Anyway, also looking at Ontario, I looked at their electricity rates and prices. They talk about things like off-peak, mid-peak, and on-peak. Is that really the direction that we want to go here as a province, where on-peak they're paying 13.2 cents per kilowatt hour? People are having to stay up after nonpeak hours to do their laundry or to have a shower. I guess that's the concern of why we would mess with a system. We had good, clean, coal-fired generation going. We're shutting that down, going to green energy and unpredictable solar and wind energy. Now we're changing to a capacity market to protect those industries. I guess that's the point.

I just think that even the government members, you know, if you look at the clauses we're trying to change – and we're trying to add in a few words: "fair, efficient and openly competitive." I don't think anyone should have a problem with that. So I would urge all MLAs and all parties to support this very important amendment to An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm here to speak on the amendment as proposed by my colleague from Calgary-Foothills and presented by my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. This is a fair amendment, and I hope the government side truly considers it.

We found issue with this bill whereby in a few places fair, efficient, and openly competitive language was not used. Madam Chair, it is imperative in order to restore trust in this bill that proper language in accordance with the industry must be used. This type of language had not been accorded to the capacity market. To ensure the process complies with industry regulations, fair, efficient, and openly competitive language is imperative. This amendment would provide certainty to stakeholders in the electricity industry, who do not want legal manoeuvring which would allow the government or the AESO, the Alberta Electric System Operator, to skip out on commitments. This amendment is crucial in order to restore trust in this bill.

Madam Chair, it's about the messaging; it is about the language used. If we might look at how such nuances can affect us, we need only look at the purchase of the pipeline by our federal Liberal government. They didn't have to do that, but they absolutely gave no confidence to industry that they would be able to get this pipeline built without dealing with cost overruns due to illegal protesting and other ways of impairing the project by the B.C. government. It's about confidence.

Madam Chair, when this government decided to do a royalty review instead of simply reading the other two royalty reviews that had happened in the five years prior – and it took them eight months to reconsider that: oh; wait a minute; it was good; we need the revenues. During those eight months, during that time, every international company looked at an escape plan, and most of them followed through with that. We lost some fantastic, fantastic investors, international investors, in our industry. I hope that when the members from across the way go up north to Fort McMurray-Conklin and door-knock, they ask them questions about this. I can guarantee you that they will get some very frustrated responses because the international companies, truth be told, were of very high calibre, very good quality. You know, one side claims to want to ensure employee rights and whatnot. The internationals were the pinnacle of providing those necessary tributes that labour organizations want to see and that people in general want to see. They were leaders in it. There's a certain irony in chasing those international companies away.

You know, this piece of legislation is an example of our government trying to recover after forcing through bills that we warned them would have negative implications on our economy, and they did not listen then. The end result was that our electricity market was put into disarray. There was volatility and unpredictability.

Now, the virtue of this bill, I suppose, is that it's this government's way of acknowledging that the opposition was correct and that they were wrong. It is good that they are taking ownership. Certainly, the passing of bills 27 and 34 from last session fundamentally changed the way our electricity market operated. Again, instability, unpredictability. In an industry where they have to invest millions and billions of dollars in their production, in their facilities, you know, they need strong words to ensure that they can remain competitive.

Right now electricity prices are more expensive for all Albertans. Quite honestly, there are not too many Albertans that have faith in this government, if you read the polls, that they can fix such things. You know, our general public looks at provinces like Ontario, and they see the debacle that occurred over there, and they see our government following the lead of the Wynne government. They see that association and that it hurts us all.

Closing six coal-fired plants early, which cost the taxpayer $1.3 billion, you know, was reckless and thoughtless. These were new facilities. They had long lifespans. They were creating energy in a reasonably efficient way. It's disappointing that they'd want to change them so dramatically.

The policies that this government has put up have driven up costs for all Albertans, whether it's the taxes on our bills, at the pumps, and pretty much everywhere else. Life has been more expensive for Albertans. Period. Thank you, government. Thank you for that. That's sarcasm if you haven't figured that out yet.

In closing, Madam Chair, this amendment would provide certainty to stakeholders in the electricity industry, who do not want the legal manoeuvring which would allow the Alberta Electric System Operator to skip out on commitments. This is a good amendment. This amendment is crucial in order to restore trust in this bill. So I urge all members of this House to vote in favour of this amendment and consider what this amendment is about. I see disinterest, but deep underneath perhaps they recognize that this is a fair amendment, because it is about building confidence in an industry that this government has absolutely ripped apart.

Again, Madam Chair, I plead with the government side to consider this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, I think this is a really fascinating amendment from the members opposite, from the opposition here. I just want to address the meat of the amendment, what meat there is anyways. I want to just point out that if we look at what it asks to do in section 2(a), all the words that they're using are actually already in the bill. They've actually just reordered those words. We're sitting here debating, basically, the grammar and the order in which we should have this bill, and I think that's sort of superfluous and maybe something that we don't necessarily have to look at in here. It changes the order of the words, and I don't know how that's a valuable use of the time in this Assembly.

The act clearly brings the capacity market under fair, efficient, and openly competitive requirements, or FEOC, and that's clear throughout the act. There's no need for this amendment. The government is committed to FEOC, and the bill reflects that. It's actually written into the bill throughout, in multiple places. So I'd urge all members: let's just get on with it. We'll vote this down, so we can continue doing the good work that Albertans expect us to do.

Thank you.

The Chair: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. You know, the FEOC principle of fair, efficient, and openly competitive is, obviously, a very important principle in the electricity market. It's troubling to me how it is that we managed to get ourselves to this point, where here we are, looking at Bill 13, which has to do with creating a capacity market and some other aspects. I appreciate that the government has amended out some of the asset retirement pieces. I know there was some concern from stakeholders and industry, so I appreciate them having done that. But if this amendment can improve what is a flawed concept in the first place, then I certainly would happily support this amendment.

I'm wondering and asking myself: well, how is it that we got here in the first place? It started off with a government that knew or ought to have known that changes they were making to the specified gas emitters regulation were going to trigger an existing contract provision in power purchase arrangements. That is something that you know or ought to have known. From that mistake, with every single opportunity they had to fix it, instead of fixing it, they doubled down on that decision. Unfortunately, that is because, I believe, this government went into this whole question with a political lens, an ideological lens, and said, you know: we believe certain things to be true, and there's no evidence on earth that's going to change our mind on what we think is true. And every single time information, evidence, data was presented to them that something was not as they believed it to be, it didn't matter. Off they went just hell-bent for leather, as they say.

So here we are. We continue down this uncertain path of this capacity market. It's not to say that capacity markets don't exist in other places. It's not to say that they haven't worked in other places. The question is: will they work in Alberta? The bigger question is: what problem does it seek to solve? The market was working. We had a situation in Alberta with the lowest electricity prices in North America, or certainly among them, and we also had a situation where coal-fired power producers were very much willing to work with the government to ramp down that production, to find ways of ramping up renewable energy.

So to say that the only possible way of bringing renewables on and ramping down coal-fired power in Alberta was the path that this government has chosen to put us on, the path that's going to cost at least $2 billion in taxpayer dollars – at least; probably more – is false. It is false that that is the only possible way of achieving that outcome. There were many, many other, better ways of doing it, ways that would not have created chaos in the regulatory piece of the electricity system: in the MSA and the AUC and the Balancing Pool and the AESO.

That whole ecosystem has been turned upside down by the changes that this government has brought in, by the hasty and ill-thought-out changes this government has brought in. It's created a leadership vacuum within those organizations. It's created infighting within those organizations. It's created lawsuits between power producers and the provincial government, lawsuits this government seems to be adept at losing, which cost millions of taxpayer dollars to Albertans, which caused the province to have to sign deals that perhaps are not necessarily in the best interest of Albertans or of taxpayers. As usual in these situations the only ones who benefit, the only ones who are enriched are the lawyers, and that does Albertans no good at all. I can assure you that there are many lawyers on the power producers side, on the energy companies side who'd much rather be doing other things than having to fight the government.

It really is a shame, because it didn't have to be this way. There were many, many other options this government could have chosen. There were options that were presented along the way that could have prevented all of this cost, $2 billion. Two billion dollars. How many ring roads is $2 billion? How many nurses? How many cancer centres? How many schools? How much debt repayment? That's a shocking amount of money.

I say without hesitation today, here and now, on the record that this is the single biggest scandal that this government has faced. It's unfortunate that it is such a complex, complicated area, that it is very difficult to make it understood to Albertans. It's very easy, frankly, for the government to throw around things like: "No, no. Enron clause. You see, it was Enron's fault." That simply isn't true. It is demonstrably untrue that there was some backroom deal, but politics dictated that they were able to use that to spin. But make no mistake. This whole file is by far the single greatest scandal that has befallen this government.

When the Alberta Party is in control, in a little less than a year's time, I can assure you that this is one area where we're going to do our utmost to unring the bell, to undo a lot of the damage that this government has done.

Speaking specifically to the amendment, to the degree to which it's possible that this amendment can improve a situation that is – I was going to say: an unfortunate situation. It's not even unfortunate; it's far worse than unfortunate. It's tragic. It doesn't need to be this way.

Again, to be very clear, the Alberta Party stands very much in favour of bringing on more renewable electricity, in diversifying our grid, in local options, in local microgeneration. You know, the Minister of Municipal Affairs knows how strongly I feel in favour of Bill 10. I think it's a good piece of legislation. There are options for bringing on more renewable electricity and ramping down coal-fired power to address the carbon emissions that come from coal-fired electricity, the other pollution that comes from coal-fired electricity. I think it's important that we move beyond coal-fired power in this province. I'm absolutely all in. Absolutely all in. Let's do that. But let's do it in a way that doesn't cost taxpayers $2 billion, that doesn't waste $2 billion. Let's find a way to ramp down coal-fired power, to ramp up renewable power, and let's do it in a steady and responsible way.

Unfortunately, this government has picked a very ideological path. I hope the House recognizes that I don't often accuse the government of gross ideological decision-making. That's not something I take lightly. But in this case the evidence tells us that that's exactly what has happened. There have been many, many opportunities for this government to take facts that have been presented to them and make a different decision, that would have the same or better outcomes. Unfortunately, they went in with a preconceived idea of what needed to happen based on incorrect, inaccurate information that was shaped entirely by the way they saw the world. It's unfortunate because that's not the way government ought to operate. There were so many other options, so many better options.

So if this amendment can take a tiny step towards improving that situation, I'm all in and will be supporting the amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak to this amendment put forward by my very good friend from Calgary-Foothills. There's so much that I want to say, but I need to address something, first and foremost, and that is in regard to the comments of the Member for Edmonton-South West. I just want to make sure and just be clear here that I understood this: that we're to get on with it, that the language that is in this amendment is superfluous and doesn't add value, isn't useful, and that it's fascinating, and that we're just changing grammar.

I'd like to point out a couple of things that are imperative in this discussion. Maybe – I don't know – I look at this slightly differently than the member, but “fair” and “efficient” are extremely, extremely directive words. Actually, the language, to be clear for the member, in the bill actually states that the capacity market is to have reliable and reasonable cost to consumers. In the legal department, just to be clear, it does not mean the same thing. Not even close. In fact, to go a little bit further, it says within the act that to make the FEOC not applicable to renewables places wind and potentially future renewable electricity program projects at risk. So for those of us who actually really like renewables and would like to see the market decide and like to see them come online, this is a completely unfair mechanism that has been put in this legislation by this government literally word for word.

This is not a grammatical change. This is not a language change. This is about actual transparency and fairness, Madam Chair, in this piece of legislation. This amendment actually could save the government a whole lot of trouble and would provide some trust in a bill that was created as a result of the debacle on the PPAs in the first place. If you don't care about proper legal language, if that's the issue here, fine. I'm so grateful that I am here today to see that the Member for Edmonton-South West states that this is superfluous. This is legal language, actually. There is a massive difference. With the extraordinary powers of the Minister of Energy and her ability to bring these pieces on without any debate in this House, I find it absolutely amazing and “fascinating,” to use his word, that that would be the issue here, that this is not important.

Well, I was just looking at Alberta's total capacity right now. We're at 16,390 megawatts right now. Guess how much of that is wind? Anybody? It's 1.8 per cent. One point eight per cent. This is the total capacity – this is coal; this is natural gas; it's everything – 1.8 per cent. Guess what? Any time that drops, guess who's on the hook for that? The taxpayer. To the member: under the new legislation that comes forth – I'm excited to see what his constituents say to him on August 1 when this comes to be. August 1 isn't that far away. I'm interested to see what his constituents say when the price of their electricity starts to spike. I'm interested to find out.

I asked the Minister of Energy in question period the other day about the industrial users in the farming areas. She answered with respect to residential. That's not what I was asking. I was actually asking about industrial capacity. There is no ability for industrial users to have any part of this capacity market. In fact, it's up to them to make sure that they go and fix their rates really quickly. Enmax is calling them, actually, which is what the government should be doing, to tell them that they should probably fix their rates really soon because they're going to spike. They don't get to fall under this smoke and mirror 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour.

Let's go to a couple of other things. If we look at the compensation numbers, $74,310,000 of the carbon tax has been set aside in order to compensate or subsidize for anything that happens with respect to electricity prices once they're capped at 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, until 2021, which isn't part of Bill 13. But if that retail rate exceeds that amount, the government has to use the carbon tax to subsidize that, that $74 million. I mean, we've said this before: why go after the retail market? That was not the part of this that needed help. There are lots and lots of pieces of the electricity market that could have certainly used some legislation. This was not one of them.

I mean, Bill 13 had to happen. The minute that the coal phase-out happened, the grid became unstable. Bill 13 had to happen, the capacity market had to happen in order to stabilize the grid. There was no other choice after Bill 27 was passed.

One thing I'd love to be able to find out from the government: why are you risking your own program? Madam Chair, they're risking their own program. The AESO themselves had showed that the renewable electricity program will decrease revenue needed for all generators to recoup their investment and earn a profit, thus deterring investment. That is from the AESO.

Again to the Member for Edmonton-South West: how can this be an issue of superfluous language? How is that possible? This isn't about language or grammar. This is legal language that holds the government accountable for their transparency to Albertans in a market that they have completely altered, Madam Chair. How is that possible? Honestly, I'm so glad that it's on the record that this amendment is not useful, that it lacks value, that we should just get on with it. Interesting. That is fascinating. Like I said, I just have so much to say. I just don't even know where to start sometimes.

I wanted to talk, too, about the piece of this where it says, in the capacity market, that Bill 13 is not about renewables per se; it's about financing coal-to-gas conversions, new natural gas generation, combined-cycle, and backup for renewables. So in that, that piece of information right there, is the fix that had to happen as a result of Bill 27. That's what Bill 13 does.

In amongst that, with all of that complexity and all of those variations that are coming online right now, comes the need to make sure that that is transparently transferred to all Albertans. Right now on your bill, you might not be happy with what you're paying, but you know exactly what it is. You know your rate rider, you know what you're paying in taxes, you know what you're paying to providers, all of those different things, on the 120 kilowatt hours per year that the average family uses. We might not be particularly happy about what we're paying, but we know – we know – every single piece of how that works out.

Under that, we will not. This is a massive boondoggle. Like I said, if you – on August 1, with the regulations coming in by the end of 2018, it's going to be interesting to see how Albertans react to the cost of living in this province under this government in this particular market that they've put forward. We're already getting feedback on this side.

Like I had said to the minister earlier this week in question period: what about the industrial farmers? What about them? There is nothing for them in this electricity bill anywhere to protect them from spiking costs in their industries. They're already having to pay extra with the carbon tax. They have to feed cattle. They have to bring water. There's so much that's involved with making sure that our farmers, that feed us, are able to do those things, and they're already paying extra. On top of that, they're not protected in this bill or any other bill for what they pay in the industrial market.

On top of that, the government hasn't even had the foresight to make sure that they reach out to our farming communities and say to them: "You know what? We're going to be on an upswing, this is going to be all over the place. We're going to be fluctuating. You should get into a fixed market." The minister had mentioned something about there being some educational pieces going out. Really? Well, the farmer who I spoke to last week had no clue. Enmax called him. Enmax called him.

I'd love for you to take a poll in this House, especially on this side with our farming communities, to find out how many of them have had a letter from the government saying: "Uh-oh. We should probably take care of this. You should probably get on a fixed rate." In fact, I believe I've heard from the government many times that part of the issue is that people were confused by fixed rates and floating rates, that it was difficult, and that the government was going to try to make it easy for them – that's interesting; by charging them more, of course – but then on top of that you've left out a major portion of our population, our wonderful farmers, who are stuck with industrial prices on electricity. That's just one group of people. There are many, many other industries. I'm just talking about the farmers because that was one person that I spoke to.

It opens up an entire other group of people that are impacted by fluctuating electricity prices, and obviously the government has no clue to care about these people or at least to educate them on how to make sure that they're saving money and can efficiently go forward with their companies. Already every single business in this province will become less competitive simply because of more money that they're having to pay in carbon taxes and other things in order to maintain and be able to sustain their businesses. Adding in this piece, of not being part of some sort of capacity market to be protected like supposedly they're protecting the rest of Albertans, is thoughtless to say the least.

I mean, I will repeat this again. The AESO modelling showed that the renewable electricity program will decrease revenue needed for all generators to recoup investment and to earn a profit, thus deterring investment. Bill 13 had to come to fruition in order to separate the capacity market and electricity, and in doing so, has blatantly attacked industry, straight up. In doing so, in separating that, the smoke and mirrors of protecting everyday Albertans under 6.8 cents will blow up in the industry. There is no protection for industry, the fabric of this province, especially farmers.

This amendment gives an opportunity for the government to look inwardly and say: did we use the right language? Is this of value? Is this important? Do we force this through at a massive speed, something that is going to happen in under two years, that should have taken at least three to six years for the industry to be able to prepare for it?

Are we actually going to sit here and talk about the fact that language is not important? Really? How disappointing. How disappointing. Fair and efficient: I would think that that should be at the very top of the list of things that would be necessary for this government to prove to Albertans that this is the right thing to do.

You know, Albertans are totally into renewable energy. They love the idea. Absolutely. But there is a mechanism to be able to inspire people, to be able to bring these things online. One of those things is making sure that the market is able to decide. This is a false market. It's being subsidized, and it's being subsidized in every way possible. At 1.8 per cent of capacity for wind, wind gets paid out at one hundred per cent by the taxpayer regardless of whether it's producing or not. How is that fair to the taxpayer and the ratepayer in any capacity?

Madam Chair, maybe that's why the words "fair and efficient" were removed from this legislation specifically with regard to renewables. Maybe that's why. If you use the words "reliable and reasonable," I'm not quite sure what that means, reliable and reasonable cost to consumers. Fair and efficient: very clear.

Interestingly enough, the capacity market is not necessarily being applied in tandem. So how is it that we reconcile this for Albertans? To echo the language from the Member for Calgary-Elbow, this is the biggest mistake that this government has made. On top of that, they just keep doubling down on their decisions and keep coming up with new legislation to try and fix the mistakes of all of the other legislation that came before.

It's interesting. When you're out and about and you're chatting with people, I don't think that many people talked about PPAs before, power purchase agreements. It kind of seems boring. It is a major topic of conversation with about probably 60 to 70 per cent of the people that I meet with. I'm not kidding. Maybe it's because I talk about it all the time. I find this, for lack of a better word, to use the language of the Member for Edmonton-South West, fascinating. I find this absolutely fascinating, to be able to discuss with everyday Albertans what is happening in this House with regard to electricity. Fascinating.

I find it interesting when we sit down and we talk about and crunch the numbers of what it looks like right now and what it could look like and what's possible. The most interesting piece of this is that we don't really know how much this is going to cost us. We know about the $2 billion in stranded assets, we know about the payments to the Balancing Pool in order to keep them running, we know about some of the generators that are coming online with wind and solar, but we have no idea how much this is actually going to cost taxpayers.

To bring up, we were talking about Ontario a little earlier. Do we really want to get to the point of heat or eat? Right? Is that what this government wants? I doubt that. I don't think that that's the intention. But the taxpayer, Madam Chair, is going to be on the hook for millions, possibly billions of dollars. Is the government proud of subsidizing electricity in a province that was – we were debt free with our utilities. Debt free. Is that something that this government is proud of? I mean, the timeline for this is just crazy.

I don't know. Again, I remember when we were going through Bill 27, and the words "accountability" and, I think it was, "transparency" were removed from the legislation. That was a real eye-opener as a new MLA at that time. You know, you spend a lot of time as an everyday Albertan hoping and praying that that's what your government does for you, and then you see language like that removed from legislation. Now we're seeing "fair and efficient" removed, and supposedly it's just useless language. I can hardly wait to tell my constituents that the government thinks that the words "fair and efficient" are useless language, that the Member for Edmonton-South West thinks that it is useless language, it has no value, and we should just get on with it. I can't wait.

Did you know that zero power is produced at the solar place in Brooks. Zero power is produced 64 per cent of the time. Zero power is produced 64 per cent of the time. I don't know. I would call that unstable, maybe, but that's obviously not important for fairness and efficiency. That can be covered under reliable and reasonable. I don't know how zero power produced 64 per cent of the time can be – is that reliable or reasonable? And that's the language that this falls under. Isn't that interesting? How is that possible?

Mr. Strankman: It stretches the imagination.

Mrs. Aheer: It does stretch the imagination.

Then to not have the FEOC language applicable to renewables? The government, they're putting their own program at risk to fail. You're setting up Albertans to fail. This amendment puts trust back into this whole thing so that the minister can go to the people and say: "Yeah. We're fair, we're efficient, and we're openly competitive. Yes. I'm going to do that." That would be an amazing day to hear the minister stand up and say that, but that's not her language.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Yeah, I'd like to speak to this amendment. I enjoyed the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View's comments here on the language. I mean, this government continues to champion itself as being fair and open and transparent and all these different things. But time and time again we see the opposite happening, and when we provide them an opportunity to be more fair and efficient and transparent, then they – I don't know – don't take advantage of those opportunities anyways.

That leads us to situations where we're sitting here again trying to make an amendment to add in a phrase. Listen to this phrase: "that the capacity market is fair, efficient and openly competitive and is not distorted by unfair advantages of government-owned participants or any other participants." Now, Madam Chair, I just can't understand what anybody could find wrong with the phrase "that the capacity market is fair, efficient and openly competitive and is not distorted by unfair advantages of government-owned participants or any other participants." It just doesn't stand to reason why this government would not accept an amendment that, clearly, just makes things better, more open, more transparent, better for Albertans. These are very simple things.

I mean, this government has obviously totally messed up this electricity market with all the manipulating they've done, with all the bills they've passed to change the system around. They pass one bill, and then they pass two or three more bills to fix the damage from the first bill. They're continually doing patchwork to fix the problems that they've created. Madam Chair, that's exactly it. They've created these problems. Were there some changes needed? For sure. There are always changes needed. There are always ways to make things a little better. But when you take something and you come up with ideological ideas that substantially change things and that drive the cost of electricity up and make the system less stable, then you spend more time and energy trying to solve the problems that you've created yourself.

Madam Chair, we sit here again with an amendment that is very simple, that's very straightforward, that's very acceptable. I can't imagine anybody, any Albertan, looking at this and suggesting that there's anything wrong with an amendment like this. I really just can't see it. But I'm going to presume that the government is going to vote against this, I guess, because it wasn't their idea. I'm not sure why. It's very simple: fair, efficient, and openly competitive.

Now, we've heard today here, you know, what's happened in Ontario and how the cost of electricity under the Liberal government there has skyrocketed and how much trouble it's caused and how much damage it's caused to the Ontario economy. Recently we've heard that even the Liberal Premier has said that one of her greatest regrets in her time in power was the problem that she created with electricity in Ontario, with the cost and everything being driven up so high. There's somebody that's had a chance to reflect on the damages, created by government, to the electricity market, to an economy and that now regrets it.

But we sit here in this Legislature, and this government keeps going down the same road. Now, they say: well, we're totally different here. I mean, they say: okay; we're going to have a competitive market, so it's totally different than Ontario. But, Madam Chair, that's not completely true. We've seen this government go through the same things that the Ontario government has gone through.

Again we have an amendment here where we're suggesting that the phrase "openly competitive" be in this bill. Openly competitive. This government claims that this is a competitive process, the things that they're doing with electricity here, so we're giving them an opportunity to put it in writing, put it right in the bill, and they're going to vote this down. Madam Chair, it doesn't make sense that we're where we're at right now, discussing something that's so simple.

The second part of this amendment is the phrase: "supports the fair, efficient and openly competitive operation of the capacity market." Madam Chair, another opportunity here: "fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market."

Again, we sit here in this Legislature. We talk all the time. I mean, the government claims that they're the most transparent government ever, but over and over again we see this government hiding things and we see this government refusing to be transparent. We give them opportunities. We talk about Government Motion 16, where we gave them the opportunity to be transparent with the Election Commissioner, and what do they do? They argue about it, they stop the debate, and then they vote it down. Here we are almost a month later, and what are they doing? Well, they're admitting that they have to do something different to bring about some transparency. But when we provide them an opportunity to take it one step farther, what do they do? They don't accept it. Madam Chair, I mean, we're seeing this over and over again.

This amendment is a great amendment. We need to be able to have these things. This capacity market needs to be fair, efficient, and openly competitive. Again, this government has brought so many changes to the electricity market, changing things substantially in just about every part of the electricity market with multiple bills that they've brought before this Legislature, and what do we have? We're sitting here again. We're, you know, discussing more electricity bills where this government is continuing to try to fix the mistakes that they made in the past.

We know that prices are going up because of this government, how they've handled the electricity market. They put a cap on electricity rates that was double the existing rates. Obviously, they had to put the caps in because they knew the prices were going up because of what they'd done, so they had to put a cap in. Of course, what happens with a cap? Well, somebody has got to pay for that, Madam Chair. The electricity companies just don't quit charging at a certain rate and then lose money and go bankrupt. Somebody has to pay for that. Obviously, there's only one person to pay for electricity in Alberta, and that's Albertans. There's only one taxpayer, and that's Albertans. It doesn't matter if the electricity bill is where you pay it or the tax bill is where you pay it; it's still the same person paying for that electricity. When you drive the prices up, the same person pays, whether it's subsidized from a tax end or it's paid through the electricity bill.

Now, another thing this government has done is that, you know, they've tried to do the same thing, I guess – I mentioned before this morning that they tried driving the round peg into the square hole, and they just keep pounding away at it to see if they can get it to fit. Well, Madam Chair, it's not going to fit. You can't force these things to happen. There are ways to encourage people to do renewables and everything, but you can't force it. To listen to this government, you'd think that we'd never had wind power in Alberta. You'd think that nobody ever had a solar panel. I have solar panels. The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View has solar panels.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Turner: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 18. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 13. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

Cortes-Vargas: Seeing the progress that we've had this morning, I move to adjourn the House and come back at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 31, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Statements by the Speaker

Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms' Retirement

The Speaker: I have a couple of announcements I would like to make before we commence our usual business today. I would request that the Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms please join me up here at the dais, if you might.

As many of you are probably already aware, one of our Assistant Sergeants-at-Arms, Gareth Scott, will be retiring following the end of this session, and he's hoping that might be very soon. Prior to his service with the Assembly, Gareth served for 25 years with the Edmonton Police Service after emigrating from London, England, in 1985. While serving in the Edmonton Police Service, he worked in a number of areas, including the patrol/response division, as a school resource officer at Bonnie Doon high, as well as serving with the tactical team from 2001 to 2007, where he specialized in executive protection of notable individuals, including three Prime Ministers and Her Majesty the Queen during her visit in 2005.

Following his retirement from the EPS, Gareth joined the Legislative Assembly security service in March 2013 and was appointed Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms in August 2016. Gareth's tireless efforts and dedication to the Assembly have been evident to all, and he as well as his colourful sense of humour will be missed.

I will personally look back fondly on the three outreach trips on which he accompanied me throughout the province as the protector of our Mace. I will particularly remember – and I know that it was with him as well – that our Mace was smudged. It was quite an event for the two of us.

Following the end of session, Gareth and his wife, Heike, are off to Qualicum Beach on Vancouver Island to start enjoying a new phase of their life. I want the members to know that I have advised him that he should consider getting a B.C. licence plate before he departs.

On behalf of all members of this Assembly and all of the Legislative Assembly Office staff I would like to express my appreciation for your committed service to this House and wish you all the best in your retirement.

I would also now invite our Deputy Speaker to present Gareth with a small token of our appreciation. [Standing ovation]

Flag of Alberta 50th Anniversary

The Speaker: Hon. members, I do also have another announcement I'd like to say today. I want to take this opportunity to make a statement to recognize that tomorrow, June 1, will be the 50th anniversary of the provincial flag of Alberta, which was adopted by this Legislature in 1968. After much debate about whether Alberta should have its own flag in the years leading up to Canada's centennial, a banner was commissioned in 1967.

The following year the flag act was passed by the Alberta Legislature, making the banner our province's official flag, which according to the legislation may be used by citizens of the province and others in a manner befitting its dignity and importance, but no other banner or flag that includes the Alberta arms may be assumed or used.

The Alberta flag shows the provincial shield of Alberta on a blue background. The shield features azure in a range of snow-capped mountains with green hills, prairie, and a wheat field in front, capturing – and I know you'll all agree with me on this – the natural beauty of our province with one of our provincial symbols.

I think they did a pretty good job. You will find on your desks a lapel pin to commemorate this occasion.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you. M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire immersion grade 6 students from beautiful Landing Trail intermediate school. Les étudiants sont accompagnés par leurs enseignantes, Mme Jennifer Jones et Mme Janet Kamelchuk, ainsi que par leur chaperon, Mme Dawn Safar. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a remarkable group of grade 6 students from the town of Vauxhall, which resides in the southeast corner of the Little Bow riding. I had the privilege of meeting with this impressive group of young minds, their teacher, and the chaperones that accompanied the group while we were getting our picture taken out on the steps that lead to the Chamber. They completed the mock Legislature this morning, and two gentlemen got to wear the chapeau, or hat, that you generally wear into the Assembly. I'm not sure what you call it, sir. I'm sorry about that.

They're looking forward to watching part of our question period today, and then they're on their way back home. They are behind me in the members' gallery. As I say your name, I ask that you would please rise, and please forgive my pronunciations in advance: Mrs. Leslie Wolowidnyk-Vogel, teacher; Mr. Dale Cummings, the principal; Mr. Matt Hawke, teacher; along with chaperones Mr. Kerby Redekop, Mrs. Lori Van Hal, Mrs. Annie Klassen, Dr. Sara Klassen, Mrs. Betty Wall, Mrs. Eva Bergen, Mr. Daniel Loewen, Mr. Curtis Cawley, Mr. Jaarno van der Wielen, and Mrs. Emmie Rijkens. I ask that the class now please rise as well and that you all receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe I have two school groups here today. The first is from Edmonton-Glenora – actually, my apologies; a couple of sheets here. They're from Aurora charter school, which is also in Edmonton-Glenora. Part of their class was here yesterday, and the remainder is here today. This is a group of smart, hard-working students who taught me a little bit about the solar panels on the roof of their school when I was there for a visit last year. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Duncan Charlton, and chaperones Mrs. Senait and Mrs. Saba. I ask that they along with the students please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Was there a second introduction? No.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce today the second half of my group from my constituency from Ridgeview central school in La Crête. I had the honour of spending some time with both of these groups this week, and I can share with the Assembly that these kids are brilliant. They also have wonderful teachers, amazingly supportive parents, and a really strong community, so I know that together these kids are going to do some fabulous things in the future. I'm going to first of all introduce their teacher, Mr. Fred Kirby, and the parent chaperones who've come along: Mr. Ernie Wall, Mr. Herman Doerksen, Mr. Glenn Peters, Mr. George Neustaeter, Mrs. Katherine Martens, Mrs. Vanessa Wiebe, Mrs. Barb Martens, and Mr. Jake Janzen. I'd like them all to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I'm told, hon. members, that we do have a number of introductions today, so let us all be conscious of the time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For several years the Legislative Assembly has supported the Edmonton Regional Heritage Fair, which provides an opportunity for students in Edmonton and the surrounding area to research and present projects celebrating Canada's heritage. The Legislative Assembly Office recognizes one outstanding presentation that significantly relates to history, politics, or governance. It is my pleasure to introduce this year's award winners: Raqiya Kulmie, Yasmin Irobe, and Hayat Ali, grade 7 students at Londonderry junior high school. Their presentation, entitled Black Female Freedom Fighters, was well researched and delivered in a clear and captivating manner. While Hayat is not able to join them today, Raqiya and Yasmin join us with their teacher, Colleen Fraser; their mothers, Keyf Farah and Nadifa Omar; and Yasmin's older sister, Asha. They are seated in your gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have three introductions today. It's my pleasure first to rise and introduce to you and through you a number of friends and leaders from Alberta's business and industry community. Tomorrow, June 1, new occupational health and safety regulations come into effect, and on Monday these guests stood with me as leaders to show how together we can make sure all of Alberta's workplaces are safe for all. Thank you to my guests for coming today, sharing your story with us and the media, and leading by example. I'd ask you to please rise as I say your name: the project manager for Key-May, Tara Chahl; the safety manager for Key-May, Jeff Prodahl; the owner of the Empress Ale House, Sue Kiernan; and the Empress manager, Thea Bowering. I'd like to now give you the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, it is also my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House members of the Public Works Association, Alberta chapter. Last week I met with Patty Podoborozny here in the Legislature to declare May 20 to 26 National Public Works Week. This declaration recognizes the important work of the APWA. Thank you to the APWA for all you do, and congratulations on your well-deserved declaration. Please stand as I say your name to receive the warm welcome of the House: President Peter McDowell, Past-president Patty Podoborozny, Executive Director Jeannette Austin, and directors Mike Haanen, Joe Guido, and Risha Rushton.

Mr. Speaker, finally, it is my honour to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the members of the Assembly Maya Azocar, who attends kindergarten at John Paul I in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. Maya likes cats, her favourite superhero is Wonder Woman, she loves Rachel Notley, and she told me her favourite word is "feminist." I ask that she please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the entire Assembly Mr. Umang Taneja, a teacher from India who is visiting our fine province. Being from India, he's visiting Alberta and connecting with the local Indian Canadian community. Accompanying him today is my good friend Mr. Jarnail Basota, anchor of Focus Punjabi on OMNI Television as well as a host of Radio South Asia. Also joining Mr. Basota are local community members Navjeen Kaberwal, Akash Sharma, Kanwaljeet Dhillon, and another very good friend of mine, Jagdish Nischal. I ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I have two introductions today. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Thomas Greenlaw, operations warrant officer with the 3rd Canadian Division Training Centre in Edmonton. Thomas joined the Canadian Armed Forces in 1990. He has served on seven operational tours overseas, including two tours in Afghanistan. In Canada he has served on domestic operations such as the Manitoba flood of the century, the Quebec ice storm, and the Vancouver Olympic Games. Currently he is responsible for organizing training requirements and assets for courses that the training centre conducts. Thomas and his wife, Lisa, and their three children are proud to call Edmonton-Decore home, and I'm pleased that he could be here today to see how the political process works here in Alberta. I ask that he now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Nielsen: Also, Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very special superheroes that I will be speaking more about in my member's statement. Please rise and remain standing as I call your name: from Edmonton fire rescue, Cole Chapelsky, Kyle Wilkinson, Brian Wilfert; from Dickinsfield Amity House, Tracy Patience, Ursula Jayasuriya, Michelle Yang, and Kaiden Kalynchuck. Also joining them today is my daughter Marissa. I would ask that they now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members a couple of constituents of mine who have been advocating for angel cradles – I'll be presenting a petition that they provided me later today in the Assembly; this is in light of the recent incident that happened in Bowness just last Christmas Eve – Jaden Barager, who was the valedictorian at St. Mary's University this year, and Trisha McIntosh, who is a mother of four and a strong advocate for her community. Trisha is accompanied by her father, Gary McIntosh. I'd ask that they rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce a number of paramedics from across the province as we celebrate Paramedic Services Week. They are seated in the members' gallery. I want them and all members to know that we are so proud of the work that paramedics and all EMS professionals do every day providing high-quality, life-saving care to Albertans. I ask that they rise as I say their names: Nate, Tia, Thomas, Crystal, April, Kenton, Todd, Keegan, Adrienne, Melanie, Patrick, Carey, and Debbie. If I missed any others, please join them in rising and receiving our warm welcome to this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: I also have the pleasure of introducing members who are here today from the Canadian Liver Foundation, Alberta chapter, who are also seated in the members' gallery. They work to improve the quality of life for those living with liver disease through education, patient support, life-saving research, and public awareness. Thank you for your advocacy and partnership. I now invite Tracy Patience, who is the president, as well as Georgina Macintyre, Deb Troppmann, and Tyler Wiebe to please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Mike Janeczko and his daughter Ali. Mike is a long-time family friend and supporter of the New Democratic Party. For many years he served as the president and secretary-treasurer of the West Yellowhead NDP riding association. I want to take this opportunity to thank him for his support and his hard work over the years. I really appreciate it. I ask Mike and his daughter – they're standing already – to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Any other introductions, hon. members? The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a bit of a surprise to me, but I spy with my little eye in the gallery a good friend of mine who has made the long trip from Alberta's most humble constituency, Edmonton-Gold Bar, to visit us today, Ms Jennifer Klimek. Jennifer has been a long-time friend and supporter, and I'm very glad to see her in the gallery this afternoon. If I could ask my hon. colleagues to give her the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:50

The Speaker: Welcome.

Point of Order

The Speaker: Hon. members, if the table would hold the clock, I would like to now give a ruling on the matter that was in the House yesterday during Oral Question Period. The Government House Leader raised a point of order relating to comments made by the Leader of the Official Opposition. This exchange can be found on page 1344 of yesterday's Hansard. In the questions giving rise to the point of order, the Leader of the Official Opposition raised concerns regarding an employee of the offices of the Minister of Energy and the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance and that employee's work outside of the province and separate from his duties in those offices. The Leader of the Official Opposition asked whether the individual had engaged in lobbying of cabinet ministers.

The Government House Leader argued that these questions were an attempt to "smear an individual whose contract is public" and further stated that they violated the rule found on page 622 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, which provides that "Members are discouraged from referring by name to persons who are not Members of Parliament and who do not enjoy parliamentary immunity, except in extraordinary circumstances when the national interest calls for this."

On November 17, 2011, at page 3224 of the House of Commons Debates the then Speaker cited this same passage from House of Commons Procedure and Practice and noted that he was cognizant both of this fundamental principle as well as the fact that there is no rule that prohibits mentioning individuals by name in the House.

On June 25, 2015, at page 288 of Hansard for that day I made a ruling concerning a point of order also raised on the topic of reflections on nonmembers. While recognizing the freedom of speech that all members enjoy in the Assembly, I also commented that in exercising this privilege, members must be responsible for their remarks and bear in mind that they reflect on the institution as a whole. In that ruling I did not find a point of order but did question whether the topic raised at the time was truly a matter relating to the government's actions or policies.

In this circumstance I find that the questions were more closely related to the activities of the government. While maybe unnecessary I do not find that the comments relating to a person outside the Assembly do in this case give rise to a point of order. However, as I did on June 25, 2015, I would encourage all members to tread carefully when making comments about individuals outside the Assembly and to recall that any allegations or assertions made in relation to those individuals will form a part of the public record without an opportunity for the individual to respond. As Speaker Fraser of the House of Commons ruled on May 5, 1987, the freedom of speech that members of the House enjoy is "awesome and far-reaching . . . Such a privilege confers grave responsibilities on those who are protected by it."

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two days ago Kinder Morgan walked away and cashed out at the expense of taxpayers from the Kinder Morgan pipeline because the uncertainty that has been created on that project in B.C. made it too risky for their investors. They have now transferred that risk, essentially, to the taxpayers of this country and of this province. That means that the taxpayers of Canada and Alberta are now ultimately on the hook for that same uncertainty that Kinder Morgan was facing. What is being done right now to be able to actually address that uncertainty that is still facing this project?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we pushed to secure a pipeline to Canadian tidewater, the first since 1953. For the children in the gallery, that's the same time the first colour TV went on sale, the same time the first climbers reached the summit of Mount Everest. It's been far too long, 65 years, and the Conservatives were in power for 44 of those. They didn't get the job done, but because our Premier did, 15,000 people will be able to pick up their tools and get to work on this pipeline. We will never stop fighting for the hard-working people of this province.

Mr. Nixon: The rhetoric of the Deputy Premier, while interesting and sometimes amusing to watch, is not helpful to the taxpayers of this country and this province, who are now ultimately responsible for the same risk that just a few short days ago Kinder Morgan's shareholders were responsible for. We all want this pipeline built. The question now is this. Alberta taxpayers, Canadian taxpayers are now the ones who have that risk. What is being done to deal with the uncertainty that is being created by B.C., who is illegally blocking this pipeline, and the environmental activists that are standing with them?

Ms Hoffman: On Tuesday the opposition leader had one position; he supported the pipeline and congratulated the Premier on the deal that she got for the people of this province. On Wednesday not so much. On Thursday, well, I guess we can see where this hon. member is standing on this issue. Mr. Speaker, one day they support the pipeline deal; the next day they don't. Perhaps they should start making up their own mind. Instead of looking to Ottawa for leadership, look at Alberta. We've seen it. One order of government can't sue another order of government. This pipeline is moving forward. That's why we're so proud of our Premier and the fact that she got real results for the people of Alberta.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, this side of the House and the Leader of the Opposition certainly support the Kinder Morgan pipeline, the Trans Mountain pipeline. We want it built. That's not the question that is being discussed. We're not discussing the details of the deal though I know that the Deputy Premier wants us to ask it. We're asking what her government is doing to deal with the uncertainty that was so significant that private investors walked away from this pipeline. This pipeline is now the responsibility of taxpayers, so what are you doing to clear up that uncertainty? At this point it looks like you're doing absolutely nothing on that file except for standing up and grandstanding. What are you doing?

Ms Hoffman: What we're doing is getting real results, Mr. Speaker. That's exactly what happened on Tuesday, when we got this project secured, the investment on behalf of the people of Canada. I know that the member opposite was fine with investing $9 billion in the Ontario auto industry. This is an investment in the people of Alberta. Again, the federal government has taken ownership of this project. The provincial government can't sue the federal government. This project is going to move forward. This pipeline will get our product to tidewater for the first time in many, many years. This is good news for Alberta. Certainly, talking about risks when we've been able to address those isn't helpful.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Physicians' Disciplinary Policies

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are outraged that the College of Physicians & Surgeons has failed to revoke a doctor's licence after he was convicted of sexually assaulting a patient and a nurse. When the situation was called to the minister's attention, she responded by saying that she would look at the legislation to provide the college with more teeth. Section 82(1)(iv) of the Health Professions Act, however, does give the college the ability to revoke Dr. Taher's licence. Minister, you could have simply used your authority to direct the college to review Dr. Taher's case. Why didn't you do that?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the member is asking the question. Certainly, as a woman and as a concerned citizen I want to ensure that every single Albertan can go to their doctor's office with confidence that they are in safe hands. That's why we reached out immediately to the college. That's why we've looked at the legislation we have here in Alberta. While I appreciate her reading of it, the lawyers who are deeply connected to this case are working with us to make sure that we can update legislation to ensure that we can protect every single person, that we can expand the notification periods and so forth. I appreciate your advice, but we do need to work with the professionals to make sure that we get this right.

Mrs. Aheer: This isn't advice. These are actual pieces that exist already.

The college has announced that it actually will now look at stricter sanctions, including revoking a medical licence when a doctor is convicted of a sexual offence. The new principle of "no tolerance" amounts to an admission that the college was not dealing appropriately with sexual abuse. Minister, why was this oversight on this self-regulated body so lacking that you did not know that it was handling sexual assault in such a dismissive manner?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the articulation of this situation doesn't reflect the reality. The college takes this matter very seriously. They are working within the confines of the current legislation. We are also working with them to ensure that we can have legislation that reflects the values and the practices that all Albertans should be able to experience, which is having full confidence that when they go as a patient or as another staff member to any health care provider, they have the assurance that they aren't dealing with somebody who has a history of assault. We're working with the college to ensure that that's the case, and we certainly appreciate the member's passion on this issue.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a reality here. There is a doctor who is a sexual predator who can continue to see patients. That is the reality. The act actually allows the minister to give direction to the college in matters of public interest. In this case it would be public trust. To the minister. You are responsible for upholding the trust for the bodies that function under your ministry, and leading by example is imperative. What are you going to do to ensure that no patient is ever subjected to this type of abuse ever again?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, there was certainly an incident, and there was a decision that was made through the courts on that matter. The college today doesn't believe they have the right tools with regard to this one specific case. That's why we need to pick up tools, including those from other jurisdictions, to help us ensure that the college has the proper conditions to be able to remove licences as quickly as possible should they feel that that's in the public interest. We take our responsibility very seriously, and we look forward to being able to present something to this House that will be able to help us give them the proper tools.

Premier's Former Chief of Staff's Consulting Contract

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, this government has continued to double down on their secretive dealings with former chief of staff John Heaney. Let's quickly review the facts. August 31 the Premier announces that Mr. Heaney will be resigning as the chief of staff on October 6. October 9, three days later, Mr. Heaney is immediately retitled as the executive adviser to the Minister of Finance. January 2018 Mr. Heaney registers as a lobbyist in B.C. On February 7 the Premier's office signs off on a lobbying exemption. To the Premier: do you not see a problem that the exemption was granted after he began lobbying?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government consulted the Ethics Commissioner as we transitioned Mr. Heaney from chief of staff to an executive adviser. He played an integral role in the pipeline that we secured last week, a deal that will put 15,000 people to work and will generate $15 billion for our national economy. This is the first pipeline to tidewater in 65 years. That side had 44 years to do it; they couldn't. I think Mr. Heaney worked well with us.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, we're talking about this government's ethics, not pipelines. This week they continued to refuse to come clean to Albertans about their secretive dealings with the former chief of staff to the Premier. Mr. Heaney left the office on Friday to return to B.C. and was immediately retitled on Monday. He then registered as a pot lobbyist a full month before he was issued an exemption from the Premier's office, was enabled to lobby one government while being employed by another. To the Premier: on what date did you first become aware of this glaring conflict of interest?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I've already said that we consulted the Ethics Commissioner with regard to the transitioning of Mr. Heaney from the Premier's chief of staff to the executive adviser. There was some discussion about how best to structure that contract based on the advice from the Ethics Commissioner, and we wanted to make sure we took the time to get it right. Once it was signed, it immediately went up online. Mr. Heaney is on contract with the government of Alberta. As such, he's not permitted to lobby government or employees of Alberta.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, there are many misfacts in that answer. The contract did not go up online immediately because your office confirmed that it went online in May. At every turn this government is scrambling. Yesterday they finally admitted that it was the Premier's chief of staff that issued the exemption and not the Ethics Commissioner. The question is simple. To the minister: is it acceptable for your closest advisers to act first and then ask or receive or grant themselves permission later?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I've already said that the Ethics Commissioner was consulted with regard to the exemption, and when it was signed, the contract went up online immediately. We're doing the things that we need to do to be clear about this. Mr. Heaney has played an integral role in getting that pipeline secured. Fifteen thousand jobs, $15 billion for the economy: we think that's good value for Mr. Heaney's time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, Tuesday's announcement that the federal government will purchase the Kinder Morgan pipeline had the NDP celebrating – we saw them trot out dozens of staffers to stand triumphantly behind the Premier – but Tuesday was just one step on a very, very long road. The NDP should be careful about taking a victory lap too early. There are so many unanswered questions about this project, and I'm going to ask some of them right now. Now that Alberta is investing in a pipeline, what will you do to win over B.C. and those who will use any means to block this pipeline?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I do want to say very clearly that we absolutely believe it's good news that this project is moving forward. Construction is beginning within days, and that is certainly very good news for the 15,000 people who are going to be working on this pipeline, 15,000 men and women who are going to be literally building this pipeline, the first one to tidewater in over 50 years. This is good news, and there is reason to celebrate the construction moving forward. Of course, we will not let down our pressure on B.C. We continue to have public awareness campaigns there, and we continue to reserve the right to use Bill 12 should we need it.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I very much want to see that pipeline built, but that $2 billion investment is still very much shrouded in mystery. We don't know under what unforeseen conditions this money will be triggered, we don't know if the investment will be transparent, and, most importantly, we don't know if any Alberta taxpayer dollars will go directly to the B.C. government as part of their revenue-sharing agreement. These are the sorts of questions that would be answered by a fairness opinion prepared by neutral financial experts, which happens to be exactly what Kinder Morgan and the federal government have done. To the Premier: will you ask the Auditor General to prepare a fairness assessment so the people of Alberta know exactly what we might be getting ourselves into?

Ms Hoffman: Well, let me clarify right here. What we do know is that no money will be invested by the people of Alberta until the project is complete, Mr. Speaker. When money is invested, it will be an investment. There will be the opportunity for equity to be returned to the people of Alberta. In the meantime we have 15,000 people hard at work, having jobs, ensuring that when that pipeline is completed and we do get our product to tidewater, we can get the very best price on the international market. This is a win-win-win, and we certainly are proud of the success our Premier has seen with regard to this pipeline.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, it seems that the plan is for the federal government to get this project through the uncertainty caused by the multiple lawsuits Kinder Morgan is facing and then sell it back to private investors. Now, that creates an opportunity to include some of the growing number of indigenous businesses in this project. To the Premier: what specifically will you do to push for indigenous participation in the ultimate end result of this project, and will you make any investment that Alberta would make conditional on ensuring indigenous participation going forward?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again for the question. This is a project that's in the national interest. To no surprise, there are many indigenous communities and leaders who want to be a part of that project as well, and we certainly are excited about that opportunity. The Minister of Energy from Alberta has definitely been in conversations with the ministry of energy for Canada around that very aspect. This is good news for the indigenous people of this country. The Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain project is one of those critical components to ensure that Alberta and Canada remain competitive in getting their products to market. We thank the Premier for her courage on this project, and so does Gale Katchur, the chief of Alberta's Industrial Heartland.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Workplace Safety Legislation

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, only a few weeks ago there was a gas-and-dash incident resulting in a car accident at Ghost station, just west of Cochrane. These situations can too easily become dangerous for workers and innocent bystanders, which is why we passed legislation last fall to keep them safe. To the Minister of Labour: given that this act comes into force tomorrow, can you please provide the House with an update on these changes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to my colleague for the question. I'm very pleased to say that I was at a Husky gas station this morning, reminding Albertans that as of tomorrow, June 1, there will be prepaying for fuel and it will be mandatory. At that announcement, Edmonton Police Service was able to share that they've seen a 26 per cent decrease in gas-and-dash incidents this year as stations have already started implementing prepay measures at their stations. This is good news for Albertans. We will be able to save lives, having put in this legislation.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is indeed some good news.

Last fall we also passed An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, which updated the Occupational Health and Safety Act and the workers' compensation system. What has the ministry been doing to implement these changes since the legislation was passed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An improved occupational health and safety system comes into effect June 1. Our ministry has been working with employers, employees, stakeholders across the province to ensure that they have the supports they need to implement these changes effectively. In addition, there are supports available online, but I would encourage all those interested to sign up for the online bulletins. As well, you can reach out to Labour. We will provide in-person presentations. We have delivered more than 100 to more than 5,000 participants, both in person and online, prerecorded and live webinars.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister and her department for working so hard on that legislation. I've heard a lot about what these changes mean for employees, but what do they mean for employers? Isn't this just a burden on them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has the backs of all working people and business owners. We are focused on keeping workers safe as well as making sure that we're not creating unnecessary burdens for employers. What I heard during consultations was that our employers here in Alberta care deeply about their employees, care deeply about making sure that everyone comes home safe at the end of the day, and have been welcoming of many of these changes. Making sure we have strong health and safety laws prevents injury and death, and that is something that all Albertans can get behind.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister originally said that the Premier's former chief of staff John Heaney is not lobbying his ministry about cannabis on behalf of his clients in his current role with the government of Alberta, but he is lobbying in B.C. on behalf of this client while also working for Alberta taxpayers here. Minister, please tell Albertans how it is not a conflict of interest to simultaneously work for the Alberta government and a private company which could have a commercial interest in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Heaney is on contract with the government of Alberta. As such, he's not permitted to lobby government members and employees in Alberta. He was working and is working with us with regard to advice on the pipeline, with regard to energy and other files. He's not working on the cannabis file. That's something he's doing outside of this work, and that's something that there is an exemption for, that the Ethics Commissioner assisted with in consulting her.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that he is a government employee, Minister, and given that the Leader of the Opposition asked the Deputy Premier yesterday to confirm that Mr. Heaney has not spoken to a single minister on behalf of his clients and given that the Deputy Premier promised to consult with her colleagues so she could answer that question, Deputy Premier, my question is for you. Now that you have had time to consult, can you please provide a definitive answer to that important question?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I certainly will confirm, but again my experience is that this has not been a matter that's been brought up. It hasn't been brought up with me and, I don't believe, anyone else who's connected in any way to any of these topics. I understand that there is a desire to create some fog and accusations in this regard, but this has not been our experience. We're certainly happy to discuss government policy in this House, and our government policy is that we are moving forward on the 15,000 jobs. That got this pipeline, and this is one of the pieces that Mr. Heaney was hired to help us work on.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government claims that the carbon tax and this Premier got the pipeline built and that now, all of a sudden, Mr. Heaney single-handedly got the pipeline built, the real question is this: on behalf of Alberta taxpayers, do you think the optics here are good? Can you please explain the optics here, and can you justify this to Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Let me tell you about what happened on Tuesday, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday we got the clarity that the folks opposite have been rallying for for so long. Let's make sure this pipeline moves forward. Guess what? On Tuesday our Premier led us to that point, and we couldn't be prouder. As a result, 15,000 people will have jobs directly working on that pipeline; $15 billion will be inserted back into the Canadian economy. We are incredibly proud of the work of this government under the leadership of our Premier, and we will not apologize for that. This is good news.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Development

Mr. Loewen: When this government came to office and introduced the largest tax increase in Alberta's history, the job-killing carbon tax, that was mentioned nowhere in their election platform, their excuse was that it was needed to buy social licence to build pipelines and gain expanded market access. Here we stand three years later, and what are the results? The approved Northern Gateway pipeline was cancelled, the Energy East pipeline has been killed, Keystone XL was vetoed, and despite the announcement of its nationalization the Trans Mountain project faces major obstacles to construction, all this under the watch of the NDP and their Trudeau Liberal allies. Will the government finally stand up and admit to Albertans that the carbon tax and their myth of social licence were a pipe dream?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the opposition was just waiting for this day, hoping that they could laugh in our faces and cheer that we didn't get the pipeline, but you know what? We got the pipeline another step forward on Tuesday, and we got that pipeline because of the climate leadership plan. There wouldn't have been a pipeline to argue about had we not had a robust climate leadership plan because we wouldn't have gotten the approval from the Prime Minister and the federal cabinet.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the minister said that it was because of the carbon leadership plan and that we just heard that it was Mr. Heaney that got the pipeline and that we've heard previously that it was the Premier that got the pipeline and given that since the government came to the private realization that the social licence myth would not come to fruition, they have taken other steps to try to get the construction of Trans Mountain and given that they've been no more successful in gaining ground with the wine boycott, bowing to the Trudeau carbon tax, and the turn-off-the-taps legislation, that they've all but said they'll never use, will the government commit to doing what actually needs to be done to convince their ally Justin Trudeau to use the full weight of his constitutional authority to enforce the rule of law and get this pipeline built?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I thought I heard several preambles in there. I had difficulty actually finding where the question was but, I think, right at the end. You do have a second supplemental, that will soon be up, but I want to be assured that you will not repeat a preamble yet again when you take that.

The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Okay. Despite the lack of a question – the Conservative leader and the opposition “can't have it both ways.” That's not me talking; that's the Edmonton Journal. Their columnist wrote that it would be “difficult, if not impossible, to imagine” any pipeline being approved under his so-called plan. He described their leader as performing a contortionist act. Trust me, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are buying tickets to watch that.

Mr. Loewen: Given the contortionist act of this government trying to give credit to everybody for this pipeline – Heaney, the Premier, the carbon tax – and given that in recent days the NDP has been celebrating the flight of billions in private capital from the Trans Mountain project and as last resort needed to have Ottawa nationalize a critical part of our energy infrastructure and given that we are still in an uncertain situation regarding a pipeline in our vital economic interests and that the opponents of progress are no less determined to stop the construction of this energy infrastructure project of critical national importance, with the Premier of British Columbia promising to continue his obstruction and radical environmentalists threatening . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Hon. member, I'd just have a higher level of assurance that you understood what I was asking you not to do. Did you understand that?

Mr. Loewen: You might not be hearing me, but we can go to Hansard if you'd like.

The Speaker: I'm sorry; I didn't hear what you said. Yes or no?

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, I did my best to follow your directions.

The Speaker: You might want to work on that, then.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? Let the numbers speak for themselves. Over the past year, because of our government supporting the private sector and industry and entrepreneurs, jobs are up, 90,000 new full-time jobs, mostly in the private sector. GDP is up, manufacturing is up, exports are up, wages are up, retail is up, wholesale is up, housing construction is up, building permits are up, new vehicle sales are up, businesses and corporations are up, restaurant receipts are up, ATB's profits are up, EI numbers are down, and a pipeline is about to begin construction.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

2:20 Chronic Wasting Disease Testing Timelines

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the ag minister. Ranchland Meats in Lacombe is a bison and elk processing facility. The elk market is seasonal. Their goal is to harvest 40 to 60 animals a week over the next couple of months, but the CWD inspection facility in Edmonton is putting that in jeopardy. The lab first required a three-day turnaround, which is workable, but now they say that it's up to seven days, which is not reasonable. Minister, would you look into this and broker a solution, as I believe you successfully did last year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka very much for bringing up this real question. It is a concern. He's absolutely right. You know, the CWD process: the regime that we have in Alberta now is quite robust. I'm happy with what we're doing. All cases of farmed elk, deer, and reindeer older than one year are tested. Because of that, we have had an opportunity to stop the very few cases of CWD we had. Carcasses are held as the results are received. Now, out of the letter of understanding with Ranchland – we're working for another this year.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Orr: Thank you to the minister. Given that Ranchland processes elk from both Alberta and Saskatchewan and given that the Saskatchewan lab returns the results to Ranchland within 24 hours, why does it take four to seven days in Alberta for a test that Saskatchewan provides in 24 hours?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I can't speak on the protocols for Saskatchewan. I know that ours have been very successful and continue to be so. My understanding from the letter of understanding from last year is that the lab would guarantee results within 72 hours. The new letter of understanding this year will be something very, very similar. Even last year some of those results were returned in 60, even 48 hours, so I think, you know, that the new letter of understanding will be very helpful to Ranchland and be acceptable to them.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Minister, for that work on that.

Food safety is of utmost importance, but the regulatory delays are driving business out of Alberta or potentially. Given that producers ship elk to the U.S. without time-delaying CWD inspections – hence, most of the elk that should be processed in Canada are actually shipped to the U.S. – and that processing here in Alberta would be more efficient than Saskatchewan and that we are driving some business to diversify regulatory risk out of the province, Minister, what will you be able to do to ensure this industry survives and is not another casualty of regulatory delays?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his questions and concerns. The animal health and assurance branch and food safety branch of Agriculture and Forestry are doing a good job. I'm very thankful for their technical expertise on this matter. I'm looking forward to them, again, working with Ranchland and other producers right across the province to do what they can to ensure that our products continue to be safe. I think that we have one of the most robust CWD detection protocols on the continent, and it continues to be so. I'm happy with that. Food safety, without a doubt, is a concern, as is market access.

Connect Care Clinical Information System

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the 2017 government rollout of the clinical data system, connect care, saw a $1.6 billion investment for the integration of health records, but the flaw is that doctors, the gatekeepers of our health care system, were not included. The Auditor General says that the benefits are undetermined due to the exclusion of family physicians. They are key personnel in our health system, and they're being shut out from opining on the software being developed by Epic. Could the minister please explain why physicians were not a part of the software development?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to reiterate the way the different pieces within the health care system work, there are the AHS components, and then there are, of course, private offices that are run by physicians. We do have Netcare, and we are now developing connect care, and it is about integrating those two pieces. But first we need to address the 1,500 different software systems we have within AHS because of all the fragmentation and breakdown in silos that there were in Alberta for many, many years. That's step one. We are very proud of that, and we've worked with many physicians on connect care.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, physicians dictate what medical tests we get, what diagnostic imaging we use. We even rely on physicians to access the primary care networks. Stateside, where the Epic software is prominent, physicians have expressed their discontent with the usability of this software. Does this Health minister not understand that physicians are a key part of our health care system and need to be part of the discussions? They may be contractors, but quite honestly they're the only physicians we have. Do you understand the importance of ensuring that these physicians are part of the software development rollout?

Ms Hoffman: I wish my critic had a greater understanding of the way the health care system works, Mr. Speaker, is what I really do wish. What I am very proud of is the fact that we are, after many, many years of failure to invest in systems – the IT system that is at the Royal Alex hospital, for example, is as old as I am. That is not fair. That is not contemporary. I get why Conservatives failed to invest in this year after year after year. You can't cut a fancy ribbon on an IT system. But it's fundamental to good, safe operations for the people of Alberta, and that's why we are going to move forward on ensuring that we can connect patients, providers, including physicians, and health care facilities to the right information to get the right care.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, despite the concerns expressed by other users of this product, this government still chose the software and didn't include family physicians while they customized it for Alberta. Not only that, but the initial investment was supposed to be for half a billion dollars. In Public Accounts this government mentioned a $1.6 billion investment. Can you clarify the cost of the software, and what assurances do Albertans have that this software will be ready on time and on budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again, this is a massive project, and the reason why is because for longer than I've been alive, the previous government failed to invest in these types of systems to ensure that patients, no matter where they were in the province, could have their information travel with them and make sure that their health care providers could get the right information to support them in their care. Fifteen hundred different systems merging into one is very complex. It is the right place, though, to make sure that we're moving forward to give patients the very best information to their providers so that they can have the very best outcomes.

Again, the member tries to take one year's line item and then say that projects have run over, Mr. Speaker. That's not true. He knows so. I'm proud to defend our investment.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Child Abandonment and Neglect

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a newborn infant is abandoned, it sends shock waves across the community and this province. It impacts those who find the infant, first responders, and also causes risk to the life of the mother if she has just given birth. Currently there are angel cradles at the Grey Nuns and Misericordia hospitals here in Edmonton, where parents can safely leave an infant they can't care for. Can the Minister of Health update the House on how many babies have been dropped off at these cradles?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for this important question. The situation where a baby was found in December in Calgary is absolutely tragic. I want to thank the member and his constituents for raising their concerns. We want every mother, every parent to feel that they can make the safest choice for themselves and for their baby. Since the angel cradles opened in Edmonton, about five years ago, one baby has been received, and that was at the Grey Nuns hospital.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are no angel cradles in Calgary and given that we have seen a safe recovery in Edmonton and also in provinces like B.C. and given that there are many reasons that can leave a woman in desperate circumstances, can the Minister of Health please tell the House what they're doing to support vulnerable women in Calgary?

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again for the question. Mr. Speaker, we know that someone who feels that they are in a position where they need to abandon their infant is in a very desperate state, and they deserve compassion and care as well. That's why we're working to improve education and support resources for women earlier in their pregnancies. Much of the work in Calgary happens at the sexual and reproductive health clinic at the Chumir. Vulnerable women can go to this clinic to get comprehensive, no-judgment care as well as counselling and support on the options available to them and their babies, or anywhere in Alberta you can call 811.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the recent Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention recognized that child abandonment and neglect can be caused by several underlying root causes that the mother has faced, to the Minister of Health: can you update the House on what resources are available for new mothers who could be at risk?

Ms Hoffman: The health and safety of children and families is a top priority for this government, and that's why we support programs like the Alberta Vulnerable Infant Response Team, which works with public health nurses, caseworkers, and police services to work regularly with families who may be at greater risk. We've also supported organizations like the Calgary Catholic Family Service, who provides mental health supports for pregnant and parenting teens, Mr. Speaker. Our government is dedicated to making sure that vulnerable Albertans have the supports they need to live safe and healthy lives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Long-term Care and Supportive Living Spaces

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the nice pin, too. The need for supportive living in long-term care beds for aging seniors is growing year after year. I give credit to the government for directing additional funding toward building these much-needed facilities. However, I'm concerned that the additional funding is being eaten up by skyrocketing per-bed costs, with current projects costing up to six times as much per bed. This means that additional funding could well not result in additional beds. To the Minister of Health: what is the average per-bed cost of the government's most recently announced facilities, and how does this compare to past facilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're making an important investment in Alberta's continuing care system, and we're on track to build 2,000 long-term care and dementia care spaces by 2019. Since coming into government, we approved 3,002 net new long-term and dementia spaces. That includes beds beyond the 2019 commitment. Those are different types of beds, with different types of support, so the costs are varying. We want to ensure that no matter where you live in the province, no matter what the economics are for the functioning of that system, you have the ability to have the right care in the right place, where you are best supported.

Ms McPherson: Given that nonprofit and private-sector organizations have reduced costs and improved services through innovation and given that their facilities have always been constructed to the same high standard required of all long-term care and supportive living facilities and given that industry experts have said – and I quote – that the government cannot build the needed beds at a cost of $650,000 per bed; this is not sustainable, to the same minister: why is the private sector being excluded from RFPs for long-term care and supportive living facilities?

Ms Hoffman: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the assertion that's just been levied there isn't factual. We have worked with a number of different organizations to expand opportunities to serve families and those who are in need of greater care, including in Fort McMurray, for example, where, yes, even though it costs more to bring in supplies, even though the costs of labour are higher, we believe that it's about time that Fort McMurray got a long-term care facility. I'm not going to say that that was a bad investment because it's an improvement investment for the people who live in Fort McMurray. We're proud of it, and we are going to make sure that that long-overdue facility gets built.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms McPherson: Given that older facilities will have to be upgraded or replaced to accommodate the ever-increasing number of seniors in our province requiring supportive living and long-term care and given that in light of this it is simply not sustainable if costs continue to be so much higher than necessary per bed, to the same minister: what is the plan for reducing the cost per bed so that the province can adequately respond to increasing demand for supportive living and long-term care beds?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I'll tell you what our plan won't be. That's the plan that was put in place by that member's now leader, which was about finding ways to sign sweetheart contracts with folks who weren't necessarily going to be able to provide the right levels of care. We've worked with all providers to ensure that where there is need, we brought it up to the highest level of care, Mr. Speaker. We're keeping the patient at the centre, not pushing for seniors to be paying exorbitant costs for drug copays or for private operators to have additional opportunities to make profits. We're keeping patients at the centre, and I'm proud of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Seniors' Mobile Blood Collection Service Long-term Care Facility Food Service

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I brought forward concerns about the cancellation of a very convenient and efficient use of mobile lab services at the Sunnyside Manor in St. Paul. I've heard that as many as 15 to 20 patients are processed in less than an hour there. I now find that this efficient service for seniors is being cancelled at facilities province-wide. Minister, why are seniors being targeted by your government and forced to go to hospital ERs to get a service that has been efficiently supplied on-site up until now?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, again the members are trying to contort facts. What is happening is that for those folks who are living independently, if their doctor believes they need to get the service provided to them in their home, with the doctor's direction, the service will continue to be provided in their home. But for folks who are living independently who are able to go to the lab site, they're asked to do so. I did look into the specific community, and it is about a two-minute drive. We appreciate that that is different than somebody coming into your home, but we also want to ensure that instead of moving for rash, ideological cuts like the members opposite are doing – we want a sustainable system.

Mr. Hanson: I'd like to thank the minister for confirming that that service has been cut.

Given that although AHS management claims that no service has been cut, a service has been cut, and seniors that do not have a special requisition will have to find transportation to and from the ER and expose themselves and all the residents they come home to to whatever virus is in the ER that day, Minister, why are you allowing AHS to force our seniors living in long-term care facilities to have to bundle up, pay out of their limited funds, and risk exposure for themselves and other residents?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, again, for patients that are deemed as being in need of having the service come to them, it will continue, but for those who are able to go to the lab itself, which, again, is about a two-minute drive, we do ask them to do that to ensure that there are the resources available for all who need to access these services.

Mr. Speaker, I'm really proud of the fact that we've been able to sit down and work with members, including the member opposite who's asking this very question, to do things in communities like expand dialysis services in the community of Lac La Biche or the new long-term care facility in Fort McMurray. I'm very willing to sit down and work through these challenges. Gotcha politics isn't the way to do it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that on May 16 I asked the Health minister a question regarding the quality of food in seniors' facilities and given that her response indicated that long-term care, of course, is a priority and given that I was actually referring to a long-term care facility that is still serving preprepared, not on-site, meals that a lot of people here probably wouldn't want to eat, Minister, why does it appear that your department and AHS are targeting seniors in this province? Don't they deserve the best care possible?

Ms Hoffman: We are very proud of the fact that we're investing in things that seniors care about, investing in things like reversing the kinds of cuts that were proposed by the members opposite, investing in building 2,000 new long-term care spaces, investing in ensuring that they have health care providers who are available to provide those services. Instead of pushing for rash ideological cuts like the members opposite continue to do, we're investing in the things that keep seniors safe, well, and independent as long as possible, including home care, Mr. Speaker. This side of the House is investing in seniors in our communities. If there are specific questions that the hon. member would like to ask, I encourage him to approach my office. I think I've proven that we get good results when you approach me in a respectful way.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Backcountry Land Use

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Environment and Parks has repeatedly stated that her decision impacting changes to land use across Alberta, including the Castle parks and Livingstone-Porcupine Hills areas, was based on science, as were decisions about the Bighorn area. Stakeholders have raised concerns that the data being used by the minister is taken from out-of-country studies which do not accurately capture the geography of Alberta. To the minister: what relevant, Alberta-based scientific data is being used to drive these decisions, and will it be provided to the public?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The question is somewhere in the neighbourhood of about six or seven months late because the scientific studies that underpinned some of the analysis around the headwater protection that we brought in for the Castle region were released by the two scientists in December and have been available publicly since that time.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it seems as though decisions made by the government under the guise of science are really being driven by ideology influenced by foreign-funded environmental groups as opposed to members of the public who responsibly enjoy the backcountry and given that these environmental groups are pushing for the systematic removal of human activity from Alberta's backcountry, again to the minister: when will you personally meet with the general public in order to capture a balanced vision of what kind of backcountry access Albertans want?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the dozens of scientists who contributed to the analysis that underpinned many of our decisions in the Castle area will be pleased to learn that the folks across the way dismiss their life's work as somehow being tainted or ideological. I'll be clipping this Hansard and sending it to all of them because it is just beyond the pale to undermine our professionals in this province who contribute every day to what we know about science, what we know about ecology, what we know about the world around us. It's not surprising at all given that these folks . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister seems to be playing favourites again by promoting certain types of camping while restricting access for other types of camping and given that motorized access provides an excellent opportunity for families to include everyone in the backcountry experience, including those who may have physical disabilities or mobility issues, again to the minister: will the minister commit to reviewing her plans and decisions to provide fairness and balance for all types of backcountry use?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are ecological limits. Certainly, we've invested in our campgrounds and our trails and so on to manage those limits, but there are also limits with respect to the patience of the neighbours. In particular, ranchers in Livingstone-Porcupine Hills came to me and said: please, could you do some planning in these areas? And we did that. We delivered for those Conservative constituents. On this side of the House we listen to communities when they ask us to do something, and then we take action.

2:40 Property Assessed Clean Energy Program

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, recently the NDP government introduced legislation that would enable Alberta municipalities to create a property assessed clean energy program, called PACE. It's a financing tool whereby property owners pay for energy upgrades through their property taxes. Since California adopted PACE in 2007, though, it has experienced legal problems, class-action lawsuits, and homeowners losing their homes. To the minister: why would the NDP propose a program in Alberta that has been so problematic and controversial that it has resulted in horrendous legal actions in other jurisdictions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. PACE has been used in multiple jurisdictions with very positive results. It provides an opportunity for everyday Albertans to make the kind of energy efficiency upgrades that they want for their homes so that they can save money and reduce emissions. Once again, this provides an opportunity and empowers municipalities to establish a PACE program, to work with their residents to ensure that this can happen. The bottom line is that PACE is good news for Albertans.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't agree.

Given that in Alberta there are already a number of financing options for property owners who want to install energy upgrades that require the borrower to undergo a credit check and given that Alberta's PACE legislation appears to intentionally circumvent this industry best practice altogether, to the minister again: why are you proposing that Alberta municipalities become primary lenders that don't require that a borrower's creditworthiness be confirmed as a prerequisite to obtain financing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about the PACE program. Increased demand for energy efficient upgrades means more opportunities in Alberta's green jobs sector. Alberta's building and development community is very excited about the legislation and expect to see increased economic activity as a result of PACE. Similar programs across the U.S. have resulted in nearly $6 billion in economic activity, and I'm so looking forward to seeing how these programs impact our economy here in Alberta.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, despite what was said, given that existing PACE programs in the U.S. have resulted in class-action lawsuits, homeowners losing their homes due to foreclosures, and that in Alberta's proposed legislation there doesn't appear to be any requirement for borrowers to undergo even a basic credit check, to the minister again: why hasn't the legislation that you're proposing included safeguards to ensure that Alberta's PACE program doesn't experience the same disastrous results it met elsewhere?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again, this is empowering legislation supporting municipalities to establish a PACE program within their communities, should their residents want it, in order to give those Albertans access to financing to cover the cost of energy efficiency and renewable energy projects. Our municipalities play a key role in advancing Alberta's climate leadership roles, and this will empower them to take further actions. As it's a voluntary program, again, the municipalities will need to pass a PACE bylaw before the program becomes available. I cannot state strongly enough that PACE is good news for Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

North Saskatchewan Heavy Load River Crossing

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to be part of a government that supports the oil and gas industry and the need to reach new markets for our products while also recognizing the importance of the agricultural industry and rural Alberta as important contributors to Alberta's economy. I've received many positive comments from members of both of these industries in my riding due to the recent announcement by the government. The Vinca Bridge, northeast of Edmonton, will be upgraded and will provide a critical link to the areas to the north of the city. To the Minister of Transportation: can you please tell the Legislature how this project will support the energy industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. The Vinca Bridge will provide a critical link over the North Saskatchewan River for heavy and oversized loads. Once it's complete, the bridge will be able to handle heavy loads that will service the Industrial Heartland near Fort Saskatchewan or on to the oil sands. The bridge will allow industry to trim 200 kilometres off the route that currently has to be used. This will save companies time and money and will provide for a much more efficient and strategic route for these projects.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Producers in the agricultural industry are concerned about the preservation of prime farmland for their businesses and the economic future of their families. To the same minister: can you inform the House about how the Vinca Bridge supports these projects and agricultural land?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the selection of this particular site for the bridge negates the need to build another bridge location that was under study that would have destroyed some of the best remaining agricultural land in the Edmonton region and would have deprived a number of farmers and greenhouse operators of their livelihoods. It's a better route for industry, but it certainly takes the pressure off our farmers and preserves vitally needed agricultural land.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This project is significant in the support of the expansion of the Industrial Heartland while supporting the agricultural producers and rural Alberta. To the same minister: can you please update the Legislature on the timeline and details around the bridge upgrade?

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to do so. Design work will get under way this year, preliminary construction will be started in 2020, and it will take about three years to complete. Ninety million dollars was included in Budget 2018, and almost 500 direct and indirect jobs will be created. I want to thank this member and other members from the region for their support of this project, which is so essential to our oil and gas industry and which protects valuable farmland.

The Speaker: We'll proceed in 30 seconds.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Indigenous History Month

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak today about National Indigenous History Month in Canada. June is National Indigenous History Month, and it is the perfect opportunity for all of us to learn more about the history of this province and the people who lived here long before European settlers arrived.

As we focus on a renewed relationship with indigenous peoples, one based on reconciliation, mutual respect, and co-operation, it is essential that we understand the past and our role in it. Facing up to the wrongs we have committed or have enabled to continue is a necessary part of constructing a better relationship.

This is also the time to celebrate the rich and diverse culture of indigenous peoples living in this province: the vibrant art and music, the brilliant dances and regalia, and the rich tradition of storytelling. We can also celebrate a culture based on community, friendship, connection, and wisdom.

This month I encourage all Albertans to take the opportunity to learn about and experience the rich indigenous culture present in our province. Talk to your neighbours and community members, attend a local powwow or celebration, or visit a native friendship centre or a local library and learn more. And please join your fellow Albertans in the celebration of National Indigenous Peoples Day on Thursday, June 21. Alberta is made stronger and more beautiful when indigenous history and identity is recognized, and that is something we can all support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My grandmother Smith was a very practical, no-nonsense teacher and farm wife. She understood that life could be hard, so quit your complaining, figure out your options, and move towards a solution. As a teacher and a farm wife she also didn't suffer fools lightly and expected people to take responsibility for their actions. So it's not surprising that some of my grandmother's approach to life has rubbed off and affected my response to the Kinder Morgan fiasco.

We are in this position because of a lack of political leadership of epic proportions, both provincially and federally. The combined poor decisions of the present provincial and federal governments have made the purchase of the pipeline the only option left on the table. While we continue to support the much-needed Trans Mountain project, it should never have come this far.

The withdrawal of Kinder Morgan continues to send a negative message to the world that Canada cannot defend the rule of law and that special-interest groups funded from the United States will continue to disrupt our economy. Even with the purchase of the pipeline project and infrastructure, the way forward is uncertain. The same scenario that paralyzed the provincial and federal governments is still there. If the federal government was unwilling to deal with a so-called war in the woods before, it has not gone away. If Prime Minister Trudeau was unwilling to uphold the rule of law and jeopardize votes and seats in B.C. in the national interest, there is no reason to believe that buying the pipeline has changed that political reality.

Purchasing Trans Mountain thankfully ensured that the expansion was not permanently cancelled. However, there are a number of actions that the federal government can take to better ensure certainty for the project, and the time to act is now. At least, that is how the many no-nonsense farmers and businesspeople that think like my grandmother see it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Alberta Party Achievements

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The time we spend together here as legislators to debate Albertans' concerns is so important to the people who we are elected to serve. I'm very proud of the work my Alberta Party caucus colleagues and I have done here in the last three months.

We listened to the most vulnerable Albertans. We brought the choking game to parents' attention. We pushed to increase protection and support for AISH recipients and a PDD review. We brought critical home-care gaps to light. We represented concerns of those relying on assisted reproductive technology when support was withdrawn. We highlighted barriers to accessing free naloxone kits. We brought forward concerns by people with rare diseases that had been previously overlooked. We proudly showed up to debate safe access to abortion services.

We supported innovative Albertans and highlighted rural Internet access as key to economic and social development. We brought attention to the carbon trunk line, which is critical to new business.

We reminded the government of its overdue antiracism strategy, and we sought modernization in paramedics' scope of practice.

We called for support for a coal innovation cluster to provide our coal workforce with something to transition to. In fact, we recognized the importance of keeping Alberta's rural and remote communities vital by proposing $100 million more for economic diversification and education in our shadow budget. Oh, yeah. We produced a shadow budget.

I don't have enough time to list all of the good work we've done in three months. We listen to and stand with everyday Albertans, whose daily challenges do not have partisan labels. We are proud to have addressed and advocated for positive change for Albertans all across the province as the third party.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Accessibility and Inclusion

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May 27 to June 2 is National AccessAbility Week in Canada, a time to celebrate the important contributions of people with disabilities and a time to celebrate communities and workplaces that actively remove barriers for people with disabilities. Inclusion requires action. It requires intentional planning, investment, and vigilance. I'd like to thank the Rick Hansen Foundation for their work around universal access and the development of a rating certification program.

We have many people and organizations in Alberta that deserve recognition and celebration, but today I'd like to celebrate two that have affected me personally. My friend Jonathan Hamilton recently celebrated 30 years of employment with McDonald's in St. Albert. He plays the piano, he volunteers, he climbed Kilimanjaro a few years ago to raise money for a charity, and he's a deeply religious man, involved in his church community. He loves his home and St. Albert, and he's one of the most informed voters I've ever met. He has a developmental disability. By simply living his life in his community, he's taught many people about how great diversity is.

Yesterday I attended a funeral for a young man, Steven Irsheid, who I'd known and supported since he was about 17 years old. His early life in care and the many barriers placed in his way because of his disability could have defined his life, but they did not. My friend Steven lived his short life to its fullest, having all kinds of adventures he had only dreamed of. He also graduated from Bible college, another dream. Most important of all, he was loved, included, and appreciated. He created awareness about the beauty of diversity and inclusion by living his best life.

I'm very proud that here in our own Legislative Assembly we're home to the associate page program, that creates a unique opportunity for inclusion.

I challenge each and every one of you to think about what you can do in your community to support people and organizations working to ensure access and inclusion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Super Hero Day in Edmonton-Decore

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about an event that will take place in the super-fantastic riding of Edmonton-Decore on June 10, the second annual Super Hero Day. The event is being organized by Dickinsfield Amity House and Northmount Community League with the participation of my constituency office.

Amity House is truly a home of humble superheroes who have been working to support residents in the area for over 45 years. Northmount Community League was established in 1971 and has been providing a super venue and support to the community since that time. Last year Northmount Community League park was filled with a whole bunch of other superheroes from all types of comic books. A fun-filled afternoon of super activities was held, complete with a free super barbecue.

This year's event will be super bigger and super better. In fact, it will also include some of our real-life superheroes. On a daily basis members of the Canadian Armed Forces, Edmonton Police Service, Edmonton fire rescue, and emergency medical services put their lives on the line to keep every one of us safe. They are our true superheroes. So for this year's event we are pleased to have Edmonton fire rescue station 14, EMS, and EPS participate in this event.

I would like to extend a huge thank you to all of our real-life heroes for their outstanding work each and every day. As it is Paramedic Services Week I would like to extend a special thank you to all the EMS in the Legislature today for their dedication to their work and for helping numerous Albertans on a daily basis.

Finally, I would like to extend an invitation to everyone to attend this super event June 10, 1 to 4 p.m., at Northmount Community League. All ages of superheroes are welcome, and I hope to see you there.

Official Opposition Voting Practices

Mr. Fildebrandt: The single most important qualities for elected office are principle and consistency. It means sticking to your guns even when you're outgunned. It means making the right choice, not always the easy choice. I wake up on the right side of the bed every morning. But many career politicians tend to toss and turn all day long, blowing in the wind, making their decisions rooted in tactics and political strategy and not in what they just feel is right. There are many good and principled conservatives who sit in this House today, and I feel genuinely sorry for them when I see them bridled, muzzled, and whipped from speaking their minds and voting their conscience.

I know the hearts of my conservative colleagues. I know that you have been forced to vote for legislation that you oppose, abstain from votes that you care about, and stay silent on issues that are contrary to your core beliefs. You have been forced to stay silent and flee the House on 15 different votes on a bill that attacks freedom of speech. You have been whipped to vote with the NDP to support race and gender quotas for the entire private sector on five separate occasions. You've been forced to vote with the NDP against the 5 per cent pay cut for MLAs. And you've been forced to side with Trudeau and the NDP in support of taxpayers buying a pipeline.

I don't know what happened to the party that I believed we were founding a year ago. I don't know what happened to the promise of principled conservatism, of open nominations, of grassroots guarantees. But I do know where I stand. I will show up for work every day. I will not bend when the wind blows. I will not give the socialists an inch. I will fight until I have no more to give, and I will do it every day until the job is done. [some applause] Stop doing that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give notice to the House now under Standing Order 7(8) that the Routine shall be extended beyond 3 p.m.

3:00

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to present two petitions today that have been approved by Parliamentary Counsel. The petitions are on angel cradles, which are safe, anonymous drop-off spots where babies can be left when no one is able to care for them. The first petition prayer states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to adopt a policy to ensure that all new hospitals are required to provide Angel Cradles.

The second petition prayer states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to establish at least one Angel Cradle in a central hospital in Calgary.

I want to thank my guests and congratulate them on their hard work. They met with the ministry earlier today to discuss this item as well.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Municipal Government (Legion Tax Exemption) Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce Bill 207, the Municipal Government (Legion Tax Exemption) Amendment Act, 2018.

Mr. Speaker, legions have a long history in Canada, and our veterans deserve our support and respect. Bill 207 will support legions and the good work they do in our communities by exempting them from property taxes. I will be consulting with legions and others in Alberta this summer to gather feedback on this important bill, and I look forward to debating this bill with my colleagues in the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Public Recreation Areas Consultation Act

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure today to request leave to introduce Bill 208, the Public Recreation Areas Consultation Act.

Recreation areas on public land are important environmental and economic assets, to be enjoyed by all Albertans. Community stewards play an integral role in the development, maintenance, and protection of these recreation areas throughout the province. If passed, this bill will ensure that community stewards, who often invest significant time and money into the creation and enhancements of these recreational assets, can file a consultative notation on those lands and that they will be consulted when land-use changes related to that public land are considered.

I have heard loud and clear from constituents and from Albertans across the province that they want to have a seat at the table to ensure their hard work is taken into consideration when making land-use decisions. I would like to thank all those who provided ideas and suggestions as I drafted Bill 208, and I look forward to consulting further over the next several months. It is my hope that it will create a process that works in everybody's best interests.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter written by Brigitte Sakaluk, CAO of the MD of St. Paul Foundation, to Wendy Corbiere, the director of laboratory services, north zone, regarding the cancellation of on-site lab collection services to our seniors.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 5

An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities.

The intent of this bill is to ensure families are able to plan for their children's future and that Albertans with disabilities have access to financial security, as all Albertans do. This legislation ensures Albertans can establish trusts for family members and loved ones who are receiving AISH benefits without impacting their AISH eligibility. It also provides a one-year grace period, if someone receives a large payment, to make thoughtful decisions and plans. It has been incredible to hear the overwhelming positive response to this bill. Self-advocates, families, workers, organizations, and community leaders have said that this is a long-overdue change that they have been calling for for years.

I want to recognize the MLA for Calgary-Currie for his great leadership and work on this bill. He has been a true champion for this issue. He consulted with hundreds of self-advocates, families, and organizations across this province. Individuals and families shared their stories and hopes and said that this change would make a meaningful difference in their lives. That is why we are here today. We are here because we are listening to the community and want to make life better for Albertans with disabilities and their families. We are here because we want to correct a wrong, a wrong that occurred when the previous government disallowed trusts. Because of this bill, parents and guardians will be able to make thoughtful decisions to plan for the long-term care of their children and loved ones who have disabilities.

Albertans who count on AISH will not have to deplete their savings to continue to receive benefits, including health benefits. This bill corrects an injustice against people with disabilities and their families. Our government's commitment to correcting injustices and making life better underpins much of our work. We stopped the PDD safety standards, we removed the supports intensity scale, and we have refused to make reckless cuts. We have established a new relationship with the community, one that is based on listening and working collaboratively together instead of imposing changes on the community.

Once again, I want to thank every self-advocate, family member, worker, Albertan, organization, and community member that shared their support for this change. I encourage every member of this House to join with them and support this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, I rise to speak to Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. This is an important piece of legislation that will exempt discretionary and nondiscretionary trusts as assets when determining AISH eligibility. As well, it will provide a one-year grace period for AISH recipients who receive an inheritance or a lump-sum payment to give them an opportunity to take advantage of discretionary trusts.

I think this is important because, quite honestly, family members care deeply when one of their own is severely handicapped. They often love them with even a more intense love. They have a loyalty and honour to care for their own, to stick with them and look after them, and government policy should actually support that, not dissuade family participation and family ability to care for their own and should not make it, really, a discrimination against the person who needs support and help. Rather, we should have legislation that actually enhances family support and treats those with disabilities with full equality before the law and full fairness before the law.

Most of all, the most important thing, I think, is that AISH recipients should not be disenfranchised from the rights of family inheritance, family property. They should not be cut off, as it were, from family support. There are already a number of exemptions for AISH recipients so that their AISH payments are not disqualified. I'll just list some of those AISH exemptions: a home or a quarter section that they live on, a vehicle, a second vehicle adapted for disability, clothing, reasonable household items, a registered disability fund. What this bill does is that it simply adds the additional item of discretionary and nondiscretionary trusts to that list of exempted funds or exempted inheritances and rights. I think that's important because it treats them, then, with fairness and equality before the law.

The value of AISH is already very minimal on a monthly basis for people to live on. In fact, I received a call just this morning from a husband and wife receiving the $1,588 a month. By the time they pay their rent of $1,000, food at $600, the cost of rapidly rising utilities, they're struggling. For families to be able to backstop them, for families to be able to engage with them and support them and be partners with them is not a bad thing. It's a good thing. The goal really should be not to exclude family support but to actually enhance it and support it. We don't want to keep AISH recipients on a poverty line deliberately. We don't want to put them in a position where the only supports they can find are from government supports. I think that's important.

I'd like to just tell a brief story about a gentleman in my riding that I've had very close experience with. I count him, actually, as a close friend. A few years ago – well, let me back up. He was born with some developmental disabilities and lived with his parents as long as he could. They had a house at the time, an interesting house, actually, built in about the 1920s, I think. It had been many different things in the community over the years. But when they passed on, they willed to him this house as a place to live. He's lived in that same house since he was born. Thankfully, a home, as I just read a moment ago, is included in that list of exemptions. Otherwise, he would have lost a place to live and/or he would have lost his AISH payments, which he depends on for his monthly living.

I think it's a great boon and a great gift that he has been able to have both a place to live and a means of support monthly throughout his lifetime. The very important part of this here is that his parents, as they became older and then eventually passed away, had the anxiety and the worry and the concern about how their son is going to be looked after after they pass away, how he is going to survive after they pass away. It's something that many families truly, truly agonize over. This is one of the things that I think will help them to be able to have the assurance that their son or daughter will be cared for, will be able to survive, will have what they need for an adequate and a reasonable life in this world.

The gentleman that I've been speaking about is well known in his community. Everybody likes him. A few years ago that house he was living in was getting very tired, as you can imagine. He's been living in it his entire life, as I said, built about the 1920s. I was very proud to be able to lead a community effort to do, basically, about a $25,000 home makeover project for him in the community, to completely redo the interior and some of the exterior of his house, put a new roof on it, new windows in it, make sure the furnace was safe, reinforce the foundation to a very old house. Again, it continues to be a place where he can live safely, live with security and without fear and anxiety.

In his case, because they were able to give him the house that he lived in, it worked out well. For other people, they don't have the house to give them. For other people, they put together a trust. They may have the money in a different format, and they would like to ensure that their son or daughter has some means of additional support, so they go and put together a trust. It's much the same as for this gentleman a house.

But I do think it's extremely important that we show the dignity and the respect of allowing families to participate and to contribute and to create that kind of economic security for their family member, that may struggle otherwise and not be able to find employment. It just gives them peace of mind to be able to leave an inheritance, that they have worked hard for, that they have earned, that they've probably scrimped and saved for, in order to provide something for their son or daughter. To assure them that they will not be disqualified from AISH I think is extremely important. The one-year grace period for those who receive funds that are not protected or secured I think is also important so that there's time for that to happen.

I am a little bit concerned, though, for folks who may be cognitively impaired who receive those kinds of funds and don't have the knowledge or the ability to put them into a safe, legal vehicle. I trust that there will be some kind of support, some kind of advocacy on their behalf, that they will not lose this benefit simply because they are not aware or do not know how to proceed with those kinds of complicated details of setting up a trust.

I really believe the government should not treat people differently based on their family situation. It's not always their choice. It's never their choice, in fact. We ought to support them, we ought to inform them, we ought to encourage them, and, above all, we ought not to treat them as being less than human.

I fully support this bill and encourage the rest of the House to do so. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd also like to thank the member who spoke before me. He certainly did a good job of addressing the issues that are identified and addressed through this bill. I rise in support of this bill, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities, and I do so for a number of reasons. I was a single parent for a long time in my life, and I worried about my children, what would happen as they grew older. In fact, one of my daughters has some medical issues right now and, in fact, may eventually have to depend on AISH.

Even before I was elected and I had notified that I was interested in running, a number of people came to see me, who turned out to be constituents of mine. They met me to discuss their concerns around AISH, and one of the issues that came up over and over and over again was just this issue in terms of the Henson trust, as my colleague had brought forward for his private member's bill. In this area, when families are making such decisions, normally you wouldn't have to consider how you would leave an inheritance to your children. If you have two children, you could divide it in half. If you have five, they all get a fifth of it. But in the case of a disability this would have made a difference if that child or that adult child had a disability and was receiving AISH. The people who came to see me, the constituents, said: why should that child be treated any differently than the other children in my family?

In the fall session my colleague from Calgary-Currie brought forward his private member's bill, and it addressed that issue. The constituents who had spoken to me were over the moon. They were so happy that he had brought it forward. In fact, he came down to Lethbridge, and he did a session on what the bill was going to do. I don't remember exactly how many people were there, but certainly the room was packed. They listened to the presentation. Suffice to say that at the end of the presentation, no one in the room opposed that proposed bill. When the bill died on the floor, however, they came to my office, and they expressed their disappointment and their concerns about this bill dying. And I have to say that I shared that disappointment.

I was, however, very pleased to hear when the minister introduced his bill. Certainly, when they heard it, I had visits in my office again because they were pretty happy it came forward. If this bill passes, and I certainly hope that it will, it will provide persons with disabilities the same opportunities as those without disabilities in terms of their financial stability within their families.

Currently if a person with a disability who is receiving AISH were to receive an inheritance, as my colleague across the floor has said, they may well lose their eligibility to receive AISH. AISH does provide benefits to help persons with disabilities with things like their daily needs and health-related supports. An inheritance might well put them over the threshold, and they would possibly lose those supports for a period of time until the inheritance had been exhausted. This person would then have to reapply to again establish their eligibility for AISH. Depending on when it was exhausted, that may mean having to wait months before they meet the threshold of an annual income.

Before my children were born, as I said, I began planning for their futures, and as a single parent that planning really played on me in terms of: what would happen if I died, and how would my kids be taken care of? They're adults now, but it still plays on my mind. I thought about what they needed for now but also for the future. I didn't have much, but I put away a little or as much as I could. I bought insurance policies just in case, God forbid, anything should happen to me or happen to them. I didn't have enough money to bury them, so I made sure I had insurance policies that would cover the cost of a burial if either one of my kids died. All of those things played in my mind as a parent.

Certainly, this bill is a bill that I wish had been around when my kids were little so that I wouldn't have been real worried about them and certainly when I realized that my daughter had some issues that may put her in this position.

When I talk to other parents, many – and probably many of you in this room have done the same thing. You've worried about your kids. You've gotten the insurance policy. You got an insurance policy on your house so that if you died, the house is paid for, all of those little things, everything you can do to protect your children. This particular bill I think takes some of that worry away from parents, not all of it, but it certainly takes a big portion of that worry away from the parents. It doesn't mean that, you know, they won't continue to love and protect their kids, because they will do that until the day they die.

My question about this is: why has this not always been in place? I know that there was something in place before, and then it was changed, and I was kind of shocked that it had changed. Why should someone who is disabled be treated any differently than someone who isn't disabled or, I should say, maybe ably challenged? If a parent is in a position to be able to leave something for their children, why shouldn't it be divided equally between them?

On that note, I am supporting this bill because it is the right thing to do. I am representing my constituents who have spoken to me about fixing this issue. Now, there are many other issues that also came up, and every single one of them I've brought forward to the minister. I am really happy that this piece can move forward, and I certainly hope everybody in this House is going to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, would the hon. minister like to close debate?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to everyone who participated in the discussion of Bill 5. I will really briefly address the concern raised by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka around cognitively disabled individuals and family members. I think similar concerns were raised by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View and the Member for Calgary-Greenway. Under the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act there are different mechanisms available, and those protections are available. They can appoint a trustee, and the trustee will have oversight by the court, specifically if they are dealing with financial matters. If there is no one available to act as a trustee, the Public Trustee can be served the notice, and the Public Trustee can be appointed to deal with those matters.

Another question raised was around: if cognitively impaired Albertans receive funds in inheritance, what protection will be available to them? In that regard, I think the personal representative of the deceased's estate is required under the Estate Administration Act to ensure that a cognitively impaired individual is properly represented. They would have to notify the court, in the application to become the representative, of that concern. Under different statutes there are protections that are afforded to cognitively disabled Albertans.

With that, again I thank each and every one who participated in the debate, and I close debate on Bill 5.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

An Act to Empower Utility Consumers

The Acting Speaker: Is there a member wishing to speak to Bill 14? The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers, on behalf of the Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

I would like to speak one last time about Bill 14 and the provision related to the dissemination of information related to utility providers. We have heard from Albertans that more information needs to be shared about utility providers in order to educate consumers about services provided to them. The Utilities Consumer Advocate is ideally positioned to provide this service as they have both the expertise in this area and the means to make this information publicly available. Having compliance and service-quality information available for public review will motivate businesses to improve their practices in order to attract and retain consumers. Where consumers become aware of providers, retailers, or distributors that are frequently receiving complaints under the Consumer Protection Act or other legislation, they can take steps to protect themselves. This will be particularly useful in a utilities context, where some information is highly technical and can be made more user friendly by the UCA.

To conclude, this government has heard from Albertans that they want greater transparency in the electricity and natural gas sector. I believe that was originally in Bill 208 to help meet this demand, and I am delighted to see that what I proposed last fall is being carried forward.

Lastly, I'm very proud that the mandate of the Utilities Consumer Advocate will now include mediation for water services. This means that Albertans will not be alone and will have somewhere to turn if they have questions about their water bill, and it means that they can rely on the trusted expertise of the Utilities Consumer Advocate to help them address concerns or resolve a dispute. As a result, this increased transparency and the inclusion of water in the UCA's mandate will empower Albertans when interacting with their electricity, natural gas, and water utilities.

I have no doubt that Albertans stand to benefit, and I'm looking forward to seeing this bill implemented. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. I will speak on Bill 14. I am looking forward to supporting this bill. This is a good piece of legislation that has been put forward by the Minister of Service Alberta.

During my last couple of speeches I used an example of a wonderful woman in Calgary that had a $2,700 bill. She couldn't seem to get through that there was an error. I also had another example where a local businessman in my constituency had a decimal point out on the meter that he had, and he had excessively high bills that also weren't addressed by that municipality. So we have water bills that are being put forward by municipalities that seem to have no mechanism to be able to facilitate a good dialogue on, if you will.

The only thing that I will say that I'm very disappointed on with this government is that I put forward an amendment that said: let's bring some clarity to the reporting of what exactly is put in a bill; that is, the charges, the fees, the levies. What we need to do is to be able to have an explanation of exactly what those charges are for.

I gave examples of the city of Edmonton, for instance. This is not a water example; this is a new home example. New homes in Edmonton were charged an administration fee that was meant for creating efficiency within the city of Edmonton to be able to accelerate new homes through the system. What we ended up seeing was a system where it became a slush fund for the city of Edmonton. Clearly, that wasn't the intent. Clearly, that's wrong.

But other than that, other than the minister and the NDP caucus voting down a reasonable amendment, I will support this bill, and I encourage all of my colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, would you like to close debate?

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, I would like to bring the debate on Bill 14 to a close. Thank you to the opposition for your support of this bill. Thank you to the Minister of Service Alberta for championing consumer protection. It is an honour to have my private member's bill, Bill 208, come to fruition.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and on behalf of the Minister of Labour move third reading of Bill 16, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

Now, the minister asked me to convey her thanks to the members of the House for their comments on the bill. They've been extensive and indeed colourful.

I'd like to take this opportunity to address a few concerns that were raised during Committee of the Whole. Bill 16 will guarantee a level playing field by ensuring that parties that are closely connected be subject to a single spending limit. It will also increase transparency by enhancing reporting requirements. Our government continues to act on our commitment to ensure that our electoral system is fair, accountable, and transparent. Elections, after all, should be decided by ideas and not money, which is what Albertans expect. These amendments preserve the fairness and integrity of Alberta's democratic electoral system.

In regard to spending limits the intent of our amendments is electoral fairness. Bill 16 requires that associated parties be subject to the spending limit of a single party. Concerns have been expressed to this House that the definition of associated parties may be a bit too broad. Well, when determining whether or not a party is associated, the Election Commissioner must consider multiple criteria. Those criteria would include whether the parties have common leadership, political programs, or policy statements; whether one party controls another; whether parties have the same advertising material and branding; and the nature of agreements or interactions that might exist between the parties.

The Election Commissioner will have the authority to consider all relevant information. This approach provides an appropriate level, I believe, of guidance in terms of how to interpret the amendments while at the same time it does not hinder the normal interaction or discussions between parties. We believe this provides a workable and a fair process that will apply to all parties now and in the future.

In regard to government advertising another concern that was raised was whether there will be restrictions on government spending in advertising. Now, we kept our promise that public dollars cannot be used for electioneering. That's why we addressed government advertising in Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta, which passed last fall. It's imperative that the public service be able to provide Albertans with the information they need even during an election, and Bill 32 contained provisions that prohibit taxpayer money from being used in ways that could influence elections while preventing a total shutdown of all government communication with the public.

During the election period the following types of advertisements and publications would still be allowed: those required by law, those required for procurement or employment purposes, important public health or safety messages, and continuing advertising about an ongoing program. Albertans can be reassured that they will have access to important nonpartisan public information and that they will hear from the government when it comes to essential information on health and safety and continuing advertising about ongoing programs.

These amendments would enhance transparency and protect fairness in election spending. Fair elections depend on all parties and candidates having a level playing field so ideas and not money decide who wins. Bill 16 is another step to preserve the fairness and integrity of all future elections within our province.

I look forward to the continued high quality of debate on this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 16, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. Here we are again dealing with another bill to deal with election finance law. Bill 16 deals with a lot of little things, little things that probably should have been looked after in Bill 32. But that's okay. Here we are dealing with them now. I think if the NDP would have in fact conducted proper consultation and done good consultation before introducing Bill 32, we maybe would have been able to skirt this process, but we're where we're at now. When it comes to issues of democracy and accountability, which the NDP are infamous for standing up to defend, it is incredibly ironic that the NDP can't seem to get this basic consultation correct yet.

We see where implications of Bill 32 have caused Elections Alberta to now request an additional just about $9 million this year to cover off the expenses of implementing that legislation. The door-to-door enumerations do cost money. The UCP did let the NDP know that this was a concern, but I guess they didn't listen. It was not even included in the 2018 budget. So we look at this and start to wonder: well, are the NDP even listening?

Under Bill 16 the newly appointed Election Commissioner would be able to initiate an investigation of their own at the request of the Chief Electoral Officer or at the request of an elector or registered party in order to determine if two or more registered parties are associated. If two parties are found to be associated, they must share the $2 million spending limit for a single party.

I would suggest that, clearly, this legislation is targeted at the United Conservative Party, the NDP concern that the United Conservative Party would possibly stretch the rules and use the legacy parties – the legacy PC Party, the legacy Wildrose Party, and also the United Conservative Party – to be able to spend $2 million. But, you know, we're going to comply. Our legacy PC Party and the legacy Wildrose Party outlined in their unity agreement, in their agreement in principle that established our United Conservative Party, that that would be the case, so I think we were one step ahead of the game even on what's being proposed in this bill.

Bill 16 has some positive housekeeping measures such as increasing the fines for registered parties, registered candidates, registered nomination contestants, and the chief financial officers of these entities who exceed spending limits. I believe that the current fines were too small to really be any kind of an incentive for those who wish to take advantage of the law to not do so. So I believe that's a good move, to increase those penalties.

The legislation will also mean that election advertising period rules will now also apply to by-elections, which will bring advertising done by third parties during a by-election under election rules as opposed to political advertising, where they currently fall. Election advertising rules apply starting December 1 prior to an election year and end on polling day whereas political advertising is year-round.

Madam Speaker, if the NDP had done their job right the first time and listened to the UCP opposition, the Chief Electoral Officer, and others, Bill 16 would not be needed, but here we are again. Bill 16 is filled with small fixes and could have been handled much better earlier.

I will support Bill 16 and vote in favour. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Is there anybody wishing to close debate?

All right. Seeing none, I will now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. That is indeed wonderful news, and I want to congratulate the House on the great progress that we've made this afternoon. It's been a long week, and I am glad to say that it is now coming to an end. I will move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 on Monday afternoon, and I would like to wish all members a safe trip home.

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, May 31, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. [The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, as some of you may be aware, on May 29 it was International Day of United Nations Peacekeepers, and yesterday, June 3, was Canadian Armed Forces Day. Let us each in our own way pray or reflect on those who serve in our military and our peacekeeping forces and their families, who, in so doing, afford us the privilege of serving as democratically elected representatives.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers, and I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Merci. M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire les étudiants de l'école Frère Antoine. The students are from a French immersion school in the Catholic school system located in the Tipaskan neighbourhood of Mill Woods. They are here participating in School at the Legislature this week, and I hope their Monday morning has been off to a great start so far. We have 26 students with us and their teacher, Georgette Alwan. They are in our members' gallery, and I would like all of the students to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Bonjour.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to recognize guests who are seated in the members' gallery, who are here from the policy, special projects, and communications unit in the Department of Health. These staff and this unit work hard to develop operational Alberta health care insurance plan policy according to government legislation and act as a liaison with federal, provincial, and territorial governments to optimize and uphold our interprovincial agreements. I'm proud to recognize the work they do behind the scenes to support the health care system in making lives better for Albertans. I now invite Ekua Affum, Jan Robertson, Sharon Romanowski, and Lorraine Smart to please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Secondly, I have additional guests who are here today from the Spina Bifida and Hydrocephalus Association of Northern Alberta, who are seated, again, in the members' gallery. They work to provide the best possible health and quality of life for those living with spina bifida and hydrocephalus through education, support, and advocacy, and I want to thank them for their advocacy, dedication, and partnership with our government on this work. Their support and compassion are essential to the health of our communities. I ask that they rise or wave if they're unable to: Cindy Smith, Nathan Smith, Danielle Schmidt, Alexandra Karatairis, Sean Bouffard, and Ken Godbeer. If there are any others, please join me in recognizing them in the gallery.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce the Estigoy family, who own and operate GoldenBucks bakery in the La Perle community. Earlier this session I had the opportunity to share their story. After being laid off in 2016, Evan and his wife, Edna, turned to their passion of baking and cooking and to their Filipino heritage for inspiration. Today the Estigoys shared an update with me that they have been offered the opportunity to produce their delicious empanadas at the Food Processing Development Centre in Leduc and have also expanded distribution into Manitoba. Congratulations to them. I ask Edna, Evan, Erin, and Elie Estigoy to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to all members of the Assembly a guest from the most humble constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Ms Cheryl Purpur. Cheryl Purpur is a constituent. She has a background in special education. She did groundbreaking work in the field of special education and has been a consultant with Alberta social services in the past. For eight years she's advocated to the Alberta government to change the regulations regarding service dogs. I'm pleased to be part of a government that finally got that work done. She wants to make special mention of her relationship with the hon. David Russell, former Deputy Premier of Alberta, for guiding her in how to advocate to the government on this very important issue. With her today is her dog companion, Scarlet O'Hara, who carries a number of titles: best puppy in special show and grand Canadian champion. I'm sure that she's a very good girl. I want all members of the Assembly to please give the warm welcome of this Assembly to Cheryl and her pet, Scarlet.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Canadian Armed Forces Day

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm honoured to mark Canadian Armed Forces Day, which occurred on Sunday, June 3. In my role as Alberta's liaison to the Canadian Armed Forces I've been privileged to meet with serving members of the Canadian Armed Forces, veterans, and cadets. I have always been impressed by the remarkable sense of duty, outstanding professionalism, and the sacrifices that they have made and continue to make to defend the values that we cherish.

Alberta is home to the Canadian 3rd Division, the largest military division in Canada. Headquartered out of the Edmonton Garrison, it commands from Thunder Bay to Victoria and north to Yukon. Tens of thousands of regular and reserve CAF members, civilians, and their families lives and work throughout Alberta. In Canada and around the world, whether restoring peace and security in conflict zones or providing relief in response to natural disasters, we know that we can count on the sense of duty and unwavering dedication of our women and men in uniform.

It is also a time to recognize the greatest supporters of our Canadian Armed Forces, their families. Their efforts behind the scenes often go unrecognized. Canadian Armed Forces Day is a time to recognize them, too. Yesterday the annual Loops for the Troops at Edmonton's Military Family Resource Centre on the base raised money for the MFRC. Participants have raised more than $120,000 over the past decade. It allows the MFRC to provide programs and services that enhance the strength and resiliency of our military families.

It gives me great pleasure to join with all Albertans in offering our sincere thanks for your outstanding service. My thoughts also turn to those that are no longer with us and to their loved ones. I know I speak on behalf of all in expressing the utmost respect and appreciation for our military personnel and for their families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:40 Off-highway Vehicle Users' Backcountry Access

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, due to circumstances, I didn't have any opportunities as a kid to embrace the freedom of the backcountry that we could actually see from where I lived. Since becoming an adult, though, I have spent many decades enjoying the Livingstone Range. My family spent many summers random camping out there, and I learned to leave it better than I found it. Admittedly, there are some people that use this beautiful area, then leave their garbage strewn around for the next responsible camper to pick up. It's a minority of campers that act this way, but I believe it's something that can be fixed.

For the last 10 years I've been riding a quad or side-by-side on trails in the areas of Dutch Creek, the Oldman, and Racehorse. Those that I ride with respect the area and stay out of creeks and off areas that don't have trails and certainly stay away from wetland areas, but admittedly there are some that don't. Have things gotten out of hand with regard to OHVs back there? Maybe. But maybe they haven't either. Maybe it's a small percentage that have abused the area while the majority of responsible users have been ignored and lumped in with the irresponsible.

Federal and provincial governments have partnered with and given grants to organizations like the Quad Squad down south for many years. They and other OHV groups have spent thousands of volunteer hours in stewardship of the trails, education of users, and construction of bridges over creeks and streams that are of concern. It seems so short sighted to take it all away. The area needs a balance so that all Albertans can enjoy it. In this government's eye the pendulum has swung too far one way, but this same government is determined to swing it too far the other way. Isn't there something in the middle that works for everyone? My constituents have said this: the best path forward is to ensure the existing laws and get rid of the troublemakers. Strict enforcement.

Responsible users are being punished here. It's up to everyone, including government, to make sure that users now and in the future get a chance to recreate in these areas responsibly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

East Town Get Down Calgary Music Festival

Ms Luff: Thank you. On May 26 I had the opportunity to attend an incredible new music festival in the heart of east Calgary, the East Town Get Down. This festival brought over 70 bands to eight venues along International Avenue and hosted over 1,000 fans. It was copresented by the Major Minor Music Project and the International Avenue BRZ. Over 100 volunteers went above and beyond to ensure the success of this festival. It's inspiring when people come together. Each gives so much more in collaboration.

The festival focused on inclusion. Seven of the eight venues were all ages, and the music ranged from hip hop to punk rock to heavy metal, soul, and singer-songwriter. There was also an indigenous resilience in music showcase featuring traditional group Eya-Hey Nakoda and a hip hop duo from Vancouver, the Snotty Nose Rez Kids. Also, the price point made it possible for anybody to attend, with wristbands going for only $30.

The venues were eclectic and a true representation of everything International Avenue has to offer: the back lot of Fuse 33 makerspace, Paradise Lanes bowling alley, Jane Bond BBQ, the Border Crossing Pub, and three Ethiopian restaurants – Fassil's, Ensira, and TG juice – because it's not a party in east Calgary without injera.

Highlights of the night for me included the Tamil Calgarian hip hop duo Cartel Madras; teenage rockers with my favourite name ever, Gratuitous Platypus; and the Edmonton 11-piece funk-punk ensemble Klusterfunk, who are amazing. You should go see them.

Everyone I spoke with had an amazing time, with folks from Forest Lawn commenting on how proud they were to have this in their neighbourhood and folks from elsewhere in Calgary talking about the experience of finding new venues and new bands they'd never heard before.

I have so much appreciation for the International Avenue BRZ team for the great work they've done in Forest Lawn building an exciting, vibrant, and safe neighbourhood. The people, communities, and businesses I see every day make me proud to live in east Calgary. Amazing things are happening in Forest Lawn, and I urge everyone to come visit and to mark the last weekend in May on your calendar for next year to come to the East Town Get Down.

Thank you.

Parental Choice in Education

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, Airdrie is a vibrant community, home to many families with school-aged children, my family, too. Some of the most important and difficult decisions that parents make in the course of raising their children are decisions pertaining to their education. I'm proud of the freedom that parents have in this province when it comes to these decisions, whether they end up pursuing public, private, charter, or home-based education. Parents know their children and their needs better than anyone else.

Since I was elected, three years ago, I've been proud to work alongside my UCP colleagues supporting parental choice in education. Unfortunately, this NDP government has made several decisions that have prompted parents to reach out to me with concerns that the government is undermining our education system. For example, I received numerous calls from Airdrie's home-schooling community when the NDP abruptly shut down the province's largest home-school program. This left thousands of students hanging and resulted in a messy court dispute. The NDP also changed school busing fees for the worse, and they brought in a costly carbon tax, that schools need to divert funds to pay for.

The Rocky View school board recently had to make a difficult decision on how to address a $1 million transportation shortfall caused by this NDP government's policies.

Moreover, the NDP government announced in 2016 that they are rewriting our school curriculum for all grades and all subject areas. The government has been less than transparent about this process, and Albertans have reason to be uneasy that the NDP are using this as an opportunity to infuse the curriculum with their ideologies.

Mr. Speaker, I will continue to celebrate and defend choice in education in this province. I will continue to stand up for the loving moms and dads raising their children the way that they think is right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Rural Economic Development

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost every day we hear the opposition members give their version of reality, and that version almost always contains doom and gloom. Maybe if they looked beyond their own narrative, they would see the evidence of things going well in our rural areas, evidence like what was said at a recent Wetaskiwin Regional Chamber of Commerce meeting, May 2, and reported in the Leduc-Wetaskiwin Pipestone Flyer.

The county of Wetaskiwin reeve, Kathy Rooyakkers, spoke about the 284 development permits, valued at $30 million; 14 new business approvals; and the G3 grain terminal, worth millions of dollars, which will create jobs and benefit farmers. Also, she mentioned that $1.8 million of our government funding is provided for work on a bridge that had been a concern for years and that the Pigeon Lake waste-water system's second phase would be starting soon, a project also funded with $12.8 million through our government's water for life program.

At the same time, Mayor Tony Wadsworth of Millet spoke in glowing terms about how great the town's last year, 2017, had been, including the new Lakeside Meadows development for 1,200 new homes, the annexation of industrial land from the county, and the potential for new industrial development.

The mayor of Wetaskiwin, Tyler Gandam, spoke about a business retention and expansion program that was meeting with success and that its main street and Jubilee park projects were completed and that the new fire department training facility was operating, an important plus for the city.

Again and again, Mr. Speaker, we hear optimism from the people who run our rural towns and municipalities. We know that total farm cash receipts hit a record high in 2017. We know that our deficit is going down. We know that the Trans Mountain expansion will help our economy and our energy sector expand even more. I, for one, am proud of rural Alberta, its dynamic people, and its potential.

Thank you.

Port of Churchill Oil and Gas Transport Project

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given the deteriorating trade relationships between Canada and the U.S.A. the UCP caucus is committed to exploring alternative market access, pipelines or no pipelines. That's why last week I travelled to Winnipeg and Churchill, Manitoba, to meet Premier Pallister's team and the locals to discuss market access via the port of Churchill. I'm most pleased that there are not one but two private-sector offers to purchase the Hudson Bay Railway and the port of Churchill from OmniTrax.

The first one is a letter of intent between Alberta-based iChurchill and the Peguis First Nation. The second is an agreement in principle between the consortium led by Toronto-based Fairfax and the First Nation businesses. But, Mr. Speaker, it appears that Ottawa is meddling in the transaction between private enterprises, again picking winners and losers and favouring one proponent over another. It means another year will be missed repairing the railway and the shipping window. No matter whom OmniTrax decides to sell to, Ottawa needs to act fairly, impartially, swiftly to keep their promises to Manitoba's First Nations.

The port of Churchill is two days shorter sailing time to going over the St. Lawrence to Europe. Alberta shippers of grain, canola, pulses, and forest products will be interested in exploring this gateway to the world, but it is the energy products that will provide the new sources of revenue to keep the port and the railway open and sustained. Alberta stands ready to meet the world's growing energy demand for petroleum in 2018 and beyond.

Canada's current reputation is that we can't get anything done. Let's prove it wrong. Let's get the railway repaired and get moving our exports.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Eagle Spirit Pipeline Project

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a consortium of First Nations groups proposing an alternative coastal pipeline, called the Eagle Spirit project, that would take Alberta oil to the northwest B.C. coast and from there to global markets. Will the government of Alberta agree with me that this is an excellent initiative, and will the government reach out to the Eagle Spirit proponents to seek ways in which we could help them with this nascent proposal to get market access for Alberta oil under aboriginal ownership?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, this is an interesting project. Our Minister of Energy has been in meetings with the consortium, and we certainly are interested in the work that they're proposing. This won't back down on the fact that we've never been as close to tidewater as we are today and the success that we've seen with Trans Mountain, especially last week, with the significant signal and the investment by the federal government. We're proud of the work we've done to access new markets, and that will continue.

Mr. Kenney: I'd like to thank the hon. the Deputy Premier for her comments and the government's apparent interest. The challenge, however, Mr. Speaker, is that the Premier told us in this place a few weeks ago that she indicated to Prime Minister Trudeau that this government was only seeking one coastal pipeline, not two. It seems to me that two is better than one or none.

But, Mr. Speaker, the real problem is Bill C-48, the federal bill that would seek to impose a tanker ban on the northern B.C. coast, that would kill this vital aboriginal initiative, the Eagle Spirit pipeline. Will the government agree with me and the proponents of Eagle Spirit that the federal government should reconsider the legislation banning tanker traffic on the B.C. coast?

Ms Hoffman: The real problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the member opposite keeps cheering for Trans Mountain to fail instead of getting onboard and supporting it. Canadians are behind Trans Mountain because they know it will help put people to work, 15,000 people, and lead to billions annually for roads, schools, and hospitals. National support for this project rose 11 per cent from April to May. We aren't going to back down on the good work that's happening with Trans Mountain. It's as close as we've gotten. We know that the member opposite had nine years in Ottawa and failed to do it, but under our Premier this project will get built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. the minister's answer had precisely nothing to do with the question I asked, which was about the proposed Eagle Spirit aboriginal pipeline project to take Alberta oil to the northern B.C. coast. This is a wonderful initiative of our First Nations communities to pursue economic opportunity, allowing their people to move from poverty to prosperity while allowing Albertans to get a full, fair price for our energy products. So I would invite the minister to try to answer this question. Will she agree on behalf of the government with the concerns expressed by these aboriginal leaders about federal Bill C-48 and the tanker ban?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I absolutely committed to and will again is that the Minister of Energy has met with this organization. So has the Minister of Indigenous Relations. You know what? On Trans Mountain 43 First Nation communities along the pipeline support that project. They support it because they know that it balances and reaches the appropriate environmental protections and supports jobs and economic prosperity. With regard to the comments from the member opposite, fighting for Alberta's interests and delivering results will always be our Premier's focus. We know the leader has more interest in promoting himself than he does Alberta.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Did you see what just happened there, Mr. Speaker? A serious question, a policy related to an aboriginal initiative; the response was partisan and personal attacks: par for the course.

Pipeline Approval

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, there's a motion on the Order Paper, Motion 505, that would seek to call on the federal government to respect Alberta's jurisdiction over the regulation of upstream oil and gas emissions and not to regulate pipelines for downstream emissions. Does the government agree that the federal government should respect the provision of the Constitution which gives exclusive jurisdiction over the regulation of oil and gas production to the province of Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, debating motions in this House doesn't get a pipeline built. If it did, we would have done that long ago. Our climate leadership plan already addresses upstream emissions, and we've been clear that downstream emissions do not apply to pipelines. The opposition leader is just trying to score cheap political points, but his own strategy to get this project done is about as credible as his grassroots guarantee. It looks a lot like Astroturf to me.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, another nonpartisan policy question with a series of partisan and personal attacks.

Let me try this again, Mr. Speaker. Motion 505 really addresses the problem with Energy East, where it was cancelled because the National Energy Board announced that it was going to begin regulating up- and downstream carbon emissions indirectly associated with the pipeline. Does this provincial government continue to support federal Bill C-69, which would make it even more difficult to get approval for future pipelines?

The Speaker: One moment. Hon. members, I just want to make a reference to both sides of the House. This is with respect to an item that will be dealt with later in the agenda, and I would caution that you avoid the . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order.

Ms Hoffman: With regard to C-69, Mr. Speaker, we share the industry's concerns and are working – we're fighting the federal government – to address them. In fact, the environment minister is in Ottawa or has been in Ottawa very recently to direct the federal counterparts on this issue. We believe that the new rules must not stand in the way of developing our resources and getting our products to market. Putting words in our mouths won't work, hon. member. We certainly have a record, and we're proud to stand on it.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, just for the record the question was on Bill C-69, which is at the federal Parliament, not this Legislature, but it impacts very directly on our constitutional jurisdiction, jurisdiction that was fought for and won by former Premier Lougheed in 1982. If the provincial government does not support the new federal pipeline regulation, Bill C-69, does it oppose the bill? Does it support it, or does it oppose it? I hope the answer is not a series of partisan attacks but an actual answer.

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear that there are a number of components within it that our Minister of Energy and minister of environment are standing up to Ottawa and pushing on continuously because we stand up for the people who elected us here in Alberta. I know the member wants to debate federal legislation. He had that opportunity. He gave up his seat. He said he was coming back to Alberta for a number of reasons, but it doesn't feel like he came back for Albertans. It feels like he came back for his own interests.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, sadly, my prediction was proven true. It was a series of partisan and personal attacks. The Premier, the Deputy Premier could of course clarify whether the government supports or opposes Bill C-69, which has a huge impact on this province.

Full-day Kindergarten in Calgary

Mr. Kenney: On a different matter, Mr. Speaker, I must correct myself. A month ago I said that the Calgary board of education was spending $1 million on the carbon tax. It turns out, according to new documents just released, that they're spending $3 million on the carbon tax while cutting $1 million in kindergarten funding. Is the government pleased that their carbon tax is resulting in a reduction of access to full-day kindergarten in Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we are very proud of the investments that we're making in education, which includes funding for enrolment in four straight budgets, plus now a $77 million classroom improvement fund, which is hiring teachers and support staff and making sure that we make life better for our kids in our classrooms as opposed to the cuts that the members opposite are proposing.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary board of education released its Investing in the Future: Facilities document two weeks ago, which says, "We anticipate the annual cost of the carbon levy to be over $3 million and growing.” In April they announced that they’re reducing $1 million of expenditures on full-day kindergarten. Does the Alberta NDP government not understand that this massive tax imposed on the school board is resulting directly in service cuts for full-day kindergarten in Calgary? If not, why don’t they understand this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the member opposite should read the news because, in fact, the Calgary board of education is investing in full-day kindergarten, as they have done for many, many years. They’re doing it again this year. You know, this idea of somehow putting fissures between government: we work closely with the Calgary board of education on their facilities, on improving their facilities – we’ve built dozens of new schools there that are very energy efficient – and focusing on not just reducing carbon footprint but actually saving money.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the minister, I think, is misinformed. The Calgary board of education issued a report earlier this year which said, “Full-day kindergarten will continue to be offered but the scope will be reduced” as they seek to reduce $1 million of expenditures. It just so happens that they’re spending three times that on the NDP carbon tax, $3 million, according to their most recent budget document. Why did this provincial government decide to punish school boards simply for heating their schools and undergoing their daily operations in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems like the member opposite is trying to practise his closure policies that would certainly come true if they ever formed the government, which I sure hope never does happen. You can’t just say that they are clearly closing programs. In fact, CBE is carrying on with their full-day kindergarten program. They’re very proud of the results that they get, and we help to fund and support that every step of the way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mental Health Supports for Front-line Health Workers

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mental health supports are vital in any workplace, but they’re especially important for high-stress, front-line public health care jobs like EMS. Albertans need to be able to trust that the paramedics showing up at the door in a medical emergency are ready to give it a hundred per cent. As legislators we are responsible for public health care, so we need to do everything we can to ensure that front-line health care workers have the supports that they need. To the Minister of Health: what has your government done to improve access and awareness of mental health supports for front-line health care workers?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are incredibly proud of all the work that our paramedics and all EMS professionals do every day. Just last week we celebrated them and their contributions. One of the things we had a chance to do was meet with some of the staff over at the Alberta Health building and meet with the service dog that actually works to provide additional supports to people on the scene of horrific events as well as to paramedics who are doing the follow-up after. The path to mental readiness is a big piece, and we’re continuing to invest in it and in our front-line workers instead of moving for deep cuts, that would certainly cause additional stress for front-line workers.

Mr. Fraser: A report in 2015 on the mental health and morale of AHS showed that there was a lot of work that needed to be done to address gaps in mental health support. We’ve learned that another report has been prepared, but that has yet to be released by Alberta Health Services. We need to see that report and evaluate it to make sure that the measures this government has taken have been effective and what our next steps will be. To the same minister: if you’re confident that the measures your government has taken have been effective, will you direct AHS to release these reports they currently have on the state of mental health support in the health care system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We certainly know how important it is to provide the right supports and empathy and understanding for everyone who’s dealing with mental health situations in their lives. Of course, that stands true for our front-line health care workers, including paramedics. I have to say that many of them that I met recently either had the semicolon on their hand or talked about mental health in a very open way, and they said that it creates a greater opportunity for them to speak to their patients and to their co-workers about it as well. We stand by paramedics, and that’s why we’ve increased investment by $23 million to ensure that we can expand supports for them moving forward as well.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Front-line health care workers face an incredible amount of stress day in and day out, but unfortunately these issues only come to attention in the wake of a tragedy. We need to do better. We need to take steps to safeguard the mental health of our health care workers before more lives are lost. To the same minister: will you commit to reviewing the mental health supports and guidelines of Alberta Health Services either by referring them to committee or striking an all-party working group to make sure that paramedics are safe?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I’m proud of the work that we are doing as a government and continue to do. We regularly meet with Alberta Health Services to discuss items just like the one the member just mentioned. What helps arguably the most is ensuring that you give the right supports, including front-line resources, to folks who are working in the profession. That’s why I’m proud that our government is investing $23 million more to help address some of the pressures that paramedics and all EMS providers are facing on the front lines and why we will stand up and won’t give in to the calls from the opposition for deep cuts. We stand with our front-line workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Affordable Child Care

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ve heard from constituents in Edmonton-McClung that child care is a major concern, a huge financial burden every month. Given that child care for one child can cost as much as a mortgage payment and given that many parents have to make difficult decisions about child care, to the Minister of Children’s Services: how are the early learning and child care centres making a difference in the lives of children and their families across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children’s Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's true. In Edmonton parents can expect to pay nearly $1,000 per month per child. Even most families that can afford child care can't really afford child care. Conservative governments have done little to help in the past, but the good news is that the monthly bills have changed for 6,000 new $25-a-day spaces. Parents tell me that it is life changing. We're helping parents make good decisions for their families and Alberta's economy.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that there are hundreds of daycares throughout Alberta, to the Minister of Children's Services once more: what kind of applications are you looking for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government wanted to demonstrate what universal $25-a-day child care could look like. Through an expression-of-interest process we found trusted nonprofits with proven track records. The YMCA, for instance, now has $25-a-day child care at 25 locations across Alberta. That's more than 1,700 total spaces at the Y, including 195 new spaces and 247 licensed spaces they haven't been able to staff until now. In the member's own riding the Jamie Platz YMCA now has 48 affordable spaces.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that this program does not come with an income test, what should I tell parents in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung about how the early learning and child care program is helping those who most need it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're already helping newcomers, military families, and hundreds of moms hoping to re-enter the workforce. We're adding curriculum improvements to help kids learn and grow, and we're working to ensure vulnerable families have access to other supports. This pilot is allowing the Jamie Platz YMCA to add flexible, part-time child care plus a family resource worker. Affordable child care is a priority for families, and we believe that every family deserves affordable child care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

McMurray Métis Land Purchase

Mr. Horne: Last week the government announced the sale of 9.17 acres of land to the McMurray Métis. As a member of the Métis Nation of Alberta I was very excited to see the government working with the McMurray Métis to make strides in our reconciliation with our indigenous peoples. To the Minister of Infrastructure: can you tell the members of this Assembly why this sale was so important and what it will achieve?

Ms Jansen: Thank you to the member. When the McMurray Métis shared their vision to purchase a piece of land for a cultural centre and a place to celebrate Métis culture, I was very impressed with their plan. The association's plans for the cultural centre include an elder gathering space, a community meeting room, an outdoor healing centre, a youth room, and educational spaces and offices. This land sale is in the spirit of reconciliation. It also supports the McMurray Métis in participating in the rebuild and recovery of Wood Buffalo.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you. Now, I know that my family has historically had some connections to that land. Can the minister tell the House what the history of this site has been?

Ms Jansen: Thank you to the member. The McMurray Métis have been leasing this site from the provincial government for decades. All of the structures on the site were destroyed by the wildfire in 2016. This quote from Gail Gallupe, the president of the McMurray Métis, sums up the history.

The sale of the land we have been leasing from the Government of Alberta was a long-term goal of the McMurray Métis. It was something that we had requested and couldn't achieve over the course of seven previous governments... This government delivered and we are extremely happy.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for sharing the comments from the president of the McMurray Métis about just how responsive this government has been. To the same minister: can you please elaborate on why this is such a priority?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to be on this side of the House with a cabinet and a Premier that take reconciliation seriously. At a recent UCP convention racist comments were made without a reprimand from the leader, who is actually not even listening right now even though a few minutes ago he professed to be very interested in indigenous rights. Let's not forget that the leader's protege in the federal Conservatives high-fived another Conservative after voting against the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. Even though he's not even paying attention, he's certainly...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Government Announcements

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, last week this government made a b-u-y by-election spending announcement in Fort McMurray. This week it announced it will open the Sylvan Lake ambulatory care centre with a ribbon-cutting ceremony, surprise, surprise, the site of an upcoming by-election. The Premier used to speak strongly against these sorts of by-election announcements. This is just one other example of the NDP's sliding scale on ethics. Why did the NDP oppose these shady ethics in opposition but now seem totally okay with them?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I have to clarify some things here, Mr. Speaker. We announced these projects well over a year ago, when your members who are no longer in this House were still sitting in this House. We invest in communities throughout Alberta. We invest in building long-term care in Fort McMurray, we invest in building urgent care in Sylvan Lake, and I won't apologize for investing in ridings that your members used to represent. We are moving forward on protecting and improving health care throughout this province while members opposite would cut it. Musing about 20 per cent cuts? Not under this government.

Mr. Cooper: Given that a mere six months ago this government passed Bill 32, which placed restrictions on advertising or publishing information during a by-election that “disproportionately affects voters in the electoral division in which the byelection is taking place,” my question to the Premier is one that she asked in 2014 when speaking about by-elections: “to regain integrity and trust with Alberta voters, will [you] commit to amending our elections law so that this can’t ever happen again, and if [you] won’t commit to it, why won’t [you]?”

Ms Hoffman: Well, thanks for that trip down memory lane. At the time the Premier made that comment, there was a sitting member of cabinet who wasn’t elected who decided to do political announcements in the by-election period in the riding he was running for a seat in, Mr. Speaker. We certainly have fixed that. We announced these projects a year ago. We’re moving forward on them. We aren’t in the by-election period yet. It hasn’t been called. We know that members have resigned, but we aren’t in the by-election period. We’re very proud that we’ve amended the laws to reflect that.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that Albertans don’t care if the by-election hasn’t been called today but that it’ll likely be called tomorrow – they know that you’ve been caught stacking the deck in your favour; that clearly disproportionately affects voters in the electoral district in which a by-election is about to be called, according to your newly passed Bill 32 – and given that you’ve been caught bending the rules in your favour just minutes prior to the actual announcement of the by-election and given that every single day we see a new questionable ethics story from this government, the question is: why won’t this government follow . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: The questions I’ve been asked over and over and over again are: “Why when Conservatives were in government and we had Conservative MLAs in these ridings did our urgent care not get built in Sylvan Lake? Why didn’t our long-term care get built in Fort McMurray?” Mr. Speaker, our government made good on these communities. We moved these projects forward while members of your own caucus at the time were lobbying for them. We’re proud that we’re moving forward on these projects, and we aren’t going to back down. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have been with each other for many weeks now, and my sense is that that is leading to a certain tone and anxiety in the House, which I would hope that you would keep in check.

Amazon Distribution Centre in Balzac

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, at the start of the year the Premier expressed disappointment that Calgary was not on the short list of communities that Amazon was considering for their second North American headquarters. However, it was announced last fall that Amazon would still be opening a 600,000 square foot distribution centre in Balzac. Construction was to be completed this year. Some residents are getting anxious because they have not yet heard when Amazon is actually moving in. To the minister of economic development: are you able to state unequivocally that the Amazon fulfillment centre in the Nose Creek Business Park is still a go, and when is it set to open?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m very proud of the work that our government has done and continues to do on a daily basis attracting key international investments back here into our province. We know that Alberta is the best province in Canada to invest in. We maintain the lowest taxes. We have the highest talent, the most skilled workers, incredible postsecondary institutions, a high quality of life. Businesses from around the world see Alberta as a key province to invest in. The Amazon fulfillment centre is going ahead.

Mrs. Pitt: Now, Mr. Speaker, given that it’s been more than half a year since the announcement was made – so this is a fair question – and given that this project has received great community support and is something the Official Opposition supports and given that this government has previously declared victory on job-creating projects the taxpayers then had to buy to prevent them from being cancelled, Minister, what assurances can you offer us that this government’s policies won’t send Amazon running away, too?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I will remind the hon. member that Amazon is one of many companies that have chosen to invest in Alberta. We have Cavendish Farms making the largest investment in the company’s history and in Lethbridge’s history, in that area in southern Alberta. We have Champion Petfoods. We have Swoop. We have Google DeepMind, that is investing in the AI lab here in Edmonton because Alberta, Edmonton, is the third-best artificial intelligence community in the world. Why is that? Because we continue to invest and diversify our economy, something the opposition . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that investment has been fleeing Alberta, evident with the pipeline, under this NDP government’s watch and that there are still many unemployed people in Airdrie and area that are still looking for stable jobs and given that commercial property vacancies in southern Alberta are at an all-time high and given that the carbon tax and minimum wage increases are shutting down small businesses – Airdrie residents have a right to remain skeptical about future investments based on this NDP government’s broken promises – Minister, what specifically have you changed to give investors certainty and to stop their flight from our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, there isn’t a flight; there’s actually an influx of new capital in our province. That’s, first and foremost, because our government listened to industry. We listened to the Chambers of Commerce and introduced two different tax credits, tax credits which the member opposite, who’s asking me, actually voted in favour of when we were on Bill 30 a year and a half ago. But under the new leader suddenly the opposition doesn’t believe in the tax credits and wants to kill these programs, that have resulted in billions of dollars of investment in our province, have provided an opportunity for Albertans to invest in their own backyard, and are helping to diversify our economy.

Occupational Health and Safety Code Changes

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, no one can argue that Alberta businesses haven’t had a very difficult time during this recession. That’s why I was left scratching my head after reading a recent news release from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. According to the release on June 1, just three days ago, penalties for the new occupational health and safety rules came into effect. What's surprising is that 84 per cent of Alberta businesses feel that they have not received adequate information about the new safety rules. To the Minister of Labour: do you feel that businesses have had adequate notification on these new rules?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud that just last Friday, on June 1, our new occupational health and safety rules, that will better protect workers and employers, came into effect. This is a change, particularly given that a major review of this had not happened in 40 years. To support employers, we've made information available online. We've also been doing in-person sessions with anyone who requests, whether it's four people or 250. The occupational health and safety contact centre is available for anyone who wants to call and ask questions. We will continue to support employers as they adapt to these new legislative rules.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that businesses are saying that the minister has not given them adequate time to read about let alone digest and implement these new changes, will you be willing to release timelines, and if not, will you take our job creators' advice and delay implementation for six months?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. These rules are in place today. We are interested in working with employers to help them adhere to the new legislation to make sure that the rights of workers – the right to know about hazards, the right to participate in health and safety at their work site, and the right to refuse work – can be protected. We have also implemented rules that will protect workers from bullying and harassment, things that employers have asked us to assist them with. Any employer who would like further assistance in implementing this can download example plans from our website or can contact us for assistance. These rules are good for Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is unwilling to delay the implementation of the new OHS rules, will the minister at least commit to the members of this House and to concerned business owners across Alberta that OHS offices will be judicious in their writing of fines for another six months, until businesses have had time to digest and implement these new rules?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The question is misleading. Occupational health and safety officers have always worked with employers. When they come to a work site, they are there as a partner in health and safety. I can tell you that Alberta has some fantastic employers, who care about the health and safety of their workers, so it is a great partnership. What is likely to happen when an occupational health and safety officer visits is a conversation, perhaps an order asking them to follow a plan or to create a procedure. Our officers have never and will not use punitive fines. Rather, we will be working with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

2:20 Highway 3 Oldman River Bridge Repair

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 3 is an important corridor in the Lethbridge region. To the Minister of Transportation: what is the cost of the current project to repair the bridge over the Oldman River in Lethbridge?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The current estimated cost of the project to repair the bridge is $4.2 million. We want to make sure that our infrastructure is maintained and that it's safe. We want to make sure that industry can get their products to their markets and families can get home safely and to work safely. The project to rehabilitate the bridge over the Oldman River in Lethbridge will make sure that the bridge is safe and reliable for another 15 to 20 years.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what is the cost of adding the third eastbound lane in five years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a rough estimate. The estimated cost could be up to a hundred million dollars, and that would include changes to the Bridge Drive interchange. It would take a considerable amount of time. We're working to make sure that the bridge is safe for the next 15 to 20 years or until a widened bridge is needed.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why is the government proceeding now with restoration of the 1960 bridge rather than implementing the recommendations of the 2009 AE engineering report to enhance the Bridge Drive on-ramp and widen the eastbound bridge to three lanes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and for that question. The simple answer is that traffic volumes have not risen except slightly since that report was written. Replacing and widening the bridge would cost up to a hundred million dollars, and the timing of construction will depend on available funding and need.

Access to Information

Mr. Loewen: Transparency and openness are critical to good government, and the people of this province deserve nothing less. Unfortunately, under this government these values have all too often been pushed aside. An affidavit from one sheriff has shown us that at least some sheriffs have been internally directed to delete their e-mails to avoid FOIP requests. Quote: delete everything you have because if someone FOIPs it, nothing is there; you can't FOIP what you don't have. End quote. To the Minister of Justice: is avoiding transparency and accountability standard practice in your ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I'm not familiar with the specific situation the member references, but it certainly isn't our policy to avoid transparency. In fact, the biggest challenge in the Justice ministry when we took government, coming into it, was the fact that we had very insufficient staff to handle the number of FOIP requests we were getting. In order to clear that backlog, we've been hiring individuals to make sure that we can process those requests and make sure that we are delivering the transparency that the people of Alberta deserve.

Mr. Loewen: Given that this is not the only example of wilful suppression of transparency within the Ministry of Justice and given that in relation to the same case of bullying FOIPed e-mails show that Ministry of Justice officials, quote, were going to share the full report in the beginning, that we just decided not to, end quote, to the minister: is this aversion to transparency something inherent in the bureaucracy, or is it a result of a directive from political leadership?

Ms Ganley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's certainly the case that our government would never direct anyone to be less transparent. Certainly, we've taken a number of steps, including ensuring that we have the appropriate number of staff to process those requests, to increase transparency as well as a number of other legislative changes. Again, it's often the case that these things coming from the opposition are not completely grounded in fact, so I'm absolutely happy to look into the situation and get back to the House.

Mr. Loewen: Given that in just this case there are two clear examples of government employees going out of their way to avoid accountability and given that this hurts Albertans like the sheriff, who was simply trying to access records from his own file, and given that this government was already investigated by the Privacy Commissioner for the deletion of more than 800,000 e-mails and given that we received a FOIP last week that was outstanding for more than three years, not to mention many exceeding one year, can the government tell us what actions they are taking to deal with this culture of secrecy and lack of accountability that is growing under their watch?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe that government should be open and transparent. That's why we're taking this issue seriously. We've improved turnaround times for FOIP requests, and we're proactively sharing more information than has ever been shared in the history of the government of Alberta. We're very proud of the work that we're doing, and we're continuing to do it.

The real question, Mr. Speaker, is why the Leader of the Opposition won't even disclose his campaign contributors nor why they intend on keeping their election plans extremely secret.

Time-share Lease Consumer Protection

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, the Consumer Protection Act applies to unfair business practices if the supplier or consumer is a resident of Alberta. Northmont Resort Properties Ltd. is an Alberta-based and registered company dealing in resort time-share with Alberta residents, with its head office in Calgary. In a February 7, 2018, letter to my constituent an assistant deputy minister concluded that the matters of concern to him and hundreds of other Alberta consumers were "outside the mandate and jurisdiction of Service Alberta's Consumer Investigations Unit." To the Minister of Service Alberta: what can I tell my constituent about your apparent lack of interest and failure to protect consumers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this is the first conversation that I've had with the hon. member with respect to this particular issue. I'd be happy to follow up with him on this specific issue and get him information, though he has not personally contacted me for information outside of question period.

Thank you.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This follows on many, many letters from my constituent.

Given that the company referenced sells time-share lease contracts to Alberta residents – transactions are conducted in Alberta, sent to the consumer by supply representatives in Alberta, with offers and incentives also taking place in Alberta – and given that this would clearly indicate that the Alberta Consumer Protection Act should apply to these transactions and given the company in question has allegedly engaged in unfair practices as defined in the act, again to the minister: how can you say that the consumer concerns expressed do not fall clearly within both your jurisdiction and your mandate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. We take consumer protection very seriously. That's why I've overhauled the prior Fair Trading Act to make it the Consumer Protection Act. I've done a lot of work on this front. The member is now putting words in my mouth that I never said. I think that's very untoward behaviour, not appropriate for this House. Furthermore, I would appreciate it, if the member is getting letters, that he actually transmit them to my office so that I can help his constituents, instead of using them for cheap political points.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, many letters came from your office, and many, many came to your office.

Mr. Speaker, given that the Consumer Protection Act would apply if a company was engaging in unfair practices such as performing unilateral amendments to contracts without the approval of Alberta consumers or imposing cancellation provisions that were not in the original contracts and given that if the Alberta government has a law on its books to protect consumers from unfair practices, surely it also has a responsibility to enforce such laws, again to the minister: what justification can you provide for not enforcing the Consumer Protection Act to actually protect Alberta consumers in this case?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, if there's information that the member has, I would be happy to look at it.

Additionally, I'm not sure what he's talking about when he says that I have sent him letters as I have done no such thing. However, Mr. Speaker, I do know some general details about the situation, and to my knowledge this falls under B.C. jurisdiction. Again, if he has issues that he would like to bring to me to actually receive help with instead of trying to achieve cheap political points, I would love to help his constituents.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Rural Crime Reduction

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently received a disturbing first-hand account of how this rural crime epidemic is getting out of hand. Just over a week ago a band of thieves converged on a small community, with no other purpose but to wreak havoc. These perpetrators went on a robbing and destruction spree, the tally of which was over $100,000. Despite repeated calls to the RCMP, hours away they were unable to help. Minister, you recently stated that almost half of the 39 new RCMP are already in place in Alberta. Can you share with us where these members have been stationed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It is absolutely critical to our government and, I think, to all members in this House that all Albertans feel safe in their homes. That's why we're investing in ensuring that we can respond to rural crime. A great many of these individuals are in what are called crime reduction units, which are intended to target exactly what the member is raising. These units are able to focus on prolific offenders who are creating havoc in our communities, and they are already achieving results, as I've illustrated just recently. I'm sure I'll have more to say in just a moment.

2:30

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that over the course of the day these thieves were spotted at various locations, but with the RCMP an extensive time away, they were not to be apprehended and given that sometime over the course of the day they showed up at another farmer's yard and threatened his life over a tank of gasoline and given the community was understandably on edge until they were arrested with the community's help, again I ask: Minister, you continually talk about boots on the ground; of the 39 new RCMP slated for Alberta, how many have been assigned duties in rural Alberta on a permanent basis, and were they actually able to improve . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify, those RCMP officers as announced in the rural crime strategy are all in rural Alberta. Many of those individuals are being put into what we call crime reduction units.

