their application to practise again? That is why I, as the United Conservative Party's Health critic, am introducing this amendment. If approved, this amendment will prohibit a health professional who has had their licence and registration cancelled due to sexual abuse and misconduct from applying for reinstatement for 40 years.

Bill 21 is called An Act to Protect Patients. Let us provide, here in this Legislature, patients with a strong tool that we have available to us, and that's our ability to craft common-sense, responsible laws. Albertans expect nothing less, nor should they.

With this amendment I am moving that Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients, be amended in section 7(b) in the proposed section 45 as follows: in subsection (3) by striking out "until at least 5 years" and substituting "until at least 40 years" and in subsection (4) by striking out "until at least 5 years" and substituting "until at least 40 years."

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Speakers to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for engaging in this important debate with regard to all Albertans accessing health care free of intimidation, harassment, or assault. I appreciate that upon this occasion he and his colleagues in his caucus appear to be participating in this important legislation around protecting and supporting individuals as well as all Albertans who are accessing this service.

I have to say that I appreciate that I believe the intent is around ensuring that Albertans are protected, and certainly I believe that the legislation that we brought forward is incredibly – I believe that it's strict and that it's fair.

I just want to clarify one of the points that was raised by the member opposite. An individual who has had their licence taken away in no way has the ability to walk back in after five years and demand to practise. They have the ability, once their licence has been revoked for that period, to apply for consideration, and that is in no way a guarantee that they will get their licence back after five years. If there are concerns, certainly the tribunal will take that into consideration. Should the tribunal determine, when an individual has applied, whether it's at the five-year mark or any point thereafter, that the individual has not presented a case that gives them the confidence that they should reinstate their licence, they won't be able to apply again for at least six months, and the pattern therefore continues after that.

I just want to clarify that the minimum is five years that we've written into here, not a guarantee that at five years anyone would get their licence back. There still would be the full tribunal process and application process, Madam Chair.

But it is very important to our entire caucus that Albertans have the confidence that their health professional is there to serve them and to do so in a safe, transparent, and ethical way.

I just, lastly, want to reiterate that our legislation has the strictest sanctions in Canada. It parallels what Ontario has. To clarify, no other jurisdiction has gone this far yet. I imagine that many probably will. I hope that they certainly do. I believe that the five-year minimum is strict and fair, Madam Chair.

That being said, again, I just want to recommit that we did consult with survivor organizations, including the Alberta sexual assault centres, and they were supportive of the legislation that we proposed. We're really glad to be standing with them and with survivors to ensure that everyone can have the confidence that health practitioners are being dealt with in a strict and fair way.

That being said, that's why I will be opposing the amendment as presented by the hon. member. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back on the main bill, are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. To begin, I want to thank the Minister of Health, the Deputy Premier, for bringing forward Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients. I think that overall it is a sorely needed bill, a long time coming, and very clearly has all-party support.

I'm disappointed about the last vote. I think that it was a common-sense amendment from the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to improve upon the bill, so I was disappointed that the government decided not to accept the amendment. Overall, it is still a strong bill that is very badly needed, and the government should be commended for it.

But even good legislation can be improved upon, which is why I'm going to be putting forward an amendment in a moment here. Actually, I'll just distribute it before I talk so people can follow along on their TV screens.

The Chair: This is amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment I've put forward here amends the bill (a) by striking out subsection (1.1) and substituting the following:

(1.1) When establishing a hearing tribunal where the subject-matter of a hearing relates to a complaint alleging sexual abuse or sexual misconduct towards a patient by a regulated member, the hearings director must make every reasonable effort to ensure that

- (a) if the patient identifies as male, at least one member of the hearing tribunal also identifies as male, and
- (b) if the patient identifies as female, at least one member of the hearing tribunal also identifies as female.

And (b) in subsection (1.2) by striking out "has the same gender identity as the patient under subsection (1.1)" and substituting "identifies as either male or female if necessary to fulfill the requirements of subsection (1.1)".

That is a long way of saying that we just want to clarify, if it's straightforward, that if there is a male who has been alleged to have had abuse or the complainant alleging abuse or misconduct or the doctor, if they are a biological male or a biological female, there will be a biological male or biological female on the tribunal. Also, if they identify as a different sex, if it's a biological male identifying as a female, then there will be a female, the gender they identify with, on the tribunal.

Now, this is something that needs to be clarified. I don't think it would have massive applicability in the vast majority of cases, but it needs to be clarified. New York City, for instance, if I'm not mistaken, recognizes up to 31 different gender identities and expressions, et cetera. Those of you who know me well enough: people can live their lives however they want. It should be none of the government's business how people live their lives, whom they love, or how they identify, but as it involves serious government decision-making and a tribunal of this nature dealing with serious sexual allegations, this is serious business of government, and we are forced to grapple with these issues in that case.

We should be as accommodating as possible so that if someone identifies as a man, we will have someone on the panel who identifies as a man, biologically or not. If someone identifies as a woman, we'll have a woman on the panel, biologically or not, however they identify. What I do want to do is ensure that we're not opening the Pandora's box, that if someone involved here happens to be one of the very, very many on the fluid list of the number of identities – 31 according to New York City; it may have grown – it would be quite unreasonable to expect the authorities responsible to go out and find someone that particularly specific and targeted. Maybe they can find someone, but then you would have that one person who is always on that panel because it might be so incredibly rare.

My worry is that with the current language of the legislation it is a Pandora's box, opening up the door for having to find a representative on the panel of one of 31 gender expressions or identities, et cetera, et cetera. This still allows for making sure that we have someone on the panel who is there who identifies with the same sex as the person in question. It's just to clarify. It's to make sense of this so that we are not going to be potentially wasting the time of public officials in finding this.

Now, I will note that the current language of the legislation says: "every reasonable effort." It is not requiring the government to find someone of a potentially extraordinarily small number to fit on the panel. It's not a requirement. That should be clarified. I'm sure that the Minister of Health will clarify it in a moment if I didn't. It says: "every reasonable effort." In legislation "every reasonable effort" means it quite literally. It means they will go to quite extraordinary lengths to find someone.

Where is the boundary of "every reasonable effort"? Does it mean we're going to fly someone in from other provinces or even other countries? Perhaps the minister can clarify if that is the case. "Every reasonable effort": that is a very broad definition. When it's in legislation, public officials are well advised to follow it to the letter of the law so that they are not breaking the law, that they're not going to be held accountable for not living up to it. It would seem to me that unless there are very clear boundaries around what "every reasonable effort" means, we're potentially going to have to bring people in from other jurisdictions just to meet a quota on a panel. I would like that clarified, and I think that this amendment makes sure that we're clear about what we mean.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, and thank you to the member for the question. While we don't always agree on outcome, I think we do agree on process, that members deserve to and should engage in the process of trying to improve legislation wherever possible. I am happy to provide that clarity. It's actually in the next section of the bill, which is section 4(1.2).

For the purposes of ensuring that at least one member of the hearing tribunal has the same gender identity as the patient under subsection (1.1), the hearings director may select one member from the membership list established by another council under section 15 to be appointed as [an] additional public member.

For example, if we're talking about the College of Physicians & Surgeons, they first would go to their public members to see if somebody had the same gender identity as the person who had launched the complaint. If they didn't, they could go to any one of the other 26 health colleges that we have in Alberta, and they all have public members. I believe the colleges have approximately three or even more than three public members on each of those colleges, so there are approximately a hundred public members. I'm extrapolating my math a little, but I think there are at least three public members on each of those colleges. Within Alberta it's people who've already been appointed as public members on other health colleges, so that's how we tried to make sure that we had reasonable parameters around this to define reasonable effort.

I understand what the member is saying, wanting to ensure that we not slow due process. That's why we did put that parameter in, ensuring reasonable efforts, and then we go on to define that it's within the public members of other health colleges. That being said, I think that we've already taken the point that the member raises about timely response and fair process into consideration. Therefore, I wouldn't be supporting reverting to a binary on gender because I think that we have done a reasonable job of making sure that we defined reasonable efforts but also honouring that not everyone fits into a binary.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Fildebrandt: A very quick clarification question I'd like from the minister following on a question I had. Would "every reasonable effort" include bringing in potential tribunal or panel members from outside of Alberta to meet that?

Ms Hoffman: No, because, again, 4(1.2) says:

For the purposes of ensuring that at least one member of the hearing tribunal has the same gender identity as the patient . . . membership list established by another council under section 15.

Section 15 is only Alberta health colleges, so it would have to be a public member who is already part of an Alberta health college within Alberta, and they would have to be appointed already as a public member.

The other reason why we did that is so that they have the training on how to conduct themselves at one of these tribunals. It wouldn't be weeks or even months of training because they're already working as public members on other colleges. Some colleges might have more gender diversity than others on their public appointees, so we wanted to enable the ability to have those public members from those other health colleges serve in this way. They would be within Alberta. They'd already be appointed to health colleges. The college of paramedics, for example, might have somebody that matches their gender identity, so it would be within that reasonable pool, and that's how we defined it. It's on page 3 of the bill as we proposed.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 21? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. I have an amendment to put forward, and I'll circulate it before talking about it.

The Chair: Amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. This is an important bill, and I think it's challenging to get all the details on such a sensitive issue exactly the way we want them. I think that one of the issues that's been flagged by some of my medical colleagues and by others is the element in Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients: section 2(b) is amended in the proposed section 1(1)(nn.1) by striking out "and that has caused or is likely to cause physical or psychological injury or harm to the patient". The reason for this is that for any unwanted sexual content or sexual misconduct, it should not be necessary to prove physical or psychological harm. Any such contact would cause physical or psychological harm. The lawyers tell me that the need to prove physical or psychological harm is a barrier to getting convictions and to getting accountability for those who would perpetrate sexual misconduct and sexual abuse.

This phrase, "that has caused or is likely to cause physical or psychological injury or harm to the patient," is problematic in the sense that it is sometimes difficult to prove even though there has clearly been psychological harm, even though there has in many cases been physical harm that may or may not be visible. I think this is a friendly amendment. I hope the government will take it.

In the other two sections there are simply changes to accommodate the striking out of this particular section, Madam Chair. I'm happy to hear further discussion from all sides on whether this is progress and helpful to the appropriate conviction of anyone who is perpetrating abuse or violence against a patient.

Thank you.

5:00

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for catching amendments B and C as well as for highlighting this proposed amendment to section 2(b). I have to say that I researched where we pulled this definition from. It was from our OH and S legislation. Of course, when you're talking about a patient-health care provider relationship, it doesn't make sense to have that kind of requirement in this legislation. That being said, I think this amendment would strengthen the legislation and correct the numbering challenges given this amendment. I will be supporting this and encourage my colleagues to consider doing the same.

Thank you.

An Hon. Member: All three sections?

Ms Hoffman: Yep. Supporting the amendment as proposed. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 carried]

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move an amendment, and I have the requisite number of copies here.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A5.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you. I propose the amendment: in clause (a) striking out "Subject to subsection (3), a person" and substituting "Subject to subsections (3) and (4.1), a person"; in clause (b), in the proposed section 45, adding after subsection (4):

(4.1) In addition to the limitations established under subsections (3) and (4), a person whose practice permit and registration are cancelled as a result of a decision under sections 82(1.1) or 96.2, based in whole or in part on a conviction of an offence under the Criminal Code (Canada), may not apply for the practice permit to be reissued and the registration to be reinstated until at least 5 years have elapsed from the date of the completion of the sentence imposed for that offence.

And then in subsection (5) striking out "subsection (3) or (4)" and substituting "subsections (3), (4) or (4.1)."

Madam Chair, as you've already heard this afternoon, the United Conservative Party does not believe that a ban of five years is long enough for serious sexual offenders, but the government has failed to act on our suggestions for improving this bill. I believe that this government, at the very least, will guarantee that the professionals cannot seek to return to their practices while they are still serving a criminal sentence for the very offences that caused them to lose their licence. Amazingly, this bill allows that. This amendment would prohibit them from applying for reinstatement if they are still on probation, parole, or any other court-ordered restriction. It will guarantee a longer ban for the most egregious of offenders.

I want to outline why I believe this is such an important fix. A health professional who commits a sexual crime against a young patient or a major sexual assault on an adult patient could be jailed for 14 years under the Criminal Code, but they could also be out on parole in five years. As this bill is written, as soon as they are released from jail, they could reapply for reinstatement of their licence. Clearly, that makes no sense. It should not even be contemplated. I believe that if Albertans knew this, they would be alarmed. Since the NDP has refused to agree to insert other robust protections into Bill 21, let's at very least fix this oversight. Since we as legislators can do it, why would we not do it?

Thank you so much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the proposed amendment and for the consideration that, I understand from her remarks, she must have taken in drafting this. I just want to add one other thing around the five-year component, and that's that it's important to me that the legislation we bring forward obviously protects patients and ensures that we limit any risk that harm could be done to any future patient, but I also want to ensure that the legislation will withstand legal and constitutional challenges. I am trying to reflect, having just received this amendment, on what some of the concerns might be. I haven't had an opportunity, of course, to address this with legal counsel, so I'm not in a position to be able to say that I believe that this would withstand a constitutional or a legal challenge. That's point one.

Point two is that this certainly, if somebody was still on probation or if somebody was still incarcerated or serving some other kind of sentence, would be part of the consideration that the tribunal committee would take into consideration. I think it would be highly unlikely that if somebody was still serving a sentence, they would be deemed to have met the other criteria by which a health professional receives their practice permit. I would certainly welcome some of my colleagues who have practice permits as registered health professionals to extrapolate on that process if they so choose.

Without having an opportunity to question whether or not the legal and constitutional challenges would be met with this new amendment and knowing that that part of the tribunal process, when you apply to have it reinstated, includes having a criminal record check, I find it likely that it would probably, well, definitely have to surface during that criminal record check process. Therefore, the tribunal, I believe, would probably weigh on the side of not granting the reinstatement.

Again, not having had an opportunity to review this prior to seeing it just at this moment and not having an opportunity to discuss with legal counsel the implications of a legislative or a constitutional challenge, I have concerns that if we were to approve this, it would put us in a weaker position to protect patients. For that reason, at this point I am reluctantly voting against this proposed amendment. I really do want to ensure that we have strict and fair legislation and that we have protection for patients, and I would not want to see that stymied by constitutional challenges. So I think it's important that we reflect upon the intention of the amendment but respectfully vote it down at this point.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment moved by my colleague. I just want to thank her for her work on this particular issue.

I know that a number of folks in our caucus have been diligent in trying to ensure that the victims are respected in this process. While I can appreciate the minister's comments about the need for more information, frankly I think it's worth having a constitutional challenge take place on an important issue like this with respect to making sure that the safety of patients is put first and all of the other very important issues that have been discussed here this evening.

But the other key point that the minister made was that at this time she recommended voting against such an important amendment, that would require the time served plus five more years, as mentioned by my colleague. I just think that now would be a great time to take a pause on this particular piece of legislation and allow the minister to get that important legal information that she says that she would like to have so that she can support or not support an amendment like this, so at this time I would like to recommend that we move a motion to rise and report progress.

[Motion that the committee rise and report progress lost]

The Chair: Are there any further members wishing to speak to amendment A5? Calgary-Mountain View on the amendment.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Madam Chair. I'd like to just address some fundamentals here in these ongoing suggestions. Three basic questions are being asked about health workers, in particular, and sexual abuse. The first question that's being asked is: what is appropriate punishment for somebody who assaults a patient, and who should decide what that punishment is?

The second question is: should there be a loss of professional status, professional position, as a result of a sexual offence? I guess the third question that's being asked here is: to what extent should legislation prescribe the consequences as opposed to the professions who have been charged with, appropriately, I think, making decisions around practice and licensure and conduct? We have delegated these responsibilities to the professions. I guess we're saying also that we have a teaching profession, where we have people who are in positions of trust, and if we're going to single out a particular profession, how far does this go?

But in the first instance, I don't believe that legislation should be prescribing specific punishments. That's for either a court of law or a college. Secondly, to go to the next step and rescind someone's licence to practise, again, we have already delegated to professional bodies. If we're going to take that away, what are we saying about the roles of these professional colleges, and how are we empowering or disempowering them from doing their job, which is to assess the degree of egregiousness of a particular act that someone has done?

I think that's enough said. Those three basic questions are at the heart of what these debates are about. I don't mind debating these issues because they are very serious, but I think we have to take a step back and say: what are we changing when we start legislating at this level what the punishment is going to be, including how long they have to stay out of their profession? We're undermining the role of the professional bodies if we do so, and if we're going to do that, we need to revamp the whole college process.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll just take a moment. I'd like to address the comments just made by my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View. I like that he laid everything out in a list. That's helpful to put your thoughts out that way.

In terms of punishment he asked: how do we prescribe a specific punishment? Should we be doing that here? To rebut that, I would like to ask: how do we prescribe specific remedies that are sufficient to show survivors of sexual assault in these circumstances that what happened to them has our attention, has gravity, and is being taken seriously? The reason that we're seeing these amendments is because the way the legislation stands right now, many of us and many people I've spoken to do not believe that five years is a sufficient amount of time even if that's the minimum, even if that's not what happens ever. It isn't sufficient to demonstrate to survivors of sexual assault by health professionals that what occurred to them is unacceptable.

Next was the loss of professional status and what the position or the role of the professional college should be. I don't think that anyone here has suggested or recommended that we take away any other authorities from these professional colleges. We're simply asking that the legislation reflect the gravity of this particular kind of offence, whether they are charged criminally or not or if they are found to be responsible by the college, which would include their peers and other people. It's not a matter of trying to take away anything from the professional colleges. It's trying to create a standard that can be followed for any professional college, whether it's for health or law or whatever it is, that sexual assault is unacceptable in our society and that we will create the framework of legislation to reflect that appropriately.

Finally, the last question: to what extent should this be legislated? Well, to what extent do we support survivors in their recovery from the trauma that is sexual assault? The member had previously moved a really good amendment saying that, you know, it's a foregone conclusion that sexual assault does cause a great deal of physical, emotional, mental harm to the person who is assaulted, and I think that ties into his question. I think it answers his question. To what extent should this be legislated? It should be legislated to the extent that sexual assault survivors in these circumstances know unequivocally that legislators stand with them and that they reject the possibility of sexual assault happening in those circumstances again.

For those reasons, I'm happy to support this amendment, and I commend the member for moving it.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to speak about this. I would like to present an amendment, please.

The Chair: This is amendment A6. Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move that Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients, be amended in section 7 as follows: (a), in clause (a) by striking out "Subject to subsection (3), a person" and substituting "Subject to subsections (3) and (4.1) a person"; (b), in clause (b) in the proposed section 45 by adding the following after subsection (4):

(4.1) Notwithstanding subsections (3) and (4), a person whose practice permit and registration are cancelled as a result of a decision under sections 82(1.1) or 96.2, based in whole or in part on a conviction of an offence under the Criminal Code (Canada), may not apply for the practice permit to be reissued and the registration to be reinstated.

Madam Chair, I think back about how this came to be and the questions that we asked on Dr. Taher and a pattern of behaviour and what had happened to these women in this particular situation that not only were victimized and then survivors and then had the courage to come forward. To think that in the legislation there is nothing to make sure that somebody who has breached that level of trust doesn't have the opportunity to be able to reapply and be reinstated for their job. This is about trust, completely.

The Alberta United Conservatives supported last week's motion of a lifetime ban of a health professional's licence if it was cancelled due to sexual abuse or misconduct involving a patient. Let's talk about this for a minute. We did that because we believe that this is an unconscionable breach of trust. Patients display an incredible amount of trust in health professionals. You're extremely vulnerable when you're in these situations, extremely willing to give over information that is particularly intimate about your situation, about what's going on. There are so many aspects to that. That breach of trust, when it happens, is absolutely devastating to the person who has been impacted by that. If they, in turn, are sexually abused by that health professional, it is absolutely imperative for those of us who have the privilege to legislate to ensure that these health practitioners are never ever again offered the opportunity to practise.

This is why the UCP is introducing this amendment. It provides a lifetime ban on health professionals who have been convicted of a Criminal Code offence, and that actually aligns with Bill 21's definition of sexual abuse. It includes the Criminal Code offences that align with misconduct as well if the practitioner's licence has been cancelled for those reasons. Why do we think that this is important? Well, the bar for a criminal conviction is high, and Albertans would be shocked to learn that Bill 21 actually leaves the door open for someone who's been convicted of a serious sexual offence to actually reapply to practise. Think about that for a minute. We're actually leaving that door open for that possibility in the health professional field.

Health is about trust, a hundred per cent about trust. The government is trying to build trust. We're trying to build trust. We're trying to make sure that within our health system, at the very, very topmost piece of that, that trust piece is there. It's absolutely imperative. For the sake of that public trust we must slam the door shut, and this amendment will actually accomplish that.

Thank you.

5:30

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Again, I just want to reiterate that I think the intent of the amendment aligns with the intent of the bill. I think that the purpose of this legislation, as was stated by the member and, I think, by the Alberta sexual assault centre folks who were at the press conference when we released this bill, says that, of course, we need to be strict and we need to be fair.

I just want to reiterate that we want to ensure that in our legislation – our legislation will be the strictest in Canada – there is a minimum sanction, being a minimum of five years, and that in no way does somebody applying lead to the outcome that they will be awarded their licence back because they've applied for it. I want to remind all folks about that and just reiterate that, through legal advice that we have sought, we want to ensure that this withstands legal and constitutional challenges. Our advice has been that if we went further than five years, that that would be less likely.

Again, I want to reiterate that this is removal of a licence for a minimum of five years, that at the point of five years someone may apply, but in no way does it lead to the likely outcome that they would receive their licence. It's important to us that we have a fair and strict process that aligns with the values that we've outlined through this bill and through speaking and fighting for Albertans who clearly deserve to have a government that's on their side, and that's definitely what we have worked to achieve through our collaboration with sexual assault centres, with survivors, with the colleges. Our government is clear that we want to stand up for women and survivors of sexual assault every day. That's why we've brought forward this bill and other bills earlier in this session, even in the spring session. I think that our record on this matter is clear.

I appreciate the passion with which the member of the Official Opposition speaks to this item and look forward to hearing her voice on all future items, hopefully with the same level of passion that she's been able to bring to this. Again, I want to honour the intent of the amendment. I think it's a good intent. I again, though, want to ensure that our survivors, that people who are in Alberta have the ability to have a bill that will have teeth and that will withstand constitutional challenges. That's why we're proposing a minimum period of five years, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Dr. Swann: I'll maybe add another comment as well that I haven't actually expressed so far. I appreciate very much the sensitivity around this issue as well. Medical professions, all 18 or 20 or 25 of them, have a special duty of trust and privilege in our professions. I want to remind the member that colleges have the authority to restrict practices to certain types of medical or health care practices. They can limit the scope of the practice of that person if they see a reason to do so, they can use judgment and assess the nature of the harm that individual did and the subjects that that person may be particularly attracted to or damaging to, and they can ensure, for example, that an individual never practises without someone else present. There are a range of options for the colleges to address that don't have the impact of a one-size-fits-all, that we seem to be trying to find here.

I think in all professions there are these risks of people in authority and power positions abusing their power and authority on others, and for us in this Legislature to presume that we can assess each case in its uniqueness and address a common punishment for these folks I think is out of the scope of the Legislature, let me say. That is why we have professional bodies that are supposed to be self-policing, and if they're not self-policing, if they're not doing a good job, they need to be called on that.

In the first instance, the members here who are saying that we need to be more supportive of victims and victims supports and victims services, by all means, we need to do that. But we need to leave to the courts their role, we need to leave to the colleges their role, and we need to leave to the Legislature our role, which is to provide overarching legislation that makes sure that we take this very, very seriously. And I think this bill does take it very, very seriously.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View for this thoughtful amendment and indeed the Minister of Health for having brought forward the bill. I discussed this with her in question period last spring and indicated that the Official Opposition would be eager to work constructively with the government to bring forward legislation to address the outrageous circumstances of licences being granted to convicted sexual offenders practising medicine.

I would just briefly like to respond in support of this amendment to the remarks of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who essentially said that this matter is better left in the purview of the professional licensing body designated by the Legislature, namely the College of Physicians & Surgeons. Madam Chair, the problem is that the college failed in its duty to protect women. It failed to responsibly exercise the authorities granted to it by this Legislature. The college and other professional licensing bodies are granted the privilege to regulate their respective professions in the public interest for the common good, not to be given carte blanche to essentially look the other way when members of their professions engage in crimes and are found by our fair legal system, are convicted by that system, of having engaged in such an odious crime as sexual assault.

I would submit to the hon. member that he is mistaken in placing such confidence in a college which failed to protect women in this instance. We as legislators cannot allow that mistake to be repeated. He talked about punishment. Well, darn right, Madam Chair. Physicians and other professionals who abuse their professional relationships with patients or clients for sexual gratification darn well should be punished. They should be punished, of course, under the criminal sanctions of the federal Parliament, but they should also face serious and, in our view, permanent repercussions in terms of their ability to practise their profession.

Finally, Madam Chair, I believe that the measures proposed by the amendment before us and a permanent ban on the ability of convicted rapists and sexual offenders to practise medicine would have a very serious deterrent effect, that before they take the step to violate the sexual integrity of one of their patients, they will realize that their entire career is on the line.

That is why I think most Albertans expect us to support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to get up and give a few more remarks. First of all, thank you to the member for moving the amendment. I think it's a good amendment. I think it's an important one.

One of my concerns in this debate today is that we're really focusing on the professionals, and we're not focusing on the survivors. I think that's where our attention needs to lie, with the survivors. I just want to go through a few reminders, put some context around where we are today.

The Me Too movement isn't a movement to try and trap anybody. It isn't about making sure that someone is punished. The Me Too movement is to let survivors of sexual assault know that they're not alone and that what they've experienced has been experienced by other people. The thing that keeps survivors quiet is shame, shame and guilt and a sense of responsibility for the act that has occurred to them.

Another point that I want to make is that sexual assault is not about sexual gratification. It is always about power. It's using sex as a tool to control someone else. When we think about what prevents people who survived sexual assault from reporting sexual assault, some of the obstacles are a fear of not being believed. To disclose something that feels so shameful publicly or to another person is a terrifying thing to do.

I know. I've reported being sexually assaulted to the police. I've stood in this House and I've spoken about years of abuse. It was one of the scariest things that I've ever had to do in my life: what if people don't believe me? What if what happened to me doesn't mean anything, it doesn't make any difference? Some of the other concerns are marginalization. I remember that when I did report to the police, I was told by an RCMP officer that they really had a lot of other important things to take a look at and my case wasn't that important. For any survivor, you know, it's a risk to come forward and to disclose what happened. It's a bigger risk to disclose to police, to law enforcement, because that has a lot of gravity to it.

It's taken so much for a survivor to come forward to a college, if they can even figure out that that's an option for them, and disclose what happened to them and to create circumstances where they're okay sharing their story. It's pretty monumental that they've been able to make it that far. Their credibility is always in doubt. We have a history as a society of laying a lot of blame on survivors and telling them, you know, that they shouldn't have been wearing what they were wearing or they shouldn't have drunk what they drank or shouldn't have been where it was possible for them to be sexually assaulted.

If you think of the circumstances of going to see a health professional and being sexually assaulted, you have that trust, you think that you've already created the circumstances where you won't be sexually assaulted. One in four women will be sexually assaulted throughout their lifetime. All women keep in the back of their head: how can I be safe? We're not able to walk and go about our business in the same way that men are. We always are concerned about our safety. So when you are somebody's patient and you're sexually assaulted, it makes the crime even more egregious. It's already awful, and to contravene, to compromise that level of trust is unspeakable. There should be strict and very severe consequences for behaving that way.

I heard what the minister said about the legislation being the strictest in the country to be introduced, and I appreciate that. I really do. I would say that I'd love to see it be even stricter. I'd love us to be a beacon throughout North America, throughout the world as to how to handle sexual assault in cases of professional misconduct. I think one of the things that I'm hearing in the debate today, especially the hesitancy concerns about the constitutionality of the law, is an undercurrent of fear or concern that we could go that far and there could be a challenge.

I get it, and I'd really like to encourage all of us to act in a different way in spite of that fear, acknowledge that it's there because that's what courage is. If you think about the Kavanaugh hearings and Dr. Blasey testifying, she was petrified. She had to drink her glass of water with both hands. Like, she was scared. That is a really scary circumstance to be in, and she did it anyway. That's courage.

If we have fears about the constitutionality – and we're smart people in this room. There's nothing blatant about the constitutionality that says: oh, please, don't do this right now. I would really encourage us to be courageous and to go ahead and pass this amendment. Right now we have a chance to provoke societal change in attitude about how we address sexual assault, and we need to take it.

For these reasons, I am supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 19 and Bill 21. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the time and the progress that we've made this afternoon, I would move that we adjourn the House and call it 6 o'clock and reconvene tomorrow morning at 9.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Hon. members, as we continue Veterans' Week, let us reflect on the military, police, firefighters, and paramedics who keep our Armed Forces safe both home and abroad, and let us also keep in mind the first responders in Sherwood Park, who have been working diligently to keep their community safe.

Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 19

An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and move Bill 19 for third reading.

This bill represents a significant advance in protecting affordability for students as far as the cost of higher education goes and is also a significant advance in making sure that more Albertans get the opportunity to pursue the postsecondary education of their dreams.

You know, Madam Speaker, when our government was elected, we inherited an oil price in free fall, an economy that was going into one of the worst recessions in a couple of generations. Our government chose not to turn our backs on the people of Alberta and instead invest in the people of Alberta to make sure that they had the opportunities that they needed to continue to be successful and make their lives better, and that included the students of our province. So we continued to invest in every university and college by providing predictable and stable funding, and we continued to guarantee affordability for higher education by freezing tuition and fees at every university and college in the province so that every Alberta student had the opportunity to pursue an affordable higher education.

Madam Speaker, it's also important to know that the tuition freeze couldn't last, that we had to recognize that we needed a long-term plan for the sustainability of the cost of education for our students, and that's what's reflected in the bill that we are presenting for third reading this morning.

Madam Speaker, our government listens to Albertans. This bill is the result of extensive consultations with our stakeholder groups. We know how important this legislation is, so we ensured that the voices of our stakeholders were heard and respected. We consulted with postsecondary institutions, with student advocacy groups, and, most importantly, with the students themselves to ensure that their needs were met. I'm happy to report that the feedback from our stakeholders has been extremely positive, and they know that we're making improvements that will make postsecondary education more attainable for learners without sacrificing the high-quality education that Albertans expect from their universities and colleges.

This bill introduces important changes to keep postsecondary education affordable by creating checks and balances needed to better control tuition and fees for domestic and for international students. While this bill does give the minister authority to set fees for apprentices, the institutions will continue to set fees for all other students, allowing them the flexibility and the ability to continue to provide high-quality programs for students. I want to repeat that there will remain a difference in treatment between tuition fees for apprentices and other postsecondary students. Apprenticeship fees are the same at every institution and are set by the minister. Bill 19 doesn't change that. However, this will place some restrictions on the minister's authority by requiring apprenticeship fees to align with other student tuition increases, namely through the consumer price index.

This bill also includes explicit parameters for mandatory noninstructional fees, which are fees that students pay in addition to their tuition. This bill ensures that public institutions must keep mandatory noninstructional fees at or below the cost to provide the goods or services for which the fee is set. These fees cannot be used as revenue generators for institutions. This bill also ensures that institutions must have written approval from student councils before they introduce a new mandatory noninstructional fee. This ensures that all students across our great province continue to have access to high-quality and affordable educational opportunities.

We're creating a system that is accountable and transparent not only for the students but for all Albertans. We've listened to our postsecondary partners. We're continuing to ensure that the needs of our postsecondary partners are heard and respected. That's why this bill strengthens the collaboration between sectors and ensures that research across the province is co-ordinated and aligned with the Alberta research and innovation framework.

We've also told our postsecondary partners that our intention is to provide them with backfill funding while we continue our tuition freeze for a fifth year. This will offset the cost of the tuition freeze for those institutions. We know how important stable and predictable funding is. Our government, as I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, restored funding to institutions, and we've provided 2 per cent operating grant increases every year since 2015.

Our postsecondary institutions are highly regarded and respected across the country. The many changes in Bill 19 will ensure that the quality of postsecondary education in Alberta remains extremely high.

I'm proud of this bill and what it represents to all of our stakeholders. I know that it will serve our stakeholders and our province well. This proposed bill continues our government's commitment to the students of our province, a commitment that we've upheld during our government's mandate. Bill 19 will ensure that affordable postsecondary education is accessible for every Albertan. The initiatives in this bill will create a postsecondary system that continues to provide learners with the skills that they need to succeed in Alberta's diversifying economy.

I look forward to the rest of the debate at third reading of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the bill, Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. I will say that I am in support of the bill. I think it's an important bill, one that needed to happen although there are some challenges.

I think there are a few things that, just for the sake of government and for the sake of Alberta, we should address a little bit in this conversation although I am sure that students are happy with the bill. I know that some of them have been consulted, and I think the stability that it will create for students is definitely going to be a valuable thing, and it allows them to plan. It allows them to figure out how they're going to get their finances in order. I think it will be helpful to them in that regard.

I do think the tuition freeze of 2015 was a concern. Any time you have a radical departure from policy in government, it creates challenges for one group or another, so I think resolving that and figuring out a reasonable rate of return for the colleges and costs for the students is something that's important.

I understand that student bodies were pushing for a cap that was tied to the consumer price index, so I think that they should be happy and satisfied with that. I do have some concerns about the consumer price index, though, and how it might impact Alberta. It hasn't always been stable and low as it's been the last few years. There have been times where it's been very challenging.

There are also economists who question the validity of the CPI, the way it's calculated. The way it's calculated has changed over the years. My concern also with that is partly that the reality is that we're tying our Alberta tuition and university funding to a figure that is set federally. Quite clearly, it's set for federal policy benefit, not necessarily Alberta policy benefit. The way it gets calculated gets tweaked at different times throughout its history. There are some who claim that the federal government deliberately keeps it a little bit low because that suits their own personal position. I'm not sure that it's a perfect measure, but it's something we'll have to watch, something that we'll have to continue to monitor as we move forward in Alberta here because, quite frankly, I think we need to make our own decisions and not be tied in everything to the federal government.

But I think it will, as I said, provide predictability, and it does provide at least a framework that the institutions can work with, a framework that gives them important predictability. As in every business – and universities are also a business besides an educational institution – the costs are sometimes not nearly as significant as the reliability or the predictability of them and the policy framework in which they exist. So this is good.

The reality is that many students have to pay for their own education. They have to work very hard to get a postsecondary education, sometimes two jobs. We often hear that. People who have succeeded and who give inspirational challenges often tell their stories about how hard they had to work. It's no different here in Alberta. To get a postsecondary education, for the majority of people, is a huge challenge. I know it was for me. I had to earn every cent of it, and many, many students are in the same situation. The thing that scares me a little bit, though, is the escalating cost of that tuition, that has to be earned. I've always sort of thought that way back in the late '70s, when I started my education, it somehow seemed easier than it appears to be today.

I tried to do a little bit of research on that, and I think there are some extremely interesting numbers that arise. Unfortunately, I don't have detailed numbers for Canada. I do have some American numbers, and I think the entire western world is facing this escalating challenge. For instance, in 1971 the cost of a public college education in the U.S. was $8,700. In 2016 it was almost $21,000. Now, here's the important part. If you compare that to median income and put it into a ratio, it's almost scary. I have it here for both women and for men, and it's different but in different ways. In 1971 the average cost of a college education was 58 per cent of the annual median income; 58 per cent in '71. By 2016 that same ratio had jumped to 80 per cent. So we have an over 20 per cent ratio increase for women. This is a huge increase for them. For men, as I said, the numbers are slightly different. In 1971 the average college cost divided by the median income was only 20 per cent. By 2016 that 20 per cent had jumped to 51 per cent; over a 31 per cent increase in costs.

When I went to college, you could go to work in the summertime. You could get a job. For me it was either construction or tree planting, actually. Did that for a summer, fighting mosquitoes and mud. You could go to work for the summer, and you could come out at the end of summer. There were jobs available, and you would have enough money for the next year to get through school. Now that is almost impossible.

I think this is a trend across the western world. When you have these kinds of escalating increases – 80 per cent of average income for women, 51 per cent for men, with a 20 per cent increase and a 30 per cent plus increase – these are challenging numbers for our educational realities. We need to take into account the economics of this for students. Students really do need the opportunity to earn the money that it will take to pay for their education.

I do have some numbers for Canada in terms of debt financing, and it tells much the same story. Student loans for Canada in the various ratios, by the time you're done, whether it's $5,000 or $5,000 to $10,000 or $10,000 to $15,000 or over $15,000, have increased. For those who have over $15,000 in student loans, just from '91 to more recently – I don't even have the number here, but it's more than tripled. The size of student loans is increasing dramatically. We have a real problem here where both the tuition-to-income ratio and the size of student loans are increasing at a rapid pace. It is important that these kinds of issues are addressed and fixed and somehow looked at by government.

Capping tuition rates for students I think is one potential solution, one step, but there's a much bigger puzzle than that, a much bigger challenge for us. It has to do with the fact that students need jobs, and we need good-paying jobs. We need the kinds of jobs that make it possible for a student to earn enough to actually pay their way through education and not come out with massive, multiple years' worth of debt to have to try and address. To me, that would be extremely depressing. I don't believe in personal debt. I don't believe in government debt except in rare situations. I just think it's a huge risk for us to cause the young people of our day to start out their life with a net debt situation in terms of their own personal finances, their family, their ability to provide for children, to buy a house, to even have a car to go to work. I think that these are challenging issues that government needs to address.

As I said, years ago you could get a job in the summertime, and you could earn enough to pay your way. Now you may not even get a job in Alberta in the last few years. Some of this, quite frankly, is the cause of macro government policy. It's not just the price of oil. I mean, you look at other jurisdictions, and they're booming. I just noticed yesterday that in the U.S. the leading market index is actually oil and gas extraction. Their economy is booming. Young people are getting jobs in those industries. They can't even hire enough people. Here we don't have any jobs to offer them. So macro government policy in terms of the economy actually has a huge impact on the accessibility and affordability of education, which is what this bill is about.

I note that if you take a look back through history, the glorious times of education in any society in history are those times where they were economically prosperous. One of the benefits of economic prosperity is the need to not have to work so much of your life, which grants you the freedom to engage in not just education but also the arts and culture. When economies are struggling and poor, people don't have those luxuries of both education and the arts and culture and all of those things. So I think it's extremely important that we do maintain in Alberta a vibrant economy, a growing opportunity for employment, and not just the kinds of jobs that cause students to struggle through but, hopefully, the kinds of jobs where over four months of the summer they could actually earn enough to pay for the next year's education. Unfortunately, in Alberta in recent decades the only place where you could really do that, for the most part, was in the oil and gas industry, earn that kind of money.

Now we have a government that's put a cap on much of our oil industry. We have a government that too often has tried to shame our oil industry, drive it out of our province, drive it into the U.S. We've seen a number of companies leave just recently, this week, take all of their investments and move them into the U.S. We are building the education of U.S. students and leaving our own students strapped for income and the opportunity to succeed and to get ahead. I think this is a part of the big picture that is a huge challenge for us. It's a problem.

I'm pleased in one regard, that there's some stability and that there will be some ongoing framework there for both students and the universities. I think that while the cap for international students is good for international students, we need to make sure that it's presented in a way that actually invites international students in because they do a lot to fund our educational institutions. We don't want to create a situation in Alberta where we lose the economic benefits of international students. They bring a great benefit to our province. As I said before, many of them stay and become great contributors to our culture, to our economy, to our industry, and to innovation. They bring fresh ideas, and that mix of international ideas being brought to us is part of what we need in Alberta to make us prosperous and to make us successful.

I am a little disheartened that it took three and a half years to get this tuition review done. I think it was an important, urgent issue that probably should have been done earlier than that.

I think we also need to take a much broader look at the other policies that affect the whole picture of the massive rising increase of university education and the decline of our economic strength, of our economic vitality, because these policies can affect the whole province and, in the end, affect how we go about creating a context where a university education is entirely possible for students.

When we cripple our economy, university education as well as students suffer. There are now 184,000 unemployed Albertans, 40,000 more than before this government took office, in 2015. We need to make sure we get people back to work, not just in low-paying jobs but good-paying jobs, the kinds of jobs that can pay for a university education. That's what students are dealing with. Those are the things that we really need to be thinking about and the things that we need to continue to address on sort of a macro level.

I'd also like to say on sort of the broad picture of things that I think we need to encourage our universities, which are educational institutions but are also businesses, to really focus on the business side of their model. We have universities that teach business education. We have some of the brightest business minds in our universities. So I think we need to encourage the universities as well to also look at ways that they can adopt lean business models. Every other business in the province has had to do that.

I would encourage them to wrestle a little bit more with how they build endowments. I know all the big universities in the U.S. have massive endowments. In many cases they're able to fund tuition. Stanford University, I think, has gone away from tuition altogether because they have the endowments, so they just endow every student. For them, it's about grades. If you have the grades, you make it into the university. We need to encourage them to build those endowments, and I know that's been a challenge in Canada. Canadians need to be more generous, I think. We should endow our universities so that they're not struggling and hampered so that they can be world class.

I'd also encourage that government should try and find ways to incent universities to be innovative and business class, basically, to be innovative in terms of revenue and find value-added means. Businesses have to do this all the time. There are some ways I think they could build additional revenue through the sale of product, leasing of physical assets – I mean, they hold immense assets in many cases – consulting, and speaking. I'm just saying that we need to encourage them to model best business practices in every way possible so that they can offer their students an absolute premium university. Quite frankly, students looking for a university are sort of like shopping for a car. Everybody wants the Lamborghini but can probably afford the Volkswagen. It's a challenge to try and find a price point that provides us with what we need.

These are some of the broader challenges, I think, facing universities. I also question a little bit – and this isn't my idea; I read quite a bit in different areas – the trend of universal four-year degrees. It used to be three. In Britain it still mostly is three unless you do an honours four-year extra program. You know, you could cut student tuition by 25 per cent immediately if we would grant a three-year degree instead of a four. My point with that is that I don't think every student necessarily should take a university degree and especially not a four-year degree. I think that a more basic education – I think it's what they call a basic degree in Britain – for many students will serve well. It will help keep them out of debt, and it's an immediate 25 per cent cost to the tuition of a bachelor's degree.

The push for a four-year degree in some respects is driven by a revenue drive by universities wanting more money out of students, and I think it's something that needs to be challenged and questioned because not everybody actually benefits from a university degree. It's not a guarantee of a job, and when we sell it for that, in some ways we're deceiving students who go into debt to get a degree that then does not serve them well.

I guess my point is that we need to be a little bit more careful about the appropriateness of education for each student and where the best value is. I understand that university degrees generally make more income and that there's a whole scale of that. All of that I totally understand and agree with, but it's not the right choice for every student.

I was just reading here yesterday, in fact, an Edmonton Food Bank report, 2018 Beyond Food: Revisited. I was shocked to read that actually 48 per cent, almost half, of food bank recipients in Edmonton, have a postsecondary education of some kind or other. There's only one of two things going wrong here when half of our food bank recipients have a postsecondary education of some level. Either the economy needs to be improved, or the education isn't focused in a way that provides them the opportunity to get what they need in order to hold a job, in order to advance their own personal lives and careers, in order for them to provide for their families. There is a need, I think, to refocus some of our university training.

Now, I totally, totally agree that esoteric academics does have its place. We do need very, very technical and scientific and focused people in our society for sure, but it's not beneficial for everyone. I think working more toward helping students find the right education for them, that will truly serve them well, so that we don't have all these postsecondary graduates who cannot get a job, having to go to food banks – that's a tragedy when they're carrying debt for education already. I think we need to focus as well on the suitability of the education that we're offering to students.

Those are just a couple of insights and a couple of remarks that I would like to make. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. Now, I listened very closely to the comments from the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, and quite frankly I find it astounding that his main idea for lowering tuition fees and to keep students out of debt is to have students stop going to university altogether. Usually when I meet with students, I tell them how important it is to get an education. But, you know, I guess that's just the difference between the NDP and the UCP.

Frankly, bills like this are why I entered politics and put my name forward in 2015. Before I was elected, I was a student, and I'm really proud of that. Governments need to have a diversity of views. Making sure that students' voices are heard in this Legislature is incredibly important because it brings about decisions and bills like this.

Before I was elected, I was working minimum wage jobs, full-time in the summer, part-time during school. On top of volunteering, on top of my studies, and on top of extracurriculars, I needed a part-time job so that I could afford to study. On top of that, I had to take out loans because even then it didn't cover my expenses. Now, my parents aren't rich – in fact, I'm making more in this job now than anyone in my family has ever made – so it wasn't always easy. The vast majority of students I studied with and who are studying now in Alberta cannot afford to get a degree without taking out massive loans.

I'm incredibly disappointed that the opposition will not be supporting this bill. However, I'm not surprised.

Mr. Orr: We are supporting this bill.

Connolly: Oh. They're finally supporting the bill. That's good to hear. The last I heard, the large majority weren't supporting.

But I'm surprised because any time we put forward legislation that sets out to help students, to help LGBTQ youth, to help women, the opposition seems to sit on their hands or to leave the room entirely. So I'm very glad to see that you're all here and debating today. But if the opposition really wanted to help students, they would have talked to them to begin with and put forward this bill when they had the chance, when they were in government.

Now, the UCP has really shown who they are, and it's time for Albertans to see them. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills said that if they get into government, quote, it's going to hurt. It's obvious to me that some members of this Assembly ran to help Albertans and others ran to hurt them. Voting for this bill will help Albertans, and that's why I'm supporting it. Students deserve affordable high-quality learning opportunities.

For decades whenever there was a drop in oil, Conservatives used students and postsecondary institutions as scapegoats, cutting their programs at every chance they got. My friends were attending Mount Royal when the previous government cut the programs they were in. They didn't even know if they were going to be able to finish their degrees because the former government had absolutely no plan whatsoever to help those students.

I'm sick and tired of Conservatives saying that they care about students because their record shows the exact opposite. They have absolutely no plan to help students. If they were in government today, they would have cut advanced education like they always have. If they were in government, our tuition fees would be sky-high, with multiple market modifiers and no plan to fix the problems that this bill finally fixes.

If the members opposite finally got off their seats and talked to students, they would know why this bill is important. They would know why this bill has been needed for decades. But the Leader of the Opposition stated that he has no intention to consult with anyone if, God forbid, he's elected Premier, because he doesn't want to get bogged down.

If they had spoken to students, they would have heard from people like Andrew Bieman, chair of the Council of Alberta University Students, who said:

We have been asking for these changes for a long time, and we're happy to see the government addressing students' concerns regarding the costs of tuition. We're looking forward to legislative changes that help support students in the long run, as students are the largest stakeholders in the post-secondary system, and it's encouraging to know that our voices matter.

Basically, Madam Speaker, the UCP have been showing, time and time again, their true colours. They're not in this Chamber to help students. They're not here to help anyone that may be struggling. They're here to help their rich friends in the top 1 per cent. They're here to give tax breaks to the rich and hurt everyday Albertans.

Our government will continue to work to improve the lives of every Albertan. We will make sure that students have access to mental health supports. We will make sure that Alberta's students can afford to go to school. We will make sure that Alberta students have what they need to succeed in Alberta, because without an educated workforce, our province is doomed to fail. But it seems that our province's failure is exactly what the UCP has been cheering for.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It was interesting listening to the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood talk and go on his rant, I guess, on the UCP. Now, he suggested that the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka was discouraging people from going into postsecondary education. Maybe he should have been listening more carefully, because that definitely was not the case. He also suggested that we weren't supporting the bill. Of course, maybe he needs to attend the House a little more and pay attention to what's going on here, because I don't remember the members saying anything of the sort. He also said that this bill should have been done a long time ago. We even heard the minister speak here just yesterday, talking about how we had the highest tuition in Canada. Of course, that's not true either. We had some of the lowest tuition in Canada, way below the national average.

One thing I think the government fails to realize and that the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood maybe needs to realize is that this government has raised costs to universities. They brought in a carbon tax, that has cost universities and colleges millions of dollars. This carbon tax has cost students money, too. It's cost them money to travel. It's cost them money for heating the places that they live. All these costs have been increased due to this government here.

We have the highest unemployment and the highest youth unemployment. How are students going to support themselves in college and university when this government has done nothing to support them getting jobs? Madam Speaker, I think it's pretty rich for the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood to get up and go on this rant on the opposition here when they have done nothing to help the students in Alberta.

There are lots of different things that this government has done that are not very helpful at all to students. In fact, I actually had a member's statement yesterday, where I talked about all the different things this government is saying that are just not true. Then the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood gets up and reiterates the same things. Now, I wish that the member opposite would take a little more time and maybe think of what their government's actions have done and what their inaction has done, too, to unemployment, to the cost of living for everyday Albertans. They talk about the tax breaks. Madam Speaker, they've raised taxes on every single Albertan, from the top income to the bottom income.

I think it's pretty rich to have the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood get up and speak like he just has, railing on the opposition, when we've been supporting Albertans every step of the way. We've been fighting with this government as far as the damage that they've been doing, and we will continue to fight this government on the damage that they're doing. When they come up with something good, we'll support it. We will. We'll try to make it better.

I think there are a lot of things that could have been done with this bill as far as some more consultation. They say that they've done all this consultation, but they don't have the regulations in place yet. They don't have the guidelines in place yet. I think colleges and universities in Alberta are worried about that. I think they're worried about what the government is going to come up with as guidelines and regulations for this bill.

Obviously, some more time could have been taken as far as having the opportunity for these colleges and universities to look at what the guidelines and regulations are going to be so they know how it'll affect them. There's lots of opportunity for that. We could have sent this to committee and had a little bit more time for input. It still could have been passed in this legislative session, but we could have had just that little bit more information that the colleges and universities could have used so that they could make a decision on whether they would like to support this or not. Obviously, without all that information, how are they going to know what they're getting with this bill?

I think there are a lot of different things here, Madam Speaker, that this government could do. Again, if we'd had this input from these people – we could have had students come in and talk about this. We could have had the colleges and universities come in and talk about this, and had they known what the regulations and guidelines would be, they would have had that opportunity to have that input, and we would have been able to have that input, too, so that they would know what they're doing and what's going to happen with this bill and how it's going to affect them.

I'll leave it at that. I appreciate the time.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. Education is one of the pillars of our society, and it's through education that we make our province competitive with other jurisdictions, we create a more active community in regard to actions like voting and donating, and we innovate and stimulate the economy.

Everyone here values education, and it's disappointing when you hear members from the government side being so arrogant as to assume that they are the only defenders of education, that they're the only ones that believe in postsecondary education. I guarantee that everyone in this room believes in education, especially on this side of the House.

Let's move on with this. You know what? Education is not just about what you learn from your professors or read from your textbooks. Postsecondary education helps us to develop essential skills such as time management, interpersonal skills, critical thinking, unless you're enrolled at Wilfrid Laurier. But other than that, most schools do try to teach some critical thinking. These skills are absolutely critical if we are to remain competitive and grow as a society. Certainly, there are lots of studies that talk about the benefits of postsecondary education in regard to job prospects. Those with postsecondary education have a higher employment rate, they make more money, and they enjoy longer term careers.

Postsecondary education has benefited me greatly, Madam Speaker. I might not have a university degree like some of the folks in this room, but I went to technical school. I went to NAIT and also AVC, Alberta Vocational College, in Lac La Biche to get my EMT and then my paramedic at NAIT. When I got on with the fire department in Fort McMurray, I got the pleasure of going into a more technical program, the firefighting program at Vermilion college, and that was a good experience. So I had a very interestingly diverse education that was more on the technical side.

But in order for me to proceed in my career, to grow as a firefighter paramedic, Madam Speaker, I started taking courses at our local community college, Keyano College, up in Fort McMurray. I took a class a semester, working my way towards my business admin certificate. My hope was to get, like, a diploma or a degree in it. I tell you what. That program alone put me ahead of all my co-workers, so when there was a position available in the management ranks, I was able to procure that job by applying. Definitely, my abilities on the floor really helped. I went into administration, and it was thanks to that business administration certificate. I believe that really helped me stand apart.

But the flip side to that, Madam Speaker – well, let me first talk about that. Going into the management side was great, administration. I was running EMS for an entire region. It was a time when I was developing a lot of the stuff for our own protocols and that. It was a time when Alberta Health Services came and took over everything. It was a time of great grief because even my boss, my fire chief, came up to me and said: how do you like answering to two masters? I had Alberta Health Services on one side and the mayor and council on the other, that I had to address, and it was very difficult because sometimes there were conflicting issues in there. It was a pain in the butt, quite honestly. But I digress.

I enjoyed the job in the administration, and then education helped me get to that side, but my lack of education also created that glass ceiling, and I couldn't climb any higher. Even though I had the smarts and I had the work ethic and I knew our industry, any applications I had to a more senior position weren't being considered.

I remember going in to ask my chief: "You know, what do I have to do? Where am I at here? Like, I'm stuck in this position. I'm not enjoying it. I have to deal with Alberta Health Services. Like, I want to get into a higher position." He said, "Come into my office." The chief walks me into his office. On his desk I remember there was a stack of papers, and he takes a handful of them and throws them on the table in his office there. "Tany, take a look at those." You know how the pile hits that table and just slides right across, right? I just start randomly picking them. They were all resumés for the positions that I was applying for. He said, "Look; keep looking." I started looking at all these resumés. Every one of them had a degree or a master's degree, a higher level of education than I had.

Even though I had things like project management, which was another separate course, and the business admin and a couple of other things, classes and officer courses, it still wasn't enough, so I was restrained by the amount of education that I had. It was shortly thereafter that I realized that I needed to reconsider where I was at and consider getting that postsecondary education.

I guarantee, people across the way, that there are people over here that understand the real repercussions of not having an education and having an education. The arrogance that I see that comes from across the way is just really ridiculous and rhetorical. I know you're playing the politics game, but, you know, it is arrogant, and it is sad. Let's be clear. [interjections] Sorry. What was that?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Yao: Sorry. One of your folks from the government side was beaking off there. I was curious as to what he was saying.

The Deputy Speaker: Please continue.

Mr. Yao: Anyways . . . [interjections] Say again?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members.

Please continue, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Sorry. They're just heckling over there.

Anyways, we do understand the need to ensure that education is sustainable. That's the issue, that all of our expenses are increasing. The expenses on the schools are increasing. You threw a carbon tax on them, that they have to absorb, and they need an ability to pay for all these things. Again, we would love to have a school system that definitely didn't have financial barriers, but unfortunately that is a fact of life here because we need to pay those professors, we need to pay for those heating bills in those schools, and we need to build that infrastructure. There's only so much that you can take from Albertans, who are paying so much in taxes. So recognize that we do understand this.

You know, I was fortunate enough to talk to a student in my constituency about their experience with postsecondary institutions. The student was disappointed with the freezes because his experience was that when fees were frozen previously, he got hit with his parking and his other annual fees. Book prices went up, textbooks. They were things that they were having problems navigating, okay? He wasn't a rich guy. He had to work full-time while he attended university as, again, he wasn't wealthy. He didn't have parents that could sponsor him for his tuition. So he only took about five to six classes a semester as well as working 35 hours a week just to stay afloat. We certainly recognize where individuals like this need predictability and stability in order to budget. Living paycheque to paycheque isn't a great way to live.

Now, I'm not saying that all students have to work while they're in school, but it's sometimes a necessity. That said, they do gain valuable skills albeit they're not partying all the time. They have to work and sleep and eat and study. Those are the ones that learn the true value of their education and a dollar spent, unlike some others who get everything on a platter, I suppose. We understand that student groups have been pushing for stability in education. They simply just want to know what they're going to be paying for tuition year after year, and we certainly understand their concerns around that.

Yes, you know, one of the things that certainly impair a lot of these guys is the taxation. Even the carbon tax makes everything more expensive. Again, the institutions are saying that the prices rise on everything, whether it's their energy bills, their construction bills to build a new annex. It just goes on and on. I'm just curious as to why this government hasn't exempted postsecondary institutions and even our health institutions, I might add, from the carbon tax. Better yet, you should just remove it entirely because, in the end, it's just a tax, isn't it?

One point I'm pleased about with this bill is that I'm glad to see that the regulations do try to include noninstructional fees so that some of these things that students have faced previously won't hurt them as much, like increases to parking and whatnot. My constituent had mentioned to me that the institution he was attending did try to pick up costs by raising all those nontuition fees. He told me that parking costs doubled, some of his book fees increased, and it was very tough.

Madam Speaker, there is another concern about this bill, and it is the regulatory authority over noninstructional fees and other things. It seems this minister might be trying to take control of a lot of the process. We do have to recognize that a lot of these agencies need to follow some sort of due process, but part of the due process is also making sure that they're financially viable, and by putting restrictions on a lot of the things that these universities can do, it could impair them. We can only hope that the good minister has the decency to try consulting with them when he's making a lot of his decisions. They certainly haven't demonstrated a lot of consultation on other bills.

That said, Madam Speaker, I do stand here today in favour of Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Postsecondary Education. At the heart of this bill I believe his intent is good, and we understand that. The benefit, again, of more predictable financing for students' tuition fees is greatly desired, but again we have to balance that with making sure that universities have the ability to be fiscally responsible and to spend within their means. To that effect, I would ask the minister: what are his conversations with these schools? Do they have ways of reducing some of their costs? I wonder if these professors are all collectively willing to take a bit of a drop. I have students that complain about their professors that work a day a year. I don't know if that's an exaggeration or not, but they don't see them around. It makes me wonder if they'd be willing to pitch in for the collective good. Who can say for certain?

To this bill, Madam Speaker, I do understand the intent, and I recognize that they want to try to get some stability there. I certainly recognize that. Let's see where we go from here.

Thank you so much for the opportunity to speak on this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for taking some time and commenting on this bill. I thought it was interesting, his talking about his real-life experience with the education that he had and how he chose to extend it and go back to a postsecondary institution to expand his education. I think it's good to have those real-life experience stories, you know, to encourage the youth in Alberta today to look at other options as far as education and what they can be doing.

I also want to thank the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for his service as a first responder, which, of course, is what he went back to school for, to improve his education. I think that's definitely something that can be lauded and respected. Of course, we rely so much on our first responders all across Alberta. We've been talking about first responders in some of the bills that we've been discussing in the Legislature already and the importance of having our first responders, our volunteer firefighters, and things like that, especially in the small communities in Alberta.

I thought it was interesting, too, his comments on the carbon tax, how it affects the costs of universities and colleges and how that money could be so much better spent on the actual education rather than on a tax, and also on the cost of that carbon tax on students and how it affects them and their living expenses, in particular students that travel from outside the centres to the colleges and universities, students from rural Alberta. Some of the biggest costs of an education are those living expenses and travel expenses. Of course, those living expenses and travel expenses are all affected heavily by the carbon tax.

He also talked about the importance of universities, you know, being sustainable, being able to have the income and the expenses balanced so that they can actually provide the proper education for students, which they need to do, which is their job to do. Universities and colleges: I think one of the things that they're always after is predictability in their funding and their income and expenses so that they can make decisions on where they spend that money and how they serve the students. I think that one of the most important things that we can do for colleges and universities is to come up with something that's predictable both on the income and on the expenses side so that they know how much money they have and what they can spend it on.

Like I said, I enjoyed listening to the member's speech. By giving that real-life experience, I think that was a good opportunity for people to listen and to understand the importance of postsecondary education.

I did want to go back to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and some of his comments. Of course, we didn't have the opportunity to ask him questions on what he said, but I thought it was interesting how he talked about the consumer price index. It seems simple to just add in . . .

Mr. Westhead: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order, hon. member.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I believe that under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the intent is to comment on the comments of the speaker, not someone who has spoken in the past. I would just like to ask the member to focus his comments on the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to respond to the point of order?

Mrs. Pitt: Yes, Madam Speaker. The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky was simply stating that some of the comments from the previous speaker and then the speaker he was referring to are relative to this conversation and some of the comments from the original speaker, from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I can assure you that if you allow the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky just a little bit more time, you'll see that this will make its way around to a fulsome conversation that will be understood by all members.

The Deputy Speaker: I will agree. I was actually giving you a little time to see where you were going with that, but I was at the point of cautioning you, Member, that you were drifting into an area that wasn't going to be appropriate for the intent of Standing Order 29(2)(a). Again, please confine your remarks to the previous speaker, as is intended by this particular provision of the standing orders.

Go ahead.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that leeway there.

Debate Continued

Mr. Loewen: I was talking about the consumer price index and, of course, how it's calculated and how it could be politically manipulated or adjusted for political reasons. What that does and how that leads back to what we're talking about is that the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo talked about the importance of universities being sustainable and being able to know what their costs are and what their income is and being able to make sure that they had a balance so that they could continue providing the education that they should. This idea of the adjustment of the consumer price index: the idea of having it tied to that is maybe a good idea. Maybe it's the best idea. I don't know. What it does do is allow for a little bit of adjustment there, and maybe the colleges and universities may not know from one year to the next what's happening as far as that's concerned. I think that's the segue that I was using to bring that back into this discussion.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak in support of Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. Our government is dedicated to fair legislation that improves the lives of every Albertan, including the many postsecondary students in Alberta.

In 2015 our government, which I'm very proud to be a part of, committed to stable and predictable funding for postsecondary institutions. Madam Speaker, because this government has frozen tuition at 2014-2015 levels, the average undergraduate degree program tuition in Alberta is more affordable, something I hear every time I walk through the halls of Red Deer College. Because of our government's foresight and actions, tuition in Alberta is now the fourth-lowest average tuition in the country, something I'm very proud of.

Bill 19 proposes a number of updates to the Post-secondary Learning Act that will set our province's postsecondary learning system up for continued success. This bill creates the checks and balances needed to better control tuition and fees for domestic and international students. By tying tuition to the consumer price index, it ensures that tuition costs remain affordable and do not spike for domestic students and apprentices. That means that here in Alberta the average tuition costs at each institution cannot increase more than the consumer price index and that each program is capped by a 10 per cent increase per year.

This government is also updating the act to give the Minister of Advanced Education the authority to order future tuition and fee freezes so that the government can keep the costs of postsecondary education affordable in the face of an unexpected economic downturn.

Furthermore, Bill 19 will provide the regulatory authority needed to implement the new tuition framework. It will deliver on our promise of affordable and predictable postsecondary costs for domestic and international students. Bill 19 is also capping mandatory noninstructional fees, or MNIFs. These fees are often used for things like health services, athletics, sexual assault centres, et cetera, and have been a point of contention that was mentioned repeatedly in the consultations carried out by this government. Bill 19 is also capping the apprenticeship tuition, the same as the capping of postsecondary tuition, so the increase cannot exceed the CPI.

Madam Speaker, unprecedented action is being taken here by this government when it comes to international tuition for the thousands of international students who study and live in Alberta. This government is in fact removing the fear of unknown changes in tuition and fees by creating a tuition guarantee. With this guarantee international students will be told the tuition cost for each year of their program before they accept admission to their institution. That way international students will have peace of mind knowing what their education will cost and will be able to study in Alberta without the fear of tuition hikes.

Madam Speaker, this bill will also be modernizing and reorganizing the postsecondary system to create increased access for learners across Alberta. Since this government was elected in 2015, requests by many institutions asking for the government to grant approvals that would allow institutions to facilitate student success poured in. To ensure that students across our great province have access to high-quality educational opportunities, Red Deer College and Grande Prairie Regional College can pursue degree granting, and both institutes are on the path to university status, something that the people of central Alberta and the Grand Prairie region have been asking for for years. I hear about degree-granting status at RDC on almost a daily basis, and people of central Alberta are absolutely thrilled that their kids won't have to leave home to get their degree. This legislation will formalize this change and will ensure that the postsecondary system continues to adapt to serve the needs of students and communities in the province.

Madam Speaker, Bill 19 demonstrates this government's commitment to improving the lives of learners in our province so that they can achieve their educational goals, get good jobs, and contribute towards our province's diversifying economy. Albertans deserve a postsecondary system that provides high-quality education that is affordable and accessible, and this bill delivers on that promise. I encourage everyone in the House to vote in favour of this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Absolutely. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really appreciated hearing the comments of my colleague from Red Deer. I understand that this bill is indeed a very important step forward for the work that's being done through Red Deer College and now its opportunity to work towards becoming a university. I know I've had the chance to speak to students who've been part of the programs there. They have had some challenges at Red Deer College. I know that, unfortunately, they had to let go of their well-respected music program. I remember speaking with a number of students and indeed some of the faculty that were involved in the program at that time about the challenges they were facing there.

It's fantastic to see that now they have this opportunity to transition and that the city of Red Deer, as it continues to grow, is now, through this bill, going to be able to have a full degree-granting university over time, that we're going to be able to work towards that. I appreciated the comments that the member made there, and I was thinking that perhaps she would have a bit more to share on that.

As well, I thought the member might also have some good perspective here in that, you know, she has long been an Albertan. I believe you've raised children here in the province, and indeed I imagine you have grandchildren here in the province. Of course, they've taken advantage of the postsecondary system. I imagine the member might have some good reflection on her own experiences coming through a postsecondary education institution, the experiences of her children, and the type of future that this bill is going to provide then for some of her grandchildren as they go through that same system. Perhaps the member would have some thoughts on that.

The Deputy Speaker: Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you very much. I myself attended the U of A, Grant MacEwan, and I also did distance learning. The reason I ended up with my education going to Grant MacEwan college rather than continuing at the university was the costs. I've talked to many students at RDC that had moved or were planning to move from the U of A or the U of C to get their studies at RDC and places like Grant MacEwan because the tuition costs were so much lower.

I've got a granddaughter who wants to be a teacher, and I know that the cost of tuition will be a concern for her mother. Anything we can do to keep it more affordable and keep our kids closer to home so they don't have to have the extra expenses of dorm fees and meal plans and travel, the better. I am so proud of this bill, and I am so proud of the work that our minister has done on this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise to speak to Bill 19. It's clear, and it may be contrary to the comments from the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, whose speech writer was both out of tune and out of date on some of the sentiments on this side of the House. I rise to speak in support of Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education, in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I have three children, and many of our members on this side have children and grandchildren in the postsecondary system now, and if not, they're anticipating their moves to seek postsecondary education of one sort or another. So I'm in the middle of it. I have children that are well along in their postsecondary education, some that are pondering it, and I'm fully aware of the costs of education and some of the concerns that we all as Albertans, I think, have about the affordability of postsecondary education for our children, for the next generation, for the students of today and the leaders of tomorrow.

Madam Speaker, I hear about it from within my household; I hear about it on my board. I have five members of my board between the ages of 18 and 22. I have a further five or six members of my board between the ages of 22 and 28. Some of them probably are still paying off student loans and moving forward in their careers. I hear it from them, and I hear it from my constituents all the time, the concerns, not just the concerns but the hopes and dreams they have to pursue an education in one field or another so that they can have a future, a bright future, and have those opportunities which we've heard about from the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, where he faced barriers because of educational disadvantages versus other candidates and jobs that he was looking at.

Madam Speaker, I'm quite happy today as well that I'll be speaking to some representatives from CAUS to hear their concerns and their input on some of these issues about affordability and tuition and some of the other items and issues that are addressed by this bill, I think many in a positive manner. But I think they only go part of the way in dealing with this. We're now freezing tuitions and controlling the increase in tuitions with the consumer price index, which I think is a good thing, but we are still in a situation where the affordability of postsecondary education is a challenge.

I remember that when I was going to university, I could work, as was mentioned, I think, by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. You could work hard all summer and work those 8-, 10-, 12-, 16-hour days and save up your money and have enough to pay your tuition and pay for your books and pay for most of your living expenses throughout the year, sometimes leaning on your parents a little bit when those funds ran out, sometimes taking a part-time job to supplement that income so that you could do more than just go to school. You could actually enjoy that postsecondary experience and have some spending money on the side, important to pay for gas, pay for insurance, and those sorts of things, which are just a part of life.

Many of our students are not in the position where those are paid for them. They have to earn and pay for those themselves, for the privilege of being able to have those opportunities and that flexibility. Madam Speaker, it's a concern for me. In today's world I know that my kids work hard all summer long, and there's no way that they can save, even if they've got a good job, to pay those same costs that I could afford when I was a student back in the late '70s and early '80s, so that concerns me.

I also was just looking back at some of the current situation with respect to student loans. Madam Speaker, Canada student loans has $19 billion in outstanding loans right now. Now, I know that number might seem like a small amount for the members on the other side here compared with approaching a hundred billion dollars' worth of debt, but $19 billion across this country in student loan debt. That's $19 billion of debt. But in doing a little bit of research, since 2010, rough calculations, we've actually had to write off, the Canadian government, over $1.8 billion worth of student loan debt that was either uncollectible or people had declared bankruptcy and for various reasons. That was between 2010 and 2013 that it was $541 million; in 2013, $175 million; 2014, $231 million; 2015, $295 million; 2017, $178 million, and in 2018 it was $203 million. These are the student loan amounts that are being written off because students not only can't afford — so they're borrowing money to go to school, but now we're getting into the situation where they're not able to pay back that money.

That's one of the things that concerns me, not so much about this bill but just about the situation that our students are in in this province and in this country in terms of being able to afford this, not only to be able to afford it, but they think they can afford it, and then it ends up that they can't repay the money that they borrowed to do that. A lot of that, Madam Speaker, is because they can't find jobs.

I spoke in the House the other day, and if I recall correctly, youth unemployment in Alberta is at about 11.7 per cent, which is a huge number and one of the highest amongst demographic groups not only in the country but in the province, certainly, as well. If I recall correctly, I think the unemployment amongst students is around 44,000. I think it was 37,000, but it's bumped up to about 44,000 individuals. Well, those are the same students. These are the youth. This is the unemployment rate, and those students when they are seeking positions in the summertime to work, that high unemployment rate is something which affects them year in and year out, whether they're trying to get a part-time job, whether they're trying to get a full-time job to pay for their postsecondary education.

That is a huge problem for us here and then even more so when they graduate. What I hear more from students today who absolutely want the tuitions controlled and whatnot: more importantly, they're concerned about getting a job when they graduate, Madam Speaker, about getting a good-paying job, that they've now invested anywhere from a couple to four years of their lives or even more if they're into graduate programs so that they can have higher earning potential. What we're seeing are students graduating with bachelor's degrees and choosing to go back to take a graduate degree because they can't find employment. But what happens then?

You know what I'm hearing from them? A good friend of one of my sons has a bachelor's degree in geology. She goes back and takes a master's degree in geology. Do you know why she's doing that? She can get a job internationally with a master's degree. The minimum requirement to be hired and employed internationally as a geologist is a master's degree, and that's why she's pursuing that. Here in Alberta she'll have six years of education under her belt, seeking jobs here in this province to try and pay back her student loans but also to fulfill her dream and her vision of becoming a geologist, and we're going to lose that talent overseas after six years of education in this province. That's a problem, Madam Speaker, those people who are seeking employment.

I hear it now from people in their first year and second year and third year or approaching graduation from their postsecondary education. They're worried about a job, worried about a job in their field preferably but just worried about a job. That's why we see so many students that are doing jobs that are not in the fields of education that they've been in, Madam Speaker, and not able to earn enough money to pay back those student loans, to the point where we've got $19 billion in student debt in this country. That's just the federal debt. I'm not sure what the amounts are here. I'll be doing some more research on that to see what it is on the provincial debt side as well. But 1.8-plus billion dollars' worth of written off debt because people can't pay for that because of bankruptcies, because of lack of collectability on those debts: that frightens me. That's a large number, and I think if we divided that over the number of graduates per year in this province, we'd see that it's a huge problem for us.

Moving on, again, as I said, I will be supporting this bill because I think that the intent is a positive one to try and control the costs of postsecondary education. I believe we need to work with postsecondary institutions to ensure that they are doing what they can, the best they can to control costs. Maybe it's not just the rate of inflation, but maybe over time we can increase productivity and we can increase efficiency and delivery of the education while not undermining the quality of that education.

Some of the previous speakers, Madam Speaker, have talked about some of the other impacts that we need to consider. The carbon tax: I am sure that the impact of the carbon tax across this province with postsecondary institutions is in the millions of dollars. And it's not just postsecondary education; I hear it from all fronts. I hear it from nonprofits, I hear it from recreational facilities, I hear it from the faith sector, who are trying to deliver services. And here again we run into this same situation with the postsecondary institutions with respect to carbon tax. It's a burden on our students. It's a burden on our faith-based institutions. It's a burden on our nonprofit sector. It's a burden on the recreational facilities that all Albertans use as well. As was mentioned, you know, maybe we should be exempting those.

I happen to agree that we should scrap that tax entirely, but that's another issue altogether. It is impacting the affordability of education today in this province and is a burden and is a problem, and it's going up 67 per cent, Madam Speaker; 67 per cent, that carbon tax is going up. Let's take that number today and increase that burden on the postsecondary budgets by 67 per cent and see how that impacts the affordability of education in this province.

That concerns me. Here we have a good initiative to control costs, but actually we're layering costs back on those same institutions at the very same time out of the two different sides of that same mouth.

Now, I believe the students will be here. I'll talk to the members from CAUS this afternoon. We'll be happy with the cap on tuition, and I think that that's a good initiative. I think that the increased representation that they'll have within their own institutions on the boards of governors is a positive step as well. Students' voices deserve to be heard.

Members on this side, we're listening to those students. They are our children. They are friends of our children. They are members of our boards. They are members of our community, and we listen to them when we're knocking on doors. We hear that at the doors. Very often, you know, knocking on doors, it is a student or young person who's coming to the door. What a great opportunity to hear from them, to hear what their hopes and dreams and visions and concerns are and how they view things, how they perceive things, because it's different. We need to ensure that we embrace that in a positive way and that we do something about it, not just listen, not just hear, but that we do something about it.

We've heard about the international students' situation. I think international students enrich the postsecondary experience in this province. Yes, I know there are concerns with the costs and how we should allocate those costs to international students. But there's no question in my mind that having international students, having the diversity of the student population in our country, in our province is a positive thing, and the bridges that we can build through those relationships are incredible. Many of those students choose to stay here in Canada and in Alberta, and that enriches our society as well. Those that go back are bridges for our students, who in many cases spent those four years together, shoulder to shoulder as fellow students, maybe into the graduate programs as well.

Those are bridges to countries around the world for us, Madam Speaker, which I think are vitally important to the future of this province. The bridges we build today as youth and as students are the bridges of commerce and the bridges of friendship and the bridges of culture in the future because one day those students will go back and they will be leaders in their communities. We've all experienced that, I think, as we talk even to some of the immigrants here in Canada. I talk to some of my dear friends who have been in Canada for 30 and 40 years, who left places like Hong Kong as young students and came to Canada and have done well and have prospered in this province and in this society here. But guess what? Their former fellow students back in Hong Kong are now leaders of industry, and those are bridges that we can build. I do believe that the protection of that for international students is a positive, positive step and a positive thing, and I do support that and thank the minister for that initiative.

The tuition framework, I think, is a positive thing to ensure that we have a positive framework. Predictability is a positive thing, giving students predictability at all levels, whether it is, again, international students or whether it's our own local students, in terms of understanding, even if the budgets are too high – I believe they're too high and the costs are too high – the opportunity, again, for some predictability so that they can plan ahead, so that their parents who have RESPs can say: "Here's how much we've got in our RESP. We can allocate that."

I know that, for me, my wife and I have saved as diligently as we can and put money into RESPs because we have three children. We kind of have to allocate it accordingly, not necessarily equally but subject to the costs that they're facing in the various postsecondary paths that they choose. That's important to us, that they can work and contribute to their own education, that we can contribute some savings to them, and that they in some cases may take on a small amount of student debt as well.

I want them to be able to find the good jobs when they graduate to be able to pay that off, to not be one of those defaulting debtors, 1.8 billion plus dollars of defaulting debtors in this province. Do you think that that feels good for our students, Madam Speaker, when they default on that or have to declare bankruptcy? I don't think so. That's because they can't find the type of opportunities when they graduate.

Sadly, we see so many graduates, talented, talented young people, working in jobs that are not commensurate with the type of education they have. They're driving a taxi, they're working in the hospitality industry, they're doing so many different things. I mean, talk to somebody in a hospitality sector that you go to, a service industry you go to, and ask them. I challenge all of us to ask the people – the baristas and the taxi drivers and the service staff in the restaurants and the hotels that we go to – what their background is.

Madam Speaker, I'm very honoured to be able to speak . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to take a few moments to address some of the comments that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek made in his speech, particularly around student loans. I don't have any issue with the data that he used. I'm relieved that he used a credible source, which is not always the case with the members opposite. I just wanted to enlighten the member and any others listening to his speech about some of the facts for Alberta student loans. I don't have the numbers – I don't know the numbers off the top of my head – but I have rough approximations. Right now we have slightly less than $700 million in student loans outstanding to students here in Alberta. That's made available to about 90,000 students. Ninety thousand students across Alberta have taken out student loans, which is approximately a third of the total number of students who are in the system. So a third of Alberta students right now currently hold student loans, and that total is slightly less than $700 million.

Every year we write off about $60 million in student loans. It's single-digit percentages, Madam Speaker. It's a significant cost; $60 million, of course, could pay for the tuition freeze four times over. It could certainly be used to enhance the student experience in a myriad of other ways. However, that is one of the risks that we're willing to assume as a government, of course, when we provide a loan program like that. Some of these loans are going to be written off.

The member opposite seems to think that there is this vast group of unemployed students – you know, they're working hard, or they're trying to find a job, and they just can't find one – and they've got their degrees in hand, and because of his imagined state of the economy here in Alberta, our students can't find work. That's where he is completely wrong, Madam Speaker.

The vast majority of the student loans that we write off as a provincial government are for students who have attended private colleges. They're not students who go to the University of Alberta. They're not students who go to the University of Calgary. They're not students who go to Red Deer College or NorQuest College. They're students who go to CDI or Reeves College. They are victims of unsavoury private education practices. They're sold a bill of goods. They're told that they're going to enrol in a program that will get them a job that pays them enough money to pay back the extremely high student loans that they have to take in order to pay for these programs, and that turns out not to be true, Madam Speaker.

We get complaints to our office every single day from people who are taken advantage of, who signed up for student loans, in many cases unbeknownst to them, student loans that they cannot pay back because of the questionable practices of a lot of these private career colleges, Madam Speaker. So I share the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's concern. The Member for Airdrie is laughing. I challenge her to prove me wrong. I have the data. My staff tell me about this all the time.

Private career colleges are the vast majority of the student loans that we write off, so our government is taking action to make sure that we are addressing some of the problematic practices that we find in private career colleges. We're tightening up their ability to – we monitor them very closely, making sure that they behave properly according to the regulations that we have in place. And we're taking additional steps to make sure that they don't rope in students to student loans that they're unaware they're actually signing up for and they have no hopes of paying back.

All that to say, Madam Speaker, that we share the member opposite's concern for the number of student loans that we're writing off. I'm pleased that I have had the opportunity to make everyone aware that the vast majority of those student loans that are being written off are for students who have received programs from private career colleges that were told that they would get high-paying jobs and ended up not being able to and were sold a bill of goods that turned out not to be true. Our government is taking action to protect those students.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill? Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to this bill on the main bill. I did have the opportunity to speak to the amendment, fairly early on, that was brought by members of the opposition and speak to some of the elements there, some concerns they'd raised around consultation and some other pieces here.

I'm very pleased to see that in the time since, though I haven't been able to be here for some of the other debate, they've shifted their position and they have come around to supporting this bill. It's fantastic to see. I'm glad to hear that they are echoing in this House the concerns of students, recognizing the challenges that they face both in the job market and in terms of affordability. I think it's fantastic that we should see a unanimous vote in this House to support this legislation so that we can support students in our province.

I'd like to begin by noting a quote from the president of one of the universities here in my constituency, Deborah Saucier, the president of MacEwan University, someone I've had the chance to start to get to know. I've really appreciated the progressive vision she's brought to MacEwan University, both in terms of outreach to the community and highly valuing the voice of students. She says:

The transformative experiences students take away from Alberta's post-secondary institutions fundamentally change them in ways that benefit not only those students, but also shape our province's social and economic future. It's why we support the government's commitment to making it possible for more Albertans to access – and be able to afford – a quality education.

That is the core of why we have this legislation here today, Madam Speaker. We are here to ensure that more Albertans can access and be able to afford a quality education. I'm incredibly happy that one of the presidents of one of the universities in my constituency agrees with that and supports this legislation as a step in that direction.

As I noted in my previous remarks, Madam Speaker, there has been robust consultation that went into this bill with the presidents of universities, with boards of governors, with the staff, with students. And, indeed, members across the aisle have acknowledged, now that they've had their meetings with students, they've spoken with them, that they have heard that this indeed is what students are asking for.

I'm very pleased to see a number of things within this legislation. Certainly, we've had quite a bit of discussion so far about the tuition cap, and that has been a very important piece of what students have been asking for. So I'm very pleased to see that piece here.

I'm also very happy to see the changes in governance, which some other members have addressed, now allowing there to be two student representatives on all boards of governors within the province. Madam Speaker, I can tell you that for MacEwan University, for NorQuest College, and for other, smaller institutions that I have the pleasure of representing, the honour of representing, this has been a real concern for students. It's a lot of work for a single student on a board of governors to represent all of the concerns of their entire student body. It can be a real challenge for them sometimes at those meetings, then, to have the sole responsibility of making those voices heard. Now having that opportunity for there to be two students at that table to raise those voices, to provide each other with support, and to provide that additional voice at the table, I think that's a very important step, and I deeply appreciate that the minister has taken action on that.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, these are things I heard from these student representatives within my first six months in office. I think it was in the summer of 2015 that I first met with representatives of the students' association at Grant MacEwan – or at MacEwan University. Pardon me; I sometimes revert to the old name. They raised that particular concern around governance, they raised the concern around tuition, and they raised the concern around wanting MacEwan University to have the opportunity to be classified in a different place within the sector model in the province. Those were some of the initial asks, and here we are three and a half years later. We finally have the opportunity to bring this forward.

Now, some members have said that it's taken too long for this bill to come forward. At the same time, members have said that there hasn't been enough consultation. I'm not quite sure how they square that circle, Madam Speaker. But what I would say is that I think it was important that the minister took the time he took to sit down and have these discussions with students. This is one of the things our government does. We plan for the long term. We give careful thought to how we're going to move forward in terms of these complex situations. [interjection] The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo seems to find this amusing. I'll tell you that I didn't find his comments terribly amusing earlier, but I'll attempt to refrain from the kind of condescension I often hear from that member.

The reality is, Madam Speaker, that the members opposite have talked about their concerns around certainty, how postsecondary institutions are going to be able to move forward, but in the history of Conservative governments in this province with postsecondary institutions, stability and certainty have been the farthest things from that relationship. Every time the price of oil would drop, Conservative governments would make cuts. Institutions wouldn't know by how much. They didn't know what their budget was going to be from one year to the next. Conservative governments would go on spending sprees when the price of oil was high, and then they would make cuts, never predictable from one year to the next. What could postsecondary institutions do but double down on the tools that they had at their disposal that they could trust: tuition, noninstructional fees, other things that went directly on the backs of students. For years Conservative governments abdicated their responsibility to provide stability to the postsecondary education system and left that on the backs of Alberta students.

By contrast, Madam Speaker, over the last three and a half years we have provided 2 per cent increases year over year; stable, predictable funding that allowed our institutions to plan, that allowed them to move forward, that allowed them to adapt to increasing costs. We recognize those exist as student numbers increase, as other pressures increase. That is the first time in many, many years that they have had that kind of stability and certainty.

They speak about capital costs, Madam Speaker, and speak about the concerns they have over the additional pressures that universities and institutions face as they continue to have to deal with maintenance, as they continue to look at issues around building and how they move forward. Well, our government has made heavy investment into the maintenance renewal fund for postsecondary institutions. In fact, we have drastically increased funding to address the massive infrastructure deficit that was left behind by previous Conservative governments, because, again, the tradition in this province was to tie all of our public services to the price of oil. There was no long-term plan. There was no further thought given than to the next election.

Our postsecondary institutions, and therefore what was downloaded to students from there, were left to deal with the aftermath. Conservative governments, in order to try to maintain a sense of prudence but, again, not thinking in the long term, skimmed on infrastructure and providing universities, colleges, our postsecondary institutions with the dollars they needed to be able to keep up the infrastructure they had, let alone go on to build.

Indeed, shortly after I was elected, again, one of the first conversations I had with the board of governors and the president of NorQuest College was around concerns over a cut that had been made by the previous Conservative government for the Singhmar Centre for Learning. They were short millions of dollars that had been promised to them and that the Conservative government had suddenly decided they were not going to bring forward. I had conversations with our Minister of Advanced Education, with our Minister of Infrastructure, and I'm pleased to say, Madam Speaker, that our government stepped forward and we turned that around. We provided them with that additional funding so that they could complete that centre, open it, and now have it there serving students in my constituency.

This is the record up until now. When members opposite criticize our government and this piece of legislation around their concerns about predictability and stability, I can't say that I can take that very seriously. Now, the fact, Madam Speaker, again, is that we recognize the complexity of the system we are dealing with in the province of Alberta. We recognize that there are many pressures on students. Members opposite have spoken about the carbon tax and the pressure on postsecondary institutions. Again, we have worked with these institutions. We have provided them with support so that they can move forward and develop more energy efficient infrastructure. Indeed, again, by actually addressing the maintenance deferral, we're helping them do precisely that. As you upgrade older buildings, they become more energy efficient, therefore reducing the actual energy costs.

Our government retains the ability to walk and chew gum at the same time. We can move forward on addressing the larger issue of climate change in partnership with our postsecondary institutions, in partnership with business, nonprofits, all Albertans, frankly, while still also addressing other issues that are on the table here. As I have made clear, Madam Speaker, our government has not simply left postsecondary institutions hanging. We have worked with them on a number of fronts to help address their costs, their cost pressures so that ultimately we can help them help students, which all members in this House have so far said that they absolutely agree with. That's why I'm pleased to stand and support this legislation, which I truly believe is going to make life better for students and, as a result, for all Albertans, because as Ms Saucier, the president of MacEwan University, noted: doing this for students, providing them with this opportunity, provides a net benefit to our province as a whole. Again, that is about investment and long-term planning.

Now, I recognize that members opposite may not agree with all the directions we choose to take in how we plan for the long term, and I recognize that members across the way have raised, you know, some other concerns that we also certainly agree on. The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka spoke about the concerns that he had around tuition getting more expensive, and certainly all members have agreed with that here, that jobs don't pay enough for students to be able to earn enough over the summer to be able to pay for the full school year. Indeed. That was one of the first things I noted when I had my first opportunity to rise and speak to this bill.

There have been comments and discussion around the size and number of student loans as they're ballooning, yet, Madam Speaker, I have not heard the members opposite offer any solution on this. They have said that they agree with capping tuition. That's a good step. That's a good first step. That addresses one piece here. But I have yet to hear them offer any solution to any of the other challenges that our students are facing here. Wanting to take the minimum wage and roll that back now for youth: that's not going to help them be able to earn more in a summer to be able to afford postsecondary tuition.

I am proud to say – and indeed I spoke with representatives from CAUS yesterday – that our government brought back the STEP program to keep students employed in this province and help them not only be able to earn a better wage in the summer but also to be able to work in degree-relevant fields, and indeed that's what the students from CAUS were talking to me about.

They are incredibly thankful that our government brought that program back, but what they would like to see now is that program targeted in a way that it helps provide students with degree-relevant experience. They appreciate the fact that they can get a job with a landscaper or with another business who applies to the STEP program, but they would love to see far more accounting firms or, say, organizations or nonprofits that are offering opportunities to get experience in social work or engineering firms or others stepping up to take advantage of that to provide students with the opportunity to get that kind of employment.

Frankly, Madam Speaker, the only kinds of solutions I've heard from the members opposite always involve just simply cutting taxes. They believe that if we simply cut more taxes and leave more money with top earners in the province, that will magically somehow trickle down. That hasn't been the case. There is no jurisdiction that I've seen where they have made those kinds of tax cuts and it has benefited their postsecondary institutions. We've seen skyrocketing tuition across many parts of the United States and in many other places. The fact is that this is a public good. This is a public value. It requires a public investment.

There's work that we're going to need to do in a lot of other fields, absolutely. We have more work to do to continue to build Alberta's economy back up. It's come a long way since 2015, and indeed we are continuing to lead in Canada, but there are still many, many people that we need to work to support, and I recognize that students and youth remain among them. But there are better ways we can do that than simply cutting taxes for the top 1 per cent in the province, giving that $700 million tax break.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure listening to the Member for Edmonton-Centre talking on any topic, especially one that's close to his heart in the middle of his constituency, where so many educational institutions reside.

It struck me while listening to the Member for Edmonton-Centre that the debates we often have in this House are not necessarily debates couched in terms of right or left on the political spectrum, but they are, really, debates about living in the past or embracing the future: the future of high-tech jobs, for example, that are going to be needed in this province to allow the economy to move forward in our energy and agricultural sectors, the future of our innovation economy, that's going to be necessary in order for our students who are now graduating to be employed.

I'd like the member to maybe wax a little bit more on this theme about living in the past versus embracing the future by talking about how granting accessibility and affordability to quality education continues our pattern here in Alberta of fighting to support Alberta families and, really, with concrete measures, putting money in their pockets, serious money in their pockets, serious savings that they can use to invest in their family or in other ways that they so choose and how the value of a postsecondary education not only helps those individual families but also moves ourselves forward as we look towards a new, technologically advanced economy that is going to be requiring a much higher level of expertise from our students and that we need to make sure we embrace the future in getting those students prepared for the new economy that's emerging and that we take advantage of all the opportunities that we as a government can do to make sure that the workforce, the brainpower of this province is employed to best advantage, to take every opportunity that we can to grow our export markets and technological capacities so that we look forward towards the future with great excitement and know that there's no market in the world that we can't touch and that there's no technology that we can't be a leader in in this province. I'd like to hear a little bit more from the member about those topics.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the comments from my colleague from Edmonton-McClung. Yeah, I would love to touch on that a bit. You know, one of the big things over this last year that's really been of value to me, again, another great decision, I think, involving the Minister of Advanced Education, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, and some others, has been our government's decision to create new postsecondary spaces in the province for people in technological fields. Now, members opposite have spoken about the need to help ensure that students are getting education in fields that are going to help them find work. Indeed, I talked to start-up companies here in my constituency that have come up through Startup Edmonton, TEC Edmonton, that are working in the many co-working spaces we have here who are part of that new economy, and they tell me that they are having a challenge finding people with the skill set and the knowledge that they need in digital technology and computer coding and some of these other fields.

These are big opportunities that our government has invested in through the Alberta investor tax credit, through the new screen-based industries tax credit. These are things that are going to grow and move our economy forward. Indeed, keeping that postsecondary education affordable and accessible is incredibly important. I'm very pleased that our government is making that investment to work, again in partnership and collaboration with our postsecondary institutions, who are themselves happy to open this up, to provide that opportunity.

I would also note that in this legislation we are limiting fees and helping to control costs for apprenticeships. We have talked in this House – indeed, the leader of the loyal opposition has expressed it himself in a few different venues – about the importance of giving more high school students opportunities to access vocational trades. I'm very happy to have programs at St. Joseph Catholic high school here, at Centre High here in my constituency, where they do exactly that. Those students get the opportunity to begin to work towards getting certification in the trade, begin to work towards getting their apprenticeship while they are still in high school. By keeping tuition and these costs lower and more affordable, we make it easier for those students to be able to move into that postsecondary realm, complete that work, and get to work sooner. Not only that, Madam Speaker; they have experience, which then also opens up the opportunities for them to gain employment more quickly.

I'm proud of the work that our government has done on this and many issues. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and Happy Diwali. Actually, today is the Deepavali. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was reminding me this morning to greet Diwali to everyone. Last night he himself, the members for Grande Prairie-Smoky, Chestermere-Rocky View, Calgary-Lougheed, and Edmonton-Mill Woods were all there celebrating with a few thousand Hindus and Sikhs from Edmonton at a temple. Diwali is all about, you know, light triumphing over darkness and good triumphing over evil, but also that light signifies the purity and the power. That's why on this occasion I would wish everyone Happy Diwali and that the light in each of our souls shines and brightens others' lives.

This bill that we're talking about today, Madam Speaker: in the spirit of Diwali, I'm going to personalize and customize. I'm very moved hearing the debates on both sides of the aisle here, particularly from the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. He said that he had all the qualifications, smarts, but because he didn't have the degree, that would have taken him to the next levels of employment, he was disappointed. We don't want other kids in this province to lose the opportunities due to lack of education. That's why our caucus is very happy to support this bill. Although my neighbour and good friend from Calgary-Hawkwood thought that we were not supporting it, actually we are supporting it. If there is any good legislation brought forward by the government, we are always there to support it. But, at the same time, as the Official Opposition it's our job to talk about how we can make it better. There is always hope for improvement.

In this bill we talk about making tuition affordable, which is a great thing. We also talk about: when the students take student loans, how do they pay it back? Right? If the province is waiving loans, are we able to afford it? In most of the cases in the cultural communities – I mentioned quite clearly South Asian nations – the parents pay for kids' tuition fees. As a cultural practice they don't like their kids to borrow money and take student loans. They don't want them to be indebted. They don't want to put them in debt. So are the parents able to pay back for their kids' education? That's the thing. So we have to look at the big picture.

I know that the Member for Edmonton-Centre talked very passionately about the tax cuts, but he's only talking selectively about $700 million given to the rich people, which is not true, because by cutting taxes, actually you are attracting more investment. That will provide opportunity for the students to get jobs. The Minister of Advanced Education said that it's not true that students who graduated from postsecondary are not finding jobs. It is true; they are not finding jobs. I can tell you from my own experience. My son's classmates, after they graduated, were not able to find employment, so they're actually trying to apply for a master's, thinking that in the future, after they finish their master's degree in two years, the market might improve and give them opportunities. I heard from many people in Calgary-Foothills coming to my office telling me that their kids are not able to find economic opportunities here, that that's why they had to extend their education. That is true. Whether you agree with it or not, it is a fact.

Madam Speaker, my colleague from Calgary-Hawkwood also said that members on this side of the aisle are out of touch, that they don't have the same issues that regular Albertans face or something like that. It's not true. I'm a parent. I'm an engineer, and my wife is an architect, so as parents we wanted our kid to have a better economic opportunity. That's why we came here. He actually went to U of C. My son got his first degree in the biomedical sciences honours program. He applied to med school in Calgary. He was interviewed twice, but they didn't offer him the seat. At that time I was quite busy fighting for my Calgary-Foothills nomination in the by-election. I didn't pay much attention to what was going on. After his second interview with the Calgary med school, the second time they didn't offer him the seat, he chose to apply to overseas schools. The fee there is ridiculously high for foreign students. He is paying, just in tuition fees alone, $80,000 and, on top of it, living expenses like boarding and travelling and all. Each year he is spending more than $110,000.

That was the time when I took the pay cut. When I got elected to this position, I had to take a huge pay cut. But because of the cultural practice I mentioned to you – I was busy, and he was discussing it with his mother. His mother promised him: "Don't worry about it. Go ahead. We'll pay for it." Right? So we said that we'll pay for it, but I don't want him to take it easy. He should have some responsibility, and he should go and get some loans. He applied for a loan. Apparently, he got some federal loan, some provincial loan. He will get about $150,000 out of that half a million he's going to spend on his four years of med school.

So why I'm saying that is: we know the issues. As a parent I know. I'm paying. I'm paying for it. Don't assume, like, that your opponents are heartless or that they're not regular Albertans. We are regular Albertans. It's our job to debate with you and improve your bills. And the same thing: if we get the honour to be in government next year and some of you are on the opposition benches, you'll do the same thing because that's what you'll be elected to do.

Anyway, coming back to this bill, Madam Speaker, having the tuition guarantee, particularly for foreign students, is a great thing. Like my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek said, all those foreign students, when they come here, get better education, and then they become good ambassadors, and if they choose to stay back here and become citizens of Canada, they will add to the skilled workforce. That's why recently, when I and the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake accompanied our leader on the trip to India, we met with many stakeholders overseas, including some of the people involved in postsecondary education. What they're looking for is predictability, particularly with the situation with the visas in the United States. President Trump has tightened H-1Bs and student visas and all.

Most of the students from South Asia used to go to the U.S. as students. Once they got their MSc and other masters' degrees, then they went to Silicon Valley, and then they did a start-up. Many of them became entrepreneurs, and that's how they contributed to the booming U.S. economy. If we could bring some of them here and retain them here, they'll be good contributors to our economic growth here. That's why I like that aspect of this bill, giving some predictability and guarantee for foreign students and also for our local students.

Also, I have an issue with the Minister of Advanced Education when he was slamming private schools. All of them are not that bad for the reasons I mentioned to you, like my own kid and even myself, actually. Although I was in the public system till grade 12, the engineering school I went to was privately managed by a trust, and they had a world-class institute. I got the benefit of studying in that school. I mean, their motto was to educate students and help them. All the private schools probably did. Maybe some – I mean, there are always some issues with educational institutes, but all private schools are not bad. If that is your opinion, I would want you to reconsider what you said.

Then coming back to what the Member for Edmonton-Centre said about the overall economy, it's two ideas here. In your case you're saying: "Okay. We won't reduce the taxes, but we keep on adding layers of regulatory burden. We'll bring in bills like the carbon tax or a cap on emissions" and all that. Those policies are making the bad situation worse. We don't blame you for the world oil price, but then your government, the NDP government, made the bad situation worse. That's why the companies and the jobs are fleeing. The investments are fleeing Alberta. That, I think, you have to acknowledge at some point rather than saying that we don't have any ideas, that we are not offering solutions.

We are offering solutions. We are opposing the carbon tax. We said that we'll repeal it, and we gave you the reasons. We said that why we want to reduce taxes is because you increased taxes, but your revenue has gone down. Those numbers are there for you to look at. Your government revenue has gone down even though you increased taxes.

When we reduce the taxes, we believe all those investments will come back. That will create jobs for these postsecondary graduates. That's our idea. That's what we're going to campaign on in the next election and let the people decide. They'll have options to choose between the NDP platform and the UCP platform. Also, this week, during the QP when the Leader of the Opposition asked about those economic issues, the Premier threatened: oh, those youth will vote. Remember that? Now I'm saying that all those youth, when they graduate, don't have economic opportunities, employment opportunities, and if their parents are at home not working, they will remember that, too. The Premier also should realize that all those unemployed 150,000 or 180,000 Albertans: they too vote. They'll remember that. They'll look at both platforms, and they'll choose which platform fits better for their economic prosperity.

For us, we had to create wealth first to be able to pay back our way with the student loans. First, we had to create the wealth. That's the difference in the ideas between the NDP and UCP. Our thought process is: we had to first create the wealth so we can distribute it. In your case, you're taking on debt. A $96 billion debt: that's what your budget said. If you get the opportunity to be in government for a second term, in 2022 you'll balance the budget, but till then you said that you'll have a $96 billion debt. Somebody has to pay it back. Who will pay it back? If people are not working, if they're not paying taxes, how will we pay back that debt? That's something we have to think about, Madam Speaker.

Also, when some of our members said that we won't trust the government about consultations, there is a reason, like, previous bills like Bill 6. Although I'm from Calgary, Madam Speaker, I travel all across Alberta . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been enjoyable to listen to my hon. colleague here. I wanted to say that a while back I had read an article about a one-cylinder engine. It could go two speeds, zero or a hundred. It was phenomenal, but it could only do two things, you know, zero or a hundred. Unfortunately, what I've heard here today, especially from Calgary-Hawwood, is absolute vitriol, overheated rhetoric about this issue when in reality we have said – right from the beginning we've talked very positive. We've talked about some of the negative things about this bill, but we talked very positively about the bill. For him to be able to get it so wrong, that we were not in favour of this bill, just goes to show that he needs to think about maybe some kind of a middle, that the people on this side are actually in favour of some of the good policies that are being brought forward on the other side.

What I liked about my hon. colleague is that he got up, he spoke about some of his concerns, he did it in a measured response that I felt was respect, showed respect for this House and respect for his colleagues even in speaking about the Member for Calgary-Hawwood. Just the way that he spoke about this was – you know, he said: my friend from Calgary-Hawwood. This is the kind of respect and this is the kind of dialogue that we should be having in this House, Madam Speaker, and one that I actually really respect.

Now, the member that just spoke has a lot of experience. He has a lot of education. He has seen the benefits of an advanced education. He has seen the benefits of being able to help his children get advanced education. He's speaking from an experienced position.

I have two children right now that are in school, that are going to university, and I know how hard they work, Madam Speaker, to be able to have ownership of this experience. Now, yes, their mom and dad can help them. But they choose, they want to have ownership. They want to be able to say: "You know what? I earned it myself. I'm the one who actually got out there, and I worked hard during the summertime. I made some sacrifices. I learned some money management. I did the things that actually made me be successful." They have ownership of it. You know, you have to take your hat off to these people, to these kids, to these young Albertans that are really working hard.

Now, that's why you've seen from this side of the House a lot of support for this bill. We've tried to show a balance. We've tried to show that there is a balance between what is happening with the costs of universities – when you cap the tuition rates in perpetuity, it's not a sustainable model, Madam Speaker. So I applaud the government for addressing that issue. I applaud them for recognizing that it is not sustainable. I've heard members from the opposite side say that it's not a sustainable model, and I applaud them for doing that.

However, the overheated rhetoric that we heard, that the Conservative governments in the past have only raised rates and they've only caused problems for the universities, only caused problems – in fact, I think it was his "always." The Member for Edmonton-Centre said: always. I just thought: okay; well, show us the evidence that shows that the Conservatives and the past governments have always caused problems for the universities.

Again, it's this overheated rhetoric, Madam Speaker, that, in my opinion, is not helpful to the debate.

The debate we're trying to have is: is this a good piece of legislation? Is it something that's actually going to be good for students and for universities so that it's sustainable? If there can be some better things added to it, then that's our responsibility. It's not only our responsibility but backbenchers on the government side's responsibility to try to make it better. This is what we're trying to do, yet unfortunately what a lot of the discussion that we've seen here, Madam Speaker, from members opposite is – and again I go back to Calgary-Hawwood – is just absolute, over-the-top rhetoric and a fight against the approach . . .

Mr. Feehan: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we have a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Feehan: Madam Speaker, we've had this addressed already in this House today, that the point of 29(2)(a) is to address the previous speaker and not to reiterate everything that has been happening in the House for the morning. I'd like to see the speaker focus on the previous speaker, to which he is supposed to be addressing his comments, and not use it as an opportunity to review.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the hon. minister for those comments. I can assure you that my hon. colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner was about to get to the point.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this is already the second time this morning that this has come up, so I would just really caution you. The intent of 29(2)(a) is to question the previous speaker, make comments on it, but it's also the intent to have a bit of a dialogue. I think we're tending to lose sight of that. I do give a lot of leeway on this, but I think it would be a far more productive conversation if we tried to encourage more back-and-forth dialogue with it and used it as it's intended, you know, referring to the previous speaker.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: I will allow you to continue. You've only got five seconds left, but try to stay focused.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm answering his 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Panda: So . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Five seconds goes very quickly.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak to third reading on Bill 19. I will say from the outset that I will support this bill in third reading, but I would like to expand a little upon some of the comments that I made during committee debate on this.

They have to do with, actually, a word that was just spoken here in the House, and it's a word that I believe in very strongly. The word is “balance.” I think that my belief in balance comes partly from my veterinary background. As veterinarians, as human physicians, for that matter, as biologists we learn that systems, animal and human systems, act in balance and that there are a number of different things within those systems that provide checks and balances to make sure that things don’t go out of whack.

I’ll give you an example. Blood sugar is governed largely by two hormones, insulin and glucagon. Thanks to the interplay of those two hormones, which is truly an amazing thing, blood sugar is maintained within a relatively normal range in the vast majority of healthy people and healthy animals. It’s when one of those hormones goes out of balance that we see disease issues. As we know, insulin, which was discovered some 97 years ago thanks to the work of Dr. Frederick Banting, is the hormone that’s missing from that balance.

But balance is not easy, and balance, for example, when we are doing government policy is not easy. Right now there is a debate – and it’s a difficult debate – between the rights of persons wishing to express their religious beliefs and the rights of patients who wish to access specific health services that have been deemed to be necessary and legal. There’s a balance there, and it’s a difficult one to balance off, but finding that balance is truly critical.

You know, even just this week we learned, for those of us who didn’t already know, that there is a balance between the autonomy and independence of MLAs and iron-fisted caucus discipline. There’s a balance, and striking that correct balance can be difficult.

Well, in the postsecondary sector, from my discussions with both leaders in the postsecondary sector and students – clearly, this bill addresses one side of the lever, and it’s the side of the lever of accessibility and affordability. We know that that is something that is vitally important to this minister and this government and, for that matter, all members of this Legislature. Many, many of us have had personal experience attending university, have had children or other relatives attend university, and affordability and accessibility are very important. We do not want to ever have a situation where capable Albertans who wish to attend a postsecondary institution are unable to because it is not affordable or accessible. To address that side of the equation is a good thing, and Bill 19 does.

The concern that I have – and I raised this in debate in committee – is that the other side is the sustainability and the quality of postsecondary education. That is something that is held within the purview of the leaders of the postsecondary sector. Many of them have told me that they have grave concerns about how this might impact that balance. Indeed, if the quality of postsecondary education that is offered at our institutions in Alberta declines because those institutions cannot provide the same quality of programs, well, Madam Speaker, that’s a concern. Then it won’t matter that the education is accessible and affordable. You could make it as cheap as you like. You could make that price zero, but if the quality of the education has suffered, then we’ve accomplished nothing. In fact, the lever or the teeter-totter, whatever you want to call it, has broken on the fulcrum, and both sides are now sitting at rock bottom.

So I think it’s vitally important that now that affordability and accessibility have been addressed – and in my conversations with some of the student leadership I said: “I think, you know, you can spend some time celebrating this victory that you’ve won, but your work is not over. Now you need to address working alongside the leadership in the universities. You need to work alongside them to ensure the sustainability and the quality of that education that is now, hopefully, more affordable and accessible.” That’s the first thing that I wanted to talk about in my address on third reading.

The second area that I wanted to talk about is to offer my colleague the hon. Minister of Advanced Education some advice. We learned yesterday that, in his own words, he is “a humble and deeply reflective person, dedicated to continual improvement.” I’m quoting his words here. As we should all be dedicated to continual improvement, then as someone who has had the experience of sitting in cabinet and being in government and making some of those difficult decisions that required balance, and even more so, Madam Speaker, because both the minister and I belong to that small group of people – yes, we are accordionists. The accordion: an instrument that is despised and rejected perhaps only more by the bagpipes. We both play the accordion, so we are both men of sorrows and acquainted with grief, to paraphrase from the prophet Isaiah.

Madam Speaker, when the minister took his oath of office – and I took the same oath some years ago – there is a one-page oath for the ministry that you are moving into, and there is a four-page oath that you take when you become a member of Executive Council. That’s a big responsibility, and if you read through the words of the oath of Executive Council, you will find an indication of expected behaviours, expected deportment, expected now that you are a cabinet minister, now that you are a member of Executive Council, expectations that you have.

I must say that with this minister – and I’m not alone in this. Certainly, I have, you know, many people in the postsecondary sector who feel the same way, but goodness knows they don’t want to be attributed. I’ve talked to many people who are disappointed in the deportment of this minister, this minister who just a few months ago accused one of the most respected university leaders not just in the province but in Canada of lining his pockets, a shocking and completely uncalled-for attack upon someone whose reputation, I can assure you, is much longer and much stronger than the current minister’s. We saw it earlier in debate on this bill, when the minister made a comment about “the son of a rich farmer” in attempting to make his point. Well, Madam Speaker, that’s not what people expect of cabinet ministers.

So if the minister is indeed a humble person, dedicated to continual improvement and deeply reflective, I’m going to suggest that he reflect on this. Albertans, especially those with involvement in the postsecondary sector, including the students that he was so happy to be photographed with and, you know, enjoying himself with during the course of the announcement on this bill, expect their cabinet minister to behave like a cabinet minister and not a frat boy at a kegger.

Madam Speaker, that is my word of advice to this minister.

Mr. Feehan: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Relevance
Insulting Language

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise on a point of order under Standing Order 23(b) as well as under 23(h), (i), and (j). The first point of order, under 23(b), is that a member speaking in the House needs to speak to matters that are relevant to the question at hand, and that is the bill. This speaker is clearly not speaking to the matters at hand or the question under discussion. I would like to see him discontinue his present course of comment and move back to the bill.

Secondly, the comments being made are clearly intended to impute motives to a member in the House and are essentially insulting language at this point to the member of whom he's speaking and are not relevant to the concerns that we are talking about this morning. Using this as an opportunity merely to take a slam at another member seems to be a violation of at least two sections of Standing Order 23.

Thank you.

11:20

The Deputy Speaker: Do you wish to respond to the point of order, hon. member?

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, I would like to respond. First, to the first point on 23(b), I can assure the hon. Deputy Government House Leader that commentary with regard to the department of the minister specifically during the introduction of this bill is entirely relevant to the bill. We've had lots of discussion in this House. We've had discussion about the carbon tax, and we've had discussion about a wide variety of other things from members on both sides of the House that had, at best, a tangential relationship with the bill at hand. I was talking specifically to the bill at hand. Now, if you wanted to point of order me when I was talking about insulin and glucagon, okay. Fine. But a point of order here? This is not a point of order under 23(b).

As for 23(h), (i), and (j), Madam Speaker, I chose those words carefully. I said: behaving like a frat boy at a kegger. I didn't suggest that that was what the member was doing. I was saying that the preference of people was that their ministers behave like cabinet ministers. As far as that goes, I was not imputing motives. I was not intending to attack the character of this minister. I was simply offering this minister some advice.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to comment on the point of order? Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to speak to the point of order, in particular 23(h), (i), and (j). I read: "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." The Minister of Advanced Education over the course of this entire sitting has continually displayed behaviour that is unbecoming of a minister of the Crown. That is not imputing false or unavowed motives in any way, shape, or form but, in fact, in a roundabout way generally explains the behaviour that continuously comes from this minister in this House.

In regard to 23(b), I would speak to that matter as well. The way in which the minister has spoken to other members in this House during the course of this debate, being the minister and the mover of this bill – absolutely, one has to do with the other, Madam Speaker. Perhaps if the minister or the government is offended by the way in which the minister does offend members of this House, the government members would encourage their minister to improve his attitude towards opposition members in this House.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have to say that I was a little concerned myself with the use of that language under "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," because it certainly does have that effect when we use those types of words. I will remind the House that the minister did withdraw and apologize for the statements that he made previously on this.

Usually we move on. We're here to debate the bill; we're not here to debate individuals' behaviour or conduct. I would caution the member. Certainly, you have the experience in this House to know what is and is not appropriate. I would encourage you to use language that is not going to create disorder and to confine your remarks to the bill.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I do appreciate that, and in order to achieve what you're asking us to do, I will withdraw that comment, and I will sincerely apologize to the minister and to the House for having used that if that is your ruling. That is just fine.

Debate Continued

Dr. Starke: What I will say, Madam Speaker, then, by way of concluding my remarks: I have concerns about this bill though I will support it. I have concerns about our postsecondary sector. I mentioned during committee debate that Alberta has the lowest level of postsecondary participation anywhere in Canada. The lowest level. In order to just get to a point where we're at the Canadian average and to allow for population growth, which in Alberta has always been robust, we need 90,000 additional spaces in the postsecondary sector. That's going to cost some money.

My own opinion is that money spent on education and advanced education is money well spent. I will point out to the House – and most people probably don't remember this – that one of Peter Lougheed's base tenets was that even in difficult times, if you have to cut everything else, preserve education. That was Peter Lougheed that said that.

As a Progressive Conservative I note that I have been moved progressively to the right, which, I can assure you, many people have tried with all the tenacity of a border collie trying to herd that last lost sheep into the sheepfold. Madam Speaker, I can assure you that as a Progressive Conservative, the assurance that education be accessible, that it be affordable, that it be sustainable, and that our postsecondary institutions can always provide a high quality is something that I think is in all Albertans' interest. This is a nonpartisan issue.

As I said, I'm in support of Bill 19. I would like to thank the minister and his staff for having done the work on this. I, frankly, disagreed with the notion that there wasn't enough consultation and that we needed to send it to committee. I felt that the consultation on this was long standing. He commented to me when I mentioned about the fullness of time – Minister, you made a crack during your opening remarks on second reading. You know what? That's fine; I'm okay with that. I'm in the House and can quite easily absorb those things. I've had worse, let me tell you.

Madam Speaker, I am in favour of Bill 19. I hope that all members vote in favour of it, but I also hope that not just the minister but subsequent ministers and subsequent governments act to guard that balance, that balance between affordability and accessibility, and sustainability and quality, and not only do that but make the lever, make the teeter-totter even bigger so that we can accommodate more students so that more Albertans can get a higher education, because I think that is good for our economy and it's good for our society.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), the hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Perhaps I'm rising to take the bait. I'm not sure. I'm pleased to offer a few comments to some of the comments made by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. For the member's knowledge, my mother is a keen observer of the proceedings here at the Legislature. I would have to say that, after me, her favourite speaker in the House is the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I just say that he has created probably some significant emotional pain and cognitive dissonance for my mother because now she's pitted between her two favourite speakers here as to whom to believe. I am not entirely sure that my mother will take my side in this matter. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has put me in the uncomfortable position of having to explain to my mother why her second-favourite speaker has said what he did.

In the spirit of accordion player solidarity, I will kindly take the advice of the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster as to deportment. Certainly, we're all guilty of letting our emotions get the best of us in this House. I meant what I said when I said that I am a deeply reflective and humble person, dedicated to continual improvement, and I will take the member's advice.

I did want to take issue, though, with one of the comments that he did say. He said that he adopted Peter Lougheed's vision of funding education above all else, which is interesting, Madam Speaker. Forgive me; I don't recall if the member was in cabinet at the time. Certainly, he was a member of the House and the government caucus at the time that the government of the day cut funding for advanced education by 7 per cent.

Certainly, I appreciate the advice that the former minister, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, has given. It's unfortunate that his government didn't live by that creed that Peter Lougheed set out when given the opportunity to. Those 7 per cent cuts in budgets had a significant effect on the quality of education and the affordability and accessibility of education in the province of Alberta, and that certainly contributed to the downfall of the government of the time. They didn't support services.

The interesting thing, though, Madam Speaker, is that when his caucus, the PC caucus, existed as more than one member, they did release a shadow budget. He signed off on it. They proposed a cut of an additional $400 million, give or take, to the Advanced Education budget of the day, which represents about 20 per cent of the operating grants that we give to universities and colleges across the province. So it is very interesting to me that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster seems to be a follower of Peter Lougheed's valuation of education, yet when given the chance to bring a budget, he voted for a budget that cut Advanced Education by 7 per cent. And he didn't learn from that lesson. His caucus presented a shadow budget that proposed an even bigger cut to Advanced Education, possibly because he felt that maybe the 7 per cent cut in 2013 wasn't big enough, didn't go far enough.

You know, I appreciate the member's comments on my deportment. I would just ask that the member do me the return favour of actually acting out what he says he believes in. If he believes in the value of education, then he should have voted to support it through the budget. He should have voted for our budget, which supported education. He shouldn't have been a member of a caucus that prepared a shadow budget that proposed a 20 per cent cut in the operating grants of universities and colleges.

With that, Madam Speaker, with that helpful bit of advice to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, I will take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today in support of Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. First off, I would like to thank the Minister of Advanced Education for bringing this forward. Over the last three and a half years I've had the opportunity to speak to many of the student groups who have advocated for the very things that are within this bill, and I think it's important to finally see this moving forward.

Of course, in the 2015 election there was an opportunity for our party, the NDP, to put forward a platform which, I believe, included tuition freezes if I'm correct and for the governing party at that time, the Progressive Conservatives, to put forward a budget that included market modifiers or the continuation of those. I think that was one of the reasons why we are here today on this side of the House and the other party, while essentially dissolved as the Conservatives, are on that side of the House.

I will just start off by saying that, of course, in 2015 our government committed to stable and predictable funding along with the tuition freeze in our platform. As we are all aware, this freeze has been put in place from the 2014-2015 year, extended into the 2018-2019 academic year.

This bill represents the conclusion of years of hard work by this minister and this government, meeting both with the student associations and students that are outside of those associations as well as the administration of these institutions. Of course, Bill 19 proposes a number of updates to the Post-secondary Learning Act that will set our province's postsecondary learning system up for continued success; first of all, tying tuition to the CPI, which was one of the main issues that the student associations brought forward to us, starting in 2015. I'm very proud to see that moving forward. We're also updating the act to give the Minister of Advanced Education the authority to order future tuition freezes, which is very important as well.

I think it's very important that we continue to see the cost of postsecondary education as affordable. I think back to my own life. While I didn't go to university, I first attended NAIT for radio/television broadcasting. Following that, I went back to work towards my journeyman ticket, which I didn't get before becoming elected, but I did some apprenticeship training there as an electrician. While I was able to afford both of those programs, in the instance of the apprenticeship training I was actually able to be reimbursed by AIT, I believe it was, which was wonderful. But I am happy to see that we're moving forward with moves to make that more affordable or capping the tuition as well.

When I think back to my own life, I think I've mentioned once in the House before that my mother, the most inspirational woman in my life, was 14 years old when she had me. I mean, there's a lot that comes with having a child that young. I can't imagine even having a child at my age, 26 now. She went on to university. She didn't miss any school. She said: you know, I want to make sure that he has the best life that he can have. So she went on, finished – well, it was in Saskatchewan, so they don't have junior high – elementary school, went on to high school, and then went to the U of S to gain a sociology degree.

Now, she is very happy that she was able to do that, but she still lives with the ramifications of having to take on a student loan. I mean, not only was she having to pay her own way through school; she was a single mother. She didn't have any support, or very little, from other family members. Honestly, if anything, she was supporting other family members other than myself. So she took on a student loan, not only having to pay for school but having to support a child, and, as I said, still lives with the ramifications of that today. I mean, this is not something – you know, not everyone goes to school and is able to find employment in the industry that they are working towards.