The member has illustrated some incredibly disturbing events. Those are exactly the sorts of events that I've been hearing about and that our MLAs have been hearing about as well. That's why we've taken this proactive step to create these crime reduction units that can target exactly the sorts of prolific offenders that the member raises.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, given that in the incident I just referenced, these perpetrators were out of jail days after, on $3,000 bail, and given that this catch-and-release philosophy is simply compounding this rural crime problem, Minister, when will this government and your ministry get tough on rural crime?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, the episode that the member is illustrating is the same as many episodes that we've heard about from many rural Albertans. That's why we've taken the steps to ensure that we are making the necessary investments in these crime reduction units so that they can gather evidence on these individuals and build a stronger case. This is about proactive policing, about ensuring that we have the requisite number of resources in place to ensure that we can target these offenders, because all Albertans deserve to feel safe in their homes.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Northern Lights Gas Co-op Capacity

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, on March 22 I asked about a very good situation that resulted in a very significant problem in Mackenzie county. It seems the population growth has been so great that it has outstripped the ability of the Northern Lights Gas Co-op to finance the $45 million needed to construct a 65-kilometre second natural gas line in a timely manner. Residents already faced almost a week-long low-pressure emergency this past winter. To the Agriculture and Forestry minister: since March what progress has your government made to help fix this problem?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I've actually been up there and discussed that with Mackenzie county before. We do know that over the last few winters the gas supply has become a vital issue up there with the growth, which is a good thing. We do understand that, you know, the heating fuel in the winter is super important. It's the reason we fund the remote area heating allowance program and why we invest capital grants into gas co-ops. We've been having conversations with the stakeholders and folks in the area, in the region. I know the minister of agriculture has been personally engaging on the issue in conference calls and meetings up there and will continue to do so.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that the government did not budget for any financial assistance for this situation despite knowing about it since at least the end of December and given that the minister said that ministry colleagues would work together to ensure that we do have a plan and that they would have the gas they need, Minister, what other resources have been made available to Mackenzie county to help the Northern Lights Gas Co-op fix this critical infrastructure so that residents can be certain they will have the gas that they need?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Thank you to the member for the question. Together with the co-op and the county we are developing short-term, medium-, and long-term solutions so that northwestern Alberta can continue to grow and prosper, as it has been. We are continuing these conversations, and we are now identifying low-interest financing through AFSC and other sources. We are connecting local stakeholders with federal and provincial agencies that may be able to help and encouraging stakeholders to approach those agencies like Western Economic Diversification Canada or Indigenous Services Canada to understand what's available to them.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that other regions are fighting for improved broadband Internet yet Mackenzie county is being left behind on this basic need that other regions take for granted and given that Mackenzie county has been forced to turn down business proposals because there is not enough natural gas to support the demands of any development, to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what has your department done to look after making sure this basic energy infrastructure is in place for economic growth in Mackenzie county?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, being in Municipal Affairs, everything happens in municipalities. One of my interests is rural broadband and, you know, economic development, gas, and working with the co-ops. This is kind of a crossministry endeavour, I would say, an initiative for one broadband across rural.

For the gas in particular we are working with stakeholders in the region to help enhance the gas network. AltaGas is planning to install two new compressors by November 2018, which I think is really good news. There are also plans to include other compressors in the system to keep pace with the growth over the next 10 years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Filipino Community

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Alberta is home to over 175,000 Filipinos and Filipinas, making up more than 4 per cent of our province's population. That's the second-largest Filipino community in Canada. With over 60,000 Albertans of Filipino descent calling Edmonton home, many of them who live in the constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, I've heard from many of them asking our government to celebrate their contributions to our province. To the Deputy Premier: how is our government recognizing generations of Filipinos enriching Alberta's culture?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: [Remarks in Tagalog] Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I was honoured this past weekend to join Filipino community leaders both in Edmonton and Calgary as our government officially proclaimed June Philippine Heritage Month in Alberta. That means that every June in the future will be a time for Albertans to celebrate the tremendous contributions of generations of Filipinos. Whether it be faith, civic, and cultural contributions, Filipinos make this province a brighter, more caring, and vibrant place to be, and we're proud to work with them to do that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, and thank you to the Deputy Premier for this historic proclamation. I know that many Filipino Albertans across Alberta will be very excited. Given that the Filipino community embraces the values of compassion, hard work, family, and fun, which are values our government shares, to the Deputy Premier: what is our government doing to support Alberta's Filipino community?

Ms Hoffman: Our government knows that family is one of the core tenets of many Filipino Albertans when they talk about why it is that they're here and what they believe is most important moving forward. Mr. Speaker, when I heard from a number of Filipino leaders shortly after election that temporary foreign workers weren't bringing their children to health care facilities because they didn't think they were entitled to, I worked diligently to ensure that that was no longer the case. We're proud that every child who lives in this province has access to health care, whether their parents are here permanently or not. That's one example. We're also investing in families through daycare, education, seniors' care ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that Filipinos run hundreds of organizations that reach out to Albertans of all ages and backgrounds, guided by the values of [Remarks in Tagalog], or empathy and solidarity, to the Deputy Premier: how will our government work with the Filipino community, guided by our shared values, to make life better for all Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: You know, Mr. Speaker, they've taught me a phrase in Tagalog. [Remarks in Tagalog] It means strength and unity. We know that we are stronger when we work together, and it's something that we all believe. When we work together, when we support one another, when we support communities, we have stronger outcomes. One of the things that the members of the Filipino community have raised with me is how disappointed they were when the now Leader of the Opposition was in the federal government that grandparents were no longer able to come and provide child care when their families moved here. That's shameful. We're working with the community to try to unite families and keep them supported and stronger together.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Personal attacks even when I'm not asking the questions, Mr. Speaker. That last comment was untrue.

Canadian Senate Vacancies

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the Hon. Claudette Tardif for her service representing Alberta in the Senate of Canada. She retired in March of this year, so there's a vacancy for Alberta's allotment in the Senate of Canada. Will the government of Alberta agree with me in encouraging the federal government to appoint Mr. Mike Shaikh, who was the third-place finisher in the last Alberta Senate election, in which he received 310,000 votes?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we have removed the election process. Certainly, this is a question, again, that's geared towards federal politics and federal appointments. I understand that the member wants to spend a lot of time discussing federal issues in this House. We're keen on discussing Alberta issues.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Shaikh was elected in an Alberta election, held under an Alberta statute, to represent Alberta in Ottawa in a seat that is now vacant. Does the government agree with the basic principle of democracy insofar as Senators Doug Black and Scott Tannas, the first- and second-place candidates in that election, were appointed to the Senate by Prime Minister Harper? Does she not agree that this precedent should be followed by appointing Mr. Mike Shaikh, who won 310,000 votes in an Alberta election conducted by the government of Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: I'll take this one again, and then I'll turn it to my colleague for democratic renewal. Mr. Speaker, again, this is a federal appointment, not a provincial appointment. I understand the member has spent a great deal of time in Ottawa, but these appointments are made by the federal government. They're the ones that appoint these folks. I understand that you want to discuss federal issues, hon. member, but again I urge you to consider discussing the matters at hand that relate directly to the province of Alberta, our polices and what we do to move this province forward.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'll take it from that answer that the government does not believe that the election should be respected.

Mr. Speaker, another vacancy will be occurring as a result of the hon. Senator Unger reaching the age of 75 later this year, so will the government agree with us that this Legislature should renew the now-lapsed Alberta senate elections act so that Albertans can have an opportunity to propose to the federal government the next Senator to be appointed to represent the people of Alberta in the upper Chamber?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I and this government are very proud of what we've done to renew democracy here in our province, getting big money out of politics and a number of other changes. I believe that the member asking the question was a member of government while vacancies were available and did not appoint the person that he is referring to. That seems to contradict his statement that all governments should react so strongly to the elections as he's put forward. But I will say that this government will continue to make sure that democracy in Alberta remains strong by getting big money out of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, we will proceed in 30 seconds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters today from concerned parents regarding the situation at l'école du Sommet that I've brought up in the House. I would urge the Minister of Education to read them and please respond to these folks. They've been waiting for answers for over 75 days.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate copies of hundreds of letters to the minister of environment in regard to her land-use framework policy changes, all of which have not been responded to by the minister or her office despite the minister saying to this Assembly that she is consulting with Albertans on this important issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the five requisite copies of three articles that I referenced in my question period questions on Wednesday, May 30. The first is an article from the Edmonton Journal containing the quote from the UCP convention equating the issues that hold women back to socialist crap. The second article, which fits in very well with the question from the MLA for Airdrie today, is from the Calgary Herald and contains a quote from the Leader of the Opposition about putting Alberta's revised school curriculum through the shredder. The third article, from the Ponoka News, cites the Leader of the Opposition stating that Alberta's revised curriculum is being written by committed socialists.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from Mary MacDonald, who is the assistant deputy minister, resolution and court administration services, at Justice and Solicitor General, in which she says that they conclude that the matters with respect to the issue I raised earlier "were outside the mandate and jurisdiction of Service Alberta's Consumer Investigations Unit." This letter was copied to the Premier, to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, to the Minister of Service Alberta, and to the MLA for Calgary-Shaw.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe there was a point of order, but I'm advised that it's been withdrawn.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 203

Long Term Care Information Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise in the House today on behalf of my colleague from Red Deer-North and move third reading of Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act.

This private member's bill focuses on creating a one-stop shop resource for those looking into long-term care options. It serves to provide a tool for those who are looking into which facility may serve their needs according to their preferences. Mr. Speaker, when you're looking at deciding which facility is your forever home, that is a very important decision. Fellow members, we have heard many members speak to this bill before in terms of having witnessed first-hand the tremendous stress that this decision can cause. Without this tool the options currently available do not assist with easing the stress but, rather, contribute to it. I have seen families look at specific long-term care options. I have seen them having to physically visit facilities because the ability to compare them online is a very difficult process. When families or individuals are looking into long-term care options, the time frame is limited and having an online resource would ease the stress of making these incredibly important decisions.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the Member for Red Deer-North held public consultations in her community of Red Deer to hear about the perspectives of individuals she was elected to serve. Suffice it to say, the support for this private member's bill was very strong. This highly correlates with what I've seen myself, with what people are saying in terms of the difficulties our current options are presenting.

Mr. Speaker, I did hear that there was no need to make this a private member's bill and that the Member for Red Deer-North could just simply ask the minister to establish this. In fact, I believe that it was coined as a squandered opportunity recently in this Chamber. Establishing private member's Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act, gives a stronger backing to the focus of providing reliable, up-to-date information that is centralized to one spot. It provides a strong commitment to providing an invaluable resource to those who are making decisions regarding their forever home. It allows for easy navigation of long-term care facilities that can be compared based on information that is important to those who are looking for specifics which are important to them and their lifestyles. This is sound governance that not only supports that we are listening to the needs of Albertans but that we are willing to provide easy and accessible answers to them as well.

I know that the Member for Red Deer-North also did some research on other jurisdictions, and each province has recognized that data regarding long-term care is important. The amount of information that each province requires varies. However, there are attempts to support those investigating long-term care options within each region. In B.C., Saskatchewan, Ontario, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland website access is presented in a drop-down menu form, but it also includes all types of continuing care facilities. With such information available, it is imperative that those searching have a strong understanding of the language used to designate which facility is best suited for the care required.

Each province presents by region to enable ease of search. Within each link the information extent varies from basic address and contacts to what extra services are provided, amenities on-site, if it is pet friendly, or whether smoking is permitted and where. Additional costs are detailed. However, the amount of specific information about costs is not reported on a consistent basis. For example, B.C. includes information about extra meal costs. Inspection reports are available and updated regularly but are available through a link that is not specifically connected to the website or long-term care options. As a result, information is piecemeal and difficult to navigate.

Recognizing the importance of this information, Saskatchewan is currently revamping its website but has kept links to regional health authority websites, which provide this information. This information overhaul has taken the responsibility from regional health care authorities and made it the responsibility of the province. Manitoba, P.E.I., and Nova Scotia have listings of facilities, but these facilities deliver all kinds of health care, so a one-stop model for long-term care is not in place.

The information presented by region. Some are presented as a PDF directory, with access to varying information. What we know is that there is a strong need to make this information available and easy to understand. Currently data available in Alberta is available in a piecemeal style and is listed by diagnosis. It is the goal of this bill to simplify the process by choosing a facility that meets individual needs and to ease the burden of stress that can accompany this highly delicate decision.

Additionally, the Member for Red Deer-North has sought out feedback from agencies that serve to assist our seniors and their families and received resounding support for this tool, and they agree on the difficulty of accessing information regarding long-term care facilities.

This opportunity for the Member for Red Deer-North to present a private member's bill echoes the needs of her community and, I am sure, many of the communities represented in this House. This bill will enable and empower Albertans to make sound choices based on current, reliable, and transparent information, and, Mr. Speaker, that serves to make life better for all Albertans.

On behalf of the Member for Red Deer-North I welcome the response and debate in third reading. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act. I want to take just a brief moment to thank the Member for Red Deer-North for her work on this file and her advocacy on behalf of our seniors. You know, I think there's not too, too much that every single member of the House can agree on, but certainly on this there isn't a single member in the House who isn't willing to try to do everything that we can in our power to support our seniors, who deserve the very best that this province can offer as they enter their golden years. These are the folks that have built our province through hard work, grit, and determination, and we owe a great debt of gratitude to them for those efforts. They have given this province so much, and the very least that we can do as they transition into the next phase of their lives is to try to make that seamless, to be supportive, and to allow them as much choice as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill has the right idea, and I thank the member for her reasoning behind it. I think that any opportunity we have to look at ways to improve access to information, accountability, and to make life easier for Albertans is worthy of supporting, which is why my colleagues and I on this side of the House are in fact supportive of Bill 203. But in the interests of fulfilling our role as the opposition, I want to take an opportunity to have an informed discussion and perhaps suggest some additional pieces that could have been added to strengthen the legislation and truly further ensure that it serves the purposes that it was set out to conclude.

The purpose of this legislation, from what I see, based on my reading of the bill, is to create a publicly accessible online registry for long-term care facilities in Alberta that is updated periodically to ensure that seniors and their families have all of the information that they need to make informed decisions about their futures as they access the different options available to them.

Now, as my colleagues have noted, this does to some extent already exist online. The Alberta Health website does in fact have a search engine for information regarding supportive living or long-term care accommodations that has the following information: accommodation name; operator contact address; accommodation type as well as a button for each housing option which lists how facilities are funded; details on licensing information, including the licence issue and expiry date; detailed inspection reports. There is also a helpful function which allows you to compare, side by side, different facilities that families may be interested in.

So, Mr. Speaker, I just want to ensure that this private member's bill, which has had such great intent and highlights a really important issue, expands on the great work that's already been done rather than reinventing the wheel that already exists. On behalf of stakeholders that I have reached out to or have reached out to us regarding this legislation, I would have liked and continue to make the following suggestions that would have enhanced this great piece of legislation.

The registry should include all facilities, whether private, public, nonprofit, voluntary, or any other designation. I think this is a really fantastic point, that there are so many different options when it comes to supporting our seniors. Some families want to be able to care for their elderly within their own home and simply need an extra hand, some seniors are fully independent but unable to drive, some seniors function best in a community environment such as a lodge, and some prefer to live independently, away from others.

The point is that seniors are diverse and their needs are diverse and that the options for care facilities should also be diverse. That's why having this bill mandate all continuing care options that are available to families and seniors and their families – given that all the above, from public to private to voluntary, are options in Alberta, I feel that all of those options should be built into the registry so that seniors and families really can compare those options side by side and make the most informed decision for them and their families.

The registry list should provide information specific to palliative or respite care. It would also be helpful to track the number of facilities offering palliative and respite care and see what other types of fees they may or may not be charging for palliative residents. The registry should have a description of palliative care options included in the online registry.

The registry should include information on specialized training and staff levels; for example, dementia-specific training or qualifications as well as details on types of staff as well as numbers at each facility. As you can imagine, if my mother has Alzheimer's and I'm looking at different facilities, it would be helpful to know if there are nurses or other staff in the facility that are particularly specialized in handling those specific needs. Personally, that would be a large factor in deciding what kind of care facility to place a loved one in. It is important for families to be able to select a facility that can best provide the specialized care that their loved ones may require. This would provide additional peace of mind for families.

It was suggested that regulations could flesh out the details of the services provided that must be disclosed in the regulation. Examples are: if they provide palliative care, the number of rooms or beds designated for complex patients, if they provide respite care, et cetera. This would have given a very clear breakdown of any individual strengths, the pros of each facilities, and allowed families to choose facilities that specialize in the care that their loved ones may specifically require.

If we look at this example in other areas of society and health care, we see it at work. For example, if I live in the Edmonton area and I have a sick child, yes, I could realistically go to any hospital to receive treatment for my sick child, but I would probably go straight to the Stollery hospital because I know that they specialize in children.

Similarly, most of our seniors could probably live in any continuing care facility, but if there's a particular facility that specializes in a particular area that is important to them, don't we owe it to our seniors and to their families that this information on the facility's specialization clearly be listed on the registry so that they can help make that choice earlier on in their decision-making process?

The registry could provide a further description of what an accommodation charge or additional charge means. Providing transparency around pricing is so important with respect to facilities.

Smoking policies at each facility should be included in the registry. Just as we see in hotels and other public facilities, the requirements around smoking should be made available on the registry.

I think the point that I'm trying to convey, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill had such a fantastic opportunity to really provide our seniors and their families with much-needed information and as many tools as possible to inform their critical decision. The more information that we can provide to them, the better. There is already some great info out there, and the bill provides us with a fantastic opportunity to expand on that information and really take a look at what additional information could be provided to enhance transparency to families.

I would like to thank again the Member for Red Deer-North for her advocacy and her work and hope that collaboratively we can continue to work across party lines to ensure that legislation like this, that will additionally help our seniors and their families, will make that information as accessible as possible and that the registry in its final form will be as full and robust as possible, as such providing the best possible information to Albertans.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise in the House today to support Bill 203, the long-term care transparency act, presented by the Member for Red Deer-North. I would like to commend her for her work and for standing up for our seniors, who have played such a vital role in our communities and in our society. I've got many long-term seniors' care homes in my riding, and I interact with seniors quite a lot. Based on my interactions with them, I continuously hear how they are seeking information about different services available to them, different options that are available to them.

One of the challenges that they experience is to have access to the information, and to provide that platform is necessary so that they can have all the resources they need to make decisions for themselves. As human beings we all have individual needs. All of us have choices based on our individual needs, and we look for opportunities to make those choices. In this bill the platform that is being provided will allow seniors to make the best choices about long-term care. Albertans need information about options in an easily understandable and accessible format. The easier the information is to comprehend, the better it will make sense to people, and that's when they are able to make the right choices for themselves.

I would like to read a quote by Bertrand Russell. He says, "The good life is one inspired by love and guided by knowledge." If we have the knowledge, we are able to make good decisions, we have better inspirations, and then we can move forward in the right direction for ourselves, whatever that is.

Also, I was reading a blog about how it is important for human beings to have the ability to make a choice. This blog I'm referring to is from huffingtonpost.ca, and it talks about Having the Freedom to Make Choices Can Empower Lives. In this blog they are referring to studies that show that feelings of powerlessness can lead to depression and anxiety. In 2011 researchers at the U.K.'s London Business School found a fascinating link between choice and empowerment. Study participants were presented with scenarios where they had various amounts of power, such as being a boss versus an employee. They were then asked to make decisions with varying options. The researchers proved what has long been suspected, that having more choice counterbalances feelings of powerlessness and also improves psychological well-being by giving people a greater sense of control over their lives.

A person could be living in different circumstances, in different situations, and as long as they have the sense of being empowered, then they define a good quality of life, they feel they are having a good life. That empowerment, as we can see from the research, is very much linked to their ability to make choices. When they have that sense that they can make a choice, then they feel more empowered. Recognizing the importance of having options, some charitable and community groups across North America are giving the most vulnerable a say in the aid and little comforts they receive and discovering that it can have almost as much impact as the hand up itself.

Basically, this research is very much relevant to this bill as well because when we are talking about our seniors, all seniors have got different needs based on their situation and what phase of life they are in. By giving them the option to make choices, we are empowering our seniors, and we can only do that when we provide them the information, the knowledge they need to make those choices. Through this bill, what will happen is that all long-term care facilities in Alberta will be required to provide information about services and costs to all Albertans. This will allow Albertans to make decisions about long-term care that are suitable for them. This will basically be a helpful tool for the seniors and their families to identify what kind of lifestyle they can have and, once they select a long-term care facility or the care that they are seeking, how it is going to make a difference in their lives.

Long-term care is something that most of us are going to need in our lifetimes. For example, my parents are aging as well, Mr. Speaker, and I currently think about what their future is going to look like, how their needs are going to change over time. Even today I'm concerned about what would be the best option for them. Being a family member, it is very important for me that they have a comfortable life and for me to gather that information in terms of what is available to them. I won't be able to figure out what would be the right decisions to make down the road or how their planning process could be started in the first place if I do not have enough information for them.

If seniors themselves are looking for options, they are confused or perplexed most of the time because they don't know where to go, how to access information, and what's available to them.

The programs that Seniors and Housing offers – for example, the Alberta seniors' benefit program, special-needs assistance, property tax deferral, seniors' home adaptation and repair program, and seniors' housing – really make a difference in the lives of all Albertans because we either have seniors in our families now or will be seniors ourselves someday.

Having that information in one place, in an organized manner, and making sure that there is a standard in all the institutions that are providing services to seniors gives certainty to our seniors that they will have a good quality of life and that they will be provided whatever they're being promised in the first place. If this bill is passed, Mr. Speaker, the long-term care transparency act will create a publicly accessible online registry to provide Albertans with information about auxiliary hospitals and nursing homes in the province. This would include type of operator, facility capacity, services provided, additional charges if applicable, and results of any inspections or investigations conducted under the Nursing Homes Act or the Hospitals Act.

The Member for Red Deer-North has consulted with Albertan families, long-term care residents, and stakeholder groups, who are widely supportive of the proposed changes because there have been many incidents, Mr. Speaker. After engaging with seniors, I hear quite often that when they sign up for a long-term care facility or for a certain service, they have a certain picture in their mind, but once they are experiencing it themselves, it's different from what they thought. This adds more pressure and more stress to their lives, and it does not really help with their transition or their well-being overall.

Basically, they feel a lack of empowerment. Again I refer to what I was talking about in the beginning, that we want to ensure that our senior citizens feel empowered, and that empowerment comes through the options that are given to them and letting them have the ability to make choices. They can make those choices once they have the information available to them, once they have that knowledge.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would highly encourage all the members in this House to vote in favour of this bill so that we can empower our senior citizens and their families to ensure that they have access to quality services and that they can make choices that will fit their individual needs.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Decore. Sorry; Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Nellie. Think Nellie McClung.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to rise to also speak to Bill 203, the long-term care transparency act, to add what I think is a bit of a valuable addition to some of the arguments that have been made, to applaud the introduction of this bill and be glad that it is actually going to become, if passed, another addition to the tool box for families who are looking to serve their elderly members while they look to transition from either one level of seniors' care or from their own home into long-term care.

At an early age and over a number of phases of my working career, Mr. Speaker, I was exposed to the decision-making process that many families and, in fact, most families in Alberta will have to go through to determine where to place a family member into long-term care once they're no longer able to function at the level of care that they're at or in their own home.

First of all, at age 17, as some members will know, I actually trained as a nursing orderly. I trained and was in a practicum at the old Colonel Mewburn vets' home. It's no longer in existence. It's been replaced, really, by the Kipnes Centre here in Edmonton as a home for veterans. With that particular location, the choice was a bit of a no-brainer for families of veterans, and they were very happy to have the option to place their family member in long-term care in the vets' home. Now, of course, the Kipnes Centre, back then the Colonel Mewburn, had a high level of care, and it was dedicated to veterans, and they knew that the needs of those veterans would be looked after. In my case, it was only male veterans who were in the Colonel Mewburn.

They actually had special needs looked after there. I know that when I was operating there, they actually could still smoke – in fact, I remember helping people with Parkinson's disease smoke their afternoon cigarette – and on Thursdays they got to have a beer as veterans in their own facility. So people were happy to have their family members in the veterans' hospital, the Mewburn, back in 1977, when I worked there, because they knew that there were levels of specialized care that they wouldn't get elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, I also knew, from families even at that point in time who didn't have the option to get their family member into a veterans' hospital because they weren't a veteran, that the opportunities were difficult to decipher because there wasn't a system of registration for the long-term care facilities, that this bill contemplates putting in place. That early exposure to the decision-making process, though, made it abundantly clear to me how necessary it was for families to know what all their options were.

The second phase at which I became aware of the importance for families to have good information when they're making a decision about where to place their loved one in long-term care came, of course, as a result of my 30-year career as a real estate agent. One of the major reasons that a family member, an individual, a homeowner will sell their property or, if they're renting, will decide to move away from a rental situation is that they, of course, no longer can function properly in the accommodation that they're in. Often real estate agents were called upon, as I was, to counsel a family member on what the next steps would be. I found, as I mentioned in the House before, I believe, that it was something that was a little more complex than I had first contemplated when I met with families who were making these decisions.

When you talk to a family who's relying upon you for advice as a real estate professional, you soon learn that you'd better do some research. That research was fairly extensive and wasn't the easiest thing to accomplish and still isn't because the registry is incomplete. It doesn't necessarily have all the information in one place, that Bill 203 contemplates, making it much easier for real estate professionals and family members to access a full array of all of the facilities that might be available to suit their family member's needs in one place. That's one of the major successes of this piece of legislation, Bill 203, that it will be a one-stop shopping centre for not only real estate professionals but family members, who don't want to miss any potential opportunity to make the best decision for their family member when they're looking at a long-term care choice.

Now, of course, a third phase that I went through in this decision-making process and understanding what the benefits of Bill 203 would be was, of course, as a family member myself, trying to place parents and grandparents in long-term care. That direct experience was helped by my real estate experience in that I'd been down that road many times with other members, my clients' families, but it's a different kettle of fish when you're dealing with your own parents or your own grandparents. I found that even though, of course, you have a high level of care and concern for your clients, other things come into play when it's your own family member, because you know intimately what that family member's needs are and what things will no longer be available to that family member in a long-term care situation. You want to know, you know, if there is a particular need that may or may not be addressed in a given long-term care facility.

This registry will go a long way towards allowing those family members to feel some peace of mind by investigating properly an institution that is in the registry and knowing for sure that their family member's needs are going to be met to the best of their ability as they've done the research. Now, finally, Madam Speaker, as an MLA I actually get to help this process along. I'm really proud to be here and to assist with the debate and promote the adoption, I hope, of Bill 203. As I mentioned before, this bill would require all long-term care facilities to provide information about services and costs to all Albertans.

Now, after four decades in power, Madam Speaker, the Conservatives never introduced legislation to help Albertans make this kind of difficult decision. The opposition is calling for deep cuts to core services across the board, and that would create and have a direct impact on Albertans receiving and who need long-term care.

Mr. Malkinson: That doesn't help seniors.

Mr. Dach: No. I agree that it doesn't help families in the deepest time of need when the consideration is to get a family member placed in a long-term care situation that's going to be helpful and that's going to extend their lifespan. Really, what the family member is looking to do is to make sure that they have the highest quality of life and the longest life possible once they have to leave their family home or their rental accommodation.

I'm proud today to stand in support of Bill 203. I've had the opportunity now to work beside my colleague from Red Deer-North for three years, and I've come to respect her greatly. I know the dedication and the integrity that she expresses every day in this House and how much she cares deeply for the people in her constituency. I know that her background in the health care system has certainly driven her to do her very best to find these gaps that are in the legislation, that she's addressing now with Bill 203 to ensure that family members have the one-stop shopping registrar that this bill will put in place.

Now, despite the work that our government is doing to make it easier for seniors to stay in their homes as long as possible, we all know that the demand for long-term care is going to increase over the next 20 years. Some of the things that our government has done

I've actually been able to participate in, as a cosponsor, for example, of the SHARP program, the seniors' home adaptation and repair program, whereby seniors are able to access their home equity and invest it in their property to make renovations and repairs which make the house more accessible and allow them to live in it longer, thus prolonging the decision-making process that Bill 203 contemplates. But at a certain point in time, even with all the renovations and adaptations and repairs and so forth that the seniors' home adaptation and repair program allows seniors to do, many seniors will no longer be able to live in their own homes.

We do owe a debt of gratitude to those seniors, to our aging population, assisting them in living in their homes as long as possible, but when the decision has to be made to leave that home of theirs to go to long-term care, I'm very happy to know that Bill 203 will be in place.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 203? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to be able to rise today to speak in favour of Bill 203. I haven't yet had the opportunity in the House to speak to this, and I'm very pleased to do so. I want to take the opportunity to thank my colleague from Red Deer-North for bringing this forward. I know that this is an issue that she's absolutely passionate about and has a lot of experience in and was able to look for something that is maybe a small change, but it's a change that will certainly make a large difference in the lives of people in Alberta and will make a positive change for folks. I really want to thank her for her efforts on this piece of legislation.

This is absolutely an issue that I hear about in my community. It's something I hear from constituents and friends. I have many health care aides who work in my constituency, and it's something that I hear about from them.

When folks are looking for long-term care for their parents or their relatives, it's often a very challenging decision, and people making those decisions make them for a wide variety of reasons. Everybody is unique. As people have said before, all of our seniors are diverse, and people are looking for different things. Some people want their parents to be close to them and so want to try and find a facility that's in their neighbourhood. Some people want their parents to be able to live in the community where they've always lived. I know that some folks want to continue to live in their community rather than move close to their children because that's where they've always lived and that's where they're comfortable. Those are certainly things that people consider.

People also consider – the issue of extra charges is something that I hear about a lot because, depending on where you're located, you could be charged for any number of extra things, whether that's extra care time or whether it's for someone to cut your mom's toenails or whether it's for a bath. Having those extra charges as something that's included in this database, I think, is really important and something that will be really helpful.

This is something that my family has had to deal with, not here in Alberta but in British Columbia, with my maternal grandmother, who was a wonderful, wonderful lady, who is, sadly, no longer with us, and I miss her very much. When the time came for her to have to move out of her house – you know, she lived in a lovely house on a lake, so it had a view, so something with a view was really important to her. And she was notorious. We would often thank her for meals and say, like, “Oh, Grammy, that was delicious,” and she would say: “Of course it was. I cooked it myself.” Food was something that was also really important to her.

We spent a lot of time looking. At that time, when we were looking, you often heard about things via word of mouth – you had friends who had had a good experience – or you had, you know, just driven by a place that looked good and you needed to check into it, but it wasn’t all available in one spot. Certainly, as a younger person myself I like to be able to find information all in one spot, so the idea of having a database where you could just look for these things relatively quickly is extremely appealing.

You know, after my grandmother moved out of supportive living and had to move into long-term care, we were fortunate to find a place near our home, but I know that my mom still spent many hours travelling back and forth to do things like laundry and to cook my grandmother poached eggs on toast because she, again, was picky about food.

It can be a really difficult situation for a family to be in, and it can be something that is extremely personal and a lot of work and something that many, you know, baby boomers are starting to deal with right now, where they have parents who are needing this extra assistance. Certainly, I was fortunate to be able to help a little bit. I was in university at the time that this was happening, so I was able to help out where I could, but I know that it was a lot of burden that was placed on my mom to look after her mom. It’s something that a lot of people are going through right now.

Having quality long-term care facilities near your house or in a community of choice is very important. There are, as was mentioned, over 170 such facilities here in Alberta. Making this decision is an incredibly difficult decision for people, and this is something that, you know, just makes a little bit of a difference.

I know that navigating the health care system in general in Alberta can sometimes be challenging, challenging to find the information that you need. You know, recently I went through having a couple of children. All of the decisions that are available within the health care system in Alberta in terms of having children, whether you want to have a midwife or whether you want to have an ob-gyn, whether you want to have a home birth or a birth in a hospital, what other facilities are available, what classes you want to take – there are any number of decisions that you need to make, and those decisions aren’t always able to be found in one spot.

Something as important as putting a parent in or having a parent choose a long-term care facility: having all that information in one spot is really, I think, something that’s essential and important and will make a difference. You know, moving forward, I think that more information being available is always better. The more transparent we can be, the more information people can have accessible at their fingertips, it is always a better thing.

I just want to, you know, congratulate my colleague from Red Deer-North for bringing this idea forward, and I want to congratulate her for the extensive consultation that she did. From what I understand, this is something that’s widely supported. Certainly, when I speak to my constituents about this idea, it’s something that I hear is widely supported, so I would encourage everyone to vote for this. Again, thank you to the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to also stand up and speak to Bill 203, Long Term Care Information Act, for the first time. I have been a fan of the Member for Red Deer-North for a long time. She is very quiet, but she has a wealth of knowledge, and she brings years of experience in this particular sector. I think this bill is perfect. I couldn’t imagine a more perfect bill, so I’m so happy to be able to support it.

Last week we heard I think it was the Member for Battle River-Wainwright tell the Member for Red Deer-North that this was a squandered opportunity. He couldn’t be more wrong. This is absolutely essential. Part of the reason that it is essential is that any time that you can compile information and keep it together in one place so that it’s easily accessible, it’s a win.

I wanted to go through some of the points that the member put together for the online registry and just talk a little bit about them. Once this bill is passed, if it’s passed, there will be an online registry to disseminate information. Some of that information includes, obviously, the operator name, contact information, mailing address, phone number, and the description of the type of operator. Now, you might not think that’s too important, but it actually is. There are people out there that are looking for private operators, for-profit operators, and there are some that are looking for nonprofit operators. The reason that they might be looking for a nonprofit that offers this sort of support is because there’s a different framework. It’s managed in a different way. There are different opportunities for families or for people receiving support to become involved. So there’s a general membership, there are meetings, there are bylaws that are easily accessible, and there’s quite a bit of information.

Obviously, (c) is description of the facility.

Then (d) is also really quite interesting. It’s the “total number of residents that may reside at the operator’s facility and a description of the intake process.” First of all, I think it’s really important, when people are looking for a place to live or looking for a place to assist their loved ones to move into, to know how big it is. Some people are quite comfortable living in a setting where there are a lot of people to interact with – there are a lot of staff; it’s obviously noisier, busier – and some people are looking for a small environment, a quiet environment.

The intake process is very important. I’m speaking to this because I was obviously heavily involved in the intake process in my previous role. I was the director of an organization that provided support for people with disabilities, and why the intake process was so key was that it was the time to assess the types of supports that people needed. Does the intake process in the organization that you’re looking at putting your loved one in take the time to actually assess the medical needs, the emotional needs, the mental health needs, the family needs? Do they look at all of these things in the initial process? Also, is there a matching component at all? Are people perhaps paired up or put next door to people with similar interests? All of those things are actually quite important.

Clauses (e) and (f) talk about details of the services provided. I think we’ve all spoken at length about that, which is really important. Some people are looking for personal care services or recreation services, and then, certainly, people with complex medical needs are going to be looking for specific medical assistance.

Additional charges. That’s vital. We know that, for the most part, there are a lot of people that are doing quite well in their retirement or when they get to the point that they need long-term care, but a lot of people are not. A lot of our seniors are living on a very fixed income, so they really do need to know what those extra charges are.

The date that the operator was established is, of course, important. It might not seem like it, but it is. It’s good to know that there’s a track record. I’m not saying that new ones aren’t good, but it is good to know.

Description of the status of the resident and family council. We did pass some legislation that talks about the resident and family council. But was there one ahead of time? Was there one before that, or did it just start now? There are many, many, many organizations that have been undertaking activities like this for a very long time. Organizations that identify the need to give input into the daily operations of the facility to the people that are living there through either their friends or family is key.

Finally, we get to the sort of more specifics around accreditation and oversight, and that's where I think this is so important. Now, it is possible to get this information in other places online, but to have this information all together is absolutely vital.

At one time the organization that I used to work for, obviously, had to comply with a number of levels of accreditation, licensing, inspection. And it's important, particularly for long-term care facilities. It is vitally important that every aspect of the facility have some oversight. This will allow people to see right away. It's as important as looking at how the menu is decided. Who gets to decide about the menu? Is there a family council? How big is it? Where is it? How old is it? How did they do in their inspection? You will learn pretty much everything you need to know about an organization by looking through their inspection report. What were the recommendations that were made? What was the laundry like? Were things kept separately? Was there infection control? All of these things are so incredibly important. They also will talk about staffing. What are the staffing ratios like in the long-term care facility? What are the additional medical supports? All of these things are very important.

Under the accreditation they also look at things like – I'm sure you've heard of the tragic cases of people being scalded. So it also looks at: are the staff trained with the equipment that is used to bathe people? Are there protocols in place to address water temperature? More than that, are there protocols, training, and oversights in place to prevent any kind of abuse? That's really key, and that information can also be found there.

I could go on and on thrilling people with all of these specifics, but I'm going to stop here. I would just like to thank the Member for Red Deer-North for using the opportunity with her private member's bill to truly give a gift to Albertans who are for themselves or for their families or friends looking for the right facility. To have all of this information in one place is so incredibly vital, and I'm thankful for that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act? The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I'm gratified that you've consistently gotten my riding right since the very beginning, so thank you very much.

It's my honour and privilege to rise today in support of Bill 203. You know, like my colleagues, I would also like to commend the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this forward. I think that it really speaks well of, you know, how close she is to her constituents that she was able to identify this issue. I think it also speaks to the kind of value that having, actually, a diverse caucus brings to the province in general, because the MLA for Red Deer-North does have a background in nursing and long-term care, and I'm quite sure that her original expertise in this field has also informed this. That's the benefit of having people from diverse walks of life and having a government that's actually representative of the people that they serve. You get good policy out of it, and I think that this is good policy.

I guess I'd also like to concur with the opinion expressed by my colleague from St. Albert. I'm also a fan of the MLA for Red Deer-North. She's been really helpful to us rural members by taking an active role in issues that impact rural residents. As I'll talk about in a couple of moments, I think this is one that has particular resonance for seniors in rural areas.

Of course, what Bill 203 does, basically – and details have been expressed by other members – is that it does provide a central sort of one-stop shop for seniors looking for long-term care and families helping to advise them, where they can find all the pertinent information they'd need to be able to make the correct choice for themselves.

I think this is something that is really, really helpful and particularly helpful in situations such as I encountered more than once in my own previous career as an insurance agent in small rural communities. You know, as an insurance agent sometimes you end up being almost the early warning for seniors that need to be looking at long-term care. When you have, say, clients that phone you every month asking if they've paid their annual insurance premium, for example, that sometimes can be a real sign that perhaps something is amiss.

There's been more than once where you'd have to talk to families about the situation that their parent or a loved one is in. What you'll find is that these families very often really want to have a constructive role to play in this decision, but it's something that can be quite difficult for them to do and can actually cause acrimony among them because what you'll see is that very often with these families, you know, the senior may live in this local area, but their family is going to be spread all over the province. This family has to somehow get information. Somehow they have to find a way to be on the same page when they're trying to get the best advice for their loved one. By having it where they don't have to go to many different places to find disparate pieces of information, where it's becoming not even just an organizational challenge to provide that information, I think is maybe an extra benefit of having this there.

Of course, for seniors that make their own minds up, make their own decisions and don't look for consultation, it's also helpful as well because, of course . . . [Mr. Piquette's speaking time expired] Oh, jeez. I guess we're out of time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 8(7)(a)(iii) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate.

I would invite the Member for Red Deer-North to close debate on Bill 203.

Mrs. Schreiner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very proud and honoured today to stand and close debate on Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act. Some of the members opposite do not believe that we need this legislation to protect and help our seniors, but I have heard loud and clear from my constituents, from my colleagues, and from associations who deal with seniors' care that this bill is worth while and necessary.

A piece of legislation like this provides consistent and accurate information that enables those searching to have the majority of their questions answered easily and online. From the cross-jurisdictional research we can realize the importance of having this information available within a one-stop resource, and I'm sure the Minister of Health will look at the variety of approaches in other jurisdictions when building our service.

Mr. Speaker, this bill serves to support a framework that enables Albertans looking into long-term care to identify the qualitative information immediately. This bill serves to provide the basic contact information, operator and facility type, total resident capacity, additional fees and services, inspections and results, as well as accreditation status. Additionally, regular updates will be legislated to ensure the integrity of the information is accurate.

The ministry will also have the flexibility to include additional information that Albertans deem necessary and required. Transparency regarding inspections and outcomes also serves to provide opportunity for corrective measures to be implemented.

My Long Term Care Information Act is aimed at easing the stress and streamlining the information required when a loved one is determining which long-term care facility best serves their needs, and that, Mr. Speaker, makes life easier for Albertans. As individuals choosing their forever homes, the individuals' needs are the most important criteria in making the best decision, and having that information available in one location enables and empowers the right decision-making process. I have completed the research, spoken to governing agencies as well as enlisted feedback from constituents, and there is strong support for a resource that provides ease of access to this information.

My Long Term Care Information Act is an opportunity to make important information available to those who need it and to the general public. What it also does, Mr. Speaker, is ensure that information about long-term care is standardized and that comparisons between facilities are made easier. While there are numerous items that this website will disclose, it is important to remember that the availability of specific items such as special diets or cultural or language amenities can also be included at the discretion of the ministry. We should also remember the great work that has already been done by enabling and supporting resident and family councils.

I was glad to debate this bill in the Chamber with my colleagues. Those of us who are private members do have opportunities to make a positive change in the lives of Albertans, and I am proud that I had a chance to do so. All of us should work every day to make life better for Albertans in the way we know best. This is what I have done through bringing this bill forward, and I am proud of my work. I sincerely hope that every senior, their families, and their caregivers will be able to find the information they need with ease and accuracy and without hassle.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 203 read a third time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I continue to be impressed by democracy and how it works.

I've had a request for unanimous consent to introduce a guest.

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly my best friend's sister Anne Cataford, who is here visiting from the beautiful, remarkable, tremendous constituency of Calgary-Elbow. Anne is an engineer with the city of Calgary, working in the transportation department, helping to make sure that Calgarians get to where they need to go. We're tremendously privileged to have Anne's incredible engineering skills in the city of Calgary. I'd ask Anne to please rise, and I'd ask the members to please give the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 206 Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018

[Debate adjourned May 14: Mr. Shepherd speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I often reflect on my role as an MLA, and one of the things that I often say is that the things that have the most impact as an MLA sometimes are the little things. The bill that my colleague from Calgary-Klein has proposed is one of those things that only require a three-sentence addition to the Societies Act. It's a little thing, just three extra sentences in the Societies Act, but it's going to have a profound impact in our communities to prevent hate.

Bill 206 proposes adding wording to prevent groups that advocate or promote genocide, as defined in section 318(2) of the Criminal Code of Canada, or publicly incite hatred in a manner which could constitute an offence under section 319(1) of the Criminal Code of Canada from registering as a not-for-profit society. They are very small sentences. It's not a great deal of change. It's one of those little things that we as MLAs have the chance to do that is going to have a huge impact in the lives of our communities.

I want to thank him for doing this because Alberta has seen a rise in organized hate groups with racist and extremist views. I am constantly flooded by hateful and racist letters to the editor, including in my own community, social media posts, comments and discussions, and racist incidents in our communities. I'm also very weary of how some politicians use the fact that we're a very diverse community to really incite people who may have racist and extremist views.

I was really amazed, through the work that my colleague had done, to discover that the KKK was actually registered as a not-for-profit society here in Alberta, something that just floored me. I personally didn't even know that they existed in Alberta or in Canada. It appears that they lost their status not because somebody in the registrar's office recognized it was wrong for them to be a not-for-profit society but only because they failed to file the proper documents three years in a row.

Mr. Speaker, our government has been proactive in addressing systemic racism, and we have done a number of initiatives from addressing the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission to working with police officers and judges to ensure that officers are trained to recognize bias and cultural competency. We have acknowledged past wrongs such as the '60s scoop, and we are honouring days that are important to our diverse ethnocultural communities.

The Minister of Education was charged by the Premier to lead an initiative consulting groups and Albertans throughout the province to establish what needs to be done to combat racism and discrimination. His leadership not only in the consultation but in ensuring that the revised curriculum reflects students in ethnocultural communities, including the First Nations, Inuit, and Métis communities in Alberta, should provide or help to provide students with tools and strategies to combat racism.

Like the MLA for Calgary-Klein, my own family consists of children who are not white and who have faced name-calling and unpleasant remarks. When your children face hatred, you know the importance of removing the possibility of groups that promote hate, like the KKK, from being registered as a not-for-profit society. Even though I chose to live in that community on purpose, which was a very, very mixed community, it did not prevent hatred and really horrible remarks from being addressed to my children.

I felt that the initiative of the Minister of Education to revise the curriculum so that it really reflects everyone in Alberta, especially the contribution of everyone in Alberta, including our black pioneers, is a really good step. And I wanted to thank the MLA for Edmonton-Centre for his advocacy to have the province promote Black History Month and reflect the importance of our black pioneers here in Alberta. I'm also really so supportive of the way that our new curriculum will see our First Nation, Métis, and Inuit contribution and culture reflected in the curriculum. Students throughout Alberta will also understand how discrimination, violence, and name-calling were part of the history of how settlers treated First Nations.

Mr. Speaker, apart from the efforts that our government has been doing to ensure that racism and the promotion of genocide and violence towards those that are different from us isn't happening and isn't being supported by the work of the government, I think it is important for us to recognize that in Alberta we have a diversity of not-for-profit organizations and that these not-for-profit organizations are key community builders. They provide social services, affordable housing, seniors' lodges. They do advocacy work. They run hockey teams and recreation teams for our young people. We have such a great wealth of not-for-profit organizations. This bill has nothing to do with the work that not-for-profit associations are doing and how we need to continue to support our not-for-profit associations. Really, what this bill is all about is just ensuring that those organizations that are registered do not promote those purposes of hate or genocide.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I've shared in this House that my own father was Jewish and the impact that had on my family and how the kind of stuff that was rampant in Europe at the time when he grew up really impacted him and my own family. This is why it's so important that we don't have any not-for-profit organizations in Alberta whose purpose is to promote genocide or hatred.

I know that some religious groups may be a bit worried about this bill, and I just wanted to emphasize that this bill, again, is not against religious groups. This bill would only limit registration for groups that promote hate against a person or a class of persons as the core principle of their organization or engage in activities that break federal hate speech laws. Groups that advocate for a policy change on a particular issue within the bounds of the law will not be affected. Religious organizations would be free to continue to preach and operate as they see fit as long as their activities are not in violation of federal hate speech laws.

I think it's really important to emphasize that this bill always refers to the federal Criminal Code, section 318 of the Criminal Code of Canada and section 319 of the Criminal Code of Canada, as the activities or the purposes that will be limited by this bill. I think it's always important because when bills like this come to the House, very often we see so much more in the bill than what is really the purpose of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my speech I mentioned how small things can have a really great impact, and I want to emphasize this point because as MLAs we have the opportunity to do great things for our communities through very small things.

Some of the small things that we need to do are to make sure that when we are able to make some changes that will reflect who we are as Albertans and the values that we have, we do those things.

Mr. Speaker, I also think it's really important, in the small things that we do as MLAs, not to get caught up in a lot of thinking about something and not move forward with voting positively about this change with the bill. I want to remind members, as we start discussing this bill, that you have the possibility, by voting for this bill, to ensure that we no longer have in Alberta groups like the KKK that have destroyed so many lives and continue to destroy those lives in the U.S. and possibly in other parts of Canada.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other members who wish to speak? The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure once again to rise in the Assembly this afternoon to speak to Bill 206, the Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018. I'm reminded of a stunning moment that I had last year while driving to an event in Rundle park in Edmonton. It was in 2017. I was participating in the closing ceremonies of the Alberta Indigenous Games. On the way to that ceremony in Rundle park I passed a number of vehicles that were parked, with people milling around and gathered around the vehicles that I had to pass by in order to get to these closing ceremonies for the Alberta Indigenous Games. I won't mention the name of the organization because they certainly don't deserve any more oxygen than they might already have, but it was an organization which festooned the pickup trucks that they were driving with banners describing their name and that had some flags with their name emblazoned on them as well.

I found out later that it was one of these hate groups that have surfaced in our province in recent times. I thought: my goodness, individuals who are going to attend the Alberta Indigenous Games, hundreds and hundreds of them – in fact, last year there were 1,427 athletes and their families and so forth – have to pass by this group of individuals who at that time, without the legislation now being promoted as Bill 206, were able to legally organize themselves under the Societies Act and legitimize their hatred within the Societies Act as a group that would receive the benefits of those who have registration under the Societies Act. That group could legitimize themselves under the Societies Act and promote themselves in a way that would really be a travesty.

It was shocking enough to me to know that they existed, period, and to know that the hundreds of young people participating in the Alberta Indigenous Games had to pass by that group, knowing what they were, knowing that they were hoping to have a society that was one that discriminated against people of colour or people of different cultures than their own, that they were looking to maybe go backward to a time when there were no people other than Caucasian people in Alberta.

That's not the type of thing that we in Alberta ascribe to. We are very much an inclusive and a diverse province, and this province and 99 per cent of the people in this province think that that diversity is a strength. That strength is something that we herald and we will enshrine by passing Bill 206, making sure that anyone involved in an organized hate group with racist and extremist views knows that these views are not welcome in this province, knows that they will receive no legitimization by any legislation that we have in this province, and that means the Societies Act as well. If passed, this bill will also prevent new hate groups, that may seek greater legitimacy, from being incorporated under the Societies Act.

I certainly have lived a privileged life in this province, Mr. Speaker. Coming from a Caucasian background, I didn't have to suffer the slings and arrows that many of my colleagues in this Legislature and many Albertans have had when they are visible minorities or from the non-WASP culture, the white Anglo-Saxon Protestant establishment culture. That's something that I'm very much aware of as I stand here to ensure that anybody who wishes to promote hate based on their desire to discriminate on the basis of race or colour is untenable in this province.

The closest, I guess, I can come to personal experience is with my dad's parents, of Ukrainian background, where they did suffer, you know, significant discrimination in small-town Alberta as an underclass, as they were always reminded they were. Those family stories I can certainly relate to, but to know that in this province the KKK still exists and that it actually had a large presence in this province in the area where my father's parents were homesteading was something that I'm sure in the back of their minds made them feel pretty uncomfortable and wondering, really, how welcoming this western Canadian province was.

We look to really make a statement with this piece of legislation. As my colleague from Sherwood Park has indicated, it may only be three sentences, but they speak very loud and very proudly that the province of Alberta is a defender of diversity, and whenever we do find elements who are looking to separate us by way of following through with their notions of hatred and indicating that no one in Alberta is welcome other than their own creed, their own background, we'll stand up to that by eliminating the anomalies in legislation such as the Societies Act, where people will no longer be allowed to promote hatred and belong to an organization that seeks to be governed under the Societies Act.

Societies exist in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, as a way to help people do good things, whether that's through sport, arts, culture, or a myriad of other things, and I don't see how giving legitimacy to an organization like the Ku Klux Klan does any good for Albertans.

This bill would not impact the free speech rights of these organizations. The Klan can keep being the Klan, but they should not get the same recognition from the government as your child's soccer team or your local curling club.

I'll never forget driving past that group of pickup trucks with their banners emblazoned on them as I went to the Alberta Indigenous Games in Rundle park last year. This year, when we're working on having them situated in my riding, Edmonton-McClung, in the west end, I'm going to do everything I can to make sure that there are no such demonstrations around that particular location. I would be remiss if I didn't make every effort possible to know that those students, those athletes who attend – and there are expected to be well over 1,500 this August – shouldn't have to run a gauntlet of hate as they go to participate in games that are meant to bring people together, to demonstrate the diversity of our province, and to celebrate the indigenous culture that is part of our community, in our urban areas as well as our more rural parts of the province. That goes for any identifiable group who might suffer at the hands of people who wish to promote hate in our province.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot allow this hate to spread in this province, and the government has a role in preventing that. I remember growing up, and in my elementary school there were virtually no people of colour, maybe one or two in the whole school out of 300 or 400 students. The province has changed. We welcome people from all over the world with open arms, and that is the way we want to continue to be seen throughout the world, as a very welcoming place. Those that would counter that attitude and who would besmirch our reputation with hatred and discrimination are people that we should be opposing without hesitation at every step of the way. This is one small way that Bill 206 does that. It makes a statement of saying that we will not stand for hate in this province.

If passed, this bill will deter hate groups from gaining society status in two ways. First, it'll require, Mr. Speaker, that societies that are applying for status have to have a lawful purpose, meaning that the stated purpose on their application must be legal. This means that any group that exists for the purpose of promoting hate speech will not be allowed to register because they would violate federal hate speech laws.

Second, it would require the directors of a society to ensure that the activities of their society are lawful and continue to be lawful. Mr. Speaker, organizations such as the KKK and the other that I referenced, who were demonstrating in the parking lot of Rundle park last year, clearly do not stand up to the scrutiny that this legislation suggests will be in place, and they would not be allowed under the Societies Act to register.

Beyond the registration, Mr. Speaker, we have all got a responsibility to stand up to racism and hatred in the Assembly and in our daily lives. As I mentioned before, if passed, private member's Bill 206 would require application for society status.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It really is an honour to rise to speak to Bill 206, the Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018. One of the great strengths of our society, without question, is our diversity and multiculturalism. I don't think it's a stretch to say that Canada, and Alberta in particular, is one of if not the most successful multicultural communities in the entire world. It is a source of great pride in my constituency. It's a source of great pride – I think it should be for all of us – that people will choose to make Canada home and choose to raise their families here, choose to contribute to community, choose to start a business. This is, you know, one of the things that I think would cause rare unanimous consent in this Assembly. We would all absolutely agree with that.

But, troublingly, racism in Alberta and around the world seems to be on the rise. I met recently with representatives of Calgary's Muslim community who were deeply unsettled by a hateful rally that took place on the steps of Calgary city hall and were shocked by, frankly, the number of people who attended that rally. The, I suppose, positive aspect of that was that the antiracism protesters far outnumbered the anti-Muslim protesters, but it doesn't change the fact that that had a real, real chilling effect on the Muslim community. We sat, and they asked that I bring that before the Legislature. I've done so previously, but I'll do it again.

As much as we may think that debating a bill that is relatively short, that would simply ensure that any society incorporated under the Societies Act, in fact, has a lawful purpose – so far as we know, currently no organizations like the KKK, as the Member for Calgary-Klein has talked about previously, are in fact registered under the Societies Act. They were at one point in this province registered under the Societies Act, which gives them a level of legitimacy which, frankly, they do not deserve. This bill prevents that from happening in the future. I commend very much the Member for Calgary-Klein for bringing this forward. I think it is very, very important that we provide that protection. It sends a strong message from the Assembly that hateful behaviour is not acceptable. If it just creates one more barrier for any organization that has a hateful purpose from being provided any sort of legitimacy, which they absolutely do not deserve, then I think the bill has served its purpose.

The member previous had talked about the racism his parents suffered growing up as Ukrainians. Those of us of Ukrainian heritage living in 2018 may think: how could that possibly be? But my mother will tell many stories of actively being discriminated against. You know, for a good long time she did everything she could to try to fit in, to not celebrate her heritage as much as she may otherwise have. That was really upsetting to observe. It's been nice, as the years have moved on, that she's able now again to embrace her cultural heritage. It's unfortunate that she didn't teach me any Ukrainian, but I could always still learn.

You know, it's something that we need to remember, that it is never that far away and it's there below the surface. That level of racism can bubble up. Fortunately, I think we're safe to say that it is not rampant in our society, but it's not nonexistent either. Anything we can do to prevent racist organizations from existing, from being legitimized, I think we absolutely need to enthusiastically pursue. I again commend the member for bringing it forward.

I will say that I have heard some concerns from organizations that this may present a chilling effect on legitimate free speech. I think that's not the case. When we look at the definition in the bill itself, it's actually a very narrow definition: "advocating or promoting genocide, as defined in section 318(2) of the Criminal Code (Canada)" or "publicly inciting hatred, in a manner which could constitute an offence under section 319(1) of the Criminal Code (Canada)." That's a very stringent test, which would capture only very specific, overtly hateful activities. So any organization that has a lawful purpose, be that a religious or a civil society organization, has nothing to worry about from this bill.

I have no concern that this will overburden the system in terms of the registrar being required to retroactively look at every single one of the applications. I don't believe that. In fact, I know that's not part of the bill, but it would apply as new registrations are made or registrations are renewed. The registrar would ensure that there is a lawful purpose.

I feel that the bill is welcome. I feel that it takes Alberta forward, and really the cost, if any at all, is absolutely worth it. So I encourage every member of the Assembly to support the legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Also pleased to speak to Bill 206, Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018, and commend the member for bringing this forward.

A couple of concerns that have been raised with me that could have made this a more comprehensive bill and that have to do with the Societies Act in general, which has very little ability for recourse: if a society, for example, is following its own bylaws even if they're not very legitimate issues within the realm that they have chosen as targets – fundraising, recreation, sport, whatever – if they're not holding proper elections, if they happen to be using public funds for purposes that are not actually intended by the spirit of the act, it's very difficult to hold them to account. They have internal audit procedures that are allowed under the Societies Act.

What I have learned since having some connection with societies over the years is that the whole Societies Act needs to be reviewed and given a more robust oversight because there have been a number that limp along because either the members don't have the courage or the opportunity to blow the whistle on some things that are going on in their society. Indeed, apart from breaking the law, there doesn't appear to be robust accountability for many of these societies. We have thousands of societies in Alberta, some of which are not fulfilling either the spirit or the letter of their own bylaws and may be self-serving, may be serving the executive and, to some extent, contracted employees but not actually serving society or the full purposes of the Societies Act. So that was one question, that I would have liked to see this bill be a little broader and ensure that we do a full review of the Societies Act. At some point I hope this government will consider that.

Apart from that, I think it's eminently appropriate that we have strong proscription and block the ability of such organizations that promote hate and violence, that they not be registered once that's proven. I would certainly support this in the event that either they are already registered and they can then be revoked or they are proposing to be registered. It's a pretty common-sense issue, I think, especially having learned about the Ku Klux Klan in Alberta and the supremacists out of central Alberta. I don't know if any of them were actually registered or not, but it certainly raised questions, and this limited bill will go some distance, a great distance, in fact, in ensuring that these organizations don't go very far at all.

Apart from those minor concerns, I think it's very appropriate for us as a Legislature to support this and take one step further in trying to quell, in some cases, the ethnic groups that have historic challenges from their countries of origin or, indeed, folks within this country that have inappropriate, alienating approaches to new Canadians or, indeed, to indigenous people.

Very often, of course, these are individuals who are doing things that are hateful and smearing cultures or religions or ways of life, and I wonder if it's possible, then, to link individuals in some cases to their society. If they say that they're not speaking on behalf of their society, how, in fact, does one make that connection? If there are individuals who are members of certain societies yet as an individual they're speaking in ways that incite hatred or, in fact, violence, that may be a wrinkle that one would have to work through the Human Rights Commission or, in fact, legal channels. There are a number of people who continue to incite such abhorrent language and activity and are in fact associated with certain organizations but are not speaking on behalf of those organizations. So we do need to have ways of, I guess, taking that next step, if not at an individual level, helping to make the connections between an organization and an individual who's outright speaking hatefully and vengefully.

Apart from those concerns, I think this is progress, and I'll certainly be supporting this bill. Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members? The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a pleasure for me to rise to speak to this private member's bill, Bill 206, the Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018, sponsored by my colleague from Calgary-Klein. I actually want to express my appreciation to the previous speakers, particularly the last two speakers from Calgary.

I'm reminded, actually, of the debate on Bill 9 here. We seem to have a consensus among this side of the House and perhaps that end of the House over there about the value of it, but I don't hear anything from the Official Opposition. I'm actually wondering, when it comes time for a vote, whether those folks there will disappear into the cloakroom, but let's wait and see.

I said that this is a really important piece of legislation. Alberta has seen a rise in organized hate groups with racist and very extremist views, and it's something that we have to be vigilant that we stamp out. We can't be supporting that or facilitating that in any way. The bill is going to make sure that organizations that exist solely to promote hate, like the KKK, will not be able to be revived as Alberta societies. It's already been spoken to, that there are two societies that are sort of KKK-related that are on the books, that could be revived with the filling in of a piece of paper.

It's also true that there are groups – and my colleague from Edmonton-McClung brought this up – operating in this province right now that are basically hate groups. We should not be in a situation where those folks can become a society, where they wouldn't be responsible for their debts. Certainly, if they were to become a society, the directors of that society should be held responsible for their vile and pernicious views.

You know, this government, our government, that I'm very proud of, has been active in addressing systemic racism, including Islamophobia, that was brought up by the MLA for Calgary-Elbow. Islamophobia is relatively recent in this province, largely because there haven't been a lot of targets of that particular faith living in Alberta, but as we are becoming a more multicultural province, there is a need to protect that very valuable part of our population, our citizenry, from this kind of hate activity. Any group that espouses Islamophobia should not become a society and should be held accountable for their views.

One of the most emotive episodes in my work as an MLA this past year was attending, with the MLA for Edmonton-Centre, a very impressive event at city hall here in Edmonton, and this was to recognize, I believe, the 15th anniversary of the Rwandan genocide. You know, I'm sure that all of the MLAs in the House are generally familiar with that, but basically this was a civilized country that fell into a miasma of ethnic hate based upon politicians and societies within the Rwandan nation fomenting hatred and, ultimately, genocidal activity between the Tutsis and Hutus.

You know, there is a Canadian hero in all of this, and I would really recommend that all of us heed the words of General Dallaire. General Dallaire is a hero to me and, I'm sure, to all members here. He wrote a memoir in 2016 that's called Waiting for First Light. Even that title gives me a shiver. The memoir was largely about PTSD and about how he had to deal with that. In fact, he got to the point that he considered seriously and, I think, actually made the first steps towards suicide but then pulled himself back from that and has made tremendous contributions since that time. General Dallaire basically pointed out that these were recognized individuals with some social power within the community that had decided, for reasons that still I personally do not understand, that they would basically vilify and demonize their opposition.

I mean, I can't think of it here in Alberta, how it would happen, but it would be as if the Official Opposition decided to say that socialists were evil and were non-Christian and didn't deserve to live. Have I heard that comment? I don't think I have heard that comment before, but I sometimes get that impression, that sort of thing. That sort of speech can be magnified. I'm not saying that that's hate speech, but that kind of speech can be magnified. We need to have things in place that will make sure that groups or associations or fraternal organizations or whatever you want to call them cannot get registered under the Societies Act of this province.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you were making very eloquent remarks, but the comments about the opposition were a little over the top.

Please continue.

Dr. Turner: Well, I will certainly withdraw any portion of that that was over the top. I sincerely apologize if there was that implication. I was trying to avoid doing that, actually.

This comes back to this situation where this act is necessary. It has been said and I've heard commentary that, really, this isn't necessary: "We're good people here in this province. Why should we have this on the books? This is another regulation, perhaps, that really isn't necessary, and maybe it's going to cost a little bit of money to set up the administration of this act." In fact, I don't want Alberta to become a Rwanda. I know that's a bit over the top, too. That's a bit hyperbolic.

We do have an example in this province where well-meaning people went far beyond reason, and that was in what I call the Leilani Muir situation, where people that were considered to be mentally defective were sterilized. This was done by the government. In fact, it was defended by the Progressive Conservative governments right up until the 1990s. Fortunately, the Supreme Court of Canada helped Alberta get out of that trouble.

I mean, I'm just using that as an example of where we Albertans might need to have some limits on what we're doing. I believe that the bill proposed by my colleague from Calgary-Klein really does help with that.

What I do want to do is talk a little bit more about this situation that the Member for Edmonton-McClung was talking about. There is a group of people in this province that call themselves a militia. I think that they pattern themselves on American militias, on the situation in the States, which has a very different – you know, their second amendment, that protects . . .

The Speaker: Are there any other members who'd like to speak to Bill 206? Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I'll do is applaud everyone who has spoken already on this bill, the Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018, because there were a lot of really good points having to do with this bill, and it sounds generally very supportive.

I come at it, maybe, from a slightly different point of view. I think back to teaching, especially junior high, where students are getting the idea of free speech and their right to have free speech, without understanding any consequences and limits on it. That's an interesting stage in people's development and one that's really important to deal with.

One thing you learn very quickly – and in being a parent or a teacher, you learn it – is that you cannot make everyone think the way you'd like them to think or believe what you'd like them to believe. But you can teach them that every action has a consequence and that the only people in charge of their actions are themselves. You can't do something and say: well, I didn't mean to. You did it, and therefore you've got to deal with it.

One of the things you also learn along the way is that when people group together with similar beliefs and similar mindsets, it gives them a feeling of rightness and a feeling of legitimacy, and that can be very dangerous. That kind of amplifies the rhetoric. So anything we do here that can help to make sure that people are not legitimized and are not given the feeling that this is acceptable and they have – what is it? – the right to belong, to be a legitimate group, that they can speak what they like, and that that's all protected under free rights legislation is really important.

I noticed in some of the comments made that nowadays the hate groups, the ones that basically preach negativity about others, whatever their others are, are becoming emboldened. There's a lot of feeling that it's acceptable to be anti this group and anti that group, that group of people based on their race, their religion, their ethnicity.

When the member was talking about his grandparents coming here as homesteaders from Ukraine, I was thinking that people who were here before the homesteaders would sometimes be very critical of them because they were different. They spoke a different language, they had different customs, and therefore they were regarded negatively. It took a long time before people learned to be able to see what was the same, that they had the same goals in mind and the same reason for being here.

When groups become, as I said, legitimized, they get a gain in confidence and a desire to entrench themselves, and having recognition from the government makes it easier for them to do that. The government has such an important role to play in preventing the spread of hate and in making sure that people understand that this is not okay, that this is not a legitimate reason for getting together: get together if you like, but don't want outward legitimizing of your endeavours. The bill doesn't infringe on anyone's ability to say what they want to say. It just prevents them from forming an association expressly for sharing their hatred or figuring out a way to express it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand on Bill 206. Now, as I understand this bill, if I understand it correctly, it purports to be against the promotion of hate and bigotry in our society. I can tell you that on this side of the House we believe that hate and bigotry are unacceptable at all times and without exception. The United Conservative Party stands resolutely against hate and bigotry.

Let me just say that my experience is that this province has been a welcoming place for people of all backgrounds for a long time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to suggest that the experience in Alberta has been perfect because it has not. There have been cases where people have been badly treated. As has been said in this House, at one point the KKK was apparently even registered here, which seems completely – I understand it's a fact, but it's not a fact that I believe anybody in this House should be proud of or is proud of or ever would have been proud of.

Mr. Speaker, I have to also say that this is an issue where we should stand together. When it comes to being against hatred and bigotry, I think it's a nonpartisan issue. I think it's something where people on all sides of this House and of all stripes in this House should make sure that we stand against hatred and bigotry together.

I have to say that I was pretty disappointed a few minutes ago to hear what I thought was a member of the House talking right on the edge of hatred and bigotry, perhaps suggesting that members of this House might think that other members of this House didn't deserve to live. Beyond the pale. Mr. Speaker, I'm grateful that you called the member to account. I thought you did your job well when you did that, and I compliment you on that. I have to say that those comments were entirely, in my view, against what I believe the spirit of the bill brought forward by the hon. member was, entirely against it. To suggest that any member of this House, because of a political disagreement – to even suggest that it's possible that they might think that somebody with a different political background or agreement doesn't deserve to live is shameful. I was ashamed to hear those remarks uttered in this House, where I serve.

Mr. Speaker, if we are going to build the Alberta that I believe we all want, where every Albertan is welcome and equal and is able to live their lives securely, without fear, and is protected regardless of their background, their race, creed, colour, religion, sexual orientation, or any other difference that somebody can add onto how you describe a human being, then we need to be part of a positive conversation about those things. I'm not suggesting at all that we should deny negative historical things that have happened. I'm not suggesting that at all. In fact, that's one of the ways that we learn from the negative past and create a more positive future.

Mr. Speaker, while we consider this legislation – on this side of the House we obviously are of the strong, strong opinion that any piece of legislation that stands resolutely against bigotry and hatred is a positive thing and something that we feel strongly about – we need to make sure that as we have this debate, we can make the bill as good as it can be. On this side we commend the sponsoring member. I think what he's saying is that we must be vigilant. Even in some of the speaker's comments and in some of the comments that I've heard – he's actually made reference to some of the negative past, and I compliment him on that, too, because the hon. member did it in a way to point out what was wrong in the past, to point out . . .

An Hon. Member: Make things better.

Mr. McIver: We need to make things better. Exactly right.

. . . why we need to move to a positive future.

This is something where I think that when the Legislative Assembly sets a positive example, it puts us in a position where we can set an example for our children, those in school, to learn lessons. You know, just the other day, Mr. Speaker, I was at an event with the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View at the Boys & Girls Clubs in Calgary. He might remind me of what the program is. It's one that I went to learn about – roots of empathy – where they bring young mothers with their children into a classroom. The children watch the mother and the young child, sometimes a toddler, sometimes brand new babies, react and talk about empathy; for example, you know, having discussions about:

if the child cries, is the child bad? Well, no, the child is not bad; that's how the child communicates. The whole idea is to get people thinking about other people's feelings, too.

I think that's at the root of fighting hatred and bigotry: people caring not just about themselves but about the other human being in their presence, the other human beings that they are with here in Alberta, having concern and care for the other person's feelings, the other person's place in society, the other person's place in the room and not just their own. These are things where, frankly, the more we get people to think about these things, the better our society will be, the safer our society will be, the more secure our society will be, the more proud we can be of the society that we are and the society that we can be in the future.

As we continue with the debate on this bill, I would like to make it clear that those things are important to members on this side of the House and, I believe, on all sides of this House, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I need to interrupt the discussion on this as the time has lapsed and we need to move on.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

Upstream and Downstream Emissions

505. Mr. Kenney moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately demand that the government of Canada introduce any necessary legislative changes that would prohibit the consideration of upstream and downstream emissions by a federal energy regulator at any stage of the pipeline approval process.

[Debate adjourned May 28: Mr. Shepherd speaking]

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of the motion brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. The reason it was necessitated is that the NDP's federal allies the Trudeau Liberals are attacking Alberta with bills like bills C-48 and C-69. The Leader of the Official Opposition and all of us on this side of the House asked the government to actually table if they have written to the standing committees in opposition to those bills and in support of Alberta. They didn't table any of it, other than partisan rhetoric, in this House.

Mr. Speaker, even if and when the Trans Mountain is built, it's only 600,000 barrels that we can ship to the coast. The other 4 million barrels we are selling to one single customer. Based on the current trade relationships we have with the U.S.A., if the U.S. decides to turn the tap or shut the wall, the inlet down, we will need alternate pipelines. With bills like C-48 and C-69 we can never get any other pipeline built to the coast, to tidewater in Canada. That's why this Motion 505 is really important.

When the Minister of Energy spoke – when she said that she's going to oppose without any valid reasons, that means she's opposing, and she's supporting when the Trudeau Liberals are attacking Alberta, so that means she's supporting the attacks on Alberta. She has to decide, she and her caucus, whether they stand up and fight for Albertans or not.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 8(3) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of the motion to close debate.

I would invite the hon. member to close debate.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all members who participated in debate on Motion 505 for their thoughtful interventions. As I said at the beginning of this debate last week, this motion speaks to an issue that is existential for Alberta and our economic future. Our jurisdiction in the Constitution to regulate the production of oil and gas is something I spoke to at great length, a right – a hard-fought right – won by the late, great Premier Peter Lougheed in the repatriation of the Constitution in 1982.

Mr. Speaker, I thank, commend, and appreciate the NDP government for having raised some objections to the intrusion of the federal government, through the National Energy Board, into the indirect regulation of downstream carbon emissions in the assessment of proposed pipeline projects. I wish, however, that their opposition to that were more vigorous. The government, for example, while it says that it has, quote, raised concerns with the federal Minister of Natural Resources with respect to Bill C-69 before the federal Parliament, has refused to state outright opposition to that bill or call on the federal government to repeal it even though it makes worse and cements in law the policy adopted by the National Energy Board in 2017 with respect to downstream emissions.

I think they are missing the target in defending Alberta given that the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association and virtually all other major voices in Alberta's energy industry have indicated that the more burdensome process represented by the Trudeau government's Bill C-69 effectively means that we will not be able to get approval for another major pipeline in the future. This makes us even more dependent on now federal ownership of the one and only prospective coastal pipeline project.

Earlier today, Mr. Speaker, I raised a wonderful initiative by a consortium of First Nations groups to build an alternative coastal pipeline, called the Eagle Spirit pipeline, to the west coast from Alberta. The problem here is that even that pipeline proposal, if it were to come to fruition, would be assessed today based on the expanded writ of the National Energy Board, as articulated in its August 23, 2017, interpretive letter to TransCanada PipeLines with respect to the proposed Energy East pipeline route, where the NEB got into the business of up- and downstream carbon emissions. If the Eagle Spirit pipeline were to be proposed, say, a year from now, following the prospective adoption of Bill C-69, the federal environmental impact assessment act, it would become virtually impossible to get approval.

You see what this is doing? The opponents of our energy wealth, Mr. Speaker, are trying to land lock us. One way in which they are doing so is through these new regulatory mandates, currently, I believe, arbitrarily imposed by the National Energy Board but now, worse, sanctioned by legislation under Bill C-69. That is why this Motion 505 is so important, and that is why I regret that the government appears to oppose it.

I've addressed so far the question – I thank the government for their kind of, I would say, modest opposition to the National Energy Board's intrusion into downstream emissions and the regulation of pipelines. But what really puzzles me, Mr. Speaker, is their stubborn refusal to object to the Trudeau government and the National Energy Board intruding into the regulation of upstream oil and gas production. I've quoted at length the relevant section of the Constitution, which says under section 92A, "In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to... development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources." Not partial or shared jurisdiction but exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, I would call upon our friends in the New Democrat Party to reconsider their position, to stand in the defence of these hard-fought and historic rights, which are essential for our economy and our future. Please join with us in defending section 92 of the Constitution, join in the legacy of Peter Lougheed and the defence of our right to regulate our natural resources without unjustified federal intrusion by voting yes on this motion today.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:08 p.m.]

The Chair: I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 13 An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

The Chair: We are currently considering amendment A4. Any members wishing to speak to that amendment? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Great to see everybody on this fine, wet evening. I am rising, of course, to speak to amendment A4. I believe it was moved by me on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

The point of the amendment is that the legislation as proposed says that the capacity market “supports ensuring a reliable supply of electricity is available at reasonable cost to customers.” This is not the same thing as: “supports ensuring a reliable supply of electricity is available at reasonable cost to customers” and “supports the fair” – Madam Chair, the fair – “efficient and openly competitive operation of the capacity market.”

Again, under the current legislation it says: “supports ensuring a reliable supply” – reliable and the NDP don’t often go together; that may be some of the confusion – “of electricity is available at reasonable cost to customers.” This amendment would change it to: “supports ensuring a reliable supply of electricity is available at reasonable cost to customers.” Same thing. It doesn’t change what is in the current legislation brought forward by the government, but then it adds: “supports the fair, efficient and openly competitive operation of the capacity market.”

Now, the government has indicated that they will not support that. It is a little troubling – troubling, Madam Chair, but I should say not surprising given this government’s history – that this government would not support a fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market. For what possible reason will the government not support a fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market?

Madam Chair, this is a major change to bring trust back to the capacity market. That is what we’re trying to do. We talked about this last week, before we left for our constituencies, about the need to bring trust back, particularly around the capacity market – that’s what we’re talking about right now – but trust in general because this government has lost the trust of the majority of Albertans. When it comes to the electricity market, because of that lack of trust Albertans are scared. They’re very, very scared. They will probably be more scared of this NDP government when they find out that they’re voting against supporting a fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market.

I think for many Albertans that will reaffirm their fear and the lack of trust in this government because by their vote they’re proving Albertans right. They’re proving Albertans right that they have not changed their ways, that they’re still the NDP government that we have seen here for the last three years that ignores Albertans and that bullies their way through legislation despite the consequences, sometimes devastating, to the people that they’re supposed to govern. By supporting this, though, then there’s an opportunity for this government to be able to regain some trust with Albertans.

Now, Madam Chair, why wouldn’t you want – not you, of course. I’m sure you would want to support the capacity market to be fair, efficient, open, and competitive. But why wouldn’t the government want to support the capacity market to be fair, why wouldn’t they want it to be efficient, why would they not want it to be open, and certainly why would they not want it to be competitive? We know that the NDP have focused most of their time in office on stacking the deck to their advantage, but they should not do that in this capacity market because there’s no advantage to them. As they try to rig the election system and do those types of things, that won’t be here. All that will happen, if they continue down this path, is that we could end up in a place like Ontario has found themselves, with an electricity market that is devastating their economy, that is devastating investment in their communities, that is devastating manufacturing in their province, and that is devastating everyday people inside the province of Ontario.

The soon-to-be former Premier of Ontario in less than 72 hours: she herself has acknowledged in probably a most unprecedented statement from a sitting Premier in our country’s history that she will not be the Premier in 72 hours. One of the things that she has acknowledged when acknowledging that fact, that she is about to lose the election, was that one of the biggest reasons why she and her provincial Liberal Party have found themselves in this situation is because they messed with the electricity market so much that the people of Ontario seem prepared to wipe the entire Liberal Party down to one or two or zero seats. Possibly the current Premier will even lose her seat. Premier Wynne has said that her greatest regret is how the Liberal Party has handled the electricity market and that this has had devastating consequences.

You know, those are the political consequences to that party, and maybe there will be similar political consequences to the provincial NDP. The problem, though, is that while that was happening, while the Liberal Party in Ontario blindly pushed through their ideological agenda, everyday Ontarians were being punished. You’d watch the news in Ontario and see people that were paying $1,500, $2,000, ridiculous amounts of money for their power bills.

Now we have a government in this province who seems determined to do the same types of things or certainly seems determined to continue down the path of not consulting people, not listening to their boss, which are Albertans. I know the NDP forget that. They think it’s the bubble of all their little NDP ideological friends that all hang out together on the weekend. That’s not who they work for. They work for the people of Alberta, from north to south, from east to west.

Mr. Bilous: We don’t hang with them.

Mr. Nixon: Well, you know, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade says: we don’t hang out with them. But that actually is the problem. They only hang out with themselves. They only go home. They don’t talk to people. Because if they went home on the weekend and they talked to actual constituents, if they stepped outside of their bubble, they would find out that this is one of the number one concerns. They would certainly find out. I know the minister is laughing and smiling, but I would be devastated if my party had lost all that trust.

This party managed, this party being the NDP Party, because of a situation where Albertans were frustrated with the current government – the legacy Wildrose Party crossed the floor and created a perfect storm where this government could come in and do all their ideological changes. But you would think that because the NDP were able to get power through that, they would've learned a lesson from the former PC Party. My colleagues who were part of the former PC Party have spoken about that lesson very often, which is to not stop listening to the boss. Do not stop listening to Albertans.

The late Premier Ralph Klein used to call it dome disease, and there is no doubt when you're talking about Bill 13, this electricity capacity legislation, that this NDP government is suffering from the worst case of dome disease probably in the history of this province. They've lost complete contact with Albertans. If they talked to Albertans, they would understand that Albertans are very concerned about this. They also are very concerned that this government will not even put in simple words to ensure that the language around this legislation will ensure the fair, efficient, openly competitive operation of the capacity market. For what possible reason would the government not want it to be fair, would not want it to be efficient, would not want it to be openly competitive when they try to make these large changes to the capacity market?

You know, we've been debating Bill 13 for a while in this Assembly. My colleagues and I primarily are the only ones who have been speaking to it. A simple look through Hansard will see that that fact is true. While the NDP members have been in the Assembly during the debate, they have not participated in it, particularly the Minister of Energy, who has not risen to discuss those concerns with the opposition and has not answered some of those simple questions, particularly why they would not want a fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market they're trying to create.

Albertans cannot be blamed for being concerned about the hidden agenda of this government. This government, from the very moment that they took office, has operated under a hidden agenda. The carbon tax, another thing that has devastated our communities, was another hidden agenda, something that none of these members campaigned about when they were running to be this government, something that they hid from Albertans. Then they came in, and they made it the law, made it one of their primary laws.

That applies, certainly, to the amendment because the amendment is about trust. The amendment is about trust. Why would Albertans trust a government that continues to hide things from them, that campaigns and doesn't tell them about their ideological policies, that focuses their time on stacking the deck on electoral reform and trying to make things work better for them, and as we heard today in question period, that skirts around the law to do campaign announcements in Fort McMurray and Sylvan Lake despite finally passing a law after a long fight by this opposition in this Assembly to stop the government from using the taxpayer purse to participate in elections, you know, something the Premier and the hon. Government House Leader very clearly were against when they were in opposition, very clearly were against? But now that they're in government, that's all changed. They can skirt those rules. They can skirt those rules, and they lose more trust, which is why the opposition has to bring an amendment like this, because Albertans don't trust them.

If this government's goal with this bill is not to take away a fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market that they're creating, then they should support this amendment. If they don't support this amendment, then the Energy minister should rise and explain why she and her government do not support a fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market. Asking Albertans just to trust you is no longer acceptable to the people of Alberta. It is no longer acceptable. They're totally tired of the NDP's behaviour, their blatant, partisan, rhetoric, ideological behaviour focused on themselves – selfish behaviour, I would say – and completely ignoring the people of Alberta.

Now, Madam Chair, instead it appears that the NDP is focused on a capacity market under the NDP that will only be about reliable supply and reasonable cost. This is not the consistent language that the industry uses. The other thing that this amendment does, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, who's worked very hard on this issue, points out and rightly so, who brings this amendment because of that, which I moved on his behalf, is that it brings consistency to the language inside the legislation.

One of the big struggles that the NDP government in Alberta have had during their time in office is that they have very, very much struggled to make legislation that works. They have to revise almost every piece of legislation that they ever bring to the Chamber.

I see the Minister of Labour, who's brought a lot of electoral reform pieces of legislation to this House, and then she has had to change them every sitting afterwards because they got it wrong.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs is here tonight. Great to see him. We had a piece of legislation the other day around Bill 10 where he had to amend three-quarters of the legislation just three or four short days after he tabled it in the Assembly. He struggled to get that legislation right. Now, I'm glad he's working to get it right. It's a good thing the opposition was here to catch the mistakes. Despite the fact that the minister ridiculed the opposition over and over while they were catching it, he still came with, you know, an amendment to his own legislation that replaced three-quarters of it only a few short days after he tabled it in this Chamber.

It was such an interesting debate at the time, Madam Chair, because the government had to reach out to the opposition to have us carry on debate on another bill because they were having trouble getting their amendment for this Bill 10 photocopied. This is what the government does to legislation. They're in a mad panic in the backroom trying to photocopy an amendment that ends up in the hands of people in this Legislature that's still hot, hot off the presses, hot off the photocopier.

You know, they get legislation wrong. They have a terrible habit of that, and there are probably a couple of reasons for it. One is because they're trying to go at such a rapid pace to get their ideological agenda in that they will not listen to the opposition, just like they will not with Bill 13 or this amendment. Second, they won't talk to Albertans, which is why Albertans don't trust them. And that's why you see governments who have to come and replace their entire piece of legislation.

I mean, I would not hold my breath as we're working through Committee of the Whole that at some point the pages will not come running in here with a whole bunch of hot amendments to Bill 13 because this government finally realizes: oops; we made a mistake on this one, too. Now, when it happens that way – which if it's going to happen, I hope it happens that way for Bill 13 – that at least allows us to catch it before Albertans are punished. Most of the time this government catches it well after the sitting is done, and then they have to wait all the way to the next sitting to come and change their own law, because they're incapable of writing legislation that they don't need to have fixed.

Now, Madam Chair, when it comes to Bill 13, everybody that we are talking to in the industry says that they need a fair, efficient, open, and competitive capacity market, or FEOC, through and through, without any exemptions. There has to be a fair, efficient, open, and competitive market. It has to be consistent language throughout Bill 13. It's essential to prevent legal challenges, something that this government has had trouble with as well. In fact, they had to sue themselves when they were dealing with the electricity market. They sued themselves. They also sued Calgary's electricity provider, which is owned by taxpayers in the city of Calgary. They ultimately had to do a settlement, which they still have not, you know, from what I've been able to tell, come clean with this Assembly on what it is despite being repeatedly requested to by the opposition. It will come out. It's not something that they're going to be able to keep hidden forever. It will come out.

But why not make sure that this legislation is right this time? Why does this government continue to do things like Bill 10, realize that they made a mistake because they won't listen to anybody, and then rush to fix it and still make more mistakes? It's shocking to many people that this government continues this behaviour.

I will close with this, because I'm looking forward to hearing some more comments from my hon. colleagues tonight. I may have more to say a little bit later. The biggest issue that I hear on this bill back home right now – and it was great to be back in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre this weekend. This was one of the number one things that, actually, people were discussing with me back in my constituency because of that trust issue, that they don't trust this government. They're also scared of the day-to-day consequences that could come as a result of this government making a mistake. They also know that this government doesn't care about them, because the government has shown over and over and over that they don't care about Albertans. They do not care about Albertans. That's why they get their legislation wrong. They just don't care. I mean, they come in and make fun of a significant portion of this province's representatives, telling them that they're fearmongers, and then have to come in and actually fix the legislation as was pointed out about it.

But their biggest fear is that this NDP government, which has shown itself to be extraordinarily incompetent on almost every file, is going to get this wrong and that we are going to be like Ontario. We are going to end up like Ontario. We're going to end up in a situation where we're going to make it harder for small manufacturing in communities like I represent: Sundre, Rocky, Rimbey, Bentley, Caroline, Buck Lake, Pigeon Lake, on and on, Winfield, Eckville. All those communities are very scared that this government is going to get it wrong and that it's going to cost manufacturing, which, in particular, rural communities are depending on attracting to their communities right now, too much and that they're going to go to other jurisdictions, Montana or Saskatchewan or elsewhere.

Then, secondly, they're absolutely petrified about their electricity bills, which are already crippling, in some cases, in an economy that has been struggling under this NDP government's watch, under a government that has raised their taxes, under a government that has brought in a job-killing carbon tax to the point of hurting seniors in our communities, hurting our community centres, hurting our nonprofits, devastating them. Then their only answer to them when they come and ask questions is: go and fund raise for your carbon tax. That's all this government will tell them. But they're scared that government, that same government who's lost the complete trust of Albertans, who has no trust, is going to bring in and continue to mess with the electricity system so bad that it's going to raise their bills even more. It's going to make it harder for them to raise their kids. It's going to make it harder for them to go on vacation. It's going to make it harder for them to live their lives, every Albertan.

Particularly, though, I think right now as I'm speaking of the fixed-income seniors, many of whom I represent, who are living on tight budgets, who have built our communities, who we want to stay in our communities because communities are better with grandma and grandpa there. They're better with our seniors, the people that have built our communities, but they are struggling to stay afloat under this NDP government, a government, when you're talking about seniors, Madam Chair, who took away 30 per cent of their carbon tax rebates and then shrugged their shoulders and said to them: it's okay; you've still got 70 per cent. That's how this government treats seniors. They are scared. They are scared of the consequences that will come as a result of this legislation.

Now, the NDP may think that's humorous. They may think that it's okay, that people will forget, that seniors will forget in the next election, that other people will forget the damaging policies that this government continues to force upon them, but I can tell you, Madam Chair, that they will not forget. They will not forget. This government would be good to remember that.

But that should not be the reason why they should fix this. They should fix this because they don't want to continue to hurt the people they say that they're here to govern, to hurt the people they say that they're here to help. Time and time again in this Assembly this government proves that they do not care about Albertans.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise tonight to speak in support of the Member for Calgary-Foothills' amendment to include the words "fair, efficient and openly competitive" in the language of this bill. There are a few reasons why I think this amendment is needed, the main reason being that adding in the language would simply restore confidence to the investors that we so desperately need in this province. Our caucus has heard on a number of occasions from various electricity stakeholders that there is great concern and mistrust in the absence of fair, efficient, and openly competitive that had not been accorded to the capacity market, where the standard FEOC language was not used, especially given this government's track record of making changes after the fact.

We've just heard plenty of examples, so I won't indulge in stating those examples again, but as I've stated many times before, I think that if this government would take the time to be able to do the proper consultation, to properly ask Albertans what's going on and what's happening, I think they would be in a situation where they wouldn't have lost the trust of Albertans. They wouldn't be in this situation where they've messed things up so badly that they're sitting where they are in the polls right now.

Now, the members from the other side would like to say that there is absolutely no reason for the amendment and that it is a complete waste of time, but, Madam Chair, I would like to ask those same members: when has it become the practice of this Assembly that restoring confidence in the electricity market or any market, for that matter, is simply a waste of time? This Assembly was established so that legislators can come to this House to discuss concerns brought forward by the people. To say that that is a waste of time is completely appalling. If that is the case, then I think those members should rethink the reason they even started to get involved in politics in the first place.

Trust in the process and trust in this House needs to be restored, Madam Chair. Trust is the biggest problem that this government faces. It is no wonder that the people have lost confidence in this government when members make comments such as: these are a waste of time. Like the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said last week, "When the NDP . . . came into power, they started out by actually breaking government contracts and ending up in some [huge] lawsuits and negotiations as a result of that... instability for the generators but also instability for investment markets" due to investors not trusting this government's word.

And how, really, could they trust their word? They change the rules as they go. After all, this government is willing to break contracts that the government itself had and has the willingness to sue even itself. Who can know the mind of this government? This amendment would help to tidy and clean up the bill. It would also ensure consistency. Taking this government's word is obviously not good enough.

Now, I know the members on the other side would rather have people believe that this amendment is just a waste of time, but truth be known, it's rather simple to include and gives electricity stakeholders confidence and certainty. I know for a fact that they don't see it as a waste of time. It would also instill confidence and certainty in the stakeholders who are worried about legal manoeuvring that could potentially allow the government or the Alberta Electric System Operator to skip out of commitments.

Now, you would think that this government, seeing what we saw with the PPA debacle, would understand this point and understand this principle that you need to make sure that the legal contract, in this case the legislation, is ironclad. To take a little longer to be able to make sure that we get it right or that they get it right would save the government and, obviously, taxpayers a lot of money in terms of legal costs, again, as we've seen with the PPA debacle.

I couldn't tell you enough how extremely important it is for this government to restore some essence of confidence and instill trust in the bill. If they did so, investors would feel much more confident in the process. Members on the other side of this aisle claim that the words we are using in the amendment are already in the bill, that it's superfluous and perhaps something we don't even need to look at. Restoring confidence is considered superfluous and something we don't need to waste our time on? That is what happens, Madam Chair, when you have a government who lives under an NDP world view and does not consider consultation with anyone outside of the view valuable. Actually, they perceive it as a complete waste of time.

If this government really wants investors to receive this bill in good faith, then I suggest that this amendment be supported. Eroding investor confidence will not lead to the future growth of this province. This is a rather simple amendment that would very well restore that confidence. Like other members have mentioned before, this is not simply a grammatical change. This isn't simply adding words to make this just sound better to investors. This is about actual transparency and fairness. It also incorporates words that industry understands, using legal terminology that cannot be mistaken.

The Member for Calgary-Foothills used foresight when drafting this amendment. He decided to look ahead to make sure that the same issues that happened previously with the PPAs does not happen again. This is something that the government side of the House and their thousands of employees should be very concerned about. I give him credit for this kind of forethought. I think that the other side of the House should peacefully and humbly accept this amendment because – you know what? – he's right. This very simple amendment could save the government a world of trouble and save taxpayers a world of trouble. Not only could this be a potential problem down the line, but let's look at the electricity capacity any time capacity drops. Who is on the hook for the bill? That's right. It's the taxpayer, Madam Chair.

The legislation as proposed says that the capacity market supports ensuring "that a reliable supply of electricity is available at reasonable cost to customers." Reasonable according to who? Who determines that? The value of being able to put this kind of verbiage into the legislation establishes that there are going to be competitive processes at play, that there are going to be fair processes at play, that they are going to focus on efficiencies and that they are going to make sure that it's open and, as I said earlier, competitive.

This is standard practice in good or best practices. I think the sad thing that I hear is that the NDP will not be supporting this amendment. This is a very common-sense amendment that does not change their need or desire to be able to move to a capacity market. This actually takes, in my opinion, a very bad bill and makes it less bad, and yet again we're seeing complete stubbornness from this government. This is just not the same as it saying that the capacity market "supports ensuring a reliable supply of electricity is available at reasonable cost to customers" and "supports the fair, efficient and openly competitive operation of the capacity market."

Let me ask the members on the other side of the House this question. Why wouldn't you want the capacity market to be fair, efficient, open, and competitive? I imagine that if they were sitting on this side of the House, they would be championing that kind of an idea. As we've seen in Hansard in the past, that is something that they've been supposedly champions of in the past, and I'm not sure exactly why they're not now.

Since this government's phase-out of coal generation, the need for Bill 13 became apparent when the grid became unstable. The capacity market had to happen in order to stabilize the grid, or else we would have seen the same sort of thing happening in Ontario happening here. Now, it's not to say that that won't happen here. As we can see, especially with the election in Ontario, Premier Wynne is suffering the consequences of a policy that has taken down a complete government. I think that, once again, making sure that this bill has the right mix, learning from the mistakes that were made in Ontario, would be something that this government would embrace, yet again they're completely uninterested in applying these best practices.

Now, the reason they had to do this was because the NDP decided to implement changes too quickly. What an American company did in three years across 13 states should have taken six. Then there's our government. They decide that if this American company can do it in three, they can beat that and do it in two.

Here we are back in the House, and if you want to talk about wasted time, let's discuss how this government, through their own fault, now have to bring in capacity markets and waste everyone else's precious time and money. It's a real shame, Madam Chair, that it went this way. In fact, it can all stem back, in my opinion, to the carbon tax. Because they implemented the carbon tax, there was just a snowballing effect of one more legislation that needed to be introduced and presented so that they could fix the original problem, which is the carbon tax, the original fault of not thinking about things and just rushing headlong into policies that had not been properly thought out, in fact not even just properly thought out but not even campaigned on, the largest tax grab in Alberta history. We're in a situation now where we're seeing that not only affecting Albertans in the pocketbook from the carbon tax but actually affecting Albertans because of the constant new policies that have to be presented by this government in order to be able to try to fix the original problem.

Well, I know what the fix is, Madam Chair. We've said it many times. Our leader has said it. We need to get rid of the carbon tax, get rid of the original problem, and start working through these issues that this NDP government has introduced to a fantastic economy and to a fantastic province, a place that used to be the light in Canada. In fact, many people from all over the world came to this place because of this thing that we used to call the Alberta advantage. It's been dismantled now. Now we have businesses that are saying that they have no interest in being able to stay here. The only reason why they do is because they believe that this will be a one-and-done government, and if they believed that there's going to be a second term, they would not stay. We would see a complete exodus of businesses.

Now, look, I'm not trying to be a fearmonger here. I'm not trying to say something that I haven't heard. I've heard this everywhere I go. From north to south, from east to west in this province businesses are scared to death of this NDP government. They keep on changing the rules. You know, what's interesting about this, Madam Chair, is that businesses can adapt to a lot of things, but when it happens so quickly, they have a very hard time adapting.

I'll give you a case in point. Recently, June 1, the new OH and S rules, occupational health and safety rules, were applied and also the fines and penalties associated with those. Now, what's interesting about that is that as I read through some of the feedback that we were getting, that feedback showed that the businesses had not even been told about these changes and the scope and magnitude of these changes until just weeks ago. It started being posted on the website, and the government started being able to tell people. But how do they expect businesses to be able to adjust? They need to have that certainty, that certainty that if they invest, if they bring their hard-earned capital and they invest it in this province, they will be able to see a return on investment, or else they wouldn't do it. They'll go somewhere else, where they can have that certainty.

In this situation we've seen time and time again where they have introduced bills, introduced legislation based upon a world view or a view of how they think the world should be, and the outcome, the cost to society, has not been fully vetted, has not been fully understood.

You know what? For three years now I've been sitting on this side of the House trying to figure it out, and I have to say that the only thing that I can see as the reason why we're seeing this kind of legislation coming out is because the NDP government, the people who make up the NDP, do not know how money flows. They don't know how investment works. Because of that, it's like shooting in the dark. They're in a situation where they think this is the utopian way that it needs to be, and then they move forward with legislation that has never been proven. There are no precedents to show that it actually can work, but there's a belief that they can do it.

You know what? Even with this whole concept of electricity, the capacity market, they're doing the same thing that has been done in Ontario – the same thing that's been done in Ontario – yet what do we hear from them? “We'll get it right this time. We've figured it out. We know how it can work.” Well, I've said many times, in talking about Bill 13, that of the three parts of the electricity market – you've got the transmission, the distribution, and the retail – the one part that was the shining light in this whole electricity market was the retail side. That's the one part that we've done well. Yet they're changing it. They're moving that into a capacity market. They're moving that into a model adopted by Ontario. Why? Why are they moving to that kind of a model? Because it is working? Once again, why would they want to fix the things that are working? They don't need to be fixed. If they would think about this, if they would think about the consequences of their actions, I don't know why we would have something like this come about.

I think that they should have addressed the issues of transmission and distribution – I've said that many times in this House – where we have a threefold increase in cost. When I talk to people and they talk to me about the increases in their electrical bills, they say: I'm concerned about the transmission and the distribution costs going up. Those are the types of things that we need to be addressing. Instead, what do we see in Bill 13? We see them trying to fix something that was already fixed, which is the retail side. We've seen, actually, a few bills come forward which, in reality, just restrict that supply. If you restrict the supply, you're going to drive up the equilibrium price. This is economics 101. Very simple.

Anyways, Madam Chair, I have been opposed to this bill, but the amendment takes a bad bill and makes it less bad. This is why I'm in support of this amendment. It brings in the verbiage that will hopefully bring a little bit more certainty to those investors that we desperately need in our province. We don't want to be driving out any more investors. Now, I would like to reiterate that the members from the other side like to say that there is absolutely no reason for this amendment, yet I hope that I've been able to clearly articulate the value and the reasons why this is important, that this is something that actually can bring that certainty.

Even if it's just that one part that makes this bad bill just a little bit better, I think it's something that this government really should take a look at. They really should be able to try to get their head around it and figure out what it is about this idea of “fair, efficient and openly competitive.” What is it about that? What is it about that verbiage that makes sense and will help to make this even better?

I don't know why the government would be concerned about adding those words: “fair, efficient and openly competitive.” Maybe the competitive part would scare them. It seems like in every area where they can get rid of competition, they have been picking winners and losers. But what about fair and efficient and open? I mean, the NDP government has often said in this House, many times, how open and transparent they are. What about that?

Now, in the event that this is not something that they'd be willing to do, why wouldn't they amend this? Why wouldn't they just take a look at this and say: “Well, you know what? We do want to be able to carry on with this idea that we're open and transparent, so we are willing to take a look at this”?

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to this this evening. It's interesting. Lots and lots of opportunities to fix things here.

I just want to talk for a moment about language again. This is sort of where I was at when we ended last week. There is a humongous difference in language when you're speaking about what you're actually trying to produce. There is also an imperative piece about trust, an imperative piece about making sure that when large, large changes happen like this, you have the trust of the people that have put you here and that you're able to make sure that they have that trust going forward because you've been very clear about the mechanism that you're trying to change.

When we talk about fair, efficient, open, and competitive, it's actually not just language, Madam Chair. Those were the rules that were set out in the original language with regard to electricity and capacity and how those things are distributed. That language is actually the rule. It's the legal jargon that was put in there in the first place to make sure – those words are not just words. They're actually things that you have to do in order to make sure that you are doing right by the people of Alberta when it comes to their electricity, their quality of life, their ability to keep the lights on, and the ability to make sure that they can take care of their families. Also, if you're going forward with green technology, that language would help them to understand what is happening with the new things that are coming online.

When we talk about that, the legal departments say that the words “reliable” and “reasonable cost to customers” do not even fall into the same category as “fair, efficient and openly competitive.” You cannot in any way prove “reliable.” “Reliable” has to follow with metrics. It has to follow with baseload. It has to follow with capacity. It also has to fall in line with what people can pay for, not hidden behind the smoke and mirrors of a number that the government has set in order to subsidize electricity coming to Albertans instead of allowing them to know what they’re actually paying for.

Like I’ve said before, not everybody appreciates what’s coming to them on their power bills. However, the rate riders on there have always handled the volatility. Sometimes you’re getting money back; sometimes you’re paying into the system. But we understood what it was that we were paying for. That piece has been removed by this government with the cap and also by removing this imperative language.

To reiterate, Madam Chair, this language was also removed in Bill 27 and Bill 34. The words “transparent” and “accountable” were removed from the Market Surveillance Administrator and from all of the aspects of those bills and what was changing there, which again gives extraordinary power to the Minister of Energy to bring on whatever capacity she wants without it being talked about in this Legislature on behalf of Albertans. When we look at that part of the puzzle and then we look that the government is changing the language, the assumption is that they don’t believe that Albertans are savvy enough to understand what’s being done.

If we look at REP 1, in that auction it came in with three wind projects. These three wind projects, that average 3 cents per kilowatt hour – and this is for the 600-megawatt project. I’ve said this before, but I think it bears repeating. When the electricity price drops below the average, the NDP government carbon tax subsidizes these wind projects. Boy, that carbon tax is going far, subsidizing wind projects. It’s subsidizing the cap on electricity, I mean, all sorts of things. Evidently, this $3 billion is going to go a long ways. Of course, now it’s not going towards green initiatives. It’s been put into the general coffers, but this was before. The NDP government carbon tax will subsidize wind projects. What happens when it goes above 3 cents per kilowatt hour? Wind projects pay back the NDP government. Sounds good.

By comparison, the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta indicated – and this is the interesting part, Madam Chair, and the part that doesn’t get explained by the government at all in any capacity. The 2016 wholesale price of electricity averaged – get this – 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour. How much subsidy is that, hmm? It sounds really good for the taxpayer and ratepayer, doesn’t it? That’s the average. That means that even more could have gone below that, which means that the subsidy increases by this government, supposedly by the carbon tax, supposedly to come in and help Albertans: I would like an explanation of that and how it is that – on top of this, how are we going to pay for the infrastructure that’s going to be required?

That’s just REP 1, Madam Chair. That doesn’t even include other projects that are coming online. We can talk about that, too. The question always, always has to come to: fundamentally, who is paying for this, and how much is it going to cost? Those are two fundamental questions we cannot get answers for. The total cost to the taxpayer? Unknown. How is it that in this House we can sit and do that to Albertans and say that we have their backs? That’s not appropriate, not even close. This could mean energy poverty for people in this province. We’re already going to see those spikes in electricity. Everybody in this House has probably had somebody come to their office telling them that they’ve seen their energy costs increase, and I can bring in a whole bunch.

Again, the interesting thing about this and the 6.8 cent cap for residential users – and I’ve asked this on several occasions. There is no part of the capacity model that works for the industry. What about the farmers, Madam Chair? What about our farmers, our food producers, the people that put food on our tables every single day, who have to feed their cattle, haul water, use their trucks the same as they do plus pay the carbon tax and then, on top of that, are paying based on a rate rider different than what we are getting under this supposed capacity market and are not being informed by the government in any way, shape, or form as to what would be the best deal for them?

The minister sort of slightly said the other day that they’re sending out information and education. Really? Well, I have to tell you that I have a lot of farmers in my area. I phoned them after that conversation. I phoned 15 of them who happen to be my close friends, who I’ve known my whole life. Not one single one of them, Madam Chair, has received a letter saying: “Oh, you know what? You should probably go to Enmax, and you should probably get a fixed rate because these prices are going to spike.” Not one. If I could have gotten one or two out of those people – okay – I can understand. The information doesn’t always get out to people. I have the same problem. Not one. And I have them actually reaching to all of their friends right now, too, to see where this education piece is coming from.

Let’s talk about this again. We have REP 2 and 3, that are now being bid on, for additional renewable electricity. REP 2 is about 300 megawatts – this one has other equity ownership in it – and REP 3 is 400 megawatts. Do we know what the total cost to the taxpayer is? No. Nothing. Nada. Why, Madam Chair? Why is it that if this is so good for us, the government isn’t willing to be fair, efficient, open, and competitive, first of all; second of all, transparent or accountable? All of the words – there are six words there, superimportant words, that have been removed by this government in their own legislation. Well, it’s pretty easy to see why, because then they can legitimately make these decisions without actually talking to Albertans or debating it in this House.

Let’s talk about solar. The government of Alberta is planning to tender into June 2018, and evidently it’s to procure over half of its energy from solar power electricity. According to the solar industry it comes in at about 6 cents per kilowatt hour. Let’s talk about what the Independent Power Producers Society says. The 2016 wholesale price range: guess where that averaged, Madam Chair? One point seven cents per kilowatt hour. That’s interesting.

So, Madam Chair, do we know what the costs to taxpayers are? No. Nothing, because the language “fair, efficient, open, and competitive” has been removed, and so has “transparent and accountable.” I guess there’s no need to tell our fellow Albertans what’s actually going on here, is there? The government is just going to make that decision for them.

Let’s talk about the capacity market. As we know, Madam Chair, the sun doesn’t always shine; the wind doesn’t always blow. In order to keep our baseload – electrical generation has to stand on the back of some baseload that needs to be built. The reason why we got a capacity market, the reason why this has come in and impacted every single Albertan, why Bill 13 exists is to supposedly stimulate investment.

But guess what happens with a capacity market? Electricity prices will rise, supposedly because we have less volatility. You know why? Because it’s been capped. Therefore, anything that is happening volatilitywise will happen under the smoke and mirrors of the cap, so Albertans just don't need to know. What we have right now, where we have zero utility debt, will soon grow to be a massive debt in this province because of subsidies, because of lack of understanding, and because the rate riders aren't there to balance off what was happening in the first place.

Like many of the other members on this side have said, there were so many things with the electricity market that could have been fixed. The retail part was not that piece. So many other things that could have been fixed, that needed help, that should have been looked at: no, no, no. We're just going to attack and bring up the cost of the specified gas emitters so that the PPAs get overturned and cost billions of dollars to Albertans and then, on top of that, build all of this other legislation to fix that mistake that happened in the first place, that evidently wasn't in the binders of the ministers when they first got this portfolio.

An Hon. Member: You've seen the binders?

Mrs. Aheer: I can actually answer that because actually that was language that was used by your Minister of Energy specifically in this House, in Hansard. I have it here. That was not my language; that was the minister's: it wasn't in the binder. Fair enough. Walking in as a brand new government: so much information, for sure. But when the energy companies come to you, saying, "Uh-oh, you probably shouldn't do that" and that this is what's going to happen and it still happens – and we know that that discussion happened well before the PPAs were overturned – it calls into question not even the understanding but the purposefulness of what has been done here.

Here's the thing that's interesting. We know that electricity prices will rise. We know that there's a cap. We'll presume that there's less volatility because we don't know any different, because it's not on our bill anymore. But guess what again? The cost to the taxpayers and the ratepayers is unknown.

Let's talk about the power purchase agreements for just a moment. We have a bit of a timeline here. The NDP raises the carbon tax on coal-fired power plants. It made the power purchase agreements more unprofitable. That cost the taxpayer $2 billion to buy back the PPAs. That full cost is still not fully known. It's another thing that Albertans are very interested in.

You know what's really interesting, Madam Chair? How interested Albertans are in this right now, completely interested. I've never had so many questions about electricity. I love talking about it. It was something that I learned from the very beginning to here. I had very limited knowledge about this. It's one of the beautiful things about being in this House, how much you learn, how much you learn about these particular pieces of information, especially when you have to explain it to people, what's going on. I find it very interesting because I'm interested in it, more people talk about it, and then you have a lot more interesting discussions about it. What every single person says to me is: "I don't understand it. I don't get it." Whether they love renewables or whether they're against or they're coal-fired people, whatever it is, nobody seems to understand this mechanism or how this has been done.

Let's talk about that first. We've got approximately $2 billion to buy back the PPAs, but we don't know what that full cost is yet. Then – whoa – here's even more fun. The coal phase-out agreements: the cost to taxpayers is $1.1 billion in 2016, $31.9 million in 2017, $29.9 million in 2018. And that will continue to cost taxpayers tens of millions until 2029. Wow. Congratulations. That's a real winner of a piece of information there, especially when you consider that there's absolutely no information going out to the taxpayer and the ratepayer about what the cost actually is going to be to Albertans.

If we talk about subsidized electricity prices, consumers on the regulated rate option for electricity will have their bill subsidized when electricity prices climb over 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. The government has budgeted $74.3 million in 2018-2019 to subsidize this decision. That decision, just the decision alone, aside from the $74.3 million, cost the government $9 million. Does the government know how much this is going to cost taxpayers? No. Absolutely no clue. The only thing that we have information on right now is REP 1.

REP 1 proves to us that at this point in time not only is it subsidizing the taxpayer, but we're having to subsidize for capacity as well. How does that work, Madam Chair? How is that okay? People love the idea of renewable energy, but you don't do it under smoke and mirrors. You don't make decisions and then have Albertans pay for that because people think that that's the right thing to do. You can't do that and not tell the taxpayer what they're on the hook for. We are here spending hard-earned taxpayer dollars on things. We have a responsibility, at least to some degree, to explain to them why this is happening.

I mean, we know that the total cost to Alberta taxpayers for these changes to the electricity system is going to be north of $3.2 billion, but we don't have an exact number. That's the entire cost of the carbon tax for this year. Now, even better, Madam Chair, those dollars are being taken out of green initiatives and put into the general coffers. In the government coffers there's even less transparency over what is happening to the money that was promised by this government that was going to be used for green initiatives.

The hon. members for Calgary-Foothills and Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have written to the Auditor General asking to have all of this audited. Why? So we can actually go to Albertans, Madam Chair, and say: "This is how much this is going to cost you. This is what the government has put on your shoulders." They didn't ask. They brought this forward. They didn't campaign on this, and this is the result. These several bills that build this puzzle of a lack of accountable language and that puts together all of this legislation that had to be built as a result of the mistakes that were made when the PPAs were overturned in the first place in order to subsidize – you have to be able to subsidize renewables to bring them online in order to track that investment. It can't happen by itself. They are not capable of making money by themselves. It has to be subsidized. There has to be a capacity market in order to subsidize renewables coming online right now because they cannot pay for themselves. It's not even like they produce at 100 per cent capacity, Madam Chair. Anything outside of that is paid for by the taxpayer.

So when you hear members say that language is superfluous and lacks value and "Is it useful?" and they find it fascinating and that we're just reordering words for grammar reasons, I have to say, Madam Chair, that that is absolutely mind-boggling, that that's the kind of language that is being used when we're trying to find out why Albertans are on the hook for this, that a member of the government would use that language to explain the necessity for fair, efficient, open . . .

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's so exciting to be here tonight. It's 4-1 in the hockey game.

Madam Chair, I rise today to speak in favour of my colleague from Calgary-Foothills' amendment on Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. You know, this amendment could change the wording in a couple of subsections, where it should be fair, efficient, open, competitive, and not being used to describe the capacity market.

Madam Chair, before I get into the specifics of this amendment, I'd like to touch base on a couple of points on Bill 13. Bill 13 is not a simple piece of legislation. It would change Alberta's electricity market from an energy-only market to a capacity market. What does this really mean? From my understanding, this means that there'll be two markets, one for the ability to produce energy and one for the ability to deliver energy. It's a fundamental change to our electricity market. Has the government done proper consultation with the consumers and industry stakeholders? Well, if industry stakeholders are taking you to court and there are some legal issues, obviously, you didn't talk to them. In the past we've seen that this government has brought through different items on their agenda without proper consultation, and this piece of legislation isn't that different. I think it's unlikely that they're going to do that.

Was there any reason to change our electricity system in Alberta? The fact of the matter is that the previous market, the previous system, was working pretty well in Alberta. We had no debt, prices were low, consumers were happy, and the risk was carried by the electricity market, or the producers and the providers. So why did the government introduce this legislation? The reason was because of this government's ideological plane and a shift from a reliable market such as coal to other forms of electricity. They wanted to take that away and move it towards what we think is an unreliable market such as wind and solar.

Well, Madam Chair, while there are many issues with this legislation, what we can do right now is propose amendments – and that's what my hon. colleague has done – that can make this legislation better for all Albertans. The amendment proposed by my colleague from Calgary-Foothills does just this. This amendment cleans up and adjusts the language in Bill 13, just for the mere fact that it creates some consistency. There were a few places in the bill where fair, efficient, open, and competitive had not been accorded to and brought through in the capacity market, or the standard language just wasn't used. It wasn't business language.

This further makes it such that the government just can't skip out on its commitments. Some stakeholders have expressed concerns about whether the government could use legal manoeuvring to not live up to its commitments. Perhaps the language in the contracts is somewhat nebulous.

My colleague's amendment would help restore the trust in the bill. If the last three years have shown us anything, it's that Albertans have very little reason to trust this current government, from its tax hikes, which were never campaigned on, to the increased level of government debt, which has given Albertans plenty of reason to be skeptical. Considerable debt. Even regarding electricity this government has gone from a system that served Alberta and Alberta's best interest to a system that was costed by Albertans – even better – more so.

While this amendment doesn't solve all the problems – I'm sure my hon. colleague had thought it through well, this amendment – he was trying to solve one problem, some of the language. It makes sense. It doesn't solve all the problems that we've created, the lack of trust in this government, but it does help the public trust in this particular piece of legislation. Adding the words "fair, efficient, open, and competitive" to this legislation restores the trust.

Why wouldn't we want capacity markets to be fair, efficient, open, and competitive? Why wouldn't the members vote in favour of this amendment? Hmm. This government hasn't shown its commitment to fair, efficient, open, and competitive markets in the past, but now it would be a good time to show that commitment.

Let the people think and know exactly what you're doing. Put it in the language of the law. Put it in the contract. No.

However, the language the NDP uses in this legislation regarding the capacity market is only about reliable supply and reasonable cost. Pretty simple terms. Not much there; not much of a commitment. It's just not consistent language that the industry uses. I haven't seen it in the contracts. We need the consistent language in this legislation. It only makes sense. The industry needs to be seen to be fair, open, efficient, and have competitive operations of the capacity market without exception. This will prevent legal challenges and will allow us to enable an industry to trust the government to get the capacity market right.

Madam Chair, while this amendment does not allow improvements to be made to Bill 13, I still have many reservations about the capacity market that is being created. You see, government works best when there is less of it, less red tape, less infringement. We had a little government electricity sector prior to this government taking over, prior to the NDP taking over, and it worked well, but now look. Now the NDP seems to think that adding more government to the electricity sector is something that's going to make things better, more red tape.

The NDP got involved in the electricity market by shutting down coal-fired power plants and trying to promote their green energy ideas in a very short period of time. Then, to compensate for this intrusion, the NDP introduced Bill 13, which we are debating today, just to try and solve some of the issues of their initial intrusion and what it's caused. When will it stop? When will this government learn that the best thing they can do is simply get out of the way of the private market?

As I mentioned before, Bill 13 is no simple piece of legislation. Fundamental changes are being made to the electricity sector. Is the time that we have spent debating this bill in the House sufficient? I think not. My UCP colleague and I have previously made referral amendments so that this bill could be studied in depth in committee – and, believe me, I'm getting used to the committee – with input from most stakeholders, but unfortunately, of course, it was defeated.

Madam Chair, while I do see many issues with the shift to capacity markets, I would encourage all members to vote in favour of this amendment. I think it's a good amendment. I think my colleague thought it through effectively and efficiently, and I support this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. It seems that I'm really, really encouraged by the Deputy Premier and her colleagues there. They really want to hear me speak on Bill 13 and my own amendment, amendment A4, which is an important amendment. While I was away in Manitoba learning about market access issues, my colleague from Rocky Mountain House introduced this amendment on my behalf, and I would like to thank him for doing so.

I also understand, Madam Chair, that the Member for Edmonton-South West sparked some heated debate on this amendment of mine. I understand that the member said, "All the words that they're using are actually already in the bill. They've actually just reordered those words." I'm really happy at least that he did some research and found that I drafted the amendment using the words which are already in the bill. I compliment him for taking some time and reading that bill, at least paying attention to my amendment. Thank you for doing so.

Yes, that's true. All of the words that I used to draft this amendment are actually in the bill, and, yes, that's exactly what I'm doing. We are reordering them. The member then went on to say, "I think that's sort of superfluous and maybe something that..." Did I get that right?

Mrs. Aheer: You did awesome.

Mr. Panda: Okay. Whatever that is, superfluous.

"... we don't necessarily have to look at in here. It changes the order of the words, and I don't know how that's a valuable use of the time in this Assembly."

I heard that the Member for Edmonton-South West – I just saw him saw him there – is a computer programmer, and he should know better. The law is not much different than writing a computer code. If you write the code in the wrong order or if you forget to write a line of the code, the program doesn't work; it crashes or it produces the wrong answer. The same is true with the law. If the words are in the wrong order or if the words are missing from a line of the bill, when that bill becomes the law, the law doesn't behave as it was originally intended.

Now, the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, my good friend here and my seatmate, rightfully pointed out that part of this amendment changes the section of Bill 13 where the capacity market is to have reliable and reasonable cost to the consumer. Being reliable and a reasonable cost to consumers is all well and good, but it's not the same thing as also being fair, efficient, and openly competitive in its operation. This amendment is a major change in Bill 13 to bring trust to the capacity market.

Madam Chair, here I'm talking about bringing trust back to the capacity market. Just now my colleague from Highwood spoke about that trust. Trust is really important here because when the NDP ran in the 2015 provincial election, I looked at their election platform, their election manifesto. They never told Albertans that they were going to bring in a job-killing carbon tax, not even once. They hadn't mentioned it. They also didn't tell Albertans that they were going to take on a $96 billion debt on behalf of Albertans. They never said that to Albertans. They didn't ask Albertans for the mandate, not even once. I looked at their campaign platform. So then they brought in these earth-shattering changes to the electricity market, actually changing the livelihood of rural Albertans where that coal-fired electric generation is happening currently. The NDP, for their ideological reasons, wanted to shut down those coal-fired power plants. That means there is a deficit in electricity generation, so they want to replace that with renewable electricity, with wind and solar.

Since wind and solar are intermittent and they're not a hundred per cent reliable or dependable, they have to have a backup baseload to backfill that shortage, so they came out with this idea of Bill 13 to create a capacity market, which transfers the risk now to the consumers and the ratepayers. Earlier the private investors like ATCO, Enmax, and Capital Power took the risk of investing into this business and providing electricity at a reasonable cost. Now with the NDP's Bill 13 the risk is transferred to the consumers and the ratepayers.

Then they also capped it. They thought they were hiding that by capping the electricity at 6.8 cents per kilowatt. The difference is that somebody has to pay. In the month of April this NDP government has spent $9 million more to pay for the differential, so about 6.8 cents. There are so many hidden costs that this government wants to hide or transfer to other, you know, accounts, but in the end it's coming from the same pocket, Madam Chair. It's the consumers and the ratepayers. Albertans are paying for it. That's why the trust is really important.

That's why I thought through and brought in this amendment. There were a couple of places in Bill 13 where "fair, efficient and openly competitive" had not been accorded to the capacity market. The standard FEOC language was not used. FEOC is an industry standard language. People in the industry use it regularly, so you don't go messing around with that. By putting this back in, with this amendment, this will clean up some sloppy legal drafting in the bill and ensure consistency. Why? Because it's all about trust, Madam Chair. We just talked about that. Electricity generators want to be able to trust that this NDP government will get this bill right the first time. In that way, the government or the system operator will not have legal wiggle room to skip out on their commitments.

Madam Chair, I simply don't understand why the Member for Edmonton-South West does not want the capacity market to be fair, efficient, and openly competitive. It's not just the Member for Edmonton-South West. I don't understand why the minister or her cabinet colleagues or the NDP MLAs don't want this in the system. I just don't get it. But people want to invest in trust and confidence that the NDP government is not going to change the rules midstream or use the courts to force contracts open or amendments because they left a legal loophole.

Madam Chair, I mean, we know what happens when rules are changed midway. We have seen that when the federal government, this NDP's federal allies, the Trudeau Liberals, changed rules midway through with TransCanada, that has withdrawn their investment in the Energy East pipeline and cancelled the project. With that, they killed thousands of jobs and billions of dollars of investment. That's why I would ask the NDP members: do you want backup generation for wind and solar or not? If so, give the industry trust and confidence in the market rules.

Madam Chair, this is a good amendment. It strengthens the bill and helps the minister. I tried to make this bill, which is really, really complex – I'm sure the Energy minister will agree with me and I agree with her that Bill 13 is really complex. We're trying to help her make the bill better, myself and my colleagues here. We're doing our job. As the critic I'm doing my job of reviewing the bill and offering constructive criticism and offering alternate suggestions to make this bill better.

The NDP government has a record of rejecting the reasonable, common-sense amendments that we've brought forward to make their flawed bills – I mean, rarely, probably about three or four times in three years they've accepted opposition amendments. That really reflects badly on them. Today we have seen another example, Motion 505, a private member's motion brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and Leader of the Official Opposition. The NDP, without even applying their minds, just rejected it.

On the other hand, the opposition, every time we thought that the government was fighting for Albertans, stood with them. We supported their bills wherever we thought they were in the best interests of Albertans. Like my colleague from Calgary-Elbow said, the NDP is acting silly, and they don't want to give the wins to the opposition just because they don't want to give any credit to the opposition for doing their job.

It was not the same story when the NDP Government House leader and the current Premier were in opposition, when they were sitting in that corner. For them, the world looked differently then. But once they occupied the other side of the aisle, their world view changed. They just want to suppress the opposition, and they don't want to accept reasonable, common-sense amendments. Well, I think power corrupts people. It has gone to their heads. That's why Albertans are ready to send them back to where they belong very soon. They're losing common sense. They're not accepting good suggestions. Even reasonable – reasonable – amendments they simply don't want to look at. They just want to reject them.

I mean, on this particular amendment why can't the NDP members speak up and give their input? If they don't like this, I'm open to amend my amendment if that's what they want to do. I don't know if it is allowed or practical or not, but I'm open to listen to their suggestions for my amendment. They can tell me, other than saying: oh, he used the same words. I gave them my justification for why I used the same words. If they have any issue with that, I encourage them to speak up. I'm open to listening to them. If not, if they don't want to do that, then at least take our suggestion and accept this amendment, approve this, bring the trust back. Today people are not trusting the NDP.

This particular bill, Bill 13, if approved as it reads is going to increase the prices for electrical consumers. Seniors can't afford to pay. Seniors who are on fixed incomes can't afford to pay higher electricity prices, the carbon tax. Then regular people, the middle class, can't pay all those tax increases that this government brought in with their ideological agenda. They're not making life better, Madam Chair. They are making life hard for Albertans. If they believe in making life better for Albertans, let's try with this amendment with simple steps, baby steps. Let's take one step at a time. Make Bill 13 better by accepting this amendment.

With that, Madam Chair, I ask all my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this reasonable amendment and make this bill better.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to follow up with some commentary based on what the Member for Calgary-Foothills was talking about. I guess I just need to ask the question: why? Why would you not want the words “fair, efficient and openly competitive” in the legislation? Is there a really good reason for that? Why would you choose to not have that wording in there?

I mean, the legislation says that the capacity market supports “a reliable supply of electricity [that] is available at reasonable cost to customers.” That is a very good mission statement. It's a good idea, an ideology to follow. However, it's not legal language. Saying that it's going to be reliable and a reasonable cost to customers is a very nice thing to say. It's a good sales pitch. But it doesn't have the legal language required to make sure that those things actually happen.

I just want to talk a little bit about energy poverty. Here's the interesting thing. When you look at Ontario, for example – and I know the government doesn't like talking about Ontario, but we have a similar story being created here, Madam Chair. If you look at Ontario and you look at the issues that they're having, they say specifically that today's high prices are largely a result of provincial policy decisions that were made in the 2000s. The system is different because in Ontario they went to a large capacity of nuclear power.

Here's the interesting thing. I want to talk a little bit about some of the important factors around what it is that Albertans are going to be paying for. Now, Ontario, like I said, has a slightly different mechanism, but here's the thing that I find particularly interesting. Facing low approval ratings, the Premier of Ontario decided to add in an 8 per cent subsidy for residential and small-business bills, which took effect that year in January. Isn't that interesting? It sounds very, very similar to what's going on here.

Then if you look at the actual numbers – so let's talk about this for just a minute. This is one thing that I think this government is going to run into as this capacity market starts to take hold is that you have your baseload power, and you have your peaking power. The gap between those two things is when we talk about installed capacity and actual production. The interesting thing is that your installed capacity – like, for example, in Ontario almost 60 per cent of the electricity is supplied by nuclear power plants even though it's only a third of Ontario's capacity. So what does that mean? That means that other sources, for example, natural gas in Ontario, those plants are running nonstop, the 60 per cent, while other power sources often go unused.

So what happens with that gap? What happens in that? That's why the fair, efficient piece is in there. That's part of the mandate of transparency, to be able to let the ratepayer know what is happening in the gap between installed capacity and actual production and who actually is getting paid for not producing at that time.

It's interesting. I was mentioning this last week. Let me see if I can find this. Oh, right. In Brooks did you know that zero power is produced 64 per cent of the time? Zero power. So when you talk about that, 64 per cent of the time nothing is coming from there. There is no production coming from that particular type of energy, but it is subsidized at a hundred per cent. [interjections]

It's interesting that you have an entire capacity – I mean, the point of bringing that up is that it's unstable. How do you have stability in electricity when the wind doesn't blow and the sun doesn't shine and it's producing zero capacity? You have to have a baseload power that is coming from somewhere else, that is running all the time and is being paid out for capacity while other things are being subsidized even when they're not producing. I'm sure the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud will have something to say about that shortly, or at least that's my understanding based on what just happened there.

I'll just continue on with my story. Unfortunately, this isn't a story. It's actual things that have happened in other provinces that we could learn so much from. One of the things that was really interesting was the transmission in Ontario. Hydro One is a government company. It was in the process of being privatized. Anyway, the Premier of Ontario had a plan to sell 60 per cent of hydro in a bid to raise $4 billion to fund transit and $5 billion to pay down the debt. Did you know that since 2015 only 30 per cent of the company is on the stock market? Why is that? If that is the plan of this government, to be able to bring this on and then sell it off, what is the plan for that if that doesn't work? The taxpayer and the ratepayer are still on the hook for that money.

We have another interesting piece of information that's very similar, too. The province of Ontario was haunted by the memory of the disastrous over budgeting on the nuclear construction between the 1980s and the 1990s. Then at that time the Liberals were elected on a promise to close down coal-fired power plants. It's interesting. It sounds very similar to what's happening in this province except that our capacity that we're bringing online is solar and wind and without, actually, any ability of understanding how we're going to get those megawatts and are going to get them to be sustainable.

The first major wave of power plants – this was all tied to the Green Energy Act, Madam Chair. But do you know what happened? It's the same thing that's happening here. The government provided lucrative terms for wind and solar to build a renewable-power industry. What ended up happening? The cost of all of this was passed on to the ratepayers in the form of – guess what? – higher electricity bills. That is why the Member for Calgary-Foothills and the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills were asking for the Auditor General to find out what this is actually going to cost the taxpayer. We have no information on what this is going to actually cost the taxpayer.

Anyway, I just wanted to chat about that, and if somebody on the government side wants to talk about capacity or wind capacity or how that's being subsidized or not being subsidized, I'd be very grateful for any information. If I'm wrong, please correct me. I would love to be wrong about this. I would absolutely love to be wrong. So I'm hoping that the member will stand up and explain about the wind capacity and how that is not being subsidized by the government and about how it's okay with him that the language "fair, efficient and openly competitive" has been removed from the legislation that he is standing behind instead of explaining why it is that the capacity market provides smoke and mirrors to be able to bring on capacity where the taxpayers themselves will not know what they're paying for.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment today. I think that, you know, it's a good amendment that provides some assurance, provides some transparency. I think we've heard somewhat from my colleagues this evening on the fact that this is about instilling trust. It's one thing that this government has done a very poor job of; that is, establishing trust with Albertans. On this particular file with respect to electricity this government has done anything but that.

You know, my colleague from Calgary-Foothills and I recently wrote a letter to the Auditor General asking if he would be able to provide some sense of the extreme costs that are going to be incurred by Albertans. We've literally seen the government spend billions of dollars already on the electricity market, yet we don't know what the future costs will be. There really is a lack of trust, a lack of understanding of exactly what direction this capacity market is going in and where it's going to end up.

This particular amendment supports ensuring a reliable supply of electricity that is available at reasonable costs to customers. This is not the same thing as "supports ensuring a reliable supply of electricity is available at reasonable cost" and "supports the fair, efficient and openly competitive operation of the [capacity] market." This is a major change that brings back trust to the capacity market. The real question, as has been stated, is: why wouldn't you want the capacity market to be fair, efficient, open, and competitive? One can only ask themselves the question on why the government wouldn't want that.

You know, if we look at the track record of the NDP, we've seen them make a whole bunch of different decisions that communicate that they don't actually want a fair and open and transparent and competitive market, whether it's bringing decisions back into government or whether it's something as simple as the rollout of the $25-a-day daycare program. Madam Chair, you'll know that the government made the decision to only allow $25-a-day daycare with very specific providers, providers that the government has selected. In this case it's only around nonprofit daycare centres. They don't even allow for nonprofit day home providers to have access to that $25-a-day daycare program. In my opinion, it's all about minimizing fair, efficient, and openly competitive markets. They're doing that in all sorts of different scenarios, including daycare and including the electricity market.

It really comes down to an ideological bent that the NDP has that they know best. It is that they will be driving the market forces, that they will be minimizing choice, and that they will be taking steps to minimize the opportunity for fair, efficient, and openly competitive operations. We've seen that in so many different avenues that the government has touched. It's certainly concerning. It's concerning that we may in fact have a less open market, a less transparent market, a less openly competitive market because of the decisions that the government makes. Really, at the end of the day, it comes down to trust.

When we look at other jurisdictions that have lost control or have headed in the same direction as this government is heading, particularly in the case of Ontario, in every other jurisdiction that has transitioned to a capacity market, they've done so on a much more reasonable timeline. But this government is insistent on rushing this particular decision. We've seen in a number of situations significant cost increases and a real lack of trust with respect to what the government is doing on this particular file in other jurisdictions as well as here in Alberta, so it's widely expected that there will be a significant increase in costs with respect to the capacity market.

You'll know, Madam Chair, that I have the opportunity of serving the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and you'll know that that's a very rural constituency and that these particular changes often have a more significant impact on rural Alberta, particularly because of the way that they engage in energy and in electricity.

Mr. Nixon: So another attack on rural Alberta.

Mr. Cooper: It is another attack on rural Alberta.

I think that, you know, we're wise to heed the advice of those who've gone before us. We look at rural Ontario. I was interested to read earlier today about a story that came from rural Ontario: Rural Ontarians Left in the Dark as Electricity Bills Skyrocket. The story is a Global News story.

So-called "energy poverty" is getting worse in rural Ontario, a Global News investigation has found, with even small households paying hundreds of dollars a month [just] to keep the lights on.

Mr. Gill: How much?

Mr. Cooper: Hundreds of dollars a month just to keep the lights on.

Officials, residents and experts are all sounding the alarm after electricity rates in the province rose 100 per cent in the past decade.

A range of factors are fueling the increases, including subsidies for clean energy.

Subsidies for clean energy. I think that this government has been well and truly on the record about their significant commitment to subsidies for clean energy, and while it's important that we are managing our environment and doing everything we can, we need to make sure that we're doing it in a manner that isn't going to create energy poverty in rural Alberta, as it has in rural Ontario.

A range of factors are fueling the increases, including subsidies for clean energy, dealing with aging nuclear plants and maintaining and modernizing the province's vast transmission and distribution system. But the problem is especially acute in rural Ontario, where steep delivery charges are the norm.

Madam Chair, it is a very large concern. I have heard from a lot of constituents – a lot of constituents – who are concerned about the way that the government is mismanaging this particular electricity file. We've seen them make a lot of decisions – and I know that when we've asked questions in the Chamber about the costs of the PPA contracts, people from right across the province have reached out to us and expressed some concern about that particular problem, in particular, you know, the mismanagement, the expenses that have been incurred, the $1.96 billion that are included in this budget that were losses because of the PPAs. That doesn't include the money that the Balancing Pool lost in advance of this year's budget. So it's yet unknown exactly what the costs are, but what Albertans are certain of is that at the end of the day the chickens will come home to roost, and someone has to pay that bill. Who is it that has to pay that bill? Well, it'll be the taxpayer at the end of the day.

More often than not, rural Alberta seems to be the place that winds up feeling the decisions of this government the worst. Time and time again they've shown that they don't understand rural Alberta, and rural Alberta is not treated as equally and as fairly. So they're concerned, just as they were in Ontario.

Fay Knox, who is mentioned in the article, knows what it's like to live off the grid. Unable to cope with rising power rates, she has been disconnected twice because she couldn't pay her hydro bills. She lives by herself in a small house in the Eastern Ontario town of Lancaster, but her electricity bills run into the hundreds of dollars. For the month of March 2016, it was $299.67. Knox, who receives a disability pension, says, she simply can't afford to keep her lights on.

This is the challenge. When the government makes decisions like this, including the carbon tax, they often have a disproportionate impact on those on fixed incomes and low incomes and disability pensions or AISH. You know, we've heard the government speak at length about the rebates that were coming from the carbon tax. But here is the challenge, isn't it? They actually are rolling back rebates for seniors and taking 30 per cent of their rebate cheque to go to their seniors' housing.

This is the challenge. We've seen it in other jurisdictions, and there's no reason to believe that it won't happen here, because we're moving to a capacity market, but we're doing it at an even faster and more alarming rate than they did in other jurisdictions, including in Ontario.

So when we see the government doing things that are going to create a less fair, less efficient, less open, competitive operation of a capacity market, we should all take pause. We should pause because why wouldn't you want all of those things: a fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market? But the problem is that this government continues to make decisions that don't reflect fair, open, and competitive markets.

Industry needs to see fair, efficient, open, and competitive markets throughout without exception, and I think of industry in rural Alberta, in particular. There are a number of greenhouses in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, a number of large agricultural operations, including dairies. I think it was actually just World Milk Day here in the last few days. The dairies, I know, are feeling the pinch. As electricity prices will increase because of this government's mismanagement of the electricity file, we're going to see dairies, greenhouses, and other large industrial users all suffer significant consequences because of this government.

This is exactly why we should be supporting this amendment. It is so that we can establish trust, that we can continue to promote trust, that we can continue to support fair, efficient, and openly competitive operations of the capacity market. It is a very small, small step that the government could take to really advance the cause to provide a little bit of certainty to industry, to provide a little bit of certainty to rural Alberta and the things that they can come to expect. Because what they have come to expect from this government is not those things; it's the opposite of that. Certainly, in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills there is a lot of mistrust, in fact, of the government, and this would be just a very small gesture that would allow a little bit of trust back into this particular piece of legislation, and I encourage all members of the government to support it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway, on the amendment.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Chair, for giving me the opportunity to speak on this amendment for Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, an amendment brought by my colleague from Calgary-Foothills. I want to thank him for his work on it, his research on this amendment to make this bill actually a stronger bill.

I think it's a very simple amendment. The speaker from Olds-Didsbury, the Opposition House Leader, and the Member for Chestermere Rocky View, they all spoke at length about this amendment. As they all said – and I would echo that, Madam Chair – there are a couple of places in the bill where fair, efficient, and open competitiveness had not been accorded to the capacity market or the standard FEOC language was not used. I mean, I understand that, like, fair, efficient, openly competitive is not this government's style. I get that, but I think it will make this bill stronger. It will help restore the trust to the bill, which this government, I think, in my humble opinion, desperately needs because that's what the fine people from Calgary-Greenway tell me every time I'm on the road and talking to my constituents.

I think this amendment will clean up the bill and ensures that consistency, to make sure that nothing is left behind. This amendment will provide certainty to the electricity stakeholders who do not want legal manoeuvring to allow government or the AESO to skip out on the commitment.

I think we should all support this amendment. It'll strengthen the bill. It'll restore the trust. I don't understand, like, why we would have any challenge or opposition to this simple amendment, which would strengthen this bill. I mean, I don't think the government wants to look like they're not fair or they're not efficient or they do not support being openly competitive, right? Those are all good things that strengthen the bill, and we should all support it because the trust is the main thing. The people of Alberta sent us here to represent them and do the best job we can do on their behalf, the taxpayers. I think it's incumbent upon us, Madam Chair, that we all work together above the party line and accept the common-sense amendments to strengthen these bills, amendments like my colleague from Calgary-Foothills has introduced.

I think we had four or five speakers before me who spoke at length about this very simple amendment. I mean, we had seen, Madam Chair, that legal battle with the PPAs. The government had to deal with that, the whole embarrassment and everything like that. We could potentially have legal consequences in this bill as well, so I think this is a simple amendment. As I said, it'll help restore the trust to this bill. At the end of the day, the whole idea is An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. If the government's attempt is to secure Alberta's electricity future, I think we should do the right thing and accept the common-sense amendment, which will strengthen the bill.

You know, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills spoke about the impact of the electricity market on rural Albertans. I mean, the hard-working people of his riding and, of course, my riding and a majority of Albertans are not happy with the direction of this government. I think it's in our best interests, Madam Chair, that we all work together to do the job we're here to do, to represent our people, the hard-working Albertans, and wherever we see common-sense solutions, to rise above the party lines and accept those very simple amendments.

Once again I want to congratulate my hon. colleague from Calgary-Foothills. I think he may have, like, Madam Chair, six or seven more amendments. That's what he's so passionate about. If the government believes that it's an Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, let's act on it. Let's not just put it on paper. Everything that this government does: it's always an act. I think they're just only acting. They're not actually acting to make it better. You know what I'm saying? It's okay. It was confusing, anyways.

My point was: let's act, accept this common-sense amendment. It restores trust to the bill. It's a simple amendment, Madam Chair. It's like "fair, efficient and openly competitive" had not been accorded wherever in this bill, in a couple of places, to the capacity market, or the standard FEOC language was not used. So let's fix that. Let's add those important words because we do have the potential of legal ramifications. I was speaking to my colleague from Calgary-Foothills, and I was asking him about the impact. He's very passionate about this thing, and he told me about, you know, the ramifications, the potential political issues that we may face if we don't have these simple wordings.

I don't think we're asking too much. I don't think, Madam Chair, that the Member for Calgary-Foothills is asking too much. This is not about scoring points like we were hearing today in question period, that the opposition is always looking to score cheap political points and all those things. I don't think it's about those things. I think it's about restoring the trust to this bill, strengthening the bill. You know, I think this NDP government could use that trust right now, especially when we're looking at the poll numbers, especially in my colleague's riding of Calgary-Foothills. I'm sure that the numbers are pretty dismal, and I'm sure, you know, the NDP supporters are, like, watching this House and saying, "Yes, government, support this amendment," so they may hold on to their support.

I think it's a fairly simple amendment, and we should all work together above the party line. If the government members have any issues about this amendment, let's debate that. That's why we're here. That's why we're here.

When the Leader of the Official Opposition had his maiden speech, Madam Chair, he spoke of the word "Legislature," and he broke it down. I believe it was a French word. It means the place where we debate. So let's debate these things, and if there's anything we can improve in this amendment, let's do it together because we owe it to Albertans. We all owe it to Albertans. That's why we're here. That's why we all left our families and everything. We're here to make this place better.

You know, once again I want to say thank you to my hon. colleague from Calgary-Foothills for bringing maybe, like, six more amendments. I don't know. He's been working very passionately, very hard on this file. I truly hope, Madam Chair, that the government side will support this very simple amendment and that it will help restore trust to this bill. Again, I mean, this government can use the trust really, really badly right now because Albertans don't trust this government.

With that, I encourage all the members of this Assembly to support this very simple amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:30 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, thank you for the opportunity to speak again on Bill 13, the electricity bill. Bill 13 is really complex, and on behalf of my constituents of Calgary-Foothills, the outstanding riding of Calgary-Foothills, they sent me here to do my job, to hold the government to account, and to improve their legislation. I know that the minister there is laughing.

An Hon. Member: About Bill 9.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. We can debate that in her own constituency if she wants to choose to debate.

Also, Madam Chair, when the Leader of the Official Opposition named me as the critic for Energy, he didn't expect me to be here and rubber-stamp everything that the government did. That's why I looked at the bill, I brought in three amendments so far to make this bill less bad and make it better, and then they rejected every single amendment we brought forward. These are common-sense, reasonable amendments.

To make this parliamentary democracy and this Legislative Assembly work and to deliver the value for our shareholders, who are the people that elect us, we have to do our job. We have to do the critical analysis of every bill that comes in front of us. That's what I tried to do. Most of my colleagues on this side of the House, all parties, have supported my amendments so far, but the government rejected them. I see a pattern here.

Today we saw that Motion 505, a private member's motion, which, if passed by this House – although it is symbolic, this government blindly rejected it for ideological reasons because they want to keep their federal ally Justin Trudeau happy. They chose Justin Trudeau but not the people of Alberta. It's a shame because federal Liberals are attacking Alberta with draconian bills like Bill

C-48 and Bill C-69. If they are passed as presented in the Parliament, no investor will invest in any major energy project, not only pipelines but also the resource development projects up north. With that go thousands of jobs and billions of dollars of investment. That's a common-sense motion, private member's motion.

In this House when this government brought in any bill or legislation that supported Albertans and if we felt that it was in the interest of Alberta, we actually supported this government. But the NDP don't want to work with the opposition. They're not open to take our reasonable, common-sense amendments. They keep rejecting them, but I'm not giving up. I'm trying again.

I'm bringing another amendment to make this bill better. Madam Chair, with your permission, I have the requisite number of copies, and I'll give it to the page and wait for your instructions.

The Chair: This will be amendment A5.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. Madam Chair, I rise to read this amendment into the record. I move that Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended in section 2 (a) in subsection (14) by striking out the proposed section 20.21(3) and (b) in subsection (29), in the proposed part 2.2, in section 41.42(5) by striking out "unless the Commission makes an order under section 20.21(3) providing otherwise."

Madam Chair, I will discuss my amendment here. When Bill 13 sets up the capacity market, there will be an initial set of provisional rules prepared by the Electric System Operator and approved by the Alberta Utilities Commission to get the capacity action started. It's also my understanding that there will be a period of haggling, where the Market Surveillance Administrator, MSA, may challenge some rules, and so will some generators. This means that the full market rules won't be ready until 2021. The industry and the regulators need time to sort this out.

Madam Chair, when I say that there will be challenges, I mean it. We have seen recently, when the NDP brought in this climate change plan and carbon tax, which they never campaigned on, that most of the generators and other stakeholders who had PPAs, power purchasing agreements, dumped them onto the Balancing Pool, and Albertans ended up paying billions of dollars. We don't know how much it would be. We only know of a couple of billions as of now, but there will be lots of future costs, which this government has not accounted for. They're hiding this. That's why I'm bringing this amendment, to make sure that we know all the costs and also that there is some certainty for the investors to come and invest in renewable energy options to provide stability to the grid. Generators in the capacity contract under the provisional rules before 2021 do not want the provisional rules changing on them until their contracts under the provisional rules expire.

The bidders are bidding now based on some provisional rules, and the regulations and other information would come into force before 2021. So investors really don't know what those regulations are going to be, what changes the government would make during the course of time. How can you award a contract and then change the terms and conditions after signing the contract? A contract is supposed to be a sacrosanct document. Generators want to bid for capacity with confidence. If the terms and conditions under the provisional market rules change after a capacity contract is signed, the old rules must apply to the capacity contract until the contract runs out. It's just common sense, Madam Chair.

This means that the first capacity contracts will have to be short in order to align with the finalized rules, which will come in around the end of 2021. That's fine. The industry can deal with that. But the provisional rules have to be like a trial run and allow the trial run to run out. They can't be temporary rules. Temporary is not the same as provisional. The rules can't be interim either. Interim is not the same as provisional. Provisional means provisional, Madam Chair.

I cannot emphasize enough that the minister and the Electric System Operator and the Alberta Utilities Commission can't go changing the provisional rules midstream and expect people to bid and invest in capacity. It just won't work, and this amendment, amendment A5, would strengthen Bill 13 and help the minister to avoid a potential pitfall in implementation of the capacity market. This amendment gives investors, who will supply backup generation for renewables, the confidence to invest in Alberta.

Madam Chair, I discussed why I brought this amendment. I'm hoping that common sense will prevail, and I'm urging the members of the government party here to be, you know, receptive of good, common-sense ideas coming from across the aisle and to make their bill better and regain the trust of Albertans because today nobody trusts them. If you look at the polls in my riding in Calgary-Foothills, the NDP are probably in single digits. That's kind of the sense I got at the doors when I was door-knocking in the last several months.

If they want to regain the trust of Albertans, make this bill better by adopting these amendments that I proposed, and also respect democracy. You know, just don't blindly reject the good ideas coming from the opposition. I wonder. The Leader of the Official Opposition was in Parliament for 19 years. I don't know if you had the same experience of being rejected while you were in opposition or while you were in government, simply rejecting common-sense, reasonable amendments from the opposition.

I have been trying for three years now, and this government: every time we ask them for economic impact analyses of their bills, they simply reject that. They say, "No, we won't share that with you," or they won't even tell you if they have that information or not.

They brought in so many – so many – bills that changed the economics of this province and that are going to, you know, land us at $96 billion of debt in three short years, three more years. Albertans are not ready because that's not what they were told before they elected this government. When this government presented their election platform in 2015, they never talked about a carbon tax, they never talked about the $96 billion debt that they're going to cause to Albertans, and they didn't talk about the potential $3.7 billion to service the debt of $96 billion.

This is about trust. This government is attacking Albertans with higher taxes, with red tape regulations, and then they're actually siding with the federal Trudeau Liberals, who are attacking Alberta with bills like C-48, C-69. We keep trying with this NDP to work with the opposition and, you know, at least debate with us on these kinds of amendments. None of them stand up and talk about these things. Their only interest is in partisan personal attacks.

I'm actually losing interest in this House by hearing this kind of negative approach from the government. I mean, I tried to talk to the Speaker a few times. At least it's not working for me because the people of Calgary-Foothills sent me here to do my job, and then this government is not giving me any opportunity to do my job in a reasonable way. I'm really thoroughly getting, you know, disillusioned in electoral politics because that's not why the people sent us here. They sent us with hopes that we'll contribute to the debate here and make the legislation better and make life affordable for Albertans.

Today with all these taxes and tax increases and you name anything – minimum wage, carbon tax, higher income taxes, and all these ideological regulations they bring in which have unknown costs – I can't even account for it. I can't even size it up to my constituents. When I'm door-knocking, they're simply asking me: how much will it cost? I say that I keep asking the government, but they're not telling. They're not sharing the economic impact analysis of their policies, so I'm not able to answer my constituents.