With that being said, I mean, we hear a discussion a lot about whether arts degrees are worth it, you know. She went and took sociology, which is a bachelor of arts program. I would never discourage anyone from doing that because no matter what you're going to postsecondary institutions for, I think you're learning something and you're becoming a better person. I would just start by saying that I do have concern with the Member for Lacombe-

Ponoka saying: well, maybe you shouldn't go to postsecondary education. Somebody else said that that's not what he meant. But I have concerns with that.

As I mentioned, you know, having a mother that young and her living with these costs still to this day, I think it's very important that we're moving forward to put a cap on tuition. I just want to say that there were other comments made by Lacombe-Ponoka – well, there were many that I have concern with, one of them being that universities should be more lean. I have great concern with that. I mean, over the last several decades, being under a Progressive Conservative government, they've had to find ways to become lean.

When I think back to my education at NAIT even, in the radio/television broadcasting program, they've had to make a lot of adjustments with such a small amount of funding. You go there and you see. I was just there last week, actually, and the instructors are putting together sound panels at home, essentially, because there's not necessarily the funding there. But they don't complain. They do with the funding what they can.

I also have other concerns with what was said. I mean, the carbon levy piece continues to come up. I will just remind the members on all sides of this House that Advanced Education has invested $929.8 million in capital projects since April 2015. We have doubled the budget for maintenance and renewal since 2015. That's $60 million in 2014-15, which we increased to $118 million now. To say that the carbon levy is killing these institutions is completely ridiculous. We've seen increases to these funds, which are very important. I think that it's important to recognize that students want to see these renewable projects and green energy projects moving forward.

The person who created carbon pricing is a Nobel prize winner. When we have 97 per cent of scientists agreeing that climate change is real and that we need to do something about it, when the author of carbon pricing is winning Nobel prizes, at what point do you start to agree with this? I mean, we have prominent Conservative leaders that are agreeing with this. I don't understand. But I digress. That is not what this bill is about.

Once again, the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka said: "What have you done for students' education? Costs are increasing." Well, the tuition freeze was the first thing. He said that we're not moving fast enough. Well, you did not agree with the tuition freeze when we implemented it, but now you're here saying: oh, we agreed with everything all along. It's very silly.

Meanwhile you're saying that we haven't done anything for students. We increased the minimum wage, and this goes back to the story of my mother. She worked entirely through high school, probably through elementary, and, of course, through university. She was working at a bank as a front teller. She was making the minimum wage. To say that the minimum wage does not help these students: it's not true at all.

Let's see here. There was also mention that there should be accelerated programs, which I don't understand. We do have accelerated programs. You know, there are four-year programs. There are accelerated one- or two-year programs from a variety of institutions. This kind of reminds me of the Leader of the Official Opposition saying: you know, RAP programs are a great idea. He said that a couple of weeks ago. Well, we already have those. Those are things. It's not something he can bring in.

I guess my final piece would just be that if you are in support of this legislation so much, which you say you are – I don't necessarily believe you from the comments that you've made previously through the last three years. When the students meet with you over the next week and over the next six months, I hope that they will question your intentions. You know, if you were to become the government of the day next year, then these students should understand and make sure that they get a promise from you, because if that were to happen, I think you'll go back on it, and I hope that they hold you to account.

Once again, thank you to the Minister of Advanced Education for bringing forward Bill 19. I'm very happy to see it move forward. It was one of the main reasons that I got involved with politics, to see more opportunities for students to succeed. I hope everyone supports it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The hon. member from the government side had mentioned the carbon tax, and I'm wondering if the member opposite could explain to me how exactly the carbon tax benefits students, particularly around the issue of increased costs to students. The carbon tax literally increases the cost of absolutely everything. Students are not immune, and we know that, despite the rhetoric from the government in regard to the carbon rebate cheques, that that absolutely does not cover the output costs of everyday needs and expenditures in a student's life.

I would be particularly interested to know what the member thinks a carbon tax is doing to help benefit students and help them to have a more affordable life not only now, in the course of their university or college education, but how exactly, moving forward, that is going to benefit students and their families.

Ms Jansen: The green line.

Mrs. Pitt: Madam Speaker, the minister opposite yelled "green line." You know what's a fun fact? The green line was actually approved prior to this government and was not tied to any of the carbon tax funds that the government is currently putting into general revenue. They're absolutely misleading the public in these types of conversations. Everybody knows that the carbon tax money collected by this government goes into their general revenue funds and that they dole it out as need be. Particularly, the Calgary green line project was approved, actually, while the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, was a minister with the federal government.

Again, it's one of those situations where, you know, we say or do something on the Conservative side, and the government members freak out, saying: it's the world's worst thing. Then they realize: actually, it's a good idea. Then they take our talking points and use them moving forward.

Mr. Feehan: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. For the third time this morning we rise and speak to the fact that 29(2)(a) is supposed to be about the previous speaker and the comments they made. Clearly, we have drifted off into a speech and lecture with facts derived from the ether, not related to anything happening here on Earth. I really think that we need to admonish the opposition yet a third time for wasting the time of this House to use it as an opportunity to lecture and berate, completely inappropriately and without value, when we actually should be speaking to the bill at hand. I'd really like to see them try to focus on that at least for one morning. I know it's hard. It's been a whole two hours and 45 minutes, and some attention spans really are unable to get through a whole morning.

Mrs. Pitt: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I address the second point of order, would you like to speak to the first point of order?

Mrs. Pitt: I would like to speak to the first point of order, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to do so.

When I was asking questions around the carbon tax and the impact that it's having on students, making their lives less affordable, the Minister of Infrastructure had yelled across to me: the green line project. I was simply explaining the facts around the green line project and where the funding was actually coming from, Madam Speaker, completely relevant to the conversation. Perhaps if the government members want to participate in the debate, they would stand up and do so. But when I was speaking on 29(2)(a) in regard to another member's comments and concerns in this House, I was completely on topic and particularly answering some of the heckling that's coming from the government ministers.

So this is not a point of order, Madam Speaker. In fact, I don't recall that the minister actually made a citation either in regard to his point of order, but this is absolutely relevant to the conversation and it's a matter of debate.

The Deputy Speaker: All right. We have discussed this issue several times already this morning, and perhaps we need to have a broader dialogue again about the use of 29(2)(a). I will say that I think that everybody has been very congenial in this House this morning for the most part, which is nice to see. That said, yes, there was some heckling occurring while you were speaking. That doesn't mean that you necessarily respond to it and get distracted by that heckling. I think that there is an onus on all of us to strive to a higher level of debate in this House. Again, I have been giving a great deal of leeway with 29(2)(a), but I encourage members to really try to stick to the intent of that standing order.

If you would like to continue your remarks on 29(2)(a), please, hon. member. Just a clarification: you cannot call a point of order on a point of order. Go ahead.

Mrs. Pitt: I thought I'd try.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I was talking about earlier, the affordability for students. The government is expressing concerns that it's very expensive for students for life, particularly in regard to postsecondary education, and I would absolutely agree. I would question why the government is making it even more expensive for students with their carbon tax. Students understand that, and their parents understand that. Albertans understand that the carbon tax is making life more expensive, and I don't understand why this government doesn't get it, particularly one of the younger members in the government caucus who is very likely making a significantly higher wage than most of his peers. So maybe because he doesn't understand the impacts of the carbon tax, he doesn't understand that students absolutely feel those effects. If he could explain to me why or how this carbon tax makes sense, I would be grateful and make an effort to understand where he is coming from on behalf of his constituents, not just personally for himself.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you have a few seconds to respond.

Mr. Carson: Well, I just said that I was raised by a 14-year-old mother, so for you to say that I don't know what living in poverty is like is completely ridiculous.

11:50

I'll say that the valley line LRT, completely funded by carbon levy funds, is a massive investment for my community. People understand that that investment is going to change the way people move through the city, and that is going to positively impact students across the city. It's an incredible investment in my community.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: I thought that that would be the constituency on everybody's lips, so it would be easy to remember.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 19 on third reading. Before I begin, I'd just like to make a comment, with all due respect to your position, on your response to the first point of order, where you acknowledged that the minister had withdrawn his comments and apologized. I'd just like to correct you. He has never apologized for his statement. He withdrew the comments. He has never apologized to the member, and he has never apologized to the farmers of Alberta, who he slighted in his comments.

That being said, getting back to this bill. It will put in place a cap on tuition in postsecondary institutions in Alberta, indexing them to the CPI, which will make the rate by which the tuition rises every year more predictable and controlled, and that is a good thing. I see the necessity for students as they have dealt with massive and volatile tuition hikes in the past.

But I'd also like to mention that just today in the Edmonton Journal, I believe, the president of Grant MacEwan University made some comments. Grant MacEwan University is a great institution that's accessible right downtown. We have a lot of people that otherwise would not be able to afford to go to an institution, but we have some that are in the inner city, and it's accessible to people that live downtown. It's a great advantage to the downtown community, much like Portage College is out in St. Paul and Lac La Biche and Cold Lake, where people can go to school right in their own community, so it does give that advantage.

Now, her concern is the unforeseen consequences of this cap. She talks about the reduction in the ability to provide competitive wages to their instructional staff, resulting in what they call cherry-picking by other institutions. Now, we've already seen this with the cap on our Crown prosecutors, Madam Speaker, where Alberta put a cap on wages, especially for people just coming out of university, and a lot of those good Crown prosecutors have left our province to go to B.C., where they can make 20 to 25 per cent more. It puts an extra burden on our legal system, especially out in rural Alberta where we have Crown prosecutors with an average caseload of upwards of 2,000 cases.

You know, I've had meetings with the chief Crown prosecutor, where he's admitted in public that they've taken 200 of their cases and just said: "You know what? These are cases that didn't involve violent crime or are mostly just petty theft, which, if it happens to be your quad or your truck that was stolen, I mean, it means a lot to you, but in the grand scheme of things in the prosecution office it didn't." They would want to stick to the violent crimes and domestic violence and that, so a lot of those cases were just thrown into the garbage and will never see the light of day. So this is one of those unforeseen or unexpected consequences of an action of the government.

Now, you know, when they put that cap on the Crown prosecutors, they possibly didn't think about how it was going to affect especially rural Alberta and the stresses that we already have and the rural crime. People are getting the idea that they can break into houses and steal vehicles and steal RVs and all these things or just tools out of somebody's shop, and they know that even if they get caught and arrested, they're never going to be prosecuted for it. These are what we call the unforeseen consequences.

Now, while it is a huge benefit for students, especially those of low income, and for accessibility to universities and colleges, the concern from the president of Grant MacEwan University is the ability of the universities and colleges to maintain the level of education that we're accustomed to here in Alberta, and it is a great education. Two of my children have gone through, one through Grant MacEwan University and one through the University of Alberta for a lot of years. A medical degree takes a long time. A nursing degree is a four-year program.

I know that not only the tuitions but as rural students living in Edmonton it's the extra costs of accommodations and just living your life and having enough money to buy your lunches and not have to work extra jobs just to make ends meet so that you can concentrate on your studies.

My only concern with the cap on tuition is, you know, listening to the president of Grant MacEwan and her concerns about how it may affect the quality, the number of courses that are available, and also that they may have to cap the salaries of some of their high-end instructors and some of the best instructors. These people have a limited career just like everybody else. Not saying that they're totally focused on money, but a lot of times it is a really big thing, where if you have a choice to work in Edmonton for $100,000 a year or in Victoria for $150,000, a lot of times you may choose to go to another institution. That being said, I guess that is my only concern with the bill.

We are supporting. We do understand how it affects students. In an attempt to continue increasing revenue, postsecondary institutions continued increasing their prices in the form of noninstructional fees when tuition was frozen. My understanding is that this bill also gives the minister the ability to cap those expenses as well. From my understanding, reading what the president of Grant MacEwan University said today, a lot of times the gym fees and access to exercise facilities and even some of the food is subsidized, and a lot of times they're already covering a lot of those costs, so putting a cap on those is going to make it even harder for universities to operate in that way.

Again, I just hope that we don't end up in a situation where we look back at this cap on tuition three years down the road and say:

"You know what? It was a very well-intended bill, but here are the consequences that we've seen. We've had a reduction in courses at Grant MacEwan or the University of Alberta or the University of Calgary, and we've lost some really good instructors from these programs, and we very, very likely will never get those folks back or increase that level of study." With this legislative step to increase the transparency of noninstructional fees, it's my hope that students will no longer face vague and undefined fees during their education.

Further to this, the bill enacts a limit to the increase in tuition, stating that program tuition can be raised by a maximum 10 per cent as long as the average across the board is not greater than the CPI. We can recall a few years prior to the tuition freeze, since this government took over, that tuition went up by the rate of inflation already. This set a precedent for what Bill 19 aims to accomplish, and also means that the same can be achieved through ministerial orders rather than new legislation altogether.

Again, just before I run out of time here, Madam Speaker, I'd just like to reflect, and hopefully the minister will consult with the president of Grant MacEwan. I know that I've met with her. She's a very, very intelligent lady and has the best intentions for her students and her faculty in mind when she's making her decisions. I don't think she would come out and just make reckless statements in regard to Bill 19. That being said, this bill protects students from postsecondary institutions hiking such fees as a roundabout way of increasing revenue. We do see that. The measure affords more security and confidence for students, commendable in all ways. I know that it was an issue when my son was going to school and when my daughter was going to school, the tuitions were a big part of it.

Like I said, as far as from a rural student standpoint, far more than that is the cost of rent. If you're trying to live in downtown Edmonton so that you're close to Grant MacEwan University, it is very, very expensive to live down here, and food costs, transportation costs as well. There's more to the whole issue than just the tuition when it comes to student's accessibility, especially coming from a rural setting. I know that it does hold back a lot of rural students from making those choices of furthering their education because they don't have the same access that a student born and raised and living in Edmonton and Calgary would have, being able to live at home while they go to university. It can be quite costly for rural students to come into Edmonton and Calgary. If there's something we can do to help subsidize the . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I'm hesitant to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 7, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly students from one of the greatest constituencies in the entire province. It was great to go to their school and help open it not that long ago. The students I've met many times over the last few years. From Roberta MacAdams school today we have Mr. Ash Robinson, Mrs. Amber Smith, Ms Katrina Pickett, and Ms Cherilyn Maluga. If you'd all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure, on behalf of the Minister of Transportation, to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly 26 brilliant students from Norwood elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. These students have been busy here today and have visited the Borealis Gallery, the Pehonan Theatre, and the Agora Interpretive Centre in the Federal Building, as well as the Legislature Building. They are accompanied today by their teachers, Susan Strebchuck and Danielle Duncan, and their student teacher, Miss Woodman. I would ask them to please rise now and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you, sitting in the public gallery, students from Niton Central school, accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Maskell, and parent helper Mrs. DeLeeuw. I'm fortunate to be the MLA to several small, deeply rooted, historical towns, Niton Junction being one among them. Niton has been a landmark on the trail to Jasper for nearly 100 years, once acting as a major agricultural trading station on the railway. I ask that you and all members of the House join me in a warm welcome for this group, that's come a long way to visit us.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly distinguished visitors from the veterans' working committee. During Veterans' Week we honour veterans who have given their lives for our country and all those who have served. Today we also honour those who serve veterans. A year ago Mr. Doug Styles, himself a veteran, contacted the Minister of Seniors and Housing about homeless veterans in Alberta. Sadly, despite their service, the last homeless count showed 174 veterans without a home. We know there are many more without a permanent address. In response we formed a veterans' working committee. Now, less than a year later, we will be announcing an exciting pilot project to improve life for veterans and homeless veterans in Alberta. That announcement will take place on Friday.

I would ask the members of the veterans' working committee to please rise as I introduce you: Captain Doug Styles, veterans' advocate; Master Warrant Officer Michael Hogan, Department of National Defence and Canadian Armed Forces; Corporal Wallace Bona, royal Canadian electrical engineers, president of the Aboriginal Veterans Society of Alberta; Major, retired, David Blackburn, Forces@Work; Matt Barker, veteran of the RCMP; Warrant Officer Gerry Finlay, Royal Canadian Legion, command service officer, Alberta-Northwest Territories Command; Lieutenant-Colonel Chad Rizzato, Canadian Armed Forces, project manager, veterans' service centre and housing; Major Chris Duncan, director of operations in the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires; Lynda Cuppens, co-chair of the veterans' working group for the government of Alberta and a military spouse; Sharon Blackwell, co-chair of the veterans' working group; Kevin McNichol, CEO, Forces@Work; Shawna Laychuk, Veterans Affairs Canada; Andrea Fuller-Chalifoux, Veterans Affairs Canada; Ragaad Jurf, Alberta Community and Social Services; Jill Wright, military liaison support. Please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you for your service to our country, and thank you for your continued service to our country.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce my guests in the House today. From the Central Alberta Sexual Assault Support Centre we have Sarah Maetche, administrative assistant and community journalist. Suzanne Zukiwsky, board chairperson, has been on the board for seven years. She is a Red Deer College psychology student and a Red Deer public schools educational assistant. Kellie Cummings, board vice-chair, has been working with the vulnerable sector for 18 years. The last 11 years she has dedicated herself to those fleeing family violence and sexual trauma. We have Dyson Zukiwsky, event volunteer and supporter; Spencer Zukiwsky, event volunteer and supporter; as well as Patricia Arango, executive director since 2014. Patricia is the former ED at Chatham Kent Women's Centre, Ontario, where she worked for more than 15 years. She is an active volunteer, Rotarian, and member of various boards and chairs. Over the last four years under her leadership Central Alberta Sexual Assault Support Centre has created the iRespect campaign and the first provincial text and web chat crisis line service. I am so very proud of my guests today, and I ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the House two members in the Assembly who are involved with mental health, particularly mental health youth services, Mr. Mark Korthuis and Dr. Adam Abba-Aji. Mark is the CEO of the Mental Health Foundation, an organization dedicated to building better mental health care for people in Alberta. Dr. Abba-Aji is the lead psychiatrist with Access Open Minds, a program working to change the way we deliver mental health service in Alberta. They've both been invaluable contributors to the movement to better integrate mental health and social services in Alberta. I'll ask them to stand. Give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First of all, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Community Drug Strategy Committee for Strathcona county. This group has been working collaboratively since 2017 to address the opioid crisis in our community and to develop a drug strategy for Strathcona county, including the exhibit Opioids Don't Discriminate, an interactive experience. Last night the workplace of some of my guests was damaged. Thank you to firefighters, RCMP, and EMS for their prompt response. I acknowledge that this situation is upsetting for staff and residents alike, and I really thank my guests for coming today. I will ask my guests to please rise as I call their names: Lerena Greig, Susan Robblee, Darlene Spelten, Jean Bell, Stephen Neuman, and Sam Singh. If I've forgotten anybody, please rise. I'd now like to ask that you receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the constituency manager for my office in Sherwood Park, Trish Agrell-Smith. I first met Trish when she was working at Baseline Wine & Spirits in Sherwood Park, and I soon realized that outside of her obvious knowledge of wine she had a lot to offer and that she was the person I wanted as part of my team. She started working in my office part-time and has been my constituency full-time manager since last November. She helps me keep organized, is kind and patient when helping constituents, and is a great graphic designer and writer. Thank you, Trish, for your fantastic work. Trish, I would now ask you to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests who are here today to observe the introduction of Bill 25, the Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act. Mr. Jeff Wearmouth is the cofounder and current director of Turning Point Generation. Jeff is a professional engineer born and raised in Alberta. He has worked in renewables and the energy sector for over 25 years. Mr. Rob Mackin, former mayor of the town of Hinton, has worked with Turning Point to introduce them to the community and key stakeholders in the region. In 2017 he helped spearhead the Hinton Energy Alternatives Team, which is made up of leaders in the community, to support and attract exciting development such as the Canyon Creek project. I ask Rob and Jeff to both stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. The first is some students who are here with their instructor and staff from Global Tesol College campus within my riding. My guests are visiting from Libya and work in finance, and this is their first visit to Canada, to be immersed in our culture and our language. I want to welcome them to Alberta and, specifically, to our capital and our Chamber here. I invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: Secondly, I rise today to recognize members of the Medical Assistance in Dying Review Committee who are seated in the members' gallery. I want to recognize their dedication and their compassion and the work that this committee has done to ensure that Albertans have the care and support that they need should they choose to access medical assistance in dying and to ensure that the wishes are met with dignity and with respect. I'd also like to acknowledge one of the members, who wasn't able to be here today, Troy Stooke, who has joined the committee as a public member to share her experience as a family member and an advocate. The members who are present today, please rise. Those are Dr. Jim Silvius, Dr. Elizabeth Brooks-Lim, and Debra Allen. Please receive our warm welcome and our gratitude.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you my good friend Jesse Cesar. He's a member of the Filipino community. He's lived in Alberta for eight years. He's part of Yorkton Group International and works as a client relations specialist. He's also a member of St. Theresa parish and a member of the Knights of Columbus. He's an active member of my volunteer team who lives in Edmonton-Ellerslie. I'm so proud to call him my friend. Jesse, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very good friend, a strong female leader, a former colleague. MLA Jacquie Fenske, former mayor, by far makes some of the best pies in Alberta. I'd like to also introduce Marvin Olsen, the Alberta Party candidate for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, and his beautiful wife, Shannon Olsen. Will all members please welcome them to this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through to all members of the House members of the group Advocis, the Financial Advisors Association of Canada. If they could stand as I read their names: Rob McCullagh, Kelly Smith, Wade Baldwin, Lorne Zalasky, Lori Power, Julie Martini, Nick Colosimo, Greg Pollock, Kris Birchard, and Chris Fox. Of course, one of my favourites is Dan Boorse from Grande Prairie. Dan is a member of Rotary and volunteers with lots of organizations within Grande Prairie. If we could give them the warm welcome of the Assembly, that'd be great.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other introductions, hon. members? The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House Minu Bhatia. As some of you may know, Minu is the creator of the giant crocheted Canadian flag. It's 40 feet by 20 feet and weighs around 132 pounds. It took Minu over three years to complete this amazing project. Minu wanted to pay tribute to the country where diverse groups of people can enrich their lives and those around them. This project is dedicated to a nation where we can all expand our horizons, build a better future, and realize our dreams. Our government is currently in the process of finding this wonderful piece of art a permanent home. I would like to ask Minu, who is joined by her family and children, to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

World War I Armistice Centenary

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, in honour of the 100th anniversary of the armistice of World War I, I rise to pay my respects and honour the service and commitment of military members and their families from Alberta who fought for our freedom. The Vimy Ridge Armoury, today located in my riding of Little Bow, is home to the 20th Independent Field Battery, the Royal Canadian Artillery, and Troop 3 from the Medicine Hat-based A Squadron of the South Alberta Light Horse. The 20th Battery can trace its roots as being the truly Alberta battery raised by Major John Smith Stewart, the father of artillery in Alberta. He raised this unit from Lethbridge but recruited the gunners from Edmonton and Calgary as well to form the 20th Battery, which still operates. This year, to mark the 100th armistice of World War I, the 20th Independent Field Battery will conduct a 100-gun salute on Remembrance Day in Calgary.

At this time I also want to share with you a few southern Alberta connections leading up to the last few days of World War I. The second of four artillery batteries raised from Lethbridge, the 39th had the distinction of being the first Canadian artillery battery to enter Mons and can claim to have had one of its 18-pounder field guns fire the last round in World War I. Brigadier-General Stewart, who commanded the artillery units of the 3rd Canadian Division at the end of World War I, was also one of many serving MLAs during the Great War for civilization. He had the great honour to command the parade in the Grand-Place in Mons for General Currie on November 11, 1918. He also returned for the 50th anniversary in Mons, where he was made an honorary citizen. As we commemorate the armistice and continue to recognize the military contribution to Canada, it's also about connecting our members of the Legislature to the military and to their fellow citizens, thus enabling an understanding of how they have contributed and continue to contribute to the fabric of this great province and great nation.

Lest we forget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Community Drug Strategy for Strathcona County

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to highlight the work of the Community Drug Strategy Committee for Strathcona county. I am so proud of how my community has moved forward in addressing this issue. Strathcona county, like many communities across the province, has been impacted by the opioid crisis. In 2017 community partners, including the following, came together to develop this strategy: various Alberta services departments, Chimo Youth Retreat Centre, Children's Services, Elk Island public and Catholic school divisions, Hope in Strathcona, Moms Stop the Harm, parents empowering parents, Sherwood Park primary care network, the RCMP and its victims' services, Saffron Sexual Assault Centre, the Salvation Army, various Strathcona county departments including family and community services, and the Strathcona county public library. Using a new mental health model based on the premises of collective ownership and empathy, best practices, brain science research, and community engagement, the committee has developed a community drug strategy for Strathcona county, from addiction to connection.

With funding from an AHS opioid public awareness grant the committee developed a public information engagement campaign, Just a Little to Lose a Lot, and have created Opioids Don't Discriminate, an interactive experience. Originally scheduled to run this week at the community centre in Sherwood Park, this exhibit is a unique interactive exhibit allowing participants to follow the journey of three fictional community members who find themselves affected by opioid use. Based on real-life experiences and local statistics, this exhibit is a one-of-a-kind opportunity to explore the impact of opioid use in our community. With the uncertainty surrounding the unfolding incident at the community centre, I hope that this amazing exhibit will have the opportunity to continue and to travel across the province.

As the MLA for Sherwood Park I am so thankful and appreciative of the collaborative work that this diverse group of community partners has accomplished.

Congratulations.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Myron Thompson

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute an Alberta original, my friend Myron Thompson. I have been blessed to call Myron, one of the most successful and best-known politicians of his era, a friend and a mentor. Over Myron's long and successful life he has accomplished much, starting out with an incredible baseball career. In fact, he made it into the New York Yankees' baseball program as a catcher, competing with a guy by the name of Yogi Berra for a spot in the big club.

After baseball Myron and his amazing wife, Dot, would settle in the community of Sundre, where Myron would serve as a school principal for 23 years. Myron served faithfully several generations of Sundre students. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would guess that well over half of the town population went to school with Myron as their principal. He entered municipal politics in 1974, becoming the mayor of his beloved Sundre. In 1992 he was elected to the House of Commons, where he served faithfully as our man in Ottawa until 2008. He became known in Ottawa for wearing his cowboy hat and was never hesitant to proudly display our western heritage. After he retired from Parliament, he stayed in Sundre, where he served on town council for several more years. He finally hung up his spurs last year after an incredible 50 years of public service to our community.

No one could raise holy heck like Myron or fix a stern glare better, and there's no question that Myron always calls it as he sees it. But if you miss the twinkle in his eye or the playful grin, you don't really know Myron. Myron never leaves you with any doubt about his deep faith in God or how much he truly loves his family, his students, his constituents, his town, his province, and his country, and he never shies away from fighting for them.

Myron announced just a few weeks ago that he is facing what he describes as his last great battle, a fight with cancer. He is facing this fight with the same class, dignity, and grit that he faced every challenge in his life with. There will never be another Myron Thompson. He truly is one of a kind, Mr. Speaker.

God bless you, Myron. You know that my entire community stands with you and Dot as you have stood with us for so many years.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Suspension of Physicians' Licences to Practise

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year it came to light that a physician practising near Edmonton had been convicted of sexual assault against patients and nurses with whom he worked. It was shocking to learn that this physician had been allowed to continue to practise with a licence from the college of physicians, so the opposition at the time asked the government to consider bringing forward legislation to ban licences from physicians convicted of assault. We're glad that's happened, but the government will only allow that to apply for five years. Why not ban doctors permanently from practising if they've been convicted of assault?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like the member opposite, our government and in particular our Minister of Health were very disturbed by the situation that the member opposite describes. That's why the minister has brought in legislation to this House, only the second province in the country to bring in this kind of legislation, to protect vulnerable patients and particularly to protect women in these vulnerable situations from predatory professionals. That's why we are moving forward with this legislation. We are still having good conversations about it, but we're happy to be able to bring it in.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the hon. the Premier for her response.

Mr. Speaker, as I said to the government in March, the Official Opposition would be happy to co-operate with the government in the adoption of such legislation. We seek to do so constructively; however, there have been multiple opposition amendments proposing, effectively, a permanent ban on the ability of abusive physicians to practice, given the risk that they will revictimize in the future and also to send a clear message of deterrence to abusive physicians. The government voted down those amendments. Why? Why don't they support a lifetime ban?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. It is our fundamental belief that women and all Albertans accessing health care services should do so without fear of harassment, intimidation, or assault, of course. We're happy to work with all members of this Legislature when considering how best to do that, and we certainly welcome the critic of the opposition caucus. I have reached out for meetings, and we continue to work collaboratively. We also work with front-line providers who provide support to survivors. We've increased their funding, and I'm very proud of that.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, again, the government now on three occasions has voted against amendments that would effectively impose a lifetime ban on doctors convicted of sexual assault. This is a terrible violation of the doctor-patient relationship, and I cannot understand why there would be any consideration of granting a licence to practise to a doctor found guilty of sexual assault. So will the government join with us in listening to vulnerable Alberta women who have been victimized in this way by agreeing to a lifetime ban on the ability of such doctors to practise?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the important recommendation. Again, we are only the second jurisdiction in Canada to embark upon this kind of protection in bringing in a mandatory minimum requirement of a five-year suspension. I appreciate that the amendments came forward recently and certainly welcome anyone to bring forward recommendations at any time to help strengthen our legislation. We continue to work with the organizations that represent survivors to make sure that we have the strictest and fairest consequences in place so we can withstand appropriate constitutional or legislative challenges. We want to ensure that these consequences stick and that we protect all patients.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second main question.

Student Achievement in Mathematics

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in recent years there has been a disturbing decline in math ability amongst Alberta students through multiple different standardized tests. Most recently the provincial achievement test shows that math proficiency amongst grade 9 students has declined from 67 per cent in 2014 to 59 per cent last year. Does the government share our concern about this data, which shows declining math proficiency amongst Alberta students, and what does it plan to do about it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question. That is why the Minister of Education took action almost as soon as we got elected to bring together a group of experts in math to develop some significant changes to our math curriculum, which were announced last year. The results that we're seeing now demonstrate the fact that it was necessary to do. We're very pleased that we've been able to bring in some very significant changes that will in fact improve math ability amongst our students.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the Premier for that answer, Mr. Speaker. However, the actions taken by the government do not address a fundamental problem, which is that since the introduction of discovery or inquiry learning as a common method of mathematics instruction we've seen a steady 15-year decline. It clearly started before the NDP was in office. Regardless of party, we all need to work together to turn the situation around. Does the Premier share my concern with the fact that the cut-off score for math proficiency is only 42 per cent for grade 9 students?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do at least appreciate the member opposite acknowledging that it was, actually, the previous government that put this system in place.

As the member has identified, we have just in the last year implemented the plan that has been developed by the Ministry of Education. We're supporting math teachers, funding their ability to increase their skills; we are modernizing the curriculum and asking for a renewed focus on the basics, including memorization of multiplication tables and fractions; and we are improving testing. Part of the thing that happens is that as you do that, you see that, oh, the tests are not good. That's why we're working . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: I do appreciate that answer, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister has taken some positive steps forward.

The decline has been so rapid that tens of thousands of Alberta families, many of them new Canadians, are now forced to pay out of pocket after-tax dollars for math tutors to backfill for what children are not learning at school. Will the government make it very clear that the expectation is for our schools to equip young people with the basic math skills that they need to succeed in the future regardless of pedagogical fads like discovery learning?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, that's exactly, as I've said now twice before, what our government is doing. We are working very hard to improve the math curriculum and to improve the outcomes that we are now testing for as well because we think that this is fundamentally important to the educational future of all Alberta kids.

But what I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that one of the other ways that we make sure that our kids get a good education is to make sure that there are enough schoolteachers in the schools that they are learning in. If we were to, for instance, have frozen funding in 2015, we would not see the kind of progress that we are now able to deliver.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, on that point, the government has been in office for three and a half years, and the math scores continue to come down.

2:00 Carbon Levy and Federal Carbon Pricing

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the voters of Washington state for the second time in a year rejected a proposed carbon tax in a referendum. This is the greenest state in the United States. Unfortunately, Albertans haven't had a chance to hold a referendum on the NDP's carbon tax. The Premier has said that she does not intend to proceed with her planned 67 per cent increase in that tax unless there is construction of Trans Mountain. Will she agree to require that a referendum be held before there are any future increases in the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the member opposite is fully aware of what our government's position is with respect to the climate leadership plan and the matter of pricing carbon as a tool to fight climate change, something that is fundamentally important. I appreciate that the member is often inspired by what goes on south of the border; however, that's not how we take our direction. You know, in Washington, for instance, almost half a million people don't have access to health care, and that's also not a model that we're going to follow. What we are going to do is make progress on combatting climate change, innovation, investment in renewable energy, transit . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Well, democracy is not an idea that belongs to the Americans, Mr. Speaker. Albertans want democracy. They want to have a say – they will in the next election, in any event – on the carbon tax.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal scheduled the date for the hearing on that government's constitutional reference on the threatened Trudeau carbon tax. It is going to be supported by the governments of Ontario, Manitoba, and the incoming government of New Brunswick. Will the government of Alberta seek intervenor status to help defend provincial jurisdiction against the threatened federal carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, we have adopted our own climate leadership plan. As a result, the actions of the federal government are not relevant to Alberta at this time. What I will say, however, is that the member's new-found affection for the Prime Minister and his desire to replace a made-in-Alberta plan, made in consultation with our industry, with a made-in-Ottawa plan that was not made in consultation with our industry is, well, perplexing. However, we will continue to work for Albertans, with Albertans on behalf of our collective environmental interests.

Mr. Kenney: Well, that's exactly the opposite of our position, which is to challenge the constitutionality of a federal carbon tax.

Mr. Speaker, why is it that the governments of New Brunswick, Ontario, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan are doing more to defend the constitutional authority of the government and Legislature of Alberta than the NDP government is?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what our government is doing is leading the country in terms of taking action combatting climate change. Sometimes, you know, making decisions that are for the good of future generations requires strength and resolve in advance, and that is what we are doing. Because of that we're able to invest in the LRT, in the green line. We're able to finally move Alberta to a place where we can incent renewable energy, something that should have happened decades ago, and we are doing this on behalf of future generations of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a young person is dealing with a mental illness, family can be one of the most important lifelines. However, families aren't always equipped to deal with the additional strain of caring for someone with a mental illness. In order for them to be effective and to support their loved ones, families need our support. They need to know what their resources are, where they're available, and how to access those resources. To the Minister of Health. Minister, I've heard from constituents that are caring for a child with mental illness, and they don't know where to turn. What is your government doing to connect families with the help that they need?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I want to assure all Albertans that if you're ever at a time of crisis, if it's an emergency, please call 911. If it's something that you have a little more time to process and you want some advice on, you can always call 811 and speak to a licensed registered nurse here in the province of Alberta, and they will help you navigate through some of the options that are available.

In terms of system investments, we've increased our capacity for children and families by building the Rutherford mental health clinic here in Edmonton. We've also funded new counselling supports for survivors of sexual and physical assault through the Zebra Child Protection Centre, and they supported over 1,600 children and youth last year.

Mr. Fraser: While we all hope that someone dealing with a mental illness can rely on the support of friends and family, that simply isn't always the case. Whether it's because they have no one to turn to or because the people in their life aren't equipped to help them, many people suffering from mental illness are at risk of isolation, homelessness, and much more. This is especially a concern for someone who is being discharged from a facility as that transition often results in falling through the cracks for these patients. To the same minister: what specifically is your government doing to ensure support for those suffering from mental illness after they've been discharged from a facility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again for the question. Currently we are in the process of monitoring over 150 initiatives that our government has led and been involved with because of the valuing mental health work that we did when we were first elected. I want to thank the former Associate Minister of Health for her work on that important file as well. There are 18 actions specifically related to Valuing Mental Health: Next Steps, including the building of an eight-bed youth facility in Red Deer, increasing psychiatric emergency service outreach at the Alberta Children's hospital, and the list goes on. We need to continue doing more, but much has been done.

Mr. Fraser: The issues that I've talked about today are symptoms of a much larger mental health crisis in our province. While spending has gone up, we're still struggling to improve outcomes. What we need is a province-wide vision for how we approach mental illness and to help those who are suffering. The Valuing Mental Health report is a good first step, but we need to make sure that the recommendations are being adapted into a holistic approach to mental illness, not simply being applied in a piecemeal fashion. To the same minister: how close are we to full implementation of that report, and is your ministry pushing for a more holistic mental health strategy for all of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's exactly what we're doing. That's why we didn't stop when we wrote a report. Many people said to us when we embarked on this process: we've written reports before, and they sat on a shelf. It was really important to them that this new government, our NDP government under the leadership of our Premier, develop next steps. That's why we have the 18 steps identified under the Valuing Mental Health: Next Steps report.

We've also increased investment through the mental health capacity building in schools. Now over 65,000 students in 182 schools in 85 communities have additional supports because this side of the House voted to increase the budget and give those supports to families while members on that side of the House voted to slash them and lay off front-line workers, Mr. Speaker. I think we know who's got the backs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Health Care Accessibility

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, a constituent of mine in Lethbridge requires joint-replacement surgery. This constituent is a senior, as is their spouse. The preference would be to have their surgery performed in Calgary, where their family lives and can provide social supports before and after the surgery. To the Minister of Health: is this an option available in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for this important question. The short answer is yes. A patient can request to have their surgery in a different community than the one that they live in. For example, a Lethbridge physician can e-refer directly to a Calgary surgeon or vice versa. Obviously, our goal is to get patients surgery as quickly as possible based on their needs, but we also know that we need to act with patients' wishes as a guide in this, and I want to applaud the member for her advocacy on behalf of her community.

Ms Fitzpatrick: To the same minister: how many joint replacement surgeries have been performed in Lethbridge over the past year, and what is the ministry's plan to protect that surgical capacity for my constituents?

Ms Hoffman: Specifically in Lethbridge, 233 were performed last year, and AHS performed 569 hip replacements in the south zone in 2017-18, also 778 knee replacements, almost 3,000 cataract surgeries. We protect our surgical capacity by investing in strong public health care, Mr. Speaker, unlike the members opposite, who want to fire 4,000 front-line workers, nurses. We've got the backs of ordinary families.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Recruiting surgeons and other health care professionals to our smaller cities and rural areas is a challenge. Some communities attempt to mount their own version of La grande séduction or the Newfie version: hey, boys; a soiree to meet the boys, and then they'll stay. What is the government's plan to ensure that we have the professionals we need in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a friend who works as a surgeon here in Edmonton, but when she was on a stint in northern Quebec, she certainly met every eligible bachelor in town, and I understand why communities want to make that the case. We need something more robust than that, though. I'm proud to work with the AMA and with our medical schools and with RPAP to ensure that we have recruitment aligned with the needs of Albertans. This is a long-term effort, and this is something that Conservative governments failed at and that we have taken up.

Government Services Communication with MLA Offices

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, last week I asked three different cabinet ministers why public servants working in Alberta Works and Alberta seniors offices have been ordered not to talk to staff in MLA constituency offices. Now, the minister said that they knew nothing about this and said that they would follow up with me to resolve the issue. Well, I thought: great. Since then, crickets. My office staff and I have not heard a word from any of the ministers or any of their staff or the much-vaunted MLA contact person. To the Deputy Premier: is this your idea of following up?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I don't have the Blues in front of me, I think what I did say or what I intended to say is: please, give my office a call. We are happy to work with you on this matter. Every minister has an identified MLA contact to ease that flow of information. Mine is Courtney. She's a lovely human. She's on the fourth floor. Please, if you want to reach out to her or to me personally, I know the hon. member has my contact information. I've been able to solve a number of issues with him directly. My staff are working on a number of files. Of course, we take your concerns very seriously and would be happy to work with you. Give me a call or send me an e-mail, please.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, my office has been trying to get a meeting with this minister and have several issues resolved since August, and so far we've heard crickets. We've heard nothing from the other ministers either, but we did get some response. We got response from staff in constituency offices from all across the province, all saying the same thing, that they've heard the same directive. But, you know, funny thing: all of those offices were for opposition members of the Legislature, not a single response like that from government members. To the Deputy Premier: why the double standard? Why is your government punishing Albertans who had the temerity to elect non NDP MLAs?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I welcome the member to reach out to me personally.

I want to give an example of another member on the opposition who did reach out to me. It's the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, who reached out to me and said how important it was that people who were getting inadequate service for dialysis on a bus parked in front of the hospital get quality care. You know what? We addressed that, this side of the House. Forty-four years with a Conservative government, and it was this side of the House in an opposition riding that rose to the challenge, fixed that solution. You know what, Members? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills now says that if a UCP government was elected, it would hurt. You know what? He's right.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll come back to the topic at hand. Given that the constituency offices are supposed to be nonpartisan and given that we have received several reports that Alberta Works and Alberta seniors have been ordered not to speak to constituency office staff but only in opposition-held ridings, to the Deputy Premier. You know, five years ago this kind of behaviour would have had the Premier lighting the Minister of Transportation's hair on fire. What are you going to do to end this double standard?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is available to help Albertans who need assistance. We are hearing from the front-line staff that MLAs were contacting them directly and that that made them uncomfortable. I will also say that nothing has changed that was in place before us. It's the same process. When you reach out to a minister's office, we are here to help, and if there are any specifics, please reach out to any of our offices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Unemployment Provincial Budget Revenue Forecasts

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Corporate tax increases, provincial carbon tax, and costlier environmental regulations have resulted in weak job growth, layoffs, and the highest unemployment rate outside of Atlantic Canada. What does this government say to Albertans who are out of work and unable to take care of their families because of NDP policies?

Mr. Ceci: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we have said all along is that Alberta is the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the entire country at $11.2 billion less than the next province. We have said to Albertans that we are there to support you through this downturn, and we have done that with our employment support programs, with our income support programs. We addressed those. We did not leave them languishing and let people line up and not provide services. We have also provided support for job training, apprentices, and other things to get people back to the workplace as soon as possible.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the government's own budget says: "Beginning in 2021, additional revenue resulting from the federally-imposed carbon price tied to the construction of the Trans Mountain Pipeline will be used to support vital public services as the province stays on track to balance the budget by 2023-24." To the Premier: how does your government plan to provide vital public services to Albertans without a pipeline that you're not willing to fight for?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, this side has fought for the pipeline. We'll continue to do that with Ottawa, to stand up to Ottawa and say: look, this needs to happen as quickly as possible. The Premier has been across the country talking to all sorts of audiences, and some of them weren't very friendly, but she stood up for Alberta and will continue to do that. You know, we have a strong path to balance, and it's based on three principles: a strong and diversified economy, stable spending and cost containment, and reducing Alberta's reliance on resource revenues. We're doing all those things at the same time.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the government, then, saying that their budget is tied to the Trans Mountain pipeline and the ability to get the pipeline built?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I think I've addressed this question several times. Our path to balance relies on two out of three pipelines, but we're going to keep fighting for all three of those pipelines. We will get TMX, we will get line 3, KXL will happen, and we will balance by 2023. On that side they want to cut $700 million for the richest 1 per cent and leave the rest of us to suffer. That's no plan. Our plan is going to work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Oil Sands Advisory Group Former Co-chair

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on October 13 the Premier and Tzeporah Berman each addressed the Alberta Teachers' Association. During her speech the Premier said, quote: soon after I was elected Premier, she – meaning Ms Berman – worked with leaders in the energy industry to help fashion Alberta's response to climate change. Listening to that comment, one might think Ms Berman was hired by the energy industry. Premier, Ms Berman was not hired by the energy industry; she was hired by you. Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the development of the climate leadership plan soon after we were elected, we discovered that oil companies had in fact been in conversation with environmental groups for some time on the topic of trying to break the land lock and having a more fact-based conversation around Alberta's resources and getting those resources to market. It was a surprise, actually, to me – and it was a surprise to many of us – that that degree of consensus actually existed. It had been led by many of Canada's largest oil companies. That was the consensus that was there, and then there were a couple of pieces of work in terms of implementing . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: No answer, Mr. Speaker.

Given that last spring in this House the hon. environment minister and the hon. jobs minister described Tzeporah's views as wrong and irrelevant and given that even before this government appointed her as co-chair of the oil sands advisory group, she was voicing extreme views about Alberta's energy resources and given that her opposition has escalated to the point that the Premier now feels the need to follow her around after every speech, Premier, what was your strategy when you hired Ms Berman, and how is that working out for Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will rise in this House and deliver an answer that I delivered many times to the same question over and over again, which is that there were three co-chairs for the oil sands advisory group in developing recommendations around implementing the 100-megatonne limit on emissions and a couple of other pieces, including clean tech reinvestments and land-based concerns with respect to oil sands development. That work was concluded some time ago, and therefore there is no need for the oil sands advisory group any longer.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier did hire Ms Berman and now has created a public spectacle by following her pipeline opponent on her speaking schedule and given that the Premier distances herself from Ms Berman now but that even she must recognize that she's responsible for handing Ms Berman a platform for her extreme anti-Alberta views in the first place, Premier, are you finally ready to admit today that your government made a mistake when you hired Ms Berman as a policy adviser for our most valuable resource?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the individual in question shared the co-chair duties with Dave Collyer and with Melody Lepine from the Mikisew Cree, but the members opposite don't seem much interested in talking about the indigenous involvement on that group. Neither are they interested in talking about the industry involvement, which came from a number of companies, including Imperial Oil, who just today announced a final investment decision on the Aspen project within the context of the oil sands emissions limit. Clearly, the climate leadership plan is working to spur investment, to reinvest in clean technology, and to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Education for Students with Special Needs

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many students with special needs are eligible to receive full instructional funding if they attend a designated special education private school. The funding manual requires that parents consult with their resident school board so that, quote, parents are making an informed decision, end quote, and an official from the resident board must sign off on the consultation. To the Minister of Education: why do parents need permission in the first place? Does the minister not trust Alberta parents to make the best choices for their child's education?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's very important that we have a firm line of communication, in partnership with parents and teachers and the school, every step of the way. When we're working with students that require special needs, it's doubly important to have that communication and that conversation every step of the way. Our government has been working hard to ensure that we have inclusive education with supports, and those supports include incorporating and helping to work with the families every step of the way.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the United Conservative Party trusts parents to make good educational choices for their children and given that just last year the minister himself affirmed the government's support for funding of private schools in a letter sent to the ATA and given that he agreed in the letter that special-education schools in particular, quote, should continue to receive government support, to the same minister: if you're so supportive of these schools, why are you bent on making it more difficult for students to access them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for bringing up the specific information. I would be glad to discuss this particular issue with him to ensure that we do have clean lines of communication. He's a hundred per cent correct. We have worked hard to make sure that we have funded all forms of choice in education here in the province of Alberta, and we're very proud of that. Through that choice, we have created a very strong school system, we have excellent results in the provincial achievement exams to reflect that, and I'm proud to every step of the way work with families to make a better education system.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these families already face significant hurdles when it comes to securing a good education for their children and given that until this year parents were trusted to simply declare that they had consulted with the resident boards and given that no one was informed that a school board's official signature is now required until one week before school started, to the same minister: are you deliberately placing another hurdle in the way of educational choice for these families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, that would never be the intention. We've always been trying to ensure that, by fully funding enrolment growth and looking for ways by which we can refine special-needs supports for families. I think that we've done a good job. This helps along the way. I can certainly use this information to get back to see exactly what the potential challenge is, but I know that on a universal basis, by funding public education and putting that investment in, which this government has done for four years now, we have built a better system, and we're proud of the results.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Racism and Hate Crime Prevention

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I was proud to host an antiracism consultation event in my constituency. A few individuals associated with the white nationalist movement and with a history of posting misogynistic and racist material online decided that this was an open invitation to drop by. Luckily, the incident was resolved without issue, but I fear that this will discourage members of the public from attending these events and participating. To the Minister of Education: what have you done to combat racism in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to take a moment to commend the member for making it clear that racist and misogynistic views have no place in this province. The presence of these people promoting white nationalism at public events is a frightening trend. It seems to be emboldening. Somehow they are emboldened to do more of this, and I find that reprehensible. That's why we have released our Taking Action Against Racism report and continue to fight against racism and to educate people about this. We have taken many practical steps, and we certainly encourage the public to help us in this fight.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I heard loud and clear from my work that taking allegations of racism seriously in the school system is a major issue. To the same minister: what is being done to make sure that all students feel safe to speak out against hatred and racism?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, racism and hatred, I believe, are a product of ignorance, and you fight ignorance with education. When students have a solid education foundation in critical thinking, history, civic responsibility, and community, they will understand that hatred and racism are fundamentally wrong. When students see themselves reflected as well in what they learn, when they see themselves reflected in the curriculum, their confidence grows, and they feel empowered to speak out against hatred.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of the antiracism announcement from the Minister of Education, our government also announced funding for hate crime units. Can the minister provide the House with an update on those units?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in co-ordinating our intelligence efforts towards groups that are more systematically promoting hate for political purposes or what have you, it's important that we gather that information together. We have a Hate Crimes Committee, but we want to bring that together with the police and the RCMP, that do gather that information as well, so that we can tighten the noose on these people who use hatred and racism for political purposes.*

Energy Policies

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, when the Energy department appeared before the Resource Stewardship Committee, the deputy minister could not assess a dollar value for the NDP's social licence. Given that the social licence was deemed meaningless by the deputy minister, to the Minister of Energy: when will the social licence be issued, who is supposed to issue it, at what price, and how long is it valid for in spite of the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about what's real, which is the climate leadership plan, the fact that we have already reduced greenhouse gas emissions through our climate leadership plan; that we are seeing $1.4 billion worth of investment in clean tech to help oil sands innovation, for innovation projects to support research, commercialization, industrial energy efficiency, and grants for bioenergy projects that help the agriculture and forestry sectors; $400 million in loan guarantees to support investment in efficiency and renewable energy. We've cut small-businesses taxes by a third . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier's friends and allies and the NDP's fellow world travellers refuse to issue a social licence for pipelines and given that her Trudeau allies have held up construction of three pipelines but chose to impose the painful carbon tax, to the Minister of Energy: who are we supposed to get the social licence from to build the new pipelines? Is it from John Horgan or Jagmeet Singh or Gerald Butts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I noted with interest last week the member's comments on C-69, when he was talking about Trans Mountain, and he was talking about a number of other things. He said about indigenous consultation, "Enough is enough." Now, that is exactly the kind of attitude that doesn't get pipelines built. That is exactly the kind of attitude that drove us into a one-product, one-market, at-one-price situation, which led to a dramatic loss in jobs. Their way forward is no way forward for the province of Alberta.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that I attended Diwali celebrations last night here in Edmonton and given that all those unemployed engineers who were introduced in this House 18 months ago now cannot afford to celebrate Diwali because they continue to be unemployed, Minister, how do we measure and quantify the worthless and nonexistent social licence for the new projects, and how do we get those highly skilled professionals back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the ways we do that is by investing in diversification to make sure that we are broadening the energy economy, adding value to our resources, something that the members opposite have opposed. One of the ways we do that is by investing in efficiency, in renewables, in clean tech, again broadening our energy sector so that Alberta can be an energy economy in every sense of that word, something that the folks opposite oppose. One of the ways we do that is by making sure that good projects go forward like the Imperial Aspen project, which got its final investment decision today, again making sure that we're broadening our energy sector, that we are making sure that good projects go forward. There are a number of different examples.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Economic Development

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From September and October the private sector shed another 10,000 jobs while the public sector added 7,000. The UCP recognizes and values the contribution of Alberta's public servants, but supporting them without cheques written in red ink requires a thriving private sector. This government's debt-ridden recovery has put our public servants and public services at the mercy of creditors and ratings agencies. To the Minister of Labour: what specifically are you doing to improve economic fundamentals in this province in order to drive real recovery in the private sector?

2:30

Mr. Ceci: I think I'll address the credit rating discussion that was part of that whole mix. You know, our province and our government were dealt a really tough hand with the collapse of oil prices, but instead of deep cuts across government and privatization, which would be a problem also for people working, we put jobs and diversification first. Our plan is working. We're seeing the deficit drop $3 billion, Mr. Speaker. We have the strongest balance sheet of any province. I think TD Bank said that our balance sheet is the envy of the country. We're going to keep moving forward with the plan we have for economic diversification.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gottfried: The credit rating is under your watch, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that the NDP is undermining Alberta's entrepreneurs and businesses with burdensome regulations while the job-killing carbon tax has only made the situation worse and given that the NDP's red ink recovery has damaged our economic fundamentals so severely that boutique tax credits are akin to putting a Band-Aid on a critical wound, to the same minister: when will this government get out of the way of Alberta's renowned private sector and let them build their businesses, create jobs, and generate much-needed societal wealth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, a significant part of entrepreneurs out there have small businesses. That's the backbone of any economy, and Alberta is no different. That's why we're putting jobs and diversification and supporting small businesses first. My colleague down there talked about the small-business tax cut, from 3 per cent to 2 per cent, that's funded by the climate leadership plan. Our plan is working: 90,000 full-time jobs last year alone, in 2017. We are going to continue to lead the nation. We're amongst the leaders in the nation again this year. That's going to help businesses.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that both unemployment and the unemployed grow in this province, a robust public sector is only possible if we grow the economic pie, and given that the NDP has chosen to both shrink that pie while coveting a bigger slice for their own coffers and given that something – or should I say someone? – has to give, to the same minister: which taxes will your government be hiking to pay for your red ink recovery? The carbon tax, income tax, some other magical debt-slaying world view tax, or is it all of the above?

Mr. Ceci: You know, the tax advantages of this province over every other province are $11.2 billion, with no sales tax, no health care premiums. There's one more that I've forgotten off the top of my head, Mr. Speaker. Anyway, there will be no areas like that, PST and other kinds of things, that we will bring in. He wants to tax Albertans; we won't do it.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, the government claims to support Alberta's energy industry, but their actions don't always match their words. In fact, their words don't always match the words from just a few months earlier. To the Energy minister: if you support Alberta's energy sector, why have you placed limits on our economic progress with the NDP oil sands emissions cap?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The oil sands emissions limit is in place and has been for a couple of years now, yet we have seen new investments, like the Nexen $400 million expansion at Long Lake, for example. We've seen JACOS make a big announcement as well, and just today we have the final investment decision coming from Imperial Oil on the Aspen project. I mean, just yesterday the UCP leader was cheering for the Aspen project to fail for his own political gain, but today is a different day.

Mr. Loewen: Given that it seems like the Environment minister has the Energy minister's tongue and given that with these projects that are started now, there's been a lot of other investment driven away at the same time, billions and tens of billions of dollars, and given that members of the NDP caucus have protested ethical and responsible energy industry in the past, including the Education minister, who chanted "no more approvals" and has since shown no regret, and given that the NDP has empowered other unapologetic anti-oil activists, will the Energy minister actually support the people in the energy industry by repealing the emissions cap and the job-killing NDP carbon tax?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're fighting every day for what matters to Albertans, and that's market access by getting pipelines, it's diversification, and it's creating those jobs that Albertans want, especially in the energy industry. We're not going back to the boom-and-bust days. That's why we're working on a recovery that's built to last. Jobs are returning, new oil sands projects such as the Aspen project, that's going to be a $2.6 billion investment, hundreds of jobs. It'll be in commission in 2022, and that's all operating under the oil sands cap of 100 megatonnes.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the oil field workers in northern Alberta are overwhelmingly opposed to the carbon tax and emissions caps, so maybe the minister should be talking to them, and given, Mr.

Speaker, that in order to revitalize our energy sector, we need to get better value for our resources, and given that to do this we need to get pipelines built and given that there was no support from this government when Keystone was vetoed and given that the Premier backed Trudeau's cancellation of Northern Gateway, will the Energy minister finally support our energy industry by forcefully and specifically demanding that Trudeau kill his no-more-pipelines act, Bill C-69, and the tanker ban, Bill C-48?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're fighting every day for what matters to Albertans, and that's market access with pipelines, that's diversification, and that's the good jobs that the energy industry brings. Just this morning I was addressing the chemistry industry, talking about Bill 1 that we had last year, that's bringing billions of dollars of investment to Alberta as we speak, and there's more to come. They're keen to invest in Alberta, and that's because we have a forward-looking plan that takes into account doing what's right for the environment as well as bringing investment.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Electric Power Prices

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, as you know, the government capped the electricity rate that consumers pay at 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, which sounds great if you didn't know that the average price that we paid used to be half that amount before the NDP started meddling with the electricity market. To the Minister of Energy: how does she answer seniors on a fixed income when they complain about skyrocketing electricity prices?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we're fighting for what matters for Albertans, and that's also a stable electricity system, stable prices. We're fixing a system that was, quite frankly, very broken. We're capping energy bills. We're bringing in common-sense reforms to make bills more affordable and predictable. When we talk about the carbon levy, we have rebates for seniors that help pay for those bills.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that in Public Accounts Committee yesterday we were presented the actual costs of electricity being charged to Albertans either through rate charges or taxes and given that those prices reached as high as 9.4 cents per kilowatt hour in August this year, can the minister tell us how high she sees these electricity prices going and whether she could table studies showing future increases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that the Conservative members across the way want to defend the price spike system and the backroom deals that were part of the broken system that we inherited. They continue to do that, but, you know, on this side of the House we're on the side of protecting Albertans. We have their backs, and we're going to continue to do so when we're fixing a system that's broken by common-sense reforms and capping electricity prices.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, it is said that hindsight is 20/20 vision, and given that the minister has now seen how high electricity prices have gone, does she still think that this government is making life better for Albertans and especially for those people on fixed incomes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we are protecting Albertans from those wild price swings that were caused by the system that was broken by the previous Conservative government. In capping bills, we are bringing more stability to families. We're bringing in common-sense reforms, a capacity market because on this side of the House we are on the side of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, to the Minister of Education. Junior high school can be a challenging time for students as they prepare for the transition to high school and many begin thinking seriously about their future careers. I know this government is working on modernizing our curriculum, but with government focused on updating what students will learn in early elementary school, significant changes to junior high are years away. What steps is the government taking now to ensure students are supported as they prepare for high school.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good question because, of course, as we build through the curriculum, we're certainly going to make sure we use good ideas that we get along the way straight away in our classrooms, to make sure we improve life for junior high and high school students every step of the way. For example, we've been increasing the dual credit program here in the province in regard to agribusiness and health care and in the trades as well. We're making adjustments to exams to make sure — you know, they have the no-calculator portion in the grade 6 and grade 9 exams so that kids are learning to do math on paper or in their heads. Every step . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Given the recent decline in math scores in grade 9 PATs and given that the transition to high school can be a difficult adjustment for some students, it seems like action on the new curriculum for grade 9 is urgent. Will the minister consider changing the curriculum development process to tackle improved supports for grade 9 students sooner rather than later?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that we were anticipating that the grade 9 no-calculator portion was going to be problematic because it was the first time they were going to do it. We did it last year with the grade 6s, and lo and behold the grade 6s came through with flying colours this year. I would expect the same for the grade 9s next year. However, we want to make sure we're making these changes straight away. It's important to support grade 9 students, so I have directed my department to move the grade 9 curriculum development forward, so the writing will begin for the grades 5 to 9 curriculum this month.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. I want children to get the kind of education that will prepare them to lead our province for a brighter future. I've heard from my constituents that education is a critical priority for them. How is this government supporting the implementation of future curriculums to ensure that there will never again be students learning from a curriculum that's over 30 years old?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This modernization of the curriculum is historic. We're on to all subject areas and all grade levels, and it's a continuous process so that we're always working to move forward on the curriculum so that things don't get stale along the way. I must say – I've said it before; I'll say it again – that what you do not do to forward education is that you do not fire teachers, 4,000 teachers that you would lose taking $700 million out of the budget that potentially could be used for education. That is the wrong way to go.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've been advised that the Minister of Education would like to clarify an answer on question 10.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On question 10, when we were talking about antiracism initiatives, I would like to withdraw my comment that talked about tightening the noose.* My intention was to talk about tightening the net so that we use hate crimes intelligence from all police forces so that we are making categorical changes to ensure the safety of Albertans.