But, anyway, I'm not giving up. I keep trying because I'm paid to do my job. I hope and I urge members of the other side to actually debate this amendment and make this bill better so that electricity prices won't go up unreasonably. At least we should take control of that file. We can't leave it open because the NDP is not telling them. They're saying that they will cap the power prices at 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, but in April the taxpayers paid $9 million extra to cover the cost, the differential cost over 6.8 cents and the actual cost. Just in that month of April the government of Alberta paid $9 million.

During the budget estimates I asked the Minister of Energy so many questions. I didn't get any answers so far. I even asked the minister: Minister, if you don't have the information, at least commit to table it later or write me a letter or send me the information in whichever mode you want to use. No. I haven't heard back till today.

Madam Chair, tell me: how can I serve my constituents if this government keeps ignoring reasonable requests on behalf of my constituents of Calgary-Foothills and the Calgarians who sent me here? We're here to do our job, not to rubber-stamp this government's ideological policies without assessing the impacts of the bills and legislation they bring forward in this House.

I'm asking all members of this House to at least review this amendment. Tell me why they agree or why they can't agree. If they agree, let's pass this amendment. If they don't agree, let them give me some reasonable answers why they oppose this and just don't blindly oppose it.

Investors are looking for confidence in this new electricity operating system. Today they don't have that confidence. If they keep changing the rules midway through, after signing the contract, then they are going to lose money and they are going to drag us to the courts and Albertans will be on the hook to pay for it. That's why, to avoid that, I brought in this amendment. If the government says, "No; that's not the intent of this amendment," let them speak up and let them tell me how they want to address the problem I raised via this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak to another excellent amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Foothills. Thank you so much again.

There are a lot of reasons that many of these amendments have come forward. We just had the government vote against an amendment that gave them the opportunity to bring language back into this legislation that would allow Albertans to feel that they could have gained trust in the government, that would tell them that they had the fair, efficient, and openly competitive ability to make sure that as things come online, that is the mechanism that is being used.

I was mentioning earlier that we had language in previous bills that have led up to this bill that we're dealing with right now that removed the words "transparency and accountability" from the language that was used within that legislation in order to give extraordinary powers to the Minister of Energy to be able to bring renewables online without debating or bringing up any of that legislation in this Legislature to allow Albertans to understand what is happening. Instead, we've had a cap brought in that basically hides from Albertans what is going to be happening to them with respect to paying for energy.

There are a couple of things that I wanted to bring up. Mostly, when we're talking about making sure – it's one thing to be able to say that it's fair, efficient, and openly competitive to the average Albertan, but where that's really, really important is when you are wanting to attract investment. The assumption in Bill 13: the capacity market was brought online because in order to attract investment, you have to subsidize these particular markets coming on because they are not able to hold their own in an open and free market. So you have to be able to create legislation to be able to allow the minister to subsidize these items coming on. This particular amendment brings to light what has to happen in order to make sure that investors feel confident that should they invest, that contract is not going to change at the last minute, because they can't trust that the government is going to keep their word.

We simply have to look at what's happening federally with the pipelines and at what happened provincially here when the entire concept of social licence was used and thrown out on the shoulders of Albertans to make the assumption that that would buy them a pipeline. Well, not only are they paying a carbon tax, but now they have to pay for the pipeline. The social licence didn't work, and it was sold to Albertans to make the assumption that that would be what would happen.

Now we have an entire new market, Madam Chair, that is coming on, a capacity market, that requires buy-in from folks that require subsidies in order for them to be able to function and to be able to bring their electricity online. But then, on top of that, there is no protection of any contract that could be brought on. That could change at any moment, which could cause another boondoggle. I mean, we were just talking earlier about the cost to Albertans, that we actually understand, from the PPA debacle and everything that came from that.

I'm going to go back in time, just for a little bit of fun, when we were talking about Bill 34, which is the precursor to many of these bills that have come after this as a result. So we had the PPAs, and we had the fact that the carbon tax triggered the "more unprofitable" clause within the PPAs, which triggered an entire situation where not only did the PPAs have to be returned, but the government ended up suing itself and Enmax in order to try and get this boondoggle back on track. So we have that, but then we also have the fact that Bill 34 basically made a loan to the Balancing Pool and guaranteed obligations to the Balancing Pool. It was a blank cheque, a blank cheque that the government signed to the Balancing Pool in order to compensate for the rate riders that were there initially, that actually solved that problem all on its own in the deregulated market.

So we have the PPA debacle, we have the PPAs being turned back, we have the stranded assets, we have the suing of Enmax and the government basically suing itself, we have Bill 34, which had a blank cheque going to the Balancing Pool in order to be able to compensate for dollars that actually were brought in by rate riders in the past – it's an unchecked loan – and now we have Bill 13, which had to come in for the capacity market in order for investors to be able to come in line to be subsidized.

We have the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills trying to make amendments to help the government show that it can gain trust back from Albertans, which they voted against, and now to protect the investors that are actually coming in so that their contracts will actually be honoured by this government, which is very hard to believe given the fact that they have already sued people that were involved in the original contracts in the first place. I would assume that this amendment would be very good for the government because it gives them the opportunity to say: "No. When these contracts come online, we will honour those contracts. We will make sure that we honour what we have told the consumers." But the government is not willing to do that.

You know, it's amazing. I was talking about Ontario Hydro before. Did you know that "hydro" is a dirty word in Ontario now? It's a word that's used for all of the various kinds of electricity that are online there. It doesn't just mean hydro. When you say hydro, it means nuclear, it means all of the very, very complex and very diverse types of electricity that are in Ontario. Why is it a dirty word? It's because of the cost to the people in Ontario.

I have a couple of stories here, and I will table these articles. This is an interesting article from the Windsor Star: The Highest Electricity Rates in North America. It says, "Thanks to 13 years of Ontario Liberal scandal, mismanagement, and waste, our province's Hydro One customers officially pay the highest residential electricity prices in North America, surpassing the tiny island state of Hawaii."

An Hon. Member: You're kidding, right?

Mrs. Aheer: No. I'm not kidding.

And put in the perspective that Hawaii is in the middle of the Pacific Ocean. It is thousands of miles away from generation. This is how unbelievably mismanaged this file has been in Ontario, and Alberta is headed down the same track because of this government. The exact same track. On top of that, it's hidden. It's hidden.

To continue on with this article: "Since the Liberal Government first took office, average households are now paying more than $1,000 extra on their annual hydro bills."

An Hon. Member: Wow.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah.

Think about that. We're not there yet. I have one constituent who said that theirs had already gone up $302 – this was a farmer – $302, and that is just on a small piece. That doesn't include the industrial piece, which is not protected by the capacity market.

How is it that as a government you can just shift the cost to the taxpayer, wipe your hands of it, and just say, "Albertans are on the hook for this," but you're not willing to be honest and put a rate rider on there so that when the customer sees the bill, they understand what they're paying for? We have zero utility debt in this province right now. This government is going to change all of that. Our children and grandchildren are going to be paying for this capacity market long past the time that I will be here.

On top of that, they don't even take into account the build that is going to be necessary to bring on this new capacity, new generation. To speak even more to what the hon. member was saying about this particular amendment, it doesn't even talk – and this is actually super important – about the contracts that are going to be made for the people who are building this capacity. Is that even taken into consideration? I don't think so. It's certainly something that you would need to talk about, especially if you're making contracts with these folks.

In Ontario do you know what Andrea Horwath said? She said that if she's elected, she's actually going to shut down the Pickering nuclear power plant. That's 3,000 direct jobs and 15 per cent of their capacity. Isn't that interesting, considering that the Liberal government spent billions of dollars? People have to choose between whether to heat or to eat in that province, and the NDP, that could possibly be in government, is willing to take electricity offline. Why? That's over 3,094 megawatts taken offline. Sixty per cent of the capacity in that province comes from nuclear.

I'm curious. Is that what we have in store here for this province, that they're going to do all of this with smoke and mirrors, bring it online, and then just decide one day that they're going to take it offline because it didn't work? You can't supply the capacity that you're promising because when the wind doesn't blow and the sun doesn't shine, it's not possible – you have to have baseload capacity, so the taxpayer is paying for that – then on top of that you have no ability to be able to promise Albertans that they are going to be able to get what they deserve from the other capacity that's been online because the minister, with her extraordinary powers, can bring that on without telling anybody how, where, when, and how much it's going to cost.

In fact, aside from some of the base numbers that we have from stranded assets, what happened with the PPAs, and any of the other dollars that have gone to the Balancing Pool, the $750 million that was paid off to the Balancing Pool in the initial debacle with the PPAs, those are the only dollars that we know about. The rest of that: we have absolutely no knowledge about what it's going to cost the taxpayer, and the government thinks that that's okay and then on top of that is expecting investment to come in and can't make any promises that those investors will be respected with their contracts because that's not what they did with the previous contract holders.

They turned the PPAs over, cost the taxpayer billions of dollars, reneged on the contracts that were there for the 20-year period, said that they didn't understand it even though we know from everything that we've read and put together that they knew what would happen once they turned the PPAs back – we absolutely know that that was the case – but still reneged on those contracts. So how are we supposed to convince new investors that are coming online that they will have an honest contract with this government when at the flip of a switch when it suits them, they're just going to turn them over?

That's why the Member for Calgary-Foothills has brought this amendment forward. At the very least if they're not willing to take amendment A4 and put back fair, efficient, and open competitiveness into the language of renewables coming online, if they're not willing to bring back accountability and transparency into the language from bills 34 and 27, that were done in the previous session, in order to bring this capacity market to light, they're not willing to bring that language on, at the very least they might want to protect the very investors that they're asking to trust this government with the investment that they're bringing online. As I've said, the market isn't deciding on this. This is a false market. This is something that is coming on because the government has decided that they are the decision-makers. They're going to make this decision on behalf of Albertans regardless of how much it's going to cost them. Then, on top of that, we don't even know what kind of legislation is going to come out for the industrial users like our farmers because they're not protected under this cap. Then what happens?

A user is bringing this online to bring to the government with absolutely no promise from them that they will uphold those contracts, whether that is bringing on generation, whether that's in retail, whether that's distribution or the building of the infrastructure. As I understand it, it could be possibly as much as $800 million minimum to bring on new infrastructure to tie in different kinds of generation.

I have 40 solar panels on my house. It's wonderful. I love it, wouldn't change it for the world, but let's talk about that for a second. They have a 25-year life. There's no way to recycle those in this province. In fact, I'd have to send them back to China in order for that to happen. It's cheaper to actually ship them from China than to get them from anywhere else. On top of that, do you know how much coal-fired intensity it takes to make silicon in order to make those solar panels work?

There is so much new technology out there, but that new technology needs to be inspired by a government that allows that technology to happen so that the market decides, so that they inspire people to make renewables part of their life. That's a wonderful idea, but the government is not the one that makes the decision on behalf of Albertans, hides it in a 6.8 cent cap and tells us, "Oh, we're protecting you" even though for anything that happens remarkably over that cap we pay a humongous amount. For every cent we go over that cap, it's a million dollars. Then if wind capacity goes below 3.7 cents per gigawatt hour, the taxpayer is subsidizing that, too.

Just to reiterate, earlier I was mentioning about how much that actually costs. Just to be clear, this is the average and this was for REP 1. The Independent Power Producers Society said that it indicated that the wholesale price of electricity averaged 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour, way below the 3.7 cents. That's a whole lot of subsidy, a whole lot. But the government doesn't tell you that, nor do they phone farmers or anybody else in this province that happens to be in rural Alberta to tell them that they'd better tie into a fixed rate real soon because if they don't, their prices are going to be out of control. Enmax did that. Enmax phoned a bunch of my farmers in my area and let them know: "You know what? You might want to get on fixed rate." Very nice of them. But they also know what this government does because they've been sued by them.

Mr. Nixon: I guess they forgot about the REAs.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah. Well, it's interesting. The REAs are an interesting thing. They figured out their situation, but how much negotiation did that take? On top of that, it wasn't considered within this capacity market at all. The REAs had to go to the government, negotiate for a contract in order to not pay more than the average person so that they could keep their REAs going. That didn't happen because the government reached out to them. The REAs reached out to us. We put it in front of the government.

Mr. Nixon: It's true.

Mrs. Aheer: It's true.

I don't think it's very funny. If the government did listen to the REAs, then why wasn't it in their legislation to start with? You can laugh all you want. If you truly believe that you're the ones responsible for that, why wasn't it in the legislation in the first place?

Mr. Nixon: Oops.

Mrs. Aheer: Oops. I can honestly tell you that every single person I talked to did not say: oh, the government came to me and told me, "This is how we're going to work this out." No, no, no, no, no. Actually, it was the member from Sundre that talked to the REAs, that actually pushed to make sure that the government did their job and did right by the REAs in the first place, so congratulations.

Madam Chair, we are giving a massive amount of help here to make this horrible policy better. You know, sometimes when I go back – I have all my Hansards here from Bill 34. I mean, we were in here for hours and hours and hours and hours debating.

But we have moms and dads and families out of work. They're genuinely afraid. They're afraid for their children and their grandchildren. It appears the government doesn't seem to grasp the overwhelming burden of the lack of understanding of fiscal policy. They don't seem to understand that the impact – and we've seen this in other provinces. We have other jurisdictions to compare this to. Yes, the combination of energy is different, but the mentality and the mechanism is the same. Government does not know better than people how to spend their money, and it is our responsibility that if we're going to change the mechanism, Albertans understand that.

The carbon tax was brought in with absolutely nothing coming from this government when they were running their campaign. They said that they would use it for social licence to get a pipeline. That did not work, so they have misled Albertans. On top of that, they're attacking our energy. Look at the cap on the oil sands. The cap on the oil sands: bills 37 and 34 all came in at the same time, a complete and utter attack on our industry at all levels, yet – yet – the government keeps saying that they have Albertans' backs.

What's going to happen once those prices start to spike, once all of these renewables come on? When we get to REP 2 and REP 3 and their bidding for the extra 300 and 400 megawatts, we have no idea of the total cost to the taxpayer. Like, these are coming on without any transparency for the ratepayer or the taxpayer, absolutely none.

I mean, we have Bill 34, that gave a blank cheque to the Balancing Pool; Bill 27, that took the MSA's ability to investigate the market away. We have Bill 13, which basically had to happen in order for the capacity market to actually happen and to attract investment, yet when we give you some much-needed advice on how to attract investment, you're saying no. When we give you advice on how to use your language appropriately, the words – like I said to you earlier, when you use the language "reliable," I mean, it sounds nice. It's a great mandate, but it doesn't stand as a legal term.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's really important that we take a meaningful look at this and we actually address what's going on in these sections that are being amended here.

I think this section allows the commission to allow an AESO rule change to apply to an auction that has already occurred only if the auction meets two very specific criteria: if it supports the fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market and it is in the public interest. I think that combined, when you look at those two criteria, it sets a very high bar. I think we expect that this test will only be met in certain situations where retroactive change would really be in the best interest of everyone, generators and consumers. An example could be an administrative change to a rule that improves clarity in such a way that generators can operate more efficiently, thus saving consumers money.

I think it's really important that when we look at this, we reiterate that the corrective power here is clearly restricted, and it's a rule that would only apply backward where the AUC makes a clear order on the basis that this application was to support the fair, efficient, and openly competitive, or FEOC operation, of the capacity market and is in the public interest.

I think it's a little bit interesting when we've listened to the opposition for the last two, three hours talk about how important it was that we put the words "FEOC" in that order into this bill, and, Madam Chair, here they are. They're right here in this bill, right there, and the opposition is asking us to strike them out in two places. I think that when we move forward with this, we have to look at it in a really clear light and say that, in fact, these sections add FEOC standards to the capacity market, and they have the intention to provide a market that works for everybody, consumers and generators. That's why those two very high standards and criteria are set.

Bill 13 I think very clearly does demonstrate those FEOC principles, and when we remove instances like this from the bill, I think we degrade from them. When we move forward and change these very narrowly defined corrective rules that are in place that allow FEOC principles to be used in certain circumstances – and it's not just once in this amendment, but it's actually twice that they're removing the words “fair, efficient, and openly competitive.” They're removing those words twice from the bill. I think it's something that we need to be really clear about.

To be very clear, members opposite have spoken about how these concerns can cause political uncertainty for investors and market participants, and that's simply not true. These clauses have nothing to do with the political level. The flexibility is provided to the regulator, which is the AUC, if adjustments are needed to meet that FEOC principle and public interest that the opposition wants to keep talking about. I think it's a shame that they're suggesting that the responsible, expert commissioners of the AUC would try to apply politics to decisions. I mean, the opposition is free to cast those aspersions if they would like.

I think that when we look at this amendment, we see that it doesn't support an efficient marketplace, it doesn't support a fair marketplace, and really we need to reject this amendment. I encourage all of my colleagues to vote against it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I am not sure if the hon. member is on the right amendment. The hour draws late, and maybe that's why he may be confused. Just a few short moments ago he stood in this Assembly and voted against an amendment that would have changed the language to include a sentence that says, “supports the fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market.” That was the last amendment that we were debating.

I'm glad to see that now he is concerned about a fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation in the capacity market with the amendment that has now been moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills that's before us now, Madam Chair. I'm a little bit concerned and would have some questions to the hon. member why he was not concerned about an open, fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market about 15 minute ago, when he stood in this Assembly and voted against that exact thing. It is a little rich to now stand up in this Assembly after you voted no to that, sir, and then say that you're concerned with making sure that the market is fair, efficient, and openly competitive. Why did you vote against that? But I digress.

Amendment A4, which has been brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, talks a lot about the need to honour contracts. It talks about the need to not change rules halfway through. The impact that that has on investors is significant. I think that the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View did an excellent job of articulating that. Through you, Madam Chair, to the hon. member, he did not do a very good job of countering that argument by speaking about something just voted against and did not take any time to address some of the serious issues with very well-thought-out examples, I thought, that the hon. member brought to the Chamber this evening.

You know, I was watching my 11-year-old twins play a board game when I was back home last weekend, on Sunday afternoon before I drove here. I don't know what the game was, but they were playing this board game, and I could hear, as many of the parents in this Chamber from all aisles will understand, that things were getting a little bit angry over there. There was something going on, so as a dad you kind of perk up and start to watch what was going on.

My 11-year-old son was playing this game with his 11-year-old twin sister, and each time he would pull a card, he would say that the rule for this card meant this, and it would go very good for him. Then, shortly after, his 11-year-old twin sister would pull the same card, and my 11-year-old son, Austin, would say: “No, no, no. That's not how it works now. The rules have changed.” She was becoming very animated and upset. I don't really blame her. It's pretty frustrating to play a game if the rules are changing the whole way. In the end, she threw the board game on the floor, and that was the end of the board game. I stand with her on that. I mean, I think that it's not fair to have the rules changed. In that case, though, she was able to go elsewhere and enjoy the rest of her afternoon.

The problem is that with what we're talking about here, investors may throw the board game on the ground, but in the end they're not going to come back to our province because they don't trust this government, who is changing the rules halfway through. The consequences are, really, not to the investors, because they're going to go to other regions that don't change the rules, that are more open to them and to making sure that they can do the important work they do of creating jobs in our communities. The people of Alberta will pay the consequence for that.

We saw that in a different context but a pretty big example of that just a few weeks ago, when Kinder Morgan pulled the plug. A private investor pulled the plug on a significant project, billions of dollars of investment that they were going to put into our economy, and then left. Of course, Madam Chair, I'm sure you were as offended as I was that the NDP stood outside and high-fived each other out of excitement that that investor left. That's what they did. They celebrated a job creator who was going to put billions of dollars in our economy leaving and the taxpayer having to bail out an emergency situation because they left.

I can tell you that the investor, Kinder Morgan, did not pay a serious consequence for that, nor should they. They are a private company that ran into a political problem that was created by the NDP government and the Liberal government and the B.C. NDP, but you see in the newspaper today that their leadership received a $1.5 million bonus because of the deal that they were able to negotiate on the way to cash out of that situation. Clearly, it didn't negatively affect them, but it did affect us because now we have to go and fix that situation.

The hon. member wants to talk about a fair, open market. I'd be curious – and I do appreciate that he has risen because I note that the Energy minister still has not risen to discuss this. So I will ask him: how can you award a contract and then change the terms and conditions? Maybe he'll answer that.

The Chair: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. I actually would like to try and unpack what was said by the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

A couple of things. When you're creating policy on such a complex issue, broad statements that the FEOC is only changed under certain circumstances – when you talk about all of a sudden that the AESO will make decisions based on the public interest in certain situations and retroactive charges, that the rules are going to be changing based on that, that's a pretty subjective group of rules.

Just to be clear, if you're removing fair, efficient, and openly competitive from any part, whether that's one or 15 items, that actually makes sure that the AESO can meddle with the capacity contracts if the meddling is compliant with the FEOC. Basically, when you remove that, you're giving the AESO the ability to meddle because it's not in the contract in the first place. On top of that, the most interesting part is that the AUC is the one that approves the meddling.

I don't understand how the member can say that this amendment degrades the legislation. We're trying to help the legislation. By what the member just said, if I understand correctly, he is okay with the AESO meddling with fair, efficient, and openly competitive as long as that meddling falls within the auspices of what their general legislation says about the public interest in certain situations.

Then he goes on to explain about flexibility and responsibility. This is not legal language. Flexibility and being responsible fall under the mandate and the vision of what a piece of legislation looks like. We need to have clear, concise language and then, on top of that, clear and concise promises from the government regarding their ability to actually follow through with the promises that they are saying they're going to do.

If the member would like to respond to that, that would be wonderful. I don't understand how the member could be okay that the AESO meddles in capacity contracts as long as the AUC deems that that meddling is okay.

Thank you so much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to get up and just say a few words on this, too. Here we are again talking about electricity. This government has been working on electricity since they were elected, since 2015. They've been passing bills in this Legislature, and from the time they first started and created their first problems by messing with the electricity system, they've been here time and time again passing legislation as damage control for the legislation that they previously passed. Obviously, if they had left it alone to begin with or maybe just tweaked a few things here and there, they would have saved themselves a whole pile of work and saved Alberta taxpayers and ratepayers a whole pile of money.

Now, when I look at this government and how they operate, I'm thinking about the Trans Mountain pipeline. You know, this government swore up and down that if we do a $3 billion carbon tax to Albertans, we're going to get a pipeline. Then they said: well, if we do a wine boycott, then maybe we'll get a pipeline with that. That didn't work either. Then they thought: "Well, maybe a $5 billion carbon tax will work. If we agree with Prime Minister Trudeau on his, then maybe that'll work." No, that didn't work either. "Oh, we'll pass Bill 12. We'll tell everybody that we won't use it. Maybe that'll work to get a pipeline." Of course, that didn't work either. What did we find out that works? Well, if you buy a 65-year-old pipeline for 4 and a half billion dollars, that's a good start. Then if you take another $8 billion to $10 billion to build a pipeline, then I guess that works. This government over and over again is – it's like they're practising on Albertans instead of actually governing and doing things right.

You know, the Member for Edmonton-South West got up and said: "Oh, there's no uncertainty in the market. There's no uncertainty here." Madam Chair, that's just not true. I mean, there's a lot of uncertainty in the marketplace because of what this government does. I think what's most frustrating a lot of times with what this government does is that it moves the goalposts. There'll be rules in place, and a business will come along and say: "Okay. This is what I've got to do; this is what we'll do." They go through that whole process. Then all of a sudden government comes along: "Well, no. That's not good enough. We're going to do this. We're going to change the rules as we go along." There's no way there could be certainty in the marketplace when a government keeps changing the rules as they go along.

Madam Chair, I do want to point out that there isn't one member of the government side right now paying attention to any of this debate, not one. We have the Infrastructure minister, the Health minister, Environment and Parks minister, Service Alberta minister all here. Not one of them is paying attention to this debate.

The Chair: Hon. member, we do not mention the presence or absence of any members. I would ask you again: please refrain from doing that.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. Thank you very much.

Now, Madam Chair, the only thing we know for sure is that the prices of electricity are going up. Everything that this government has done with the electricity market has caused prices to go up.

Now, another thing we have to say here, too, is that this government, you know, has tried to incent all of this renewable resource, renewable power generation coming into Alberta, wind power and solar power and everything. They talk about this like it was never happening in Alberta before, but of course, Madam Chair, we know that there was wind power here in Alberta before. That was long before the NDP government came into power. Of course, this government comes along, and they want to change the system. They want to take taxpayer dollars to incent things. There are just a lot of things that this government is doing that have been hurting Albertans.

Again, Bill 13 is something that will make electricity more expensive for consumers by transferring more risk away from the generators. So I think Albertans have lost their trust in the NDP government when it comes to electricity because time and time again they've done these changes over and over again. They've done changes to the electricity market, and every single time it's cost Alberta taxpayers more money.

They even put a cap on electricity. Obviously, they knew that the price of electricity was going up, so they would have to put a cap on it to make it look like it wasn't as expensive as it really was. Of course, we know what happens with caps. The electricity might not have cost that much, but obviously somebody has to pay for that, and the only other way to get the money is to take money from the taxpayer. Well, Madam Chair, the taxpayer and the ratepayer are the same person. They're Albertans. So it doesn't matter how it's paid for; it's still them paying.

Now, we've even written to the Auditor General asking for a full cost accounting of all the electricity changes this government has done. It's going to be interesting to see what happens there, I think. We know it's cost billions of dollars; we're just not sure how many billions of dollars.

We talk about the phase-out of coal-fired generating plants that this government has done. Now, we were to phase out 12 of the coal-fired generating plants by 2029. That would have been on their natural cycle, wouldn't have cost taxpayers anything to do that. Of course, this government comes along, and they want to phase out the six remaining coal-fired generating plants sooner than their life cycles would have run out. Of course, that's what costs money, when you do something sooner than the company that's built that infrastructure has had a chance to recover their costs and make some money at it. So this phase-out is costing somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1.3 billion to shut them down early or convert them to natural gas.

Some of these plants were practically brand new. Keephills 3 was supposed to run until 2061. Genesee 3 was to run till 2055. I mean, that's a lot of years of lost production of these generating plants. Of course, some of these newer generating plants were far better at burning coal clean than the older ones. Of course, some of them will be converted to natural gas, but those conversions probably aren't going to be as efficient as the brand new combined-cycle natural gas power plants. Of course, the NDP wanted to force renewable electricity on the Alberta market, so they've forced these things to happen.

Now, the AESO ran many models, including for high use of intermittent renewables to generate electricity in Alberta, and their modelling showed that a renewable electricity program will decrease revenue needed for all generators to recover investment and earn a profit, thus deterring investment. That's AESO. That's not the Official Opposition here doing these things. This is an independent organization that's done this modelling to show this. But, of course, the government has ignored these things and has gone ahead with their plan and their ideology and pushing it through.

Now, the AESO report from October 2016 also said that "system reliability will be compromised." Of course, this government talks about that all these changes are to increase reliability, but AESO is suggesting that it's actually the opposite. So, Madam Chair, obviously, this government needs to take a little time to think about these things, and when we bring forward amendments to their bills, that's the thing we're suggesting. We're suggesting they take a little bit of time, pay attention to what we're suggesting, give it a chance, and see if there's something there that we could use to help relieve the cost and the burden to Albertans.

Now, the NDP, you know, purposely compromised the electrical system's reliability and did this without a guarantee that the peaker plants would be built to produce electricity when the solar and the wind isn't generating electricity. That's why they've come up with this idea of the capacity market.

Madam Chair, I think that when we look at all these things, we see that there's no doubt that these things that this NDP government has done will increase the cost of electricity to Albertans. Nobody is fooled by the electricity cap because they know that if the cost of producing electricity rises above the cap, then that money has to come from somewhere. If these generating plants can't generate the electricity based on the government rules for the 6.8 cents a kilowatt hour, then somebody has to pay for that. Of course, we know that the government is planning on backstopping those costs and, of course, with taxpayer money. So even though it may not show up on the electricity bill, it'll show up in the tax bill for Albertans.

Madam Chair, I think that if this government would look at this amendment and realize that it is a good amendment – it's one that could help this bill and help Albertans – then I think they should do that. I mean, we've just had them turn down amendments. We're talking about a fair, efficient and openly competitive operation. So I guess we should never be surprised in what this government will or won't accept in an amendment when they won't accept fair, efficient and openly competitive markets.

Madam Chair, I'd encourage all my colleagues here in the Legislature to support this amendment today. Thanks.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and speak in support of this amendment by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Foothills. As I've been listening tonight to the debate, I've had the opportunity of being able to read through an article from the Globe and Mail. It's entitled Why Does Ontario's Electricity Cost So Much? A Reality Check. This is a very interesting article.

One of the things that I've found interesting about this job as an MLA is that we are required to understand or learn about a lot of different industries and get our heads around these industries. Now, look, that can be dangerous, Madam Chair, because we're not gurus in our area. We don't have 40,000 hours' worth of experience in this industry. At least, I certainly do not. But as I've taken a look at this whole bill, Bill 13, in general, I've seen that this government is trying to figure out how to fix an original problem, the original problem being the carbon tax.

Now, what's interesting is that if you take a look at this article in the Globe and Mail, it goes through and talks about their experience. I imagine that after reading this article here, the NDP took a look at what was going on here in Alberta and decided that they need to actually go to a capacity market and follow something similar to what Ontario did. The disturbing thing about this is that our situation, Madam Chair, could be substantially worse because of where we started from. Ontario started with 30 per cent, a third, of their capacity as nuclear, yet it produced 60 per cent of the electricity for Ontario. Here's what's interesting. In Alberta a majority, two-thirds of our electricity, is produced from coal. The outcomes are going to be so much worse because our starting point has been so much more in terms of coal. So Ontario's goal was to be able to go green, to be able to decrease the reliance on coal, which was only a third of what they were using to produce, yet we're two-thirds.

It's interesting because there's a part here where it talks about where they were able to get to after years and years of trying to be able to go green. It says here that "the second-largest source is hydroelectricity, which accounted for 24 per cent of generation in 2015, followed by natural-gas plants (10 per cent) and wind power (6 per cent)." Then it says that 1 per cent was solar. So the total between wind and solar: 7 per cent is what they were actually able to produce.

Now, our government is trying to be able to get to 30 per cent between solar and wind. The cost to Ontario to try to be able to make that transition has almost bankrupt that province, yet we think – I shouldn't say "we" because I take no credit for this. The NDP government believes that they can go to 30 per cent in renewable electricity and somehow figure out how to do it without causing us to go bankrupt.

The concern that I have is that during PAC, I asked how much of the producers' capacity we would have to pay for. So we've moved into a capacity market, and the question that I wanted to know was: if a wind company has a capacity of 50 megawatts but only produces 10 megawatts, will they be paid for their ability to produce the extra 40 megawatts? The answer was no. So I asked them how much they would pay. After a lot of stalling, they said that they didn't know but that they thought it would be around 20 per cent.

Now, it sounds like a great deal, right? You build it, and the government is guaranteeing 20 per cent more than you can produce. If you just set up a wind farm and you're only going to produce, you know, a tenth, it may be very profitable. They don't even know what the percentage is going to be, but it may be very profitable for them. I think that is the only reason why we're seeing people come into this market, because of that payment by the government for what their capacity is versus what they can actually produce.

Now, my hon. colleague is proposing that the provisional rules don't change, that there is a modicum of certainty that these companies can have. But I would have to submit, after taking a look at this article, that the certainty that they're going to get or that they feel they can get is in those 20-year contracts, where they can get payments for capacity versus what they're actually producing. Once again during PAC, when we asked the question, "Well, how much are they going to be paid of their actual capacity?" they didn't know. Either they didn't know or they weren't telling us. They refused to tell us.

Now, I would think that if you're going to create a capacity market and create something that is going to be sellable to Albertans that at least you'd be in a situation where the government would know what the final costs are going to be to Albertans. After seeing the debacle in Ontario, which cost the Liberal government there this election – Premier Wynne said it herself the other day, that she's not going to get elected, and the main reason is because of these out-of-control electricity prices. In fact, this article says that in some places they saw almost a hundred per cent increase in the cost of electricity.

Now, it goes on to talk about why the electricity is so expensive. It gives a historical background, then it goes on to talk about why it's so expensive, and then it goes on to talk about what the solutions are. In talking about the electricity, why it's so expensive, as I read through this section, it's almost identical to what is being proposed by this government. It says, to start out with, that the Liberals had been elected in part on a promise to close down the province's coal-fired power plants.

Very similar to what this government, the NDP government, has stated as well.

So the government went on a building spree, upgrading aging infrastructure and commissioning new natural gas, wind and solar plants to replace the coal plants.

Again it sounds very similar to what this government has been doing. However, it's interesting. In this article it says:

Ontario Hydro [a government organization] decided [that they were going] to outsource the work of building and running the new power plants to the private sector.

Now, when I asked the government in PAC why they felt that this was going to work, where was their magic bullet or silver bullet, they said: well, we're doing it differently because we're going to outsource and have a competitive bid.

It says here that they went for 20-year contracts, the same thing that's happening here. We're outsourcing to have these things built and managed by the private sector. I don't see the difference. Then it says:

The contracts essentially guaranteed that the companies would receive a certain amount of revenue – no matter how much electricity their plants produced.

That sounds like a capacity market, Madam Chair.

What's interesting is that, again, back to the history of this, in Ontario ultimately the province built more than it actually needed. Go figure, Madam Chair. You have a situation where they're going to receive a guaranteed return on investment anyways no matter how much they built. Well, how much did they build? Actually, on an average day the average Ontario electrical need is about 15,959 megawatts. They built 30,203 megawatt capacity. What is to say that we won't be having the same kind of thing happen here in Alberta, where this capacity market will be overbuilt to the point where we no longer have control over the building costs and now we're in a situation where we're paying for way over capacity to what our needs are?

This is very disconcerting. As I've read through this article, I've seen how similar the program that this NDP government has established and set up is to what the Liberals in Ontario set up. What I'm amazed at is that the media here has not covered this more. This is a disaster waiting to happen. In fact, it's a disaster in the process of happening. We've got fixed-income homeowners, fixed-income seniors, people on AISH, people in the margins that will be affected by this far more than anybody else. This is the government that was supposed to be the champions of these people, yet they're creating a system that is going to be helping to hurt these people on the margins. I don't understand it. As I've tried to get my head around these different bills and the capacity market and how it works, I am shocked to see that after having seen this whole thing play out in Ontario, we're doing almost the exact same thing. This government is blindly moving forward doing this.

This amendment, once again, is making a very bad bill less bad. The reason why I'm in support of this is because the NDP government up until this time has refused to even listen to our voice of warning, our voice of warning that this is a train wreck in the making.

Is this the silver bullet? Is this what's going to fix this thing? Absolutely not, Madam Chair. This is just going to make it less bad. But in the hope – in the hope – that we can at least have companies that are willing to actually get in here and invest and have that certainty for investment, I think that this is a reasonable amendment. I have no doubt that the Member for Calgary-Foothills has put a lot of thought into this, realizing that the government is not willing – absolutely not willing – to take a look at what really should be happening, and he is trying to make it the least bad that he can. That's his job as the critic for Energy, to try to critique these bills and to be able to figure out: what is the best solution out of a slate of bad options? That's all I can see here.

Like I said, Madam Chair, I'm shocked that this government is taking our Alberta down this road knowing full well what has happened in Ontario and is not willing to address this issue and even let Albertans know what's going on. I speak in favour of this amendment, not because it is an amendment that makes this bill better, but at least it is an amendment that says, you know: let's create some kind of certainty for our investors so that they will come in and, hopefully, will drive the price down when they bring in the contracts.

With that, Madam Chair, I will be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment that was so aptly proposed by my colleague from Calgary-Foothills. I think it's an important amendment, particularly when it comes to creating fairness in the marketplace and ensuring that there is one very clear set of rules.

You know, one of the things that we've seen time and time again, even with respect to the PPAs, is that this government essentially changes the rules midstream. Why they got into this whole mess in the first place was because they either should have known or knew and acted anyway about clauses in the legislation. Then they changed the rules on the providers. As such, it provided them the ability to turn back those PPAs, and now we're in the bad spot that we're in, all because the government made a poor decision about the PPAs and changed the rules mid-game. That's exactly what this amendment will propose, will ensure, that the rules will continue throughout the length of the contract and don't change the terms and conditions associated with that contract, particularly with respect to generators. Generators who win a capacity contract under the provisional rules don't want those provisional rules changing on them.

You know, Madam Chair, it's a bit like a hockey game where you've played the first period and the second period and the third period all under one set of rules. Then you go into overtime, and without letting either of the teams know, you set out a set of rules that is going to take place only for overtime. But you fail to let the teams know, or in fact a worst-case scenario would be that one team gets to play with five players and the other team gets to play with four or whatever the case may be. Everyone – everyone, every Canadian – would know that that's unfair. Changing the rules in the middle of a hockey game: what could be more un-Canadian than that?

But here we see inside the legislation the opportunity that the provisional rules could be changed. The amendment, then, would ensure that those rules would not change and that, in fact, the provisional rules would remain for the duration of the contract. If the terms and conditions, the provisional market rules, change after the capacity contract is signed, then the old rules must apply to the capacity contract until that contract runs out. This means that the first capacity contract will have to be shorter in order to align with the finalized rules, which will come in around 2021. The minister, the AESO, and the AUC can't go changing the rules midstream and expect people to bid and invest in the capacity market.

We've seen the government – this isn't the first time that industry will be concerned about them changing the rules. In virtually every aspect of Albertans' lives, in some respects, the rules have been changed by this government. Whether it's the labour rules, whether it was the rules around farm workers, whether it was the rules around the minimum wage, whether it was the rules around PPAs, whether it was the rules around carbon taxes, time and time again this government has a habit of changing the rules. In this case the thing about this rule change is that the rule change will not even have to come back to the Legislative Assembly. They can just change it, essentially, at the whim of a minister.

Any time that you're creating legislation that gives such authority, ability, and powers to the minister to make changes to provisional rules or any other term of a contract, it creates uncertainty in the marketplace. Those who are investing: one of the key things that they look for and require is investor certainty. When you pass legislation that creates, potentially, confusion or doesn't provide them with the certainty of the rules not being changed, it certainly causes industry to take stock of that and to potentially even make other decisions. We've seen a significant amount of investment flee our province, particularly in the early days of this administration, when folks were unsure of what was going to happen. We saw major, major, major investments leaving the province. In fact, just this past week we saw another major oil and gas producer, in the form of a pipeline company, divest their assets here because of political uncertainty in the province of British Columbia.

So now the federal government has needed to step in and bear some of that risk of uncertainty, and we will continue to see this all across a wide variety of industries. In this case we'll see this in the electricity marketplace, that rules that have the potential of changing do not encourage investment. They do the opposite of that. It's unfortunate that the government, with a very simple amendment, would be able to provide the sort of certainty that industry is looking for, that the rules provided under the initial capacity contract, those provisional rules, would not change. The terms and the conditions of the contract that they have believed to be true would then, in fact, be true, and this amendment would provide the legislative certainty that that, in fact, would be the case. If the government made a decision, then, to change that legislative certainty, at least they would have to come back to the Assembly and have the scrutiny that the Assembly could provide.

It's not just this government that's the problem. Potential governments down the road, all the way to 2021 – that has the potential of being a couple of governments – in fact, may want to change those rules. While this government may have good intentions – although I'm not entirely sure that they do – it is unclear as to what will happen in the future. So we need to create a legislative framework that provides that certainty into the future and on a go-forward basis. It is a reasonable amendment. I think that most members of the government will agree that keeping these contracts in an investment climate like Alberta's is important. I think that most members of the government can now see what happens when you change the rules midstream. It literally costs Albertans billions of dollars.

That's what happened the last time they changed the rules without coming back to the Assembly, essentially turning the dials on the electricity market. They turned one dial, and it created a whole cascade effect, all down across the market and across the grid. That created such, such, such chaos within the electricity system that we are well and truly on the way to replicating the damaging impacts of the Ontario electricity market. You know, literally, an election is going to be won and lost on this very issue. This sort of certainty, a small amendment, could have a positive impact on the government's poor decisions.

It was interesting to see the Premier of Ontario concede the next election well before – well before – the actual voting day. I wondered if that is a path forward for this particular government as well as we move towards the next election. What might in fact happen with the stack of poor decisions that this government is lining up? In fact, perhaps they will be willing to concede the election prior to the next election, just like we saw in the province of Ontario early this week when what we could almost say is former Premier Kathleen Wynne conceded the election five days prior to the actual vote taking place.

Every day in the Assembly the Official Opposition provides ideas and amendments that the government ought to heed to prevent some of these challenges for them in the future. Unfortunately, it is on very, very, very rare occurrences that they heed our advice.

Tonight would be a great night for them to do that as it would make a bad bill a little bit better and provide a little bit of additional certainty to the marketplace. I encourage them all to support it.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Happy 11 o'clock – what time are we at? – 11:16. I just wanted to again mention that I just think that it's imperative that we – sometimes if you can talk about something enough and maybe come up with enough arguments, we'll be able to convince the government at least to consider some portion of what it is that we're trying to accomplish here.

Again, just to reiterate, we just need to make sure that I would be – it's very important to understand that so much of why we're here and why we're discussing this is because of some very, very seriously poor and very dangerous legislation that has come before this that puts our taxpayers, our ratepayers, the Albertans that we represent on the hook for every mistake that is being made by this government. It's interesting because the government has no problem pointing out previous government boondoggles and all those kinds of things. You know, every government is going to make its mistakes, for sure. There's an immense amount of things to pull from from any government anywhere at any time.

The interesting thing, though, is that the government campaigned on doing things differently. It campaigned on being transparent and making sure that it protected the families in Alberta. It campaigned on being a completely different group of people. People bought into that change, and here we are discussing a bill that, within three years, has completely changed the way that we do things in this province, faster and at a worse pace than any other government before.

The government can stand there and say that they're coming in and trying to change things and fix things that other governments have, but they wear this one. This will be part of their legacy going forward. We're trying to help with the legislation, to make it better than it is, but this will be something that this government wears. You know, everybody has that. We're all going to have our history in here, for sure, but this one in particular, which actually hurts families, hurts families as much as not building a pipeline hurts Canadians. It hurts families the same way not that protecting the federation and our own prosperity in Canada hurts Canadians and Alberta families.

The worst part about it is that the government could have fixed it. There were so many opportunities along the way to just slow things down a little bit. You know, when we were talking about Bill 34 in 2017, we did referral amendments on those specifically to be able to go to committee and discuss, especially with the stakeholders, what that was going to look like.

I remember the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud talking about how it wasn't a big deal that Enmax was – he said that Enmax was hiding costs from Albertans and that suing Enmax was what that was about and that that's what helped to get two pipelines built at that time. I don't know if you remember that, but the answer for everything was “two pipelines.” It's interesting because Bill 34 was this unchecked loan, this ability to have a blank cheque that goes to the Balancing Pool to keep it functioning, when it didn't need any help before on that because the Balancing Pool was able to cover its losses with the rate riders, and it didn't compromise the fiscal responsibility of governance.

You know, removing checks and balances that are put in place to protect families, to protect Albertans is irrational. We're at a point right now in this bill where the Member for Calgary-Foothills is bringing forward really rational and thoughtful legislation to help make this bill better, and the government keeps voting it down. This will be your legacy, your legacy that actually hurts Alberta families, that costs them money that they don't have right now, that may cost them the difference between heating and eating, that could have been avoided.

Like, I mean, I've said so many times that there were things that absolutely needed to be fixed in the electricity market, lots of things, but this wasn't one of them, certainly not the retail piece of it. To shift that cost to the taxpayers wipes Albertans out. You wipe your hands of it. It's exhausting for the average Albertan to try and understand what is behind this other than an ideological push to bring things online that the government thinks Albertans need, but it's willing to sacrifice the dollars that come to them in order to prove their ideology.

It's interesting because objecting to a bill is one thing. I mean, sometimes I look at this bill and I think: we should just object to it outright. But there are things that we can do to improve it since this is what's going to happen. The government has the majority. They can pass these bills. They don't need our permission to do that.

But when you actively seek to take language out not only that is legal language but is language that gives Albertans hope and gives them that ability to feel their morale lift because the government is making legislation that will help them, especially at a time of need, that is a significantly different thing than a government that chooses to profess that a carbon tax and the ideology that comes along with the climate action plan are actually helping them, especially when it's costing them so much more and not just in one part of it. There's the carbon tax. There is now the pipeline, especially if the indemnity is brought forward, that $2 billion, and then also, on top of that, the fact that the policies that have led us to these positions could have been dealt with so much earlier on.

You know, the government keeps saying that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed could have built a pipeline nine years ago. If you think about it, this government has been in power for three years and within that three years has managed to destroy our electricity market and, on top of that, has created policies that have hurt the industry that they say that they profess to protect by building a pipeline. Isn't that interesting? If you look at a couple of different things, you have – I mean, a pipeline, for me anyway, is a part of our federation. It's something that unifies us across the provinces and across Canada, something that we all do together to make sure that Canadians are able to prosper from these amazing resources that are literally under our feet. It's pretty spectacular if you think about it, and I can't imagine anybody who would be against that idea.

But if you look at what that means for the morale of the people of this province, what it means when people do what they say and mean what they say and follow through with not only – I mean, it's one thing to say that you're getting pipelines built and all of that, but there's a whole other piece of it when actually your actions don't align with that process. The reason why I'm comparing it to this is that if you consider the fact that, you know, we're going to be paying for this pipeline through tax dollars federally and provincially but we haven't done anything, Madam Chair, to make sure that there are solutions to actually get to tidewater, which is what stopped Trans Mountain from being able to do that in the first place – Trans Mountain was ready to invest. They're ready to do the work. The terrain to build the Trans Mountain pipeline is not easy terrain. It's a really, really tricky and difficult place to be. There's 11 per cent disturbance. Most of it is built along the same pipeline.

However, the interesting thing is – I mean, the pipeline is one piece of it, but we're not fighting to make sure that we actually have somewhere now to take what is in that pipeline somewhere because of the bills that are coming from the federal government. This government keeps saying, “Well, you know, the hon. member the Leader of the Opposition would rather be in Ontario still and doesn't care about Albertans” and other language that they've used, really, really, actually very terrible rhetoric.

What's interesting about that is that in order to understand pipelines, you have to understand the federation. You have to understand what goes on in Canada. You have to be willing and reasonable to be able to talk about those kinds of things. You can't just talk insularly about Alberta when it comes to pipelines because it doesn't just traverse our province. It's about going across many provinces. It's about engaging with all of those provinces to make them understand their responsibility in the federation, to make sure that they understand how that works in order for Canadians to receive what comes from having that prosperity in a pipeline. It's so much bigger than just a piece of infrastructure. It's actually about who we are. It's part of an identity of being a responsible developer of resources, of being people who do it better than anywhere else in the world.

It's funny. People always ask me: well, what would you do differently? You know what I would do differently? I'd make sure that we produce more. You know why? Nobody else should be producing other than us. You want to talk about green technology? You want to talk about who does better on carbon leakage? Nobody should be producing except for Canada if we were to follow those rules. You know, when you talk about the Paris talks and COP 21 and all of this kind of stuff, we have ministers in this House that go and allow people in those countries to call us dirty oil and tar sands, yet we're then supposed to expect them to come in and invest. That's funny. It's actually not funny; it's disturbing.

Then on top of that, you have the fact that we've been fighting about this pipeline for so long. How is it that pipelines became politicized? How is it that our national infrastructure, that brings us together as a country, that provides prosperity for us, that uplifts every single Canadian, provides thousands of job directly and indirectly, everything from working on the pipeline to the hair stylist that's in that area where that construction is going on – how did that piece of Canada become politicized to a point where it's not even about the pipeline anymore? It's about the ideology around that and about aligning with activists and pandering to that as opposed to the rest of Canadians, that are suffering as a result of waiting.

You keep criticizing other governments for not getting to tidewater when in reality all of the pieces that led up to being able to get this pipeline built were done by previous governments in order to get to this point in the first place. Capacity comes online as capacity is needed. You don't build capacity until it's necessary. Now it's necessary.

We have the ability to be able to be globally competitive at a larger level. As the Leader of the Opposition has said on many, many levels, we have pipelines that have been cancelled in all directions, and now we're looking at an electricity bill that is, to our province, about our prosperity, about taking care of our families, about making sure that we are the ones that make sure that that transparency is there. This is what this government ran on. They ran on that language – I mean, all of us do, right? – transparency, accountability, taking care of Alberta families, making sure that that's first and foremost in their minds. How can they say that and then hit Albertans with an unknown amount of dollars for something that is unknown? We don't know how it's going to work, how it's going to come online, how we're going to maintain it.

You know, it's interesting. If you look at Ontario again – I'm sorry to bring this up again – they are in such a crisis when it comes to brownouts and all of these kinds of things. Do you want to know why? It's because they are unable to keep their electricity functioning, first of all, because of dollars but, second of all, because it's unstable.

There is a family. Sherry-Selena Hucul, a single mother of four, has been dependent on a food bank and works part-time. She both hears from food bank clients and deals with her own struggles with hydro bills. She's the one that says: hydro is a dirty word now; even if you get paid off within a very short amount of time, you end up owing more because the rates go up. Did you know that her monthly bill, a single mom with four kids, is $309 even though she doesn't heat with hydro? She doesn't have a dishwasher, dries her clothes by wood stove, and doesn't leave the lights on. Eight years ago her bill was $80.

Mr. Kenney: This is Ontario?

Mrs. Aheer: This is Ontario.

Mr. Kenney: Wow. Wow.

Mrs. Aheer: On top of that, now they've had to start these support programs in Ontario to be able to pay for folks that can't afford it.

Mr. Kenney: Energy poverty.

Mrs. Aheer: Complete energy poverty. And think about this from a long-term perspective, too, if we're comparing it to pipelines. Pipelines not only help Canadian prosperity, but think about the energy that gets to go to countries that are also in an energy poverty state and what we're able to do with them with our remarkable resources that we're able to get to the pipeline, places like India and China, who are desperate for our natural gas. Can you imagine what that would do for their burgeoning middle class, to be able to get access to our resources? It's pretty incredible.

I think that there are a lot of things where the government hasn't seen what the ripple effects will be of this level of legislation. Moreover, when the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills is very thoughtfully bringing forward legislation to try and help and to save this government from some really, really bad legislation, it's quite frustrating when none of that is being taken into consideration. I mean, really, if you don't want to pass this legislation, take his advice and make your own. Bring it in. We'll debate it, and we'll pass it. Even that, that's okay.

You know, if you don't want to give credit to the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, he doesn't care about that. He cares about Albertans. He doesn't care about who. There's no shortage of good ideas. It doesn't matter which side of the House they come from, but perhaps the government will listen to an excellent, excellent group of amendments. Of course, they've already voted down a bunch of very good ones. At the very least, take into consideration that if you're not willing to pass something that we're bringing forward, that's fine. Make your own, bring it to the House, and we'll work on that.

Government keeps talking about bringing in investment. Well, how are you going to do that if you can't guarantee that that investment has a safe place to land? I mean, the government was always saying that the carbon tax and the social licence wasn't worth the paper it was written on. Do you remember when the government was saying that they wanted to make sure that that legislation was worth the paper that it was written on? That's because the expectation was that when they did what they said that they were going to do with their friends in Ontario, with Justin Trudeau in Ottawa, this would somehow buy us social licence – right? – with the pipeline. But we know that it wasn't worth the paper it was written on. Now investors in Alberta are going to know, because they're not willing to pass legislation to protect that, that their contracts are not worth the paper that they're written on.

I would completely suggest, out of tremendous humility for this process, as I realize that my language in here is used simply to debate, I have no power to pass legislation. The government has the power to do that. You're the majority. You carry the burden of passing this legislation, and you carry the burden of those decisions and the legacy that that leaves behind, which will truly be your legacy, but Albertans pay the consequences.

I would ask that at the very least you consider what it is that we're saying here. Consider this excellent amendment coming forward from the Member for Calgary-Foothills, and consider the ripple effects that your legislation is having on the very people that put you here in the first place.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A5 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:35 p.m.]

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 13? Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. We are back to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. I understand that the minister is just trying to do the right thing here, and the point is that the NDP broke the electricity system by fooling around with the early phase-out of coal. Madam Speaker, I'm just going to summarize, I mean, how we got here, and then I leave it to the members of this House to decide how they want to vote on this bill.

Now, the NDP have used a number of Whac-A-Mole policies in order to try to put humpy dumpty back together again. This is the last one, and the final Band-Aid, but the electricity system will never be the same.

Let's review some of this NDP's actions here, Madam Chair. The first one is the power purchase agreements. When the NDP raised the carbon tax on the coal-fired power plants, it made the power purchase agreements more unprofitable. It cost the taxpayers at least $2 billion to buy back the PPAs, and the full cost is still not known. There are many, many costs that are not known. You'll hear that from me a few times tonight. The costs are not known. The coal phase-out agreement is another one. This cost taxpayers $1.1 billion in 2016 and then $31.9 million in 2017 and $29.9 million in 2018, and it will continue to cost taxpayers tens of millions of dollars until 2029.

The next one is the capacity market, Madam Chair. Because the sun does not always shine and the wind does not always blow, electrical generation on standby needs to be built. The NDP is changing the energy-only electricity market to a capacity market with Bill 13 in order to stimulate investment. This means that electricity prices will rise, but we'll have less volatility. The cost to taxpayers and the ratepayers is unknown, but we know the power bills are going to go up.

The next one, Madam Chair, is renewables and wind and solar. The renewable electricity program action 1, which is REP 1, came in with three wind projects that average 3.7 cents per kilowatt hour for 600 megawatts.

When the electricity price drops below that average, the NDP government's carbon tax subsidizes the wind projects, and when the price is about 3.7 cents per kilowatt hour, the wind projects pay back the NDP government.

By comparison, the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta indicates that the 2016 wholesale price of electricity averaged at 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour. REP 1 is not participating in the capacity market, which leads to the questions about existing merchant wind power. REP 2 and 3 are now being bid for additional renewable electricity. REP 2 is for 300 megawatts with the minimum 25 per cent indigenous equity ownership. REP 3 is for 400 megawatts. The total cost to the taxpayers, again, is unknown.

Next is solar, Mr. Chair. The government of Alberta is planning to go to tender in June 2018 to procure over half of its energy needs from solar power electricity. According to the Canadian Solar Industries Association, solar comes in at 6 cents per kilowatt hour. By comparison, the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta indicates that the 2016 wholesale price of electricity averaged 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour. One more time: the total cost to taxpayers is unknown.

Subsidized electricity prices is the next one now, Mr. Chair. The consumers on the regulated rate option for electricity have their bills subsidized when electricity prices climb above 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. The NDP government has budgeted $74.3 million in the 2018 and '19 budget for the subsidies. But in April 2018 that decision cost the NDP government $9 million, and the government has no idea how much this will cost taxpayers. Again, the total costs are unknown. We know that the total costs to the Alberta taxpayers for all of these changes to the electricity system are going to be north of $3.2 billion at a minimum, but we don't have an exact number, again.

Myself and my colleague from the outstanding riding of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have written to the Auditor General asking to have all of this audited because in this House we tried by all means, you know, using the committees, using this House, Public Accounts Committee. At every opportunity, through all of the avenues that are available for us, we have tried to get that exact number, how much it costs Albertans, because those are the questions we face at the doors in my riding and in every riding we represent. Because we didn't get any answers, as another, you know, tool at our disposal we approached the Auditor General and asked him to audit this whole file.

We in the official opposition did our job to try and make Bill 13 better, but again the NDP rejected our advice. Let's review the mistakes the NDP made in Bill 13. An electricity generator should not be receiving a capacity payment and then deny the provision of electricity, thus spiking electricity prices when the system operator demands electricity. In other words, if on a capacity contract a generator must offer electricity, every minute of every day the Electric System Operator asks generators to bid to supply electricity and the generators comply, and the lowest price electricity is bought. Now, if the generator is allowed to receive a capacity payment without being forced to bid the electricity, then the electricity price will rise. Soon it will spike because not enough load is being offered to the grid. This is how TransAlta . . . [interjections]

Mr. Chair, this is not a laughing matter. We are almost at midnight here, and we are talking about serious issues that are going to cost Albertans, that are going to impact the livelihoods of many Albertans. Because this government chose to phase out coal-fired electric generation, thousands of people lost their jobs, and these NDP members are laughing. This is not a laughing matter.

Connolly: Yeah, Jessica.

Mr. Panda: Then my neighbour there from Calgary-Hawkwood is heckling me.

Back to this discussion on Bill 13, Mr. Chair. If the generator is allowed to receive a capacity payment without being forced to bid the electricity, the electricity price will rise, and soon it will spike because not enough load is being offered to the grid. This is how TransAlta, one of the main companies, got caught and got fined $56 million by the Alberta Utilities Commission for market manipulation. TransAlta was denying the provision of electricity in order to drive prices up. It is fundamentally wrong to receive a capacity payment and then deny the market electricity. Denying electricity to the market drives up electricity prices. We want to keep the prices as low as possible for average Albertans.

To put it on record, Mr. Chair, I want to compliment TransAlta, actually. They came and gave me input to bring some of the amendments I brought from their own experience. They didn't want to make the same mistake again, they didn't want other bidders to make the same mistake, and this NDP government shamelessly rejected all of those amendments. TransAlta learned their lesson. That's why they didn't want future bidders to make that mistake. They don't want others to, you know, end up paying penalties. That's why they gave input to me to improve this legislation, so that's why I brought the amendments.

You know what happened? When the Alberta Electric System Operator asks for electricity, if you are on a capacity contract, you must offer the electricity for sale, and if you do not offer electricity for sale, you do not receive your capacity payment. That was the amendment, and the NDP rejected that. The NDP wanted to pay for capacity whether electricity is offered or not. That is wrong, simply wrong, and it will drive the prices up.

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

Next we wanted to make sure that the NDP had a minimum of 60 days to consult on the draft regulations. Such a timeline would put the draft regulation out now so the NDP can have the final regulations done for August. Setting up the capacity market is a serious and complex undertaking, and the minister only has one shot to get this right. The timelines for implementation are short and tight, and all the experts have said: take more time and get it right. We need all the stakeholders onboard, providing all of us the best advice so that this can be done correctly the first time. A minimum 60-day time period is a fair and reasonable time frame to make sure the regulations are correct. In the long run it would be better, much better. But by voting the amendment down, the NDP have signalled that the draft regulations are not ready. Power companies are going to have a mad scramble this summer in August, when the final regulations are released.

The next amendment was FEOC. Fair, efficient, and open competition was not applied evenly to the capacity market in the legislation. The Member for Edmonton-South West, with his vast computer programming skills, could not see the syntax error in the computer record of this legislation, and there were a couple of places in the bill where fair, efficient, and open competition has not been accorded to the capacity market or the standard FEOC language was not used.

The amendment cleans up the bill and ensures consistency. It would have provided certainty to electricity stakeholders, who do not want legal maneuvering to allow the Alberta Electric System Operator to skip out on commitments. Instead, the NDP shows sloppy drafting and wiggle room. This does not bode well to instill confidence in the suppliers.

So we come to the fourth suggestion of the Official Opposition. Generators who win a capacity contract under the provisional rules do not want the provisional rules changing on them. How can you award a contract and then change the terms and conditions, FEOC or not? If the terms and conditions of the provisional market rules change after the capacity contract is signed, the old rules must apply to the capacity contract until the contract runs out. This means the first capacity contracts will have to be short in order to align with the finalized rules, which will come at around the end of 2021. The minister, the system operator, the Alberta Utilities Commission can't go changing the rules midstream and expect people to bid and invest in capacity.

Madam Speaker, the NDP rejected these suggestions for improvement. I fear we have a flawed piece of legislation that will give rise to a broken capacity market. Albertans suffer because of this. Electricity prices will rise higher than they need to rise, and as such the minister touts an electricity price subsidy to consumers. At the end of the day those consumers will pay for it with higher taxes because the ratepayers and taxpayers are one and the same, Madam Chair.

Now, we talked about the consequences to Albertans. The electricity prices are going to go up, and the investor confidence won't be stable because they want some certainty. That means that we're going to go on the same path that Ontario went, and you know what's going on in Ontario. We'll see on Thursday what happens because the Premier of Ontario already conceded the election.

You know, earlier we were thinking that only the day of the election matters, but now it seems that every day matters. That means that this NDP government in Alberta is on the same path, and they're likely to concede their defeat in the next election already. That's how I take it because if they're serious about listening to Albertans and making their legislation better and making electricity prices affordable and reliable, then they would have taken a serious view of these amendments and all the discussions in this House and at least made their bill better. Since they chose not to, I am assuming that they're ready to switch their seats back to this side of the aisle. I look forward to that, Madam Chair.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank all members engaged in debate at this late hour, in particular the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, the Official Opposition Energy critic, for his tremendous research and detailed work on this critically important issue.

Madam Chair, this bill and the policy area of power production which it addresses is essential to Alberta's economic standing and its future. I'd like to pull the camera back a bit to discuss that strategic importance because it's easy on such a complex issue as power policy sometimes to get lost in the details and the myopia of it. I think we need to understand that when we talk about prosperity and job creation, so much of this is dependent on our ability to attract and retain investment capital, that increases productivity and wealth in Alberta. That doesn't happen by politicians giving speeches or good intentions or, you know, by accident. It only happens through having the right overall macroeconomic policy setting, which, I would submit, this province did have for many decades. It's not perfect, but the record speaks for itself.

We had, generally speaking, the highest rates of growth in the country, the highest labour force participation rate, the highest level of employment, the lowest unemployment in the country, and, most happily, the highest labour force participation rate amongst underrepresented groups in the labour force such as younger people, aboriginal Albertans, immigrants, persons with disabilities, and other groups that are facing very high levels of unemployment in other parts of the country. They did quite well over recent decades here in Alberta, a province that also had the highest levels of disposable income, the highest incomes by far, which according to some recent economic research was really the bulwark of the middle class in Canada, particularly for many people with more modest levels of education or skills who were able to find gainful and secure employment in this province. That's a record about which we should be broadly happy, Madam Chair.

It collectively is something that we used to call the Alberta advantage. That advantage was made up of a number of key policies, one of which was a stable fiscal environment. Since 1995 until recent years having had a balanced budget and since 2004 having had zero net public debt, it's thanks partly to that, allowing us to have the lowest tax rates in Canada and at times amongst the lowest tax rates in North America, which incentivized the kind of activity which creates wealth: working, saving, and investment.

But the Alberta advantage was also, Madam Chair, in part attributable to Alberta having low and affordable power prices because power is, obviously, something that everybody depends on in their normal lives in this modern world and therefore constitutes an important part of the average household budget, so from a consumer point of view it's important. But it's hugely important as well for heavy industry. Very often power costs are the number one or two input cost for major industrial employers. I think, for example, of the pulp mill in Whitecourt. Whitecourt paper is what it's called. They are, I think, the largest industrial consumer of electricity in the province of Alberta. It's an enormous amount of power that they buy. There you have several hundred people in and around the community of Whitecourt whose livelihoods depend on the competitiveness of that plant in what is a very competitive industry around the world. When power prices go up appreciably, that jeopardizes the ability of a company like Whitecourt paper to produce, to compete, and to protect those jobs.

This applies, of course – we often talk about the importance of diversification, Madam Chair. I think that's one thing that all parties in this Chamber have in common as a goal, which is continued diversification of the Alberta economy. Practically what does that mean? Well, it means expanding outside of oil and gas. Happily, we have seen that happen. In fact, oil and gas has declined by about a third as a relative share of the Alberta economy in the last 30 years even while it has grown in absolute terms quite significantly. This effectively means that other sectors have grown more quickly, other sectors like services and construction but also manufacturing. Manufacturing has as typically one of its top two or three input costs power, so this is not just some sort of marginal technical issue that maybe some people find boring. It's essential for our economic future. It's essential for us to restore an Alberta advantage to have affordable power prices.

Madam Chair, let's face it. When we talk about the Alberta advantage, there are also certain Alberta disadvantages, one of which is our relative remoteness from major markets. Here we are as a landlocked province, far from any other major population centres. We're not on the eastern seaboard. We're not on the Pacific coast. We have a high cost of production generally as a big, cold, northern climate. You can't do construction in most places year-round. Labour costs are higher. Now, under this government regulatory and tax costs are higher, so we need certain competitive advantages if we are to attract manufacturers in other industries here to help us to further diversify Alberta's economy. For that, we must have affordable power prices.

We must avoid the disastrous model of the Ontario Liberal government, which, as my colleagues have pointed out, is on the brink of an electoral disaster, according to their own leader, Premier Wynne, because they pursued, Madam Chair, not a practical power policy based on the interests of consumers or of industry and employers but, rather, an ideological approach to power policy, which rushed to shut down coal generation as part of the power grid in Ontario. They refused to invest in renewal of their nuclear power generation capability. They went headstrong into long-term contracts for – some people call them renewable; I call them intermittent and unreliable – forms of power production such as wind and solar, in fact, assigning, in some cases, contracts that were for production as high as 40 cents a kilowatt hour.

Now, Madam Chair, the effect of this has been a hollowing out of Ontario's industrial capabilities as those power prices have gone up. They have this bizarre situation – I offer this as a cautionary tale relevant to this bill – where in order to privilege intermittent forms of power production, they require that consumers buy expensive so-called renewable power sources first and very inexpensive hydro electricity power last. Effectively what this means is that Ontario factories trying to operate all night, you know, 24/7, are paying up to 40 cents a kilowatt hour, but there's excess capacity on the grid being generated by Ontario's enormous hydroelectricity capacity, excess power which is dumped on U.S. markets at less than 5 cents a kilowatt hour. Ontario is literally subsidizing their industrial competitors south of the border, so is it any wonder that jobs and business have gone south, too? I mean, you can move your business south of the border and get lower taxes, lower labour costs, less regulatory burden, and now substantially lower power prices.

I offer this cautionary tale to say that we must not replicate any dimension of this failed policy, which the Member for Chestermere- . . .

An Hon. Member: Rocky View.

Mr. Kenney: . . . Rocky View – I'm still learning the names of the constituencies, Madam Chair – has so eloquently articulated as energy poverty.

Some members may recall – I think it was in the spring, about March 2017 – when the Rt. Hon. the Prime Minister was doing a town hall meeting in Peterborough, Ontario. A lady came up to the microphone and broke down in tears in an emotionally wrought statement. You could tell that she wasn't somebody used to speaking in public or in front of TV cameras, but she suddenly found the courage to stand up to the Prime Minister of Canada in front of national television to tell her story about how she was having to choose between buying groceries and heating her home. She was talking about how she was, you know, cutting her food budget because her power budget had become higher than her mortgage payments.

That's the real world. I find this perverse, that this is imposed by parties that pretend that they have a monopoly on compassion. Compassion: where's the compassion for that woman and the hundreds of thousands of other Ontarians of modest incomes who have been the victims of the kinds of policies that are implicit in this bill? That is my concern fundamentally, Madam Chair. It undermines our economic competitiveness, one of the key planks of the Alberta advantage, which was affordable power prices, but it also drives us towards greater energy poverty for people who are at the margins, people who can't afford to pay an extra $20 or $50 a month on their power bills. They already are paying more to heat their homes with the carbon tax, that the NDP increased by 50 per cent on January 1 and plans to increase by a further 67 per cent in order to please their close ally Justin Trudeau, so people are already being forced into increasingly a form of energy poverty in many cases to heat their homes. Now this will be the case increasingly on their electricity bills as a result of the higher costs implicit in this bill.

More than that, Madam Chair, is my concern about investor confidence. I was just down in Toronto a couple of weeks ago. I spent a day meeting with national business leaders on Bay Street in the financial, real estate, and other industries, and they all told me – I heard the same thing over and over again – that as far as they're concerned, Alberta is not a place in which to invest right now. To quote one very senior Canadian business leader who is responsible for a portfolio that invests $45 billion globally, this gentleman, who loves Alberta, told me that there is a red X on Alberta in terms of investment right now.

Now, I understand that if you come from a social democratic party, maybe that sounds like: oh, that's just the evil fat-cat capitalists. Maybe it's easy to objectify, dismiss, ignore those kinds of comments that we're hearing. For example, on April 1, 2018, the chief executive officer of the Royal Bank of Canada, Dave McKay, told the Canadian Press that a significant investment exodus to the United States is already under way, especially in the energy and clean technology sectors. Especially in the energy and clean technology sectors: isn't that ironic? All of these subsidies, all of this talk, all of this rigging the system to privilege clean technology, and guess where it's going? To a friendlier investment environment according to the CEO of the largest financial institution in Canada. Madam Chair, this is not an opposition MLA speaking. This is a guy responsible for hundreds of billions of dollars of assets here. It reminds me as well to further quote Mr. McKay, quote, in real time we are seeing capital flow out of the country, but if we don't keep the capital here, we can't keep the people here, and these changes are important to bring human capital and financial capital together in one place, end quote.

I would go on to this question of investor confidence with direct relevance to this bill. To quote Nancy Southern, the chair and CEO of ATCO, a great Alberta company built from scratch in this province, started in the 1950s. She recently described as, quote, heartbreaking, the policies of this government and the federal government in driving away capital and investment. She said, quote, how heartbreaking it is to see our wonderful resource-laden province so constrained by regulatory policy and politics.

I would further quote Siegfried Kiefer, president and chief strategy officer of ATCO. He described how governments in Canada, quote, are busy bringing in multiple and compounding policies and regulations that are layering considerable costs on businesses and individuals alike, undermining the confidence of investors, eroding the attractiveness of our industries, and weakening the confidence of the public. It goes without saying that in our increasingly globalized economy, capital flows will continue to seek certainty. Close quote.

Does this bill offer that certainty, Madam Chair? The answer is manifestly not. What the bill does is create even greater uncertainty for power producers that have already been shaken by this government. I will in a moment enumerate the reasons why.

First, Madam Chair, I'd like to enter into Hansard a quote, a citation at length from a speech recently delivered by James Pasioka, a partner at McCarthy Tétrault, a major national law firm in Calgary. Mr. Pasioka is one of Alberta's leading experts on the energy industry and power production and has been highly recognized and, in fact, has taught courses at the University of Calgary. I just read this speech that he recently delivered to the C.D. Howe Institute. I think all members would benefit to hear this, I think, prescient summary of the NDP government's approach to power as summarized in Bill 13.

Mr. Pasioka said, quote, let me give you one very significant example in Alberta of deleterious government actions of the Alberta NDP, that Nancy Southern is talking about, and that is as relates to the backbone of Alberta's infrastructure, the province's electricity generation sector. The Alberta NDP, shortly after it took office in 2015, lurched into a series of ad hoc political moves to ultimately remap the entire electricity generation sector in Alberta with the NDP's determination to eliminate all coal-fired electricity generation in Alberta from and after 2030. By the way, none of this was in the NDP's election platform. To demonstrate the very significant impact of this, it is important to remember that Alberta gets 60 to 65 per cent of its baseline power generation from coal. Point one, it all started after the province boosted its carbon tax on heavy industrial emitters such as coal-fired generating plants.

The Alberta government tripped on an opt-out clause contained in existing power contracts. This allowed holders of the unprofitable electricity deals known as power purchase agreements, PPAs, to return them to the government agency called the Balancing Pool. That government agency backstops all PPAs and was soon holding the bag on losses of up to $70 million a month as electricity prices fell to decade lows. The NDP government lent the Balancing Pool hundreds of millions of dollars, money that must be repaid by consumers later through a surcharge on their monthly power bills, with this loan being made so that the government's actions would not be noticed, or at least not felt, by taxpayers or consumers in the short term.

This situation, however, was hugely exacerbated by the Alberta NDP government seeking to cover up its mistake in tripping on the opt-out clause. Here is what happened. Bizarrely, in what the Financial Post called a Monty Python like script, the Alberta NDP sued one of its own government departments, effectively the Alberta government, dating back to the year 2000, claiming foul on the so-called Enron clause, that the opt-out clause had somehow been slipped into the PPAs by Enron at the last minute, an utterly nonsensical lawsuit. But by holding on to this frivolous lawsuit for two years, the Balancing Pool and, ultimately, the taxpayers of Alberta had to cover the losses on the PPAs while the PPAs were extant for those two years. Losses under the PPAs would of course terminate when the PPAs were terminated.

The last of the lawsuits dealing with the termination of the PPAs was settled in March of this year with Enmax, but the significant costs on the return of the PPAs had been manifestly made worse because the NDP government hung onto the PPAs for those years instead of permitting the process under the PPAs to take its natural course.

So what's the cost here? Well, it's still to be tabulated. [Mr. Kenney's speaking time expired]

I'd be happy to continue in just a moment, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I look forward to continuing to hear the remarks of the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. So what's the cost here? Well, it's still to be tabulated. After PPA holders gave the underwater agreements back to the Balancing Pool two years ago, the Balancing Pool quickly burned through more than $700 million from its investment portfolio to cover the losses in the PPAs due to the government's actions. After burning through its $700 million portfolio, the Balancing Pool has borrowed a further $566 million from the province as at year-end 2017, kicking the can down the road so that electricity consumers don't see the real cost at present of this disaster. Do you see a pattern here?

In addition, in 2018 all Alberta electricity consumers will pay a surcharge, instigated by the Balancing Pool in order to help pay for these losses, of a further $190 million. More Balancing Pool charges like this in the years to come are reasonably foreseeable on this matter.

Two, when coal-fired baseload generation is shuttered before scheduled by government policies, electricity prices will go up. To help mask this, the NDP government is borrowing from the playbook of the disastrous Ontario experience and has instituted a residential price cap, a subsidy paid for by all taxpayers, at an estimated cost of $74 million for this fiscal year, to cover the cost of limiting electricity rates for residential consumers to 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. The price ceiling remains in place till May 2021, meaning that the price tag could still grow.

Three, what happens when a very significant change in government policy and framework is made after the private sector has made its investment decisions and spent capital relying on the existing ground rules? And this is the point I was making about investor confidence, Madam Chair. Will you have stranded assets?

In our system compensation would ordinarily be due to the parties that spent the capital. Twelve of Alberta's 18 baseload coal plants were scheduled to close down one way or another by 2030. The other six plants are merchant plants designed and built to be in operation as late as 2061. Thus, the NDP government under its climate leadership plan had to compensate the existing plant owners, who were to operate their six plants well past 2030, with taxpayers' money for the owners' stranded capital costs. The province will pay three of the four affected parties – TransAlta Corp., ATCO Ltd., and Capital Power Corp. – a total of $97 million annually, or $100 million to round up, over 14 years beginning last year, in 2017, for a total cost of, get this, $1.36 billion. Whoops. That's a lot of hospitals. In fact, I think that is more than the entire budget of the Calgary South Health Campus.

Settlement with the last of these four affected plant owners, Enmax, took place just in March of this year, and the cost of that compensation settlement with Enmax will push the overall total significantly upwards from that initial $1.36 billion. So that's a minimum, not a maximum. Imagine how many hospitals you could build in Peace River, Madam Chair, or in La Crête or in any part of northwestern Alberta for a billion and a half dollars.

The craziness of it all is that the six coal-fired electricity generation plants in Alberta to be closed by 2030 were among the most advanced coal-fired facilities in the world, utilizing supercritical boiler technology, which operates at higher steam temperatures and pressures to drive a high-efficiency steam turbine. CO₂ emissions per megawatt are lower than those from conventional coal-fired power plants in the rest of the world by 18 to 20 per cent. This is important stuff. Canada generates approximately 1.6 to 1.8 per cent of the world's greenhouse gas emissions, so those six modern coal-fired plants were an infinitesimal contributor to Canada's world-wide total. But over the next 10 years some 1,600 new coal-fired plants are being built world-wide, 700 of those in China alone. That is a rate of two to three a week.

I would add, parenthetically, Madam Chair, that even in the putatively greenest economies on Earth, in Germany and Japan, guess what they're building more capacity for? Coal. Thus, we're closing down Alberta's six cleanest coal-powered plants early at a tremendous cost to Alberta taxpayers. Somewhere in the world three weeks from now there will be another six plants to replace those and growing at that rate every three weeks for the next 10 years. This doesn't make any sense.

Four, the Alberta NDP government, in its complete remake of Alberta's electricity generation sector under its climate leadership plan, has to incentivize or rebuild all the province's baseload power generation, replacing coal with other alternatives. Allow me to pause to explain baseload power, Madam Chair. When you bring increased capacity onto the grid from intermittent sources like wind and solar, you need to match every kilowatt hour of that capacity with baseload. That means that, effectively, in terms of the capital expenditure you have to pay twice for the same power.

Mrs. Aheer: Double billing.

Mr. Kenney: Yeah.

As usual under the climate leadership plan, there is a cost with these alternatives. The AESO, the government agency that oversees the province's power grid, estimates that it will cost $25 billion to replace coal plants, meet the government's targets for nonrenewable power generation, and meet future customer demand. A U.S.-based electricity expert hired by the Alberta government as a consultant on the coal file pegs the cost at between $20 billion to $30 billion. That's billion with a "b," Madam Chair. All of this massive remapping occurs amid concerns that the province has caused much more uncertainty about the future of the power market at a time it's trying to attract investment.

A Calgary city councillor said recently – I think this is Diane Colley-Urquhart – quote: the implementation of this program has sparked legitimate concerns regarding the stability and sustainability of Alberta's current power market design, infrastructure, and transmission. Unquote.

Now, enough said about what not to do if you want to attract private-sector capital for infrastructure or project spending. I want to contrast what I have said about the Alberta NDP government and the electricity generation sector in Alberta and pivot 180 degrees, and this is very interesting. This one is really a good-news story – and don't we need some good news? – from a local Alberta government jurisdiction, the city of Medicine Hat. Unfortunately, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is in his constituency tonight, but we'll make sure that he . . .

The Chair: Hon. leader, we do not refer to the presence or absence of members, please. Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Oh. That's right. I shouldn't have. Quite right, Madam Chair. Duly reproved. I did that inadvertently, and I apologize to the member.

Here's a great story about Medicine Hat. It's a great story on how governments can and should work to encourage, foster, and partner with private capital to create project and infrastructure spending and thereby create sustainable jobs and bolster the economy for many years in the future.

The city of Medicine Hat has some unique competitive advantages. Number one, it's the sunniest city in Canada, with over 2,500 hours of sunshine per year. That must explain why the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has such a sunny disposition. It ranks in the top 50 municipalities in Canada in terms of the ability to generate solar energy. It has abundant gas reserves in a large, shallow gas reservoir located directly below the city. It reminds me of the heavy oil reservoir under the city of Los Angeles. Using this as a base, the city developed and fostered a natural gas and petroleum resources department. Smart. The city's oil and gas assets were developed through existing ownership of gas properties and by several acquisitions of various private companies' oil and gas interests.

The city partially used its oil and gas revenues to eliminate homelessness in 2014. Bravo. I think they followed the housing first approach, the first and only city in Canada to do so. But then the downturn in commodity prices came. The city was hit hard by a drop in oil and gas prices, losing a thousand jobs in under three months in 2015. In the face of this adversity, the city decided that it would have to increase its efforts to work with business and diversify its economy, coming back to my earlier point about using smart power policy as a lever for diversification.

The city responded to this much like a business would. They set out to increase their marketing efforts to promote their competitive advantages and formed an internal Development Investment Readiness Team to bargain with private industry and convert tangible investments to profits. The combination of a business-friendly government, municipally owned utilities, abundant gas reserves, and sunny skies have led to massive investment in the city, facilitated by this initiative.

For example, Hut 8 Mining Corporation – and I met with the CEO of Hut 8 Mining in Toronto 10 days ago – doing fascinating work in partnership with the Bitfury group, arguably the world's leading full-service block chain technology company, announced plans to construct a flagship cryptocurrency mining facility in Medicine Hat. This is pretty cool stuff, Madam Chair. Basically, to break it down, with the whole block chain economy, these block chain transactions require enormous amounts of power, and Medicine Hat has cheap power. They've gone the market route in harnessing natural gas, for example, to sell that to companies involved in block chain and in cryptocurrency. Negotiating a 10-year electricity supply agreement and a lease of over 11 acres of land, the city has landed a $100 million facility that will create 100 construction jobs and over 40 additional jobs at the facility.

He goes on to describe helium liquefaction. The city continues to explore alternatives with the Whale Group, which is a U.S. helium producer, to construct the first Canadian helium liquefaction plant in the Medicine Hat area. That's a great success story in its entirety.

In closing, I have thus left you with two profoundly contrasting stories, he says, of government actions as it relates to private capital spending on projects or infrastructure, with two dramatically different results and consequences.

I'd like again to acknowledge and thank the C.D. Howe Institute and James Pasioka for that very informative paper about what we're facing in Bill 13 and the legislation which preceded it.

Madam Chair, it's important for me to underscore what my colleague the Official Opposition Energy critic has discussed in this bill, a number of provisions such as, for example, economic withholding, which is of great concern. Essentially, this means that a company should not be receiving a capacity payment and then be denying the provision of electricity when the AESO wants electricity in order to spike electricity prices. This is a very concerning element of the bill.

We're also concerned that real powers for the capacity market will be enacted through regulations by the minister without reference to this Legislature. My colleague has already outlined our concerns with respect to rules for a fair, efficient, open, and competitive market and has brought forward amendments, that unfortunately have been rejected, in this respect. I can't understand why the government would be opposed to fairness, efficiency, openness, and competitiveness as governing elements of the capacity market proposed in this bill.

Madam Chair, in closing, I would ask the government to seriously reflect on where they are taking us, not only to higher power prices for ordinary consumers but to less competitiveness and less ability to attract capital investment that would allow us to diversify in industries not related to oil and gas and, finally, the overall impact on investor confidence about changing the rules midstream. That's the basic concern that we hear from the industry that invests billions of dollars in power production in Alberta, that Bill 13 creates even more uncertainty just when we need that certainty the most.

For those reasons, it is my intention to vote against the bill.

The Chair: Any other questions or comments with respect to the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us all pray or reflect, each in our own way. As today is the second day of Seniors' Week in Alberta, I would like us to take time to reflect on the contributions of our elders. They make meaningful contributions to our communities each and every day, working to make a better Alberta through the incredible support they provide to their families and to our province as a whole. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 18 Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Government House Leader I move third reading of Bill 18, Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

As has been discussed at second reading and at committee, this bill makes a number of minor changes to various statutes. I encourage all members to support it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 18? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yeah, it's my pleasure to stand today and talk regarding Bill 18, Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. Of course, it's intended as a miscellaneous statutes amendment act. It's to bring about minor word changes to a number of different statutes. I mean, it covers a lot of different things in this bill. It covers A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, the Alberta Human Rights Act, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, the Auditor General Act – I'm just trying to think which other ones are here – the Conflicts of Interest Act, the Consumer Protection Act, the Election Act, the Employment Standards Code, the Electronic Transactions Act, and the Financial Administration Act.

There are a lot of different things that are covered in this bill: the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act – let's see here – occupational health and safety; public interest disclosure, which is the whistle-blower protection act; the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act; the Public Service Act; the Public Service Employee Relations Act; the Vital Statistics Act. There are several different things that are covered in this. Of course, it's meant to just be some minor changes to wording and that sort of thing.

I think what's caught a lot of people's attention is the Financial Administration Act. It says here:

Amends RSA 2000 cF-12

11(1) The Financial Administration Act is amended by this section.

(2) Section 1(1) is amended

(a) in clause (f) by adding the following after subclause (vii):

(vii.1) the Office of the Election Commissioner,

(b) in clause (u) by adding the following after subclause (vii):

Madam Speaker, what this does is that it brings in the public disclosure of the Election Commissioner. Of course, the Election Commissioner is a new position that this government brought forward. They brought it forward, I think, trying to tell everybody that this was something new and great, that all of a sudden we would have some accountability and somebody to look after the rules and regulations taking place in elections and to do some investigations and stuff like that.

But, Madam Speaker, this is something that's been going on for quite a while. We have a chief electoral office and a Chief Electoral Officer, whose job – I'll just read here from one of the documents in this regard: Elections Alberta is a nonpartisan, nongovernment agency that facilitates provincial elections, enumerations, plebiscites; we ensure that the election events are open to all those eligible, that all processes are transparent to maintain integrity and public confidence, that events are as accessible as possible, and that the laws are communicated and enforced. That phrase right there, Madam Speaker, shows that the job of this Election Commissioner has been going on previously. There have obviously been things that have been brought forward to the Chief Electoral Officer in Alberta, and the Chief Electoral Officer and the staff there at the chief electoral office have dealt with these issues. They've brought about, you know, different things, bringing things to the public as far as things that they felt were wrong. That's been their job.

The office of the Chief Electoral Officer, at least up to the date when this was printed, had 16 permanent staff supports for the Chief Electoral Officer. The Chief Electoral Officer was appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Similar to other independent officers of the Legislature, Elections Alberta does not report to a minister but, rather, to the Legislative Assembly through an all-party standing committee.

Madam Speaker, if we look at the Election Commissioner – of course, they put out some ads. They put them out around Christmastime, which, of course, maybe isn't the best time to be putting out ads to get people to apply. It was kind of an expensive process they went through. I think they ended up having to extend it because of the process that they initiated to start with. I just want to read here, from Alberta's Election Commissioner, the ad to get people to apply for this job.

Alberta's Election Commissioner will be a nonpartisan officer of the Legislature appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Legislative Assembly.

Exactly like the Chief Electoral Officer.

As Alberta's first Election Commissioner, you will be responsible for ensuring compliance with, and enforcement of, certain obligations of entities regulated by the Election Act and Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

Madam Speaker, I just read here from the roles of the Chief Electoral Officer, and it sounds very much like the same thing. To make sure that laws are communicated and enforced is the responsibility of the Chief Electoral Officer. So there's obviously a lot of overlap here. Of course, like I say, this government came in and thought this was some great new thing that they were doing, but obviously, like I said, things have been going along just fine previous to this.

In this capacity, the Election Commissioner will be responsible for fully investigating complaints, levying administrative penalties, issuing letters of reprimand, entering into compliance agreements, and recommending prosecutions.

Now, Madam Speaker, I think that when we read through the roles of the office of the Chief Electoral Officer and their duties, it deals with all these exact same things.

It says that this position requires you to investigate potential wrongdoings by political entities including candidates, political parties and third parties.

Obviously, everybody that's involved with elections is subject to the Election Commissioner's responsibilities.

It says:

Drawing upon your strategic leadership skills and executive management experience you will be responsible for establishing, overseeing and building a strong team of professionals for a new independent office of the Legislature.

Obviously, Madam Speaker, this isn't just: hire one person, and we'll help take care of some of these issues that the Chief Electoral Officer was already doing. We're going to create a whole new, strong team of professionals for a new independent office.

Obviously, we had these discussions. In this Bill 18 it talks about bringing the Election Commissioner into the sunshine list so we know how much the Election Commissioner is getting paid. That's the right of Albertans, to know this, because this is in legislation for others that are making this kind of salary. What's interesting is that, again, the full cost of this isn't just how much this officer, the commissioner, is going to get paid; it's the cost of how many people in this strong team of professionals that this person is going to be responsible for. We don't know how many more people will be hired with this job and if there are any kind of restrictions or any kind of guidelines that this person has on how many people they can hire and what kind of work they'll be doing.

So, you know, bringing this into this Bill 18: I think it's great, obviously. In fact, we made an amendment to the original motion, that was to hire this Election Commissioner, to bring this person's salary into the sunshine list immediately. Of course, the government voted that amendment down. They don't want this salary to see the sunshine list until after the next election, and I think that's unfortunate because we have a person here whose responsibility, the government has said, is to take the dark money out of politics.

Of course, anybody that has the job of taking the dark money out of politics: I think their money should hit the sunshine list. I think it only makes sense. In fact, I guess it's somewhat contradictory to think that the person that's responsible to take the dark money out of politics is – their wages and their staff, whomever they're going to hire, the total cost of this we won't know until after the next election. I think that's something that needs to be looked at.

Obviously, we tried to make this happen. But the government for some reason doesn't want this person's salary to hit the sunshine list until after the next election though at least they did admit that they made a mistake in not actually having legislation to get them on the sunshine list even after the next election. Of course, we could have taken care of that right off the bat with the amendment to the original motion, which is what we, you know, wanted to do at that time.

When I look at the roles of the chief electoral office, their duties are to look at the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, and that's carried out by the Electoral Boundaries Commission. The chief electoral office actually oversees that portion, too. They also oversee the Senatorial Selection Act, which, of course, this government has let die, I think.

We even had a discussion on this yesterday, about Senators and how Alberta has been selecting their own Senators to put their names forward to the federal government for the federal government to select. I'm just going to read that section here.

The Senatorial Selection Act was last used in conjunction with the 2012 provincial election to select Senate nominees. Names of elected nominees were submitted to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada as persons who may be summoned to the Senate of Canada for the purpose of filling vacancies relating to Alberta. Senate Nominee elections may be run in conjunction with a general election under the Election Act, in conjunction with municipal elections, or as stand-alone events. The last Senate Nominee Election saw a record of 13 candidates run for three vacancies.

Madam Speaker, this is something that we had in Alberta that I think was a great part of democracy. Instead of somebody in the federal government – the Prime Minister, whatever – just picking whomever they wanted to be in the Senate to represent us in Alberta, we actually had the opportunity to choose whose names we would put forward to the federal government to choose to be in the Senate. I think that was a great part of democracy here in Alberta. Of course, under this government's watch they've let that kind of die and seem to be unwilling to entertain that idea again. Like I say, it was something that was special to Alberta as far as having this kind of democracy that others didn't have.

I can't see any problem with the people of Alberta having a say in who gets to represent them in Ottawa. I mean, we elect our MPs here, and that's how we choose who goes to the House of Commons to represent us. Why would we not want to continue? Like I say, this is something that we've been doing. Why would we not continue doing something where Albertans have an opportunity to choose who represents them in the Senate? Obviously, this is something, I think, that needs to be looked at. I would encourage the government to look at that section of the act and see if we can get that going again.

Now, as far as the chief electoral office, it talks about the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. It provides direction to political entities and third-party advertisers for registration, financial reporting, and disclosure. This act also prescribes the means for the Chief Electoral Officer to monitor compliance of political entities, including political parties, candidates, constituency associations, and, most recently, third-party advertisers. Elections Alberta is assigned the responsibility for ensuring filing, examination, and public disclosure of financial documents submitted by political parties.

Again, Madam Speaker, when we look at the role of the Election Commissioner and the responsibilities that that individual will have – and, of course, not just that individual but their "team of professionals," the quote that it says here in the act for, you know, getting people to apply for this position – there seems to be some overlap here, obviously, because Elections Alberta is assigned the responsibility for ensuring filing, examination, and public disclosure of financial documents submitted by political parties, constituency associations, and candidates.

So, I mean, obviously, this job was already being done by Elections Alberta. Of course, I just saw in here that at the time this was printed they had, I think, a team of 16 people, 16 permanent staff, whose duties were the same as this person's.

Here's another part. It says: another part of the finance regulation is enforcing the legislation relating to the collection of contributions. Again, enforcing the legislation, investigating complaints of breaches of the act. When we look at the ad posting here: "investigate potential wrongdoings by political entities." I read here on the Chief Electoral Officer responsibilities: investigating complaints of breaches of the act, applying administrative penalties or consenting to prosecution if warranted. This is, again, for the Chief Electoral Officer.

Then, of course, we read in this ad: “levying administrative penalties.” We have one that says, “levying administrative penalties,” and then the Chief Electoral Officer: applying administrative penalties. Obviously, there just continues to be more and more overlap of these two jobs.

Now, the Chief Electoral Officer says: it is important to note that we serve in an advisory role as well as a regulatory one – so, obviously, they try to give advice on how they feel the rules apply to political parties, constituency associations, that sort of thing, but they also regulate – assistance is provided to the staff and volunteers involved in the process to assist them in understanding and complying with the legislation; we maintain a register of political parties, constituency associations, candidates, and third-party advertisers and assist groups in forming new political parties. So they have kind of a wide-ranging mandate, the Chief Electoral Officer. Of course, it includes everything that the Alberta Election Commissioner is doing.

Of course, when we look at Bill 18, to bring this person’s wages or what this person is being paid to the sunshine list so that Albertans can find out exactly what this person is getting paid, we sit here at this time and we know that unless the government decides to accept some of our amendments or change something, we will not know how much this person makes until after the next election. I think that’s what’s missing out of Bill 18, that opportunity.

This government, when they brought forward Motion 16 about hiring the Election Commissioner, told us that everything was fine and everything was great, and any time that we brought up or suggested changes or amendments or anything like that, you know, we were fearmongering or whatever. I think one time they said that we were picking on this person, singling this person out. Now, of course, the government has realized that they had to single this person out and actually put him in Bill 18, specifically list this position in Bill 18, to make it so that this person can hit the sunshine list, even after the next election.

Madam Speaker, I mean, we had the opportunity back when this motion first came forward, with the amendment that we brought forward, to bring this person to the sunshine list immediately. Of course, the government voted that down. They didn’t want to do it. They told us that everything was fine and that they had everything under control, but obviously they didn’t. Now they had to bring this forward in Bill 18. This gives them another opportunity to not only bring this person to the sunshine list, which is what they had to do, but also they had the perfect opportunity to make sure that this person’s salary was made immediately available to Albertans, before the next election.

Obviously, this person’s position is related to democracy and related to transparency. It’s related to, as they say, taking the dark money out of politics. When we look at that and we realize that this person’s responsibility has to do with the actual election, what goes on with the election before and after and that sort of thing, we have an opportunity to amend this and to ask that this be brought forward immediately so that we can see how much this person’s salary is immediately and take a look at the contract and see what it says there. We have the opportunity to do this now.

The government had this opportunity with Bill 18. They realized that they had made a mistake earlier and that they should have brought this forward right from the start, but they didn’t. So now they’ve had to throw this into kind of a housekeeping bill. By doing that, they had an additional opportunity to bring sunshine to the person that’s to take the dark money out of politics, but again they failed to do that.

I’m not sure why they have a problem with bringing light to this issue, but it seems like at every turn they have an opportunity to fix this, and they don’t take advantage of it. Again, we see that this person’s responsibilities are an overlap of the Chief Electoral Officer and the Chief Electoral Officer’s office and the staff that they have, who have been performing these duties already.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise today and speak on Bill 18 in third reading. We see time and time again in this place that the government needs to bring legislation forward to fix some other piece of legislation that they’ve already passed. In this case Bill 18 brings in some rather administrative housekeeping proposed amendments. For the most part, these changes are rather minor and don’t evoke much concern from me.

But there is a particular portion of this legislation that I do want to discuss at length, and that is the portion that deals with the Election Commissioner. Really, in my opinion, Bill 18, that is called the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, should actually be changed to the Election Commissioner Act because out of the 20 pages in this act, the Election Commissioner is not mentioned on only three of those pages. I’ll just quickly go over a couple of them here.

It’s on page 2, under Alberta Corporate Tax Act – it’s not mentioned in the Alberta Human Rights Act for some reason – and again on page 3, under Auditor General Act; page 4, Conflicts of Interest Act, and it continues to page 5; but it is not mentioned under the Consumer Protection Act. Then, of course, under Election Act, it’s very extensively mentioned there. Even under the Electronic Transactions Act, the Election Commissioner is mentioned and under the Financial Administration Act, but it is not mentioned under the Employment Standards Code. It goes on to list it a number of times on page 9, quite extensively. Then on page 11 again is a very long section. Under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, it mentions it.

Then we have page 12, the Municipal Government Act, and he’s not mentioned there. So those are the three pages – 12, 13, and 14 – where I haven’t seen any mention of him. He’s not mentioned under the Occupational Health and Safety Act, but when we get to the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, he pops up there a number of times again. The Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act: it’s interesting that he’s mentioned there. Most of my colleagues have been standing up and asking about his rate of compensation, and it seems to be a big secret, although he is mentioned in the transparency act. He’s also mentioned numerous times under the Public Service Act, the Public Service Employee Relations Act, and they managed to skip him under the Vital Statistics Act.

You kind of get my point, Madam Speaker. You know, out of 20 pages, only three of them don’t include the mention of the Election Commissioner, so we should really change the act’s name from Statutes Amendment Act to Election Commissioner Act.

As my fellow colleagues before me have mentioned in the House, the issue of salary disclosure in relation to the commissioner has been long discussed, and few of our words have been heeded. We will continue to fulfill our duty in this House as the Official Opposition and keep the government accountable when we see that it is taking actions that will not do right by Albertans. We have urged the government to add the Election Commissioner to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, which this actually does on page 17 of the act, but the government doesn't recognize that that means that they should disclose the salary.

On May 1 my colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock proposed an amendment which would have required the salary of the Election Commissioner to be disclosed, which would have fallen very nicely under the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, on page 17 of this bill. The government voted down the amendment that would bring more disclosure to this position. Madam Speaker, these are not the markings of an open and transparent government. Just because, you know, you talk about public-sector compensation transparency in a bill like Bill 18 doesn't mean that you're actually committing to being transparent.

As legislators we have a duty to be accountable to those that we have been elected to represent. However, we see a pattern shrouding accountability with this NDP government. When my colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock brought this amendment, the government members asked why we thought it necessary to single out this one particular legislative officer. Yet we see that – again I'll mention it – out of 20 pages in Bill 18, only three of those pages don't mention the commissioner. It kind of looks to me like they're singling out the commissioner here or trying to correct an error that they made when they put their other bills forward.

For this to be explained and for the issue I take with the current portion of the legislation in this bill that deals with the Election Commissioner, it is necessary to recall what has been said previously. Madam Speaker, my colleagues and I have taken issue with the creation of this position from the get-go. During the discussion about the creation of the Election Commissioner position my colleagues on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices voiced their staunch opposition numerous times on numerous occasions. We heard reluctance from external voices as well, being the Chief Electoral Officer. It seemed like there was so much outright opposition. In fact, it became clear that the NDP came in with an unwavering plan, not looking to create an open dialogue or discussion in these committee meetings. They were looking to execute their plan. After the creation of the position, upholding the spirit of the position itself, we took great opposition to the chosen candidate.

When Motion 16 was before the House, we proposed some reasonable amendments which would lift the veil on this process even a little bit. Madam Speaker, as our thoughtful amendment was stricken down then, Bill 18 now includes it. I'm glad to see that the government is heeding our words and implementing what we have been proposing. It is notable that they are now passing what should have been passed awhile ago and they're admitting their mistakes. I think that's quite clear by the 17 pages in Bill 18 that mention the Election Commissioner.

Beyond simply this, it became quite evident during the debate that the government was executing their plan when the Minister of Justice, with a government motion, invoked time allocation. This would mean that rather than carefully considering a motion which has a great deal of influence on the future of our province, the NDP decided it would suit them more to shut down debate altogether. This meant that neither side could have an open and productive dialogue, nor could the government continue to be held accountable. Debate was over. Democracy at its finest.

To add to this, almost all the work of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices in regard to this commissioner took place behind closed doors. There was no public footage available of anything that happened behind closed doors, nor was there a transcript available in Hansard. The majority of work that went into the candidate selection was not able to be viewed by Albertans. This was until the final day on which the decision-making happened. The public could simply see the strong split that occurred along partisan lines in this traditionally not-too-partisan committee.

Although the majority of Bill 18 is minor in nature and mostly housekeeping, the Election Commissioner is an item in this bill that is worth taking this deeper dive into for the sake of transparency, which we will continue to fight for on behalf of Albertans. In the opposite of this, it was very clear with the NDP's choice to fill the Election Commissioner position that it was made for a partisan reason. Our caucus was fighting to ensure that Albertans could have accountability, trust, and transparency while the NDP was busy fulfilling their plan.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. We are in third reading, so if I could just remind everybody to find their seats, or if you need to speak, please leave the House.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Our caucus was fighting to ensure that Albertans could have accountability, trust, and transparency while the NDP was busy fulfilling their plan. It was clear that the NDP side was more focused on stacking the deck and that the UCP side was focused on upholding our democracy and transparency to Albertans.

Another troubling aspect of the Election Commissioner debacle was that there were, in fact, a number of qualified candidates who did not present a history of concerning behaviour, as was the case with the NDP's chosen candidate. Madam Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer himself said that he was already performing this job and fully capable of continuing to do so, and we on this side of the House have full faith in him. We do not cast doubt on his demonstrated ability to perform his duties. We believe that the motives of the NDP in appointing their chosen candidate were elusive and uncertain. After much debate and opposition I'm glad to see that the government has taken into account at least a portion of our recommendations on adding the Election Commissioner to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, which falls on page 17 of the Bill 18 document.

Further to this, it appears that this change will still not have the effect of disclosing the details of the government's secret deal with the Election Commissioner until after the next election. This is quite characteristic of the NDP. Of course, this goes to show the lack of transparency continuing to veil government. We on this side of the House will continue fighting on behalf of Albertans for transparency and accountability. I'm glad to see that this government is finally heeding the words of the United Conservative Party on this side of the House. However, it is disconcerting that the government is only about to admit their mistakes when held to account by the Official Opposition.

Therefore, I will be voting in support of this bill because, like I said, it does deal pretty much specifically with the Election Commissioner and bringing transparency to the House. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Yes. I was interested in hearing the hon. member as he was dealing with Bill 18 here. I'm really interested to see his analysis of the bill and how often the Election Commissioner is referred to in this bill, so much so that as I began looking at the bill myself, I began seeing just how many times it's in here: page 3, under the Auditor General Act, "the Election Commissioner and the staff of the Office of the Election Commissioner" referenced; page

(3) Part 2 of the Schedule is amended by adding the following after item 7:

8. The Election Commissioner under the Election Act.

Finally, again, I think you referred to page 17 and the Public Service Act. “The Public Service Act is amended by this section.” No. I’m sorry. It was the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, where it’s amended by adding “the Office of the Election Commissioner” in there.

So I just thought I would ask the hon. member if he could explain why it is added in here. You know, why was it missed in the first place, and why was it not addressed by the government when we first began talking about this?

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yeah. It is interesting. You know, I think that quite possibly we wouldn’t even need a Bill 18 at this point if it wasn’t for the selection of the Election Commissioner, or if we did have it, it would be a very, very short document because only three pages don’t mention the Election Commissioner.

Yeah. It is very interesting, to my colleague there, that, you know, when we look at all of these pages where they had to add the Election Commissioner into different acts all through the legislation here, everything from the Election Act – it’s funny they didn’t find some spot in the Consumer Protection Act to throw him in there. He’s definitely under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and then, again, like I said, on page 17, the most important one that we had asked to have amended. Curiously enough, the government voted against the amendment, but then suddenly we find it on page 17 under the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act. It says that he is added under section (2) by adding the following after subclause (iv):

(iv.1) the Office of the Election Commissioner.

Then again under the Public Service Act:

(2) Section (1) is amended

(a) by adding the following after clause (c)(iv):

(iv.1) the Election Commissioner with respect to the Office of the Election Commissioner,

(b) by adding . . . after clause (d)(iv):

(iv.1) the Election Commissioner with respect to the Office of the Election Commissioner.

Thank you for the question. I do agree that it’s very curious that we have a Bill 18 at all considering that – you know, we could have had a very, very short discussion on a three-page document, but here we are on third reading of Bill 18. The opportunity exists again for all members of the opposition and the government to stand up and speak to Bill 18. Maybe one of them could stand up and explain to us why suddenly they found the need to add all of these sections, to add the Election Commissioner into all the other acts in the province. I find it very curious. We simply could’ve got by with them passing a motion that we had on a previous bill when we were dealing with the Election Commissioner, and maybe we wouldn’t have to be here today. We could all be out in the sunshine.

Thank you for the question, Member.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Anybody else wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yeah. It was interesting, of course, listening to the discussion here on how much of this bill actually refers to the Election Commissioner. I know that my colleague here in his previous private-sector employment worked for large companies.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 18? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s a pleasure for me to rise today to speak to Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. There are times in every Legislature where the best laid plans of mice and men sometimes go awry, where printers will sometimes forget a word, where spelling mistakes occur, where we realize that a minor change or something has been forgotten in a piece of legislation, and where at the end of a session we try to put all those things into a bill that just deals with the miscellaneous and minor changes that are sometimes needed for every piece of legislation. You know, this just, I guess, speaks to the humanity of this Legislature, to the reality that we are but human and that we are prone to error and that even in our best efforts sometimes we need to address these small, minor, but nonetheless important changes if we want to remain consistent in the legislation that we have in this great province of Alberta.

Bill 18 does that. Bill 18, for much of it or for portions of it, simply makes minor word changes to a number of different statutes. A bill like Bill 18, as I’ve said, is often needed and should not take a significant amount of time in debate or in discussion in this House. Unfortunately, I think that Bill 18 needs a little bit more thought and a little bit more diligence brought to it simply because it’s not always just simply a minor word change in this bill.

Bill 18 amends a long series of acts; for instance, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act. It amends the Alberta Corporate Tax Act. It amends the Alberta Human Rights Act. If we take a look at page 2 of Bill 18, it says:

3(1) The Alberta Human Rights Act is amended by this section.

(2) Section 5(1) is amended by striking out “commercial unit, self-contained dwelling unit or mobile home site” wherever it occurs and substituting “commercial unit or self-contained dwelling unit.”

You know, that would be an example of a relatively minor change to the act, one that we probably don’t need to dwell on very much.

It talks about An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. It amends that.

It amends the Auditor General Act. On page 3 it says:

(2) Section 1(1)(b) is amended by adding the following after subclause (iii):

(iii.1) the Election Commissioner and the staff of the Office of the Election Commissioner.

That’s one of the first times that we see in this bill a reference to the Election Commissioner, and we’ll talk more about that a little later on.

It talks about the Conflicts of Interest Act. It amends the Consumer Protection Act. It amends the Election Act. It amends the Electronic Transactions Act. It amends the Employment Standards Code. In many of these, they’re just minor references and minor changes, spelling errors, et cetera. As you can see, Bill 18, while it’s primarily about or consistently about correcting minor changes to various bills and acts that had minor errors, there are at times some actually important information or amendments in this bill that need to be discussed a little bit further.

At least one part of Bill 18 is not simply a minor change, Madam Speaker. While we broadly support the changes in Bill 18, we also as the Official Opposition have noticed the need to add the Election Commissioner to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act. Now, this part of the amendment addresses the need to publicly disclose the salary of the Election Commissioner.

Now, we've had a lot of conversation and debate in this House when it comes to democracy and to bringing transparency and openness, and sometimes we've had great success and we've come to agree on both sides of the House about how to move forward. For instance, Madam Speaker, there was a broad amount of agreement when we debated and discussed the concept of having a sunshine list and of openly and transparently publishing the salaries of people on agencies and boards and commissions, people that work within the confines of government, so that we can ensure that these people are being compensated fairly but not overly generously and that we aren't just simply providing someone with a job and a high-paying salary without making sure that they are performing a valuable service for the people of Alberta.

Now, at other times we've had a little less agreement in this House over how to make our democracy function better. I remember standing in this House and being a little upset over the fact that this government had not renewed the Senatorial Selection Act. Now, I understand that there are probably some in this Legislature and some in Canada that would take a look at the Senate and say that the best thing that we could do is to put it out of its misery. Madam Speaker, I would respectfully disagree with that.

I believe that the Senate plays a valuable role in our Canadian Confederation, that there are some realities in this Canadian Confederation that make a Senate actually very important. The fact that a clear majority of the seats in our House of Commons can be dominated by those people that have been elected from Ontario and Quebec can often imbalance this Confederation and the decisions that are coming out of our Parliament. A Senate is important in order to be able to protect the smaller, less populated provinces in this country, where the Senate can be appointed from people that represent their province or their region and have the capacity to be a second body of sober thought when it comes to passing legislation at the federal level.

It was very disappointing to me, Madam Speaker, when a province like Alberta can move so strongly and so forcefully towards trying to improve our Canadian Confederation by having our Senators elected, to then not renew the Senatorial Selection Act. That was very, very disconcerting, the fact that Albertans have for many years had the capacity to vote in a general election to be able to choose the Senators that we would put forward as names to the Prime Minister.

As a matter of fact, the last time we did this was around 2012, in the general election. I believe there were 13 candidates that ran for the senatorial election seat. As a committed democrat I believe that every time we allow our people to have a choice in democracy to be able to choose the people that will represent them, that is a positive thing. I was very strongly disappointed when this government, I believe for the first time in Canadian history, actually took the vote away from their citizens by refusing to renew the Senatorial Selection Act. That's a very, very serious thing that this government has done.

So there's been disagreement. I will gladly stand on this side of the House and I will gladly stand on the side of democracy and I will gladly stand on the side of electing Senators. I realize that the government in its wisdom or lack thereof chose not to support and to renew the Senatorial Selection Act. We would counsel today that if the government would listen a little more closely to its opposition and not just with a knee-jerk reaction dismiss the amendments and the advice brought up by the opposition, we would have better government.

Mr. Speaker, we have brought forward this idea of publicly disclosing the salary of the Election Commissioner. It was first brought up to the government by the United Conservative Party. On May 1 the MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock proposed an amendment. He proposed an amendment that would have required the disclosure of the Election Commissioner's salary.

Needless to say, the government refused to support that amendment. They argued against this amendment. They argued that the opposition was unreasonably focusing on an individual and an officer of the Legislature that we did not support. Now, that was correct to this extent, that as the opposition we believed that there were other candidates for the office of the Election Commissioner that were just as qualified and that had not sued the government of Alberta in the past and that it wasn't all that wise for the government to hire an individual, especially for the first time into a seat like the Election Commissioner, that has actually tried to sue the government and lost.

As the opposition I believe we rightly questioned the creation of this office of the Election Commissioner. We've had many people stand in this Legislature and bring to the attention of the government that the Election Commissioner appears in many aspects to do exactly the same duties as the Chief Electoral Officer, that the Chief Electoral Officer and the Election Commissioner were doing the same job. Why in the name of the taxpayers of Alberta should we create a redundant job?

Of course, the government chose again not to listen. That's their right, and they have the votes to be able to ensure that they can pursue the agenda that they have. But it is also their responsibility to listen to the opposition and to consider the counsel of the opposition. We counselled that perhaps they should reconsider the entire office of the Election Commissioner simply because it was already being done by the Chief Electoral Officer.

Well, as we said, on May 1 we counselled the government that the Election Commissioner's salary should be disclosed publicly, that it should be transparent along with all the other officers that we've already done through previous legislation of this House. It's not an unreasonable amendment. So it was once again frustrating to see that when the opposition actually does its job and does it effectively and does it well that the government does not have the capacity to understand its role and listen and consider and support an amendment that is reasonable and that will actually make a piece of legislation better.

So we find ourselves here today. When the opposition attempts to help the government craft better legislation, this government, rather than doing its job of considering amendments, instead votes them down and then later on puts forward pieces of legislation that actually address the amendments that we brought forward, as is the case here in Bill 18. We see once again that after having rejected the MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock's amendment on May 1 to disclose the Election Commissioner's salary, to be publicly and openly transparent, after having rejected that, this government now is coming back, through Bill 18, saying: you were right, but now we want to take the credit for it. I think that's just about as far as it goes.

You know, we in the opposition were not trying to single out a particular officer when we had questions about the wisdom of hiring a particular individual. Rather, we were trying to ensure that openness and transparency and accountability were being placed before the House regarding an officer of the Legislature.

Madam Speaker, you're back. Welcome.

We are on record that we believe that the Election Commissioner is a redundant office, already being done by the Chief Electoral Officer. But now that we have an Election Commissioner, we believe that they should fall under the same constraints and the same expectations for disclosure of salary as the other legislative officers that this Legislature oversees.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to rise and speak on Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. We're here at third reading. What's interesting about this is that a good amount of the bill is, in my estimation, the way that a statutes amendment act ought to be, and that is housekeeping, but alas it is not, in my estimation, all housekeeping.

In fact, there's certainly a piece of it where, when it comes to the referral to the Election Commissioner, the government actually put time allocation on an earlier bill talking about the same subject matter. This is regrettable, particularly when we're talking about an officer that will have a great deal to do with the next general election and perhaps the next five or 10 or 20 general elections. Who knows? That matters because when these things come up with the independent officers of the Legislature, all of them need to be respected by all sides of the House and to be, when possible, agreed on by all sides of the House, particularly when you're talking about an independent officer who is responsible for the conduct of a fair and impartial election.

If there was ever a place in our democracy, for those that believe in democracy, where the process should have been nonpartisan, with co-operation across the aisle, with everybody signing off on it because it's obvious that it was all sides of the House that had a good and reasonable and respectful debate and came to a consensus, if there was ever a place – I appreciate the way that we settle things in this House when we disagree. It's a nice, nonviolent way called voting. That's the beauty of democracy. You settle your differences in a nonviolent way that you've agreed to in voting. So that's a beautiful thing.

The problem is that in this case there was an element of democracy, in my view, that wasn't respected. Democracy allows for disagreement. You could say that just by virtue of the fact that the largest group of people in this House that's not in government is called the Official Opposition. Just the word "opposition" indicates that disagreement isn't only allowed, but you could say, in some cases, that it's encouraged because it's the opposition's job to hold the government to account. It's an important part of democracy on behalf of the citizens to have a check and balance built into the system.

One of the rare examples where, in my view, that's not the case, where consensus should be the call of the day is when you're appointing an independent officer with responsibility over elections. Now, there's a place where you really ought to look for a way to build consensus across the aisle on all sides of the House. Clearly, this government didn't find that necessary, which is unfortunate.

I've been on committees with members of the government, and I can tell you that they actually know how to do that. On the Members' Services Committee I would say that when we disagree, with a little bit of enthusiasm and a little bit of emotion and a little bit of rancour, it's the rare event. The common event is when members on all sides of the House from all parties have a nice, respectful discussion and come to consensus, an agreement based on an agreed-upon set of facts and some common goals. We work together, and we try to think of what's best for Albertans. So we know how to do that. I know that the government side knows how to do that, and I compliment them for when they have done that.

Unfortunately, on one of the very most important times when they ought to have done that, they chose not to. It's actually disappointing. What's actually sad about it, Madam Speaker, is that the person hired for this very important job is, in my view, the person that's unfairly paying the price for the government's unwillingness to look for consensus, to work with the opposition, work together to find someone to control the conduct of the next election. If ever there was a place where consensus should have been the order of the day, this was it. Yet the government chose to go the opposite path. This is an issue.

Of course, because of that, here's the other thing about it, too. Independent members of the Legislature are pretty senior positions. You could in many ways say that they work fairly directly for the public. If not, then they certainly control the conduct of members of this House, and members of this House definitely work directly for the public. They're senior enough roles that the public has the right to have an idea of key details like how much money those officers of the Legislature make. The Official Opposition, of course, pushed, you know, and through an amendment asked the government to disclose that, asked a number of different ways.

The government at one point claimed that this position was on the sunshine list and then had to come back. It was the Government House Leader that had to come back and admit that they were wrong and that they gave incorrect information to the House. Madam Speaker, that can happen. That can happen. I'm not going to accuse the Government House Leader of doing anything untoward. We all make mistakes. Sometimes we don't remember the details a hundred per cent accurately, and I'm not going to pick on him for that. In fairness to him, he did come back and admit that he was wrong.

Nonetheless, that wasn't enough to spur the government to do the right thing and say: yeah, we'll disclose the salary of the person in charge of the next election, you know, the person that's just become one of the people in charge of the next election. The right thing to do would be to say: no; we're going to actually disclose that before the next election because the public has a right to know before the next election. It seems pretty normal, it seems like a natural thing to do, it seems like it's consistent with the democratic system that we all depend upon for our positions here, yet the government has gone exactly the other way.

As a result, one of the things the government has had to do to correct that mistake is to add it into a piece of legislation. Instead of putting it in a free-standing piece of legislation, which in this case would have been the right thing to do, they tucked it in the middle of a statutes amendment act. Madam Speaker, I don't know what the government would have to hide, but it would be reasonable for one to ask and it would be reasonable for Albertans to wonder – and I'm sure many of them do – what the government has to hide by trying to sneak this piece into a statutes amendment act. Even on this side of the House – and we are called the opposition – we agree that the vast majority of this bill is housekeeping, things that need to be done in some cases because they're matching up with changes in federal legislation, some technical things, a few spelling errors, a few grammatical errors that can make a difference if somebody challenges legislation. That's what, in my view, statutes amendment acts are for, cleaning up these anomalies.

Yet there's this unfortunate piece hanging out. It's unfortunate that the new Election Commissioner is paying a price for the government's unwillingness to be transparent with Albertans about how the elections are being run. Here we are, stuck with a piece in a statutes amendment act that should never have been put into a statutes amendment act. Madam Speaker, I will say that it's a shame. The government could have done better, the government should have done better, and for some reason, that Albertans have the right to ask about, the government chose not to do better.

Madam Speaker, that's what I have to say about that, so at this point I will cease my remarks. But just before I do, I will move to adjourn debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1 Energy Diversification Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Welcome back. It's déjà vu all over again. I mean about last night.

Anyway, on behalf of the Minister of Energy I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act.

Madam Speaker, I am excited about this bill. I'm excited and proud to be part of a government that is finally moving on diversifying Alberta's economy and helping to diversify Alberta's energy sector. Albertans deserve to get the best possible value for our resources, the resources that every Albertan owns, and that means adding more value here at home. Now, over the last 20 years, you know, people in my circle, which is made up of a lot of different demographics and a lot of different professions, have always believed that we should be upgrading and refining our bitumen right here and not shipping it to Houston, getting low value for it and then buying it back, again at a discount. We simply took this cue from the B.C. forest industry, which used to do the exact same thing with its raw forest products. It nearly ruined them. It nearly ruined that industry. The money is in the refined product, not in the raw resource, as we know in both cases.

Now, I fail to understand why there hasn't been any real effort from the previous governments to move on upgrading. I mean, the opposition and the previous governments do tout themselves as the big thinkers, the economic geniuses, if you will, but they weren't able to see the value in this. I don't know the precise answer on why they didn't want to move on this. I mean, pretty much everything after Premier Lougheed ceased.

I do have an anecdote that might help explain this a bit. I talked to a very senior, very well-known financial investment individual in Calgary about bitumen upgrading, including about the PDP, the first round, and this bill as well. You know, they're onboard with the movement on PDP and this bill and very enthusiastic about the government's direction on this. My simple question to them – maybe it's not simple to answer, but it's a simple question – was: why didn't this happen 20 or 30 years ago? Their answer was: we were too busy stuffing our pockets full of money. Now, I know that's a bit of a flippant response, but there is some truth in that response. It demonstrates how the previous governments viewed wealth in business, that it must be concentrated in the hands of a few to be effective. They would just wait out the busts and wait for the next boom. Wealthy people and politicians can afford to ride a boom-and-bust roller coaster economy, but ordinary Albertans cannot.

Now, I know upgrading is expensive. It takes collaboration with many in the industry, and government needs to be onboard as well. The previous government and, it would seem, the UCP were not willing to get out of that comfort zone, not willing to concede that the unwillingness to change, to diversify, to upgrade was a problem. And it's a shame. We should have been getting fair value for our resources many years ago, we should have been diversifying our economy many years ago, we should have had more than one customer many years ago, and we should have been off the resource roller coaster many years ago. Well, we're trying to get there.

But that's okay, Madam Speaker, as we now have a government that understands that the world is changing, that you cannot run a business with one customer, and that we have foresight in regard to the energy industry, both in petrochemicals and in renewables. The petrochemicals diversification program was created as part of the Alberta government's continued action to create jobs, attract investment, and diversify Alberta's economy. It encourages companies to invest in the development of new Alberta petrochemical facilities by providing incentives through royalty credits.

In February 2016 the first round of the program was announced, targeting methane and propane upgrading. After a competitive application process two projects were approved to receive up to $500 million in royalty credits. These projects will capitalize on the abundance of propane available in the province to establish a propane-based value chain in Alberta, the first of its kind in Canada.

In December 2017 Inter Pipeline, based in Calgary, announced that it had approved the construction of the company's proposed $3.6 billion heartland petrochemical complex. One of the facilities in this complex, the propane dehydrogenation plant, was approved to receive up to $200 million in royalty credits under the PDP. The other successful project, Canada Kuwait Petrochemical Corporation's propane dehydrogenation and polypropylene complex, is a $4 billion project that is expected to make a final investment decision in early 2019.

This bill is about round 2, Madam Speaker, and is part of the Alberta government's response to the report from the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee. Now, the second round of the program is moving forward through this bill, with around $500 million available in royalty credits. This new program is similar to the first, with one major change, broadening the scope of the program to include ethane in addition to methane and propane. The PDP and feedstock infrastructure programs are complementary in that investments in new ethane processing will likely require investments in new ethane supply in Alberta. This is because Alberta's ethane supply and demand are currently balanced. This change is designed to expand Alberta's petrochemical sector, to increase the supply of natural gas liquids to encourage investment in additional petrochemical processing, and ultimately to diversify Alberta's energy sector.

Now, Alberta's natural gas industry competes with a flourishing, export-oriented industry in the United States. Alberta can get its gas to market through petrochemical processing to create value-added products for export. This comes with new investment and new jobs in Alberta. Demand for petrochemical products continues to grow globally. There is intense world-wide competition to attract petrochemical investment because of the large economic benefits. Governments around the world, including along the Gulf coast of the United States, routinely offer aggressive incentives to companies considering new projects in their jurisdictions. Other Canadian provinces, including Ontario and Quebec, also offer generous incentives to attract these large investments and new jobs. In order for Alberta to remain competitive on the global stage, the petrochemicals diversification project is an important step forward.

Madam Speaker, according to the Chemistry Industry Association of Canada Alberta's chemical sector employs over 7,500 people directly, with an average salary of over $90,000 per year. Exports are valued at $8.2 billion, the largest exporting sector in manufacturing industries in Alberta. The new round of the PDP is expected to see similar results to the first round, which had applications worth a collective $20 billion in private investment. The construction of the new petrochemical manufacturing facilities will create thousands of construction jobs and hundreds in operations later. Processing Alberta's natural gas into a wide variety of in-demand consumer products substantially increases the value of the raw resources and allows Alberta to get the most out of it, whether through investment capital, jobs, increased economic activity, or exports.

Now, Madam Speaker, this is about investing in good jobs and a stable economy by supporting diversification in our energy sector. As the economy gets stronger, it's time to talk about how we secure the recovery for the long term and build an economy to last, one where no Albertan is left behind. The Energy Diversification Act builds upon Alberta's traditional strengths. It moves us away from the boom-and-bust policies of the past without sacrificing our leadership in oil and gas.

Madam Speaker, the benefits are clear. By being able to take diluent out of some shipments of bitumen, we could move about 30 per cent more oil through existing pipelines and have access to refineries that right now cannot take our bitumen product. This will mean lower costs and greater value, so ultimately that's more revenue for the industry and more royalties for the people of Alberta. One study has shown that partial upgrading could add up to $22 billion a year to our GDP over 20 years.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I will say that upgrading our raw resources into higher value products is at the heart of Alberta's energy diversification vision. To see more private investment in petrochemical manufacturing, we need to ensure that companies have access to the natural gas liquids that they need. This program complements the PDP by investing in ethane supplies.

Alberta currently has a surplus of ethane, that is not being recovered. By encouraging investment in facilities that extract these components of natural gas, we'd go a long way in supporting the creation of new, world-scale manufacturing plants. Madam Speaker, right now we are closer than ever to getting fair value for our resources and stabilizing and growing our energy sector.

With that said, Madam Speaker, I will urge everyone to vote yes on Bill 1 and continue to help move our energy sector forward. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act: if I might just read the preamble here because this is very interesting to note.

Whereas Alberta's bitumen production can realize better overall value for upstream producers through large-scale partial upgrading technologies.

And then it goes:

Whereas Alberta will benefit from a stronger and more diversified economy if it takes full advantage of the opportunities its hydrocarbon feedstock provides to create value-added processing and the production of secondary and tertiary non-energy products.

Here's the interesting one here, Madam Speaker.

Whereas the Government has received recommendations from the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee to diversify Alberta's energy sector by expanding the downstream oil and gas sector using a variety of financial tools, including royalty credits, grants, loan guarantees and equity investments.

See, that's the interesting part of this whole preamble to Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act. It's a government saying: we'll do whatever it takes; we'll provide all sorts of funding through all sorts of creative ways.

But why, Madam Speaker? It is about confidence. What is the definition of confidence? The feeling or belief that someone can rely on someone or something. That's interesting because when a new government goes in and says, "We're going to do a royalty review," you know, in my mind I wonder if they could not have read the other two royalty reviews that were written just a couple of years previous and a few more years previous to that. But they chose to do a royalty review that took eight months.

Not only that, Madam Speaker. When the oil companies were having some discussions but for the most part sitting back because they were waiting to see what this government thought, do you know what the petrochemical industries were looking at? They were looking at and reviewing a government, and they had photographs of everybody, photographs of all these people who are now in command, in charge, with signs that said: "Stop the oil sands. Stop the tar sands. No more pipelines." They realized that these were the people that were doing a royalty review of their industry. When we talk about confidence, there's not much more that kills confidence than knowing what the motivations of a government are.

Madam Speaker, if hindsight is one hundred per cent, we saw it when every international company that stood up with this government and said, "Hey, this is a great deal," said whatever the government wanted to, and then they left. That goes to show you how much confidence they had in this government. It is a shame.

Now we see a pipeline that had a private company funding it and ready to build that thing and were trying to. When this government here in Alberta doesn't really provide much support for them, when supposed allies in British Columbia in these municipalities are trying to express their concerns that, "No, we don't want this pipeline," and this government doesn't do anything about that and our federal government doesn't do anything about that and says some weak words, those things kill confidence.

It's interesting to see where this Bill 1 – you guys must have seen this coming, that we would have to do things like invest in pipelines and stuff, because you knew that you killed the confidence in everyone and in every industry, every corporation that would invest here and employ hundreds if not thousands of people in Alberta. You killed the confidence of so many. You know what? When those decisions are made, you should have surely known what was going to happen and come, and there will still be more announcements about the negativity that has happened because you killed the confidence of so many industries.

Certainly, when we look at Shell's sale to CNRL, what we will find is that Shell had a higher ratio of employees per barrel. A friend of mine who works for another oil company, when Shell sold to CNRL, said: "You watch. In a year or so, give or take, two years, they will start to cull the employees that they hired from Shell." I said, "How do you know that?" He said: "Well, you can look at the number of employees they have and divide it by the barrels per day that they produce. You can go on here, and you look at Shell and see what their ratio is." And then he said, "Look at CNRL's ratio."

It was a far lower ratio of number of employees per barrel. He worked for another oil company, but that's his job, to evaluate and assess. He said that within X amount of time we can anticipate, and he ballparked it at 1,000 jobs that CNRL will slowly let go.

Talking to my friends because – they don't publicize this, but CNRL is up in my neck of the woods, up in Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I've many friends that work for them, and they've all started to sweat bullets now because – guess what? – they've been receiving some notices. They've been receiving some underlying commentary about their positions, and my friends have all now started to apply elsewhere because they are unsure of their job security. It's disappointing that they have no confidence because there's a chance that they might get pushed out. That is disappointing, Madam Speaker.

The Energy Diversification Act, in killing confidence in our industry – you know, it is great. Certainly, our previous government invested, maybe not necessarily because they wanted to, but it was about providing that confidence in industry. They helped invest in that North West refinery, that the Member for Calgary-Klein forgot to mention. So there have been previous investments in our refineries, in our objectives of what you would call diversification of our oil industry, petrochemical industry. I just look at it as just trying to provide a better quality product and something that we can make more money on. Certainly, if we can refine it – you're right – we can ship it with much less diluents and whatnot and hopefully make more money and use what limited pipelines we have more efficiently. There's another word that would elude you guys, "efficiency." But I digress.

You know, energy diversification: there are some other industries that we could look at, and I wonder if the hon. member in charge of diversification and job creation has looked at groups like the plastics industry to use these oil products that we have, these petrochemical products, to see if we can't attract those companies. Certainly, when we look at the medical industry, biomedical products are very lucrative. There's a lot of money spent on that, and plastics are a key part of that because a lot of plastics are resilient, depending on how they make them, against certain bacteria and other contaminants. There's always that opportunity for us to produce things that we create from our oil.

Madam Speaker, it is so important that we diversify, but at the same time as we're looking at refining things, as per this bill, again it's about – I'm curious if you guys knew that this pipeline was going to fail, because you have these clauses in here that demonstrate that you need all the openings you can to invest money or provide some grants or any incentive that you possibly can in order to ensure that you don't completely kill our industry. You know, it's hopeful that you guys have done this one-eighty, from holding picket signs that said, "Down with oil, down with the tar sands, destroy Fort McMurray" to "Hey, we love this community, and we love our product, and we want to get that shipped out." I love that one-eighty that you guys did there.

It's lovely to see, and I look forward to it in the by-election coming up. By the way, when are you going to call that anyways? It is good timing for that by-election, too, I might add, because, like I said, CNRL is about to make some announcements. Actually, they don't make big announcements. They just do it, and it's disappointing. I can't wait to see you guys all door-knocking up there. It'll be a wonderful, wonderful experience for everybody here.

Madam Speaker, as I look at the time here – with that, I'll sit down. I see Calgary-Elbow wants to say a thing or two, so I'll leave it to him.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I realize that we're running a little short on time this morning. We're trying to get through a few things, but I would like to offer my comments on Bill 1 at third while I have an opportunity. We have had a lot of interesting perspectives on this topic over the last couple of months of debate. I've learned a lot. I haven't agreed with everything the government has done. I certainly haven't agreed with everything on the opposition side. You know, we have had some brief discussions amongst ourselves in caucus and with our research team, and we've gone back and forth on exactly what our perspective is on this bill.

One interpretation is that it will create a boon of oil and gas jobs in Calgary, where those management decisions are made, and in Edmonton and rural Alberta, where the petroleum is extracted and processed.

But there's another interpretation, and that is that the bill grants the minister remarkable, extraordinary, and really arbitrary power to hand out royalty credits and grants, as the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo talked about previously on the preamble of the bill, talking about those royalty credits and grants and other financial tools that are made available to this government and this minister without, I believe, appropriate transparency or accountability. It's very clear that the minister has said that she prefers the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission, APMC, frankly, to work in secret from most Albertans. I don't understand how keeping that knowledge from Albertans really strengthens team Alberta or our economy.

Now, the Alberta Party supports the general principle of energy diversification, but we certainly have questions and, more than that, concerns about this bill and the NDP's approach. I would say that Bill 1 really is a story about missed opportunity. We understand that it's prudent to build on the energy resources we have, but we know that we can do better in the face of the undeniable global shift towards new energy and new transportation technologies.

Now, one of the most important aspects of this bill, of course, is that it comes out of Alberta's Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, or EDAC. Now, EDAC acknowledges that oil and gas may not always be primary to the global economy and that there is a transition coming, so I'm going to spend a bit of time just reviewing some of the key recommendations that EDAC made that didn't find their way into this bill. When we really started digging into those recommendations, much as the government has touted the fact that this bill is an outcome of their work, there's a lot that EDAC suggested and recommended that never showed up in the bill. That's a grave concern to us.

I'm going to start on their executive summary on page 6. They report that there are six signs the global energy system is transforming.

1. The sheer volume of clean energy technologies being developed and adopted.
2. Rapidly declining cost curves for the new technologies, which suggest adoption will begin to accelerate even faster over the next decade or two.
3. The evolution of the power grid, which will be needed to handle the [additional] demands of an electric economy.
4. New business models that add new value for consumers and change the way we live and work.
5. Changes in policy at the global, national and provincial level in response to the climate change challenge.
6. Acceptance by Canadians that the global energy system is changing, with continued support for energy development while also favouring policies that reduce greenhouse gas . . . emissions and speed up the energy transition.

Now, this bill completely ignores recommendation 2.1, that “the Government of Alberta transform Invest Alberta [which is an agency] into a world-class organization that has the capacity to secure multibillion-dollar projects when competing with the best investment agencies in the world.” It sounds like a winner when it comes to making commitments to new energy. Certainly, that would have been handy when the feds successfully negotiated for the Trans Mountain pipeline. Really, what that speaks to is the fact that there’s a tremendous amount of capital available for energy projects, both traditional energy and new energy, and Alberta is doing a very poor job. In fact, we’re seeing a significant flight of capital away from the province of Alberta and away from Canada, which is a great, great concern to our province in particular and to our country as a whole.

Now, recommendation 2.3:

EDAC recommends the agency have access to a dedicated, robust Diversification Fund that would provide clarity to the business community on the kind of support available from the province [that] would enable the agency to effectively execute on its investment attraction strategy.

Now, that sounds remarkably like the Alberta Party’s shadow budget pledge to spend $100 million more in economic diversification and trade investments than the government proposed themselves in this most recent budget; again, a story of missed opportunity.

Recommendation 2.4 explicitly empowers a different body than the APMC, which this government and this minister have also ignored. The recommendation is that the agency be structured similarly to the [APMC.] [It] should take strategic direction from government. To promote transparency, efficiency and a long-term view, the agency should ultimately be structured at arms-length, with a mandate, in alignment with government policy, to negotiate and recommend deals for final government approval. A governing board with clearly defined financial authorities should provide oversight.

That would minimize the risk of political interference, which is a significant risk.

We also feel we can do better by following the committee’s observation that it is inefficient to task experts and professionals in petroleum with figuring out how to do energy beyond petroleum.

EDAC then goes on to make several recommendations concerning how the government should structure its investment, regulatory and resource management, and transparency policies – there’s that word “transparency” again – and mechanisms, all of which are ignored in this bill. We absolutely could do better if this government had chosen not to ignore EDAC’s recommendations.

Their recommendation 4, also missing, is particularly telling since it would have the greatest potential to actually create new sustainable jobs.

EDAC supports the concept of establishing new infrastructure and energy corridors around existing or likely sites for downstream energy clusters – in particular, Alberta’s Industrial Heartland, Joffre, Grande Prairie and Medicine Hat.

We can do better by supporting new infrastructure that sustains investment and growth, not just infrastructure that expands what we’re already doing.

Recommendation 5.1. “EDAC recommends the Government of Alberta ensure the hydrocarbon value chain remains a strategic priority within the innovation funding [system].” That whole hydrocarbon value chain, even in an evolving world and an evolving energy economy, will continue to drive value for the province of Alberta for the core products that we produce. So it’s not just us recommending that the government develop an innovation funding strategy and that ministers start working together instead of continuing in silos. We’ve talked a lot in many different contexts about knitting together different government departments.

We agree with EDAC that a modern innovation ecosystem needs to be supported and expanded with a long-term innovation fund that is “independent from political and budgetary cycles,” which is stated in recommendation 5.5. That, I think, is probably the single biggest issue for this government and, frankly, all governments in this province to grapple with; that is, making agencies and decisions that are going to be independent from those political and budgetary cycles and from the winds of political whim.

Recommendation 5.2 from EDAC highlights the skills gap this government has not been able to address despite what we’ve seen here in Bill 1 and also in Bill 2. EDAC says:

Successfully bringing technologies from conception to commercialization requires a unique skill set, pairing technical talent with financial skills and business acumen. EDAC recommends the Government of Alberta optimize its system and programs to support both the technical and business development aspects of innovation.

That feels a little bit like the challenge that we had in attracting Amazon in terms of not just having the business acumen but also the technical skills. Now, in the petroleum industry we certainly do have the technical skills. I’ve talked about pairing those things up. Again, there’s really very little in this bill that addresses that directly. Supporting the intersection of technical and business skills does seem like something local grassroots collaborations like EvolveU can address. We can do better for Albertans if this government would agree to work with partners instead of taking years and years to roll out their own solutions.

Finally, recommendation 5.3 highlights the regulatory barrier to actually getting innovation into the field. Again, this bill fails to address that challenge. EDAC recommended “that the Government of Alberta create an enabling mechanism within the regulatory framework to provide the necessary flexibility and speed to properly test technologies at scale in the field.” Now, some of those sorts of things are happening. We see the work going on at the Shepard power plant outside of Calgary to repurpose carbon. Those are the kinds of things that I would have hoped to see in this bill but that aren’t there.

Recommendation 7.2 is missing.

EDAC recommends the Alberta government continue to lead on advocacy for equitable rail services that address the needs of downstream . . . industry players in regards to access, cost and reliability, with active participation by downstream energy industry representatives.

There’s a lack, surprisingly enough, of proper GBA plus consideration informing this bill, and it ignores completely recommendations 6.1 through 6.4, which include recommendations about explicitly including indigenous communities in energy diversification and also working with the federal government. This has become both a challenge and an opportunity with the Trans Mountain pipeline.

So this government’s own metrics of implementing EDAC recommendations: the bill fails on almost every count. We’ve tried through our amendments in committee to amend the bill so that it aligns more closely with those EDAC recommendations, and even with the limited and short-sighted scope this government has chosen, regrettably, the government has chosen to ignore most of that EDAC report and most of the opportunities for the opposition side and the Alberta Party in particular to improve the bill. It is with great regret that I see this bill as such a tremendous missed opportunity that we simply cannot support it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2 Growth and Diversification Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act.

Our government has proven repeatedly that we deliver legislation that invests in people, diversification, and an economy that works for all Albertans. We're committed to delivering fair legislation that makes life better for all Albertans. The proposed Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act, will continue our tradition of achieving these goals. This bill will boost education and training for the high-tech sector, add new supports for digital media, and bolster two successful tax credit programs to support an economy built to last. Our government has worked hard to spur innovation and drive job growth, and this bill will help continue our trend of creating an economy that is diversified and ready for future success.

The Growth and Diversification Act includes a number of proposed changes that directly benefit the postsecondary system in our province in a very exciting and positive way. This legislation includes supports for 3,000 new tech spaces in Alberta's postsecondary system, increasing educational access for learners across the province. Two hundred of these spaces will be in place during the upcoming 2018-2019 academic year once this bill passes the Legislature and receives royal assent. An additional 550 spaces will be made available in the 2019-2020 academic year, with 750 spaces being added each of the following three years. By 2022-23 all 3,000 new tech spaces will be available to students in Alberta. This bolsters our existing strong programming in the tech sector currently being offered by our province's excellent postsecondary institutions.

We know that our postsecondary graduates are highly skilled and coveted by businesses across North America, and we've heard from industries across the province that access to a highly skilled talent pool is one of the determining factors that high-tech firms consider before making major investment decisions. Keeping pace with the demands of a new economic reality requires additional tech spaces. This bill is a win for students, a win for industry, and a win for our province's economic future.

The Growth and Diversification Act will take unprecedented steps to increase our existing talent pool so that our province can support local start-ups and establish tech firms. To ensure that our graduates are entering the workforce as quickly as possible and meeting industry demands for today's skilled workforce, the initial 200 spaces may be supplemented by the delivery of a number of short-term skill development opportunities. If implemented, these skill development programs could help Albertans, particularly those with existing credentials, acquire the tech-related skills they need in the transition to permanent employment.

Short-term skills programs developed in collaboration with industry partners are a way of engaging the many young Albertans who are unemployed or underemployed and teaching them the in-demand skills needed to succeed in careers across the province. These short-term skills programs will help Albertans enter the job market quickly so that they can participate in Alberta's growing economy. Additional programs could be developed in areas such as information and communication technologies, clean and renewable technology, artificial intelligence, and quantum computing.

In addition to increasing access to tech programming, we will also be adding supports to ensure that education remains affordable. This legislation will create $7 million in new scholarships over the next five years to encourage young Albertans to join the high-tech workforce that will sustain our province's economy now and in the future. Many of these spaces will include a work experience component to help Albertans train in industry-relevant positions and acquire the skills needed for Alberta's tech sector. The government of Alberta will be working with local tech companies to ensure these placements happen and that Alberta industry builds the jobs for Albertans.

In collaboration with our crossministry partners, including Indigenous Relations, Status of Women, Community and Social Services, we will work to ensure underrepresented groups have access to exciting future-focused training. A portion of these new scholarships will focus specifically on women interested in entering tech-related training programs. As with the 3,000 additional spaces, the scholarships will roll out over a five-year period starting next year.

To help guide the development of these additional tech spaces, we will develop a talent advisory council on technology, or TACT. TACT is an innovative initiative that brings together the smartest minds from Alberta's tech industry and our postsecondary system. Together government, industry, and our postsecondary system will work hand in hand to create growth in the tech sector and to ensure that Albertans are highly skilled and adaptive to the rapidly evolving tech-driven economy. An open and transparent recruitment process will be used to seek interested Albertans as members of TACT. We will work with our partner ministries to select knowledgeable representatives from the tech industry, labour organizations, and academia who are committed to helping our economy diversify and grow. TACT will also include student representation and representatives from organized labour. TACT members will play a key role in ensuring that our tech-related skills and training meet the needs of students, industry, and our communities and remain relevant now and as the industry grows. We're hoping to have TACT members selected by this summer.

In addition to the postsecondary implications, this bill will also create a new interactive digital media tax credit to encourage the growth of the digital media industry, a sector which has the potential for substantial growth in our province and could grow to accommodate many Alberta-based jobs for tech graduates. By supporting our interactive digital media sector, we can ensure that talented Albertans can remain in their home province and don't have to move to less desirable places like Ontario or B.C. to participate in the tech economy.

Our government will be able to bolster two successful tax credit programs that currently support innovation, diversification, and job creation in Alberta by enacting Bill 2. The Alberta investment tax credit program supports up to $100 million in investment in new and growing small businesses each year. This tax credit gives an additional 5 per cent for people who invest in companies where the majority of the board of directors, including the CEO, are members of underrepresented groups. Continued support for the capital investment tax credit program will keep Alberta competitive in attracting and retaining investments while creating jobs for tech graduates. The capital investment tax credit program has already stimulated more than a billion dollars in capital projects for manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure and could stimulate considerable growth in the tech sector. Combined these tax credits spur investment in new services, new products, and new capital projects and bring increased opportunities for economic and employment growth.

The Growth and Diversification Act will also see Alberta expand in our burgeoning unmanned aerial systems sector. Unmanned aerial technologies have economic applications in a number of sectors important to our province, including oil and gas, agriculture, resource management, wildlife tracking, transportation systems, and emergency response processes. This initiative would position Alberta as an attractive investment location and create new jobs in the sector so that Alberta graduates can be employed in Alberta.

Our government knows that investment is the key to economic growth and diversification. This includes investment in businesses and in the people in our workforce. This proposed bill continues our government's commitment to increasing economic diversification, to supporting employers and entrepreneurs in creating sustained job growth, and to improving access to high-tech training opportunities in Alberta. With the Growth and Diversification Act we will create a province with a vibrant tech sector, where Alberta-based firms can take advantage of the highly skilled graduates coming out of our postsecondary system. We've heard from industry that there is a need for tech-trained talent in this province. The initiatives in the Growth and Diversification Act create the learning and training atmosphere needed to fill industry's talent gap with talented graduates from our postsecondary system so that Albertans will not need to leave their home province.

The many measures in the Growth and Diversification Act will ensure that Alberta's economy continues to grow for many years to come. I encourage all members of this House to support Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act, today again. This is an opportunity for us to talk about diversification, a topic that comes up not only in this House but across this province. We've talked before about statistics and how to tell the truth with statistics and how to bend and how to lie with statistics, and we also hear, I think, rhetorical comments of up, up, up in this House as well.

But we've also talked in the past, Madam Speaker, about the fact that this province actually has diversified significantly over the last 20 to 30 years – in fact, we've moved from about 37 per cent of our economy being in the oil and gas sector to only 25 per cent – the fact, if you exclude that 25 per cent of oil and gas energy sector activity, that we're still the third-largest economy in Canada, ahead of British Columbia in the most recent statistics we have. We are a diversified province, and a lot of that has been done on the strength of what we know as the Alberta advantage – the power of entrepreneurial spirit which this province is renowned for, the power of the prairie work ethic, which we are so proud of, and the pioneering spirit which has driven the province since it was first formed – in fact, preceded by the spirit of our First Nations people.

"How do we diversify?," I think, is the question here. Do we diversify by micromanaging and trying to incentivize and trying to pick winners and losers and trying to throw carrots at people or, as I've said before, throw candy back at people we've stolen the meat and potatoes from, putting a Band-Aid on the critical illness, and so many other visions that we can look at, Madam Speaker?

Do we do it by shrinking other industries so that that pie chart looks better, so that we can say, "Oh, look at that. It's increased in the size of our total economy. We've diversified. Isn't it great?" as we shrink that pie, which is the Alberta economy?

Do we chase away investment? Have we so damaged our economic fundamentals that we're now becoming famous not for the Alberta advantage but some of those disadvantages which are driven by policy, ideology, and a regulatory framework which is actually detrimental to a broad-based diversification? Madam Speaker, there is nothing better than broad-based diversification.

Are we killing the entrepreneurial class? Is this government failing to recognize that for people to take risks, there need to be rewards and there needs to be a balance between those risks and rewards because those risks that are taken do not come with a guarantee of reward? They come with a hope and a vision and a drive and an entrepreneurial spirit, which, on a good day, with great luck and hard work and great ideas and good products sometimes yield a reward.

When those rewards are earned, where do they end up? Do they end up back in the economy? Do they end with the staff? Do they end up with those investors, or do they end up with a deeper hand in their pockets from a government which believes in bigger government and taking all that money and spending it, oh, so wisely as they write their transcripts with red ink? Maybe they write their eulogy with red ink. It would be so fitting, Madam Speaker.

Do they, in doing so, decimate the venture capital ecosystem for the 1 per cent that is disparaged almost daily in this House, Madam Speaker, who actually make up much of that class? It's not 1 per cent; it's probably 20 per cent of people that say: "You know, I think that's a great idea. I'm going to invest with you. I like your idea. I like your plan. I think that's a fair risk. I'm going to put money into your venture. It's outside of my core business. Maybe I made my money in oil and gas. Maybe I made my money in another sector, but you know what? I like to diversify my portfolio, too, so I'd like to give you some money to develop something that is completely out of my sector, whether that's something in the hospitality industry, the tourism sector, technology, agriculture, forestry, renewables, the energy sector."

Have we decimated that ecosystem, which is not driven by government? It's driven by the entrepreneurial spirit which is so renowned, which we, once upon a time, were renowned for in this province as part of that broader Alberta advantage, that I sadly say is at great risk in this province today, Madam Speaker.

Are we talking to people about the social licence and what that's going to earn us in terms of attracting investors here? I reflect back and this argument and this discussion relate back to Bill 1 and Bill 2. What is the signal we are sending to the world from Alberta, Madam Speaker? It frightens me as not only a born-and-raised Albertan but somebody who's spent a lot of time in the global scene.

I'm always proud when I'm around the country and around the world here, whether I'm in Hong Kong or Singapore or Beijing or Guangzhou or Shanghai or Jakarta, talking to people there about how proud we are to have this province, that has always stood head and shoulders above almost every jurisdiction in North America to attract the investment, to attract people not just to the bounty of resources we have in this province, Madam Speaker, but to the spirit we have in this province, the can-do spirit that we have been renowned for under the Alberta advantage, that has allowed us to attract that investment not with incentives, not with candy, but with a solid plate of Alberta-grown beef and Alberta-grown potatoes and probably some vegetables and legumes that we grow proudly in this province as well. That is the Alberta that we have been able to sell across this country, across North America, and around the world. That is the message that investors are looking for, not how many points we are ahead of somebody else and the race to the bottom of incentives.

Madam Speaker, the minister of economic development said that we were the first government – and I'm paraphrasing here: thanks to us, we now have levelled the playing field. Well, actually, it's quite ironic because the playing field was not level before. It was in our advantage. We actually were at the high end of that playing field – the high end of that playing field – that allowed us, without incentives, to go to the world and say, "You need to invest in Alberta." Not "We want you to invest in Alberta"; "You need to."

Madam Speaker, I see that in our future again. I see a time when Alberta can go around the globe. First, around North America we need to be the most business- and investor-friendly jurisdiction in North America, full stop, and we will achieve that. In doing that, it will give us the strength and the fundamental economics we need, which this government has destroyed, to allow us to go around North America first and tell people that we are the best jurisdiction for them to invest in, for them to build a business in, for them to create jobs and wealth in.

That will allow us to dig ourselves out of that $96 billion hole that this government is digging for us. We will not tax our way out of that debt, Madam Speaker. We need to grow our way out of that debt, and the only way to do that is through improving the fundamental economics of this great province to ensure that we deliver competitiveness, regulatory competitiveness, an ideology where people go: "Those people are the kind of people I would like to do business with. That province has a bounty of resources which are so attractive to the world, whether that's energy, oil and gas, forestry, agriculture, tourism." We need to have an open-door policy to bring people from around the world to spend their money here, to buy our exports but to invest here as well.

Madam Speaker, I've looked at some recent articles. We're seeing that the investment market is diversifying. They're diversifying. They're diversifying away from Alberta and Canada, $40 billion of investment from fund managers now moved out of this country, diversified away from Alberta and Canada, a net loss of close to $40 billion of foreign direct investment.

We're seeing more today. ConocoPhillips is preparing to sell their stake in Cenovus. They became the largest shareholder. That's not talked about here. We talked about: oh, isn't it great; a Canadian company bought it. No. Actually, in that transaction ConocoPhillips became the largest single shareholder of Cenovus. Now they are divesting themselves of that interest, $2.7 billion, and they're willing to take a discount on that because of what? It's a distressed asset because of the two words that I never thought in my lifetime I would hear used in the same sentence, "political risk" and "Alberta." Shame on us that anybody has been able to use those – and I hear it. I hear it across this province, I hear it in Calgary-Fish Creek, I hear it on the streets of Calgary, and I hear it in backyard barbecues. I hear "Alberta" and "political risk" in the same sentence.

I hear: "What am I going to do? Where are we going in this province?" I hear, sadly: "Where will I move if we continue on this path? Where will I move?" I hear that from born-and-raised Calgarians that I've known since childhood, and that saddens me. It saddens me to the point that I and my colleagues are prepared to fight for this province to ensure that we actually get the economic fundamentals right, that we can go to the world and we can tell them, not ask them or beg them – we can tell them – that they need to be in Alberta, they need to invest in Alberta if they're smart. If they're smart money, they will come to Alberta. Madam Speaker, before the next election I can tell you that we'll be out there telling them to get their chequebooks ready because on the day after that election they will want to be in Alberta. They will see that this province is open for business, that it is going to be the most competitive jurisdiction in North America.

As I say to many of my friends in Hong Kong – Hong Kong has been voted, 26 years in a row, the most entrepreneurial economy in the world – "We're putting you on notice. Once we become number one in North America, we're coming after you guys." They laugh, and I say, "Watch out," because we will do that. Hong Kong is a special administrative region of China, 7 million people, not a speck of resources hardly, a quarter of the GDP of Canada. Madam Speaker, we have those bridges. We have those relationships not just with Hong Kong but with China and Southeast Asia and around the world. We have those relationships.

We have our best trading partner, our biggest trading partner to the south, the United States, and we need to start treating them as friends and partners, as our best neighbours, not as somebody to disparage and somebody to try and move away from. This is not a net zero game. It's not a zero-sum game. We can expand other markets around the world, making new friends and new partners and new customers, and still trade with our biggest trading partner to the south. I think that they need to hear that from us. Maybe that's why we're having trouble with some of our negotiations today. Maybe we've disrespected them as we demand respect for ourselves, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I think that we have a great opportunity here. I think it's been squandered by this government. I think that they're now trying to put those Band-Aids on. They're trying to throw candy at people through this legislation. What they fail to admit, fail to realize is that they've damaged the fundamental economics of this province so seriously that people are leaving here. The flight of capital is real. You can read about it every day in the newspaper, not from politicians but from economists, from pundits, from people who are in the financial markets, who are telling us where their money is going and not going. That frightens me because we should be a great place to invest. As I've said many times, you don't create a job until somebody puts a dollar at risk, unless it's a government job. And guess what? You need wealth to create those government jobs unless you have a pen loaded with red ink to the tune of $96 billion.

Shame on us for not understanding that we need to live within our means, and shame on us for not passing on wealth to the next generation, Madam Speaker. That's what I think every household, every person in this Legislature – I would hope that they would hope to pass on wealth to their next generation. I know I do. I'm not going to pave the road for my kids, but I want to be in a position to be able to give them a small hand up, as I think we should with all Albertans. Shame on us to pass on debt. We should be passing on wealth, not debt, to our next generation and the generation beyond that and possibly the generation beyond that, as we've seen in Ontario, with the largest nonsovereign debt in the world. Do we want to be that? Are we following this on a race to the bottom? I hope not.

I hope that we create an opportunity here to actually live within our means, to invest wisely in infrastructure, to be able to have a plan to pay it off, not a path to balance, a $96 billion path to imbalance, Madam Speaker. We have an opportunity to do the right thing here.

You know what? I will not be . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon, everyone. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a group of nearly 50 seniors who are here today visiting the Legislature in honour of Seniors' Week June 3 to 9. These seniors boarded buses in Lloydminster and Vermilion early this morning, and they have spent the day participating in a program that's been co-ordinated by visitor services. While it's dangerous to single out one senior because they're all special, I do want to make special mention of one of the seniors who has actually been a leader of the group, and that's Mrs. Judy Woyewitka. Judy, where are you? Stand, even if you don't want to. Mrs. Woyewitka has a long and very illustrious service in the public. She was Vermilion's first female mayor and served on Vermilion town council for 21 years total as well as 12 as mayor. Last Friday Judy was awarded an honorary degree at the convocation ceremonies at Lakeland College for being Lakeland College's distinguished citizen. My congratulations to Judy. I'd like to ask my entire group to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain. Nice to see you here.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly guests from the Acheson Business Association, which represents over 350 local businesses in the Acheson industrial area. Acheson is a thriving industrial hub employing over 50,000 people every single day. Here today are President Roger Ward from Morgan Construction and Environmental Ltd.; Past-president and Director Dale Allen, Sci-Tech Engineered Chemicals; Vice-president Terry Janzen, Strongco Corporation; Treasurer Cathy Dool, Hayworth Equipment; Secretary Jo-Ann Willis, Willy's Trucking; Associate Director Sheldon Jacobs, KPMG LLP; Director Chris Konelsky, United Construction Company; Director Darren Boyde, Jen-Col Construction Ltd.; and the executive director of the Acheson Business Association, Natalie Birnie. I thank them all for the great work that they do supporting Acheson businesses, our entire region, and I ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House, especially the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, members of the Alexander First Nation council on health services. We have here today Councillor Joe Kootenay, Councillor Anita Arcand, Councillor Cheryl Savoie, as well as Executive Assistant of Health Susan Budnick. They are members of the council and are working very hard to improve the lives of the people they represent out at Alexander. I have invited them here today to attend question period and ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the best volunteers in all of the province of Alberta, from Edmonton-McClung, whose help, support, and friendship I so greatly appreciate. Stand as I mention your names, please. I am proud to introduce Francine Bérubé, Patrick Barbosa, Carla Drader, Ramona Sather, Alan Sather, Selam Beyene, Leah Naicken, Adrienne Arnott, Michael Arnott, Joscelyn Proby, and Usha Bachhu. I ask my guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you two nominees of the 37th annual Ernest C. Manning innovation awards. The Manning awards recognize innovation and discover, encourage, and reward Canadian innovators. Today on behalf of BioNeutra North America Inc. we are joined by Bill Smith, chair of the board and former mayor of Edmonton, who is representing nominee Dr. Zhu for creating a low-calorie natural sweetener, and on behalf of Run-Withit Myrna and Dean Bittner, who were nominated for their innovation in synthetic customer environments. We are also joined by my friend and chair of the Manning awards board, Sol Rolinger. I would now ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you members of the Strathcona county chapter of the Canadian Federation of University Women, which is a nonpartisan, voluntary, and self-funded organization with clubs across Canada. Since 1919 CFUW has worked to improve the status of women and promote human rights, public education, social justice, and peace. The MLAs for Edmonton-Mill Creek and Lethbridge-East as well as myself are proud to be CFUW members. It is an honour to represent active and engaged citizens like my guests in the gallery today, who work to support the well-being and success of women both here at home and around the world. I now ask Lesley Ratcliff, Tammy Irwin, Amy Macleod, Ruth Eckford, Carol Wilson, Carol Hare, and Shirley Reid to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests from Sustainival, the world's first green carnival. Here today, Founder and CEO Joey Hundert, Executive Director Odette Hutchings, and Director Dominic Mishio. Sustainival operates a full-scale carnival midway that runs entirely on renewable energy. It's going to be taking place in Edmonton, Fort McMurray, and Lethbridge. It's in Edmonton this weekend at the Edmonton Expo Centre June 7 to 10 and then in Fort McMurray at McDonald Island park from June 14 to 17, thanks in part to support through our climate change office. Sustainival provides an important opportunity for Albertans to join the conversation on sustainability, the potential of exponential clean technologies, and the inspiring sustainability initiatives taking place in our province. I see that my guests have risen. I ask them to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, any other introductions? The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: [Remarks in Tagalog] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you many members who are strong advocates and leaders from Alberta's Filipino community. This past weekend I was pleased to celebrate with Filipino Albertans in Edmonton and Calgary as our government proclaimed each and every June forevermore as Philippine Heritage Month in Alberta. Today Alberta is home to more than 175,000 Filipinos, making Alberta the second-largest Filipino place in Canada. I hope that all members of Alberta will join us in celebrating the tremendous contributions of generations of Filipinos to Alberta's faith, civic, cultural, and economic communities, of course, as well. I ask that my guests rise as I say their names: Ida, Marco, Grace, Erica, Lucy, Annie, Jun, Swee-Hin, Virginia, Josephine, Tess, and Kehrl, and if there are any others, please also rise. [Remarks in Tagalog] everyone, and please, colleagues, join me in extending the warm welcome to our guests.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Acheson Industrial Area

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so proud of the part of Alberta that I represent, and I am so proud of our region, which is prosperous in large part because of the Acheson industrial area. The Acheson industrial area is one of Alberta's largest economic engines. Consisting of 10,600 acres, it is the largest medium industrial area in Alberta. Three hundred businesses from small to large call Acheson home, and 50,000 people every day come from all over the Edmonton region and beyond to do work and business. Seven hundred and fifty billion dollars flow through Acheson annually, and it provides $15 million in taxes to help fund the services all Albertans need.

Acheson is also in a strategic location. It is serviced by three main highway corridors and by main line rail, is near three airports, and is only 35 kilometres north of the EIA. The success of the Acheson industrial area is due in part to the great work that has been done by the Acheson Business Association, members of which are present today and have been introduced. The association is made up of businesses and professional people with the primary purpose of promoting the commercial, industrial, social, and civic interests of the Acheson industrial area and the surrounding communities. Since its inception in 2004 the association's unwavering business vision and commitment to our community have helped it to achieve much for Alberta.

Looking to the future, sustainable development and balancing industry and environmental stewardship is the association's mantra. Energy efficiency and green buildings and technologies are front of mind as the Acheson industrial area moves forward. Their community efforts include numerous fundraising events like Make a Difference Christmas Campaign and the new Hockey for Hampers, and proceeds from their annual golf tournament and participation in the Coldest Night of the Year go directly to the Parkland Food Bank Society.

Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate to have the Acheson industrial area and the Acheson Business Association not just in my region but in Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Union Certification

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring we warned this NDP government that the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act could open the door for union abuses. We warned that secret ballots are a fundamental pillar of democracy, consent, and transparency, which this bill eliminated. We now see that the extended powers the Alberta Labour Relations Board has been given are most definitely being used to support the unionization of Alberta's workforce. Quotes taken from workers in a news article in February 2018 say, and I quote, that the labour law in Alberta designed to empower workers has left labourers in Calgary saying they felt tricked, bullied, and voiceless. Workers allege that they were deceived into signing union cards and unwittingly made history in what's believed to be Alberta's first union certification without an employee vote.

Workers at Icon West Construction were approached by union officials at the gate of their secured company workplace. One worker said that he was approached by a union official who said that he owed $250 in past dues, but if he paid $2 now and signed, his dues would be wiped clean. The duped worker said: instead, he used my signature not for a receipt but to sign me up for the union.

Others were taken advantage of due to their poor English, and yet others were told that they would never work in Calgary again if they didn't sign these union cards. Then to add insult to injury, when 90 per cent of the workers wanted a secret ballot vote, at an ALRB hearing they said no. One of the workers complained that the board didn't want to hear the stories of bullying or how they were misled by union officials.

Last year we warned that the NDP plan to take away the absolute right to a secret ballot for union certification votes would hurt workplace democracy and hurt both Alberta workers and employers. The right to a secret ballot for workers must be restored, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Agriculture in Edmonton-Manning

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Edmonton-Manning is very fortunate to have some of the best agricultural land in the province. Places such as Riverbend Gardens have been family owned and operated for three generations. Riverbend Gardens played a crucial role in the creation of both the Edmonton downtown farmers' market and the Old Strathcona Farmers' Market. They also support our communities through their community-supported agriculture program.

Horse Hill Berry Farm offers four varieties of raspberries at their U-pick farm in northeast Edmonton, which is another sweet addition to our constituency. Norbest Farms has served the greater Edmonton area for generations. You may be familiar with Norbest Farms from their famous Great Potato Giveaway, where they gave away over 45,000 kilograms of potatoes in 2009 to thousands of Albertans. We are extremely grateful to our family-owned and -operated growers and gift shops such as Kuhlmann's greenhouse and the Root Seller. Mr. Speaker, Edmonton-Manning is also home to our tree nurseries such as Sunstar Nurseries and Arrowhead Nurseries. Last but not least, northeast Edmonton is home to Lady Flower Gardens, which provides supervised access for experiential learning opportunities on 93 acres of land to nonprofit partners and donates to our local food banks. You can find many of our local producers at the Miller Crossing Farmers' Market, located at our Kingsway Legion every Sunday with over 50 vendors.

Mr. Speaker, demand for locally produced food continues to grow in Alberta. Alberta's local food industry is a key part of our economy. Farmers' markets and direct farm purchases exceeded $1 billion in 2016. Our government recently passed the Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. This will help support those local growers. We also established a heavy transport corridor northwest of Edmonton, that will help maintain the integrity of this vital agricultural land.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be part of a government which values local agriculture and to represent Edmonton-Manning, a special constituency where agriculture is cherished and where we do not take the land we have for granted.

Thank you.

Alberta Advantage and Government Policies

Mr. Gotfried: The Alberta advantage: it rolls off the tongue so easily, so familiar to us all, yet somehow in these days of the NDP world view it seems but an elusive concept. Investors take flight, small businesses struggle, unemployment lingers, confidence wanes, people leave, yet talk of incentives is touted as a panacea for all of our economic woes.

But the failure is not of Albertans, not of the entrepreneurial spirit that still flows through our veins, not of the rich bounty that we have been blessed with. It is the failure of this government to understand and appreciate that their ideology, attitude, and the heavy hand of socialist dogma are real and have so severely damaged our economic fundamentals as to have stolen something that can only be described in the most technical of terms. Yes, the Alberta NDP have robbed us of our provincial mojo. I hear it from my neighbours in Calgary-Fish Creek, I hear it in downtown Calgary, I hear it at backyard barbecues, and I hear it across our great province: "What happened to the Alberta we love? Where will I go if this continues?"

Mr. Speaker, I also hear from Albertans that they want responsible government, they want accountable government, they want effective and efficient government, they want a compassionate government. But they also want to pass on a legacy of wealth and prosperity, not the burden of debt, to future generations. That is a sense of right and wrong we know as Albertans, part of the prairie work ethic we are proud of and the pioneer spirit that built this province. I hear from Albertans that they expect a government that provides an opportunity to all Albertans to reach their greatest potential.

Mr. Speaker, in 2019 Albertans will have an opportunity to choose that government. My colleagues and I are committed to earning their confidence and trust to lead them not on this government's unconscionable $96 billion path to perpetual imbalance but on a confident, visionary, inspirational, can-do path back to the Alberta advantage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Seniors' Week

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As many of you know, June 3 to 9 is Seniors' Week in Alberta. We all have seniors in our lives, and seniors are vital members of our communities as parents and grandparents, mentors and friends, and colleagues.

Alberta seniors are actively engaged in their communities. According to recent statistics almost 20 per cent of Albertans over the age of 65 are active in the workforce, and nearly half of seniors aged 65 to 74 volunteer in their communities. Because seniors contribute so much to the lives of their families, friends, and neighbours, it is important that they are able to age in their communities. The latest numbers show that more than 90 per cent of seniors live in their own homes. That means that the supports and services that government has put in place to help seniors stay in their communities are working.

But we have more work to do to ensure Albertans can age in dignity close to their loved ones. Our government is committed to this work. Each year we provide close to $3 billion in services and supports for seniors. In Budget 2018 we protected the Alberta seniors' benefit so that thousands of seniors have up to $280 a month when they really need it. We also launched a home repair and adaptation program to help seniors age in their homes close to loved ones. We passed legislation that protects seniors in the workplace by prohibiting discrimination based on age through the Alberta Human Rights Act. Those are just a few examples of the supports for seniors that our government has invested in.

For more than 30 years Alberta has celebrated our seniors. This week and every week I hope everyone takes a moment to spend quality time with an older person, to recognize them, and to thank them for all they mean to us and to our communities.

Thank you.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Project

Mr. McIver: We live in hope, Mr. Speaker. On this side we really want the Trans Mountain pipeline to be built. Our NDP government has promised to put Alberta up to $2 billion more in debt to help buy an old but profitable pipeline. They promised to pay up to that $2 billion to solve not a money problem but a rule of law problem. It's like taking your car to the mechanic, saying that it runs great but has a flat tire, and the mechanic gives your vehicle a tune-up and forgets about the flat. The driver is now stuck on the side of the road after paying the $2 billion tune-up bill, broken-hearted about the fact that the tire is still flat and they can't drive. This is where we are now on the Trans Mountain pipeline file.

For a year the United Conservative Party has asked this government to confront illegal protesters. Our leader has offered many ideas to put pressure on B.C., most of them ignored by the government. The Alberta NDP and federal Liberals instead chose to ridicule great ideas offered up by the Leader of the Official Opposition. They focused on a crisis of financing when it was always a crisis of confidence, in hopes that Albertans and Canadians would not notice the cowardly way these governments failed to push back the illegal protesters. They put their own political convenience in front of the real interests of Canada and Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this Alberta NDP and their allies the Trudeau Liberals have left Alberta and all of Canada in the ditch so that they can pander to their real friends now protesting against the Trans Mountain pipeline. The B.C. NDP are still not onside. The uncertainties that made the project unviable for the private sector still exist. Meanwhile, the rest of us are stuck on the side of the road with a flat social licence tire, having paid for an unneeded tune-up.

This is how the NDP has solved our pipeline problem, but we can still hope for better. We hope that the Prime Minister while in Alberta today will promise to push the illegal protesters back. We hope the NDP will save their high-five media conferences until it really is mission accomplished. Then and only then can all of Alberta and Canada join in that celebration.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today sad news about an increase in the number of deaths of children in care of the province of Alberta. It is sad for, I'm sure, all of us to learn of an increase of seven deaths of children in care, an increase of 26 per cent for 2017 over the previous year. Can the government explain why these numbers have increased given the great focus on protecting children in care and what plans the government has to address what appears to be a deteriorating situation?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We know that, frankly, any deaths of children in care are too many deaths, and it is an issue with which we have been incredibly seized, as have members on both sides of the aisle. We are continuing to move forward as quickly as we can with as many plans as we can to improve the situation and to protect kids in care. We've moved forward already on phase 1 of the committee's recommendations, and we are very close to completing phase 2. In addition, we are continuing to invest further in child protection.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the hon. the Premier for her answer, Mr. Speaker. The ministerial panel on children in care reported back several months ago. We're now at the end of this Legislature session this week, and no legislation has been brought forward by the government to give effect to those recommendations. Why has the government not brought forward legislation, and will it commit to do so as soon as this House resumes?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we did bring forward legislation with respect to the first phase of the committee's work, so we moved as quickly as we could. In addition, in the interim what we've done is we've significantly increased resources to the ministry that is engaged in the work of protecting children in care. As well, we've been working with the federal government to improve the level of services that occur in First Nations communities. We will continue to do that work, and we will absolutely do whatever is necessary legislatively or otherwise.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Premier. Unfortunately, the ministerial panel was prevented or precluded from exploring the tragic Serenity case in detail. Such an exploration would have allowed for, I think, more detailed recommendations and lessons to be learned from the atrocious mishandling of Serenity's case. Why did the government preclude the committee from that detailed investigation of Serenity's case, the failure of which handicapped the entire process?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we don't agree that it did handicap the entire process. It was a very broad-based consultation where all members of the House were able to engage and stakeholders and people impacted by the issue were given a great range within which to engage. During the course of the work of the committee the Serenity case was before the courts. In fact, having it go before the committee would have prevented the courts from doing their work, which was absolutely not in the best interest. That's why we didn't do it. Members opposite who were here at the time were fully aware of that. At the same time, I believe that the committee was able to get good work done.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second main question.

Surgery Wait Times

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are more reports today about growing wait times for Albertans seeking critical health care. The CBC reports that Judy Wales waited an agonizing 76 weeks for shoulder replacement surgery. She sought out an Edmonton chronic pain management clinic but ended up on yet another wait-list. Why are wait-lists growing for people like Judy Wales, causing them to live in pain as their health deteriorates and often as they are forced to take painkillers, which can also be harmful to their health in the long run?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will say that, you know, we empathize with all Albertans who are forced to be on wait-lists to wait for surgeries. We know that it's absolutely very difficult for them and for their family members who are watching them wait. That's why we're doing everything we can to continue to invest in our health care system to ensure that we can get better outcomes with respect to that. As part of Budget 2018 we've allocated $40 million to address wait times for surgeries, and we'll continue to do the work that is necessary to ensure that Albertans' health care needs are well met.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Data from the Canadian Institute for Health Information indicates that wait times in Alberta for hip replacement surgery, knee replacement surgery, cataract surgery have all grown since 2015 even though the government is spending more money on the health system, a significant increase in health spending. My question for the Premier is: why are Alberta patients getting less for more money?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that we are in fact making progress overall with respect to wait times, and we will continue to invest in our public health care system to make sure that we bring those wait times even lower. What I will say, however, is that what will not help reduce wait times are the privatization plans, either of funding or of delivery, that have been offered up by the members opposite. What those will do is create two wait-lists, one for the very wealthy and one for the rest of us. Absolutely not the solution to improving this problem.

Mr. Kenney: In fact, Mr. Speaker, the wealthy and the desperate very often end up taking their pain and their dollars to the United States for care because they aren't willing to wait two years for surgery here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, heart valve surgery wait times, according to AHS, are up by 40 per cent since 2015. Interventions on the stomach have increased by 12 weeks since 2015. Interventions on lymph nodes have increased by 35 per cent in terms of the time it takes, increased by four weeks since 2015. Again, why is the government spending – where is the money going? Is it going to bureaucracy? Why isn't it going to patients and reducing wait times?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what we've been able to do is make progress in some areas, yet we know there is still work to be done in other areas. Our government has premised that work on a couple of foundational principles. First of all, we need to finally ensure that there is stability within the health care system as opposed to having it become a political football, which is what happened under the previous government. Nor should it be the place for experimental privatization opportunities, which also created problems. We have also ensured that it's received stable funding. These are the things that will ensure that we're able to make better progress and deliver better health care in the long run.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Eagle Spirit Pipeline Project

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to come back to an issue I raised yesterday, which is the proposed Eagle Spirit pipeline, a proposal of a consortium of First Nations to create a pipeline to ship Alberta oil to global markets through the northern B.C. coast. Will the Premier agree with me that this is a project that we should in principle support as we pursue multiple options for global market access for Alberta energy and that we ought to support any good-faith initiative by First Nations to participate in our energy industry?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I believe the member heard yesterday when he asked this question, our Minister of Energy has met with the proponents of that particular project, and we're certainly very interested in continuing to work with them on that project. We are, in fact, also very supportive of a number of different consortiums of indigenous groups that are looking to engage more effectively or more prosperously in pipeline construction, either with the Eagle Spirit or with the Trans Mountain. We'll continue to do that work because we know that it will ultimately result in better returns for Albertans.

2:00

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the minister has met with the proponents. The problem is that the federal government has a bill before Parliament, Bill C-48, that would make it impossible, illegal to export oil through the northern B.C. coast with a tanker traffic ban. Will the Premier on behalf of the government of Alberta and in solidarity with the First Nations consortium proposing the Eagle Spirit pipeline call on the federal government to withdraw Bill C-48 to allow the prospect of the Eagle Spirit to proceed?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what we have done already and what the Minister of Energy has done is written to the federal government indicating that we think that the tanker ban in its current iteration is too broad and may well limit opportunities that may at some point in the future exist. We know that that work has to continue, and we will continue to work collaboratively with indigenous partners.

Quite honestly, we know that it was the former federal government's failure to do that that resulted, ultimately, in the death of Northern Gateway, and we know that they can't make that decision again.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: It was actually the federal government's stated intention of introducing Bill C-48 that led to their veto of Northern Gateway. It was a decision of the current government of Canada.

I'm glad to hear that the government of Alberta has raised concerns, but could we maybe get a little bit of clarity on that, Mr. Speaker, and move that from an expression of concern to actual opposition to an unnecessary ban on northern tanker traffic? Does the Premier not understand that it would be beneficial to our industry, our jobs, and our economy and to these First Nations pipeline proponents if we could at least potentially get northern coast access?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, the member opposite has displayed his very high level of talent at rewriting history, but I'm pretty sure that the court decision that killed Northern Gateway rendered its decision on the deliberation process of the former Conservative federal government.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, what we will do is continue to engage with the federal government. As I've said, we've articulated that we have concerns about it. We're not going to do gratuitous insults. We're not going to tweet things at them. We will however engage on how this is a problem. We need to be respectful of indigenous partners along the coast and on the path.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

AHS Report on Health Worker Mental Health Supports

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister of Health, yesterday I asked you about a report done on mental health supports and morale within AHS, and I asked if you would direct them to release that report. Your response talked about some of the things that your government is doing, which is fine, but you didn't answer the question, and you didn't even mention the report. Minister, I'll ask you again. Will you direct AHS to release any reports that they currently have on the state of mental health supports in the health care system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am so incredibly proud of the work that our front-line paramedics do in our province and all of those who work in terms of emergencies. When I talk to Albertans about EMS, they talk about how it's the scariest time of their life when they need to call 911 and wait for that help and how much they appreciate the front-line support. In turn, we certainly need to give that support to the front lines as well, including supporting the path to mental readiness and increasing opportunities for mental health supports for all front-line workers. I receive regular updates from AHS and look forward to receiving their advice on how we can continue to support front-line responders.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, I've always commended your government for the additional resources and supports for EMS, which you talked about yesterday. However, I spoke to many paramedics yesterday after question period, and they don't feel that those measures are making enough of a difference. Minister, have you read the report? Does it identify where we're failing front-line health care workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I believe that the member referred to a report that was commissioned by Alberta Health Services. I have not received said report, but I do regularly communicate with their employers, whether it's Alberta Health Services or any of the contracted employers in Alberta that work with our paramedics as well. I have to say how grateful I am for their front-line services and the work they do, how proud I am that our government invested $23 million more to expanding supports and expansion of those services. I understand that the caucus that asked the question – I think one person voted for it, one person voted against it, and one person didn't vote. I have to say: where do you stand on front-line services and the people of this province, hon. member?

Mr. Fraser: Minister, your refusal to share vital information with this House is troubling. Whatever your reasons for not directing the release of this report, they have to be weighed against the potential to save the lives of front-line health care workers. Any potential political liabilities that you may have in this report or that this report may present your government aren't worth the delay. To the same minister: will you direct the release of this report before it's too late?

Ms Hoffman: Again, hon. member, I am very proud to work with the employers, with the unions, and with the workers that provide this important service across Alberta. I look forward to hearing advice from all parties on how we can continue to strengthen and support folks. The number one thing they've said to me is, "Get us more resources," Mr. Speaker, and that's why this government invested $23 million additional dollars to ensure that we have the right supports. That's why this government is working with AHS to make sure that we install power stretchers in all AHS ambulances. We're proud to work with front-line responders and to make sure they have the supports necessary, and we will continue to work to help support them in their mental health journey as well. We've got the side of workers on this side of the House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Steel and Aluminum Tariffs

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the U.S. government announced new unfair and discriminatory tariffs on Canadian steel and aluminum. I've already heard from folks in my constituency who are deeply concerned about the impacts that these new rules might have on our economy. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what are you doing to fight for Albertans and get these tariffs reversed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We always stand up for Alberta workers and Alberta companies, whether it's licence plates, pipelines, lumber, or steel. President Trump's tariffs are ridiculous, and they're insulting and will hurt workers and families on both sides of the border. We support the federal government approach for strong retaliatory measures and also their commitment to consulting Alberta companies and workers to hear their ideas and concerns. Now, there is a 30-day period which provides the President an opportunity to walk back these dangerous and protectionist measures.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we are already seeing stories about the negative impacts these tariffs might have on producers and consumers, to the same minister: what are you doing to advocate for Albertans who might be unfairly impacted by these new, costly increases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Immediately on learning about these tariffs, I had a conversation with the CEO of AltaSteel, which is Alberta's largest steel producer. We convened a round-table that afternoon with the largest steel consumers as well to talk about the impacts, not only to the steel industry but, quite frankly, to the livelihoods of other sectors and other families. I can tell you that our government will not stand by as these workers and families and their livelihoods and jobs are put at risk. I can tell you that we're assessing the impacts of these tariffs, and we'll be in constant dialogue with the federal government. Just yesterday I spoke to the Prime Minister to voice Alberta's concerns.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you. Given that construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline is going to be started any day now and given that builders will need an incredible amount of steel throughout the project, again to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: can you confirm whether or not this pipeline will be in fact impacted by these new tariffs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report that the tariffs will have no impact on the Trans Mountain pipeline. The majority of steel needed for the pipeline is coming from a plant to the east of us, and the rest is going to be sourced from outside of the U.S. So we're not going to be subject to any of these tariffs. I can tell you that we're working incredibly hard to ensure that this pipeline is built as soon as possible. The Premier has been a steadfast advocate and has said that we will do whatever it takes to get this pipeline built. We know that 15,000 jobs are significant, not only for Albertans but for all Canadians, and we stand behind this project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Hillview Park Condominiums in Fort McMurray

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fort McMurray's Hillview Park condominium complex was among the many destroyed in the 2016 wildfire. Since then owners have struggled with significant financial hardship and personal challenges as they attempt to rebuild their homes and their lives. Rebuilding has been stalled, but they still have to pay monthly, and they're now faced with new special assessments to pay for what? The owners are getting lost in stonewalling by their own condo board. To the Minister of Service Alberta: we're approaching four years now since the Condominium Property Act was amended, so why in 2018 are condo owners still facing significant barriers to obtaining basic general information or documents?

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, our government is focused on the priorities of regular Albertans, protecting them when they make a purchase, and no purchase is more important than buying a home. That's why our government took action to protect the residents of Fort McMurray from being scammed or gouged. We stationed experienced investigators in Fort McMurray to assist residents during the rebuild phase by providing advice for dealing with contractors and landlords. We continue to work in the community, and we're making sure the home builders and contractors who are taking deposits for their work have proper business licences. We're also working very hard on updates and regulatory amendments and changes to the Condominium Property Act. However, the issue that . . .

2:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you. I hope we'll hear the rest of that answer, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister, the Hillview Park condo issue demonstrates why a quasi-judicial condominium dispute tribunal is so desperately needed in Alberta, yet your government has failed these affected owners by not finalizing the regulations to bring such a body into being. Will you quickly establish a condominium dispute tribunal as a much-needed, low-cost way of resolving or preventing some of these issues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To complete my earlier answer, I did want to say to the member that this is a legal dispute between Viceroy and Hillview. It's currently before the courts, so we're unable to comment in detail about that particular issue. With respect to the tribunal, we went across the province and consulted with Albertans on the regulations for the Condominium Property Act and heard clearly that there is a strong appetite for a tribunal. We are bringing these out in phases. The next phase is to deal with the relationship and governance of condominium boards, and after that a tribunal is in the plans. Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we're four years and counting. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why doesn't the government's postdisaster responsibility to victims include making some kind of pro bono or low-cost legal services available to people whose lives have been totally devastated and cannot afford legal consultation?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you very much to the member for the question. I'm aware of what is happening up there, you know, as the Minister of Service Alberta stated as well. For my part in Municipal Affairs, one of the things that we did up there for the rebuild was put in a pilot program to try to give people more information about builders so they knew beforehand who they were dealing with. We did bring in builder licensing on December 1, 2017, to make sure people understood who was building their house, their contacts, their history, their qualifications to make sure in case something like this happened that they were covered. I mean, we do have warranties, which are after the fact, things like that, but builder licensing . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-West.

Criminal Code of Canada Penalty Provisions

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-75, which is being fast-tracked through the House of Commons, purports to modernize Canada's criminal justice system. The proposed changes include watering down sentences for many serious crimes, such as using the date-rape drug and forced marriage, in an effort to reduce crowding in jails. Minister, do you seriously support a plan that allows a court to slap someone on the wrist for these crimes as well as for impaired driving causing bodily harm and leaving Canada to participate in the activities of a terrorist group?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member has correctly identified, it is within the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament to deal with those sorts of issues in the Criminal Code. For our part, we are doing what we can here in Alberta to ensure that we have the necessary officers in place in order to get the proper cases forward to Crown prosecutors. We're investing in those Crown prosecutors so that they can make the appropriate applications to ensure that individuals who belong in jail stay in jail.

Mr. Ellis: That's interesting, Mr. Speaker, given that in Ottawa last week the federal Justice minister indicated that she held meetings with provincial justice ministers, "all of whom are supportive of the bold reforms" in C-75. Minister, can you confirm the federal Justice minister's statement that you are onboard with the Trudeau government's plan to reduce penalties for abducting a child under the age of 14, disguise with intent, participating in organized crime, advocating for genocide? I could go on and on. Do you actually support these changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member well knows, discussions that occur at federal-provincial-territorial meetings tend to have certain aspects which are confidential. That being said, justice ministers were able to come together across the country to talk about the issue of Jordan. One of the reforms that was brought forward was reforms to preliminary inquiries. There are a number of other reforms having to do with hybridization of offences. There were a variety of views in the room, and I'm sure I'll have more to say about that in just a moment.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we really just want to know if you agree with the federal minister's statement in Ottawa and given that, you know, this is a revolving-door justice system that is spinning faster and faster all the time, Minister, how can you support these catch-and-release proposals in the face of Alberta's current rural crime epidemic?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we here in Alberta are focused on those things which are in within our jurisdiction. The province of Alberta has an enormous number of tools at its disposal to ensure that we are addressing the rural crime issue. That's why we're investing in police. That's why we're investing in Crown prosecutors. We're ensuring that we're taking a more proactive approach to crime. We've also been working with a number of organizations like Alberta Citizens on Patrol to ensure that all Albertans who have a great interest in this issue can be invested in making progress, and we are making progress.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Physicians' Disciplinary Policies

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health insists that the College of Physicians & Surgeons needs more legislative tools to revoke the licence of Dr. Ismail Taher, who is convicted of sexually assaulting a patient and a nurse, yet three years ago the college revoked the licence of a physician convicted of sexually assaulting three patients, so clearly the college does have the authority to revoke licences for these offences. The irony is that Dr. Taher has now stepped down due to public pressure. Minister, given this information why are you not directing the college to revoke the licence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. I, too, share concerns around wanting to guarantee that any time anyone goes to a health professional, they know that that professional doesn't have a record and that they wouldn't have a history of abuse. That's why I have worked within my responsibility and my area of rights as the Health minister to meet with the College of Physicians & Surgeons and really push this, because it is a regulatory college and a body that has authority over licensing for their members. It is an area where I don't believe I have the ability to revoke a licence.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the college posts the names of all practising physicians on its website and Dr. Taher is on that list and given that this family physician admitted that he thought his 18-year-old victim's clothing choice was an invitation for him to touch her sexually during an examination, Minister, why are Albertans having to rely on ratemds.com to warn patients away from sexual predators?

Ms Hoffman: Well, certainly those remarks are very concerning. It is never appropriate for anyone to violate anyone's bodily autonomy without their full and active consent, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, when you're in a position as a patient, you aren't in a position to be able to consent, so that is deeply troubling, those remarks. Women and Albertans should feel safe while accessing medical care. When I was made aware of this situation, as the member knows, we ensured that we reached out to the college immediately, wanting to ensure that they moved with the greatest accountability they could for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is the problem, that we are hit now with the ability to not be able to tell people that they're safe. Public safety is the issue that's here. Given that the college recently introduced a no-tolerance policy for doctors sexually abusing patients, but the minister claims that the college needs new legislative tools before it can deal with sexual predators, and given that for the sake of public confidence in the health system, no tolerance means that it has to start today, Minister, if the college simply has a lack of tools when it is confronted with sexual abuse, that means nothing has changed, so when are you going to step in?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Again, this was very troubling. We want to ensure that all disciplinary action is made available for Albertans. We're going to expand the time limits, and we've worked with the college to make some progress on that. Some jurisdictions are ahead of Alberta because they have been addressing issues over the past number of years, including the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, who post criminal convictions for doctors and also keep disciplinary decisions on their website longer than Alberta. Ontario has recently taken legislative steps to prevent sexual abuse by amending the Regulated Health Professions Act. These are some of the tools the college wants, and I'm going to work with them to make . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Alexander First Nation Supportive Living Grant

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in light of his member's statement I would ask the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert to pay special attention to my question today. On January 19, 2016, a letter was sent to the Alexander First Nation from the current Health minister confirming the approval of a $1.2 million ASLI grant for expansion of the Keechewkamik home. Disabled residents were removed from their homes so renovations could begin. Almost two and a half years later the residents are still displaced. Minister, why have you not released the funds as promised?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very happy to follow up with the member opposite with regard to his specific concerns and with the local MLA as well. It's certainly our intent to make sure that there are as many long-term care beds and supportive living beds as possible for the people of this province and that we keep people as close to home as possible as well, including on-reserve, especially where we have willing partners. I know the department has been working closely with the grant recipients, and we look forward to being able to update the House very soon.

Mr. Hanson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister met with council in January 2017 and assured them that funds would be released by March 2017 and given that the government of Alberta sent a letter in September 2017 confirming an increase to the grant to $1.4 million, Minister, you state in your letters how pleased you are to be able to respond to the supportive living needs of vulnerable Albertans, allowing them to age in their communities, much as what was said in the statement today. Why have you not released the promised funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to follow up with regard to the specifics. I think we have a proven track record working with you, hon. member. I certainly have delivered on the dialysis beds in Lac La Biche, something that Conservative governments failed to do for many, many years. I welcome the hon. member and all members to contact my office directly and be able to problem solve these kinds of things. On the floor of the House is certainly a challenging place to do that, but I do understand that there is some back and forth with legal and with other folks within the department and within the nation to make sure that the funds can be appropriately released. It is a complicated process, but I'll be happy to look into further details in a respectful way.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for that answer. Given that the people living in this home have been removed to allow for renovations, which were started but stalled due to the lack of funding, over two years and waiting, Minister, council is here in the Chamber. Will you agree to meet with them today and come up with a solution? This has gone on long enough. And bring your chequebook.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks so much for the gotcha politics, Mr. Speaker. This is always fun when members in one breath ask for us to make cuts and in the next breath ask us to bring our chequebook. We are absolutely committed to working in partnership with First Nations, with local leaders around our province to make sure that we get beds built in the right communities to support the right care in the right place. Certainly, moving forward on projects on-reserve is a deep priority of mine, and I've made that very clear to my department. We'd be happy to troubleshoot, and I'd be very happy to meet, of course, with the folks that are here. Doing the "come today and bring your chequebook" is not exactly the most diplomatic way, but obviously I will meet with the constituents.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, Royal Bank's recent provincial outlook confirmed what Albertans already know. We are worse off today than when the NDP took power. One indicator is called the discomfort index, a combination of unemployment and inflation. Alberta's discomfort index when the NDP took office was 7. By 2016 it had risen to 8.4, and this year it's rising to 9. To the minister: why do you continue to push critical investment out of Alberta, resulting in Alberta families and communities being worse off?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I think he's a little confused because over the past year over 90,000 new full-time jobs have been created, mostly in the private sector. As well, there are a number of other indicators. Our GDP growth is up. We led the country last year with 4.9 per cent growth. We're on track to lead the country again this year. Our manufacturing numbers are up. Our exports are up. Wages are up. Retail is up. Wholesale is up. Housing construction is up. EI numbers are down. Alberta recorded the fastest year-over-year decline in the number of beneficiaries among all provinces, down 26 per cent.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Given that a recent Fraser Institute report found that before 2015 Albertans were each paying $58 annually to service the province's interest, an Albertan in 2020 will pay $655 in NDP interest, and hard-working Albertans have received longer wait times, six credit downgrades, and decades now of debt and interest, to the minister: Your wild spending has resulted in a 1,000 per cent increase in interest costs per capita. Yes, that is up, too. What do you have to say to hard-working Albertans who must pay this back?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, what I would say to these Albertans is: look at the record of the Conservative Party over there. They had increases to the operating lines of 10 per cent some years. We're flattening that out. What wouldn't help Albertans out is the flat tax that that side keeps talking about. It's really exposed for what it is, a handout that benefits only the rich in this province, and all of us pay for it. Why don't they talk about that, how the flat tax would hurt every Albertan except the 1 per cent, which are their friends?

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's current annual interest of over $2 billion doesn't help anyone out. Given that the same institute report found that by 2020 Alberta's ever-increasing interest payments per capita will surpass British Columbia's and be 70 per cent of Ontario's and all the while services Albertans receive diminish, to the minister: why have you reduced Alberta's future prosperity, destroyed investment, and jeopardized every single priority that Alberta families and communities care deeply about?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, you know, on this side we're carefully and prudently reducing the deficit without making the reckless cuts that the UCP Party would make across Alberta. They would fire thousands of teachers and nurses and leave us all without the programs and services we need. The Leader of the Opposition has no record to stand on as he was part of six straight deficit budgets, the largest of which was $56 billion in just one year alone; $145 billion to our national debt: that's what he added.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Workforce Education and Training

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hear from many constituents who were laid off two or three years ago that they haven't been able to find work or, if they do find a job, it doesn't use their skills. They want to retrain but can't find short-term programs that will get them back to work quickly to pay their bills. What government strategy ensures that education programs offered by community and employer collaborations are supported through economic diversification, coal community transition, and other programs to increase opportunities for people to get back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the very timely question, an important question. There are a number of initiatives that our government has been rolling out through not only my department but also the Ministry of Labour and others to help especially workers, whether it's in retraining, developing the right tools and skills to be able to go back into the workforce as well as a number of initiatives to support our job creators, our businesses around the province to get back on their feet. We know that small business is the economic engine of this province. Our government has been steadfast in our commitment, and we will continue to look at ways to support workers through a variety of tools moving forward.

Ms McPherson: Given that Rainforest Alberta and Calgary Economic Development have worked with employers to create a program called EvolveU that meets employers' needs for work-ready developers now and given that there is currently no government funding to address the immediate needs of the tech sector for full stack developers, not coders, will the Minister of Advanced Education commit to covering all or part of the tuition for innovative programs such as EvolveU that have been designed to address the ongoing shortage of tech workers, as identified by Amazon and others?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, this Legislature has before it Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act, which commits to creating 3,000 new technology spaces in postsecondary institutions. In our budget that we brought forward, we committed millions of dollars to funding those spaces and funding the short-term training programs that the member referred to in her previous question. As far as the details go for providing additional funding, I advise the hon. member to stay tuned.

Ms McPherson: Given that EvolveU is a great example of GBA plus focused program development that is intentional about inclusivity and given that speaking to underrepresented communities in tech reveals that they have the largest hurdles to overcome and given that diversity offers a distinct competitive advantage to anyone looking to diversify in export, why have there been no reported metrics and no tabling of gender-based analysis of legislation passed over the last three years?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For too long women in our province have faced barriers to work, unequal pay, and high levels of violence. This is no different when we look at the STEM sector. In fact, there are additional barriers to women getting involved in the STEM sector, and that's why we include GBA plus analysis in all of our ministries and all of our departments. There is an incredible number of examples where GBA plus has contributed to the work being done, including the legislation brought forward by the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, which includes additional incentives and credits for hiring diverse populations of individuals into exactly those STEM sectors.

Thank you.

2:30 Air Ambulance Service in Peace River

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, previously I asked the Minister of Health about an incident that occurred at the Peace River airport on April 29 where a medevac plane was stuck in the mud for almost two hours. The minister disputes this claim and has said, "I'm sick of the mudslinging in this House." Ironical. Given that the documents I tabled last week demonstrate a delay of almost two hours, would the minister like to rescind her comment and admit that the procurement process for our air ambulance service has resulted in an actual reduction in the services?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are getting an upgraded and modernized air ambulance system, and this means newer, faster aircraft equipped with the latest technology. CanWest Air charters began operating in 8 of 10 base communities on September 1, 2017. What I did say was that the air ambulance I believe was stuck for approximately 10 minutes – the hon. member said two hours – and that it was considered a stable transfer, nonemergency, so a new air ambulance was sent rather than risking anything by flying with the old one. I'm simply putting the facts . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, given that the air ambulance service provider did not meet AHS service obligations on April 29 by not departing within 30 minutes of the transfer, what did the minister do to hold the provider accountable for this breach of their contract?

Ms Hoffman: Again, hon. member, it was deemed not be an emergency transfer. That's why the backup plane was brought in rather than departing with a plane that had been in the mud. Certainly, if we want to enforce contracts and if it had been an emergency, they would have been able to do that, but what was deemed better by the experts in the community was to send the backup plane rather than fly the one that had been in the mud more recently. Patient care will always be the number one driver in making sure that we have safe transfers. Safe transfers are our priority and making sure that happens in all parts of the province.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that if the incident on April 29 was actually an emergency, there could have been life-threatening consequences for the patient involved, will the Minister of Health ensure that this type of incident does not happen again and patient care is not at risk for residents of not just northern Alberta but all of Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: Just to clarify – I may have misheard – the transfer was seen as nonemergent. It was seen as a routine, nonemergency transfer, and that's why the second plane was called rather than flying out with the first one. Of course, if there's anytime an emergency, first responders would work as urgently as possible to ensure as quick a departure as possible. This is why we are grateful that we have an upgraded fleet that's got the most efficient, effective tools on board, and we will continue to work with Alberta Health Services to ensure that all parts of the province have the very best air ambulance service available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Supportive Living Accommodations for Rural Seniors

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of Seniors' Week I would like to inform the House about a remarkable constituent of mine. Her name is Zoe Bleau. Zoe has been a resident of Bonnyville for 46 years. In those five decades she has made many contributions to our community and has raised seven children. Now, however, Zoe is at a later stage in her life. She is 86 and is dealing with many issues that come with age. Zoe has been waiting nine months to move into the Bonnylodge. She has been bumped down the list, being told that she exceeds the income threshold. To the minister: is it fair that Zoe will most likely never get into this local facility?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We believe that all seniors should have a safe and affordable place to call home. I can certainly look into the particular details of this issue, but I can assure you that it's a priority of our government to make sure that seniors have the supports they need to live in a dignified manner. In the next question I will expand on the investment we have made so far.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. Given that Zoe has been made to wait because she exceeds the $28,000 per year priority threshold and given that Zoe's doctors have written that she is in immediate need of the kind of care that Bonnylodge can provide and given that Zoe has previously written the government about this issue, will the minister please consider Zoe's individual circumstances, consider waiving the income threshold, and take action necessary to immediately place her in the Bonnylodge, ensuring that she has adequate, medically necessary care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As I mentioned, I will look into the specifics of this issue.

We are investing in seniors' programs to make sure that seniors have the support they need. In just the last three years we have invested in affordable housing to make sure that there are housing options available. We have made sure that seniors have access to the Alberta seniors' benefits. We have invested almost $3 billion in seniors' programs to make sure that they have the supports they need.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've provided the minister a hand-delivered document that was from this constituent and given that Zoe's family has been told that the income guidelines are the only barrier to the admission and given that the staff of the seniors ministry told the family that she had the choice between being safe or being near family members and friends and given that this sets a dangerous precedent for many aging Albertans who may have pension income or the like, will the minister review this kind of situation that Zoe finds herself in and commit to taking immediate action so that she can age safely, in dignity, near her family?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. I do want to clarify that lodge living is still independent living and that home-care services are usually what provides additional wraparound health supports. If there are specific questions with regard to individuals receiving health services, I'd be very happy to respond to this on a health component. Folks who do live in a lodge are living independently still. They do have their meals provided and their housekeeping provided, but they are still independently living. If it's about health care services, hon. member, I'd be happy to discuss this, whether it's home care or whether it's about moving into a facility that has additional supports. These are some of the options that are available.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Yao: Since this government took power, the Health budget has continued to grow, and so has the government's boasting about hiring front-line workers to, quote, improve the standard of care for Albertans. In fact, Mr. Speaker, AHS has grown by approximately 8,000 employees, and we're still waiting for a response from AHS on how many of those are front-line workers.

What is disappointing is that wait times have steadily increased. Hip replacements, knee replacements, cataract surgeries have all risen a month in wait times since this group has come into government. Why have these wait times dramatically increased under this Health minister's watch in the last three years?

Ms Hoffman: Again, Mr. Speaker, anytime anyone is waiting for health care services, we want to provide better, more efficient, more effective local services as close to home as possible. What wouldn't help with that is deep, ideological cuts and moving towards privatization and two-tiered health care. That certainly would hurt everyday folks living in this province. While the member has identified a number of areas where there is still more work to be done, I have to say that we are making significant progress and reducing wait times in a number of areas, including GI in Calgary. Essentially, there are zero wait times now to see a GI specialist, and that's certainly a good thing, and we're going to continue moving to address wait times in other areas as well.

Mr. Yao: The failures of this ministry are not just limited to things like hip and cataract surgeries, Mr. Speaker. Mental health is a very real issue in today's society. Timely mental health supports for children are crucial for their development. In Edmonton only one in four children got in to see a therapist within 30 days. To the Minister of Health. The federal government has budgeted a substantial amount of money to the provinces specific to mental health, yet AHS's own statistics do not lie. Why have Albertans, especially those most vulnerable, been stuck in longer and longer health care queues since your government took over?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that for any family that is reaching out asking for help, I want to honour that fact. I am so grateful that they're asking for help. We've done a lot over the last few years, I think, to address the stigma around mental health and create a more compassionate, caring society. Folks are asking for help at greater levels. That's why we're increasing funding to greater levels. We've increased the funding for school interventions by 50 per cent this year alone. That is certainly a step in the right direction. Is there more to be done? Absolutely. Is cutting 20 per cent from the Health budget the solution? Absolutely not. We need to invest in these families and make sure that children get the supports they need.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, it's a question of outcomes for Albertans, not just spending. This government's justification for increasing the Health budget is to hire more front-line workers. Despite the increase of $2 billion in the Health budget since you got elected, wait times have not improved and outcomes for Albertans are deteriorating. To the Health Minister: rather than deflecting, will you take ownership of the irrefutably deteriorating wait time performance measures?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a number of areas the wait times have improved. As I mentioned, in Calgary, for example, GI wait times are essentially eliminated. That is nothing to laugh at, hon. members. Those are people who are not living in pain anymore because this government invested to make their lives better. I'm proud of that. What I am also proud of is that we stopped regressive cuts that were being proposed by the members opposite. Is demand going up in a number of areas? Yes. Is there more need for investment in these areas? Absolutely. And 20 per cent cuts and laughing at people who are in pain is no way to do that, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Women's Political Participation

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the recent UCP convention a member of that party and a former MLA in this House suggested that it was humiliating and patronizing that Executive Council currently has more women than men. She implied that women who currently serve as ministers were apparently, unlike any men who had served in those roles before, appointed merely for their gender rather than their qualifications and experience. Now, if true, that's very troubling for the Albertans who depend on them to govern our province. So on behalf of the Premier, to the Minister of Status of Women: can you please clarify the policy of our government in choosing who will serve on Executive Council?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the important question. Our government is taking concrete steps to make life better, fairer, and safer for Alberta's women. The Conservatives have the wrong priorities. They would make life harder for women in Alberta if given the chance. You know, it's not difficult to name a gender-balanced cabinet when you have an embarrassment of riches when it comes to our members' qualifications, and because of the strong women's presence in our caucus and cabinet women have been at the heart of all our decision-making. That's why we're investing in affordable child care, making historic investments in funding for women's shelters and sexual assault services, and introducing legislation like Bill 9 that ensures ...

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the same individual derided the suggestion that women face economic, social, or other barriers to choosing to run for political office as socialist crap and given that the former interim leader of the federal Conservatives suggested that the issue is simply one of women not being invited to get involved or offering them mentorship, to the Minister of Status of Women: have you considered directing any of your grant funding to supporting such a unique and novel initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Increasing the democratic participation of women is an issue that our government takes very seriously. That's why we launched programs like the ready for her initiative and supported community-driven initiatives like Ask Her in Calgary. We also gave grants to a number of organizations like the Altview Foundation for Gender Variant and Sexual Minorities, where we provided a grant for conferences to empower and mentor women and gender-diverse persons with their political goals; the Grande Prairie Friendship Centre, where we gave $50,000 for a program to encourage indigenous women to run for office or be active in politics; and the IAAW, where we provided $100,000 for the development of a strategy ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that at this same convention the former interim leader of the federal Conservative Party derided thinking of women as tokens, saying that they don't want any special treatment, and given that the former interim leader of the Wildrose suggested that quotas to recruit women are condescending and paternalistic, to the Minister of Finance: given that the number of women on Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions has gone from 32 per cent to 50 per cent, can you clarify how our government's policy has accomplished this without condescending to or insulting women?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To answer that, let me take you back to a time when Conservative Premiers with their aura of power reigned supreme from their sky palaces, a time when only Conservative friends and insiders were eligible for board and executive roles and were handed taxpayer-funded perks like golf club memberships. Today we make appointments based on what you know, not who you know. Government appointments are now posted online and open to all Albertans. We are putting people with the right skills into those roles, and we are proud to have achieved gender parity on our boards, just like we have in cabinet. That's something we're proud of.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll begin again in 30 seconds.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I have several documents I'd like to table. The first one is regarding the question that I had earlier about a request from an 86-year-old constituent that I'll quote here. It says, "What is a reasonable time frame to await placement while at risk? I think that 9 months is too long!" This is obviously problematic.

Then what I have are two letters, one from an ADM from the government, from John Thomson. He says in this, "Bonnylodge is currently at capacity and has an extensive waitlist. The waitlist is based on priority of need and, unfortunately, it is not possible to expedite your mother's placement on the waitlist." It's clearly because of an income threshold, not because of need. Her response was that when she had contacted the ministry, they didn't even have a file for them even though she had sent a letter and a hand-delivered one was given by myself to the minister – that original letter; sorry.

I have three doctors that have written recommendations that she be admitted into the local lodge. Again, this is for the safety of a senior who is 86 years old that wants to reside near family and friends in a place that she has resided in for over 46 years. I also have a picture of where she was injured. It is a terrible set of pictures where you see that she is all bruised from a fall that she had had. This is a clear reason why we need to really help this ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of all of the correspondence between the Health minister and Alexander First Nation on their project.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Jansen, Minister of Infrastructure, responses to questions raised by MLA McPherson, hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Hose Hill, and Dr. Starke, hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, Ministry of Infrastructure 2018-19 main estimates debate.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 18 Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

[Adjourned debate June 5: Mr. McIver]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: How much do I have left?

The Speaker: Five minutes left to speak.

Mr. McIver: Five minutes left. Okay. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to continue on Bill 18. As I say, it's the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. For the most part the bill truly is housekeeping, and since the government put time allocation and limited debate on the hiring of the Election Commissioner, I think it's important to remind the House that the process of hiring an independent officer that oversees an election should be the most nonpartisan piece of business that this House does. It should be a place where all parties should come together, where the government should actually do their best to look at the opposition – we get it. The government has the majority, and they can do whatever they want, rightly. I'm not saying that it's wrong. That's the definition of democracy. They can do what they want because they have the most votes in the House, but they need to have respect for the core principles of democracy.

The core principles would be that it should appear to Albertans that there is a fair, unbiased process for running an election, and of course that would include the fair, unbiased process for hiring those officers charged with the refereeing, if you will, the elections, monitoring the fairness of the elections, making sure the rules governing the elections are enforced in a way that's even-handed towards all parties and not stacking the deck for one side or another. I have no doubt that the commissioner hired will do that or do his best to do that.

The problem is that the government has put the commissioner in a bad place by not going about the hiring process in a way that is unbiased and in a way that values the opinions of the opposition parties. They didn't do it in a way that looks fair. They didn't do it in a way that seeks consensus. They didn't do it in a way that looks to anybody that measures the government's actions against the principles of democracy. They did it in a way that is open to criticism, and that is a shame.

Mr. Speaker, this is a House where we can disagree on a lot of things, and indeed that is our job. But when the government takes one of the core things that we shouldn't disagree on and turns the process into a partisan one, then of course we are left with questions, not the least of which is at this point the sunshine list, the fact that this adds the sunshine list. But what's interesting here and disappointing in the legislation is that Albertans won't find out the pay rate of their new Election Commissioner until after the next general election probably.

There you go, Mr. Speaker. The government had an opportunity to get it right. They did something else. They didn't get it right. They limited debate because they didn't want to hear about how they didn't get it right. And then when they found out that they got it wrong again and didn't get the commissioner on the sunshine list in legislation, they attempted to sneak that little detail into a statutes amendment act, which is in my view just one more admission that they didn't get it right. I'm happy to stand up and remind the government of that. All Albertans should be aware of that, and all Albertans should be very disappointed in this government and the way that they have added this section into Bill 18.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Hays?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, talking about a house-keeping bill is one of those things that, clearly, isn't probably a lightning rod, if you will, for many of our constituents. But I will say that the last time I had spoken on Bill 18, I had several questions that I have not heard answers to, and if I have, then I apologize. One of them was the fact that on Bill 18, if we go – the name of the bill is Statutes Amendment Act, 2018; again, this is a thrilling name for a bill, here – to

(2) The heading "Fair Trading Act" preceding section 1 is struck out and the heading "Consumer Protection Act" is substituted.

What we're doing here is more or less renaming an existing act, it appears to me. I'm not sure what we had as a problem, when it came to the fact that the Fair Trading Act seems to be very clear on what it was for. It was to promote consumer protection if you will.

Now, I do know that that's what they're naming it, Consumer Protection Act. Were there stakeholders out there that had said that they are unclear what the Fair Trading Act stood for? And if there were stakeholders out there, when it comes to this Fair Trading Act, what concerns exactly did they have that would actually reinforce this need for the government to want to change this act's name? What are the advantages? Is it bringing clarity to what is inside of the bill? Has the government done something that clearly has changed the intent of the act to something different?

Now, the Fair Trading Act is pretty straightforward, in my opinion. It appears, too, that this renaming of the act could be used to promote that the government has actually done something. I would say that renaming an act isn't actually doing anything other than potentially misleading Albertans into the understanding that this government is out to protect them. I'm not saying that they're not. Obviously, I believe that every member of this Chamber is out to protect the public, but we do need to be cautious that we're not promoting that we're doing something just by changing its name. It would be like me taking off my Ford nameplate, putting on there GMC, and saying that it's now a GMC truck, going out and saying to everybody that it's a brand new truck. Clearly, that would be misleading. If that is not what the government is intending to do, then I apologize, but it does seem that what we're trying to do here is to more or less tell Albertans that this government is out to do consumer protection, which is admirable, I have to say. Again, I believe every member here – I don't want to speak for everybody, but I'll speak for myself and my caucus – is out to actually protect consumers.

Now, another one that I had as a concern is on page 2 of the bill. What we're doing here is that the Alberta Corporate Tax Act is amended by this section. What we're seeing here is that the government is more or less adding the new Election Commissioner into the Alberta Corporate Tax Act. I had questioned before: are these powers that this new position actually needs? This is not something that is to be taken lightly, to be going out and just suddenly empowering an independent office with being able to go in and see corporate tax records. What exactly is this new position? What are they going to be doing with access through the Alberta Corporate Tax Act?

The way I can really look at it at this point is that corporate donations and union donations are exempt from donating to a nomination race, to a campaign, a leadership race. So when we've disqualified these corporations from contributing or creating an active role because we've actually brought forward third-party limitations as well, what happens here is that there's a question about why exactly it is that this new position, the Election Commissioner, needs access to corporate records. Now, I'm not saying that it's an unreasonable thing that the government is doing, but I want to understand what it is that they're trying to accomplish with that. I think that's a reasonable question. Why does this new position need that access? Can the existing CEO, the Chief Electoral Officer, not accomplish this through his access as well? The Chief Electoral Officer has access through the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, and he's able to go in and do the things that he needs to do there, so we do have a mechanism for ensuring that Alberta corporations are not donating inappropriately.

Again, it seems that there's a lot of duplication when it comes to the roles of this new position with our Chief Electoral Officer, and it's this duplication that is something that we need to acknowledge as a consistent problem within the government of Alberta. We need to find efficiencies, and we need to ensure that those efficiencies are brought forward because we are ultimately accountable to the taxpayer. We are ultimately trying to make sure that when every dollar of taxpayer money is spent, it is spent responsibly.

My question, again, on this next one here is: why is it that we have a new independent agency getting this access? Is it going to be something that is problematic later on, in the future, because we're going to find that we have competing roles between these two independent agencies? That is very troublesome, when you've got one agency competing with another agency for the same resources. My concern, as always, is: are we ensuring that we have an absolutely fair electoral process?

When we have the government getting up and saying that, you know, we're trying to pick on this new position, it clearly is not the case. I just want to understand why we're giving them that power. It seems that they're duplicating something that they don't need to. They're deeming this as a miscellaneous change or a statutes amendment act, so they're kind of sneaking this in and hoping that nobody asks the question so that they don't have to answer it.

When we've got this new position, the new Election Commissioner, in place, they're going to be going around and potentially going into areas where they're actually, maybe, not allowed to go. I don't understand. If the Election Commissioner gets a complaint, just because he has this act, it doesn't mean that he actually has the authority to investigate that.

Now, the problem here is that when we looked at the job description for this new position, it was very vague, so I really am unsure what the new Election Commissioner is going to do. I would say that that was one of my concerns when we brought it forward. This is a position that could potentially change the direction of an entire election because of the fact that we have a conflicting role, potentially, between the two independent agencies.

Clearly, I want to ensure that we're not duplicating with the money that our taxpayers are giving us. But we also need to make sure that the goal of bringing transparency and reliability to our electoral process isn't impaired by having duplication. Normally what happens when you have duplication within a system is that the two systems create holes in areas that weren't there before. Let's say that one thinks that one is doing it, and the other one is thinking that the other is doing it. And guess what? Nobody is doing it. A lot of times what happens is that the thing that is being missed or the gap in the system is usually very costly for the independent department or that group, so then in the end it's better for them to step back and say: let the other guy do it.

Now, we have seen that in other places. A good example would be our school system. I have a nephew who, as many of you know, has autism, a wonderful young man. I think he'll be an incredible Albertan when he gets a little older. What happened here was that we had three different organizations: the school board, FCSS, I believe, and a special board for children with disabilities. All three of them were pointing to each other, saying that his specific problem, which was language, being able to speak to others, was each other's problem, somebody else's. All three of them were pointing in different directions. None of them were taking responsibility for the fact that, in the end, my nephew wasn't getting any help. Clearly, there's duplication within that system. Clearly, it's not working the way that you would hope.

This is where my concern is when it comes to the new position that we've got, the Election Commissioner. If there's duplication there, are we going to be creating gaps that were never there before because the CEO, the Chief Electoral Officer, would have automatically taken responsibility for it because he was the only one there and he would've been the only one held accountable? When something bad happens, are we going to end up with two independent offices pointing at each other, saying: it's his fault or her fault? Clearly, that is not good for us. That's not good for Alberta's well-being because we depend on an impartial, reasonable, accurate election going forward. This is clearly something that we need to be cautious of when we're doing anything with that.

Again, I will get back to these miscellaneous changes. Does this new commissioner require access to the Alberta Corporate Tax Act?

Now, I will also ask the question – and, you know, I probably am going to get an answer that I'm expecting – that I don't understand why we are putting the Election Commissioner as a subclause to the Chief Electoral Officer. Does this matter? Does this mean that one office is subservient to another office? I see in other examples that we've got in here that that does happen with other commissions. That's been pointed out to me. But this is an important point. It's good that we clarify that if it is under the independent office of the Chief Electoral Officer, then really what we've done is created an office within an office, which is going to cause us immense grief because then we're going to have two offices, one trying to give direction to another office, which is not the intent of this House, I believe, that they're trying to create two independent offices.

Now, again, when it comes to this legislation, I will definitely lean to what the government is saying. If they say that it's not what their hope was and that it is not what that means, that's good to know. In the end, all I'm looking for are clear, concise, on-the-record responses from the government should a judge ever need to go back and look over these debates. Because in the end, it matters. It matters that we're clear and concise whenever we're discussing legislation what the intent of the government was at the time, not what the judge is trying to interpret that the government means.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always a pleasure to rise in this House to speak to legislation that affects all Albertans. Today is no exception, of course, as we speak to Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. Now, Bill 18 was originally intended as a miscellaneous statutes amendment act, but it does make minor wording changes to a number of different statutes. The proposed amendments are administrative, of course, or technical in nature, certainly not complex, not intended to deal with any controversial matter, and Bill 18 doesn't authorize the direct spending of money and does not create offences.

You know, Mr. Speaker, for the most part, I think this is a good act. I think that traditionally statutes amendment acts generally are good pieces of legislation. I think that probably most governments find that they need to do something like this as far as amendments are concerned and that it is something that is actually required now and then.

I believe that in the brief I looked at, the following departments have legislation included in Bill 18: Justice and Solicitor General, Labour, Municipal Affairs, and Service Alberta. Members of the Legislative Offices Committee would like to highlight the legislative change required to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act. This change is necessary to allow the public disclosure of the Election Commissioner's salary, which I'll speak to later.

The bill also deals with some pieces of legislation: A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, the Alberta Human Rights Act, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, the Auditor General Act, the Conflicts of Interest Act, the Consumer Protection Act, and the Election Act. I believe also that the Electronic Transactions Act is thrown in there, the Employment Standards Code, and the Financial Administration Act.

Usually with a bill like a statutes amendment act things go in the bill and they go by without too much discussion. Of course, most of the things in the bill are traditionally housekeeping measures, responsibilities of the government, perhaps a misspelled word or two within some of the documents, like I would have just mentioned there. Things like that. But it kind of looks to me like the government has chosen to slide a few things into the bill that they may not necessarily have wanted – I'll put it this way: maybe they didn't want the opposition to talk about anymore, kind of hoping that the bill would go through the House with some of that content not talked about. But because some of the content that I would suggest perhaps the government does not want to hear anymore about – understood – is the content that the Official Opposition talked about at length during our sitting last month, I think that it should indeed be talked about before Bill 18 passes.

I just want to make it clear that I and my colleagues will be supporting Bill 18, but because of the content of one particular issue, I think that many of my colleagues prior to today and today will probably be saying a few words to that particular issue, just as I'm about to do.

I guess I'd like to address the fact that I did notice that the Election Commissioner, the new position, is part of the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act. I do remember rather well that government MLAs were rather, I guess I would say, sanctimonious when we suggested the need to publicly disclose the salary of the Election Commissioner last month. They certainly had a bit of a holier-than-thou attitude when we suggested that the new Election Commissioner's salary be publicly disclosed. You know, Mr. Speaker, the government side of the House almost – well, not almost. The government side actually took the position that asking them to provide the salary of this new position, the Election Commissioner, publicly was some kind of an insult to the commissioner himself. The government was somehow appalled that the Official Opposition would actually ask for the salary of a new position of this government to be publicly disclosed.

Mr. Speaker, I think that you will remember that in this Chamber there has been a lot of discussion about the Election Commissioner position and what, indeed, that position was getting paid. The question was why the salary for the new position couldn't be posted on the sunshine list. That was an issue that the Official Opposition talked about in this Chamber several times last month. We truly do believe that there is a need for transparency on that sunshine list. We've come to that decision in this House, you will recall, that everyone in this House determined that part of having a good government was to disclose people's wages that reach a fairly substantial level, I guess I would say, and that those salaries would be added to the sunshine list. The Official Opposition wanted the Election Commissioner's wages to be disclosed and brought forward immediately so that the public could see just how much this person was going to be paid. Now, of course, we all know that the government did not support that idea.

Now, as we look at Bill 18, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act has been added to this bill, the Statutes Amendment Act, which just happens to include discussion about the Election Commissioner. Mr. Speaker, I think we all remember the discussions about the individual's salary and the fact that the government didn't want to make it public until some time in the future. In fact, all members kind of got to learn a little more about this position as the discussion continued, how the committee recommended his hiring and the government members, that held the majority, pushed that idea through that same committee. I believe that the members of the House will remember that four members that sat as Official Opposition on the committee, that actually sit on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, produced a minority report that explained all of the issues pretty much that I've just explained here and then some.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to remember that my good friend from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock proposed an amendment to Government Motion 16. I think the date of that proposed amendment was May 1. Now, you remember Government Motion 16. It was the motion that the government brought forward which recommended hiring Mr. Lorne Gibson as the Election Commissioner. I recall the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock telling the House how the opposition members of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices fought the appointment of Mr. Gibson at the search committee level for various reasons and then determined that some additional opposition to the government motion should be added when indeed Government Motion 16 came to the House.

As I said when I spoke to this last time, I understand that members of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices have been involved with a number of search committees over a period of time, and in all of those cases all members had a very good working relationship and, most importantly, were in all of those instances able to come to unanimous consent, unanimous support. So if you consider the Auditor General position or the Ombudsman position, those were all passed unanimously, the decision of who that person would be. I just believe that there was some good communication between all party members, that all the voices at the table were heard, and there was more of a robust discussion that led to a unanimous decision.

What happened with the proposal to appoint this election officer was a little more partisan, as our friend from Westlock – what is it?

The Speaker: Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. Schneider: There you go. You've said it more times than I have.

The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock – there you go – told us in the House of discussions that were held in the standing committee, certainly not discussions that were held in camera, but in discussions that they had with Mr. Gibson during his interview on the fact that he may have somewhat of a bias against the government of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, you'll recall that the reason for that bias was the fact that the contract that Mr. Gibson had with the Alberta government was allowed to expire in 2009. Subsequently Mr. Gibson determined to sue the government of Alberta for wrongful dismissal. You'll recall that when that case got to court, the judge determined that the government of the day had indeed not dismissed or fired Mr. Gibson, as today's government would like everyone to believe, but that, rather, his contract had simply been allowed to expire. This is something that happens in business. It happens all over the place. Those are actually two different things.

Now, this government has gone to a lot of work to see that this same individual is now hired again by the government of Alberta to fill a newly created position called the Election Commissioner. You know, it seems that, Mr. Speaker, actions like this almost seem to be becoming habitual for today's Alberta government.

Just last week my colleague from the outstanding riding of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills asked a question just about every day during question period about a person that quit their job with the government of Alberta and within 48 hours was immediately rehired by the government of Alberta even though he is working and living outside of the province and being paid a five- or six-figure salary. We're not exactly sure about that one because their job description certainly hasn't been made public. There are a lot of things that we don't know about that particular job and its salary, and I commend the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for the good work that he did on that file.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that's just another faux pas, it seems, of a government that hasn't dotted its i's and crossed its t's. Albertans that talk to us are wondering how the government is spending their money and what benefit they are getting for the money that is being spent. They are concerned and rightfully so, it seems.

What we do know, Mr. Speaker, is that the amendment to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act was indeed necessary. We know that Bill 18 is bringing the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act into the Statutes Amendment Act and is indeed absolutely necessary because, you see, the Government House Leader on the 8th made it clear to the House that he'd actually provided inaccurate information to the House with regard to the public disclosure of this officer's salary. He admitted on that day that legislative changes would indeed be required in order to make that happen. You know what? Everybody makes mistakes. Everybody makes mistakes.

I remember speaking to Motion 16 in the House last month. I remember the whole discussion that revolved around this new position and, certainly, the salary of the position. We know that this Election Commissioner position is a position that was just newly created by the government. We also know that the job this new Election Commissioner will be doing is already, for the most part, being done by the Chief Electoral Officer. Now, the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Glen Resler, reminded the committee while he was there to report to the committee that he had not had a chance to comment on the bill that actually created the position of Election Commissioner, so you can imagine how the Chief Electoral Officer may have been feeling.

Now, I think it would be fair to say that the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta has been held in high regard throughout this province. He's done his job very ethically. I think there would be not too many that would be able to challenge that statement. He has served the electoral process in Alberta well. Now, he stated, when he was asked to present to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices in regard to election investigations, that he actually had no issues handling current complaints that came into his office in regard to investigations, that he was able to handle all of the complaints in his regular duties as Chief Electoral Officer. So just to recap that, the Chief Electoral Officer made it clear that he had no problems or issues.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions for the Member for Little Bow under 29(2)(a)?

Do any other members wish to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Bill 2 Growth and Diversification Act

[Debate adjourned June 5]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise here to speak on third reading of Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. This bill is proposing, of course, to use a mixture of incentives, also called taxpayers' money, to encourage diversification in Alberta's tech sector. Alberta's United Conservatives do not support this type of approach. What we see with Bill 2 and why we are not supporting it is that the NDP is trying to put a Band-Aid on cuts created by the sharp knife of the carbon tax and all of their, you know, other fiscal policies that have not really, necessarily, had such a warm reception from many of the public-sector folks that I've spoken to.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 2 is another one of those pieces of legislation the NDP proposes because it continues to err with its economy-killing policies. So what does it do? In typical fashion it plays the game of trying to make winners by offering a suite of tax credits in this particular bill. Albertans have never liked that approach. In fact, as a fourth-generation Albertan and somebody who has spoken to many business owners in Calgary-West, that certainly isn't an approach that they appear to like or enjoy. You know, they see right through it, the folks that I've been speaking with. What they want is, of course, a strong economy, an economy that is freed from the chains of the poor fiscal policies such as the carbon tax.

Let me point out an example of the problem with Bill 2, which it purports to be fixing. This proposed legislation continues the Alberta investor tax credit, yet that targeted tax credit left $1.4 million on the table, Mr. Speaker. This might indicate that the government has had a lower than anticipated interest in this tax credit because it is narrow and very sector specific. Another possibility is that the government has not been able to efficiently and effectively distribute this money to investors.

Clearly, there are questions about this tax credit and how it's performing. Why serve up millions of dollars of taxpayers' funds before understanding if the sector needs that extra bit of offering? As we've, you know, seen over and over again, Mr. Speaker, this government has not provided any analytics to show whether it's even performing as it had anticipated, perhaps because it didn't set any benchmarks to begin with. Benchmarks, of course, are very important when putting policies forward. That, too, unfortunately, is typical of this government.

The UCP members tried in the standing committee on economic development to convince this government to do an economic impact study on the carbon tax, which, of course, is very, very important. It certainly made sense and could have warded off bills like this one that just offer a fix for something that needs axing, not fixing, and that is, of course, the carbon tax, Mr. Speaker. As the government raises the carbon tax, which the NDP is happy to do at the behest of their friend Mr. Justin Trudeau, the Prime Minister of Canada, they will have to increase the Alberta investor tax credit. That is a question, of course, that we have to ask.

What about the others, Mr. Speaker? The AITC is only one of a suite of tax credits adjusted or introduced in Bill 2. A concern is that the government is playing favourites by keeping the focus of the tax credits on a relatively narrow sector of industries, and that, of course, again is a concern. Is this the right approach for Alberta? The folks that I've spoken to in Calgary-West don't believe that it is.

Now, we maintain that the government should place its focus elsewhere than in creating boutique tax credits like the ones in Bill 2. A good example of a more fruitful way to assist businesses is by reducing red tape. It may seem obvious, Mr. Speaker. If the NDP were actually to ask industry what would benefit them the most, they would hear about the benefits of getting rid of or eradicating the regulatory burdens that are placed upon many of these businesses. Allow me to note what the CFIB said about the red tape.

Alberta is the only provincial government in Canada that refuses to be publicly accountable for the regulatory burden . . . Last year, a private members' bill to put constraints on regulators was voted down. While taking responsibility for red tape can be challenging, experience shows that it can be done if there is the will.

The bill that the CFIB was referring to was introduced by my colleague and friend the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, a very good and common-sense bill that would have ensured that any time the government introduces a new regulation, it deleted one on the books, maybe too common-sense for this government, Mr. Speaker. I know that my friend from Cardston-Taber-Warner put a lot of, you know, effort into that bill and a lot of thought and consulted with businesses, and it was certainly what he believed to be a good, common-sense bill that I think would be able to assist businesses in dealing with, of course, the regulatory burdens that have been placed upon them.

As evidenced by Bill 2, they prefer to introduce unnecessary means to supposedly help business instead of taking measures that actually do help them. Instead of reviewing the technology sector's real needs before introducing tax credits or increasing and adjusting others, the NDP goes forth and multiplies, sadly, its mistakes.

The minister spoke of levelling the playing field in a speech referencing the fact that this government has now put Alberta in competition with the rest of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I'm happy for Alberta to compete for economic investment. Of course, that's something that is welcomed in Alberta. But the point is that before the government came into power, Alberta had already been dominating that field for a great deal of time. Before the NDP came into power, Alberta was a key player on that field. Then this government implemented numerous policies, some of which were misguided, and blew up that particular field. Now they are trying to level it again. It doesn't make sense to me. They should have been more careful not to destroy, you know, a field that they were playing on in the first place.

What this government does not seem to realize, even after all of this time, is that industry does not need government to hold its hand. In fact, many of the businesses which I have spoken to and many of the business owners in Calgary-West want government to essentially leave them alone. They want to pay their fair share of taxes, but they are not looking for increased burdens or incentives or handouts. They just want the ability to, you know, have a business, grow that business, employ people, provide a positive impact on the economy not only in their local area but, of course, in Alberta as a whole. Many of these businesses and entrepreneurs provide a positive impact to Canada as well.

Industry just needs government to stop, you know, tripping them up at every turn, every stop. Before Bill 2 moved to its final stage in this legislative process, we urged this Assembly to send this bill to committee for review. They would have none of it, sadly, which I think is very disappointing. I think it's very important that we have that consultation, that review, hearing from those necessary stakeholders in order that we provide a really sound decision for the people of Alberta. This government, sadly, appears to be very happy just to write cheques, never knowing whether they make that difference or not. That goes back to what I was saying earlier about having those benchmarks. It's important to have those benchmarks so that you know if what you're investing in is successful or not successful.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has had six credit downgrades since 2005, all after the NDP formed government. I've had this unique opportunity in my second term. Although my first term was very short, just six months, I can tell you, from the people that I spoke to during the massive number of doors that I knocked on, whether it be in 2014 or whether it be in 2015, that there was a huge sense of pride in having a triple-A credit rating, and it was one that actually took me aback a bit.

My background, Mr. Speaker, as you know, is in law enforcement. I'm not necessarily a businessman, we'll say, although I do have some management background. I was surprised when going to those doors. Knowing that we had that triple-A credit rating, many people just appeared to wear that as a badge of honour. So I feel that, sadly, the multiple downgrades, if I was to talk from my perspective in law enforcement, have had a serious impact on what I would call morale of what we would call in this case the people of Alberta. I think that the downgrades and the lowering of those credit ratings has had more of a significant impact on the people of Alberta than maybe this government tends to even realize.

Thanks to our Finance minister we know that Alberta's debt is projected to reach $96 billion. And our six downgrades, right? [interjections] Yeah. Thank you. Should the NDP continue in government, of course, until 2024, you know, I certainly would have some concerns about any further increases to debt and forecasting and going down this particular path, Mr. Speaker.

So while Bill 2 isn't the most expensive policy decision the NDP has made, it's typical of its practice of Band-Aiding on top of Band-Aiding, and this, Mr. Speaker, has got to stop. You know, we can send a strong message by voting this bill down together, collectively, as a group, as Members of this Legislative Assembly.

The CFIB tells us from its surveys with the business community that 92 per cent of business owners are not confident that this NDP government is committed to improving the business climate. We have all kinds of examples of, you know, business-killing policies that have been put forward over the last several years. One of its first moves was to increase taxes on larger businesses and high-income earners, then it piled on environmental and other regulations with little, if any, consultation with those affected, and then it focused on measures such as the minimum wage, that increased labour costs. Sadly, again, many of the businesses I have spoken to have had to cut corners, lay people off, raise prices as a result of those increased labour costs, which is very disappointing, Mr. Speaker.

What does it have to deflect from? It chooses specific sectors to hand out its tax credits to. [Mr. Ellis's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions to the Member for Calgary-West under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-West for his comments on this bill. His presentation I found interesting. I do have a question that follows up on some of the content that the hon. member discussed. He brought up some of the concerns that are happening in his constituency. In fact, actually, I have a quote here that is very applicable to the Member for Calgary-West's constituency. It's from the Calgary Chamber of commerce. It says, "It's becoming harder to run a successful business in Calgary." The reason that the Chamber cites for that is the carbon tax in addition to rising labour costs, increasing personal and corporate taxes, and the layers of government costs associated with government policy.

In another one, which the hon. member spoke about – but I think it's worth repeating – the Finance minister just a few moments ago confirmed this statistic, which was very helpful. The CFIB says that 92 per cent of business owners are not confident the Alberta government is committed to improving the business climate.

Certainly, in the member's constituency and in the member's hometown, the city that he comes from, things are still not well. I know that's how it is in the communities that I represent. There's still no confidence in this government. I think a lot of that has to do with the fact that this NDP government implemented several economically damaging policies. Alberta was already an attractive place to invest, but when this government came into place, they focused so much on their ideology and did not listen to the people that were being hurt as a result of that ideology. Now we see the results.

Here they come, and instead of fixing those damaging policies, instead of recognizing that the decisions that the NDP government in Alberta has made over the last few years have had significant consequences for job creators in our communities, they want to gloss over that and hope that Albertans will forget that. They want to bring in a very limited program instead of doing what they should do – and I want to see if the hon. member agrees with me – which is reduce regulatory and tax burdens for businesses, reduce them for investors, and get out of the way. I think the hon. member said that his constituents just want the government to get out of their way.

Since this NDP government has come into power, in 2015, all this party across from me can do is get in the way of job creators. It's caused devastating impacts on Albertans and on the people we represent. I wonder if the member would expand on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you. Thank you to the hon. member who just spoke, as well as to you, Mr. Speaker.

Yes, certainly, as I previously mentioned, we do have many business owners in Calgary-West who are having challenges in getting money from investors. We have a government that is essentially getting, you know, in the way. We talked about labour costs there with some of the restaurant owners that I was talking to. I'll just be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I had an opportunity to go out with some stakeholders to a restaurant, and in speaking with the server, she was very excited to show me an iPad that she was using in order to conduct her business as a server. She indicated that when she became proficient on that iPad, she would be given a larger section. A result of that larger section would be that some of her colleagues would be laid off. That was very disappointing to hear.

We're seeing the increased costs and burdens on these businesses. Again, many stakeholders in Calgary-West are really just wanting this government to, you know, kind of get out of the way and allow them to be the job creators and that backbone of industry in order to continue to support the people in the community, in order to provide good jobs, good, mortgage-paying jobs for other people not only in Calgary-West but in Calgary as well as Alberta as a whole.

I think it is very, very important that the regulations be, you know, taken back a bit and that we really just allow businesses to flourish.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House . . .

Mr. Nixon: Let's not forget Sundre today, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: . . . Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: We can't forget about the good people of Sundre.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to talk about Bill 2 in third reading. I think it's important that we acknowledge as we discuss Bill 2 the reason that we find ourselves in this situation. Alberta was one of the greatest districts in the world to invest in. We had the Alberta advantage. We were the envy of the world in many aspects. Then in 2015 the NDP government was elected, and they took that Alberta advantage and just basically threw it out.

They came into this place, and from the moment that they arrived in Edmonton, from the moment that they were sworn into government – Mr. Speaker, I know that you've had a front-row seat to watch it for the last three years – they focused on their ideological agenda. They focused on implementing ideological policy and legislation that did not benefit Albertans, that sometimes maybe benefited friends or people associated with the NDP. It certainly did not benefit everyday Albertans, not the Albertans that I represent. They brought in these ideological policies, damaged our economy at the worst possible time, during a terrible recession, refused to listen to anybody, including their own constituents – we hear all the time everywhere we travel in the province, in NDP ridings how frustrated they were about that – and then blindly followed their ideology.

A couple of examples, Mr. Speaker. Let's start with the first. They brought in a royalty review right in the middle of one of the worst recessions, the worst recession in my lifetime and in the lifetimes of many people in this Chamber. They focused on a royalty review, which did what?

Mr. Speaker, I actually should back up. What happened when they started to talk about a royalty review? What did the opposition tell them? "This is going to scare away investment. You're going to scare away investment at the worst time, when our constituents are losing their homes, losing their cars, or having trouble getting their children into university. You're going to make a terrible situation worse. You're going to scare away our job creators and send them to places elsewhere, where they're going to be treated appropriately. You're going to create instability within our system at the absolutely wrong time."

Now, what did the government do? They went ahead, and they did it anyway. They did a full royalty review, and in the end, Mr. Speaker, they barely changed anything. But during that royalty review, just as the opposition predicted, billions and billions and billions of dollars of investment left this province, and it hasn't come back. It has not come back.

In fact, the hon. Leader of the Opposition was in Toronto not too long. He was talking about this the other day in the Chamber. Mr. Speaker, I don't know if you caught that. He was meeting with some investors on Bay Street, big investors who like Alberta, who made it clear that they put one big red X on investing in Alberta until one condition is fixed. You know what that condition is? That this NDP government is no longer in power. That's how badly they screwed up doing stuff like the royalty review.

Billions of dollars in investment gone; my constituents and your constituents, many of them struggling to make home payments, sitting in the unemployment line for well over years; record – record – unemployment out of this government: they're proud of that? Sometimes they want to stand up and high-five each other and declare victory on different things, like they tend to do in this Chamber, although there is no victory. You know, the Deputy Premier on that issue rose not too long ago in this Chamber and said that those couple of hundred thousand people who've lost their jobs under this NDP government's watch were just an opportunity cost for them to bring in their ideological agenda. It's shameful, Mr. Speaker. It's shameful.

Bringing a bill like Bill 2 to the floor, you know, that goes nowhere near beginning to fix the issues that this government brought forward or have caused as a result of their ideological agenda, is also shameful. This government knows what they need to do if they want to fix some of the damaging policies that they brought forward, but they won't because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, they can't see beyond their ideological views. They can't see beyond them. They're so focused on that bubble of the NDP world view.

Again, this is a government who has stood in this Chamber and admitted that they had to hire tremendous people that did not live in this province, in the Deputy Premier's own words, because she could not find people in the province of Alberta that shared her world view. That shared her world view. She had to go hire other people. She's admitted it on Hansard. I was shocked. I'm sure you were shocked, Mr. Speaker, when she said that.

Ms Jabbour: She didn't say that.

Mr. Nixon: Folks, the Member for Peace River is saying that the Deputy Premier did not say it. She did say that.

But let's talk about Peace River for a while. Let's talk about the damaging policies in Peace River, in that member's constituency. Not too long ago I had the privilege of visiting La Crête. Devastated by the decisions of this government. Devastated by it – they talk about it all the time – and frustrated with the lack of representation that they get from this government on these important issues.

The royalty review, and now another example. Then this government focuses on raising taxes. Often when we talk about them raising taxes, they want to point out that Alberta has, you know, the best tax advantage in the country. That may not be true anymore, but if it is true, I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and the hon. Member for Calgary-West, who are here today from the former government, who created that tax advantage.

This government began to systematically take it apart the moment that they took office. Again, scaring away investors, scaring away job creators, costing Albertans more money at the worst possible time, when they were dealing with the worst recession in the history of this province.

Now, where do they go after that? They bring forward a bill, a bill that has become – I don't even know what to call that bill. It was so outrageous.

Mr. McIver: Notorious.

Mr. Nixon: Notorious. Thank you, hon. member. Notorious.

A bill that attacked rural Alberta, a place that is near and dear to me. I'm proud to be a rural Albertan, Mr. Speaker. We stood here, and one of the first – I think it was in the second sitting of this government when they brought forward a piece of legislation that outraged rural Alberta. The NDP will never win a seat in rural Alberta for a very long time because of that bill, I predict. We'll see if I'm right. It outraged farmers and ranchers across this entire province. Without even talking to them, they brought in legislation that changed their whole way of life, that would not fit, and still – still – they haven't been able to get the regulations to work because they won't talk to farmers and ranchers. Farmers and ranchers need to be consulted before you change the rules of their operation.

Worse than that, Mr. Speaker, they went far enough that they almost collapsed the entire family farm, which is the majority of the agriculture industry in our province. If it was not for the opposition, supported by constituents from every corner of this province, who came to this place, who rallied on the steps, who said, "We will not accept this," kids in 4-H, farmers and ranchers, my neighbours and friends, who watched this government stand in this House and even accuse them of deliberately trying to hurt workers – they stood up, and in the end the government brought in an amendment that was able to save the family farm but still left the rest of the bill in place, that they have not been able to implement.

They haven't been able to implement it because it's just a mess. But it left the rest of the bill in place and created a tremendous amount of red tape, hurting our second-largest industry at the exact worst time that you could ever think of because our first-largest industry was in a crisis situation during the recession.

In the communities that I represent, Mr. Speaker, if it was not for the agriculture industry over the last few years, we would have been in significantly worse shape. As the energy industry crashed around us, our agriculture industry carried us forward. Not only did they carry us forward economically, keeping our towns operating, they still continued to feed us and feed the world despite this government working against them each and every day. The worst part about that is that the rural members of their caucus supported that. That's what they brought forward.

If you were an investor in the agriculture industry, would you want to come and invest right now inside this province when you know that you have a government that is willing to completely attack that industry and the people that work in it so savagely, that shows so little regard for that industry? Of course not, Mr. Speaker. You would not want to come and participate in that.

Another example, Mr. Speaker. This is in some ways probably the most terrible thing that this government did. They brought in a carbon tax that not one of these members – not one of these members – when they campaigned to come to this place talked about with their constituents, not at one door, not in anything, not in any document, didn't bring it up at all, hid it completely from Albertans, part of their hidden agenda.

Then they came into this place, put in a carbon tax that absolutely damaged our economy, continues to damage our economy. But further than that, not only damaging our economy and hurting everyday Albertans as they pay their bills, they went and attacked the very social fabric of many of our communities: seniors' centres, swimming pools, arenas, schools, municipalities, on and on and on, nonprofits, food banks, women's shelters, on and on. This government won't do anything about it. Nothing. So, again, they created a situation that is not great for investors.

Then, of course, we know that the minimum wage increases that this government has done under their watch have resulted in tens of thousands of jobs across this province going away, you know, and are having significant impacts on some of the other small employers in our communities, on youth employment as well. It's so disappointing.

Now here we are. The NDP realizes that they completely made a mess of this situation. Maybe they don't even realize it – who knows anymore at this point with this government – but they certainly did create a mess of it. The record is clear. The majority of Albertans certainly agree. Instead of doing what they should do, which is reverse their damaging policies, reduce the regulatory and tax burdens that they put on businesses and on investors, Mr. Speaker, what do they do instead? They bring in Bill 2, that is focused on very limited sectors, that does not help the broader province. For significantly less money they could just reduce their damaging policies and let businesses come and do their job.

Mr. Speaker, this is a government that under their watch has seen that 92 per cent of business owners – 92 per cent of business owners in this province – are not confident that the Alberta government is getting this right. Entrepreneurs in Alberta are the least confident in the entire country under this government. Entrepreneurs in Alberta are the least confident in the entire country. Alberta used to be the most entrepreneurial in the entire country. It used to be the beacon of that to this country. Now our entrepreneurs are the least confident in this entire country. Why? Because of the NDP's damaging ideological policies.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, I talked about this with the Member for Calgary-West. When I was speaking after his remarks, I asked him a question on a quote from the Calgary Chamber of commerce, inside our largest city, that it's becoming harder to run a successful business in Calgary under this NDP government's watch. Why do they say that? You know, all those members there want to roll their eyes over this, but the Chamber of commerce, who is not partisan, says that it's because of the carbon tax – I think I brought that up – rising labour costs, increased personal and corporate taxes, and the layered cost of government policy. That's what this government did.

It is further concerning to me with this legislation given that the NDP's track record on programs such as what's in Bill 2 has not been promising so far. There were difficulties and delays in providing the Alberta investor tax credit funding in a timely fashion last year. Everybody remember that? Meanwhile the interactive digital media tax credit program will not have any program or application details until the summer of 2018.

Madam Speaker, I do not know about the constituents in your constituency, but my constituents don't have time to wait anymore for this government to continue to play these games. Instead of trying to fix the mess that you created, the absolute devastation that you put on the people of Alberta, with a Band-Aid solution that only picks winners and losers – the government only gets to pick winners and losers for select groups – you should do what's right and immediately do what the large majority of Albertans are calling for and reverse the carbon tax immediately. This would be the first thing you could do. That's the number one thing you could do, and it would have a bigger impact than this bill.

Under these members' watch, Madam Speaker, they've watched investment flee – we saw it – because they won't take action beyond their ideological agenda. Kinder Morgan is a prime example. Everybody wants Kinder Morgan built in this House – it's good – but this government would not do the simple things that it would take. Actually, I shouldn't say that they'd be simple; they'd be hard. But they would not take the time to do the hard things. Get the protesters out of the way, shut the taps off to B.C., and say: build this pipeline instead of breaking the law.

Now, because they could not do that, we see a large investor, a private investor, taking billions of dollars out of our economy and elsewhere. This government failed, Madam Speaker. They failed, and you know what they did when they failed? They went outside the Legislature and high-fived themselves about billions of dollars of investment leaving this province. It was disgraceful. And still we're here with no clear explanation of how they're going to address it.

Instead they're bringing in a bill that has limited potential. While there are some good things within it for some good people and some good job creators, it certainly cannot turn around the mess that this government has made of the economy. It cannot turn around the mess that they have made of this economy.

4:00

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much. I'd like to thank the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for his comments. Madam Speaker, you know, as he was talking there, he made me think of our friend the late, great Manmeet Bhullar, former Member for Calgary-Greenway and, certainly, a football colleague of our friend from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I'll never forget when Mr. Bhullar said to the Minister of Finance: "Minister, 30 per cent of our income that comes in for Alberta comes from people who choose – who choose – to pay their taxes here in Alberta. If you raise the cost of personal income tax, if you raise the cost of corporate taxes, if you raise the overall cost to just do business, those people are going to choose to pay their taxes somewhere else." And from the numbers I have seen, those particular holes, I think – as we can see with our 9-plus billion dollar, it seems to me, annual deficit, those people have chosen to go somewhere else. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, I think, would probably love the opportunity to expand on our good friend Manmeet Bhullar and the wise words that he had.

I'll add one more thing. The response from our Finance minister was that those people are going to stay here because of the mountains and lakes and this beautiful sunshine that we have here. If he can expand on that, I'd appreciate that.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, hon. member. I'd be happy to expand on that. I'm always happy to talk about my friend the late, great Manmeet Bhullar. His comments were exactly right, and the Finance minister's comments were wrong. The Finance minister wanted to talk about staying here because of mountains and lakes. I have the privilege of representing one of the most beautiful mountain areas in not just the entire province or country but the world, hands down.

Mr. Carlier: Or the universe.

Mr. Nixon: The minister of agriculture says: the universe. If he takes a ride up highway 11 and goes to the Columbia Icefield, he may actually say that by the end of that ride on his motorcycle. Absolutely, it's a beautiful place.

I can tell you that people fled our communities not because they wanted to but because the job creators in our communities left. Our population started to drop underneath this NDP government more significantly. Our employers left and went to other jurisdictions in the world, sometimes to dictatorship jurisdictions, because of the decisions that this government was making.

Madam Chair – I got used to committee the last few days. Sorry, Madam Speaker. If the Finance minister of Alberta thinks that he can destroy the entire economy and that the mountains and the lakes are going to keep everybody here, that probably shows you what the biggest problem we have here right now is, that the NDP are completely out of touch and they don't care. That's the biggest thing that I hear right now, and I'm sure the hon. member would agree with me right now. Everywhere I go in this province right now, they say: "The NDP government does not care. They don't care about us. They tell us to finance to pay for our carbon tax. They tell us to shut our swimming pools and not let our kids have a place to recreate to pay for their ideological carbon tax." They attack farmers and ranchers. They attack rural Alberta. They do not care about our province. Certainly, the way they act shows that they don't care.

The comments from the Finance minister saying that the mountains will be able to overcome his $10 billion deficit or $9 billion and change deficit, his budget that puts us on track for $96 billion in debt, borrowing money against my children's and my grandchildren's and my great-grandchildren's futures – I mean, as I said before, one of the largest intergenerational thefts, in my perspective and in many Albertans' perspective, is being undertaken by this Finance minister and this government.

And what happens? If Manmeet was here today, I know what he would say. He would say to the backbenchers of this government: "Shame on you. Why have you not stood up – why have you not stood up – to this cabinet? Why have you not stood up for the people that you represent?" That's what he would have said. In fact, I watched him say it in this Chamber many times. He would have said: shame on you. He would have. That's what he would have said. He's not here to say it, so on behalf of Manmeet I say it: shame on you. You have a responsibility to stand up for your constituents.

Instead, you have continued – the Minister of Education: he has a responsibility to stand up for his constituents, too. He does, Madam Speaker. Through you to him: stand up for your constituents. But you won't. Instead, you come here and heckle and continue to bring in brutal, damaging policies to the people I represent. You continue to attack the communities that I represent, and that's what the opposition is frustrated about, and that is what Albertans are frustrated about. They've had enough of this government and their ideological agenda. They've had enough of it.

As for the Member for Calgary-West's point . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and offer a few comments, if I can, on some of the statements that we . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, did you move third reading of this bill?

Mr. Schmidt: I did. This is 29(2)(a).

The Acting Speaker: No. The time is up under 29(2)(a). You'll have to wait till the next time.

Mr. Schmidt: Oh.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: All right. We're back on focus here. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. Bill 2: my colleagues have made some very good comments that I hope the government is paying attention to, but they have only touched, scratched the surface on the damage that this government has done to this province, damage that Bill 2 is not going to come anywhere near fixing.

Since this government has come to power, they have – you know what? Here's the thing. Some of my colleagues talked a little bit about some of the things that this government has done, and one of the things that they touched on was the royalty review. They're correct in what they said. Having a royalty review at a time when the industry was under great stress was a really bad idea. Again, as my colleague said on this side of the House, billions of dollars of investment have flown, have left Alberta, and have not come back.

But here's the thing. This is what's really interesting, Madam Speaker. Even when they did that, they almost didn't get it all wrong. Almost. What I mean by that is that when they – I was there the day that they announced the results of the royalty review. Frankly – and I've said this publicly before, so no one should be shocked – I said that I was pleasantly surprised with the recommendations from the royalty review, which is to say that they didn't really change anything much. They tinkered with a couple of things, tried to make it better, but they didn't really make anything bad. The problem was the months that they went through leading up to that, letting industry and business think that they were going to get damaging policies coming in. It drove a bunch of investment out.

Here's the thing. When they released the recommendations from the royalty review, they weren't bad, because what the government realized is that all the bad things they said about the system before and how Albertans weren't getting their fair share – essentially, the conclusion was that Albertans really were getting their fair share, which is why they didn't have to make a big change. As much as there was damage that was inflicted upon Alberta's economy for months on end before they gave the – because, of course, the government members, through the election and then after, were saying: "Oh, we're going to get our fair share. We're going to take a lot more out of the industry."

Of course, the industry is saying: well, these people are going to fleece us like crazy. No wonder they left, because margins, in many cases, were tight. A lot of business is tough to do. Business was having a hard time making the type of money that they would like to make, and then you've got a government standing up saying: we're really going to give it to you with the taxes now. Then at least at the royalty review part: they got them with the taxes in a lot of other areas, but in the royalty review part they didn't. You know what? I would say that confidence was restored to a certain degree in the industry.

The problem is that it was restored for 10 seconds, and then the Premier and the Finance minister said: we are not going to raise your royalties – wait for it, Madam Speaker – yet. All that goodwill: out the window. They had 10 good seconds, though. They were a glorious 10 seconds when the industry thought the government got it right.

Then the Finance minister and the Premier stood up and said: "We won't raise the royalties yet. In other words, we know you're not making much money now. We know you're hurting. We know you're having a hard time staying in business. We know you're having a hard time to afford to employ Albertans. But we're just putting you on notice that the minute it gets better, we're going to take that away from you and make sure you're always just barely making a living. We're never going to let you live. We're never going to let you have a decent return to your shareholders. We're never going to let you thrive. We're never going to let you have enough profit left over to invest in new jobs, new technology, new inventions, new employment, a future for Albertans, for our grandchildren."

But they were a glorious 10 seconds before the government shot itself in the foot, Madam Speaker. I was cheering for those 10 seconds. I remember it so well because in the three-plus years that the gang across the aisle has been in office, there have been very few opportunities to cheer them on. Those were a glorious 10 seconds, and I want to thank the government for those 10 seconds. Fabulous. Fabulous.

What I didn't know is that while I was so happy during the 10 seconds, they were loading the gun, figuratively, to shoot themselves in the foot because, of course, all that confidence that the industry had went away about 10 seconds later, when they used the word "yet." We're going to hurt you later, not today, but as soon as we think you're doing well, we're going to hurt you again financially: that was the message from the Finance minister, the message from the Premier. All that goodwill, the fabulous, glorious, wonderful, outstanding, stupendous, exciting, good, great 10 seconds: it all went whoosh in about half a second after the 10 seconds. But I just have to say it again: those were a fantastic 10 seconds, really, really good. I will say my whole life that I was there in person – in person – in the same room to enjoy those 10 seconds. Man, that was great. That was fantastic.

Now the government wants to undo all of that damage with some boutique tax credits. You know what? I will agree with what some of my colleagues said: they're not all bad. The problem is that they're not going to undo the damage that this government has done. They're not going to undo the corporate tax increases. They're not going to undo the personal tax increases. They're not going to undo the job-killing, spirit-breaking carbon tax, that makes it more expensive for kids to swim in warm water, that makes it more expensive for kids to skate on cold ice because they get nailed with the carbon tax both ways. It's more expensive either way with this government. There's no getting around it. Everything that people pay for is more expensive.

In fact, the government pretty much acknowledges it constantly in, you know, the fact that they spend a good part of what they collect in the carbon tax to undo the damage of – wait for it – the carbon tax. They're giving 40 per cent of it, a large percentage, back to people in rebates. In other words, they're spending money from the carbon tax to undo the damage of the carbon tax. Well, maybe you just don't put the carbon tax on in the first place. You don't have to undo all the damage. Then you caused whole towns with coal mines to be damaged and have a big hole put in their employment. Then they spend more millions of dollars out of the carbon tax to – wait for it – undo the damage of the carbon tax. This is the track record of this government: make a big old mess, and then throw money at it to try to have people forget that they made the big old mess. It's really, really, really unfortunate the way they're doing this.

Here's the problem. We're hoping that we're going to have a different government in Alberta next year. None of us know that. But even if we do, the way I look at it is that it's like, Madam Speaker, if I give you a shoelace and give you 10 minutes to tie knots in it, or if you give me a shoelace and you give me 10 minutes to tie knots in it. You and I won't be able to untie each other's knots in the same 10 minutes. It'll take hours. The whole problem is with the gang across here. They've made a mess of Alberta's economy, they've made a mess of everything in Alberta over four years, and it will take decades to undo the damage, the mess that this government has made. I believe that all Albertans will be in a big rush at election time to stop the mess that this gang is making and to look for somebody else to start fixing the damage that has been done in the last three years and will be done for four years by the time the next election comes.

Madam Speaker, that leads me to the place where I would like to move an amendment, please.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, can you just wait till I have a copy at the table, please?

Mr. McIver: Of course.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McIver: I'll stand silent until you give me permission, okay? Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, please go ahead. Your amendment will be referred to as amendment HA1.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that very much. If it's okay with you, I'll start by reading the amendment. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day three months hence.

Madam Speaker, based on this government's track record, I can't think of a more sensible amendment to make because, remember, this is a government that can't shoot straight. They get almost everything wrong that they do, and this legislation is another example. These things that they're trying to do for business, some of them are very good. The problem is that they're ignoring all the bad things they did. With some of these things the support for business would come in if they just hadn't killed and slowed down and damaged the amount of business that's already being done.

When hundreds of thousands of jobs left after this government came to power, a lot of those jobs were good, mortgage-paying jobs.

Here's the problem with that. Diversification is a good thing, and every government wants to bring in diversification. It will never be enough no matter how much is done because that's just the nature of the world. The fact is that it seems that almost every time the government makes a piece of legislation, they get it wrong, and many times they have to come back with one or two or three other pieces of legislation to fix all the things they got wrong the first time to get it right. This amendment would give the government three months to actually think about what they've done here and get some of the things right that they might have gotten wrong.

I know there will be members on the government side who say, "Oh, no; we don't do that," but, yeah, they do. Just this session they brought forward a bill that was four pages long. We on the Official Opposition side started pointing out that there were problems with the bill. They stood up, they stuck their chests out, and they said: "You people don't know what you're talking about. This is fantastic. It's fine. We've got it right. Why don't you just vote for it? If you love Alberta, you'll vote for it." Then we pointed out that there were things on the website that said three different things on the same topic, and then the minister, that two minutes before was saying that everything was perfect, said: "Well, yeah. Maybe this isn't right. Maybe we've got to do something different with that."

But wait. It gets better. A week later, a few days later, the same minister or another member of the government walks in and drops a three-page amendment on a four-page bill. Three pages of amendments on a bill they said was perfect. It was obviously not by our reckoning. But by the government's reckoning it was three-quarters wrong. Not just a little wrong. It didn't just miss dotting the i's or didn't just miss crossing the t's, didn't make a little mistake on page 2 that could easily be corrected. Three out of four pages of the legislation were wrong, not because I say so, Madam Speaker, but because the government said so, right after thrashing the opposition for criticizing their bill. "It's so great. It's perfect. We got everything right. Why don't you people listen? Why don't you pay attention? Why don't you do it our way?" Good thing we didn't pass the bill in one day because then they would've had to go and have a second bill with those three pages of amendments to correct the first bill.

So you see why this amendment is so important, Madam Speaker, because that gang can't shoot straight. They haven't been able to shoot straight for the whole three years they've had here, and they still can't shoot straight now. It's the way they operate. I don't know why that is. They are not able to get it right the first time. So I think that any time we give them a little bit of time to think about what they've done – and here's a great idea: talk to Albertans about it.

That's really one of their big failings. They don't actually talk to the people that their legislation affects. I know they sometimes go through the motions. We hear about meetings with the ministers, where they'll come in and the minister is answering e-mails or something while the staff is trying to carry on a conversation. Then: "All right. Your 30 minutes are up. Check. We met with that industry group." They didn't hear a thing they said, but they met with the industry group. That is the track record of this government in the way that they have operated for the last three years. And it's not once or twice. It's not one ministry or two ministries, Madam Speaker. It's just about the whole gang on the front bench. That's how they operate. Why?

We actually talk to Albertans, and Albertans tell us that. I know the government, some of them are probably a little bit embarrassed to hear this now, but that is what we constantly get told about the way that they operate when they talk to Albertans who are stakeholders and who legislation affects. It's dismissive, it's disrespectful, and there's not enough listening to know what is good, what Albertans want and what they don't want, which is why they're constantly getting themselves in trouble.

Now, Madam Speaker, every government gets themselves in trouble. The last government, the one I was part of, got themselves in trouble sometimes. You know when we got ourselves in trouble, in my opinion? In most cases it was when we were in a hurry. Because when you're in a hurry, you don't take the time to talk to Albertans as much as you should. You don't take the time. Because you know what? Everybody is entitled to bad ideas, and sometimes people have great ideas, but whether your idea is great or bad, you actually ought to test it out with the people it affects and maybe ask them before you commit it to legislation. When the old government sometimes didn't take the time to ask Albertans, they got in trouble, and the same is true with this government.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. I was listening to my colleague speak on the lack of consultation by this government, and what kept popping to mind every time he would say lack of consultation was Bill 6. That was where we more or less slapped all of our farmers and ranchers across the province in the face.

Now, why that is relevant here is that had we put forward a hoist like what my hon. colleague is doing right now, it would have given us some time to go out and talk with the farmers and ranchers that were clearly sending signals to this current government that they were very unhappy with the legislation that was being put forward. Had we been able to move that legislation forward in time just a little bit, do some consultation with those people that were going to be affected by it – you know, I can understand that the government had some concerns – I believe that what happens here is that they can work together and come up with a compromise that both the industry and government can move forward with.

But what we end up seeing is a government that moves head-on right into the empty pool, if you will. They go off the highest diving board they can find. They dive and do all their tricks all the way down, and when they hit the bottom, there's nothing there to catch them, just a cement bottom. What we've got here is a government that continues to follow that pattern of lack of consultation.

My question to my colleague. Bill 6 was one of the big failures of this government, and I would say that we still haven't seen the regulations come through from the government after. This was the first thing, one of the cornerstones, that they had brought forward to keep the farm workers safe. Now, to the member: do you think that had they not moved so quickly on it, that potential of this incredible incitement of all of our farmers and ranchers would have happened? Like with what's happening here, do you think that if they weren't rushing headlong into legislation, they might get it right?

The Acting Speaker: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank my hon. colleague for this question because he puts his finger right on the problem and the reason why everybody in this House should support this amendment. On Bill 6 it has been – what? – a year and a half, two years since they passed the legislation, and the government still hasn't come out with the regulations because they got the bill wrong. There are still regulations that are waiting to come out. Farmers and ranchers, afraid for their living, still don't know all the rules that are going to change under this government. When they brought it out, it was obvious. I mean, we had thousands of people from all over Alberta on the front steps of the Legislature with signs, yelling and screaming and singing and dancing and chanting and telling this government to stop. All those signs: kill Bill 6.

Meanwhile the government actually had the audacity to say: we are going to create a culture of safety. Albertans have been safely farming for over 100 years, maybe over 200 years, for a long, long time. I don't know when the first farm was. Yet this government had the courage, the audacity, the incredible lack of respect for the people that feed the rest of us to say that they needed to create a culture of safety, as if the farmers and ranchers were treating their staff like chattel or not caring about whether they lived or died or whether they went home safe at the end of the day, and exactly the opposite was true.

They also talked about how many farms and ranches didn't have any insurance. Well, a lot of them had insurance. They just didn't have the government-forced insurance, the WCB. A lot of farmers and ranchers that I've run into since – and I'm a city boy, so I don't talk to as many farmers and ranchers as some of my rural colleagues – have told me that they had better insurance for themselves and their employees and at a better price before the government forced them into the government insurance plans. If the government had actually talked to them in a respectful dialogue, a two-way dialogue, they would have realized that before they forced this legislation down their throats.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment that was brought forward, that: "Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be not now read a Third time but that it be read a Third time this day three months hence." In listening to the speech from the Member for Calgary-Hays, there were a number of thoughts that occurred to me, some of them that I will willingly share in this House.

First of all, the Member for Calgary-Hays described with a great deal of energy and enthusiasm the 10 seconds in which he felt affection for an action of this government. Certainly, nothing is more disappointing to me than to know that there's something that we've done to lose the Member for Calgary-Hays' affection. That is something that weighs heavily on my mind, every time I make the Member for Calgary-Hays unhappy.

The other thing that occurred to me, though, is that he repeatedly referred to us as a gang, referred to us as this gang over here on this side, and said that we're certainly not a gang of straight shooters. Madam Speaker, I do have to express some dismay at being referred to as a gang although certainly if we were a gang, I'm sure our gang colour would be orange. We are nothing but a friendly and approachable group of people, certainly not the kind of people who would shoot. Although many of us have fired firearms, it's definitely not our preferred method of engaging with people. In fact, if we were a gang, it occurred to me that maybe we would be a gang like from the movie West Side Story, that instead of, you know, shooting or stabbing our opponents, we would just engage them in a dance-off.

Anyway, moving on from that. Of course, the Member for Calgary-Hays has referenced, as the members opposite are wont to do, the lack of consultation that we've engaged in on all of our bills. It doesn't matter what bill we bring forward or how much actual consultation we seem to engage in, the members opposite accuse us of not listening to Albertans and not engaging in consultation. In fact, that is the spirit with which this amendment has been moved, that the three months between now and when we read this bill a third time would give us time to consult with Albertans.

Two points on that, Madam Speaker, that I'd like to make. First of all, this bill was, in fact, the result of extensive consultation that we undertook with many stakeholders across Alberta. The Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit were things that were good suggestions that were offered by many businesses, many chambers of commerce, and people interested in economic growth and development across Alberta. We heard loudly and clearly that the development of these kinds of tax credits was something that was long missing from Alberta, that actually existed in other jurisdictions, that if implemented here would enhance the growth and diversification of our economy. Since these tax credits have been introduced, I think it's fair to say that they've been successful in achieving their objectives. We're grateful for the advice that we received from all of the stakeholders in implementing these tax credits, and that's why we're so pleased to continue with these tax credits as we see here in this bill.

With respect to the development of the tax credits I don't see any particular reason that we would need to engage with stakeholders on this issue. We've already done so, Madam Speaker. We've taken their good advice, we've enacted it, and it's actually yielding positive results for the people of Alberta. So I'm not sure why the members opposite seem to think that we need to delay making a decision on whether or not those tax credits should be extended. It seems to me that if a good idea is working, we should keep it working.

On the issue of the interactive digital media tax credit as well as the technology spaces that are mentioned in the bill, this was the result of, again, extensive stakeholder consultation that we conducted, particularly with members of the interactive digital media world and in the high-tech world. They told us loudly and clearly that, again, this interactive digital media tax credit is something that exists in other jurisdictions, that has been very helpful in developing those industries in those jurisdictions, and that it would be beneficial to Alberta if we implemented that kind of program here in this province. Again, like we did with the investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit, we've taken their good advice, and we've sought to implement it.

Members of the high-tech industry have also told us that they can't find people who have the skills they need to go to work in this industry, and that's why we're investing significant dollars in expanding the number of tech-related education seats in our postsecondary education system.

To say that we haven't engaged in any consultation with Albertans is not true, Madam Speaker. In fact, we have engaged extensively with the people of Alberta. You know, our success with the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit we hope to duplicate with the interactive digital media tax credit and the expansion of the tech spaces. We've relied previously on stakeholders' good advice to implement those two tax credits. We're relying again on their good advice to implement this further tax credit and expand these seats. This bill before us is a product of extensive consultation. Certainly, I think that that work has been completed, Madam Speaker, and there's no need to conduct any further consultation over the next three months.

With respect to consultation there are a couple of other points that I'd like to make. Certainly, you know, we get lectured all the time from the members opposite about our failure to consult with real Albertans. It was with great interest that I read the news today,

Madam Speaker, that, in fact, the Leader of the Opposition won't be appearing in the Edmonton Pride Parade but is having an invitation-only breakfast event Pride adjacent, let's say – I don't know where exactly that's going to be – which strikes me as odd. It's odd that they would come into this House and accuse us of not talking to real Albertans, yet when it comes to talking to real members of the LGBTQ community, they're not interested.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you are deviating from the amendment that has been put in front of us. If you could please refer back to the amendment.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, with respect, Madam Speaker, I, of course, am referring to the amendment because the amendment was offered in the spirit of consultation. I'm just taking steps to poke holes in the authority that the members opposite seem to claim when they claim that they have some superior ability to consult with Albertans when, in fact, they've demonstrated time and again that they don't want to listen to Albertans that they feel disagree with their outlook on how the province should be run. So I raise that issue as well, that the members opposite are not exactly models that we would want to follow in terms of how to consult with the people of Alberta.

Mr. Westhead: Just like Bill 9.

Mr. Schmidt: Yes. Certainly, with respect to other issues that have been before the House, the members opposite have failed, in fact, to express any opinion whatsoever regardless of what they've heard from the people of Alberta.

Now, the timing of the amendment. Of course, it says that this bill be not now read a third time but be read three months hence. The Member for Calgary-Hays brought this amendment forward, saying that perhaps we would take the next three months to go home and think about what we've done and perhaps change our minds. It's interesting, Madam Speaker, because three months is approximately the same amount of time that we've been debating this very bill in this House.

Of course, we've heard a number of complaints from the members opposite about what they think are economy-destroying policies that our government has enacted, so economy destroying, in fact, that we have the fastest growing economy in the entire country, Madam Speaker. We created 90,000 jobs over the last year. The outlook, economic forecasts continue to be excellent.

What we've heard from the opposition are, of course, extensive complaints about what they imagine the state of the Alberta economy to be, yet all they've brought forward in terms of the counterproposals to the policies that we've brought forward is a reverse of the personal and corporate income tax increases that our government brought forward.

Of course, our goal here with this bill is to diversify the economy, something that Albertans told us loudly and clearly needed to be done and that the previous government had failed to act on. In fact, Madam Speaker, I think it could be fairly argued that, you know, reverting to the old tax regime would do as much to diversify the economy in 2018 as it did prior to 2015, which is nothing. The previous tax system in this province was not a terribly effective tool at diversifying the economy. The members opposite have really failed to explain to us or anybody why reverting to the old tax rates would be any more successful in growing and diversifying our economy than the measures that have been put forward in this bill. We've been arguing about this for three months. I suspect that if we were to come back to this bill in three months' time, we would be no further ahead in reaching a consensus on this issue.

You know, time and again when members opposite raised taxes as an issue, I've brought up the fact that our goal here is to stimulate investment using measures that have been successful in other jurisdictions. I've listed B.C. and Ontario and Quebec as jurisdictions that have similar tax structures, actually, to Alberta now. They also have prices on carbon. They also have corporate income tax rates that are similar to our own. They also have personal income taxes that in almost every case across the country are much higher than ours. Yet the members opposite have failed to explain to anybody why lowering personal and corporate tax rates here in Alberta would be any more successful in doing the thing that we're trying to do with this bill than it has been in any other jurisdiction. They have yet to explain to any of us why it is that Quebec has such an excellent interactive digital media economy even though their corporate tax rates are the same as ours. They also have a price on carbon. They have personal income tax rates that are much higher than Alberta's. They also have a provincial sales tax.

The members opposite have repeatedly failed to explain to us what their plan is, why they seem to want to vote against these particular initiatives and have nothing to offer.

Madam Speaker, this process has taken three months. We've been debating this bill for that time. Nobody's opinions have changed. Certainly, their opinions haven't changed. It doesn't make sense for us to delay this bill another three months when we suspect that in coming back to this bill in three months' time, we'll be no further ahead in resolving some of the differences that we've seen expressed in this House on our approaches to economic growth and diversification.

Madam Speaker, I must reiterate the importance with which we must act urgently. Certainly, the failure of Calgary to be included on the short list of the Amazon second headquarters was a wake-up call to the people of Alberta that we need to do something more to stimulate the growth of the high-tech sector here in the province. In fact, that's exactly what this bill accomplishes. That's why I urge all members to defeat this amendment and get on with passing this bill so that we can take effective and timely action to diversify the economy of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Is there anybody wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank the Minister of Advanced Education for asking us to explain certain things. First, I appreciate him keeping the tone in a civil manner, unlike his usual style. He tried to drift, and you tried to bring him back to the amendment.

He asked us why we are not explaining that lowering taxes will benefit. One point I want to mention to the minister is that if he looks at his government's record, when they actually increased the taxes for higher income groups and also businesses, the revenue came down. If your purpose in raising taxes is to collect higher revenue, but on the other hand, when you increased the taxes, the government's revenue has come down – I would like to ask him about that.

Also, I would ask him why businesses are actually leaving Alberta and going to other jurisdictions and investing in the same business. They are not taking their money away from Alberta and Canada and investing in different types of businesses. They're still investing in the same types of businesses. During their three years in office $35 billion of investment has left Alberta. If he and his front benches would reflect on that, then they'll find the answer, I guess.

Also, the fact he is forgetting is that I was the critic for economic development for two years. I tried to meet with the minister, the economic development minister, many times to actually talk to him on the impacts of some of these programs, including AITC and CITC, and he wouldn't meet me. I approached the Speaker and I asked the Speaker for help, and Mr. Speaker actually talked to him three times. Three different times. He still wouldn't meet his critic. It's not the case with other ministers. I could meet with the agriculture minister, the Health minister – it seems she meets people – but that particular minister was not interested to hear what Albertans were telling me as the critic. Then I used other avenues like budget estimates and other opportunities to ask him about AITC, CITC and what the economic impact is of those policies and how many jobs they actually created.

Coming back to this amendment that we are talking about, why we are asking for a three-month consultation period is that stakeholders are telling us: this minister always rushes things, and then he realizes. For example, in April 2016 there was a $170 million job-creation grant program, that this government brought in with much fanfare, and then they had to abandon that. Probably they heard their stakeholders telling them, and they might have done the right thing. That's the benefit of consultation.

My colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake talked about Bill 6. With that type of ramming through of legislation, that left scars on those rural farmers. I don't think any of the NDP rural caucus are happy about it because I'm sure they heard it from rural Albertans. They should be worried about their seats.

Also, another reason we are asking them to step back and look at this policy is because of the credit downgrades we are getting. The only things that are looking up: the deficit is going up, debt is going up, and the Calgary office space vacancy rate is going up.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My colleague was going down a path of saying that consultation has been lacking when it comes to this government, especially when it comes to labour. To what the minister of postsecondary was saying, that on every bill that comes through, we criticize about lack of consultation, I would say that when it came to Bill 14, I never criticized that, and I didn't hear any of my colleagues criticize that specific bill. I actually even complimented the Minister of Service Alberta on that bill. That's the bill that deals with including water commissions and water services for municipalities. So to say that we criticize about consultation on every bill is very wide.

But I will say that what we do as opposition is that we try to make a bill better. When we get to the point where the government has more or less shot down every amendment that we bring forward, not giving the opposition the ability to be able to reinforce a bill like Bill 2, that's problematic.

The fact is that when it comes to Bill 2, what we're seeing is that the government has said that they've been moving this through and that it's been three months. Well, again, whenever we start to move legislation through the House at the rate that we're going, you're going to find that we're not perfect. We heard clearly from the Member for Calgary-Hays about the fact that the government is putting through legislation and coming in with amendments to fix their own legislation because it's so flawed. That clearly means that we're moving this legislation through the House too fast.

Now, what I would like to say – I'm going to pull up an article. Mark Milke is the author of the article. The title of the article is Alberta Already Tried to Diversify Her Economy – and Failed. This article is posted on the Fraser Institute web page. I know that the government may not like the Fraser Institute, but it does have a lot of valuable information there that highlights the government in what it's doing right and what it's doing wrong. A lot of times what happens is that our media focuses on the negative stuff, but in this case what we've got here is an article that's about diversification. I'd like to start with the very first sentence.

With the price of oil plunging to below $50 per barrel and the outlook for Alberta's economy and provincial budget revenues falling in tandem, an oft-heard piece of advice is being recycled: Alberta should diversify its economy.

Diversification isn't a new idea. Actually, I would say that every government comes out and says: we should diversify. I think that if you were to poll Alberta as a whole, you are probably going to get 96 per cent of Albertans or even higher saying that they would like to see more diversification within Alberta. So there's clearly a desire there. The question is: how do you get there?

Now, we've got the NDP, that has decided that corporate welfare seems to be the path that they want to go down, and you've got the Conservatives, who are saying that a low tax regime will promote diversification. One says: we need to use taxpayer money, and we need to pick winners and losers. The other says: allow the market to dictate diversification; they'll find the best place for it, and they will be driven to our economy here because of the fact that they can make profits. Whenever government gets into business, we always see that there's a failure at some point. Governments were never meant, in my opinion, to be in business, and it's because we're very inefficient. The bigger we get as a government, the more inefficient we become.

When we look at these tax credits – and I'm going to go to a different article. I'll be flipping between the articles if time allows. "New Alberta Tax Credit Off to Slow Start with No Money Awarded Yet." Now, this was written on June 19, 2017, and this was specifically about the tax credits. What we've got here is an article that is showing that when they first announced this, there wasn't a whole lot of uptake from the industry, and that is because what we end up with in the end is a government picking winners and losers.

I just want to get to the point here. What we're looking at here is an article that is more or less saying in the first sentence here:

The Alberta Investor Tax Credit, which formally launched in January, offers a 30 per cent tax credit to private investors who put [their] money into companies doing work in non-traditional sectors such as information technology, clean technology, health technology, interactive digital media and game products, and digital animation.

It's clearly saying what its focus is.

Now we're seeing a second tranche or a second phase of the same one, and they're retargeting the same groups and with a lot of money. We don't even know if the first one was successful. The reason: the way that tax credits work, in order to receive a tax credit, you have to actually earn profits. It takes time for these businesses to earn the profit in order to be able to get the tax credit. Now, sometimes what happens is that it may take several years for a company to be able to have this tax credit pay out.

Moving on to where I'm going with this – and I'm going to be going through the different articles because they're all relevant – what we've got here is a Manitoba article from agcanada.com: "Manitoba Pulls Less-loved Ag Tax Credits in Budget." Underneath it says – and I know this might have some humour involved in it – “Manure management, riparian tax credits end immediately.” What happens here is that in this article it goes on to talk about how the government brought forward tax credits in Manitoba with clear expectations on what their intent was, but nobody was actually seeing if the results were there for the tax credit.

Now, in this same article:

Friesen, in his speech, also announced the province is “eliminating boutique tax credits that had little uptake and failed to meet their objectives.”

Manitoba, with over 30 provincial tax credits, has had “among the most complex and diversified” tax credit system in the country, he said.

Among the tax credits that end effective Tuesday for farmers and agribusinesses are the odour control tax credit, the nutrient management tax credit and the riparian tax credit. All three cuts were listed as having “negligible” budget impact.

The odour control credit was an income tax credit for businesses that invested in capital projects to control “nuisance odours that arise or may arise from the use or production of organic waste.”

Now, it goes on to talk a little bit more specifically here, but what we have here is an article that says that there was a target of eliminating odour, and they created a tax credit. Inside of that tax credit was the intent to more or less move the economy in a different direction. Nobody took it up, and the government realized that they were managing something that wasn’t efficient.

Now, to hear the minister for postsecondary say that this is a wildly successful tax credit from the first phase, there’s nothing that actually can show that because it takes a long time for these tax credits to go through the system. It all derives from profit. They need time to build the capital. They need time to move forward with the project that the government is trying to diversify to.

Now, we’ve heard the government putting forward all of these success stories. The fact is that whenever we’ve got a success story, I’m glad to hear that, because I want to see Alberta succeed as much as any one of the other members do. But it’s a little soon to be bringing out a second phase of a tax credit system when we are not even sure that the first one worked. That is clearly problematic. The fact is that we had articles stating that the first phase wasn’t as successful as the government makes it sound like. The first phase sounded like it was failing, but over time – it took time to build that up. But we don’t know if it’s successful at this point yet, and I don’t believe the government has that information. If they do, they should share it. I am sure that if they did have that information, you can bet it would be on every billboard across Alberta.

Again, with this government, what happens is that they look at the immediate need, and they say: “Okay. We want to diversify, so we’re going to throw money at it. You know what? Maybe the first phase worked, maybe not – we don’t know – but we’re going to try throwing more money at it and, when the third phase comes along, throwing more money at it.” We find out that the first phase didn’t achieve what they had hoped. That is problematic. That is something where we need to ensure that our taxpayers, Alberta’s taxpayers, are respected.

Whenever we’ve got something as large as these tax credits, I think it’s admirable that the government is trying to find a way to diversify our economy. But why do we always need to throw money at it? Why do we always need to ensure that Alberta’s money is thrown into a bottomless pit, with nobody being held to account?

Now, I have to say that once we’ve gotten to the point where we’ve verified that the intent to create diversification happened, then maybe we can look at it, but we’re talking large windows of time here, not just a year, not just six months. It takes decades to find out if this stuff works. I understand that the government wants to rush headlong into this stuff. Like Bill 6, if they get it wrong: well – you know what? – we can try, try again or put the regulations on hold. Hopefully, once we’ve got something that would be a compromise with the consulting – again, this minister for postsecondary has been very clear that it seems like they feel they’re doing an appropriate job. I hear from my own constituents that that would be something they would dispute.

What we have here is this hoist amendment saying: “Let’s give this some time and let the government go back and actually do some economic impact studies or income research in trying to work out: did the first phase work? How far along is this?”

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yes. I enjoyed listening to the comments here from the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I guess I was interested in hearing – he was kind of comparing these two different articles and quoting from each one. It was interesting to hear the comments and what was going on there, and I think it would be great to hear him continue on in that vein.

Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’m going to go back to – thank you, again – Mr. Milke’s article. This specific article is Alberta Already Tried to Diversify Her Economy – and Failed. Now, what happens here is that I will continue on from the first one, which is saying that Albertans have for many years been saying that we should diversify. This is something that I believe the government is trying to hear Albertans on and move forward.

Moving on, it says:

The advice is well-intentioned. But local economies, like businesses, often make money selling what’s nearby. Hawaii peddles vacations with warm weather attached. Alberta (along with Saskatchewan, Newfoundland and Labrador and northern British Columbia) sells oil and gas.

The oil, gas and mining sector is the largest contributor to Alberta’s economy at 23 per cent of the province’s GDP. That is significant for employment and income. That sector also matters to the provincial budget: resource revenue provides about 24 per cent of the Alberta government’s own-source revenue.

In theory, diversification would allow Albertans to be less reliant on resources. However, it is not clear how Alberta could diversify simply by everyone wishing to that end, including via government policy.

He makes a good point.

What we’re looking at here is that there are going to be things that Alberta has as competitive advantages. We need to be focusing on those competitive advantages to diversify our economy because when we have competitive advantages, you will find that we will be able to find private investors to be able to fund that without risking taxpayer money.

A good example in my constituency is that I was told – and I’m sure that I could be corrected – that in my area there is a competitive advantage for growing hemp. We are in a band where we get the perfect amount of light, and it’s the perfect season for growing hemp. So the government, if they were looking at diversifying Bonnyville-Cold Lake, would look at: how do we get more diversification when it comes to my area? Now, the problem we’ve got here is that a number of years ago the rail line was taken out of my whole area, so now we don't have a way of being able to transport the different agricultural, grown resources that we've got up in my area. We have no way of getting it out efficiently. That's problematic because what happens is that we will have other industry players in other provinces across Canada that have that access to rail that'll be able to get that hemp out.

A good example would be for the government to be working at finding a diversification plan, trying to work out how to get hemp out of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. We would be looking at maybe bringing more rail back to my constituency, that gives the ability for farmers to get their agriculture to market. That is good for Alberta; that's more diversification. Instead, what we're doing is that we are creating a tax credit for industry that probably would have done it anyway. What happens here is that every time we have a tax credit, that means that fewer royalties, in this case, are going to be collected or less tax income is going to be . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Hon. member, just a reminder. If you could please table your two articles tomorrow.

Mr. Cyr: Okay.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yes, I'd like to speak to the amendment. During the discussion here that we've had on this amendment, there was some discussion about consultation and how the government had done extensive consultation on this. I guess I was thinking: okay; if I went to a certain industry and said, "We're thinking of giving you guys a tax credit; what do you think?" I'm going to suggest that they would probably say: "Yes. Yeah. Let's do this. In fact, while you're at it, why don't you get rid of the carbon tax, and we'll save even more money." Of course, that doesn't necessarily mean that this is all good for Albertans because I'm sure we could go to any industry, any business in the province of Alberta and say, "Hey, how would you like to pay less taxes?" and they'd say, "Yes, of course."

What I find a little ironic, I guess, is that when we on this side of the House say that we should have lower taxes here in Alberta and we suggest that that's good, of course, the NDP light their hair on fire, saying, "How could you do that? That's going to cause all these problems, and this is going to be horrible," you know, all the different things that they accuse us of when we talk about lower taxes. But, of course, when the government comes along and says that we're going to lower taxes for these guys and we're going to lower taxes for those guys and we're going to lower taxes for those guys over there, this is diversifying the economy and making life better for Albertans. It just does seem to be a little bit of a double-edged sword there. No, I shouldn't say a double-edged sword. But it just seems to be that one side says, "It's great," and the other side says, "It's horrible."

Now, when we talk about consultation, you know, on this side of the House we had town halls for rural crime. I don't think the government had any. We had town halls for Bill 6. We travelled all across Alberta with Bill 6, having town halls. Did the government have town halls for Bill 6? I don't think so. We had town halls for the parks they were creating on the eastern slopes, for discussions on that. We've covered a lot of ground in Alberta doing consultation when this government, of course, wasn't doing any, except maybe going to certain companies and saying: hey, do you want a tax break? Of course, they say yes, and that's what the government says is consultation. They say: well, if they say it's great, then it's great.

Now, obviously, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about that Alberta was the fastest growing economy in Canada. Alberta was the fastest growing economy in Canada. But I looked on the Conference Board of Canada website here, and I actually found out that, unfortunately, that's not true. Alberta actually kind of sits in the middle of the pack, and B.C. and Prince Edward Island are actually the fastest growing provincial economies in 2018. Of course, we would love to see Alberta at the top of that as far as the fastest growing economy, but that's just not the case. Of course, the government keeps talking about this – we hear this almost every day in question period – how fast the economy is growing in Alberta and it's the fastest in Canada, when obviously it's just not true.

It goes on to say here, "Alberta's economy is performing well but a lack of investment in the energy sector is dimming economic prospects." That's another thing that we talk about on this side of the House. You know, we tell the government, "You're driving away investment." They come back and say: "No, no, no. Investment is just flooding into Alberta. I mean, you wouldn't believe all the investment that's coming in." But, of course, when we pick an organization that's not involved politically, the Conference Board of Canada, they actually support our view, that the investment isn't flooding into Alberta like the government suggests. Now, it goes on to say here, "While Alberta bounced back from recession in 2017 growing by 4.9 per cent, economic growth is expected to be weaker this year, at 1.9 per cent."

Now, Madam Speaker, once the government had driven the economy to the very bottom that they possibly could drive it, then there was actually nowhere for it to go but up. When you have 4.9 per cent growth, that's actually – well, it's good. We're not going to complain about having 4.9 per cent growth. But the only reason that it was 4.9 per cent growth is because they'd driven it so far down. It had nowhere to go but up.

I also wanted to mention, too, that this government, during the economic downturn, of course, blamed the price of oil. The price of oil has a lot of effect in Alberta. We agree with that, that the price of oil does have a great effect on our economy. We never blamed the government for the price of oil going down, but we do blame the government for how they reacted to it and the different things that they did to make matters worse at that time. Of course, the price of oil goes down. The government says: it's not our fault. Agreed. But when the price of oil goes up, I mean, emergency rooms are flooded with NDP members with dislocated shoulders trying to pat themselves on the back. It just doesn't make any sense, how this government can sit here and when the price of oil goes down, "Not our fault"; when the price of oil goes up, the economy comes back a bit: "Hey, thank us. We're here. Just pat us on the back and turn us loose here." I think there are some things here that just don't make sense.

Now, we want diversification in our economy, but it doesn't always take government intervention to get there. In fact, all we have to do is that we have to create a business-friendly environment in Alberta – that's what we need to do, create a business-friendly environment – so businesses will come to Alberta, invest money, take their jobs and everything and move them here so that Albertans can be employed and working. Of course, what happens when you do that is that the economy builds naturally. These businesses will come in and set up business. They don't need to be paid to come in and do business in Alberta. They can come to Alberta and know that they're going to make money, and they'll bring their investment here, bring the jobs here. That's how you diversify the economy, but of course this government figures that they have to interfere with everything.

Now, we talk about a business-friendly environment. Well, a business-friendly environment doesn't include things like a carbon tax, that our neighbouring jurisdictions don't have, the places that we have to compete with. Like, these companies compete in a global market, and if we don't have, you know, an opportunity to show them that they can come in and do business and make as much or more money than anywhere else, they're going to go somewhere else. So we have to give that opportunity to do that.

Another problem we have here is regulations. We've got companies that want to bring investment to the province, and when they go to set up, of course, they're met with barriers and years and years and thousands, hundreds of thousands of dollars to set up their businesses.

Madam Speaker, that's what we need to do. Bill 2 is obviously something where it's meant to try to force investment to happen when really it could happen naturally if we just create that business-friendly environment in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will now call the question on the amendment.

Bill 1 Energy Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate June 5: Ms Ganley]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act. There are some very interesting aspects of this bill, interesting in the sense that the minister did not need this bill to do what she intends to do. The minister already has the power to do what Bill 1 does. This reminds me of another Bill 1 from another session, one in which that Bill 1 outlined the Minister of Economic Development and Trade's job description. Bill 1 is symbolic and symptomatic of the NDP government and the policy choices it's making.

The NDP went to great lengths before bringing in Bill 1 by striking a committee – yes, another committee, Madam Speaker – and this one is the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee. It was stood up on October 13, 2016, and the membership was made up of several people, including Jeanette Patell from GE, Gil McGowan from the Alberta Federation of Labour, Leo de Bever – that member only lasted until March 13, 2017 – Warren Fraleigh, Carol Moen, Marie Robidoux, and Rocky Sinclair. It makes me wonder why Leo de Bever only lasted five months on this committee.

All manner of recommendations came forward, but only a subset of recommendations made the cut into Bill 1. Although there were many more recommendations, only a subset made it into Bill 1. It was the recommendations that played to the NDP stereotype – grants, loans, and loan guarantees – and the NDP's big-spending ways. Yeah, Madam Speaker, this government is willing to give billions to corporations but doesn't want to bring natural gas to La Crête. I don't know why, but they can't get it.

Yet there are other recommendations that could have been chosen that would have had a greater impact on the petrochemical sector in Alberta. I actually like the petrochemical sector because at the beginning of my career I started at Reliance, which built over a period of time the world's largest petrochemical complexes, in India, actually.

The recommendations of this EDAC committee include – I'll read some of them.

Recommendation 3.1:

EDAC recommends the Government of Alberta strive for the same levels of regulatory transparency, efficiency and predictability in the downstream [same] as in the upstream.

Recommendation 3.2:

EDAC recommends the Government of Alberta ensure regulatory timelines are in line with comparable jurisdictions such as Texas and Louisiana, while not compromising Alberta's high standards.

Recommendation 3.4:

EDAC recommends the Government of Alberta work with industry to support timely review processes by exploring opportunities to reduce duplication of efforts, use existing data and create shared value by bringing the environmental assessment process more fully into the digital age.

Recommendation 3.5:

EDAC recommends the Government of Alberta, as part of its land management policies, take steps to enable preapproval of project sites and/or zones within existing or emerging downstream energy clusters.

Recommendation 4 of EDAC's report reads:

EDAC supports the concept of establishing new infrastructure and energy corridors around existing or likely sites for downstream energy clusters – in particular, Alberta's Industrial Heartland, Joffre, Grande Prairie and Medicine Hat.

Recommendation 7.2 of EDAC's report says:

Due to the fact that Alberta's downstream energy industry relies on rail access for its movement of product, EDAC recommends the Alberta government continue to lead on advocacy for equitable rail services that address the needs of downstream energy industry players in regards to access, cost and reliability, with active participation by downstream energy industry representatives.

In 7.4 it says:

Seek the permanent extension of the existing accelerated capital cost allowance for manufacturers such as the petrochemical industry to provide certainty to those interested in investing in the downstream.

Madam Speaker, these policy options were not chosen by this NDP government. Instead, we have grants, loans, and loan guarantees, and the industry smiles politely and says: hurray. Who doesn't want money? The Energy minister and the economic development minister and everyone in this House told us that their Bill 1 is based on the recommendations from the EDAC report. Now, I've read so many of them which have suggested alternate ways to help the industry, to grow the economy and bring jobs, but the NDP government conveniently ignored them, and they just chose the handouts.

Meanwhile just yesterday the executive director of Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association had something to say. Lynette Tremblay said, quote: globally integrated companies do not necessarily need repayable loans from government. End quote. Madam Speaker, it looks like the NDP might be getting this wrong if the organization that stands to benefit the most from new investment in petrochemicals in Alberta is not liking the policy tool chosen by this NDP government.

Lynette went on to say that Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association is, quote: also advocating for more competitive capital cost allowance; Canada's 50 per cent deduction for capital cost depreciation is only available until 2025 while the United States has implemented a permanent 100 per cent capital cost allowance. End quote. This capital cost allowance at 100 per cent was placed in President Trump's last budget, and Wall Street loved it. EDAC recommended it, too, but there's nothing here in this Bill 1 about that particular recommendation.

The executive director of the Industrial Heartland Association went on to point out, quote: additionally, recent corporate tax cuts in the States have resulted in a 21 per cent tax compared to Alberta's 27 per cent corporate tax, 12 per cent provincially and 15 per cent federally. Madam Speaker, our federal and provincial taxes are out of synchronization with the U.S.A.; again, not the variable but certainly a variable.

Madam Speaker, also, there was a quote from the heartland association. Basically, they want a reduction in red tape and regulatory times; again, a recommendation from EDAC but not found in Bill 1.

Further issues plague Canada's investment attraction such as the B.C.-Alberta pipeline dispute. Foreign investors take a look at the pipeline dispute. Quote: the signals that we send globally do impact our sector regardless of what the nature of the dispute is. So it's really important that the perceptions of Alberta and Canada are that we welcome investment, that it is easy to do business here, and that we recognize the benefit to the community. The pipeline fight is creating uncertainty.

You know what else is creating uncertainty? The federal carbon pricing being layered on top of provincial carbon taxes. Madam Speaker, if you remember, Shell has decided to invest in Pennsylvania over Alberta, and they're constructing a $6 billion ethane cracker facility estimated to create 6,000 construction jobs and 600 operational jobs in Pennsylvania but not in Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House will now stand adjourned until tomorrow morning at 9.

9 a.m.

Wednesday, June 6, 2018

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us each pray and reflect in our own way. As we gather today for another day of considered decision-making, I would ask that each of us reflect in our own way on what we can do to be seen as leaders for the LGBTQ community. As members of this Assembly it is our responsibility that all Albertans are welcome and feel welcome.

Please be seated.

Third Reading

Bill 1

Energy Diversification Act

[Debate adjourned June 5: Mr. Panda speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last night we were talking about Bill 1, and I'll start where I left. Just as a recap, we were talking about what led to Bill 1. EDAC, Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, consisted of different members from General Electric, Alberta Federation of Labour, Building Trades representatives, and so on. They were all involved in this committee, and they gave a report. That committee recommended many other important recommendations to the government like reducing the red tape and looking at other measures that make our businesses more competitive, but this government just picked handouts rather than looking at other important tax credits and other incentives that will encourage businesses to stay in Alberta.

I was talking about that when we had to leave last night. Madam Speaker, there are a few quotes that I mentioned last night from the executive director from the Industrial Heartland. The quote was: additionally, recent corporate tax cuts in the States have resulted in a 21 per cent tax compared to Alberta's 27 per cent corporate tax, which is a 12 per cent provincial tax and 15 per cent federal tax. Also, our federal and provincial taxes are out of synchronization with the U.S.A. Again, not the variable, but certainly a variable.