The Speaker: I'm advised that the practice of the House has been that the member who directed the first question would get an additional supplemental. Do you have an additional supplemental question?

The Speaker: Thirty seconds, hon. members.
The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Central Alberta Sexual Assault Support Centre

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fellow members, I would be remiss if I did not embrace yet another opportunity to convey attention to the outstanding organizations that my constituency as well as those encompassing central Alberta draw support from. Friends, it is my pleasure to introduce our Central Alberta Sexual Assault Support Centre. With over 30 years of compassion and caring this organization serves the needs of our Albertans when the unthinkable occurs. They continue their mandate to work collaboratively with community partners to provide a safe haven to those who have experienced sexual abuse or sexual assault, whether the incident occurred recently or decades ago.

Recently, this organization introduced a 24-hour sexual assault text and web chat crisis line to further support those who are victims of sexual crimes. This anonymous, user-friendly method creates an instant resource to assist those who feel that there is nowhere to turn at 3 a.m. or that isolated locations render them powerless. As a result, no one needs to feel that they are alone. With a front line of volunteers, this cost-efficient method provides instant communication and words of encouragement at a time when personal meaning may be challenged or hindered by sexual assault or abuse.

I am proud to share that this year the centre was recognized by our Red Deer chamber of commerce at their business of the year awards. Friends, this was the first year that a not-for-profit category was incorporated, and I commend the innovation, foresight, and immense commitment that the Central Alberta Sexual Assault Support Centre provides to our citizens. They have answered the call to support Albertans by listening and fashioning resources to combat feelings of no self-worth as a result of sexual abuse or assault.

It is my honour to speak to the work of this great organization in the House and to thank them personally for their pledge in supporting victims of sexual abuse and assault.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Métis Week and Louis Riel Day

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we will be away on Friday, November 16, I rise to remind everyone of Métis Week and the Louis Riel commemorative day. The Métis, hidden but in plain sight, are in our military, in our Legislature, and show leadership in many communities. There are eight Métis settlements in Alberta, with over 114,000 people. Métis Week marks the annual celebration of Métis people, their culture and contributions, including special events honouring the anniversary of Louis Riel's death.

Let's step back in history to 1932, when the Métis Association of Alberta lobbied for improved social and economic conditions and a land base for their people. Not until 1985 did Alberta commit to pursue constitutional protection of Métis land in the federal Alberta Act and the passage of the Metis Settlements Act to provide a framework for local self-government on the settlements. In 1990 land was transferred to Métis settlements, resulting in the only recognized Métis land base in Canada protected by legislation.

Last week we raised the Métis flag here at the Legislature to reaffirm our commitment to Métis rights in Alberta. Louis Riel was a champion of French language rights, the founder of Manitoba, a visionary for Métis self-determination, and exemplary of the new Canada.

This week we also celebrate Remembrance Day. Let me remind you of the 20,000 Métis and indigenous men and women who have served Canada by sharing a poem called a Prayer for Métis Veterans.

As Métis we are standing
We'll bow our heads in prayer
God bless those Métis veterans who Saw war and who fought over there.

There are many of them buried
In far-off foreign lands
So proud to serve, because of them
Now Canada's freedom stands.

In prayers we will remember
The awful price they'd pay
They gave up their tomorrows
For us to live today.

Lest we forget, we remember November 11 and 16. Canada's strength is in her people. Among them are our resilient Métis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Diwali

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Diwali, also known as the festival of lights, commemorates the triumph of good over evil. Diwali is celebrated by the Hindu, Sikh, and Jain communities. Many people in Alberta and around the world celebrate this time with candle lighting, family gatherings, reciting prayers, and gift sharing. It is truly a joyous time of year. The Sikh community recognizes this celebration as Bandi Chhor Divas, as on this date 52 political prisoners were released back to the community.

I'd like to personally thank all those celebrating this colourful celebration for their contributions to our province. As we all know, different perspectives enrich our understanding, which is one of the points of this wonderful celebration. Not only is it the celebration of light over darkness but of knowledge and understanding over ignorance.

As we continue to work together to build a better Alberta for all who call it home, it is especially important to me to thank the community for their many social, economic, and political contributions to our province. Each and every community and ethnicity in Alberta strengthens our social and cultural fabric and adds vibrancy to our communities. It is this diversity that helps to make our province such a great place to live, work, and raise a family.

My caucus colleagues and I wish all families in the province a very happy Diwali and Bandi Chhor Divas, and I hope this new year brings joy and success to all Albertans and is filled with good health and prosperity. May the lamps of hope and joy illuminate our lives and fill our days with peace, happiness, and goodwill and may the festival season illuminate our homes and may the light empower us all to continue showing compassion and understanding towards one another.

Happy Diwali.

2:50 Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report recommending the reappointment of the hon. Marguerite Trussler as Ethics Commissioner for a five-year term. Copies of this report are available online or through the committees branch.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to provide notice that at the appropriate time I will move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately prevent Statistics Canada from demanding that banks turn over the personal financial data of their customers, and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to ensure that ATB Financial as well as credit unions in Alberta protect the personal financial data of their customers from being shared with third parties without their consent.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 25

Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 25, the Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act.

Mr. Speaker, on August 2, 2018, the Alberta Utilities Commission approved Turning Point Generation's Canyon Creek application for a 75-megawatt, closed-loop, pumped hydro energy storage project. The AUC determined that the project is in the public interest. The Hydro and Electric Energy Act requires that a bill be prepared in order to authorize a construction order and an order in council to authorize an operation order for the hydro development. The AUC has indicated that their review of the Canyon Creek application considered both the construction and operation of the project.

Passage of Bill 25 would authorize the AUC to make an order for the construction and operation of the Canyon Creek pumped hydro energy storage project. While this act meets our legislative requirements to grant the appropriate authority to the AUC, it does not remove any of the regulatory duties of that body or the Alberta Environment and Parks approval requirements.

Mr. Speaker, this project shows that companies are eager to invest in renewable and alternative sources of energy in Alberta. Privately funded projects like this one will help us transition to a low-carbon electricity system and enhance Alberta's position as a responsible energy producer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with section 19(5) of the Auditor General Act as chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I am pleased to table the report of the Auditor General of Alberta, November 2018. Copies of this report have been provided to all members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table today the requisite number of copies of a news report that I talked about in my questions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an Alberta labour force statistics report referenced in my questions today.

Thank you.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we are now dealing with the motion under Standing Order 42 which was introduced by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, which I think was delivered to everyone. I would allow the opportunity to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to speak to the motion.

Statistics Canada Request for Personal Banking Data

Mr. Barnes:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately prevent Statistics Canada from demanding that banks turn over the personal financial data of their customers, and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to ensure that ATB Financial as well as credit unions in Alberta protect the personal financial data of their customers from being shared with third parties without their consent.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important and urgent priority right now because Statistics Canada is asking banks across the country for financial transaction data and personal information of half a million, 500,000, Canadians without their knowledge to develop a new institutional personal information bank. Unfortunately, this includes personal banking and financial transactions, including bill payments, cash withdrawals from ATMs, credit card payments, electronic money transfers, and even account balances of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, this has created urgency everywhere in Alberta that I've been, but it's also created urgency and concern amongst some qualified Canadians in this business. Statistics Canada has triggered a formal investigation by the Privacy Commissioner, Daniel Therrien, because of their request for personal banking information. Scott Smith, a privacy expert with the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, has warned that businesses are concerned with the requirement to hand over consumer data to the federal statistics agency. He's very concerned that it will highlight the differences between Canadian privacy laws and a tough new law in Europe, and he believes this could even put trade at risk. Of course, we've seen what trade disruption with our NAFTA agreement with America has done for hardship for Alberta commodities, for Alberta families.

Mr. Speaker, it's especially urgent because Albertans are very, very concerned about this. Everywhere I went when we were home last weekend, whether it was a Tim Hortons, a roastery coffee shop, or an event, Albertans were coming up to me, Cypress-Medicine Hatters were coming up to me and saying: "Can we not do something about this? I do not want my personal information to be accidentally leaked. This is my information. This is my information, my information that I have garnered and protected my family with, with my bank." And now we have the Trudeau government once again stepping into Alberta families and lives demanding that banks and credit card companies hand over Alberta's detailed personal financial information – and this needs to be said again – without their consent, without Alberta families and Albertans consenting to this information being distributed.

We hear it every day in here. I heard it two or three times in the government's answers to our questions in question period. The government answers: we are fighting every day for what matters to Albertans; we are fighting for what matters to Albertans. Mr. Speaker, through you to the government: this matters to Albertans. Everywhere I went this weekend, Albertans would talk about the concerns they had with Alberta's economy, with other things going on around Alberta, but it was always mentioned at the same time that they're concerned about what the federal government is doing reaching into their personal information, their personal information that they've developed with a bank or they've developed with an institution, and they feel strongly that it's a massive overreach by Justin Trudeau. Again, this is this NDP government's chance to show that they stand up for Albertans and not with their ally Justin Trudeau.

Mr. Speaker, these concerns of Albertans are not only about government overreach, but there's good cause for concern if this information accidentally gets out in the public, accidentally gets leaked, for the financial hardship that Alberta and Canadian families could suffer, just having to go around and cancel your cards, change your information, protect your family's fiscal future.

3:00

Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you what Ann Cavoukian, a former Ontario Privacy Commissioner, said about this. She said: "It just leaves a bad taste in your mouth, unfortunately, because it seems as if Stats Canada isn't being transparent. When you find out after the fact, it just leaves many questions unanswered, and I think that's the reaction you're seeing now. People are dumbfounded by this. I know it sounds extreme, but you can't rule out what can happen to personally identifiable data, which is very sensitive, that's collected for one purpose and ends up being misused for other purposes." Again, that was Ann Cavoukian, former Ontario Privacy Commissioner.

The Canadian Bankers Association said that they weren't even aware that Statistics Canada was moving to compel disclosure of this information. Think of the cost that'll be pushed back on Canadians, Albertans. Think of the accidents that could happen as this information comes out.

Mr. Speaker, a quick check of security breaches shows how easily this can happen in financial and personal-time hardship to Albertans and all Canadians. The Canadian government's record of privacy breaches just between April 1, 2015, and March 31, 2016, include – and these are only the worst ones – 84 breaches in Veterans Affairs, 50 breaches of privacy in corrections Canada, 47 in immigration, 21 in Canada Revenue Agency, and 17 breaches, not all of them serious breaches, in employment and social development.

Mr. Speaker, I'll just give you a couple of the ones that are amazingly hard to imagine. In 2018 the personal information of 2,027 Canadian federal government employees was lost after a device was stolen from public services at Procurement Canada. The employees weren't notified until more than two weeks after the breach. Can you imagine the financial information that could have been lost, the hardship that some Alberta or Canadian families may be facing now?

Mr. Speaker, in 2016 Statistics Canada lost nearly 600 sensitive files during a census process after confidential documents – confidential documents – were left on a subway, and hundreds were lost after an employee's car was stolen.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe that the data that you're sharing may well be important, but the principle – again, the same as yesterday: you've got to get to the point. What makes it urgent? That's what needs to be decided.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What makes it urgent is that the federal government, this government's good ally Justin Trudeau, is forcing this on over 500,000 Canadians right now, including many Albertans. Albertans are terrified of their information being leaked, and this is this government's opportunity to show that they really are here fighting every day for Albertans.

I ask all my colleagues in this House to support this motion. Thank you, sir.

Second Reading

Bill 24
An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights

Mrs. Pitt moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights, be amended by deleting all words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate November 6: Mr. Cyr]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. Imagine that. Just after my comments in second reading, we get before us a referral amendment. I was talking about how we need to refer Bill 24 to committee for study, and here we are now discussing just that. I believe that this referral amendment is in good order and would be the prudent thing to do in order for all of the unintended consequences that could be present with regard to the AMA representation rights in that we would be able to, through committee, understand more thoroughly what is going to transpire and possibly some of the pitfalls with regard to Bill 24 and improve it through the process of committee, make it better, and serve Albertans in a more wholesome way.

Our people, our researchers, have started checking around with doctors. My colleagues have also been talking to doctors. The doctors we've talked to so far didn't even know that Bill 24 was in the works until it was mentioned in last week's AMA newsletter. I'm sure every member here also gets that newsletter, and I will attest that it was in the newsletter, but apparently Bill 24 has been in the works for some time.

The doctors we were able to talk to or who got back to us in the short amount of time that we've had the ability to speak with them speculated about the different groups that the AMA may be interested in going after for representation. What we see in Alberta right now is that the AMA does not necessarily represent all doctors in the province, and as we move forward, the legislation will encompass all doctors, whether they're members of the AMA or not.

First, we have to understand that a medical doctor is not a doctor until they are told they are a doctor. There are lots of categories of doctors also: in training or doctors that are not quite doctors but are more than nurses. So let's review some as potential new AMA members. Of course, the AMA would like to continue to grow their membership ranks, and we see that there are a lot of potential new AMA members that would possibly be under this legislation.

The AMA may be going after resident physicians, the doctors in training, as a group to be represented even though the resident physicians are currently represented by a group called PARA, the Professional Association of Resident Physicians of Alberta.

Then there are the physician assistants. These people are academically prepared and highly skilled health care professionals who provide a broad range of medical services. Physician assistants act as health care extenders, working under the supervision of a physician to complement existing services and aid in improving patient access to health care. Is the AMA looking to target them also?

We also have the clinical associates. They assess patients, make diagnoses, prescribe treatment, and perform minor surgery under the supervision of a physician. Often these people have been trained as doctors in other countries and are having their skills assessed and upgraded to meet Canadian standards. By definition, these people sure look like candidates also to join the AMA.

Finally, there are the nurse practitioners, registered nurses, RNs, with graduate degrees and advanced knowledge and skills. They are trained to assess, diagnose, treat, order diagnostic tests, prescribe medication, make referrals to specialists, and manage overall care.

Now, the doctors we talked to also expressed puzzlement and wondered why a doctor would never want to be part of the AMA. All of the doctors we talked to were members of the AMA. Membership in the AMA comes with benefits, so all the doctors we talked to felt that all doctors would benefit greatly from being members of the AMA. They have benefits such as a fairly large payout for maternity leave per child, the reimbursement of malpractice insurance, on-call stipends, a flat-fee payment to physicians who practise and also reside in rural, remote, northern program communities, continuing education program, and so on and so on, the benefits of being a member of the AMA. Most doctors would be wanting to become members to participate in those benefits. Of course, we the taxpayers pay for all that.

We have questions about the groups of medical employees the AMA wants to target to recruit to their ranks. We have questions about the benefits the AMA membership gets. So you see why we might want to send Bill 24 to committee. There are always more questions that need answering. We're not sure that all those questions have already been asked. Therefore, there could be some unintended financial consequences here to Bill 24.

Bill 24 was brought forward as part of an agreement between the AMA and the government. In return for bringing this legislation forward, the AMA agreed that doctors would receive no fee increases until 2021. The government has seen this as a way to save $98 million in health costs. They've calculated that they believe there will be $98 million saved over the next three years. The minister talked about saving $98 million in health costs. That is $98 million on a Health budget with an operating expense of just under $21 billion. Therefore, the Health minister is talking about saving less than half a per cent of the Health budget. Actually, if you calculate it out over the three-year period, it's much smaller than that, so relatively small savings but savings nonetheless. The $98 million is slightly more than the entire budget for addictions and mental health, which stands at $86 million, and that number can be found in the Health estimates on page 157.

Do you know what the largest line item is in the Health budget, Madam Speaker? It's physician compensation and development. Physician compensation and development comes in just shy of $5 billion: $4,919,999,000. Just $80 million for mental health and just short of $5 billion for physician compensation, the largest item in the Health estimates. So the Minister of Health is going to save 1.8 per cent on physician compensation with this deal to save $98 million.

That sounds a bit better, but we are going to have to do a lot better to save money in health care overall. It is a start but a slow start. All one has to do is take a look at the age pyramid of the province to see those baby boomers, just like me, marching towards retirement and the ever-increasing needs the baby boomers will face. The front-line workers know where those savings can be found.

Now, the government will crow about 89 per cent of AMA members approving the agreement, but voter turnout was only 30 per cent. Really, only 26 per cent of the current membership approved this plan, so only 26 per cent of the people who receive just shy of $5 billion annually even cared to vote.

Madam Speaker, do you see why we might want to take this bill before committee? These dollar figures are astronomical. We have a Health budget that spends almost $21 billion annually while our tax revenues from all forms of taxation, whether that be personal, corporate, education property tax, carbon tax, and others come to just shy of $23 billion. If not for the natural resource royalties of $3.8 billion, transfers from Ottawa of $8.2 billion, investment income of $2.8 billion, and revenue from other sources of $10 billion plus all the borrowing – we cannot forget about all the borrowing that is currently taking place. How else would the province operate? Health alone gobbles up almost all of our tax revenues.

Madam Speaker, I think I've made my case here as to why we need to send Bill 24 to committee. With a budget as large as Health's and with a spend on doctors as large as there is, just shy of $5 billion, and when the best the Health minister can find is 1.8 per cent of the annual doctors' salary, which is actually spread over three years, and less than half a per cent a year on the total Health budget, we need to have a conversation with the doctors and other stakeholders within the industry.

I would encourage all members to support the amendment to refer this bill to committee. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock's comments today, very thoughtful, on a very important piece of legislation, with lots of questions that need to be answered yet, which I think was the core point of his speech this afternoon. If he would take a brief moment just to expand a little bit on a couple of the things that he raised during his speech that I would be interested in.

He talked in great detail about the question of: what else would be prescribed in regulations if this legislation was passed in the way that it was presented? I'd like it if he would expand a little bit on his concerns on that, maybe even elaborate a little bit on historically what has happened on some of the legislation he's been asked to vote on by this government in his time as a member and then on what he's seen happen or not happen with the regulations side afterwards. Maybe he'll expand a little bit for this Chamber on why that's an important question for the opposition.

Also, you know, the question that he raised about how this could possibly give the minister more power through regulations than we know: I think that's a fair question to make sure that we understand.

Then, lastly, he raised during his comments concerns around consultation. I know you probably get bored, Madam Speaker, when you're in the chair and hearing us talk about that, but in reality we have seen, as you know, this government consistently having to come back in sessions afterwards to fix legislation they brought to the Chamber. Just the other day, on another bill, they managed to catch it in time this time, which was helpful, and they had to change a bill that they had just brought to the House days before.

Maybe the hon. member could expand on those three points a little bit, as he did in his speech. That would be helpful for me.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleague for the questions. Of course, we need to take a look at all of these aspects as the Official Opposition. The government, to a large degree, is asking us to just trust them. We receive these bills, and in a very short period of time, most times the next day, we're discussing bills that are fairly in-depth, that have huge consequences for the people of Alberta. Many times we have the pitfall of legislation that will be enacted that gives the Executive Council significant powers to put forward regulations as they see fit, and this Legislature, the members here, really have no influence on how that is going forward. As Official Opposition members we continue to encourage the government to bring forward these bills in a way that we're able to digest more of it in a timely manner, to have more time to consult with stakeholders, and to receive more information back on how Albertans are viewing these.

We definitely have to be careful, in my opinion, with the powers that we give the minister of any department, a single person, giving them powers to enact these regulations and make decisions on behalf of all Albertans. We need to be very careful that we do not get into a situation where the minister has powers that would not be healthy for our society.

The third thing. With regard to consultations, we have seen time and time again over the last three and a half years legislation being brought forward and that stakeholders within the industry or the profession or the group that's being largely affected by the legislation being brought forward have significant concerns with what is being proposed. Time and time again we as the Official Opposition have asked this government to please put in place the proper consultation so that all Albertans, in a very transparent manner, are able to see that this is good for Albertans going forward. What I'd like to see is the opportunity for Bill 24 to ...

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to the referral amendment this afternoon for Bill 24. I just want to reiterate that this bill and the proposed amendments in the bill really just formalize the government's long-standing practice of working directly with the AMA on matters of physician compensation and physician programs. I just want to remind members that it doesn't really change the existing processes that have currently been in place between the government and the AMA. It doesn't give the AMA any new powers or abilities. Really, it just sort of formalizes a long-standing informal process. This is something the AMA has been asking us for, and, you know, we're here to deliver on that commitment. For that reason, I would encourage members to vote against the referral amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the hon. deputy government whip's comments. I want to reiterate for the Chamber – this is under 29(2)(a), and then I have a question – that this side of the House at first glance actually probably supports this legislation. It was just brought forward by the government. We're obviously doing our due diligence as opposition and talking to some constituents and people that will be impacted, just trying to make sure of that, which is our role.

I'd like the hon. member, though, to maybe expand under 29(2)(a) – or if the minister who has brought forward the bill wants to as well, that would be helpful – on some of the consultation that was done to provide assurances to this House that this should not go to committee. We are speaking about the amendment. It seems to me that you're indicating this does not need to go to committee.

Maybe you could expand on what the government has accomplished or done that would make this side of the House comfortable that our doctors and our constituents have been properly consulted on this piece of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions, comments under (29)(2)(a)? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I do have a question for the hon. deputy House whip. One thing he said there is that this is actually just formalizing already standing practices. I am the Labour critic, not the Health critic, and I know that this is a Health bill, but the question that I have is that from what I read, rather than saying that it formalizes, it actually gives the AMA exclusive – exclusive – rights to represent the physicians of Alberta.

Now the question I have for the hon. member. If, from my understanding, 80 per cent of physicians are members of the AMA, the other 20 per cent, that have elected not to be, are going to be affected by this legislation now. How can he say that there are no changes to the current practices? I know it's only a six-page bill, but in that bill it says specifically that they have exclusive rights to represent physicians. If you could comment and help us understand this, it would do us a lot of good on this side of the House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to respond. You know, I just think it's important to remember a few things that definitely won't help the medical system here in the province: a promise that the legacy party of the members opposite, the Wildrose, had actually planned to send patients to the United States if they weren't able to access health care here in Alberta.

When we're faced with a party on the opposite side who is proposing experiments in privatization with our health care system, that would only put patients at risk. It would allow their wealthy friends and donors to jump the queue and access health care services before everyone else. In Canada health care access is based on your need to access health care and shouldn't be based on your ability to pay. We've got to be really wary about what the Wildrose legacy party and now the UCP has been proposing in terms of the way that they'd like to manipulate the health care system. Sending people to the U.S.: it really just shifts those jobs outside of Alberta. What I would rather see, instead of taking patients away and sending them elsewhere, is to make sure that we have a health care system here in Alberta that works for everybody, that it doesn't matter how much money you have, you are able to access the system just the same as everybody else.

I can tell you that another thing that's not going to help the health care system here in Alberta is the $700 million tax cut for the wealthiest 1 per cent among us. What the members opposite are proposing, in terms of giving tax breaks to their wealthy friends and insiders, is not what our health care system needs. We need to make sure that we're investing properly in our health care system. One of the first actions of our government was to reverse a $1 billion planned cut that the legacy party of the UCP was proposing. We also reversed the idea of having a health care premium, Madam Speaker. Who knows? That may be what they're going to be proposing in the next election. They really haven't made their intentions clear to Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to the referral motion on Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. Our role as legislators and as Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta is to ensure that we're doing everything reasonably practicable to make sure that we are making life better for Albertans. It is important that we have time to consult with stakeholders and Albertans to ensure that their voices are heard and that we have evaluated all potential consequences, both positive and negative, of all pieces of legislation before we vote on them.

This bill is no exception. In my previous time I served in Ottawa for the minister of the environment there. In Ottawa it's a long-standing practice that every single piece of legislation automatically goes to committee for consideration before the third reading. As such, stakeholders are able to come and talk directly on the bill and make sure that most of these unintended consequences are dealt with before the bill gets enacted. I truly believe that that's something that could be very useful for this particular bill, because while on the surface it looks quite benign, we don't know what the unintended consequences are.

Being from Fort McMurray, I've seen first-hand the struggle that rural communities have and face in receiving adequate health care. We far too often face challenges in attracting and retaining doctors and other health care professionals within our region. Often physicians prefer to stay in larger centres for a variety of reasons. This is why I feel that this bill might disproportionately and negatively affect our rural communities. In fact, there are doctors that work within the emergency department of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo's hospital, the Northern Lights regional health centre, that actually fly in and fly out of our community. They live in Toronto, in Calgary. They serve our emergency department, which is wonderful, but this creates some challenges, and it's not an ideal solution.

For example, when I was in grade 3, our family doctor left. This created some struggle, and it took us nearly five years, having a different family doctor almost every single year over those five years, before we could find another family doctor. We celebrated when we got that new family doctor. They left two years later. By the time I was in about grade 9, I gave up on the idea of having a family doctor. I typically just go to walk-in clinics. That's partially due to the struggle we have in recruiting and retaining doctors in many of our rural and northern communities. While this is just my experience, rural Alberta faces a complex range of issues in regard to physician access.

3:30

According to Alberta Health data the number of physicians has dramatically outpaced the province's population growth in recent years. At the same time, the number of doctors practising outside of cities has decreased. There are many challenges in recruiting and retaining doctors in many of our northern and rural communities. This is not just the case in Alberta, but this is a nation-wide problem. There's both a shortage and a maldistribution of the physician supply, with many rural Canadians being disproportionately affected. Forward-thinking strategies, including rural exposure for training and training local students, help to improve this, but we're not quite there yet.

Rural Canadians already experience lower life expectancy, higher infant mortality, higher cancer mortality, higher cardiovascular disease mortality, and higher accident rates. According to a 2017 Canadian Institute for Health Information report, of the 84,000 physicians that are in Canada, 92 per cent of them practise in an urban setting. That's a staggeringly high percentage of our doctors across Canada that practise in urban settings. It's worth noting that while 6 million Canadians live in rural Canada, which represents about 18 per cent, only 8 per cent of our physicians are in rural Canada. That's a 10 per cent differential. Furthermore, when you do a study into how many specialists in Canada practise in rural settings, that drops even more, down to 3.1 per cent. These two facts mean that many rural Canadians must travel to receive the health care they need because so many simple services aren't available. Yet, at the same time, the percentage of doctors has decreased.

In 2012 8 per cent of physicians practised in rural areas. In 2016 this percentage declined in Alberta to only 7.3 per cent. Of the 994 new doctors practising family medicine in Alberta between 2012 and 2016, only 60, or 6 per cent, chose to practise in rural areas. This is really alarming, that many of our new doctors are choosing not to practise in rural areas and are instead choosing to practise in urban areas. This is for a variety of reasons. Many doctors end up staying where they studied because they've started their families, they have their network of friends, and they're used to that lifestyle, having spent many years studying medicine in urban settings.

We've all heard stories in small communities of doctors that have to be on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week without any backups. This is just one of the many reasons that many young physicians are choosing not to take positions in rural communities. They feel that the family balance is not as easily attainable. Furthermore, we've heard that it can be difficult for a surgeon's spouse to find employment within the field of study of their choice within smaller communities. There are a variety of reasons why doctors are not choosing to go to these rural communities.

The College of Family Physicians of Canada in 2016 in collaboration with the Society of Rural Physicians of Canada released a background paper on the challenges for medicine in rural communities. It stated that "Canadians who live in rural communities tend to [have] poorer health than that of their urban counterparts," a disparity that's "directly related to their distance from urban centres." This trend, they found, is particularly severe amongst indigenous populations, which often live in rural and remote communities.

There are just over 10,000 physicians that work in Alberta as of September 2018, and there's only about 7.3 per cent of those doctors that practise in rural communities. Why do this government and the AMA feel that the AMA's role in the negotiating process should be entrenched in legislation? What other negotiating body is threatening the AMA? Why does the AMA need to have exclusive representation when approximately 80 per cent of the doctors already belong to the AMA? Were the 20 per cent that don't currently belong to the AMA consulted on this legislation? Ultimately, if this agreement has been working for the last 15 years, why is it all of a sudden so important to enshrine in legislation? I'm not saying that it's not, but I'm curious as to: why now?

I'm grateful that this bill has found potentially some savings. The government maintains that this agreement leading up to the creation of this bill would result in about $95 million in health care savings. That's outstanding. But is this long-term savings, or is this something that could potentially end up costing taxpayers more when it comes to negotiating future agreements, mitigating any short-term savings?

This bill had five months of negotiation, and the use of facilitators was required to reach the agreement. Five months of negotiation, but only 30 per cent of the doctors voted. To me, that's not good enough. It received 89 per cent support, but that's still 1 in 10 doctors that belong to the AMA that did not support this, as I've previously brought up. Eighty per cent of the doctors do belong to the AMA, but there are 20 per cent that don't. Were these doctors consulted?

The bill ends the retention program that paid doctors about $5,000 to $12,000 a year for each year that they stay in Alberta. Are there risks that this could negatively affect our ability to recruit and retain doctors in our rural and northern communities? To me, there are so many unknowns within this bill. What else is going to be prescribed in regulations? How many doctors were consulted? Were rural doctors consulted? Were rural hospitals consulted? Were rural health providers consulted? What consultations actually went into this bill? What questions were asked during these consultations?

This bill seems to give the minister more power over regulations, and I'm curious if this is actually true. What could all of the unintended financial consequences be? We see short-term savings, but is this actually going to be something that can be maintained? Will this actually save Alberta taxpayers, or will this end up costing us more money when it comes to renegotiation down the line? How will this affect negotiations, going forward, in regard to physician benefits and compensation? What does it do to the 20 per cent of the doctors that don't currently belong to the AMA? Does it make many of them perhaps choose to leave Alberta and go and practise elsewhere? Perhaps they have reasons as to why they didn't want to be part of the AMA. All of these are questions that we really need to be asking ourselves.

It is so important that we take these questions seriously, because our health is something that we can't afford to get wrong. We really can't afford to not have doctors. So many of us in this Legislature represent communities that have countless health care horror stories due to the difficulty in attracting doctors to our communities. Before we can choose whether this is something we can support or oppose, I truly believe that we need a lot more information, and we need the opportunity to consult with stakeholders and the time to do the possible research.

I've personally reached out to a few doctors that I know as well as some lawyers and asked them questions to see what their opinions are of this. But we haven't had enough time to fully consult with enough health care providers, the hospitals and make sure that this bill doesn't have these negative, unintended consequences for our rural communities. It's something that we really need to take seriously. Health care decisions are way too important to get wrong.

While I really do thank the government for their commitment to medical professionals, we can't move forward without some further study or at least some answers to these questions that we've been raising to ensure that this bill is actually positive for Albertans. It's something that's really, really important, and we can't afford to get this wrong.

The current legislation to make the AMA the exclusive representative when governments consult physicians on compensation and benefits: this exists and has been existing for the last 15 years, this relationship. The reason as to why we're doing this now is something that I'm just curious about.

As I stated previously, when I was in Ottawa, it was very common for pieces of legislation – in fact, it was required that all pieces of legislation go to committee and were studied by a multiparty system, where you could bring in stakeholders and ask questions of these stakeholders to examine the legislation. Oftentimes bills changed substantially while they were in committee, and the opposition members or government members would bring forward stakeholders that brought up some very valid points and often made changes that were critically important to preventing the negative consequences that no one had anticipated. That's why I believe that sending this bill to committee to allow us to have a little bit more in-depth consultation would be great. I would be really curious and interested to hear what kinds of consultations went into this bill and how many doctors, how many different health care professionals were actually consulted on this bill prior to it hitting our tables there this week. It's something that I think all of us, on at least this side of the House, are really curious to hear, and I'd really appreciate having some of these answers.

I believe that committee is the best possible place to have this. I'm not saying that this is a bad bill. I don't know. I really want to have some of these questions answered before I make a decision, because I truly believe that it's important to make informed decisions before voting on any piece of legislation.

I would truly, truly appreciate it if all members of this Assembly consider this amendment and refer this piece of legislation to committee. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to be able to respond to some of the questions raised by the hon. member and to give the answers to the questions, fair questions, that she's asked during this stage of debate in consideration of the amendment.

I want to begin just by clarifying and reminding everyone that the reason why we're doing this motion is because we entered into a fair and open and good-faith negotiation with the AMA about the state of health care and their contract here and their rates of compensation in Alberta. This relationship has been in place for many, many years, at least three rounds of negotiations that I've been well versed in, Madam Speaker.

When we were in obviously challenging fiscal times, we went to our labour partners and we said: "We need you to take zeros. Albertans are not in the best state economically right now, and we don't want to enter into more borrowing than necessary. We want to ensure that we continue to improve and protect the services that Albertans rely on. We're not talking about deep cuts that would hurt the front lines, but we do want you to take zeros. We think that that's fair and reasonable."

In consideration of that – actually, in the amending agreement we got rollbacks, which definitely helped us on our path to balance and helped us achieve these $3 billion ahead of projections that we're at today, but also they said: "Okay. Fair enough. We understand that there's a need for zeros." They didn't exactly say it that quickly, but they said: "We want to ensure that we enshrine this relationship, that moving forward the government of Alberta always treats the AMA as a partner at the table and that it's a respectful relationship and it's enshrining the existing relationship that's been in practice in this province for many, many years." Madam Speaker, I think that's a fair price to say: "We're going to continue to have a reasonable relationship with you and a respectful relationship with you, and we're going to honour the role that you have embarked on."

I also want to clarify. One of the questions asked was around the number of physicians. Ninety-six per cent of Alberta physicians are members of the AMA, and those 96 per cent get regular updates through president's correspondence – I think many MLAs get the president's letters as well – and through, obviously, their rep for them and their organizational structure that they have in place. Ninety-six per cent of physicians in Alberta had an opportunity to vote on this. Many did. I understand that it wasn't full participation. But I don't think any of us were elected by 100 per cent of our electorate coming out to elect us, and we still represent those democratic processes that are in place. It did have a very strong vote of confidence from the members of the AMA that chose to vote on it, and I respect their right to ask for this.

This was done many, many months ago. They had lead-up to their vote, then obviously we ratified the agreement, and then there have been many, many months since then, and we certainly have welcomed feedback from anyone who had considerations about it during that period of time. But this was done in an incredibly transparent way through public disclosure, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment? Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate you recognizing me, and I appreciate the chance to rise and speak to the amendment. You know, it's been interesting sitting in here and listening to the debate and the opposition side of the floor coming out with so many reasons as to why this needs to go to committee, as to why this needs to be further discussed, and absolutely clear is our support for our doctors and how good they are, the best in the world, support for our health system, how good it is, support for all our front-line workers but wanting to make sure that we have the opportunity, because we certainly have the time, to get this right. So why not send it to committee? Why not take the opportunity to put this in front of MLAs from both sides, from the parties not in government and have a chance to discuss this with many professionals, with many Albertans, and many other related allied professionals that it could affect?

There are many things that I want to go over, but as my colleague from Fort McMurray mentioned about more of a standard process in the federal government and how it's habit to refer many, many laws, many, many bills to committee, to the opportunity where, in our case, Albertans would have the chance to come in and be fully involved in their province. We as more generalists could hear from experts, could hear from Albertans who know their industry, whose future depends on it, quite frankly, and Alberta's future depends on us getting this right. You know, why not do that at a table where there's time to call in the right witnesses, where witnesses can hear what's going on and come forward, where they can offer all kinds of expert knowledge?

You know, when I was first elected in 2012 – and I always want to say how grateful I am to the people of Cypress-Medicine Hat for this opportunity – one of the first committees I was on was Resource Stewardship, and the committee was very active. It was active equally from the government people and the opposition members. Madam Speaker, I remember us looking at three or four different hydro projects for northern Alberta, for the Calgary area. We even talked about some in other areas like the eastern part of Alberta, and we had experts come in. We had Albertans that knew the impacts, knew the costs, knew the potential come in and tell us about it. We had many First Nations people come in and express their ideas and their opportunities and concerns. It was just a great chance for me, especially being a brand new MLA, and even today, to really listen to those that it would affect the most, to those that it would help the most, and those to make sure that we get it right.

I'm sitting here wondering why this government is not willing to give us the chance to minimize unintended consequences, to get it right. You know, I think I heard that this formalizes a long-time agreement that the government has anyway. Well, if it's a long-time agreement or a long-time relationship or a verbal agreement, what's another couple of months going to take? What's another couple of months going to take when we're here anyway? I see that we don't have night sittings this fall. It's something we could certainly do at night. Certainly, we're here. We're willing. We want to do the very best we can for Alberta. Why not let us?

Let's talk about all our great doctors and all the specialties that are in that incredible profession and all the expert, expert knowledge and all the specialized knowledge. I just can't imagine how a little, six-page bill could possibly encompass everything that's important to our important public servants, essentially, so let's take the time to get that right.

I want to talk for a second, too, about what it says here about the relationship between the AMA and Alberta Health when it does become formalized in this bill. Because we don't have a lot of clarity in the short six pages and we're under the belief that many of the details will be just in regulation, controlled by the minister, controlled by the bureaucracy, controlled by the government, we also think at this point that it means that any independent professional associations, and, our people believe, including the Alberta dental association, can no longer negotiate individually with the government and must go through the AMA. I mean, that's just one of many other good associations and other good professionals that take financial risk, dedicate large parts of their life to very, very aptly and very, very capably serving Albertans.

Madam Speaker, I think back to the last time that this minister and this government looked at changing things with the dentists. I don't know if she's heard as much negativity from the profession as I have about her changes, but my goodness she's not only opening the door for this to happen again; she's doing it without the opportunity of many, many of this great profession to come forward and tell us that they're in agreement or tell us how we can make it better. I see that as such a missed opportunity. I wonder why the government would take that risk. I wonder why the government doesn't want to get this as good as possible.

I feel the need to tell a few horror stories, and I think back to health care. I don't know what all the motivation was when the regions were basically eliminated and AHS, Alberta Health Services, was set up, and the unintended consequences – my colleagues use those words lots; I want to use those words lots – that it caused. You know, I've said it in the House before, Madam Speaker, that when I talk to AHS employees in Cypress-Medicine Hat, tremendously hard-working, you know, wanting to give Albertans the best service they can, they talk about the stories about how procurement is so offside, how when they need a little bit of glue, they have to wait two weeks before a big case finally arrives. They end up opening one of the big cans and basically shelving the rest or putting it somewhere where it won't do anybody any good. Can you imagine this kind of thing happening with expensive medical supplies?

My favourite is the one in the Medicine Hat hospital. I haven't heard this one for a while, so hopefully AHS fixed it, but it used to be that when the parking arm broke and you couldn't get out of the parking lot, you'd push the button, and a person would come on and say: "Oh, I'll come right down, and I'll fix that for you. By the way, I'm in Red Deer. I'll be there in five hours." These are the kinds of things that happen when you don't do things right, and as people on both sides of the floor have said, our health service, the physical and mental and health of Albertans, especially our seniors that built this province and our youth, is too important not to get this right.

I'm really, really glad that so many of my colleagues talked about the risk with rural communities and how this may disproportionately affect service to rural Albertans through doctors' services.

The Bow Island hospital – and there are so many good things to say about those people; they're so independent, they're so hard-working, they expect so little – is just going through a process where they started to lock the emergency door at 5 o'clock. Can you imagine – can you imagine – a real emergency and you can't get your loved one or yourself in the door? I will give our Alberta Health Services people down south tons of credit. They've been made aware of this problem. We've discussed it with them. They're working on a solution. They have a solution. But this, Madam Speaker, is exactly what me and my colleagues are talking about. This was done without realizing the huge impacts it could have on an Albertan, an Albertan family, somebody in crisis, somebody at the worst time for them, unfortunately. Yeah, we'll correct the problem after, and I believe Alberta Health Services will get there, but we don't need to do it after.

It's like this bill. We don't need to do it after. We can send this to committee, we can bring in the experts, we can bring in the dentists, we can bring in professionals and allied professionals from all other representative groups that the AMA is purporting to represent, and we can hear what's important. We can get this right. Madam Speaker, why would we not put in that month or two when we're here anyway, when the government doesn't have us sitting at nights, when we all want to do the best we can for Albertans? That makes zero sense.

We've talked about how rural Albertans, again, you know, don't have access to as many doctors. This agreement talks about some uniformity, some maybe consistency, but that may have a negative impact on a rural doctor, who out of necessity may need to be on call a lot more, who out of necessity may need to see a lot more patients, who out of necessity may have to look for a locum and pay more out of his or her pocket to make that happen. Madam Speaker, I don't know. I don't think the government knows. Let's send this to committee, and let's find out. Let's spend the time to do that right.

While we're here, maybe this bill can encompass – I mean, I understand that universities are more directly responsible for who gets into medical school and who doesn't. But one of the things that surprises me the most, and maybe this bill could improve it, especially for rural Albertans and rural Alberta, Madam Speaker, is the number of young people from Medicine Hat – and I'm talking 10, 20, 30 of these young people that I've met over the last six years – that have, like, 4.0 grade averages, 3.9, are the smartest young people anywhere in Alberta, Canada, in the world, that want to get into medical school and can't.

Dr. Swann: They've got to have more than marks.

Mr. Barnes: Well, I'm hearing there has to be more than marks. Of course there does, but we also know that parts of rural Alberta are short of doctors, whether it's because of rationing or limitations the government has had to put on to control spending.

The fact remains – the fact remains – that we need a more transparent system there, and we need more opportunity, Madam Speaker. We need more opportunity for young Albertans that just want to give back to other Albertans in Alberta. We need more opportunity for them to do that, for them to reach their pinnacle, for them to service Albertans. I don't see that anywhere in this bill. Maybe the AMA wants the same. Maybe the AMA can help us. Surely that's a question that somebody can ask at committee. Somebody can answer it. We can make this better, better for Albertans.

I also, you know, have some concerns about choice for Alberta doctors.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that I was very enlightened by what my colleague had to say. He had some good points. I think that we all can agree that utilizing our committees as they were intended, which is to discuss legislation within this Legislature, is important. Something that is as important as moving our doctors into a potentially unionized environment is a concern, I think, that all Albertans have if it's not done correctly. That is where a committee would be an excellent route to go. I have to say that whenever we've got a bill that seems to come before this House, the government seems to have trouble doing the appropriate consultation it needs in order to be able to get the bill right the first time. [interjections]

Mr. Hunter: That's funny. Sadly, they think that's funny.

Mr. Cyr: Well, yeah. Unfortunately, it does seem like this is a bit of a joke for the government right now.

I will tell you that what isn't funny is that this could actually impact our health care system if we get this wrong. We will end up with, potentially, doctors that are unhappy.

I asked specific questions on the referral last time. I'd asked for the government to come back with answers. There's almost going to be $100 million worth of savings. I have to admit that when it comes to this government, it seems like the only thing they can do is spend, but in this case they're actually looking for efficiencies within the system, and I commend them on that. The problem is if that $100 million comes out of rural Alberta. That was my question before: if we're going to be finding $98 million in savings, where is that money coming from? Will we end up putting rural Albertans at risk because we can't find doctors?

I have to say that it's disappointing whenever we've got something as important as doctors coming before the House. This is a good thing that would be discussed thoroughly through a committee setting.

I have to say that whenever I discuss doctors in my constituency, one of the things that continues to come up is that the city of Cold Lake has a lack of doctors. It has had a long-term lack. It has been a long-standing problem within the constituency. I heard from the member before when she was talking about being unable to find doctors in her constituency. In mine, the only way that we were able to get a family doctor is that we were blessed with my wife getting pregnant. Apparently, if your wife is pregnant, a doctor has to be made available. That was the only way that my family was able to get access to a physician.

This is a problem that already exists. My concern here is that if we move this forward and we go to a standardized, set pay scale for the doctors in rural Alberta, are we going to be ensuring that these doctors move to somewhere that is – I guess we've heard over and over again – more urban? We already heard that the majority of doctors favour our urban settings, which is fine. I understand wanting to live in Edmonton or Calgary or Lethbridge or Grande Prairie. The thing is that they're wonderful cities, and I can see why physicians would want to live in them, but we do need health care outside of those major centres. If we get this wrong, that means we're going to see a migration – it may not be today, it may not be tomorrow, but it's going to slowly happen – and then through attrition we're going to see less and less doctors available, and that is unfortunate.

The question I have for my colleague is: do you see attrition happening within Alberta if we get this wrong?

Mr. Barnes: Thanks to my colleague for the question. I appreciate it. Well said. A couple of things that were cut off when the bell went . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Dr. Swann: Well, Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to speak not only to the amendment but to the bill itself. I've never been a member of the AMA – I chose to be independent – but I know that the AMA has played a critical role in terms of negotiating with the government of Alberta over the years in establishing a fee schedule that they can live with and also in establishing some variance on that fee schedule and is involved in the capitation system, where, on a particular roster of patients, a physician would get a certain amount of money and therefore is more free to provide a range of services rather than just one-off services driven by volume, where his income is driven by volume.

I'm also aware that over the years there have been some disparities develop in the Alberta Medical Association. Certainly, some specialties are, I would say, inordinately valued, and their billings are significantly higher than in other areas of medicine. Historically, too, some specialties have gone directly to the ministry to negotiate their fees separately from family physicians, for example, who are part of the AMA. Their fees are negotiated as with most of the various professions within the medical profession, are covered by the AMA.

So what's developed is a sense of inequity and favoured access for some specialties over others, and that's part of a problem that's divided the profession and pitted one group against another. That has not been helpful not only to the building of a stronger sense of mutual support and fairness within the association, but also it has meant that when medical students look at the levels of income – and they're obviously faced with student debt, a new practice, perhaps buying a house, starting a family – one of the first things they might have to look at is what kind of income they're going to receive. The disparity is growing as a result of having several negotiating groups acting independently in the medical association.

This will bring that all into line. This will provide for a single negotiating team from the Alberta Medical Association. It will, I think, help to bring a little more fairness, I hope, a little more consistency in how we are dealing with each individual branch of the medical professions, and I think it will reduce some of the conflict and rivalry that goes on in any profession where some are more equal than others. It's long overdue. It's something that the AMA has agreed to and the majority of the physicians, I gather, have also agreed to.

I don't see a downside and I see only a positive to this myself. I think we will be better served by a unitary negotiating body. It's been acting in that way as well as it can, but there have been factions within the Medical Association that are in some ways going around the AMA and therefore creating some inconsistencies, some perceptions of inequities, some rivalries, and that has to stop.

In my view, this is important legislation not only for patients but to help physicians start to move towards what are considered more equitable deals in terms of their salaries and incomes and what is a more open and transparent process rather than what often may happen, which is deals being made in more private negotiations with certain specialties. So this is progress. I've watched this evolve over 25 years, and it's not getting better. I'm happy to see that the minister has done her due diligence here and consulted with the profession. From my point of view, the sooner we do this, the better

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I really appreciate the hon. member being a doctor, being able to stand up and give us some clarity on this. I know that having someone who's been in the industry as long as he has, having the experience he has: he knows the inner workings. We've often said on this side of the House that the people who are the closest and fighting the fights in the trenches will know best how to be able to move forward.

Some of the things that, I guess, are questions that I do have, Madam Speaker, for the hon. member. He said that we're moving in the right direction, it's been 25 years in the making. I guess the question that I have is: if 98 per cent of the doctors and physicians are part of the AMA, why hasn't this happened until now? I mean, we're three and a half years into the NDP's mandate, so this is something that probably would have been, in my opinion, brought forward right at the beginning if this is, again, 25 years in the making.

As much as I respect the position that this is the right direction – once again, I think we've heard from most of the colleagues here that have spoken, on this side of the House at least, that we haven't made a decision on whether we'll be supporting this bill or not – one of the problems that we face, Madam Speaker, is that when we do ask questions, the Member for Banff-Cochrane, I believe, would stand up, and rather than answering the question, we get again these hyperpartisan responses. You know, again, these are benign questions. They're not intended to cause concern for the members in the government side. These are just asking for clarity.

One of the problems and the reasons why we've said, "Let's refer this to the committee" is because we are trying to get information so that we can do our jobs as MLAs and representatives of the people of our ridings. I think that probably the best presentation that we've seen here today is by the hon. member from the Liberal Party, being a doctor, getting up and saying that this is something that he thinks is good for the health care profession and good for physicians and for Albertans and the reasons why he believes that.

It would have been nice if, when we asked our questions under 29(2)(a), we had received some answers from the members opposite. Actually, I do believe that the Health minister did get up and did answer one of the questions. But, again, the question that I still haven't been able to receive an answer to and would love to receive an answer to from the people who have crafted this bill is: if the Health minister said that the formalization was a concession for zeros by the physicians, how is formalizing this a concession? What is it about the formalization of this that actually is a concession to the physicians? Is it that it hasn't been working, that the negotiations haven't been working, so formalizing this ties the hands of the government more so that it's in the benefit of the AMA or the physicians in negotiations? Again, all that information, Madam Speaker, has not been provided to this House and to the members of this House.

If the member is willing, I would love to hear his position on some of these questions that I have.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. These are legitimate questions. The other question I have and that isn't clear to me is just how much this might influence the self-regulatory control of the profession. How much might this provide access to information and powers to the government that might be seen to be a threat to the profession? I haven't heard back yet from the AMA. They're responding to some of my questions about their comfort or not with this bill. I believe that in the main they are comfortable with the bill. It isn't yet clear in my mind to what extent they may be surrendering some self-regulation, some self-governance, but I don't see it in this current draft. I don't see any threat to self-governance and self-regulation in this. I see it as a result of good-faith negotiations on both sides.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise in the House this afternoon to speak to the referral amendment on Bill 24. Bill 24, if passed, will amend the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act as well as the Regional Health Authorities Act. It will formalize relations between the government and the Alberta Medical Association, or AMA. Bill 24 will also legislate the AMA as the negotiating body under which all health professional unions must negotiate. If I understand it correctly, the other unions will fall underneath the AMA, and this gives the AMA the power to negotiate on behalf of any group that falls under its authority as long as the majority of its members approve.

As I studied Bill 24, one positive I can pull out is that there will be no fee increases until 2021. I believe this was part of the agreement that the government was able to strike with the AMA.

Now, the government estimates that it will save $98 million in health care costs. I believe that we have to be fiscally responsible, and any measure that can save the taxpayers money, I think, is a good thing. At the rate that the NDP government is spending, though, we'll be racking up $96 billion worth of debt in our near future. Of course, the savings that this agreement will create is just a drop in the bucket relative to the financial mess this government has brought into this province. However, it's always small steps and small savings that we need to do, and if we achieve enough of these, we'll be able to slowly tackle the debt the province has given us. If only the government could be fiscally prudent with all of the decisions they make and all of the legislation that they've introduced in this House, perhaps we wouldn't be in the mess we are in right now.

Of course, we don't know the full financial implications of this bill. Send it to committee. The government says that they are short-term savings, but will there also be savings in the long term? We don't understand that yet; another reason why my colleagues have suggested: send this bill back to committee. Let's understand the full process. Are there long-term savings? We don't know.

Madam Speaker, we know that 30 per cent of AMA members voted; 89 per cent approved the agreement that led to this Bill 24. That is very strong support. However, it can be a little concerning that only 30 per cent of the members voted. Thirty per cent. That means that 70 per cent didn't vote. In an ideal world we would be able to get feedback from all doctors and professionals involved. However, I understand that isn't always possible, and the physicians that gave feedback did vote in favour of this agreement.

Madam Speaker, this is one of the reasons why I'm supporting this referral amendment. We need to hear from all stakeholders involved in all decisions of this bill. Thirty per cent is all who participated, which could give us a good representation of all of the professionals, but it may not. We need to ensure that a good sample is conducted and that a majority of the doctors are in full support of this bill. For example, one question we could ask is: did the government and the Alberta Medical Association hear from rural physicians? I believe that it is important as legislators that we hear feedback from stakeholders publicly. Send it back to committee. That is why I believe it's important to refer this to committee. Bill 24 makes some very consequential changes, and I believe as legislators we need to give it due process.

We should be doing this with all legislation that comes through this House. We know that the government has done a poor job in the past of consulting with stakeholders and ramming through their agenda, but we are here to represent Albertans' best interests, and that's all Albertans, not just special-interest groups or those who have an in with the government. Rather, we need to take proper time to talk to our constituents, consult with them, and hear from stakeholder groups in the matters that we are debating in this House.

When a bill is introduced in this House, as legislators we need to be able to hear feedback from all Albertans. Bill 24 was just introduced last week. This gave us just a little bit of time to review the legislation and talk to our constituents. It's only been a week. However, with a consequential bill such as this we need more time to get it right, and, really, one week just isn't enough time to fully consult with all stakeholders and the constituents that will be affected. I think it's prudent that we consider sending this bill back to committee for that reason alone. One week is just not a significant amount of time, enough time for us to gather the information that we need to provide feedback to our constituents.

Madam Speaker, that's what committees are for, to hear from stakeholders and those closest to the decisions that are being made. It's all done in a public forum so that Albertans can hold us accountable for the decisions that we make and the results of the committee study. Accountability. Transparency. Hmm. I believe that we need to use committees more in this legislative process. The government has seldom used committees when pushing through their legislative agenda.

I've experienced this with my private member's bill, Bill 201. It got dragged through committee. Hey, I think the committee did excellent work, and I agreed with their outcome on that. That's what committees are for. But this government doesn't want to use the committees on their side, just on our side for some reason. We've seen many times where the government has introduced a bill, passed it in this Legislature – and it has come into effect – only to realize later that perhaps they got a few things wrong.

We can't afford that. This is too, too important a bill. Our constituents expect better of us. A really good way to avoid doing that in the future is to actually use the committees that are set up so that the government can get legislation right the first time. Let's take some time, and let's do this right. I think it's extremely important that we hear back from stakeholders, and that's what committees are for. As MLAs we've got a job to do, and we in the opposition are happy to spend time discussing legislation in committee to ensure that we get it right, get it right the first time.

Madam Speaker, there are many instances from this government where they did not consult properly with stakeholders. Let's look at the carbon tax. It got pushed through, and if they had listened to Albertans and given due process, maybe we could have reconsidered introducing the carbon tax. But we all know that did not happen. The reality is that the carbon tax has cost Alberta families a lot more than they anticipated. It's hurt families. It's hurt investment coming into Alberta. Billions of dollars of investment capital has moved out of the energy sector and moved into the U.S. market as a direct result of the carbon tax. Members in opposition here are representing our constituencies. We voiced opposition to the carbon tax; however, government members supported the bill, and the carbon tax got pushed through.

Another example we can bring up about the government's lack of consultation is regarding the increase in minimum wage. I've heard from dozens of small-business owners in my constituency that the increase in minimum wage, the recent increase in minimum wage, has impacted their bottom line substantially and cut back now on the level of service they're providing their customers and their profit. This is a double whammy: a carbon tax, increase in minimum wage. Consult with people first. Another example. You know, if the government had brought the decision before a legislative committee, they would have heard the concerns from small businesses and how it would have affected them. But they didn't. They just brought it in ideologically, forced it through the House, and now businesses are suffering. But as it turns out – again, no agenda, no regard for the people that are being affected.

Now, Madam Speaker, this is not to say that this is the case for Bill 24. It could be very well the case that the government consulted fully with stakeholders and took their feedback seriously. However, I believe it would be more prudent to refer this to committee and allow us all to fully understand the true impact of Bill 24 on all constituents, not just the doctors but all the people affected by it.

I'm sure the government has done plenty of consultation with physicians and other health professionals regarding this bill, with 89 per cent of the doctors voting in favour of this agreement. I'm sure that there were plenty of stakeholders that would be pleased with this legislation. However, we may never hear all of the feedback that the government has received from the stakeholders. Why not? That is what we need to hear. We need to hear feedback from the stakeholders and the public. Have a public forum so that all Albertans can have confidence that as legislators we're taking the right steps with this legislation.

Madam Speaker, Bill 24 looks to have some positive elements to it. The health care cost savings are something that I think all members of the House would agree on. However, I still have many questions regarding this bill that I think need to be heard and need to be addressed before we can proceed. For example, have we heard from physicians in all areas of the province? I mentioned rural physicians. I don't know of any rural physicians in my constituency that were consulted. Anybody else? No. Why does the consultation agreement between the government and the AMA need to be formalized at all? Under the opt-out provision, why would any physician want to opt out if they're still bound to the agreement? Even though you don't belong to the union, you've still got to pay union dues. That is why I will be supporting the referral amendment, so that we can get proper consultation with all stakeholder groups.

Madam Speaker, in closing, we still have many questions regarding this bill, and I don't feel comfortable carrying on without proper study. I hope that the government will consider a referral motion, giving us time to take in the feedback from all stakeholder groups. Let's send this back to committee.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate being able to hear from my hon. colleague from Highwood. One thing that I heard him say was that 89 per cent of the AMA members voted, but from what I understand, I'm not sure whether or not that's what we've heard. What we've heard is that actually 30 per cent of its members took part in that vote, which, in my opinion, is more evidence and reason why we need to send this to committee, because if only 30 per cent of its members actually took part in the vote and 89 per cent of those voted in favour of it, it is, from what I understand – 30 per cent as a sample group is not bad. But once again, being able to know for sure that this is what physicians want and want to move forward on and that the questions and concerns specifically, I think, in regard to rural physicians have been met: this is something that I think going to committee would provide.

I would like to ask the hon. Member for Highwood his thoughts on whether or not he felt that that sample size is adequate to be able to truly say that this is what AMA members are looking for.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. The concern we have is that I don't think 30 per cent is the right number. It means 70 per cent did not participate. That being said, I'd like to see some of the information from some of the stakeholder groups that they had solicited, if they did, specifically in the rural sectors because in the rural constituencies a lot of doctors are working long hours, hard hours, and they're being affected by this, but maybe they did not have the opportunity, probably didn't have the opportunity to provide some feedback to this government. Now, show us the documentation. Show us the results. Give us the data. Take this to committee and show it to all legislators and all members of the public that will be affected by this.

This is serious legislation. One week is not a significant amount of time for us to even consider what the end result will be. Play the movie out. What does it look like? What does success look like? What we've seen up till now with this government: by ramming legislation through and not taking it to committee, there have been repercussions, serious repercussions. Madam Speaker, I don't think Albertans deserve that. I think they deserve better, and my concern is that if we continue in this direction without proper consultation, without proper feedback, that long-term effect is going to be extremely negative to a lot of people, not just physicians but, obviously, the stakeholders and constituents. I mean, they talk about going to the United States for medical treatment.