The heartland association also hears from investors on how they see Alberta. Quote: while we were in Texas recently, we heard from investors that the U.S. regulatory environment is more consistent than Canada's, and they felt more driven by economics. On average it takes about twice as long to navigate Canada's regulatory process than it does in the U.S. That adds significant cost and uncertainty to a project.

Red tape and regulatory times: again, recommendations from EDAC not found in Bill 1. Further issues plague Canada's investment attraction such as the B.C.-Alberta pipeline dispute. Foreign investors take a look at the pipeline dispute and, quote: the signals that we send globally do impact our sector regardless of what the nature of the dispute is. So it's really important that the perceptions of Alberta and Canada are that we welcome investment, that it is easy to do business here, and that we recognize the benefit to the community.

Madam Speaker, if you remember, Shell Canada chose to invest in Pennsylvania over Alberta. I talked about that briefly last night. Taxes, tax incentives, tax credits, royalty credits: they all appear to be the language that the industry likes to hear. That's why the demand for royalty credits exceeded the supply in the petrochemical diversification program, PDP 1.

But while the NDP have chosen to do a second round of PDP, they also decided to create a feedstock infrastructure program with $500 million in loan guarantees for industry to construct more straddle plants needed to capture more natural gas liquids to feed the petrochemical industry in Alberta, namely to obtain propane and methane. The NDP have also decided on $800 million in loan guarantees and $200 million in grants for a partial upgrading program. Industry is most interested in this program, but in our conversation with them they said that they would prefer a tax credit. While partial upgrading supports freeing of pipeline space on existing pipelines and using them more efficiently, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce questions the assumption in the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee report that more refining in Alberta makes economic sense.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The member, I think, when the time ran out, was midsentence. I thought he was onto something important that the House should hear, so I was wondering if the member could complete his thoughts.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Thank you to my colleague from Calgary-Hays. Yes, I was talking about partial upgrading, which actually supports the freeing of pipeline space on existing pipelines and using them more efficiently. But Alberta Chambers of Commerce: their question is whether more refining in Alberta makes economic sense or not. That's why we need an economic impact assessment that proves or disproves that there is a greater economic benefit to Alberta as a result of refining here versus removing the discount on our bitumen products and refining where it makes more sense, where the refinery is already there.

We don't blindly accept the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour's support for site refining projects as a ringing endorsement for more refining here. Of course, he's going to say that he has a vested interest. But, Madam Speaker, we tried to make Bill 1 better with a series of amendments. We wanted some accountability to bring the reports of the APMC to the Legislature, and we wanted to eliminate the loan guarantees and the equity stakes. We wanted to eliminate the grants. Then we tried to make the grants less risky by limiting them to site preparation and job training. We also asked for NAFTA and CETA compliance, and we tried to get an economic impact assessment on refining here versus elsewhere as well as an economic impact assessment on each project getting support. The NDP rejected all of those amendments, preferring their ideological approach and not wanting to consider other factors.

There will not be support for this bill from our caucus for the reasons mentioned above. As I said, although we like petrochemical diversification – personally I worked on those projects, and it makes sense – before we take this route of handing out to the industry, there are other measures EDAC recommended, and this government ignored them. We tried to bring them back through amendments to make this bill better, but the government blindly rejected them. There is a pattern here. They keep rejecting every common-sense suggestion from the opposition. I'm really getting tired of repeating the same thing. I don't understand why the government when they were in opposition tried to make the legislation better using their legislative options, but when they went into the government, you know, the power went to their head, and they started ignoring common-sense constructive criticism from opposition and also the co-operation offered by opposition.

That's where Bill 1 is now, Madam Speaker. Government still has the opportunity if they want to make it better. If not, they have to explain to Albertans why they're overlooking EDAC's other recommendations to make businesses more attractive without taxpayers' money.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Good morning, everybody. It's good to see everyone here in the House again on a bright, bright sunny day in the beautiful city of Edmonton to listen to very, very important information and solid debate on Bill 1.

I've got a few prepared remarks and things about Bill 1. Some of you may know that I spent a little time in the oil and gas industry, but it was in a different segment than this. Certainly, it's something I always keep my ears to and my eyes peeled for in the news, and it's something that goes to my heart, and one day – who knows? – I might even find an office downtown again just to consult some more.

But anyway, today we're talking about the Energy Diversification Act, and it's something that I actually haven't had a chance to speak on too much up to this point, just the way the rotation goes. Nonetheless, you know, it's something that I think the government has not exactly been, over the course of its three-and-a-half-year mandate so far – they really haven't been too favourable to the oil and gas industry in many respects. For the first three years there's been the raising of taxes on job creators by 20 per cent. There's been an awful lot of extra red tape put into the system. As we all know, we speak about in this House time and time again on the matter of a related topic, how much extra red tape has been put into the industry in terms of regulations and processes.

You know, from what we've seen and read in the papers, not just myself and my own remarks – it's what people have said in articles by knowledgeable journalists across the country – it really has driven a lot of investment elsewhere. The day before yesterday in Sherwood Park News, in fact, it was revealed that over the past five years, according to that article, Canada has lost 80 per cent of its historical energy investment. The country has only received $250 billion in investment over 10 years when we should have received, in the normal course of business that history has shown us, over 1 and a quarter trillion dollars. That's a big number. I don't even know what a trillion dollars really means, actually. Nonetheless, there are a lot of examples.

Sasol, as an example, which is the South African synthetic oil liquid company, moved their investment of $8.1 billion, which was an ethane cracker, from Fort Saskatchewan to Louisiana. There they created 5,000 construction jobs and 500 operations jobs. That plant apparently is accompanied by plans for a further $14 billion gas-to-liquids facility to complete a $21 billion petrochemical complex. Just imagine if we could have had that here.

The package from the state of Louisiana was worth over $135 million, which aided Sasol investment, including a one-time tax credit of $2,500 per net new job created, a research and development credit of up to 40 per cent, and a retention and modernization tax credit as well. So they were pretty innovative in how they put their plans together to attract business down south. That's for sure. As we all know, the new president there has been innovative, to say the least, in how he approaches business and how he has changed the models down there.

It looks like our NDP government here has looked at this, and they want to go down a similar path in providing some sort of market change. I think that there was a large, large committee struck by the NDP. They created the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, and it produced a report. I've seen the report. It's actually quite thick. I've got a copy of it. The work of EDAC, the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, is not, therefore, some fly-by-night operation. It looks like they have done quite an intense job of studying this whole situation. It has the hallmarks of something quite substantial, actually. I say this because I know there were policy options recommended in that report that would seem the current government hasn't acted on at this point in time.

There are some policy options in there that remove the regulatory roadblocks that we were seeing and some red tape holding up project permits. In fact, I could mention item 3.2 in that report, and 3.2 says:

EDAC recommends the Government of Alberta ensure regulatory timelines are in line with comparable jurisdictions such as Texas and Louisiana, while not compromising Alberta's high standards.

Now, I remember in this House a few years ago, when the former government was here, and the Energy minister at that time spent a lot of time in refining some of the energy act at the time with amendments. A lot of red tape was reduced at that time, and I'm not sure myself what exactly has taken place since that time. Another writer, Lynette Tremblay of Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association, said in that same Sherwood Park News article that I mentioned a moment ago:

While we were in Texas recently, we heard from investors that the U.S. regulatory environment is more consistent than Canada's, and they felt more driven by economics.

She went on to say:

On average, it takes about twice as long to navigate Canada's regulatory process than it does in the U.S. That adds significant costs and uncertainty to a project.

It seems to me that we're facing an uphill battle if our main competitor has seen the light of day and they've reduced a lot of these costs and red tape situations, yet here in Bill 1 it looks as if they have not done much in terms of addressing red tape and the regulatory timelines. When that is the case, how can you be competitive with our major competitor to the south? If we had something there, some sort of red tape repeal, it would do much to unleash the economy that we're in right now and put people back to work, in our opinion.

I guess it's telling that the NDP is only introducing Bill 1 after three years. Governments are setting up good-news stories all the time, and, you know, as we approach the election, I'm hoping that some of these things might become something that can be addressed. If it's missing here, I'm wondering when it's going to come out. Is it going to be addressed soon?

Let's just take a moment and review what the policy options are that the government is going to use to diversify the economy through the petrochemical sector and just see what we can discover. It's kind of hard to comparatively look at modest loan guarantees and grants spread over eight years. It will hopefully draw some much-needed investment back to Alberta in a meaningful way, but we have yet to see that happen.

Again, to quote another portion of that article, Lynette Tremblay said in that same article:

Globally-integrated companies do not necessarily need repayable loans from government.

But it seems that that is what the NDP government is doing with this bill. They plan to use grants, loans, and loan guarantees as outlined in Bill 1. Generally speaking, what my experience has been is that Albertans generally do not support grants to businesses in a big way. They don't like to see government involved in business. A lot of times you hear about it, and it's called corporate welfare. Time and time again we've heard about the latest refinery that would finally come online and how that had to be heavily supported by government. Corporate welfare came up time and time again in the previous term, I can assure you.

Nonetheless, if the government is handing out free money, the problem is that everybody wants free money. We have to be careful not to be picking favourites all the time. We have to be careful that we're doing this in an appropriate way across the board.

Albertans like competition. It keeps the costs low. That's a basic principle. Companies going bankrupt because one gets a grant or a loan or a backstop and the other does not is not encouraging competition. It would be, I think, far more effective to start repealing these harmful policies that have been brought in by the NDP government and to create an investment environment that is going to drive competition. Instead, this bill, Bill 1, reads like a distraction. It looks like the NDP are going to bring in $800 million in loan guarantees and $200 million in grants for a partial upgrading program. This process reduces bitumen thickness, making it easier to flow in the pipelines. No diluent is needed, and it opens up pipeline capacity and enables more refineries to access Alberta oil. Certainly, those sound like great improvements.

There are multiple players, though, trying to get partial upgrading under way, and this seems kind of problematic. One person getting money over the other would have a competitive advantage over their competitors. Maybe the loser would go bankrupt and the industry would consolidate. It's hard to tell. But we already have banks, both commercial and investment banks, and other financial institutions and other capital funds available through the capital markets. Why as the Alberta government do we need to backstop commercially viable projects with Alberta's credit rating to act as a cosigner on loans? It didn't look like that's what they were doing down south, where they were quite successful. Could it be because the NDP have actually changed the way we operate so that it's so visible to investors that the fundamentals of the province have changed? Hence, they have to financially backstop the projects; otherwise, people aren't interested. This makes no sense, Madam Speaker.

I also understand that the NDP plans to bring in a $500 million loan guarantee for what's called a feedstock infrastructure program. Apparently, our natural gas industry needs financing assistance in order to build what they call straddle plants to separate gas into its separate components. Those typically are ethane, propane, and methane, which, in turn, feed the petrochemical plants that will make plastics and other products. I would think that the companies would have sense enough to separate those streams if the separate streams are worth more money. Why do we have to go in and offer loan guarantees to have this happen? What is the main crux of the problem? Have we done a cost-based economic analysis of this to ensure that that's the right path?

They also plan – and I'm speaking of the NDP government again – to bring in round 2 of the successful petrochemical diversification program. The first round of that program had $20 billion over 16 projects bid for $500 million in royalty credits. Two projects won. They're expected to create 4,000 construction jobs and over 200 full-time operating jobs.

One can note the royalty credits in Alberta versus the tax credits in Louisiana. One can also note what incentives Louisiana did not use. They didn't use grants or loan guarantees and royalty credits. They did it in a more creative way. Could it be that Louisiana knows that grants, loans, and loan guarantees will not have the bump in activity that the other policy programs have? Could that be the case? Has anyone looked at and really analyzed what has taken place in that state and how they've been so successful, as they've been so successful across that nation? I read this morning in the paper while I was having breakfast that the U.S. is now providing a new gas line into southern Ontario or Quebec – I can't remember which – and instead of our gas being supplied to eastern Canada, they're now going to be supplied mainly from the U.S. Something is wrong with this situation, folks.

Locally the Alberta Industrial Heartland Association is also advocating for a more competitive capital cost allowance. Canada's 50 per cent deduction for capital cost depreciation is only available in 2025 while the United States has implemented a permanent 100 per cent capital cost allowance. This is another thing that needs to be looked at in a very serious way.

Interestingly enough, though, the EDAC report, which I mentioned earlier, in recommendation 7.4 stated that Alberta should "seek the permanent extension of the existing accelerated capital cost allowance for manufacturers."

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod for his comments today. I was on the edge of my seat during that entire speech, and I would like to give him the opportunity to be able to finish his remaining comments.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I appreciate that from the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I was saying that, interestingly enough, the EDAC report in recommendation 7.4 stated that they wished to seek the permanent extension of the existing accelerated capital cost allowance for manufacturers such as the petrochemical industry to provide certainty to those interested in investing in the downstream.

But there's nothing in Bill 1 about that. Why didn't you follow up on that idea? It makes so much sense. You know, there are a lot of economists that agree with us, and they note that this tool can be more powerful than any tax-based incentives, actually.

Let's talk about taxes now. Recent corporate tax cuts in the United States have resulted in a 21 per cent tax compared to Alberta's 27 per cent corporate tax: 12 per cent provincially and 15 per cent federally is how that's made up. Taxes are actually the big deal now. We must pay attention to this, folks. We pay 6 per cent more corporate tax in Alberta than in some parts of the U.S.A. Why is that? Why can't we match these things?

Madam Speaker, I know that the government means well in trying to do something to spark growth in the industry. The minister on this file is a good acquaintance of mine. He served over here on the opposition side with me and with three others for some time in my first term, but it looks like we're playing to the stereotype and the ideological inklings to spur development that is common with the NDP.

To recap, the NDP plan to use grants, loans, loan guarantees, and royalty credits to spur development. While there might be some success, I suppose, with these support programs, I don't think they would be as successful as reducing the red tape, shortening the permanent approval timelines, reducing the taxes, and increasing the accelerated capital cost allowance. These are all policy options recommended by the panel of experts assembled by the NDP who wrote the report. Why aren't these recommendations in Bill 1? That's the key question. Why aren't they in Bill 1?

For those reasons, Madam Speaker, for choosing the ideological shortcut over the proper, long road that is there that makes common sense, I'm sorry, but the NDP will not be receiving my support for Bill 1. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to be able to rise and speak in third reading on Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act. I have been listening to the debate on this bill for the past few months, and what I'd like to do is that I'd like to be able to just kind of review, first of all, the background of how we got to this point where we have a need for this. Then I'd like to talk about some of the pros that we see in this bill. I know that the NDP government would be surprised to hear me talk about the pros, but I do actually think there are some pros to this bill. Then I'd like to talk about the things that we feel are not so positive about this bill and then finish up with some of the recommendations that we've brought forward.

To be clear, when we had a drop in the natural gas prices, there was a spur in global petrochemical demand. Historically, as we looked at this petrochemical industry, the first wave of investment in North America totalled, I believe, around $240 billion Canadian. Now, what's interesting about that is that of that investment, 62 per cent came from foreign investors, which is a very good sign saying that the private market has been able to assess that this is a growth industry, that they can actually make a profit on it and is something that they're interested in.

We then move on to what happened here in Canada. Now, traditionally the foreign investors of whatever amount, the $240 billion: we would have seen traditionally about 10 per cent of that foreign investment coming into Canada. However, Madam Speaker, it's interesting to note that only 2 per cent of that $240 billion came into Canada. The question then becomes: why? Why did we only see 2 per cent of that initial tranche of investment? I believe that the reason why is because of some fairly aggressive incentives that were offered in the United States. The United States, from what I understand reading through some of the materials, had been offering, in some of the states, 10 to 15 per cent of the capital costs of a project. In places like Louisiana, Pennsylvania, and Texas they were very successful at being able to lure these investment dollars into their states in order for them to be able to have them build those projects there.

Now, there's an IHS Markit analysis, and in this it talks about our competitiveness in terms of this petrochemical diversification. What it said was that our ability to bring in those investment dollars has eroded, and it talked about the reasons why. One of the reasons that it talked about was that we had no incentives to counteract the high labour and capital costs. When a business, an organization looks at where they're going to invest, they're going to take a look at all the factors, and then they're going to say: well, this is the cost of labour, this is the cost of feedstock, this is the cost of transportation to market, and this is the cost of the taxes. They'll take all those things into consideration. One of the things that this report said, which I've spoken about many times in this House, was that the regulatory burden within Canada was restricting the ability to be able to incent that capital to come to Canada.

Now, specifically in Alberta we have talked about this concept of regulatory burden, red tape, as it's often called, and we've talked about just being able to drill an oil well. In Texas it takes a couple of weeks to be able to get the permitting; Saskatchewan, you know, two or three months. In Alberta it can take over a year. What's happened is that we've driven away business. We've driven away the opportunity for businesses to be able to come into our province and say: this is a place that we can set up, we can quickly get the investment going, and we can be in a situation where we can start creating jobs.

This is something that I believe the committee, the EDAC, was set up to try to be able to address. Now, what's interesting about that, though, is that when they set up this EDAC committee, there was a mandate put in that, and the mandate was "to explore opportunities for increasing the value of Alberta's resources and creating more jobs." The concept of being able to create more jobs, according to a Conservative side, is that when you incentivize through lower marginal tax rates, lower size of government, and lower regulatory red tape, then that will create the scenario where investors can say: we can make a good return on investment; we'll go into that jurisdiction. This we used to call the Alberta advantage, and when we had that Alberta advantage, we had for a 10-year period more foreign investment coming into Alberta than Quebec and Ontario combined, with only 11 per cent of the population of Canada here in Alberta.

Here's what's interesting about that. There are jurisdictions down in the United States that have taken the approach that if they will put 10 to 15 per cent of the capital cost into a project, they can incentivize those companies to come into their state. The problem is this, Madam Speaker. It becomes a shell game because you have other states or other jurisdictions, even different jurisdictions throughout the world, that say: okay; well, they're offering 10 to 15 per cent; we need to offer 17 to 20 per cent. Then the next tranche of investments doesn't go into those areas. It goes into other areas that are offering more.

There is actually a better way, Madam Speaker. The better way is to offer, as I've stated many times in this House, a Reaganomics approach. This, again, specifically talks about creating not a vehicle but the environment where businesses can thrive. This concept here – I mean, the bill is called the Energy Diversification Act. Now, this government has oftentimes said that the whole approach of this government is to be able to try to get us off the oil roller-coaster ride, so they talk about diversifying the economy. The absolute best way to be able to diversify the economy is by applying Reaganomics.

Rather than actually taking a look at a tax boutique, which is what we've kind of seen with – actually, that's what we've seen with the bills that have come forward from the NDP, which is picking winners and losers, saying: we believe that this is actually the area that we need to expand and put money into so that we can actually build out that sector or that portion of the economy.

Here's the problem. The problem is that throughout the couple of hundred years that we've been able to kind of focus and really learn about what market economies are like, what we've seen is that any time people think that they're actually smarter than the market or that they can actually gerrymander or mess around with the market, it has always ended up being unsuccessful. There's a plethora of examples out there. We've got history on our side to show that the absolute best way of being able to create a strong, robust, diverse economy is to allow supply and demand to be able to create the equilibrium price.

If we do that and we do that effectively, then that diversification will happen organically, the creation of jobs will happen organically because the fundamentals – the fundamentals – are strong. So you build the proper fundamentals, the proper foundation of any economy, and it will thrive. This is why in North America we have seen such amazing growth and wealth creation, because of our ability to be able to embrace those principles or those policies that actually create that wealth and create that diversification, create those well-paying jobs, those well-paying businesses.

When we move away from that model, Madam Speaker, we move to shaky ground. We move into an area that has never been proven in the past to work, yet I hear from this government on a regular basis that they have figured it out this time, that even though it hasn't worked in the past, they have the ability to be able to figure it out this time, and that it will work. There is an arrogance in that – and I've spoken about that before – where the arrogance is that we believe that we have a better idea about how to be able to fix the economy or how to be able to make it work.

I've said this before, Madam Speaker. I think that if this government was to be judged on intent, they would have a gold star, absolutely, an A, grade A. Intent? Absolutely. The problem is that outcomes are how every government is judged, and the outcomes that we've seen from this government have been lacklustre at best. We've seen an increase, an uptick, in the price of oil, which naturally is going to see an uptick in some of your economic drivers. For the NDP to say that that's because of their policies, I think that that's short sighted.

But I will say that I recognize the intent of this bill. The intent was to say: look, we're only getting 2 per cent of this petrochemical industry investment; we need to try to be able to address that issue. There are certainly historical background and precedents to show that when states like Louisiana and Texas and Pennsylvania do this, they do incentivize these investment dollars to come in.

But once again I've said, Madam Speaker, that that is short sighted because it's a shell game. At one point you can be able to incentivize them with a 10 to 15 per cent capital injection into the project, but when the next tranche of money comes in or when the next petrochemical facilities need to be built, at that point you're in competition with other jurisdictions that say: we'll give you 17 per cent or 18 per cent or 20 per cent to be able to come in. Then where does it end?

This is why, in my opinion, this approach is folly. It is not long-term thinking, nor is it actually an approach that, in my opinion, is good for our children and grandchildren. Let's create an environment – and this is the reason, Madam Speaker. This is the reason why I came to this House. This is why I ran, because Alberta was good to my family. We had a charmed life here. It was fantastic. Being able to live . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much to the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, who had a great presentation. I was very interested to hear his comments that he was speaking about at the end in regard to his family and would love if he would elaborate on that a little bit more.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Would the member like to respond?

Mr. Hunter: I would love to respond, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Please go ahead.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. Look, the truth is that I got into this, I ran to become a politician to become a Member of the Legislative Assembly so that we could try to be able to get Alberta back on track with this thing that we used to call the Alberta advantage. Really, the Alberta advantage is an application of Reaganomics. It is an application. It's a proper application of Reaganomics. You know, it was interesting because I heard one of the members a few days ago talking about how trickle-down economics didn't work, and this is actually another word for Reaganomics. She quoted the IMF as her source for saying that it didn't work. It's interesting that she would use that as the source.

But I will say this much. If you take a look at wealth creation as the indicator of a system's success, trickle-down economics has worked very, very well throughout the world. The members opposite can laugh all they want, but they need to read history, and they need to read some economic journals rather than just the IMF. That they would be able to say – you know what? Again, I could quote lots of stuff the IMF has said that is absolutely – what can I say? It's the IMF.

But I will say this much. When it comes to Alberta's approach to being able to actually get us back on track, Alberta's approach to being able to say, "How do we make it better in a sustainable, diversified, robust economy?" this is what I would have to say. Picking winners and losers through a boutique tax break style really doesn't work. [interjection]

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Nixon: I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j). I hesitate to rise on it. I was hoping the minister would just handle that issue herself, but I'm wondering, through you, Madam Speaker, if the minister would just like to rise and apologize and withdraw her language in this Assembly. I won't repeat it, but it's inappropriate. I know you acknowledged it and looked at her. I thought that she'd handle that in a more appropriate way, and I'd like to give her an opportunity to do that.

The Acting Speaker: Is there someone wishing to respond to the point of order? The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The member is absolutely correct. I would like to apologize and withdraw.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, would you like to continue?

Mr. Hunter: Yes, I would like to. Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hunter: As I was saying – and I know that the members opposite were riveted by what I was saying – the concept is that if we get back to the fundamentals that actually build a diverse economy, a robust economy, our children and grandchildren will be the benefactors of that. The value to us in being able to do that is that when the petrochemical industry decides that they're going to do another tranche of investments, at that point they can take a look at all the fundamentals of Alberta and say that Alberta is the place to invest petrochemical – whatever the industry is, it will invest.

This is why I am opposed to this bill. It doesn't get the fundamentals right. If you want a diverse economy and you want to be able to diversify the economy, then you've got to get the fundamentals right. This government continues to focus on tax boutiques. Tax boutiques do not work, Madam Speaker. Actually, to put this more succinctly, tax boutiques only work for a short period of time. Then what happens is that the government is in a position where they have to rethink their situation.

We're now, I think, $45 billion in debt and, according to this government, moving towards $96 billion. We're in a situation where if we don't get the fundamentals right, Madam Speaker – this is a perpetual problem that lots of economies have. They believe that they can spend their way out of the problems with their fundamentals, and that is not true. You have to get back to the fundamentals that actually make an economy work. Once you do that, then you're in a situation where that economy can now – because it does not try to gerrymander or rig what happens with supply and demand creating the equilibrium price, the market moves where it needs to move, and it will diversify, as that market will. We will see the people starting to net migrate back into Alberta. We'll see all the indicators starting to fire on all cylinders.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a beautiful June morning, and I do appreciate the opportunity to talk about Bill 1. I really enjoyed the comments from the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, who just went before me. I think that he did an excellent job of articulating some of the concerns about this piece of legislation that's before us today. I'd like to pick up on a few of the main points that he raised, actually, in my time today.

While the concept of this bill and, certainly, the title of the bill, the Energy Diversification Act, are something that all members of this Assembly, I think, would support – certainly, broad amounts of public would support the idea of diversifying our industry – the problem, though, is that like with so many things with the NDP when they bring legislation here, they have cute and fancy titles, but then when you go and look within the bill itself, it starts to fall apart and it falls short. In this case it certainly does fall short of that goal and does very little towards the act of actually trying to diversify our economy in this province.

I think, Madam Speaker, as was pointed out by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, it is interesting – in fact, I would say that it's telling – that this government, the NDP government of Alberta, has only brought forward this legislation three years into their mandate. Prior to this legislation – even if you look at some of the ideological policies that are coming out of the NDP government currently, over the last three years the NDP was doing everything possible, it seems, to be able to prevent investment inside our province. Sadly, they did that successfully. They successfully chased away billions upon billions upon billions of dollars out of this province. We now know from the majority of large investors with billions of dollars to be able to invest in an economy like Alberta's that they have put a big red X on Alberta, and the condition before they will consider coming back to our province is that the NDP government has to be gone.

Those are the policies that they've brought forward in the last three years. They raised taxes on job creators, really slowing down the diversification of our economy, not to mention increasing the consequences of the economic downturn that we were facing. We now know that we have higher taxes in our province but less income under the NDP government because they chased away job creators who left our province.

They imposed a carbon tax, brought in the largest tax increase in the history of our province, something they did not campaign on, something they actually hid from Albertans as they campaigned through the last election. You know, typical of the NDP: run on a hidden agenda, come through, then force through a tax on the province, a tax that the large majority, a huge majority of Albertans do not like, do not want. This carbon tax is a backdoor PST. As you know, if they had brought in a provincial sales tax, they would have had to call a referendum and they would have had to consult with Albertans, so they had to sit in the backroom and come up with a devious way to be able to move around that. They used the carbon tax. They like to call it a levy, as you know, Madam Speaker – I know you would not – but it is clearly a tax. That's what they brought in, again further damaging our economy.

As the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner points out, if this government truly has seen the light and actually wants to be able to help Albertans – so far their record is attacking Albertans and making life harder for Albertans. But if they've seen the light finally – and maybe it's been the great work by the Member for Calgary-Foothills, who's worked so hard on these files. Maybe they've finally seen the light, Member. Maybe they have. But if they've seen the light, then they should take some immediate actions that would have way more effect on our economy, way more positive effect on the people of Alberta and our economy than this bill would, because this bill falls well short of that.

The number one thing they should do is to remove the carbon tax if they want to help diversify our economy immediately. In fact, they may even help themselves politically, but that's not why they should do that. They should do it because that's what Albertans want them to do. They should do it because it's good for our economy. They should do it because it will attract investors back to our province.

But they won't. They won't. I don't want to always predetermine the outcome of the government, but clearly their record on this issue is clear. They will double down, triple down, and continue to go on with their ideological agenda despite the fact that they're devastating communities, that they're hurting people that you represent and that I represent. Instead, they'll come here and attempt to distract people, Albertans, from this government's hideous and ridiculous record on these issues. They'll try to come forward and say: hey, look, we'll bring in a couple of these tax breaks, we'll call the act a fancy name but not really have any content within the act that actually does what that name says, but we will not actually do what it takes to fix the economy.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner talked a lot about how much easier it is in other jurisdictions to be able to do certain activities, you know, oil and gas activities. If this government truly wanted to diversify the economy, truly wanted to spur things on, get things going, they would actually look at the red tape side. Instead, this government has made it worse. The example of Texas was raised earlier this morning, you know, three, four weeks to be able to get a project going; in Alberta and in Canada, unfortunately, sometimes well over a year.

In the case of what we're seeing right now with the Trans Mountain pipeline in B.C. being blocked indefinitely by NDP allies in B.C., including the NDP government in B.C.: individuals blocking that pipeline illegally without any consequences from the Premier of Alberta – in fact, she went out of her way to be able to avoid actually having that conflict with them and continued to allow them to do that illegal behaviour up to the point that she and the Prime Minister, her close friend Justin Trudeau of the federal Liberal government, had to go buy that pipeline and then had a party high-fiving each other.

It's shocking, Madam Speaker. I know you'll be shocked by this. The members across the way stood outside a couple of weeks ago or a week ago – time blends together in this room – on a beautiful sunny day and high-fived each other repeatedly, celebrating billions of dollars of investment leaving our community, billions of dollars of investment leaving our province. As the executive of Kinder Morgan got to go home to Texas and get a million-and-a-half-dollar bonus, this NDP government was high-fiving each other, but they still haven't dealt with the issue, which is that they have to address the protesters and the municipalities that are blocking that pipeline illegally. But this government, rather than deal with that, would rather put their head in the sand than confront people that have the same ideological agenda as them.

I can say that, Madam Speaker, because one of leads of the protest movement against that pipeline is Tzaporah Berman, an appointee of the NDP government, who has been quoted recently saying that all hell is going to break loose because the federal government tried to buy a pipeline and that, basically, they will not stop blocking this pipeline from being built. That's an appointee of this government.

Instead of changing red tape and adjusting to it – you know, the red tape argument actually is significant. There's an organization in Sundre, my hometown, called black gold, and they do a lot of great work on emissions, on technology.

Mr. Cooper: Dallas Rosevear.

Mr. Nixon: Dallas Rosevear. You're correct. Dallas Rosevear, for sure.

But they do a lot of work on technology that can address emissions on current oil wells and those type of things. Really great stuff. If you ever have a chance, Madam Speaker, if you're ever in Sundre, call me, and we'll go for a tour of their shop. It's pretty fascinating. Their head office is in Sundre, and they have shops in Oklahoma and across the United States, but Alberta is where they are from. The owner of it is a lifelong resident of the great town of Sundre. In fact, he actually lives out in Bergen, just a few miles away from my home.

Mr. Cooper: He just planted 36 trees in his yard.

Mr. Nixon: I did not know that, hon. member. He just planted 36 trees in his yard. That's excellent.

I went and visited with him the other day. Like, something like 80 per cent of their current business, including what's coming out of the shop in Sundre right now, is on its way to the States, places like Texas and Oklahoma, because they can get projects off the ground effectively, through the red tape, at significantly, I mean, astronomically faster speeds to be able to get their projects built than what's happening here in our province.

What's happening is that all of the investment is going down to the United States. The only thing that's still saving our communities is that the United States and those areas still do not have the same level or the same amount of experienced workforce in these issues, so they have to come up to places like black gold in Sundre to be able to access our skilled labour. But the United States is catching up in these areas very, very fast. Many people, particularly Albertans of late: I know many of them who have moved down to Texas and those other areas to be able to provide their skills because they don't have to pay the carbon tax down there. They don't have to pay the increased tax rates from this government. The point is that that much work is coming from our communities and having to go to the States or other jurisdictions because this government and the federal government have made the red tape so significant that they can't operate inside these environments.

Now, I'm sure that this government will try to put a spin on it. In fact, maybe at lunchtime we'll all go outside, and we'll see them all jumping up and down high-fiving each other in the sun and getting some nice photos. But the problem that they created, the problem that exists in this province, will still exist after those high-fives. The people that this government is supposed to represent and should be concerned with when they're in this Chamber, though they're not, are still going to be suffering as a result of this government's policies.

The number one thing the government can do right now to work on diversification is to create an environment, as the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner said, where businesses can succeed. But this government, from the moment they came into office, have worked hard to attack businesses, to make things harder for businesses, to make the rules harder, to focus on their ideological beliefs, to damage job creators, and to chase job creators out of our province. You know, when we talk about that here at a high level, it's easy for us to forget what that really means. What that means back in communities like mine and yours, Madam Speaker, is that people lose jobs. People stay on the unemployment line longer.

Now, I guess this government doesn't care about that, according to the Deputy Premier of Alberta, who has said in this Chamber in Hansard that those several hundred thousand people who have lost work under this government's watch are just an opportunity cost so that this government can push forward their ideological agenda. They're just a cost. Don't worry about them. They're struggling to pay their mortgages. It's ridiculous of that minister to say that. It's ridiculous that this government acts like that and thinks like that. Those are real people: my friends and my neighbours, your friends and your neighbours. Those are moms and dads. Those are people that are trying to make ends meet, and this government thinks that they are just an economic opportunity cost on the altar of their ideological agenda.

When they bring forward legislation into this place, they just confirm their own words. All they want to do is distract from their ridiculous record. All they want to do is distract from their shameful behaviour towards Albertans. Distract. It's a great idea to diversify the economy. It's a great idea to try to fix the mess that the NDP have created in their time in government. Why won't they do it? Why do they continue to double down on their ideological policy? Why do they continue to punish everyday Albertans, to scare away job creators? Why? What you'll notice is that there have been a lot of bills in this session associated with energy and with the Energy minister's files. What I have noticed – I don't know if you have noticed this, Madam Speaker – is that the Energy minister almost never rises to discuss them. She won't discuss them. She won't stand up in this Chamber, and she won't defend them.

The Energy critic for the United Conservative Party, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, has done a great job through all these bills. He's come forward with reasonable changes, well thought out, after broad consultation with the industry. He's also worked in the industry, is very educated, an engineer, and understands the process. He stands up in this House repeatedly and brings forward ideas on how they could at least make their bad bills better. And from the Energy minister what do we hear? Crickets. Crickets. They know that they can't defend their behaviour. They can't defend their behaviour. If they could defend their behaviour, the Energy minister would stand up right now and defend it. She would stand up and say: "This is why this bill is okay. This is how this bill will actually fix the problems that have caused the economic downturn," you know, like raising taxes on job creators by 20 per cent or increasing red tape, the issues this government did to those job creators. She could show us how this bill would do it, but she won't.

Because of that, Madam Speaker, I will move an amendment. I have the appropriate copies for the page.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. If you could please just wait until I have a copy at the table and at my chair.

Hon. member, just for a point of clarity, you are out of time, so any other member can speak to the amendment.

The amendment is in order. The amendment will be referred to as REC.

We will be under 29(2)(a). The hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise under 29(2)(a) and ask if the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre wouldn't mind informing the House a little bit more about what the amendment would do.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you to my good friend and neighbour the MLA for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, who, as you saw earlier, Madam Speaker, seems to be paying particular attention to the Bergen road, where I live, and seems to know when my neighbours are planting trees more than I do, which is great. I'm a little worried.

An Hon. Member: Just scoping out the area.

Mr. Nixon: Just scoping.

I'm moving the following amendment, that the motion for third reading of Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 2, 3, and 4.

The reason I move this amendment – I think I made it fairly clear in my comments earlier on the main bill – is that this government is avoiding dealing with the real issues that are preventing the diversification of our economy and are making our economy worse, issues that mostly they created during their time in government. They need some time to be able to reconsider the legislation that they've brought here to be able to actually bring in some concrete action in those sections, to be able to fix the mess that they created, and to be able to get our economy back on track for Albertans.

We know that this government struggles with legislation. The record is extremely clear that when it comes to bringing forward bills to this Assembly, the government has repeatedly shown themselves as incompetent. They most of the time have to amend their own legislation, sometimes during the session. Fortunately, sometimes the public is able to put enough pressure on them, and they realize that they made a mistake. A great example would be the Municipal Affairs minister with Bill 10, having to bring in an amendment that basically rewrote his entire bill because of the mistake that he made. It's very disappointing, but at least he caught it and caught it during the session, before everybody had to go home for the summer. But most of the time under the NDP government they don't catch it till the following sitting. Albertans have been having to pay the consequences as a result of the NDP's incompetence when it comes to writing legislation.

Clearly, I think that the Energy minister won't even address her own legislation in this place. We don't know if she has gotten it right. Clearly, when you read this bill, the NDP do not have a plan to actually diversify our economy, do not have a plan to address the job-killing policies that they've brought forward, do not have a plan to address the fact that they scared away billions of dollars of investment from our province and that nobody will come back as long as they're still in power because of the policies they do. This amendment gives them an opportunity to be able to bring it back to committee and try to get it right so that, one, we can catch all the mistakes that they probably made within this bill, because that's every bill, and two, we can make sure that they're actually bringing in changes that will help the economy.

Now, I predict, unfortunately, Madam Speaker, that the NDP will vote against this amendment because they actually do not care. They just want to focus on driving through their ideological agenda and distracting people from the fact that the main problem with diversifying our economy, the number one problem with getting investment into our economy, is them. That's why they'll vote against it, because they don't want to admit it. Now, I get it. If I was in government and my government was the main thing that was chasing away billions of dollars of investment for the province, I probably wouldn't want this to go to committee to discuss that. But they should care about your constituents and my constituents and their constituents enough to recognize: "We have a problem. This government keeps messing up. We better go to committee and get some help. We can't even write a bill without any help, and we've proven it, so let's go to committee and get this right for the people of Alberta. They're depending on us."

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There's some time remaining under 29(2)(a). Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to amendment REC? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

10:10

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment today moved by my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre with respect to Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act. In this particular amendment today we are proposing that we go back to Committee of the Whole for the purposes of reconsidering section 2, section 3, and section 4. I think that it is reasonable for us to have a bit of a discussion around exactly what that would allow us to do.

In section 2 of the legislation it speaks about:

The Minister shall establish programs that have the primary purpose of supporting economic growth and energy diversification, including, without limitation, programs that

- (a) support innovation and diversification in the energy sector by renewing the Petrochemicals Diversification Program and by allowing projects that consume ethane to be considered under that program,
- (b) increase access to capital,
- (c) increase the development of value-added upgrading in Alberta through a partial upgrading program under the Petroleum Marketing Act,
- (d) encourage more investment and jobs in upstream, midstream and downstream energy sectors by creating a petrochemical feedstock infrastructure program under the Mines and Minerals Act,
- (e) encourage increased participation from under-represented communities in the energy sector, and
- (f) support energy export and development.

You know, I find a number of these particular sections curious because many of them the minister actually has the ability to do already. One thing that I think is a little bit disappointing and a good reason why we should recommit it to Committee of the Whole to have a much more robust discussion around these particular issues in section 2 is particularly around this issue of encouraging participation, increasing participation from underrepresented communities in the energy sector.

I know that the Leader of the Official Opposition in this House both this week and, I believe, last week, if I'm not mistaken, asked specific questions about the Eagle Spirit pipeline project in northern Alberta – that is a project predominantly of indigenous leaders, indigenous communities, and indigenous organizations – proposing engagement and increased participation, one might say, in the energy sector. Unfortunately, due to the federal government's tanker moratorium and ban off the northern coast of British Columbia, they are unable to proceed with their efforts.

We have literally asked the government on I believe it is half a dozen occasions: will they speak strongly, against their opposition, to remove the tanker moratorium? Every single time the minister, the Premier, the Deputy Premier duck, cover, weave, bob, move all around the place but actually say that their good friend and close ally Justin Trudeau should in fact remove the tanker ban from northern Alberta. In a single act of him doing that, it would allow a whole group of individuals who are from, as the bill says, underrepresented communities to proceed on that very issue of engaging in the energy sector in a much more meaningful and important way.

The amendment before us here actually would give the government the opportunity to come back into the Chamber, speak strongly about this particular issue. They could set the record straight, actually communicate, put into actions the things that they say they want to do in this legislation. They would be able to support Alberta entrepreneurs. They would be able to support members of the indigenous community. They would be able to support this very vital project. All that we've seen from this government is that the government has said: "Don't worry. We've written a letter. We've written a letter and expressed our displeasure." But they have not publicly spoken against the tanker ban.

I think you'll find if you go back into Hansard, Madam Speaker, that in the spring session or the last fall session the Official Opposition asked tens and tens of times this particular question about the tanker ban, prior and then after, and at every single turn the government has refused to take a strong position that supports Alberta entrepreneurs with respect to pipelines in northern Alberta. They won't commit publicly, yet they profess in this piece of legislation to want to be encouraging increased participation from underrepresented communities in the energy sector. Well, the spirit energy pipeline and the group that is associated with that are individuals who are passionate about the energy sector, but there is a significant barrier to the project in which they would like to engage, and the government has virtually said nothing.

You know, the legislation also talks about supporting energy export development, and I think it's a perfect reason why we should go back to Committee of the Whole just to talk about what that means. If that means the current plan of chasing away private capital so that it can be replaced with federal government capital in the form of Kinder Morgan, so that their senior executives could get a $1.5 million bonus payout from the Alberta and the federal governments, if that's their idea of supporting energy export development, I think Albertans want to have a more robust conversation around that.

You know, the amendment before us speaks specifically about recommitting this legislation to reconsider section 3.

Regulations

3(1) The Minister may, if regulations are necessary to give effect to a program referred to in section 2, make regulations respecting the program, including its implementation.

(2) If the Minister wishes to establish an investor tax credit program or a capital investment tax program, the Minister shall introduce in the Legislative Assembly a bill to establish that tax program.

Well, I think it's important that we have a discussion around what some of those regulations might look like.

You know, this government has an amazing track record, and not in a good kind of amazing way but in the way of establishing rules and regulations inside the cover of a minister's office. Essentially, under the regulations section, section 3 of the legislation, it allows the minister to create any program and any regulation to support that program. But part of the problem is that even if we want to FOIP information about this in the future with respect to the e-mails that might go around the minister's office on what those regulations might be, Madam Speaker, you know what kind of record this government has when it comes to deleting e-mails. You know the kind of record this government has when it comes to the FOIP process. There are currently four investigations with respect to breaches that this government has been involved in. So any time that ministers are providing themselves carte blanche abilities, you know, the Official Opposition and Albertans have some concerns around that.

The most senior official in the Premier's office, Mr. John Heaney, the former chief of staff, you'll know is involved in an investigation of political interference with respect to FOIP. He also has, you know – the government's track record on transparency has been terrible.

Mr. McIver: He was laid off for a weekend.

Mr. Cooper: He took a weekend off before they retitled him with a $130,000 contract. This is exactly the problem with regulations and why it's so important, and how it's related directly to Bill 1 is the government's track record on creating regulations in a fair, open, and transparent manner.

I think it's important that we reconsider section 4 of the legislation.

4(1) The Minister shall annually, and more frequently if the Premier directs, report to the Executive Council on the Minister's progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2.

(2) The Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission shall annually, and more frequently if the Minister directs, report to the Minister on any project supported by the Commission through any programs established under section 2.

You know, Madam Speaker, I have a philosophy in politics: trust but verify. The problem with this particular section is that the minister can go a whole year without any accountability to Executive Council, let alone any accountability to the Legislative Assembly. Now, fortunately, the Premier can tell the minister to do his job in a more efficient manner by directing him to write a better report or more frequent reports to Executive Council. My colleague here from Calgary-Hays has been a minister before, and he'll tell you that reporting to Executive Council should happen frequently. There's no reason, if the minister is reporting to Executive Council frequently, that he can't then report to the Legislative Assembly at least on an annual basis. It would make sense. The chairs of most committees in our Assembly report to the Assembly annually.

We're talking about spending millions of tax dollars, with virtually no accountability with respect to reporting to the Assembly.

Those are just a few of the reasons why it's important that this bill gets recommitted to Committee of the Whole so that we can correct the errors of the government and so that they can recognize their folly with respect to transparency and accountability. We can do them a favour, help them out of a political jam, and make sure that this bill is as open and transparent as possible.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Hon. member, under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Panda: No. I'm speaking to the motion.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. There are no members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to rise to urge my colleagues to vote down this amendment. The time to get Bill 1, you know, out of the Assembly and into action I think is now. This is a bill that has been given a great deal of thought and has had the benefit of experience with the first round of incentives, speaking specifically about the first PDP program, which was a resounding success. That's one thing that I think we need to be really clear on is just how well received that first round of the petrochemical diversification program has been.

I mean, it just so happens that yesterday I was out visiting Pembina with our Minister of Energy and had a chance to speak with the administration and the staff there. They're really excited and raring to go. You know, this is a development that, as well as the IPL one, wouldn't be going forward if we hadn't made the prudent decision to level the playing field here in Alberta so that companies could make that investment decision. Playing on the experience and the success from that first round, I think that this bill is a very well-informed sequel to it and should have a substantially positive effect on our diversification efforts, which are also immensely popular not only within the industry but within the public at large. This is what Albertans want to see. They want to see us moving up the value chain as a province. This is something that we promised to do, and we're keeping our promise. So I'm really a bit nonplussed about the level of opposition we're seeing on this bill when I get out and talk to people in the field.

I also had an interesting conversation with a gentleman in Sturgeon county who works for a large international engineering firm. He made a point to thank me personally for what our government has done. He said, in his words: you know, it helped to keep us working, and we think it's a really well-designed program; we're really happy to see that, and we hope to see more. That's really what the consensus is out there. It's the time for greater diversification, the time to move up the value chain, the time to, you know, stop burning ethane and to be able to use it as the viable feedstock that it is. That time is now.

So it's for those reasons that I think we should defeat this amendment and pass this motion and, you know, get these programs to work for us.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, now I can recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing me to speak actually in favour of this motion from my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Having said that, although I support his motion, I'm not against petrochemical diversification. My colleague here from Calgary-Hays can confirm that within my own caucus I've spoken very passionately about energy diversification many times.

There are many, many good points in this bill. To the previous speaker from Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater: thank you for saying what you said, but you're being selective. If the intent of this bill is to increase the value of our resources, there are other ways to do it, too. If you look at the report submitted by the EDAC, you will realize that there are many other aspects of the recommendations that were not considered in this bill. That's why I worked with my caucus colleagues and I moved seven amendments, not one. Unfortunately, none of them were accepted by the NDP caucus.

We are all agreeing that energy diversification is important for maximizing the value of our resources. But having said that, the EDAC dealt with a few other recommendations. The fundamental difference here, Madam Speaker, as you heard from my colleagues from Cardston-Taber-Warner and Livingstone-Macleod, is that everyone talked about the EDAC report and how we can fix this bill and how we can have a fulsome discussion and then upgrade this bill. Some points we differ on. The NDP prefers grants, loans, and loan guarantees while industry preference, although they don't mind receiving them, and if the government offers them, they won't say no, is for tax incentives, tax credits, and royalty credits. That's where the difference is.

Like my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner said: New Democrats are not my enemies; they're my rivals. That's how I view them. They have some great ideas. In other provinces the likes of Gary Doer and Roy Romanow actually balanced budgets. They did a lot of great things for the people they served, and I'm sure that's the same intention of my NDP colleagues here. But where I differ from them is when they take a selective approach.

I also pity them because they have to fight their own NDP fellow travellers. Unfortunately, they put trust in people like Tzeporah Berman and Karen Mahon and all those people. Not only that; now they're in danger in Ontario. God forbid if the people give the mandate to the NDP there. They're going to side with the B.C. NDP, not with the Alberta NDP. And their own leader, Jagmeet Singh, the federal leader, already declared his intention to support B.C., not Alberta. So I know what a difficult situation the Premier and her colleagues are in, and I have some sympathy for them on that front because they have to fight their own NDP fellow travellers.

But the issue here is that the EDAC recommended many other things. I read into the record a few times and my colleagues read into the record many recommendations, and stakeholders like the Alberta Industrial Heartland talked about other ideas where we can improve this bill. All those recommendations were ignored. That's the issue I have in supporting this bill.

I talked to the stakeholders, and they still prefer other incentives than – I mean, those businesses don't want the public to view them as receiving corporate welfare. All they want is the government to get out of their way and let them do their job. They want a reasonable return on their investments, and then they want to take that risk. But if government is adding layers of regulation and putting up hurdles, that's not what they want.

That's why although I like some parts of the bill, I and my colleagues from Calgary-Hays and ... [interjection] Yeah. Calgary-Fish Creek. He had the same challenge on Bill 1. We talked about this in our caucus. When the NDP is selectively applying these things, we're not able to convince our constituents who are asking me: why would the NDP give billions to corporations, but they won't bring natural gas to La Crête? Those kinds of questions.

Also, people are asking that if we had to maximize our value for the resource and also, you know, the benefits to all Canadians, the NDP should be fighting their federal ally on the tanker ban, C-48. If we don't remove that tanker ban on the west coast, we can't export our product to Asian markets. So that means we continue to ship to only one market, in the U.S.A., and then we have to discount that product.

We are losing $43 million per day due to lack of pipeline space, and the Premier knows it. She said it many times, that we are discounting to the U.S.A. and they are exporting. They're using our heavy oil that they're refining in the Gulf coast of Mexico. They're getting full value for the product, and we are losing, in terms of the differential, $43 million a day. It adds up: every day $43 million, which is $15.6 billion per year. That money could have been used for all the social programs this government wants to champion. That's a lost opportunity.

Then C-69 is the other bill that their federal ally Justin Trudeau brought in. If that bill is passed as presented, there won't be any energy development projects, resource development projects in this province in the near future. There are only two, three projects that are wrapping up like Suncor's Fort Hills, and there are a few expansions to Cold Lake and other projects. But other than that, there are no in situ projects, there are no mining projects.

So how do we maximize the value for our resource if we don't fight those two bills? I asked the Energy minister many times in this House and the environment minister that if they have written to the standing committee, they should table those documents if they oppose those bills. Until today I haven't seen it. I tried to engage the Energy minister's staff, chief of staff. He gave me his cell number. I called, left a message; no answer.

We do want to work with them and co-operate, but they don't want to co-operate. When the Premier talked about all of us working together with one voice to send out the message, we supported her many times in this House. But when the Leader of the Official Opposition brought in Motion 505 to oppose those two changes, you know, to those federal bills, C-69 and C-48, the NDP voted against it. I was so surprised. While I thank them for passing my previous Motion 505, which was to phase out imports on the east coast and bring in energy independence to Canada – the NDP passed that private member's motion – to show solidarity, again, they could have voted in favour of the new Motion 505 from the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, but they decided to vote against that. That is not giving certainty to the industry.

When the NDP blindly reject our amendments and our ideas, industry is watching this, and then they're not feeling confident to invest in Alberta. That's another issue. That's why this Premier and her front-benchers need to work with the opposition so we send the right signals to the stakeholders. Otherwise, they'll be very, very scared to invest in Alberta. They know that governments come and go. That's part of democracy. Governments do change occasionally. You know, the PCs had a dynasty for 44 years. Then you know what happened. The same thing could happen to the New Democrats in less than a year. That's why they have to be careful.

Also, this bill didn't talk about geographic diversification. When I was the economic development critic, I travelled across all of this province, and I met with stakeholders like the Chambers of Commerce and others. What they told me is that although – I mean, we are concentrating on petrochemical diversification projects mostly in the Industrial Heartland, but then there are places in Alberta, like Grande Prairie, Whitecourt, Medicine Hat, and these days even in Rocky Mountain House, where there is a lot of natural gas and other resources that we can use as feedstock to produce value-add products. From methane we can produce polyethylene, and from propane we can produce polypropylene and so on. But in this Bill 1 that aspect, geographic diversification, is missing.

It's going to be hard. I know how people feel. In Calgary thousands of my former colleagues can't find work anymore. Although the economic development minister here and also the Finance minister get up and talk about things looking up, up, up, the reality is that there is still about a 30 per cent vacancy rate in Calgary's downtown towers. When I walk on the +15 Skywalk during lunchtime these days, it's not as busy as it used to be. That is the reality. If they want to check on that, they can. But they have to be realistic when they say that things are up, up, up. It's a jobless recovery. It's hurting Albertans. You can't ignore that.

You can sit in this House and say what the projections are. Yesterday the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky actually said it nicely: things went to the bottom, so now the only way, you know, it reacts is to come back up. We can't go any further down, so it has to come back up. If you want to take credit for it, take it. I compliment you for that, if you have any contribution to bring things back, but at the same time, then, you have to take accountability for things that are not working well.

So when we are talking about the $96 billion in debt that is projected, that's scary to many people. People like me who came for economic opportunity here, for a better quality of life and standard of living for my son and his future children, I mean, those dreams have shattered now because on that $96 billion we are going to pay $4 billion just in interest to the banks and bondholders, who are not even in Alberta. They are in other countries and other cities in Canada. So that's scary. And all those 100,000 jobs that are lost, somehow we have to bring them back, and the only way we can bring them back is if the NDP is willing to ...

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. The hon. member made several comments that I thought he was in the middle of when the time ran out, and I was hoping that he might complete those thoughts because I know members on all sides of the House were anxiously hoping to hear the end of his comments.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I said, our caucus and our party support energy diversification. We are not against it. All we are saying is that we differ from the NDP on the approach they are taking on this bill. Things like diversifying and looking at doing value-adds in ridings like Rocky Mountain House will actually help in the geographic diversification of these energy projects. The intent is good. The bill's intent is good, to maximize the value for our resource. The best way to do it is to leave it to the market. Let the market decide where to upgrade and where to refine.

Also, this government, you know, is inconsistent. Last year or the year before – I don't remember – when we were talking about bills 27 and 34, I actually moved an amendment to exclude partial upgrading from that 100 megatonne cap. Even that amendment was defeated by this government. The Government House Leader and the Premier, when they were in opposition, always opposed pipelines like Keystone, saying that that's going to export jobs to south of the border, but today conveniently they forget that. You know, when I asked them to exclude partial upgrading from the 100 megatonne cap, they voted against it.

So that's why I'm really concerned, Madam Speaker. If the NDP is really serious about maximizing the value for our resource, we should allow the market – if companies like Suncor, Syncrude, and all those, CNRL, if they want to invest in petrochemical diversification, let them take the risk. They will invest. If they think there is no market case and the best way to maximize the value for our resources is shipping bitumen to refineries south of the border, it's up to them.

Or we should actually ship it to other markets. So to ship it to other markets, the capacity in pipelines is not there. Government is trumpeting Kinder Morgan, if and when it gets built, the expansion, when we are only adding 600,000 more barrels to the international markets, but almost 3 million barrels are still going south of the border. One day, if President Trump gets up on the wrong side of the bed and he decides to shut down the wall, the inlet to the U.S., then we are hooped. That's why the NDP has to fight their federal ally Trudeau to remove the tanker ban and to let Bill C-69 die on the Order Paper. Federal bills C-48 and C-69: if they are passed, then we are doomed.

This NDP put all of their eggs in one basket by letting Trudeau kill Energy East, by letting Trudeau kill Northern Gateway. Now we are left with only one project, Kinder Morgan, which is very important but is only going to add 600,000 barrels. We need more than that. That's why the Leader of the Official Opposition talked about Eagle Spirit and I talked about using Churchill's port. Why is the NDP silent on that? Why would the Energy minister not engage me or my colleagues on those ideas? If your intention is to maximize the value for the resource, then do those things.

Also, apply your mind to the EDAC report, where they strongly recommended looking at red tape and other issues. They were all read into the record many times by me and my other colleagues.

I strongly encourage my NDP colleagues to understand our point of view. We are not against energy diversification.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment REC? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to rise today and talk in support of this amendment. The amendment asks us to take a look, have a sober second thought about the approach that this NDP government is taking. Earlier in the day I talked about some of the concerns that I had seen with their approach, and those concerns haven't changed.

What I will say is that there was an interesting article that I was perusing yesterday and today from the School of Public Policy at the University of Calgary entitled The Siren Song of Economic Diversification: Alberta's Legacy of Loss, a very interesting article, produced March 2015.

What's interesting about this article, this paper, is that it actually goes through historically to describe some of the problems that we've faced. There have been many efforts in Alberta to diversify the economy away from the dependence upon our oil and gas industry, not even just to move away from it but actually just to diversify it so that, because the commodity is actually quite volatile, we wouldn't have that roller-coaster ride. This government's approach has been tried by past Conservative governments. The concern is – and it was clearly articulated in this article, Madam Speaker – that when any government tries to approach this from a tax boutique concept, a tax boutique idea that they know best about where the economy should move to, it can result in the loss of taxpayer dollars.

Look, our responsibility in this House is to try to make sure that the economy that we are supposed to be championing is robust and is as sustainable as we can make it. It is not our responsibility nor role to pick winners and losers. It is the responsibility of the market to be able to pick those winners and losers. The market will decide whether or not there is a business case, whether it's petrochemical or whether it's for oil and gas or whether it's for whatever. Whatever the industry is, Madam Speaker, the market will decide. When the government, any government, whether it's left leaning, right leaning, whatever, decides that they feel that they know best how to be able to create jobs and establish more market, this is usually when we see the problems.

Now, I have indicated in this House before that there have been some times where we've gotten it right. There have been. Down at my . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt. I just want to remind the House and all members of the House that we're actually on a referral. Like, we're on an amendment that is asking us to go back to Committee of the Whole. I've been hearing a lot of debate, and I'm trying to give as much leeway as possible, but we seem to have shifted back to the content of the bill, not necessarily why we are asking for an amendment to refer. If we would just try to refocus on the actual amendment itself and not the content of the bill, I would appreciate it.

Please go ahead.

Mr. Hunter: I appreciate that clarity that you gave me, and I will endeavour to make sure that I do that. With your indulgence, though, Madam Speaker, what I would say is that in order for me to be able to make my case, the case for being able to move this back into Committee of the Whole, I have to be able to help, hopefully, my colleagues on the opposite side, who do have a majority in this House, with the reason why I believe that we have to go back to Committee of the Whole. In order for me to be able to get to that point, I have to be able to give you context, and I'm hoping that you will indulge me to be able to give the context of that argument. Feel free to stop me if you feel I'm going off on a tangent that I shouldn't be.

Madam Speaker, the point is that in this paper, that I felt was actually a very sober look at this, it was fairly damning of the past Conservative governments, that we've had for 44 years. It's not saying that they were all wrong, but it is saying that we did make mistakes. We should be big about saying that we made mistakes. We should be big about it and say: "You know what? Look, we've tried, with the best of intentions, again, but we made some mistakes. How can we learn from those mistakes?"

The area that this paper talks about showed how we can actually fix the problems that we have. It talks about getting back to the fundamentals. The fundamentals that we saw were effective in being able to move us away from unsuccessful diversification efforts were during the Lougheed era and during the Klein era. The fundamentals that they were successful at – they didn't call it Reaganomics; we call it the Alberta advantage – were very similar to those Reaganomics principles, which are, again, lower marginal tax rate, decreasing the size of government so that it's sustainable, and then the third part was a lower regulatory burden, which allows the economy to be able to be robust and sustainable.

This motion is designed to be able to give us, again, that opportunity to be able to take a look at some of the historical evidence that I've had a chance to be able to peruse. I would love for the members opposite to give us their feedback. Let's go back to Committee of the Whole. Let's take a look at some of the points that were made in this well-thought-out research paper from the University of Calgary, take a look at that, figure out whether or not there are some things that we need to do better, and then get back on track.

The truth is, Madam Speaker, that we have got to get this right for our children and grandchildren. I've got children. I've got grandchildren. I desperately want to get it right. I know that the members opposite also have children and grandchildren.

So what is it that is going to be able to make it right for them? Is it going to be tax boutiques? Is it going to be petrochemical diversification? You know what? It actually could be, Madam Speaker. It could be. However, some of the concerns with this – I think history is replete with examples of how it doesn't work – are that the loan guarantees, the equity investments, the grants in the past have proven to be unsuccessful a majority of the time.

Again, there are some times when they have actually been successful. One of the times where I've seen the success and still to this day see the success is in the development of our irrigation systems down in southern Alberta, where I'm from. That has actually been a success. I can say that for the farmers the growth in GDP down in my neck of the woods is very consistent and very stable due to that infrastructure development. That actually was due to those loan guarantees and equity investments and grants. I would have to say that . . .

Mr. Piquette: How about the oil sands?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: You know what? There are a couple of other examples as well.

In context, I'm trying to say that the idea that we have gotten this right at this juncture, I believe, is folly and again strikes at that arrogance that we know best about where economies and where markets should be going.

I think that the value of this amendment is that it gives us an opportunity to go back, in the dying days of this session, and to be able to just give it one more opportunity, one more sober second thought so that we can give the best chance to get it right for our children and grandchildren, the best chance to be able to get Alberta firing on all cylinders and make sure that this is the type of legislation that, in reality, will be good.

You know, the money that they're going to be spending, again, in order to be able to incentivize them to Alberta, not away from Louisiana, the new petrochemical investments: look, this is going to be a rolling of the dice. Are we going to be successful at it? Are we going to be able to actually incentivize people away from these other jurisdictions? I know that when I talked to the people in the petrochemical industry, they had some very deep concerns about those fundamentals being wrong. They did say that they need to see this similar investment. Well, of course, the businesses are going to say that. But they also said that it's the big picture as well. They need to take a look at the full package to see whether or not it's actually going to be in the best interest of those petrochemical companies to be able to come to Alberta.

Once again, going back to the amendment, the amendment allows us the opportunity to be able to get some more feedback to make sure that we've got the equation right, again, for our children's and grandchildren's sake. Madam Speaker, we have tried many times in this House to give the government ample opportunity to do this sober second thought. What we have seen in the past is a complete abandonment of that sober second thought and a rush, a headlong rush, into legislation that was poorly thought out, and then we're in a situation where they had to bring forward massive amendments or even change the legislation in following sessions.

This is not an unreasonable ask, Madam Speaker. This is not an unreasonable request. In fact, it's an olive branch to help this government be able to get something right, to give them an opportunity to be able to take a look at a little bit more of the evidence that we've seen. The historical evidence is always a good thing to be able to go on.

You know what, Madam Speaker? I would imagine that in the event that this petrochemical diversification works, I would be the first to say, "Congratulations; you actually got this one right," because Albertans need jobs. Albertans definitely need to have those jobs. We need to make sure that they have the opportunity to be able to get back to work and have the dignity of being able to have full-time employment, gainful employment. This is the sort of thing that Albertans expect their legislators to get right, and if we don't have the opportunity through this sober second thought, then we potentially could get it wrong. I think that that is really the danger to being able to push this forward.

What's interesting also, Madam Speaker, in just a little bit of a side note – I hope that you're okay with this – is that we're in a situation where Bill 1, in the dying days of this session, is now just being finished up. If it was so important to this government, why would they wait until three months later to be able to actually finish this bill up? This is actually a little bit of an indictment on them in Albertans' eyes because, again, I think that they used to say – let me see here; I've just got a little note here – that this was making life better for Albertans. That was kind of their call to action.

Now what we're seeing is, I think, building a plan that'll last or something like that. I think that's what the new call to action is. You know what? If you're going to make it last, if you're going to make it work, then . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment REC lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:02 a.m.]

[Motion on amendment REC lost]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 1. While I am disappointed that the amendment did not pass in terms of the government showing its lack of care and consideration for ensuring that they get this piece of legislation correct, I still am pleased to rise and speak at third reading on Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act.

Madam Speaker, I'd just like to pick up on a few points that I made in the amendment discussion, particularly around section 2 of the legislation and exactly what the legislation is intended to do. One of the big, big, big concerns that I know I have is this government's track record of saying one thing and doing another. Really, in many ways, that's exactly what the Energy Diversification Act is.

We've seen politicians all across North America getting into this habit of saying one thing and doing another. Certainly, this NDP government, you know, is very, very similar to other NDP governments that we've seen in the past. Right now in Ontario there's an election taking place, and there's a small chance that the NDP in Ontario, under Andrea Horwath, are going to win. I don't know if I would be clapping for that because we all better hope that they're a say one thing and do another government. They've promised a lot of very, very, very problematic things. They would in fact be problematic for this government, who pretends not to like the federal NDP, pretends not to like the British Columbia NDP.

Mr. Nixon: They're the same party.

Mr. Cooper: They are the same party.

Whether you like Doug Ford or not, I think we can all hope that there's actually a Conservative government in Ontario so that we have somebody who can advocate for our energy sector from right across our country. Whether you like Donald Trump or not, he certainly has done things to promote pipelines in this country. Now, I am not a fan of his in many respects . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Cooper: . . . but with respect to energy he's certainly done a lot of work. That's exactly what the Ontario Conservatives would do as well. We need governments right across our country and around the world that are going to promote our energy industry and are going to promote the fact that we need to make sure that this is a growing sector.

The unfortunate thing is that this NDP likes to sputter and start and putter and patter in all sorts of different directions. They wind up saying that they support energy diversification, but their actions communicate otherwise to the marketplace, so we see a significant flock of investment out of the country and the province. I mean, we saw it just last week in the form of Kinder Morgan divesting their assets in Canada and the federal government needing to step in and engage in that project in an unprecedented manner. These sorts of policies from the past that the NDP have implemented: now they're coming to try to clean up the mess that they've created.

But they continue a pattern of saying one thing and doing another. One particular place that I would like to highlight this – I mentioned it earlier, but I think there's some merit in mentioning it again – is in section 2 of the legislation, where it speaks about the establishment of programs. Then it outlines what the minister's job is already, which I find a little ironic. You'll remember, Madam Speaker, that Bill 1 just a few sessions ago – I think it was the job-creation act or whatever – was really a job description for the minister, and in some respects that's what this legislation is as well.

With respect to the establishment of programs

2(1) The Minister shall establish programs that have the primary purpose of supporting economic growth and . . . diversification, including, without limitation, programs that . . .

And then it goes on to list those programs that it might include.

You know, it's almost like it's another job description for the minister. Never in Alberta's history has the minister had his job described so many times in legislation. But it's good that he has clear direction. I'm glad that the Premier has provided clear direction to him as to what he should do. I also am glad that the Premier in this legislation provided the Premier's office the opportunity to require more of the minister, like more reporting to Executive Council. We all know that Bill 1 the last time around or two times ago, whatever it was, created one job, and that was the job of the minister. We hope that this bill will in fact create more.

In section 2, as I was saying, it talks about a number of different programs:

(b) increase access to capital, something the minister should be doing already.

(c) increase the development of value-added upgrading . . .

This is a fair point in this piece of legislation.

(d) encourage more investment and jobs in upstream, midstream and downstream energy sectors by creating a petrochemical feedstock.

This is a good thing.

I do find it interesting how they're willing to address upstream and downstream jobs, but they're not willing to defend upstream and downstream emissions on this particular point. Again, it's a say one thing and do another government, where they'll say that they want to defend Alberta's interest, but when it comes to upstream and downstream emissions, essentially, that killed Energy East, they want to say nothing.

So I'd like to move an amendment. It's a good, solid amendment. If it's okay with you, I'll proceed while they're being handed out, or would you prefer me to wait?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, if you can just wait till the table has the original and I have a copy, please.

Hon. member, please go ahead.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 1, the Energy Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day three months hence.

Madam Speaker, this is a motion that will allow the government to put this particular program on hold. There was so much opportunity that Bill 1 had that they missed. You know, the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee, that reports directly to the minister, produced a great report, a number of recommendations, on many of which the government said: "Thank you for your expertise, but no thank you. We'll create a bill that is a job description for the minister instead." They created a bill that says: "encourage . . . participation from under-represented communities in the energy sector."

But while they say that, they're actively working against or, at minimum, not doing enough to protect great projects like the energy spirit project in northern Alberta, that is spearheaded, led, organized, orchestrated, capitalized by members of our indigenous community that are from underrepresented communities. This government hasn't said boo about the tanker ban in northern British Columbia, which is preventing the energy spirit project from moving forward, yet they say that they want to encourage participation of underrepresented communities in the energy sector.

At every single turn, whether it's on accountability, transparency, realistic points in legislation, they say one thing and do another. That's exactly why this bill should be amended to not now be read a third time and to be read three months hence, and I encourage all members of the government in the Assembly to vote in favour of that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to stand up and to speak to the hoist amendment, especially because we actually started debating this bill earlier in March, essentially allowing them months to debate this bill, and in those months of debate we have seen that the Official Opposition has failed to actually speak to the bill. I can say that because I was there the day the bill was announced. In fact, I wasn't just there; the MLA for the Industrial Heartland was there, and most of the Strathcona county council were there. The mayor of Strathcona county was there.

Just yesterday I was reading the Sherwood Park News, and they were talking about $30 million of potential investment within the Strathcona county industrial area. This is because we have the ability to bring investment in through our industrial sector. The thing is that there is a past history on the ability to attain that investment, a history that the former government demonstrated that they failed to do.

That is why a lot of the industry leaders throughout that area have been very vocal about the fact that our government has turned the dial in a way that the former government was never able to do and, in doing so, has actually seen announcements like Inter Pipeline. When Inter Pipeline announces that they're going to be bringing their petrochemical and polypropylene plant there, they're talking about real jobs for the people of Strathcona county.

When we're talking about these kinds of things – and the members opposite are talking about delaying this for a counternarrative; they actually failed to provide a countersolution and a counterapproach – what are we waiting for? Madam Speaker, there's actually more to be lost right now in not moving forward on this bill. I think that we have done our due diligence in making sure that the industry understands where we're moving to and seeing that we really do need to address the difference in capital costs in Alberta and invest in Alberta rather than go somewhere else, and that's what this goes down to.

That's what the petrochemicals diversification program in its first iteration did. By putting forward royalty credits that a company could use once it's up and running – they don't actually even get to use that until later on – it addresses the competitiveness factor, that really impacts our ability to get that investment into our area. That's what was stated by many folks from Inter Pipeline as to making a difference in petrochemical diversification, the first iteration.

That's why, Madam Speaker, in the time that the energy diversification panel released their report, they spoke to doing similar actions like the petrochemicals diversification program. We put that in place early on in our term, knowing that we needed to do more work as to finding out how best to move forward. That report was released in I believe it was early March, and we moved quickly because we know the urgency, that we need to be putting this work forward. We know that Albertans need to be able to rely on job stability, and we cannot do that if we continue to rely on just one area in oil and gas, and that's the extraction of oil and gas. We must be able to diversify within our energy sector the areas in which we're adding value to our oil industry. That's what we're doing when we're attracting petrochemical sectors like the ones that bring polypropylene. They take excess feedstock like propane and turn it into a value-added part like plastic pellets.

I think we need to really talk about the issues at stake. I've listened for the many hours that we've been debating Bill 1 at the end of the session, and the members opposite have spoken to anything but the actual bill on debate. They've spoken to past record. They've spoken to rhetoric, Madam Speaker, because I think it's more convenient for them to keep talking about this ideal economy that they never actually changed, because the people that are there in the Industrial Heartland – the industry members, the economic development executive director within Strathcona county – will tell you that the previous government was unable to turn the dial on investment when it came to attracting this kind of sector to that area. And they'll say that programs like the petrochemicals diversification program did exactly that.

As the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, not only has this been an important thing that I've been working on throughout my term, but it's something that members all throughout the government have worked on because we know that attracting these different sectors is not something we just promise but something that the workers in this province depend on. We can't continue to expect workers across Alberta to have job instability through every boom-and-bust cycle. I think that's the element where having things like polypropylene, that goes into feedstock, is extremely important because they actually do better when the feedstock is lower. That usually happens in a bust cycle, so they actually run countercyclical, meaning that the people that work in the area have more ability to have jobs within the energy sector regardless of which part of the cycle it's in. It doesn't prevent the problem in its entirety. It means that there's still more work to be done, but I believe it is an essential step to creating job stability for workers, Madam Speaker. So I'm proud to stand with a government that is doing this and that is going to move forward on this work.

I know that in the past few months of being in session, every time I'm out in my constituency, the first question I get asked is: "When is Bill 1 going to be passed? When is that going to happen?" That is a question that, as I'm going through the chamber of commerce and as I'm talking to members of the chamber of commerce – they know, because they have a very direct line to the folks that are creating jobs in that area and a lot of them have to do with the industry, that programs that are coming out of Bill 1 will be extremely important in our ability to move the investment.

Madam Speaker, for those reasons and for making sure that we're standing up for Alberta workers, I don't think that this amendment is anything but a delay tactic.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to respond under 29(2)(a). The hon. member made some interesting points. I found the newspaper item, I believe, that the hon. member was referring to, and the hon. member, respectfully, left a few details out. Here's what the local folks said: the big change is that our biggest customer became our biggest competitor. The United States is now our major competitor, and that largely happened due to the shale oil. It was exacerbated by the fact that this government made our industry less competitive by raising corporate taxes by 20 per cent, by adding the carbon tax, making it more expensive for everybody that's in that hon. member's riding to do business. They've actually made it harder for them to compete, less competitive against the United States, their major competitor. That's what the article talks about. The hon. member left some important details out in her comments.

The hon. member and, unfortunately, the whole government over there also seem to believe that nothing happened before 2015. Well, news flash for the government: the previous government had been talking to Inter Pipeline for some time, and they were coming anyways. It happened on your watch, so take credit. Good for you. But they were coming anyways because this is a great place to do business.

If anything, this government has made it more expensive for Inter Pipeline to come. They've made their corporate taxes 20 per cent more expensive. They've added carbon taxes to them. Even for the staff that they're trying to attract to work there from other jurisdictions, they've made their personal taxes more expensive, higher prices for everything that they do. This government has actually crippled the ability for new companies to come here, and not just evidence – yes, the new investment that does come is great, but the hon. member left out the fact that over 35 billion with a “b” dollars have left, largely because of this government's policies. Madam Speaker, the energy price has been low before, many times, but we never had the mass exodus of major capital investments until this government made it so that companies didn't feel welcome here anymore. They felt that the government didn't have their back. They felt that the government wasn't on their side, that they weren't going to support workers, that they weren't going to allow companies to live.

Even after they did the royalty review and they got that kind of right – again, I talked about this yesterday, but it's relevant to this conversation today – they couldn't stand the prosperity 10 seconds later. After they released the royalty review, which was actually fairly well done, the Premier and the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board stood up and said, “We won't raise the royalties yet,” in other words, telling industry that if they ever start making money, this government will take that money away from them. They will not let business survive and thrive and create profit and return for their shareholders. Yet the hon. member stood up and tried to make it sound like this government is the saviour of business when exactly the opposite is true.

The hon. member talked about the first question she gets asked. The first question I get asked is: “When are we going to have an election? When are you going to do something about the current government?” That's what I hear everywhere I go in Edmonton, in Sherwood Park, in Calgary. Everywhere I go. When I talk to people from Sherwood Park, I get that question from them, too.

The hon. member, I'm sure, meant what she said, but the hon. member seems to have misplaced some of the facts. I think that's a polite word, “misplaced.” I'll stick with that. I'm sure the hon. member was intending to give accurate information to the House. I would never suggest otherwise. But the fact is that the hon. member left out a few details that were pretty important to this discussion.

Now, again, the same article talks about: the corporate tax cuts in the United States have resulted in a 21 per cent tax compared to Alberta's 27 per cent tax, 12 per cent provincially and 15 per cent federally. So 20 per cent of that provincial tax was added by this government on this government's watch, making them less competitive against the major competitor that they have. It really, really, really has left Alberta companies in the lurch, less able to compete, yet the hon. member would stand up and try to have this House believe that this government has been in any way a friend to business when it's a well-accepted, well-understood fact across this province that exactly the opposite is true.

I would be interested in any comments that the member would care to reply on that.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question. Oh, sorry, hon. member. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll wear bright colours in the future. I am rising this morning to speak in favour of this amendment but not because I think trickle-down economics work. I did want to make the point that there are many, many people that do not benefit from the idea of Reaganomics, that wealth would trickle down. If you're of a particular gender or race, it is a very successful system. If your name is John, you could probably do very well. But globalization has fundamentally changed economies. Just this morning I was reading about how the happiness index in Scandinavian countries, who do not subscribe to Reaganomics or trickle-down economics, is the highest in the world. Many Scandinavian countries are in the top 10. GDP is certainly not the only measure of success.

But I am voting in favour of this hoist because the EDAC report includes a number of recommendations that aren't included in Bill 1. Around two-thirds of the EDAC report recommendations are not incorporated in Bill 1.

The member opposite was speaking about questions that she's asked, the first questions that she's asked. I know that in Calgary a couple of questions that I'm asked quite often are: when are jobs coming back to Calgary in particular? And how are we going to fill the office towers in downtown Calgary, which are sitting at about a 30 per cent vacancy rate right now? That is a lot of revenue that isn't moving within the city of Calgary.

Bill 1 seems to focus primarily on Strathcona county, the Industrial Heartland, and while that's a really important part of Alberta's economy, I believe that energy diversification needs to be inclusive of the whole province. A lot of the activities that are listed within the EDAC report, the infrastructure that already exists are in the Edmonton area, in the Lloydminster area, in the Fort McMurray area. To be able to see that benefit be spread further across the province, I think, would be a huge positive for the province.

For all of those reasons, I urge everyone to vote in favour of this amendment. Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will now put the question.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, June 6, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Mr. Alfred Macyk
March 2, 1924, to May 1, 2018

The Speaker: Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away. Mr. Alfred Macyk was elected as the Liberal Member for Redwater on June 29, 1955, and served for the duration of the 13th Legislature. Prior to his election he served in the Royal Canadian Air Force from 1942 to 1945 and served as a councillor for the municipal district of Smoky Lake from 1953 to 1955. Mr. Macyk passed away on May 1, 2018, at the age of 94.

In a moment of silent contemplation I ask you to remember Mr. Macyk as you may have known him.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service. Today I would like to welcome members of the Macyk family who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise if you might as I call your name and remain standing until all have been introduced: Rose Kleparchuk, Peter and Faye Macyk, Doug and Paulette Macyk, Gary and Bernice Macyk, Don and Marilyn Macyk. Thank you for joining us today and for your service to our province. Thank you very much.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, it's my real pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple who I literally could not be here today without. It's Cindy and Daniel Dang, who are my parents. They are in the gallery today. I want to tell you a bit of a story if the House would indulge me. They have two children, one very successful, who's done great things, just graduated from Harvard with a master's in landscape architecture. The other one is an MLA. My mom and dad are here to visit, and as they can finally see, I actually have a job. Here I am. Here we are. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I need to let you know that the first week I met this young man, I gave him some advice and said: listen to your parents.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly family members of a constituent of mine and our current page Jessica Hermary. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I ask them to rise as I say their names: her mom, Nadine Hermary; grandmother Erika Auton, great-grandmother Sofia Lochner, and great-aunt Margaret Lochner, who are here visiting from Hamilton, Ontario; and grandmother June Hermary and her husband, Lorne Cain, visiting from Parksville, B.C.

Jessica's family is here in the Speaker's gallery today to watch Jessica in her role as a page. She's been positioned here since 2016. I know I say on behalf of all members that it's our pleasure to work with her. I invite all members of this Assembly to give the traditional warm welcome, please.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you some humble, hard-working, law-abiding Albertans, who happen to be unitholders of time-shares of Northmont Resort Properties in Fairmont, B.C. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names and remain standing to receive the warm welcome of this House: Helen Engels and her son, Richard Engels, who have a claim against them for $31,000; Randall Dodds of Edmonton, a claim against him for $24,000; Jerry Kucharzow of St. Albert, a claim of $54,000; Dennis and Rosanna Loughlin of St. Albert, $30,000 for collectively $139,000. Unable to join them today were their daughter and son-in-law, who have a claim against them for $50,000. I would like the House to give them a warm welcome, as is typical in this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you and to all the members of the Assembly four guests who attended the Seniors' Week tea earlier today: Shari Hallam and Susan Parr, who live in Edmonton-Rutherford; Sharon Chadwick, who lives in Edmonton-Gold Bar; and Bonnie Albrecht, who lives in Sherwood Park. I'm pleased that they're able to join us today to watch question period. I ask them to rise, as they have, and receive the warm traditional greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one of my fantastic constituency assistants, Adiatu Kuyatah, and her son, Hamzah Koroma. Adiatu is a social worker in my constituency, and I could not do without her. Hamzah is a student at Dickinsfield junior high school, where he is also president of the students' union. His keen interest in politics led him to apply as a page here at the Legislature, and I hope he's interested enough after today's proceedings to want to become an MLA as well. I ask Adiatu and Hamzah now to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Nick Dira. Nick is a spinal cord injury survivor who has had an experience in navigating the bureaucracy of our Alberta Health Services as he tries to get the supports that he requires, at points in his treatment and rehabilitation funding his own treatments during the gaps in our system. I ask that the House please acknowledge Mr. Dira and give him a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. June is recognized as stroke awareness month in Canada, and it's an important opportunity to build awareness about the signs of strokes and empower Albertans to live healthier lives. I want to commend the Heart and Stroke Foundation for its work raising awareness, helping support survivors, enhancing research, and improving stroke care here in Alberta as well. I invite Donna and Owen from the Heart and Stroke Foundation – they're seated in the members' gallery – to please rise and receive our warm welcome.

And [Remarks in Tagalog] Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce some strong advocates who are leaders in our Filipino community to join us in celebrating as our government proclaimed June as Philippine Heritage Month in Alberta for every June moving forward. I ask that my guests who are here today please rise as I say their names: Marilda, Edwin, Aimee, Celso, Genevieve, Julie, Tony, Jo-Ann, Beatriz, Nicky, and if there are any others. [Remarks in Tagalog] Thank you all for all of your work in supporting Filipino Albertans and all Albertans and getting to know Filipino Albertans as well.

Thank you for being here.

Filipino Community

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to join with other members in celebrating Philippine Independence Day. Alberta is fortunate to be the home to tens of thousands of Canadians of Filipino origin. In fact, I was proud as minister of immigration to oversee a period when Philippines became for the first time in Canadian history the top, number one source country of immigration to Canada. Partly through the expansion of the Alberta immigrant nominee program during my tenure we managed to see a significant expansion of the size of Alberta's Filipino community, people who for the past several decades have brought tremendous compassion, work ethic, devotion to family and community that have helped to build our prosperity and contributed in every walk of life.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things as a former federal immigration and multiculturalism minister that I appreciate most about the Filipino community is how it has sunk roots in communities large and small in every part of our province and country. It is often true that immigration patterns tend towards big cities, but we can visit some of our smallest towns and even villages in some of the most remote parts of Alberta and see nascent and growing Filipino communities who are reviving their local community, their charitable organizations, their churches, their schools, and their local economies.

This is an opportunity for us to celebrate our friends in Philippines, a country I've had the opportunity to visit on several occasions, and to wish them on this important day peace and prosperity but also an opportunity to thank Albertans of Filipino origin for the sacrifices that they have made and make every day to make Alberta a better place. To all of them, [Remarks in Tagalog].

LGBTQ2S Rights

Connolly: Mr. Speaker, 2018 Edmonton Pride Festival kicks off this weekend. I have to say that it is one of my favourite events of the year, and I know it's one of our Premier's favorites as well. I'm also excited and honoured to be able to march alongside the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park and the Minister of Culture and Tourism as three of this year's parade marshals.

Our government is proud to support all of Alberta's pride festivals, including Taber Pride, which the Minister of Environment and Parks and I had the pleasure of attending just last weekend. These events are an opportunity for Alberta to showcase the best qualities of our province: love, respect, and freedom to be yourself.

Pride is also a celebration of strength and courage. For many people pride is about remembering those loved ones lost during the AIDS crisis. People have fought long and hard to be able to celebrate and take pride in our LGBTQ2S community.

We know that all societies, even in Alberta, still have work to do to ensure that we are inclusive and providing safe environments for everyone. Every member of this House can take steps to ensure that every person, whether gay, straight, bi, cis, queer, questioning, intersex, pansexual, asexual, two spirit, and/or transgendered, knows they are welcome and safe in our province.

The NDP has always fought for the LGBTQ2S-plus community. Several of us are proud members of it. In fact, the first time I met our Premier was at Calgary Pride in 2011, before I was even out. This past year we defined in law that students have the right to form GSAs without having to seek permission. The opposition stands against this, and they recently reaffirmed this stance at their founding meeting.

Mr. Speaker, this is discrimination and just goes to show that there is still work to be done. I want Alberta's LGBTQ2S community to know that our government and our party have your back, and we will fight for your right not just during Pride Week, not just by paying lip service by flipping a couple pancakes, but every single day. LGBTQ rights are human rights, and we will defend them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Seniors' Issues

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While we sit here in the House and listen to this government continuously pat themselves on the back, most Albertans see it for what it really is: lip service. During this week, proclaimed as Seniors' Week to recognize the contribution of our great seniors, I can't help but think of issues that have come forward in the House recently and some that have been raised for years.

Recently I brought forth an AHS decision to cancel mobile lab services to seniors' lodges in Alberta. Previously a lab tech would come to a site on a scheduled basis. Seniors, often fasting prior to their bloodwork, could get the collection done and then head directly for breakfast. Apparently this was seen as too convenient for seniors and too inconvenient for AHS. Now these same seniors, most on fixed incomes, will have to find their own transportation to a health care facility, stand in line to be processed, sit in a waiting room with people who may have a contagious condition, and then find their own way back to the lodge. How does this make sense even to AHS?

Meanwhile, seniors in some long-term care facilities in Alberta are still subjected to what I like to call sourced lunches from off-site procurement, or SLOP for short. For those people in long-term care often the main thing that they have to look forward to are the daily mealtimes. How disappointing when the same tasteless mass is served over and over. This is definitely not the case in all facilities. Most that I have visited have great-quality, fresh-prepared on-site meals. All of our seniors deserve the best quality treatment and the best quality food.

Both of these issues have only been met with lip service from this government. We hear: my office is always open; call at any time if you have specific issues. How many times do these issues have to be brought forward before they're dealt with? These are not random issues; these are province-wide. These are real people. Simply proclaiming something like Seniors' Week does not mean anything unless you actually act. These issues are a simple fix for this minister, and this would be a great week to take care of it. Our seniors deserve nothing less.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Filipino Community

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This June 12 marks 120 years since the Philippines was declared independent from Spanish colonial rule. I'd like to take this opportunity to salute the local Filipino community and the people of the Philippines on the celebration of their independence.

On June 3 I was proud to join the Deputy Premier in announcing June 2018 and every June to follow as Philippine Heritage Month in Alberta. This month is a time to celebrate and recognize the significant contributions of Filipinos and Filipinas to our province.

Alberta is home to the second-largest Filipino population in Canada, and the over 175,000 Filipinos which call Alberta home contribute enormously to our culture, our society, and our quality of life. Like anyone who chooses Alberta as home, they come to our province to work hard and to make lives better for their families and loved ones. But in some cases new Canadians of Philippine descent were not treated fairly, having their rights as workers ignored.

Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as an MLA I've had the opportunity to learn about the organization Migrant Alberta, an education and advocacy group based in Edmonton. Migrant Alberta was formed to help address the issues facing migrants and provide assistance where they can. It's a sad truth that many people who come to Canada from the Philippines under the temporary foreign worker program have not been given the same rights as other workers.

Last week I was able to join them for the launch of their new book, titled Bridging the Gap, which was made possible due in part to a grant provided through the Ministry of Culture and Tourism. The book chronicles the life of several immigrant communities as they struggled to make a new home here in Canada and the structural injustices that they faced.

During Philippine Heritage Month let us all celebrate the wonderful things that Alberta Filipinos have brought to our province and continue to work to bring fairness and justice to all Filipino and Filipina workers. [Remarks in Tagalog]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Economic Indicators

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've sat here day after day listening to the NDP government throw out all sorts of numbers. Well, it's time to set the record straight. Let's start with the whopper that Alberta has been broken for the past 44 years. Well, here are the facts. If you look at a longitudinal graph showing Alberta's gross domestic product, there have only been two times where we have seen a drop, in 2008 and after the NDP took office. You will remember that the 2008 crisis was one of the worst financial crises the world has seen in 80 years.

Let's look at another indicator, average weekly earnings. The NDP's 2018 budget is called A Recovery Built to Last. Well, not when you're racking up $96 billion of debt. How is that a recovery to last? But I digress. Fact check: in the three years this government has been in power, Albertans have seen a three-quarters of 1 per cent increase, .74 per cent, in average weekly earnings. With inflation at 4.56 per cent over the same period, it is easy to see why the NDP had to change their motto from making life better for Albertans.

Let's end off with the whopper that the NDP continue to say that they have added 90,000 new jobs. Fact check, Mr. Speaker: we have only seen an increase of 17,800 new jobs since this government was elected, in May of 2015. Put another way, that only employs 25 per cent of the 70,000 new people that have moved into Alberta in the past three years.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I invite the members of this government to stick to the facts. If not, I can always do another fact check in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Health Care for Transgender Persons

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about the challenges transgender individuals face while seeking medical care. In no other community is the link between rights and health so clearly visible as in the transgender community. Transgender individuals often face significant barriers to health care. There are medical professionals who have no training on transgender health and aren't familiar with the basic issues that transgender patients face.

Our health care system should be a place of understanding and compassion, yet when trans individuals reach out for help, they often find doctors, nurses, and other health care professionals who are poorly informed. This lack of medical care leads to fear and isolation. About three-quarters of trans youth were uncomfortable or very uncomfortable discussing their trans status and specific health care needs with doctors at walk-in clinics. This is unacceptable. All Albertans are entitled to quality, judgment-free health care. There should never be a barrier between a physician and a patient.

However, I am pleased to say that some things are getting better. In 2015 our government amended the Alberta Human Rights Act to make it illegal to discriminate on the basis of gender identity and gender expression, and in February of this year the gender health program at the University of Alberta opened its doors, the very first of its kind in the prairie provinces. But we know it's not enough. We need better medical and sensitivity training for doctors and medical staff so that they understand the health needs of transgender people, we need more psychiatrists who are qualified to diagnose gender dysphoria, and we need better access to gender-confirming therapy and better gender-affirming care.

It's a simple fact that when we as a society respect and normalize the rights and choices of others, including the right to determine one's gender, we are all healthier for it.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Calgary Crime Rate

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, today there was troubling news from the Calgary Police Service about a shocking increase in crime, including violent crime, in Calgary over the past five years. The report indicates an increase of 43 per cent in the incidence of sexually related crimes in Calgary in the last five years. Child abuse is up by 29 per cent and domestic abuse is 41 per cent higher over the past five years. Does the Premier agree with me that these are disturbing statistics, and what actions does the government intend to take to help protect Calgarians and other Albertans from these higher levels of crime?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, these are very troubling statistics, and of course we will be working and continue to work very closely with our law enforcement officials to find the best path towards bringing those kinds of statistics down. I've not had a chance to review them as of yet, but I certainly anticipate doing that. It's fundamentally important that Albertans can know that we are living in safe communities and that they will be kept safe, so we'll do what is necessary to ensure that we can work with those law enforcement officials to meet that goal.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Premier for her answer. The same report from the Calgary Police Service indicates a 33.6 per cent increase in assault crimes, a 22 per cent increase in home invasions, and a 25 per cent increase in financial robberies over the past five years. Will the Premier agree with me that the federal government reducing and eliminating mandatory minimum sentences in the Criminal Code is unhelpful and sends the wrong message to those who are victimizing innocent civilians in our society?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, the statistics are always troubling. That's why our government is taking the steps of ensuring that we are investing in our law enforcement professionals. It's also critical at these times – and our police would agree with me – that we continue to invest in social services, in health services, and in many other services to ensure that we're moving forward in a number of areas. I think all levels of government have acknowledged that they have a role to play in this. We'll continue working to move the needle on this issue.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. the minister, but we're not moving forward. Maybe we're spending more money, but we're moving backwards in terms of results, with a 42 per cent increase in sex offences in our largest city over the past five years. Will the minister agree with me that if more money has not resulted in lower crime levels – we're actually seeing an increase in crime – that perhaps we should have tougher laws that ensure that, in this case, sex offenders actually stay behind bars and don't manage to get out on suspended sentences or conditional release? Would she not as the Attorney General call on her federal counterpart to support such measures?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, we have not reviewed these numbers in depth, and we're happy to take a look at them and to consider them thoroughly. We are always concerned about any increase in crime statistics. Certainly, this government has taken some steps to ensure that we're making progress on the issue of sexual violence. I had the honour of introducing a bill to remove the limitation period for women seeking recompense for such things. In addition, we've recently introduced police guidelines for sexual violence crimes. These will help police to understand and to work with those survivors to make sure that everyone gets the supports they need.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second main.

Union Certification

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a different matter, it's come to light that changes made by the NDP government to the labour code in fall of last year have resulted in a bizarre situation where people can be unionized without their knowledge or consent. This is a result of a recent Labour Relations Board ruling, which says, "The possibility of certification without a representation vote is now a feature of Alberta's labour [regulations] legislation." Why is it now possible under NDP rules to force people to unionize with neither their knowledge nor their consent?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It didn't exactly come to light, Mr. Speaker; it was actually a featured element of the changes that were made to the labour code by our government some time ago. This is called an automatic certification, something that happens in almost every jurisdiction across the country. In fact, the threshold for that presumption here in Canada is much higher than in other jurisdictions, but it is a long-standing mechanism that's in place to ensure that there is not a case – anyway, ultimately, it's a standard feature of labour relations codes across the country.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Premier for admitting that they actually want a province where people can be forced into a union with neither their knowledge nor their consent, but I think Albertans disagree. They want the right to make their own decisions for themselves in their workplace. Rose and Joe Visser, two employees at a small family business, ended up being members of a union without their knowledge or their consent, and they wonder why. They complained to the Labour Relations Board, which said: so sad; too bad; these are the new rules under the NDP. What does the Premier have to say to Rose and Joe Visser, who were forced into a union without their knowledge or their consent?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That particular element of union organizing has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada and, in fact, was upheld as a fundamental component of labour rights by the Supreme Court of Canada decades ago as part of an overall regime of understanding international human rights. So that is how labour relations works. That's how organizing works. The majority rules. That's how you get a certification. This is not new, and it is about time that Alberta finally join the rest of the country with modern labour laws that protect working people.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I can't think of a better example of NDP ideology than imagining that forcing people to do something without their knowledge or consent is a, quote, international human right.

Now, the same law the NDP brought in has resulted in intimidation of people to force union certification cards against their wishes. Vulnerable immigrant workers in Calgary on a job site last year were told that if they didn't join, they could be deported. Mr. Speaker, does the Premier stand behind the law that is resulting in the intimidation of vulnerable workers?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I stand behind is a law that protects workers from intimidation in a work site where their employers use the control of the work site that they have to prevent workers from exercising their fundamental human rights as recognized by the Supreme Court of Canada. It is something that we were very proud to bring forward because Alberta had for a very long time been well behind the rest of the country, failing to recognize fundamental human rights and worker rights, and we are proud to have changed the record.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: So, Mr. Speaker, now according to the Premier it's a fundamental human right to be intimidated by unions in order to sign a certification card. According to one vulnerable immigrant worker on a Calgary work site he said that the organizer, quote: used my signature not for a receipt like he said but to sign me up for the union. Is it now the Premier's position that committing fraud and getting somebody to sign a certification card under false pretenses is a fundamental human right?

Ms Notley: No, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that it is a fundamental human right to have those kinds of issues adjudicated by a fair and impartial panel, and that's exactly what the laws that we brought into place would ensure happens. So if an employer, who the member opposite is speaking on behalf of right now, is not happy with the fact that 60 per cent of their employees signed cards, then they can challenge those cards. They can challenge whether they were appropriately signed, and if they are successful at challenging them, then the certification will not happen. That's a fair process. That's what we brought into the province of Alberta finally, after decades of failure on the part of the Conservatives.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, there the Premier is owning and defending intimidation of vulnerable immigrant workers by union organizers who committed fraud in order to get people to sign cards under false pretenses. [interjections] One of these vulnerable immigrant workers – you hear the heckling? That never stops. One of the vulnerable immigrant workers said, quote, my last paycheque was short $700 thanks to this union certification, that I opposed. Why is the Premier justifying coercion and intimidation as tactics that have resulted from her government's attack on workplace democracy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'd start by saying: why is the member opposite making stuff up like he just did? That is not at all what I said. I wish he would stop suggesting that I said things that I did not. The fact of the matter is that for many, many years the International Labour Organization, the United Nations, had actually looked at Alberta's labour laws and acknowledged that they were in breach of the International Labour Organization's international standards for a fair workplace. We are pleased that finally the province of Alberta has come into line with the rest of the country and, quite frankly, is leading countries and the rest of the world.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this is slightly Orwellian to hear the Premier justifying these kinds of intimidation tactics, this absence of workplace democracy under the aegis of human rights. Effectively, what the NDP has done is to say that it is no longer a requirement to have a secret ballot vote that protects workers from intimidation either from employers or from union organizers. Why does the Premier have such a problem with the basic principle that workers should through a secret ballot vote be able to determine their own future democratically?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the member opposite has some very interesting ideas, perhaps even slightly paranoid ideas, about the labour movement and about unions. It's that same kind of ideology, speaking of ideology, that resulted in us having labour laws and employment standards laws that allowed a woman who was trying to care for her sick child to be legally fired from her workplace because nobody would stand up for her in her workplace and she had very little access to anyone else who would stand up for her. We are proud that we have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase Agreements

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, it's been a week and a day since the deal was announced to purchase the Kinder Morgan pipeline, but details about Alberta's participation remain a mystery. Today the Alberta Party obtained the 121-page agreement between the federal government and Kinder Morgan and also a separate, shorter support agreement. I will table both of these documents at an appropriate time. One of the big questions I've been asked by my constituents is whether any Alberta taxpayer dollars will go directly to B.C. as part of their previously signed revenue-sharing agreement. To the Premier: will you release Alberta's agreement so Albertans can know that detail as well as all the other details of this agreement?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I can say very definitively is that once all the ink is dried on the agreements – of course, the Alberta agreement needs to be finalized after the original agreement, that the member opposite just talked about. Once ours is complete, we will be happy to release it, subject, of course, to commercially sensitive information concerns, but we're pretty clear that we're going to be releasing the whole thing. I can also say that we've been very clear that any of the terms that would result in us paying anything under that amount that we discussed before – we had to be very clear that none of it was going to the province of B.C.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you. I'm very glad to hear that. I look forward to seeing the full details of the agreement to confirm it.

Mr. Speaker, if the federal government can release their contract, there can't possibly be commercially sensitive information preventing the NDP from releasing the details of what Alberta's participation might mean. We deserve to know as Albertans the conditions that will trigger the $2 billion investment and what exactly we will get for that money. Again to the Premier: do those details just not exist yet, or do you not want to release them?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No. In fact, those details do exist, and we will release them once the final agreements are crafted and signed off. As I said, it comes secondary to the final agreements that occur with respect to the federal government and Kinder Morgan. So the member opposite can expect that information to be released. It was a fundamental element of our engagement that what we did would be absolutely transparent to the people of Alberta, and we are committing to ensuring that that's exactly what happens.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I want to be absolutely clear that the Alberta Party wants the Kinder Morgan pipeline built absolutely as soon as possible. Of course, we know the risks of that pipeline not going ahead, but there are risks inherent in any financial arrangement that the NDP will have signed on Alberta's behalf. It's been nearly a week since I asked the Premier whether the NDP has hired a neutral third-party expert to prepare a fairness assessment of the deal that Alberta signed. Premier, given that both the federal government and Kinder Morgan have hired outside third-party experts to prepare what's called a fairness assessment, will you ask either the Auditor General or a third-party expert to prepare a fairness assessment?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We'll certainly do whatever is necessary to ensure the integrity of our agreement. Of course, we had outside independent experts who were advising all of our engagement thus far. Obviously, the thing in our case is that our engagement is very conditional. It's much farther down the road, and it's for a much lesser amount. But that being said, we'll certainly look into the matters that the member opposite identifies, and as part of our overall commitment to transparency we will ensure that all the information that he is seeking is provided.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Executive Compensation Review

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the previous government executive pay was wildly out of whack with the rest of the country. This extended to school superintendents. That's why I was pleased to see this week, after an extensive review, that superintendent compensation will be changed to be more reflective of the national norm. To the Minister of Education: how much is the government saving as a result of this review, and what kinds of outrageous perks are being eliminated?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Superintendents do play an important role in our education system. They support elected boards, and they help with school divisions that are sometimes between hundreds or even tens of thousands of students. We know their work is invaluable, but we also know that public positions deserve fair and reasonable compensation but not excessive. So this new compensation framework will put $1.5 million back into the classroom, and we'll no longer be paying for things like children's tuitions or for spouses to go to social events and so forth.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you. Postsecondary presidents' compensation has also been changed under this government, again after an extensive review. To the Minister of Advanced Education: how much money is the government saving as a result of this review, and again what outrageous perks are being eliminated?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. She's quite right. Under the previous government compensation for university and college presidents was way out of control and way out of touch with the expectation of Albertans. Our government expects that the majority of public money that we spend on universities and colleges goes towards the students as well as supporting staff and keeping education affordable and accessible for everyone. The changes that we brought to presidential salaries bring compensation in line with the rest of the country, and we expect that it will save about $5 million a year. We've also prohibited sports memberships and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you. Finally, to the minister of the Treasury Board and Finance. Many of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions received exceptionally high compensation prior to the reviews undertaken by this government. How much money is the government saving as a result of this review, and for the last time what kinds of outrageous perks are being eliminated?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We on this side of the House eliminate Conservative waste wherever and whenever we find it. Under the Conservative government salaries and perks were out of control and out of step with what Albertans expect comes to the public service. We challenged all of that. Our government eliminated and amalgamated some boards, saving $33 million over three years. We also cut salaries for agency executives and eliminated taxpayer-funded perks like golf club memberships, saving another $16 million. We did all of this on top of opening up the application process to boards so that Albertans can apply on a selected . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon minister. [interjections] Thank you, hon. minister. Heard that.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

2:10 Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase Agreements (continued)

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend the number one question I heard was: so how does it feel to be a pipeline owner? Yes, the federal government has spent $130 each on behalf of every man, woman, and child in Canada to buy a 60-year-old pipeline and unknown hundreds more each to build a pipeline expansion that faces exactly the same obstacles and opposition that it did when Kinder Morgan owned the thing. To the Premier: now that we own this asset, how much is Kinder Morgan being paid both to manage the existing pipeline and to supervise building the expansion?

Ms Hoffman: You know what feels great, Mr. Speaker? It's having 15,000 people know that they're going to be able to work on this project. It also feels great knowing that there's $15 billion coming back into the Canadian economy instead of sending that money directly south of the border. I do want to clarify that there are many things that are different now that it's under federal ownership, including the fact of investor certainty, that the investors at the table, the investors committed to this project, and Canadians care about it. We're sure going to get our product to tidewater. Finally, after Conservative governments had many years to try to do it, this government is making it happen.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, with the exception of the employment, everything else the Health minister said I totally disagree with.

Given that the federal government bailout of Kinder Morgan has actually sent shock waves of uncertainty throughout the capital investment market and given that this flight of capital will mean that large-scale projects and the jobs they create will simply not go ahead, to the Premier: now that the federal government on behalf of the people of Canada owns the existing Trans Mountain pipeline, how does Bill 12 give Alberta the power to turn off the taps on this now federally controlled piece of infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to reiterate that it's great to see the progress for the pipeline. Certainly, Bill 12 was one of the pieces of legislation we passed. It's currently back in the tool box, but it will be brought out should we see frustration at any point along the way. As the Deputy Premier said, you know, we see a lot of progress. We see work coming. And I have to say that up where I live, people are very excited that this project is going ahead.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, given that the federal bailout of Kinder Morgan sets a troubling precedent for large-scale energy projects here in Canada and given that the Trans Mountain expansion met all the legal and regulatory requirements but was blocked by forces using means both illegal and unconstitutional and given that the federal government has shown that they will step in and buy major projects rather than deal with the illegal resistance, to the Premier: do you in principle support taxpayer-funded buyouts of projects that encounter opposition, and are you at all concerned about the message that this sends to private investors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, both the federal government and ourselves pushed ahead to secure a deal to build this pipeline to tidewater. I have to say that it's an investment. The federal government currently will own the existing pipeline, which, honestly, is a money-maker. It's full to capacity. The new pipeline as well is going to be an asset and an investment, and if they decide to sell it, they will make money off it.

Child Intervention Panel Recommendations

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition asked the Premier why the number of deaths of children in care in this province is, sadly, increasing. I sat on the child intervention panel and often had to remind people that it was created because of the horrible death of four-year-old Serenity. I continue to regret that the NDP refused to let us examine her case specifically. Paula Simons, the journalist credited with bringing Serenity's story to light, said about the panel's draft recommendations, "They won't save the life of one single child." Will the minister please explain how implementing the recommendations of the panel will save the life of a child?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The death of any child is a tragedy. That's why we're committed to ensuring that children and youth get the supports that they deserve. The panel's recommendations and the upcoming action plan are a critical part of the work that we are doing to fix the system. For too long in Alberta previous governments dragged their feet on essential and long overdue improvements, and we are not going to let that happen again.

Mr. Nixon: Given that UCP members were firm in our criticism that the recommendations were too vague and high level, given that our request to review the final wording of the recommendations and subsequent action plan was outrageously blocked by NDP panel members, given that what the panel members were allowed to release at the end of the day were described by Paula Simons as "grand, overarching philosophical principles of the most high-minded sort" – when it comes to improving the nuts and bolts of the child welfare system itself, the report is sorely disappointing – Minister, why were the NDP panel members insisting on leaving the finer details to the very department that failed four-year-old Serenity?

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, we know that the panel's recommendations are just a start. What really matters is that we take action. That's why we moved legislation within a month of the first phase of recommendations, and that's why we're working to implement the panel's latest recommendations as quickly as possible. We are working closely with indigenous leaders and communities, who know what work needs to be done. I very much look forward to sharing further information on the action plan later this month.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the minister has done nothing on the second phase in front of this House. That's for sure. Given that the panel's phase 2 recommendations don't include timelines for implementation, as the NDP kept insisting that those be left for the department, and given that, as Paula Simons has pointed out, there is no discussion of accountability in the panel's final report, released quietly on a Friday afternoon, right after the government announced its budget – she wrote at the time that a person "might be inclined to think the government was hoping no one would notice." I agree with that statement. Minister, why should Albertans believe that this panel was somehow different from all of the other panels? What will real change look like?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives like to talk a big game, but when it comes time to take action, one member fell asleep during a panel meeting, and their most vocal critic didn't even show up to review the recommendations. It's clear where the Conservatives stand, and it's not with everyday Alberta families and children. Instead of working with us on solutions, as we see, they politicize the panel for partisan gain. They even chose to vote against essential funding to support child intervention. I know that Conservatives don't like showing up to work, but I'd like to hope that when the time comes to vote another time, they can actually bring themselves to do the right thing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've spoken with multiple parents who attended the draft curriculum meetings which began this past week. These parents indicated that the pattern of ministry secrecy continues, as it was made explicitly clear that there were to be no pictures or social media posts about the session. These parents felt intimidated by the staff present and described the staff as being openly hostile to questions they asked. Minister: is this the level of engagement we can expect from your staff as this process continues?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As everyone knows, we are engaging in building curriculum for all grade levels and six subject areas. As part of that commitment we have prototypes of the K to 4 curriculum out now. We've been looking at it with school boards and postsecondary institutions and parent focus groups and teachers as well. We're conducting a series. I think there are seven or eight different zones and meetings where these are taking place. We're looking at the draft. When people make recommendations, then we will make adjustments along the way. This is very much a transparent process that's never . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these parents described their frustration with the process because the staff involved seemed uninterested in actually listening to the parents and given that these parents noted that this session did nothing to dissuade their fears about how mathematics will be taught at the K to 4 level in Alberta when the new curriculum is rolled out in 2019, again to the minister: for the record can you once again make it abundantly clear that algorithms and memorization will form a fundamental aspect of the instruction of mathematics in the new curriculum?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, what I will do is to make sure that we organize and have the very best people working on the curriculum around mathematics. That's why we have, in fact, the focus groups right now on the curriculum looking at mathematics and all of those other things. It's part of a process of moving towards building the curriculum prototypes for K to 4 by the end of the year. We're making adjustments as we go along. Certainly, the hon. member opposite, who seems like he's an expert in mathematics suddenly, can make a submission to the very same program.

Mr. Smith: Thanks for the invite.

Given that the parents I spoke with who attended different sessions all described the process as being overly secretive and given that this process will inevitably force parents to surreptitiously take pictures of the documents to share with other concerned parents and given that any parent who attended these sessions or future sessions will obviously have seen the draft curriculum, again to the minister: will you do the right thing and allow all Alberta parents to provide your ministry with feedback by posting the draft K to 4 curriculum online and soliciting feedback directly from parents?

2:20

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I mean, we are doing that very thing now, which is to have parents and focus groups scoping out this information.

You know, this whole idea of a conspiracy theory, a bogeyman around the curriculum, is just generated by the members opposite in order to try to subvert the very public education system that we have been building over these last number of years. To suggest anything around secrecy and conspiracy theories not only undermines the integrity of what we're trying to do; it undermines the integrity of the members of the UCP.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Rural Crime Reduction

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week I presented the rampant problem of rural crime. A roving band of thieves went on a robbing and destruction spree, doing over $100,000 of damage, and despite repeated calls the RCMP were hours away and unavailable to help. Minister, I asked you to provide details about where these 20 new RCMP you referenced have been stationed and have received no answer. Can you now table exactly where these officers were deployed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I stated last time in answer to the exact same question, many of these new officers are in what are called crime reduction units, crime reduction units that are intending to focus on exactly the sort of offenders that the member referenced. These offenders don't stay in one jurisdiction. When they're discovered, they move to another jurisdiction. That's why we've created these crime reduction units, that are able to respond to that by moving like the offenders do.

Mr. Strankman: Given that only with the community's help were the accused eventually caught and then released on $3,000 bail and given that when five police officers, two mayors, victims, and community members showed up at court, the accused defenders did not and given that a typical penalty for failing to appear in court has been embarrassingly reduced to a simple $300 fine, Minister, isn't the forfeiture of bail and a token fine simply the cost of doing business for these criminals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was so much wrong with that question that I'm hardly able to address it all. It's absolutely the case that we're concerned about this issue. In fact, we have increased grants to organizations like Citizens on Patrol and rural crime watch to ensure that these citizens are able to help the RCMP, and they're happy to do so. In addition, we've increased funding to the RCMP to ensure that they can fight exactly these sorts of criminals. If only the members opposite had voted for it.

Mr. Strankman: Given that Bill C-75, which the federal minister says that you support, Minister, actually provides more opportunity to release offenders and allows judges to dismiss those who breach release conditions and given that that just props up the current catch-and-release judicial system, Minister, why are you knowingly supporting federal laws that make it easier for criminals who are plaguing rural Albertans to get back on the streets?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, nothing could possibly be further from the truth. We are engaging in a smart-on-crime strategy. That is a strategy that allows us to capture offenders and to build better cases against them in instances in which they should spend more time in jail. At the same time it's important to invest in social services. I know that the members across the way think that these services that allow addicts to be treated appropriately instead of thrown in jail, which save money and increase safety, are just people putting poison into their veins, but we know that they're . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-Glenmore.

Environmental Science Curriculum Redesign

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Calgary-Glenmore there is a wide variety of schools giving parents a choice in education that meets the needs of their children through quality education. I continuously hear from my constituents about how a curriculum update has been long overdue to teach children to be stewards of our environment. To the Minister of Education: what changes are being considered to ensure that our education is promoting environmental stewardship in Alberta schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question. Certainly, we are always looking to ensure high-quality education through our curriculum, and we're focused on the priorities of regular Albertans, protecting and supporting education and the front-line services that their families depend on. We know that schools have some of the brightest, highest academic performers in the country and that we have one of the best education systems in Canada. The curriculum is a key component of that, keeping it updated and current and working closely with parents and students and teachers and postsecondary institutions to build a curriculum that's as high a quality as what we expect for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a lot has changed since the curriculum has been revised, to the same minister: what kinds of changes could we expect in the science curriculum that will teach children about the very important and real issue of climate change both in and outside of the classroom?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've been working with our curriculum working groups, but we also have round-table discussions in regard to the energy industry, for example, agriculture and forestry, talking about working with energy systems and working with modernizing and developing each of these industries here in our province. So we work with postsecondary institutions, we work with industry, we work with teachers, and we work with parents to make sure that we build a solid curriculum that reflects both reality and the future of our province in a fundamental way.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our understanding of climate change has evolved quite a bit since the last time the elementary school curriculum was updated, in 1996, to the same Minister of Education: what new information has been added about climate change?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As pointed out before, some of our curriculum is more than 30 years old. The elementary science curriculum is more than 20 years old. At the time, I think, Windows

95 was kind of the latest thing, and we've moved on since then. The modern K to 12 curriculum will make sure that we have the skills for students to understand both the changing environment in which we live but also the changing industrial environment in which we live. So working together with both industry and postsecondary institutions, we are ensuring that we have modern concepts around climate change and around diversifying our energy . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, last week we learned about the government of Alberta's plan to backstop construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion up to $2 billion in case the project goes over budget. Since so many energy projects in this province experience schedule delays and cost overruns that can double a project's cost, will the Premier table the cost-benefit analysis that shows that Alberta will not go over the $2 billion backstop? How will they recover this investment? And when will they get this project built?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, Alberta worked hard with Canada to come to this agreement. It means 15,000 construction jobs, you know, 37,000 jobs once in service, and $15 billion back into our economy. We're very proud of that. We've been very clear that our investment would be up to $2 billion, but only once oil is flowing in the new pipeline.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the government of Alberta will receive an equity stake in the Trans Mountain pipeline if the $2 billion backstop is used and given that the NDP has assigned Alberta's growth mandate to the Alberta Investment Management Corporation, AIMCo, to the Premier: has AIMCo been named the lead in the assessment and management of the backstop funding agreement, especially if the funds are to be converted into equity?

The Speaker: The hon. Energy minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As our Premier indicated earlier, the federal agreement has to come first. Once our agreement is in place, it will be public. But, again, we are contributing up to $2 billion – it could be zero; it could be $2 billion – once and when oil is flowing in the pipeline. Again, this is an investment, and all the details will be public once all of that is done.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that everyone needs a plan B, like additional pipelines or new market access locations, and given that the NDP does not oppose their federal ally Justin Trudeau's Bill C-48, the tanker ban, and Bill C-69, the impact assessment act, can the Premier please explain if there is a remote chance of cost overruns on the pipeline project that exceed the $2 billion backstop, and what's her plan B to get this taxpayer mountain pipeline completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was previously said a couple of times now, the federal government contract will be in put in place. Our details will follow once that is inked. But our commitment is $2 billion – it could be zero – once and when oil is flowing. That is the commitment we've made, and that's the commitment we're sticking to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

2:30 Time-share Lease Consumer Protection

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have heard that consumer protection is of utmost importance to this government, yet the experience of the time-share unitholders of Alberta-based Northmont Resort Properties does not reflect that. In fact, the minister and other members or representatives of this government have stated that the concerns of thousands of Alberta were “outside the mandate and jurisdiction of Service Alberta’s Consumer Investigations Unit.” Minister, I’m not here to make, in your words, “cheap political points.” I’m here to look out for the best interests of Alberta consumers. When will you stand up for Albertans and do the same?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. I’m always disheartened to hear of this kind of hardship. That’s why our government has taken intensive action to strengthen our consumer protection laws. This particular matter occurred outside of Alberta and, unfortunately, isn’t within our scope but within British Columbia’s.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that from my personal discussions with many aggrieved Alberta consumers and my own common-sense review of the evidence and issues received, it is clear that there is both mandate and jurisdiction worthy of investigation by Service Alberta under consumer protection legislation and given the amount of correspondence and advocacy across the province to your department and to members on both sides of this House calling for an objective investigation, Minister, will you commit to Albertans today in this House to order an objective, independent investigation into claims of breach of the Consumer Protection Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For too long Alberta’s consumer protection laws lagged behind the rest of the country, and that’s why we’ve updated them. We take this issue, the issue of consumer protection, very seriously. In fact, this issue that the member is bringing up was investigated in 2012 and closed under the previous government. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was in that government, so frankly it’s a bit ironic coming from him.

Mr. Gotfried: Not seriously enough, Mr. Speaker, and I stand up for my constituents irrespective of what happened in the past.

Given that I’m hearing from Albertans from all walks of life on this issue, many of them seniors on fixed incomes hoping to enjoy their prepaid time-shares in retirement, and given the frustration of Alberta consumers, many of whom have settled, allegedly under duress, in feeling dismissed and ignored by this government, Minister, will you also commit today to a meeting with key representatives of the last few 100 holdouts who refuse to believe that your government will continue to shirk responsibility for their own legislation?

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, I’m always happy to meet with Albertans concerning consumer protection issues. This issue has been decided by the court, so I cannot specifically comment on it. However, that member and his party do not take consumer protection very seriously. They never have. My office has received no – no – correspondence from him at any time on this issue. He is selling a bill of goods saying that he cares about this. As the minister of consumer protection I’ll advise Albertans not to buy it. It’s a scam.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Economic Indicators

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has only had two substantial dips in gross domestic product since 1997, one in 2008 and one when this government was elected. Does the NDP believe that adding a costly carbon tax, increased taxes, and increasing government size and red tape make life better for Albertans in these difficult times?

Mr. Ceci: Well, Mr. Speaker, the dip in gross domestic product that the hon. member talks about was as a result of the world price of oil crashing in late 2014 and 2015. We had two years of significant recession in this province at minus 3.5 per cent in ’16 and ’15. In ’17 we grew 4.9 per cent. We’re going to lead the country again in growth. Alberta is back on track.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta weekly earnings have increased less than 1 per cent in the past three years and inflation has increased over 4.5 per cent in that same period, does this minister believe that that’s on track?

Mr. Ceci: I’ll tell you what this minister believes, Mr. Speaker: 90,000 new full-time jobs were created in the last year. This minister also believes that GDP growth was 4.9 per cent in 2017. It’s going to lead the nation again in 2018. This minister also believes that manufacturing is up, exports are up, small-business confidence is up, wages are up, and on and on and on. Yes, I do believe that.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, Albertans don’t.

Given that the government continues to maintain that they have created 90,000 jobs and given that according to their own website Albertans have only seen 17,800 net new jobs while there are 30,000 more unemployed Albertans today than when they took office, would they be willing to restate their claims?

Mr. Ceci: I’ll continue on the things that are up in this province, Mr. Speaker. Restaurant receipts are up. Housing construction is up. Building permits are up. New sales are up for vehicles. Retail is up, business incorporation. I hope you get the theme here. It’s up, not down.

Federal Energy Policies

Mr. Loewen: When the federal government announced the purchase of the 65-year-old Trans Mountain pipeline for $4.5 billion, the NDP were celebrating despite uncertainty on whether the expansion would be built. We have not heard a plan to deal with the obstruction from the B.C. NDP and the environmental radicals. While Albertans are happy that TMX was not cancelled, there is concern that a key piece of infrastructure will be controlled by the Trudeau Liberals. Has the government secured assurances that the federal ownership of the pipeline will not be used as leverage to interfere in areas of provincial jurisdiction like upstream emissions, carbon taxes, or even to silence Alberta’s voice on equalization?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we often hear the opposition fixating on an increasingly shrinking group of opponents to the pipeline and ignoring the fact that a growing majority of Canadians are in fact behind this Trans Mountain expansion project. Now, I know the opposition likes narrow and extreme special-interest groups. They did, after all, roll out the red carpet for extremists to take over their party, but on this side of the House what we're looking for is to put 15,000 people to work and grow the economy across the country.

Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Given that we also know that pipeline opponents in B.C. are threatening a war in the woods and given that they are to be led by the likes of the Premier's hand-picked chair of OSAG, Tzeporah Berman, and the environment minister's friend Mike Hudema and given that Berman said about the Premier and her ally Trudeau that, quote, they're either making a terrible calculation and fooling themselves or they're being dishonest in their public relations in order to create a false sense of certainty and security, end quote, to the Premier, could you respond to your former adviser's suggestion? Are you fooling yourself or being dishonest to create a false sense of certainty and security?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the opposition does fixate on a shrinking group of opponents. That's because they want this project to fail. They're not interested in putting Albertans back to work. They just want to score cheap political points. On this side of the House we know that support for this project has grown by double digits over the past year, including a majority of British Columbians. This pipeline is going to get built despite the fact that they're cheering for it to fail.

Mr. Loewen: Given that nothing could be further from the truth as far as us wanting the pipeline to fail and given that Albertans are hopeful that Trans Mountain will be built as they know that we still need greater market access and given that there is a great potential and widespread support out there for projects like the proposed Eagle Spirit pipeline, not to mention the pipelines that have been cancelled under this government's watch, will the Premier demand that the Prime Minister end his agenda of obstructing and bottlenecking Canadian resources by withdrawing Bill C-48 and abandoning the B.C. tanker ban, which exists only to please radical opponents of progress?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's unfortunate that the members opposite want to continue to cheer for this pipeline to fail, to continue to fixate on opposition to this pipeline when, in fact, a majority of British Columbians, like a majority of Canadians, support this project. It was approved due to the merits of the climate leadership plan. On this side of the House we are moving forward and investing in indigenous communities, investing in municipalities, and diversifying this economy while we put Albertans back to work.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Employment Supports

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I logged onto social media today, I was thrilled to see former employees of mine, from Mary to Courtney to Emily, who are graduating from the University of Calgary this semester. Many of them relied on placement programs that were supported by our provincial government, programs like the student temporary employment program, commonly known as STEP, which our government brought back. To the Minister of Labour. This program is very important to my constituents, to employers, and to even the students that I employed as an employer. How has STEP improved and helped better support Alberta's growing economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're really excited about the upcoming summer. I've already heard from a number of businesses who are thankful for the support that STEP has given them in the past and again this summer as we've sent those approvals out. When I was running for office, I heard from people who were disappointed that the summer temporary employment program had been cut by the previous government in a fairly heartless move. We can see from policy conventions and their plans going forward that they have not changed their tune at all. Our government is very proud . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that STEP has been one of many programs that the government has invested in to ensure that Albertans are getting access to good, safe, fair, and healthy jobs, again to the minister: what are some other programs that the government is focusing on that help Albertans access the good jobs they deserve?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is focused on Albertans' priorities, and those include creating good jobs and diversifying the economy. On top of expanding the STEP program, we've increased funding for skills training and support programs, programs that support even more Albertans in making sure that they have the supports they need to get back to work. We are also supporting entrepreneurs who are starting their own businesses through the self-employment training program. Most importantly, we're closer than ever to getting our pipeline to tidewater built, and that is 15,000 good jobs for Albertans. Our government is hard at work to create . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Again to the Minister of Labour: given that critics have promised cuts and pain to Albertans, what is this government's strategy for supporting Albertans in what Albertans care about, that is to say, their jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has the backs of everyday Albertans. While some only seem to care about making life easier for the very rich or their Conservative insiders, we are hard at work. We know there's still more work for us to do, but it's clear across the province that things are looking up. Our plan is working. GDP growth is up. Small-business confidence is up. Manufacturing is up. Wages are up. Exports are up. Most importantly, jobs are up, and more and more Albertans are getting back to work each and every day. We are so proud to support that success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue the Routine.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to provide several notices of motions to the Assembly. First, I will be moving, the government will move:

Be it resolved that notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1) on Thursday, June 7, 2018, the Assembly shall sit beyond the normal adjournment hour of 4:30 p.m. that day until such time that the Government House Leader advises the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

The second one, Mr. Speaker:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Government Motion 25 is resumed . . .

That's the motion that I just gave notice of.

. . . not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the motion, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the motion shall be put forthwith.

Third, Mr. Speaker:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2018 spring sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of two documents, the first being the agreement between Kinder Morgan Canada and Her Majesty in right of Canada and other parties to purchase a share in a unit purchase agreement, which is the agreement to purchase the Kinder Morgan pipeline between the federal government and Kinder Morgan Canada.

The second is a support agreement between some of the same parties, both documents dated the 29th of May, 2018.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was asked by Madam Speaker when we were debating Bill 1 to table three articles. The first one, which was published by the Fraser Institute, is done by Mark Milke, Alberta Already Tried to Diversify Her Economy – and Failed.

I've got a second article. This one here is a Calgary Herald article, New Alberta Tax Credit Off to Slow Start with No Money Awarded Yet. This was written by Amanda Stephenson.

The last one is an article that is titled Manitoba Pulls Less-loved Ag Tax Credits in Budget. This one here is an online source.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of the 2017 Horse Racing Alberta annual report. Horse racing employs 7,000 Albertans across racing and breeding programs and is growing in Alberta. The Century mile track south of Edmonton will be completed and accommodate some great racing very soon. I was pleased to be at the Century Downs track near Calgary last November to watch the return of thoroughbred racing to Alberta. This return would not have been possible without our government's long-term investment, a 10-year agreement that continues to support the industry in rural Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table numerous documents here today, the first one being an article from the Columbia Valley Pioneer in February 2018 by Lorene Keitch referencing the Northwynd Resort Properties issue since 2013, in which she quotes, "It is a mess for all involved."

Secondly, I'd like to table communications to the Ministry of Justice in which 53 people's names were listed referencing communications with Service Alberta – this was sent directly to the Ministry of Justice – including e-mails and telephone numbers.

Lastly, I would like to table the requisite copies of numerous communications with both Service Alberta and the Ministry of Justice in relation to the Northmont Resort Properties issue. These letters and many others received, I'm sure, by all members of this House from their constituents include those from Edmonton, Leduc, Olds, Calgary, Airdrie, St. Albert, Taber, Barrhead, Red Deer, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Fort McMurray, Fort Saskatchewan, Sherwood Park, Spruce Grove, and many more, as I'm sure could be confirmed by many members of this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any others? The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of Capacity Markets 101: Understanding Options for Alberta, published on February 1, 2017, and presented by the Pembina Institute.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we had a point of order today. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j) today, all of which are applicable to this point of order. At the time that I called the point of order, a question had just finished. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the Minister of Service Alberta were having an exchange during question period. At the end of a response to the question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, the minister said something to the effect – and I don't have the Blues. You may be in a better position than I am to get the exact wording, plus it was, granted, a little loud. My colleagues across the way still like to bang their desks, and sometimes it's a little hard to hear over that, so I may have missed it slightly. But the gist of it and the context of it was this. The minister said that she would like to advise Albertans not to buy what the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was saying but went further than that and said that what he was saying was a scam.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would say that 23(h), for sure, "makes allegations against another Member," would be in that, saying that he was scamming people. I would say that (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member," certainly falls under that.

And then (j) I would also say, “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.”

Mr. Speaker, I don’t know about you, but being accused of undertaking a scam on Albertans would probably make me upset. It certainly does for us as the colleagues of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and it does create disorder in this House. Further to that, I think there is a decent argument to be made that “scam” and the context that she used the word “scam” implied that the hon. member was lying, not only lying in this Assembly but lying to Albertans, which is not true because he went on to table 52 letters that showed that what he was saying, in fact, was true, that the minister was mistaken. I would not say that she was scamming or lying. She must have been mistaken about not receiving those letters because he took the time to table them.

I think the simplest way to deal with this would be for the minister or the Government House Leader to withdraw and apologize for that comment. If not, I would ask that you rule that this is a point of order and ask the ministers, particularly, but also the government to please watch what they say to hon. members in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m tempted to refer to some of the preambles of the hon. member’s leader today as evidence that it’s a two-way street in here, but I will refrain from that and merely say that there was a disagreement between the minister and the member about correspondence received. I suggest that no allusion was made towards the hon. member, but certainly in terms of the difference of opinion on whether correspondence had been sent or received from that member to the minister, I think it comes down to simply being a disagreement between two members on the facts.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I do have a copy of the Blues. I will not read all of the comments. “My office has receive no – no – correspondence from him at any time on this issue. He is selling a bill of goods saying that he cares about this. As the minister of consumer protection I’ll advise Albertans not to buy it. It’s a scam.”

Hon. member, in this particular instance I would ask that the Government House Leader on behalf of the minister withdraw the comment.

Mr. Mason: I will do so, Mr. Speaker, at your direction.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s an honour to stand here and open and move third reading of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements.

I’d like to start by taking a few moments to address some of the concerns raised by the opposition last week. Everyone who knows me knows that I don’t like to play politics. I believe in working across the aisle, in ensuring that the opposition is briefed on what we are presenting, and in constructive debate of our bills. As has been mentioned many times by opposition members in the House, my ministry has gone above and beyond to reach out to affected stakeholders. The Municipal Government Act was labelled the gold standard of consultation, and we’ve repeated the formula again and again with builder licensing, the Emergency Management Act, and now with PACE.

Because stakeholder feedback is so important to us, last week we tabled an amendment to Bill 10 to address concerns raised by the city of Edmonton. Now, it is not typical to give a briefing on an amendment, but we’ve developed what I thought was a good, nonpartisan relationship with our critic, so when he asked for a briefing on the amendment on very short notice, we happily obliged. The very next day my staff went line by line through the amendment and explained the reasoning behind each line item of the amendment and showed how these amendments were clarifying in nature and do not change the overall intent of the PACE program.

It was my understanding that the briefing went very well. Imagine my surprise when member after member of the opposition stood up to claim that the bill had now substantially changed. Not only is this untrue, but I believe it does a bit of a disservice to our Albertans who stand to benefit from this legislation and a disservice to the spirit of co-operation and honesty that we need to operate earnestly in this House.

So allow me to dispel some of these assertions by sharing with this House the briefing that was given to the UCP opposition, if you’ll indulge me. The first amendment removed a redundant clause that required the clean energy improvement tax to be shown separately on the tax notice. Since section 334(1)(a) of the MGA already requires this, the line was deemed redundant and removed.

The second amendment dealt with removing a redundant reference to property and changed the term from “agricultural property” to “farm land” to standardize the language across the Municipal Government Act.

The third amendment and largely the most significant clarified for municipalities that the clean energy improvement bylaw acted as a borrowing bylaw and that there was no need to pass a second borrowing bylaw for the program. It also clarified the required contents of the bylaw and clarified that the bylaw must identify the repayment period and not the set tax rate.

The fourth amendment clarified the ability to appeal and that appealing the agreed upon tax rate could only occur within one year of the tax being first imposed.

The fifth amendment clarified property owners’ ability to prepay the remainder of the clean energy improvement should they be in a financial situation to do so.

The final amendment clarified that should there be a public petition to conclude the program, existing property improvement agreements would be grandfathered and would not require the owner to come up with the remaining cost of the improvement should the program conclude.

The opposition members know full well that a bill isn’t measured in the number of pages; it is measured by the words contained on those actual pages.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre also raised questions around how many mayors and stakeholders I spoke to regarding this legislation. Well, allow me to read you some letters of support I’ve received from my municipal stakeholders. Here’s a letter we received from the city of Edmonton and Mayor Iveson, quote: I would like to take this opportunity to thank you for considering the city of Edmonton’s feedback in bringing forward amendments to the drafting of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, which will help enable successful municipal implementation of the proposed property assessed clean energy legislation in Alberta.

The City of Edmonton looks forward to continued partnership with your government in the development of the associated Regulation and design of the [PACE] loan program in the coming months following successful passing of Bill 10.

From the AUMA:

This is a proposal that AUMA has advocated for since 2017, and we thank you for bringing our idea forward for consideration.

In reviewing the legislation, AUMA was pleased to see that Bill 10 will enact a voluntary and flexible PACE program for municipalities that are interested; furthermore, we appreciate that it will respect local decision-making and allow municipal councils to determine the best program design for their community . . .

AUMA looks forward to working with your ministry on fine-tuning the legislation and on developing accompanying regulations.

Here's one from the RMA.

[We] support[t] the opportunity for those members that are interested in using the PACE tools to their best interest with the understanding that it will [be enabling legislation]. We look forward to continuing the consultation process on the regulations to seek clarity on how the program will be administered and utilized.

We also heard and spoke to industry leaders. Here's one from EllisDon.

Providing this financial tool for Albertans to add renewable energy systems while improving their energy performance will be of great benefit to our communities and province.

[PACE will help] Alberta become an economic leader and job creator in the sustainability sector.

Another, from Clark Builders, which also highlights the economic impact that the program will have.

Tools and mechanisms such as PACE will encourage more investment in renewable energy, energy efficient and high performance buildings, and renewal and repositioning of buildings in the market . . . As an asset-backed form of financing it allows property Owners to open up a viable source of financing which will encourage owners to undertake retrofits.

Here's one from the Canada Green Building Council.

[The council's] research has shown that upgrades such as deep retrofits and installation of on-site renewable energy generation systems, will provide the greatest energy efficiency improvements and emission reductions in Alberta.

The PACE model is focused on addressing the challenge of affordable and more long-term financing . . . [PACE] is critical because it opens up a viable source of financing, which is helpful for encouraging more owners to undertake retrofits.

[PACE can] improve energy efficiency . . . and help the Province meet its climate change targets.

To our hon. Official Opposition, who rushed to oppose this bill over what appears to be politics and ideology, I do ask: how many of these stakeholders have you spoken to about this bill? At the end of the day, this bill is enabling in nature. Municipalities will choose whether or not they want to enact the program, and they can choose the scope of their program through their bylaws.

The opposition has also been talking a lot about the class-action lawsuit in California but appear not to have read past the headline. Let me be clear. There will be no door-to-door sales as our government has banned that. Homeowners will choose whether or not they will want a clean energy improvement to the property, and once they've made their choice, they will sign an agreement with the municipality. This entire program is voluntary.

I have stated again and again that we will continue to consult and work with our municipal and industry stakeholders throughout the summer to develop the regulations and the administration of this program. On this side of the House we listen to our stakeholders, so when I was approached by municipalities about a desire to have a PACE program, I listened. We came forward with a bill that reflected municipalities' desire to implement such a program while ensuring it was enabling in nature so that all municipalities have a choice. We studied other jurisdictions that have implemented the program, took note of best practices, and worked to address any of their shortcomings, and we ensured that our program would have a strong consumer protection component.

I've said this before, and I will say it again. The bottom line with PACE is that it's good news for Albertans, it's good news for our climate leadership plan, and it's good news for our economy. It gives homeowners, residential building owners, farmers, and businesses access to affordable clean energy upgrades. It will help those folks save money and take care of our environment and will create jobs in Alberta's clean energy sector because we will need a lot of skilled tradespeople and technicians to make these types of upgrades.

I encourage all of my colleagues here in the House to vote in favour of this bill. Put aside your politics and listen to the stakeholders and to the Albertans who have been asking for this program. I hope all members will vote in favour of passing Bill 10.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

I will now recognize the Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. This is 29(2)(a), correct? Or he's the first speaker. Well, then, I guess, I'm excited to speak to third reading. I was looking forward to asking the minister a question in my comments, but I did forget that he was the first one to address the Chamber on third reading, so I can't ask him through 29(2)(a). I will ask him in my speech, though. It was interesting to listen to the minister's comments.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, it's great to see you.

It was very interesting to listen to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs' comments, I would suggest, a little bit defensive, starting off very aggressive towards the opposition. He seems to be, Mr. Speaker, through you to him, extremely frustrated with the fact that the opposition called him out for bringing forward a piece of legislation to this Assembly when he then had to come back a few days later and rewrite, basically, the entire piece of legislation. I am sorry to hear that the minister was hurt by the opposition pointing that out, but I am not sorry that the opposition did it. That is our job.

I do notice that the minister at no time in his comments took even a moment to address the fact that he brought a piece of legislation to this House that had to be almost completely rewritten, and the reason that he noticed that was because the opposition pointed it out, asked him to slow the process down, take some time to make sure he got it right.

Evidently, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, the Municipal Affairs critic for the opposition, was correct in many of the assertions that he presented to this House when we started the debate on this important piece of legislation. Instead of the minister then coming back after all that and saying nicely to the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, "Thank you for your help; we appreciate the role that you play in this place and the fact that you've prevented me from making a mistake on my legislation," he got up and took a partisan jab at the member, implied even at one point that the member or at least somebody over here was not being truthful. And it's disappointing.

This is relevant, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, speak to the policy matter and governance if you would.

Mr. Nixon: Well, the policy matter is this. The government is asking us yet again to vote on a piece of legislation that the minister will not discuss with this Assembly the details of or answer any of the questions that have come from this Assembly.

The minister says that he consulted to change things that would make it better and to fix the points that were pointed out in Committee of the Whole, Mr. Speaker. Then he came here, and he never talked about any of them in his address to this House. He did not talk about the policy of this bill at all. He took partisan jabs at this side of the Assembly for his entire comment, and we heard nothing different from the minister, not one thing different from that Municipal Affairs minister that would cause us to want to be able to support this piece of legislation. Not once did he talk about his bill other than to attack opposition members.

He talked about a couple of mayors that he did speak to and their comments about it, but he did not talk about the important issues that are wrong still with this legislation and how he was going to be able to fix it. He did not talk about the municipal issues that would come and the fact that he originally told this Chamber that municipalities would not be on the hook for any of this. He has not addressed the fact that his own website says that they will. So it becomes hard to talk about the details of this legislation because the minister continues to avoid it.

The minister says that the reason this legislation is here is because he listened to some Albertans that told him they wanted it. That's hard for us to be able to follow, Mr. Speaker, when we're talking about a minister who's part of a government that refuses to remove the carbon tax despite the fact that over three-quarters of Albertans are asking them to remove it. What is different on this piece of legislation that he would bring into this House?

The point, Mr. Speaker – and then I will close, because I just rose to ask a question – is that this Minister of Municipal Affairs will not rise and defend his own legislation. He brings it to this Assembly, asks for us to vote for it on third reading despite the fact that he's already had to rewrite the entire thing overnight at one point. He asks us to trust him, but his track record with Albertans is not good, and it's not something that we would trust. He has not answered the questions, and there is no way that the Official Opposition could support this legislation until he does.

The Speaker: The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon. It's my pleasure this afternoon to rise to speak on Bill 10, which is called An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, at this third reading. If passed, Bill 10 would empower municipalities to establish something called a property assessed clean energy program, or PACE, as it's known. Apparently, the way it works is that once a municipality establishes a PACE program through passage of a bylaw, the municipality would then take on the role of lender to property owners who wish to make improvements to their property such as improved energy efficiency, incorporating renewable energy into their property, and increasing their property's water conservation. Since the municipality is the lender, apparently, it is able to collect repayment through the property tax bill under this proposed legislation.

This concept of PACE loans actually first started in California in the mid-2000s, Mr. Speaker. Since then, it has spread to 33 other states and at least two provinces in Canada. While it has been touted with many accolades by the members across the aisle, there are a number of concerns that my colleagues and I have raised over the course of debate throughout the past few weeks on this very legislation. While the government did propose an amendment, which I supported, in fact, last week, that does improve the bill, there is simply too much left yet unaddressed. There is too much being left to the regulations, which is usual. Unfortunately, that is a repeating theme with this government.

I think many of you may recall one of the first times I spoke at second reading, as a matter of fact. My major concern then was that so much of the meat and potatoes of the bill was left out of the legislation. It's fewer than 10 pages long, this Bill 10, but it proposes to enable municipalities in Alberta to actually become moneylenders, for the first time that I recall. Frankly, if you're proposing to create a whole new kind of a loan program, Mr. Speaker, the government should be prepared to offer substantial details.

Not only is there not enough detail in the legislation now after the amendment; the other jurisdictions that have brought this type of legislation forward have since faced some pretty serious issues with them. If members will recall, I had mentioned that California municipalities are now facing class-action lawsuits because they didn't do their due diligence and ensure there wouldn't be any issues. The lawsuits claim that in Los Angeles county they failed to protect consumers who entered into these loans with the municipality, that L.A. county failed to fully inform those applying for PACE loans of all their obligations, that it has resulted in property owners being unable to pay back their PACE property taxes, and that the PACE loan was directly responsible for ruining their finances. Furthermore, the suit claims that seniors were particularly susceptible to abuse under the program from overeager contractors who promoted the program as an easy way to get home upgrades. That program has resulted in a number of those involved in the lawsuit ultimately losing their homes because they were unable to afford to repay the PACE loans.

To say that it's become a boondoggle for that area and their residents would be putting it mildly, Mr. Speaker. My concern with this policy is that making this same program accessible to property owners in Alberta would do nothing more than expose them to the same unneeded and undeserved risks as it did there. I don't want Albertans to risk losing their homes, to ruin their personal finances and be plagued with the burden of this debt for a decade or more.

At the very least I would have hoped the government would have undertaken, Mr. Speaker, a round of thorough consultations in the same vein as they did with the MGA review, much like they are doing with Bill 8, that is in that process now, where the minister is taking the summer to consult with stakeholders, and then he will propose amendments based on the feedback once the legislation apparently returns in the fall. It's a model that worked marvelously for the previous Bill 21 – I complimented the government on that – the Modernized Municipal Government Act.

It's not just homeowners that expressed concerns about this PACE program, though, Mr. Speaker. Over the course of the past month I have reached out to the Alberta Real Estate Association, or AREA, to get their feedback from a realtor's perspective. I'd like to share a quote from our correspondence.

While it appears that [some] home buyers are attracted to properties with energy-saving features and may even be willing to pay a premium for them . . . the financing structure of PACE projects may be a deterrent for resale of properties with an outstanding PACE loan. Specifically, the design of PACE programs in California has resulted in some financing institutions' ... decision not to lend monies to [homeowners] when the property has [one of these outstanding loans]. This is due to the fact that PACE [program] loans are recorded against the property [tax] as a tax lien that assumes the first position in case of a mortgagee's default.

I also spoke to a friend who works as a mortgage specialist for one of the major banks here in Alberta to gather her perspective. What I learned is that Canadian banks, like their counterparts in the U.S., do not like to issue mortgages to people when the bank is not the first creditor to be repaid in the event of a bankruptcy or foreclosure. In fact, many banks won't consider issuing a loan if there are other outstanding liens on the property, regardless of whether they end up behind the bank in the line of creditors. That's an important point that hasn't been raised to date. In fact, my friend mentioned that certain types of mortgages, specifically a home equity or a home line mortgage, would fail to qualify an individual planning to purchase a property that has an existing lien on it, regardless of whether it is a PACE lien or a judgment lien.

After getting feedback from AREA and my friend the mortgage specialist, I went back further and tried to find out how California addressed this particular problem. What I found was very interesting, Mr. Speaker. According to the California State Treasurer's website the state of California established a PACE loss reserve program in 2014 to address this problem. It says that it's "to mitigate potential risk to first mortgage lenders by making them whole for losses incurred due to the existence of a first-priority PACE lien on a property during a foreclosure or forced sale." While it's not clear if this will be something that Alberta needs to adopt in order to maintain mortgage eligibility for Albertans in this case, it certainly raises serious concerns that this aspect is not even mentioned in the proposed legislation yet to date even though we had the amendment. That is a very big concern, I think, that remains completely unaddressed and is one of many reasons I will not be supporting Bill 10 at third reading.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a moment also to reflect back to one of my previous speeches on this bill, where I mentioned how as an opposition member I look upon the task of reviewing proposed legislation seriously – and I think a lot of members in this House will know that I've said that before – as it's our role in this House to ensure that what is proposed for the benefit of Albertans is worded correctly to ensure that the purpose and intent are achieved and that it prevents unintended consequences from occurring. In that regard, I mentioned at the time that there was a disconnect, obviously, between some of the briefing documents that we had received during the government's two tech briefings and the bill being presented in the House.

For example, during the briefing from the government initially it was announced that the Energy Efficiency Alberta agency would be taking the lead as the administrator of the program. This apparently would have allowed municipalities to forgo any risk of additional cost to running the program. The municipality would ultimately be responsible for lending the money to the property owner and for collecting the repayment during property tax requisitions. However, the legislation still does not establish that the Energy Efficiency Alberta agency is going to be the administrator. In fact, it doesn't even mention it anywhere in the legislation. The legislation does mention on page 7, under MGA 390.9(h), that the minister can establish regulations that outline which body is ultimately responsible for the program, yet it still comes down to the government saying: trust us; we'll get the regulations right. The agency is not specified. I have an immense amount of respect for the Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr. Speaker. I really do. But my question is: if Energy Efficiency Alberta is in fact intended to be the administrator, why is it not included in the legislation?

Finally and most importantly, the most troubling thing I find is that there isn't any clarity on who is eligible for the PACE loan. Currently in the U.S. example and in Canada the PACE loans do not normally require any of the usual creditworthiness checks that are normally considered the industry standard best practice at a bank. In fact, it appears the only qualifier for a PACE loan will be based on the property information. Although this would make the program easy, I suppose, to qualify for, I believe that a proper loan should only be considered through proper risk assessment, with a repayment plan in place, and the basis would normally be an individual's history with finances in almost any other setting.

It would appear that the government is so eager, instead, to get their green spending out the door that, by not following normal lending qualifications, they are prepared to march along with this program. That can put Albertans at risk, Mr. Speaker. If a family can't pay, they risk losing their home, ruining their finances, or being plagued with a burden of debt for a decade or two. Of course, this presents another problem for the municipality. If a property owner cannot repay the loan, the municipality will not be getting its money back either. But it's an exponential problem for the property owner, who now risks losing everything.

This is especially so since there already exist several types of lending services for home improvement, from lines of credit to second mortgages plus the CHIP program, which involves proper qualification standards that protect the homeowner and the financing companies. Why aren't we doing this with this program, or why are we bringing this program in? That's what I have to ask, Mr. Speaker. This makes PACE loans totally unnecessary if all the normal financial institutions offer this already.

To conclude, I've shown in previous submissions, Mr. Speaker, during the second reading debate of this bill, that the legislation still remains vague and has insufficient details that would be pertinent to prevent future unintended financial consequences or potential litigation. I've also shown how many municipalities have serious concerns over implementation, administration, and financing aspects of this program. That was clear in the ministry briefing document that we received. I've shown how this same program in L.A. county, in California, has caused serious problems for its citizens. It has led to class-action lawsuits. Therefore, I can only conclude that Bill 10 does not provide sufficient detail to ensure that there is adequate protection for property owners to avoid the type of litigation that has arisen with the PACE program in these other jurisdictions.

Given all of the above, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of the House to protect Albertans from the same fate as what has happened there by voting against this bill so that it does not proceed. For that reason, I will be voting against Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. I encourage all of my colleagues to think this over more carefully. Bring it back if you wish, but I encourage all people to vote against this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod?

Mr. McIver: Yes, Mr. Speaker, under 29(2)(a). I listened carefully both to the minister's comments and to my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod, and I'm left with several questions. It's clear to me after listening to all of that that the minister's work was, really, inexcusably sloppy. It was sloppy by the fact that he brought a four-page bill and brought three pages of amendments. So I wanted to get the hon. member's impression, amongst other things, on how he feels about the fact that the minister claims that he did lots of consultation before yet admitted about two sentences away from stating that he did the consultation that he talked to the city of Edmonton after he released the legislation, which means he had to go back and change it. So, clearly, he either didn't talk to the city of Edmonton before he brought out the legislation or he didn't listen because what Edmonton would have liked wasn't in the original legislation. So I would like to get my hon. colleague's impression on what seems like the obvious lack of consultation despite the minister's protestations.

Beyond that is just the fact that there was a second briefing, which the minister tried to say was a big favour to the opposition, yet it was actually the minister covering his own tracks, Mr. Speaker, because when the government brings out a four-page piece of legislation and then has to have a three-page amendment, that's essentially a complete rebuild of the whole legislation, it means that a briefing for the opposition critic isn't a big favour, as the minister would have us believe, but, rather, a necessary step based on the sloppy, sloppy work that the minister did the first time around in putting the legislation together.

Also, when the minister talked about the risk to people for a class-action lawsuit, like everything that he did when he was on his feet, Mr. Speaker, he glossed over it like: "Nothing to see here, folks. Look away. Look away." The only thing he said was: well, there are no door-to-door sales. Now, Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge that door-to-door sales can be a problem in some cases, not always, but there are a lot of problems that occur from marketing and sales efforts other than door-to-door sales, and the minister did not address that at all. In fact, he left that wide open.

When you're dealing with putting burdens on people's homes that could cause seniors and other vulnerable Albertans to lose their homes in the event where someone is not a hundred per cent honest and they don't make a great business deal, I'm interested in my hon. colleague's thinking about that and how the minister really failed in a very big way to address the risk to people, as brought out in the class-action information from the States.

Further to that, I'd like him to comment on the fact that, as my colleague said, there was nothing in the legislation talking about how the financing was done. I'm sure that the minister would say, "Well, then refer to the website," except the problem with that is that when we talked to the minister in the earlier part of the debate, Mr. Speaker, and said, "Your website is wrong," he said, "Well, everybody looks at the legislation." So I guess he can't really say that everybody has to look at – now, I disagree with the minister. I think everybody looks at the website before they look at the legislation if they're buying something. I know that if I'm going to buy a fridge from an appliance store, I don't go to legislation about appliances. I go to the website of the store I'm buying it from and see what their terms and conditions are.

There's quite a bit there to unpack and not much more than a minute to unpack it, but I think I've asked some legitimate questions based on your comments here, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, I'd be grateful if my hon. colleague for Livingstone-Macleod would stand up and try to answer some of these amazing reflections on the sloppy work done by the minister.

The Speaker: I'm only sorry that you didn't give him more time to answer some excellent questions.

The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to my colleague from Calgary-Hays, who has a large, large amount of experience as a former member of AUMA, on their board for many years, and a former council member from the city of Calgary. He's very qualified in what he does here, and I think we've seen that throughout the past three years.

But he asked several questions, and he first started talking about consulting. It was interesting to me how in the first briefing that we attended, we noted that municipalities had indicated to them that they had concerns about being responsible for administration or looking after this new program. It was on one of the pages in their briefing document, and I'm happy to table that if necessary, Mr. Speaker. But it was interesting that they had those concerns, yet even just a few minutes ago we heard to the contrary.

Secondly . . . [Mr. Stier's speaking time expired] Oh. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just start by thanking you for the note that you sent where you mentioned that you had met Alex Janvier last night. You're absolutely right. He is quite a guy, not only in artistic ability and talent that's second to none, but his sense of humour is also right up there, and he's very sharp. Thank you again for that.

It's my pleasure to stand today and speak to Bill 10 at third reading, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. As I've mentioned in the House before, one of the biggest barriers to microgeneration investment is the large initial cost to the property owner. This bill intends to assist property owners with this financial burden. It will introduce the PACE program; that is, the property assessed clean energy program. It would help Albertans in financing renewable energy projects as upgrades to their homes, and the repayment would be collected through the property owner's municipal tax bill rather than the traditional loan channels.

Renewable microgeneration is often a luxury more frequently afforded by the wealthy, with little to no affordable substantive options on the market. So consumers are left with the choice between a big investment or no purchase at all. Insulated windows, likely on every Albertan homeowner's wish list, especially in the wintertime, would help keep energy bills down and outlast dreaded Alberta winters. But when asked to prioritize where their money will be going when they have mortgages on the line and families to feed and carbon taxes to pay, it's not easy to make the leap into renewable microgeneration. Thus, Bill 10's PACE program appears appealing and accessible to the Albertan concerned with reducing his footprint and looking for an easy financing option. That is precisely what our American neighbours thought in L.A. county prior to almost losing their homes and filing a class-action lawsuit against the county's PACE program.

Now, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod mentioned unintended consequences. We've often in the House warned the government to make sure that they take their time and get things right and avoid the unintended consequences of many of their policies and bills because it is difficult, basically, to put the toothpaste back into the tube once it's out. A person realizing that they got into a bad deal and ending up losing their home over this: again, it's too late for them.

Mr. Speaker, the government would like us to give blanket acceptance to this bill in which we have no ability to see, debate, or vote on regulations. We have no way of foreseeing what the rolling out of this bill would actually look like since that is all left to the regulations. We do not have a way of voicing our concerns or advocating on the part of Albertans, which is our duty as legislators. This does not show transparency and accountability by our government. I do not feel comfortable granting my approval to something I cannot study and that cannot be properly brought forth to the people that will be involved in it like the municipal governments around the province.

Among the many items that are not clarified within this bill are the operation and administration of the PACE program. That has been a concern that was brought forward by a lot of the municipalities out in my area, especially when they saw the clause on the website that said that they would be responsible for providing not only the funding for it but the installation of these projects. The government has put out contradicting statements on several different occasions. Municipalities have stated that they do not want an administrative role in this program, and the government acquiesced to this. Municipalities had no interest in taking on the cost burden of this provincial program either, but according to the website it looks like they will be.

Thus, the government envisioned that the administration would instead fall to Energy Efficiency Alberta, a governmental body. This would alleviate municipalities' concerns and introduce an extra round of regulatory bodies to the program. This would also raise various concerns about funding: where the money would come from, how Energy Efficiency Alberta would go about incurring the cost, and whether this, in fact, is a regulation or not.

Although this was a roundabout answer to municipalities' concerns, the government then put out conflicting information, and I've mentioned that before. The government of Alberta web page, that explains the PACE program itself, has a line that contradicts the previous statement. It reads, and I quote: under PACE municipalities will install and pay for upgrades on private property and recover costs through the owner's property tax. Mr. Speaker, I believe this very clearly and openly states that municipalities would be responsible for incurring the cost burden, something that they had been assured they would not have to do. Also concerning is that they would be responsible for the installation of this equipment as well.

On the same web page a further section states, and I quote: the municipality installs and pays for the upgrades. This is in relation to accessing a PACE loan. There seems to be no clarification on this matter. Will the municipality be administering and paying for this program or not? They have stated very clearly that they do not want involvement in the administration nor in taking on the cost burden, and clarification needs to be made.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things I found most troubling in the way this program will be rolled out is the eligibility criteria and the administrative dispensing and collecting of the program. Most loans, home loans in particular, base their eligibility criteria on income and credit information, where they can get a rounded look at someone's spending history, how they go about paying back loans, and if they're financially capable of taking on the debt. Nobody wants to see Albertans put into a spot where they can't afford to put clothes on their kids' backs or send them out to different events or, you know, buy groceries, for that matter.

The eligibility criteria for this program appear to be based on property information alone. Mr. Speaker, this would undoubtedly make the program easy to qualify for and paves the way for possible reckless lending. A loan should be considered through careful risk assessment. There should be a repayment plan in place, and there is normally a consideration of the person's past management of finances. That is not the case here. It seems, quite obviously, that the government is eager to get their green spending out the door, and Albertans are being put at risk in the same way that the residents of L.A. county have been, which ended disastrously. Why do we continue to follow bad examples?

In L.A. county a family that was not able to pay off their loan in adequate time would risk losing their home, ruining their finances, and being plagued with the debt for the next couple of decades. If a loan is given out that has a greater value than the home itself or if an individual undertakes a loan that they are unable to pay back for any number of reasons, this is an enormous cause of problems.

There need to be preventative measures that analyze a person's situation from the get-go rather than being so eager to get money out the door for green spending that Albertans are being put at risk. The greatest issue here is of families losing their homes. However, there is also the problem of the government recouping its money.

In L.A. county there were not enough protections put in place. Even more so, there were no special safeguards for our most vulnerable populations, our seniors, and many were left living hand to mouth to hold onto their homes. L.A. county's class-action lawsuit is a caution on what could happen when government legislation is not fully thought through and adversely affects residents, all due to the NDP's nature of proceeding without foresight and not heeding warnings from the opposition.

A government program that is inherently designed to promote the taking out of loans should not be responsible for Albertans being fearful of losing their homes and irreparably ruining their finances. This bill simply does not provide enough safeguards to ensure that Albertans do not face the same fate as the residents of L.A. county. Our seniors, particularly, need special safeguards put in place. In recognition of that and it being Seniors' Week, I think we should be taking them into special consideration.

I know I recently found out that, being over 55, I'm actually a senior in a lot of places. I imagine, Mr. Speaker, that you're considered a senior as well.

There is no further clarification in this program on what would happen if a property owner with a remaining loan balance, that he is paying through his municipal taxes, decides to sell his house. There is no mandatory disclosure of PACE loans, and this could lead to distrust in the housing market. If a buyer does not know whether his home purchase has a significant amount owing that has been transferred over, housing scams could run rampant.

In closing, I believe this bill does not offer enough safeguards for Albertans, especially seniors, to feel safe in taking out PACE loans. There is no clarification on the regulations, which are also not debatable or votable, on how the program will be administered, and no clarity to municipalities about who will take on the administration and cost burden of the program.

Finally, we have seen this program in action in L.A. county, and we have seen what can happen. I urge all members of this House to vote against this bill at third reading.

Thank you very much for your time.

The Speaker: Any hon. members under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was listening to the previous speaker talk about this bill that we're discussing here today, Bill 10, the property assessed clean energy legislation. He talked about the lack of clarity with this legislation as far as that a lot of things are left up to regulation, so it leaves, I guess, a lot of unknowns as to whether a person could support a bill like this or not. I think, you know, the Minister of Municipal Affairs got up and talked about how the Rural Municipalities association had support for this legislation, but when he read that support letter, the thing that really stood out to me was that they were looking for clarity on regulations. Obviously, I don't know that it stands to really add a lot of credence to support for this legislation when, really, the biggest thing that they're saying is: we would like some clarity; we'd like to find out what's going on here in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I think that was kind of a key takeaway that I had from the previous member's speech about this bill, the lack of clarity and how, you know, we're sitting in here, having discussed this legislation for quite some time now, and, of course, are going to be discussing it some more, too. As long as there are kind of these unknowns about this bill, then obviously we need to be discussing this.

I'd like to maybe just query him a little bit more about this lack of clarity and the suggestion, I guess, that the minister and the government really want just a blank cheque here on this legislation: you know, let's just pass this, and we'll figure out the details later. Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know that our job here is to pass blank cheques for this government and hope that what they do in the end is going to be right and going to be representative of what Albertans want to see.

We've seen a lot of different, you know, concerns expressed here regarding this. I mean, it's vague. There are no details. Some of the regulations are contradictory or nonexistent. We know that the government brought in a bunch of amendments on this. Of course, the minister suggested they were clarifying and not changing, but obviously there are a lot of people looking for clarity on these regulations still, even after these amendments have been brought forward.

I wanted to maybe have the member just follow up a little bit along those lines as far as clarity and where we'll end up on this at some point down the road and if there's any kind of idea what the government has in mind for regulations.

Thanks.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you for the question from the member. You know, you spoke of lack of clarity, and I think that is one of the major concerns. Any of the mayors or councillors or reeves that I've spoken to are quite confused and concerned about this. I guess the proof will be in the pudding. I don't know how many municipalities are actually going to put forth bylaws to allow their ratepayers and the municipalities themselves to take on this risk. Yeah, I think the minister could be more forthcoming with the regulations and discussing and clearing up some of these issues.

You know, I've talked to folks that are very concerned about what happened in L.A. county, and they don't want to see that happen to their own ratepayers. I talked to a lot of folks out in my constituency, farmers and people that live on acreages or lake lots, and their feeling is that their tax burden is already high enough, not only with income tax and carbon tax, but you slap on the property tax, and the bills really add up over the year.

So while it may sound like a good idea to begin with, I think a lot of people will look at this and initially say: "Yeah. Okay. We'll get on with this and just slap this onto our tax bill." But, you know, two years down the road, when they get that additional tax on their bill, I don't think they're going to be quite as enamoured with the whole program. Also, the other concern is the resale value of the house or the availability of buyers that are going to be interested in buying a house and taking on that extra burden.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. First, I'd like to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I believe that he does good work, and he works hard, and I do think that he has brought forward some reasonable legislation in the past and actually has done some consulting, but I think he's fallen more than somewhat short of the mark on this. We've talked about this before, but I wanted to go over some of the issues and some of the concerns that have been raised with me by some of my constituents. We've also heard from various municipalities and various other organizations, both professional and community organizations that I've spoken with.

You know, in missing the mark on this and failing to do that consultation, there are some real fundamentals that we need to think about here. Of course, Bill 10 enables municipalities to pass a bylaw creating this property assessed clean energy, or PACE, program. That's quite clear. But it's interesting that some municipalities have said no thanks already and are backing away from this because they see it as a mess of regulation, and possibly they foresee some of the problems down the road that, unfortunately, this government has failed to do adequate consultation around.

You know, this mechanism for property owners to finance their energy efficiency, renewable energy, water conservation projects, or upgrades to their property: that all sounds great. In some cases, if it was structured well, it could be a great thing for Albertans to save some money in the future, particularly under the burden of the carbon tax that they're already feeling, not just individuals but other groups as well. But this one is focused on those residential customers.

This program does so by allowing repayment through the property owner's municipal tax bill. Isn't that a wonderful thing? "I don't have to pay for it today. Just put it on my tax bill. Just send it to me. Just put it on my credit card, put in on my tax bill, put it somewhere I don't have to deal with it today, and we'll push that down the road as a caveat on my title that I can't get rid of." That concerns me because we live in volatile times. We've been through the roller coaster we hear about, the roller coaster that we hear about economically, where people may do things and they may make decisions, and we don't always make great decisions.

Particularly, you've got homeowners and maybe new homeowners that don't have the experience of managing their budgets as well. They're doing well and they've got two jobs, but then one of the members of the household loses their job. All of a sudden paying that extra burden on their tax bill actually puts them under severe distress. We're seeing that across our province, Mr. Speaker. We're seeing that stress. I'm seeing it in my communities, and it has no boundaries across any socioeconomic strata. It's actually everybody in this province. They're feeling that, and they're feeling that pinch, and they're trying to reset their burn rate, as it were, their spending on everything: on utilities, on their tax bill, which they have no control over.

But with this one, if somebody were to have done this, they would have no control over this one with respect to things like food, putting food on the table. We're seeing an increased number of people going to food banks. This could add another layer of stress onto an already stressed community, and I'm not in favour of adding stress onto my constituents. I don't know about you, Mr. Speaker, or the rest of the members of this House.

You know, I think we're all in favour of green technology. I'm a big fan of renewables. I'm also a fan of hydrocarbons as well. But I'm a fan of an orderly transition, and I think that orderly transition has been breached in this province to a disorderly transition, which is now hurting us, and it's going to cost Albertans, taxpayers and consumers, millions and millions if not billions of dollars going forward. We're seeing these investments in things that we should never have had to invest in. There's an orderly transition, and I think that that orderly transition also translates back to the household, that orderly transition where people will adopt new technologies and new opportunities to improve their lot, to improve their home, to improve the efficiency of their homes.

But, Mr. Speaker, we all know what happens with technology. There's a rapid decline in prices over a short period of time, and technology and in some cases appliances and various other things are a case in point. I mean, I think that a generation ago you couldn't go into these big box stores and buy the latest, greatest energy saver, energy efficient appliances. They were maybe only available through the high-end boutique stores, but now virtually every product carries those labels to let us know what the energy efficiency is.

But I worry that people are going to rush into this and take on a burden which has no return in five years, let alone in 10 years, that they'll find out that that $30,000 investment today is worth $10,000 in five years, yet they're still paying back $15,000 that they still owe on it, the age-old story of buying something that depreciates and which is devalued much more quickly than you can pay it off. It kind of sounds like Alberta with a $96 billion debt – doesn't it? – that debt that we can't pay off. We're not going to receive the value of that in our lifetime, so we push that down the road to the next generation.

We live in a province now where we see that there's going to be – I suspect and I'll predict that we have a government that has actually taken every conceivable opportunity to make electricity and home heating and gasoline and so many other things more expensive. But that's other legislation, so we'll try to stay on topic here, Mr. Speaker.

You know, taxpayers shouldn't get stuck with this. I'm worried that if this plan fails, municipalities are stuck with these bills. People are foreclosing on homes, you've got a home which has gone to unpaid taxes, and all of a sudden, who's paying for that? What if that happens? What if the unexpected happens? What about the unintended consequences that we may be left holding the bag on? We've heard again that some municipalities are saying: thanks but no thanks. So what does that tell you? Does that tell you that there's a lack of consultation? We don't want to put extra burden on these municipalities. Some of them are choosing not to take that as an extra burden. It's very, very interesting that that's the case. Mistakes and unintended consequences, Mr. Speaker. Mistakes and unintended consequences.

Energy Efficiency Alberta is supposed to administer the plan, so municipalities are not responsible for the administrative costs. That's interesting because, you know, Energy Efficiency Alberta is so efficient and so effective. We know that. They even help us to change our light bulbs, Mr. Speaker: you go like this. Maybe next time they're going to teach us how to pat our dog on the head, and we're going to have a Bollywood dance here. Wouldn't that be exciting, to have Energy Efficiency Alberta teach us all how to do the Bollywood dance by changing light bulbs and patting our dog on the head at the same time? Highly efficient. Looks like we've got a few light bulbs up here I could change while I'm doing my dance. It would be very exciting. I know that Brian has picked out a few for us to change here already. [interjection] I knew you were. I knew you were. It's a scam, I'm sure.

Additionally – you know what? – we have homeowners here that are going to take on the opportunity to do this. You know, Mr. Speaker, one of the more popular programs of the previous federal government was a home renovation tax credit. A tax credit, not: we're going to stick this on your tax bill for the next 10 years. A tax credit. People can make a reasonable and responsible decision: if I buy this, I'm going to get a little bit back, so this makes my purchase, my well-reasoned purchase, more reasonable. We saw that work in the past. Maybe this is a compliment to the past government of Stephen Harper, who put that in place. I'm not sure that the minister would agree that he's paying a compliment to the former Prime Minister. A tax credit is a far cry from a permanent long-term caveat on someone's title: "Stuck with it. Sorry. You're stuck with that on your title for ever and ever."

Who wouldn't want to have solar panels or other upgrades, you know, solar panels on the roof to put electricity back on the grid? But, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting because it's not just putting those panels on the roof. A friend of mine, a former MP for Red Deer, Bob Mills, has got solar panels on his roof, but – you know what? – it cost him $27,000 to put in the power line that allowed him to put it back on the grid. So it's not just automatic that you get the solar panels and all of a sudden you can put it back on the grid. This is again lack of consultation, lack of what the costs are, lack of what the risks are.

You know, upgrading appliances, I think, is a great idea. But, again, are these well-reasoned purchases for the individual? Mr. Speaker, I was in the home building business. I've mentioned this before. Many of the buyers over the last decade – and it scares me when I see it, but it is the reality – are coming in with 5 per cent down on a $400,000, $500,000 home. That's what they come in with, 5 per cent down. Now, I'm looking around this room, and I suspect that there are a number of us that probably didn't go and buy our first home until we had 15 or 20 per cent, maybe 25 per cent. See, I'm getting a nod from the Minister of Transportation over there. I know he's a very responsible man himself personally. Too bad about his party, but that's another story altogether. I know he's a responsible man, and he did that.

It worries me that we may be in a situation here where somebody has a $400,000 house that they bought with 5 per cent down. They get this PACE program, which looks really good. They're kind of new adopters, and they like to try new things, so they take on a $30,000 caveat on their tax bill, which is more than the equity that they have in their home. That's crazy. That's bad financing. Yet we may be counselling people to make bad decisions. Mr. Speaker, I would rather we do more financial literacy consulting with Albertans to help them make good decisions, and we could have a remedial program for the members on the other side as well. But I digress.

You know, the PACE program could be a good thing. It might be a good thing. I regret that I think that in its current state it will not be a good thing because of lack of consultation, Mr. Speaker.

You know, we've talked about the risk to seniors. This program is there, and there are people that may take advantage of seniors and tell them: "Well, no. You have to change this. You have to change your furnace. You have to change the products. You have to do these things." By the way, they may be misrepresented on how much it's going to save them. They may not live long enough to enjoy those upgrades and those things, and then it's a caveat on their house.

I know that many seniors, number one, won't even take reverse mortgages, let alone the SHARP program, because they don't want to have any lien, any caveat against the equity that they have worked so hard for. They burned that mortgage back in 1967, and they want to make sure that they hold that equity. Maybe not, you know, the best thing for them to do personally, but they believe that they want to pass on wealth to the next generation. We've spoken about that in this House as well. But, again, I won't digress into that particular issue.

We've got some other concerns here. We've heard about this huge scam, this issue in the United States that is now turning into class-action lawsuits, Mr. Speaker, and that concerns me as well.

We've talked about new homeowners, about the new homeowners that could take these. I understand some of the builders are saying: "Well, that's great. We can put all these upgrades in the house, and you don't have to pay for it today. We'll just put a caveat on your tax bill." I was in the home building business, Mr. Speaker, and these are business decisions that they may make because it may appear to keep the sticker price on a home down, which is being escalated by – guess what? – an overburden of taxation at all three levels of government, new regulations on mortgages, et cetera. They may try to do that because that might help people to invest in a new home that has a few more bells and whistles of energy efficiency, which I'm all for, but we have to be able to afford these things when we're doing it. Did the government consult with those homeowners, the home builders?

What about with the SHARP program? I know that with the SHARP program, back when that was being launched, one of the first calls I made was to Bob Dubask, who, I mentioned before in this House, is known as Mr. CHIP. He was one of the early adopters, early proponents of reverse mortgages, the Canadian home income program. Essentially, the SHARP program is kind of like the Canadian home income program, which has been around for almost 30 years now, and they didn't even call him to find out any suggestions he might have on making that program better.

Or maybe they would have taken that entire program on. Only the portion that was eligible for what is now called the SHARP program could have been taken on by them and administered by a third party at no cost to the taxpayers and no administration by taxpayers other than possibly the component where they maybe were buying down a percentage of that Canadian home income program, maybe buying down part of that mortgage for them. But that wasn't done.

Did they consult with CMHC or Genworth, the two largest home mortgage insurance companies, on how they would deal with it, how they would treat that income? I can tell you that anybody here who's worked with a mortgage broker knows that there are various line items that you have to include, including condo fees and utility bills and mortgage payments and other things. I am pretty doubtful that CMHC is not going to include the PACE program on one of those line items, which basically allow them to do a stress test on the purchaser when they are setting the premiums on home mortgage insurance.

Thankfully, we have that program. We have that to guard against meltdowns in our housing economy. Thankfully, we have not seen any huge runs on that, and we should all be thankful for that, even in a down economy in Alberta. We've seen some depression of land values and housing values, but not a deep, deep cut like we saw in 2007, '08, and '09 in the United States, which, of course, unravelled almost the entire financial system.

What about the chartered banks? Did anybody talk to the chartered banks? Did the minister talk to the chartered banks? My guess is that he did not.

Mr. Speaker, I will not be supporting this bill. Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Point of Order Decorum

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't raise this point of order earlier because I didn't want to interrupt the hon. member's speech, but I've noticed with alarm the increasing frequency of a breach of part of the protocols of this House that have long been established – page 449 of Erskine May, 24th edition, articulates it as well as paragraph 458 of Beauchesne, sixth edition – and that is that members are not to pass between the member speaking and the chair, nor are they to pass between the chair and the table or the chair and the Mace.

Now, I noted that you nodded your assent for the Member for Rimbeby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to return to his seat, but it bothers me that we're breaching this rule. This is a fundamental rule that has been in place in parliaments for a long, long time. It's a gesture of respect both to the chair and to the Crown, represented by the Mace. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you remind members, just by way of reminder.

You know, I see the pages, and it's always fun to watch the pages in this dance they do around the Chamber to avoid breaching that very rule. They never pass between the member speaking and the chair, nor do they ever pass between the chair and the Mace or the chair and the table. I think we could learn well from our pages to follow that very basic and very long-standing parliamentary tradition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The Member for Rimbeby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre did ask my permission, and I did indicate to him that it was appropriate. I have, I believe, also undertaken that several times in the past. But I take the point that you are making under advisement. Your reminder to all of us of the respect for the Chamber and the House is important and ought to be given.

I also would ask, now that this topic is raised, that when members enter and exit the Chamber, they acknowledge the chair out of respect for the position and, as you say, for the Mace.

Noted, and we'll most probably be practising that into the future.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: I believe we are at 29(2)(a). Any questions to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek?

Anyone else who wishes to speak? The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. I want to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs for bringing forward this legislation. I understand what he's trying to do here, and I want to first put forward that as a Member of the Legislative Assembly and as somebody that tries to represent his constituents, I am in favour of the concept of renewable energy and of trying to diversify the Alberta economy. It is a laudable goal. While there are times when we may perhaps disagree on how we achieve that goal, it's one that I think is a laudable goal to move forward on.

You know, I would bring to the attention of the House, for instance, the county of Brazeau in my constituency, that is putting forward a municipal plan and program to help subsidize renewable energy projects within my constituency, subsidizing the cost of things like efficient washers and dryers and fridges and furnaces. These are all worthy goals, and if it's done in a fashion that is economically sustainable, it should have our support, I would argue.

As I said before, I believe in the pursuit of a diversity of energy options within this province. When I take a look at some of the things that have been happening in my constituency, I've been quite excited about some of them; for instance, the movement towards geothermal. I know that the Minister of Municipal Affairs and I have had an opportunity on many occasions to sit down and talk about geothermal energy and the opportunities that are there for the citizens and the people of Alberta. I believe that there are companies in this great province of ours that are moving forward on these kinds of endeavours. It's been very interesting to me to be able to see where we can take the concept of geothermal.

I can think of one Alberta company where they have identified thousands of abandoned and orphaned wells across this province, wells that are going to create a problem for the people of Alberta in the future as we try to figure out how to clean them up, with the Orphan Well Association, et cetera. If we can repurpose these wells to ensure that we produce renewable, green energy, it is a benefit to the people of Alberta, especially if it can be done without subsidies by the state. These companies believe they can do that.

In line with this Bill 10, which is encouraging people to pursue renewable energy, here's an example of several companies that I'm aware of that are in pursuit of not only peak power, which would be your wind and your solar, but baseload energy through geothermal. I had the privilege and the pleasure of attending the ATCO AGM the other day. In that AGM the CEO referred to a project that they are doing in Australia where they are taking solar energy and when that energy cannot be used by the grid, using it, through the process of electrolysis, to produce hydrogen. That hydrogen is then stored in abandoned pipelines, and when they need the energy, that energy is then used to produce electricity through a power plant.

I had the privilege of being able to talk with one of the vice-presidents and say: "Listen, when I look at my constituency, I see an abandoned Esso plant where the town of Devon has talked about wanting to have solar put on that brownfield. I have in Thorsby a water treatment plant that is working at 17 per cent efficiency and is looking for how they can use that water to be more efficient and to raise the money that they're getting. Then I have a power plant that was running on biowaste from the Weyerhaeuser plant in Drayton Valley, and when the government took the subsidies off, the biomass had to shut down." We're going to be having ATCO come out to my constituency, I believe, on June 20, and we're going to show them these opportunities and see if maybe there is a way of moving forward with something like that.

Again, I stand here not against the concept of renewable energy. Where it can be done efficiently and where it serves the purposes and the needs of the people of Alberta and where it starts to diversify our economy, then we should move forward where it's economically possible.

Bill 10 speaks to municipalities and speaks to municipalities' capacity to create through bylaw a property assessed clean energy, or PACE, program. This property assessed clean energy program provides a mechanism for property owners to finance energy efficiency and renewable energy and water conservation projects or upgrades to their property. Again, on the outside, just on a surface level, it sounds like a good idea. I think we need to scratch down a little deeper. I think we need to take a look at whether this is actually going to be good for the property owners or the people of Alberta and whether or not municipalities need to be involved in this.

In general anyone who owns property is probably going to be looking forward to trying to save some money on their power bills or their water bills, the former of which are becoming much more expensive, as we know, due to some of the policy shifts made by the NDP. The PACE program is going to provide a funding mechanism for financing these types of projects, as I have previously mentioned, by allowing repayment to be collected through the property owner's municipal tax bill. Now, in theory, we could see that this would be an innovative way to pay for these upgrades, that a new avenue of financing has been created, if you will.

However, if you drill a little bit deeper, there are some concerns that begin to arise. You know, having listened to some of the debate in the House here, one of those was highlighted by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek when he asked the question: what happens in the case of a foreclosure? A simplified example would be if you have spent, through the PACE program, $30,000 on a solar panel installation built onto the top of your house. Through the PACE program this individual would finance this $30,000 project over 10 years for, say, $3,000 a year. However, let's say that this individual maybe overextended themselves or lost their job or some unforeseen event occurs where they have been unable to maintain payments on their mortgage, where essentially life has happened and where that individual has missed significant or so many mortgage payments that their house has had to be foreclosed upon.

It's a sad situation and one that is not unusual – well, maybe not "unusual." Maybe that's the wrong word to use. But that has occurred in my constituency over the last three years. I know that I've sat down. I had one lady come into my office just in tears because she knew that she was in her last capacity to be able to keep her house and she was very scared of losing her house. I know that I was concerned for her, but there was not a lot that, really, we could do or I could do as her MLA. I remember that a month or so later at the parade in Drayton Valley I saw her in the crowd and walked over to her, and we had the discussion about how she had lost her house. This has been an issue in the bad economic times that we've had over the last three years, and it has not been unusual in my constituency for people to have to walk down this path.

So it's concerning when we start thinking about the PACE program: well, what do we do when an owner has met this unfortunate reality? Sometimes we've seen, in these kinds of cases, where owners have stripped whatever they could out of the house to try and take whatever they could to deal with their financial problems. Of course, when you've put $30,000 of renewable solar panels on your house, it's not unreasonable to think that perhaps that's one of the things that an individual might look at trying to take.

Well, what happens to the remaining money, which has to be paid through the property taxes to fund that installation? Who's on the hook for that money? Is the municipality really going to have to go after an individual who clearly does not have the capacity to pay and maybe not even a regard for the financial contracts that they've signed? This and many other questions continue to abound with this legislation.

Now, that doesn't mean that there aren't some positive aspects to Bill 10, and we've recognized those as we've gone through the debate on this piece of legislation. You know, Energy Efficiency Alberta will administer the plan, so municipalities are not necessarily responsible for the administrative costs, which is a key factor that we all need to be wary of because all orders of government need to be committed to working together. We shouldn't be trying to add additional burdens on other levels of government through legislation that passes through this House.

You know, an additional strength of this legislation is that it does not impact property owners' ability to borrow from lending institutions. Lending institutions will be involved, but the money is not coming from municipalities, another positive aspect of this bill.

Now, who would not want to have solar panels on their roof and put electricity back onto the grid or have hot water heated by solar or maybe have a windmill on their property? Maybe you have appliances or machines drawing a lot of current and driving up your power bills. A PACE program could potentially help to replace some of these less energy efficient situations. Or maybe you're trying to protect the wetland on your property in order to conserve the drinking water, or maybe your home needs an energy audit to find the leaks in it and then some renovations to help keep the heat in during the winter. This program, if executed properly, could help address all of these issues.

However, this bill seems to be one of those bills where when you start to dig deeper into it, you start to ask some questions and you get into a further debate on the merits of the bill. Now, one of the major concerns with this legislation is that it leaves most of the details up to regulation. These regulations are not debated in this House, nor are they voted on by this Assembly. Essentially, the government is once again suggesting that we need to just simply trust that they have the situation under control and that they will provide the regulations necessary to protect the people of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, sometimes over the past three years we've questioned just whether the government has the capacity to do that. Sometimes when we go forward with legislation, we want to trust, but we also want to verify, and we want to dig a little deeper.

For example, the requirement to disclose a PACE program property tax to prospective buyers is left to regulations. Now, there's nothing in the body of this legislation which ensures transparency when selling property of a PACE program property tax owner. [Disturbance in the gallery] Let's go back to our earlier example. While it's oversimplified, I still believe it's relevant. Instead of being foreclosed on, the individual, I'd suggest, is actually doing quite well and decides that they can upgrade or they can sell their house.

Let's say that it's just two years after they have placed solar panels, had them installed on their house, and have been part of the PACE program. Remember, they've financed this through the PACE program for 10 years. This means that the $30,000 installation is spread out in a series of yearly payments of $3,000 on their tax bill in addition to the regular property tax that the homeowner would be paying regardless of whether they had the PACE program or the green energy upgrades at all. Now, two years into that payment plan, the home is sold. That means that there are eight years and approximately $24,000 left to pay off. [Mr. Smith's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just would like to point out that the stranger in the House was not in any way intending to interrupt your presentation.

I have a request for unanimous consent for an introduction.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's very proudly that I stand to introduce to you and through you two young ladies that hold a very special place in my heart, the first being my daughter-in-law Dr. Sarah Hanson. She's a doctor of veterinary medicine and very proudly studied at the University of Saskatchewan. With her today is my one and only granddaughter, Lilly Charlotte Hanson, who just turned nine months yesterday. She's very happy to be here in the House to wave at grandpa and make noise up in the gallery. I would ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House, please.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) to the member?

Any members who would like to speak to the bill? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. Now, while we haven't been supporting this bill, I think you've heard from several of my colleagues that we don't have any trouble acknowledging that the general idea behind it may even be a good one. The execution, on the other hand, has been sloppy at best. Let me go through that here. Of course, when the bill came out, we pointed out to the government and to the minister that the bill said one thing and the government's website said a couple of different things about who the lending was going to be through, whether it would be through municipalities or not or whether it would be through Energy Efficiency Alberta. I know that the minister along the way finally had to acknowledge that, and I'm grateful to the minister for doing that.

But there's more to it, Mr. Speaker. I know that when the minister spoke earlier, he seemed to be unhappy with the Official Opposition for pointing out all the shortfalls caused by – I don't know who did the sloppy work – the sloppy work done on this legislation. We talked about the fact that on – I appreciate that the minister said that he gave the critic from the Official Opposition a second briefing. Again, he made it sound like he was doing a big favour for the critic from the Official Opposition. Giving briefings to the opposition for any government is common practice. It's a common courtesy. I know that it's not necessary. We appreciate it on this side of the House when we get the briefings.

In this case the second briefing wasn't just: oh, yeah; there's another i to dot and another t to cross. It was actually three pages of amendments to a four-page bill, so essentially a complete reconstruction of the bill, a complete rewrite of the bill. You know, I know that the minister tried to make it sound like it was a courtesy for a slight amendment – nothing to see here, nothing to worry about – but in fact when you change three pages of a four-page bill, it's more than that; it's actually a reconstruction of the bill and a rewriting of the bill and a do-over.

Mr. Strankman: It's a lot of typographical errors.

Mr. McIver: Well, in fact, I think it was more than typographical errors.

Mr. Speaker, what we have here is a bill that's been rewritten, and we have a lot of questions that haven't been answered yet. For example, when we pointed out to the minister that the web page said two or three different things, of course, the minister said: well, everybody looks at the legislation. I'm sure that the minister meant that when he said it, but I couldn't disagree more than I do. If I was to look at a government program to see how to take part in it and how to participate in it and how to get money out of it to, say, perhaps, put solar panels on my house, I'll tell you that where I would not go first is to the legislation. I think that most Albertans watching and listening today will agree with me that the first place they would go would be the government's website because that's what people do. They would say that. The minister's argument at the time, that if the legislation was right and the website was wrong, it's okay: I couldn't disagree more because I think that most Albertans would actually go to the website.

However, in the minister's submission earlier today he talked about a number of things. I guess he was paying attention to some of it. He made reference to the fact that the opposition was concerned about the class-action lawsuits down in California and in different places in the United States. The minister presented to this House that the answer, the complete answer, to that question was that door-to-door sales aren't allowed. Okay. I can accept that door-to-door sales aren't allowed, but that hardly answers the question.

Mr. Speaker, certainly, people can be misled and pressured into a business transaction on a door-to-door basis. That can lead the consumer – misled, pressured, pushed, whatever you want to say – into a deal that's not good. But the problem is that that's not the only way that can happen. In any other way you can do a transaction, people can be misled and pressured and pushed into doing the wrong thing. I think we all know in this House, because we talk about it all the time, that some Albertans, for various reasons, are more vulnerable than other Albertans.

When we do legislative things, we can't just think about the sharpest business dealers amongst Albertans. We can't just think about those with the most experience with business, the most sophistication with negotiating. We actually have to think about those with the least business experience, perhaps with the least sophistication and the most vulnerable to unfair business practices. The minister gave no details on any of those things other than to say that there are no door-to-door sales. When the opposition was asking these questions, I think the questions have been legitimate since we started asking them, and I would say that they're still legitimate now, and, Mr. Speaker, they haven't been answered yet.

Now, further on the topic of consultation, when the minister stood in this House not long ago, he talked about how he met with the mayor of Edmonton and that that's where a good part of if not all of the three pages of amendments came from. Well, that's good. I'm glad the minister talked to the city of Edmonton and the mayor. That's good stuff. But my question and the question for a lot of Albertans is: why didn't that meeting take place before the minister brought the legislation to the House in the first place? Again, that's more evidence of sloppy work, Mr. Speaker. And if he did go talk to Edmonton before he brought the legislation to the House, I guess, why didn't he listen? Clearly, if indeed he did talk to Edmonton before, he needed to have a second talk before what the city wanted was right. So I'm not sure whether it's a matter of that the minister didn't talk to Edmonton before he brought the legislation in the first place or whether he did, and he didn't listen. Perhaps at some point before we're done the debate today, the minister may rise and clarify that, although both answers are kind of embarrassing, so maybe he won't, but we'll see.

Now, Mr. Speaker, again there have been some inconsistencies here along the way on the government's side. Municipalities aren't banks. I know a lot of municipalities do a lot of financial transactions. You know, they collect taxes, they collect fees, they do lots of other things, but when it comes to banking and checking credit worthiness and one thing and another, of course, then you're in a situation where not all municipalities are created equal. They're all staffed by good people that do a great job, but in fact I know that, for example, a very large municipality almost for sure will have a very large department of what I used to call when I was at the city of Calgary "hot and cold running lawyers, hot and cold running accountants," lots of them.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that at one point you were with a municipality, and you would probably know a little bit about hot and cold running accountants and lawyers. I'm not sure how many your municipality had. But I think you would agree with me that some municipalities, smaller ones, for very good reason don't have a big staff of lawyers and accountants to be able to make assessments about individual lending practices. Maybe they do, but there's no guarantee that the expertise will be in-house to assess a homeowner on their credit worthiness when they're going to borrow, for example, up to $30,000 for solar panels. That assessment of the municipalities is not in the legislation, and I'm not aware that it's on the website. That's, I think, another legitimate question which remains unanswered.

Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of other questions about this, too. What happens, for example – this is another thing; some of my colleagues raised this – if there's a foreclosure? The legislation is silent on what would happen then, who would be responsible for that. Or would the Albertan just lose their home? That seems like it probably would be the answer to me. But if we're passing legislation that's going to cause a lot of Albertans to lose their homes or even a few, that's something we should be thinking twice about.

I appreciate again that while door-to-door sales won't be allowed, what if somebody makes a bad business deal? Let's just say that an Albertan in their home buys, again, that classic $30,000 solar panel and let's say it's from a reputable dealer. But what if it turns out that, in the same way that they used to say that cars made on a Wednesday will be better than cars made on a Monday or Friday, they get a bunch of defective solar panels, and then the business isn't in business anymore? It may not even be their fault. Maybe they leave the province for a bigger opportunity. Maybe they have health problems. Maybe they retire. There are a whole bunch of reasons why that could happen, Mr. Speaker, and you get somebody that's under the strain of making payments as part of their tax bill on a $30,000 purchase that's no good to them. Then how do we protect consumers against those types of things? I haven't heard the government explain how Albertans will be protected against those circumstances.

Another question that occurs to me that I haven't heard an explanation of is: will this or could this be used to end-run the current mortgage rules? Now, we all know that the CMHC, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, just tightened up the lending rules. Listen, a lot of people aren't happy about it, and I'm sure the CMHC would say that those rules were tightened up in order to protect consumers. Taking that at face value, if somebody uses this program to end-run those rules that are to protect the consumers, the homebuyers, so that the homebuyers between what they get approved for and their mortgage when they max it out and then take on another $20,000, $30,000, or $40,000 through the PACE program, what protections will there be so that consumers won't find themselves on the short end of being able to make the payments when their tax bill comes and lose their home over something that they got talked into? Or perhaps they talked themselves into it. Either way, we don't want to see Albertans lose their homes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the government has said that they want to consult more over the summer, and that's a good idea because in my humble estimation that hasn't been done well enough yet, which leads me to want to make an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies here, if you would be kind enough. I'll wait for your permission to continue speaking, if that's acceptable to you.

The Speaker: Continue, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This amendment, in my view, is actually very much in co-operation with the government. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day three months hence.

Three months, Mr. Speaker, is about a season. The government has said that they want to consult over the summer. The opposition has pointed out many, many, many legitimate shortfalls. The government has already come with a big amendment. We’re saying that we don’t hate the idea of helping people add energy efficiency to their homes. In fact, we kind of like the idea. What we don’t like is the sloppy way in which it’s been done so far. The extra three months would give the government the time to go out and talk to Albertans, maybe talk to the opposition, find out what the concerns are about the shortfalls of the legislation, come back, maybe make some additional amendments that’ll improve the legislation, get it right, and – who knows? – in the brave world that we’re in perhaps have unanimous consent in this House by all sides to support this bill. Wouldn’t that be nice? It does happen here sometimes. It doesn’t happen every day, but when it happens most is when the government has an open, listening attitude to well-thought-out, good ideas from the opposition and looks for ways to improve their legislation. I see this as the Official Opposition presenting a well-thought-out way.

Mr. Speaker, it ought not get in the way of what the government has stated that they’re going to do anyways. The government has said in this House that they’re going to go out in the summer and consult, and we’re saying: good idea. We’re saying: good idea. Here’s the real benefit. Right now, if they pass the legislation, they can only make adjustments to it through regulations. If they pass this amendment, they could actually change the regulations or the bill itself. We’re offering the government a great opportunity to do as good a job as they can.

4:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Hays? Calgary-Foothills on the amendment.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of the notice of amendment served by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Hays. I have some concerns about Bill 10. The property assessed clean energy, or PACE, program is supposed to be a financing tool which building owners and developers can use to upgrade their building’s energy performance and install renewable energy systems and reduce resource consumption with no money down and with financing repaid through their property tax bill.

Now, a lobby group called PACE Alberta was stood up in 2017, and it seems to be endorsed by lots of green energy companies and green lobby groups. It is even endorsed by the NDP world traveller the Pembina Institute. The environment minister has good friends at the Pembina Institute. Former Ontario Liberal minister Glen Murray is the executive director there, and Glen was around the cabinet table when disastrous policies were brought into Ontario trying to force the green economy and drove little old ladies out of their homes because of sky-high electricity prices. Glen has a team of 44 people working for him at that think tank and a board of nine people.

Now, the first entry on the PACE Alberta blog is from April 10, 2017, announcing that PACE is coming to Alberta. How would PACE Alberta know in April 2017 that PACE is coming to Alberta when the bill didn’t come out until April 2018? Clearly, it shows that NDP world travellers were advocating for this program for a year and knew that it was coming a year before it was announced in Bill 10. I wonder if the Ethics Commissioner has PACE Alberta properly registered in the lobbyist registry. After all, PACE Alberta knew about Bill 10 a year before there was a Bill 10.

The government still got it wrong, Mr. Speaker. The government had to amend their own bill. A person named Jerry Flaman wrote in to PACE Alberta’s blog. He said on May 2018 at 08:28:

Just a few questions. I live in Summerland BC and am party to several organizations promoting awareness of Green Energy initiatives. I have been following PACE in the US for several years and have seen that as the programme developed many hiccups were encountered. I have just recently learned of the Alberta PACE initiative and am wondering if AB is the only province initiating a PACE programme or if other provinces are also jumping on the wagon? I haven’t yet thoroughly researched the government Website nor PACE Alberta. However, I am just wondering how your initiative is progressing and what roadblocks or pitfalls are being experienced and how those situations are being addressed?

Jerry is quite right. People in the U.S.A. are losing their homes over PACE. I tabled a number of stories about those home losses here in this House. California is particularly hard hit. There are class-action lawsuits, people who owe more money than their mortgage or PACE. I tabled their stories in here a few weeks ago. Bill 10 has a lot of hidden dangers for consumers, Mr. Speaker. California has mixed results since they implemented a PACE program in the late 2000s. Due to the design of California’s PACE program, some financing institutions, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac – it sounds familiar – decided not to lend to homebuyers when the property has an outstanding PACE loan.

Mortgage rules in Canada were recently tightened, and for many Albertans this resulted in smaller mortgages and being priced out of the market. If Alberta’s PACE program follows California’s example and PACE loans are recorded against the property as a tax lien, the PACE loan would assume the first position in case of a mortgage default. In California the result for PACE homeowners was that they had to repay the loan first to attract buyers, or for those unable to pay off the loan, they were unable to sell their home. In other words, Mr. Speaker, people are tied down, they are no longer mobile, and labour needs to be mobile. There is a real danger here of people getting overextended in the amounts they owe to get solar on their homes up and running. Albertans are already the people with the highest grossing personal debt per capita in all of Canada.

And that is before we talk about the $96 billion in debt that the NDP will have created by 2023. I don’t understand how the NDP can get people tied up into more debt when the banks will have to approve those people for more loans. It feels like a program to help people lose their homes, Mr. Speaker. It’s scary. It’s very much buyer beware going into this PACE program. I can’t see the difference here between PACE and taking out a bank loan to do the job. That’s why I will not support Bill 10, and that’s why I support the notice of amendment served by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Hays.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Yes, please. I want to thank the hon. member for his comments. Certainly, his concerns about the Pembina Institute were very interesting to me, and I wonder if he would care to comment on the fact that a member of the Pembina Institute advisory council is Preston Manning. Do you believe that this is representing a shift among Canadian conservatives?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to thank the Minister of Transportation for asking me that wonderful question. Preston Manning is an individual Albertan. He's entitled to his opinion. In other words, you know, the NDP's fellow-travellers in B.C. are opposing pipelines, and the NDP's national party president, the stylish Jagmeet Singh, supports the Leap Manifesto and so on, and now you're in danger of seeing an NDP government tomorrow in Ontario who might support B.C. rather than the Alberta NDP. Within the parties people may have individual opinions.

4:40

I know that Preston Manning supported the carbon tax. I agree with that. To your point, he's not on the same page as us. We oppose the carbon tax. Our leader was very vocal in saying that if and when we get the mandate, that will be the first bill we will repeal. We are on the record. We are saying that every time in this House. It doesn't mean that Preston Manning doesn't have his own opinion as long as it is not against the interests of Albertans. Some of your fellow-travellers, interestingly, are working against Alberta's interests. The minister of environment's close friend Mike Hudema: every day he's fighting against the interests of Canada. If it was in any other country, like Saudi Arabia or other countries I dealt with, he would be in danger of being behind bars if it is treated as antinational. At least, Preston Manning is not antinational.

I'll leave it there, Minister. Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

On the amendment, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to support the amendment, given by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Hays, to send this bill for further consultation. Three months is not a long time. Three months, I think, is the time that maybe this bill was rushed.

I'd like to thank the minister for bringing this forward. Again, I think there is some good content in this bill and, I think, some valid content to help Albertans. I'm all for helping Albertans themselves to be in a position to save on their heating bills, on their electricity bills, on various things that might have impacted their own power consumption. I'm concerned – I think all Albertans are concerned – about what's going to happen with the power prices, electricity prices as we go forward. That, I think, in itself is causing a great deal of angst and fear amongst Albertans and, hence, a drive towards this. Hence, this bill may, in an improved form, be something that might be viable and might have some traction with Albertans without hurting Albertans.

I mentioned a little bit earlier – and I'll mention it again – you know, that there are many groups that we don't seem to have talked to. The financiers and the mortgage holders of Canada basically facilitate the purchasing of and long-term investment in housing stock in our country. Realtors, for the most part, are involved with the transactions to purchase these homes and will have to deal with these caveats if they go wrong, if there are unintended consequences. We need to talk to those people and understand what concerns they may have, and I think this will give us the time to do that over the summer, Mr. Speaker. The property assessment community, in looking at these, can tell us what the impact might be, particularly if there's something that goes wrong with these systems. Yet there's still $10,000, $15,000, $20,000 on the books under the PACE program on somebody's title when they go to purchase that house. How are we going to deal with that?

The insurance companies. Has the minister spoken to insurance companies? What happens if somebody installs $30,000 worth of solar panels and we have a hailstorm, which we are prone to do a little bit in this province? That purchaser has purchased it but doesn't have enough money to get adequate insurance on their homeowner's insurance. Maybe they forgot to call, or maybe something has happened where we haven't required it to be properly and appropriately insured, not just to protect them but to protect that housing unit going forward and future purchasers. If it gets smashed and damaged and they don't have another $20,000 or $10,000 to replace and repair, you then actually have this white elephant on your roof, which used to look pretty, probably covered with shattered glass and that is inoperable yet is still on the bill. They're still subject to that, and if they go to sell that home, it's going to be, "By the way, did you know you have to reduce the price of this home to the tune of $20,000 so I can repair it and fix it?" or "I'm not buying it until you repair it and make sure that it's fully operational." We haven't thought about that.

I talked earlier, Mr. Speaker, about the fact that we may end up with some purchasers who owe more on PACE than they have equity in the home, and that scares me deeply, having been in the home building business and having seen that we live in a generation – I think and I hope that people are changing because we've been through this tough economic time. But we had many people that were buying homes that hadn't seen the downturn in the economy back in the early and mid-2000s. They hadn't seen a downturn for a long time, and many of those people were hurt. We saw a lot of foreclosures in 2008-2009 because that 15 per cent drop in the value of properties was, again, triple the amount of equity those people had. Some of them were starter homes, and some of them were starter castles. People just overextended themselves based on the cash flow of the day, not thinking that things would ever change. Again, it concerns me, both from an individual standpoint and from a provincial standpoint, that we do that.

So I think this is an opportunity for us to take a sober second thought with this bill, to give the minister and his team and to give Albertans and to give this Legislature time to ensure that this legislation comes back to us complete and with full consultation and with full disclosure and full knowledge, having consulted properly to know what the intended and unintended consequences of this legislation are. Mr. Speaker, that, I think, is a reasonable request, it's a prudent request, and I think it's one that actually bears a strong sense of responsibility and accountability for this Legislature, for this House, and for the government and members opposite to consider.

Three months is not going to change anything other than maybe some opportunities for some renovators to get going on this. And, yes, we could use that economic activity, Mr. Speaker, but the people that are already going to do that are going to do that anyway. Maybe that will give us some time to build up that expertise through contractors, that may or may not need to go through an approval process with Energy Efficiency Alberta to be able to install some of these products.

I think that that would be, again, a prudent approach to do that consultation: talk to the mortgage brokers, talk to mortgage insurers, talk to the realtors, talk to the property assessors, and talk to the insurance companies. I'd be curious and interested if the minister would share with me and share with us: has he done all of these things? I'm sure I'm not the first person to think that these are some of the people we should be consulting to ensure that this legislation is whole, that it is done with full consultation, that it is done with full knowledge of what the intended and unintended consequences are in this marketplace, and that it's done in consultation, again, with home builders, that we've talked to them.

I think it's a great idea. They may say: "You know what? This is an opportunity for us, so we can maybe go into a starter home market, and normally we wouldn't be able to afford that. Maybe the mortgage holders wouldn't be able to qualify for a mortgage on this house, but maybe we can do this." And maybe the mortgage insurance companies and maybe the lenders will say: "Yeah. That's okay. We'll let you do that." We're not going to take that full – very often you take a percentage of qualifying expenses when you're qualifying incomes for people, and maybe they decided that PACE will only take half of that and put that as a qualification or one of the calculations in terms of the stress test for applying for a mortgage.

Mr. Speaker, I think we're all concerned. We want Albertans to be able to – for those that have a stable income and have the wherewithal and the interest in doing so, we would like them to be able to purchase a home without any major impediments to doing so. But we want them to do that with their eyes wide open, understanding what the consequences are, what the impacts are, and what factors they need to consider as they're purchasing homes.

Mr. Speaker, I've spoken in this House before about that I was very instrumental in starting Calgary's first attainable home ownership program, which provided down payment assistance and some subsidy financing for low- to middle-income Albertans to be able to purchase a home. I'd like to think that those people may be in a certain situation and may be able to qualify for those. Maybe there's even another way to assist those people to achieve those and to work with the builders that are working with them to give them also a hand up of that extra energy efficiency. Those are the people that, if we're helping them with a hand up to achieve home ownership, maybe we need to also give a hand up to make sure that they can sustain homeownership even through a downturn in the economy.

Quite frankly, we were taking people that were paying, at that time, a high rental demand, paying $1,800 a month in rent to a landlord, and then putting them into ownership of a nice three-bedroom townhome for $1,400 a month, Mr. Speaker, $400 less. That gave them $400 to put better food on their table, to maybe invest in some RESPs for their children, to pay down some debt that they may have accumulated somewhere along the way, and/or to put some extra money down on their mortgage so that they'd build up equity over time and create a more stable home and stable household and a stable place to live, which I think we all would agree is a good thing.

I'd like to think that we can bring this program through consultation, again, with the people that are doing that, Attainable Homes Calgary, the PEAK home ownership program. I'm sure there are similar programs. I know that Habitat for Humanity here in Edmonton has some similar programs that are attainable home ownership programs, not their traditional builds but a different program that they've done to give more families a hand up within the community. I'd like to think that we could blend that and take these kinds of programs forward in an opportunity to help all homeowners at every stage of home ownership, from their very first starter home up to their first and second move-up homes, and also to create some opportunities for greater energy efficiency across the entire province, including in the rural areas.

I mentioned earlier that there are some challenges in the rural areas because of the ability to put back on the grid and off the grid when, in fact, in urban areas that's a little less expensive to do. It may actually be already embedded into the delivery systems there for electricity that they can do so.

Mr. Speaker, I think that what has been proposed by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Hays is a reasonable amendment, a very reasonable amendment for us to consider. This really gives us an opportunity as legislators to ensure, again, that we are not moving towards unintended consequences. Again, I think most of my colleagues have spoken here, and we've said that there is some good in this bill. There are some well-intentioned moves forward. There are some well-intentioned opportunities here for Albertans to increase their personal energy efficiency and to reduce their costs and, quite frankly, to help the environment individually, and I think Albertans feel good when they have an opportunity to do that.

But this is an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, I think, for us to ensure that we can do this with full diligence. I think we owe it to Albertans to be diligent in the legislation that we do in this House. We're here as the opposition, as the Official Opposition, to ensure that accountability is something that we bring to the table. We try and do it respectfully, and we try and do it in the name of talking about policy and not attacking individuals. Again, I've said that the minister here is, I'm sure, very well intentioned and I think has done some good work in bringing this forward. We would like that to be done in the spirit of achieving an optimal result for Albertans, and I think we have the opportunity to do that here.

I would ask the members opposite to think of it in that light, to consider it in the light that this is not meant to derail this legislation. This is meant to ensure that it is of the highest possible quality and calibre that we can do. I'm sure that the hon. Minister of Transportation would love to see that level of accountability. I know he does. I can see the smile on his face. He really wants us to be accountable, and he wants us to certainly be there.

Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this amendment wholeheartedly. I hope that the members opposite will consider doing that to ensure that we can also bring the best possible legislation to this Assembly and that we can bring the best possible legislation to Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to the amendment as proposed by Calgary-Hays? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to this amendment. I think we've had an opportunity here to discuss some of the shortfalls of this bill. I think it's always great to have sober second thought in these matters. You know, we've seen this bill all of a sudden receive three pages of amendments to a four-page bill. Of course, that right away kind of sets off the alarm bells as far as: okay; have we really done our due diligence with this bill as far as making sure that it's been properly worded, properly brought forward, properly consulted on?

Now, when we first got this bill brought forward to us, we were kind of alarmed because we'd seen different things on the website as opposed to what was in the bill. Of course, the suggestion was made: don't look at the website; look at the legislation. But what happened then was that, okay, we quit looking at the website, and we started looking at the legislation. Then the legislation changed, too. It leaves us kind of open to some wondering and a little bit of dismay, of course, in the process that got us to this point.

Now, we look at the amendments, and I know the minister called them – that they were clarifying and not really changing anything. Of course, any time we have so many clarifying amendments, let's say, brought forward to the government's own bill, that they brought forward themselves, I mean, it's a little bit like damage control rather than, you know, actually clarifying things.

The minister talked about one of the mayors and read kind of a support letter from one of the mayors. What was interesting about that support letter was that the mayor thanked the minister and the government for the amendments. Obviously, it wasn't that the mayor was consulted ahead of time and said: "Boy, this is great. I can't wait to see this hit the Legislature." He wrote his support letter thanking the government for the amendments. That sort of thing right there just shows that, you know, there had to be a lot more consultation done beforehand rather than after the bill was introduced and, in fact, after the amendments were actually brought forward.

Now, the minister also read the Rural Municipalities of Alberta support letter. Of course, they were looking for clarity on regulations, so I'm not sure that the letter was that much in support as opposed to wondering what it really means and where this legislation is going to end up.

I know the government also brought forward some builders and stuff like that in support of this legislation. Of course, it only makes sense that builders would support something like this because it gives them another opportunity to have people be financed to get projects done, you know, other than just going to a bank.

I guess one thing I wasn't sure of was if the government had consulted any seniors' groups and stuff like that. A lot of times seniors fall prey to, you know, situations like this where somebody could come in and say: "Wow. This is a great idea. This is going to save you all sorts of money." Seniors may not have the opportunity to do the research and realize whether it's a good deal or not.

Now, when the government brought this forward – I'm looking at some of the documents they used in support – they talked about how it was first implemented in California in 2008. In fact, two different documents the government put out talk about this. To try to sell the bill to Albertans and to us, it was: California has done this, so we should do this, too; it's been great for them. Well, Mr. Speaker, we found, of course, that there are lawsuits filed in California over this very same program. I just want to read here from an article a little bit.

Attorneys representing homeowners filed lawsuits Thursday against Los Angeles County, alleging a county program that funds solar panels and other energy-efficient home improvements is a "plague" . . .

That's in quotation marks.

. . . that's ruined the finances of many borrowers by saddling them with loans they cannot afford.

Mr. Speaker, I think some of the problems with this kind of legislation – and that's why if we could have some more time to consult on this – are that municipalities are not often in a situation where they can analyze whether certain people, you know, could handle the payments that would result from any of these kinds of improvements. Obviously, that kind of leaves a situation that leads them to the possibility of failure. Failure, of course, is a very serious thing in a situation like this because this could mean that you lose your home. It's not just a failure of: well, maybe they won't get the clean energy program or additions to their home that they want. They could lose their home and not have a place to live afterwards. Of course, people later in life, if left in a situation like that, will have a hard time recovering.

Now, some of the complaints that they've brought forward in this lawsuit are that borrowers are now at risk of losing their homes because the loans are liens on a house, lacked adequate consumer protections, and were marketed and sold by unscrupulous contractors that were not properly monitored.

You know, a lot of people won't realize that these are liens on a house, that if these aren't paid back when they pay their taxes, they will lose their home.

It also goes on to say:

Specifically, the lawsuits allege the county and lenders have committed financial elder abuse, while the lenders charged inflated interest rates and broke a county contract that said they were to provide "best in class" protections against predatory lending and special safeguards for seniors.

So, Mr. Speaker, we sit here today, and we don't know what these regulations are going to be, what kinds of safeguards there are going to be on this. It leaves us in a situation where it's really hard to support something that you don't know where it's actually going to end up.

Then it goes on to say:

While the lenders have said they checked borrowers for previous bankruptcies or missed mortgage payments prior to approval, they did not ask for their incomes until recently, basing approvals largely on home equity.

When you base your decision of whether you do this kind of work for somebody on their home equity and not on their income, that doesn't tell you what their opportunity is to pay back these kinds of loans. All it says is that by selling their home, you will be able to recover the money that you've put in. I don't know if that's the best way to operate. Obviously, banks don't do that. Banks have to go through the paperwork with the people and say, "Okay; let's see your income, let's see your expenses, let's see other loans that you have, and let's see your credit card account and that sort of thing" so that they can get an idea that there's an opportunity to pay back these loans.

It talks about a fellow here, a 58-year-old former bus driver.

He took out a Renovate America loan for solar panels and attic insulation in 2016. [He] said before a contractor handed him a smartphone to sign, the individual didn't explain to him exactly how much he would be paying. He said he was told he'd qualify for a $7,000 government check for going green, but found out it isn't available to him.

Then it went on to say:

He wasn't told he could lose his house if he didn't pay and only found out the true cost when paperwork arrived in the mail after the loan was finalized. He now owes roughly $240 a month for 25 years, even though he said he and his wife, who suffers from multiple sclerosis, sometimes only have $50 or less in their checking account each month.

So there's an example right there of, you know, somebody who was put in a situation that was very dire.

Mr. Speaker, we've got a situation here. There are other ways to borrow money. There's the opportunity to go to a bank, to go to different lending organizations, or there are other programs available to get money without a situation of going into this and going into your taxes and not having that safety check there to prove that these people, you know, have an opportunity to pay this back. Of course, again, it's a situation where we sit here with a bill where the regulations aren't being brought forward, just the bill itself, and we don't know where this is going to end up, so we're sitting here with this opportunity where we could be setting people up for failure.

Now, there's an organization called the National Consumer Law Center. These are some of the things that they've said about it.

While well-designed PACE programs may save energy and/or money for higher-income households, they are inappropriate for homeowners eligible for free or lower cost efficiency programs. Further, PACE has few consumer protections. Expensive loans that are often pushed by aggressive contractors for projects with questionable savings pose serious risks of predatory lending. Reports are already surfacing of problems that mimic the home equity scams and subprime abuses of the 1990s and 2000s.

They go on to say:

There are several PACE models, but typically PACE loans are first-priority liens that jump ahead of existing mortgages.

Obviously, this a situation here where some of these loaning institutions aren't interested in loaning money to somebody that has a PACE loan on their property because there's a chance that in a foreclosure the PACE loan will be paid out before the mortgage lender's loan is paid out. So some of these lending institutions aren't that excited to be involved with a property that already has a PACE loan on it.

Now, this same National Consumer Law Center goes on to say:

Underwriting does not check whether borrowers can afford the loan; there is no guarantee that energy savings will pay for the improvements.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's pretty clear that if the borrowers can't afford the loan, that's a problem right off the start, but if the energy savings don't cover the costs, then we definitely have a serious situation there.

They go on to say:

Taking on a PACE lien may violate existing mortgages (even if payments are made); and may cause problems when selling or refinancing the house.

Obviously, there are a lot of unknowns that aren't covered in this legislation. We don't know how this is actually going to affect different things as people go down the road as far as maybe refinancing their home or something like that down the road.

Now, it says here:

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which are, of course, organizations in the U.S., will not purchase loans on properties with PACE liens so it can be hard to refinance or sell those properties.

These are some of the situations that people can find themselves in as they go through and try to take advantage of, you know, a PACE loan.

Mr. Speaker, again, I just want to encourage everybody to support this amendment. I think that there's plenty of opportunity to do a little more research on this, maybe include a little more information in the legislation so that we know and people will know what we're actually doing with Bill 10 and what's going to be in there as far as some of the regulations and that sort of thing so that we can have a little bit of clarity and so that people can make a decision based on that.

Thank you.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. As we prepare to conclude another legislative session, let us reflect on the great responsibility and privilege we have in holding public office. As we return to our constituencies, let us always remember that we are accountable to the people of Alberta for the decisions we have made and the words we have spoken. Safe travels. Have a wonderful summer.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Adjournment of Spring Session

27. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2018 spring sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Government Motion 27 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Afternoon Sitting Adjournment

25. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that, notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1), on Thursday, June 7, 2018, the Assembly shall sit beyond the normal adjournment hour of 4:30 p.m. that day until such time that the Government House Leader advises the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 25 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 13

An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the Minister of Energy to move third reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future.

This proposed legislation will ensure that the necessary legislative changes are made to prepare Alberta's electricity system for the future, a future that will help to ensure Alberta's long-term prosperity. Madam Speaker, Alberta's electricity system needs to change. The current system is volatile and not sustainable. It doesn't work for consumers or for investors. This bill lays the groundwork for a system that is more stable and reliable for consumers, more attractive for investors, and better for all Albertans. It will also bring better measures to protect utility consumers from bad utility services and billing practices.

I'm proud to support this important legislation and bring stability, affordability, and protection for Alberta's utility consumers. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for this opportunity to speak before the House. It's disappointing to see that we've got this bill in front of us. The government broke our electricity markets, and they're attempting to fix it with taxpayer money. That is the essence of this. When the government came in, in 2015, nowhere did they mention that they were going to bring in a carbon tax. Then what happened is that the government moved forward with a carbon tax, the single largest tax in Alberta's history, and what ended up happening is that they committed to shutting down our coal plants. Now, our coal plants are responsible for more than 50 per cent of the energy produced within Alberta. Clearly, there's going to be an impact.

Now, what this does, this Bill 13, is that it moves to a capacity market. What they're trying to do is that they're trying to pave the way for renewable energy. While I believe every member in this House does see a value in moving towards renewable energy, making sure that we do it in a responsible way is always something that we need to be very clear, taking that clear path.

Now, whenever we ask this government for an economic analysis or an impact study, the government deflects our questions. They say that the opposition is fearmongering, that really they're making things better. In the end, what happens is – and we've seen this repeatedly come through the House, where they put forward a piece of legislation or change the direction of how Alberta has been typically going in in a radical U-turn and then suddenly are fixing it down the road. Bill 13 is one of those fixes.

What we've got here is that Bill 13 is moving towards a capacity market. What's important here is that because the sun doesn't always shine and the wind doesn't always blow, electrical generation on standby is needed to be built. The NDP changed the energy-only market to a capacity market with Bill 13 in order to stimulate investment. This means electricity prices will have nowhere to go but up.

The fact is that the stability the government has brought forward – the one thing that they continue to say repeatedly is that they've brought stable electricity rates to Alberta. I wholeheartedly agree with that. What happens here is that we have a government that put 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour as a cap, and we are most certainly going to be over that cap going forward. That means Albertans can expect 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour into our future, and that's disappointing because a lot of times we saw markets right at about 3 cents or 2 cents per kilowatt hour. So we're adding a lot of cost to the cost of electricity.

The problem, too, is that we also have delivery and transmission charges on our electricity bills. Now, that is for building up the infrastructure that we need to be able to get that electricity to residents and commercials and industry. What happens here is that if you look at your electricity bill now, you're going to find that more than half if not three-quarters of your bill is transmission or distribution charges. Clearly, that was never the intent.

The problem that we've got here is that once we move away from coal and towards renewables, we're going to need to have more infrastructure put in place, so what we've got is a spike that is most likely going to be coming from our distribution and transmission fees. Now, it is already unacceptably high, and a case can be made that – the fact is that I believe we need to actually review in depth what makes up the cost when it comes to our bills when it comes to electricity. When we see that our transmission and distribution charges, say, double – and I don't know what the cost is, but I can only assume that it's going to be significant because we need to get those solar farms and those wind farms connected to the grid – in the end our middle class is going to suffer.

Now, we've already suffered because we're shutting down the coal plants. We've already suffered because we've got the carbon tax. We've already suffered because our oil sands have been hammered with this government's decisions, whether it's the methane reduction – that's currently the big hurdle that's in front of us right now, which means that should the rules and regulations go forward as the government has proposed, I am looking at about 1,000 people within my area losing work. That's shameful. But to make matters worse, we're looking at probably 7,000 people across Alberta that are going to be put out of work. So now what we've got is well-paying jobs that are going to disappear from decisions and policy that this government is making.

Now, I would like to say that at least the government didn't surprise us with capacity markets. They didn't put it in their platform, but I believe that at the time they didn't know they were going to destroy our electricity market by implementing a carbon tax.

But what happened is that this Speech from the Throne – it's actually listed in here, and I like going back to what the agenda is for the government when they are moving forward with the new session. On page 8 of the throne speech it says, "Diversifying our electricity sector," and the very first sentence is: "Your government will create new jobs and protect people from wild electricity price swings." Doubling the cost of electricity and keeping it there doesn't seem to be a solution that I believe my constituents accept as a plan from this government. What'll end up happening is that in many cases you're going to find that the government is going to have repercussions from this going forward because once you go to a capacity market, it is very hard to undo if it doesn't work for you.

Now, I've heard from the government when they've been doing Bill 13 speeches. They're saying that other provinces or jurisdictions across the world have tried capacity markets. I would like to hear in detail on how it's working for them. I'll tell you that for me it seems strange that we would pay any energy producer to not produce energy. That essentially is what this is doing. Now, I understand that what they're trying to do is that they're trying to build renewable and they're trying to ensure that they have the ability to be able to supply power to Albertans. But here's the problem with capacity markets and renewables. When the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow, you need an alternate power source, so we need to always have something on the side ready to go. Duplication is what we've got right now.

Now, I don't remember the exact numbers, but from an article I remember reading, what we saw was that Ontario, for instance, is buying power – and I can be corrected on this – at 13 cents to 16 cents per kilowatt hour. This is from their solar farms and wind farms. Then what they're doing is that they're selling that same power to the United States for 4 cents per kilowatt hour. Now, what happens is that while the sun shines and the wind blows, you've got a ton of power. What happens here is that we always need to be ensuring that we have the appropriate number of wind farms and solar farms but that we're not subsidizing something just to have it in place.

Now, Ontario and, I would say, the Ontario government is a prime example of what not to do when it comes to energy. They have ruined their energy system. They have incredible burdens put on their rural residents right now, where people are choosing between heating and power to their homes and paying mortgage payments. That's energy poverty or energy, more or less, denied to rural residents . . .

Mr. Strankman: And it's shameful.

Mr. Cyr: . . . and it is truly shameful that the Ontario government has gone down that road.

Now we've got the Premier of Ontario. She has outright said – and I don't have the quote in front of me – that she's not going to win: please vote for somebody else so that the Conservatives can't form government. That is because Ontarians have learned the lesson when it comes to energy, and we continue to go down the road where Ontario has proven that it doesn't work. Now we're getting a government that is going to be punished when it comes to the election that's coming up here. Punished. The question is whether they're even going to have a party left, an official party left, once that election is done because of how poorly they've managed their government there.

Mr. Strankman: We'll find that out tonight.

Mr. Cyr: And – good point – we'll find out tonight exactly where that's going.

I would wish everybody in Ontario fortune in whatever party they choose, but I will tell you that it is a telling tale when your Premier who has a majority government is looking at going down to no official party.

This is important because when we look at what happened in Alberta's past, we had a government, a Progressive Conservative government, for 44 years. This government, some will argue, did very well. Some will argue it didn't do well. But in the end what happened was that the people of Alberta decided to give the NDP Party a chance. The NDP Party promised not to be radical, in my opinion, and in the end we're seeing radical bills like Bill 13 coming forward. This is a radical bill because it is a radical change to our electricity system. We are going to be subsidizing this from Albertans most likely for generations. This is something I am passing on to my children and their children. It is shameful that we are debating this and the government is going to supporting this.

To move on to the throne speech again, I would like to say that the next sentence to this is:

Since Alberta's electricity system was deregulated, families, businesses, and investors have been subject to volatile electricity costs. That volatility was keeping investors on the sidelines.

Markets do that. What happens here is that when there is a need for energy, we would have somebody provide that energy. It's a simple system. That is the value of that. We never were short of energy, so it was a good system that we had in place. Was there volatility? Absolutely. But you know what? Your cap does more or less the same thing under both the market system and the capacity system, and it also does it through the other system as well. If you were trying to take volatility out of it, you could have done it in both market systems by putting the same cap on there, yet you chose to go with a more costly route, which is to pay our energy industry for actually not producing any energy. That seems strange to me. That's something that I can't see as an option that we should have moved forward with.

Now, it goes on:

At the same time, the electricity system generated harmful air pollution, with Alberta burning more coal than every other province combined.

We've got coal here. We've got clean coal here. I am waving my hands around too much, but I will tell you that what we've got in Alberta is an abundance of energy. We have the ability to create clean coal burning facilities. Why wouldn't we want to take advantage of that?

When you see Germany, for instance, which, from my understanding, has some of the worst coal on the Earth, when you compare us to them, we're phasing out coal and they're moving toward coal. That's a strange thing to be seeing. They've tried this renewable energy route that you're trying to move us towards, and it failed for them. Now what happens is that they've got incredible energy poverty happening in Germany.

We've got incredible energy poverty happening in Ontario. It is a common path when it comes to electricity that it seems everybody wants to fix our energy system, yet they don't want to do it with their own money; they want to do it with taxpayer money. They want to do it with debt. Debt is one of the things that we will pass on to future generations, and debt interest is something that will mean that we will have less money or less ability to provide programs in the future. Obviously, this is troublesome, and obviously this is not the direction that Albertans were hoping that we would go in. We need to be making sure that Alberta always has a stable energy source, that Alberta always has the ability to be able to provide energy in a way that Albertans are able to heat their homes. They'll be able to spend time with their families, with entertainment. They'll be able to drive their cars to get to and from work or to and from activities. In the end, Albertans depend on energy, and Albertans depend on cheap energy. This is one thing that has allowed Alberta to thrive.

Yet here we've got a government that continues to slap more and more taxes on our energy, making it harder and harder for our middle class and those that are, unfortunately, low income or seniors, all of those that have lower incomes, to be able to move forward with their lives. We're moving forward with making it more costly for them. Then we hand them an energy rebate or a carbon tax rebate. That rebate is meant to subsidize them for all of the costs. From what I've heard from my local seniors and my local middle-class families, the money that the rebate reimburses isn't anywhere near the cost that is being levied against their families. We are actually seeing people that are worse off because of this government.

It comes down to that they need this energy to live. This is not something that Albertans can do without. A lot of times what happens is that you'll have people compare us to other provinces or other states. Well, it is tough to compare us to, say, California when we require heat going into our homes in order to live whereas for Californians some may argue that down there they could do without any power if they were needing to because in the end they don't depend on power for their livelihood. Now, some could say that heat for seniors is a necessity down in California, and I think that argument could be made. What we can't do is ignore the fact that cheap energy in Alberta has allowed us to prosper.

We're seeing more and more businesses being put out of business because of the decisions this government has made. One of them is the carbon tax. The other is the incredible cost that is being levied on them, whether it's the minimum wage increase, whether it is – in some cases in my constituency we've seen the emissions cap, we've seen the methane reduction, and we've seen a lot of things that this government has brought forward. Yet all of them seem to be putting people in my constituency out of work. The government knows this is going to happen, yet it still pursues those options. That is not consultation, that is not working with our industry, and that is not finding balance.

Now, I understand that the government wants to see radical change, a U-turn, if you will. Albertans aren't there yet, and I don't believe that Albertans should be responsible for that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to stand in support of Bill 13 as a cosponsor of this bill. Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, will implement the capacity market. We are excited about the made-in-Alberta approach we are taking to what is a proven market system. Over the past 18 months our government has worked with stakeholders, including industry and consumer groups, to ensure that we have designed the best possible capacity market for Alberta. Our new market system, once fully implemented in 2021, will make life better for Albertans. It will ensure that Albertans continue to have safe, reliable, sustainable, and affordable electricity, and it will attract investment from industry.

Madam Speaker, I need to speak to some comments made about the Brooks solar facility. It was stated in this Chamber that that facility was unstable and unreliable and that it was subsidized at 100 per cent. Comments were made suggesting that it produces too little energy, as if the project's developer did not account for solar's capacity factor when deciding whether the project was economic. This facility is privately owned, privately developed, and privately financed. It's important for us to defend private industry that has brought investment and jobs to Alberta.

I know that many in Brooks and the county of Newell are proud to be home to western Canada's first utility scale solar project. It is private investors who brought this facility to reality after securing innovation funding through the competitive application process back in 2014. It is an important early leader for working through the approvals and regulatory process and will set the industry up well for further solar investment in Alberta. The project used a significant amount of local labour and subtrades in a variety of roles, which not only represents economic development for the Brooks area, but it also builds local capacity in this growing renewable energy sector. This is good for Alberta.

We know that solar energy costs have come down substantially and that it produces energy well in line with higher demand and higher priced hours in Alberta. For that reason, solar energy is poised to bring a lot of benefit to Alberta, and people in and around Brooks can be proud to pioneer this trend. The county reeve is rightly excited about the opportunity to diversify the county's income streams. For these reasons, it is important to set the record straight and address comments that unnecessarily bashed private investment in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to address another misconception raised repeatedly during second reading and Committee of the Whole debate. The statement has been made by members opposite that under this bill companies could be under contract for capacity, receive payments for that capacity, and could deny the provision of electricity. This is simply not so. Companies that deny providing electricity to the grid would be in breach of system operator rules. Alberta's existing energy market rules have must-offer requirements. This means generators that are connected to the electricity system must provide electricity when told to do so by the Alberta Electric System Operator. Should a generator fail to provide electricity, they would be subject to investigation by the Market Surveillance Administrator and potential penalties from the Alberta Utilities Commission. This requirement will continue to apply with the capacity market.

Generators who receive a capacity payment will be required to be active in both the energy and capacity markets, and generators who win a capacity auction will be obligated through system operator rules to provide that capacity similar to the current requirements in the energy market. Be assured: Alberta's agencies will ensure that generators comply with all rules.

Madam Speaker, in addition to enabling the capacity market, Bill 13 will also protect Albertans from poor customer service. Bill 13 will hold electricity and natural gas service providers accountable for inappropriate business practices or breaches of customer service such as late or inaccurate bills. With this legislation the Alberta Utilities Commission will be able to directly issue specified penalties to electric and natural gas service providers for infractions. Currently the only enforcement tool the commission has is its formal hearing process, which can be lengthy and costly and is not in the best interest of consumers. It is past time to repair that gap. I am glad to support legislation that gives all members the opportunity to support this important piece of consumer protection.

This bill enables the changes needed to modernize Alberta's electricity system to ensure that it becomes a more stable and reliable network. Not only will it provide consumers with stable electricity prices, one of the key benefits of implementing a capacity market, but it will protect them from poor customer service by enabling the Alberta Utilities Commission to directly issue specified penalties to electricity and natural gas service providers for particular breaches.

Madam Speaker, I'm proud to support Bill 13, legislation that ensures Alberta's long-term prosperity while protecting Albertans and putting consumers first. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's with the greatest of respect that I ask my friend from Red Deer-North some questions in regard to her comments. My understanding was that her comments were directed and concerning the county of Brooks. There really isn't a county of Brooks; it's the county of Newell. I was actually speaking just yesterday to the Alberta Irrigation Projects Association manager about the development of irrigation in the county of Newell by the Eastern irrigation district. They have great concerns about the use of irrigable land for solar farms.

Madam Speaker, I was wondering if the Member for Red Deer-North could explain, where she talks about the infusion of solar panels, how that would negatively affect the irrigable land that's associated with the coverage by solar farms, because that coverage is not unlike suburban sprawl that's taking agricultural land out of production. If the Member for Red Deer-North would expound on that a little bit, please, I'd be greatly appreciative.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other comments? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I did a quick look on some of the concerns that the hon. member from the NDP had brought forward, specifically about misinformation that may have come from the opposition side. You know what? Whenever there's misinformation, we need to clarify it on the record. That just needs to happen.

I'm thankful that the member, if there's something that came forward – I do have an article, though, Alberta Renewable Revolution Begins with Launch of Largest Solar Project in Western Canada. This is an article that was put forward by CBC News on December 22, 2017, by Kyle – and I'm sorry, Kyle, whoever you are – Bakx. Now, in this article it says, "The project cost $30 million and developers received $15 million in grant funding." Now, in this case – the member from the NDP can clarify this, but what I understood from her comments was that none of this project was subsidized by the Alberta government. Clearly, this article says something very different from information that she may have provided.

Again, if the case is that there's an error in the record, it is important that we clarify this, because I do believe that any of these renewable projects that go forward that are put in place by Alberta, a lot of them are subsidized by the Alberta government. When we start seeing the capacity model come forward, we're going to see that these renewable projects will also be subsidized when they're not making power. That is troublesome as well. So to hear the member – I have nothing but respect for private investment. Absolutely, this is the way to go. But to make it sound like private investment is the only thing that holds this project up: I'm having a hard time jumping to that conclusion. The fact is that whenever we've got a renewable project going forward in Alberta, most likely you can always tie it to taxpayer money. Going forward, you can also tie that same project to some sort of subsidy.

If my colleague across the aisle had put some information out that said that it was a hundred per cent subsidized by the Alberta government – and, clearly, from the article that I have in front of me that says that maybe 50 per cent of it was subsidized by government, that sounds like there may have been an inconsistency. If that's the case, then I will apologize for my colleague because I don't believe that they ever meant to mislead to the House. But I do believe that it is a little misleading to say . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. This bill is very complex, as we all spoke in this House many times. Today you'll hear more and more about our concerns and how we got here and what we told the NDP on how they can improve this bill and what other stakeholders told them. I'll bring up some points here, and we can discuss that later on in the next speeches. My colleagues here all have lots of information to share this morning.

After all of these ad hoc changes to the electricity system by the NDP, Bill 13 certainly takes the cake. This bill, Madam Speaker, is 50 or 51 pages. Even the numbering, you know, is not proper. It's a little bit weird. Anyway, it hides more information than it reveals. When I asked more questions, I was told: it will all be in regulations. When we ask when the regulations would come, nobody can give us a convincing answer.

Bill 13 was supposed to be all about bringing in and installing a capacity market, and while Bill 13 does that, there are a couple of other things Bill 13 also does. The NDP tried to change the laws – when I say "laws," it's not "loss"; it's "laws" – around utility asset disposition. The electricity distributors – EPCOR, Enmax, Fortis, AltaLink, ATCO, and AltaGas – all successfully lobbied to have this part of the bill amended, and the offending parts that were meant to close the gap created by the 2006 Stores Block decision were removed. It's not very often that government, let alone an NDP government, amends its own bills. Now, the NDP government must have got utility asset disposition very wrong.

The NDP have also made a move to slip natural gas retailers under the Gas Utilities Act as a body that can be taken to the Alberta Utilities Commission and assigned specified penalties for not doing their job. I'm surprised the NDP tried to put utility asset disposition in this, the capacity market bill. Same with adding natural gas retailers and specified penalties to the Gas Utilities Act.

As I said, Madam Speaker, it's really complex. We in the Official Opposition did our job to try and make this Bill 13 better based on the stakeholder consultations we had and the input they gave to us. Not surprisingly, the NDP rejected our advice.

The UCP did not think an electricity generator should be receiving a capacity payment and then deny the provision of the electricity, thus being allowed to spike electricity prices when the Electric System Operator demands electricity. Now, we want the generators on a capacity contract to be forced to offer electricity to AESO for sale. Every minute of every day AESO asks for and buys the lowest price electricity. If a generator is allowed to receive a capacity payment without being forced to bid their electricity to the ISO, the Independent System Operator, the electricity price will rise.

How high does it have to rise before people are being forced to the food banks like they are in Ontario? That's shameful, Madam Speaker. Within Canada it's happening, and it's in the largest province of Canada. It has its own electoral implications, and we'll see that tonight. The Alberta NDP, probably by passing this Bill 13 today, is actually conceding the next election.

TransAlta got caught and fined $56 million by the Alberta Utilities Commission for market manipulation by denying the provision of electricity in order to drive up the prices. Is this a practice the NDP wants to continue? I asked them, and I didn't get any convincing answer. It's fundamentally wrong to receive a capacity payment and then deny the market electricity. We want to keep prices as low as possible for the average Albertan, for the regular Albertans, and the NDP wants to drive them up. The NDP rejected that amendment to protect consumers, and the NDP wants to pay for capacity whether electricity is offered or not.

The UCP wanted to make sure the NDP had a minimum of 60 days to consult on the draft regulations. Such a timeline would put the draft regulation out now so the NDP can have the final regulations done for August as per Bill 13. We know the ministry is consulting. Setting up the capacity market is a serious and complex undertaking, but the NDP rejected this amendment. All this tells me is that the draft regulations are not ready. Otherwise, the NDP would have accepted the amendment. Electricity companies are going to have a mad scramble this summer in August when the final regulations are released.

The next amendment was FEOC. "Fair, efficient, open, and competitive" was not applied evenly to the capacity market in the legislation. In some cases it was just sloppy wording by the lawyers; in other cases, it was omitted. FEOC is standard language in the electricity sector, Madam Speaker, and cleaning up the bill's language ensures consistency and would have provided certainty to the electricity stakeholders, who do not want legal manoeuvring to allow the government or the AESO to skip out on commitments. But the NDP chose sloppy drafting and wiggle room. This does not bode well to instill confidence in the suppliers.

Our final suggestion was that the generators who win a capacity contract under the provisional rules do not want the provisional rules changing on them between the provisional rules and the final rules coming out. How can you award a contract and then change the terms and conditions? The minister; the AESO, Alberta Electric System Operator; and the Alberta Utilities Commission can't go changing the rules midstream and expect people to bid and invest in capacity. But even this, Madam Speaker – even this – was rejected by the NDP. The NDP seems to believe that as long as the rule change is within the bounds of fair, efficient, open, and competitive, the AUC can force the change in the provisional market.

Madam Speaker, the NDP rejected these suggestions for improvement. I fear that we have a flawed piece of legislation that will give rise to a broken capacity market. Albertans will suffer because of this. Electricity prices will rise higher than they need to rise, and I fear energy poverty in Alberta because of what the NDP has done, everyday Albertans unable to afford their power bills and having to make decisions on whether to eat or heat their homes. We have people in Ontario, where Liberal electricity reforms for green energy have taken power bills from $80 per month to $309 per month – it's almost a fourfold increase – and that is without dishwashers, without clothes dryers, and without leaving appliances or lights on. That's a 386 per cent increase over eight years. That's Ontario.

What about Alberta? Borrowing from the Official Opposition leader's dissertations Monday night and early Tuesday morning, the NDP started down this road when they increased the carbon tax on heavy industrial emitters like the coal-fired generation plants. Alberta gets 60 to 65 per cent of its baseline power generation from coal, Madam Speaker, as you know, and this action tripped an opt-out clause contained in existing power contracts. This allowed holders of the unprofitable power purchase agreements, PPAs, to return them to the Balancing Pool. That was the starting point, because of that ideological decision the NDP has taken that triggered dumping of the PPAs. That's the starting point.

Now, let's follow this trail here carefully. The NDP government did not like this, so they sued themselves, claiming foul under the so-called Enron clause being slipped into the PPAs at the last minute. The taxpayers of Alberta had to cover the losses on the PPAs while the PPAs were extant for those two years of the court case, and the losses kept mounting.

Also, it's funny, Madam Speaker. Neil McCrank, who was a former deputy minister and a former AUC chair, was blamed for that Enron clause, through no fault of his own, and he challenged it. All he asked was: hey, I'm in no way connected with that; you're mistaken; let's talk; withdraw your allegation, and apologize. And this government refused to engage him. Then he went to court, because he had to defend his reputation, and he, being a former bureaucrat, was indemnified by AUC. Then we, taxpayers, Albertans, ended up paying for his legal fees. Shame on this government.

The Balancing Pool spent more than $700 million from its investment portfolio to cover the losses on the PPAs due to the government's action. Then the Balancing Pool borrowed a further $566 million from the province at year-end 2017, last year, hiding the true cost from the consumers. That's how the NDP is hiding the true cost, Madam Speaker. In 2018 all Alberta electricity consumers will pay a surcharge, instigated by the Balancing Pool, in order to help pay for these losses of a further $190 million. This list is, you know, endless, and someone like the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who is a professional accountant, hopefully can help me in adding up all these losses. They are mounting up, and the taxpayer is on the hook to pay for them.

Then to hide the cost to consumers again, Madam Speaker – you see, there is a pattern here – the NDP instituted a price cap on the regulated rate option for residential electricity, at an estimated cost of $74 million for this fiscal year, or 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, and the price ceiling remains in place till May 2021, meaning that the price tag could still grow. If you talk to my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, he has lots of consultations with the rural electrification agencies, the REAs. When he speaks next, you can hear from him what they told us.

Twelve of Alberta's 18 baseload coal plants were scheduled to close down, one way or another, by 2030, and the other six plants are merchant plants designed and built to be in operation as late as 2061, which is four decades away from now, more than 40 years away from now.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really was interested in hearing the rest of my colleague's speech, and if he wouldn't mind continuing, I would appreciate that.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Member. I will continue here. Those power plants which were meant to be closed in 2061: the NDP accelerated the phasing out of those coal plants. The NDP government, under its climate leadership plan, had to compensate the existing plant owners, who were to operate these six plants well past 2030, for stranded capital costs. Alberta will pay three of the four affected parties – TransAlta, ATCO, and Capital Power – a total of $97 million annually, or $100 million to round up, over 14 years, beginning last year, in 2017, for a total cost of $1.36 billion. I don't know if anyone is adding up all these numbers. It keeps adding.

You heard that right, Madam Speaker and members. The NDP are paying more than the cost of the south campus hospital to close down perfectly good coal plants. The NDP could have used that money to pay for the new south Edmonton hospital, but they chose the ideological coal shutdown over the new hospital. These six coal-fired electricity generation plants in Alberta were among the most advanced coal-fired facilities in the world, utilizing supercritical boiler technology, which operates at higher steam temperatures and pressures to drive a high-efficiency steam turbine, and carbon dioxide emissions per megawatt are lower than those from conventional coal-fired power plants in the rest of the world by 18 to 20 per cent.

Here we are today, Madam Speaker, with a capacity market, Bill 13, to raise the power rates to stimulate the generation build-out needed to provide the backup power for all the wind farms and solar farms the NDP are foisting on Albertans. Bill 13 represents the culmination of the NDP ad hoc electrical system redesign, that has cost Albertans billions of dollars and keeps costing Albertans more and more. In the following discussions today I'll bring up how much it cost in total. The NDP ruined the low-cost electricity advantage we had for ideology.

As a result, I cannot support Bill 13. I don't think Albertans have any appetite to support this Bill 13, and I don't think my colleagues on this side of the House have any inclination to support this bill. We might have thought about that if the NDP had accepted at least one amendment or a couple of amendments that we brought in, but they chose not to because they don't want to improve the bill. They just want to punish Albertans, who elected them. Now Albertans will be ready to punish them in less than a year.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to talk about section 3 of Bill 13, which, of course, deals with the Gas Utilities Act. Section 28.3 of the Gas Utilities Act deals with how to handle poor-performing gas distributors, default supply providers, and now under Bill 13 it will add retailers to the legislation.

Now, in addition to administrative penalties, the Alberta Utilities Commission will now be allowed to levy a specified penalty under the new proposed section 63.1 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, found in section 1 of Bill 13, the bill that we're discussing in this place today.

Now, I'm concerned about this. Madam Speaker, up in Mackenzie county along the Peace River, in La Crête, an area, I'm sure, you know well – Buffalo Head Prairie, Paddle Prairie, Keg River – growth is great. It's been growing significantly up there. You may or may not be aware that there's a local natural gas shortage in that area. Now, in December 2017 there was an emergency as temperatures reached minus 40. People could not get enough natural gas to heat their homes due to low pressure of the gas line in those communities. Demand exceeded supply.

Mr. Strankman: Direct it to the Speaker so that the Speaker knows.

Mr. Nixon: For sure. Thank you.

Demand exceeded supply in those communities, a pretty concerning, I would say, situation, definitely scary if you're in a situation where you're trying to heat your home at minus 40. But it's also creating a situation where it's stifling development. It's stifling development in those communities because of the lack of gas. If you're hearing stories in those communities about not being able to get gas at a time of year when it's minus 40, in communities where it's minus 40, as you know, Madam Speaker, a lot; I assume you know, because you are the MLA in that area, that it gets cold there a lot – you would probably not be as encouraged to develop in those areas because of that gas shortage.

Further to that, though, even new businesses that want to come to those areas despite the challenges are now being turned away because of the lack of gas. It'll take the Northern Lights Gas Co-op 10 years, Madam Speaker – I don't know if you know this – to raise the $45 million from ratepayers needed to build the new 65-kilometre pipeline. And now we find out – this is why it's relevant to this bill – that the NDP have snuck into Bill 13 some amendments to the Gas Utilities Act where the AUC can order a specified penalty against a retailer like the Northern Lights Gas Co-op in Mackenzie county for failure to deliver natural gas. Shocking that not one northern Alberta NDP MLA has even risen in this House to speak on behalf of these poor people that are about to experience this inside their communities or are already experiencing this inside their communities. It's very concerning to me.

I was talking to some people in Mackenzie county the other day, and they're disappointed in that, which is why we're rising on their behalf to represent them in this Assembly on this issue. This has been snuck into Bill 13. This is the behaviour that we get from the NDP government: the lack of regard at all, the lack of concern, even for communities that they represent. I mean, it's one thing when they come to this Assembly, and we talk about our communities. They seem to want to ignore the concerns of those communities, but even for communities that they represent, nobody from northern Alberta in the NDP caucus has spoken about this.

Mr. Piquette: Oh, that's not true.

Mr. Nixon: They have spoken about it. They've spoken about it in defence of it. The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater is now heckling me because he's a northern Alberta MLA who has not spoken, defending his constituents on this issue, a prime example of that.

The question, then, becomes: why did the NDP sneak these amendments into Bill 13 despite the concerns that would be happening in northern Alberta communities? I would suggest, Madam Speaker, that it is yet another example of the NDP falling short, at the very least, maybe not doing their job. The members that represent northern Alberta in the NDP caucus, I'm sure, do respect and care for their communities. It may be that they just have not taken the time to actually understand the legislation that they are voting for because the government just asked them to.

I will move an amendment to give them another chance. I have the appropriate copies for the pages.

10:00

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 2 and 3.

Now, the reason I move this amendment, as articulated in my preamble before the amendment, is out of concern for all Albertans, particularly some concerns around what is taking place in northern Alberta and some of the counties up there and the tremendous impact that this legislation may have on them – it may continue to make the situation worse out there – and the fact that none of their representation will speak on their behalf on this issue.

The NDP, who are the government right now, need to be trying to help the county up. We need to be trying to help these areas out. Instead, what we have right now is that the NDP are lining up to kick the county when they're down. Instead of helping the county get up, the NDP are lining up to kick the county when they're down, which is why this needs to go to Committee of the Whole and be reconsidered to make sure that we are getting it right. I certainly hope that no member would want to continue to watch large portions of our province be kicked when they're down.

You know, Northern Lights Gas Co-op is adding two compressors to its pipeline to increase pressure to the system to try to deal with some of the situations I've discussed, which will boost capacity, but it's a Band-Aid until the new pipeline is built. Lenard Racher, who's the chief administration officer for Mackenzie county, says that if action is not done now, the county will be in trouble in two to three years. The county is going so far as to now consider not hooking up natural gas to new homes, which, of course, stifles development again, but it also means that there are more trucks with propane, et cetera, driving on the roads.

Mr. Strankman: It's dangerous.

Mr. Nixon: For sure.

This is what happens, though, Madam Speaker, when you have a governing caucus that continues to just provide a cabinet and their leadership a blank cheque without looking through legislation or taking the time to be able to defend their constituents and ask questions. It is a very reasonable question for any MLA, but particularly an MLA from northern Alberta, to ask why these clauses have been snuck into Bill 13.

I know that counties across northern Alberta, that are talking to us, and constituents across northern Alberta are concerned about these clauses. We still have not seen – even today during third reading the minister has not risen to speak to her own piece of legislation. She has refused to communicate at all about this legislation. I would encourage the minister to today. During the debate on Bill 13 I would hope that she would finally get up and address some of these concerns, to give the answers.

While I get that the NDP has complete disdain for the Official Opposition – that's fine; that's their choice – they should not for the people that we represent, and they certainly should not for the people that they represent who are asking questions. This is not a county or an area of the province that I currently represent though I do enjoy visiting from time to time. This is an area that is represented by the NDP caucus, and nobody in this House on the government side will take a few moments out of their day to talk about legislation that this minister is asking us to pass. This minister is asking us to vote on Bill 13, to support it, but will not stand up and answer simple questions about the bill itself, will not address the concerns. You know, this goes back to the trust issue. It's a problem.

I do not know, Madam Speaker, if you know:

If the [AUC] is of the opinion that the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer has failed or is failing to meet the service standards rules, the [AUC] may ...

- (a) direct the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer to take any action to improve services that the Commission considers just and reasonable.

Inside Mackenzie county they can't accomplish that at this moment. They just don't have the capacity, and if it gets cold, they're in a situation.

They could

- (b) direct the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer to provide the customer with a credit, in an amount specified by the Commission, to compensate the customer for the gas distributor's, default supply provider's or retailer's failure to meet the service standards rules.

Well, that, at face value, seems entirely reasonable. When you go and look at the gas co-op in Mackenzie county, they literally can't right now because there's no capacity.

Instead of the government focusing on how they could help that municipality get through that issue and be able to take care of their constituents, they come to this place and focus on an ideological agenda, completely abandoning the county, kicking the county when they're down, and not having a serious talk about what the consequences could be to this community. I can think of no clearer example of what we've been talking about repeatedly inside this Chamber, over and over and over. Sadly, this is the NDP's track record, focused on their ideological agenda, you know, spending time, obviously, just talking to each other and to a tight bubble.

I can say that, Madam Speaker, because if they weren't, they would know about what was going on in Mackenzie county. They would be standing in this Chamber and they'd be saying: "Minister, I'm on your team. I'm part of your government." I'm not, and I want that clear in Hansard. But they would be saying that and saying: why is this not being fixed? They would be bringing amendments in Committee of the Whole right now to be able to defend the people that they represent. Instead, they continue just to rubber-stamp the process.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

So that's why I brought forward this amendment. I certainly hope that all members of the Assembly will consider supporting that amendment and making sure that we can get this piece of legislation right for all Albertans.

I thank you for your time, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really felt like I had to get up and correct the record based on some of the comments made by the previous speaker. I represent the constituency of Peace River, and I'm very proud to represent that constituency. That constituency includes Mackenzie county, which is the largest county in the province.

Back in December, when we first became aware – in fact, I've been aware of the gas shortage problem for quite a while. I have a very good relationship with Northern Lights Gas Co-op. We even meet on a regular basis. My assistant attends all of their meetings and gives me feedback, so I always know exactly what's going on. When the crisis came up in December, when we were at minus 40, that week – I think it was Christmas or right after Christmas – immediately the Premier's office contacted me and said: "What's going on? What can we do to help?" I immediately contacted the reeve and the county. We followed through.

Shortly after that, we had a meeting with the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, with a number of the gas people, including ATCO, with members of the community, with the county, and we talked about solutions. We put everything on the table. The minister at that time made it clear that there was only one desired outcome, that we were going to fix this problem. It didn't matter what had to be done – we were going to look at different solutions – but the problem needed to be fixed before another crisis came up. We've been working very hard on this issue, and the community knows that. Mackenzie county knows that.

I received an e-mail from the reeve this morning. He wanted to get my feedback because CBC just did a flyby and an article about the issue. He said that, you know, he wanted to know my feedback, what I thought about the article. He expressed his concern that even though he had told the reporters how much he appreciated all of my hard work, all of the Minister of Energy's hard work, and the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry's hard work to solve this problem, the reporters had chosen to eliminate that from the article. They all recognize it. They all see it. They know I'm working hard for that constituency.

I don't appreciate having incorrect information being brought forward to this House that implies that I am not doing my job. I am.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, have the same problem in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I would ask the Member for Peace River, who chairs the NADC, to realize that this is an actual northern problem. Maybe it needs to be addressed as a concern that is brought forward for our entire area. I have had my office reach out to Agriculture, and we haven't so far had a response. But the fact is that when it comes to gas in my area, North East Gas is the gas distributor in my area. They can't get gas, and we are actually losing commercial projects in my constituency right now because we cannot get the supply.

With North East Gas, what happens here in my constituency – this is why it's disappointing to see that sections 2 and 3 are slipped into this specific bill – is that they can't get the gas. They have to accept every application that comes in, and then when the application gets processed, they have to tell them that they have no gas. It's the craziest system ever. But now what will happen is that when they deny them, it's going to open it up to other companies that are larger in Alberta, more or less forcing these REAs out of business. It is shameful that they cannot get the supply they need in order to supply northeastern Alberta.

This is not just a northwestern problem, and I would ask the Member for Peace River: will she bring this forward as an NADC concern for northern Alberta?

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: I just want to briefly comment that, yes, absolutely. NADC has discussed this, and it's something we will continue to discuss.

Thank you, hon. member.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the MLA for Peace River for her advocacy on this. She's not the only one advocating for that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a fine day in Alberta here, and it's a fine day in the Assembly. It's a fine day outside as well. In the Chamber today I'm sensing an urgency for the business to be proceeded with, but I'm also smelling in the air the smell of fresh-cut grass, and it's an honour to be speaking here in this Chamber but also a pleasure to smell those odours inside the place rather than some of the normal atmosphere that we have of hot air.

Madam Speaker, I believe that when discussing Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, it's important to take caution when looking at the bill. I believe that if we step back and we're able to take a bit more time, which we attempted to do several times in this opposition's proposed amendments – we have had quite lively discussion recently on I believe it was amendment REC, proposed by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and we've had some quite lively, informative discussions under section 29(2)(a) – we could see more clearly that there are consequences or in some cases unintended consequences that may happen as a result of passing the bill.

Madam Speaker, we owe it to ourselves and we owe it to Albertans to make sure that we get this bill right. Some of the legislation that's passed in here is a hallmark of longevity. In my riding there are people who are still looking at – and many know in this Chamber that I've fought it – outdated federal legislation, dating back to 1943. As a result of that repeal, in Alberta we see a marvellous economic development going forward. I believe that it's never wrong to take time to consult. It's been suggested by this government that at some points consultation, as believed by some, is simply burdensome red tape.

I think that it's important to speak about components of this bill that truly change how our electricity market works. This bill takes us from an energy-only market to a capacity market. Madam Speaker, that's a significant set of words there: energy only to capacity market. In doing so, those electricity prices will be more expensive. My compatriot from Bonnyville-Cold Lake has talked about the unsuccess of the Premier in Ontario and now her abandonment, it would appear, of her political career based on a lot of the unforeseen, unintended consequences of legislation. Here in Alberta, though, this NDP government would argue that the cost to the consumer is capped and that the price cannot go beyond 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour until 2021. Well, Madam Speaker, that's what is said on the one hand, but on the other hand the government had to offset this and create an offside that had to be covered by some $74.310 million. Those are not small numbers. It's certainly about more than 100 times the spring budget that my son uses on our farm to put the crop in the ground, and we're quite aghast at the small numbers that our operation uses. So this has been set aside in the budget to look after the potential shortfall of the revenues to pay for the misguided agenda proceeds from the carbon tax. But another question going forward is: with increased costs, what if this 74-plus million dollars isn't enough to cover the costs?

I'd like to go back a couple of years so that we can see that there was the formation of a plan by this government so that this overage cost could be paid for not by the consumers necessarily but by all Albertans. Unfortunately, how Albertans will pay for that is with excessive, long-term, significantly large, approaching three digits now, $100 billion of debt.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to take a trip back to Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, which at the time took away the accountability of this Legislature with regard to how much it can borrow. Just four months prior to that, this very government said that they wanted to raise the amount that they can borrow to 15 per cent of the gross domestic product, an amount that they've since blown through and why they want an unlimited debt ceiling. It's beyond the pale. Looking back then, we knew that this was a problem that the government didn't altogether plan for. We had a gigantic problem that we're heading for. It would certainly appear that some of the cautionary presentations by this side of the Chamber are coming true.

Going back to 2016 and a bill that, arguably, is one of the smallest bills that I've seen go through this floor but with tremendous consequences, Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, assented to in 2016, reads:

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, enacts as follows:

Amends SA 2003 cE-5.1

- 1 The Electric Utilities Act is amended by this Act.
- 2 The following is added after section 82:
Loans to the Balancing Pool and guarantee
82.1 The President of Treasury Board, Minister of Finance may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, make loans to the Balancing Pool and guarantee the obligations of the Balancing Pool.

So, Madam Speaker, we're seeing the verification of some of our concerns about the presentation of a supposedly low, locked-in price, but on the other side of the shell game we see the guarantee by the requirement for debt covering north of $74 million. We see the guarantee of the obligations of the Balancing Pool by the Minister of Energy so that no matter how badly they messed up this file, they would always have a way to cover it. This is covered in this legislation I've just described. This would not be covered by the consumers of the electricity but by the average taxpayer, taxpayers in general. They would be on the hook for whatever has been run short because the government can borrow, by the legislation just described, whatever it takes for this or any of its projects and leave the taxpayers on the hook for the bill. Why, I ask, is the government short? Well, let's just dip into the seemingly unending pot of debt that the government has set up through Bill 10, as previously mentioned.

This brings us to today, Madam Speaker. As a result of the coal-fired generation phase-out and the push for 30 per cent renewables generation by 2030, the reliability of our electrical system would appear to easily be compromised. The phase-out of coal-fired electricity: the federal government under Mr. Harper had said that existing plants built in the last 50 years are grandfathered, meaning they would have up to 2030 to close or – they give an option of choice; Mr. Harper and I get along famously on the use of the word “choice,” because he was one that provided significant choice to Canadian farmers, of which I was one – to introduce carbon capture and storage technology to reduce those emissions. As you can see, there was an option for these plants to continue on.

In my riding, the riding of Drumheller-Stettler, in the community and the town of Hanna near the Sheerness plant operated by ATCO, they've explored many various ways to reduce the pollution, or perceived pollution by many, to an acceptable level. They've been ongoingly doing these experiments. What effectively is happening here close to home and in communities like Hanna, Forestburg, or Keephills, for that matter, is the premature closure of their coal-fired plants, and that is, frankly, openly harmful to their communities.

This bill is a reaction or a result of this government's plan to phase-out coal and push for renewables. Many Albertans have no problem with new technology and no problem with the influence of renewables, but they want to know that it's going to be a fair and economical process going forward, with highlights on the word “economical.” In doing so, this government, Alberta's newest government, the NDP government, has compromised the reliability of the electrical system and has made it so that the electricity prices are or will be more expensive and less reliable. We see that we may – I should remove the word “may” from the Hansard records. They've done this without consulting communities directly affected. They've done this after. They've consulted after the fact.

I'd like to draw your attention to the communities of Hanna and Forestburg or the power-generating plant at Keephills 3, which was to close in 2061, or even Genesee 3, that was to close in 2055. Coal-fired electricity has made up over half of all electrical generation up to this point in Alberta and has provided us with safe, stable, inexpensive base power, base generation, that Albertans could rely completely, predictably upon. They were paid for what they produced.

Under the capacity market and using renewables, there seems to be a problem because the wind doesn't blow all the time and the sun doesn't always shine even though in the summertime we have more daylight hours. There are some new efficiencies to solar panels, but the backup plan is simple cycle peaker plant generation to cover off for the wind. Madam Speaker, these plants are considerably more expensive than the long-term, stable generation of the base power units that we have presently on hand. The AESO demands that there be a 15 per cent reserve margin, and neither wind nor solar can be used in that factor.

The good folks, my constituents in Hanna and in the Battle River-Wainwright constituency, Forestburg, in fact, all the Albertans that I've talked to have zero trust in the government when it comes to this electricity generation program and delivery model. In fact, reliability is a factor in why these folks have no confidence in their ability to deliver reliable power, not to mention the emotional and financial harm that they're inflicting on these communities. This is why we have pushed so hard to make amendments like the one previously before us, A1. It's important that these communities have been brought to a position in time. The government needs to fully consider what additional trickle-down effects or unintended consequences – and I repeat myself: trickle-down effects – these communities may experience.

Now, there are other interesting ways, and the government needs to take the extra time to consult and get all stakeholders on the same page. There have been some consultations, Madam Speaker, and it's been basically involved with the communities and the adherents to the delivery of some grants. Those communities are left beholden. Not unlike an old storied fable where the young lad was asking for another cup of porridge, these communities are asking for some form of extra patronization and being patronized in some cases by the government to get their funding.

Hanna, for example, will be losing approximately 200 full-time jobs, great wages, Madam Speaker, that a family could easily be raised on. Those 200 jobs are paid an average of $90,000 per year per job, and that's a tremendous loss for the families and the town. These are great-paying jobs. My Hanna constituency office manager: her husband drives a coal truck out there, and they're pleased, proud, and happy to be residents of the area. They're wondering how their mortgage is going to be paid as this phase-out goes forward.

Madam Speaker, $90,000 per worker for 200 jobs is $18 million, and the patronizing way that the government has approached the community so far has been far, far, far less than $18 million. That would not be a huge loss of income for the city of Edmonton or Calgary in pure numbers, but for the town of Hanna that's 7.5 per cent of their population.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. You know, I was curious on how Hanna is being impacted by this potential legislation. If the member wouldn't mind continuing to explain to us how it's going to impact Hanna, I would appreciate that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I hope it wasn't too boring a regaling, but the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake seems to think that I have some credence here, so I'll continue.

Like I was saying, if you did the same comparison to the city of Calgary, if you did an initiative that would cost the city of Calgary 7.5 per cent at the stroke of a pen, then Calgary would lose 90,000 jobs. That would be using the same comparative number to Calgary. The economy of Calgary would be staggered, and the housing market would be staggered. Beyond the tanking of the whole economic environment there, I think that this government needs to realize and Albertans in general need to realize that Hanna would be flooded by this. These good-paying jobs are serious for the region. There are other economic development opportunities, but it's important. It just kills the economic incentive for anyone to even live there.

I'm concerned about what this government has done for a backup plan, as I said, Madam Speaker, for the $18 million of job income lost. So far they've come forward with $455,000. To the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, $455,000 isn't even hardly interest on $18 million. So it's a staggering comparison, and it's a reality check of the numbers that are going forward, but it also is an extreme ripple effect of what happens in these communities like Forestburg, where the power is generated as well, towns like Halkirk, Castor, Coronation, Donalda, even reaching out closer to my district in Oyen.

These people feel the loss of the money that normally would be created, and $455,000 in a handout – or recently there was some $270,000 in a handout – doesn't necessarily equate to the $18 million of good, honest-paying jobs where people have enthusiasm in reality to go to work for. This pain is hitting hard, Madam Speaker, in the area, and it will further hit these small communities throughout rural Alberta and somewhat in central Alberta, and this cannot be recovered in those low agricultural production areas by more agriculture in the present form. There need to be other forms of economic development, and that isn't necessarily by the construction phases of solar panels or wind farms.

What seems to be missing from Bill 13 is the economic withholding, Madam Speaker. Economic withholding is the ripple effect or the countercycle of job removal. Companies that set up shop in Alberta should not be receiving a capacity payment and then at the same time reject or deny the supplying of electricity when AESO wants electricity in order to spike those electricity prices. This practice of unintentionally pricing power generation out of the market to deliver price spikes in many jurisdictions is regarded as illegal, but without addressing it here in Bill 13, is the government accepting this behaviour? Is it considering it permissible?

Another strong argument right here for hitting the pause button, as my good friend from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills attempted to do with his prior amendment, is that it's never too late for the government to start doing the right thing and take a step back and make sure we have this right. This consultation period before enacting regulations was a good idea, and the government should have embraced it, but this government purports to be a fan of new technologies and new ideas and are putting more money into them through their carbon emission reduction plan, picking winners and losers.

Now, given that coal is being used for power generation here in Alberta until 2030, that's another 12 years from now that these plants will be operating. It seems odd for a government that claims to care about the environment and makes me wonder why there seems to be no investment and research in the development of clean coal technology. The environment minister talks about it. They talk about exporting it, but we haven't seen that in any great capacity. Technology advances could reduce Alberta's emissions over the next 12 years. [The time limit for questions and comments expired] Excuse me.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to be able to rise today to speak to the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, in which he moves that the motion for third reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 2 and 3.

Madam Speaker, I know that we're all familiar with the term "to err is human," and I would argue that the purpose of this amendment, this recommittal, is to address an error and to address some concerns that have been discovered in Bill 13 and to bring it back to Committee of the Whole, where we can perhaps provide for the government some amendments that would create a better bill. I think that's what the purpose of this Legislature is, to make sure that whatever legislation we pass through this House is indeed good for the citizens of Alberta.

In this notice of amendment we see clearly that they've identified some sections of the bill that need to be reconsidered. Madam Speaker, it references sections 2 and 3, and if I turn to page 45 of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, I can see that in section (3) it says:

If the Commission is of the opinion that the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer has failed or is failing to meet the service standards rules, the Commission may by order do all or any of the following:

(a) ... take any action to improve services that the Commission considers just and reasonable.

Let's see. It says here that they can

- (b) direct the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer to provide the customer with a credit, in an amount specified by the Commission, to compensate the customer for the gas distributor's, default supply provider's or retailer's failure to meet the service standards rules;
- (c) prohibit ... any activity or conduct that the Commission considers to be detrimental to customer service;
- (d) impose an administrative penalty under section 63 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act;
- (e) impose a specified penalty under section 63.1 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act.

If we take a look on page 10 of Bill 13, we can see that under section 63.1, specified penalties, they can prescribe contraventions of Commission rules, orders or decisions in respect of which a specified penalty may be imposed and prescribing the amounts, or the manner of determining the amounts, up to a maximum of $10 000 per contravention, or if a contravention continues for more than one day up to a maximum of $10 000 per day, of the specified penalties that may be imposed.

Madam Speaker, this amendment asks us to reconsider because we've seen that there are some errors throughout Bill 13, that we've brought to this government's attention. We understand that Bill 13, in some ways, was an absolute necessity once you have gone away from an energy-only market. The energy-only market produced the lowest prices in North America without any government subsidies in the production of electricity.

Madam Speaker, we have an energy system that, while prone to price swings, was working and functioning very well. The interference by this government with things like the specified gas emitters' agreements or the generators' contracts and the PPA agreements have thrown the electricity market into crisis to the point where it's cost the citizens of Alberta somewhere around $2 billion to move from an energy-only market to a capacity market. When you do that, when you move to a capacity market when an energy-only market provided the lowest prices in North America, you've got to start asking some questions.

Now, we know that the purpose or the reason that they've moved towards this is because they wanted to enhance the renewable energies component of electricity provided in Alberta. That in and of itself is a laudable goal, assuming that you are not burdening the taxpayers of this province excessively. When you start to provide energy alternatives which cannot provide a reliable electrical system for the province of Alberta and for the people of Alberta, you are going to have some significant issues arise. For instance, you know, the sun shines and the wind blows but not always. We know that when it comes to solar power or wind, almost 64 per cent of the time zero power is produced. That creates a problem with the electrical grid because it's no longer reliable.

Is this reasonable? As the opposition we've questioned the wisdom of this government as it moves down this path. It's not that we're against renewables, but we need to have an electrical system that is reliable and is not unreasonably attacking the pocketbooks of the citizens of Alberta.

Because we are moving away from coal and towards more renewable energy, we need to have things like peaker plants that can provide energy that's ready to go when the wind doesn't blow and when the sun doesn't shine. That's an additional cost to the system. In many ways we have to question why we're creating a capacity market which is going to be paying for energy that actually isn't going to be produced. But we are paying for the capacity for that to happen because we are moving towards renewable energies that are not baseload energy. This is a concern, and as the opposition we felt that we needed to bring this forward to the government's attention.

Madam Speaker, that's not the only other option or problem that we sometimes face. Sometimes we face a situation when the sun is shining and when the wind is blowing, with renewable energies like solar and wind, where energy is being produced when it's not actually needed. What do we do with that excess energy? Again, there's a cost.

I know that when we were working on coal in my constituency, where we have the Genesee power plant – it's a stable, reliable source of energy that had some of the best not only energy efficiency but also environmental efficiencies anywhere in the world, and the environmental costs and the greenhouse gas costs to these coal-fired burning plants, while slightly more than renewable energy, were by many Alberta standards within acceptable and reasonable norms, at least to the point where we could have followed an already set-out path for taking coal offline without stranding assets, as we've done under this government, which, again, has come at a cost to the citizens of Alberta and to the taxpayers of Alberta.

But when that sun shines and when that wind blows and when we have excess energy, what do we do? Well, again, we have to spend more resources. If you take a look at the Brazeau Dam, that's out in my constituency, in Drayton Valley, they have a project whereby they will be using the old river channel. When electricity prices are low, they will use that to pump water that has come out of the dam back into the second channel, and then they will open up the sluice gates again when electricity prices are high. Essentially, if you can just think of that second channel as a battery that stores energy, that is one way of dealing with some of that excess electrical capacity when the sun is shining and when the wind is blowing.

I mentioned the other day about ATCO and their Australian project, where they are using excess energy when the wind blows and the sun shines to produce hydrogen, which they store in abandoned pipelines and which, when they need the energy, can be used to produce energy through an electrical power plant. There's a loss of energy in conversion of that. They're telling me that they can achieve about 60 per cent efficiency, but it is one example of how we can find alternatives when we are looking at the whole issue of the unreliability of renewable energy. But it comes at a price, usually to the taxpayers of this province.

There are problems with this vision of the government as they move forward, and this amendment actually helps us to address that. We referred to section 3 of Bill 13, that deals with the Gas Utilities Act. We've read page 45 in here, which talks about – let me just find it here – the commission and what it can do when a “retailer has failed . . . to meet the service standards rules.”

Now, in section 28.3 of the Gas Utilities Act it deals with how to handle poor-performing gas distributors and default supply providers, and now under Bill 13 we’re adding retailers to the equation. In addition to the administrative penalties that are set out by the Alberta Utilities Commission, they will now be allowed to levy a specified penalty under the new proposed section 63.1 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. We found on page 10 of Bill 13 that it read that they can levy a fine of $10,000 per contravention and $10,000 per day per contravention. This is a significant penalty that is built into a bill that styles itself as Alberta’s electricity future yet is dealing with gas.

Now, we know that recently, and it’s been referred to by other MLAs in this House, there was a CBC article – I believe that it came out on Monday – talking about the problems that are being felt in Mackenzie county. Along the Peace River and in the La Crête area and Buffalo Head Prairie and Paddle Prairie and Keg River the population growth has been very large. In the good economic times that we had prior to this government, the population in this province was growing as economic opportunity was here in Alberta, and they have experienced significant growth. One of the things that has happened as a result of that is that it’s put a stress and a strain on the provision of local natural gas, that there has been a shortage.

In December 2017 we saw this shortage and what it means to real people and the average individual in Alberta when they do not have access to proper supplies of natural gas. In December 2017 the temperatures reached minus 40, quite common in Alberta for the winter. I know that when I travel down south sometimes and we talk about minus 40, they can’t wrap their heads around minus 40. But you and I know, Madam Speaker, that in minus 40 weather we don’t want to have our furnaces go out, and we actually do have to have a product like natural gas if we’re going to be able to go through the winter in any kind of comfort and safety.

Now, the people could not get enough natural gas to heat their homes due to low pressure in the gas lines because demand was exceeding the supply of natural gas. This not only is, obviously, an issue of safety – I mean, think about it, Madam Speaker; we’re talking about Albertans having to worry about their safety – but this also has developed a problem in that business has been stifled because of this lack of natural gas. New businesses are being turned away. It will take the Northern Lights Gas Co-op, which provides the supply of gas, 10 years to raise the $45 million from the ratepayers that will be needed to build a new 65-kilometre pipeline. Ten years: cold comfort, isn’t it?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, when we hear that ratepayers are not going to have safety for 10 years, that seems to be a hurdle that is significant for northwestern Alberta. I’d like to hear some more of my colleague’s speech that describes how the 10 years of potentially unsafe circumstances that these Albertans are being put in is unacceptable.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for his question. You know, if there’s a reason to vote in favour of this amendment, which asks us to reconsider sections 2 and 3 and to go back to the Committee of the Whole to address this, I can’t think of anything more important than this right here. We have a problem, and we need to be willing to address this because there is going to be a problem with providing natural gas not only in this county but across northern Alberta. It’s going to be important for us to address in this bill whether or not we’re going to allow the Alberta Utilities Commission to be able to fine a company that is trying to provide natural gas but is just going to be restricted from being able to do so. That is why we need to go back to the Committee of the Whole. We need to reconsider this bill.

Madam Speaker, I said that it was cold comfort because it’s going to take 10 years for them to raise the currency from their taxpayers, from their ratepayers to be able to build the capacity. Yet we understand that the NDP have snuck into this bill some amendments on the Gas Utilities Act where the AUC can order specified penalties against retailers like the Northern Lights Gas Co-op in Mackenzie county for failing to deliver natural gas. If the AUC is of the opinion that the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer has failed or is failing to meet the service standards rules, the [AUC] may . . .

- (a) direct the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer to take any action to improve services that the Commission considers just and reasonable.

That’s a very broad power to be giving the AUC, where they have the capacity to fine a company because they simply cannot provide the natural gas that is necessary.

10:50

They can:

- (b) direct the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer to provide the customer with a credit, in an amount specified by the Commission, to compensate the customer for the gas distributor’s, default supply provider’s or retailer’s failure to meet the service standards rules.

So not only can they fine the company, but now they can also force the company to provide the customer with a credit.

They can also:

- (c) prohibit the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer from engaging in any activity or conduct that the Commission considers to be detrimental to customer service.

And they can impose an administrative penalty, as we’ve already addressed.

These are extraordinary circumstances in Mackenzie county and across northern Alberta. They’ve had rapid growth in population that has far exceeded their ability to pay, and to look at Mackenzie county and communities like La Crête, they need the NDP to help find a solution to this problem. We need our government to help the county up, but instead we have a case in this Bill 13 where they are lining up to kick the county when they are down.

Northern Lights Gas Co-op is adding two compressor stations to its pipeline to increase the pressure – we’ve already addressed that earlier in this House – but it’s not a long-term solution. We need to listen to people like Lenard Racher, the chief administrative officer of Mackenzie county, when he says that if action is not done now, the county will be in trouble in two or three years. The county is now considering not hooking up natural gas to new homes. That means that homes are going to have to be hooked up to propane. That puts more trucks on the road.

The NDP are handing out hundreds of millions of dollars in grants and loan guarantees under Bill 1 to industry to grow the economy, yet somehow they can’t do their job to make sure that people are not frozen out of their own homes.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to go to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm speaking in favour of the recommittal amendment, which will recommit Bill 13 to Committee of the Whole, as proposed by my good friend from Rimbe- Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Bill 13 has been a debacle from the get-go, and now we need to talk about the Gas Utilities Act, which is dealt with under section 3 of Bill 13. In the Gas Utilities Act itself section 28.3 talks about the handling of poor-performing gas distributors and default supply providers. Bill 13 endeavours to add retailers to this section of the gas utilities legislation. The Alberta Utilities Commission, the AUC, would be able to levy administrative penalties as well as a specified penalty under the proposed section 63.1 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. This is found in section 1 of Bill 13. Madam Speaker, I would like to elaborate on why this is such a grand issue, that this government would be doing wrong by Albertans if they do not recommit this bill to Committee of the Whole in order to have an open discussion on this matter.

In Mackenzie county, along the Peace River, in La Crête and Buffalo Head Prairie and Paddle Prairie and Keg River and Carcajou, they have experienced a shortage of natural gas. This shortage has been caused by the massive population growth in the region. Back in December 2017 they encountered an emergency situation in the grips of our freezing Alberta winters. Temperatures reached minus 40, and people were not able to heat their homes due to low pressure in the gas line. This region is having its development stifled by the shortage of gas. They are unable to promote an appealing business environment because of the lack of gas.

Madam Speaker, it would take the Northern Lights Gas Co-op 10 years to raise the $45 million from ratepayers that it would need to build a new 65-kilometre pipeline in order to help alleviate this shortage. That's a lot of money and a lot of pipeline that they need up there, and they're going to require some help. You know, they're going to need some help here.

Bill 13 had plenty of faults on its own, to which we proposed amendments. However, now we find out that this government has tried to pull yet another fast one in regard to this bill. They have snuck in some amendments to the Gas Utilities Act where the AUC can order a specified penalty against the retailer for failing to deliver natural gas. That's an interesting concept, isn't it? I wonder if that can relate to bigger projects or if those rules could be used in our much larger projects and the bigger threats we have in B.C. Anyway, this would apply in a case like the Northern Lights Gas Co-op in Mackenzie county.

If the Alberta Utilities Commission believes that the gas distributor, default supply provider, or retailer has failed to meet the service standards rules, they have several options as to what they may do. They could:

- (a) direct the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer to take any action to improve services that the Commission considers just and reasonable;
- (b) direct the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer to provide the customer with a credit, in an amount specified by the Commission, to compensate the customer for the ... failure to meet the service standards rules;

- (c) prohibit the gas distributor, default supply provider or retailer from engaging in any activity or conduct that the Commission considers to be detrimental to customer service;
- (d) impose an administrative penalty under section 63 ...
- (e) impose a specified penalty under section 63.1 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act.

The emergency situation that Mackenzie county encountered last winter was an extraordinary circumstance, and such communities need the NDP's help in finding a solution to the problem. Their rapid growth far exceeded their ability to pay, and demand exceeded supply, simple enough concepts. Instead, when the county is in a position where it needs help when experiencing a shortage that affects its residents, the government is lining up to kick the county when they are down.

The Northern Lights Gas Co-op is in the process of adding two compressors to its pipeline. This will increase pressure in the system, which will, in turn, boost capacity. However, this is only a Band-Aid until the new pipeline is built. Mackenzie county's chief administrative officer has said that action needs to be taken now or else the county will be in trouble in two to three years. The people of Mackenzie county should not be in a position to face inevitable trouble down the road, Madam Speaker. The county is now considering not hooking up natural gas to new homes. This would mean more trucks with propane on the roads.

The hypocrisy of this government is that they're handing out hundreds of millions of dollars in grants and loan guarantees under Bill 1 to industry in order to grow the economy. However, the NDP can't ensure that the people in Mackenzie county aren't freezing in their own homes in the cold Alberta winters. We have no trust in this government's ability to get the basics of economic development correct. This bill needs to be recommitted to Committee of the Whole and thoroughly reviewed.

We expressed to you in previous sessions, when you were putting in all those other related bills, what would happen. We described it quite accurately. We told you to even look at Ontario and see what they were doing. If anything, you were just mimicking what they were doing. We'll see in today's election what the repercussions are in Ontario of putting in bad energy policies. Remember that a year from now. Or, better yet, remember it when there is a by-election up in my community of Fort McMurray.

Madam Speaker, in the end, this bill does need to be reviewed. It needs to be thoroughly discussed. It needs to be recommitted to Committee of the Whole. We need to discuss this. We need to talk to more people about getting this bill right and fixing what is going to lead to long-term repercussions for all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment REC lost]

[Motion on amendment REC lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on the original bill. I will recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the House that we move to one-minute bells for the remainder of the morning.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: I will now recognize the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this morning in the last hours of a session, perhaps. I would never presuppose the direction of the Assembly, but there's not an incredible amount of debate left to be had, I believe. I think it's been . . .

An Hon. Member: Boisterous.

Mr. Cooper: . . . a boisterous session that has seen the government make a whole ton of terrible decisions. I think that's what has happened here this session.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

If you reflect back – and I think that it's a good opportunity to do that. While we debate Bill 13, reflect back on just the negative impact that not only this bill, Bill 13, has had on our province, but, you know, this was a session where the budget was passed, a budget that has set the province on a course, a crash course, you might say, for $96 billion in debt and a crash course of massive amounts of debt for our children and our grandchildren and, in fact, our grandchildren's grandchildren.

Bill 13, in many respects, is part of that crash course, particularly when we look at the massive amount of debts that are going to be incurred because of this government's ideological decision to enter into a capacity market. The debts that we know of already are in excess of $1.96 billion because of this decision, because of this government's lack of knowledge or willingness or knowingly making decisions that were going to cost Alberta taxpayers $1.96 billion with respect to the PPA contract cancellation.

Since the beginning that this government was elected – now, I will have a small prequalifier in my statement here in that, you know, there are half a dozen things or so that I have supported, particularly around some election reform legislation and finance, et cetera, so there are a couple of exceptions to the rule here.

But since 2015 we've seen a government that has made rash, ideological decisions that have had a significant impact on Albertans, and I don't mean in a positive manner; I mean in a way that has made things worse for Albertans, that has created stress, disdain, financial hardship for so many, job losses, business closures. Crime is up all across the province, including in Calgary, not just to mention rural Alberta, where there is a crisis. I think that Bill 13 is really a reflection of those poor decisions. It is a continuation of a commitment to making decisions that are certainly going to turn out to not be in the best interests of Albertans as well as not being in the best interests of Albertans today.

That's one reason why I would like to propose an amendment this morning, and I'll be happy to talk at some length about a number of other reasons why this is a good amendment as well. I'll wait until you have your copies.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended by deleting all the words after "that," and substituting the following: "Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day three months hence."

Madam Speaker, I move this hoist motion as my continued commitment to the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to hold this government to account. My expectation is that the government will rise in its place this morning and talk about how, whether or not the Official Opposition likes it, a capacity market is well and truly under way and that this hoist motion would derail that process, which is my exact point, that this government needs to reconsider its decision to proceed down the path of this capacity market.

If nothing else – if nothing else – this government needs to reconsider its timeline in which it intends to implement this capacity market. I have heard from stakeholders, whether its large power producers and deliverers of power or small REAs or microgenerators, their concerns, from all across the province, as they engage in the grid. While some of them will speak positively about the capacity market because, in fact, it's going to have a net benefit on their business – it may not in fact have a net benefit on Alberta consumer powers, but it certainly will have a positive impact on their business. So it's possible to find people who will say good things about a capacity market.

What they all say universally is that the speed at which we are heading over this cliff of the market is way too fast. Even if the government continues their ideological position to have a capacity market, this amendment this morning, in defeating this piece of legislation, which is essentially what the hoist motion would do, would allow them to reconsider their timelines and bring this back in the fall, when we can expand that, extend that, and really deal with a lot of the negative ramifications that will come from the capacity market.

We don't have to look very far, Madam Speaker, to see the pain and the consequences that these sorts of decisions can have. You know, there's an election in Ontario today. Literally, one of the main reasons why it's being fought is power prices. I know that when I speak to folks in the outstanding constituency of Olds-

Didsbury-Three Hills and right across the province of Alberta, they are concerned that we are replicating that marketplace.

The government will say: “Oh, no, no, no. Don’t worry. We’ll do better.” But the fact of the matter is that this government’s track record when it says, “We’ll do better,” is not that. They aren’t doing better. They are putting Albertans at risk, whether they continue to put them at risk with the large increases in carbon taxes, whether they put small businesses and the economy at risk with their sweeping changes to labour legislation, whether they’re putting nonprofits at risk.

I had a wonderful conversation just last week with some nonprofits in central Alberta that employ 700 or 800 people and are currently taking steps to consider how they may in fact wind down their nonprofits because of the legislative changes, particularly around labour legislation, that are ultimately going to be imposed by the minister of community services. In this case, they fall under his ministry, and I know that the minister has asked them what their contingency plans are if they have to close their doors.

The government isn’t doing better. They say: trust us. You know, when the government arrives at your door and says, “We’re here from the government; we’re here to help,” people have the right to be skeptical of this government, because they haven’t been helping. Bill 13 is not going to help. The capacity market is going to make things worse. We’re going to see an increase in power prices. We’ve already seen it. The government’s rate rider, essentially a cap, is now in place. They are literally paying more. It’s not “they,” Madam Speaker. At the end of the day, the “they” is us. It is the good people of Alberta, it is the outstanding people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that are paying more.

It’s exactly why this government should heed the Official Opposition’s advice, take this amendment seriously, vote in favour of it, and postpone this legislation while they go back to the drawing board and get this right. I encourage all members of the Assembly, on what is quite likely to be the last day of the session, to make one good decision this session, and that can be this morning.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any others who wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. A pleasure to see you this morning, and a pleasure to see everyone today. I have a few comments with respect to the moving of a hoist amendment this morning on Bill 13, which is An Act to Secure Alberta’s Electricity Future. I’m supporting this amendment, and I encourage all members, on both sides of the House, to support it as well. I’m doing so for a number of reasons, but chief among them is the fact that the system of power production in Alberta was working totally fine before the NDP decided to accelerate the coal phase-out by decades and force-feed renewable generation despite lacking any ability to store the power long term.

Make no mistake; the cost of electricity in the province will be more expensive once we have moved from our current energy market to a capacity market. Why? The answer is risk. In an energy market the consumer assumes very little of the risk, but it can result in price jumps, depending on the supply and demand of producers and consumers at any point in time.

Alberta’s current electricity generation industry is in an energy-only market, which means that generators are paid for electricity they produce based solely on the wholesale price of electricity, which fluctuates. These companies decide on the type of generation they produce and on the location of facilities. On the other hand, we have a capacity market, which, to paraphrase Alberta’s Electric System Operator, or AESO, uses competitive forces to incent suppliers to provide innovative and low-cost solutions.

Alberta was doing just fine in an energy-only market, Madam Speaker. Prices for electricity were low, and most importantly, when an Albertan turned on the light switch or started the coffee maker, there was always consistent, stable, and reliable power. So why is Alberta considering changing to a capacity market? The answer is ideology. The NDP have been dead set against any hint of a free-market solution in the power generation industry since Premier Klein deregulated the industry in the ’90s. But, ultimately, it was their breakneck speed to phase out coal that made the transition to a capacity market necessary.

Members on this side of the House routinely talk about making sure we get legislation right the first time. I’ve said that about many bills we’ve talked about in the past few weeks. With Bill 13, this is doubly important. There are no do-overs. Our Ontario cousins are a prime example of what happens when you rush through legislation. Because the Ontario government didn’t ensure that all the kinks were worked out beforehand, Ontario citizens are experiencing horribly expensive power bills. We’re now hearing stories about Ontario consumers having to choose between buying food and paying their power bill. Imagine that. It’s absolutely imperative that this does not happen here.

In our effort to improve the bill and ensure that the legislation leaves no detail, my colleagues proposed a number of well-reasoned amendments in previous readings and in previous discussions on it. We originally proposed an amendment that required power generators that were paid capacity payments to offer electricity when AESO requests it. First of all, it is simply wrong to promise electricity and then, when it is actually needed, claim that you don’t have any to give. The capacity payment is essentially that promise. The power generator receives a payment based on the capacity to produce power. To then deny the market electricity is unacceptable. First of all, it drives the cost of electricity up, and the new capacity market is supposed to keep prices as low as possible for the average consumer.

In the past generators have been found attempting to manipulate the market by starving the market of supply in an attempt to artificially drive the price of electricity up. It is naive to think that it cannot happen again. We proposed the amendment to close that loophole, but unfortunately the NDP members across the aisle thought ensuring that power generators that receive capacity payments supply power when AESO requests power was unnecessary and didn’t add anything to the bill and defeated that amendment.

Our second previous amendment regarded consultation by government during the regulation development process. If passed, it would have required the government to consult with stakeholders for a full 60 days. Frankly, capacity markets are complex, and we must get it perfect the first time, right from the start. There are no do-overs, no mulligans, and no opportunities for redos. Because of this, it is absolutely paramount that we consult the experts, the power generators.

The unfortunate part about that amendment was that it was even necessary, frankly. Consultation should be the first and last thing a government ever thinks about when it considers legislation. Unfortunately, though, this government seems to have a very broken relationship with consultations, making our amendment absolutely essential to the proposed bill. Not only is it important to hear the feedback first-hand from stakeholders, Madam Speaker, and from those working in the industry.

It would have also brought the stakeholders, the ones being impacted by the legislation, onboard and gotten their buy-in, the public. The success of Bill 13 is really counting on stakeholder buy-in, and nothing ensures stakeholder buy-in on a project like thorough and meaningful consultation. How did the government respond to our previous proposed amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud claimed that the amendment was redundant, that extensive consultations had been done, and that the amendment didn't add anything to the value of the bill and therefore, again, rejected it.

Our third previous proposed amendment was basically housekeeping issues with the bill. Throughout the bill, language that would have accorded the capacity market the standard "fair, efficient and openly competitive" theory was not included, which is inconsistent with other legislation Alberta has on the books. By including the reference specifically, it would have provided to electricity stakeholders certainty that AESO and the Alberta government would never skip out on their commitments. That amendment would have helped restore trust in the government among stakeholders. Not to sound like a broken record again, but you'd think that a government and a government agency wouldn't renege on their promise. But as we see with the government's handling of the coal phase-out, as an example, what was once thought impossible, this government has shown to be very possible.

Finally, my caucus colleagues and I proposed a further amendment that would clarify that when a generator wins a capacity contract under the provisional rules, the provisional rules remain in place on those contracts. It is foolish to believe that offering a contract with the proviso that the rules outlined in the agreement will change won't have a negative effect on the price being offered for the deal. The minister, AESO, and the Alberta Utilities Commission, also known as the AUC, can't go changing the rules midstream and expect generators to invest in the capacity market.

Instead of demanding that generators remain flexible and receive a lower price for the capacity market, we should have passed that amendment and extended a little bit more assurance to generators that we wouldn't continue to move their goalposts even after they signed a contract. Did the NDP support that amendment? Of course not. They claimed it wasn't necessary and, once again, rejected it.

While we tried to work with the government to improve the bill, they continued to reject our suggestions. Albertans are the ones who will suffer for it.

As I mentioned earlier, in Ontario there are many people who have become energy poor. They are left with the choice of paying their utility bill or buying groceries now, Madam Speaker. What a horrible crisis they've had in the power situation in Ontario. Canada, though, is a first-world country, rich in natural resources, whose populace is highly educated and boasts a 99 per cent literacy rate, yet we have thousands of people in Ontario who cannot afford to keep the lights on and feed their children. What a crime. I've read accounts of people in Ontario that have had their utility costs increase by nearly 400 per cent in just a matter of a few years, and we have a government that seems intent on bringing that same failed power generation system to our province.

I can't believe that we're going down that same path, Madam Speaker. In fact, it has already started. Due to the government's disastrous bungling of the carbon tax on heavy industrial emitters, Alberta's coal-fired power plants returned their power purchase agreements, or PPAs, to the Balancing Pool, the government body responsible for managing the risks and maximizing the value of certain generating assets held on behalf of Alberta's electricity consumers. The return of the PPAs to the Balancing Pool resulted in $700 million being spent to cover the losses, and starting this year, all Alberta electricity consumers will pay a surcharge to help pay for a further $190 million in losses by the Balancing Pool. A hundred and ninety million. Due to the NDP's ideological agenda, they have cost Alberta taxpayers over $1.3 billion to shut down the province's coal plants early and convert them to natural gas. That's real money, $1.3 billion. I don't even know how much that is.

To conclude, I've outlined many of the reasons why I support this hoist amendment that we are making today, and I hope my fellow members will consider the impacts of this bill and, likewise, will support this amendment. We need to send it back, have another look at it in the fall, make sure that we're doing things right. That's our challenge as the opposition, to ensure that these bills are right before we support them. We have trouble with this bill. It was unjustifiable, and we'll look, I think, at this as something that will be reflective of what this government has done for years and years if it proceeds as is. I strongly urge both sides of the House to support this amendment. Bring it back, we'll look at it again, and let's make it right this time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise to speak on this amendment. I will not be supporting this amendment. The reason I am not supporting this amendment is because there are many people in our communities in Alberta that are waiting for this bill to pass. The bill speaks about the changes that will enable community generation and that community generation projects will be able to feed electricity back to the grid. This is an area that many in our communities have been waiting for.

I could list the projects, which I think I did previously, that are really waiting for this bill and the number of e-mails and discussions that I have had around this part of the bill, that is really important. I think we have to be fair to this community, that has worked really hard around generating electricity from a community perspective. Projects can be found in places all throughout Alberta, north and south. I think it's really important that as MLAs we do not delay the passing of this bill so that those persons who have invested in those communities and those co-ops that have invested in community generation can move forward and know that they have a path towards their relationship with the electricity grid.

I would like to urge all members to vote for this bill so that the needed changes can be made and these projects go ahead. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this morning to speak to Bill 13, specifically to the amendment put forward by my good friend from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, which states that we should possibly read this bill three months from now. I understand his reasoning. Even our colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake agreed with that. Now, he's walked out, so I'm not going to talk about him. But we can kind of see unintended consequences that happen as a result of this bill.

We've been talking about this bill in the House for a long time. There have been a lot of questions by this side of the House and a lot of amendments put forward that would have made this legislation a little better, certainly from our opinion, certainly from our stakeholders' opinion. It makes some sense, certainly to this side of the House, to look at things a little closer and consider some of those comments. It's never wrong to take some time to consult.

What is happening in Alberta right now, as we speak, is that the government is in the process of radically recreating our entire provincial electricity system. Now, that is what this bill is all about. The NDP government was elected in 2015, and there have been a few policies that have been created that have been, shall we say, expensive for Albertans. Part of this radical change to the electricity system in Alberta is the change from the energy-only market to a capacity market. The decision to add a capacity market is pretty much the culmination of a plan that the government basically introduced when they pushed forward their climate leadership plan in May of 2016, one year after they were elected.

Madam Speaker, this government was elected on May 5, 2015. I don't believe they expected to be elected, so of course they were not quite ready. I don't think they had enough staffers. As I recall, they had a bit of a platform – now, that was a national platform, not something that would have been created specifically for Alberta – and found themselves in a position that they were governing a province now. You know, I don't know that they considered that they had to have a budget ready, possibly. We had a budget that had been debated and passed, I think, before the election, but that wouldn't have been a budget that the government would have been happy with.

There was a lot of stuff going on, a lot of things that the government had to get ready before the fall session. That session is where we began to see a lot of what we would be seeing from that point on with this government, things like Bill 6. That was kind of the flagship bill in the fall of 2015. I think the government learned a lot from that bill, learned a lot about putting a piece of legislation forward to a certain, specific portion of society that did not agree with the legislation. They found that there is some push-back at times.

Anyway, along came the climate leadership plan. Something within that plan that also came along with the climate leadership plan was something that the government did not talk to people about as they campaigned in 2015, something that the electorate knew nothing about, a carbon tax. As much as the government would like us to believe that Albertans have no problem with this tax, the polling certainly shows exactly the opposite.

Of course, the carbon tax was levied on heavy industrial emitters as per the government's plan, with the target really being the coal-fired power plants in Alberta, that have been generating the heavy load of Alberta's electricity for some time.

Mr. Yao: Some time.

Mr. Schneider: Some time.

As I mentioned last time I spoke on Bill 13 – I think it was last week – when this carbon tax, that was hidden from the people of Alberta, was charged to the companies that owned and operated the coal-fired plants in this province, those companies immediately invoked the portion of the contract that they held with the province of Alberta which allowed them to opt out of their contracts. I think each of their contracts indeed had verbiage that allowed them to opt out if at any time during the life of those contracts any government made those arrangements uncompetitive. Argue as you will, it was a contract that was signed and a deal that was made with all the power companies. Of course, they took the opportunity to opt out of those contracts.

This was all part of the grand scheme, not the handing back of the contracts but the grand scheme of the government to hurry up and shut down coal-fired plants. Now, there were 12 of Alberta's plants that had actually been scheduled to be shut down, as per the federal government, by 2029. Madam Speaker, there were six of Alberta's plants that had actually been scheduled to be shut down much later, as late as 2061. That was the Keephills plant. Genesee, I believe, was 2055.

Now, these plants, of course, were considered state of the art, and I think everyone here knows that we here in Alberta have been scrubbing our coal plants' emissions better than anyone else in the world for some time now. We've learned how to do that here, and I've always wondered, to be perfectly honest, why part of the climate leadership plan did not include a plan to take the opportunity to see that the technology that we use here in Alberta was taken to or sold to or used as an education tool in countries all over the world that are building plants continuously as we speak, China being a good example.

Anyway, as the power generation companies handed back their contracts to the Balancing Pool, the cost to the Balancing Pool turned out to be $70 million per month. At the end of the day, the pool lost an obscenely incredible $2 billion. Now, the government poured a lot of money into the Balancing Pool while they tried to come up with a Band-Aid or something to stop the bloodletting.