Well, I had the privilege of going through the health care system about a year and a half ago, where I'd be waiting six months just to see a specialist just to have an interview, another year before my spinal surgery would be able to take place. When I called down to the clinic in Arizona, they could do that in 24 hours. Why? Like, this is what boggles my mind. Instead, what they want to do is that they want to fill the old guy with painkilling drugs long enough so maybe he'll just shut up and put up with the system. But waiting a year, three, four, six months just to see a doctor or a specialist and then waiting another three months for his results and then another year later for surgery: this isn't a health care system that works effectively. It's broken. We need to get down to the details. This is a serious business, and I've experienced it personally. Believe me, Madam Speaker, it's not something I would wish on anybody. I managed to get through the other side. It did work in the end. But, wow, the treatment during the process was horrific, and I don't wish that on anybody.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Madam Speaker, thank you so much for giving me the opportunity to speak. Certainly, I rise to speak to the referral motion for Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. My staff has certainly gone to great lengths to put together notes for me, which I'm sure I am going to get to.

I'm going to support this motion. I think it's important regarding consultation. I want to address a couple of the, I guess, comments that I've heard in this Chamber over the last short bit of time. As my friend from Cardston-Taber-Warner indicated in regard to the Member for Banff-Cochrane and the hyperpartisan remarks, we're really just asking simple questions, especially when we're just talking right now about consultation.

You know, Madam Speaker, I am just a simple police officer. I was a security guard. I did shift work for, like, nearly 20 years. My father was in the military and police, grandfather was in the military. I come from a working-class family, so I'm a little, quite frankly, tired of hearing about all these alleged rich friends that I have when most people that I know are teachers, are nurses, some doctors, certainly people that are neighbours and friends and from the community. So I hope that we can really just truly get to the issue at hand, especially when we're talking about Bill 24. Again, I think this is a very important referral.

Now, the minister also had mentioned consultation. You know, I think I've said in this Chamber before, Madam Speaker, talked about the importance of consultation and kind of the unintended consequences of lack of consultation. I think I've also spoken in regard to the committees and how successful they can be, ensuring that all sides are heard on a particular subject, especially one as important as health care.

Now, my friend from Highwood, the Member for Highwood: I thought it was very fascinating that he had indicated – and if I am wrong on these numbers, I certainly would appreciate the government correcting the record. When I hear numbers like only 30 per cent of the total number of physicians voted and that, you know, 89 per cent of the 30 per cent voted yes, which – again, no math major, Madam Speaker. From my perspective it appears to be a low number of physicians that actually participated in this vote and this consultation. I certainly would like to know if all doctors – and I think this is important, especially because it affects all doctors – were consulted and were at least made aware of an important bill such as this.

Now, if I was to listen, as I did, to what the minister indicated to me, it was a very exhaustive consultation. It sounded to me like there was a lot of back and forth and that there were certainly a lot of folks that were involved in this. One can only be led to believe that the people that the minister was negotiating or talking with were representatives of the – again, please correct numbers – my understanding is over 14,000 physicians that currently practise in this province, which is certainly an outstanding number.

I guess what I do have a concern with is that, you know, when we get this bill presented in the Legislature and my staff and all my colleagues' staff attempt to contact stakeholders in the community on short notice in the evenings, in the mornings, everyone who should be consulted was consulted. I have had some feedback. I do have at least a couple of physicians that I was able to get hold of. One was able to respond back to me. I think where I have a concern, Madam Speaker, is that when somebody who is a family physician, president of the Canadian Society of Hospital Medicine, indicates to me that he's not currently involved in the negotiations – he read both the act and the Alberta government media release only after I let him know that it had come out. He was not aware of this change and certainly – maybe I won't go into it at the moment – expressed concerns.

Is that consultation, Madam Speaker? When somebody who, let's see, has a bachelor of science, master of science, an MD, CCFP, FCFP, SFHM; staff physician, Beaumont medical clinic, Foothills medical centre; clinical associate professor, University of Calgary; and president of the Canadian Society of Hospital Medicine, when somebody like that says, "I wasn't aware of this," that should give everyone in here pause, everyone, including the folks on the government side, to say: "Hey, wait a second. Maybe not everybody was consulted on this." It's important that people like this – this gentleman here has more credentials and letters after his name than

I have in my entire name. Yeah. This is somebody that is highly respected in this province and certainly in the medical profession itself, and he was not aware of what was going on here.

So I see no issue with anyone in this Chamber to pause this – we are going on a constituency break – to sit there and say: “Hey, wait a second. Let’s just make sure that all physicians, especially one that represents other physicians, are fully aware of what this bill is, what possible changes are indicated in this bill, and that the government gets buy-in.” I don’t think anybody in this Chamber, I don’t think anybody in whatever profession that they belong to wants something that is even perceived to be forced upon them, let alone be blindsided. My take on this e-mail and certainly comments that have been made to me is that certain folks within the medical community are blindsided on this. Although I can appreciate that a select group of people were contacted – and, again, the perception is that a select group of people appear to have voted on this – based upon the information that I have, I would argue that medical professionals, physicians were not just not consulted but were not even made aware of this bill and what the contents of this bill are.

Again, Madam Speaker, this is one of those things that gives me great pause. I think that doing due diligence, ensuring that the government and those involved get the appropriate buy-in – because I think it’s important that if you’re going to have any form of success, you achieve buy-in with the stakeholders for which you are representing.

Now, Madam Speaker, one of the other things that gives me a little bit of pause here is that, you know – and, again, numbers can always be slightly different, but my understanding is that the AMA represents about 14,000 doctors. Even if we say that 14,000 participated in this – but based on the information I have, I find that that may not indeed be the case. But if we assume that they were, then I see numbers such as 12,460, which would be 89 per cent of the 14,000. That still leaves me pause that you’re still looking at numbers like more than 1,500 would not be supportive of this. We’re not talking about small numbers. And I get it. What the minister said is correct, to suggest that not every single person in a constituency voted during the election. I get it, right? But, again, it goes back to what I was trying to say, which talks about people that you would believe should know what was going on with a bill of this sort of magnitude were completely unaware of what had transpired and what was really dropped upon Alberta over the last, short few days.

Madam Speaker, again I would encourage everyone in this Chamber to give pause. As my friend from Cardston-Taber-Warner indicated, this is something that does not require urgency. It is something that, as was indicated, is a long-standing practice – that’s what I think somebody had mentioned on the government side – that they’re enshrining. Okay. Well, if that is the case, then there is no rush. There is no rush to, you know, put this through the House, to vote on it today, tomorrow. I mean, again, ensuring that we have the necessary consultation, ensuring that all of the stakeholders, all of the medical professions or certainly people that are involved in the medical profession are consulted on this, have their input – you know what? If the government talks to these individuals such as the person that I mentioned, maybe they do achieve the buy-in. That’s fine. If this is a practice that’s been long-standing, again that’s all fine. You know, nobody has indicated that they’re against doing something that is good for the medical profession.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just want to begin by clarifying and reminding folks that joining the AMA is a personal choice for each physician, but currently 96 per cent of the physicians in Alberta do belong to the AMA. Today if a physician chooses not to belong to the AMA, they still work under the terms and conditions reached within the AMA agreement. We are proposing that this legislation will formalize this practice as it’s our belief that negotiating with a single entity ensures fairness, consistency for physicians. That will continue to be the case. This isn’t changing practice.

I also want to remind or maybe clarify for folks who don’t know that the AMA communicates with its members. The AMA has president’s letters that go out monthly, that talk about things like the negotiation process and what the terms are within the new agreements that people have the opportunity to vote on. This was voted on back in the spring, Madam Speaker, so this is something that members had the opportunity to engage on at that point and certainly at any point before or after that as well through their professional association, that being the AMA.

I just want to give an example. I know that the Member for Calgary-West was elected in 2014. I looked up the by-election results. There was a 35.7 per cent voter turnout, and that member got 44 per cent of the vote for those who turned out. And he rightfully was the person to receive the most votes. Even though only 35.7 per cent of voters turned out, he certainly earned his seat in this Chamber. I don’t think anyone would say that he should go to committee and consult with people from his constituency before he can have the opportunity to represent folks. He was elected through a democratic process.

There was a democratic process that ensued as a result of a fair and reasonable negotiation that resulted in efficiencies, zeroes, and formalizing the current relationship. I just want to reiterate that this isn’t about giving new powers or new processes. This is about formalizing what, I think, were a very respectful two rounds of negotiations in the term of this government that resulted in savings for Albertans, that resulted in no reduction to services but, in fact, in many areas increased services throughout the province. All that the physicians are asking for in return through this bill is to respect that we will have fair and reasonable negotiations. I think that that’s something reasonable for us to continue to have as we move forward.

Negotiation was perhaps an overstep. Consultation, Madam Speaker, because, again, just to reiterate, this isn’t actually a union. This is a professional association that we engage with in a very professional and respectful way. I’m really pleased that the consultation has in many ways over the last two years resulted in what felt like a good-faith negotiation, to be frank, even though it was not indeed a negotiation. It was an engagement. That’s what this bill outlines.

Again, physicians are members of the AMA. They were contacted by the AMA about this whole process. It was definitely something that was discussed a lot in the lead-up to the recommendation to ratify the agreement that they reached. It was through their communications with their president, and members certainly have an opportunity to do so. Any physician in Alberta who wants to engage with their association has the opportunity. Not everyone chooses to take that opportunity, and that’s their own choice.

I respect the 35.7 per cent of voters who came out and voted in the Calgary-West by-election, and I respect the physicians who chose to vote for the ratification of the AMA agreement. Part of the terms of that agreement were that we would bring forward legislation this term, and I am honouring that negotiation, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

4:50

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I certainly do not want, and I hope I did not hear this correctly, that the minister was in any way insinuating that this person who I reached out to did not receive an e-mail, may have ignored the e-mail or, in any way, was not properly notified. This is a very qualified individual who was not made aware of this bill. He clearly represents other physicians; president of the Canadian Society of Hospital Medicine. So if he is not aware of this, then it's only reasonable to assume that other physicians are not aware of this bill. It would only make sense that we would consult and make sure that this is sent to a committee so that we can get the proper consultation on this particular bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: It was absolutely not my intent to say that that member wasn't notified . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to stand and speak in favour of this referral motion to Bill 24. When we first came into the House to discuss and to debate this bill, we had, obviously, questions that we wanted to go through with our staff, with other colleagues. We sat around the table, we talked about what we see this bill doing and not doing, we talked about the pros and the cons, and truthfully, we had not been able to figure out whether or not this is something that was going to be good or bad because there were just so many questions that we had. The value, in my opinion – and I talked about this earlier this morning – to what we're doing here is the opportunity to be able to stand up, to have debates back and forth. The full Westminster parliamentary system that we have is designed to help us to debate these things so that we can come up with the best practices.

We've gone back and forth. We've had the opportunity to hear from the hon. minister, the Health minister, which I appreciate and I know that the colleagues on this side appreciate. We've had the opportunity of hearing from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, another physician in the House. I know that there is another physician in the House as well. I'd be very interested in hearing from him to know his position on this and what he sees as the positives and the negatives to this. Again, I think it's important, Madam Speaker, that we hear from the people who are in the trenches, the physicians that are living this day in and day out because I think that they have the ability to get these things right better than some bureaucrat or someone so far removed from those trenches.

When we come into this House and we talk about the need for being able to refer this to committee, it is a genuine desire for us to be able to see good legislation coming forward. I don't believe anybody in the House has any intention of bringing forward bad legislation for Albertans. I know that sometimes in this House things can get heated, but I would say that if someone was willing to put their name forward to actually stand up and try to be an MLA, a representative of the people in their riding, they have the best intentions for those people in their riding. Forgive me for being cynical, but we've seen so many times where the government has said that they've consulted. Then we try to slow it down so that we can have an opportunity to be able to reach out.

Then what we hear from our members in our constituencies and other parts of the province is that they hadn't been consulted, that they had not actually had the opportunity to bring forward reasonable ideas about how the legislation should proceed.

Now, I think that the Member for Calgary-West has provided us with a very reasonable answer to these queries, and that answer comes in the form of an e-mail that he was sent. When we first received this legislation, obviously, being the Labour critic – and I know this is the Health minister's bill, but there is a labour component to this – immediately we sat down, and we said: let's send out an e-mail to physicians that we know in our riding, and let's find out from them what they think of this bill. That happened yesterday, Madam Speaker.

We're starting to receive some of the information back. We're starting to receive some e-mails back and some correspondence, but the concern is that with the speed that this government is wanting to move this bill through the House, it's not going to give us an opportunity to be able to do what we're supposed to be doing, which is consulting with those people who are going to be affected by the bill.

It's only incumbent upon us, Madam Speaker, to present to this House a referral motion that allows us the time necessary. I don't believe that we're asking for months on end. We just need to make sure that we are going to get it right, that the premise of the bill is what it says, that it will be just formalizing already a good practice that has been happening for years, decades in the province. I don't think it's unreasonable to ask.

Now, through the course of today, we've had the opportunity of hearing from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and I respect him. I respect his opinion because, again, he is a doctor. He is a physician that has practised, and his recommendation was that this was 25 years in the making. However, there was still a caveat that he presented that I don't think we've heard an answer on yet from the Minister of Health, and that caveat was: how does it affect the autonomy of the AMA in terms of self-regulating?

Now, that is a question that we had not even thought about. That's something that we on this side in our conversations hadn't discussed. We didn't see it. Here's the reason why. I'm not a doctor. The people who were sitting around the table weren't doctors, so we wouldn't know that. We wouldn't see it. However, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is a doctor. He probably took a look at this thing, made a phone call to people he probably knows in the AMA, and said, "What do you think?" and pretty quickly he was able to get that little bit of information where they're a little concerned. I don't see any reason why we couldn't slow the process down a bit so that we have the opportunity to hear from other physicians who are in the trenches that would be concerned.

We've already identified a few of these concerns here, Madam Speaker, today. One of the concerns that we have – and many of us on this side of the House are from rural ridings – is how it is going to affect members in our rural ridings.

One of the questions that I had has to do with my line of work before. Before I was an MLA, I was in commercial construction, so I had the opportunity of doing some work up in Fort McMurray. Well, while we were doing the work up in Fort McMurray – we were building an airport hangar up there – we didn't have any accidents, but we started to get to know some people up there. I had an opportunity to be able to meet a doctor there, and that doctor told me a lot of information about how his role up in Fort McMurray as a doctor was very difficult. Being so far removed from larger centres like Edmonton and Calgary, it was difficult for his family. I mean, he enjoyed his work. He was very engaged. But it was a difficult thing for his family, being so isolated.

One of the first things that I thought when I saw this bill was: how is this going to affect these remote areas or rural areas in terms of them being able to retain family doctors? Now, in my riding, Madam Speaker, in Milk River, through the RPAP program we had the opportunity to bring in a couple of doctors. Only one of those doctors has stayed now. They both actually came in from South Africa. We couldn't fill the need for those doctors there locally. We had to bring them in from South Africa. So already we're seeing that it's difficult for us to be able to find doctors that are willing to go into rural Alberta.

But let me go back to this Fort McMurray model, and this is one of the questions I was thinking about today. As anybody who has been to Fort McMurray knows, the cost of living there is very expensive, very high. It's a long way up there, five hours from here. So if the negotiated model in terms of fee structure is centralized and it's unified, as the doctor from Calgary-Mountain View said, how does it work in terms of being able to get the doctors up in Fort McMurray to be able to say, you know, that even though the cost of living up there is three or four times the cost of living in, say, Lethbridge, they have an incentive to stay or an incentive to be there? The good doctor, again, talked about the disparity between those fee structures being brought into line.

I guess my question is – and I don't know. I think that maybe it would come through regulations. I'm not sure. But if you have that uniformity of the fee structure, once again, I would imagine people would want to be in a place like, say, Lethbridge, where the cost of living is so much cheaper. The cost of a home is, you know, a third of what the cost of a home up in Fort McMurray would be. Property taxes are cheaper there. All of the input costs and the costs to physicians are so much higher up in Fort McMurray. So if you are going to make that fee structure uniform across the province and there's no variance, I don't know how that's going to work.

Now, again, I don't believe that this bill actually goes into the details of that. I'm not a doctor, but it just goes to show that we have to start looking at some of these things. We have to start looking at some of the concerns that some of the physicians might be bringing forward. The fact that my hon. colleague from Calgary-West started to receive some feedback and that a fairly prominent physician in Calgary was willing to get back to him and say, "I haven't heard anything about this," in my opinion is all the evidence we need to slow this down so that we make sure that we have a good direction and directive from physicians.

Now I want to go to one of the things that, through the debate back and forth, Madam Speaker, I heard from the minister. The minister made an argument that, you know, 37 per cent is not bad. When you're electing people, that's not a bad thing. I mean, people in this House got elected on I think she said 37 or 39 per cent. Well, here's the problem with that argument. I appreciate her making the argument, but the problem is that we don't actually have to do that.

How many physicians – 10,000, 11,000 – do we have in Alberta? Well, I don't think that it would be very difficult to slow this down and to actually have a fulsome direction from all of the members. If all of the members, 80 per cent of them, decide to vote, I think that we would be able to say: "You know what? It's not 30 per cent. It's 80 per cent that have voted. We have our marching orders. We know what we want to do, what we should do."

But we don't have that sample size. We only have 30 per cent. Thirty per cent of those physicians have voted so far. [interjection] I'm not sure exactly what the member opposite is heckling about. I can't hear him. My hearing is not so good. But I will carry on with what I'm saying. If he's asking questions, I would invite him to please stand up and make sure that he asks the question so that we can get that in Hansard and, again, have a fulsome debate here.

Back to my point, if there's no pressing need, if there's no health emergency, environmental catastrophe, whatever it is, Madam Speaker, if we don't have that impetus, that need to push this forward, why are we? Why does this government feel such a burning need to push this forward?

Bill 6 is a classic example of the unintended consequences when you get it wrong, a classic example, Madam Speaker, of when you say, "Hey, we've got lots of consultation," and then all of a sudden all over the province they have combines lining up for miles and miles on end and some of the largest groups of farmers showing up and protesting on the Legislature steps. I would think that after having that happen, the NDP government, the government of the day, would say: "You know what? We need to do a little better at this, prudently."

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would say that this was very interesting, and there were a lot of questions that the member, my good friend, brought forward. Again, the United Conservative Party is always looking to collaborate with the government on good bills, bills that they are bringing forward in good faith, that show that they're trying to improve Alberta and the direction Alberta is going in. I see that the member, my good friend, has also got some questions about this. And while there are some benefits that we're hearing from the government, we're also needing to make sure that this is done right. So I would like to hear if he's got any more concerns. So far I can say that some of them haven't been addressed yet.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I would like to thank the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, a good friend of mine, for asking me this question. Look, again, having the opportunity of being able to get it right is our responsibility. It's our right. If it can't happen here, if we can't have the opportunity to be able to debate it and then take it to committee so that they can bring forward representation from the AMA, from its members, hearing both the pros and cons, then how can we in good conscience say that we got it right? How could we in good conscience say that we've done the job that Albertans have sent us here for, that what we've done here now is enough, that we've had a fulsome approach to this discussion of this bill, and that in good conscience we can bring it forward and have it receive royal assent?

Within a very short period of time, as you know, Madam Speaker, we've already come up with many good questions. Many good questions. I think that a few times the hon. Minister of Health has stood up and answered a few of them. She keeps going back to clarify that there's 96 per cent of physicians who are part of the AMA. Thank you so much. I didn't know that. I thought it was 80 per cent. I appreciate you getting me that information.

You know, it goes back to this concept, Madam Speaker, of our desire to be able to reach out to the AMA and to its members. Give us the chance. Give us the opportunity to be able to do our jobs. I'm sure that the members opposite, especially the backbenchers, would love to be able to have that opportunity as well.

We've heard from a past member of that caucus that she didn't feel that they had the opportunity to do that. This isn't just coming from this side of the House, Madam Speaker. This is actually coming from past members of the government side that are saying: "You know what? We have the opportunity, we have the privilege, and we have the responsibility to make sure that we get these things right." We shouldn't just say that we're going to rubber-stamp something. That's not our responsibility. That's not, in my opinion, a healthy way of being able to do what we've been asked to do here.

I am very much in favour of sending this to committee, of having the opportunity of being able to discuss it fully and being able to have those people who are deep in the trenches, those physicians that actually live, breathe, and have this as something that they have to be concerned about on a regular basis, give us that expert witness and testimony rather than just taking the advice or scout's honour or, as I sometimes have heard the Government House Leader say, you know: trust us. Well, I'm sorry, but the past record hasn't been very good.

Mr. Nixon: Trust but verify.

Mr. Hunter: There you go. Trust but verify is exactly what one of the greatest legislators said. I think we need to make sure that we do that, trust but verify.

That's what we're doing as the opposition, making sure that we're trusting and verifying by sending this thing to committee. I would hope that all members of this House would take a serious look at this as an important amendment to this bill.

Thank you so much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: On the amendment, not under 29(2)(a), Madam Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment.

Mr. Nixon: Okay. Just making sure.

Thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the amendment today. I would like to start off by actually, through you, Madam Speaker, to the hon. Minister of Health and hon. Deputy Premier, thanking her for taking the time today to answer lots of the questions of the members of the opposition on this legislation. It's noted and certainly, through you to her, Madam Speaker, appreciated.

I think I'd like to start off by pointing out, similar to what many of my colleagues have spoken about already this afternoon, and making very clear before the House today that we're speaking at this moment about a referral amendment to send this piece of legislation to a committee to be reviewed. That is not taking a position on this side of the Chamber that we are against this legislation. I actually suspect, Madam Speaker, as I've listened to the debate today, that I will likely be leaning towards supporting this bill that the Health minister has brought forward before this Chamber this afternoon.

I still think that this amendment brought forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie is appropriate. It makes sense to send this to committee to make sure that we've properly consulted on the process. Lots of the great questions that I've heard this afternoon – and some of them I never thought about until I heard them – I think are very interesting, and the great feedback that the minister has provided to those questions is valuable. One of the tough parts, though, Madam Speaker, as you know, is that in this Chamber it's often hard to have the type of dialogue to be able to get a piece of legislation correct whereas when we're in a standing committee environment, it's easier to have that back and forth, to be able to interact and make sure we get the legislation right.

The other reason why I think that's important is that it's also an opportunity where more of the private members in the government caucus get to participate. In my experience over the last three and a half years, they get to participate a little bit more in the committee. Just because of the nature of how the Legislature works, the opposition spends more time debating in the Legislature. That's how our process works. Certainly, the history within this Chamber is that private members have significantly more opportunity to be able to participate.

As mentioned by a couple of the hon. members, we do know that we have some doctor colleagues, physicians, that are in the government caucus. I would be interested in their advice, their thoughts on this piece of legislation, as certainly they're the members in the Chamber that probably have the most experience with it. I know that if we were debating a piece of legislation that had to do with law enforcement, I would strongly encourage, as the House leader of the opposition, that the hon. Member for Calgary-West be able to participate in the process because of his lengthy career in law enforcement. I think he adds significant value to a debate of that nature, just like I do the medical professionals inside this Chamber. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, for example, who I have spoken about positively in this Chamber before, has been a physician for friends of mine in his unique capacity working with people with cancer, so I think his input on this would be something that I would value. In committee, in my experience, Madam Speaker, you have a bigger opportunity to do that.

Now, it was interesting to me to hear the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin speaking in the Chamber today, who comes from Ottawa, not as a Member of Parliament but as a staffer for other Members of Parliament in her time there. She echoed her shock as a new member in this Chamber realizing how our legislative process works here compared to a place like Ottawa. Madam Speaker, it's interesting to me that every time a staff member comes from Ottawa and ends up working at the Alberta Legislature or a former staff member from the federal Parliament becomes a member of the Legislature, which I think is pretty cool, they all say the same thing. In fact, actually, the Leader of the Official Opposition, who has considerable experience in Parliament over two decades: as his House leader I often have to explain to him why things are so significantly different on the committee side, because they just don't understand it, because this would not happen in Ottawa.

We would not be in a situation where the government brings forward a piece of legislation that has significant impacts on a lot of people, a complicated piece of legislation, that was basically read in the House and only a few short days later was in a position where it could pass in this Chamber before members of the Legislature, particularly on the opposition side, who have not seen the bill because the government has had this bill – it's just the first we've seen it – are able to consult with the constituents they represent. I represent a lot of doctors, as do members on this side of the Chamber, as do members on that side of the Chamber. But the fact that here in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta we're in a spot where you could actually pass a bill, all three stages, in one day – that would be rare – or certainly before members of this House have an opportunity to return to their constituency to go and talk to the people that they represent is a unique thing to this Chamber and this House that we operate in.

You would not see that in Ottawa. A bill going to committee is standard procedure in the House of Commons. Being able to call witnesses to make sure that you get legislation right, to be able to ask questions is a common procedure in Ottawa. I would argue that it's something that I actually think we should do more often inside this Chamber.

You know, the hon. Member for Calgary-West in his comments was speaking about how he's already heard from a constituent or at least somebody from Calgary, I believe, the city that he represents in this Chamber, who has got considerable expertise on this issue, saying: well, I've got some questions. I think that's pretty reasonable. Going to committee allows that to happen. A person could come forward, they could testify, provide information for the hon. members of the 29th Legislature to be able to make an educated decision on how they cast their vote for their constituents.

This becomes important because we have seen examples of mistakes that have been made by this government and, I'm sure, previous governments, quite frankly, by going through a process in the Assembly where they do not use the committee process to make sure that they get it right, to make sure that the people that will be impacted by that legislation have had an opportunity to contribute. In this Chamber we don't often hear from the ministers on that type of legislation. Again, I want to reiterate, as I did in the beginning, that I think it's great that we have heard from the Health minister, to her credit, during this. In fact, I think that makes me more comfortable with this piece of legislation because you can start to get the answers. Pretty rare that we see that, but I digress on that.

Making sure that we get legislation right is an important responsibility of this side of the House. It's an important responsibility of the private members on that side of the House as well. Their job, Madam Speaker, as you know, is to hold the government to account, no different than, actually, the opposition, particularly when it comes to legislation like this, that has really not many partisan implications that I can see. This is a technical issue that we have to make sure that we get right. That's the hon. members' responsibility, just as it is our responsibility.

I'm sure that they would appreciate an opportunity to be able to talk to some of the physicians that they represent to make sure that this legislation is right. They would appreciate an opportunity to ask questions not only of the minister but of bureaucrats that are involved in the Health department, that may be able to provide some technical advice to the members of the Assembly on this before they cast a vote, but also to be able to talk to outside groups, that are outside of this bubble that we live in, not only in this Chamber but in this whole precinct and in our world in Edmonton. It's often great to see it.

You know, we saw one of the most famous examples, of course, Bill 6, the agriculture safety bill. An amendment like this was moved on that piece of legislation, to move that to a committee to be able to make sure that people, stakeholder groups could come forward. We know that the history of that now is that, in the end, because the opposition spent time asking questions and going through a process like this, Albertans, farmers and ranchers in that case, were able to come to the Legislature to protest – I would argue that it would have been easier through committee – to be able to say: hey, there are some mistakes in this bill. In the end, the government brought forward an amendment to address some of those mistakes. There are still some other issues, I would say, with Bill 6 – we'll address that if we're fortunate enough to form a government in the next few months – but they did make adjustments based on that feedback.

I think that it would have been more efficient in that case to have had that feedback in a committee in a positive way, with farm and ranch communities and farm and ranch families rather than a thousand or more of them on a regular basis having to stand on the stairs of the Legislature chanting: kill Bill 6; you're getting this wrong. It's a great example of how that would have gone better.

There are many, many more inside the history of the 29th Legislature and, again, Madam Speaker, I suspect, probably through previous governments before the NDP government because the system does not work the same way as the House of Commons. I think it lends itself for the opportunity for these type of mistakes to be made when you're not using the committee process that is common within the Westminster parliamentary system. Instead, you're seeing this type of legislation rammed through often in 24, 48, 72 hours. You've got MLAs literally going out to the cloakroom using their cellphones – I don't know how they did it before cellphones, quite frankly – trying to get a hold of relevant constituents, relevant stakeholders to say: "Where should I be on this? Is this right? Is this going to impact the community that I represent?" It's a flaw of the system.

Luckily, we do have something within our system that can address that. I think the House of Commons' system is more appropriate. I think it's a better form of democracy. When you use the committee system, it allows people to be able to participate from all different angles.

But we at least have an opportunity, as the hon. member for Calgary – not Calgary but Airdrie; she would be really upset if I called Airdrie Calgary – has done, to move a referral and move it then to committee so we can move it out of this Chamber to committee, go through that great process. It doesn't have to be long. It could literally be a couple of days. Bring the right people in and have that opportunity. Unfortunately, it appears, from what I've seen indicated to me – I don't want to predetermine how, of course, the government is going to vote – that there's no interest yet again in sending an important bill like this to committee.

What frustrates me more about that – and I think hon. members across the way should think about this before they cast their vote. The only time in the 29th Legislature that the current NDP government and their backbenchers, their private members, have taken the opportunity to actually vote with the opposition to send something to committee or done so themselves – I'm actually not sure if they sent anything to the committee themselves or if it's always been on one of our motions. I could be corrected on that.

But the only time that they've taken the opportunity to do that is on a bill that has become, politically, a hot potato for them. So you're in the legislature, like: "Ooh, that's a problem. The opposition is getting media on it or whatever is going on, and we want to vote against it. We don't like what the opposition has done." It's usually one of our bills, in my experience, Madam Speaker, most of the time. "But we can't vote against it. We can't be called on the record to stand up and vote, so we're going to send it off to committee for it to either die in the committee process and never come back to the Chamber or to buy some time to be able to figure it out." I think that's disappointing, that that's the only time that we're actually using the committee process to get good legislation, primarily as a government tool to kill private members' bills in the Chamber.

When you have a great example like this, what is probably at its core a pretty good piece of legislation but may just need some minor tweaks – I don't know – there may be some stuff that comes forward in the committee process that the government never thought of. We saw this week the postsecondary minister amend his own bill that he brought to this Chamber. He brought forward an amendment that, I believe, actually passed with the support of the House. I could be mistaken on that as well. A great example. What if he had not caught that?

The government wants to say: "We got it all. We caught it all. It's okay, hon. member. You can trust us." But then we see this track record over and over of a piece of legislation making it through the House, forced through by the majority, and then the government has to come back the following sitting and try to fix it yet again, sometimes, in the case of some of the democratic renewal bills that we saw in this Chamber, multiple times, I think, something like three or four consecutive sittings trying to fix mistakes that the government put inside their legislation. If you went to committee, it all would have been done right the first time.

Now, sometimes, though, what's really problematic about it, Madam Speaker – and I'm sure it concerns you as much as it concerns me – is that Albertans get impacted by that. How problematic, I guess, really is it that we have to spend an extra couple of days in another city, six months later, debating a piece of legislation the government got wrong? I mean, it slows down other important government business or legislation, but it's really not, I guess, the end of the world that we have to stay here and debate that. I don't have a problem with that. But when there are consequences to the people that we represent that they have to put up with for six, seven months, a year or longer as a result of that mistake that has been made by the government because something got missed – I mean, mistakes happen. My wife informs me that I make plenty. But that does not mean that we shouldn't learn from the experiences that we've had in the past in this Chamber and take time to do it.

This amendment does that. This amendment gives the government an opportunity to be able to send this to make sure we got it right so that they don't have to come and bring an amendment to fix their own bill or bring another bill next sitting to fix the bill that they messed up the previous sitting. It also gives . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that it's very interesting to see the passion that my House leader has when it comes to ensuring that bills get referred to committee. As a man that has sat on many committees, I have to say that . . .

Mr. Ellis: And chaired, too.

Mr. Cyr: Actually, a good point from Calgary-West here. I chair a committee.

When committees are used correctly, we can see actual benefit happening for Alberta. A lot of times what happens – and we've heard this repeatedly – is that the government seems to prioritize opposition bills for committee that they feel are difficult for them, but when it comes to bills that have been identified by the opposition saying that this could be problematic if it's not done correctly, we end up seeing silence on the government side. Then it's accusations and pointing to us that we're trying to slow the process down. Let's be clear. Our job as opposition is to ensure that we strengthen legislation.

While this bill here is not as meaty as some of the other bills – the Municipal Affairs one that just came through: that one there is a rather large one – a lot of times what happens is that a single phrase in a bill can actually mean a great difference in how it actually is interpreted. If I remember correctly, there was a dispute on one of the bills that had gone through the House in an eastern province, and a simple comma actually changed the entire meaning of a paragraph. That's why making sure we get this right is something that, I think, we all are hoping for.

It is good to hear that one of the questions that I'd asked before was: how many of the physicians are in the AMA? I'm very thankful the Minister of Health answered that: 96 per cent of just over 10,000, I believe, so 9,600 members, somewhere in there, 9,700 members, give or take a few, I'm sure. We're looking at a large body of physicians.

It's amazing how much engagement you can get from a group when you start talking money. That is the whole thing. I understand that the argument could be made that you say that an elected official may only see anywhere from 40 to 60 per cent engagement from the constituents, but I will tell you that if there was a dollar attached to that vote, that engagement probably would be a lot higher.

So to see that we're at a 30 per cent engagement when this is potentially going to have a very large impact to these doctors tells me that potentially the AMA may not have gotten that message out well enough to its members when it was actually going out for consultation on whether or not they should go down this road. Again, I understand that doctors are busy. You know, the one thing that I did struggle with in my career as an accountant was getting a doctor to actually fill a form out. That seems to be one of those struggles. When you have a doctor that has literally no time to fill forms out, you see that they may not have the appropriate time to be able to maybe read every single AMA e-mail.

That is why I'm saying: was that consultation done in an appropriate fashion? I think that having the AMA president before us is a good indicator to the committee, being referred again to the committee, that she would be able to answer these questions, because until we can actually get to the meat of this, it is going to be hard to know. I'm not putting down the AMA, because it's a great organization, and I do believe they're doing a great job representing doctors.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, November 8, 2018

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect, each in our own way. As we continue Veterans' Week today, let us reflect on how fortunate we are to gather in this Chamber today for our final day of debate this week. As we all return to our constituencies for the day of remembrance, may we travel safely. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 21

An Act to Protect Patients

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to move third reading of Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients.

I want to thank members of this Assembly for their thoughtful observations and constructive suggestions during second reading as well as Committee of the Whole. I truly appreciate that all parties have represented themselves through this process.

Earlier in this debate I shared with the Assembly my shock and anger this spring when I became aware of a situation where a doctor was convicted of sexual assault and got his licence back. Albertans weren't being properly protected, and we needed to fix this. Since then we have heard many stories from Albertans that are simply gut-wrenching and often extremely difficult to hear. We began working with our patients and the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta as well as the other regulatory colleges who govern health care workers to develop the right tools to keep Alberta patients safe. I'm proud that my colleagues shared our commitment to patient safety and partnered with us on this work.

Madam Speaker, the proposed amendments would protect Albertans from sexual assault and sexual misconduct by regulated health professionals. If passed, it will establish mandatory penalties for sexual abuse and sexual misconduct by regulated health professionals. It will require more transparency for regulatory colleges.

Pardon me?

The Acting Speaker: There is no amendment on the floor.

Ms Hoffman: I'm not speaking to an amendment. I'm moving third reading.

The Acting Speaker: Okay.

Ms Hoffman: I'm moving third reading, and then I understand there will be a motion.

Oh. It does say amendment in this sentence. I understand why you'd say that. Sorry. It's been a busy 24 hours. There was the word "amendment" in here, and I'm sorry for that. Oh, you know why? The word "amendment" is in here because it's amendments to current legislation that governs the Health Professions Act. So the bill in itself is an amendment.

Don't worry, Aaron, the wording was correct. Yeah. I'm sure his heart just stopped.

Given that this bill is in itself an amendment to the Health Professions Act, the proposed amendments would protect Albertans from sexual abuse and sexual misconduct by regulated health professionals. If passed, it will establish mandatory penalties for sexual abuse and sexual misconduct by regulated health professionals. It will require more transparency for regulatory colleges by having disciplinary actions related to sexual abuse and sexual misconduct clearly and consistently posted online. It will increase survivor supports by providing them with access to treatment and counselling. Those are all of the amendments the bill proposes currently.

Women and all Albertans deserve to feel safe while accessing health care services, and this bill will do just that. If passed, it will make Alberta a national leader in protecting patients from sexual abuse and misconduct. Madam Speaker, Bill 21 will help protect Albertans and ensure that appropriate penalties are in place. We have had some very productive conversations with the opposition, and I expect that the hon. Opposition House Leader will rise in a moment.

With that in mind, I move third reading.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today, and thank you to the Deputy Premier for her comments. I have to start off today by pointing out the extraordinarily different tone that is coming from the Deputy Premier and the government side of the House when it comes to this legislation. I'm happy to see the different tone because I think it will be good for Albertans in the long run, but I am a little shocked to see it. I'm not sure what has happened in the last 24 hours, but it appears that the government is indicating that they would like to change their mind on some of the decisions that they made in the Chamber over the last several days. As such, because I am such a nice Opposition House Leader, I have decided to move the following motion.

Madam Speaker, would you like me to give you the copies first, or do you want me to move now?

The Acting Speaker: If you could, just to make sure it's in order first, bring a copy to the table, please.

Mr. Nixon: I will await your instructions.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, please go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 7 and 26.

Madam Speaker, it is not the first time, as you know, that I have moved a procedural amendment in this Assembly in an attempt to get the government to either reconsider their legislation or to send it to committee to make sure that they got it right. But by the indication from the Deputy Premier this morning it appears that it will be the first time that the government accepts that recommendation, which is interesting in and of itself.

The move from third reading back to Committee of the Whole is highly unusual, in my point, Madam Speaker. It tells me that the government has changed its mind and its heart when it comes to allowing predatory doctors to reapply for reinstatement after just five years. If the government had just listened to members from this side of the House when they had a chance, we would not be in this unprecedented situation. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills rose during the amendment debate and gave the minister an opportunity at that point to be able to adjourn the debate and reconsider the direction that the government seemed to be going on this legislation.

At the time then the minister rose and said that not only did the opposition have it wrong about the five years but that she had consulted with sexual assault groups, that this is the direction that they wanted to go. After that debate in the House the opposition started to get called by those types of groups saying that consultation did not happen. The reality is that what we saw take place is the government yet again, out of its partisan bent, its inability to be able to work across party lines on important issues like this that should not have been a partisan issue, to be able to cross and work with us to be able to get this done right, instead just blindly, automatically voted against what the opposition brought forward. Then they find themselves in a spot like this.

It's alarming to me because this is how it took so long to even get this bill to the floor in the first place. The Leader of the Opposition and the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View were bringing this forward in the last sitting of the House. No mention of that, Madam Speaker, when it was finally brought, this legislation, to this Assembly. No mention or a thank you at that time for the work they did, though they weren't doing it for a thank you. But the reality is that the government went and waited over an entire spring and an entire summer to even bring this legislation to this floor because they didn't want the hon. members to be able to have credit for the process.

So now we've already had to wait six or nine months, when predatory people in the medical community could be in a position of power still over their patients, because this government, rather than work with the opposition on something – again, I could think of no other better example of a nonpartisan issue, but they still went out of their way to prolong this for Albertans.

Then they bring the legislation to the House, and they get it wrong. They stand up for the idea that somebody who did something so terrible to a patient and a person that they had power over could then have their licence back in five years. I haven't talked to one constituent, anybody on this issue who thought that was a reasonable position of the government.

The opposition comes forward with reasonable amendments and automatically, Madam Speaker, the Deputy Premier and the rest of the NDP caucus rise and defend an undefendable position because of their blind hatred for the opposition. That's what it feels like. This can't continue to happen because this is what happens. I've talked about this so much. This government brings forth legislation and has to either amend it days after they've brought it forward because they realized that they've made a mistake, or, more often than not, they have to come back six or seven months later and amend their position.

I also think that it's important that at some point today the government explain what has changed because they've put a tremendous amount on the record, a tremendous amount of content on the record in Hansard, defending the position of five years. Yesterday the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition asked why the government had a five-year ban instead of a lifetime ban, and both the Premier and the minister defended their position. That's less than 24 hours later. The concern then has to become, because of the history of this bill: how do we now know that this amendment actually has fixed everything? I think, Madam Speaker, there are a lot of people who are going to want to speak about this, but it's important that we were clear on how we ended up here.

With that said, though, I move this amendment because I believe that this is such an important issue, and I hope that the government will finally reconsider it and look at the reasonable amendments that have been brought forward by the opposition and get this right for Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Sorry to be hesitant to stand up. This is a little bit unexpected, the way that things have played out. [interjection] Apparently one of the members across the way finds something funny about this subject. I don't think anything is funny at all. I think it's really unfortunate that we're in this position today. I did move an amendment last week asking for a lifetime ban, and I'm looking forward to seeing what's in this recommittal. As late as Tuesday I asked the acting House leader if we could extend Committee of the Whole so I could bring forward another amendment after speaking to the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services. I know that they met this week, and I suspect that some of this has to do with a letter that they forwarded, that I'll happily read into the record later.

I'm of mixed feelings. I'm grateful that we are taking another look at this, and I'm really disappointed that it had to be such a struggle to get to this point, to be able to do something that was patently right. It was the right thing to do from the beginning. There was a lot of wasted energy, and I'm super disappointed that we had to work so hard to get this to happen. I'm looking forward to hearing what the amendments are.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the recommittal amendment? Oh, yeah; 29(2)(a). My apologies.

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. Not 29(2)(a), no.

The Acting Speaker: Sorry. Are there any other members wishing to now speak to the recommittal?

Ms Hoffman: I would just encourage my colleagues to support the motion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Any other members, 29(2)(a), wishing to the speak to the referral? Seeing none.

[Motion on amendment REC1 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 21 An Act to Protect Patients

The Deputy Chair: The Committee of the Whole has under consideration sections 7 and 26 of Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to these sections of the bill? The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's always fun making that switch from Speaker to chair and soon back to Speaker, I imagine.

With me I have a copy of an amendment that I'd like to propose.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Deputy Premier. If you could just wait until we have a copy at the table.

Please go ahead. This is amendment A7.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I want to be very clear that our government has always and continues to believe that sexual assault is a heinous crime and that it will not be tolerated. That's why we introduced legislation to protect patients from sexual abuse, sexual misconduct, sexual assault, making Alberta only the second province to do so so clearly. We've listened to survivors and listened closely to the organizations who support them as we drafted the legislation. We did indeed work with sexual assault centres, and we continued to work with them during this debate. I was very proud to stand with them in support of this legislation when we introduced it.

While the penalties in this legislation were modelled after Ontario's, we agree with survivors that we can and should go further than Ontario did to protect patients in Alberta. That's why we listened to survivors and consulted our legal counsel yet again, and we are amending the legislation to ensure that those medical professionals who have committed sexual assault can never apply for reinstatement here in Alberta, those who have committed it and went through an original hearing tribunal and were found guilty of that through the tribunal process.

We want to ensure that this legislation is as strong as possible while still empowering survivors to come forward and enabling colleges to protect their patients, and these amendments will do just that. I'm happy to hear further comments from my colleagues and to respond to those as well.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment on sections 7 and 26? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I am pleased to rise in support of this amendment; however, I will enumerate reasons for which I believe it is inadequate. Therefore, it is my intention to propose a subamendment should this one be adopted by the committee.

Madam Chair, first I'd like to review how we got here. Last April my colleague the deputy Leader of the United Conservative Party and Member of the Legislative Assembly for Chestermere-Rocky View was the first member to raise in this place the concern about physicians who have been found culpable of various forms of sexual assault against patients or indeed colleagues. In fact, my colleague raised this on April 19 of this year, and shortly thereafter I raised a question in this Chamber about the practice of the college of physicians allowing a licence to practise to member physicians who had been found guilty of sexual assault. We all know the particular case which led to this, which seemed to us a prima facie abuse of the regulatory authority of the College of Physicians & Surgeons, an authority granted to it by this Assembly on behalf of Albertans.

How much time do I have?

The Deputy Chair: Eighteen minutes.

Mr. Kenney: Sorry. I'm still learning the rules around here, Madam Chair. Thank you for your patience.

Madam Chair, I think it's very important for us to underscore that regulatory bodies, professional licensing agencies designated by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, while they are self-governing agencies, are accountable to and ultimately derive their authority from this place, acting on behalf of Albertans, and they, therefore, do not have carte blanche to abuse their regulatory authority in such a flagrant way as to grant a licence to practise medicine to predator doctors. This I think is a matter, quite frankly, of common sense. I think this is a question that transcends partisan or ideological views.

This is in part about the sanctity of the doctor-patient relationship. It is about the vulnerability of patients who enter into that relationship, trusting implicitly that the physicians treating them will act as conscientious professionals, respecting their personal, physical, and sexual integrity. So when a physician violates that trust in such a flagrant way as to sexually assault or abuse a patient, it is, I believe, essentially an unforgivable crime in terms of their professional credentials. Of course, Madam Chair, such instances may also be subject to criminal sanction under the Criminal Code of Canada, and they may also be subject to professional censure.

But the question before us now, a question that the Official Opposition raised in this place six months ago, is whether a slap on the wrist is adequate as a sanction by the licensing body to discipline a member who has sexually abused a patient. That is why last spring, Madam Chair, I called on the government to bring forward legislation to deal with this. Now, when I first did so, the hon. the Minister of Health said, essentially, that the college didn't have the power to withhold licences. So I said, right on the spot: well, then why don't we amend the relevant legislation to grant the college the power to withhold permanently the right to practise from predator doctors? And I indicated to the hon. the minister and the government that we in the opposition would be keen to co-operate in any way with the government in the development or passage of such legislation swiftly, and we were quite frankly prepared to do that last spring, to fast-track legislation of that nature.

Well, it's unfortunate that it took the government so long to act, but finally they came forward with legislation now. It clearly wasn't a priority in the spring. So they finally came forward with legislation. But even though this matter had initially been raised by the opposition in a completely constructive and nonpartisan fashion with a polite offer of co-operation, the government did not consult with the opposition prior to the introduction of the bill. When concerns were then raised by the opposition about the legislation, about it allowing for predator doctors to have their licences renewed, Madam Chair, the government dismissed these concerns out of hand and voted against three opposition amendments to allow for a long-term or effectively a lifetime ban on predator doctors from practising medicine.

Madam Chair, I want to dial back, though. What I found really problematic – I'll get back to the substance of the issue in a second, but I want to talk about the process that led us to this peculiar moment this morning of the government furiously backpedalling in embarrassment over its mishandling of this important issue. When I rose in the spring to ask the minister about this issue, I did so in the most polite, respectful way possible, and the hon. minister responded with a partisan and personal attack – a partisan and personal attack – as the Hansard transcript will confirm. I think that's exactly the problem that led us to this place, a spirit of hyperpartisanship that we see from this government in general and, quite frankly, from this minister in particular.

Let me share with you the exchange that we had, Madam Chair. Here you have a serious issue affecting vulnerable women in particular, a good faith effort on the part of the opposition to reach across the aisle to the government. I thanked the minister in advance for any co-operation we could have on this issue. I offered in a nonpartisan way to co-operate, and her response was a partisan and personal attack. The refusal to even contemplate operating in good faith with the opposition is what led us to this embarrassing moment today.

I would like to propose to the government that it consider this a learning moment. That perhaps, Madam Chair, there's not a Manichaean kind of duality here, where the government is all good and the opposition is all bad. Perhaps the government could admit, in the wake of this legislative fiasco, that elected members of the opposition, at least on occasion, are acting in good faith and can be constructive legislative partners in finding solutions for Albertans.

Madam Chair, this points to a larger issue. When I had the honour of becoming Leader of the Opposition, I met with my colleagues in this caucus and said that I think Albertans expect us to raise the bar of decorum and civility in this place. When I first visited the Assembly, shortly after being elected leader but before being elected a member of this place, I couldn't believe the disrespectful noise back and forth, the desk thumping, the heckling, the unnecessary insults from, quite frankly, both sides.

And I understand what happens. You know, I've got a little bit of parliamentary experience. In my 19 years in the federal Parliament I would see when hyperpartisanship would take over and, mea maxima culpa, Madam Chair, undoubtedly many times in those 19 years I was responsible for it. It didn't make me proud. In fact, perhaps as I matured, it made me learn that politics, at least in a deliberative Chamber such as this, could be done differently.

It is important that this is a place for the clash of ideas. It is inevitable and desirable that we should have vigorous debates, disagreeing vigorously on policy issues – that's how this great Westminster parliamentary democratic system ought to be – but surely undergirding that should be a basic respect for one another that I think has been, frankly, devoid in this Chamber. When I hear the kinds of insults, I mean – I'm sorry to raise this, but I'm going to, Madam Chair – I don't think it's a coincidence that the minister who walked herself into this problem in part by her refusal to even sit down and talk to the opposition or seriously to consider opposition amendments is the minister who stood up in this place and said that members of my party, quotes, hang out with sewer rats.

And I appreciate that the member apologized for that, Madam Chair, but I raise this for a point. The tendency to go to that kind of rhetorical extreme in demonizing your opposition is what leads to a failure to co-operate in a spirit of civility and nonpartisanship on certain issues like this, issues that ought to transcend partisanship. Now, I am a partisan. I hope that my party wins the confidence of Albertans next year. We're going to have a strong debate in the election and the time leading up to it, but surely there are moments when we can park the partisanship.

I raise this because I really do hope this will be a learning moment about the importance of co-operation when it is possible. I think that's all Albertans expect of us. They don't want this Chamber to be an echo chamber. They don't expect us all to be of like mind on everything all of the time. They understand that spirits will get high occasionally. I get that. None of us are angels, Madam Chair. But when there is an honest, good-faith effort to reach out, perhaps we could accept that.

Let me share this with you in the context of my own parliamentary experience. When I had the honour of serving as a minister of the federal Crown, I made it a point to reach out to my opposition shadow ministers or critics to consult with them on legislation before it was drafted and after it was introduced. In fact, Madam Chair, I believe if you check with my former opposition shadow ministers, they will confirm this, including the Rt. Hon. the Prime Minister, who was my critic for three years, and including somebody I consider a dear friend, a New Democrat, Olivia Chow. She was my critic for three years, and she will confirm, if asked, that I in multiple cases accepted a number of NDP amendments to Conservative government bills that I introduced.

I'll go a step further, Madam Chair, and I will reveal that my boss, the Prime Minister, didn't like me coming back to cabinet to seek approval to amend government legislation to accept opposition amendments. He wasn't really big on that idea. But I thought it was critically important that to the greatest extent possible we try to find common ground, that if we couldn't find complete consensus, we at least listen to one another. I spent dozens of hours as a federal minister sitting down with my counterparts in the opposition parties, including the NDP, to try to find common ground. Now, I'm sure those opposition critics will say that I didn't do it enough because I didn't accept all the opposition amendments – I didn't agree with them all of the time – but they will absolutely confirm that I tried to reach out and often did accept their amendments in good faith.

So if I could do that with the NDP in opposition in the House of Commons, why can't this NDP government do it with the Conservative opposition in this Legislature, Madam Chair? Is that an unreasonable thing to suggest?

Now, I have this from May 2, 2018, in Hansard, and I'm going to quote this into the record. I asked the hon. the Minister of Health:

Can the minister clarify, please, whether or not the College of Physicians ... has agreed that they will withdraw licences to practise from physicians who are charged with sexual assault or are under investigation for that kind of terrible crime?

The minister said:

Thank you ... Mr. Speaker. Some governments are further ahead of us in their work in this regard ... We're definitely working in close partnership to make sure that all Alberta women can feel safe when they're going to the doctor.

I replied:

I thank the hon. minister for the substantive answer, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister is telling us that the college will not do this unilaterally but requires legislation. Why could the college not take its own disciplinary action to withhold licences from physicians accused of sexual assault? Secondly, I can assure the minister that we would co-operate with the expeditious passage of any legislation granting the college that power.

The minister replied, saying:

I'm excited to hear that the member is willing to show up and vote on a bill that is certainly important to women accessing health care services ...

It's good to hear that the member of the Official Opposition plans on showing up in this regard ... I've heard the quote that 90 per cent of success is about showing up. As an Alberta woman I'm concerned about what the track record of that member has been, but I'm glad he plans on showing up for this vote.

There's only one way I could characterize that response, which is snark, Madam Chair, a snarky, partisan response in an answer from the Deputy Premier of Alberta in response to a completely nonpartisan expression of gratitude and offer of co-operation. That's the attitude which caused the minister not to sit down with my colleague or other opposition members to discuss the statutory solution to the loophole allowing predator doctors to get their licences to practise. That's the attitude, the hyperpartisan effort to demonize other members of this place, which caused the government and the minister to dismiss out of hand three thoughtful and constructive amendments brought forward by opposition members.

Again, there's not a lot of time left in this Legislature, a few more months, but hopefully in those few months, as partisan tempers rise inevitably as we get closer to an election, how about in this place we make a conscientious effort to find common ground?

In that spirit, Madam Chair, I thank the government, I thank the hon. the Minister of Health for having reconsidered this issue. I thank the government and the minister for having reconsidered this matter. I thank them for the motion that they have brought forward. I'm glad that they now have had a change of mind and agree with us in principle that the consequence of the abuse of practice by predator doctors should be potentially a permanent ban on their ability to potentially victimize other patients, and I look forward to speaking a little bit more on the substance of this amendment later in the debate.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. To preface my remarks, I want to apologize to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I assumed that he was laughing while I was speaking, and he was not, so I want to offer my apology.

I'll also preface my remarks with: I find this difficult to talk about, and the more we talk about it, the harder it is. I have PTSD because of sexual assault, so every time we talk, it's like ripping a Band-Aid off, but I think it's important, so I hope you'll bear with me. These are just tears, it's just water, and I'm just a human being.

I'm very grateful for this amendment. I'm grateful that this is a lifetime ban, and I'd like to hope that my remarks earlier this week about the courage of survivors coming forward had some influence over the decision to bring this amendment forward today. Last week, after I moved my amendment for a lifetime ban and it was voted down, I reached out to the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services, and I had a conversation with them because I wanted to make sure that I wasn't off the mark, that the lifetime ban that I had proposed wasn't unreasonable. Through that conversation the request was made to wait a few days because the association was meeting yesterday, and they had a very thoughtful, difficult conversation about what's appropriate in these circumstances.

I'd like to read part of that letter into the record because I think it's really important. Now, these are people that provide services to sexual assault survivors every day. This is what they do every day. I think they're amazing. I think that what they do is invaluable, and I don't think we could ever pay them enough money for the healing that they provide.

The Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services applauds Alberta for being the second province in Canada to adopt a policy that protects patients from sexual violence. The issue of sexual violence has been surrounded in silence, secrecy and shame, and after 25 years of advocating on behalf of survivors in this province, we are appreciative of such passionate discussion amongst our political leaders.

Health professionals occupy a unique position of power and control over their patients, and the abuse of this power and the betrayal of that trust can have devastating lifetime effects.

As survivor advocates, we are in full support of a lifetime ban. We have no doubt that the after effects of this type of sexual victimization impact survivors throughout their entire life.

To ensure the tribunals at regulatory bodies employ the most consistent and effective response, AASAS strongly recommends:

- Training for all tribunal members on the myths and stereotypes that surround the crime of sexual violence
- Inclusion of at least two sexual violence experts/advocates as tribunal members.

I hope we see some flavour of these recommendations developed in regulation. I think it would be a great benefit to any tribunal that's hearing a case such as this, so I'm really hopeful that that's what we'll see. I just want to say that with everybody here today voting in favour of this amendment, we're helping survivors heal. We're showing them really clearly that we do believe them and that what they have to say is very important, and for those reasons I encourage everyone to support this amendment.

9:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise to speak today, one, to speak to Bill 21 but also to the amendment that we're discussing on the floor today and to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for her work on this. I deeply appreciate how emotional this is. I, too, am a survivor of sexual abuse. I, too, am also a survivor that has never had the opportunity to take and bring this kind of issue to a court, nor will I probably ever be.

Madam Chair, when I hear the Leader of the Opposition stand up on a bill about protecting patients and take the 10 minutes to discuss how this was unfair to him, I feel like that is the ultimate demonstration of privilege if I've ever seen it. I mean, I think that the work on this has happened on so many fields. I know that the member opposite that they were talking about has brought these questions up in question period.

I know that some of these incidents started in Sherwood Park, so I started working with the minister seven months ago. I didn't say, you know: why didn't they do it? I looked into why they couldn't do it, and I saw that they didn't have the teeth in their legislation to do this. I saw and I met with the Alberta Medical Association, and they wanted the college of physicians – sorry; I'm talking about a different regulatory body. They wanted to be able to address this properly because overall their goal is to maintain the safety of patients, and they are deeply committed to that cause.

I think that when we make this about one individual – frankly, this isn't about him. This is about survivors, this is about patients, and this is about access to health care without fear that you're going to experience some form of sexual abuse, some impropriety. You shouldn't have to feel that. I think of the patient that went through that and how difficult it would be to cross that barrier, to go into an office, and to think about what kind of protections they can put in place to make sure it doesn't happen again. That would be exponentially difficult, Madam Chair.

That is the kind of thing that motivated me to work with the ministry, to look at which province was the only one that had legislation on this front, and it was Ontario. I spent hours upon hours reading the current tribunal processes, the issues that brought it forward in Ontario then. The fact is that the College of Physicians and Surgeons there conducted their own investigations as to what powers they could grant the tribunal there in order to support this.

This process has been different in Alberta. The process was brought forward by the legislative body, by us, and we looked at consultation with them. It was the opposite in Ontario, and I think that allowed for a capacity to have investigative reports, and they go into great depth. In fact, before the legislation was passed there, the College of Physicians and Surgeons brought forward a letter that goes through each problem that they see in the current way it sits. Frankly, how our legislation stood before this kind of read the same, so you'd go through the same problem. What happens if we bring forward a complaint? What can the tribunal look at? What do we do for transparency? All of these things had similarities in scope because for a long time we hadn't looked at how to modernize the rules and the powers given to them.

I thank, first of all, the minister for being able to have collaborative conversations about this, for reaching out to AASAS. I think that if you want to make this about not being able to consult and then at the same time seeing that we're right here, that we're having this conversation – we're not afraid to say that we're willing to solve a problem and that we're willing to stand up for the questions on the complexities of a bill like this.

We're not just talking about a slap on the wrist, as it was mentioned by the member opposite, for a misconduct. Five years out of the profession: in the medical association any doctor will tell you that that's almost equivalent to never being able to practise again. I talked to nurses: the same thing for them. That is not a slap on the wrist.

At the same time, like, the characterization of that ultimately damages the public perception of their protection in this. Ultimately, I think that when we talk about survivors and how they bring forward questions and concerns, sometimes it's, "I don't think they meant to say this, but this is how they made me feel." If we don't have a way to address that – sometimes you just want to be able to say: "Can we resolve this and not go through a terrible tribunal process where I'll have to, you know, provide testimony? That creates stress in my life. Can we find a way to address this?" If we make it so, so difficult, then I can see that as a barrier for people to come forward. Do we want to do that? Do we want to evaluate the consequences of what we do?