Anyway, as a result of the coal-fired generation phase-out and the push for renewable generation, the government has compromised the reliability of the electrical system. In order to replace this backbone of electricity that Alberta has had for many, many years and implement the renewables for up to 30 per cent of the electrical generation, that this government has implemented by the passing of Bill 27 in 2016, Bill 13 strives to change Alberta's electricity market from the steady power that we are all used to, known as the energy-only market, to the capacity market.

Bill 13 is not about renewables per say, but this bill is about financing coal-to-gas conversions. This bill is about new natural gas generation, which is called combined-cycle gas and simple-cycle gas peaker plants, which is required to be the backup for renewables because, of course, wind and sun are intermittent and therefore cannot be considered as a baseload for Alberta to generate the roughly 10,000 megawatts that this province uses every day.

The Alberta Electric System Operator did some modelling in this regard, and that modelling showed that the renewable electricity program will indeed decrease the revenue needed for all generators to recoup their investment and earn profit, and rightly so. Generators that would be spending huge amounts of money, that would not see a return on investment, would of course be likely to not become involved in Alberta's new electricity market at all. Investment would be deterred. Makes sense.

Under our current energy-only market our electricity and our capacity are bundled. This bill and the changes within it maintain the competitive market but separate the markets for capacity and electricity. You see, Madam Speaker, in the electrical system that we now enjoy, the distinguishing characteristic of that energy-only market is that electrical generation is only rewarded or electrical generation is only paid for when that electricity is used. Those systems are designed to meet peaks in the demand throughout an average day in this province. The pool price therefore must be able to recover not only the operating costs of that facility when it is actually generating but also the fixed costs of that facility not only when it generates but for all those hours during the year when it's not generating.

The basic idea of a capacity market is fairly simple. Generation should be compensated, of course, for making electricity available to the market, but capacity is also compensated, that being that generators built for Alberta's electricity market are actually paid just for the capacity in generation that they have, whether they're running or not. Two streams of payment: generation and capacity. This creates the ability to meet the requirement at any given time, mostly peak times. All that being said, Madam Speaker, it means that Bill 13 cannot help but make electricity more expensive for consumers because the risk is being transferred away from the generators and, of course, onto the backs of ratepayers and the backs of the taxpayers in Alberta.

Wrap it up. That's the signal I'm getting.

You know what, Madam Speaker? I did receive a pamphlet in the mail yesterday, when I checked, sent by efficiency Alberta, that talks about electricity prices. They're expected to increase this year, from the historic lows of the last three years back to a range that is closer to the historical average price. It states that if the market goes above – this is for household consumers – 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, the government of Alberta will cover your costs above that price. The government of Alberta is made up of 4.3 million people, and we know who pays the freight around here and where that money comes from. Hopefully, the people that read the pamphlet – this government wants everyone to believe it's being so friendly to them to give them money back. They're giving their own money back. So it was $74 million that it was going to cost to keep that project going.

Madam Speaker, we have before us an amendment that asks us to consider speaking to this being read a third time three months from now. It is an amendment that I intend to support. I suggest that everyone within the building, this Chamber, this Legislative Assembly, also support this amendment – I believe it's a good one – put forward by my good friend from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

Seeing none, any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. I rise to speak in support of this great amendment from my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the second-best riding in Alberta, the reason being, Madam Speaker, as you know, that I'm the critic for this file, and I've been consulting stakeholders across the province. The government did engage some stakeholders selectively, but they haven't considered all their input. That's why our job here is to get some more time to get this right.

We did everything we could as the Official Opposition. We moved amendments, and we were not successful in getting the government's approval of any of our amendments. That's why we need some more time to look at this issue and size it up and explain to people in our constituencies how it's going to impact, because this government didn't present any economic impact analysis of this policy. This policy is derived from their big climate change plan – that's the overarching driver for this capacity market – because this government wanted to actually completely remake Alberta's electric generation system under its climate leadership plan.

That's why they have to incentivize or rebuild the province's baseload power generation, because they want to replace safe and reliable and cheap coal-fired electricity with other alternatives. Those alternatives come at a cost, and when Albertans are asking, "How much would it cost?" the Minister of Energy didn't get up in this House and tell us how much it costs. We asked the minister many times: tell us how much it costs. She doesn't know, I guess.

You know what, Madam Speaker? The Alberta Electric System Operator, the Independent System Operator, the government agency which the minister oversees: that agency told us that they estimated that it will cost $25 billion, billion with a "b," to replace coal plants and meet the government's targets for new renewable power generation and meet future customer demand. That's what AESO said, but the minister didn't get up to tell us that. Her own department, which oversees AESO, has this information that the minister tried to hide.

What else did they try to hide, Madam Speaker? There are so many costs. I'm trying to put a bow around it and trying to, I mean, summarize and size it for all my colleagues here. I might need help from the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to actually add up these numbers for me if he can because it's going to be tough. AESO says: $25 billion to replace coal-fired power plants. Now, let's look at different costs here. Renewables: there are wind and solar. First, let's talk about wind. They signed 600-megawatt deals with three proponents for wind in the first REP 1, and when the price is about 3.7 cents per kilowatt hour, the wind projects pay back the NDP government, whereas the IPPSA indicated the 2016 wholesale price of electricity averaged 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour. So there's a difference between 3.7 cents and 1.7 cents.

We don't know, actually, how much it's going to cost because REP 2 and 3 are now being bid. REP 3 is for 400 megawatts, and REP 2 is for 300 megawatts. So we don't know the total cost. I can ask one of these guys here if they can just guess a number out of the $25 billion, put some number. We'll add it up at the end by the time I finish. We don't know the cost there, but my colleague is going to guess. Then solar is the other renewable energy program, their round 2, and it's the same thing. In 2016 as per IPPSA's estimate it's 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour. So we had to make a line item there and guess how much that would be.

Now the capacity market. Why do we need the capacity market, Madam Speaker? Because the NDP decided to phase out the coal power plants, which are low-emitting power plants, which are good to go till 2061 but which for their ideological reasons they phased out sooner. So that's going to cost us $25 billion.

Then the power purchase agreements debacle. When the NDP raised the carbon tax, the coal-fired power plants dumped their PPAs, and it cost taxpayers at least $2 billion to buy back the PPAs. Again, the full cost needs to be confirmed.

Madam Speaker, then there are the subsidized electricity prices. For customers on the RRO, regulated rate option, the price is capped at 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, but in April 2018 that addition cost the NDP $9 million. Originally in the budget they made an estimated $74.3 million to subsidize the consumers, but if you go by that $9 million that we just paid in April times 12 months, again, I'll ask my colleague there to use the calculator and count that.

Madam Speaker, with all that, this is the number that I spoke. It's more than $30 billion, north of $30 billion, which we still don't know if that stops there or not.

Then throw in the jobs, throw in the economic diversification, these policy costs. There were thousands of jobs lost in the ridings of my good friend from Drumheller-Stettler and Forestburg and other places. Thousands of jobs were lost because of this ideological policy to revamp the electric generation system and destabilize the reliable power grid.

We're not done there yet, Madam Speaker. Then look at the $96 billion debt we talked about. Then add the $35 billion of investments that left Alberta. These are all billions. We are talking about big money here. That's why the amendment brought by our colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills makes sense, because this government lost its direction. Their intentions are good. I'm not doubting their intentions.

We are cautioning them. The other party in Ontario tried this policy. I mean, we don't have to look outside at Germany or Japan or other countries where they came back to coal-fired power. It's reliable. It's cheaper. Then they can handle the emissions. If the government's intention is to reduce emissions, this policy has not served that because there is no tangible reduction in the emissions when they shut down the coal power plants, which are actually very efficient. Keephills and others, those two or three power plants which are supposed to be operational until 2061: this government closed them. They accelerated their phase-out. Because of that, now they have to rely on unreliable and unstable intermittent renewable energy, which is going to be costly. That's why we asked for an economic impact analysis. They said that they don't have it, or they don't want to tell Albertans. They just want to hide it and pass it on to future generations. We can size it up. We asked the minister to stand up and explain to this House. She won't. Even today, on the last day of this session, she didn't stand up to explain to the members.

Madam Speaker, that's why I and my colleague, who's the author of this amendment that we are discussing now, actually approached the Auditor General, an officer of this Legislature, to help us. That's why I'm also asking my colleague who's the chair of PAC and who's a professional accountant to help me actually understand. In summer – we have a four-month recess now – when we go door-knocking in our ridings, people are going to ask: “How much is Bill 13 going to cost us? How much will we see on our electricity bills?” And I will say: well, you won't see anything on the electricity bills because it's capped at 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, but you will see that as a taxpayer. Then they'll ask me: how much? I don't know. That's why we need time to study this further and bring more stakeholders, bring those that are responsible for this file – like the Alberta Electric System Operator, Balancing Pool, and others – to come and explain to us.

That's why I ask all the members of this House to support this amendment and get this bill right. You're going to be in your ridings for the next four months, and you'll have a tough time answering these questions. We can't squander the wealth of future generations. We have to get this right. If your intent is to reduce emissions, this policy is not going to help that. The Premier keeps saying that the economy and the environment should go hand in hand. We didn't gain anything on the environment, and we didn't get any social licence by shutting down those coal-fired power plants. At least on the economy side it's devastating. We talked about billions, the impact of this policy. Again, the ministry is silent. The minister wouldn't tell me how much it costs. That's why I encourage everyone to vote for this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yeah. I would appreciate a brief comment on the bill and on the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Dr. Swann: I struggle with this bill, frankly. It's been clear to me from the outset that there is an inconsistent approach to this important or, rather, essential service, electricity, and I'm concerned that we're prioritizing climate change on the one hand but we're not sending messages to our consumers that the price is going to help them make better decisions about their electricity. We're interfering with the market and therefore undermining to some extent investor confidence. We're certainly not incenting behaviour change.

On the other hand, I see an important shift from coal, the dirtiest possible energy source on the planet, going to renewables and reasonably good prices that we're getting for renewables. I see a continuing growth in renewable priorities, and I see protection for consumers against gouging by industry. So it's a very mixed bill.

I'm struggling with whether to give us more time on this or whether to support this bill entirely and not support the amendment. But I needed to say that for the record it's been a very mixed bag on electricity, and I have not developed the confidence in the government in relation to managing the electricity system as yet. One of our proposals around the regulated rate option was rejected outright by the government, and it would have saved up to a billion dollars in 10 years in consumer prices.

I'm still unsure of how I'm going to vote on this. I guess I've got to decide in the next 30 seconds or so, but I needed to register my concerns about the bill and would have liked to see more time to deal with this.

On the other hand, I want to get on with more stability in the system, more investor clarity about where we're going, so I will likely support the bill.

Thanks, Madam Speaker.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, June 7, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. I truly mean good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly some special guests. Mr. Luis Enrique Cruz Mora is the executive director of Fundacco, a charity in Nicaragua that works in some of the poorest neighbourhoods in the country of my birth to help with health needs and to set up co-op units to improve the local economy. Unfortunately, the current situation in Nicaragua is very similar to when I was forced to leave, and peaceful protests have been met by violent reprisals, leaving many civilians hurt, jailed, disappeared, or killed. It is my hope that peace returns soon to this country and that justice prevails. Fundacco, of course, could not be doing their important work without the help from a local Alberta organization, the Roots of Change Foundation. Joining us today from the Roots of Change are Jocelyne Durocher and Cindie LeBlanc. I thank you all for supporting this much-needed international work in community development, and I ask all my colleagues to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly someone I think many of us know by sight, Mr. Doug Brinkman. He is a citizen journalist with the Citizen Free News. I know many of us probably chatted with him on the way into the House. I'd ask Mr. Brinkman to please rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you and [remarks in Tagalog], Mr. Speaker. This past weekend I was honoured to proclaim June as Philippine Heritage Month in Alberta, as you may have heard. I want to recognize that Filipinos across the world are known for their hospitality, for their values of compassion, and for taking care of one another. Today I'm honoured to introduce a group of Filipinos who take care of the members in this Chamber every day. They're here from the staff in facilities and maintenance at the Legislature and at the Federal Building. I ask that my guests rise as we say their names. They're enthusiastic. I like it. My smaller but distinguished Ate Nimfa as well as Limuel, Geofrey, Nathaniel, Reynaldo, Jesu, and Erwin. [Remarks in Tagalog] to all of you, and thank you so much for taking care of us all year long. Colleagues, please join me in extending our gratitude.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the United Conservative Party intern team that has been with us this late part of the session and will be with us for the remainder of the summer. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has taken to affectionately calling them tiny Tories. I think that, well, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is probably a tiny Tory himself, so that probably makes sense. They're doing a great job, and I'm looking forward to working with them for the rest of the summer. As I say their names, I'd like it if they would stand: Ethan Williams, Justin Laurence, Andrea Farmer, Kyle Paterson, MaryAnne Spiess, Quinn Hironaka, Cline Borle, and Arsh Singh. I'd ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a guest from Futurpreneur Canada, a unique nonprofit which supports young entrepreneurs through financing, mentoring, and other support tools. Here we have today with us Ismail Attitalla, the owner of Edmonton Brewery Tours. It was an absolute pleasure to meet with Ismail earlier today and hear about how Futurpreneur has helped him in starting his own business, which was born out of a passion of his own family's business. Our government is an enthusiastic and proud supporter of Futurpreneur and indeed all young Alberta entrepreneurs like Ismail. I ask him to now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other introductions? Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm very glad to introduce to you and through you to the House at least a couple of Liberals from both the Calgary and Edmonton constituencies. Actually, I'm waiting for the leader to arrive. Could I possibly delay this introduction? He's just held up briefly. Would that be acceptable to you?

The Speaker: Only because it's today, but you'll have to test the House at some point.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. That's very gracious of you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Farmer's Day

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bacon and eggs for breakfast; mixed salad greens, assorted cheese, and fresh vegetables for lunch; steak and baby potatoes for dinner: we eat meals like these every day. But where do they come from? Many Albertans have never seen the process of farm to fork.

Agriculture is one of Alberta's most important industries, and we are the second-largest agriculture producer in Canada. We lead the nation in beef production and are one of the largest producers of honey. Grains, pulses, poultry, eggs, dairy products, berries, and much more are all produced in this province. Our value-added food and beverage industry is worth over $5 billion. In the north we have over 30 per cent of Alberta's agriculture community, including many smaller family farms. I'm proud to represent a constituency where agriculture plays a key role.

Farmer's Day was established in 1951 after the United Farmers of Alberta, or UFA, passed a resolution urging the Alberta government to declare the day a provincial holiday. For more than 20 years the second Friday in June was a provincial holiday; schools were closed, and communities across the province celebrated the importance of agriculture. In 2010 the tradition of Farmer's Day was resurrected by the UFA, and the event continues to recognize and celebrate the men and women who tirelessly drive our agriculture industry. These are farmers like my grandparents, who came to Alberta for new opportunities, to break ground and grow food to meet the needs of an expanding population.

My constituency is one of the last parts of the province where new agricultural land is available. Hard-working farmers continue to clear the land and plant crops in the north. Because the soil has not been previously cultivated, it is ideal for organic farming, which is one of the reasons the Peace River constituency has the largest number of organic farms in the province.

There are so many reasons to celebrate our farmers, so I encourage everyone to reflect on the meaning of Farmer's Day, take time to learn about where your food comes from, and thank a farmer. Knowing that your meal was grown or produced right here in rural Alberta will make it that much tastier.

Official Opposition Policies

Mr. Loewen: There's a reason why we call question period question period. Well, we can't call it answer period as the government almost never answers questions but, instead, uses question period to spew partisan rhetoric that never resembles reality.

Let's review some of this bizarre commentary. They say that we would cut taxes only for the rich, not ordinary Albertans. The fact is that the NDP raised taxes on every Albertan. We would cut taxes for everyone by just repealing the carbon tax alone.

They claim that we cheer for the failure of pipelines. Nothing is more absurd. We have never wavered in our support for all pipelines. Back when NDP members were protesting every pipeline proposal, we were in steadfast support. No one even believes they support pipelines now, only that they want to be re-elected.

They say that we want to fire teachers, nurses, and doctors. This is absolutely untrue. We want to protect front-line workers while making government more efficient and responsive to the needs of Albertans.

They say that the UCP doesn't care about the environment. The reality is that we can protect the environment without destroying our economy.

They say that a vote against the budget is a vote against the valuable and worthwhile functions of government, but they conveniently forget that when they were in opposition, they voted against every budget every year.

They even claim that the previous government blew up hospitals, when actually it was the demolition of an old hospital that was replaced with a brand new medical facility. They ignore the reality that some of the newest and most advanced hospitals in this province were built by Conservatives. Meanwhile under their watch they have closed multiple seniors' centres in the Peace Country alone.

I guess that when you're 30 points behind in the polls, you get desperate and use hyperbole and misdirection at every opportunity. Frankly, this NDP government seems a little confused when it comes to reality, and on top of that, they certainly have an interesting relationship with the truth. Mr. Speaker, with all of this, the biggest mistake the government members make is thinking that Albertans buy what they're saying. Saying it over and over again doesn't make it true. On this side of the House we know that the people of this province are wise and that they see right through this government and will have the opportunity to send a message loud and clear in election 2019.

Indigenous Relations

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to stand today and call our attention to the 22nd anniversary of National Indigenous Peoples Day, celebrated every June 21. This day calls on all Canadians to celebrate and learn about the unique histories, diverse cultures, and significant contributions of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people all over Turtle Island.

Mr. Speaker, I've had the privilege of participating in ceremonies with indigenous people around the province, including the Dene, Cree, and Blackfoot. We have so much to learn from these nations, but for far too long they were oppressed by previous governments. We have so much more to do to correct the historical injustices of the past, but I'm proud that our government has made a commitment to developing meaningful and ongoing relationships with indigenous people.

To that end, our government has committed to ensuring that all Alberta students will learn about the history of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people, including the history and legacy of residential schools. We know that learning about the past is only one aspect of a renewed relationship. We're also committed to working with indigenous leaders to implement the objectives of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada: Calls to Action.

As the youngest and fastest growing segment of our population, indigenous people will help lead Alberta forward. Together we'll build an inclusive society, where indigenous people are full participants in the social, economic, and cultural life of this province.

Throughout June communities across Canada host events to celebrate indigenous people. On June 20 Alberta will host a National Indigenous Peoples Day celebration at Edmonton City Centre mall from 11:30 a.m. to 1:15 p.m., and I encourage all members and members of our communities to attend. Let us take this day and every day to celebrate the heritage, contributions, and cultures of First Nations, Inuit, and Métis communities across Canada. Let us all look forward to a future that is richer because of our increased understanding of indigenous cultures and stronger because of a renewed, respectful relationship with indigenous people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Crime is on the rise in Alberta. Yesterday we heard some sobering statistics about spikes in domestic violence, child abuse, and sexual assault in Calgary, and last night the Alberta Party team held a large round-table meeting with rural Albertans to discuss the rural crime epidemic. Rural Albertans all too often face the very real fear that comes from unauthorized access to their property, often when they're home, by emboldened criminals who don't seem to fear any consequences.

Now, the Alberta Party voted in favour of the Justice budget because we agree that more needs to be done and that more resources need to be committed. We need more officers in communities to respond to criminal activity, and especially in rural Alberta we need more police to reduce response times that can be 45 minutes or more. The Alberta Party knows that we need more police to catch criminals and keep communities safe, but we also know that spending more money isn't the only answer. The roots of crime are complex, and we will never deal with the problem if we don't tackle those roots. The opioid crisis has had a devastating impact on communities in rural and urban Alberta. We heard last night that cannabis legalization is impacting property owners who are adjacent to cannabis production facilities. But the single biggest reason for rising crime rates is the poor economy. If people are able to make a good living, to provide for their families, to have a stake in society, they are far less likely to commit a crime of any kind.

There's absolutely no excuse for any criminal activity. It is never okay to assault someone or to steal their property, but until we tackle the root cause of crime, we will never address it. The job of government is to provide the law enforcement resources needed to protect communities, and it is also government's job to enable the innovation needed to fix this problem. We need to invest in prevention programs to address the opioid crisis, we need to empower front-line workers to work differently, we need to invest in technology and in social supports, but more than anything, we need to improve Alberta's economy to ensure more good jobs are available for more people. It is on this last and most important point that this government has let Albertans down.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Weaselhead/Glenmore Park Preservation Society

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to rise in the House today to congratulate the Weaselhead/Glenmore Park Preservation Society for being one of the finalists for the 2018 Alberta Emerald awards. The Emerald awards have been recognizing and celebrating environmental excellence across all sectors of the Alberta economy for 27 years.

On Tuesday night I attended the award ceremony with volunteers of the Weaselhead/Glenmore Park Preservation Society to support the tremendous work they do. This organization has been active for over 20 years in the preservation of three parks that surround the Glenmore reservoir, and they run outdoor educational programs attended by 4,000 schoolchildren and 400 adults in Calgary every year.

I would like to thank the Emerald awards for acknowledging and recognizing our amazing environmentalists in Alberta at this ceremony. It was excellent to see the Minister of Environment and Parks sponsoring and presenting the awards on behalf of the government. It was fantastic to see the support of the energy industry for environmental stewardship side by side with awards given out to grassroots environmental groups and educational institutions.

What I did not see or hear, Mr. Speaker, was anyone complaining about the carbon levy or bringing up ridiculous arguments against programs which will help Albertans save energy and protect the environment. What I did not see was people like the members opposite, who question the influence of human activity on climate change. What I saw were citizens, schools, governments, and businesses working together to help preserve our precious environment.

As a very inspiring American businesswoman said, "We are each other's destiny." I'm hopeful, Mr. Speaker, when I think about our common environmental destiny being in the hands of groups like those recognized at the Emerald awards. I'm terrified when I think about our common environmental destiny being in the hands of the United Conservative Party.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for indulging me in an introduction. I presume that's what you're inviting me to do?

The Speaker: No. You have two minutes, and then we'll go to the introduction.

Cannabis Legalization

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our legal cannabis experiment is nearly a reality in Canada, with the twin goals of reducing illegal sale and protecting public health. It's clear that the business of producing and selling cannabis, especially in Alberta, is extremely attractive, but we have a critical role in ensuring health and safety, especially among children and youth. The ND government has addressed some issues, but there is much more to be done in relation to public health notwithstanding the clear benefits of cannabis in medical conditions.

In Canada about 30 per cent of 11- to 15-year-olds reported using cannabis in the past year, the highest rate in the developed world. Public health risks are widely recognized, especially in the younger generation, where most evidence of problems occurs in the developing brain. There are also risks in relation to public safety, and both areas deserve a higher priority in planning and policies at our schools, institutions, community gatherings, and workplaces.

We don't have all the answers now, but we need to ensure that we provide to the public what we do know, monitor impacts, and prepare to research answers to key questions going forward. How will cannabis use and impacts be monitored, for example, in mental illness rates, emergency room visits, school attendance and achievement, injury rates, and deaths? What research will assess the short- and long-term impacts on individual and community well-being? What health expertise exists in the AGLCC to provide timely updates and evidence on which to base changes in policy? With incredible claims already emerging from the business marketers, how will dubious marketing claims be handled? What is the public understanding of risks and benefits currently, and how will public education reach into rural and remote communities? With every municipality setting its own bylaws related to safe use and enforcement, how can we reduce conflicting policies and enforcement practices?

Time is running out. Let's ensure we establish a body of experts with the best evidence so that public health is a consistent priority and not private profits or government tax revenue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, unanimous consent has been requested for an introduction.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A real pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you our now well-known and well-respected leader, David Khan, with a couple of colleagues, one from Edmonton and one from Calgary. David will be one of the grand marshals in the upcoming Edmonton Pride Parade on Saturday. With him is Gwyneth Midgley, the Liberal Party executive director and an advocate for environmental and educational issues in Alberta; also Kerrie Johnston, a Liberal organizer in Edmonton-McClung and a university administrator fiercely committed to fiscal responsibility and equality of opportunity. As a political leader David Khan is unrivalled in his commitment to freedom, equality of opportunity, and fairness to future generations. I'll ask them to rise, and we'll give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this will be our last day of the spring session, I wish all members, particularly our Premier, a productive summer ahead.

Calgary Crime Rate

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised the growing problem of crime in our communities. I cited statistics about a 42 per cent increase in sexual offences in Calgary and a 34 per cent increase in assault crimes in that city. The Premier undertook to look at these statistics. I would like to ask if she's had a chance to do so and whether she has any further ideas about policy responses either through advocacy with the federal government's Criminal Code authority or with provincial enforcement responsibility.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, and thank you to the member for that question. You know, as I said yesterday – and I think it bears repeating – we are always very concerned to hear about the kinds of increases in crime, violent crime in particular, understanding, of course, what it means to the families and the communities who are affected by it. Of course, we have to redouble our efforts to ensure that we combat crime at every level. I think that, having had a chance to look at this, what we know is that in the course of presenting those statistics, the chief of police in Calgary identified that we have a broad range of concerns arising from things that I will talk about in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

First supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the Premier. In particular, we've seen a significant increase in the number of auto thefts: in Calgary over the past five years a 54 per cent increase in vehicle thefts, 1,800 incidents in the first quarter of this year alone, and in Edmonton the police report that there are 12 to 15 cars stolen each day in this city. Does the Premier share my concern about this growing pattern of auto thefts, and what policy response does the government have to this serious problem?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to go back to the last point, I think what's really important to understand is that we have to redouble our efforts to focus on job creation and economic stimulation, because we do know that there is a very clear link between the significant difficulties experienced, in particular in Calgary and by families in Calgary, as a result of the unprecedented drop in the price of oil. That's something that our government has been focused on all along.

With respect to auto theft we know that there is a gang element in that, and that's why we have increased resources to focus on that kind of crime prevention activity.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I concur with the Premier on her points that economic growth must be the priority to address some of these deep social problems we're experiencing and that there is a gang element in auto thefts. Indeed, the Edmonton police say that they believe that 70 per cent of auto thefts are related to organized crime. Will the Premier join with me in calling on the federal Attorney General to use their authority to strengthen criminal penalties for those found guilty of being involved in organized crime, particularly the auto thefts?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For one thing, what I'd like to do is to correct a bit of the impression that was left yesterday. The changes that the federal government is contemplating making to the Criminal Code have not even come into effect. In fact, they would not necessarily have been linked to the statistical increases that the member opposite described yesterday or today.

With respect to organized crime activity one of the things that we know we need to do is to invest in the kinds of programs, like ALERT, which actually focus on stopping gang activity. That's one of the things that was actually cut under the former federal government and something that we . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Government Policies

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, since the Premier has raised it, Bill C-75, before the federal Parliament, reduces criminal penalties for a number of offences. In fact, it moves a number of offences from potential imprisonment to merely summary conviction, including impaired driving causing bodily harm, abduction of a person under the age of 14, administering a noxious substance, et cetera. The federal minister says that she has the support of the government of Alberta and all of the Attorneys General for weakening these criminal offences. Why is this government supporting a weakening of criminal penalties when we have a crime wave in this province?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we need to do is to focus the issue of penalties on the most serious and violent of crimes. Meanwhile what we have to be able to do is to focus our resources on crime prevention and, in particular, supporting our police, which is something that our government has done. Since we were elected, we've increased, just in Calgary alone, roughly $80 million to almost $100 million in resources to the Calgary Police Service. These were increases that were actually voted against by the members opposite each time they were brought forward as part of our budget, and these kinds of investments are what are going to reduce crime.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, of course, the opposition voted against the government budget, just as the NDP voted against increases in funding in a number of areas when they were in opposition, because of the overall fiscal disaster of the government, headed to a $100 billion debt.

Since we're closing out the session, let me ask the Premier whether or not she's happy to have as a potential legacy a $65 billion debt, headed to a $96 billion Alberta public debt.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I mean, I know the member opposite would have some familiarity with those kinds of legacies given that the Conservative government left a $145 billion debt at the end of their term and, in fact, ran six consecutive deficit budgets. We took over at an unprecedented time, an unprecedented drop in the price of oil, and since we've been managing the economy, we've seen 90,000 jobs return to the province of Alberta because that's the way we address those kinds of crises.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, unemployment is higher today than it was in 2014, the provincial economy is smaller today than it was in 2014, the debt has gone from $13 billion to $56 billion, headed to $96 billion, but today is also the second anniversary of the NDP's adoption of the carbon tax. They promised that 100 per cent of those carbon tax revenues would go towards dedicated environmental funding. Now we know that with the increased carbon tax, that is no longer the case. I'll ask again as we close out today: why has the government broken its promise to Albertans about the dedicated nature of carbon tax revenues?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the full amount of the carbon levy that the government of Alberta has introduced is in fact focused on efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. That's exactly what we said we would do, and that's exactly what we've done.

But, moreover, you know, when we're talking about anniversaries, it's interesting. It's, for instance, almost 23 months since the Leader of the Opposition was fined $5,000 by his own party for breaking campaign rules, a two-month anniversary since the entire UCP opposition walked out on a bill to protect women's health issues, a 35-day anniversary...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, there was a little sleight of hand there in the Premier's response when she said that the carbon tax revenues have been dedicated to notional environmental spending. The problem is that she's forgotten the proposed 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax, the revenues for which are baked into their budget, zero dollars of which are dedicated to environmental funding, and there is a zero increase in the rebate for Alberta taxpayers. So why did the NDP break their promise to Albertans about the rebates and green funding coming from the carbon tax?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the additional amounts that the member opposite is referring to are the additional amounts that were subsequently introduced by the federal government. When we talked about the carbon levy, we talked about the $30 that the government of Alberta introduced, and that still applies.

But on the issue of, you know, anniversaries, I just want to say that it's about the six-month anniversary since the members opposite released their plan to give a $750 million tax break to the top 1 per cent. Mr. Speaker, when it comes to anniversaries, I will say that we're proud of ours. The members opposite should not be of theirs.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the 67 per cent increase in the NDP carbon tax, that's baked into their budget, was proposed before the federal government even introduced legislation on this, legislation which the government of Saskatchewan is now challenging in court. The question is simply this. Since that revenue will be raised by the Alberta government for Alberta purposes, why won't Alberta taxpayers get a rebate when the NDP carbon tax goes from $30 to $50 a tonne? Why are they breaking their word on the rebates for the 67 per cent increase in their carbon tax?

2:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the $30 per tonne price on carbon we are following through on exactly every element that we committed to Albertans when we introduced the plan. In addition, what we are doing is that we are part of a larger pan-Canadian framework, the result of which has resulted in the federal government approving a pipeline to tidewater, which is actually going to increase revenues to the province of Alberta, increase jobs for Albertans, and increase money in our overall economy. Getting a pipeline to tidewater: nine years, couldn't get it done; three years, we're on our way.

Mr. Kenney: Well, it's sad to see the hon. the Premier continuing her victory lap to celebrate the withdrawal of billions of dollars of investment from a private corporation after tens of billions of dollars have already fled this province under NDP mismanagement. Mr. Speaker, the Premier never addresses this, but is she the least bit concerned that nearly $40 billion of investment in our energy sector has moved from Alberta to other jurisdictions at the same prices? It's clearly not because of price; it's the same price. It's because of policy. Is she happy to have helped drive nearly $40 billion of investment capital out of this province?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I'm happy to do is something that the member opposite and his party could not do when they were in Ottawa for nine years or, frankly, the previous Conservative government, their legacy party, couldn't do for 44 years, which is get a pipeline from Alberta to Canadian tidewater. It's been over 60 years. We've been in charge for three years. We're going to get that pipeline done. It's going to bring back investment, it's going to grow money into our economy, it's going to grow jobs, it's going to grow revenue, and it is long, long, long overdue.

The Speaker: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Rural Crime Prevention

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't imagine how frightening it must feel to be a mom at home with preschoolers, alone without neighbours around for miles, and have someone drive into your yard, look in your shed and your barn, and watch them take your equipment and drive away. I listened to a woman describe this experience last night, and I wondered why the government has not delivered a plan to deal with the realities of rural crime. To the Minister of Justice: how many of the seven stages of the rural crime reduction strategy announced in March have been executed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's precisely because we have been out there listening to stories exactly like the one the member described that we've taken action to ensure that Albertans can feel safe in their homes. Many of those employees are already in place. Obviously, the RCMP has direct jurisdiction over deployment. When it comes to this strategy, we're already starting to see the effects of those rural crime reduction units, and that will have the effect of making Albertans feel safe in their homes.

Ms McPherson: I also heard reports of farmers going to great lengths to prevent their property from being stolen, triple-locking tools in Sea-Cans and installing gates in places they never needed to fence off before, and it's clear that a determined thief with an angle grinder can get through pretty much anything. Farmers are often told that their security camera footage cannot be used in court, so cameras aren't deterring thieves either. To the same minister: when will you expand education to address crimes in progress rather than just prevention? How are you improving prosecutors' understanding of the impacts and constraints rural Albertans are facing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said many times, the impacts of Alberta's geography on policing mean that sometimes RCMP have to travel longer distances. We can't change Alberta's geography, but what we can do is work with our RCMP partners to ensure that we're putting in place effective strategies to deal with these issues. That's why we've rolled out a crime prevention strategy that focuses on proactive policing, targeting those offenders that offend over and over again to ensure that we can get them behind bars where they belong.

Ms McPherson: Another woman I spoke to described how a recently approved cannabis production facility near Fort Saskatchewan, which hasn't been built yet, meant that her family had to install gates to prevent people from crossing their property to get to the cannabis facility site and how farmers adjacent to the Cremona cannabis plant are dealing with employees from that facility trespassing on their land to smoke pot during their breaks. To the Minister of Justice: have you worked with rural municipalities, property owners, and cannabis producers to plan and ensure that new facilities do not generate or attract crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, as we move forward in ensuring that we're addressing not only current crime but potentially future trends, I think it's important to continue to invest in those proactive policing strategies, and our police partners absolutely agree with us. When it comes specifically to the location of facilities in terms of production of cannabis, that's in the jurisdiction of the federal government and municipal governments. Our government has been working to ensure that we're providing support to municipalities so that they understand their roles and what their powers are, and we will continue to do that going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Liquor Service Regulations

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Football, or soccer as it's known in North America, is the most popular sport in the world, with hundreds of millions of fans. The beautiful game requires only a ball, which allows a good majority of people to play. Being originally from South America, I'm a huge soccer fan and excited for the World Cup, which begins next week. My constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie is incredibly diverse and full of soccer fans. One constituent, James Aubrey of Summerside, would like to enjoy a cold one while watching games at his local pub. Given that many games will be played in the morning local time, will the Minister of Finance allow for bars to open and serve early to accommodate this world-wide event?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for bringing this forward. This member is as good at advocating for his constituents as Cristiano Ronaldo at free kicks. You know, I had thought about this, but I figured that no one would be watching without the best team in the world, Italia, being in it. I will commit to explore this idea with the AGLC and will follow up with this member. We won't Messi around.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While being able to go and enjoy a beer while watching some great soccer makes sense, we must also ensure that people do so responsibly. How will the AGLC ensure that minors are not served and that people do not overconsume, Minister?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Extension of liquor law hours has been previously done for Olympic hockey games and other events. The only thing that changes in those cases is the hours of service. The World Cup would be no different should hour extensions occur. Everything else remains in place, like restrictions on serving minors and overconsumption. Should we move forward with this, I will have full confidence in the AGLC folks and our business owners in Alberta that this will be done in a socially responsible manner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Loyola: Thank you. Can the minister speak to the work our government has done in partnership with the AGLC to modernize liquor rules in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you – and good luck, Iceland – Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for this question. Our government has overseen the largest increase in craft brewing in Alberta's history, with the industry tripling in three years. On top of that, we have made it easier for bars and restaurants to have a patio, allowed for the sale of great Alberta liquor products at farmers' markets, and cut the markup on our province's distillers. All the while we have ensured that the highest standards of social responsibility through the DrinkSense and Bar None programs remain.

Thank you.

Carbon Levy

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, not a week goes by that I don't receive another letter or hear another story about a business or a nonprofit struggling because of this NDP's carbon tax. The carbon tax is draining their limited resources, and my constituents are not seeing any benefits from paying into it. The NDP's carbon tax is obviously not putting people first. People are being forced to pay for someone else's ideological agenda. Minister, why won't you repeal the carbon tax, that is hurting our communities and killing jobs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our carbon levy is designed for the Alberta economy. That's why it has two-thirds of Albertans receiving a rebate. That's why we have the programs for nonprofits, for churches, institutions, and others. That's why we have $1.4 billion worth of investment in clean tech to lower the carbon in the barrel. If it wasn't this plan, it would be Justin Trudeau's plan, and we know that the Conservatives prefer that, but on this side of the House we prefer a plan that is designed by and for Albertans.

Mr. van Dijken: Given that today marks two years since the NDP passed their carbon tax legislation in this House and given that over the past two years the carbon tax has been shown to do nothing more than to make life, business, and charitable efforts more expensive for everyday Albertans and given that the carbon tax did not even give us a so-called social licence, with two cancelled pipelines and a third pipeline just bought by taxpayers to prevent it from being cancelled, Minister, would you at least acknowledge that your carbon tax isn't all it's cracked up to be but, in fact, is having a negative impact on real Albertans' lives?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we put in place our climate leadership plan so that one would not be imposed on us by Ottawa. This matter has been examined by the courts. The province of Manitoba asked the courts to examine this, and here's what the Premier of Manitoba said in response to that court decision. He said: it's either our plan or one that comes from Ottawa. So these matters have been settled. I know that the members opposite are interested in make-work projects for lawyers. On this side of the House we're interested in rolling up our sleeves, having a climate leadership plan that leads to two pipelines, and getting 15,000 people to work. That's the priority on this side of the House.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier of Manitoba has stated that he'll see Trudeau in court for raising the carbon tax, I do not believe that he is as fully on board as the minister expects, but given that Albertans are leaders when it comes to environmental stewardship and we have been proud of our record long before the NDP formed government in Alberta and called us the embarrassing cousin that no one wants to talk about, Minister, will you admit that the NDP government was wrong to introduce a carbon tax they didn't campaign on, or will you continue with tone-deaf grandstanding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just yesterday we heard from the CEO of Canada's largest oil producer. He called on the carpet Conservatives and their studied opposition to the fact that climate change is real, the fact that this matter has been politicized as it has been by Canadian Conservatives, and how regrettable that is to Canada's reputation as a responsible energy leader. It is these Conservatives that drove us into the dead end of not having market access, of having one product, one market. That's not the way forward for this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Premier's Former Chief of Staff's Consulting Contract

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the NDP has been playing fast and loose with the facts when it comes to the Premier's former chief of staff John Heaney. In August they announced that he was resigning to return to B.C., only to be retitled and rehired the very next Monday. Then they claim that the Ethics Commissioner issued an exemption for Mr. Heaney to be a B.C. lobbyist while advising the Minister of Finance here. Then they changed their tune and said: well, the exemption actually came from the Premier's chief of staff. We have seen nothing but dishonesty from this government on this issue. What do the NDP have to say to Albertans who expect transparency and accountability from this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, with regard to Mr. Heaney, of course, the former chief of staff to the Premier of Alberta, he is now an executive adviser. We have consulted with the Ethics Commissioner with regard to that transition that he played from going from the chief of staff to being an adviser. He's played a role in the Trans Mountain pipeline, in the path to balance in Treasury Board and Finance, and in other matters. He's done good work for us, and we're happy with his service.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, don't worry if he's unethical; he's done good work. It makes no sense. On May 31 the Finance minister said in this House, "When it was signed, the contract went up online immediately." Mr. Heaney's contract was not posted online. It was posted online in May. To the minister: why are you not telling the truth?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, there had been discussions with the Ethics Commissioner. The consultation gave some directions in terms of what that exemption would look like. There was time taken to make sure it was right, and when it was right, it was put online.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're a very experienced member of this Assembly, and you know the boundaries as to when comments and accusations are made, so I would hope that as you make your second supplemental, you are conscious of that. Thank you. Please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister said one thing on May 31 in this House that was in fact not honest because since then his office has confirmed that the contract was not posted immediately but was posted on May 15, to the minister: who is telling the truth, you or your office?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, you know, the kings of questionable contracts are sitting on that side of the House: things like golf club memberships, limo rides, salaries, the palace over there that they wanted to install their Premier in. [interjections] We have done the job of making sure that we've got pipeline access to tidewater. We've had consultants helping us in that regard. We got feedback from the Ethics Commissioner about how to structure that contract. I'll stand behind all of that.

The Speaker: Just a few more minutes, folks, just a few more minutes.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Wheat Varietal Classification Changes

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In February 2015 the Canadian Grain Commission announced the Canadian wheat class modernization process. Later that year the CGC announced the creation of the Canada northern hard red and the Canada western special purpose wheat classes. To the minister of agriculture: what have you done to ensure that Alberta ag producers are aware of and ready for this classification change?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very good technical question. Our office continues working with producers, cereal and oilseed producers, right across the province on discussions on any changes the federal government proposes. There are a number of changes as well, not just in seed grading. So we're continuing that good work with the producers. They're well aware, well versed, and well trained, some of the best producers in the world, as you know. We'll continue working with them as we go through these regulatory changes.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta farmers are already experiencing a backlog from full elevators and a looming hopper car shortage and given that the federal government has already said, and I quote, that the CGC is not allowing any grace period for producers after the July 31 deadline, unquote, minister: what plans, if any, are in place if farmers aren't able to get their grains shipped regardless of whether they have had their wheat varieties reclassified or not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do really appreciate the question. It allows me the opportunity to update the House on changes that have been made. Recently the federal government has passed changes to the Canada Transportation Act that will go a long ways. It's one more tool in the tool box for producers to be able to get their products to market. As well, we've had good news in the past few weeks. Both of the large carriers, CN and CP, have announced a thousand new hopper cars each, that they're going to buy, so that's 2,000 brand new hopper cars that are going to be online there shortly. As well, CN has announced a large number of new locomotives they're going to be hiring, infrastructure, you know, changes as well with sidetracking, and new terminals . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, given that producers who have a delivery date after August 1 for transitioning varieties should be already contacting their grain buyer to ensure that their grain will be accepted as Canada western red spring or prairie spring red and given that wheat varieties classified as Canada northern hard red are expected to sell at a discount, again to the minister: are there any programs available for these farmers as they transition to these new classes of wheat given the possible negative financial ramifications?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Just yesterday I had the opportunity to meet with representatives from GrainsConnect and Viterro on the new facilities that they're building across the prairies, including in Alberta. There are many reasons to feel optimistic about farming in Alberta. Last year was one of the best years on record on cash receipts. I'm looking forward to working with producers, working with processors, marketers, and transport companies as we continue the good work we do here in agriculture.

Health Care in Fort McMurray

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, a by-election is around the corner in Fort McMurray, and with that are the government's conveniently timed announcements on spending, not to mention visits from the front bench. But there was radio silence about the concerns of residents who must continue to commute to Edmonton for dialysis treatment, and we've also seen no improvements in accessing pediatricians. Minister, it's been three years, and these vital issues have not been addressed. Will this government be dealing with these issues in the north, and how?

2:20

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It certainly is my honour to be part of a government that even during one of the most difficult economic downturns in our province's history chose to invest. We chose to build and hire instead of cut and fire, and we're seeing the results of that in Fort McMurray right now. I certainly won't apologize for investing in long-term care in Fort McMurray and mental health in Fort McMurray and making sure that we have the right supports to support our communities as they continue to recover from a devastating wildfire. We're proud of the work we've done in Fort McMurray, and we're proud to serve those folks.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the question was about pediatric care in Fort McMurray.

The Stollery foundation is willing to work in partnership with Fort McMurray to help get access to pediatricians through teleconferencing. Not only would this option be cost-effective, but it would contribute to improving overall health outcomes by expanding access to pediatric care in the very underserved region of Fort McMurray, where demand vastly exceeds service. Will this government consider facilitating this sensible option as opposed to a total shortage of pediatric care?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, we absolutely have continued to expand telehealth opportunities. We also recruited 10 new doctors in 2017 to Fort McMurray, including pediatricians, anesthesiologists, family physicians practising low-risk obstetrics, and psychiatrists. These are important investments. We're going to continue to move forward on investing in the folks of Fort McMurray and in health care. The members opposite talk about 20 per cent cuts. That would devastate communities. Instead, what Albertans are telling us is that they want to see improved access and improved supports, and that's what they're getting from this government rather than the deep cuts being proposed by the opposition.

Mr. Yao: Even if you did actually fill all of those positions, we still wouldn't be in the same state as the rest of the province.

Mr. Speaker, using technology such as teleconferencing to allow patients to access specialists would be exceptionally useful in rural regions, where long commutes are often necessary to get specialized medical attention. To this day the only place that AHS utilizes teleconferencing is in their boardrooms. To the Minister of Health: why is teleconferencing of health specialists not being done to increase the accessibility of health care for all Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, let me repeat that we have absolutely invested in increased capacity and in the telehealth system. But what we've also done is that we have recruited 10 physicians to Fort McMurray, hon. member. Those aren't positions; those are people. These are people who are practising in a number of areas in Fort McMurray, including, again, pediatricians, anesthesiologists, family physicians practising low-risk obstetrics, and psychiatrists. We have on-call pediatric care 24/7.

And, Mr. Speaker, I'm so proud that this side of the House invested in Willow Square. We know that the PCs bungled the project for years. We know that the Wildrose criticized them for that, and now they're sitting as dance partners on the opposite side of the House. This side of the House . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Taber Pride Flag Raising

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, over the weekend, on June 2, the LGBTQ2S folks in the town of Taber celebrated pride. As members of the House must know, the Taber Equality Alliance has endured significant harassment at previous celebrations, with their rainbow flag being stolen and vandalized. To the Minister of Infrastructure: can you tell the House how the pride flag came to be raised on a flagpole outside the Taber professional building?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. You know, in January I received a phone call at about 6 a.m. from the Minister of Environment and Parks. I always answer those phone calls; she's a very insistent minister. She told me that the town of Taber had voted against raising the pride flag. So after everything that the Taber Equality Alliance had gone through with their flag last year, it was a no-brainer that the province had to step in. We were delighted to do that. Alberta Infrastructure was delighted to have the pride flag raised at the Taber Provincial Building to show our support for the Taber Equality Alliance.

Ms Goehring: Thank you to both ministers for your swift response and for being head and shoulders above in your support for pride in Taber.

Again to the Minister of Infrastructure: why was it a priority to make sure that the flag was raised on a provincial building?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government is going to continue to stand up for the LGBTQ2S community and continue to ensure that they are treated with respect. In many parts of the world raising the rainbow flag is still a provocative act. We want the LGBTQ2S community in Alberta to feel safe and proud of who they are. We want them to know that this government is here for them to fight for their rights.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, why is the pride flag such an important symbol at this time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has never been a more important time to recognize how important the pride flag is as a symbol. Not only are the opposition parties intent on removing the rights of LGBTQ2S citizens, but they are also intent on putting young people in harm's way. What a shame. The powerful act of flying a pride flag over a government building tells the community and its allies that we support them and that we will ensure that they are safe.

LGBTQ2S Rights

Mr. Fraser: Well, Mr. Speaker, what kind of session would it be without me getting a little verklempt or misty eyed? I want to talk about my oldest son, Carson, who's incredibly brave. He's one of the strongest people that I know. It's for people like him that we raise the pride flag. It's because of the other brave people who paved the way for him to come out to the world. Because of him and those other brave people, they changed me. They inspired people like me to show us that God created us in His image, and He doesn't make mistakes. Premier, how is your government protecting people like my son and trying to bring people together on the issues of gay rights rather than drive them apart for political benefit?

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to commend the member. I have known him for three years now, and before that, we've had the opportunity to converse. I know that he has come a long way himself in understanding and embracing and ensuring that not only his son but every single LGBTQ Albertan feels safe and secure, and for that, I thank him very much. I will say to the member that the members on this side of the House have always and will always continue to fight for every single LGBTQ Albertan and ensure that their rights are never taken away from them despite what others would like to see.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, as a family of faith we raised our kids not to subscribe to organized religion but to find their faith in Christ and develop a relationship with Him that's not based on traditions or boundaries. We taught our kids to love one another. I want to thank those in the government caucus, the United Conservative caucus, my independent friends, and the Alberta Party caucus that have supported my son and my family. And for those in this House that aren't there yet, I hope that you get there. Like I said, I taught my kids to love one another. Premier, what is your government doing to bridge the political divides so that gay rights can flourish across the political spectrum?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, we have spent a lot of time going throughout this province and meeting Albertans in every single opportunity where pride celebrations are taking place but also ensuring that they feel safe in their schools, and that's something that is extremely important. Unfortunately, what we have seen is the politicization of the issue of having GSAs in schools, for example, and that doesn't help. We will not stand for that. What we will do is ensure that every single student in this province can feel safe when they go to school, and we're going to make sure that any . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Happy Pride Month to all Albertans, especially to the brave ones who are teaching us about love and acceptance; to my precious son Carson, my wife, Mishelle, my son Thaine, who loves and defends his brother; and to all proud families.

How does this government support families that are out and the ones that just need a little help getting there?

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for his very brave question. One of the things that we have been very clear about is that we will not stand for kids to be outed before they are ready. Everybody goes through a journey, and when they get there, some of us will struggle, absolutely, and may not be able to have these kinds of discussions. But what doesn't help is having people in political power not having the conversations, not even wanting to have face-to-face meetings with the community. We understand the needs of these young people because we ourselves, from my own experience and that of a couple of my colleagues, have seen it first-hand.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Union Certification

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, an employee was fired for habitual tardiness. When that same employee complained to the Alberta Labour Relations Board, it found no direct evidence that the employer terminated the employee because of his union activities. However, the ALRB inferred that the employer's decision was tainted, and a remedial certification order was issued, immediately unionizing that company. No employee vote was needed, just the ALRB ruling. Does the minister think it's fair and democratic that a labour board can decide who is unionized and who isn't?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the work that our government has done to update workplace legislation laws, laws that hadn't been updated in 40 years, 30 years, including our labour relations laws. What we've done is to make sure that we have brought Alberta into the Canadian mainstream using items like remedial certification, which exists in other jurisdictions and deters both parties from playing games or treating workers unfairly when they try to use their Supreme Court protected right to join a union.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that we have also heard of situations where union officials harassed new immigrants and used trickery to get them to sign union certification cards, does the minister condone these heavy-handed tactics, and was this the intent of her union bill?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member wants to talk about harassment and intimidation – let's talk about it – after their caucus colleague fired a mom who was sexually harassed when the harasser asked him to, without so much as a peep from their leader. It really doesn't get much more shameful than that. We know that workers experience harassment and intimidation in many forms. Our government has updated workplace legislation to protect workers in this province. It is a priority for us, and it should be for you.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister said that she was moving the labour laws in line with the rest of Canada, wouldn't the minister say that harassing and tricking vulnerable workers who do not have a good grasp on the English language is taking a step in the wrong direction?

Ms Gray: Again, Mr. Speaker, the members opposite and his party should look in the mirror when they want to talk about bullying and harassing.

What we have done is that we've brought in balanced labour relations laws that return some of the proper responsibility and power to the Labour Relations Board. When employers are abusing the system and harassing their workers, the Labour Relations Board has remediation for that. When unions perhaps are bullying and harassing, the Labour Relations Board has remediation for that. They are the arbitrators. This is a fair and balanced system. This is what the Supreme Court guarantees Canadians because they have the right to join or leave a union.

Environmental Assessments and Project Approvals

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, there's a chronic problem in Environment and Parks when it comes to issuing permits for projects, and this has consequences. Fort McMurray has been unable to open a new gravel pit in order to make up for the imminent closure of the current pit at Susan Lake. This threatens the supply of gravel in the area, and that is the beating heart of our primary industry. This is a problem caused by the inability of government to officially approve permits. Will the minister take action now to ensure that Fort McMurray has the gravel supply that it needs and review the Alberta Environment permitting process to slash needless red tape?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've been in touch with the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and a number of the affected folks with respect to this aggregate issue in Fort McMurray, and the department is working on a resolution to this matter.

As to the broader matter of regulatory approvals I am sure I will get to it in the supplementals.

Mr. Loewen: Given that this problem with overregulation is far from an isolated incident, impeding job-creating private industry around our province every day, and given that in my constituency we have seen an example of this where Fox Creek has been trying for six years to obtain adjacent land from the province for their business park and given that it takes six years to get something like this off the ground, impeding the growth of Alberta communities, can the minister explain to the House why the government sees the need to stand in the way of this kind of wealth-creating local development?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, around the Water Act absolutely no regulations have changed since this government took office, so if the hon. member has a quarrel with the way that the Water Act was written or with its associated regulations or policy, I suggest that he bring it up with his new colleagues, the folks that he ran against in the 2015 election, because it's actually that framework that's in place here for that.

As for processing approvals, we are working on making sure that there are enough resources for that matter, Mr. Speaker. I take it from the hon. member that it's a spend day over on the other side of the House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the bizarre answers continue and given that the problem of red tape is ingrained and pervasive throughout this government and given that this government piles on more and more regulations every day, inhibiting economic progress, and given that south of Grande Prairie industry has been hampered from developing in the Industrial Heartland due to lengthy approval processes and given that we know that it is possible to get projects built promptly – when the CN train bridge burned at Mayerthorpe, they had a replacement built and ready in 20 days – will this government finally take steps to kick the habit of overregulating everything and take our advice to develop a detailed strategy for red tape reduction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the issue here with respect to timeliness of approvals – and I will grant the hon. member this: we do hear from municipalities on this, and that's why we've streamlined a number of these things. We've done blitz approvals. We've worked with municipalities. We've been hearing from them. But there weren't enough resources in Environment and Parks due to the serial cuts that came from the folks across the way. Now, we have tried to work within our existing budgets to make sure we've got the resources in place. We'll have more to say about that over the coming months. The fact of the matter is that we are focused on getting this economy . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

FOIP Request Wait Times

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week when the Minister of Justice answered questions about unacceptable delays with FOIP requests, she told this House that the problems were due to backlogs and insufficient staffing left by the past government. I thought this was confusing because in 2015 and 2016 in the main estimates the same question from me was answered by the minister, and her quote was: yes, we believe it's appropriately staffed. To the minister: which is it, staffing issues that you refused to address two years ago or a failure of the ministry to manage FOIP under your watch today?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. We believe that information should be open and transparent, and access to information is an important issue that we all take seriously. There's certainly more work to do, but we have improved turnaround times for FOIP requests and are proactively sharing more information than the government of Alberta ever has before. We're hiring more people to clear the backlog. This is necessary in many of the departments. In Justice we've increased the number of full-time FOIP employees to 18, and Executive Council has two more staff seconded from other departments.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that if the minister is having trouble deciding, I would be willing to provide her a copy of Hansard and given that during the very next estimates the minister implied that any delays to FOIP requests were due to normal circumstances such as vacancies and people who went off due to illness or maternity leave, I have a simple question. To the minister: are these inconsistencies proof that you refused to address FOIP delays within your ministry, and will you commit today to correcting this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. Under the past government FOIP was not a priority. Transparency was not a priority. We've seen this time and time again. When the people of Alberta elected this government, they elected a more transparent and honest government. That's why we are proactively disclosing more information than has ever been disclosed before. Each week we're feeding the open government portal with new data that Albertans would not previously have had access to without having to file a FOIP request. We're adding additional people. In addition to better turnaround times, we're taking action in a number of areas, posting all sole-sourced contracts over $10,000 online. We opened up the ABC appointment process to all . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister simply wasted the time of my colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky by playing politics and refusing to answer addressed questions about transparency and access to information and given that this is something Albertans genuinely care about, can the minister stop throwing her staff under the bus and articulate a coherent plan to process FOIP requests in a timely manner to get Albertans the information they require?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's so much in there that it's hard to address in the amount of time allotted. We've seen a 154 per cent increase in requests coming into the Ministry of Justice over the last several years. That's exactly why we took action and put in additional employees. We increased that from 10 employees to 18 employees. The members opposite voted against that funding. It's clearly this side of the House that's committed to transparency.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I will table the requisite five copies of outstanding questions from the Children's Services consideration of main estimates.

The Speaker: Any other tablings, hon. members?

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the 2018 Bighorn Backcountry Recreational Survey, that was done by a group called Love Your Trails. It shows that they surveyed people that actually use the Bighorn backcountry about what they felt about what was happening as far as the Bighorn backcountry being made into a wildland park.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I am rising to advise the Assembly that the business of the day and of the sitting is now complete. [some applause] Thank you. As such, I move that the House adjourn until Monday, October 29.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I might, with your indulgence, I would on your behalf show compliments and thanks to the staff, many of whom you see in this room on a constant basis but many, many more whom you do not see. [Standing ovation]

I also want you to know that Roger, as I've affectionately been told to say, has the endurance that multiplies by all of us together.

He is always there. He never leaves. [applause]

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 2:44 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(4)]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, June 7, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, October 29, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. We have to remind ourselves that the vast majority of the population, the people who we are elected to serve, don't live in this political world. They live in the real world. They live in a world where all conversation does not turn to confrontation, where common solutions are sought, where there is give-and-take, and where plans are made.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on the first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met.

Mr. Thomas W. Chambers
July 7, 1928, to June 23, 2018

The Speaker: Mr. Thomas William Chambers was elected as the Progressive Conservative Member for Edmonton-Calder for four consecutive terms, from 1971 to 1986. After graduating from the University of Toronto, Mr. Chambers came to Alberta to commence his career as a petroleum engineer in 1952. From 1978 until 1982 Mr. Chambers served as minister of housing and public works and from 1982 until 1986 as minister of public works, supply, and services. As minister Mr. Chambers worked toward affordable housing for all Albertans and oversaw the development of the Kananaskis Country. Mr. Chambers passed away on June 23, 2018, at the age of 89.

In a moment of silent prayer and reflection I ask that each of you reflect upon the contributions of those members who have served before us.

Statement by the Speaker

Gordon Munk
Jacqueline Marie Breault

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is with sadness that I stand before you today to share the sense of sadness felt by the Legislative Assembly Office following the deaths of two highly respected, genuinely kind, and truly wonderful people who were more than simply colleagues to those who worked with them side by side every day. They were in fact dedicated public servants who made this province and this Assembly effective.

Mr. Gordon Munk joined the Legislative Assembly security service in February 2000, after having spent 30 years with the Edmonton Police Service. He served as the Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms from 2009 to 2016. During his tenure Gordon served six different Legislatures through five elections. Gord discharged his duties with the utmost proficiency and professionalism. He embodied the dignity and esteem that this place commands. He had the deep and abiding respect of his peers, the members, and his colleagues within the Legislative Assembly Office. More importantly, he was a kind and caring man.

One other dedicated public servant, Jacqueline Marie Breault, who passed away on September 7 at the age of 52, had spent more than half her life working at the LAO. She started out as a summer student in 1987 and worked hard over the course of her service to become the manager of corporate services and senior records officer with finance. She, quite simply, was the person everybody went to when they wanted to know the story behind the corporate history. It was more than her work ethic that endeared her to people. It was her light, her generosity, and her warmth that drew others to her. She had a sense of humour and a zest for life that we all wish could have graced us for many more years.

Could I ask, hon. members, if you would just take a moment to honour and reflect upon these two dedicated public servants.

Thank you, hon. members. We will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Presentation to the Assembly of Ms Laila Goodridge Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin

The Speaker: I would now invite the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to proceed to the main doors of the Chamber.

Hon. members, I have received from the chief electoral office of Alberta the report of the returning officer for the constituency of Fort McMurray-Conklin containing the results of the by-election conducted on July 12, 2018, which states that a by-election was conducted in the constituency of Fort McMurray-Conklin and that Ms Laila Goodridge was duly elected as the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Kenney escorted Ms Goodridge to the Mace]

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you Ms Laila Goodridge, the new Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, who has taken the oath as a member of this Assembly, has inscribed the roll, and now claims the right to take her seat.

The Speaker: Let the hon. member take her seat.

Presentation to the Assembly of Mr. Devin Dreesen Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have received from the chief electoral office of Alberta the report of the returning officer for the constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake containing the results of the by-election conducted on July 12, 2018, which states that a by-election was conducted in the constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and that Mr. Devin Dreesen was duly elected as the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Kenney escorted Mr. Dreesen to the Mace]

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you Mr. Devin Dreesen, the new Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who has taken the oath as a member of the Assembly, has inscribed the roll, and now claims the right to take his seat.

The Speaker: Let the hon. member take his seat.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who share the burdens of public office and public service. I would like to welcome members of the Chambers, Munk, and Breault families who are present in the Speaker's gallery. I would call upon the Member for Peace River to call the names.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly an honour and a privilege to introduce the families of Jacqueline and Gord. I had the privilege and the honour of working with both of these individuals, and it was wonderful to have known them.

I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the family of former Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Gordon Munk: Gord's wife, Cecilia Munk; Gord's daughter Tracey Neufeld, and her husband, Cody; and Gord's grandsons Austin and Ethan Neufeld. I'd ask that they please rise, as they have, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

As well, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the family of Jacqueline Breault, who was the manager of FMAS at the Legislative Assembly Office: Jacqueline's mother, Elaine Breault, and Jacqueline's LAO colleagues and long-time friends Elsie Yeremiy and Colleen Smith. Would you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: I would also like to invite the members of the Chambers family to please rise: Andrea and Hannah Robb, Colin Robb, Susan Peachment, Rhys Webster, and Kevin Malinowski. Welcome. Thank you for your service to this province.

The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Arne Lietz, Member of the European Parliament from Germany. Arne is a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, a member of the Committee on Development, and a substitute on the Subcommittee on Security and Defence. He is currently touring Canada with the Friedrich Ebert foundation to discover more about Canada. I also want to introduce Raoul Gebert, who is the project manager for Canada with the Friedrich Ebert foundation. He was also the chief of staff to former NDP leader Tom Mulcair. If the Chamber can give them a warm welcome today.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce two of your guests who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I'd ask that they please rise when I call their names. As the MLA for Medicine Hat during the 28th Alberta Legislature Blake Pedersen preceded you in your home riding and served the city with pride. Blake continues to serve the people of Medicine Hat in a number of capacities, including president of the board of directors of the Medicine Hat Community Housing Society, vice-chair of the Palliser Triangle health region, and Medicine Hat Exhibition and Stampede parade committee member. Blake is joined by his long-time partner, Angela Kolody, who continues her work in southeastern Alberta as a real estate agent. I'd ask the House to please give your guests the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. member, did you also have a school group?

Ms Sweet: I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you 37 students from the McLeod elementary school. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Kercelyn Pasternak, along with their chaperones Joseph Kolacz, Kiersten Jackman, and Kelsey Quinney. If they could all please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: I'm still readjusting a little to the pace around here. I'm sure that none of you are suffering from that.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 10 teachers who are now working to help build the curriculum for the Department of Education. I have Robyn Boisvert, Aaron Chute, Pearl Wielki, Vilma Irasga, Derrik DeGagne, Rhonda Stangeland, Bill Jacobsen, Ash Bhasin, Kristel Zapanta, Lori Whillier, and Leslie Campbell. If they could all stand, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate introductions today. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a group of four very keen Alberta Party supporters, and I will ask them, the four of them, to please rise as I say their names. Serena Moar is a very, very keen volunteer who does a tremendous amount of work in the city of Calgary. She was a Legislature page, goes to the University of Calgary, studying political science and women's and gender studies. Gurjot Mand is a student at Mount Royal University, in the beautiful constituency of Calgary-Elbow, studying athletic therapy. Griffin Brown is a graduate of the University of Lethbridge, also a very keen member of the Alberta Party's provincial board. Last and absolutely not least is the next Member of the Legislative Assembly for Calgary-Lougheed, Rachel Timmermans. Rachel is a MRU policy studies student and is also the nominated Alberta Party candidate in Calgary-Lougheed. If the four of them please could rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View – do you have another?

Mr. Clark: I do, Mr. Speaker, briefly. Thank you very much. I'd like to introduce to you and through you two members of the leadership team of the Boys & Girls Clubs of Calgary. Mr. Jeff Dyer is the CEO, and Nicole Jackson is manager of research and evaluation. For over 75 years the Boys & Girls Clubs have served over 10,000 vulnerable children and youth every year in the city of Calgary. They are an important part of ensuring a bright future for children in our city. I'd ask the two of them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: I wonder if the Government House Leader might entertain a motion for unanimous consent to go past 1:50, if you would consider that?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, that's a wonderful idea, and I so move.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Now the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and welcome back to everyone in the House today. It's my great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of the strongest citizen advocates I've known in my 15 years in politics. Jenn Thompson is a leading community activist with the Serious Spectrum Sensory Support Group who once again rallied Albertans on the steps of the Legislature to push for much-needed change to the use of seclusion rooms in our public schools in this province. With Jenn are some fellow activists who joined her at today's rally – if they could stand as I mention their names – Angela McNair, Claire Wilde, Shannon Childers. Their advocacy on this issue of seclusion rooms is a true credit to our children and to this province. With them today is Leah McRorie, a lifelong activist for persons with disabilities, passionate about creating a more inclusive society that promotes equality of opportunity for all Albertans. Please join me first in welcoming them to the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you again and to all the Legislature a prominent group of Liberals building our party and providing Albertans with a moderate, forward-thinking option for the next election. Among them is our incredible leader, David Khan, a powerful voice for social justice and fiscal responsibility in our province, who I'm confident will be taking my place in the next Legislature in Alberta. Accompanying David is Edmonton-Mill Woods Liberal candidate Abdi Bakal and Alberta Liberal Party president Graeme Maitland as well as former Liberal candidate for Edmonton-Gold Bar Ron Brochu. Let's give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I introduce my special guests, I just wanted to thank the members of the Assembly on both sides. Since my diagnosis earlier this year with leukemia I've received so much tremendous support from the House. I am so grateful to everybody, and I just want to thank them so much and, certainly, thank all Albertans who sent me so many cards and gifts and support. I'm so grateful. I just want to let you all know that my prognosis is great and my treatment continues. [Standing ovation] Yes. Thank you so much.

Today I have the great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Parviz Walji and Betty Zapata. Parviz is a small-business owner, and she runs Hands Feet & Face, an aesthetics business here in Edmonton. Betty has cared for me lovingly over the years, and I always feel like a million bucks after I finish with her services. I'm glad you've risen. I'd ask you to please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: To the members of the gallery, I think that statement of one of our peers speaks to the importance and respect that exists across the House. Our best to have you back.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you a promising and inspiring young Albertan from the constituency of Calgary-Fish Creek. Matthew Melbourn is a second-year student at the University of Alberta, pursuing an honours degree in history and political science. Matthew is currently part of a leadership team and is the events co-ordinator for the United Conservatives at the University of Alberta. Matthew spent this past summer working in the nonprofit sector for the Terry Fox Foundation, aiding in donor relations and organizing a number of annual Terry Fox runs throughout the province. He's active with the UCP in Calgary-Fish Creek and across the province in promoting engagement of young Albertans in the democratic process. I would ask – he's already risen here – all members of the Assembly to join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly to Matthew on his first visit to this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions, both in the members' gallery. First, it's my pleasure to introduce Barb Furler and Dr. Marc Moreau, who are seated in the gallery. Barb works as a physical therapist at the Glenrose rehabilitation hospital, and Marc is a pediatric orthopaedic surgeon at the Stollery children's hospital and a founding member of the Canadian Association of Medical Teams Abroad. They work with a team of volunteers to provide orthopaedic surgeries, education, and therapy for people in Ecuador who would otherwise be unable to receive medical care. We are so proud to honour your work, and thank you for being here today. Colleagues, please join me in extending the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second is members from the Society of Alberta Occupational Therapists who are seated in the members' gallery. October is dedicated to occupational therapists as they have dedicated their careers to the well-being of others. OTs work to help enable and empower Albertans to care for themselves and have active, inclusive, fulfilling lives. I'd ask that Caryn George, Lauren Barrett, and Robin Telasky please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly and our gratitude.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you three constituents and community leaders from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. Born and raised in Pakistan, Chand Gul's passion for human rights and giving a voice to those who have faced oppression and discrimination is truly from her heart and her own personal journey. She is the founder and president of the Alberta Pashtoon Association, on the board of the Pakistan Canada Association of Edmonton, and was a community connector with the immigrant women's integration network. She is a strong supporter of Minister Sohi, and I'm so pleased she is also contributing her expertise and passion to my team in Edmonton-Mill Woods. I was very pleased to spend time with her at the NDP convention this weekend, and she's one of the newest members of our brand new race equity caucus in our party.

Parvin Sedighi came to Canada with her family as a refugee from Afghanistan more than a decade ago. She is now the president of the students' association of MacEwan University as well as a writer for the student newspaper, The Griff. Parvin is also the VP of communications at the Alberta Muslim Public Affairs Council. Finally, Cynthia Luna-Pasagui is an active member of Edmonton's Filipino community. She works with the Filipino Retirees' Association, can often be found performing with her local choir and band at the Mill Woods seniors activity centre and volunteering in my office. Thank you, ladies, for rising. I would now like to ask everyone to extend the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Now I would invite the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two important guests that I have seated up in the gallery, Iris Kirschner and her grandson William Gordon. Iris has been introduced countless times in this House, but it's truly an honour to be able to introduce her today. She has played such a monumental role in getting me to where I am right now, and I want to sincerely thank her. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce two outstanding constituents from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Both of these fine folks are young, passionate Conservatives, part of a new generation of leadership in the Conservative Party. They are Ashley Stevenson, who serves as the vice-president, membership on the United Conservative Party Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills Constituency Association, and Shaun Holtby, who is also a director at large of that constituency association. I'd invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce a set of other guests that are not quite as outstanding because they're not from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, but they are incredible in their own right. Recently these three individuals were influential in putting on the Energy Relaunch conference in the city of Calgary, a conference that brought people together from all walks of life and backgrounds, including the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, the Premier of Saskatchewan, and the leaders of the Official Opposition both federally and provincially here in Alberta. They are with New West Public Affairs. Many of you will know Matt Solberg, his brother Mike – I'm sure he couldn't be more proud right now – and their colleague Sonia Kont. I'd invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services and of Status of Women.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this first day back in session it's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests from the most outstanding constituency in the province, Lesser Slave Lake, who make it possible for me to do the critical work that I get to do here. I'd ask my guests to please rise as I say their names: my inspiration, my role model, my support network, who also happens to be my mom, Marilyn Larivee; the membership secretary for the Lesser Slave Lake constituency association and friend, Val Marshall; and member at large of the Lesser Slave Lake constituency association and also a friend, Lloyd Marshall. Thank you for supporting the work that I do, the work that our government does, and our fight for everyday families. Please accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

2:00

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing Marcy Oakes, Allison Pike, and Kristi Rouse, parents who are serving on the working group on the use of isolation and seclusion rooms and physical restraints in schools. Last week I met with Marcy, who shared with me about the urgency of this work, and quite frankly I couldn't agree more. As a parent and as a teacher myself I was very disturbed by many of the things that we have been learning about families' experiences with seclusion rooms in Alberta schools, and we can and must and will do better for the sake of our kids. The status quo is simply unacceptable, and all children's safety is paramount. Allison, Kristi, and Marcy are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they now please stand. Please, everyone join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests for introduction? The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Introductions seem to be the latest in the renewable resources industry of Alberta. I rise today to introduce to you and through you many of Alberta's postsecondary student leaders. They've joined me here today to witness the introduction of Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education, which I will be tabling later today. Over the past couple of years I've had the pleasure of meeting and working with students from across the province, and I'm proud that our work together has led to legislation that reflects the priorities and protects students.

I ask that they please rise as I state their names. With us today are Marc Waddingham, Sasha van der Klein, Lindsay McNena, Nicole van Kuppeveld, Mostafa Sakr, Jon Mastel, Kera Forbes, Alysson Torres-Gillett, Brandon Vollweiter, Jonas Bystrom, Chaise Combs, Naomi Pela, Garrett Koehler, Andrew Preiss, Shifrah Gadamssetti, Adam Brown, Reed Larsen, Sagar Grewal, Anayat Sidhu, Parvin Sedighi, Victoria Schindler, Andrew Bieman, and Amanda LeBlanc. I ask that all of my colleagues give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, I have two introductions today. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of individuals representing the Sierra Leone Association of Alberta. Today we have Kemoh Mansaray, president, and he's joined by his wife, Iyesatu Jalloh. They are also joined by Theresa Goba, secretary general; Kai Ngegba, assistant secretary general; and community member Aly Kamara. I would ask that they now please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

It's also very exciting to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Assembly Sandra Stemmer. Sandra is the newly appointed executive director for the North Edmonton Business Association. NEBA is a membership-based organization looking to create opportunities and interactions and engagement between entrepreneurs, businesses, communities, and government, and I would like to thank NEBA for strengthening the partnerships between those businesses, professionals, communities, and government and for creating business opportunities in the vibrant community of north Edmonton. I would now ask that she please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

Pittsburgh Synagogue Shooting

Miranda: Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of our government to offer our deepest condolences to the family, friends, and all those affected by the synagogue shooting, the horrific murder of 11 Americans in Pittsburgh on the weekend, said to be the worst attack on Jews in the history of the United States. Our hearts break for the Jewish community in Pittsburgh, and we stand united with Jewish people around the world.

Let it be said that no one should have to worry about their safety when they go to their place of worship. No family should have to worry that their loved ones might not make it home because of where or how they pray. When a community of family and friends gathers to celebrate a bris, they should not have to look over their shoulders in fear. As a father and a member of the Jewish faith, I am utterly heartbroken by this vile, unconscionable act.

To the Jewish community of Alberta, my sisters and brothers: I stand with you. Our government and, I know, everyone in this House stands with you as we all grieve. We must not allow hate and intolerance to divide us. Our government will not allow the rise of anti-Semitism, that we have seen elsewhere in the world, to flourish in Alberta. The fact that this has to be said in this day and age is deeply troubling. All of us must continue to denounce hate. As the Premier said yesterday: anti-Semitism is a dark reality that must be confronted directly; it has no place in a civil society.

We must continue to ensure that Alberta is a place of welcome for all people and all faiths where there is no room for hatred. We will continue to ensure that Alberta is a place where our Jewish community, who have helped to build this province, can go about their daily lives and can practise their faith in safety and in solidarity with their fellow Albertans.

Mr. Speaker and all of us in this House today, as we reaffirm our commitment to stand up against hate and in standing with Alberta's Jewish community and the Jewish communities around the world, I now ask you all to please stand as I recite the Kaddish, the traditional Jewish prayer for the dead, followed by a moment of silence in remembrance of those killed at the Tree of Life synagogue. [Remarks in Aramaic and Hebrew] Amen.

Glorified and sanctified be God's great name throughout the world, which He has created according to His will. May He establish His kingdom in your lifetime and during your days, and within the life of the entire house of Israel, speedily and soon; and say, amen.

May His great name be blessed forever and to all eternity. Blessed and praised, glorified and exalted, extolled and honored, adored and lauded be the name of the Holy One, blessed be He, beyond all the blessings and hymns, praises and consolations that are ever spoken in the world; and say, amen.

May there be abundant peace from heaven, and life, for us and for all Israel; and say, amen.

He who creates peace in His celestial heights, may He create peace for us and for all Israel; and say, amen. [As submitted]

Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. minister for those profound words and especially for offering the Mourner's Kaddish for this Assembly on behalf of the victims of the odious act of anti-Semitic violence in Pittsburgh this weekend, when 11 elderly American Jews were murdered in cold blood for the crime of being Jewish, in what was an expression of the most ancient and pernicious form of hatred in human history, anti-Semitism.

Mr. Speaker, it is disturbing to imagine that amongst the victims were those who saw the Holocaust, that during the Second World War nearly obliterated the Jewish population of Europe.

The alleged shooter, murderer, of the Tree of Life synagogue attack said that, quote, he wanted all Jews to die. Mr. Speaker, this is the perverted, dystopian dream of anti-Semites all through human history.

I've stood at the ravine of Babi Yar near Kiev, where Nazis, the Einsatzgruppen, mowed down 30,000 Jews, motivated by this same ancient hatred. I stood at the Chabad house in Mumbai just weeks after terrorists killed Rabi Gavriel Holtzberg and his family for the crime of being Jewish. I stood outside a pizzeria in Ben Yehuda in Jerusalem just days after a suicide bomb was planted to kill Jews. That was exactly the same hatred that invaded the Tree of Life shul during Chabad services this weekend in Pittsburgh.

While we denounce this particular crime, we more profoundly, all of us as Albertans and Canadians, denounce this singular hatred which underscores it. Elie Wiesel, the great chronicler of the Holocaust, said: we must always take sides. And so we do so in denouncing anti-Semitism in all of its forms.

I would like to read into the record the names of those whose lives were taken this weekend: Joyce Fienberg, Richard Gottfried, Rose Mallinger, Jerry Rabinowitz, Cecil and David Rosenthal, Bernice and Sylvan Simon, Daniel Stein, Melvin Wax, Irving Younger.

Mr. Speaker, in the face of this and the sad history of anti-Semitism, the Jewish people always respond with their devotion to the Covenant and to the dignity of the human person. So let us say that the haters, the anti-Semites, never win. [Remarks in Hebrew] The people of Israel live. And as it says in the English translation of the Mourner's Kaddish: may the one who creates harmony on high bring peace to us and to all Israel, to which we say amen.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to ask the House for unanimous consent to allow a representative of the Alberta Party to respond. I have not received notes from any of the other independents, so I presume that that will be all.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Alberta Party opposition and our leader, Stephen Mandel, to commemorate the victims of the terrible attack this past Sabbath morning in Pittsburgh. I'd like to thank my colleagues the hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for their heartfelt remarks.

I want Alberta's Jewish community to know that we stand with you. We denounce in no uncertain terms this horrific crime and the anti-Semitism that caused it. This serves to remind us that anti-Semitism and hatred continue to plague our society, and by all accounts it is getting worse. This horrific incident has left a hole in the Jewish community and has ripped the illusion of peace away from Jewish communities all over the world and here in Alberta.

Tonight the Edmonton Jewish community will be hosting a memorial for those who were slain or injured in order to stand with the community in Pittsburgh, and the Alberta Party will be there with you. Our hearts ache at the loss of innocent lives. Today we remember those who were injured and those who were lost. Among those who were slain were Holocaust survivors, professionals, an HIV specialist, and too many people who left us suddenly and far too soon.

Like many parents, I'm left wondering how I talk about this with my daughters. How can we ensure that the world they inherit is free from hatred, a world where anti-Semitism no longer exists? The answer, at least in part, is to be vigilant, to call out anti-Semitism wherever we see it, to build community, to build bridges, and to educate, and as leaders we must remember that it is us who set the tone.

Today we wish a full recovery to those who were injured in the attack, including the police who ran towards danger, and we mourn the loss of 11 innocent lives. May their memories be forever a blessing.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 7(8) I wish to inform the House that we will be extending Orders of the Day past 3 o'clock until its completion.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed to Oral Question Period, I'd like to inform all hon. members about changes to both the Oral Question Period and the Members' Statements rotations. My office received a signed House leaders' agreement on October 24, 2018. After reviewing the document and the changes proposed in it, I've decided to accept it. I have noted the agreement and the rotations in the memorandums that I sent to all members on October 26, 2018.

The changes to the Oral Question Period rotation, indicated in the agreement, as compared to the rotation used during the spring sitting of the Fourth Session in the 29th Legislature, are as follows. The Member for Calgary-Greenway may ask question 6 on days 3 and 7 of the eight-day rotation. These questions were previously allocated to the Official Opposition.

The House leaders' agreement has also added a question 17 to the rotation. The question has been evenly allocated between the Official Opposition and the government caucus, with each caucus receiving four questions total on alternating days, starting on day 1 with the Official Opposition.

Turning to the Members' Statements rotation, the House leaders' agreement stipulates that the Member for Calgary-Greenway receives one member's statement every three weeks on a Thursday, starting on November 8, 2018.

I've asked that copies of both the Oral Question Period rotation and the projected sitting days calendar which contains the Members' Statements rotation, among other things, be placed on members' desks. Please consult these documents for further information about the rotation.

Also note that as the Assembly commences the fall sitting today, members are on day 8 of the Oral Question Period rotation and week 2 of the Members' Statements rotation.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to, through you, wish all members back to the House. I hope they've had a productive time in their constituencies, and I hope our friends opposite in particular enjoyed their party convention this weekend.

Carbon Levy Increase

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, does the planned 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax continue to be embedded in the government's fiscal plan?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to welcome everybody back to the Legislature. It should be a very interesting few weeks: two very different versions of, I think, and two very different visions for the province of Alberta, one that works for all Albertans and one that works for the top 1 per cent.

In answer to the member's question, as he knows full well, we have indicated that until we see a definitive conclusion to the pipeline issue that was disrupted by the Federal Court of Appeal decision, the additional changes to the climate leadership plan . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in the government's spring budget it projected a balanced budget in 2023 based on a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax. In his quarterly fiscal update the Finance minister confirmed that the government was on track with the same fiscal plan. This was after the Premier indicated that she does not intend to proceed with the increase in the carbon tax, so there is an apparent contradiction here. I invite the Premier to clarify this. Does the government's fiscal plan continue to count on additional revenues from raising the carbon tax from $30 to $50 a tonne?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we have not yet had the opportunity to release our revised path to balance, but I can assure the member opposite that we still plan to meet our targets with respect to the path to balance. We do not currently have a path to balance which incorporates additional revenues coming as a result of signing on to the federal government's additions to the carbon levy, for the reasons I've already outlined, because we are focused on getting a pipeline built. Until that happens, we're not part of the plan.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Albertans would understandably be confused trying to understand that answer because the NDP's projected 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax would generate about 2 billion additional tax dollars per year, which was the basis of their claim to have a balanced budget in 2023. If it's not 2 billion extra dollars from an increase in the carbon tax, what other tax are they planning to increase in order to maintain their fiscal plan?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the member opposite – let me be very clear so there's no opportunity for sort of misrepresentations to occur – that there is absolutely no plan to bring in any other kind of tax. We are fully on target to meet our path-to-balance commitments that were introduced in the last budget, and of course the people of Alberta will see that in the next budget. What we won't do is blow a $700 million hole in the budget to give a tax break to the top 1 per cent of Albertans like the member opposite seems to think is . . .

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Well, you would forgive Albertans, Mr. Speaker, for being skeptical about that answer given that the NDP imposed a job-killing carbon tax on Albertans without having mentioned it in the last election. We have a huge hole in the NDP's fiscal plan, which is either being met by an increase in the carbon tax, that they're now pretending not to do, or by another tax increase. I'll be interested to find out which it is.

Federal Bill C-69 and Pipeline Construction

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in the spring the opposition proposed a motion calling on the government to join us in calling on the federal government to withdraw the no-more-pipelines bill, Bill C-69. The NDP defeated that motion. Why?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as the member opposite knows full well, our government has been fully committed to standing up for Alberta's energy industry on matters of development, including, of course, getting a pipeline to tidewater and ensuring that the new legislation that comes forward facilitates that and doesn't bar it. That's why we've been engaging in a year and half of advocacy with respect to the federal government, up to and including just last week, when our minister of environment went and met with copious numbers of federal officials to outline the clear problems with Bill C-69 because we are standing up for Alberta's energy.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in the spring, when I suggested that the government send ministers to Ottawa to speak out against the no-more-pipelines act, they mocked and ridiculed us for that suggestion. The Deputy Premier said, "How is it standing up for Alberta to hop on an airplane and jaunt off to Ottawa?" Why didn't the government accept our constructive advice then to intervene against the no-more-pipelines law when it was before the House of Commons energy committee? Why did they wait five months to finally act on our advice?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, our government has been standing up with respect to Bill C-69 for a year and a half, so the member opposite once again is taking some liberty with the facts. What I will say, however, is that we are not going to take advice on how to stand up for Alberta, Alberta's energy industry, and Alberta pipelines from someone who actually, when in Ottawa, said that no pipeline is a national priority. That's the member opposite's record. Our record is clear. It's out there. We're going to continue fighting for Albertans, and I suggest that he join us.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in August the energy ministers of all the provinces and the federal government came together, and they issued a communiqué. Two provinces resiled from that communiqué with a minority communiqué. They said that, quote, the no-more-pipelines law of the Trudeau government effectively hinders natural resource related economic development within the country and could erode Canada's economic competitiveness. Close quote. Alberta was not one of those two provinces. Why didn't Alberta sign on to this statement against Bill C-69 with Saskatchewan and Ontario?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I've said very clearly, our ministers have very definitively advocated on behalf of Alberta's energy industry. The federal government is fully aware of our position on Bill C-69. We have talked to them about how, while we support the intention of Bill C-69 to create greater clarity for everybody and to ensure that we instill confidence on all Canadians' parts, what they have proposed is not acceptable to Albertans. We will continue to push forward, and we will get results.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Well, the truth is that they failed to lead. They let the opposition, the governments of Saskatchewan and Ontario lead the fight against a bill which they still do not oppose, Mr. Speaker. Ottawa is not clear because they will not express their clear – this government will not call on the federal government to kill the bill, so I will invite the Premier to stand here in the Legislative Assembly and clarify for all Albertans: is it the position of her government that the federal government should withdraw the no-more-pipelines act, Bill C-69?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, again I will be very clear. We have said that Bill C-69 in its current form is absolutely unacceptable to this government and it will not support Alberta's energy industry, something that we are focused on doing. I literally cannot take advice from someone who sat in Ottawa for well over 10 years, with a Conservative government here, a Conservative government in B.C., a Conservative government in Ottawa, that didn't get a pipeline built. You know what? We're going to continue doing the work that we're doing, and we are going to get the pipeline done.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier literally does take my advice. The no-more-pipelines law that I proposed in July of last year she mocked and ridiculed, and then she made it Alberta government policy this spring. The suggestion that we fight Bill C-69: they mocked and ridiculed the idea of sending ministers to Ottawa to combat it, and now she's followed our lead. When we said, "Stop the increase in the carbon tax," they mocked and ridiculed the idea. Now they claim that they're going to stop the increase in the carbon tax. Instead of following, why doesn't this government lead in fighting for Alberta jobs and resources?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is absolutely entitled to his own opinions, but he is absolutely not entitled to his own facts. The facts are that our government has been fighting with respect to Bill C-69 for well over a year. The facts are that since we've been elected, we have done nothing but advocate for the Trans Mountain pipeline, for KXL, for line 3. You know what? We've got 2 of 3, and we are very close on the third one. Meanwhile the member opposite has nothing but failure on his resumé. Thank goodness we're the ones that are going to get it done.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's rather ungrateful of the Premier not to thank the opposition for providing her government with its agenda on these issues. Now maybe she could explain. If, in fact, we just didn't understand, why did she mock and ridicule our suggestion that we be prepared to turn off the taps to British Columbia in response to its obstructionism? Why did she mock and ridicule the idea that we send ministers down to Ottawa to oppose Bill C-69? Why did she mock and ridicule the idea that we freeze the carbon tax rather than increasing it in the face of the federal government's failure to lead on pipelines? Why is this government following and not leading in the fight for Alberta?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, again, the member opposite has a very creative understanding of history. Perhaps when he's sitting around with his friends in his room, they talk to each other and they rewrite history. That's very lovely, but what he's describing didn't happen. What, in fact, did happen is that since our government has been elected, we have worked hard to get a pipeline to tidewater, and – you know what? – we’re succeeding. When our government came into power, there was not a lot of support for this, but as a result of the work that we have done, talking about the importance to our energy industry and to Alberta workers of a pipeline, in B.C., in Ottawa, in the Maritimes . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Calgary-South East.

Bitumen Upgrading and Refining

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are facing a per-barrel discount of $50, trying to sell our raw product to the United States. We desperately need pipeline capacity and pipelines capable of delivering that product to other international customers. In the meantime we need to be smart about getting the most value from the pipeline space we do have. Upgraded products such as diesel not only deliver much more value per barrel; it also doesn’t require shipping diluent along with it. To the Minister of Energy: with the failure to secure expanded pipeline access, will you commit to doing more to support upgrading and refining in this province, where it makes sense for taxpayers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the differential lately has highlighted absolutely the need for pipelines, the need for more rail, but it also has highlighted that we need to keep value here in Alberta for the resources that Albertans own. We’re doing that. Last year we had Bill 1, that provides support to industry who wants to build here for things like upgrading, straddle plants, more petrochemical diversification, because we know that that’s what matters to Albertans.

Mr. Fraser: Our caucus recently had the opportunity to visit the North West refinery, and some of the good news that we heard: progress has been made on the carbon trunk line. This means that the refinery will be able to significantly reduce its carbon footprint, but the line also has the capacity to transport even more than that one facility can produce. To the same minister: with the carbon trunk line on the way and the North West refinery nearing completion, when can we expect your government to finally make a decision on phase 2 of this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, again, we’re working very hard every day for Albertans, for those good Alberta jobs that are provided by the energy and the diversification that keeping value here in Alberta will provide. We’re fighting for pipelines. We’re looking at all projects that will keep value here in Alberta for our industry to get a better price. This was a vision that long ago Peter Lougheed had. It was dropped for whatever reason over a number of years and – you know what? – as this government is doing, we’re picking up that vision, and we’re running with it.

2:30

Mr. Fraser: With increasing global demand for less carbon-intensive fuels there’s an opportunity here for Alberta, but we must be innovative. For example, the international marine organization has mandated that marine fuel must have a sulphur content less than .5 per cent by 2020, a standard that we’ll be meeting in Alberta thanks to the North West refinery. If we’re forward-thinking about the world’s energy needs, we can create more demand for our products and continue to grow our energy industry. To the same minister: have you done any work to identify any new opportunities and energy products that Alberta can take advantage of? If not, would you please explain to this House why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. It is true that there are new marine sulphur guidelines coming in on the international level, which speaks to the fact that Alberta must remain competitive not only within our own national emissions and pollutions controls but also the international protocols governing those things. That’s why, for example, we’re investing in clean tech and in innovation. Of that $1.4 billion that we committed to reinvestment into clean tech in oil and gas, part of that was a test project just over here in Fort Saskatchewan that manufactures that low-sulphur diesel to solve exactly the problem that the hon. member has described.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

H.A. Kostash School in Smoky Lake

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m proud to be part of a government that has built and modernized more schools than any other administration in Alberta’s history. However, much still needs to be done and nowhere as much as in the community of Smoky Lake, whose K to 12 school has outlived its usefulness and faces a multitude of serious issues. To the Minister of Education: is he aware of the present state of H.A. Kostash school?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. Yes, I am very much aware of the situation in Smoky Lake. In fact, I met a student just last week that goes to this school at the public school board student voice meeting, and he laid out in no uncertain terms exactly how the school was definitely needing some help. You know, there are many schools like this across the province. To date our government has funded 240 school projects across the province, the biggest infrastructure build in the history of this fine province. Again, this example from Smoky Lake . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you. To the same minister. Local parents have organized a letter-writing campaign to advocate for a replacement school. Can the minister comment on the types of concerns parents have raised with his ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I am aware of the state of the school, and I’m really glad for his advocacy to make sure that we’re getting a clear picture of what capital project priorities are across the province. We’ve been building across the province. We’ve been doing renovations across the province, and we will continue to do so. You need to invest in education because our population is growing. You can’t cut and fire; you need to hire and build more schools.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: considering the issues with this school, is the minister looking at approving a new school for Smoky Lake, and if so, when?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we work through a process using the priorities of capital builds from different school boards, and in due process of time that's what we do. We make these decisions together with school boards to make sure that our kids are safe and that we're building something that we can all be proud of here in the province of Alberta.

Government Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, after the last election all members of this House worked together to pass campaign finance reform legislation to get big money out of politics. Nearly every session afterwards, though, the NDP have brought forward changes to that legislation to try and plug holes in their original bill. In the last week the Premier has expressed her indignation that in exchange for political favours, political action committees are campaigning for the Tories: PACs bad. But 4 out of 5 active PACs in Alberta are explicitly backing the NDP: PACs good. Which one is true?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve to know who is trying to influence their opinion, and that is why I'm so proud that we brought forward the strongest third-party legislation system in the country and one that will stand up to court challenges. Now, it's clear from what we've seen lately that the Conservatives are still hell bent on getting around the rules and returning Alberta to the same system of entitlement that Alberta rejected in the last election, but I am very proud of the third-party election system that we have passed and that Albertans have more transparency.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are looking forward to their chance to scrap the NDP's carbon tax, but the Premier threw a wet blanket on the excitement when she stated that if Alberta scraps her carbon tax, the Trudeau government has the power to just impose his. When a court ruling put the TMX pipeline on ice, the Premier righteously proclaimed that Alberta was pulling out of Trudeau's plan and would therefore not raise the carbon tax from $30 to $40 per tonne. In short, opposition noncompliance with Trudeau: not possible. NDP noncompliance with Trudeau: possible. Which is true?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The issue here is the escalation of price starting in 2021, which we have said we are not doing. Alberta's climate leadership plan will be adequate pending the economic uplift that we can enjoy from market access for our products. Every other piece of our work on climate leadership with respect to efficiency, renewables, growing the economy, broadening the economy will remain in place, but that price escalation will not until we see concrete action from the federal government.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think you have a second supplemental left. Is that right? Just remember to stay close to the first topic that you entered into. It is supplemental to the main question, so if you could keep that in mind.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I assure you that the questions are on topic even if the answers are not.

Mr. Speaker, in the half-dozen or so times that the government has moved back the date of its balanced budget, the Premier and Finance minister have repeatedly stated that there's no need to cut spending because the TMX pipeline will solve everything. It's this one weird secret deficits don't want you to know about. But when the now taxpayer-owned TMX pipeline was kiboshed in court, the government insisted that there would be no effect on the deficit. TMX will balance the budget. TMX will have no impact on the budget. Which one is true?

Mr. Clark: Point of order.

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, three different questions on three different topics. On this one I can tell you, though, that we have many savings that have been achieved. We've cut the salaries and perks of the highest paid executives, and that's $33 million. The Conservatives on that side want to continue the culture of entitlement. We won't let them. We're rolling back, and we're saving on all sorts of things. We've strengthened hiring restraint. We have saved $107 million on that since 2015. On that side they just want to give bonuses to their friends and insiders.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, did I note that you had a point of order?

Mr. Clark: Yes.

The Speaker: Thank you. Noted.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Federal Bill C-69 and Pipeline Construction (continued)

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the Minister of Economic Development and Trade said that the NDP told the federal government that significant changes need to be made to Bill C-69 or it will doom our energy sector. Now, I completely agree and have said so in this House many times. The question to the minister then becomes: why did you and your government not propose these changes before Bill C-69 passed the House despite this side of the House repeatedly warning you that we needed to do that?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question and for the opportunity to stand up and say that the Premier and my colleagues the ministers of Environment and Parks and of Energy and I along with other ministers have been engaged with the federal government for quite some time, in fact about a year and a half, communicating at every opportunity the implications of C-69 on Alberta's energy sector and, therefore, on the Canadian economy if that bill were to pass in its current state. The reality is that we have been fighting. We've been fighting for Alberta's energy sector and for Alberta workers and companies, and we will continue to fight on their behalf.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will table those communiqués to this House, but let's talk about what this government has said about this issue. When we were pushing on Bill C-69 earlier this year in the House, the Minister of Energy said: "I am somewhat puzzled why you guys are so obsessed with the federal government and what they're doing." Through you to the minister: Minister, does your government now understand why we need to stand up to your close personal allies Justin Trudeau and the federal Liberals? Does your government finally understand the significant damage that they're doing to our energy industry and that it is your job to stand up for it?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There have been, in fact, a number of tablings in this House and other ways that we have communicated with the federal government, just to correct the record there.

Mr. Speaker, this is too important to get wrong. We have seen what happens when environmental assessment fails. We saw that with the Federal Court of Appeal decision. CEAA 2012, that the hon. Leader of the Opposition brought in when he was part of government, was part of the rejection of the TMX pipeline. We can't fix a broken system with another broken system. There are specific things that we are looking for to fix this legislation, to work with industry to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition asked earlier today in question period or pointed out, the Saskatchewan government and the Ontario government recently put out basically a minority report at a convention, an energy and mines ministry conference, in August. The Alberta government, who should have the most to lose when it comes to Bill C-69, did not side with Ontario and Saskatchewan. Instead, they sided with their close ally Justin Trudeau again. This government continues to prop up Justin Trudeau despite him not coming through for Alberta over and over. Why?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been very clear on the types of changes that we want to see to Bill C-69. We have been for at least 18 months, as long as I can remember, since this conversation began with the first discussion paper in the summer of 2016.

Now, let's talk about who's the ally of Justin Trudeau. The Leader of the Official Opposition has said that he wants to scrap Alberta's climate leadership plan and roll out the red carpet for the Prime Minister to impose his plan on Alberta. That doesn't work for the big projects that would be regulated by C-69 or even the small projects, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't work for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Alberta Review Board Decision on Patient Transfer

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In April of 2014 Matthew de Grood viciously attacked and killed five university students at a house party in Calgary. The Alberta Review Board decided to transfer him from the Alberta forensic psychiatry centre in Calgary to Alberta Hospital Edmonton, where he could be granted supervised visits in the community. Five people, just five years ago. To the Minister of Justice: will you review the decision to put De Grood on the fast track to freedom?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, all Albertans and all Calgarians were moved by this particular case. The losses that those families have suffered are absolutely unimaginable. As the hon. member opposite is well aware, the review board is governed under federal legislation, and I don't have the power to review their decision.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: That's not correct, Mr. Speaker.

Given that families of victims are taking this particularly hard and fundamentally disagree with this decision and given that De Grood obviously has manic, violent tendencies, it's hard to believe that he could be walking around on our streets. Minister, are you worried about the message that this decision sends to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, everyone was deeply moved by this particular case. I'm aware of the concerns that the families have surrounding this particular process. Again, it is a process that is governed at the federal level. Certainly, I will continue discussions with those families on ways that we can work on that process or work on advocating together to the federal government. As the hon. member well knows, it's out of my jurisdiction to overturn the decision.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice had it in her purview before October 15 to appeal this decision. She let that window close. I would ask the minister why Albertans should feel confident in our justice system and their safety with decisions like this and a minister who refused to act in time to appeal this decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, the law surrounding this issue is governed at the federal level. Crown prosecutors make decisions on when to appeal cases based on the facts of the case and the law as it stands. Those decisions are made independently to avoid political interference with those types of decisions. I am certainly well aware that the families have concerns around this process. It has been incredibly difficult for them, and we will continue to work as best as we are able to at our level on that.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, due to a difficult harvest farmers across Alberta are using grain dryers day and night to help salvage their crops and to finish before winter. These grain dryers are fuelled by natural gas and propane, both subject to the Trudeau-NDP carbon tax scheme. That works out to about $1.50 a gigajoule for natural gas and over 4 and a half cents for propane. That represents a 50 per cent increase in the NDP's original carbon tax scheme. Given this difficult harvest and counties declaring a state of emergency, what is this government's support for farmers who are paying even more in carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. From the implementation of our climate leadership plan farmers have taken the bull by the horns, if you will, and have asked me: what can they do? What can they do to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions? What can they do to take part in the lower carbon economy? And they have. As for the grain drying, most certainly we've had some wet weather this year where they've had to use grain drying, and I'm happy to report that those farmers are much further along in the harvest than they were even a few weeks ago.

Thank you.

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, given that it's been estimated that an average 2,000-acre farm will pay roughly $30,000 in carbon taxes and given that the carbon tax is higher than any rebate a farmer would receive, especially accounting for indirect carbon tax costs on fertilizer, transportation, and equipment, why does this government think it's acceptable to impose a carbon tax on our farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question, a good opportunity to inform the member and others as well about what we have done for farmers to ensure that their operations are sustainable and they're successful, as they have been over the generations. One is to ensure that their marked fuel is exempt from the carbon levy – perhaps the member didn't know that, but he does now – and as well the opportunities we've had from the carbon levy funds, $81 million to help farmers to take advantage of the lower carbon economy, to be able to make their operations more efficient both on energy and financial.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Dreesen: Mr. Speaker, given that there's a growing opposition to the carbon tax as Canadians are realizing its purpose, which is to increase the cost on everything and is just a tax grab by governments, and given that most industries in Alberta compete on a global stage and the carbon tax is a government-imposed economic disadvantage to Alberta businesses and families, can this NDP government commit to repealing their job-killing carbon tax scheme?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for his question and welcome him to the Assembly. What I will clarify for the member is that Albertans continue to pay the lowest taxes in the country, $11 billion less than the second-lowest taxed jurisdiction, which is Saskatchewan. Why is that? Well, I'm glad you asked. It's because we don't have a PST. We don't have health care premiums. We don't have a payroll tax. Even with the price on carbon Albertans pay $11 billion less in taxes. What our government is doing is reinvesting the carbon pricing back into the economy, supporting innovation, and supporting our companies to grow the economy.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Persons with Disabilities' Workforce Participation

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year Alberta joined other Canadian provinces and countries around the world to proclaim international Disability Employment Awareness Month for the first time in our history. To the minister: can you please explain how awareness contributes to the promotion of inclusive employment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We are very proud to be the first government in Alberta to proclaim Disability Employment Awareness Month. This month and every month we are committed to working with our partners, advocates, and with employers to promote inclusion and break down the barriers for the person with disabilities. Building awareness is important but only part of our work. We have made investments and taken action to improve the services that Albertans with disabilities rely on.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister. Can you please explain what our government is doing to assist people with disabilities to be better prepared and supported to participate in the economy via supported employment?

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We are expanding disability-related employment services to support part-time workers. For instance, this year we announced $600,000 in new funding for inclusive postsecondary, and we are creating jobs through our internship program within the Ministry of Community and Social Services. Instead of making cuts, as that side has suggested, we are investing in supports and services that Albertans with disabilities need and rely on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all have constituents, friends, family, neighbours with disabilities, and we all know how important it is that we continue to listen and make progress to support this community, particularly related to employment. To the minister: would you please further expand on the work that is being done to support inclusive employment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Colleague. We know that Albertans with disabilities face multiple barriers to employment, but at the same time we do know that they contribute tremendously to our workforce and to our communities, and we believe that every Albertan should have the opportunity to achieve their full potential. This is why we proclaimed DEAM. It is why instead of making cuts, we have invested in supports and services that make a difference in the lives of the people of Alberta, and Alberta can always count on this government to fight . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, in the final quarter of 2017-18 the government paid out about $800 million of capital funding for the municipal sustainability initiative. Annual funding was promised at $846 million. Then at the tail end of the year's budget cycle it jumped to $1.65 billion, but the government clawed it back this year, because the amounts to municipalities fell by the same amount in the budget. To the Minister of Finance: would you agree that if those funds had not been prepaid at the end of last year's deficit, last year's deficit would have been $800 million lower than reported and this year's deficit $800 million higher?

Mr. S. Anderson: Well, welcome back, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm proud to speak about municipal funding to our 342 municipalities across this province, who are the feet on the ground. This government, through the downturn, made sure that they had the money for their big infrastructure projects and small infrastructure projects because we know it's important to have jobs in our communities. It's important to take care of crumbling infrastructure. It was something that was left by the wayside by the last government. Our government will always be there to support our municipalities across this province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that in August, when releasing the 2018-19 first-quarter fiscal report, the Minister of Finance crowed about the deficit dropping by a billion dollars and given that I will table documents today showing that this, quote, deficit drop was simply a matter of their government slipping money from one budget fiscal year into another, to the Minister of Finance: was the only purpose of shuffling MSI money into an earlier year for the purpose of manufacturing the illusion of a dropping deficit right before an election?

Mr. Ceci: Actually, nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. We've cut the deficit by $3 billion without firing thousands of teachers and nurses, and we've done that in extremely difficult times. You know, our government was dealt a really tough hand with the collapse of oil prices. We have stabilized spending so that it's reduced from the previous government spending like drunken sailors. When they had money, they spent it; when they didn't, they cut deeply into the programs and services all Albertans count on. We're not manufacturing anything. We are managing a crisis, and we're coming out of that crisis into recovery.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve a government that makes announcements based on reality, not one that plays shell games designed to hide their gross financial mismanagement.

To the Minister of Finance: since you have been caught declaring a nonexistent deficit decrease, will you now apologize to Albertans for mismanagement so bad that you had to create this smokescreen?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, you know, we have been fighting for Albertans every step of the way through the deepest recession in two generations. We're in recovery now. We've dropped the deficit $3 billion. We will balance the budget by 2023, something that side couldn't do when oil was a hundred dollars a barrel. We are going to stick up for Albertans. That side wants to continue to make Albertans hurt because that's what Albertans can expect from the Conservatives.

Labour Legislation and Heavy Construction

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I've heard from concerned employers and job creators that with winter around the corner and limited time to finish certain roadwork and heavy construction projects, employers in my constituency are concerned. They are concerned about the changes this government has made. Up until this year associations could make applications for member companies and their employees to alter the daily hours and consecutive days of rest rules to accommodate the weather-dependent nature of the road industry work. This has all changed with the new rules. To the Minister of Labour: are you aware of any problems occurring due to the change in this process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When we came into office, we did inherit a set of labour laws that had not been updated in decades. Workers were being denied the same basic rights as workers in every other province. So I'm very proud of the work that we have done to update and modernize our labour laws. With those updates there is a process for us to work with employers or associations when exemptions or specific adjustments need to be made for those rules, and I'm very pleased to be able to say that my office has been working with the Alberta Roadbuilders as well as others who do need to factor in time of day, temperatures, and seasons.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the Alberta Roadbuilders & Heavy Construction Association submitted a request for an industry-wide exemption called a minister's variance six months ago now as the last permit issued by the GOA is due to expire on October 31 and given that the association is required to get 51 per cent of the workers to approve, which is about 26,000 signatures to be collected and returned in just two days, how has your office been supporting these companies so that the work can be completed before winter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As part of the changes to the labour laws we did include a need to make sure that there was employee perspective in all applications, making sure that there was worker support. In the case of the Roadbuilders we have been working with them and asking them for their suggestions on how best to demonstrate that worker support. We do work collaboratively with employers depending on their different situations, and I continue to work with the Roadbuilders and look forward to working with them in the future.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, will you commit to work with and come to an agreement on an extension to alleviate some of the burden that these HR professionals are having to deal with at this point?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been working with the Roadbuilders for these many months. We continue to work with them. I appreciate very much the member raising these questions here in the Chamber, and I'm happy to tell him that I have been working with the Roadbuilders and will continue to do so.

Thank you.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services released their annual report that indicated disappointing results. Cataract surgeries, sir, have doubled in wait time from 14 weeks to 29 weeks. Hip replacements have gone up from 42 weeks to 49 weeks. That's almost a two-month increase. Knee replacements, that were 48 weeks, are now 55 weeks. That's almost 14 months now, over a year. These people are all becoming addicted to painkillers. You've been Health minister for three and a half years. What have you done about this? What are you doing about this? Why is the system deteriorating?

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.
The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To any Albertan who is waiting for surgery, certainly any amount of wait is too long. While there is more to do, I am really proud of the fact that we have reduced wait times on hip fracture repair, radiation therapy. Our 17 stroke treatment centres are the best in Canada and the fastest in the world. There is absolutely more to be done on health care, and we're proud to do that. Instead, what the opposition is calling for is a $700 million tax giveaway to the top 1 per cent. What would that mean? Well, the member from the opposition from Lac La Biche said that things would hurt under a UCP government, and absolutely that's the case for people who are waiting for surgeries and demanding health care services.

Mr. Yao: It's not just surgical wait times, Mr. Speaker; it's also emergency wait times. Patients at the Royal Alex hospital are waiting an average of three hours or more. The University of Alberta patients are waiting an average of two and a half plus hours. In Calgary the Foothills emergency room wait times run from an hour 45 to two hours this year. Recently overcapacity protocols in the Red Deer emergency department were utilized, another indicator that Alberta Health Services has not been able to address the issue of wait times. To the minister: three and a half years later why has there not been any improvement in these wait times?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly have to say for anyone who is waiting for care that we want to improve the health care system. That's why we're doing things like working with family physicians to reduce the wait-list for nonurgent GI treatment by 98 per cent, Mr. Speaker. That's why we have the lowest potentially inappropriate use of antipsychotics in long-term care and the lowest amount of time spent in the emergency department for patients who have been admitted. Absolutely, there is more to be done, but the solution is not to privatize health care. It's not to lay off front-line workers. It's not to cut 20 per cent. The member for Lac La Biche, that caucus member's own colleague, said that if the UCP were elected, things would hurt. On this side of the House . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the Health budget has increased during this government's three and a half years by approximately $2 billion, and that doesn't even include your superlab building, which has doubled in cost from $300 million to $600 million. CIHI data shows that the cost in Alberta is $8,100 versus the average stay in any other province, around $6,000, and you've hired about 1,000 additional employees in AHS in your first full year while wait times continue to deteriorate. To the minister: where did you exactly open up positions? In our operating and surgery departments or emergency departments? Can you clarify? How many nurses and doctors did you allocate to these particular areas?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we are absolutely investing in front-line services and front-line care, expanding long-term care, expanding emergency services, expanding EMS. What would happen if the Official Opposition was in government? Those people wouldn't be hired, and other people would be fired. On this side of the House we stand up for public health care; we invest in the things that matter to families. On that side of the House they fight for a massive $700 million tax break to the richest 1 per cent. I think I know who's got the right priorities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Grain Drying

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farmers in my constituency and throughout Alberta have been working long hours over the last couple of weeks to try and complete the harvest of 2018. A lot of the grain in my constituency and throughout many parts of Alberta has been harvested in either a tough or damp condition. This excess moisture will cause the grain to rot quickly if not dealt with in a timely manner. Does the minister of agriculture know how much grain is in storage in a tough or damp condition, and do we have the capacity to dry this crop in a timely manner?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very good question. You know, without a doubt, September was a very troubling, very frustrating month. You know, by many measures it was the coldest month on record. We've had snow right across the province. Troubling because it was basically three Septembers in a row that we've had very unusual weather. This October we've had a turnaround in much better weather. Mother Nature has shone on us, if you will, and has created the opportunity to get a lot of those crops dryer on the ground so there's less grain drying going on. As it progresses, we just know we're close to 80 per cent done in the province. It's varied all over across the province on what the grades are like, but, you know, time will tell. Hopefully, we're going to get even more into the bin.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta farmers produce food to help feed people all around the world and given that the weather conditions this fall have necessitated the use of grain dryers to prevent grain from rotting in the bins, has the minister developed any plans or programs to ensure that farmers will be able to dry this important food in a cost-effective and timely manner?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and a very, very good question, a very timely question. The Agriculture Financial Services Corporation will take into account any of the costs for drying grain, especially if there's grade downgrade, to ensure that the cost for the grain drying is taken into consideration for their calculation for their payment for their insurance. For sure there's assistance necessary for what looks like a year. In upcoming years there's been a program announced to the Canadian agriculture partnership for upgrading and retrofitting of existing grain drying as well.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that these powerful grain dryers use natural gas or propane which are subject to a carbon tax at $1.52 per gigajoule and 4.6 cents per litre respectively and given that I hear consistently from producers hurt by the carbon tax's impact not only on grain drying but also on livestock producers, when did the minister of agriculture last meet with farmers hurt by the carbon tax and why has he not been able to convince his government colleagues to exempt all food production from their carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I meet very regularly. You know, a few days ago I met with Team Alberta, which represents grain – cereal crops and oilseed crops and pulses – across the province. I just talked to them. We talked about current harvesting conditions as well as the somewhat tough conditions across the province for excess moisture. That work continues. Like I've said before, the agriculture community has embraced the opportunity to do their part to ensure that the overwhelming financial hardship they'll be in if climate change is allowed to continue – they realize the realities.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Cardiac Care at Red Deer Regional Hospital

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Medical professionals and the central Alberta community have been pushing for stronger cardiac services for the Red Deer regional hospital. Our government reversed the previous government's planned cuts of over a billion dollars and listened to community concerns at the RDRH. AHS recently released the central zone health care plan and the interventional cardiac needs assessment and options analysis. Both made recommendations to enhance cardiac services in Red Deer, including cardiac catheterization. To the Minister of Health: can you inform the House what the process will be going forward?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the important question. We've heard the call from the community that they've been pushing for nearly two decades to strengthen cardiac care services in Red Deer and area. That's why we've asked AHS to work with local physicians and their clinical teams in developing a cardiac care road map as well as an overall central zone health plan for the region, and we now have those, Mr. Speaker. The next steps include completing the needs assessment and a business case, which are necessary for the evidence-based capital planning process.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After decades of underfunding and cuts, Budget 2018 committed a million dollars for the Red Deer health capital planning to advance the business case for the redevelopment needs of RDRH. To the same minister: can you please update us on the status of the business case and if a timeline is now in place?

Ms Hoffman: I want to begin by thanking our two local Red Deer MLAs for their tremendous advocacy for their community and on this matter, Mr. Speaker. We are working to ensure that the exact needs of the community are itemized. The former Tory government used to make empty promises. Instead, we have no plan of doing that. We want to make sure that we want to move forward with a budget and understanding of what the future demands are, and we want to get this right for central Albertans. I understand that the needs assessment will be completed by the end of this year and that AHS is planning a business case as well.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Red Deer and its central Alberta catchment area continue to grow, and the RDRH is the only Alberta hospital that is the sole major referral centre for an entire zone. To the Minister of Health: what are we doing to ensure that the Red Deer regional hospital will be able to keep pace with future population growth in central Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Red Deer hospital continues to have challenges with overcapacity, which increases stress on our overall health professionals as well as on patients and their families. This is exactly why the AHS team is working with physicians like Dr. Kym Jim as well as the local hospital foundation. I have to say that I think that we are making tremendous strides in moving forward in the three short years we've had. I wish that this project would have been taken care of 20 years ago by the former government. Instead, we're here today. We're moving forward with the community instead of proposing things like deep cuts that we know would cause pain. The UCP members admit themselves that things would hurt if there was a UCP government. We're working to build and support health care across Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, we will begin Members' Statements in 30 seconds.

Small Business Week

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago I had the privilege of attending the North Edmonton Business Association's fourth anniversary celebration. I had a lovely time talking with local entrepreneurs, small-business owners, and others to learn about the terrific work that they are doing in north Edmonton.

Coincidentally, two weeks ago was also Small Business Week. For years Small Business Week events have taken place during the third week of October with the goal of providing opportunities to network, share ideas and best practices, and, of course, celebrate achievements. This annual event was started by the Business Development Bank of Canada almost 40 years ago.

I don't need to tell you about any of the important roles small business plays in Alberta's economy. Almost 96 per cent of businesses in the province are small businesses. As of December 2017 small businesses employ more than 542,000 Albertans. Alberta small businesses have a bigger economic impact per capita than small businesses anywhere else in the country. In addition to providing jobs so hundreds of thousands of Albertans can earn a living for themselves and their families, they inject about $100 billion into our hometowns and neighbourhoods.

Our government is making it easier for businesses to do business. Our government is making sure that small businesses have the supports they need to thrive. That's why we cut the small business tax by 33 per cent, saving business owners more than half a billion dollars over three years. We also listened to small-business owners and created new tax credits that other provinces have enjoyed for decades. There are also significant small-business supports in place to help homegrown businesses through difficult times. For example, more than 260 service providers are available to help Alberta businesses achieve their goals.

Our government will continue to invest in programs that support economic diversification and innovation. Working together, I know that Alberta will continue to be the right place to launch and grow a business long into the future. As we have celebrated Small Business Week, please take time to thank your local businesses for the incredible contributions that they make to Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Project

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to rise today on behalf of the constituents of Fort McMurray-Conklin. Like many Albertans across our great province, my constituents know the importance of our oil and gas sector.

That's why the unnecessary delay of the Trans Mountain project is so unacceptable. It's devastating to consider what this says about Canada and our country's ability to get much-needed job-creating projects completed.

Today our United Conservative caucus will be putting forward a motion for an emergency debate regarding the Trans Mountain expansion. While the federal government is complacent with no new end date on consultations for Trans Mountain, no new date for when the expansion project will actually be built, we here cannot be complacent. From an ever-growing differential in oil prices to job-creating investments that are fleeing our borders, the current situation requires action. Today's situation is partially the result of two other major coastal pipeline projects that were killed off by the federal government: Energy East and Northern Gateway.

In recent years Canada is developing a reputation of a country that can't get pipelines built. Over the last year my constituents, like so many other Albertans, were repeatedly told that the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion would be built. We were told that there would be shovels in the ground, but verbal assurances and promises alone do not provide dependable, mortgage-paying, family-supporting jobs.

I sincerely hope that all members and colleagues from all parties will support today's motion. It is important that Albertans know that steps are being taken to ensure that this much-needed project will actually be built.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

New Democratic Party Convention

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, this past weekend I joined my colleagues and Albertans from across the province here in Edmonton for our New Democrat Party convention. The convention was overwhelmed and inspired with new members from all walks of life, who joined because they love Alberta.

We kicked off the weekend with Chief Laboucan and celebrated last week's historic agreement to ensure the Lubicon Lake band receives the lands and treaty benefits that they are entitled to under Treaty 8. We paid tribute to one of our Legislature's longest serving members, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who still insists that he's retiring and will not buy any of our attempts to change his mind.

We heard from delegates and speakers who let us know that our work fighting for families has made a real impact, delegates like Amanda Jensen, who was fired after she requested time off to care for her son with leukemia.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all weekend, delegates hashed out the finer points of policy, and we passed resolutions to protect and improve health care, education, create jobs, and strengthen the rights for all Albertans. We made commitments to things like increasing AISH and seniors' benefits to keep up with the cost of living and expanding the $25-a-day child care program.

Mr. Speaker, the highlight of the convention for me was, hands down, when our Premier addressed the entire convention. Her fiery speech laid out a clear choice for Albertans between a government that helps families and working people and one that helps the wealthy and elite political insiders. There is a clear choice for how we build Alberta for the future and for whom that future is built. Is it built for everyday Albertans like workers and families, or is it built for those at the top like elite political insiders and the wealthiest 1 per cent? In Alberta that future is not found; that future is made. Albertans put their trust in us to govern, and we're proud of the work that we've done, but we know that the work is not done. We will keep fighting for Albertans.

Thank you.

Rural Crime

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, there's an epidemic of rural crime. Last week I received a letter from one of my constituents who experienced first-hand the consequences of this problem. Two known criminals in a stolen truck and pursued crashed through a fence on her farm, tore across a hayfield, tossing out packets of drugs. They crashed through another gate before coming to rest against a tensile fence, all the while putting both the farm owner and her livestock at risk. This act cost thousands of dollars of damage, which was borne by the homeowner. But more significant is the emotional damage as a farm owner and a senior living alone now fears for her personal safety. No Albertan should have to fear living in their own home. The unfortunate thing is that the culprits were known offenders to the police. They got off with little more than insignificant punishment.

This constituent's story is one shared by many rural Albertans. I've heard similar stories from my constituents, and many of my colleagues in this House have heard similar stories. These Albertans are all calling on us to act as elected officials to do something to address this problem. The government needs to act. Stop the revolving door on our justice system. Create solutions to protect people and their property.

Last spring our United Conservative caucus released our recommendations to combat rural crime. The recommendations include increasing police response capacity, increasing and improving victims' services, addressing court delays, and educating the public on their rights and responsibilities in defending their own property. These recommendations came after broad consultation with Albertans, and implementation would go a long way to reducing rural crime, giving residents the peace of mind they deserve.

Unfortunately, this government has failed to take any concrete steps to reduce rural crime. Understandably, too many families do not feel safe in their own homes. Rural crime in some communities is up 250 per cent in the last number of years, including an increase in break-ins, vehicle thefts, and property crimes. One of the fundamental roles of a government is to enforce the rule of law and keep citizens safe. All Albertans deserve to feel safe in their own homes. The time to act is now. I call on this government to implement our recommendations and address the epidemic of rural crime.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Domestic Violence

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago I rose in this House to introduce Bill 204, the Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015. Today I also rise and ask members of this House to join me in taking a stand against domestic violence.

Alberta has the third-highest rates of domestic violence in the country. In 2016 the Calgary Women's Emergency 24-hour family violence helpline fielded 12,000 calls and served over 15,000 clients. In Calgary alone charges were laid in 4,083 domestic-related assaults in 2017. Recent data from the Calgary Police Service shows that there's been a 13 per cent increase in domestic violence/conflict calls. A study conducted by the Canadian Women's Foundation reported that 74 per cent of Albertans know of women who have experienced sexual or physical abuse. The Alberta Council of Women's Shelters found that one-third of all shelter admissions took place in Edmonton or Calgary, one-third in small cities, and one-third in rural communities. The report also found that the rates of indigenous women, immigrant women, refugees, and visible minorities using Alberta's shelters continue to rise.

The Calgary Domestic Violence Collective will host a launch for Family Violence Prevention Month at Mount Royal University on November 1. They have partnered with the Calgary Hitmen to hold a game in the name of family violence prevention on November 2. All levels of government, communities, and agencies need to work collectively to address the issue and support survivors and their families.

I ask everyone here to stand up and speak out, support survivors, listen, believe, validate, educate yourself on domestic violence, donate generously, and wear a pin or purple in November to show support for domestic violence prevention.

Thank you very much.

Trade with India

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, in diversifying and growing Alberta's economy over the last three and a half years, the Premier and her trade minister have ignored India, the largest democracy and the fastest growing economy. India has over 700 million people below age 35. That is purchasing power and a market that cannot be ignored. Last year the Alberta NDP angered the government of India when they committed a major diplomatic misstep. This was followed by Prime Minister Trudeau's disastrous tour, causing Canada-India relations to go downhill.

When the Leader of the Opposition and myself were invited by the diplomatic community to visit India, we did not hesitate to reinforce ties and improve relations with India. India currently uses 4.2 million barrels per day of oil and rising; 10 million barrels a day by 2040. Eighty per cent of it is imported. But it's not just about energy. India has a huge market for our pulse and legume crops. We addressed the tariffs imposed on Canadian pulse crops with four senior federal ministers, including the foreign minister and the chief minister of Punjab. We also talked about forestry, minerals, film production, higher and technical education, and telecommunications. Our delegation accomplished more in one week than this NDP government accomplished in three and a half years.

The UCP had a very successful trade mission, but instead of sending their officials to debrief us, the NDP filed a bogus complaint with the Ethics Commissioner, who rightfully saw through the electoral politics at play. Regardless of the NDP's politicking at home, we promoted Alberta and Canada abroad in a positive and constructive way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future I'm pleased to table the committee's final report on Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018, sponsored by the hon. Member for Highwood. This bill was referred to committee on March 19, 2018. We'd like to acknowledge the support provided by staff of the Legislative Assembly Office. Sincere appreciation is also extended to the organizations and individuals who contributed to the committee's review with written and oral submissions.

Mr. Speaker, the committee's final report recommends that Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018, not proceed. The report also includes an additional recommendation. This report will be available on the committee's external website. I request concurrence of the Assembly in the final report of Bill 201, Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act.

The Speaker: The Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(b) I wish to speak to the concurrence on the motion regarding Bill 201.

Speaker's Ruling Debate on Committee Reports

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, for advising that you do intend to speak to the motion. On occasion when members wish to debate a motion to concur in a committee report, the motion has been called under Orders of the Day and is not debated during the daily Routine. In case of debate on a motion to concur in a committee report concerning a private member's bill, the most appropriate time to debate the motion is during the time allocated for private members' business. Therefore, consistent with what occurred in this Assembly on October 28, 2013, and indeed in this Assembly on October 30, 2017, this motion will be called as the first item under Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders. Hopefully, you will get a chance today.

Speaking times for members will be subject to the time limits for private members' business found in Standing Order 29(3), meaning that members other than the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition will each have 10 minutes to speak, with the mover having five minutes to close debate. If the Premier or the Leader of the Official Opposition speaks to the motion, they will each have 20 minutes' speaking time.

We now will continue with the daily Routine, and this matter will come back soon.

Are there any other reports from standing or special committees? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a committee member and on behalf of the chair of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing I'm pleased to inform the Assembly that the committee's report on Motion Other than Government Motion 501 was deposited interessionally on June 18, 2018, as Sessional Paper 244/2018. Motion 501 was referred to the committee by the Assembly on April 16, 2018, with a reporting deadline of June 19, 2018. The committee is not recommending any changes to the standing orders.

I would like to thank those who provided written submissions for the committee's consideration during this process. The committee's report is available on the Assembly website.

Thank you very much.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to provide notice that at the appropriate time I will be moving the following motion:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, to discuss what measures must be taken to ensure that construction of the job-creating Trans Mountain expansion project is completed given the recent Federal Court of Appeal ruling and diminished investor confidence in Alberta's energy industry.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 19

An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Treasury Board chairman.

Bill 20

Securities Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 20, the Securities Amendment Act, 2018.

No doubt, members of the Alberta Securities Commission staff and board are very interested in this and watching it now. The securities regulatory landscape has become more complex, sophisticated, and international in scope and more driven by technology than ever before. The proposed amendments are intended to enhance the protection of Alberta investors and to promote the operation of a fair and effective Alberta capital market. Mr. Speaker, with these amendments we are ensuring that Alberta's securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's markets and evolves with international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives. These amendments will update and further harmonize Alberta's securities laws with those in other jurisdictions across Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of the written responses to the outstanding questions raised in Alberta Transportation's Committee of Supply on April 11, 2018, which were previously submitted to the Clerk's office.

The Speaker: Do any other members have items for tabling? Calgary-Hays.

3:30

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today as I indicated during my question in question period. The first one is the first-quarter highlights from the Alberta government, where they brag about having a billion dollar reduced deficit.

The second one is the CBC reporting on August 31, 2018, where the minister brags about having a billion dollar reduced deficit.

In the third tabling are notes from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, notes to the consolidated financial statements from their annual report, which indicate that they shuffled $800 million from one year to the next, which means that there was no billion-dollar reduction in the deficit as reported by the Minister of Finance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a special submission to the National Post that ran on October 25, 2018, that's collectively signed by the presidents of Canadian Energy Pipeline Association, Canadian Gas Association, Independent Contractors and Businesses Association of B.C., Explorers and Producers Association of Canada, Chemical Industry Association of Canada, and finally, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. They talk very eloquently about the Bill C-69 and C-48 challenges.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and climate change.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of letters sent by Alberta business, industry, and indigenous communities with concerns around Bill C-69. I have five copies of a letter written on October 5 to the standing Senate committee from the Calgary Chamber of commerce. I have five copies of the October 12 correspondence sent to the Senate of Canada from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, and the requisite number of copies from the Chiefs Council from the Eagle Spirit Energy corridor, also expressing concerns about Bill C-69. In all three cases the writers of those letters have asked for amendments to this piece of legislation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other tablings?

Hon. members, I have four tablings today. The first, I would like to table five copies of the amendment to the Members' Services consolidated orders passed June 21, 2018.

Second, I would like to table five copies of the Health Quality Council of Alberta's 2017-18 annual report, as per the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act.

Third, I would like to table Health Quality Council of Alberta's annual review which includes a summary of activities, accomplishments, and financials.

Fourth, I would rise to table five copies of the October 26, 2018, memo and attachments to the members: question period and Members' Statements rotations.

Hon. members, I believe we have two points of order. I'll call upon the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Point of Order

Supplementary Questions

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to raise a point of order on the questions asked by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. Independents get one question a week, and it looked like he was trying to knit together three completely unrelated topics into his one question.

Mrs. Pitt: Wonder where he got that from?

Mr. Clark: One of my hon. colleagues here is asking: where do you think he learned that from? Well, I will admit to perhaps trying that once in 2016, and to your great credit, Mr. Speaker, you caught me at the time.

If I could just start with a couple of very brief citations. House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, 2017, page 513, under supplementary questions it says: "By definition, a supplementary question is meant to arise from the information given to the House by a Minister or Parliamentary Secretary in his or her response to the initial question." Beauchesne's, sixth edition, page 122, section 414. "The extent to which supplementary questions may be asked is in the discretion of the Speaker," which establishes, of course, Mr. Speaker, that you have the ability to decide whether or not we hon. members can in fact continue with our questions.

I'll reference you to a ruling you made just last spring, in which you had referenced Speaker Kowalski. Speaker Kowalski on May 12, 2004, page 1390, said that "there's also a tradition we follow here that if an hon. member is recognized, they raise first a question . . . they're allowed two supplementals." And the important part: "has always been understood that supplementals must have something to do with the first question."

The three questions that were asked went to three different ministers. One was about campaign finance reform and PACs, one was about the carbon tax to a different minister, and the third was about balancing the budget to yet a different minister. I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that it's important that we respect the integrity of the question process and that all questions and supplementals relate to the same topic.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll be brief. I agree with the arguments put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

The Speaker: Hon. members. To the Member for Calgary-Elbow, there's even more recent history. I think I dealt with this matter in April earlier this year. Since this is first day, one might have some leniency, but let me allow this as an opportunity to actually consider stepping in before the second question was asked. I give the benefit of doubt to the individual, and I want all members to be aware that I intend to address this matter if it should repeat itself again, but I'm sure that will not happen within this Assembly. So I believe there was a point of order.

Government House Leader, I think we have an additional point of order. Is that correct?

Point of Order

Addressing Questions through the Chair

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, during question period today the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was asking a series of questions to the Minister of Health and during that group of questions, in a fairly aggressive way, pointing at the minister he referred to as "you." I want to just make a couple of points. In Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, on page 142, "It is the custom in the House that no Member should refer to another by name. Members should be referred to in the third person as 'the Honourable Member for'" or the "Minister is normally designated by the portfolio held." That is the hon. Minister of Health in this case.

Mr. Speaker, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, 2017, on page 510 under the section dealing with principles and guidelines for oral questions it says very clearly, "Finally, all questions and answers must be directed through the Chair." So this is maybe just a good opportunity to remind all members of this, that when in debate or in question period in particular they should be going through the chair and not referring or going directly to another member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Government House Leader for pointing out what is, in fact, true in this Assembly. First of all, on behalf of the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo I will withdraw the direct comment toward the minister, which I do not believe was his intent, which I think the Government House Leader has recognized in those comments, but the procedure is to speak through you, of course.

But I would also ask that while we are on this point of order, then, Mr. Speaker, that in the future the Government House Leader would go out of his way to make sure that his members would do the same. I could pull out reams of Hansard of their cabinet ministers across the way answering questions directly to us and making some pretty significant insults along the way. What's good for the goose is also good for gander.

The Speaker: I believe we had a notice.

Mr. Nixon: I've already withdrawn it.

The Speaker: Noted. Thank you for withdrawing. I would underline the point, again, about sensitivity to those kinds of comments by everyone in the House.

3:40

Emergency Debate

The Speaker: I think we're at the matter of an emergency debate question, and you would speak to that, Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Project

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on my motion, which I've already provided notice of. I will not waste the House's time rereading it. I believe all members of the Assembly now have a copy of it that has been brought around by the pages.

The question, of course, that you need to answer at this point, Mr. Speaker, is the urgency of this situation. You know, I could spend my time here right now just talking about the fact that 441,000 person-years of work are tied up right now if Trans Mountain is approved, this in a province that has the largest unemployment outside of the Maritimes in this country.

But I will not spend too much time talking about that, Mr. Speaker, because you have already ruled last spring, while giving us an emergency debate on this exact same issue, that this is urgent. The issue that Albertans are facing, the consequences to Alberta are urgent. The government has agreed with that statement in the past and you have as well. I think that the question then becomes for the Chamber today and you: what has changed since the last time that you granted that emergency debate motion in this place?

What has changed, Mr. Speaker, is the following. When we had that debate, the government members, as they have in question period and throughout our time in the Assembly, got up and assured the people of Alberta, assured this side of the House, and sometimes even grandstanded and prematurely celebrated, but they made it very, very clear that Trans Mountain would be built, and that construction would have started by now. Now, since the last time that we have been in this place, you and I both know that that has changed, that the government was, in fact, wrong about that. They certainly celebrated it too early, and now we see from the Court of Appeal decision that there are not, as they like to say, two pipelines approved under this government. There is yet another pipeline that has been lost underneath this government. That has changed significantly.

Now, since then, we have not heard a clear plan from the government on where the Assembly of Alberta will be going under their leadership, what their plans will be to be able to make sure that this project is built. That has changed.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I won't spend a lot of time quoting things for you, but I would like to bring to your attention one thing in Beauchesne's. I'm looking at the sixth edition on page 113, section 387. In the last sentence it says, "In making his ruling, the Speaker may, on occasion, take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate." The reality is that the urgency question, while I think it is relevant and clear, you can overlook even that if all sides of this Assembly want to have a debate on this important issue for Albertans.

I am certain – and I will be surprised if the Government House Leader rises momentarily to say that they do not find this urgent because it will be significantly different than their comments that are in the press. So I hope – I hope – that the government will stand and support this Assembly having a right to debate this important issue on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That, I suppose, tangentially touched on the urgency of the matter, a bit more like a preamble to the political debate.

But, you know, Mr. Speaker, I really hate to disappoint the Official Opposition House Leader. In fact, it could be quite unpleasant. So I want to indicate on behalf of the government that we agree. Under Standing Order 30(2): "The Member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request . . . and the Speaker may allow such debate as he or she considers relevant [with respect to the] urgency of debate."

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is something that I think is very important to all Albertans. It's certainly something that's a very high priority for our government. I would dare say that it's the top priority at this time of the government of Alberta.

Having said that, I believe that it does meet the test laid out in Beauchesne's and in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice to be considered a genuine matter of urgent public importance, and it is worth setting aside the regularly scheduled debate. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government we will support the opposition's call for a debate on this matter and support the argument of urgency and suggest that the wishes of the House are to proceed with the debate.

The Speaker: Thank you. As was pointed out by the Opposition House Leader, there was a similar discussion on April 9, earlier this year, when this Assembly was adjourned to debate a Standing Order 30 matter, the subject of which was somewhat similar to the application that has been brought forward today by the Opposition House Leader. Standing Order 30 applications were put forward on May 30, 2018. I wish to note for the Assembly that while similar to the previous applications, the application made today constitutes a different question and therefore on that basis does not contravene Standing Order 30(7)(d).

On the question of whether the matter relates to a genuine emergency, as has been noted previously, it is without doubt that the Trans Mountain expansion project is of great economic importance to Alberta and indeed to all of Canada. The decision of the Federal Court of Appeal to overturn the National Energy Board approval of the project undoubtedly adds a different dynamic to the issue. In fact, this matter is of such importance that it would be difficult to conclude that the impact of the Federal Court of Appeal's decision does not constitute a genuine emergency.

In addition, I find that in light of the new circumstances relating to the Trans Mountain expansion project, the need for a debate has taken on a renewed energy. Therefore, I find that the request for leave is in order.

I think we can proceed. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for granting us the opportunity to spend some time this afternoon in this Assembly talking about what is arguably the most important issue facing our province, certainly one of the top two or three issues that are facing our province right now. We do know that the Federal Court of Appeal made a decision, a decision that I disagree with. It seems that the government has indicated that they disagree with that decision as well, a decision that has angered Albertans, frustrated Albertans, and put us in a situation for an indefinite period of time of not knowing what's going to go on with this product, which is then compounding the problem of being able to get our largest industry's product to tidewater, that continues to go on and on.

The reason, I think, that this is an emergency that should be discussed in this place today – and I'm glad that you, Mr. Speaker, gave us that opportunity – is because we have gone through a history during this process of this current government, the NDP government of Alberta, getting this wrong repeatedly. Now, sometimes, maybe to their credit, along the way they start to do some stuff right but often too late, usually after making fun of the opposition for suggesting it, attacking the opposition for suggesting it. They sometimes finally go and actually take the action that needs to be done, often the exact action that we already asked them to do in the past.

The problem, though, Mr. Speaker, is that it's always too late with this government and that we continue to end up in a situation where nothing is moving forward on this important situation. This government continues to sit on their hands most of the time, continues to stand with their close personal friend and ally Justin Trudeau in Ottawa and the federal Liberals against Alberta's interests, and to react too late. Then, as we go along the way, all of a sudden they'll stand up and say, "Oh, we're right; we're the big champion of this issue," and they'll try to do what we already suggested they do sometimes months and years before.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We saw it with the B.C. part of this argument. Long before the appeal court made their decision, the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues on this side of the House were standing in this place making it clear that we needed to take drastic action against B.C. to enforce our constitutional rights with our resources, up to and including shutting off the taps. In fact, the Leader of the Opposition was raising that long before he was elected by his constituents to be in this place. Along the way the Premier and the cabinet ministers across from me made fun of him, compared him to Trump, said terrible things about him. It was shameful, Madam Speaker.

Then, as we already know, they come back to this place – poll numbers have changed; something must have been going on – and they change their mind and bring forward legislation that the Leader of the Opposition proposed. But do they act on it, Madam Speaker? No. They realized that the people of Alberta agreed with us, so they had to do something. So they passed a piece of legislation that, I would submit to you, they had no intention of ever using. In fact, they dragged out the process, filibustered their own bill in this place, as this side of the House repeatedly called for a vote on that issue to get it done to be able to give the Premier and her cabinet the ability to deal with that issue. They, shockingly, kept filibustering that bill because they had no intention of taking any action on that issue.

We fast-forward now throughout the process and watch minister after minister – the environment minister, the Deputy Premier, the Premier, the Economic Development and Trade minister, the Government House Leader, the Energy minister – stand up and say: “We got two pipelines approved. We got this done. You can come to the party when it’s built.” The Energy minister guaranteed in this Assembly in question period that shovels would be in the ground by this time, in fact six months ago. We know that is not the fact.

Then the hon. Leader of the Opposition starts pointing out stuff like Bill C-69, which is basically going to stop any pipeline from ever being built if we don’t deal with that. He pointed out what would eventually just become S-245, which was Alberta Senator Doug Black’s bill that would designate Trans Mountain to be in the national interest. The Leader of the Official Opposition was pushing for that long before that was even in the Senate. In fact, he dispatched me as his House leader to have a meeting with the Government House Leader to try to negotiate wording around a motion that everybody in this Assembly could support, and they mocked us in that meeting. They said that this won’t work. They didn’t want to do it. They don’t want to stand up for it. They’d rather go out of their way to be able to continue to prop up Justin Trudeau despite the fact that he continues to hurt our province, to hurt people.

You know, I was in Rocky Mountain House on Saturday. Sixteen businesses in a community that really depends on the energy industry have been shut in the last year. I am tired and I know everybody in this House has to be tired of seeing people that have lost their jobs while this government continues to be too late to the party, too late to take action. Now we see the appeal court decision. What’s the government going to do? So far they’ve done nothing. I mean, they started to a little bit say that there are some problems with the way that Justin Trudeau has reacted to this, but most of the time they still go out of their way to protect their ally. As we know, in August of this year at a convention where Ontario and Saskatchewan refused to sign basically an agreement or memorandum because of Bill C-69, this government signed on to it anyway. They didn’t join Ontario and Saskatchewan in defending our province’s interests.

Why has this government not acted, and what are they going to do to get this project moving? When are they going to start to demand that Justin Trudeau and the federal Liberal Party make this project in the national interest? When are they going to take action? What I am scared about, Madam Speaker, is that what we are going to continue to see is the same pattern of behaviour that we’ve seen from this government since it started on this issue: standing up prematurely, spiking the football, and saying that this project is completed, trying to score political points while the people of Alberta suffer because it’s not completed.

I remember last session sitting in the Federal Building in the opposition offices listening to the cheers of this cabinet and these government caucus members outside, cheering that this project was built, but it’s not. It’s not done. What we need this government to do is to stop focusing on trying to take credit for something that hasn’t been done yet and start focusing on how we can get this thing done for the people of Alberta, because they’re depending on us to do that.

Their actions so far have been nothing short of shameful. To take credit and say that something is done when it’s not done is shameful. I can tell you that my constituents and, I know, your constituents as well, Madam Speaker, would agree. They don’t want to hear anymore this government saying over and over that they’ve got this project built when it’s not built. They want this government to come forward with a clear plan on how they’re going to move this project forward. That’s what they want.

I’m not going to use all of my time today because I know that so many members in this Assembly want to speak to this important motion, but I call on this government to stop playing politics with this issue, to start working with all members of this Assembly, to start standing up to their close personal friend Justin Trudeau, and to work to get this pipeline built once and for all. The people of Alberta are depending on it. We need to get our oil to tidewater.

Madam Speaker, through you to them: please stop playing games.

The Deputy Speaker: Just before I recognize you, hon. minister, technically we have not concluded the Routine, and we haven’t completed Orders of the Day. However, it will be okay if anybody wants to have their coffee or tea in the House in the new cups. So go ahead.

The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’m pleased today to rise and speak to this important debate. I’m always pleased to have the opportunity to comment on what’s been a key focus of our government and for the office in particular, the fight for adequate market access for Alberta’s energy resources. It goes without saying that, like most Albertans, I am deeply frustrated by the new obstacles that have arisen with the Trans Mountain pipeline since we last met. I’m also deeply concerned by the growth of the differential between the price of west Texas intermediate crude and western Canadian select in the recent weeks. The differential has huge consequences for the western Canadian energy sector and, more importantly, of course, for the men and women who work in that sector, their families, and our communities.

It’s even more frustrating, Madam Speaker, when you consider that in many respects things were starting to look up for our energy sector. They are looking up. Jobs are up; new oil sands projects are opening; the oil and gas sector is growing again. Our government is committed to ending the boom-and-bust cycle that we’ve seen in the past many years, and we are a government who is committed to building a recovery that’s built to last. That means getting the greatest possible value for our resources. That’s why we have placed huge emphasis on more diversification in our energy sector through programs such as PDP, the partial upgrading program, and the petroleum feedstock infrastructure program. The first round, as we all know, of the PDP is already creating new jobs in our province with the build of the new Inter Pipeline project. My department is busy evaluating the second round of the PDP and other programs as we speak. I might remind the people of Alberta that these are programs that our opposition opposed in the last session.

Make no mistake, Madam Speaker. Energy diversification is only one answer to getting our resources to market and value out of our resources. There’s no question that better market access for our resources, whether it’s raw or refined, is another big part of the answer. That’s why market access has become a key priority for our government since our government was first elected. Indeed, one of our Premier’s first out-of-province meetings after our government was elected was to eastern Canada to pitch the benefits of Energy East, and as members in this House know, our Premier has been a vocal champion for pipelines ever since that day. She has criss-crossed the country pitching the benefits of pipelines to anyone who will listen.

Through our Keep Canada Working campaign, we have invested significant resources in educating Canadians about the economic value of pipelines, and we have shown continental leadership through our climate leadership plan, tackling head-on the chief concerns of many Canadians from all walks of life about the potential environmental impacts of pipelines. Madam Speaker, the results are speaking for themselves. Since our government undertook this work, support for the Trans Mountain pipeline has risen dramatically, to the point where now 7 out of 10 Canadians support the pipeline. This is a huge increase and a huge testament to the persuasiveness of our arguments.

On this side of the House, Madam Speaker, we've taken concrete steps to show our support for pipelines. Let's look at Keystone XL, for example. Our government has entered into an agreement with TransCanada to ship 50,000 barrels per day down the Keystone XL pipeline. The president of TransCanada thanked us for our commitment to the project, which he described – and I quote – as instrumental to achieving the commercial support needed for the project to proceed. Thanks in part to our support of Keystone XL, construction on the pipeline will begin next year. So that's one pipeline under way.

We've also supported Enbridge's line 3 project every step of the way. This project, once completed, will enable Enbridge to increase oil transport from 390,000 barrels per day to 760,000 barrels per day. Late last week this project cleared another major hurdle when the Minnesota Public Utilities Commission issued a written order for the Enbridge line 3 route permit. This built on an agreement in August between Enbridge and the Fond du Lac Band of Lake Superior Chippewa that the replacement line could cross the reservation on its route from Alberta to the Enbridge terminal in Superior. So, Madam Speaker, that's two pipelines.

Now we come to Trans Mountain, the pipeline project. Every step of the way we've stood up for Alberta jobs and fought to get this pipeline built, and we are not backing down now. This project means thousands of good jobs, a better price for our resources, and more revenue for services that we all rely on in our communities. With the U.S. as our only customer, money that should be going to Canadian schools and hospitals is instead going to American yachts and private jets.

Madam Speaker, I think it's important to provide some context for the debate here today. The Federal Court of Appeal ruling quashed the federal cabinet's approval for the Trans Mountain project, but it's important to note that there would have been no such approval without the leadership of this government and our Premier, because our government made Alberta a continental leader instead of a continental laggard on climate change, because our government placed a hard cap on greenhouse gas emissions from the oil sands, and because our government effectively delinked growth in emissions from approval for this pipeline.

This pipeline was approved, but we didn't stop once the pipeline was approved. We continued to speak up for the importance of this pipeline at every available opportunity. Our Premier explained to Canadians the importance of market access in terms of getting a better value for our resources. She made the case for the economic benefits that will flow to all parts of Canada from this pipeline, and instead of denying the reality of climate change, as the opposition would have us do, she addressed those concerns head-on. Not only did she speak about the work our government is doing to address climate change, but she made the case that we need better value for our resources to pay for the kinds of programs that are necessary if we want to make meaningful progress on the issue, and she demonstrated that there is, in fact, no meaningful progress in addressing climate change unless we get better value for our resources. It's not a question of either/or; it's not actually possible to have one without the other. The result, Madam Speaker, has been that massive increase in support that I already spoke of.

What else have we done? We participated in and won 17 separate court decisions in the process. When the government of B.C. threatened to put obstacles in our path, we implemented a temporary ban on wine imports and followed up with Bill 12 last spring. That legislation remains in our tool kit and is something we will use if needed. When Kinder Morgan indicated that they would be withdrawing from the project, we worked with the government of Canada to secure federal investment in the pipeline, and we showed our commitment to that project with a pledge to provide indemnity up to $2 billion should the costs of the project rise to the point that such investment was needed. If it proves to be necessary, Albertans will receive shares in the pipeline commensurate with our investment.