I absolutely agree that if someone takes their power and their position as a doctor, as a nurse – and we're talking about almost 40 different colleges in this situation. If someone abuses their power, we absolutely need to make sure that there are consequences. We absolutely need to make sure that patients have the ability to understand that background, what their rights are. That's going to be hard enough, Madam Chair, because understanding regulatory bodies isn't something that people inherently think about. If I think that something happened to me with a doctor that I wasn't particularly happy about, before I came to this Legislature, I wouldn't be, like: "Oh, right. I have to call the College of Physicians & Surgeons." No one thinks about that. We still have to make sure that those bodies that are put in place have the ability to protect them, and I think that's where I applaud the members opposite for standing up to this.

But I also recognize that the conversation has to be based on appropriate levels of justice as well. We are talking about a tribunal that would then allow – and one of the other things I'm proud of here is that we looked at the tribunal and we said: in this instance, if a case was to be brought forward, it would be the balance of probabilities that would cause them to be able to rule whether they were able to make the verdict. I think that that's crucially important in something like this. We talk about the number of people that do come forward and their success rates.

When we put something like this in place, it's because we've been meticulous in thinking of every single step because it's important to make sure that the people that are members of these spaces also feel like they have the ability, if they did something that was inappropriate, to also rectify it in certain situations. It can be for smaller ones that would also fall under misconduct. I think that those things happen within society, and I think the Me Too movement has told us about the kinds of things that happen on a daily basis. I think that we need to find a way to address these things because we can't, frankly, just say that everyone is wrong. We need to find a way to have some form of restorative portion to what we're doing, because, at the end of the day, what we're working on is to create a culture that says: "Listen, this isn't okay. This can't continue to be in." I don't care if it was the culture of the past. I don't care if it was okay then. It's not okay because any form of sexual assault or sexual misconduct has a deep impact on anyone who has experienced it, an impact that you can't ever shake.

Madam Chair, at the end of the day, this amendment demonstrates the government's and the minister's ability to listen and the commitment to being able to get something right for a patient. I think that's how this should be characterized. Shame on the members opposite for saying that we aren't willing to work with them because this is exactly that demonstration. When you make a case for 10 minutes that all of this is terrible because we did it, because someone once mentioned your record – it's your record. If you don't like defending it, change it. That's not on us.

I think, Madam Chair, at the end of the day, we need to keep having these conversations. We need to ensure that not just in health care spaces are we supporting survivors but all across the board. I think that's where it is hard to have those conversations because it feels like we are at some point blaming someone for something that they've done. I think that when these conversations happen on a routine basis, that's why people get defensive, because they at some point may have said something that they don't know how to rectify now.

We have to give that space for people to grow, because if we can't grow within society, what are we giving people the opportunity to do? I'm not at all excusing anyone that ever thinks it is okay to implement their power and to abuse that power. Frankly, when you read the story that happened in Ontario, that actually brought this legislation to Ontario, it's actually appalling as to how something like that would happen in a doctor's room.

I think that it is absolutely imperative that we put this legislation forward, that we make sure that in the instance that we are moving forward with a tribunal verdict that says that they are guilty of a sexual abuse, they will not be able to practise again. I think we have to let the tribunal also do its work. Otherwise, why do we have it? Otherwise, we have to question why we are putting these things in place.

Madam Chair, this is so important for the work that we need to continue doing. I know that the members opposite know that. We've worked with them on different issues. This government actually does have a record of having supported amendments from the opposition in a way that is actually quite different than the former government. I mean, I will remind the members that I used to work for the Premier beforehand, and in her time in office before being Premier, she had one amendment that the previous government moved and approved, one amendment in a career of years.

I think that we have demonstrated session after session that we are willing to look at it. We don't have to agree on everything, but we are willing to look at these things. I mean, a lot of their amendments look very similar time after time because it's the procedure of how they're doing these things, but I think it's unfair to characterize this bill – to put those things into perspective right now, I frankly feel that only someone that hasn't felt the pain of sexual assault in their life would make this about something, anything, other than that. I deeply feel that. When those kinds of comments are made, I get it. I get that everyone in this Legislature works hard and that, frankly, it is a job where you don't get much recognition when you do something right. I don't think that many members know that I started working on these things seven months ago and that I started bringing things forward to the minister's office and that she was getting annoyed with me for the number of things that I asked her to look at.

I think it's important that we keep debating this amendment and that we look at the importance of an amendment like this, Madam Chair. I really hope that the conversation can be about patients, about what we're looking at. Frankly, even our position before this was from consultations that we've had, from the worry about, as it was stated multiple times: what happens to the constitutionality? Will they be able to challenge it? I think it's a fair question to have when we're talking about a justice system. I think that resulted from the consultation. You can disagree on whether that is or not, but that's why we're here. We want to be sure that something that we're putting into legislation would be the best for the patients and to make sure that we are providing appropriate health care.

Madam Chair, thank you very much for allowing me to make comments to Bill 21 and to the amendment today. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky ... No. That's not right. Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: I get confused with him all the time.

Thank you so much for the opportunity. I actually, really, don't know where to start other than that I think we need to bring this back to why we're here in the first place. One of the things I'd like to mention is that the hon. Leader of the Opposition has been an absolutely incredible advocate by the side of all of us on this side trying to bring this legislation forward. I couldn't have more gratitude for a person who has worked so hard alongside us to bring this legislation forward. Then for him to be attacked personally in this Legislature for bringing forward questions that have ultimately led to this legislation and then to have the government attack him for his good work in here, working with us and offering to work with the government, I think that shame needs to be turned back around onto the government. You need to consider why we're here in the first place.

One other thing that I'd like to address before I go fully into this amendment is that the member who just spoke was talking about the reality of the people who commit these crimes and about their rights to be able to have a tribunal and all these kinds of things. Okay. But I'm going to tell you something, Madam Chair. My body, the bodies of anybody in this room, my children, my parents, anybody that I love: if a doctor ever – ever – hurt or molested or touched anybody that I know and that person was not held accountable and the government does not have the guts to stand up and say that that's not appropriate, then shame on them.

On top of that, when we brought legislation forward to extend the ban in legislation, that we're grateful for – I think all of us have said this here at least once, that we are grateful for this legislation, no doubt, whoever brought it forward. Let me also say that the college of physicians and doctors, if you have consulted with them, would be grateful for the ability to do their jobs properly. That would have to be mandated by this government, and this strengthening that we brought forward would give them all of the tools that they need to hold accountable these people who decide that in vulnerable situations they're allowed to massage breasts and pinch buttocks and actually, in Ontario, molest 21 people that were sedated. Twenty-one before it actually came forward, and he was banned for 10 years and was allowed to reapply, as far as I understand.

Let's be clear about why we're here in the first place. This is a nonpartisan issue. This is something that we brought up with the very good intention of helping to change the legislation. This amendment is strong. It could be stronger. We have an absolute responsibility. Let me just quote. Like I said, I don't even know where to start. Let me quote here from the hearing tribunal.

Dr. Taher did not suggest he had any medical basis to touch the patient's buttock or breasts.

He admitted that. I don't know; maybe he deserves more of a tribunal. We'll let the government decide that.

Then it goes on to say that he had reported that at the time he had believed the patient's attire and behavior had been an indication that she had been giving him "an invitation."

Really? And the government wants to stop our ban on somebody like this from being able to reapply after five years because, technically, after five years they're not competent anymore, they have to reapply, and it would be difficult for them. I'm sorry. I'm not going to weep over that. I'm weeping over the person that went there, trusted a doctor, and was manipulated by that doctor. Let's be clear about why we're here. The public confides in their physicians.

The member had also said that the physicians are the ones that bear the burden of this, and they do. You don't think for one moment that physicians want to make sure that legislation is strong enough so that any young person that's coming into this very, very noble profession understands, right from the get-go, that do no harm means that: do no harm? But if we want to get into the weeds of what that means or that particular situation and make exceptions to the rule before we even get started, my goodness, are we not going 10 steps backwards?

What is the purpose of this legislation? The purpose is to lay down a foundation to make sure that anyone that comes into this noble profession – and as it was pointed out to me, in education if a teacher is fired for these particular reasons, they can't come back to school. Would you like to know that the teacher that's teaching your child, grandchild, cousin, friends, neighbour's child had after five years reapplied and then was allowed to teach young children again after having molested a child? We're talking about this legislation as it pertains to women, but what about children? What about vulnerable people, anybody in a situation like that?

Do any of you in this House want to stand in that doctor's office that has molested or behaved in any inappropriate manner – you tell me right now – who has proceeded with that, completely vulnerable in whatever situation you're in there for, and be okay because after five years they were allowed to apply or they happen to have a mentor with them who watches over them while you are shirt off, pants down, vulnerable?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I know that this is an important subject for everybody in the House. Just a reminder, if you could do it through the Chair, please, instead of speaking to each other. Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: Sorry, Chair. I appreciate that. Thank you so much. Through you.

I would like to know who in here would like to be in that doctor's office and is okay with that. Any of you? Sorry, Chair.

I would like to know, Madam Chair, if anybody in this House is okay with that. And if you are, stand up now and say that that's okay and that you're okay with five years and that that's enough, that after that time, that person has learned their lesson and they're not going to manipulate a vulnerable person while in their care because they didn't know what they were doing the first time around.

It is an absolute honour to be here, absolutely beyond my wildest dreams and expectations to be able to stand in this House with people who care about Alberta. Protecting patients from sexual assault: actually, this bill should be renamed An Act against Predatory Doctors. This act is so important in promoting health. We talk about women's health, but this is all people. All of us are vulnerable when we're in front of a doctor. All of us. We tell them stories about absolutely everything that is going on in our lives – absolutely everything – things, Madam Chair, that you would not normally tell to even somebody you know that well because it's so personal. You're going to that person with this information in your hand, going: please help me and my situation. The mistake that the government made in not accepting the legislation that we brought forward hopefully will be fixed in this amendment. I'm grateful that they've taken actions to improve this important piece of legislation.

The fear of sexual assault by a health care provider should never be a barrier. For anybody who has ever been at the hands of a predator or sexual assault, the thought of going in, Madam Chair, to a doctor and being that vulnerable is already an issue. The experience of the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin: she talks about a gynecologist there in Fort McMurray that was charged with assaulting six female patients between 2003 and 2005. Am I correct? Yeah.

It's very, very overwhelming, actually, to hear about, especially if you consider rural areas. You know, we're considering people who – a lot of these doctors who live in rural areas know their patients, they know the families, they have dinners together. I'm very good friends with my doctor. So that trust is even beyond just the doctor-patient relationship.

All of us were horrified to learn about the disturbing report on Dr. Taher that was about the sexual assault and about the patients that were twice assaulted and the nurse that had been allowed to return to work even though the doctor, Dr. Taher, who was working there had shown this pattern of behaviour. She had to go back and work with this guy.

So you can imagine, after fighting so hard to get this information across, that we were very happy to see this legislation come forward, but I think what we need to consider altogether here, Madam Chair, are the loopholes that are still there. Beyond the emotions that I personally have and have shown and beyond the partisanship that has happened with the bill, you know, with respect to speaking about this and beyond where credit goes or doesn't go, it's about: we have to go to bat for the Albertans who put forward multiple – and those amendments that we created on this side: this was because Albertans, their voices were in our ears through those amendments.

The amendments aren't for the people in this House. The amendments are for my neighbour next door that doesn't speak English very well. She's an amazing woman. They have four children. One of them has special needs, and she has to be able to go to her doctor, that she may not completely understand due to her limited English. She comes from a country where things might not have been as wonderful as Canada is, and everybody is telling her: you know, we are this amazing country, these beautiful people. We are. So she already goes into that relationship with that doctor, Madam Chair, with the desire for trust.

If we in this House can't uplift that public trust, we've lost already. This kind of legislation is there to actually invest in public trust, to invest in health care, to invest in what our expectations are.

All of us who are in here, Madam Chair, as politicians are held to a higher standard. Why is that? That's a good thing. The expectation of our doctors should be no less than that. We rise to the occasion. We work harder. We learn from our mistakes. If the actions of the government are only going to be totted up to partisanship and not working together on this, I feel very, very sorry and incredibly disappointed, and I'm sure Albertans are as well.

It's such a privilege to stand up in here for something that I'm so grateful for every day, and that's safety. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill as well because as a survivor this is very, very difficult for her, too, and she's shown such grace and strength bringing forward legislation.

I wish that this had happened earlier this week when the bill was originally in third reading. Late is better than never. I want to thank the minister for being willing to take a step back and take a look at this legislation. No one is perfect, as the Leader of the Opposition had said earlier, and we're not expected to be, but this is a very, very important step forward. Five years after assaulting a patient is just not enough time. I cannot imagine a single Albertan, as you can tell by my speech this morning, who would be comfortable being alone with a physician who'd had the ability to reapply for their licence after a five-year ban for being sexually inappropriate or aggressive with a patient.

Consider, too, that sexual assault, sexual inappropriateness, and all of these things are very, very broad spectrum definitions, Madam Chair. Broad spectrum definitions. What we have to remember is that a doctor is a position of authority. No matter how you look at that, this is the person that has the information that is able to hopefully lead us.

What we're talking about here with this bill is actually prevention. It's based on a very, very sad situation and the absolutely horrific treatment of people who went for care, but actually the legislation is about prevention. The legislation is about setting up the right language, the right tone, and the right laws to be in place to make sure that the folks that are in this power position understand that privilege and understand the trust that is being given to them and that they enter into that wholeheartedly, understanding their responsibilities and that that is not something that any of us are willing to negotiate.

Physicians who are convicted by a tribunal of their peers should never ever be allowed to practise again. The credibility of our health system and the trust and safety of patients depend on this important change, that actually we advocated for very hard on this side, Madam Chair. I am honoured that I had the opportunity.

I would also like to thank my incredible, incredible staff, that have worked so hard with myself and the Leader of the Opposition, bringing this information forward. It's been very, very emotional and very hard on everybody, and I'm very proud of the people that I work with. I'm very pleased to have been able to bring this forward in the House and to see some resolution. I'm so proud of my colleagues. I'm so proud of my colleagues on this side of this House who fought so furiously to get this legislation to this point.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to begin by thanking my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View for her passionate remarks and deep conviction on this issue. I would also like to thank the hon. members for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill and Strathcona-Sherwood Park for their sincere, powerful, and heartfelt words and for sharing their painful personal experiences with the House and with Albertans. That underscores the great seriousness of the issue with which we are seized. I'd like to also thank the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for having brought forward one of the thoughtful amendments on Bill 21 to eliminate the five-year window proposed in the original legislation.

I would also like, Madam Chair, just briefly to respond to some of the comments made by the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park about myself. I regret if I said anything in my initial remarks to suggest that I would think this bill is about me. To the contrary, what I tried to convey was my disappointment, when I first raised this matter in a completely nonpartisan fashion and offered to co-operate with the government on behalf of the opposition, that the hon. the Minister of Health turned that into a personal attack. My point was simply that I hope we can all use this very peculiar volte-face on the part of the government, moving this from third reading back into Committee of the Whole, doing a complete policy reversal – I would hope that we could learn from this and learn that perhaps working more collaboratively and finding common ground across party lines is the best way to serve Albertans when and where it makes sense.

Now, having said that, Madam Chair, I would like to speak a little bit more about the substance of the amendment. To try to put this in layman's terms, section A(a)(3) of the amendment before the House proposes two substantive sections. One is subsection (3), which essentially says that if a physician has had their permit to practise medicine cancelled as a result of a decision of unprofessional conduct based in whole or in part on sexual abuse, they may not reapply for registration. They may not apply for reinstatement of their medical licence.

We wholeheartedly agree with this amendment, Madam Chair. It gives effect to the amendments proposed earlier this week by the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill and the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View and the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin. So we thank the government for having listened and addressed this because this is dealing now with predator doctors who've been found guilty of sexual abuse, which has a particular meaning, Madam Chair, in the Criminal Code of Canada and obviously deals with much more serious kinds of abuse.

We all recognize that there are different forms of sexual offences, and that is why the government amendment goes on in subsection (3.1) to say:

A person whose practice permit and registration are cancelled as a result of a decision of unprofessional conduct based in whole or in part on sexual misconduct may not apply for the practice permit to be reissued . . . [for] at least 5 years.

In layman's terms, what the government amendment, I think, understandably seeks to do is to make a distinction, to bifurcate the consequences between sexual abuse and sexual misconduct. It essentially says: a lifetime ban if a predator doctor has been found responsible for sexual abuse but the possibility of reapplying if the doctor is found guilty of sexual misconduct, which under the Criminal Code of Canada and the common law is a lower standard of offence.

One of the concerns we have, Madam Chair: while we wholeheartedly agree with the first part of this, the lifetime ban for abuse, we are concerned that there may be some kinds of misconduct characterized as sexual misconduct or unprofessional conduct which should merit the lifetime ban as opposed to the five-year ban proposed. For example, we understand that one of the most frequent forms of sexual or unprofessional misconduct on the part of a physician involves what is known as voyeurism, like videotaping or surreptitiously photographing patients in a vulnerable situation. My understanding – and perhaps the Minister of Health could confirm this – is that the majority of complaints brought against physicians for offences of this nature deal with voyeurism, which is a grave invasion of the privacy and security of a patient.

With that in mind, I just wanted to give notice that we intend to bring forward a subamendment, which is being shared with the government. This is not a formal motion. I'm just giving the committee an informal heads-up to expect a subamendment from the opposition which would say that, notwithstanding anything to the contrary, a person whose practice permit and registration are cancelled as a result of a decision of unprofessional conduct under sections 82(1.1)(b) or 96.2(1)(b), based in whole or in part on a conviction of an offence under the Criminal Code, may not apply for the practice permit to be reissued and the registration to be reinstated.

Essentially, what we will be proposing, in a completely constructive spirit, Madam Chair, is an amendment to use the threshold established in the Criminal Code of Canada for triggering the lifetime ban on predator doctors. If, for example, a doctor is found culpable of having engaged in voyeurism that would meet the Criminal Code threshold of an offence – that is to say, that could carry a significant penal sanction – then we believe that should carry with it the lifetime ban proposed by the government under part A, subsection (3), of the government amendment.

We'll have a chance to clarify this when we share the proposed subamendment with members, but I just simply wanted to give our constructive input on this at this point, which is to say that while we do appreciate the government's willingness to reconsider the bill, to support bringing this back to committee, and while we do appreciate the effort to amend Bill 21 to ensure a lifetime ban for doctors who are responsible for sexual abuse, we do think that the next section may create loopholes that allow for the reinstatement of the licence for doctors who've been found guilty of a criminal offence that does not constitute sexual abuse but which is made up of other forms of abuse such as an invasion of privacy through voyeurism.

We'll offer that in due course this morning, Madam Chair. One of the reasons that we're speaking to this is because we've been trying – you know, all of this is happening at lightning speed by legislative standards, and we are working with Legislative Counsel and our research staff to frame this and potentially other amendments in the technically correct fashion. I just offer that as constructive input into this important debate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for the opportunity to rise to speak to this amendment to Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients. I think that it's been quite an interesting debate in this House, and I would really first, before I start, commend the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill and the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park on their courage to speak about their experience. In this Legislature I know that it's really hard to talk about those kinds of things as sexual assault does leave a scar, a scar that will never go away, so bringing it up is hard to talk about. I want to just say thank you for coming forward, because you're not just talking about yourself. You're also speaking about women across this province who don't have a voice, and you're standing up for their rights. I just want to personally say thank you for that.

You know, members on this side of the House, this bill and this amendment proceed naturally from our values. I know that the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park just talked about how she's been in consultation with the Minister of Health for about seven months now. I know that with her background as a social worker, she has dealt with many cases like this and has consulted with many different organizations across Alberta and has a really good understanding around how to deal with this kind of thing. It's only natural that she would be a cosponsor of this bill. I'm proud to be a cosponsor of this bill as well. I've spent the majority of my years as a women's rights activist, and I think that's proven through my legislation helping women fleeing domestic violence situations by them not paying a fee. Since that, over 500 women have used that, and I think that it's needed. I'm just proud of our government's work in helping women.

It's something, actually, that has been ignored for quite a long time, for 44 years. This is why Albertans back in 2015 decided that they wanted a change. They were tired of not being heard, and it's refreshing that they have a government that's actually listening to the people. I'm just so proud to stand here and have the privilege to even talk about a bill that's really going to be helping hundreds of people's lives.

You know, I just find it really interesting that the Leader of the Official Opposition was just a few minutes ago talking about himself – instead, I feel like this bill is about survivors of sexual assault and sexual misconduct – and I find it insulting to women. I remember him putting forward a video after Bill 9 saying that he knows what's good for women in this province, and I would have to disagree with that wholeheartedly. I think his voting record as a Member of Parliament really speaks to that. His actions speak louder than his words, Madam Chair. Either way, it's good to know that at least they are listening to our government and agreeing with this amendment today.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Point of order. Please go ahead.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Nixon: Madam Chair, I rise on relevance. We're talking about an amendment that has been brought forward by this government in an unprecedented way to correct a mistake. The member who is speaking right now is speaking about anything but the amendment. Quite frankly, I think it is quite ironic that she would spend her time attacking members on this side of the House when it's already been pointed out that that's the problem that got them to the same place. In addition to that, that member, just less than 48 hours ago, stood in this House three times and voted against women. That's her record in this Chamber, not the hon. members . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, thank you.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I understand that the debate has gotten rather heated in this place today. I think that, based on the experiences of members in this Chamber, there has been a certain amount of latitude allowed today. I appreciate that the Opposition House Leader feels the need to amp this up, but I think the member is more than willing to carry on and get to the point. I'm seeing nodding, so I think that in that case we can carry on, and I'm sure she will speak on point.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. members. For all members of the House, if you could reference Beauchesne's 459, relevance of the debate. I try to allow as much leniency on both sides when we're in Committee of the Whole. I believe I've done that for the opposition side as well as the government side. If I could just ask that we on both sides refocus on the relevance of the sections. At this point there is no point of order.

Please go ahead, hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, you know, the whole thing that I was trying to say was that this amendment is very important for women's lives. It will provide serious consequences to health care providers who think that they can get away with sexual misconduct or assault, and I'm just so proud to support it.

I've listened with great interest to members on all sides, in particular to the other side, the United Conservative Party. They've spoken very passionately about wanting to send a message to women in Alberta, as I mentioned before, but I can't help but think that they've already sent a very powerful message. Back in May of this year, when the House was debating Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act, I didn't hear a word, actually, from the members of the United Conservative Party. In fact, they left this House every time we voted on that bill, 14 times.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could please focus on section 7 of the amendment.

Drever: No problem. You know, I'm just pleased that today they decided to join us in condemning violence and harassment inside a doctor's office.

I am very happy that our government has done a lot of work for survivors of sexual assault in this House. We've done a lot of work by increasing funding for women's shelters by $15 million. That has helped more than 17,000 women and 14,000 children in Alberta. We have provided $6 million in emergency financial supports to 5,489 Albertans fleeing abuse. This government has provided $25 million in new funding for FCSS to address sexual violence and to promote healthy relationships.

This government has also provided $33 million to 121 community projects that support survivors and to help end family violence and sexual violence. This government helped the North Rocky View Community Links family violence services project and Sagesse, a peer support service in Calgary and Airdrie, providing more than 1,500 counselling hours. I'm very proud of that. I know that I've personally been to many of these organizations myself, and they're very thankful for our government's work because now they can properly help their clients in addressing family violence and sexual assault.

You know, I just wanted to stand to say that I support this amendment, and I encourage everyone in this House to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I will now recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move an amendment, and I have the requisite number of copies here. Would you like me to wait until you receive the amendment?

The Deputy Chair: Just to clarify, hon. member, it's a subamendment?

Ms Goodridge: It's a subamendment, yes. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: You can just wait until I have a copy at the table.

Please go ahead, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as SA1.

Ms Goodridge: Wonderful. Thank you, Madam Chair. Alberta's United Conservatives are proud to have shown our effectiveness by pushing the NDP government to ensure any health care professional who sexually abuses a patient never practises again, but we can still do better.

Allow me to read this common-sense subamendment to the government's amendment to ensure that we cover all criminal convictions involving a doctor and a patient: (a) part A is amended (i) by renumbering it as part A.1 and by adding the following before part A.1: A. section 7(a) is amended by striking out "Subject to subsection (3), a person" and substituting "Subject to subsections (3.1) and (4.1), a person"; and (ii) by adding the following after clause (b): (b.1) by adding the following after the proposed section 45(4):

(4.1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary, a person whose practice permit and registration are cancelled as a result of a decision of unprofessional conduct under sections 82(1.1)(b) or 96.2(1)(b), based in whole or in part on a conviction of an offence under the Criminal Code (Canada), may not apply for the practice permit to be reissued and the registration to be reinstated.

Madam Chair, as you've already heard many times over the past few days, the United Conservative Party does not believe a ban of five years is long enough for health professionals who commit serious sexual offences. The government's amendment today performs that service on behalf of patients if they have been sexually abused by a health professional. This will include all convictions under the Criminal Code that align with sexual abuse and all findings by a tribunal for guilt of sexual abuse.

What this amendment does not ensure is that health professionals whose licences have been pulled due to a Criminal Code conviction that aligns with sexual misconduct also face a lifetime ban. Our United Conservative caucus has been trying through every legislative means possible to us as members of the opposition to impose a lifetime ban on any health professional who has been found guilty of sexually abusing a patient and who has had their licence pulled for sexual misconduct. We are pleased the government's amendment shuts the door on convicted sexual abusers, but we also on this side of the House want to see the door closed for criminal convictions aligning with sexual misconduct.

The bar for a criminal conviction is high, and Albertans would be shocked to learn that Bill 21 leaves the door open for someone who has had any conviction for sexual offence involving a patient, including potentially harassment and voyeurism, to apply for their licence. We are hopeful that this government will understand the importance of dealing with all sexual offences with the same firm measure.

Let's fix this bill now to offer Alberta women and patients the utmost protection now and provide all Albertans with the faith that their legislators are crafting laws that deal firmly with all criminal convictions.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Sorry. Is this 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Chair: No. We're in Committee of the Whole.

Ms Hoffman: It's not. Okay. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just want to say that I think the intent of the mover aligns with the intent that we share in government. I just have questions. The reference in the actual subamendment refers only to the Criminal Code. It doesn't say: of a sexual nature. As I understand it, we will soon be at a point where we rise. I think what the mover said in her remarks was: Criminal Code of a sexual nature. I think we might have to work collaboratively. Again, if there's an opportunity, when there is a desire to work on amendments – certainly, if we would have had this ahead of time, we could have worked on that language and would be happy to do so with our staff while we, of course, honour our veterans.

I have to say that I want to thank again all of the colleagues who have been involved in this process for many, many months. I believe it was in April when we first started speaking publicly about this. I know how heart-wrenching and emotional and challenging this has been for probably everyone but explicitly for the survivors who've approached me. I know how committed they are to making sure that this never happens again and that we ensure that every person who has survived has confidence that their abuser is being held accountable and won't have an opportunity to reoffend.

Again, I want to say to both of my cosponsors how honoured I am to have worked with them through this process to make sure that we not only send a very clear message – obviously, that is a big part of this – but that we also have by far the strictest legislation to ensure that there is no room. As I had mentioned in the introduction of this bill, the days of impunity are over, and we are bringing folks out of the darkness into the light so that folks have an opportunity through this legislation and through the work that we've done to align in supporting survivors.

A few ways that we've done that before today include, of course, the increased investments to the sexual assault centres as well as bringing forward protections for folks accessing . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: A point of order called.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Nixon: Madam Chair, again, I'm very interested in hearing what the minister has to say about it. I think it's important to this piece of legislation, but we are literally on a subamendment. The relevance of this for the debate portion of this subamendment that is before the floor is confusing the process. I actually don't think that's the Deputy Premier's intention. I want to hear more about what the Deputy Premier has to say on this important issue. That's what Committee of the Whole is for, but we're specifically on this subamendment at this moment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: As I was saying, I believe that this subamendment, with the intent that was referred to by . . .

The Deputy Chair: No. We're still on the point of order. Does the Deputy Government House Leader have a comment?

Ms Hoffman: Oh, I'll let my House leader defend my honour.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I do believe that the Deputy Premier is willing to refocus her comments with respect to the subamendment specifically, so I'm happy to let her continue.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader. Again, because we're in Committee of the Whole, I do try to allow some latitude. I know that there were some specific questions, so if the minister could maybe focus specifically on the new subamendment, that would be appreciated.

Debate Continued

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The subamendment speaks to and the mover of the subamendment spoke to the importance of being very clear around the Criminal Code components, building on that, of course, and respecting the fact that it is survivors who we are motivated to ensure are protected and have the ability to have full confidence as well as anyone – any woman, any Albertan – entering the health care system. That's one of the reasons why through the legislation we've added the components around transparency and posting. I certainly appreciate the intent of the hon. member. I think we had a very good conversation with the opposition Health critic to explain why we were bringing forward our amendment this morning and last night, and I certainly welcome opposition members who have amendments and want to ensure that we're aligned and have good understanding to do the same moving forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Deputy Premier, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) and Government Motion 28 I shall now interrupt the proceedings and call the committee to rise and report progress.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

10:40

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Committee of the Whole has under consideration certain sections of Bill 21. The committee reports progress on the following: section 7 and section 26 of Bill 21. I wish to table all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official record of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? All in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As we were slated to adjourn at 10:45 in any event and seeing as everyone has a Remembrance Day ceremony to get to, I would propose that we call it 10:45 and adjourn until this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:42 a.m. pursuant to Government Motion 28]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 8, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the high commissioner for New Zealand to Canada, His Excellency Daniel Mellsop, as well as Mr. Nick Fleming, trade commissioner and Consul General of New Zealand in Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker, there are many similarities between our two jurisdictions that allow for natural partnerships across a number of areas. I had the opportunity to sit down with His Excellency this morning to discuss some of those areas, including agriculture innovation. What's fascinating is that 80 per cent of New Zealand's electricity is generated by renewables, so there's lots in common between Alberta and New Zealand. We enjoy a warm relationship, and we look forward to working with the high commissioner to further our relations in trade and in areas like agriculture and to collaborate on matters of interest, especially to indigenous peoples. I'd now like to ask the high commissioner and Mr. Fleming to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a group of seniors that have travelled to the Legislature today from the Heritage Place Lodge in Morinville: Simonne Deblois, Glen Gabby, Dell Risser, Marie-Thérèse Cyr, Dorothy DeChamplain, Jean, Liette Beaulieu, and Monica Warrener. They are here today to learn more about the happenings in the Alberta Legislature, and I welcome them here. I'd ask that they please rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Piquette: M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire members of CFB Edmonton 1 Service Battalion, who are students in the official languages program. We have here Master Corporal Johnathan Cognac, Corporal David Houde, Leading Seaman Becada, Private Fortier, Aviator Monette, Corporal Migneault, and they are accompanied by their instructor, Deborah Stasiuk. I had the opportunity to chat with them at lunch, and I have to say that they are wonderful students, so obviously they must have a great teacher. A warm welcome to Alberta, and I hope that you really enjoy being here. I see that they've already risen, so I would like to have the members extend to them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the very first class of the brand new school of Davidson Creek, and I hope that they'll stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. It was my pleasure to be there as we were opening this school with an incredible amount of windows. I think that they're pretty excited to be here, so give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my good friend from Battle River-Wainwright it is indeed my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a remarkable group of students from the Bashaw school. They are obviously here today to take a tour of the Legislature and learn a little more about how the Legislature works. I see just about everybody has risen there. If everybody is there, I'll say your name. The teachers are Rebecca Coates, Gerald Brouwer, and Lezley Lischynski. Hopefully, I got everything right there. Chaperones are Sara Jo Errity, Lori Miller, Maypu and Mark Mann, Sheena Singleton, Chad Singleton, Bobbi Wright, Jeff Bailey, Matt Greanya, Natasha Lawrence, Marie Leier, and Renée Groux. Please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly SML Christian Academy. There are 17 students today here in the public gallery. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Vanessa Hamilton, and their chaperone, Mrs. Aimee Williams. If they could all stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, today is Aboriginal Veterans Day. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly distinguished visitors from the Aboriginal Veterans Society of Alberta. The society's mandate is to organize and unite all aboriginal veterans for advocacy and support of each other. Today we honour First Nation, Inuit, and Métis veterans for their dedication and sacrifice. Indigenous veterans bravely served in World War I and every world conflict since. We thank you for your sacrifices, for your service with the Canadian Armed Forces, and for your continued contribution to our society. Hay-hay.

I would ask our honoured guests to stand as I read your name: Corporal Wallace Bona, retired, royal Canadian electrical engineers and president of the Aboriginal Veterans Society of Alberta; Corporal Shawn Donovan, retired, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry; Corporal Clint Eastman, retired, intelligence branch for five years and 22 years with armoured, and his wife, Corporal Jocelyn Eastman, retired, served 16 years between the RCAF and the Royal Canadian Navy; Corporal Chuck Stevenson, retired, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, and his wife, Bridget Stevenson, who will be celebrating 52 years of marriage on November 21. I would ask that all my guests remain standing and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Thank you for your service.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the winner of the Royal Canadian Legion's Dominion essay contest, Sadie Vogel. Her father, Mr. Paul Vogel; her mother, Mrs. Penny Vogel; and her sisters Miss Ellie and Holly Vogel join Sadie in the Speaker's gallery. The Vogels are from St. Albert, where Sadie currently attends St. Albert Catholic high school. I am sure that many members will recognize Sadie, who read out part of her essay Remembering the Past and Reflecting on the Present at the Remembrance Day ceremony earlier today. On November 11 Sadie will be part of the ceremonies in Ottawa, where she will meet the Governor General and help lay a wreath at the National War Memorial. I would ask that Sadie and her family all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, and thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Isaac and Colleen Stepney. Isaac is in grade 6 at St. Pius X elementary school. He's excited to learn about the provincial government with his class this year. He enjoys playing ball hockey, reading, playing board games, and spending time with his family. Colleen is a retired Edmonton Catholic school social studies teacher who has brought many students to visit the Legislature. She is delighted to introduce her grandchildren to the history and traditions of the Legislature in hopes that it will inspire a lifelong interest in politics and the democratic process. I'd ask Isaac and Colleen to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

1:40

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you Mark Taylor and his son Markus. Mark is the dedicated executive director of the Alberta Party and is raising a fine young man. It's a pleasure to have them as friends and in this House today. If the members would give them the warm welcome, I'd appreciate it.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a special group of individuals who promote diversity, inclusion, equality, and human rights. Joining us here today are human rights advocate and Hate to Hope founder, Chevi Rabbit; representatives from the 13th annual sisters in spirit vigils, April Eve and Freda Ballantyne; as well as newly elected councilwoman Katherine Swampy, who was an integral part in creating Canada's first rainbow crosswalks on a reserve. We also have Hate to Hope guest speaker, Dan Johnstone, and Rob Schwabenbauer and his team from the Mental Rescue Society. I'd like to thank my guests for all the important work that they do to make life better for all Albertans, and I would ask that they now please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first introduction today is to recognize two remarkable Albertans who exemplify the values of learning, teaching, and service. Dr. Austin Mardon is a geographer, writer, parent, and person living with schizophrenia. His wife, Catherine Mardon, is a lawyer, pastor, author, and parent. Together they are frequent writers, speakers, and advocates for mental health, social justice, and people with disabilities. They have received countless honours in recognition of their work, including the Order of Canada for Austin and papal knighthood for both Catherine and Austin. Please join me, colleagues – and Catherine and Austin please identify yourselves in the members' gallery – in honouring these two folks.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: I'd also like to rise today in recognition of our province's allied health professionals and their valuable contributions to health care teams across our province. This week is dedicated to allied health professionals as they dedicate their careers to the well-being of others. The allied health teams in our province include many disciplines such as audiology, psychology, occupational therapy, physical therapy, recreation therapy, respiratory therapy, speech-language pathology, social work, and spiritual care. Representing some of these folks today, I'd ask that Carol Robertsen, Eileen Keogh, Lana Hawkins, and Liz Webster please rise and receive our warm welcome and the appreciation of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of introductions, and I will be brief. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you some very important advocates who have called for increased AISH and financial assistance rates: Ian Young, Larry Marcotte, Don Slater. They're joined by Kelly Dowdell from Momentum; Rob Yager, president and CEO of United Way; Allan Undheim, vice-president of community building and investment for United Way; Jody-Lee Farrah, Andre Tinio, Elie Haddad, and Kayla Das from the Alberta College of Social Workers. I want to thank all of you for your dedication to fighting poverty and ensuring that all Albertans can live in dignity and provide for their families. Our government shares your commitment and looks forward to continuing to take action to make life better for Albertans. I ask my guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you three guests all the way from Calgary: Sana Jahangir, a real estate associate, a successful businessperson; Gul Wisha, resident and property manager with VIP company, who is accompanied by her daughter; and Humaira Falak, program co-ordinator with the Calgary Senior's Resource Society. These women are strong and successful advocates and active members of their communities who make life better for newcomer and immigrant communities. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. It's my last introduction, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to all members of this Assembly I want to introduce Red FM reporter Ramanjit Sidhu and Arshad Chaudhry, who is the Red FM photographer and one of the gallery's best photographers, and Kayla Van Den Bussche, Arshad's assistant photographer. These folks came up from Calgary to cover the event that will change the lives of many Albertans. I thank them for their dedication and for bringing culturally relevant news to the great people of Calgary in a language they understand. Red FM has done some great work with raising funds for the Peter Lougheed Centre's maternity triage area and neonatal intensive care unit care rooms, and now they will be having a radiothon for the Peter Lougheed Centre hemodialysis unit on the 23rd of November. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Andrew Boitchenko. Andrew is a constituent of mine and a proud Conservative and a volunteer with the United Conservative Party constituency association in Drayton Valley-Devon and a friend. Andrew was born in Odessa, Ukraine, and he is an active member of the Ukrainian community in Alberta and sits on the council of Canada-Ukraine Chamber of Commerce. Would Andrew please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and climate change.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you two women visiting us from Japan. They're here on behalf of the government of Japan's Ministry of Environment. Their names I'll say in the Japanese way. Aya Naito and Maho Takimi are here to focus on carbon pricing and emissions trading systems in Japan and around the world and to learn more about how it works in B.C. and Alberta. I would like them to rise [Remarks in Japanese] and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other introductions? Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to introduce to you and through you representatives of Lacombe composite high school, one of two schools in Canada to share this year the award for the greenest school in Canada. The students and their teacher, Mr. Schultz, are here in Edmonton today participating in the ag hero symposium, meeting with members of the Commonwealth ag society, presenting some of their projects, and planning for others. I'll mention them a little bit more in my member's statement. I ask that they please stand as I call out their names: Mr. Schultz, teacher; and then students Jade Benoit, Darcy Cunningham, Alexis Hutson, Holden Fafard, Brianna Campbell, and Cody Schonewille. Please extend to them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

World War I Armistice Centenary Aboriginal Veterans Day

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, this Remembrance Day marks the 100th anniversary of the end of the First World War, when an armistice was signed at 11 a.m. on November 11, 1918, which ended the hostilities of the First World War. Here in Canada our nation's contributions still evoke pride while families still feel the impact of loved ones lost. Leading up to the signing of the armistice is a period of time referred to as Canada's Hundred Days, a three-month stretch of Canadian victories that saw more than 100,000 Canadians advance 130 kilometres. Such triumphs came at a high price: 68,000 Canadians lost their lives in World War I, and more than 172,000 Canadians were injured.

Mr. Speaker, today is national Aboriginal Veterans Day, and it is my honour to recognize the contribution of indigenous Canadians from the First World War. An estimated 4,000 indigenous people, 400 in western Canada, voluntarily enlisted in the Canadian military in the First World War. They did so out of a proud warrior tradition, from a sense of adventure, and from patriotic sentiment. They served in every major battle Canada fought, and they served well. Over 50 were awarded medals for bravery, and hundreds died or were wounded, yet when the war was over, indigenous veterans did not receive the same services as others or the recognition that they deserved.

Mr. Speaker, I can only touch on this important story today, but with the 100th anniversary of armistice on our minds, I invite Albertans to explore this and other stories of the First World War for themselves. In the course of history a century is only the blink of an eye. The First World War still offers us many important lessons today of bravery and perseverance and ideals that led many to make the ultimate sacrifice. Let us learn these lessons and never forget those who lived them a century ago.

Lest we forget.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Unemployment

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday's job numbers show that unemployment is up 32 per cent under the NDP government's watch. Literally hundreds of thousands of Albertans in this province are out of work, and we have the highest unemployment outside of Atlantic Canada in our country. These are real people suffering real consequences as a result of that unemployment, and all this government can do is say that everything is rosy. It's not. My question is this. How does the government explain the decline in private-sector employment?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting. I think it was on Monday or Tuesday that the Leader of the Official Opposition was declaring defeat and talking about how nobody was ever going to invest in Alberta again. About an hour after those sets of questions, I believe that Imperial Oil announced a $2.6 billion investment in Alberta's oil sands. So let me just say that work still needs to be done, Albertans still need more jobs, but we are on the right track.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, of course, that's very good news, but that still doesn't replace the $100 billion that left under this Premier's watch.

Standing up and saying that everything is okay totally disregards what these families are going through. A young man by the name of Ryan visited with me in Rocky Mountain House when I was home on Friday, a father of three who's been unemployed for two and a half years, struggling to keep his family fed, who's lost hope.

His biggest frustration is that this Premier and this government continue to act like that does not matter. Again through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why does this government insist on telling Albertans how good things are, how good they have it when we know without a doubt that we still have the largest unemployment in the country?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what we say all the time is that we know there is more work to do and that we continue to be focused on having Albertans' backs and doing whatever we can to promote job creation and that we know that it is not success until every family feels that recovery. We actually say that all the time. That being said, the members opposite want to paint a picture that is not true. Just yesterday StatsCan came out and showed that last year Alberta led the country in economic growth by a long ways, doubling Saskatchewan next door, that followed . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about actually what this Premier and her government say to Albertans. She told them to take the bus. She told the people that were concerned about the carbon tax that they were Chicken Little. She told seniors in my community to fund raise to pay for her carbon tax. And she continues to stand up here and just try to indicate that because we have some investment coming back, everything is going to be A-okay. The reality is that while that is good news, unemployment has still been increasing since May under this Premier. Investment is still fleeing. Trans Mountain, which she promised the House would be built, is not being built. People are out of work, and they are hurting. Again, how does this Premier expect Albertans to believe that things are looking up when their . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Another thing that is in fact happening is that the employment rate in Alberta is the highest in the country. The number of people working in Alberta is higher than it has ever been. The average weekly wages are higher than they have ever been. Is every family feeling that yet? No. That's why we're going to continue to focus on supporting our communities. But what we do know is that the families that the member opposite talks about will not be helped by blowing a $700 million hole in the budget to give money to the richest 1 per cent of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Provincial Achievement Tests

Mr. Smith: Thank you. Yesterday the Minister of Education boasted of "excellent results" in the provincial exams. A 42 per cent passing grade, or cut score, is not an Albertan standard of excellence, and the Premier herself remarked yesterday that "the tests are not good." Now, I was a social studies teacher, and I never learned how bad tests could produce excellent results. Perhaps you need discovery math for that one. Mr. Speaker, through you to the Premier: how is it that bad tests are getting excellent results?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we see excellent results in so many areas, in science and grade 12 math and grade 6 math. Grade 9 math: room for improvement, for sure. But you know what? We're not afraid to have no-calculator portions on the tests to make sure that kids can do math in their heads. That's a decision that we made to make sure that we're investing in education, to make sure our kids get the very best education now and into the future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the PATs are extensively field tested and that the assessment branch has historically produced excellent assessment tools, which indicates to me that there is some kind of disconnect between teaching methodology, teaching resources, curriculum, and assessment. Parents deserve to know which pieces of the puzzle are missing. Why won't the Premier direct her minister to publish the cut scores and explain the rationale behind them so parents can better understand where the problems lie?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we know that the root of the problem is that we need to develop new curriculum, which we are doing here in the province of Alberta, the biggest curriculum rebuild in the history of the province. The previous government failed to build curriculum in a modern way, and we are doing so. We're proud of the results that we're getting. Certainly, we have transparency every step of the way to make sure parents, teachers, and students know what is expected of them, and we should expect nothing less.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a recent CBC article one Alberta parent has described her daughter's experience with the PATs this way. "We really didn't have any indications from her report cards that she was going to be flunking the exam." This disconnect between expectations and results strikes me as mounting evidence of a major problem with math instruction in Alberta, and curriculum is only one piece of the puzzle. When is the Premier going to direct the Minister of Education to make a comprehensive inquiry into the problem of cut scores?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, our PAT exam scores are excellent. We see some room for improvement on one part of one exam in one grade. You know, I used to teach a bit of science. It's called action-reaction. Action: you take $700 million out of the public purse to give to your friends. Reaction: kids in schools will suffer; kids in classrooms will suffer. You take 4,000 teachers out of the classroom: action-reaction, same result. We're here for kids. We're proud of that.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Suspension of Physicians' Licences to Practise

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Six months ago we raised the case of an Edmonton area doctor who was convicted of sexually assaulting a patient at a Sherwood Park clinic in June 2013. He also assaulted a nurse at a north side Edmonton clinic. He also assaulted a clinic manager. The tribunal report said that "proven conduct was . . . serious and repugnant for a member of the medical profession.” Until this morning this government thought that a mere five-year suspension would be good enough. To the Premier: why?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Women and all Albertans should feel safe when receiving medical care. We’ve been clear about that for a number of months, and I want to thank the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for her advocacy on this particular issue. That’s why our government introduced legislation to ensure better protections for patients from sexual abuse and sexual misconduct, more transparency on the disciplinary histories and criminal convictions of health providers, and why we were matched, until this morning, for the strictest in Canada. But we’re thinking that it’s time to take that even further. We’ve worked with survivors and the agencies that support them, and they’ve asked us to do that, and we’re proud to do so.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you to the minister for listening to the opposition.

Five years is not a long time. Dr. Ismail Taher sexually assaulted an 18-year-old female patient in a Sherwood Park clinic in 2013, violating the sacred doctor-patient trust. If he had received a five-year restriction on practising back in 2013, he’d actually already be practising right now, today, in 2018. Again to the Premier: why did your government this week repeatedly stand against making a lifetime ban from practising for doctors and is now only starting to backpedal?

2:00

Ms Hoffman: I want to thank members from both sides of this Chamber for their passion in this debate on this important topic. Let me make it clear. My intention is to proceed with preventing any physician found guilty of a sexual offence as defined under the Criminal Code of Canada from being reinstated, to prevent that from happening, to prevent anyone who has conducted sexual assault from being able to practise again in this province, and to give the colleges the strictest legislation of any jurisdiction across Canada to ensure safety for patients and all Albertans, Mr. Speaker. I’m proud of our record.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, the minister’s record is voting three times against extending the ban on predatory doctors.

We welcome that the government has finally come around to doing the right thing, but just the other day the Minister of Health said that she wanted to ensure that everyone can have the confidence that health practitioners are being dealt with in a strict and fair way.

That being said, that’s why I will be opposing the amendment.

To the Premier: why did the government spend days arguing that five years is a good enough ban for doctors who sexually assault patients?

Ms Hoffman: Again, I want to say that Alberta’s vision for this law is the strictest in the country, and we will show just how serious our government stands in support of women’s rights and the rights of survivors when they’ve been assaulted, Mr. Speaker. It’s important to us that we continue to show just how we stand with survivors. That’s why we’ve increased funding for women’s shelters by $50 million to help more than 17,000 women and 14,000 children flee violence, that’s why we passed legislation so that survivors of domestic violence can break a lease without financial penalty, and that’s why we will improve access to the legal system for survivors of domestic violence by removing the two-year time limit for bringing forward civil claims. Our record is clear, and I’m proud of it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, consumer protection is a major responsibility of governments of all types.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I was thinking about next week, when we won’t be here. My apologies.

The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: No problem at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, to the Deputy Premier: when we speak in this House, who are we speaking for? Are we speaking for our constituents, or are we speaking for political parties? As representatives for Albertans do you believe that honest questions asked in this House deserve straight answers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I have the absolute honour and privilege to be in this House every day fighting for all Albertans. On this side of the House we’ve done that by stopping a billion-dollar cut to health care, by making sure that we invested in children when former governments wanted to push for deep cuts, and we will continue to do that. And, yes, I will happily answer reasonable questions with reasonable answers, and I will not back down from my responsibilities to fight for ordinary families.

Mr. Fraser: I asked yesterday how close we were to full implementation of the Valuing Mental Health recommendations. I asked that question because people in Alberta are suffering. Whoever is responsible, it’s clear that we don’t have the necessary supports for people suffering from mental health. To the same minister: how many of the recommendations have been implemented, and what still needs to be done?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently we’re monitoring over 150 initiatives led by the government, Alberta Health Services, and community organizations to move forward with the 18 actions that were identified in Valuing Mental Health: Next Steps. I’m very proud of the fact that we not only did a review but that we developed an action plan, something that many members in the community said hadn’t happened before. They were a little bit nervous that they might be part of a report that would sit on a shelf, but this side of the House has put our money where our mouth is. We’ve moved forward on action plans, and we’re funding it while members of the opposition continue to vote in opposition to those.

Mr. Fraser: Minister, we know that there are thousands of Albertans dealing with mental health issues. Their voices count, and they should be our top priority. To the same minister: can you articulate a vision to give Alberta families hope that mental health will be top of mind and a nonpartisan priority?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, as was evident from one of the Premier’s first two or three news conferences, we absolutely wanted to reach across the aisle and work with members of multiple parties to address this significant area of need. That's why we invited the Member for Calgary-Mountain View along with the now Minister of Children's Services to lead a review on mental health. Then when we added the associate minister, she helped lead the initiatives around implementation. We welcome all members of the House to bring forward ideas and recommendations because we are certainly focused on making sure that we invest in supporting and promoting and protecting the health of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Consumer Protection for Motor Vehicle Owners

Dr. Turner: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Consumer protection is a major responsibility of governments of all types. Our provincial government has made it a priority. My constituents, particularly seniors, are really appreciative. They want to hear more about these efforts. To maintain mobility, these seniors may need to buy a car sometime. To the Minister of Service Alberta: please outline the initiatives taken to protect all Albertans who are purchasing or leasing a motor vehicle.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Why, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government believes Albertans should be protected when making purchases, whether big or small. That is why we recently announced new protections for consumers when buying or repairing a car, protections such as informing buyers of the history and condition of a vehicle so they know as much as the dealership, giving a written estimate upon request for repair, providing a comprehensive bill of sale, itemizing things such as, you know, paint protection and others that the consumer might want, and transitioning the AMVIC board into a public agency as the automotive agency regulator.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you. To the same minister: do you have any concerns that the playing field needs to be relevelled after these important changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member again for the question. These protections will increase transparency in the industry and help Albertans make well-informed decisions when buying or fixing a vehicle. This levels the playing field for consumers and prevents businesses from having to compete with bad actors in the industry. We did this by consulting with Albertans, with industry, which is something this side of the House believes in – and I know others do not in this House – and by not making backroom deals and selling our platform to the highest bidder in exchange for $700 million tax breaks for the wealthy.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thanks again. How is the ministry protecting car dealership customers from usurious car loan rates?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve a safe borrowing environment. That's why we're bringing in new rules that level the playing field for lenders and protect borrowers of high-cost products such as instalment loans, rent-to-own contracts, or vehicle loans. These changes include establishing disclosure and advertising requirements and establishing licence requirements for high-interest lenders. These protections will help borrowers make informed decisions and minimize the risk of being trapped in a vicious cycle of debt. That's good for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Government Caucus

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are elected as MLAs to represent people to the government and not the government to the people. The establishment parties and the career politicians have learned nothing from the last election. The establishment parties act like they're entitled to the votes of the people and entitled to the obedience of the MLAs. Premier, is it the government's policy to control, silence, and whip your MLAs?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government is here for all Albertans. It's important that all voices are heard, and we make sure that that happens. You know, I see the hon. member is in the far corner, no longer with his caucus, and I'm sorry. We do have also a matter of working together as a team, and that's important in politics, too.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it's hard to believe when the Member for Calgary-East called out her own government for excessive control over its MLAs and given that this rot is firmly entrenched in both establishment parties and given that when I was in the Tory caucus, I too was silenced and whipped, again, is it the government's policy to silence and whip your MLAs? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, folks.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we have, in my opinion, the best caucus that I've ever seen in this Legislature. I've been here longer than any other member, so I've seen a lot of government caucuses come and go, and this is absolutely the finest one. We have such wonderful input from our very diverse group of MLAs. We represent people in this province that never had a voice before, and that's something I'm very proud of.

2:10

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's hard to believe.

Every MLA votes the same as their leader does in every caucus and every time. When the NDP brought forward their Bill 9 attack on free speech, I was not free to speak out about it or even vote to represent my constituents on the bill. Independent thought was not welcome. Is it the government's policy to control independent thought, just as the Tories do? [interjections]

The Speaker: Calm down, folks. Stay calm.
The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm very shocked to hear that, quite frankly. It confirms what I believed about our friends in the Official Opposition. I want to assure you and all members that we have one of the best caucuses in this Legislature's history, and they provide a wonderfully diverse input to the government. We value them, and we value their opinions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Bail for Persons Charged with Violent Offences

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A man accused of attacking and terrorizing his girlfriend this fall was released on bail not just once but twice. The first incident was a particularly vicious attack. A little more than a month later he was arrested again after he was accused of pulling up beside her in a vehicle and firing a gun. Incredibly, he was released a second time, and the woman felt so unsafe that she has now fled the community. Minister, why did the bail system fail this young woman so badly?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. I think this case is extremely concerning to our government. I think it's extremely concerning, obviously, to the opposition and to all Albertans. Preventing and addressing domestic violence has been one of our government's top priorities. As members of this House will know, unfortunately bail decisions are ultimately determined by independent justices of the peace. In this case the prosecutor did oppose bail and was not successful.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that in the first incident the woman accused her ex-boyfriend of biting her face, choking her, banging her head against the floor – and the disturbing pictures show her battered, swollen, and scarred – and given that even though her ex-boyfriend was charged with three counts of assault and one count of unlawful confinement, he was released and continued to terrorize her, Minister, why does it appear that Alberta's bail system favours a person with violent tendencies rather than a victim of domestic abuse?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, this is an incredibly troubling case. My office has reached out and spoken with the families to ensure that they are receiving the necessary supports through victims' services in this case. It certainly is a troubling case. As I've indicated in my previous answer, these are decisions that are made independently of government. The Crown did attempt to oppose bail in this case.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that in the second incident the man is accused of shooting a gun near the victim and it resulted in very serious charges against this alleged accused and given that despite these alleged hostile acts committed by a man already on bail for a vicious attack against the same victim, he was let out on the streets again, Minister, how can we claim that protecting victims is a paramount goal of our system in the face of such a colossal failure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again, it is certainly a goal of our government to ensure that we are doing everything we can to prevent and address domestic violence. That's why we've increased funding for domestic violence shelters. That's why we've taken a number of steps around these sorts of issues. This case is, as I have noted, very disturbing. My office has been in touch with the family to ensure that they have the necessary supports.

Thank you.

Caribou Range Plans

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, last spring the government tabled a letter to the federal government regarding the development of caribou range plans indicating that the province needed more time to conduct a socioeconomic impact assessment and that federal funds would be required to implement effective caribou management. Could the minister tell the House what the response from Ottawa was, what discussions have taken place on the issue since, and what the present plans and timelines are?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and climate change.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are fully committed to recovering caribou populations, as we are legally required to do under the Species at Risk Act, which is a federal piece of legislation. Earlier this spring we led a delegation to Ottawa where we requested support from the federal government, as the hon. member points out. We did get a commitment from them of something in the neighbourhood of $30 million to assist us with caribou range planning and some of the near-term recovery efforts that we can undertake.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the NDP has been through multiple versions of the caribou plan and given that they have had to backtrack on their own words after realizing oversights and mistakes and given that until those on this side of the House and the communities affected applied pressure on the issue the government wasn't even considering an economic impact assessment, can the minister confirm to us that the results of the assessment as well as those from consultations with industry, stakeholders, and the communities affected will drive the next steps of this process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of incorrect statements within that lengthy preamble of a question, but let me just correct one. A socioeconomic assessment is, in fact, part of range planning and is being undertaken in the various ranges. There are, I believe, 17 ranges that we have to plan for. They're all in various stages of development. There's a tremendous amount of technical and scientific work – science – that has to go into this, and I'll be pleased to provide more detail in the supplemental if I ever get the chance.

Mr. Loewen: Given the NDP's atrocious record on this file and on wildlife management more broadly and given the NDP's tendency to develop management plans in silos, disregarding the interactive nature of Alberta's complex ecosystem of wildlife, forests, and waterways, and given, for example, that pine beetles, which threaten Alberta, and caribou, which are threatened in Alberta, are said to require similar old-growth forests, what has the minister done in dealing with these two conflicting management issues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, Alberta is redoubling its efforts to work with industry to develop solutions that avoid the imposition of an environmental protection order, which is something that would happen if these folks had their way because they would do nothing. Certainly, my deputy minister was meeting with federal counterparts today on the issue of C-69, but I know that she is also engaging the federal government on our recovery efforts with respect to caribou populations as well and on their investment and their responsibility to help us on this file.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

SuperNet Contract Management

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Alberta's Auditor General released his fall report identifying the new and follow-up audits recently conducted by his office. Among those audits the Auditor General addressed the NDP's mismanagement of the SuperNet, Alberta's most critical Internet infrastructure. More broadly, the audit was critical of the existing contract management processes of Service Alberta, indicating that improvements must be made. To the minister: do you agree with the Auditor General that the status quo for Service Alberta contract management is unacceptable?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General was indeed correct that there were many problems with the previous contract. He described it as: poorly constructed and largely mismanaged. I'd point out that the Auditor General was looking at the previous SuperNet contract. That was the contract that was put in by the previous PC government. The Minister of Service Alberta, this government came forward with changes to replace that contract and, in fact, implemented all of the Auditor General's recommendations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

2:20

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this current government has had three years to deal with that and given that the Auditor General issued three new recommendations in his audit and given that these recommendations highlight key failings of the performance measurement and the compliance processes and given that these failings have negative impacts on hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of important government contracts like SuperNet, can the minister tell us if he has immediately directed his department to implement these recommendations and what steps he plans on taking to prevent future processes that fail just like this one?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, our government took immediate steps to address those issues three years ago. That is why we have a new contract for SuperNet that I'm so proud about, that we're going to be posting that online shortly, as soon as the assets transfer over to Bell with the new contract. You know, that contract was done by the previous Conservatives, and it left us with a contract that did not function properly and did not properly serve rural Albertans. Thank goodness that Albertans elected a government that was able to fix it properly.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have repeatedly asked this government over the last three sets of estimates to correct this or give us an update and they've told us each and every time that they had it under control – clearly, this is not the case; we're putting at risk over 400 Alberta communities, including schools and hospitals – and given that the NDP had three entire years to get this new contract in order, will the minister admit that the process that led to this new SuperNet contract failed to meet the standards that Albertans expect from their government and take steps to ensure that these contracts ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we did take steps to protect Albertans, and Albertans did that by electing an NDP government, which took steps to clean up the PC mismanagement, and this contract was just another example of that. I suggest that the hon. member look to his colleagues who were part of the government at the time. We took the time to go forward with a new contract that will serve Albertans well, and thank goodness we were there to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Military Content in Educational Curricula

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the government of Alberta's liaison to the Canadian Armed Forces I've had the tremendous honour and responsibility of advocating for the Alberta men and women who serve us bravely every day. I've heard from members of the Armed Forces across the province on the importance of ensuring that our history is not forgotten. This is especially significant as it is currently Veterans' Week and we are commemorating the 100th year of the armistice this Remembrance Day. To the Minister of Education: how is military contribution and history present in the new curriculum?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to say that our military history and service will be very well represented in the new curriculum. We're working on the grades 5 to 9 curriculum right now. We want to make sure that kids have a very clear idea about the history that we share, the things that we should be proud of, and to make sure that we don't see atrocities like we saw with World War I, and so that kids can learn: never again.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As there is a very strong military presence in my constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs, I have the opportunity to speak with veterans and active military members, their families regularly. To the same minister: how is the government incorporating the lived experience of Alberta veterans and current CAF members in the new curriculum?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've worked with military history – we had a military history round-table – and we've been speaking with Canadian Forces, both veterans and current members, to make sure we're building a strong curriculum. I hear it time and time again from service personnel that they like to get stationed in Alberta because – you know what? – they think that the education system is the best in Canada.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the involvement of the Canadian Armed Forces affords many unique opportunities to the young people of our province to chart a positive course for their lives, test their abilities, and learn valuable life skills. To the Minister of Education: how is the government supporting opportunities for students and Alberta youth to engage with the Canadian Armed Forces?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we're working very closely with the Canadian Armed Forces. We're working with advocacy groups. I'm very proud of an announcement that we'll make around No Stone Left Alone tomorrow, together with the member, to make sure that we have a strong school system there for Canadian Forces kids but all students as well. You know, this whole notion that you would make cuts and that it's going to hurt, I mean, that would hurt Canadian Forces personnel, which I think is not conscionable, and we don't want to be hurting our kids as well because we're here to help and to create something that we can be proud of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Service Alberta Contract Management

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's Auditor General's report examined procurement in Service Alberta, highlighting SuperNet as an example. Through examining this contract, the AG found that the department lacked an effective contract management system, and Service Alberta confirmed that it applies the same process to manage all of its large and complex contracts. Now, this contract was so late that subscribers and ISPs were scared about service continuity. To the Minister of Service Alberta: how many other large and complex contracts does Service Alberta manage with this flawed process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As the Auditor General's report pointed out, it was a backward-looking report specifically on the original SuperNet contract, so that was the one that was put in place by the PCs. We took the lessons learned from the previous one and actually implemented the recommendations that the Auditor General put forward in his report when we came forward with the new SuperNet 2.0 contract.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That actually wasn't an answer.

Given that the Auditor General found in 2018 that parties to contracts are not interpreting terms and conditions consistently and given that this exposes the government to unnecessary risk, what specific measures has this minister taken to improve Service Alberta's capacity to learn and ensure that flawed processes and unaccountable outcomes don't occur in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned before, the Auditor General's report was backward looking. You know, that contract was put in place by the former PC government. As we go through Service Alberta, we have taken steps to fix the PC waste and bad mismanagement that was in there before. Thank goodness that Albertans rejected the poorly constructed and largely mismanaged contracts that the previous government was known for by electing an NDP government, and hopefully they'll do it again in the upcoming election.

Ms McPherson: Given that the Auditor General found deficiencies in 2018, this year, in how Service Alberta defines performance measures and targets in its contracts that prevent the department from understanding or reporting on whether contracts deliver on desired outcomes and given that the minister said yesterday that the SuperNet contract was an excellent example of something that our government had to come through and fix, when will Service Alberta publish performance measures about its procurement practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member pointed out, I am going to be making public the new SuperNet contract as soon as the deal is finalized and the assets are transferred over to Bell. Because we are proud of the work that we've done on that contract, we are going to have that contract be public so that Albertans can see for themselves the good work that Service Alberta and our government have done on that contract to serve rural Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Highway 1 Snowstorm Response

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, thousands of motorists were stranded on highway 1 between Calgary and Canmore for more than 10 hours during the October 2 snowstorm. When they ran out of gas, food, and water, they turned to each other to survive the ordeal because neither the plows nor the police showed up. Their desperate calls to 911 got them a shrug. To the Minister of Transportation: why did the government abandon these motorists when they needed your help?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nothing could be further from the truth. Great efforts were made by our contractors. We had difficulty throughout the evening in getting the appropriate communications about what was going on from our partners in the RCMP, but our contractors were working diligently on the job.* In the end, I'm very grateful to say that everyone was fine and able to return home to their families.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, given that this provincial government relinquished its responsibility to help desperate citizens – and they can blame the RCMP's communication all they want – and that the lapse could have ended in tragedy if temperatures had fallen to dangerous levels that night and given that there are emergency mechanisms the government can activate to deal with perilous circumstances like this snowstorm, again to the minister: what happened on October 2 that caused your government system's response to fail so badly?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I reject that characterization. Our staff worked diligently. I worked that evening with our staff who were present in the emergency area that were supervising our efforts. We worked very hard, including myself taking to social media, not my favourite place to be, to try and make sure that people were well informed about what was happening. In the end, the

RCMP successfully extracted everyone. I want to thank, particularly, the town of Canmore for their work.

2:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that all these stranded motorists would like to thank the minister for tweeting gasoline and tweeting a blanket and tweeting water, it didn't actually get there by tweet. A full month has gone by. The minister and the government obviously failed. What have they learned, and what are they doing to make sure they don't fail Albertans again the next time it snows?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to finish my thanks to the town of Canmore for the respite centre that they set up. They helped hundreds of people with food and warmth. People were, I think, very grateful for that. We certainly were. We're endeavouring to make sure that our communications are as good as they can be with our partners in the RCMP, with other organizations, and with municipalities. We want to make sure that this kind of thing doesn't happen again. It was very unfortunate. But the member's characterization of it is incorrect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

East Central Francophone School Principal and Superintendent

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's now been 250 days that the principal of École du Sommet has been absent although he is still listed as the principal on the website. To this day parents have not been given any information from the ministry regarding their principal. To the Minister of Education. This is a small, community-oriented school where parents and teachers are close friends. Why have you refused to respond to the parents' request for information to clear up this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. Certainly, the school board in St. Paul produces a very excellent education, as does the school. I am aware of the very difficult situation that has happened as a result of a human resource circumstance. It's also incumbent and important for me to abide by the rules around human resource issues. There is an investigation taking place now and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: A human resource issue.

Given that on October 30 parents received an e-mail announcing the name of the acting superintendent, it now appears the francophone board superintendent is also absent. Minister, what is going on here? Why do you ignore the parents' right to know what is happening in their school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for the question. Again, it's a very excellent school system and school. People are working hard to make sure that there's an excellent level of education. But, again, as it happens, the superintendent is under investigation, as well, at this moment, so it's incumbent upon me to not comment on this investigation here in the House.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that out of frustration parents have removed over 35 of their children from École du Sommet, which is effectively removing their constitutional right to a francophone education, and given that parents requesting information have been ignored by your office and given that the public school board doors are locked to the public – Minister, these parents and these students deserve answers – how long are you going to allow this situation to deteriorate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's important to understand what the rules and protocols are around investigations and how that must unfold legally, quite frankly. I certainly think that the results that we just saw from this particular francophone school board were excellent. They produce excellent education for students and a safe and caring place for them to be educated in. But making comments around investigations is not something we do here in the House.

Time-share Lease Consumer Protection

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the Minister of Service Alberta making time to meet on an important issue for many of my constituents and people across Alberta, since that meeting I have received a mountain of correspondence referencing what appear to be serious breaches of consumer protection legislation, supposedly being ruled outside of the mandate and jurisdiction of the legislation and this government. To the minister: can you confirm that the sale of time-share properties in Alberta is regulated by current and past legislation and your commitment to ensuring all Albertans are protected under law?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm, of course, disheartened to hear about the financial burden and hardships that Albertans have faced with these particular time-shares. You know, for too long Alberta's consumer protection laws definitely lagged behind, and that was something that we fixed. That's why we have taken action and strengthened our consumer protection laws so that hard-working Albertans are protected whether they are buying a new home or condo or whether they're going to their favourite concert or getting work done on the family car.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that I've received constituent correspondence dating back to March of this year from Alberta Justice stating, "The sale of timeshare properties in Alberta is regulated under the Consumer Protection Act, (formerly the Fair Trading Act)" and given that I'm convinced the minister wishes to do the right thing to protect Alberta consumers, Minister, can you explain to Albertans why this government has failed to enforce clear and, to me, unequivocal protections within both the Consumer Protection Act and its predecessor, the Fair Trading Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the RCMP have actually investigated this matter, and I, of course, encourage Albertans to follow up with them. There are some crossjurisdictional things happening with this since the time-shares were indeed in B.C. but sold in Alberta. We're of course continuing to listen to Albertans who are impacted by this, and, you know, we definitely encourage Albertans to follow up with Service Alberta's consumer protection unit. If there's any new information that may become available, it is something we want to hear here in Service Alberta.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, I believe this minister has some responsibility.

Given that consumer protection is important to all members of this Assembly and rightly has been a theme of this current government and its members and given that my constituents feel that recourse to the courts would not have been necessary if this government had done its job in the first place by protecting consumers, again to the minister: if the legislation has been breached, will you commit to full disclosure on the issues of mandate and jurisdiction and to a full and perhaps independent investigation into those alleged breaches?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just recently this particular matter, again, went back before the courts, so in the case of an independent investigation, you know, the precedent set by the court I think would end up settling that matter. However, in Service Alberta we, of course, are monitoring the situation, and we are happily taking feedback from Albertans. If there do need to be changes above and beyond what we've already done, this government and this minister would be happy to look at them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Edmonton-McClung.

Racism Prevention

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 27 we saw yet another act of deadly violence against a racial minority in North America. The recent mass shooting at a Pittsburgh synagogue was a stark reminder that racism and hatred exist and can have lethal consequences. My riding of Edmonton-McClung has the Beth Israel synagogue, the Rahma mosque, and a large newcomer population. Alberta's diversity is its strength. I am proud that my constituency reflects that strength. To the Minister of Education: what is the government doing to ensure that these residents of Alberta have a voice in addressing racism and ignorance in our province?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, the atrocity that the member describes and others like it are very saddening, and my heart goes out to the Jewish community and racialized communities across the world. Our government is working with communities to combat racism and hatred and to promote inclusivity and acceptance here in our province. The Alberta Anti-Racism Advisory Council will provide government with valuable insight and advice on how to support those efforts. We have more than 300 applicants to the council, and we are committed to ensuring a diverse membership that accurately reflects Alberta's population.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are fantastic organizations across the province that work diligently to address the needs of these racialized communities. I've heard again and again that these organizations provide valuable support to reduce feelings of vulnerability and fear. To the Minister of Education once again: what is the government doing to ensure these groups are supported in their work to combat racism in Alberta?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we know that we can build from the strength we have in local communities and local community groups to help to combat racism and to provide that education that fights ignorance, as I said before. We have a grant structure available for groups to apply for antiracism initiatives. We have very, very good pickup for these grants, but we're also making and designing them so that they are quite modest and so that many people can participate and help to build a stronger, safer community for everybody in the province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you once again, Mr. Speaker. Newcomers to Alberta come from a wide variety of backgrounds and must quickly adjust to life in a new home. Given that this can mean learning a new language, new skills, and new social norms, children come to Alberta and begin learning in an environment that can be very different from what they are accustomed to. To the Minister of Education: what is the government doing to ensure these students feel welcome and safe in their schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a great question. You know, we see encouraging signs. People are moving to Alberta from all parts of Canada and around the world, in part because they know that there is a more safe and caring environment being fostered in our schools, where kids can have that diversity. We need to make sure that diversity is reflected in the curriculum that we are building here now so that kids can look to the curriculum, see themselves, see their shared history in that curriculum. That builds confidence, and from confidence you have a platform for learning.

Thank you. [interjections]

The Speaker: Some order, please. [interjections] Order, please.

I understand that the Minister of Transportation has a supplemental piece of information with respect to the question from Calgary-Hays.

Highway 1 Snowstorm Response (continued)

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to supplement my answer to the hon. member. I want to just let him know that we were aware of a very severe storm coming and that all maintenance equipment was mobilized and was available. Unfortunately, the severe winter conditions resulted in the roads being blocked, including semi-trailers in some cases jack-knifed or off the road, blocking access to emergency vehicles and to maintenance equipment. We are in fact conducting a routine examination of this. It's done every time there's an instance, and that review should be completed fairly soon.*

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Member for Calgary-Hays, a supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I'm grateful that the minister has approved that gasoline, blankets, and water don't arrive by tweet and has admitted that there was a problem, I would hope that at some time in the future he might be able to report to this House any learnings and improvements that Albertans can look for in the future. If he would enlighten us on that, I would be grateful.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would be pleased to do that. And I do want to say that the first responders, including the RCMP, as well as our maintenance people as well as municipal resources need to be commended for their very diligent, hard work late into the night. I would also like to acknowledge the fact that it was probably a very frightening time for many people who were stranded on the road, but I'm convinced that this review will show us how to prevent any such further recurrence. Sometimes the weather is just overwhelming.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

We'll continue in 30 seconds, hon. members.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Lacombe Composite High School Environmental Award

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I celebrate Canada Green Building Council's greenest school in Canada 2018 winner, Lacombe composite high school. I congratulate Wolf Creek public schools and the business sponsors and the volunteers for their support. I congratulate my friend and teacher Mr. Steve Schultz, who with vision and dedication leads the students, and I congratulate the students, who for the past 15 years have participated in the program, some of whom are here today.

Here is what Lacombe students have done for sustainability and a greener community. Through the EcoVision enviroclub they've installed 32 solar arrays on the school, producing six kilowatts, along with a portable solar array and solar classroom cars. They built and use a 42-foot diameter, energy-efficient geodesic tropical greenhouse with geothermal heat storage and commercial aquaponics system. They have two acres of outdoor gardens with 40 raised beds, a 125-fruit-tree forest, picnic tables, and bird, bat, and wild bee houses. They have an urban beekeeping program with eight hives. Lacombe is the first school in Canada to run a beekeeping course for 20-plus credits. They also do farm market sales and a microbusiness program selling garden and apiary produce. They completely compost the 25 kilograms of school kitchen waste. They are now researching and fundraising for an outdoor gazebo classroom with a living roof, and they also have an active robotics program.

Wow. Lacombe high school, way to go. You truly are one of the two greenest schools in Canada, and the thousand-dollar prize will be put to good use. Lacombe is the perfect place for these endeavours. Lacombe is all about agriculture. We have both federal and provincial ag research stations. The soil is great. The weather is near perfect, and there are knowledgeable people who help guide student learning. Way to go, Lacombe students, and thank you to Mr. Schultz, Lacombe citizen of the year and teacher extraordinaire.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Calgary's 2026 Winter Olympics Bid

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday Calgarians will have their say. They will vote on whether to bid for the 2026 Olympic Winter Games. Now, there's been a lot of heated debate. Like my neighbours, I've been paying attention to both the process and the details of the deal. I wish the process was stronger. I wish we had a funding commitment from the federal government sooner than we did, and I wish we had longer to weigh our options. But now that the numbers are in, I think this is a good deal. On Tuesday I will be voting yes. I've always believed we won't move forward if we stand still. An Olympic bid is an opportunity to build on the legacy of one of the best Games ever held, the Games that were run at a profit. The 1988 Olympics left a remarkable legacy over the past 30 years for our city and our country. There's no reason to believe that hosting in 2026 wouldn't leave the same or a better legacy for the next 30 years.

I think we get a good financial deal. We get nearly 1 and a half billion dollars from the federal government for infrastructure that is badly need. Make no mistake: this is money that Alberta would not see otherwise. The IOC has stepped up. The provincial government has provided a responsible contribution, and the amount committed by the city of Calgary is almost entirely made up of what the city would spend anyway on badly needed infrastructure like a field house, facility upgrades, and affordable housing.

What about the risks of cost overruns? I have total confidence in the organizing committee to stay within budget. We've proven time and again that we can build major projects in Calgary just like the brand new Central library, which came in on time and under budget, and let's not forget that the proposed plan includes a billion-dollar contingency. That is nearly 1 dollar in 5 of the entire bid.

Calgarians have different opinions on this, and everyone's opinion matters. I've looked at the numbers, and I think Calgary 2026 is a good deal for our city, our province, and our country. It will create jobs, build on our legacy, and once again showcase Calgary to the world. This Calgarian is voting yes, and I encourage all my neighbours to do your homework and make up your own mind. Yes or no, get out and vote on Tuesday.

Federal-provincial Relations

Mr. Fildebrandt: "The west wants in." Preston Manning and Stephen Harper spoke those words in 1987, when they launched the Reform Party in revolt against the Liberal, Tory, and NDP establishment parties dominated by antiwestern interests. As the western alienation was transforming into western separatism, they sought to channel that anger into something more positive. As many Albertans looked to take the west out, they sought to take the west in, but after decades of struggle the west has never succeeded in getting more than just a foot in the door. The fact is that when the Liberals are in power, Ottawa will work against us. When the Tories are in power in Ottawa, they will too often take us for granted.

The only answer is for Alberta to take back its destiny into its own hands. Alberta must follow the example of Quebec here and take back all powers under the Constitution that the provinces have but do not exercise. Alberta must take direct control over our own pension plan. Alberta must collect our own taxes. Alberta must take direct control of the administration of the Firearms Act. Alberta must take back direct control over our own immigration and refugee system. We must build a new Alberta government that will fight the Trudeau carbon tax without end. We must build a new Alberta government that will not just complain about equalization but be prepared to use every tool at our disposal to force Ottawa to the table. We must build a new Alberta government that does not accept our extreme under- and misrepresentation in the Senate.

Albertans are proud Canadians and we want nothing more than to be treated equally and fairly with the rest of this country. That is not going to happen under the status quo. The Freedom Conservative Party is dedicated to bringing decision-making back home, building a firewall around our provincial wealth, and holding a referendum to renegotiate our constitutional relationship with Ottawa. We must come together to build an Alberta and a Canada that is strong and free.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Suspension of Physicians' Licences to Practise

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last April my colleague the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View raised a disturbing incident. A doctor here in Edmonton was continuing to practise, to see patients despite having been convicted of sexually assaulting a patient. This individual was convicted of sexually assaulting a patient at a Sherwood Park clinic in June of 2013. He also assaulted a nurse at a north-side Edmonton clinic a year later. He was also charged with assaulting a clinical manager. The tribunal report over his conduct said that "proven conduct was very serious and repugnant for a member of the medical profession." Serious and repugnant, yet he was allowed to return to seeing patients, patients who had no idea about this doctor's behaviour. This was a demonstration of the failure of one of our professional colleges.

The Leader of the Official Opposition raised this in question period as well. As he committed at the time, our United Conservative opposition are ready to work with the government to ensure that this needed legislation passes quickly if introduced. We welcome the government putting forward legislation months later, but the legislation as proposed didn't go far enough. A five-year suspension for those grotesque crimes is simply not enough. We raised these concerns and proposed amendments. It was disappointing to see the government defeat these amendments. It was disappointing to see the government defend the idea that being unable to practise for five years was good enough. It was disappointing to see the NDP members on the government benches stand and repeatedly vote against amendments to move this towards a lifetime ban.

Today it appears that the government finally recognized this obvious problem in their legislation. Mr. Speaker, we're relieved that the government has finally changed its mind and finally supports a lifetime ban for doctors who commit sexual assault. The doctor-patient relationship is a sacred trust.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Remembrance Day

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year in the weeks leading up to November 11, people from across the province, across our nation come together to pay tribute to men and women in uniform. Many of us proudly wear poppies as a symbol of remembrance and respect towards those who have fallen in the defence of our freedom. Some attend Remembrance Day events and reflect on the past and present sacrifices made by Canadian service people. It is easy to forget that there are dedicated individuals who commit themselves to honouring our veterans year-round such as the members of the Royal Canadian Legion.

Legionnaires are the ones who provide our poppies and organize our Remembrance Day services. They raise money to provide essential support to veterans, their families, and other community organizations. They educate and provide mentorship to our young people through cadet programs. Legions also provide venues for socializing, local events, and volunteer recruitment. Legion halls are a foundational part of communities across Alberta. As a Legion member myself I have always recognized the incredible service that Legions provide to veterans and communities.

Recently with the consultation of my bill, Bill 207, the Municipal Government (Legion Tax Exemption) Amendment Act, 2018, I have had the privilege to consult Legions all across the province, deepening my appreciation for Legions. I am proud to have five Legions in my constituency – Hinton, Jasper, Edson, Cadomin, and Grande Cache – where I have spent a great amount of time with veterans. I am proud to be in a province where there are over 120 Legions. I am proud to rise today and give my thanks and support to our troops, our veterans, and our Legions.

Lest we forget.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: If I may, before we move on, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to provide notice pursuant to Standing Order 7(8) that the daily Routine will continue past 3 p.m.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation. You have a notice of motion?

Mr. Mason: I do, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Minister of Justice I would like to give oral notice of a bill for the Order Paper, that bill being Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Bill 26

An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today and request leave to introduce Bill 26, An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities.

This legislation, if passed, will make historic changes to the AISH income support and Alberta seniors' benefits programs by indexing these programs to cost-of-living increases. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is a response to the concerns and feedback that we have heard from many Albertans, their families, and advocates, who count on AISH, low-income, and seniors' programs. If passed, this legislation will make a positive difference in the lives of thousands of Albertans. I look forward to the discussion in the House on this bill.

With that, I move first reading of the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of correspondence, referenced in my question today, from Alberta Justice and Solicitor General, dated March 2018, referencing that "the sale of timeshare properties in Alberta is regulated under the Consumer Protection Act." Further, it says,

"I sympathize with you and the many other individuals impacted . . . however, there is nothing further I or this ministry can do to assist you directly."

The Speaker: Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To supplement my member's statement on Monday, I am tabling the requisite five copies of a document provided to me by the St. Teresa of Calcutta School Playground Foundation, which I provided to the Minister of Education earlier today.

The Speaker: Any other tablings, hon. members?

I advise the House that I believe that the point of order from the Opposition House Leader has been withdrawn. I think there was one point of order. Is that correct?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Opposition House Leader has chosen to withdraw that point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 21 An Act to Protect Patients

The Deputy Chair: The Committee of the Whole has under consideration sections 7 and 26 of Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients. We are currently on subamendment SA1. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this section of the bill?

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise on the subamendment which is before us right now. This has been a long and winding road to get to where we are. Certainly, starting back in the spring, the Leader of the Official Opposition and the deputy Leader of the Official Opposition raised this important issue. I think it's an issue that matters to all Albertans. Surely, when any Albertan goes to see a doctor, I know that they have every right to expect professional behaviour, and to be clear, that's almost always what Albertans get. However, in any line of endeavour you do end up with certain individuals who are either poor at their job, show terrible judgment, or actually do things that are completely unacceptable and offensive.

When it comes to those cases where that small minority of doctors are predatory and commit sexual advances towards their patients, then surely that needs to be dealt with in a firm, harsh, and definite way. Certainly, from the input that I've heard into my office and talking to people that I know, I think Albertans' opinion is that doctors convicted of sexual misbehaviour towards their patients, particularly female patients, obviously, but any patient, should lose their licence not for five years but forever. Despite the fact that this issue came about in the spring, Bill 21 didn't arrive from the government until this week, and of course it arrived with a recommendation to only suspend the doctor's licence for five years before the doctor could reapply.

Now, certainly, we the Official Opposition and other opposition parties took the position very much right from the start that that was not an adequate reaction to the heinous behaviour that we are talking about and, surely, in the example of Dr. Taher, which, I suppose, has become the best illustration of this very, very serious and completely unacceptable and offensive behaviour that can sometimes occur. Albertans really have come to the conclusion that a stronger, longer withdrawal of the doctor's ability to practise medicine is what's appropriate. Indeed I believe that what Albertans want this House to do is to say that that doctor can't practise medicine anymore in Alberta.

The entire House, in my understanding, is actually coming around, I believe, to the same conclusion despite the fact that the government side took a much different position at the beginning of this debate on Bill 21. I'm presuming they received some of the feedback from Albertans that the Official Opposition has received and, I understand, some of the other opposition parties have received, which is a very strong message saying never, that when a doctor is convicted of sexual misconduct against a patient in that sacred trust relationship in Alberta, that doctor should never be able to practise in Alberta again.

Here's the problem. The problem is that in this very illustrative case with Dr. Taher, that is not what occurred. That sanction is not the sanction that that doctor received. Frankly, I think many Albertans are angry about that.

Now, the government rejected the opposition parties' amendments to strengthen that. They strengthened one amendment to stretch the time period out to never and then another one as an alternative, I think, because the member of the House thought that the closest to never was 40 years, probably reasonably based on the fact that by the time somebody gets a medical degree, they're probably, in many cases, 25 or 30 years old. If you add 40 years onto that, they're pretty much at the end of their effective time of practising medicine. So, really, both amendments amount to the doctor never getting his licence back. Despite the fact that they weren't worded identically, I believe the net effect in protecting Albertans was the same strong net effect, which is why the Official Opposition and indeed another opposition party took that position.

Of course, we're at this awkward place because, apparently, until they got a stronger message, the Health minister, the hon. Deputy Premier, took a completely different stand and insisted that the five years was enough and indeed let this piece of legislation go on to third reading without any of those important amendments being made.

Today we saw what brings us here to this subamendment, this amendment and the subamendment that we're talking about right now. A most extraordinary thing happened. The government did a complete 180, taking a mulligan, if you will, backtracking, admitting failure, admitting a mistake, something that this government has been severely reticent to do despite the fact that they've had many, many pieces of legislation that they've had to drag back to this House for sometimes one, two, three, and four changes before they got different pieces of legislation to the place where they wanted them to be. They've actually gone further than third reading; they've gone past third reading and then had to bring another piece of legislation back. But this is the deepest they've gone into a piece of legislation before retreating, going into full retreat, admitting failure, admitting to be completely wrong, admitting the opposition was right and they were wrong. I'm sure that was a little painful for them to do. Nonetheless, I thank them for doing that because this issue is important to all Albertans.

Despite the fact that I'm sure it was painful and humiliating for the government to do it, I give them credit for doing it. I think they have come to the belief and the agreement, where the opposition has always been, that five years is not an appropriate penalty for that abuse of the doctor-patient relationship trust, not an appropriate penalty for sexual misconduct towards a patient who's depending on that doctor for care, for compassion, and for a chance at a healthy life under the doctor's care moving forward.

Madam Speaker, the government, to their credit, has agreed to recommit Bill 21 to Committee of the Whole. The opposition has accommodated the government's desire to do so, and an amendment was made. Of course, the subamendment, it is determined, will improve the amendment that was put forward.

What's happening right now other than me being on my feet talking about this is that there's been some consideration that there is an additional improvement to that subamendment that I think that the government and the Official Opposition can agree upon. While I'm here debating the subamendment on this very important bill to protect Albertans, it's my belief that there are members from both sides working feverishly in the backroom, looking to refine the subamendment, to improve it, and to come up with something that is a little more fulsome, a little more effective, which we believe will more fully meet the desires of Albertans for that protection, which they deserve, they need, and they surely want.

Madam Chair, again, as I said when I started out, it's been a long and winding trail to get to this point, and it's certainly my desire and the desire of the Official Opposition that before this day ends – and as we all know, this day ends at 4:30 on Thursdays – we can come to that common understanding of where we need to be with this legislation, that we can think of Albertans, that we can put our political differences aside on this issue, which I believe and I think all members of the House believe ought to be a nonpartisan issue. Having women and indeed all Albertans safe when they go to the doctor should be everyone's position. It should be an NDP position and a Conservative position and every other party's position. It's an Albertan position. It's a human position. It's a position that we all need to have and we all need to get to. So by the end of this day that's my hope.

Really, today the opposition showed what due diligence and perseverance is. To get here, we held the government accountable. We stuck to our guns, but we also agreed to work with the government and to look for what I would call that hallowed middle ground, where all sides in this House can do something that upon proper reflection, not only with each other but proper reflection and communication with bodies like the College of Physicians & Surgeons and the AMA and doctors' groups and individual doctors and indeed patients – let's not forget about the patients, the Albertans who are patients. These are the people, particularly women, that need to be protected. If we do our jobs well today, we will have moved forward in protecting those Alberta women today.

You know what? No one wins if we don't get this right. No one wins. Without regard to whatever political party they support, whatever part of Alberta they live in, whatever their quality of life is in other ways, it serves no one if a woman goes to a doctor and that woman is not safe. That will never be a standard that should be tolerated. It should never be a standard that is accepted.

I am genuinely and sincerely of the opinion that by the time this day ends, I hope that we can all look across the aisle at each other and say, "Well, there are a lot of things we don't agree on, but we agree on this," which is why it's important that we take this time. There was a point, I believe, when the House was considering talking about other pieces of legislation today, and at this point, again, it's been agreed that the most important thing that we can do on this day is to get this important issue right, an issue that we struggled to get to this place where we think we can all agree and get it right and one that matters. I'd like to think that everything that we do in this House matters, but I think most Albertans would agree that some things matter more than others. The sanctity of the doctor-patient relationship, the security of that relationship, is of the highest importance.

Madam Chair, there has been a lot of talk about how we properly look after survivors of this heinous act when it happens, and that's important, but the place that I'd like to get us to is a place where we have fewer survivors because we have fewer offences made. While you can never one hundred per cent stop bad human behaviour, one of the mechanisms that we as legislators can use to prevent bad human behaviour is to put in place sanctions, penalties, things that those that would behave badly would not look forward to, would be afraid of, be unwilling to tolerate, and that, we would hope, will inspire them to forgo any bad behaviour that they may be considering. What's better than looking after a victim of sexual violence in a doctor's office is to have no victim at all. What's better than having a survivor is to not have anything to survive. What's better is to have a trusting relationship that is honoured one hundred per cent of the time. While we may not be able to guarantee in this Legislature that we can do that one hundred per cent of the time, by gosh, I think we need to try to get as close to that one hundred per cent number as we can, and by so doing, I believe we will be truly serving not only Alberta women but, really, all Albertans.

There are other things to do. The College of Physicians & Surgeons: my understanding is that they are actually looking forward to this legislative guidance. They're actually looking forward to the legislation putting them in a position where they can apply meaningful sanctions in a timely way and feel fully able to do that without having those sanctions overturned and without having their own tribunals feel reticent to put in place the proper sanctions. That's my understanding. If we can actually do that for them, if we actually could put them in a better position to serve all Albertans, that function of this Legislature would be one, indeed, that we could all be proud of if we can get to that important point.

Madam Speaker – Madam Chair. Pardon me. I'm trying to elevate your position here. You might be Madam Speaker in a few minutes, when we move out of Committee of the Whole. I mean nothing but respect. I want to thank you for this opportunity to rise and speak on this bill. I know that there are people in the background working feverishly to agree on words that will get us to the place where we want to be. I'm grateful for this opportunity to talk about a matter that truly is of importance to all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Hays, who has been discussing this important subamendment for the last . . .

Mr. McIver: Nineteen minutes.

Mr. Nixon: . . . 19 minutes. As he says, there have been some conversations taking place, of course, behind the scenes between the government and the opposition, conversations that I believe are going to bear fruit shortly, Madam Chair. I'm sure you are excited about that.

The Leader of the Opposition spoke about his desire to be able to try to come to a good compromise – actually, I think that "compromise" is the wrong word in this case – a good agreement that will make the strongest piece of legislation on this issue for Albertans. He did indicate, Madam Chair – I don't know if you caught that part of his speech this morning, where he discussed the kind of timeline that got us to the place that we're at today, kind of an unprecedented day. I know that in your time in the Assembly you have not seen a process quite like this in the Legislative Assembly. In fact, it had gotten complicated enough that we had to bring in, between us and the government, some extra procedural help to try to figure out how to do this appropriately.

He talked about how, you know, this was brought forward last spring. The hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View – not Rocky Mountain House-Chestermere, as sometimes those of you who sit in the chair like to say because they sound similar. In fact, Madam Chair, I don't know if quite often people hear that I'm from Rocky Mountain House and think it's Rocky View county. I don't know if you've ever been to Rocky Mountain House and Rocky View county. They're very different places, about as different as myself and the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

He talked about how they brought this important issue, that they identified it last sitting. The Deputy Premier at that time did not move forward with legislation, but we are thankful that sometime, at least, over the summer she recognized this as a serious issue and brought forward a piece of legislation to the Assembly. You know, the Leader of the Opposition pointed out some of the antics that we thought were unfortunate on this issue, but the reality is that the bill did get here.

But then, when the bill got here, there was a discussion primarily around five years versus lifetime bans in certain situations, and there was certainly significant disagreement between the government members of the House and the opposition on those issues. The Alberta Party and the Official Opposition, the United Conservative Party, were united on that issue, and in this case the NDP government were not on the same page. In fact, the members across the way from me stood up four times in a row in this House, had their names called for their constituencies, and voted against, you know, making sure predatory doctors and those types of things would be unable to practise medicine if they were convicted of crimes and had done things of a significant sexual nature to hurt their patients or people that they were charged with caring for. The government made that decision.

At that time the Deputy Premier indicated that she felt she didn't have enough time to look at the amendments that were being brought forward by the opposition. I found that a little bit alarming, the fact that that is what her and her party call on the opposition to do constantly, on a regular basis, with more than just amendments. They ask us to do that with large pieces of legislation. It's an interesting process for us, where we have to often be able to try to determine what to do with a piece of legislation. It's hard.

Now, the reason I bring it up is just to point out that the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills gave the minister an opportunity to be able to adjourn debate briefly for a day or so to be able to get this right, to have time to review it. Instead, the government chose to stand up three or, actually, four times and vote against what, clearly, the majority of Albertans wanted and then sometime between then and there decided, I think because of political pressure, to change their mind and reach out to us and ask us to take their bill back out of third reading, back into Committee of the Whole, do what's called a recommittal motion, and then try to have an opportunity to have a do over. I'm glad they did because I think it would have been unfortunate if this bill had passed the way that it was in third reading and if this got missed when they go forward. I think that, to their credit, they recognized that. They came to this Chamber and had an opportunity to change it.

We looked at the amendment that was brought forward by the government, and in general – actually, not in general. We agree with all the content of the amendment, but we feel there was one section that was missed, which is why the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin brought in a subamendment, which we're talking about today, to be able to amend those areas that we think have been missed. Now, my understanding, Madam Chair, is that the government has indicated to us that they're in agreement in general with our intention with the subamendment. We have been in discussions, since we rose this morning for the Remembrance Day ceremonies, attempting to get that amendment to a place where both the government and their lawyers and the opposition are comfortable being able to pass it.

I do expect that that amendment will briefly be coming to this Chamber. As such, then I will shortly, actually, consider probably withdrawing the current subamendment that is on the floor. I'm explaining that now so that I don't have to explain it when it happens, Madam Chair, to try to make it as efficient as possible once that new subamendment arrives. Then you will probably see the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin shortly thereafter rise to move a new subamendment.

Now, I actually think, Madam Chair, there's a very good chance that you will probably know how close we are to that before I do, but we will find out. Maybe not. Maybe it'll be a surprise. We will see where we're at. But that's what we are going through today. I think what's important about that is that it shows how we should have handled that as a Chamber in the very first place. If the minister felt that she did not have enough time to review the amendment – and I suspect that what her argument will be is that, well, we send you briefs . . .

Ms Hoffman: A sit-down briefing.

Mr. Nixon: A sit-down briefing, usually the day before a bill is voted on.

Now, I've been in those sit-down briefings, and while I do appreciate that they give them, they are nowhere near adequate enough for us to be able to determine our position on a bill. That takes time. The hon. Deputy Premier spent some time as a staffer with the NDP when they were in opposition. She knows that you don't just go to a government briefing and take the government's word for it. That is not the reality of the political process.

Madam Chair, I know, without a doubt, that in the last NDP caucus, when they were in opposition, the hon. Government House Leader, who spent a considerable amount of time in this Chamber in opposition – and I always enjoyed watching him in question period – did not go to Progressive Conservative briefings on a bill and just automatically assume that they were completely comfortable with it and then come into the Assembly and make his position for his constituents based on what the Progressive Conservatives told him in that briefing. That is not a reality of how the NDP operated in opposition. It's not a reality of how any opposition party should operate.

You take that briefing. You take the bill. You work with your researchers and your staff to try to understand it. Most importantly, you reach out to constituents, you reach out to stakeholders that will be involved. I know that the NDP did that when they were in opposition as well. That is the process for the opposition when they're in there.

Now, an amendment. I have been in this Chamber many times, firstly as the chief opposition whip and then later as the Opposition House Leader, when the government has brought in amendments that I only saw minutes before, where I was literally, Madam Chair, taking pictures of the amendment and sending them to staff that are elsewhere, trying to find out where the amendment is at. It is not that uncommon for an amendment to come to this place with very little notice because of the speed of how we move through this legislation. The reality is that that is our process here in Alberta, which is why I always talk about the House of Commons. It has a different committee process, that I think probably would avoid such things as this.

What I think is important about this is that, at the end of the day, the government has indicated that, I think it would be fair to say, they regret voting against those amendments so hastily or moving this to third reading without a further discussion on this important issue. As such, we found ourselves there, and I think there's been some good bipartisan co-operation on an important issue today.

As such, Madam Chair, I'd like to ask for unanimous consent to withdraw the current subamendment that is on the floor.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

There has been a motion to withdraw subamendment SA1, requiring unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: The subamendment will now be withdrawn.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move a subamendment, and I have the requisite number of copies here. Would you like me to wait till you receive the subamendment copies?

The Deputy Chair: If you could please just wait until I have a copy at the table.

Go ahead, Member.

Ms Goodridge: All right. Thank you, Madam Chair. Part of why I've been pushing so hard to ensure that any health professional who sexually abuses a patient never is able to practise again is due to some of my personal experience. Dr. Carl Nqumayo, an ob-gyn in Fort McMurray, was charged with assaulting six female patients between 2003 and '05. He was supposed to be performing internal examinations on the women when the offences were committed.

I was 18 at the time that Dr. Nqumayo was charged, and it was all over our local media. It affected me and many young women within my community who were supposed to be getting these important tests completed for the very first time. It made a generation of young women in Fort McMurray reluctant to take their health seriously.

3:30

Today I would like to move my subamendment to ensure that health professionals that abuse a patient never practise again. I would urge all members to support this important change. I move the motion as follows:

(a) by renumbering it as part A.1 and by adding the following before part A.1:

A Section 7(a) is amended by adding "or (3.1)" after "subsection (3)".

(b) in clause (a) in the proposed section 45

(i) by striking out subsection (3) and substituting the following:

(3) A person whose practice permit and registration are cancelled as a result of a decision of unprofessional conduct based in whole or in part

(a) on sexual abuse, or

(b) on a conviction of the person under section 151, 152, 153, 153.1, 155, 162, 162.1, 163.1, 171.1, 172.1, 172.2, 173, 271, 272, 273, 286.1, 286.2 or 286.3 of the Criminal Code (Canada)

may not apply for the practice permit to be reissued and the registration reinstated.

(ii) in the proposed subsection (3.1) by striking out "A person" and substituting "Subject to subsection (3), a person".

Thank you, Madam Chair, and I would please urge all members of this Assembly to consider accepting this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. First off, the amendment will now be referred to as subamendment SA2.

Are there any members wishing to speak to subamendment SA2? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the amendment. I think this goes to speak to how complicated some of this language can be around drafting and how important it is to make sure that we work in a way that's collaborative. I really do want to recognize that the members opposite and staff sat down with our Health staff and with staff from my office to make sure that the intent, which we both agree upon, is indeed the language that will ensure the safety for any individual who is part of such a severe act.

I have to say that I think it's really important that we continue to say to anyone who's been assaulted, to all health professionals, and to all Albertans that they are going to be protected, that we are going to ensure that they have the supports that they need, and that if there are any concerns, they are addressed.

I have just gotten confirmation that this indeed is the language that we agreed upon. Therefore, I want to encourage all my colleagues to vote in support.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA2?

Seeing none, I will call the question on the subamendment.

[Motion on subamendment SA2 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the amendment. Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment as amended?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A7.

[Motion on amendment A7 as amended carried]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to sections 7 and 26?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on section 7 and section 26 of Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients, as amended.

[Motion carried]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported with amendments? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Mason: I move, Madam Chair, that the committee rise and report Bill 21 as amended.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Ms Jabbour: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain sections of Bill 21. The committee reports the following: sections 7 and 26 of Bill 21 with amendments.

I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 21 An Act to Protect Patients

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health to move third reading.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you very much to our colleagues for the progress we continued to make this afternoon.

It's my honour to introduce again third reading of Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients.

Thank you very much to members of the other parties for the important amendments and contributions to ensure that this bill is even stronger than what was introduced, and thank you to all members for working together to ensure that we have the strongest possible penalties in place for regulated health professionals who do commit sexual assault. Our government has zero tolerance for sexual abuse or misconduct towards patients, and it's a significant betrayal of the public trust, as many of us have mentioned. There is no circumstance where sexual abuse by a regulated health professional will be tolerated. The age of impunity, once again, is over, and it's time to take these crimes into the light.

Again, I want to thank the regulated health authority colleges for their support on this bill and all of the brave and strong Albertans who have shared their stories to ensure that this never happens again. I'm very proud that our government is taking action to increase transparency.

With that, I move third reading of Bill 21.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? I'd like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to actually move a recommittal back to Committee of the Whole. I'll give the necessary copies. Let me know when you receive it.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, if you could just wait until I have the amendment at the table, and then you can go ahead.

Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as REC2.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to move that the motion for third reading of Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering section 4.

The reason that I am moving this is that I do have an amendment to move this afternoon to address some of the concerns put forward by stakeholders.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment REC2.

[Motion on amendment REC2 carried]

3:40 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would now like to call the committee to order.

The Deputy Chair: The committee has under consideration section 4 of Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's certainly been a lesson in procedure today, how things work – it's been interesting to watch that part – and I think really heartening and gratifying to see all of us working together to strengthen this legislation. I'm really grateful for the opportunity to move this amendment. I'd like to move that Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients, be amended by striking out section 4 and substituting the following:

4 Section 16 is amended by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) When establishing a hearing tribunal where the subject-matter of a hearing relates to a complaint alleging sexual abuse of or sexual misconduct towards a patient by a regulated member, the hearings director must make every reasonable effort to ensure that

- (a) at least one member of the hearing tribunal has the same gender identity as the patient,
- (b) all members of the hearing tribunal have received training on trauma informed practice and sexual violence, and any other training specified by the Minister, and
- (c) all members of the hearing tribunal have completed the training referred to in clause (b) prior to serving on a hearing tribunal.

(1.2) For the purposes of ensuring that at least one member of the hearing tribunal has the same gender identity as the patient under subsection (1.1), the hearings director may select one member from the membership list established by another council under section 15 to be appointed as one additional public member.

The rationale behind this is to ensure better decision-making by tribunals when they're hearing cases of sexual abuse or sexual misconduct.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there any members wishing to speak?

Ms Hoffman: What a nice example, I think, this is of how we can achieve good outcomes when we continue to work collaboratively.

That being said, I have reviewed the language. It reflects the understanding of the conversations the hon. member and I and many members of my caucus have had. Therefore, I encourage all colleagues to vote in support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A8?
Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, it is with an incredible sense of déjà vu, Madam Chair, that I stand to move that we rise and report Bill 21 as amended.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Ms Jabbour: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain sections of Bill 21. The committee reports the following: section 4 of Bill 21 with amendments. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 21

An Act to Protect Patients

The Acting Speaker: The Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. My grandmother said good things happen in threes. It's my pleasure, for the third time, to introduce third reading of Bill 21, an act that I think we're all really excited to see move forward and be passed and enacted to ensure that patients and all those who visit health care offices have the confidence and full assurance that they are doing so without seeing somebody who may have been found guilty of sexual assault.

With that, I am very proud to move third reading and look forward to this continuing to move through at this new pace that we've set this afternoon. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 21? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients. This bill is an incredibly important step forward for our province to protect patients and ensure trust in our health care system. I want to first thank my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View for raising this important issue this past spring and for being unrelenting in her advocacy for victims all across Alberta.

Trust in our health care professionals is an absolute necessity for our health care system. It is critical that we deal with those few who abuse this trust and, in doing so, not only support victims but also the vast majority of health care professionals who uphold the high standard of ethics expected in their vocation.

I also want to take the opportunity to thank the government for coming forward with this bill and for belatedly making this decision to engage with the opposition to make it better. My colleague's amendment to change the length of the ban from five years to a lifetime, in my view, is an important change to let victims know that they have our support, that they have the understanding that their safety is our utmost intent in this legislation.

Madam Speaker, I am a husband and a father, and the safety of my family, particularly in potentially vulnerable circumstances, is my utmost concern. I am also confident that this issue is of the utmost concern for every member of the House.

I want to thank everyone who knows how important this is and is working to deliver this legislation for Albertans. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to start by first of all saying to the Member for Calgary-MacKay-Nose Hill and the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park that I am always humbled by the willingness of members of this House to be open and to talk about their personal experience. I think this is why I really appreciate being part of the Assembly at the moment where we're really willing to tackle some very tough issues that are not only very personal but affect people for a lifetime.

The other thing that I think is important to say is that whatever bill we pass and so on, the important thing is that, first of all, we believe people who report sexual abuse or sexual misconduct. That's one thing that I've appreciated, the ability that we can put forward bills and programs and so on so that when somebody stands up and speaks, we believe them and we take action. I think this is really important in what we do in the Assembly. I'm also very aware that this bill is not the only thing that the government has done to protect victims of sexual abuse or to listen to them and to put programs in place. I appreciate the extra funding that has gone to programs for safe homes or for counselling programs.

I'm really pleased to stand up and speak on behalf of this bill because, as we all know, there was an incident in Sherwood Park, my constituency, that led to concern arising out of the way that the doctor was able to practise. I also want to thank the constituents, the people who have spoken about it and have interacted with government and opposition members to make sure that we dealt with this bill. We may be voting for this bill in the House, but I think this bill indicates the fact that the voice of those who are survivors, who have been victimized is really important in how we make decisions.

Thank you to the Deputy Premier and Minister of Health for working with every member of the House to make this a very strong bill, and I especially appreciate the willingness of the opposition to work with us and to be reminded all the time that we have to listen to the voice of those people who say they've been abused.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise today in the House to support Bill 21, the protecting patients from sexual assault by health providers act. This minister might not be able to address emergency wait times, which continue to worsen, and our ambulances that continue to line up. This minister might not be able to improve surgical wait times as they deteriorate, surgeries at 46 weeks now. This minister might not be able to do one iota of streamlining in administration in order to enable front-line services to see their patients more effectively. But this minister was good enough to listen to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View on her question this last spring, and she is addressing a very serious issue, and for that I commend her. This is a good bill. This bill is a crucial piece of legislation, and I'm very grateful for the opportunity to stand up and talk on it today as the Health critic for the United Conservative Party.

I understand the code of conduct that is expected of those in the medical profession. We must treat all patients with respect and dignity. We must do our very best to make sure patients know that they are safe and that they can trust us to help them. It's absolutely horrific that some medical professionals take it upon themselves to misuse their power and sexually abuse their patients. Madam Speaker, when we were discussing this bill and I was discussing this bill with two friends, those two friends told me about their negative experiences. It was appalling. My one friend, when she was a child in Ontario, a teenager, a lifeguard, sprained her ankle. The paramedics proceeded to cut off all of her clothes, and to this day, 20 years later, she's still disgusted by it. She was good enough to share that experience with me. As a former paramedic I can tell you that if you have a sprained ankle, there is no need to cut off all of your clothes. That much I guarantee. It's disgusting. Why would a 17-year-old kid have to go through that kind of traumatizing experience? She had the trust of a medical professional who was working on her, and it's absolutely disgusting that someone would take advantage of that.

Another story from another friend here in town. She shared with me a story that involves her teenage daughter here in this city. She was having chest pains. By any measure, I know what to do with chest pains. You're assessing something in the chest. You're assuming it's a cardiac issue or maybe a musculoskeletal issue. Ultimately, Madam Speaker, the doctor wanted to do an internal exam on her – just to be clear, when I'm talking about an internal exam, I'm talking about a vaginal exam – for chest pain. When her daughter was startled by this and very unsure whether to say yes – and thank God she was discouraged from agreeing with this treatment – the doctor shamed her and said: you're refusing a medical treatment? This poor kid didn't know what to do. Ultimately, they left the hospital, and she was able to see a physician a little bit later and get a proper diagnosis.

I tell you what. It's things like that, and this abuse of medical professionals is truly detrimental to our society. It's unfortunate that our college failed us in this regard, and we can only hope that this legislation will ensure that these things never happen again. This bill ensures that patients will feel safe, that they can continue to have faith in their doctors and in the system. They can be reassured that medical professionals will not abuse their power and, if they do, that they will be held accountable. The safety of Albertans should always be our number one priority, and this bill certainly does that.

People need to be held accountable for their actions, and that includes the organizations that they're responsible to. We have to have faith and trust in these colleges that we have empowered to manage professionals. The epitome of professionals is the fact that they are self-managed. The fact that this one particular college failed our society in allowing one physician to treat people was disappointing, and we can only hope that they and every other college learn that they are accountable, that they're responsible for their actions, and that our society is very aware in this day and age. We can only hope that these things never happen again.

With that, Madam Speaker, I just simply want to say that I'm proud to stand today with this Legislature in favour of Bill 21. This bill, I hope and we all hope, will bring back to Albertans trust and faith in our system, trust and faith from people that have been mistreated by the system. We can only hope that they continue on in our society, hope that this will hold all medical professionals accountable for violating their sacred oaths and will ensure that a high standard for our medical professionals will be upheld.

I do hope that all members will vote in favour of Bill 21. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Ms McPherson: Just a comment, not a question. I think it's really incumbent on all of the members of the Legislature to avail themselves of information about trauma and how their language can be extremely retraumatizing for people who've experienced sexual assault. With some of the language that I just heard, I had to plug my ears so that I didn't have to listen to it. It was very upsetting. It was unnecessary. It didn't add anything to the debate, and I'm very disappointed to have heard it in this Chamber in that context. Once again, you know, there are many programs available where you can learn about trauma and about the effect of your words on other people.

The Acting Speaker: Any other comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, hon. member, would you like to speak to third reading?

Ms McPherson: Just very briefly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to reiterate my extreme gratitude for where we've gotten to, acknowledge the Minister of Health, the government caucus, the Official Opposition. I want to thank especially my own caucus members for standing with me and in solidarity for women. It's not just women; it's all patients. We've all done a remarkable job of sending a really clear message to people who have experienced sexual assault that we believe them and that we take it seriously and that their words matter, their experience matters.

So I'm really happy to be able to support this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be brief in my comments. I just want to thank the Minister of Health for putting forward this bill. This is such an important bill to so many women here in this province. I know that she worked very hard on it, and I just wanted to say thank you for that.

Our government has always been clear that sexual assault is a heinous crime and it will not be tolerated. I'm just so pleased that we're so close to passing this important piece of legislation to protect patients from sexual abuse and sexual misconduct, making Alberta the second province to do so. I'm proud that Alberta is a leader in Canada in preventing assault and supporting survivors, and I want to thank the members from all parties in this Assembly for their thoughtful debate and constructive conversation around this legislation. We've listened to survivors and listened closely to the organizations who support them as we drafted this legislation and as we continued to work with them during this debate.

4:00

I'm very thankful for all the amendments that came forward. I think that they really strengthen the current piece of legislation. I also wanted to thank the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for all her words today in the House. I think that she spoke on behalf of a lot of women who've been in that situation. I think that's a pretty strong message. As legislators this is our role, to represent our constituents, and I think that everyone here has done a really good job here today.

Thank you. That's all I have to say.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I will speak briefly to take this opportunity to rise and speak in favour of Bill 21, which I think is, without question, a tremendously important piece of legislation, that I would hope has a very strong and positive impact on the lives of Albertans who may be victimized by medical practitioners, be they doctors or members of the other nearly 40 colleges, I think, that it will be applied to in this case.

I also want to make sure that I thank the Minister of Health and the Government House Leader on the government side for working very collaboratively with the opposition. We had a lot of back and forth to get this bill where it needed to be, and government and opposition and all members should be proud of the work that we've done here today. I want to make sure that my gratitude is on the record and stated.

I want to thank my colleague the Alberta Party caucus Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for being the first here to push for a lifetime ban. Ultimately, after some back and forth, we got to where we needed to be. Most importantly, though, I want to thank her for her tremendous bravery in sharing her personal story. Thank you.

To the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park as well for her powerful words earlier today and to others in the Chamber who may have had similar experiences but not having had the desire to share that, which is absolutely your right: know that I believe you and that that is something that we, and I personally, acknowledge is tremendously impactful on your life. I know that others in this House have shared their stories, and it is really humbling and sobering to hear those stories. With some of the other stories that we've heard and personal experiences, what I'm struck by is just how devastatingly widespread sexual assault, sexual harassment is in our society. We're starting to finally shine a light on that problem. I think legislation like this, bills like this, help ensure that that cycle stops, but I think we need to be cognizant of the fact that we're a very long way from solving this problem in society, and there's much work that remains to be done. I really do want to thank those who have had the bravery to share their stories, and I will, with my Alberta Party colleagues, support Bill 21 at third reading.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I did want to just take a brief opportunity to speak to Bill 21 and, I think, just really reinforce how incredibly important this legislation is. I'd like to remind the House that we've talked a lot about the impacts of a doctor-patient kind of a situation. But this bill, in fact, regulates a whole number, a whole range of health professionals, including my own profession. As a provisional psychologist, my profession falls under the agency of this bill as well. If you think about a relationship between a psychologist and a patient, the potential for damage could be pretty severe just due to the nature of the personal revelations, the kinds of conversations that go on; you could be potentially creating a lot of damage should you engage in an inappropriate sexual relationship with a patient. Now, as psychologists we have a very, very strong code of ethics. We are expected to adhere to this, and in fact it's an excellent code of ethics. You benefit from it every day because it really gave me some good guidance in a whole multitude of situations.

I think it's important that the college, while they would hold their members to account, also needs to have the backing of some legislation to support them in that. This is what I heard the other evening when I had the opportunity to speak with members of the college of physicians. They said how much they appreciated this legislation because it will actually give them the legal piece that they need when they want to withhold ever giving back a licence to someone who's found guilty of an offence. This is really far-reaching legislation. It's not just doctors; it's impacting a whole range of health professions. It's wonderful. I'm really glad that the government has brought this forward.

I just wanted to comment a little bit on the process. It's been really interesting, I think, partly because I guess I'm a bit of a legislative geek, and I find it really interesting that we've had to follow all of these rules back and forth to get these things fixed. It also brought home to me the importance that we pass legislation that will withstand a constitutional challenge. We would never want to pass really good legislation like this and then have it struck down, because this is legislation that we need in this province, so I think it was really important that there was some due diligence done around that. While maybe initially, you know, we thought that we had found that balance, the minister went back, checked with the legal counsel, and came back with another possibility. You know, I think we've arrived at a really good solution together.

I just wanted to comment, thirdly, about the collaborative process. One of the things when I was working in Hansard and I used to watch the process back and forth during the years when the former PCs were in power: it would frustrate me because the opposition would bring forward excellent amendments, great suggestions, and the government just ignored them. They had no interest whatsoever in listening to anything the opposition had to say. So I'm so pleased that our government is doing this differently and that you're willing to listen, that the Health minister and the opposition parties worked together to make this bill as strong as could possibly be. Thank you so much for engaging in all of that. I'm really, really proud that as a province we're taking the lead on this.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Are there any more speakers, just to clarify?

Seeing none, I'll now call on the Deputy Premier to close.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to all of my colleagues. I know that this has been a very important bill for, I imagine, all of us. I look forward to us being able to spend time in our constituencies this next week telling our constituents about the important work of this House.

While I think we've done a great job talking about what everyone on the floor of this Chamber who's elected has done to bring us to this point, I want to also recognize all of the staff who were part of the work in drafting the original bill, making sure that we worked on amendments, and making sure that we brought it to this conclusion today of third reading. Lastly, I want to recognize the table officers and the Chair/Speaker/Chair/Speaker for her amazing ability to adapt today and help navigate this process. I imagine this is something that she probably wanted to speak to as well, so I look forward to hearing what she tells her constituents about this important legislation once we rise today.

Thank you very much to all members.

With that, I close debate at third reading of Bill 21.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank all members. This is as close as legislating comes to clockwork precision. Here we are with 20 minutes left on the clock, but I will move that we call it 4:30 and that the House adjourn until 1:30 on November 19.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:10 p.m. to Monday, November 19, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, November 8, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 19, 2018

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect. Today the Assembly hosted a ceremony to commemorate Holodomor, the famine and genocide imposed by Soviet authorities in Ukraine. Let us take a moment to honour and remember all those who have lost their lives during this horrific event.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers. I would invite all of you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and make two introductions to you. First of all, I'm honoured to introduce through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Derek Fox. Derek was elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in 1986 to represent the good people of Vegreville for seven years. Like our current members, he shared the understanding of the importance that our rural communities, farming, and agriculture have in our province. During his time in office he fought for hard-working people in rural Alberta as the Official Opposition critic for agriculture and rural development. Today he carries on the entrepreneurial spirit of Alberta as a business owner in Vegreville, and he plays an active role in his community as secretary treasurer of Warwick Hall and is a sponsor of the Vegreville Agricultural Society. I would ask that Mr. Fox please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Madam Speaker, I'm also honoured to present to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Tom Sigurdson. Tom has been described as tireless and formidable in his long career advocating for immigrants, impoverished and, of course, working people throughout Canada and Alberta. He was elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in 1986 to represent the good people of Edmonton-Belmont. Serving until 1993, he fought for hard-working Albertans as the Official Opposition critic for manpower, tourism, Education, and Labour. He also had the good fortune to have one of the bossiest summer students ever, subsequently becoming the Premier of the province. All I can say is that if you thought I was bossy then, you should try working with me now. Currently the executive director of the B.C. building trades council he tirelessly fights for 35,000 highly skilled trades workers from 17 different unions making up the council. I ask that you please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly enthusiastic members of the Strathcona County Pickleball Association. Later today I'll be speaking a little bit more about the growing sport. Here today are Rita Fournier, Loui Fournier, Zane Nykiforuk, Roger Kemp, Jamilah Mumo, Sharon Loughheed, and Rob Loughheed. As you know, Rob Loughheed served as a member of this Legislature for three terms, representing the constituencies of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan and Strathcona. I ask my guests to rise and to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. With your indulgence I have two introductions. First of all, I'd like to introduce 37 members of the grade 6 class of Waverley school, who are here for a week at the Legislature. I see them eagerly waving at me. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Douglas and Ms Walls, and their chaperone, Ms McLennan. I had the pleasure of visiting Waverley school at the end of October, where we debated and eventually decided to extend voting rights to 11-year-olds here in the province of Alberta. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

For my second set of introductions, Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce a group of student leaders in our postsecondary system. The Alberta Students' Executive Council represents students in every corner of our province and are here at the Legislature for their inaugural Fall Advocacy Week. I've been proud to work with them as we crafted Bill 19, and I'm happy to have them in the building as debate continues. With us today – and I ask that they rise as I say their names – are Garrett Koehler, Nicholas Newnes, Ramon Ramirez III, Karen Velasco, Dacil Aguilar, Chaise Combs, Lindsey Comeau, and Alex Bedard. Forgive me if I've missed anybody. I'd ask that they all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 18 staff from the Ministry of Energy. The staff here today are from all parts of departments and provide invaluable support in our province's largest industry. Some are involved with mapping oil and gas resources, others help develop policy, and yet others help to ensure collection of Alberta's royalties. Not all the staff are new to the ministry, but for the most part this is their first time in this Legislature. I want to thank each and every one of them for the important work they do every day on behalf of Albertans. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is really my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of the greatest students in the entire province because they come from the greatest constituency. There are 25 in the public gallery today from George P. Nicholson school. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Jamie Wilson. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other school groups?

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last month eight exceptional Albertans received the highest honour our province can bestow, the Alberta Order of Excellence: Wayne Chiu, k.d. lang, David Manz, Solomon Rolinger, Allan Wachowich, Ralph Young, Rosella Bjornson from Strathcona-Sherwood Park, and Sherwood Park's very own Reg Basken.

Today I introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Reg Basken. Reg has dedicated his life to taking care of people and communities. Through his work with the precursors to Unifor, the Alberta Labour Relations Board, and the International Chemical Energy Federation, he has worked towards workplace safety, environmental sustainability, and ensuring that workers have a voice in the collective bargaining process. He has been actively involved in the United Way. He received the Queen Elizabeth II silver, golden, and diamond jubilee medals and was very instrumental in establishing medicare. Reg is here with his sister and brother-in-law, Dorothy and Bob McRae, that I'm happy live in my riding; his niece Carene Schroeder; and grandnieces Eden and Jorden. I'd like to ask Reg and his family to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. A real honour for me today to stand and introduce to you and through you to the House six very dedicated citizens representing a number of different organizations in the province calling on the government to commit to the safer use of chemical pesticides, especially in urban areas. I'll ask them to stand as I mention their names: Dr. Elisabeth Beaubien, a plant ecologist at the University of Alberta; Dr. Raquel Feroe, member of the Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment; Rod Olstad, member of the Edmonton chapter, Council of Canadians; Hayley De Rose, practical nurse and mother; Robin McLeod, project co-ordinator with Alberta Low Impact Development Partnership and Healthy Calgary; and Sheryl McCumsey, co-ordinator for pesticide-free Calgary. Let's give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful group of constituents who have taken the time to share their stories with me and advocate for changes that take care of the most vulnerable Albertans: Francine Bérubé, a member of my staff, who I'm so lucky to have working in my constituency office; her sister, Evelyn Bérubé; Wendy McDonald from Inclusion Alberta – she has spoken with me numerous times regarding AISH and PDD benefits and making sure Alberta is more inclusive – and Angela Rouel, a constituent who is an outspoken advocate for an increase to AISH, who has shared her concerns with not just me but Premier Notley as well. I'll be speaking more about AISH and Bill 26 later today. Now I ask my guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Justin Zalewski, Jordan Conway, and Jonathan Berube from the Alberta LGBTQ chamber of commerce. Since its inception in October 2017 the chamber has been tirelessly working to advocate for and support the LGBTQ businesses in Alberta. I would like them to now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you a friend of mine, a lady that I share quite a bit in common with. We're both from a small-business background, we both believe in strong Alberta families, we both like knocking on doors to hear what's important to Albertans, and we both received our nomination about the same time this year, she for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and me for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Could I please ask Jackie Armstrong Homeniuk to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four individuals that came to my office and had a great chat this afternoon. I'd like them to stand as I call their names and recognize them: Ramiro Mora, CWell Consulting; James Allen, director of government affairs for Savers Value Village; Jeff Smail, VP Canadian operations; and Khazeena Ashroff, recycling sales manager. These individuals work with Value Village, which my wife appreciates greatly. Please rise. Give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise in the Assembly to introduce one of the most important people in my life. This particular individual had the unfortunate pleasure of carrying me for an extended period of time. She, along with my dad, has invested literally hundreds and hundreds of thousands of hours into their five children. Of course, I'm her favourite, fourth-born, that is, as she would say. We all know that we can't do this job without those who support us, and certainly my parents have been that for me for so long, always encouraging me to strive to be my best, to help others, and I've been pleased to follow their example of serving the community, which they have done for all of the years of their lives.

She may not be a giant in stature, but she's certainly a giant in my life. She once in a while reminds me that she may be little but she could still whup me, and nothing could be further from the truth. It's my pleasure to introduce to you my mom, Mary Cooper.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Bill 26 and AISH Client Benefits

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Conservative opposition members often accuse the NDP of building government policy on a framework of New Democratic Party ideology. To this I proudly say: guilty as charged. There is perhaps no better example of this shameless adherence to our party's core values than Bill 26, now before the House. I've heard from constituents on AISH about their struggles to pay the rent, to put food on the table. I've heard worries from vulnerable members of my constituency that benefits were not enough to cover the rising cost of living. I want to thank those who took the time to bring forward their concerns to me and MLAs across the province. Your concerns have been heard.

If passed, An Act to Combat Poverty and Fight for Albertans with Disabilities will index social benefits to inflation and recognize the higher cost of living by providing an immediate increase to AISH and income supports. These changes treat recipients with greater dignity and respect. An MLA's predominant role, Madam Speaker, is to fight for people who need help the most. Albertans shouldn't have to choose between putting food on the table or paying the rent.

For me, the last three years have been about fighting for what matters to regular people, fighting to make sure our economic recovery reaches everyone, especially the most vulnerable Albertans. If Bill 26 is passed, Madam Speaker, 250,000 Albertans – 250,000 – including people with disabilities, low-income families, and seniors, would see increased financial supports. We've heard the concerns of people on benefits, and our NDP caucus will never stop fighting to ensure that everyone can succeed and live with dignity. This fight requires some framework, some policy, and, yes, some ideology, an ideology that is concerned about everyday Albertans. Let the opposition tell the 250,000 people benefiting from Bill 26 that we are wrong. Albertans know who really has their backs.

Unemployment and Government Fiscal Policies

Mr. Barnes: Ignore it, and it will go away: that seems to be the strategy employed by Alberta's Finance minister. There are plenty of warning signs that the NDP's managed decline of Alberta's economy and layers and layers of burden are causing considerable hardship, and it is Alberta families that suffer the consequences. More than 180,000 Albertans are unemployed. That's 7.3 per cent, the highest unemployment rate outside of Atlantic Canada. In Calgary the story is even worse. Unemployment in the Stampede city is 8.2 per cent. Only St. John's is higher. To make matters worse for Alberta families, more than half of jobless Albertans are no longer eligible for employment insurance.

Clearly, something isn't working. And it's not going away; it's getting worse. Too bad the Finance minister is so focused on NDP ideology. Under this Finance minister Alberta is on track to amass nearly a hundred billion in debt. The cost to service that debt: $4 billion every single year. Four billion dollars: that makes the ministry of debt the fourth largest in government.

But according to the Finance minister this is normal. According to the Finance minister the deficit will sort itself out in a few years once we start receiving revenues from the Trans Mountain and the Keystone XL pipelines. However, the Finance minister doesn't mention that Trans Mountain is hopelessly bogged down in red tape, and their initial position against Keystone resulted in yet another halt. The government's failure to build pipelines to tidewater has driven the differential price to $54. According to the Alberta government's own estimates we're on track to lose $4 billion this year due to that differential price.

So where does that leave Alberta families? Out in the cold. This government's carbon tax has also made it more expensive for Alberta families to heat our homes, keep our lights on, feed and clothe our kids. Madam Speaker, 180,000 families have at least one wage earner without a job and more than half without employment insurance. But, hey, the Finance minister says that we worry too much.

Statement by the Speaker

Use of Electronic Devices in the Chamber

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we commence our afternoon's business, it has come to my attention that there may be a need to remind all members that the use of any recording device or camera, either as a stand-alone device or active on a member's phone, tablet, or computer, is not permitted in the Chamber at any time. I would ask all members to observe this rule out of respect for their colleagues and the institution as a whole.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Provincial Budget Revenue Forecasts

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. On April 10, 2018, the Finance minister said: we built pipeline revenues into our path to balance projections; we're confident all the pipelines will be built, so we're just going to keep going down this road. Let me be clear: the projections included TMX and Keystone XL being built. We now know that these projects, at best, are going to be delayed. How does this impact the debt that Albertans are now facing, Madam Premier?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. There is no question that, as we have clarified a number of times, our path to balance incorporates the successful completion of 2 of 3 pipelines or one if it's Keystone, and of course we know that both TMX and Keystone are delayed. Nonetheless, we feel relatively confident that as we move closer to our path to balance, we will be able to meet the targets that we have set and at the same time support those important services and economic growth that are so important to Albertans.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, analysts say that the decision on Keystone could be delayed for upwards of a year, and we now know that the federal Natural Resources minister says: we will not put a stop clock on consultation for Trans Mountain. This can go on a very long time; it's a reality. I know the Premier has promised Albertans that these pipelines will be built within the timeline of her budget, but the fact is that that's not going to happen. She has failed on that issue. Again, will she table a fiscal update to show how these changes will change her budget?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In fact, the Finance minister will be tabling a quarterly update soon, and we know that we are on track to meet all of our targets this year. Then we will take a look at where we're going going forward. But what we do know is that as we deal with these struggles, the answer is not to cut taxes by $700 million or a billion or whatever more for the top 1 per cent of the population or to make Albertans pay for the difficulties that we are facing after successive federal governments' inability to get a pipeline built.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, the Premier continues to audition to be the Leader of the Opposition. Let me be clear: the UCP has been clear that they will not be doing those cuts the Premier continues to just make up in imaginary land. But again, this question is important. This Premier promised this province that these two pipelines would be built, she used them as her projections in her budget, and she continues to delay in this House giving answers to the members of this House. Again, how will this impact your budget, the fact that you've now lost two pipelines that you promised Albertans would be built?

Ms Notley: Well, Madam Speaker, I'm not in the business of cheering for failure. I know that the members opposite think that that is their path to some form of electoral success, but that is not the way that we are going to go. We are going to keep fighting for TMX, we are going to support TCPL with respect to the Keystone project, and we're going to do everything that we can to stand up for Albertans. We are not going to cheer for their failure. We are not going to plan massive tax cuts, and to be clear, they have not clarified that they are not going to move forward with that. Moreover, we are going to support Albertans in their schools, in their hospitals, and where they need strong public supports.

The Deputy Speaker: Second opposition main question. Chestermere-Rocky View.

Services for Persons with Disabilities

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Albertans who are challenged with cognitive and physical disabilities have so much to give to our province. This is something that has been recognized by the private sector, many MLAs, the Alberta Legislature, and the cities of Edmonton, Lloydminster, and Grande Prairie, who have led in employing people with disabilities. To the minister: why does the government of Alberta fail to follow, let alone lead, in employing these amazing, able Albertans? And, no, an internship program that offers temporary employment at best does not count.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. What we have done is that we have increased supports for persons with disabilities by $150 million. Those supports also include employment supports. In fact, we have created an internship program within our ministry as well, so we are taking all steps that help them live in dignity. We are providing them with the resources they need to live.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. As I said, Madam Speaker, that internship program does not count.

Madam Speaker, employment opportunities for disabled Albertans are crucially important. There are still a great deal of questions from stakeholders and Alberta families about the roles and responsibilities for the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities, which was finally announced after almost a year of waiting. To the minister: can you clarify the role of the advocate, if employment opportunities for our disabled population will fall under this new office, and if not, why not?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Let me tell you, Member, that for those who are in those positions, you can ask them. For them, that internship does count.

The role of the advocate was very clear in the legislation, that he will advocate on behalf of Albertans with disabilities, bring forward their interests and their voices to the table, and also help them navigate the supports that exist. Employment support exists under PDD, and that will remain the same.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Maybe the minister has forgotten, but the advocate actually falls under his ministry, so I'm actually asking him that question.

The government has regularly proven themselves to be unreliable when it comes to consulting with Albertans on the importance of persons with developmental disabilities. The provincial advisory committee that was created to bring ongoing advisory capacity has been disbanded. The minister providing input on the PDD issues: this committee was disbanded by the government with no warning to the stakeholders receiving PDD supports. Now their families, service providers no longer have a seat at the table. To the minister: will you commit to reinstating this council?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would say that I will put our record, my record on this file against theirs any day. They are the ones who were imposing decisions on PDD. We worked with them, and we repealed the safety standard that they imposed on PDD. They imposed a supports intensity scale on PDD; we repealed it. We are currently working with them on all issues that matter to them. I would urge and encourage you to be part of that and to attend any one session to see what they have to say.

The Deputy Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. Calgary-Foothills.

Provincial Special Envoys to the Energy Industry

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, after taking victory laps, the Premier appointed another task force today, which includes her former chief of staff, the antipipeline Brian Topp, to go around and talk to energy companies about solutions to the oil price differential. Due to the actions and inactions of this NDP government and their Trudeau Liberal allies, western Canadian select was selling at $14.68 per barrel this morning. This is just over 9 cents per litre. A can of Coca-Cola costs more than that. What does the Premier expect to accomplish by having more appointees and having more talks?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, we were happy to announce that panel this morning. They bring a lot of expertise in a number of areas. This is a serious matter. The differential is absurd, and we have to do something about it. We have an opposition, however, whose leader was in Ottawa for 20 years, 10 in cabinet, and did not build one single pipeline to tidewater. We know that market access is important, and that's what Albertans want to do: they want to see action to get that pipeline built.

2:00

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, with respect to the price differential between WTI and WCS the Premier was quoted in the Calgary Herald saying, “we can’t have it racing out of the ground at $10 a barrel for a really long period of time.” To the Premier: Brian Topp compared Alberta’s energy industry to selling land mines. Isn’t this appointment just like bringing back Tzaporah Berman again?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, Mr. Topp, for example, he’s one of three in the group, and he has a long history of negotiations and is respected from all sides of the political spectrum. We also have two other members who bring a wealth of experience, because we know that we can’t sit and wait as has been done in the past. We know we can’t sit there and yell at people and expect action to come because we know that doesn’t work either. We’ve seen that for 20 years. We are on the side of Albertans. We know that market access matters to Albertans and it matters to our industry, and that’s what we’re doing.

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, Brian Topp opposed the Keystone XL pipeline, and he’s the architect of the carbon tax for pipeline strategy and wants to ban cars from the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. Is this really the best person Alberta could find to act as a special envoy for all our energy workers? They don’t have any confidence in this gentleman and in this government. Because of their actions thousands of Albertans are out of work. Why did they choose him, same as Tzaporah Berman?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Our government from day one has fought for what matters to Albertans, and that’s jobs in energy, that’s market access, and that’s prosperity to Alberta, and we’re doing that. We’ve been fighting for long overdue access, which was not fought for by the Leader of the Opposition when he had a chance to stand up for Alberta; 10 years in cabinet, 20 years in Ottawa, he did nothing. There were no pipelines built to tidewater, and that’s why we’re in the situation we are today. We are fighting very hard, something they have not done, and they continue to have no plan, just to criticize.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The massive price discount on Alberta’s oil is costing our province and our country billions of dollars. It is without doubt a national crisis, but instead of decisive action, the NDP have decided to strike yet another committee. Now, industry has been clear. Until pipelines are finally built, we need to temporarily curtail oil production to increase prices, keep producers viable, and, most importantly, keep Albertans working. To the Premier: why have you kicked the can down the road when it is clear that urgent action is required right now?

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think the Premier made it fairly clear this morning that this is a team that will start right away, that will be reporting very soon because we know that action matters, because we know market access matters. We know that jobs in our energy sector matter. That’s what matters to Albertans, and that’s what we’re doing. We’re taking action to provide those jobs and provide a path to get those pipelines built because we know that market access matters, as does our whole energy industry.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, thank you, but let’s be absolutely clear. What the minister is actually saying is that she really doesn’t have faith in the officials in her own ministry to quickly do that work. That means that either the minister is happy with the status quo or, in this case, making no decision is itself a decision. Again to the Premier: I understand why you’ve asked the Deputy Minister of Energy to be part of the panel, but beyond his credentials as a good New Democrat, what message does it send to industry to have Brian Topp part of this panel?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We’re very proud of the panel that’s been created. As with all good teams, it’s a team that brings a variety of skills. We expect that action will happen because of that. As the hon. member and anyone who lives in this province knows, there’s a disparity of agreement as to what next action should be, so that’s what this committee is going to look at. We’ve been working with industry constantly, looking at all options. No doors have been closed, and we’re going to continue to engage with industry.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What I can tell you is that Alberta energy producers and Albertans don’t like Ontario New Democrats coming and telling them their business. Albertans want to be involved in those answers. But I will say that the challenge facing our province is absolutely extraordinary. But desperate times call for desperate measures. In the short term curtailing oil production would be a dramatic step, but having personally talked with many industry experts over the last week, I believe it’s the right thing to do to maximize the value of the resource that all Albertans own. Again to the minister: will you agree to temporarily curtail production to increase the take for Alberta’s key producers?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to remind my colleagues here that this isn’t just an Alberta issue. This is a Canadian issue, and it matters not where people come from to address this issue. It is about Canada as well as Alberta. We’re losing over $80 million a day because of this differential, and we need action; we need it quickly. As my hon. colleague knows, there’s a variety of opinions on this. That’s why we’ve engaged some experts to come and work with industry to get those opinions and look at all options. As I said, no doors are closed at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mental Health Services in Edmonton

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Valuing Mental Health report highlighted that our mental health system is complex and hard to navigate. With multiple access points into community-based addiction and mental health services in Edmonton and without 24/7 support other than crisis teams or the ER, families are left without the care they need. To the Minister of Health: what is being done to fix this and follow through with the recommendations out of the Valuing Mental Health report?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the important question. It's incredibly important to know that our government is committed to removing barriers that Albertans face when they're accessing mental health services, including difficulties navigating the system, and that's why we created the Valuing Mental Health: Next Steps, which has over 150 initiatives that are currently under way to improve and expand co-ordination of mental health services. One specific one the member mentioned, 24/7 access: we announced recently a 24/7 mental health clinic at the Royal Alexandra hospital here in Edmonton, and we're very excited for it to open its doors.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. How will this initiative provide better care for patients, please?

Ms Hoffman: The 24-hour clinic at the Royal Alex will expand counselling, treatment, and crisis support, ensuring that it's there even evenings and weekends, when people often feel the most isolated. It will be staffed by more than 100 additional mental health employees, including mental health therapists, nurses, social workers, and addictions counsellors, all important investments in health care, Madam Speaker. Instead of talking about pulling thousands of dollars, millions of dollars, billions of dollars, out of front-line services, this government is investing in the services that matter to Albertans and increasing access through things like the 24/7 clinic at the Royal Alex.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the response there. Who was involved in the creation of this program, and when will families be able to use this new program, please?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. AHS consulted with over 400 individuals from a range of organizations as well as patients and family members who have lived experience on how best to improve access to substance use and mental health services, specifically in the Edmonton area, and our government is providing a million dollars to renovate the space. The Royal Alexandra Hospitals Foundation and the Mental Health Foundation are raising an additional $350,000 towards that new clinic. Construction is already under way, and we expect it to open later this winter. It can't come a day too soon; that's for sure. We're really excited for this project.

Rural Crime Strategy

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well thank you, Madam Speaker. I continue to receive many calls from rural constituents who have been victims of criminal activity. Now, there has been a small drop in crime statistics, and that's prompted the Justice minister to loudly proclaim that the government's rural crime initiative is working. But those statistics are small comfort for people who continue to be victimized, for some for the fifth or sixth or seventh time. To the Justice minister. Frustration continues to grow for these rural residents. What do you have to say to them?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, as the member has correctly pointed out, we have seen an 11 per cent drop in property crime across rural areas in the province. I've been clear in every instance in which I have spoken about this, that that has not extended to every area in the province. That's one of the reasons why our crime reduction units are so important. They can follow where the crime goes to make sure that they are proactively targeting those individuals who are doing a disproportionate amount of damage to our communities.

2:10

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, given that the RCMP has started telling my constituents that when it comes to stolen property, they don't have the time to spare nor the manpower to recover it and the RCMP are now telling people to simply file an insurance claim for stolen property and that some of our residents are finding it very hard to either obtain insurance or that the prices have skyrocketed, to the minister: what concrete actions are you taking to ensure that rural residents continue to be able to access property insurance at a reasonable cost?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, as we're moving forward, we're making sure that all Albertans across the province feel the impacts of our rural crime strategy in decreasing our property crime. I cannot be clear enough about this. The RCMP have been clear about this as well. It is important that all people across Alberta report crime where it's occurring. That goes into our intelligence databases, and it allows us to target the crime more effectively. We've had a fantastic relationship with Rural Crime Watch and Citizens on Patrol, and they are helping us to move forward.

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, given that our local RCMP are so overwhelmed by cases that they can't respond to or investigate crimes that have occurred and that when the much-vaunted rural crime reduction unit visited my constituency, the Vermilion River county councillors were told that our county is simply too big to provide adequate police protection, to the Justice minister. Your government is finally admitting that your economic recovery isn't reaching all Albertans. When will you also admit that your crime reduction initiative is failing to serve and protect all rural Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As I've indicated previously, the strategy is working. It's having an impact in terms of decreasing crime in many areas of the province. It is clear that it hasn't rolled out equally to all areas of the province, as is normally the case. We are working with those areas to make sure that we're moving forward on that. The answer here is more investment in police, not less. That's why our rural crime strategy is taking the steps to invest in police, invest in prosecutors, and I would wonder why the member opposite voted against it.

Dr. Starke: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order noted.

Provincial Budget Revenue Forecasts

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, a year ago the differential, the difference in price between west Texas intermediate and western Canadian select that Alberta produces, was just $18. Last week the differential hit a punishing $54, a 200 per cent increase. To the Finance minister: what impact does a $54 differential have on your government's debt, revenues, spending, and interest expense?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, first, let me address the debt-servicing cost question that was brought up in the member's statement. I just looked at Budget '18, and it's half of what he has said is the debt-servicing cost, so I'm not sure where he got his numbers. But I do want to say that our path to balance is intact. The opposition, we know, has no plan to balance. They have no plan for anything other than giving the super wealthy a $700 million tax cut, and we will have hard-working Albertans pay for that tax cut. I don't think that they're on the side of Albertans. They're on the side of their superwealthy friends.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, my member's statement was about the $4 billion he wants to put us under interest expense not the $2 billion we're currently under. But again to the minister: is the government concerned that this substantial loss of royalty revenue as a result of the differential will result in your seventh credit downgrade as it becomes obvious that this government's path to balance is nothing more than a path to debt, interest, and hardship for Alberta families?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thanks again, Madam Speaker. You know, we're not going to take advice from that side of the House. For instance, the opposition leader, when he was in Ottawa – and we heard it from our Minister of Energy earlier – had six straight deficits in the governments he was in, a $56 billion deficit in just one year alone, and he added $145 billion to the national debt and racked up over $309 billion in interest payments. On this side of the House we cut the deficit by $3 billion already without firing 4,000 nurses and 4,000 teachers, which they would do.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, $50 billion in debt in just three years.

Given that this government's 2018-19 budget pegged the cost of the differential at $28 and was counting on it to actually decrease next year, not the north of $50 that it currently is, and given that this government already prematurely calculated the revenue from a pipeline that isn't even built or started and was planning to increase the carbon tax on Alberta families, to the minister: when will you and your government get realistic about the cost of interest that reduces all of our priorities?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll just talk about the principles that Budget 2018 was built on. A strong and diversified economy: we see that across our economy. There are challenges, but we're addressing those. Stable spending and cost containment: something that side could never do. Reducing our reliance on resource revenues: that is taking place through PDP 1 and other things. We laid out a plan that would not bring in the reckless cuts that that side is calling for, cuts that the member from Lac La Biche has said would hurt Albertans. Well, that's right. It will hurt Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Finance minister sees things that don't exist.

When Alberta's NDP government released its so-called path to balance, it banked on higher resource revenues from the Trans Mountain pipeline. At the time the Dominion Bond Rating Service called the NDP's revenue forecast, quote, highly uncertain. Now, with the pipeline delayed indefinitely, we know that that revenue forecast is highly impossible. To the Minister of Finance: since Alberta has seen six credit downgrades since your government took over the books and you have not learned a thing, how will you explain the next one, and what are you doing to avoid credit downgrade number 7 on your watch?

Mr. Ceci: It's like a bad movie over there, Madam Speaker.

You know, we're putting jobs and economic diversification first in this province, and our plan is working. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that businesses are coming to Alberta. Flair Air moved their headquarters from Kelowna to Edmonton. CN Rail is investing another $320 million in Alberta for upgrades. Nexen is investing $400 million to expand their Long Lake oil sands. On and on and on. It's not as dire as that person says.

Mr. McIver: Madam Speaker, given that Albertans consider this minister's policies to be a horror movie, given that the minister's response is not surprising because he tends to remain in denial right up until our credit rating falls again and then he simply shrugs his shoulders, and given that our lack of pipeline capacity has created an alarmingly high discount on every drop of oil we sell, resulting in a very low price, to the minister: have you had any discussions with DBRS, Moody's, or Standard & Poor's about Alberta's escalating revenue crisis and the potential on the credit rating that you are responsible for?

An Hon. Member: Hopefully not.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Ceci: Madam Speaker, you know, Q2 is coming at the end of this month. We'll have an opportunity to update all Albertans with regard to the fiscal situation of our budget, and I can tell you that there's going to be some good news in that Q2 update. As a result of our work, we have cut the deficit already, $3 billion, something that side refuses to recognize and understand. When they were in government, the operating expense of their government went sky high. They spent like drunken sailors. We're restrained on this side.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order noted.

Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Given that the minister is restrained by the truth because he won't tell it as often as he should and given that in a continuing effort to deflect attention from his government's mishandling of the growing crisis, the minister for economic development unveiled a real-time lost revenue counter and given that the counter highlights national revenues of $84 million a day – it's good to highlight that – but fails to tell Albertans how much they are losing per day, to the Finance minister: do you even know the daily amount of Alberta's real-time revenue counter, and what are you actually doing to make it better other than spending more money than you're bringing in and building up a bigger pile of debt and deficit for them to deal with later?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Bilous: What we do know is that no one has been a stronger advocate for market access than our Premier, unlike the opposition over there, whose leader spent 20 years in Ottawa, 10 years in cabinet, and failed to get any pipelines to tidewater, Madam Speaker.

It's a little rich for us to be taking advice from these folks. It's also ironic that when they talk about debt and deficit, they look at the leader and how much he racked up: six straight deficit budgets – do you discuss that at your caucus meetings? – $56 billion in one year alone. We are moving forward. We've rolled out a strategy to ensure that these pipelines move forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

2:20 Educational Curriculum Redesign

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Education's new curriculum appears to be taking a one-size-fits-all approach, applying the same template to every educational discipline. As a former social studies teacher I can assure you that forcing math into a social studies template will not result in good math instruction. Each discipline requires its own appropriate approach. To the Minister of Education: why are you trying to stretch or chop every subject to fit the same narrow template?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, I'm very proud of the curriculum work that we're doing here in the province of Alberta in all subject areas at all grade levels. This is a way by which we can track and make sure that we quantify skills as they move from grade to grade and make sure that we do have those interactions between subject areas. For example, financial literacy exists and will live in mathematics, but it will also live in social studies, and it will also live in health and so forth. This is a way by which kids can internalize and learn these lessons and carry them with them for the rest of their lives.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that many cognitive theorists maintain that children do not develop critical thinking skills until around the age of 12 and given that the new curriculum asks even the youngest students to think critically and given concerns that the curriculum does not teach the basic knowledge they'll need to think critically when they're ready, how will the minister address concerns that this inattention to basic knowledge will leave students unprepared to think critically?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I find it a bit curious that we would be debating something around basic skills. We are building basic skills into the curriculum. The draft curriculum for K to 4 is up on the website now for people to look at, and we'll start field testing in the new year. Certainly, it's important to match basic skills with more advanced cognition in later grades, so we're working on grades 5 to 9 right now. Critical thinking is a very important part of being a member of a modern society. I know that the members opposite don't like critical thinking because once people learn it, then they will be less likely to vote for the UCP.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think somebody had better work on their critical thinking skills.

Given that Alberta's diverse communities have varying educational needs and given that, for example, farm safety education is vital in a rural setting but may not be needed by urban students and given that the new curriculum appears to treat every student and every discipline according to the same template, when will the minister release the instructional resources so that Albertans can be confident that the curriculum can be tailored to meet local needs?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Actually, that's a very good question. What we're doing is that we are doubling down on the professionalism of teachers and of local boards and so forth to build content that does work in their own particular local areas. I will make no excuses about urban students learning about agriculture, for example, because it's our second-biggest industry and it's a very important part of the structure of who we are as Albertans. You know, what you don't do, though, is take 4,000 teachers out of the system, make major cuts . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Eggen: . . . from the budget for the sake of simply trying to make ideological choices, which is what the members opposite are doing.

Energy Industry Diversification Programs

Cortes-Vargas: Madam Speaker, the construction of the Inter Pipeline facility has done a lot to stimulate the economy in the Industrial Heartland. This investment would not have been possible without the first round of the government's petrochemical diversification program, and understandably a lot of my constituents have been asking me how we can keep this momentum going. Last spring we passed legislation to enable the second round of PDP as well as programs for partial upgrading and petrochemical feedstock infrastructure. To the Minister of Energy: what is the status of these programs, and when can we expect announcements of the next steps?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question. I'm very proud about the work our government has done on diversification. You know, I'm old enough to remember when Peter Lougheed started that work, and then for whatever reason it was dropped until our government. We know, as I've said many times in this House, that the first round was very well subscribed, and we're very proud of the results. The second had just as much interest. Right now they are being evaluated at arm's length from our minister's office and by an independent fairness monitor, and we're going to have more to say early in the new year.

Cortes-Vargas: Given that workers, industries, and municipalities all submitted feedback about PDP and other programs in the economic diversification panel, how is the minister ensuring she is addressing their feedback as we move to the next round of applicants?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I said, I'm very proud of what we've done so far. The benefits of the Inter Pipeline investment have been well beyond the heartland itself. I've had the pleasure of touring a factory in Grande Prairie where they're providing vessels to the project. There are companies in Balzac and Red Deer that are also enjoying the benefits. In the new one we've placed some additional weight on jobs provided, apprenticeship opportunities, and benefit to indigenous groups.

Cortes-Vargas: Given that workers in the building trades are anxiously awaiting more projects and given that the Industrial Heartland plays a critical role in Alberta's GDP, to the minister: are there criteria to ensure that there are viable projects that are ready to move ahead if there are successful applicants?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The simple answer is yes. We have two sets of criteria for evaluating the projects. One, as was mentioned, was benefit to Albertans. The other criteria speak to the economic viability of the programs, including having a solid business plan, evaluating the technology used, the company's environmental performance, which speaks to the overall capabilities, and the timing of the project completion. I'm excited about the opportunities that are before us and excited for the next steps to come.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Tow Truck Driver Safety

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last fall a private member's bill would have allowed tow trucks to use blue and white warning lights along with the currently permitted amber. The industry asked for this change because their work on Alberta's roadsides creates hazards for tow truck operators as well as members of the motoring public. Although this bill died on the Order Paper, the minister had indicated interest in it. To the Transportation minister: does the minister have any plans to implement this bill's proposal?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that very good question, Madam Speaker, from the hon. member. I just want to start out by reminding people that the law requires them to slow down when they pass a tow truck with flashing lights to a minimum of 60 kilometres an hour, and we urge drivers to be cautious at all times. With respect to the question about the lights, that's something that is under consideration. I'm happy to give more information in subsequent answers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that tow truck operators are asking if there's anything they can do to help advance the proposals in the bill and given that I'm also receiving interest from industry representatives from other provinces but I'm not sure how to respond to them, to the same minister: what actions would you recommend tow truck operators take to obtain this extra level of safety for all Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I wish to correct a previous answer. You must slow down at least to 60. That's not a minimum; that's a maximum. I just wanted to clarify that for everyone.

We know that Saskatchewan has implemented a system of two-colour lights for tow trucks, including blue and, I believe, amber. We're in touch with Saskatchewan. We're looking at their experience. We want to deal with that. In the meantime I urge all drivers to respect the fact that tow truck operators are out there, that they're exposed, and we need to be careful.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that allowing tow trucks to use more visible blue and white warning lights enhances safety for all motorists and given that Saskatchewan and four other provinces have successfully made this change and that the minister can easily make the required changes to the highway traffic act simply through regulation, to the minister: will the minister work with all parties to implement this common-sense proposal as soon as possible?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. Well, as I indicated, we're looking at the experience of Saskatchewan and other provinces with respect to this. When we've analyzed it and are convinced that it's actually going to make a difference to improve safety, we're seriously prepared to take a look at what changes we can make to make sure that tow truck drivers, like everyone on our highways, are safe.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Business Regulations

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This past week our neighbouring province to the west hosted the B.C. Business Summit 2018. One of the slide decks showed that Canada ranked 34th of 35 Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development countries when it comes to time to obtain a permit for a new general construction project. This was just one slide in many that showed how poorly Canada is doing on red tape. To the government: how is Alberta doing on red tape reduction?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think we're doing quite well, actually. Thank you for the question. There are a number of things that our government has undertaken, including that every time that we are reviewing a regulation that comes back up – many, many government regulations are on a five-year timer – we look at the regulation to ensure that it's still serving its purpose. If it's a safety issue, if it's an environmental issue, or if the regulation is stale-dated and needs to be either amended or discarded, this is an ongoing process. We don't need a campaign in order to have a focus on regulations. We are constantly looking at how we can make it easier to do business in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, given that Amber Ruddy, the director of CFIB, said, "Alberta is the only provincial government in Canada that refuses to be publicly accountable for the regulatory burden," would the NDP say that they are bringing down Canada's grade amongst OECD countries or raising it?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What I'll point out to the member if they want to count regulations simply or only: look to the province of British Columbia, where up until recently there were regulations for bar and restaurant owners as far as the height they could have televisions inside their restaurant or bar. That seems absurd to me. Alberta doesn't have those types of regulations. Starting off with a certain number, other provinces have an abundance of regulations. What I will say and what we've introduced not long ago is that Alberta is moving forward on a common business number because we want to make it easier for businesses to do business in Canada and work with the federal government, and we are waiting on them.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, given that this government has received an F from CFIB every year and given that they have added over 100 pages of legislation to just the OH and S act alone, how can they stand in this House and defend their record on red tape reduction? Struggling Albertans deserve an answer.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know what? I was very proud to be Alberta's trade minister and to partake in the negotiation of the Canadian free trade agreement or the renewed AIT, where actually the national Canadian Federation of Independent Business awarded all trade ministers the golden scissors because we are moving forward with trying to make it easier to do business across the country. Now, I recognize there are a number of other initiatives that we are working on with other provinces, trying to make it easier to do business in all jurisdictions. We recognize this, and we will continue to work toward making it easier . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Hillview Park Condominiums in Fort McMurray Condominium Regulations

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Over 2,500 homes were destroyed almost two and a half years ago in the Fort McMurray fire. Only 30 per cent, 823, have been fully rebuilt, leaving 70 per cent still not home. One of the many horror stories comes from the Hillview condo complex, which has 214 separate units and has faced a series of serious challenges, and they're still a long way from being home. The government has recently committed $2 million to help these individuals. Could the minister please tell the House what the conditions are for the money?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to report that in partnership with the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and the Red Cross there's an additional $6 million being made available to support those who were affected from the Hillview condos. The Red Cross, of course, has an office set up in Fort McMurray and has already provided individual assistance to upwards of half the Hillview owners. I'd of course want to point out to any Hillview condo owner to definitely contact the Red Cross to see the help that is available to them.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that this NDP government created a licensing system for builders to be able to build post fire in Fort McMurray to prevent the very failures that we are seeing today in the Hillview complex, will the government admit that there was a failure in the licensing process, and as a result, are you looking to review this very flawed framework?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Sorry. I'm a little slow, Madam Speaker. Hurt my back. Actually, the member is incorrect. The builder licensing legislation came in after the fire in Fort Mac. What was in place in Fort Mac was kind of a precursor, a pilot, to put some things in place to try to help where we could. The legislation, in fact, that is in place, that Municipal Affairs put in, that I'm quite proud of, that we did great consultation on, and that builders and developers alike were happy with, has proven to work quite well since then because it's doing the job that we want it to do.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that many of the 70 per cent that aren't currently home are in multifamily dwellings, specifically condominiums, and given that any community in Alberta is simply a flood or a fire away from a similar fate and given that the people in Fort McMurray have already gone through enough, when will you finally release the condo regulations that you've been working on for the last three and a half years, and will these regulations actually protect against another Hillview tragedy?

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Of course, you know, condo owners throughout the province deserve to have a condo board that functions appropriately. That is why we went out and consulted with Albertans. We did two rounds of consultation, working with many different industry groups. And the condo regulations that came out of that consultation: I think the hon. member can expect to see those shortly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Lethbridge Drug Use and Crime Rates

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Of nine Alberta communities on Maclean's magazine's list of the top 20 most dangerous places in Canada Lethbridge sits in third place due to a spike in illicit drugs and associated addictions problems. In a recent Lethbridge Herald article police confirmed that addicts are fuelling their drug habits by committing break-ins and other property-related crimes, and the UCP is hearing from citizens concerned for the safety of their families. To the Justice minister: do you concur with the police that drugs have prompted this sharp increase in crime in Lethbridge?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the important question. Certainly, we have been having conversations with our police partners around substance abuse issues throughout the province. It's certainly one of the things that is seen as a driver of crime. That's why we think it's important to address crime from a multifaceted perspective, ensuring that we're addressing not only the criminal end point but the upstream things like addictions and mental health. I'm sure we'll have more to say about that in subsequent questions.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that residents are saying that a drug consumption site is attracting an influx of addicts to their neighbourhood and given that schools, parks, residences, and businesses are all located within walking distance of this site and given that I understand that the purpose of this consumption site is to save lives and reduce harm but that that does not mean the government should dismiss residents' valid concerns about harm to their neighbourhood, to the Justice minister: will you order an immediate review of the crime rates in this particular neighbourhood?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Since this is certainly a public health situation, I'm going to take the lead on this, but rest assured that I work regularly with the Justice minister as well as both local MLAs from Lethbridge. They've done an excellent job of raising the concerns and helping us make sure that folks who live in Lethbridge get the supports and services they need. That's why we've invested an additional $80,000 for needle collection, that we've doubled now to $160,000. These funds are supporting additional cleanup. We're also making sure that we are working with service providers. The fact is that substance use in Lethbridge is at a significant rate, and we can't turn our back on the people who are dying in the community, unlike the Leader of the Official Opposition recommended when . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thanks, Madam Speaker. Given that the location of this consumption site is posing hazards to residents, with many people especially concerned about children, and given that no one is asking this government to ignore people in the throes of addiction but that at the same time it must not ignore residents and businesses experiencing negative effects from the unintended consequences of this initiative, Minister, will you commit today to deal with this situation for the health and welfare of the entire community?

2:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. That's exactly what we're doing, and that's exactly why we've worked with the local MLAs to increase supports for community initiatives around the community. The truth is that the supervised consumption site in Lethbridge has the highest rate of use anywhere in our province's supervised consumption sites. It's saving lives every day. ARCHES responded to over 800 emergencies since opening in February, so this is certainly a state of emergency. The members opposite encouraged us to address it as an emergency. We're doing so. We're also working with local businesses, local law enforcement, the police, the mayor, and the local MLAs because this isn't something that we can police our way out of.

Mr. Sucha: Well, Madam Speaker, I'd like to open by congratulating the Calgary Stampeders on their win last night.

Urban Wildlife Management

Mr. Sucha: With the growth of the city of Calgary, interaction between wildlife and residents becomes a way of life. My riding's proximity is very close to Fish Creek park, so we see wildlife like deer, coyotes, bobcats, and on the rare occasion even moose and bears enter my community. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: what is your ministry doing to track wildlife in these areas?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Alberta towns and cities have developed rapidly in urban areas. Certainly, we have an urban park in Fish Creek, and we often hear about wildlife-human interactions. That's one of the reasons why we have struck a committee to manage it, being chaired by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, who's doing excellent work around human-wildlife interactions. We also have a number of other initiatives. We've invested in parks infrastructure, we've invested in wildlife corridors and underpass infrastructure, we've invested in parks staff and enforcement officers: all things that would not have happened had the folks across the way had their way.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that I have heard significant concerns with interactions between bobcats and residents in my area, what is the government's policy to remove wildlife that may be dangerous to encounter for residents?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. If a wild animal is posing a danger to Albertans, there are a number of different things that they can do, but if they're in one of our parks or on public land, they should call their local fish and wildlife management office. Depending on the species of animal, what the behaviour is, where the encounter occurred, fish and wildlife officers may take one of several actions, including relocation, medical care, or euthanization.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that we have heard some concerns that the work on the southwest ring road and the growth of south Calgary are disrupting migratory patterns of wildlife, causing them to enter areas that they haven't entered before, what is the ministry doing to prevent these negative impacts on wildlife during these projects?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. In the case of the ring road what we try to do is mitigate the impact on wildlife, including clearing vegetation outside the breeding-bird window, identifying locations to improve wildlife passage through clear-span bridges, building fences at specific locations. We also made sure that the 2013 wetland policy applies to that project. We've therefore been able to avoid some wetland loss at Weaselhead that would have otherwise happened. We're trying to make sure that we carefully balance the environment and the economy. With the ring road and with the coming green line, people need to get to where they're going, whether it's work or school, and we are committed as a government to making sure that happens.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the Minister of Justice has asked to be able to supplement a response given during an earlier question.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Rural Crime Strategy

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In response to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster I had indicated that he had voted against the rural crime strategy. That was incorrect. It was our colleagues from the UCP who voted against it, but the MLA for Vermilion-Lloydminster had in fact voted in favour.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, did you wish to respond?

Dr. Starke: That covers it very well, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Just before we continue on, I've had a request to revert to introduction of guests briefly.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you guests from the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations who are here today in support of my motion to promote long-term viability and sustainability of REAs and other co-operatively organized utility associations. The AFREA represents member-owned co-operatives that distribute electricity throughout rural Alberta. These co-ops have distributed electricity for over 75 years. Here today are President Dan Astner, Vice-president Charles Newell, and Vice-president Robert Peyton. The board has been instrumental in bringing the important topic of REA sustainability to my attention. Also joining us today is CEO Al Nagel, who has worked in the electricity industry for over 50 years. I'd ask all of my guests from the AFREA to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Holodomor Memorial Day

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today we mark 85 years since the Ukrainian genocide known as Holodomor, a word made up of two brutal realities: "holod," meaning hunger, and "moryty," meaning a slow, cruel death. In just two years millions of Ukrainians died of starvation.

Last year I travelled with the MLA for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to Kiev to pay my respects at the Holodomor memorial in the country of our ancestors. We carried a bowl of wheat as we walked by the Angels of Sorrow, statues that guard the souls of the starved. We passed 24 millstones that remind us of the 24,000 human lives ground to death every day during the famine. We laid our eyes on a statue of a girl, with tears on her face, captured in time along with her frail frame.

Stalin's plan was deliberate, and beginning in 1932, brigades of men came to steal any and all food. Many came specially equipped with long metal rods topped by hooks, used to prod any surface in search of grain to feed Stalin's armies. Natalia Talanchuk remembers her mother forbidding her to look outside the windows in the mornings because out in the streets were bodies of the people who had died of starvation overnight. Outside of Ukraine little was known, and inside to even speak of this event was a crime subject to imprisonment, exile, or execution.

Remembering the Holodomor isn't just for those of us with Ukrainian blood; it is for all of us. As Albertans we do more than remember. We act to ensure that their tragedy is never repeated. In the memorial book there I left a note: "We are each born with rights to live as who we are, no matter race, religion, age, gender, gender expression, or social economic situation, without fear. I commit to working to protect these rights, every moment, every day."

Madam Speaker, today I recommit myself to these things. May the memory of those who died live forever. [Remarks in Ukrainian] Memory eternal.

Hunting Season

Mrs. Pitt: Madam Speaker, the leaves have changed colour, and the weather has cooled down. For many Albertans their thoughts have turned to red flannel and blaze orange toques. Hunting season is here. Hundreds of thousands of people take part in this time-honoured tradition. Whether a rifle or bow hunter, we are extremely fortunate here in Alberta to have about 5 million acres of public land under agricultural lease that hunters may access.

Regardless of whether you want to hunt on public or private land, there are rules that need to be followed before you enter the property. If you wish to access public land such as grazing leases, you must contact the leaseholder and provide information about your visit. Although leaseholders must allow reasonable access to the land for recreation, there are some circumstances where the leaseholder may deny or apply conditions. Similarly, if you want to hunt on private land, you must first contact the landowner or the landowner's designate for permission. They can allow you to hunt or not – it's entirely up to them – and you must respect their discretion or face the consequences.

Last year investigations were conducted by fish and wildlife, resulting in charges or warnings being laid. This is unacceptable given technology today – the use of GPS devices, hunting apps – and even the good old-fashioned county maps with ownership and quarter sections clearly marked. There really isn't much reason for not abiding by the rules.

Madam Speaker, there are youth programs, seniors' programs, and programs to help those with disabilities enjoy this outdoor pursuit. There are even programs that allow for the donation of your harvest to the less fortunate. We should be proud that our hunting community plays such a vital role in wildlife management in this province. The money spent on licences and tags helps to keep these programs viable. Please join me in wishing everyone a safe, successful, and law-abiding hunting season.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

2:50 Strathcona County Pickleball Association

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to stand today and recognize the active volunteers in an association that has been thriving in Strathcona county, and we all share the goal of ensuring our community has the spaces they need to meet their fitness goals.

Pickleball is one of the fastest growing sports in Canada, and it encourages players from the ages of seven to 70. Pickleball is alive and well in Strathcona-Sherwood Park, and rarely is there ever an event or meeting I can get through without someone bringing up the subject of pickleball. I enjoyed my brief experience with the pickleball association when I had the pleasure of opening one of the new Strathcona county courts last year. The newest location is in my constituency, and it includes three outdoor courts at the Ardrossan junior and senior high school. There are now nine Strathcona county venues where residents can come together to play.

Pickleball is not simply dropping a ball into an old pickle jar, as it's been explained to me in jest. It's a combination of ping-pong, tennis, and badminton. Using paddles, players take turns to volley the ball across the net. It's an inclusive sport, and the rules have been adapted so pickleball is accessible to those in wheelchairs.

In July the Strathcona County Pickleball Association, with the help of 100 volunteers, held the first-ever Sherwood Park Open, which brought together 200 players. The Strathcona County Pickleball Association is a warm and friendly group, and, boy, are they active. People can drop in almost at any time and be welcomed by seasoned players who will explain the rules and get you started.

Madam Speaker, it has been a difficult two weeks for Strathcona county, but Strathcona county is resilient and has an amazing community spirit and co-operation that, to me, is exemplified by our many hard-working community groups. It is exactly this spirit of kindness and inclusion that keeps our community strong and a great place to call home.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Bighorn Area Land Use

Mr. Schneider: It is with interest that over the last little while on this side of the House we have had numerous stakeholders come to us expressing concerns with the NDP plans for the Bighorn area. We have seen the internal e-mail talking about turning the Bighorn into a wildland area, and we have also seen and heard about the resolution/proposal at the Alberta NDP's most recent AGM proposing the same. Contrast this to last week's statement by the minister that, quote: we're looking at proposing a mix of land designations that will conserve and protect natural landscapes while accommodating a wide range of economic, recreation, and tourism opportunities in the Bighorn. Unquote. Contrasting statements, it seems.

Now, the minister's own website states, "Wildland provincial parks are large, undeveloped natural landscapes that retain their primeval character." So this begs the question: how does that align with what the minister stated? Do we go with the policy e-mail, the minister's statement, or the party resolution? Remember that the minister had previously stated that the government wanted more Alberta parks. So what's the direction here? If the minister says that they are planning a park in the Bighorn, can the government ensure that no forestry sector jobs will be lost? Will existing forestry leases be respected? If the Bighorn is designated as a wildland park, can it be done in such a way that no jobs are at risk? So many questions and so many conflicting statements.

What will the government do if a pine beetle outbreak occurs in a newly designated Bighorn provincial wildland park? Will they act too late, similar to what happened in Jasper? What would a new designation in the Bighorn mean for the area's communities? Would they be consulted before any new park is designated, knowing that the loss of energy, forestry, and tourism dollars could be a reality? Will we have more communities face economic oblivion, similar to what this government has done to our coal communities? I, for one, hope not, but past actions by this government make me and stakeholders very skeptical.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 42 at the appropriate time I will rise on a motion later today. The motion I will be putting forward states:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reject co-operation with the federal government in the imposition of the Paris agreement on climate change.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. At the appropriate time I intend to move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately release an updated fiscal projection given that Budget 2018 did not account for the delay in the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion and the Keystone XL pipeline or the significant differential in oil prices that is impacting Alberta jobs and the economy.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 4(7) of the Election Act and section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I would like to table five copies of the 2017-18 annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer. A copy of this report will be provided to all members.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have two tablings today. First, I would like to table five copies of the fifth annual report of the Alberta Public Interest Commissioner.

Second, I'd like to table five copies of the 51st annual report of the Alberta Ombudsman.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Schmidt, Minister of Advanced Education, pursuant to the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board 2017-2018 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Gray, Minister of Labour, pursuant to the Government Organization Act annual reports for the following authorized radiation health administrative organizations: the Alberta Association for Safety Partnerships, January 1, 2017, to December 31, 2017, with attached financial statements; the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors, July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2018, with attached financial statements; the Alberta Dental Association and College, January 1, 2017, to December 31, 2017, with attached financial statements; the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, November 1, 2016, to October 31, 2017; the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta, January 1, 2017, to December 31, 2017; the University of Alberta, April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2018; the University of Calgary, April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2018; and pursuant to the Chartered Professional Accountants Act the Chartered Professional Accountants of Alberta annual report 2017-2018.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have some points of order that were raised. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Point of Order

Addressing Questions through the Chair

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise on my first point of order. I will actually quote my friend the hon. Government House Leader because when he raised the exact same point of order last time that we were here, he did a very good job of it. I agreed with him at the time, so I think that that will speed things up. He said on October 29, 2018:

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker was in the chair at the time.

Well, during question period today the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was asking a series of questions to the Minister of Health and during that group of questions, in a fairly aggressive way, pointing at the minister he referred to [her] as “you.” I want to just make a couple of points. In Beauchesne’s Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, on page 142, “It is the custom in the House that no Member should refer to another by name. Members should be referred to in the third person as ‘the Honourable Member for’” or the “Minister is normally designated by the portfolio held.” That is the hon. Minister of Health in this case.

Mr. Speaker, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, 2017, on page 510 under the section dealing with principles and guidelines for oral questions it also says very clearly, “Finally, all questions and answers must be directed through the Chair.”

Today, in response to a question, the Finance minister leaned over to the Member for Calgary-Hays, pointed his finger directly at the member, and aggressively started saying “you,” not speaking through the chair.

I agree with the Government House Leader, as I did then. That’s the process for our House, and I would ask either that he withdraw and apologize on behalf of this member or that you rule accordingly.

Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Government House Leader.

3:00

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Interestingly, I also agree with the Government House Leader on this matter. I did not observe the occasion, but I did observe during question period today, as on most days, that there were occasional lapses on both sides where people referred to the person they’re asking or answering as “you.” It’s a good reminder that all members should remember to go through the chair on these matters. If this is as the Official Opposition House Leader says it is, then he’s quite right, and I will ask our members and members of our government to try and keep this in mind.

The Deputy Speaker: Moving on to the next point of order, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Point of Order

Reflections on Nonmembers

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j) in regard to some comments made by the Minister of Education in a response to a question by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. During the minister’s response to the question – I was quite shocked to watch him do it – he indicated that he was making drastic changes to the education system in order to be able to deal with, essentially, conservative voters, who he said were not capable of critically thinking. Then that way, in the future they would not vote for Conservative parties and would vote for the NDP.

Now, there were 772,000 Albertans who voted for the Conservative side of the question in the last election. There are hundreds of thousands of Albertans who identify as conservatives, and I can tell you that they would be greatly insulted to be informed by the Education minister that they cannot critically think. Let’s be clear. This is a government who continually calls Albertans names, a Premier who referred to some Albertans as Chicken Little because of their concerns with the carbon tax, and, most famously, a Deputy Premier who called Albertans sewer rats. In this case, again to say that they are not capable of critically thinking is appalling, and that minister should stand up and apologize and withdraw his ridiculous remarks about the people of Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, some people in the House seem to be able to twist the truth like a pretzel, and this is a perfect example. For example, if you take what the Minister of Education said – and I thought it was a fairly lighthearted political jibe across the aisle – it was not that people who voted Conservative were incapable of critical thought but that, in his opinion, the more people were able to reason critically, the less likely they were to vote for the UCP. I don’t disagree with that point of view, but we respect and the Minister of Education certainly respects the right of every Albertan to make up their own mind with respect to how they vote and what their political leanings are. There are very many intelligent people on both sides or on all sides of the political system. It’s important that we encourage critical thought as a whole, not with a political objective in mind but just to help everyone make informed decisions about things that affect their everyday lives. That doesn’t mean they’re going to arrive at the same conclusion, and I don’t think the Minister of Education meant that.

Another example of how the hon. member is twisting words here was his reference to the Health minister’s talk about sewer rats, which was not directed to all Albertans by any means, not by a large degree.

An Hon. Member: Then why did she apologize?

Mr. Mason: She did apologize for that, but it was very focused, I think, on Rebel Media, which is, of course, very supportive of the UCP. The UCP leadership and members of their caucus have been repeatedly interviewed by Rebel Media notwithstanding the fact that it provided live coverage of the Nazi rally in Charlottesville and had adopted a very openly racist point of view and tone in its coverage, Madam Speaker. For the Official Opposition House Leader to then point the finger at the Minister of Health for being critical in a sharp way, admittedly, of that so-called media outlet is a bit rich because I think, quite frankly, that the UCP has a lot to answer for with respect to their associations with extremist groups, including Rebel Media. So I don’t think any apology is warranted in this case. It's part of the normal debate in this place, and I think that the opposition doth protest too much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, with regard to this point of order I don't have the benefit of the Blues. I did hear the comment, but in my viewpoint it was again part of that lighthearted banter back and forth. It's something, arguably, it perhaps would be nice to have a little more of in this Assembly and in this Chamber. That said, it's nice to have a reminder that we do need to always be conscious of our words and our decorum and the statements that we're taking in, how people are understanding these.

Was there another point of order? You've withdrawn one?

Did you still have another point of order, hon. member?

Mr. Nixon: I'm just checking.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has withdrawn his point of order.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: I rise, Madam Speaker, on 13(2) and ask you to explain your ruling and, in particular, why you think that insulting almost a million Albertans is light banter.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I've made my ruling, and I don't think any explanation of that is necessary.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks on Standing Order 42.

Paris Agreement on Climate Change

Mr. Fildebrandt:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reject co-operation with the federal government in the imposition of the Paris agreement on climate change.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity. Now, I think this is a matter of relative urgency for this House to debate. The federal government and many provincial Legislatures across the country have had the opportunity to debate and discuss the Paris climate accord. This Legislature has not. The Paris climate accord, while those agreements are international, has massive direct effects on Alberta, its finances, and our economy. Just as this House has in times gone by debated other accords like Kyoto and Copenhagen, the Paris climate accord is of direct consequence to Alberta, and this House has not had the opportunity to debate it yet. So I would request that the Legislature of Alberta be afforded the opportunity to debate this important and imposing federal policy, and I ask all members of the House to agree to allow this debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Unanimous consent is required to proceed with debate.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: You can begin debate on your motion, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, I want to thank members for agreeing to allowing this debate to move forward. The Paris agreement on climate change is of critical importance to all of Canada and to Alberta in particular. The agreement, signed by Prime Minister Trudeau along with support from the federal Green and ND parties, commits Canada to meeting climate change and emission objectives that are outrageously unrealistic. They are objectives that no country on the planet is currently headed towards actually meeting.

The Paris agreement on climate change follows in the footsteps of the Kyoto accord and the Copenhagen agreement. It follows in a long story of these international accords where politicians, big business, and other international interest groups come together, have a bunch of photo ops, and agree to save the world on a piece of paper. Unsurprisingly, these agreements always require that advanced industrialized economies like Canada do far more than our share. Now, the only good thing about these agreements is that our governments have consistently never met the objectives because meeting those objectives would strangle our economy.

You can still see some old, worn-out bumper stickers. I remember seeing bumper stickers on trucks around rural Alberta that said: no gun registry, no Kyoto accord, and no liberals. You can still see some of these because the Kyoto accord is – I'm sure the Member for Calgary-Mountain View doesn't like part of the bumper sticker. He probably doesn't like any of the bumper sticker, I would imagine. I'm sure they weren't referring to him.

Now, any government that realistically attempted to meet the objectives of Kyoto or Copenhagen or Paris is – no government has attempted to actually meet those objectives. They are merely aspirational. Any attempt to impose them in full would be debilitating to our economy. Of course, we need to do work to ensure that our industries are operating safely and cleanly, that we have an emphasis on environmental policy, on clean air, water, and land.

But I'm going to say something that shouldn't be news to this House. Carbon dioxide is not pollution. It is a naturally occurring phenomenon. Too much of it can be damaging, but it is not pollution. It is not a tax on pollution because carbon dioxide is not pollution. It's what plants breathe. So we need to be careful in the language we're using here when the government talks about taxes on pollution.

The Paris climate accord was signed by the Trudeau government with the support of the Green Party, the NDP, and the federal Tories. The very first act of federal Conservative Party leader Andrew Scheer after becoming leader was to whip his caucus into voting to support the Paris climate accord, and that was a early warning sign for me that perhaps that would not be a party that I could necessarily trust anymore. The Paris climate accord is supported by every single establishment federal political party. I would assume it's supported by our government, but I'll let them speak for themselves.

This is an agreement that our federal government has signed that they are now imposing or attempting to impose in legislation on provinces that do not comply. Ontario has recently liberated itself from the Kathleen Wynne Liberals, and they have pulled out of the backdoor carbon tax of that government, a cap and trade plan. They have pulled out, and now the federal government intends to impose a direct carbon tax on its own. Now, this case is going before the Supreme Court. It is to be determined yet if the federal government has the constitutional authority to impose a tax on one province and not another. To date that has generally not been the case. The federal government does not have that authority, but they believe they have it, and I suppose the courts will make that determination. The federal government is at this time imposing a carbon tax on provinces that do not comply.

Now, I might not agree with everyone on this side of the House, but I have a pretty strong feeling that a year from today there will