We had hoped that we would be closer to the finish line than we are. Our previous 17 court victories gave us ample reason for optimism, but here we are. We've been clear that this ruling was bad for working families and bad for our economic security in Canada and in Alberta. Ottawa should have appealed the ruling to the Supreme Court, and we are very disappointed that they did not. Successive federal governments have created the mess we are in today. It's time for Ottawa to fix what's been broken.

We've made our view on this crystal clear by withdrawing from the national climate plan until we see action. Alberta, Madam Speaker, is a climate leader. We will continue to do our part to address climate change because, unlike members of the opposite side, we recognize that this is the right thing to do. But we have said all along that taking the next step and participating in the national climate plan can't happen until Trans Mountain is built.

We will continue to do our part in the coming months to maintain and increase public support for this pipeline. This government and our Premier will continue to seek opportunities to make our case directly to Canadians. We will work with the federal government to ensure that the new round of indigenous consultations takes place as quickly as appropriate.

We have also called on the federal government to amend legislation to make it clear that marine wildlife should not fall under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board. We were very disappointed that they did not do this. They have instead chosen to consult on this matter as well. At least, they have set a clear timeline in this case. We have made it very clear that we are going to hold them to timelines and keep their feet to the fire.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank the hon. the minister for her remarks. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to debate this critical motion to discuss a matter of urgent . . . importance; namely . . . measures [that] must be taken to ensure that construction of the job-creating Trans Mountain expansion project is completed given the recent Federal Court of Appeal ruling and diminished investor confidence in Alberta's energy industry.

Madam Speaker, as we know, getting a fair price for Canadian energy is existential to Alberta's economic future. Our failure to do so means that we are selling Alberta oil to the Americans, our only export market, for roughly $20 a barrel while they actually sell American oil, heavy crude, to the rest of the world now as an exporter at $70 a barrel, a $50 price differential on some days in the last month.

If you include the price differential on natural gas and the $11 billion of foreign oil that we import every year to this country because we are not energy independent, notwithstanding having the third-largest oil reserves in the world, if you include those factors, the total estimated annual cost of this problem of bottlenecking of our resources amounts to some $46 billion a year and an estimated $14 billion in forgone government revenues, not to mention the thousands of jobs that would be created by the Trans Mountain pipeline directly and upstream jobs that would be created by it as well, $46 billion of wealth that we are effectively giving to the United States and to some of the world's worst regimes: the Saudi dictatorship, the Iranians, the Venezuelans, and other OPEC dictatorships. Madam Speaker, this is intolerable, and it must end.

The problem is this. The reason we are talking about Trans Mountain in this place today is because all of the other efforts to get a coastal pipeline built have been killed by the current government's policies. Northern Gateway was a pipeline that would have gone, Madam Speaker, from Edmonton, from Sherwood Park in fact, to Kitimat, B.C. It was approved by the National Energy Board, with conditions, after three years of exhaustive reviews and hundreds, thousands in fact, of intervenor statements, all of this applied against the highest environmental and technical standards of any energy regulator on the planet, yet it was killed by a close friend and ally of this NDP government, Justin Trudeau. But what's worse is that our own Premier publicly campaigned against the Northern Gateway pipeline and did not raise a word of protest when it was vetoed by her close ally Justin Trudeau. In fact, she admitted to this Chamber under questioning last spring that her position was that we only needed one coastal pipeline. The problem is that by taking that position, informed by the NDP's historic antienergy ideology, we have ended up exposed to this campaign of obstruction on the last project that has any potential for completion.

Then the NDP's close friend and ally Justin Trudeau proceeded to kill the Energy East pipeline route that had been proposed by TCPL, a good Alberta company, after they spent nearly a billion dollars. They killed it, Madam Speaker, because, as they said in their statement of August 23, 2017, regulatory uncertainty created by the National Energy Board's decision to move into the regulation of up- and downstream emissions associated indirectly with the pipeline would become part of the responsibility of the project proponents. Trans Canada said that they had no idea what they meant. How could they possibly be accountable for upstream emissions for the production of oil that they don't produce or for downstream emissions for its consumption? So they cancelled that.

I note parenthetically, Madam Speaker, that the federal government forced the National Energy Board to change its regulatory parameters by including up- and downstream emissions, that led to the killing of Energy East. But isn't it curious that the Saudi and Venezuelan OPEC oil that is shipped into St. John or Montreal is not regulated by Canada based on either the up- or downstream emissions profile of that energy? This was a decision by this government's ally, Justin Trudeau, to penalize Canada, which has the highest environmental, human rights, and labour standards of any major oil and gas producer.

Of course, Madam Speaker, in late October 2015 then President Obama vetoed the Keystone XL pipeline, vetoed a second application by TCPL for a presidential permit for that project, and the NDP's close friend and ally Justin Trudeau surrendered: no diplomatic response to that devastating decision, which resulted in a further three years of delays on Keystone. Guess what, Madam Speaker? The NDP campaigned against Keystone from the very beginning. I will never forget seeing NDP Members of Parliament flying to Washington to lobby Congress to stop the Keystone XL pipeline. We had members of this cabinet standing on the front steps of the Legislature calling for the Keystone XL pipeline to be killed.

They got what they wanted. They got the veto on Keystone, they got the veto on Northern Gateway, and they got the carbon tax, that they and the Trudeau Liberals conspired on behind the backs of Alberta voters, and then they got, Madam Speaker, Bill C-69, the no-more-pipelines act, which this government would not oppose when it was introduced. They would not send ministers to Ottawa to oppose notwithstanding our suggestion that they do so.

And so now what have they done? They've ended up exposing us to one last prospective pipeline, Trans Mountain, and what happens? Their fellow partisans, the New Democratic Party in British Columbia, come to power and launch a campaign of obstruction. What does this government do about it? The square root of nothing. When last summer I suggested that we show there would be reprisals, that we indicate that we would be prepared to replicate Peter Lougheed's turn-off-the-taps strategy of 1981, the Premier mocked and ridiculed me. She said that I was acting like Donald Trump and that I wanted to build a wall around Alberta and that I was having a temper tantrum. It took her seven months, though, Madam Speaker, before finally realizing that we were right, when the government began to replicate our language.

Now we've had yet another setback. It seems like every few weeks throughout this year this government were doing their victory lap. They were spiking the football on the construction of Trans Mountain. In fact, they had a resolution at their convention this weekend: be it resolved that the Alberta NDP convention congratulate the Premier and the provincial government on their leadership in securing the expansion of the Trans Mountain pipeline, quote, unquote. [some applause] They're applauding the nonexistent expansion, Madam Speaker. They're living in cloud cuckoo land. All that's happened is that the proponent fled Canada. Kinder Morgan said: there is no investor certainty; we're out. Now we as taxpayers have ended up holding the bag, with a $4 billion risk, and yet another block, yet another delay.

Madam Speaker, in response the government said that they were going to talk tough to their close friend and ally Justin Trudeau. The Premier said that she would hold her friend Justin Trudeau's feet to the fire and insist on an immediate appeal and timelines for restarting the process immediately. What did they get? No appeal, Madam Speaker.

The Prime Minister, after all the Premier and the NDP have done for him, after the carbon tax, after supporting him on vetoing Northern Gateway, after being mute on his cancellation of Energy East, after his northern B.C. tanker traffic ban Bill C-48, after the clean fuel standards, after all of this that has hammered the engine of our economy, wouldn't even give her an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. You've got to ask why. Does this Prime Minister actually want it built?

Madam Speaker, that is why it is time, I submit, that we had an Alberta government that will without apology go on the offence against the well-funded foreign interests that have led this campaign of defamation against Canadian energy, that, for example, funded the litigation that led to the Federal Court of Appeal decision. Yes, this should be appealed, but it is time that we demonstrated to our partners in the federation that if we cannot get a fair price for our resources, we are prepared to put on the table equalization and demand fairness . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to this very important topic. I want to clarify some of the, I think, misconceptions or mischaracterizations that the Leader of the Opposition has stated. First and foremost, you know, it needs to be clear that when the Northern Gateway project and Energy East were both shot down, part of the reason why those decisions were made was because the previous Harper government failed to take adequate action to address the concerns in order to get the approvals for those two projects.

Now, I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that we were very disappointed to see the project of Energy East not move forward. We know that Alberta energy producers are the most responsible, have the highest environmental standards to adhere to, the highest safety standards, and we have an incredible human rights track record. What is incredibly frustrating for our government is the fact that Alberta energy producers have the capacity to produce energy for the rest of our country, and projects like Energy East have been stifled because of a few.

But I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that we will continue to advocate for pipelines in all directions. As my colleague the Minister of Energy pointed out, our Premier, our government committed 50,000 barrels per day for the Keystone XL project to move forward. We know that this is a step in the right direction. It will reduce the differential, which, as other folks have pointed out, is incredibly high at the moment and is having a significant impact on our energy sector.

Let me tell you and outline just briefly, Madam Speaker, some of the initiatives and actions our government has taken in order to support our energy sector. You know, when we first came into power, we announced a royalty review because a comprehensive review hadn't been done for quite some time. We talked to energy companies, the energy sector, and listened to their feedback. We struck a committee that engaged with leaders across the province and internationally to look at how Alberta's royalty regime can reward innovation, can reward efficiency, and can help encourage more investment at a time when it was most needed, which, of course, was when the global collapse of oil prices occurred back in 2015.

We came forward with a royalty regime that, quite frankly, Madam Speaker, I'm very proud of and that many companies have said: this is exactly the action that we've been asking government for. It took an NDP government to listen to the energy sector, to amend our royalty regime in order to incent investments. Let me tell you. Some companies were so excited about the new royalty regime that they applied for early access.

For instance, EnCana spent $25 million to drill new wells in the Duvernay and Montney basin in northwest Alberta. They said that that spending would not have happened had we not made changes to the royalty system. I can quote Michael McAllister, who's the chief operating officer of EnCana, who said: it allows for investments in Alberta to compete with those in the U.S.

Those changes came into effect January 2017. By the middle of that month there were 247 active rigs in the province, more than 50 per cent more than that time the year before.

Now, that's not all, Madam Speaker. We also looked at new regulatory processes with the AER, which means that new projects can get up and running even faster, which we know will create jobs and improve our competitiveness. We know that we're saving industry hundreds of millions of dollars.

4:20

Now, Madam Speaker, I will say that positive steps have been made, but we acknowledge that there can be more, that we can do more, and we'll continue to work with our energy sector and with the AER to look at ways to expedite approvals so that we can get more men and women back to work in our energy sector.

Madam Speaker, I can tell you that there is not a more vocal champion of our energy sector than our Premier. She has been from day one the loudest and strongest advocate, from day one telling Albertans and Canadians that our government will do whatever it takes to see Trans Mountain move forward. There are a number of steps that we did take, but I can tell you that we were quite frustrated with the federal government when it came down to a point where the federal government had to purchase the Trans Mountain pipeline because of not acting swiftly enough initially. But we did say that it was a step in the right direction. I can tell you that I speak with international investors on a weekly basis and that many of them, in fact most of them, have said: we applaud the fact that the government has taken over this pipeline; that provides certainty that we like to see and will help it move forward.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that our Premier has done more for the energy sector and to get pipelines built than previous Conservative governments, both provincially here and, quite frankly, federally. I mean, the Leader of the Official Opposition sat in Ottawa for 20 years. Twenty. For 10 of those years he was a senior cabinet minister. How many pipelines to tidewater were approved and constructed? None. I can tell you that more has been done.

Now, we are frustrated with the delay in this process. Absolutely. Shovels were to be in the ground. In fact, the energy sector did pick up their tools and begin to resume construction on Trans Mountain until the Federal Court of Appeal ruled. But I can tell you that we have been relentless when it comes to telling the federal government the importance of Alberta's energy sector, the importance of the Trans Mountain pipeline, the importance of reducing our differential, getting top dollar for our top resources.

There's a number of other actions that we've taken to help spur industry and investments. I mean, the petrochemical diversification program has a $3.5 billion facility being built right now in Alberta's Industrial Heartland. In the coming weeks we're going to get a final investment decision on the second project, round 2 of this incredibly successful project. The window is closed for applications. What I can tell you is that there are more applicants in the second round than we had in the first round. Why, Madam Speaker? Because industry has said to us that Alberta is a better jurisdiction than the Gulf coast for value-added to our gas sector. What they said is: we need you, the government of Alberta, to help level the playing field because these companies are heavily subsidized in the U.S.

What I will say, Madam Speaker, is that clearly the Leader of the Official Opposition doesn't understand how competition and levelling a playing field works because if it was up to him, all he would do is go back to a flat tax and hope that industry just piles into Alberta. Well, let me tell you. Let's look at history. For decades Alberta had a flat tax. How many facilities upgraded propane to propylene? None. How many under our government? Two. And these are $3.5 billion investments that would not have happened without our program, which is built on future royalty credits, adding a new link to the value chain and ensuring that Albertans are getting top dollar for their resources. But we also are keeping those high-paid, quality jobs here in Alberta, where they are deserved and where they belong.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that I'm very proud to be part of a government that's continuing to build on the legacy of former Premier Peter Lougheed, who saw an opportunity in the pet-chem space but recognized that there was a role for government. This is where the opposition is sadly mistaken. They don't understand global competitive forces and think that by sitting on our hands and doing nothing, the economy will diversify itself and investments will just flood back to Alberta. What we've done is ensure that we are competing internationally through a variety of programs to level the playing field.

Now, it must be noted as well that the Leader of the Official Opposition would cancel all of these programs, therefore laying off thousands of workers and putting an immediate halt to a number of the investments that we see today because of the actions of our Premier and our government.

I will tell you, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Energy, myself, Environment and Parks, and our Premier have been lobbying the federal government for over a year and a half on how flawed C-69 is and the impact it would have on our energy industry. Nobody knows this better than Alberta. And what's frustrating is that, again, you had Conservative governments around for many, many years that still haven't quite been able to talk to people in a productive way about the importance of our energy sector to the Canadian economy. I can tell you that there are tens of thousands of jobs created in other provinces because of Alberta's energy sector, but what we need is to ensure that there are future investments in our energy sector, and that's where, again, C-69 needs to be completely changed.

I'm proud to have a colleague, the Minister of Environment and Parks, who spoke to over 60 Senators last week in Ottawa, spoke to dozens of policy-makers and leaders to advocate on behalf of Alberta's energy sector because, Madam Speaker, Alberta is the economic engine of Canada.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to stand in this House and speak to the motion, the emergency debate on pipelines. We've heard quite a bit today from both sides, the Official Opposition and the government, about how amazing they are and what the other person did or didn't do. I know one thing for sure, that there's one way we can solve this right away. If we really believe that a pipeline is an emergency, we actually have a committee that deals with stuff like this on a regular basis, Resource Stewardship.

So if we are serious about wanting to come up with solutions that are going to help working-class families, the families that I represent in Calgary-South East that come into my office and want to know what's happening on the pipeline issue and what the government is doing, what the Official Opposition is doing – "Member for Calgary-South East, what are you doing on behalf of my family; I've been out of work for a number of years now, and I don't know what's going to happen next; I'm on my second mortgage" – if we really believe that those families are in crisis and emergency, we'll refer this to committee, and that committee will meet once a week every week until this issue is solved. In that committee, Madam Speaker, what we can do is that we can table those flights to Ottawa. We can table the notes and the minutes of what everybody has been saying and everybody has been doing, but we can also bring industry leaders to come help us solve this issue from an Alberta perspective.

Albertans for years and years have been mavericks in dealing with issues like this. So instead of calling an emergency debate – I think this is the second one in as many months, maybe five months since the last spring session – Madam Speaker, we can solve this. Let's put it into committee. Let's put the good minds of the opposition, the third party, the independents, and the government, let's put us around a table with the ministers and let's talk about what we have done and where we're going to go next. It really doesn't matter what happened 10 years ago. It really doesn't matter what happened a week ago. Albertans want to know what we're going to do today and tomorrow and for the next coming weeks until this issue is solved to put Albertans back to work.

An emergency debate gives us the next few hours to talk about this and blame one another and the other person that was in power, the PCs for the last 44 years. But that really doesn't help the family tomorrow to get a job, to grow our economy.

Now, I've agreed with this government on many initiatives, the petrochemical diversification program. I asked a question today about the North West refinery and the opportunities that we have there. These are the very things that we can discuss in a committee. If we're serious about it, the Premier and the House leaders and the cabinet members right now can say: this committee is going to take this on as a serious challenge; we're going to meet once a week; we're going to bring industry leaders in; we're going to bring in mayors; we're going to bring in leaders from other provinces to talk about this issue. We can do that, Madam Speaker. This province has done it before.

In fact, we love to talk about the legacy of Mr. Lougheed, who was an amazing, incredible man. But let's take that vision, let's take that tenacity that he had for this province, and let's get to work and stop the blaming. Madam Speaker, that's what my constituents expect. That's what those small and mid-sized oil producers expect. People wanting to expand the oil sands, that's what they expect. They want to see results on a pipeline. Yes, we can blame the federal government, but how about let's not blame them anymore. Let's just take over the leadership, let's put it into a committee, and let's get the work done.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate, actually, the opportunity to rise in this emergency debate. I want to thank the members of the opposition for providing the opportunity for the members of the House to consider this. Of course, the Trans Mountain pipeline and the resilience and growth of our energy sector are, in fact, a matter for the national interest, and it's of keen importance to all constituents from all of our ridings. The Member for Calgary-South East just talked about what he hears from the people he represents, and I know we all do.

It's important to talk a little bit about how we got here. We are now in the aftermath of a Federal Court of Appeal decision, and rather than blame judges and undermine the institutions of our parliamentary democracy, as I have heard some people do, what we need now is action from the federal government. Now, we wanted to see specific actions from the feds that we did not see, and we're deeply disappointed in that, Madam Speaker. But the 22-week timeline, should it be adhered to, is appropriate for rescoping in the marine safety elements. We would have preferred a legislative solution to this matter, but be that as it may, those 22 weeks would have likely been around the same clock spins as a legislative amendment. As long as those timelines are adhered to, Albertans will see a good result sometime early in 2019.

Now the piece around the indigenous consultation. There were two grounds for the striking down of the decision of the Trans Mountain approval, Madam Speaker, as we remember. I have seen members opposite criticize the lack of a timeline associated with indigenous consultation. That actually undermines the upholding of the honour of the Crown with respect to nation-to-nation consultation and the terms within the court decisions that that consultation be meaningful and iterative and two way. Unless the opposition is seriously suggesting that we cut corners on indigenous consultation, it has to be structured the way it is.

Now, the Northern Gateway decision was struck down, in fact, on the grounds that the Crown did not adequately discharge its duty around consultation with respect to Northern Gateway. In fact, the TMX decision, Madam Speaker, came about because of the inappropriate scoping within the original review for Trans Mountain. Both of those decisions were made by the previous federal government, and the Leader of the Opposition was in that government. There is plenty of blame to go around with respect to the federal government's actions with respect to pipelines, but let's not forget that cutting corners on either environmental impact assessment or indigenous-Crown consultation is a road to nowhere. It will not get pipelines built. Neither, too, will ignoring the reality or, in fact, denying the reality of climate change, which the members opposite also propose that we do. That also won't help.

In this case, Madam Speaker, we have got to get it right, and we need to ensure that as we fix this system, this mess that we have been left with from the 2012 decisions around the CEAA, the National Energy Board, we ensure that we are not replacing a broken system with another broken system. That is why I went to Ottawa last week. It is the job of environment ministers to ensure that environmental rules are upheld and that processes are followed and that large projects, if they merit being built, must get built.

That is the job of the environment minister, Madam Speaker, and that's why I was so proud to bring in the climate leadership plan, which, in fact, led to the approval of those two pipelines. We must – we must – take our responsibilities to the environment seriously. We need to make sure that we do that within a regulatory regime that will hold up in court and will hold up in the courts of 2018, not in some bygone era, that the opposition wishes we were still in, where with indigenous consultation you could just cut corners, where climate change wasn't real, where we didn't care about our air, land, and water. Those days are over.

That is why we need to see changes to Bill C-69, and that is why we are advocating so vociferously, and we have from the very beginning, Madam Speaker. I have made several trips to Ottawa on this very matter.

Let me talk a little bit about exactly what we are looking for, because this is not just about making sure that Trans Mountain gets built. The federal government has a responsibility to act in response to the Federal Court of Appeal decision around the two matters, the indigenous consultation and the rescoping of the marine safety issue. But this is also about: what does the future of the energy industry look like, Madam Speaker? Well, in one sense, first of all, it looks like an energy industry that is resilient to the reality of climate change and, in fact, flourishes within the context of climate change being real. The time is over to ignore those matters within the regulatory process.

However, we need to make sure, as Bill C-69 contemplates a strategic assessment for large projects surrounding its climate change impacts, that Alberta's climate leadership plan stands in for that strategic assessment given that it is the most comprehensive response to climate change on this continent, Madam Speaker. So that is the first piece. We have made that positioning very clear to the federal government, and we expect to see clarity on it, not just in some bland assurances but in writing, in a draft regulation or in an amendment to the legislation, ideally, itself, and we have said that from the very beginning.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, we need to know what's in and what's out. The project list is deeply important to industry, and the federal government needs to be very, very clear on what kinds of projects are in in the new impact assessment rules and which ones are out. We saw some of the problems associated with this, with the throwing out of the Trans Mountain project approval. The inappropriate scoping that was decided upon by the Harper government, in fact, led us to this day. So we need to make sure we have clarity on project lists. I expect the federal government to give us that clarity, and I will not stop asking them for that until we get it.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, we need to make sure that for items within provincial jurisdiction we have appropriate environmental regulations, whether it's on the climate side or air, land, and water impacts, and that we ensure that those frameworks are in place on the provincial side. But we also need to make sure that there is no confusion about provincial jurisdiction over natural resources, that section 92A of the Constitution is upheld appropriately, and we want explicit mention of that within the legislation.

Furthermore, going back to the project list, Madam Speaker, we want to see an in situ exemption, and that links to this issue of jurisdiction. In situ production does not impinge upon, does not trigger federal environmental assessment. It does not trigger items over which the federal government has jurisdiction unless we are talking about greenhouse gas emissions, which are, in fact, an area of shared jurisdiction. Now, the fact of the matter is that in situ production in this province is governed by the oil sands emissions cap. Further, it is decarbonizing. We're taking the carbon out of the barrel through $1.4 billion worth of clean-tech investments, a large amount of which is going into the oil sands industry. The provincial government already has taken up this jurisdiction, and a federal intrusion in this matter is neither welcome nor necessary. So we are looking for that explicit in situ exemption. We know that that will strengthen our energy industry going forward because the rules are clear in Alberta with respect to climate policy.

Finally, we are looking for changes around timelines, Madam Speaker. There are a number of new criteria, terms, and principles inserted in the act that remain too vague to properly assess their impact. We want to see either publication of draft regulations or an outright amendment to the bill, preferably the latter, because we want to make sure that the industry has the kinds of assurances that it needs to make those final investment decisions on those large projects going forward.

A final element and final point to make around the future of the energy industry and investor confidence in this province, and this one is really important: we need to fix this legislation. There are so many companies who do not want to see a return to the CEAA of 2012 because that system was broken in the first place. So if we want to listen to the chambers of commerce, if we want to listen to the industries that are going to be captured by this impact assessment, then we need to make sure that we fix C-69, and we want to see that clarity coming from the federal government, either going back to the House of Commons or within the Senate Chamber, as soon as is possible, Madam Speaker.

Thank you very much.

4:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this emergency debate on what measures must be taken to ensure that the construction of the job-creating Trans Mountain expansion project is completed given the recent Federal Court of Appeal ruling.

In light of the Federal Court of Appeal decision on the Trans Mountain expansion the government of Canada saw fit to implement two more things to be in compliance with regulations. The first was to send the project back to the National Energy Board for a study on the impact of the two additional tankers a day in the Salish Sea versus the pod of orcas. Two tankers, Madam Speaker. As we speak, right now there are a hundred tankers – I just checked 10 minutes ago – in the port of Vancouver. Those two additional tankers will really make a difference, so we have to talk about that.

Then, Madam Speaker, can you imagine if the B.C. NDP's fast ferries were in service on those waters. Which one would have the greater environmental impact?

Now, Madam Speaker, to make sure I don't politically interfere in the NEB project approval process to assess these two extra tankers a day, I have not sought leave to appear as a witness. But guess what? That hasn't stopped the leader of the B.C. Green Party, Andrew Weaver. I guess he somehow has the money for lawyers and wants to take questions from high-priced lawyers, from all the witnesses before the National Energy Board.

The second thing the government of Canada has decided to do is to recommit to complete phase 3 of the indigenous consultation. Apparently, it's not good enough for the Crown to send a bunch of bureaucrats with no decision-making power to conduct consultations. I could have told you that, that it's a waste of time and money and resources. If the bureaucrats sent to consult are not empowered to make decisions and commitments, you're just wasting everyone's time and money.

But here is the kicker. The federal Liberal government failed to put a timeline on the new consultation process for TMX. To quote a Liberal minister, Amarjeet Sohi from Alberta, he said: we are not going to put a timeline on these consultations. He said that on October 3, 2018.

Madam Speaker, Canada consulted with indigenous people for over 40 years, including the creation of the Berger inquiry, with respect to the natural resource developments in Canada's Arctic and in the Mackenzie River valley. By the time First Nations were ready for development and the NEB had issued approvals to Imperial Oil to bring natural gas to the south, new technology came along, and the market price for gas collapsed, and Imperial's project did not move forward. All the benefits that the First Nations had negotiated and that would be able to improve their lives, things like roads, hospitals, and all: they all fell apart and never happened. Now here is this federal minister from Alberta refusing to put a timeline on consultation.

I am a firm believer in upholding the duty and the honour of the Crown, but at a certain point enough is enough. Madam Speaker, enough is enough. Consultations, to move forward, need to happen swiftly, and it is consultation, not negotiations. Let's be clear about it.

As for the federal minister, Sohi, he is a Liberal's liberal, a rabid partisan. He was known to show up here in this public gallery and cheer on the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and Laurie Blakeman and Kent Hehr while those Liberals set baited traps for all parties.

Minister Sohi did not like my editorial in the Calgary Sun over the weekend and responded today. Sadly, Minister Sohi continues with the bravado and false hope of getting the Trans Mountain pipeline built. Minister Sohi forgets about Justin Trudeau's pipeline whisperer, his principal secretary, Gerald Butts. Before he entered government, this former Canadian head of the World Wildlife Fund had been on the take from people who would scuttle Canada's oil and gas industry. I don't know of anyone who quits their job to go work for the Prime Minister's office and gets over $300,000 in severance. Nice work if you can get it, Madam Speaker.

There is a video all over the web of Mr. Butts wanting to shut down the oil sands. There are videos about this government's members, members in this House, in the past, protesting against these pipelines. There are videos that you can look up. When Minister Sohi opens his mouth, it's quite rich and disingenuous as long as Gerald Butts is the Prime Minister's principal secretary, because he wants to leave it in the ground. He won't let any pipeline get built.

We urged the federal government to explore every avenue possible to get the Trans Mountain expansion back on track, including but not limited to an immediate appeal to the Supreme Court, re-engagement of the consultation process, and potential legislation.

But it's not just us, Madam Speaker. That great bastion of finance in Quebec, Desjardins Capital Markets, has this to say: we maintain our previous concern that the federal Liberal government will likely be highly reluctant to exercise force approaching the window of the next election cycle, expected next fall.

There is another gentleman, former CEO of TransCanada Hal Kvisle. He said:

I don't see how any private-sector pipeline company would be dumb enough to embark on a major pipeline project in Canada today . . .

The government would hope this shows Canadians that things can get done in this country, when it actually shows the private sector that even the bestlaid plans are going to end up in the ditch.

That was in the Calgary Herald on May 30, 2018, Madam Speaker.

Then CAPP's Tim McMillan said: investment was done under extraordinary circumstances, and we should work very hard to never find ourselves in this position again.

That's why, Madam Speaker – this government said that they have done so much for these pipelines and oil, but Albertans are not buying that. When I'm getting those in my riding, people are saying: if you fool me once, shame on me, but if you fool me twice, shame on you. This government: I mean, everyone knows what they did. They just cheered the failure of pipelines, but they were celebrating a victory lap, like the Leader of Opposition said, when nothing is getting built.

That's why we called specifically for these actions: invoke the declaratory authority under section 92(10)(c) of the Constitution, immediately passing Bill S-245; immediately bring forward the promised legislation to reinforce federal jurisdiction; suspend the transfer of $4.1 billion in infrastructure funding and $1.3 billion job-training funding to the B.C. New Democrats until they end their campaign of obstruction; pull bills C-69, which the energy industry says means that a future pipeline project is very unlikely, and the tanker ban, C-48, that impedes the ability to get resources to the market; and indicate to the B.C. NDP government that the $182 million in funds earmarked for B.C. under the low carbon economy fund will be withheld pending construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion to parallel the withholding of $60 million from Saskatchewan for refusing to implement the carbon tax.

Madam Speaker, global oil demand is growing, and it's nearly 100 million barrels per day. By 2040 27 per cent of the global demand will be from oil, and 25 per cent will be from natural gas. That means that by 2040 half of the energy market will be oil and gas. That is from the IEA. Petrochemicals are also becoming the largest drivers of the global oil demand.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak on the emergency debate on the Trans Mountain pipeline. I'm glad that we're having the opportunity to speak about this. I've got to tell you that I hear about this issue more than any other from constituents in Calgary-Elbow and from Albertans that I talk with around the province. When I go door-knocking, there is frustration, there is concern, there is absolute anger that we find ourselves in a situation where Alberta has some of the most responsibly produced oil in the entire world but we can't sell it. We can't get it out of the province. We can't ship it.

I've been talking with people who are part of the investment community in the energy sector, and they've said that, you know, things were really looking up. There was a belief that this pipeline was going to go ahead, that they could rely on the regulatory process, that they could rely on the federal and provincial governments to actually ensure that the process was followed, that we'd actually see a pipeline built. They were starting to see capital maybe start to move back into Alberta.

But this has frozen everything, not just investments related to oil and gas exploration and production but investments related to technology, investments that are totally unrelated to the oil and gas sector. Investors from around the world are looking at what's happening in Canada, and they're saying: "I'm not sure I can trust putting my money there. I feel like maybe there is more risk in Canada than I thought, so I'm going to pull back and wait and see if Canada can figure itself out." So what used to be a massive advantage for Canada, political stability, a predictable regulatory regime – in fact, we have or, I should say, we had such a great reputation around the world that our regulatory experts would help set up regulatory regimes in other parts of the world. Well, that's no longer true. We're now seen as a very risky place to do business.

That is really a tragedy. It costs Albertans jobs, it costs Albertan families, it costs tax dollars that could go into important programs in health and education and ensure our society is a fairer place. So it's not just a straight fiscal issue, whether or not we ensure that our product gets sold to the rest of the world.

When I look at the approach that the NDP has taken, they said: Albertans, if we have a carbon tax, we are going to get a pipeline. They just made a straight equivalence, carbon tax equals pipeline. Well, no pipeline: what does that mean for the carbon tax? Is it a straight equation now, or are we now going on some other plan?

Where we've ended up, though, is that instead of having a pipeline – and instead of quietly going about their work of ensuring that the regulatory process was followed, what the government has done is to govern to a headline. They've just said, "Carbon tax equals pipeline," and the moment that the federal government purchased the Kinder Morgan pipeline, what did they do? They took a victory lap. They may have well strung up a banner in front of the Legislative Assembly that said: mission accomplished. They trotted out all of their caucus, and the Premier did a big news conference, and a number of us on the opposition side, staff, and media were kind of standing around gobsmacked, watching this spectacle.

Now all of a sudden, well, the courts decide that the regulatory process was not followed, that, in fact, indigenous people were not appropriately consulted. Now, I've talked to some lawyers, and I think that there's some disagreement as to whether or not that is, in fact, a correct ruling and that perhaps the federal government should look at an appeal. Regardless, that is a responsibility of the federal government, to consult at phase 3 with indigenous people and do a consultation that is a proper two-way consultation. That is on the federal government.

But where I hold the provincial government accountable is that you can't tell me that within the Ministry of Energy or within the private sector in this province we don't have a few lawyers, regulatory experts who could perhaps look over the shoulder of the federal government and make sure that that process is followed. But that didn't happen. The province of Alberta was completely hands-off back in 2016 and just said: well, we'll just trust Ottawa. When has it ever worked in the province of Alberta where we sit back and say: well, we'll just trust Ottawa; things will be fine? Clearly not. So it is not just Ottawa's fault that this happened. It is absolutely on the provincial government, who should have been looking over the shoulder, who should have bringing some of that regulatory expertise to bear in that process to make sure that the Trans Mountain pipeline went ahead.

The tragedy of this is compounded by the fact that not only is this an economic story, as I said before, but it's an environmental story, too. The research and innovation that are happening in this province – in fact, we had an opportunity with my Alberta Party caucus colleagues this morning to tour the University of Alberta. There's unbelievable work under way at the University of Alberta on carbon abatement, on reducing land use for resource development and development of all kinds, on reducing the use of fresh water and abating tailings ponds in oil sands. These are the problems that not just Alberta is grappling with, but the world is grappling with.

I have always maintained that Alberta's contribution to fighting climate change is, yes, reducing our emissions here at home, but the far greater contribution that we will make to fighting climate change is developing technologies in Alberta that will address carbon emissions that we can then sell to the rest of the world. That is our contribution, and that contribution is funded directly by ensuring that Alberta oil and gas gets to market. So when pipelines are delayed or deferred or perhaps even cancelled, it has a massive impact on the environmental side. It has a devastating and negative impact on carbon emissions globally. That is a case that I don't believe the NDP has made nearly strong enough to our friends in British Columbia nor to the rest of Canada. Building pipelines is a pro-environmental policy, not just having a carbon tax in Alberta. Building pipelines enables research and development that will reduce global carbon emissions. That's the goal. That case has not been made nearly strongly enough.

The other consequence is, of course, more oil on rail. That is, we know, statistically more risky. I don't want to suggest for a moment that it's unsafe, but it's not as safe in any way as shipping oil through pipelines. We know that. That costs more, which has an impact on the bottom line for energy companies, which means they hire fewer people, which means they generate fewer taxes, they pay lower royalties, and it has a substantial economic cost. It also presents barriers to other Alberta products, agricultural products in particular, finding their way to market. It enriches the train companies – I'm sure they're thrilled with it – but it's not anywhere near the best interests of Albertans.

Now, the minister of environment and others have talked about Bill C-69 and that that simply does not work for Alberta. I agree. There are substantial problems with Bill C-69.

I will say that the current rules, the CEAA, 2012, also don't work for Alberta. There are many examples of that in the energy industry. On another project that's currently under way, a project that's very close to my heart and the interests of the constituents of not just Calgary-Elbow but downtown Calgary, the Springbank off-stream reservoir, a very, very important project, the goalposts continually move. Every time there's a filing, a huge number of questions come back, and the timeline moves back, and the timeline moves back, and it just never seems to end.

That's a challenge that I can understand now, having intimately and closely watched this process. I can only imagine, for a project that's, frankly, relatively simple, like the SR1 project, compared to a massively complex project like a pipeline or a tailings pond or an oil sands development – I can't imagine how much effort and time and cost would go into that.

Madam Speaker, I stand here frustrated that we don't have a clear path forward on the pipeline, that it is not under construction, as this government said it would be. Of course, here in the Alberta Party caucus we are always cheering for pipelines. We will never cheer against Alberta. We will never cheer for a project to fail. We want this project to succeed, and we want it to go ahead very, very quickly.

But Albertans are demanding a credible plan for energy, not just pipelines. They're demanding a credible plan for energy diversification, for petrochemicals, for upgrading, for expanding exploration and production, for opening up investment once again in Alberta and not seeing those dollars that are going to energy development in the United States – it's far easier to get projects approved in the U.S. than it is here. It doesn't mean that we need to abandon our responsibility. Environmental responsibility, social responsibility, safety: those are things that we do better in this province and in this country than anywhere in the world, and we ought to be proud of that. But companies, investors need some certainty that the money they put in is going to result in project approvals and reviews in a timely – way.

Since a credible plan isn't forthcoming from this government, I can promise you that the Alberta Party will present a credible plan, going into the next election, for how we get Alberta's energy sector back up and running, how we get Albertans back to work, and, most importantly, how we get pipelines built.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

5:00

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Klein, followed by Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this emergency motion, a very important topic indeed. Now, I have stood up here in the past in this Assembly and expressed my frustration and this government's frustration at the fact that the Trans Mountain pipeline is not being built as we speak. It's frustrating because this government had this pipeline in its sights from day one. We knew very quickly, upon assuming government, that getting a pipeline to tidewater was going to be critical infrastructure to growing our energy industry and getting a fair price for our product, which makes you wonder why previous governments didn't see this.

As such, Madam Speaker, we did everything that was asked of us to get approval, including bringing in the most robust climate leadership plan in the country, and the federal government did approve the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline. Unfortunately, the Federal Court of Appeal ruled against the Trans Mountain pipeline, quashing the decision of the previous approval. This ruling is bad for working families and the economy. The approval process is flawed, and that's clear.

One of the most unfortunate parts of this flawed process is the fact that the Leader of the Opposition had the opportunity to improve it during his tenure in Ottawa but chose not to, and he couldn't get a pipeline built to tidewater in this province during this period either. While the federal Conservative governments were failing at getting pipelines built and changing the process, the world changed around them, and it would appear that the Leader of the Opposition and his caucus were left behind and refused to catch up.

Let's dissect this motion for a moment if you'll indulge me:

To discuss what measures must be taken to ensure that construction of the job-creating Trans Mountain expansion project is completed given the recent Federal Court of Appeal ruling and diminished investor confidence in Alberta's energy industry.

Now, what measures must be taken to ensure that construction of the job-creating Trans Mountain expansion project is completed? Well, Madam Speaker, on this side of the House we will do whatever it takes to get the Trans Mountain pipeline built, but it appears that the opposition won't. On this side of the House we understand that climate action was an integral part of getting federal approval, and it remains an integral part of getting this pipeline built. And you know what else? It's just the right thing to do.

You know who else thinks carbon pricing is good for the energy industry? The energy industry. Steve Williams, CEO of Suncor, said: "We think climate change is happening. We [think] a broad-based carbon price is the right answer." He also said that climate inaction threatens the future of the oil sands and that an earnest effort by government to decrease emissions, shared by consumers and industry, through a carbon tax and regulations could be the best possible outcome. So it's obvious, Madam Speaker, that this government and the energy industry have already adopted a measure to help ensure construction of the pipeline.

Now, let's compare this to what the opposition is doing to help ensure construction of the pipeline, which would be absolutely nothing. Instead of supporting a price on carbon that drives efficiency in the oil sands and is supported by energy leaders, the opposition riles the anger machine with its anti carbon tax stance.

The Leader of the Opposition's good friend and ally the Premier of Ontario, Doug Ford, got together to rally against the carbon tax recently. Let's call this rally what it really was, Madam Speaker, a rally against the energy industry. The opposition had even partnered with their other good friend and ally, Rebel media, to rally against the carbon tax and, in effect, again, rally against the energy industry.

The bottom line: the UCP leader will say anything to get elected. He's more interested in grandstanding than doing what's right for the energy industry. What's more, Madam Speaker, what makes the Leader of the Opposition think he knows more than energy executives? I'm not seeing it.

Also, part of this motion is to deal with diminished investor confidence. Well, Madam Speaker, investment is returning. The oil and gas sector has grown by 6.4 per cent in the past year, largely in Alberta's oil sands. CNRL announced that it will increase its capital spending by $170 million this year to $4.6 billion to advance engineering and purchase equipment for its Horizon expansion efforts. Athabasca Oil has boosted its capital budget by $45 million to $185 million.

We have also made it clear that we are not happy with the Federal Court of Appeal ruling, something else we're doing to make sure this gets built, Madam Speaker, and we've been clear that this ruling is bad for working families and bad for the economic security of Canada. Ottawa should have appealed the ruling to the Supreme Court, and we're very disappointed that they did not.

Successive federal governments have created the mess we're in today, and it's time for Ottawa to fix what they've broken. Three years ago we set out to break our land lock, and despite the setbacks we have made progress. Today Canadians in every part of the country support our efforts to build the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, and we will continue to use every tool we have to reach out to Canadians and make the case for this project, from main street to Bay Street.

Also, Madam Speaker, I am extremely proud of our Environment and Parks minister, who has been doing a great job of letting Canadians know that Bill C-69 as it is drafted will have a serious impact on the Canadian economy and specifically on the economy of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, it's been a pleasure to speak to this emergency debate, and I thank you for bringing it forward. It is an important topic, and it's really provided me and others with the opportunity to illustrate the large dichotomy between this side of the House and the opposition when it comes to helping to get this pipeline built. We're listening to industry leaders and scientists. They listen to Doug Ford and Rebel media. This is a big difference. We're leading on the issue of climate change. They continue to attract candidates that deny science. Our made-in-Alberta plan goes hand in hand with economic growth. They would rather make lawyers rich than come up with their own plan. Our plan is attracting green investment in Alberta. They want to cancel those investments and go back in time.

With all that said, Madam Speaker, thank you so much to the Leader of the Opposition for the opportunity to speak to this emergency motion and to allow me to show Albertans that this side of the House is fighting for pipelines and Albertans and that that side is fighting for themselves.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Fort McMurray-Conklin, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and speak in favour of this extremely important motion, a motion that is absolutely critical to the success of my riding, Fort McMurray-Conklin. I was born and raised in Fort McMurray, and I've lived there most of my life. My family, in fact, has worked in the oil sands for almost 50 years. My dad tells stories of days when Syncrude sweet light crude used to trade at a higher rate than WTI, and that was only a short 20 years ago.

Now we sell our product, our fantastic product, at a major loss, and this is due in full to the lack of access to markets. The increasing differential, which today is at almost $50 a barrel, hurts Fort McMurray-Conklin. It hurts Fort McMurray, it hurts Alberta, and it hurts Canada. It hurts our oil and gas sector. Our oil and gas industry contributes billions of dollars into our economy. They employ tens of thousands of hard-working women and men throughout my riding and Alberta as a whole.

So many Albertans right now are out of work, so many people in my riding of Fort McMurray-Conklin are out of work, and so many companies are taking their investment dollars and capital elsewhere. We've seen so many companies pull out of the Fort McMurray oil sands and invest in different countries in the Middle East because they think it's a safer bet for investments right now. It's so important that we get these pipelines built in order to improve investor confidence and get northeastern Alberta back to work.

The unnecessary delay of the Trans Mountain pipeline project is devastating to the people in my riding. As I said earlier today, it's devastating to consider what these delays in getting shovels in the ground on this project say about Canada's ability to get much-needed, job-creating projects built.

Over the last six months I've had the opportunity to knock on tens of thousands of doors throughout my riding of Fort McMurray-Conklin, and what I heard was overwhelmingly clear, that we need to get pipelines to tidal waters built so that we can once again sell our valuable product at a fair market rate. The overwhelming message I heard at the doors of regular, ordinary Albertans was that we needed to get pipelines so that we could once again sell our product at a fair rate. This was the same message I heard at Tim Hortons, that I heard at Earl's or any other restaurant around town. People were hurting. Companies were hurting.

Having more pipeline access would not only put more money back into our economy, but it would bring tens of thousands of much-needed jobs to Alberta. To be specific, it would add 14,600 construction jobs, well-paying construction jobs, it would add 13,340 pipeline operation jobs, well-paying, skilled jobs, and it would add over 400,000 jobs related to additional investment in oil and gas development as a result as higher net-back producers.

One thing that I have learned growing up in Fort McMurray that is evidently clear is that when Fort McMurray is working, Alberta is working, that when Alberta is working, Canada is working. This isn't something we can take lightly. This is absolutely fundamental. Our economy is trying to recover from one of the largest recessions in Alberta's history. The people of Fort McMurray are trying to recover after one of the costliest natural disasters in Canada's history. This project would have brought hope back to the people in my riding. This project would have been the light at the end of the tunnel. The number of foreclosures in my riding is outstanding. We need to do something to get these people back to work, and this project is precisely what we could put forward.

What we have seen is social licence, that was supposedly going to get us this pipeline. We were told that if we had a carbon tax, we would get a pipeline. We were told that that would give us some social licence and that some social licence would all of a sudden buy us this goodwill to build a pipeline. Unfortunately, we see a carbon tax but no pipeline. What we do see is everyone against the oil sands.

I absolutely believe that we need to do more in this House. We need to do more to urge the federal government to get the Trans Mountain pipeline back on track, and we need to work together to push this forward and do everything within our power.

Thank you so much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by Sherwood Park.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to this debate and to perhaps offer a little different perspective on things. I've been listening carefully to what's been said by members from the Official Opposition, from government members, from members from the third party, and I will say that I think I am joining an increasing cohort of Albertans who are growing weary. We are growing weary of politicians who attempt to take every statement, every news story, every new happening and try to torque it to their political advantage. Now, I know there's an election coming in six months. I'm fully aware of that. But, Madam Speaker, on an issue that is as critical as this one is to our overall existence, if you wish, as a nation – because, really, if we can't get major projects built, what does that say about Canada? I think that I'm joined by, like I say, a growing number of Albertans who are truly growing weary that everything that comes up then becomes an exercise in finger pointing and blame. That accomplishes nothing.

Now, I think I can say that like most Albertans or perhaps all Albertans, I was disappointed in the Federal Court of Appeal decision of August 30. I'd like to point out a couple of things about that decision, though. That decision was rendered on August 30, but the Federal Court of Appeal took 10 months to write that decision. They had heard and considered all the arguments, and they wrapped up in October of 2017. Some 10 months later the Federal Court of Appeal, three judges with a combined experience of over 44 years, rendered the decision, a unanimous decision, reversing the National Energy Board's decision.

Now, both the Official Opposition and the government have called on the federal government to appeal this to the Supreme Court of Canada. I'm not a lawyer, but personally I think that's a symbolic but hardly a substantive gesture. Appealing to the Supreme Court of Canada is only going to result in an even longer delay. If it took three judges 10 months to write a decision, the nine judges of the Supreme Court of Canada – well, I'm not convinced that they will arrive at a reversal of those three judges' decision any quicker. In fact, I think we have to ask ourselves the question: what is the expectation that a unanimous decision made by three judges with a combined 44 years of experience on the bench would be reversed by the nine judges of the Supreme Court of Canada? The only thing that I could see as a positive to appealing is if the Supreme Court of Canada was prepared to pass an injunction that allowed construction to continue based on the NEB's approval.

But, you know, I think that, like most Canadians, what really frustrated me in the days after August 30 was the blaming that went on. We had the federal Liberals blaming the Harper government for an inadequate regulatory regime. We had our government in this province blaming members of the opposition and specifically the Leader of the Opposition for inaction while he was in government in Ottawa. All of this was designed to somehow get a political leg-up on the other guys, and in the meantime Albertans are sitting and watching this and they're saying: do you not realize that we have more at stake than simply who gains a political advantage out of all of this? I think that's the frustration I hear from Albertans when I talk to Albertans. It's: get your heads together, and get this done. Instead, what we hear – and we heard more of it this afternoon; we heard it from just about every speaker speaking – is the opportunity to blame the other side.

You know, I do want to make a few comments that arose from debate. It may come as a surprise to you, Madam Speaker, but when I'm in the Chamber here, I actually listen to the debate, and I like to hear what the members have to say. You know, it's interesting. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade – it's very interesting. Like a lot of the members of government have wanted to do, he has invoked once again the vision of Peter Lougheed. I have to confess that it makes me feel good every time I hear the folks opposite invoke Mr. Lougheed's name. It makes me feel good when I hear the UCP doing the same thing. I mean, I think that we could be pretty much guaranteed that regardless of who wins the next election, they'll be following in the footsteps of Peter Lougheed. What that says about Peter Lougheed is that Peter Lougheed was pragmatic and not dogmatic. Peter Lougheed was a leader that looked at the situation and applied things that weren't necessarily adherent to a specific ideology.

You know, the minister mentioned the petrochemical diversification program. Well, I can look back and look at some of the decisions that were made in the 1970s by Mr. Lougheed's government with regard to natural gas diversification at Joffre. I can look at what has happened in the oil sands development in Fort McMurray and say that if it wasn't for AOSTRA, the Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority, the oil sands might never have been developed in the way they have been and are now providing a major economic driver in our province.

So I smile when I hear people talking about Premier Lougheed, and then I have to also smile when I hear in one breath the government say how Peter Lougheed was, you know, such a great leader and had this great vision, and yet in the next breath they say how 44 years of government by the Progressive Conservatives was a disaster. You can't have it both ways, folks. If Peter Lougheed was such a disaster, he was in the chair for the first 15 years of that period of time.

You know, we hear also a lot about the failure of getting pipelines to tidewater, but nobody seems to ask the question: why? Nobody seems to ask the question: why were pipelines not built to tidewater? The answer to that question is actually really related quite simply to markets and to who owns and who controls oil and gas development in North America. In fact, for most of the years that often get talked about where no pipelines to tidewater were built, lots of pipelines were built. Pipeline capacity increased considerably, but those pipelines were being built to refineries elsewhere in the United States because in those years that was the most profitable place to ship the oil. It was less profitable to ship overseas. It was less profitable to ship to the Pacific Rim. The most profitable place to ship Canadian oil was to U.S. refineries. Therefore, the pipelines were built to U.S. refineries and not to tidewater because those were less profitable investments.

What has changed, of course – and the world has shifted – is we have seen a shift because of the increase in U.S. production because of fracking, which the NDP candidate I ran against in Lloydminster in the last election said that there should be a moratorium on all hydraulic fracturing. Because of fracking, because of multistage drilling techniques and drilling plants, directional drilling, this has opened up an increased and enhanced oil production in the U.S. to a point where over a span of about eight years their domestic oil production doubled. The U.S. went from being a country that was not allowed to export oil because it was keeping it for its own uses to a country that exports a great deal of oil, including a great deal of oil into eastern Canada. The number one source of oil in eastern Canada is not the Saudis, is not Algeria, is not Nigeria, is not Venezuela. It's the United States of America. That's the shift that has occurred, and that has also been the shift that has resulted in the expansion of the differential to now close to $50. Then, of course, we are recognizing the crisis that that results in.

You know, Madam Chair, I'm somewhat of a student of history, and I look at what happens when people make decisions that don't necessarily result in their own electoral success. I look at, for example, this government vehemently defending the Trans Mountain expansion and only the Trans Mountain expansion to the exclusion of other viable options because they have put so much emphasis on that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Sherwood Park, followed by Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I always like to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for his always very interesting speech. I'm glad that he rose this afternoon.

Here we are. It's another Monday and another debate on the Trans Mountain pipeline. Sometimes I really just wish that the opposition was willing to believe facts and the evidence of what the Premier, cabinet, and public servants have been doing with their colleagues in the federal government and the oil and gas industry to make the Trans Mountain pipeline continue to be built. I tend to believe facts.

This pipeline is important not only to residents and businesses in the constituency of Sherwood Park. This pipeline starts about three kilometres from my own office and will be joining some of the other pipelines just a few feet from my office in one of the pipeline corridors. But this pipeline is important to all Albertans and to all Canadians.

I am daily reminded of the need for a new pipeline and the challenges of some of the alternatives currently being used to move the raw bitumen such as rail and trucks. I am also reminded how little was done by the federal Conservative government, in which the Leader of the Opposition was a member, and how little was done by the former provincial governments, of which many of the opposition MLAs were members of or involved with. For years former Alberta governments allowed raw bitumen to flow down to the U.S., and instead of job creations in Alberta, good refinery and upgrading jobs went south to Texas, Louisiana, and other States. This not only meant good, long-lasting jobs have gone south but also the differential in price between the raw and upgraded bitumen has seen the U.S. oil and gas sector making money rather than us in Alberta.

The Premier was clear on her disappointment with the federal court ruling. I think we also have a picture of her with Prime Minister Trudeau, and I think even with the body language she was very clear how upset she was. The Premier believed that Ottawa should have appealed the ruling to the Supreme Court, and she was disappointed that the Prime Minister decided not to.

Now, the Trans Mountain pipeline is supported by Canadians from every part of the country. Like many MLAs, over the summer I had the opportunity of meeting MLAs at our professional development conferences and all Canadians on our summer holidays. We know that the need for a pipeline is well known and that the work that Trans Mountain and the Alberta government has done to safeguard the pipeline and to respond to environmental concerns is also well understood by Canadians in all the provinces.

Not everyone is as privileged as I am to meet with pipeline companies operating in the Industrial Heartland area and learn about their environment and safety standards, to see their control rooms, learn about the constant monitoring, shutdown procedures, backup systems, alternate electrical sources, and so on. So as an MLA I believe that we all have a role to play in sharing information about the reliability of pipelines and the work the energy industry is doing to make them safer.

I often wonder how the members of the Conservative government now represented in this Assembly were not able to get the approval for the pipeline. How do they think constantly demeaning the Prime Minister in memes, ads, and their remarks is going to encourage the federal government to work with them to meet the needs of Alberta? If they continue to deny the importance of reducing carbon emissions and belief in climate change, how can they convince Canadians that they have the best interests of Albertans and Canadians at heart?

Now, I know that there are a couple of new, younger MLAs in the opposition benches now. My hope is that they do understand the importance of climate change. Maybe if they went through our school system, they might have benefited from learning about it. It might be a surprise to the members opposite who struggled with accepting climate change that most Canadians do believe that climate change is real and that efforts by government to reduce carbon emissions and the efforts by the oil and gas sector to do the same is what Canadians want. On the government side we applaud the work done by pipeline companies to mitigate climate change by constantly innovating and working to find new ways to reduce their climate emissions.

Earlier the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, and the Minister of Environment and Parks referred to the work that the government is doing on diversification. This approach in creating jobs in the Industrial Heartland currently but all throughout Alberta is important because it means that the export of the products through existing pipelines will lead to greater revenues for the companies and the government. There is not one simple solution to employment in the oil and gas sector or to the renewed fortunes of Fort McMurray or the area that I represent or increased revenues for the government. But the multidisciplinary approach that the government is using that includes increasing the capacity of pipelines through innovations that include a way to remove the need for diluent, the building of new pipeline, and investing in companies that are upgrading here in our province is the way that we will be able to return to greater employment in the oil and gas sector in Alberta.

5:30

Maybe it's time for the opposition to support this multipronged approach, rather than voting again and again against the efforts to diversify our petrochemical industry and against investment in the climate change leadership plan.

Madam Speaker, I always appreciate the opportunity to reaffirm the commitment of the government to getting the most out of our natural resources to provide the services Albertans need. I also always appreciate the opportunity to support the constant work done by the Premier and the ministers, working with the federal government and other provinces.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to the emergency debate on the Trans Mountain expansion project. The UCP, of course, is not calling the Trans Mountain pipeline an emergency. We are trying to call the government's attention to the emergency that is upon us, since the pipeline project has stalled yet again and there's no movement in sight.

Madam Speaker, two months ago the Premier said: a reliable timeline to resume construction will be established in a few weeks. Her few weeks passed long ago, and even she does not have confidence in Ottawa's new time frame. In three and a half months she's gone from urging Albertans to pick up tools because there's a pipeline to build to admitting she's skeptical of the federal government's timeline. That hardly instills hope in Albertans or investors.

If any Albertans happened to tune in to the October 23 Resource Stewardship meeting, they might have lost all hope in this government's competence on this most important file, but they would be sure about one point. The lack of a pipeline to take our oil to tidewater has created a crisis for our province, and there is no solution on the horizon.

The UCP members of the Resource Stewardship Committee, after a year of trying to finally convince the NDP majority on the committee to tackle a resource issue, convinced them to invite Alberta Energy to the meeting. Actually, we wanted the Minister of Energy, but the NDP members voted that invitation down. Anyway, the Ministry of Energy was invited to attend the October 23 committee meeting to discuss the stalled TMX project, and we convinced them to invite proponents promoting other projects that would take our oil to tidewater, namely G7G's Alberta to Alaska railway and Eagle Spirit's pipeline.

We wanted these projects on the table because we had no confidence in the government of Alberta for a plan B should TMX remain stalled. We, like all Albertans, want this project to go ahead, but unlike the government, we believe it is incumbent upon us as legislators to look at other options. We need these options not just because the fate of TMX is in the air, but because even if it is built, Alberta will still need more capacity for moving its oil as our production increases in the coming years.

We had hoped we may be pleasantly surprised, when Alberta Energy appeared before the Resource Stewardship Committee, that it had plans beyond plan A; that is, the Trans Mountain pipeline. But there is no plan B or C or D for expanding market access. Sure, there is line 3 and Keystone, but where do they go? Down into the U.S., of course. And what is the problem with that? Well, on October 12 even Albertans who were too busy earning a living and raising their children learned an alarming fact, for that's the date that the price discount when we sell our oil to the U.S. hit a record high of $52.

Let me go over the math, and then I'll wrap up by discussing the Premier's subsequent Hail Mary announcement about expanding rail capacity. First, the math. Alberta exports 3 billion barrels of bitumen crude a day. Almost every drop goes to the U.S. via pipeline or rail. That means that, according to Alberta Energy itself, that price differential costs $210 million in royalties for every dollar of the price differential. So if the discount hits $50 and stays there, that would work out to $10.5 billion of lost revenue for Alberta. Does that sound alarming? Of course, it does. Every Albertan may not understand the details that bring us to that figure, and neither should they. But when they sadly learn that the shortage of pipeline capacity can cost Alberta's treasury $10 billion in one year, they want to know: what has brought us to this plight, and how are we going to get out of it? We in the UCP believe that they have a right to know what government policies over the three years have brought us to this point.

Even the Energy minister acknowledged this problem, and that was long before the discount hit $50. Let me quote from Hansard on December 12, 2016, during the government's congratulatory period on Trans Mountain, which, by the way, has yet to materialize. The minister said:

Once it's completed, there'll be at least $3 a barrel more to Albertans, and without this additional pipeline access, the companies would be losing between $8 billion to $13 billion annually in revenue by 2022. Without additional pipelines we would lose $1 billion annually in revenue to the government.

As you can see, even the government itself has admitted that this latest escalation of differential poses a serious crisis.

You may hear that the differential will lessen when some refineries are finished with their annual shutdowns. True, but that's only by degree. We now have a structural differential of $25 to $30 due to the shortage of pipeline capacity. So that is a revenue shortfall of at least $5 billion a year.

Now let me address the Premier's announcement about rail capacity. When the record differential was exposed, she announced that she was urging the federal government to purchase railcars and locomotives to move more of our oil. There are all kinds of problems with this announcement, from creating traffic jams on rail lines for our agricultural producers and other important sectors trying to move their products to international markets, to relying on the federal government to purchase needed rolling stock when it hasn't shown any interest in Alberta, to protesters in B.C. blocking our bitumen on our rails and, with it, other Alberta products as well. Still, it can sound good.

In committee I asked Alberta Energy what would happen to this oil when it hit the Vancouver area. Would it go to international markets so we could obtain a higher price on the world market? The answer was already obvious, of course, because larger tankers cannot travel to the Vancouver-Burnaby terminals. Alberta Energy confirmed that that was correct. This oil would be loaded on smaller ships that would head down the coast to U.S. ports. So this government's answer is to get the federal government to buy railcars to take our bitumen and crude to terminals in the Vancouver area and be shipped down to the U.S., where there is a record high price discount. Albertans have been led to believe that this is an answer to shipping our most valuable resource to foreign markets where we can get a much higher price for it. Clearly, there's a misunderstanding.

Let me point out at this point that all along the UCP has urged the government not to rely on one pipeline to tidewater to cure our pipeline capacity shortage. Yes, we need the Trans Mountain pipeline for sure, but even if it is built, we are still going to need more ways of getting the crude and bitumen we will produce in the near future to tidewater, where it can go to truly foreign markets, where it can obtain a higher price. If we simply ship more and more to the U.S., as will happen with Keystone and line 3 and rail, then we are no farther ahead. We should be looking into other options like G7G or Eagle Spirit or even North West upgrader's phase 2 and 3, value-added like Nauticol. There are lots of options that the government should be pursuing to find different markets for our product rather than just relying on TMX, that we know is up in the air these days, Madam Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to this very important debate, that is appropriately taking up most of our afternoon, that of the Trans Mountain pipeline. I entered politics in 2004 on the climate change issue and the lack of action by the Klein government to take seriously the growing evidence that climate was going to be a defining issue for this generation and future generations. It may seem incongruous, then, that I would be supporting the Trans Mountain pipeline along with my party, but we do.

It's indeed easy to take positions that oppose each other, and as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster commented so eloquently, politicizing the issues around this pipeline has not served Albertans, it's not served Canadians, it's not going to serve our future generations, partly because – as I'm watching this develop over, well, the last year at least, it reminds me of the phrase that sunk Rome. Nero was fiddling while Rome burned, and that's what I see, unfortunately, especially as we approach the election in 2019.

Instead of focusing our energies on a bigger vision – and I have to give credit for this bigger vision to Dr. David Layzell at the University of Calgary. The Canadian energy systems research institute was working not only nationally but internationally on trying to broaden the debate beyond carbon and beyond climate to the systems that are changing around us, every one of them interacting with the other to either make it more or less likely that we will enter the 22nd century with life, with meaningful transportation, with stable education systems, with health, and with all of the benefits that we have so far taken somewhat for granted because we have such an overabundance of resources and investments in this province, to the credit of previous federal and provincial governments and the people of Canada who have supported those governments.

It may seem, then, incongruous, but we do need to think bigger. I would like to think that even as we head into an election time, we could see the kind of future that David Layzell is challenging us to think about in the face of disruptive technologies like autonomous vehicles, the growing energy focus around hydrogen and cleaner nuclear, renewable nuclear, and the new opportunities to grow food with non fossil fuel based fertilizers and chemicals, and think about what these messages should be giving us in taking leadership on some of these new technologies and not simply focus on who's right and who's wrong and who's working harder for the energy industry here and who's got the right approach to getting a pipeline built and who needs to be taking the blame for either not historically developing the technologies to move oil to tidewater or moving to new energy forms.

If we had had the vision 20 years ago that we have today around, for example, the new energies, clean, renewable, the extra jobs associated with a clean, renewable tech sector and had a more serious commitment across the globe in looking at the interface of health, education, energy, environment, and the technologies that are now upon us and leadership being taken by other jurisdictions on many of these issues, we would not be up against a wall which is seriously going to threaten not only the stability of this country but the international community. We are going to see refugees like we have never seen to date if we continue thinking short term about who's right and who's wrong . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Pardon me, hon. member.

Hon. members, could you please take your seats while . . .

Mr. Nixon: We're waiting for your permission, Madam Speaker. We're between you and him.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Don't start a new point of order.

Dr. Swann: You're forgiven.

Our current polarizing debate fundamentally fails to address the multitude of interdependent systems, and when we start to think about the broader systems, we take a bigger picture look and think about the longer term future than simply the next election or the next four years of an election cycle.

I would encourage people to look up the University of Calgary, Canadian energy systems research centre to see some of the tremendous and creative thinking and projects that they're involved with; for example, hydrogen freight transportation. They just received some funding to try that out and see what that's going to mean for jobs, new technology, the environment, health in the coming years.

Governments that fail to lead rather than follow and give due credit to the disruptive technologies that are coming upon us will surely fail not only our people but the planet. Who more than Alberta has the minds, the opportunities, the resources, the history to make innovative change better? That's why bitter partisan positions simply don't have a place today in Alberta. If we care about our children and our longer term future, we have to move beyond this and see the bigger picture that we have to be contributing to, that's currently being subverted by efforts to achieve political points.

I don't get a sense of the bigger leadership in the UCP. I don't hear their comments about what they would do differently. I don't see a vision for health, energy systems, new transportation, and new jobs. What I see is "no, no, no" about the current reality of climate, environment, and the new economy that's almost upon us.

An Hon. Member: What's wrong with used cars?

Dr. Swann: What's wrong with used cars? Well, that's what I would like the UCP to talk to us about. There are some alternatives, bigger transportation that carries more people and that uses some of the new options.

We must get to grips with a more thoughtful, multisystem, cross-party, national discussion that recognizes the new energy forms that are upon us, including robotics, AI, and autonomous vehicles, which should be anticipated by the kind of leadership that we could have in this province. We do need sustained fossil fuel production both for national and international well-being right now to help us make this transition. But where's the vision, and where's the willingness to look past partisan interests? We as citizens of this province, as parents, as grandparents, as people who are going to be judged in the next 10 to 20 years on what we did or failed to do in this session of our Legislature, in the coming session, have a profound responsibility to look at climate, environment, energy, jobs in a very fresh way. I've been totally inspired by what the University of Calgary and the CESAR centre, which they call it for short, is trying to push us legislators to think past.

There had been, as my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster has said, a government in the '50s who tried to push a trans-Canada pipeline and sacrificed their political future – they happened to be Liberal – because they were unelected even though they had a vision for a trans-Canada pipeline system that would have created a tremendous change in our whole last 70 years. Why was it sunk? It's a good question. It had to do with political debate, political points being scored, lack of public awareness. The media were not telling the story in as effective a way as they could have. There was a failure to think long term, there was a failure of vision, and there was a failure of the legislators at the time to make the case and to stand for something bigger than their own political interests.

I put that out because this is an opportunity for us to say what's really in our hearts and minds about this particular pipeline. We've said a lot of it before, so what I want to remind us of is that as politicians we're here to do two things, it seems to me. One is to ensure that we protect the public interest and that we look at the long term. I don't think we're doing that effectively, so I challenge all sides here to think bigger and think about the very destructive effects of failing to lead economically, socially, and environmentally in this next decade.

The Deputy Speaker: Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to stand and speak to the emergency motion, and I appreciate that the business of the House was suspended today to do that because this is so important. Unfortunately, we are missing out on some important business right now, talking about the sustainability of our regions and talking about firefighting, but those things need the support of our economy in order to really be able to do the business of Alberta.

It's also my privilege to stand as the representative for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and for all the workers there. It's not a community that is made up of skyscrapers and the office buildings that house the leadership of our oil and gas companies. It's actually the home of the people that work in the plants themselves. It is people that build homes, start hockey teams. The companies also build a lot of things in our community as well, things like the Sherritt wing of the Fort Saskatchewan hospital. Those things are all built by the economy. I'm glad that everybody has come together to support those people today.

Every day we lose $80 million because of the differential by shipping our resources to the United States. Having less money and having our arms tied behind our backs economically makes it very difficult to help those workers get better jobs, go back to work, and be able to build those things in Alberta that we've been working on for the last three and a half years: schools, highways, intersections, bridges. Those things not only build a province but also make it more safe. It's work that had been long overdue, and I'm glad that we've been able to put some people back to work doing that, but not everybody has been able to go back to work.

I know that probably, hopefully, all members of this Assembly don't support losing $80 million of resource money from our province to the United States. I'm sure that the President there would like to make America great again, but I would like him to not do it with our money.

It's been a long journey for the last three and a half years. Unfortunately, we have seen a federal court ruling that hurts families and hurts Alberta's economy, but it's important to continue to build the things that we're able to do here. It's important to diversify the economy and industry, work that started with the announcement of the petrochemical diversification program that saw the announcement of a $3.2 billion polypropylene plant that will be built just outside of Edmonton here, near Fort Saskatchewan.

We're also going to see, hopefully very soon, the final investment decision on a project that Pembina has put forward to do polypropylene. Also, we're going to see the results of phase 2 of that program and see what other projects are being proposed by companies around the world. We know that there is so much possibility in that economy and we know that there are companies that want to do value-add to ethane. We know there are companies that want to build straddle plants, and we know that there are companies that want to do upgrading. In the absence of the leadership that should have been coming prior to our government, we have had to grab the bull by the horns and take on that work as the province with some incredible partners in oil and gas and energy.

When it went to the federal court with everything that had been done so far, why was it turned over to the government of Canada to fix? Why did it fail? We see that it wasn't just a bad process that was created by successive federal governments, but it was also just plain bad listening. You know, that work, to be adults coming to the table and looking at those issues with our indigenous partners across the land where this infrastructure will be built and to actually discuss with them as partners, as self-determining people what it is that will benefit their communities, what benefit it will be to their families, and to actually listen: we have some of that work that happens every day in our communities.

I know that I have met with families both in Strathcona county and Lamont county that are on the front lines of development of our natural resources, and we have processes in which we determine how their families are affected, how their business is affected if they're farming, how their health might be affected, how the value of their very homes can be affected because when these areas are redesignated to heavy industrial use, the actual value of their home disappears.

I find it very troubling when we understand from the federal court that we did not listen enough through those processes and that we did not come to the table as partners to actually talk with indigenous First Nations about what that development looks like and how those impacts occur. It's troubling that we would afford those rights and those privileges to families that are basically my neighbours but then somehow lay a different judgment, a different set of values against our indigenous partners and say that somehow the two are different. The two are not different, and they should be thoroughly brought to the table and listened to because that's the only path forward.

You know, I hope that we can, as Albertans and Canadians, clear that hurdle and move beyond that sort of hyperbolic, disparaging comments that sometimes we hear. So I'm glad that this project is now owned by Canada. It's a project that as a public piece of infrastructure for the time being should deliver a public benefit.

Working with people to make sure that there are local hiring opportunities and local economic development opportunities is incredibly important every inch of that line.

What do we do now? Well, we keep talking to Canadians and Albertans about what we're doing. There's a reason why 7 out of 10 Canadians now, as a result of the work of our Premier, are on side with this project. They understand the value that comes back to their communities and that that this sort of real change is possible. It's important for them to know what we've done in terms of environmental leadership with the climate plan, to know what we're doing when it comes to diversifying our economy, and how it is that we have their backs through this entire process and into the future.

I look forward to further work on this, and I'm glad that we will continue to see the benefits come to all of our constituents, including those in Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just in the last minute or two that we have left, I just wanted to answer one of the questions that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was talking about. He wanted to know what we would do differently. That would be promoting Canada. You want to change GHGs, you want to change output: you use the greenest, best things that you have in the world that come from our country. You become the cheerleader. You are the person.

The world needs more Canadian energy. It's as simple as that, and if we actually look at what we're capable of doing, what we have, then, what the industry has done in order to promote better types of energy – there are billions of dollars, $1.4 billion, in fact, that COSIA has put into making sure that we are as environmentally positive as possible. The fact that there are people in our own country who do not know and understand and promote this throughout the rest of the world, that Canada should be the leader, the example, not the beating post of the world for energy is an absolute shame. We are the market. We are the ones that should be going overseas.

There are all sorts of things that are happening with carbon leakage from countries that have fewer human rights than our own country, yet we import that every day. The United States may be the larger importer, but we are still importing products from countries that do not uphold the rights and the conditions that we have in our own country. You want to make a change? You promote Canadian energy.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

Second Reading

Bill 8

Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to rise today and move second reading of Bill 8, Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018.

In the past few years Alberta has seen an increasing number of catastrophic disasters and local emergencies. All members are well aware of the significant impacts to personal lives, property, and community that result from these events. We all saw how Albertans fled Fort McMurray in 2016, when the Beast tore through their community. We saw how Calgary and High River and Canmore and many other southern Alberta communities were inundated by water after unprecedented rain in 2013. And we all saw how Slave Lake was affected after wildfire swept into the town in 2011. While these events were the big ones, there have been many other disasters that have affected Alberta communities over the years as well, from north to south, from east to west. Each event required action from local responders and municipalities to get people out of harm's way and to protect property to the greatest extent possible.

When the fire is put out and the water recedes, we take the opportunity to learn from the incident: how the response was handled, what went well, what could have been done better. For the larger events we hire an independent third party to conduct a formal postincident assessment and make recommendations for improvement. Madam Speaker, many of the proposed amendments you see in Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018, would implement recommendations from these reviews.

Most of what the members will see in the bill are behind-the-scenes items, so to speak. The proposed changes to the act focus on technical aspects of how municipalities and first responders handle emergencies. One result will be safer conditions for first responders and Albertans under evacuation orders, another would clarify how dispute resolution is used when property is damaged during a response, and another would establish the authority to create a new regulation that further clarifies emergency management roles and responsibilities with local authorities. Bill 8 will also make several other clarifying and technical amendments. Ultimately, all these proposed amendments will lead to stronger, more efficient responses to future emergencies.

Members will recall that Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018, was introduced this past spring. We then hit the pause button to consult with our partners across this great province on the legislation and the new local authority emergency management regulation. Over the summer the Alberta Emergency Management Agency engaged municipalities, first responders, and other stakeholders. We held in-person sessions in 11 communities across the province, which were participated in by 174 stakeholders from 92 municipalities. We talked to them about the bill and also about considerations that will be laid out in further, future regulations. Specifically, we spoke with municipally elected officials, municipal and First Nations administrators, directors of emergency management, and law enforcement.

We focused our engagement on these stakeholders as the proposed changes deal with the way municipalities and first responders handle emergencies. The goal is to find out whether the updated emergency management framework would give them clear direction on what they need to do to prepare for an emergency and then to respond. Although events like this are becoming more common, dealing with large-scale emergencies is not something local authorities have to deal with on a regular basis, so it is important to know if we are hitting the mark on clear roles and responsibilities with stakeholders. The answer is yes. Most importantly, stakeholders agreed that these proposed changes will move the ball forward towards a stronger emergency management framework in our province.

Madam Speaker, we have seen an increasing number of disasters impacting Albertans, and we have a duty to protect residents of this province when disaster strikes. The best way to manage emergency response is to be prepared well before emergencies happen. I'm proud to say that Bill 8 will result in a safer, more prepared, and more resilient Alberta. I'm proud to move this.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Perfect. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak about the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018. Alberta is a very scenic and beautiful province, and it has been devastated by an increasingly frequent string of natural disasters. We've seen fires ravage the north, the west, and the south and floods overwhelm most of the towns in between. Alberta quite literally has seen hell and high water over the last 10-year period. Albertans have a beautiful capacity to care for one another, selflessly help those who may not be able to do so for themselves, and persevere through any and all trying times. Not all that long ago Calgarians were standing knee deep in floodwater, lending a hand to strangers whose homes were impacted.

As grateful as we are for our supportive communities, that rally in the face of adversity, the highest praise and gratitude goes to our emergency personnel, who work around the clock in these disasters to ensure the safety of the public and that no one gets left behind, including pets. This is why it is so crucial that these personnel are given the power and authority to carry out what they are mandated to do.

Not only must we ensure the safety of each individual who's impacted by a wildfire, flood, and any other circumstances that necessitate a mandatory evacuation order; we also have a duty to ensure that those risking their own lives for the sake of the community are not putting themselves in harm's way. When an individual has been told that he must evacuate and that danger is impending and the individual decides not to heed the orders, the emergency personnel would then have to return under much more dangerous circumstances to try to get everyone to safety, placing a higher risk on their own lives as well as the individual's. A firefighter, for example, when making his initial evacuation order rounds and a ravaging wildfire is incipient, should not risk the loss of his own life to return to a house that he has already visited which is now engulfed in flames, putting additional lives at risk due to another person's stubbornness.

Although it may still be the case that some may choose not to leave their homes when a mandatory evacuation order comes into effect, this bill clarifies the liability in that circumstance. This places more responsibility on Albertans to heed evacuation orders and take seriously all advised precautions as they are now liable when they choose to act recklessly. Furthermore, this bill allows municipalities to become more effective in their local emergency management through their emergency advisory committee and other local authorities.

However, not all municipalities will be benefited by the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018. This legislation can impose a burden on the smallest communities, who do not have the resources, both in terms of money and people, to apply the necessary regulations of this act. In fact, this legislation, together with the Municipal Government Act, may overwhelm certain small towns that cannot take on this additional imposed cost and perhaps even make them consider dissolution. It can be unfeasible for certain towns to impose the necessary responsibilities described in this bill, and the additional cost can render the municipality to be in an unstable position.

However, municipalities are expected to be better prepared for disastrous situations, which will ultimately serve the community and ensure the safety of their residents. This amendment allows the minister to decide on a minimal level of training requirements and ensures that their elected officials and municipal staff have a basic level of understanding of emergency protocols. Additionally, it is not enough that officials and staff are knowledgeable about the procedures of an emergency situation; they must also be aware of their roles and responsibilities before and after an emergency. Having a standardized training requirement across municipalities will effectively end the existing patchwork of training across Alberta and will ensure that there are no gaps in knowledge or practice when faced with a relentless natural disaster.

Instead of the patchwork, it is beneficial to have a framework for what each municipality's emergency plan must include and that they continue to update those plans regularly. When the time comes to put into immediate action the emergency plan, that is not the time to be realizing a flaw that has been overlooked. There is no worse time to realize that your municipal staff is unprepared or underprepared than when a disaster strikes. That is why standardizing across the board not only the plan but also the mock disaster exercises and requirements and frequencies is vital to ensuring the preparedness of the individuals whose lives will depend upon it.

Although this will increase the effectiveness of the emergency preparedness plans across the majority of the province, there is still the challenge of the smallest municipalities implementing this. We have not heard these concerns addressed, and this has caused some uncertainty. The requirement for municipalities to conduct annual or biannual emergency management exercises, although it is an absolute necessity for big cities and towns, can prove ultimately quite difficult for small municipalities, which may struggle to put together the resources. It seems to me that the purpose of this bill has been to improve regional collaboration between towns and ensure that appropriate and adequate requirements are clearly communicated throughout the region, though that still leaves me with the question of how small municipalities will be able to comply with this bill.

Finally, I'm happy to hear that the dispute resolution mechanism will not be used to decide whether or not an individual is eligible for funding following a disaster but, rather, the amount. This will be when property is damaged by the municipality or province in their response to the disaster rather than the disaster itself.

To conclude, I'm still uncertain about how this bill will affect the smallest municipalities, especially in the northern and rural areas of the province, and whether this will lead some of them to consider dissolution. However, I am glad to see that the standardization of safety plans and requirements for preparedness will be ensured as well as regional collaboration and putting safety of firefighters as a priority. That is why I'll be supporting the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018, today.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to rise today in support of Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018. Over the past few years, as has been discussed before, Alberta has seen an increasing number of catastrophic disasters and local emergencies. I know that in the constituency of Banff-Cochrane this is something that's all too familiar to folks because we live in, you know, a large rural area that's surrounded by trees and rivers and we are at risk of lots of different kinds of natural disasters in terms of forest fires, flooding, drought, and that kind of thing. We have a lot of urban-wildlife interfaces where people come into conflict sometimes with natural disasters just based on the proximity of their communities to these wild spaces.

You know, over the last summer, in the Bow Valley and even in Calgary there was a lot of smoke from the wildfires in British Columbia. This was something that kept natural disasters at the front of mind for constituents, and I know that a lot of people reached out to my office to ask: "Are we prepared? If the smoke comes closer and the fire approaches our community, are we prepared to act and be ready if this disaster comes closer to us?" The answer is yes. We've got very dedicated first responders and emergency management professionals that were ready to act at a moment's notice. But we also know from some of the reviews that we've done, based on past disasters, that there are some improvements that we can make. We can always learn and do better, and this bill aims to do exactly that.

I'm sure that my fellow members are really well aware of the significant impact to personal lives, to property, businesses, and communities that can result from these events, and we also know the way that it can impact our constituents. I know that after the floods of 2013 it's very common for people, especially in the spring – any time it starts raining, people get nervous because they're not quite sure if we're going to see the same kind of conditions that we did during the 2013 floods. That uncertainty is what can lead to mental health conditions. You know, it can sometimes make people leave communities entirely because of how traumatic it has been to go through those. So we owe it to those people to make sure that we're doing everything we can to prepare for emergencies and respond appropriately when they do happen.

For example, you know, we saw how in Calgary, High River, Canmore, Bragg Creek, Redwood Meadows, and many other southern Alberta communities we were inundated by water after the rain in 2013, and quite honestly, Madam Speaker, that event is something that inspired me to put my name forward to run to represent the constituents of Banff-Cochrane. I was incredibly inspired by how constituents just rolled up their sleeves and helped complete strangers clean out their basement. It showed how resilient our communities are and how dedicated Albertans are to helping one another. Even in the most extreme circumstances, when a neighbour may have lost their home, they're willing to go and help their neighbour clean out their basement and help put their lives back together when they're going through extremely stressful times. That really inspired me to want to step up and help ensure that we have the resources that we need, that the government is there to support those communities when they're going through these difficult circumstances.

You know, we've seen that all across the province, in places like Slave Lake after the wildfire there in 2011 and the same with Fort McMurray just recently. These events are the big ones that attract national and world-wide attention, but there are many other disasters that have affected communities over the years all across and in all four corners of the province. Each of those events always requires actions from local responders and the municipalities that are involved to make sure people get out of harm's way and to protect property to the greatest extent possible.

When the fire is put out and the water recedes, we always take the opportunity to learn from that incident: how the response was handled, what worked well, and what we can improve on. For the larger events the government always hires an independent third party to conduct a formal postincident assessment and make those recommendations for improvement. Madam Speaker, the proposed amendments that you see in Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018, would implement the recommendations from those reviews.

Most of what members will see in the bill are sort of – I suppose you could categorize them as behind-the-scenes items. Sometimes the really flashy things get put out in public. You know, we make sure we have fire trucks and boots on the ground, and those are absolutely important. But how we co-ordinate those things behind the scenes and the rules that pertain to emergency management response are also extremely important. The proposed changes to the act focus on these more technical aspects about how municipalities and first responders handle those emergencies.

That said, this bill would achieve many important updates. One result of the bill being passed would be safer conditions for first responders and Albertans under evacuation orders. I'd just like to speak a little bit about how relevant this is to my constituency. For example, places like Banff, Canmore, and Lake Louise are largely populated by tourists, and they see about 4 million tourists and visitors a year. When you're dealing with these kinds of volumes of people, when emergencies happen, it's critical to have a response plan, to be well co-ordinated. You know, tourists come from other jurisdictions, and they might not always know the best evacuation routes or how to get away from danger.

You know, one prime example is that in the summer season there are so many tourists that flock to places like Moraine Lake, for example. The parking lot is full by about 8 o'clock in the morning, and they constantly run buses from the overflow parking lot. You've got this wild area where you've got people scattered throughout a large geographic region, and you've also got a bit of a bottleneck. In terms of if people had to evacuate, you've got thousands of people who are trying to get through a single road. Making sure that our first responders have the tools that they need to undertake an evacuation under these challenging conditions is absolutely essential.

You know, when I think of this, I think of visiting the Lake Louise fire department just recently. This little fire department is really a scrappy fire department that punches way above their weight. It's primarily composed of volunteer members, and these members every Tuesday, I believe it is, go and train. They count inventory in the fire department to make sure that they know where all the equipment is and that they're prepared to respond to these emergencies. They do this out of a really small fire department, that's based in one of the Parks Canada buildings there, and despite not having the ideal circumstances, where they'd like to be situated, it's remarkable to see what this department has achieved and the dedication of their members.

These members – and not just these members, for instance; it's all volunteer firefighters, for that matter – spend their own money for increased training to make sure that they have the skills that they require to respond to these kinds of things. I know the members in the Lake Louise fire department contributed their own money to buy a Lifepak defibrillator machine, that can help save lives. It's been successful. To see these people spend their own time and their own money on these things – for us to be able to help them do their job by making sure that this kind of management co-ordination is taking place behind the scenes is extremely valuable.

Another part of the bill would help clarify how dispute resolution is being used if there's property damage that occurs during a response. One of the other aspects of the bill would establish the authority to create a new regulation that further clarifies emergency management roles and responsibilities of local authorities. There are also some clarifying and technical amendments. Ultimately, all of these proposed amendments are going to lead to stronger and more efficient responses to future emergencies.

You know, we know that this bill was introduced by the Minister of Municipal Affairs back in the spring in first reading, and that allowed us to go out over the summer and speak to affected municipalities and stakeholders about the bill to make sure that the proposed changes have gone towards meeting the needs that they've expressed.

I just wanted to talk a little bit more about the kind of preparedness that does happen behind the scenes that I've been privileged to witness. Just a few weeks ago in Canmore I was invited to participate and watch a sprinkler training exercise. Earlier on I mentioned how a lot of communities in my constituency have a wildland-urban interface, so the forest is butting up right against residential neighbourhoods. In Canmore this is especially true in terms of – you know, you've got these beautiful neighbourhoods nestled amongst the trees. What makes it so beautiful also makes it a little bit risky and dangerous. What the Canmore fire department did in combination with the provincial government and emergency response planners was go out and set up sprinklers to kind of fend off fires from encroaching on that wildland-urban interface.

I was up in the Eagle Crescent area of Canmore. For those not familiar with Canmore, the terrain there is quite steep. I was watching these firefighters carry, you know, gigantic fire hoses, I think six at a time, up these steep slopes to set up sprinklers to test how well they would work and where they ought to be situated. I was blown away by the fitness and dedication of these members. Like, just walking up the hill myself, not carrying anything but my jacket, I was out of breath, and then I saw these firefighters basically running up the hill carrying all these hoses. For them to be able to spend that much time to be in shape to do things like that is pretty remarkable.

You know, the other thing that they wanted to test with the steep terrain around there is whether the fire hydrants and the pumps can push enough water uphill in order to get enough water to make the sprinklers work. I believe the sprinklers are about every 50 feet or 100 feet apart, and there's a gigantic line of sprinklers on the water supply. So to make sure that the water can pump uphill and have the pressure that's required was part of this exercise. They looked at solutions like putting in different types of valves so that once the line is primed and you've got the water up the hill, if you need to disconnect for some reason, you don't lose the pressure in the line. You can disconnect, do what you need to do, reconnect, and the hose is still primed. These are all the kinds of things that run through the minds of first responders.

I'm always so impressed by the dedication and professionalism of these heroes, who work all the time to keep our communities safe. I'm extremely proud that we're doing what we can to make sure that first responders and emergency professionals are well equipped, have the kind of equipment that they need in the first place but also the technical details in the background that make their job safer. When we can evacuate people and make sure that people aren't in harm's way, those first responders don't need to focus on evacuating people; they can focus on addressing the emergency situation as it requires.

This bill accomplishes those things. It is based on lessons that we've learned from other emergencies. I'm very proud to be supporting this bill and really thankful to the Minister of Municipal Affairs for the work he's done and his department has done on this. I'd encourage all members to support the bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018. I think this is an important piece of legislation. Certainly, all legislation needs to be reviewed on a somewhat regular basis, so the fact that we're doing this, I think, is helpful. No one plans emergencies, but everyone should plan for a response to emergencies when they occur. This is an attempt to be working towards that to make sure both our plans and our regulations will be effective. All too often, like how great thunderclouds arise in clear, blue Alberta summer skies, sometimes emergencies just arise out of the blue, so to speak. We certainly need to be prepared, and we need to plan for them.

My own experience in emergency management includes about eight years of volunteering with B.C. Search and Rescue and also several years as the communications official for a municipal emergency management team here in Alberta. In B.C. under Search and Rescue I served in the northwest, one of the most active regions. We had many call-outs a year. I've had the opportunity to work not only in the control centre for training under RCMP authority but also to take CASARA, Civil Air Search and Rescue Association, training and spend many hours with SAR techs in a Buffalo searching for downed aircraft. I've done mountain rescue and cliff rescue training, helicopter hover and exit training, and diver support training. I've had a lot of opportunities to participate in this. Of course, in Alberta I had the opportunity to do the provincial training for communications for local emergency management and a number of tabletop exercises, leading and participating in those as well. I do think preparedness is extremely important. Preparedness is something that needs to be rehearsed on a regular basis.

I support this bill and its intent. Hopefully, it will help us in Alberta to respond in more effective and efficient ways when the unexpected disasters do come upon us. As has already been said by the speakers before me, Alberta has had an increasing number of large-scale natural disasters and emergencies that we do need to truly be prepared for. I'm not going to re-enumerate them, because they already have been, but just say that in each one of those cases, when things have happened, there's always been a follow-up report, and there have always been a large number of comments about how things could have been done better, how things should have been planned for or anticipated in a better way. It's my hope and my desire that some of those comments and some of those recommendations are what we are seeing come forward in this bill.

I think the government did the right thing in taking the summer to consult. Hopefully, we will hear the details of some of that consultation as we move through the stages of this bill because I think that many of the people that are directly involved on the ground do gain insights and experiences that should be extremely helpful to us. Hopefully, we will see some amendments and some feedback that will address some of those concerns that have been raised repeatedly. I do say "repeatedly" on purpose because sometimes the same recommendations have come up after various events, and we do need to enact some of those things.

Yes, the consultation period is good, and here we are, and I think we should proceed. Even though many of the municipalities and regions currently have some practices and policies that fall in line with some of these new requirements – and my credit goes to them for their work in that – the reality is that we need a consistent approach across municipalities, and we need to make sure that everyone understands what their roles and purposes are and how they can attain the highest level of performance when it's most needed.

I think we're endeavouring to do the right thing here. I do have some concerns about how the smaller municipalities will be both considered and enabled because that is a challenge for some of them, to be able to have the resources, both in terms of human capital and also in terms of financial resources, to be able to actually respond to some of these things.

Let me speak to some of the details of the bill. Under the authority to establish the local authority emergency management regulation, there are some changes here, that I think will be helpful, to add some additional clarity, some guidance to municipalities as they're trying to figure out what they should and shouldn't be doing in terms of both their bylaws and their staff training and different things like that. Currently there are some high-level guidelines, some high-level requirements and responsibilities, but a little bit more detail there may be helpful as long as we understand that every community is different. Quite frankly, in my experience, every emergency is different.

While the intent to create uniform guidelines is helpful, we need to be careful that we don't go just a little bit too far and create a straitjacket that limits the ability for local responders to address the uniqueness and the complexity of whatever comes at them because there's no way we can ever anticipate everything that could arise in an emergency. But, hopefully, it will improve the authorities' response time, their ability to declare a local state of emergency, their ability to be prepared for emergency before these things start to play out. That's the goal.

Under evacuation orders – next I'd like to speak to that – currently the Emergency Management Act allows the minister or a local authority to order evacuations during a state of emergency or a state of local emergency. This will be amended somewhat to clarify that people are required to comply with an evacuation order when it is made and that it's illegal to fail to leave an area that is under an evacuation order. There are lots of reason, I suppose, why this needs enforcement although I'm not sure what the actual consequences might be there for people who do still choose to remain. There is a challenge sometimes with people who do remain, not in every case, but sometimes they put themselves or, more importantly, maybe even their families in grave danger. Sometimes they cause the diversion of scarce resources and attention away from the actual emergency response. So there is a danger for people sometimes staying.

On the other hand, I would warn that from the municipality, the local authority's point of view, I think there needs to be some clarification and guidance as to when and when not to create a state of emergency officially, because sometimes, quite frankly – I've been close enough to some of this to hear the conversations – the local authorities create it simply as a precautionary measure because they're afraid of a potential liability or they're concerned about potential public response – “Why didn't you call a state of emergency?” – when, in fact, maybe it was a bit premature. Sometimes to do it, I will say, as a precautionary measure or out of fear of liability is not maybe necessarily the right thing for the people of a region.

And then, of course, the issue that has been raised recently as well: if that's the case, what happens with the care of animals? People's pets, people's livestock: are they to be abandoned if we enforce this in strict ways? Are we then as a province taking on the responsibility of caring for those animals as well, which would add a great deal of responsibility to emergency responders, that currently I don't think has been thought through very carefully?

I think we need to be careful about when these things are put into place, and I think that municipal, local officials could use some help and some guidance about when and when not to actually create a state of emergency. Currently the evacuation orders can be declared and a resident who refuses to comply with the mandatory evacuation will not actually be forcibly removed from their property simply because a mandatory evacuation order is in effect. I think that's one of the things that might be worth a little bit of conversation during Committee of the Whole.

Under the dispute resolution piece, changes will clarify which types of dispute may be taken to arbitration. I think this is helpful. Disputes are always difficult, and clarifying that up front as much as possible is really helpful. Clarifying that it's really about the amount of compensation, not whether or not one is eligible for compensation, might help a lot of people understand what they can ask for and what they can't or whether they're even able to do that. It is about not so much the damage caused by the actual natural event but damage that may be caused or necessarily caused by responders trying to deal with the issue.

For instance, a specific detail in Fort McMurray. I know at one point the fire chief showed us that there were a couple of houses that were in a critical location in order for them to try and create a firebreak and prevent the spread of the fire to the rest of the city, and they actually just bulldozed those houses under the emergency management authority. They had full authority to do it. I'm not questioning that they should have done it. But then the question arises: who pays for that, and what is the amount that gets paid when somebody's house, under that act, gets bulldozed? These kinds of difficult situations definitely arise, and some clarity in compensation and these kinds of things certainly would be helpful.

Some other positive changes to the act regarding the emergency advisory committees: those changes, I think, will also provide more detail and direction and, as well, provide consistency across municipalities. I think this is important. Currently the Emergency Management Act requires a municipality to have an emergency advisory committee consisting of elected officials. The changes will be that the regulation may provide additional guidance around creating these advisory committees, specifically regarding roles and responsibilities of the committee. I believe this will help streamline the process and involve more collaboration on the part of all the communities. It will also increase consistency and effectiveness of local authority emergency advisory committees.

Other changes to the management agencies and regulations will help clarify the requirements for the agencies that will ensure that municipalities are able to lead in an emergency response and implement the direction of the emergency advisory committee. I think these things will be helpful.

Another change regarding regional collaboration will help ensure appropriate, adequate, and clearly understood mechanisms for regional collaboration. That is extremely important. I know that in my particular area the cities, the villages, the towns, the counties work very well together, and oftentimes a lot of that has to do with just personality and willingness to work together and a sharing attitude. But the truth is that we sometimes need some guidance for that, and outlining sort of where and when and how to do these things, I think, will do nothing but improve the ability of, particularly, smaller areas, who need assistance, who depend on partnership agreements for equipment and for staffing, in some cases for emergency responders. I think this will be extremely helpful for smaller communities, and it needs to happen.

The regional services commission will be part of that, a joint committee representing two or more local authorities. Summer villages may delegate their coverage to local authorities. These kinds of agreements, I think, are important, especially when an emergency is about to unfold and people are looking across jurisdictions at each other and nobody is quite sure whether they want to or not. It's too late to figure out those kinds of commitments when fires are burning, when floods are happening, tornadoes are blowing. We need to be ready to go.

These new proposed regulations will allow municipalities to enter into their regional collaboration agreements and stipulate which particular emerging managing powers and duties are being delegated to who or being shared with who or being provided by who. I think the requirement to establish sort of these transborder agreements within the province will be very helpful.

I think it's good to see that also there will be additional training, mandatory training. I've done hours and hours and hours of various kinds of training for emergency management, and you can never train enough. Anybody who's in a fire hall trains constantly, so I think that at the municipal level as well, training is extremely important. Even just taking time to rehearse the potential emergencies we might face, what would be our potential response, doing tabletop exercises, doing larger exercises: these things are extremely important.

I just trust that the new act, the amended act, is not going to just place a burden upon municipalities of expectation but also help them to be resourced and able to do that. They need expertise, on the one hand; they need resources, on the other hand. These things need to be backed up with the required support to actually make them have a real life.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my great privilege to rise in the House this morning to speak in favour of Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018. I'd like just one moment to congratulate our Minister of Municipal Affairs for making sure that there was time in the legislative session to take care of this very important business. You know, it's great to be part of a government that is always responsive and is always taking its obligations to the people of Alberta seriously, and I think this is another instance of that.

I have to say that I'm personally grateful to see, you know, these types of improvements being contemplated. Like the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, I also represent northeastern Alberta, and it seems that we've had more than our fair share of disasters in the last several years. Personally, as an insurance agent I got a very close, ringside seat to the Slave Lake fire in 2011 and got to see some of the good things emergency responders of the province did in terms of disaster relief and recovery but then also some of the issues that arose as well.

My very first act as a sworn-in MLA actually was the June 2 – I think we got sworn in in 2015. There was a big fire up in the Wabasca area that very evening, and residents of the Big Stone area were evacuated to Calling Lake, which is in my riding, and then as well to Athabasca. It was definitely a quick education in, you know, what the roles of elected officials are in these types of situations. Then, of course, I live in Boyle, and Boyle is midpoint between Fort McMurray and Edmonton and was one of the major destinations during the Fort McMurray fire.

Wandering River is also in my riding. During that disaster, which, of course, in our neck of the woods and, I think, for the whole province was unprecedented in its scope and the number of people impacted, I think people really went above and beyond. I mean, that was not only the emergency responders, of course, but also local residents and citizens. At the same time there were a lot of things that went really well.

You know, there were other things that maybe gave cause for concern. For example, in terms of the number of people who got stranded on highway 63, part of the issue was that there was no fuel replacement, so basically people were running out of gas along the way. In fact, in Boyle we had to wake up the bulk fuel drivers from the local co-op to get fuel shipped up there, and I know they did the same thing in Plamondon. A lot of that response went that way. I know the Wandering River fire department emptied out all of their deep freezes, and I think they gave out all the food and water. I don't think there was a scrap of anything left in Wandering River by the next morning. Now, this is all great, but these were ad hoc responses, but I think that's entirely understandable considering just the scope and breadth of what happened there.

I think we have to come to a realization that with the change in climate and with more energy being put into the climate system with, you know, springs coming earlier, hotter, and drier, we have to expect the unexpected now. We can't even really call it unexpected, whether it's more frequent and stronger floods, whether it's more frequent – and we'll expect the tornadoes that the member talked about, and especially in our neck of the woods forest fires that burn hotter and burn faster and go further than what we've seen before. We really need to pick up our game, and that's not because we haven't had an excellent program in place, but as the need and demand goes up, so needs our response.

I think this is the right path, and I know that this is something that, you know, I'd say that our predecessors were good about doing as well. I mean, for example, after the Slave Lake fire they had the Flat Top Complex regulations and consultation that went out, and that kind of assisted. I think if they hadn't gone through that process, Fort McMurray would have been even more of a challenge.

But we also have a lot to learn from recent experience. You know, how do you learn from experience? Well, you don't just learn – and this comes from my background as an adult educator. Nobody learns just from experience. You can do the same stupid thing over and over and over again if you don't stop to reflect on that experience, so you learn from reflection on experience. That's why these types of processes of taking stock and going over what went well, what didn't go well, how we can do things better are so important. It's also really important to broaden the scope of who you talk to because a problem that all of us as human beings face is that we don't know what we don't know. Unless we talk to enough people, we just simply won't know what we're missing, so broad-based consultation is always better than just sticking to just the narrow, top experts.

You know, I'm very glad to see that the process that this bill comes out of went through that and actually went through the iterative process fairly similar to the process we used when amending the Municipal Government Act. Once again, that's a complex, very important piece of legislation, a lot of players, a lot of different wisdoms and experiences to draw on, and Municipal Affairs did a great job in that, in making sure that people that had things to offer had that opportunity. I'm glad to see that the same thing happened here in Bill 8. Having it introduced into the spring session but then available for consultation over the summer, I think, was really helpful in making it more of a robust piece of legislation. I think that's it so far.

I just want to also reiterate some of the other comments. I don't think you can overstate just how important it is to be organized and clear, where people are specific about their roles and their obligations and where the resources are for when disaster strikes because, like I said, having been ringside for that type of situation, if you don't know what you're doing, you know – it's why they talk about the fog of war. I think there's a sort of fog of disaster that might be quite similar. You don't know who's doing what, where they're doing it, where you can find what you need, and meanwhile you've got demands, and people are yelling for this and yelling for that.

What happens is you can have people working at crosspurposes. You can have unanticipated gaps in coverage and in services. And that doesn't reflect on how well meaning, how brave, how giving the individuals involved are; it's simply a factor of the situation that they find themselves in. You're never going to be able to eliminate all the unpredictabilities in a situation, but the more you can do on that score, the better. The more you can have clarity, the more you can avoid role conflict, the more you can avoid jurisdictional battles or jurisdictional sloughing off, the better you're going to be. I think that the parts I'd like to highlight for the emergency management regulation speak directly to that because, of course, in Alberta municipalities do have a lot of responsibilities in the event on an emergency under the present act. Setting out what the responsibilities are in regulation, I think, will really help clarify and provide greater direction for them on just what is required for them to plan for disasters and to properly and appropriately prepare for the response if a disaster strikes.

I think, like I said, talking about how we're going into this new world of bigger and more frequent disasters, it's not necessarily going to be the case that there's just going to be one disaster at a time. I think this is something that we came pretty close to experiencing ourselves in the summer of 2016, when the whole province was bone dry and we had almost all our resources focused up in Wood Buffalo. I think it was a matter of luck that we did not have other complications that could have taxed us beyond the point where you call for help in the centre and there are no resources available in the centre to send.

So having it where municipalities aren't just dependent on others, where, of course, you can send help – but then at least they do have some built-in resilience and some understanding of handling things themselves. I think that's important for those who don't have it. I mean, I'm not going to paint everybody with the brush. Some municipalities have excellent emergency management plans in place, other ones maybe could use a bit of updating, and other ones maybe could use a bit of prodding. So I think that's good.

Other parts that I think are important beyond making sure these plans are updated: ensuring that elected officials and municipal employees understand their emergency management roles and responsibilities and are indeed trained for these roles. I can see that as being a very insightful recommendation to make and for a host of reasons, but one in particular – and this comes from my own direct experience – is that you'll find your elected officials facing a lot of public pressure to do certain things. They might be asking you to open up another emergency relief centre. They might be asking you to facilitate sending supplies here. They might be telling you to second-guess the actions of your trained emergency first responders. There's all types of temptations, especially when you're under stress yourself and you're not quite sure of what your own role is, to potentially get in the way and act in ways that maybe you shouldn't. Totally understandable and totally from the best of intentions, but if you're not clear on what your roles and responsibilities are, it can be easy under stress to overstep those. So I think that's another thing I'd like to highlight for that bill, to make all of our hard-working municipal officials' and elected officials' jobs a bit easier that way.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills brought up concerns over the resources available to smaller municipalities in order to meet these new obligations, and I think that's a valid question to raise. I know that when you talk to them, any time there are big changes in government regulation, the first question that they ask is: how are we going to find the time and the money and the resources to implement this? Now, there are free resources that are already available for the small municipalities if they so choose to be able to access. I would encourage other members, if their municipalities have those concerns, to let them know about it. The Emergency Management Agency offers several free programs and tools to help these communities fulfill their responsibilities.

These include a field officer program, which supports municipal emergency management through field officer visits, feedback on emergency management materials upon request, and delivery of training – this is all free of charge, by the way – and a suite of free online and in-class emergency management training courses. They have a good place to start. They offer the community emergency management program, an online application that provides templates and guidance to develop emergency management plans and programs. Now, is there more that perhaps needs to be done? Well, I guess as this rolls out, you know, we'll be getting that feedback, but definitely there are substantial resources already in place, and that is a credit to the management agency that they're there.

I guess that's all I have to say about this bill at the present time. I look forward to further debate and Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate in second reading.

Mr. S. Anderson: I'm good.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 8 Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Good morning and thank you, Madam Chair. Good morning, everybody. As the critic for Municipal Affairs I've taken it upon myself to look into some of the information that we've received this morning. Conversations that have been held this morning included a brief conversation with the minister, which I appreciate very much. I don't have a lot to go into here this morning, but when we last visited this bill in the spring, there were a lot of different things that were basically unknown to us, and there were a lot of conversations that were held over the past several years during my time in the House where we had a lot of incidents in the province, whether it's been the Slave Lake fire, the incidents in Calgary and High River with flooding, the Fort McMurray fire, of course, as has been mentioned this morning, I imagine, and some other things.

There were concerns from the public and most recently, by the way, in my own area in Pincher Creek with the Kenow fire on how these responses were handled by both local EMS personnel, fire response people, et cetera, et cetera, and I would like to stop at that point and just say that I'm so happy to see some of the great, great efforts by all of these different services in every municipality and in every agency. They've just been phenomenal given the circumstances that they've had.

At the same time, though, having said that, within the different reports that have been produced since some of those events took place, a lot of situations were reported upon where improvement could have been sought. From my memory, because I haven't read them all over this morning in much detail, the Flat Top Complex report after Slave Lake and some others talked about Alberta Emergency Management and the agencies involved and how they worked together and how municipalities worked together and how the various fire response teams were able to, especially in one particular note, communicate effectively and have a good chain of command and have a good authority in terms of who was doing what where, et cetera, et cetera.

The government had originally set out in the annual report and the business plan in 2018 a number of objectives, and I believe that the response to these objectives was Bill 8. I would like to say that I'm glad to see a lot of the work that has been done, but because of the way we work in this government between opposition and the government, a lot of times we on the other side here are not informed of day-to-day events and/or consultations or meetings or what's been going on, especially throughout the summer here with the consultation that was done on Bill 8.

I just wanted to take a moment to quickly outline some of the strategies that were in the business plan and then move on to some questions if I could, Madam Chair. The first one was:

- 3.1 Strengthen the provincial emergency management system by modernizing the legislative framework.
- 3.2 Improve Alberta's emergency preparedness and response capability [and that involved also the] Provincial Operations Centre.
- 3.3 Improve community and individual resilience by promoting disaster preparedness . . .
- 3.4 Improve the province's capacity to assist communities' and Albertans' recovery from disasters . . .
- 3.5 Improve resilience within the Government of Alberta by strengthening the Government of Alberta's business continuity program.

And lastly,

- 3.6 Ensure provincial 911 and emergency public alerting programs are in place and are able to meet future technological challenges.

That was more or less what I assumed was something that initiated Bill 8 as well as the other events that have taken place. I'm happy to say that the government provided us with a little briefing document on the different things that they were going to endeavour to do, and I'm quite supportive of those as well.

However, since that time there was a lot of consultation over the summer, then, to summarize. We don't know what information was gleaned from that. We don't know what concerns, other than what we're hearing from municipal organizations, were raised. So I wonder if the minister could address that. I'll give him the opportunity to provide the House with information with regard to these consultations.

Secondly, were there changes from the initial thought processes that Bill 8 created to redirect some of those initial thoughts that were in Bill 8 to the current form that it is now? Lastly, the document received during that briefing included a lot of talk about upcoming regulations. As always, we do not participate in regulations here in the House, so it would be nice if they would shed some light on the regulations that are anticipated as well in that regard.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Further questions, comments? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. Left it pretty open there, so I'll try to address some of the things that the hon. member was talking about. As he mentioned, we did do a lot of consultation from the spring through the summer up until now with particular municipal organizations, emergency management professionals, First Nations, first responders, and law enforcement in particular out there to understand what we learned from our postincident assessment reports. He is quite right that the postincident assessment reports, which we do from every disaster, informed us on what was going on here and what we needed to do as well as the consultation with these other agencies and organizations.

One of the things that we had talked about was, for example, the incident command system, so formalizing and codifying some of the information that we have out there, the jargon, the way that we speak to each other, our communications systems. With the fires down south at Kenow, what we saw, you know, was that the people on the ground worked really well together, again, with what they had and what they knew, but we knew that we needed to do better. You saw last year when there were fires down there that they worked fantastically together, and it had much to do with the firefighters down there, the first responders, the municipalities, our field officers. Everybody was on the same page. That's what a lot of Bill 8 is doing. It's trying to codify and formalize those communications and understand them.

The incident command system is one of those things where it's not technology or hardware; it's about, like I said, clear processes and reporting lines and the same type of common language and structure. One of the things, that my director of emergency management says, is the speed of trust so that you know that the person beside you has been trained and knows exactly what they need to do. So you have no worries, and you can do things faster and quicker and more efficiently because we're all there in emergency management to help people on the ground. So that's part of what's going on there.

We also have First Nations field officers out there that we've been working with as well to help when it crosses over into First Nations areas.

What else can I talk about? Regional collaboration. There was talk about some of the smaller municipalities' capacity. We went out over the last year to municipalities all across the province and said: "Okay. What is your capacity? Let us know what your issues are, your concerns, what your resources are." We put money into mitigation, prevention across the province to aid these places.

Now, when Bill 8 gets instituted, or if it does, if the House so chooses, what that will do is make sure that every municipality has an emergency plan in place. If it is a smaller municipality that doesn't have a huge capacity, Municipal Affairs and AEMA in particular have a lot of training courses, a lot of capability to help those municipalities. If there are two small municipalities, for example, that have volunteer firefighters, which is normally what they do, we encourage them to work together because we all know that disasters aren't going to look at the boundaries; they're just going to go right across. So we need them to work together, and we'll be there to help support them as well, like I say, with the capacity and the resources that we have.

What else? I'm trying to think of what you were asking there, Member.

Mr. Stier: Regulations.

Mr. S. Anderson: Regulations. They're in the bill already. Like, we've done all the work on the consultation on the regulations. That's why we took the time from the spring to now. If there's any regulation in particular that you want me to speak about, I'll get that for you. I'll get my staff to get me the information on it. We do have it laid out in the bill. Hopefully, you guys have that – that would be great – but if there's some particulars you need, I can get that for you. There's a lot to go through with that, so I don't want to just speak off the cuff about something that you guys need to know about.

Like I said, we were informed by a lot of consultation on this, so I'd be happy to try to answer whatever question you have, and if I can't, then I will most definitely get the information for you.

The Chair: Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you. I'd like to respond to the minister's remarks. I appreciate the minister's honesty and openness today. As always, it's very helpful in these discussions. With respect to the minister's remarks just a moment ago with respect to regulations, as he knows and most people here know, we don't get into the meat of the matter in regulations. So I gather that you're not aware of or have not yet had any particular focus on – I see you're waving a paper. Maybe you do have something. You know, usually with any bill we never see the regulations. Then later on cabinet and ministries work on those, and suddenly, wham, we're getting contacts from constituents or municipalities on certain aspects of regulations that came as a surprise to us.

Nonetheless, I'd like to drill down a little bit on what you've said with regard to regional collaboration and the municipal capacities. All warranted ideas; great, great thoughts there. Getting down to the Kenow fire as one example, in the Pincher Creek area there was a considerable number of landowner concerns and organized landowners who, as a result of the lack of co-ordination down there between several entities, had a fairly difficult challenge when suddenly within just 30 minutes they had to evacuate whereas, as the minister may know, at the meeting before that, the night before – in other words, 13 hours before – everything was all good and fine.

So I just wondered if the minister would like to speak a little bit more. Parks Canada was there, the local municipality rural, local municipality urban, and there was also the RCMP – I'm just trying to think; I'm missing one, but I'll come to it in a moment – and, of course, the local fire services from the municipality. Other municipalities came in to assist, of course, and we were thankful so much for all of these other municipalities donating men and equipment on this horrible event.

Nonetheless, is the minister aware of significant improvements in terms of interagency co-operation and chain of command – that is the biggest, biggest concern that was raised – and also the changes in evacuation? I realize that there are things about rights and so on and so forth with people and how they might be compensated later if there are evacuation issues. Chain of command is important to us. What has been changing there? And what about these evacuations? Are there improvements in procedures there?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. Thank you to the member. Yeah. Like I just said a minute ago, when you look at Kenow the year before and then what happened last year, you can see the improvements, and part of that had to do with an assessment after, in reports that came out. We had field officers on the ground at the time, so we went down there to speak to the municipalities. That was a bit of a different situation with Kenow. It's interesting because you had municipalities, provincial parks, national parks, and then First Nations, so it was quite a complicated situation that we had to deal with.

When I was talking before about regional collaboration, one of the regulations talks about state and local authorities who have mutual aid agreements and who choose to enter into these regional collaboration agreements. They can stipulate which EMA, Emergency Management Act, powers and duties are delegated to those organizations. We're trying to leave a little bit of local autonomy in that sense because they are the people on the ground there that know it better than anybody else. Part of that will be informed by the joint emergency advisory committees that are being supported through the bylaws from the participating partners. That will be part of that part, where they can ascertain, in a sense, what works best for them on the ground down there.

We did learn from Kenow to last year about the procedures and about the incident command portion with communication. That was definitely a big deal. With every disaster communication is the number one thing that comes out of it that says: we need to do that better. The people on the ground did that last time. We're very happy about that.

The other part is where we're instituting the municipal elected official training requirement so that every municipal official, even if they're not directly involved as emergency management, as a director of emergency management, which in most small communities would be the CAO because they stay around a lot longer, for example, than elected officials or a fire chief, you know, that's a volunteer – there will be requirements for municipal officials to take an online course to understand their roles and responsibilities. Most of the time it's, you know, to try to make sure that they have the right answers for the citizens because they need to get out of there, too. They kind of all need to get out and let the emergency professionals do the job. That's another part. We're making sure that they have the communication for their members out there and across agencies.

Also, the director of emergency management, there's training required for them which is more extensive, obviously, than for the municipal officials. There will be provisions that will require identified training that they can do within an 18-month period. There will also be municipal employee training requirements. There are all these online courses that are available to them, too, outside of kind of what we're requiring of them.

That's a lot. I mean, with some of the stuff that we're doing there there's a lot involved, but we're there. We have the capacity at AEMA to help with that, so that's part of what we're doing there. I hope that helps a little bit for you.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a follow-up to that, and this is going to be my last series of clarification questions. Thank you, Minister.

Going back to regional collaboration, this seems to be where it frequently is occurring that we have these communication issues and so on and so forth. In the briefing document we received I noted under regional collaboration some of the regulations that were possibly intended to come up. I'll read what I've got here. One of them was:

The regulation will allow municipalities who enter into a regional collaboration agreement to stipulate which emergency management agreement powers and duties are being delegated.

There may be a requirement that an establishment of a joint emergency advisory committee must be supported by bylaws.

In some of the types of things that we've seen in Municipal Affairs before where we've got regional collaboration in regard to, perhaps, planning and other things, we've said that they have to do ICFs, intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. They have to do MDPs. They have to do this, and there's a timeline. With regard to these regulations to allow municipalities to enter into regional collaboration agreements regarding emergency management, is the government, instead of allowing it, going to make it mandatory for them to do these regional frameworks for emergency management or not?

I think it may be something to consider. I'm wondering if that is part of your regulation conversations and part of your intention, to make it mandatory to do that because it seems that when life is in jeopardy, there may be something more important here in many respects as compared to intermunicipal collaboration frameworks and planning. This is an emergency situation. Why wouldn't you, if not, make it mandatory for these to be done?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Yeah, I think it's a good question, and I appreciate that. As it stands right now, it isn't mandatory, and that was informed from our postincident assessments but also from the municipalities themselves, speaking to RMA and AUMA and the two big cities about that. The bigger municipalities have the capacity to do a lot of these things. Some of these small ones might not, so we try to take that into consideration. Do we think they should do it? Yes. But we are trying to leave as much local autonomy in that respect as we can. That's why we will come in with our field officers to help in that respect.

So, yeah, it isn't mandatory right now. That is informed from municipalities, specifically, on that and directly relating to capacity, basically. But the residents that we're elected by, you know, expect us to do these things, so we will make sure that mandatory emergency plans and exercises and all those things are created, but some of these other things like that one you speak of aren't mandatory.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's really a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018. It's important to review legislation on a regular basis to ensure there is alignment between legislation and changing situations. It's particularly important to review the Emergency Management Act regularly because of changes: changes like evolving technology to save lives, changes in how municipalities are managed, and changes like the increasing frequency of natural disasters due to anthropogenic climate change. All of these dynamic factors require the Emergency Management Act to be reviewed and refreshed regularly.

Before being elected to the Legislature, I worked as a business analyst, and one of the certifications I earned was business continuity consultant. As a business continuity consultant I worked with companies to help them understand how their businesses could withstand a disaster. I helped them understand what steps they needed to take to make sure their business could survive an outage caused by circumstances beyond their control, and what I learned from this training is that it's imperative to have a plan. If you aren't prepared for unpredictable or unexpected circumstances, your likelihood to survive is low, and you can vastly improve your outcomes by being prepared, by putting plans, strategies, and training in place to keep your business going and reviewing these plans on a regular basis to ensure their usefulness.

The Emergency Management Act speaks to these same concepts. How do we ensure that our cities and our towns and our rural municipalities are able to withstand the devastating effects of a disaster, whether it's natural or man-made? By doing so, we take a closer look at the existing legislation, and we can ensure what's on the books meets the needs we have today.

From the fires in Slave Lake in 2011 to the Calgary floods of 2013 and the fires in Fort McMurray in 2016 our province and our emergency management personnel have acquired more and more information. While it's very unfortunate that our province has had so many disasters so close together and that we continue to be affected by disasters in the surrounding area like this past summer's fires in B.C., that obliterated the sun from view for weeks, and that so many people's lives have been turned upside down, the information gathered has been invaluable. We see those lessons incorporated into emergency management exercises that are held on a regular basis to ensure that first responders are prepared for the unexpected on a large scale.

By definition, disasters affect many people and have the potential for loss of life. I'd like to take an opportunity to thank all of the first responders who help us stay safe during a disaster and every day any of us find ourselves in unfortunate circumstances. Thank you to the police, the fire, and the EMS personnel that are there for us every day.

It's smart to have a plan and be prepared so that lives and property can hopefully be saved, and it's important to ensure that plans and processes make sense on a regular basis. For these reasons the Alberta Party caucus supports the passage of Bill 8.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. My background in my previous life was in this world, emergency services, and I just want to say to the minister that I commend him, with a caveat, of course. Don't get cocky. This seems to be a reasonable bill. It seems to be a bill that is about addressing issues within our emergency services. It is truly about reinforcing best practices, and I hope that.

That said, when I read the document, though, it does appear to be very, very high level. I hope as they craft the rest of it and get into the nuances of it, they provide more in the way of explanations as well as even scenarios to demonstrate so that the individual people in the municipalities across our province understand how these things evolved and why we do them. It is about leadership. It is about accountability. We have 87 fiefdoms here within this Legislature, and within each one of our constituencies it's divvied up even more so into different little regional communities and towns and whatnot, each one with their own little – I hate to use the word – empire, but certainly everyone is responsible for their own community.

We just want to make sure that there's a balance there, ensuring that they do have the supports and the education, as the minister has indicated. Some issues that have happened previously were where groups have come in and overtaken the local group. Without using that local expertise to identify some of the issues, there are balls that get dropped. Again, it is a balance. It is about making sure that there are things like mutual aid agreements. It's good to see that that's being led from the top because, quite honestly, a lot of municipalities need to be guided towards that. Positions are replaced in these municipalities, and the new guy doesn't know what's going on. That's where I see this legislation really leading to, really enforcing a lot of these communities to participate in things like mutual aid, to be aware of all the hazards in their area as well as have the ability to access the resources to that.

It boils down to money. A lot of these issues that you see come out of these incidents is that sometimes it's as simple as someone being hesitant to call for something because it costs money, and they're hoping another agency will call for that. As an example, hazardous materials are very expensive for some of these big events. You know, I've been at events where it's costing $30,000 a day for a group to come from Calgary and bring their equipment to address a spill or something like that. Those are literally the things that will impede a community from actually calling for that, because they don't have the money. I know that emergency management has a budget. I think those are also things they need to clarify and support those communities with, making sure that they have the financial supports to call for the resources they need, provided they also have the education and the understanding to know when to call for those things.

Certainly, I might be getting into the weeds a little bit. My coworkers here are keeping it at the high level. Again, that is what I would desire, making sure that even though you have this high-level document, you provide some more information and more clarity regarding some of the smaller issues that occur. I have no doubt that you can come up with a lot of examples that would definitely reinforce those decisions.

That said, here in Alberta, here in Canada we also should be proud of the fact that we do have safety ingrained into our society. As I might point out, just this summer in I think it was Portugal or Spain – Portugal had some fires. People died in those fires. We're talking western Europe here, where they're just as modern and advanced as we are, and they lost people.

In Fort McMurray we had, depending on what number you're looking at, about a hundred thousand people evacuating out of a lot of these camps and all that. We didn't lose one person. Albeit we did lose two kids in a semirelated motor vehicle accident farther down the road, but directly as a result of the evacuation we didn't lose anyone. That's really amazing because we had a lot of people. A lot of houses burned down. I'm surprised that not one person who had his ear plugs in and his light blinders on so that he could sleep and work his next shift died. We didn't lose one of those people, and there are a lot of those guys in that community.

Again, commendations to the minister. You will need to provide us with more clarity, especially for a lot of the municipalities so that they can be more supportive. But the intent seems to be very good, and I just wanted to be on the record with that.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other questions or comments? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. Yeah, I'll try to address it a little bit. You know, the hon. member, I appreciate his background as well and what he's done in the past. I have a lot of respect for all first responders. He mentioned western Europe. Actually, some of the folks over there phoned, got a hold of Alberta to see what we've done in the past because with what's unfortunately happened to us here, we are fortunately very good at what we do. We lead in Canada and, quite frankly, around the world. People look to us as leaders on this.

You know, when he talks about some of the things that we're doing out there, a lot of what he's talking about isn't in this bill. It's already in AEMA. It sets out, say, DRP, for example, after the fact who pays for what, and there's certain criteria. That's already stuff that we've got laid out. Bill 8 is more along the lines of formalizing, codifying some of the things we've already been doing and also putting into action the requirements or the things that have come out of our assessment reports afterward. So a lot of these things that he was talking about are already happening.

But, you know, some of the work we have done in respect to, say, big incidents or all hazards is we've got Canada Joint Task Force 2 down in Calgary that goes across the province. This isn't part of the bill, but it will speak to a bit of kind of if there is a massive disaster, we do have some money that we gave out to six communities. It's $2.6 million in grants to co-ordinate regional all-hazards incident management teams to strengthen regional emergency response. That's part of Canada Joint Task Force 2: the town of High Level, the city of Cold Lake, the capital region, Red Deer, and the city of Medicine Hat. So that's spread out across the province to help when there are massive incidents that maybe the local volunteer people, in particular, might not be able to handle.

So we've already done some of that work in that respect – a lot of work, actually – but I understand where the member is coming from. We already have things in place to make clear who pays for what. A lot of this is clarifying, you know, our roles and responsibilities in particular, not those other things already set in place, but I appreciate what he's saying. It is something that through our consultation we heard and that we're all aware of.

Since I became minister, I think that one of the things that is really impressive about emergency management personnel is that, you know, you might go to some other conventions and things like that where businesses or whoever it is might hold cards close to their chest; emergency management professionals don't. They're very open about: if there's a mistake, then how do we get better? Every single person in there is trying to do the best for the people that we represent. It's saving lives and protecting property and livestock out there. It's quite an interesting world to be part of, and I'm quite proud of the people we have in AEMA and across this province that do such phenomenal work.

Again, thank you to the member for the work that he's done in the past and to everybody involved.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise and speak today in favour of Bill 8. I really do appreciate the changes that were made in this bill. I believe that it will go a long way in making our communities safer and making Alberta substantially better.

As has been talked about many times in the House today, the community that I grew up in, Fort McMurray, sustained an absolutely devastating fire just over two years ago with over 2,500 homes burnt, and everyone in our region experienced challenge. Everyone was out for a month, except there were a few people that did choose to stay, so having that clarification on the evacuation is very important because it puts a lot more onus on the individual to maintain.

But one fact that I do want to put into everyone's mind right now as to part of why this is so important is that as of October 5, 2018, there are only 797 homeowners that have received their final building permit and are allowed to live in those homes. That's 30 per cent. Let that sink in for a moment. Only 30 per cent of the 2,500 homes that burnt down have been rebuilt and are being occupied. That's a staggering number.

So it's very important that we do what we can to make sure that this bill passes and that we take emergency management seriously because anyone's community is simply one fire or flood away from this. Thank you so much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Further questions, comments, or amendments? Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah, I do have a couple of questions I'd like to just briefly raise. First of all, I'd like to ask the minister if he could just help me to understand and clarify. We've asked for intermunicipal agreements, and I totally support them. I'm wondering about the issue of interdepartmental or interagency agreements, particularly with regard to – maybe this is more relevant to smaller communities than really large situations – the issue of social services in the midst of an emergency disaster. I don't believe that there is a proper framework or a funding formula to engage social service agencies for emergency disasters.

Quite frankly, managing disasters is often about: how do we care for the people that are displaced? They get into emergency shelters, they have to have temporary housing, yet I don't believe – I say this because several years ago, when I was involved with some of the emergency management things, it's an issue that came up with some municipalities and a couple of field individuals as well. There's no mechanism by which local emergency management groups can call for social service assistance to care for these people. I'm just wondering if that's been addressed. If you could make a few comments on that one for me, please.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Thank you to the member. He's quite right. With a lot of volunteers and volunteer organizations – you know, social services are something the AEMA has already been working on and does continuously to adapt. Red Cross is the big one, but you've got food banks and other volunteers that are involved. That would be part of the local emergency operation centre. It does work through that. AEMA has done lots of work over the past couple of years, trying to work with local organizations as much as we can – you're right – so that we can have those services in place. It usually does come down to the community itself. But we definitely have done some work on that, and there's more to do. I was talking to food banks this morning about that. It's something that I think is important for us, all types of social services.

Good point. Thank you, member.

The Chair: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Yes. Thank you and thank you for the answer. I just think that there might be some room also for some sort of formal process by which some of the government social services might be involved. I don't think that social services has an emergency management plan within their mandate and neither does emergency management to engage them, so some sort of possible engagement, although I truly give credit to the many, many volunteer organizations that in many cases do step up. I only raise it because a couple of municipalities have raised it with me. Anyway, I'll leave it at that.

Secondly, with regard to evacuation orders, could you clarify for me? In light of the new regulations I don't know what the consequences will be for individuals who adamantly refuse to leave. That's the first part of the question. The second part of the question is: if they are required to leave and their property becomes destroyed, they're forbidden the opportunity to try to stay and protect their property – in some cases they are actually very successful at that – then does that automatically mean that they will be qualified for compensation if they lose property due to the natural disaster rather than just due to emergency management activities? Those two questions with regard to evacuation, please.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Yeah, I mean, it was in place already that the fine for contravention of the act could be, I believe, $10,000. That was part of what this act was trying to address. The liability for the first responders is what we talked about earlier. We've had RMA, in particular, ask me about livestock. If somebody needs to stay for their animals, they need to let the local emergency operation centre know that that's happening. We do understand that this has happened in the past. I think that as long as this communication is open, that's what we need to do, because it isn't forbidden for them to stay.

Part of the act is to make sure that that clarity is there. They aren't forbidden, but the problem was the liability issues that were there before for first responders. Now we've said no, like, it's up to the individual, who's accountable for themselves. So if they're going to stay, then, you know, the first responder isn't liable for that. They have to do a job of saving other people as well, right? That was part of that. They aren't forbidden because we do know there are cases, in particular with livestock, where people want to stay and take care of them. So we tried to allow for those types of things in the act, to make sure, because we heard it loud and clear from people out there.

Mr. Orr: I will be very brief. Just to say thank you, that's a very good clarification, that's what I needed to hear, and I think you've got it right.

The Chair: Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wanted to rise to support Bill 8, Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018, and I would like to commend the Minister of Municipal Affairs for putting this bill forward. This bill certainly will have a huge impact in my constituency of Calgary-Bow.

When I go door-knocking, this is the number one thing I hear at the doors. People are still very much impacted by the 2013 floods; Bowness was quite devastated by that. You know, one of the things that I love about Bowness is that they're a tight-knit community, and they help their neighbours. Since the 2013 flood there really is a sense of solidarity in the community. I think it really has strengthened that community a lot. Actually, I was just at the Bowness Community Association AGM, and this was brought up. People are still talking about it. I know that this bill will actually improve the lives of Bownesians, as they like to call themselves, and the residents of Calgary-Bow.

I also wanted to commend the minister on his consultation that he did for this bill. Back in June, actually, I was asked to announce on behalf of the minister that our government will be providing the city of Calgary $1 million for emergency preparedness. I went out to High River for that announcement, and I was welcomed by many different firefighters and emergency-preparedness associations, and they were talking about different ways that we can prevent flood or emergencies. The funding is going to be used for things like the flood dams, water tubes, portable dams. These are things that could really help communities when they're scrambling to find ways to help with the emergency.

You know, after I made that announcement, people were really excited about that because, like I said, the number one thing I hear is: "What are we going to do about emergency preparedness? What if there's another flood?" People actually watch the levels of the river rise and fall. When it starts to rise, they do start to call my office and ask: "What are we doing on flood, emergency preparedness? I don't want to go through what I went through in 2013." Our city needs to be prepared. It's such a pleasure to say that this is a priority for our government and we're going to continue to make it a priority.

Thank you very much to the minister for putting this bill forward and making sure that this will be on the agenda for this session. It doesn't just impact my constituency; it also impacts everyone else across Alberta as we saw with Fort McMurray and the wildfires, the fires in Slave Lake. We have gone through a lot in this province, but Albertans are strong and resilient, and we're always going to be ready to take on whatever comes at us.

Thank you very much again, and I hope everyone supports this bill.

11:40

The Chair: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. As I look at this bill, I think about how important an issue this is, of course, dealing with, you know, the emergency management of the province. I think often of the people that have lost homes in things like fires and floods and that sort of thing, and I can't imagine what that would be like, I really can't. I've never had that experience in my lifetime of losing a home, and I can't imagine what people go through when they have that happen, not to mention what happens when you lose a whole community. Situations like Fort Mac, where so many homes were burned and so many communities were lost right there in that one city. Obviously, it's a very important issue and it's something that needs to be done, and of course it needs to be done right because the results of getting it wrong are so devastating for the people that it affects.

I just had a couple of questions here and a few comments, too. I know after the Fort Mac fire and, actually, after each one of these disasters that we've had in Alberta recently, there have always been reviews, there have always been investigations and things like that. I just wanted to find out from the minister, in particular with the Fort Mac fire: are all the reviews, internal or otherwise, and all the investigations and all the different things that are being looked at as far as the cause of the fire, the reaction to the fire from government and from the different, you know, responders; I just want to know if those have all been finished. All those investigations, all the reviews, again, internal or otherwise: if they're all finished, and if the government has that information at this time.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Out of the Fort Mac one, the May 2016 Wood Buffalo Wildfire Post-incident Assessment Report in particular, I believe that it was 21 recommendations, I think, came out of that. They are either all implemented or in the final stages of implementation. I shouldn't say final, because the Provincial Operations Centre is a big one, and that's something that I'm in the plans for right now. But there were 21, and they are either implemented or in the stages of being implemented, for sure. Some of them are similar things that came out of other postincident reports, too; in particular communication, which is one that I always bring up.

But there are a couple of them I can actually bring up for you if you want. For example, one was a review of this emergency management framework, that obviously we've done. The other one, recommendation 9, was:

Develop a Provincial Emergency Evacuation Framework and . . . model to provide enhanced decision-making capabilities at the Provincial level.

10. Build depth and capacity within local authorities to enable communities to support [themselves] during emergencies, which is something we've been doing a lot of the last year.

Another one about mandating incident command adoption, so that's another one that we've been doing. Those are just some examples for you, but out of the 21, they are either done or in the process.

Thank you.

The Chair: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. Thanks. I appreciate the minister's response there, of course, on the review and recommendations from that report. I just want to confirm with him that of all the reviews, internal or otherwise, being done in this regard: was it just the one that was done, that produced the 21 recommendations, or are there more that have been done or are in the process of being done?

Mr. S. Anderson: The KPMG report was the one that came to Municipal Affairs, and that report is done. And, like I said, implementation is ongoing on a few of those, but they are either done or in the process of being implemented. So that's where we're at there.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. Thank you very much, Minister. I guess as we look at this bill, I know we've expressed concerns with maybe smaller communities, smaller municipal governments and their capacity to deal with some of these new regulations and what's contained in this bill. You know, I trust the minister at his word, that he's willing to work together with these small communities and that the government will help where needed and maybe have some of these communities work together, and I appreciate that. I think it is definitely a concern of ours and a concern of Albertans that these smaller communities aren't stretched too thin as far as, you know, working on something as important as protecting their communities from emergencies and disasters and things like that.

Again, it's so important to get this right, and I guess I hope at this time, too, that the government is willing to kind of take advice as it comes up and as things progress. We always learn more as time goes on, and we always have better ideas, and other ideas will come forward as we progress. Hopefully, we can implement some of these other ideas that people may have on how to prevent these disasters in our communities.

Again, we understand that the government took the time this summer to do consultations on this, and I hope that that consultation, you know, that feedback that they got is well represented here. It'd be a shame to have taken that time to talk with the communities affected and not implement what they've been talking about or what their concerns are.

I think there are some great things in this bill. I think it's, again, a very important bill. It's good to have increased consistency and effectiveness in the local authorities emergency advisory committees. I think it's good that it raises the effectiveness of local authorities emergency management agencies. It's good to ensure that the municipal elected officials are trained and prepared and knowledgeable of their assigned roles in an emergency. There are lots of good things there that I think can only help our communities as disasters come or potentially come and how we react to them.

Just, I guess, a couple of thoughts here. Will this take care of the timely and relevant communication with those affected by emergencies and disasters? I think in some of these disasters, of course, we've found that lack of proper communication and different groups being able to communicate properly with each other has created more problems and actually made things worse. I'm just curious. Minister, do you have the confidence that this bill will solve that problem of timely and relevant communication with those affected by the emergency or disaster?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Member. You're right. Communication is key out there. I have all the confidence in the world that this will help communicate to residents. I mean, this is just part of a bigger picture. We have a lot of things that we do already, whether it be the emergency management app that we have, which was a leader in the country, the field officers on the ground who are out there, the municipal officials, emergency management professionals that are out there, first responders. That's why we're trying to codify what we've been doing, the really good work that's out there right now, but also the incident command system to make sure that's smooth across borders so that, as I said before, we have that speed of trust to make sure that we're taking care of the residents and the people and the livestock and property as best we can and they're as prepared as best we can.

You know, for the future we will have to adapt, as technologies evolve, our different communications systems out there, for sure. It is part of a bigger picture that we do fairly well right now, but, you know, we just need to make sure that we listen and improve as we go. I'm proud and I'm confident that we can continue to get the job done and lead this country in emergency management.

The Chair: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. I just wanted to clarify one thing. I'm not sure that this bill clarifies exactly who is ultimately in charge during an emergency response. I just wanted to see if you could kind of clarify that as far as, you know, where this bill covers that issue as far as who is ultimately in charge.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. It depends on the capacity of the municipalities in that respect when they declare states of local emergency. The municipality declares those. In particular, when they don't have the capacity – Fort McMurray, I mean, is the massive example – when they call us in, we have field officers in place with the municipalities to understand the situation as a minute-by-minute, hour-by-hour kind of deal. As soon as we know that the capacity isn't there for those local municipalities, that's when AEMA takes over at the request of the local municipalities. We don't just come in and take over. It is always the local authorities that we're in communication with to make sure. There's some clarity in the bill; there's some clarity on those things. It's a local clarification in that respect.

Yeah, for sure, it's because we have people on the ground that need to make sure we listen to the municipalities. Yeah, I appreciate that. It is something that came up in a couple of different jurisdictions, and we've made sure to try to keep that as clear as possible. Kenow, you know, and what happened last year: the changes there, that's because of that kind of stuff.

The Chair: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: One more question, if I could. Thanks for the answers. I appreciate it. I'm sure many municipalities already have current practices and policies that meet the new requirements. I'm just wondering how many municipalities have work to do yet on getting their current practices and policies up to snuff as far as Bill 8 is concerned.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Well, I don't have that number, you know, in that respect, but that was part of the work that I referenced earlier in this last year, going out and ascertaining the capacity and the resources that the municipalities have and the Métis and talking to some of the First Nations with our Minister of Indigenous Relations as well, across ministry in that respect with Energy and some of these other ones, too, to understand what business has out there and industry. The capacity out there: a lot of them are pretty good. They know what they need. They're already ready to go. There were just some smaller ones maybe that didn't have quite the capacity, and that was part of what we tried to remedy over the spring and into the summer. Now we'll work with them on these to engage with them to see if they need help in training and with emergency management courses and those types of things. I don't have the number. We didn't look at that. We're there to help them, and we will continue to do so.

Thanks, Member.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments?

Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to rise again to speak to this bill and thank the minister for his initiative in this. I also appreciate the comments of some of my esteemed colleagues in terms of those that are experts in emergency management. Some would call me disaster prone, having lived through a few things like sinking ships in tsunamis, so I understand the planning of emergency management. I like to think of myself as a reasonable emergency management expert, having survived a few of those things, but it's very gratifying to see that this bill actually addresses some of the key issues in terms of addressing the preparedness and ensuring that our communities not only are ready for possible disasters – of course, it's kind of like an insurance policy. You hope you never have to use the training, but, in fact, these are the insurance policies we make by ensuring that the province and cities and municipalities are ready in the event that something occurs. We don't have a lot of time. You don't have a lot of time to go backwards to do that training in a hurry. You have to be able to react and do much of that through having a plan and executing it.

I was in the airline business for about 20 years; gratefully, we had emergency and accident training and situational analysis and all sorts of preparedness for that. Gratefully, I never had to use that in 20 years, but we had it annually to ensure that we were ready in the event that there was a disaster, not just to be ready for a disaster but to also deal with the people and to ensure that the emotions and some of the challenges people face beyond the physical impact of that is also ready and there to be addressed.

My question to the minister. I've had some opportunity recently through the Economic Developers Association of Alberta to understand a lot of the work that they're doing in terms of resiliency training, which is really not just during the disasters and the emergencies but afterwards, to ensure that these municipalities and organizations, including the chambers of commerce and the municipal leaders and the political leaders of the area, are ready to move quickly after and to understand what needs to be done during an emergency to ensure that they're ready and that their capacity is not undermined.

I know that the Economic Developers Association of Alberta and their CEO, Leann Hackman-Carty, have been going around the province and have been supported in some respects by the government to do some of this resiliency training, and I think that they're moving slowly but surely through many municipalities. They're struggling with funding, from what I understand, in terms of doing that resiliency training. So I guess my question to the minister is: in this bill we're talking about preparedness and how we act when an emergency comes, but are you working with your colleagues in terms of that resiliency training to ensure not only that we address the incidents but that we address the impact and are able to move forward quickly afterwards to ensure – we've heard from our esteemed Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin as well about the fact that there's only about 30 per cent of the households that have actually gotten through the process of some of the funding, the closure . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Committee of the Whole will now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Yes. Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 8.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the committee concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, say no. So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing as we've made good progress this morning, I would move that we rise until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, October 30, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Hon. members, if I could just speak to a couple of administrative manners first. As we continue the proceedings for today, I want to make a couple of reminders. First, I would ask that you please remember that you do not cross between a member who is speaking and the Speaker's chair. [A child vocalized] That's a wonderful sound to hear in here, believe me. They won't have to agree to the rule, but these guys do.

If the Speaker is standing and you are waiting to enter the Chamber, please wait until the Speaker is seated before you take your chair.

Thank you.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the high commissioner of the United Kingdom to Canada, Her Excellency Susan le Jeune d'Allegershecque as well as Ms Caroline Saunders, the consul general for the United Kingdom in Calgary, and Ms Alyssa Perron from the British consulate. Alberta appreciates its historic connection with the United Kingdom and its people. Her Excellency's visit has presented the occasion to explore a number of opportunities. Earlier today we met and discussed opportunities for collaboration in the areas of energy, health, and artificial intelligence, to name a few. We look forward to working with Her Excellency and the consulate in Calgary on further developing and strengthening our relationship with the U.K. I would now like to ask the high commissioner and Consul General Saunders to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to the House, through you, Falun school. I believe these student are in the gallery today. They come from Falun school, which is a school in a little community in my constituency that many may not know about, but if you have been in my constituency, you do know about Falun school. Could these students please rise and receive the introduction of this House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, your class may not yet have arrived.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really an honour to be able to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly, from the beautiful town of Bashaw, the Bashaw school. I would like to introduce to you the students, that are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. McIntosh and Ms Lischynski, along with their chaperones, Ms Miller, Mr. Chipley, and Ms Peterman. Would you please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome. Yeah, everybody please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you 56 amazing grade 5 and 6 students from Afton elementary school. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Baird, Mrs. Rizzato, and Ms Clulow Haennel, along with their chaperone, Mr. James Hornbeck. I had the opportunity to ask them, "If they could see one law introduced in the House, what would it be?" They said, "More ice cream for breakfast," so with unanimous consent – I would now ask them to please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups here today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. First, it's a privilege to rise and introduce the Parkhill and Gillies families, who are advocates for the Phelan-McDermid Syndrome Foundation. Phelan-McDermid is a complex syndrome associated with the deletion of chromosome 22. I was very proud to declare October 22 Phelan-McDermid day in Alberta to help increase awareness of this rare syndrome. I ask that Mike, Gail, Stan, Carol, and Marian please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly. [A child vocalized] I can tell how excited she is for this.

My second is a group of health care aides, who are seated in the members' gallery. October 18 is Health Care Aide Day in Alberta. HCAs are the second-largest health care workforce in the province, and they are very valued members of the health care team. I am grateful for their tireless work to care for Albertans when and where it's needed so families are supported as their health care needs change and evolve. I'd ask that all of these guests and their allies please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Lastly, seated in the public gallery, I have some guests who are here to witness and support the introduction of Bill 21, An Act To Protect Patients. I ask that they rise as I introduce them. Debra Tomlinson is the CEO for the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services. MaryJane James is the executive director of the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton. Katie Kitschke is the executive director of the Saffron Sexual Assault Centre in Sherwood Park. Dr. Cathy Carter-Snell – sorry about that, Cathy – is a sexual assault nurse, examiner, and professor at Mount Royal University. Dr. Karen Mazurek is the deputy registrar of the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta. They are also joined by Marian Stufco, the government relations adviser. Please join me in welcoming these women and showing our gratitude for their efforts.

The Speaker: Welcome to all of you.

The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives of the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers local 424. I would ask that they please rise as I call their names. From CUPE we have John Vradenburgh, CUPE local 474 president and CUPE Alberta recording secretary; Barry Benoit, CUPE local 474 business agent; James Niven, CUPE local 784 president; Lee-Ann Kalen, CUPE local 1099 president; Alejandro Pachon, CUPE national researcher; and Dustin Abbott. From IBEW local 424 I'd like to welcome journeyman electricians Robert Gibbons, Sean McDonald, Ray Parker, Ashley Mycholuk, and Richard Nally. I would now ask all members of the Assembly to please provide them with the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Mike Bonner. Mike Bonner has been a long-time supporter of me through multiple elections and was there right when I started my political career. He's a fierce advocate for workers who've been injured and has been a long-time advocate for those who are working with or on occasion dealing with WCB. I'd like him to rise now and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Alberta's first Advocate for Persons with Disabilities, Mr. Tony Flores. Mr. Flores is an accomplished parathlete and a leader who has devoted his life to disability issues. He believes strongly in self-advocacy, empowerment, and breaking down barriers. I'm excited to see Tony lead the disability advocate's office to make life better for Albertans with disabilities, and I encourage anyone with concerns to contact his office once it's open, this November. I ask Mr. Flores to please receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a few introductions today. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly various members of food banks from across our province. They're here today to talk to their local MLAs to discuss some of the issues that they're facing and some of the successes as well. As you know, the food banks of Alberta feed many hungry people in this province and have seen an increase in usage year over year. I will ask you to rise as I call your names: Suzan Krecsy, Alison Richards, George Thatcher, Kevin Leahy, Valerie Leahy, Gert Reynar, Cindy Carstairs, Tia Fox, Bruce Ironshirt, Leni Schielke, Mark Schielke, Doug Tweddle, and Executive Director Stephanie Walsh-Rigby. It's a personal honour of mine to introduce the chair of Food Banks Alberta and the executive director of the Airdrie food bank, Lori McRitchie. Please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very good friend of mine, Lori Rehill. Lori, please stand. Lori is the former executive director of Airdrie victims' services. She is a volunteer of all wonderful things. She's also here with Food Banks Alberta as an adviser. She's my campaign manager, and we're very excited for the things that are to happen in Airdrie.

At this time I would also like to recognize the staff and students in Airdrie at C.W. Perry middle school that are watching at this moment.

Please, all, receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Official Opposition and Government Policies

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to the working men and women of Alberta: firefighters, nurses, social workers, plumbers and pipefitters, teachers, road builders, and educational support staff. We are a province of working people who believe in Alberta, and we fight for Alberta every day.

I'm speaking about the many in Alberta that the Conservatives want to leave behind, the people the Conservatives want to hurt with their backroom promises to their friends and insiders.

I'm speaking about the men and women who want basic protections that will keep their families safe, the people who want workplace rules so they can be treated with basic dignity and respect.

I'm speaking about the men and women who deserve retirement security, not looming threats that their pensions will be gutted, the social workers who hold up their fellow Albertans in their darkest hours, the nurses who deliver direct care and emotional support for our families when they are sick and vulnerable.

I am speaking about the pipefitters who are fighting for the energy economy and for our strong future.

I'm speaking about the teacher who is putting in that extra care and attention to ensure that each of their students has the best chance at success.

I am speaking about workers. I am so very proud to do so, and to you working Albertans I say: we hear you, and we are working for you because we are a government of workers. We are teachers, nurses, tradespeople, public servants, and social workers. We are electricians, utility workers, policy analysts, and, yes, most shocking of all, we are the people who identify with the mice, not the cats, in Mouseland. We are workers, and we are Albertans. We are working for you, and we are fighting for you, and together we are going to keep this province moving forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Natural Resources

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The world needs more Canadian energy. Did you know what our energy sector does for Albertans and this great province and our amazing country of Canada? Do you know the impact that our energy sector has on bringing prosperity to Albertans? We have become such poor storytellers about our natural resources, the lifeblood of our province, the heartbeat. The technical language that surrounds the energy sector can make it challenging, but we can't get lost in acronyms and technical jargon and forget the heart of the issue. Our magnificent natural resources, our trees, our mountains: these things bring meaning to our lives and prosperity to our families and bring us together as a nation.

We need to work to speak authentically about our natural resources. We have nothing to be ashamed of. We need to continue to fight back against hyperbole. We need to stop letting Hollywood stars like Jane Fonda and Leonardo DiCaprio or activists like Tziporah Berman define the narrative around our resources. We need a government that is proud of the history of our energy sector and has a vision of where it needs to go and isn't afraid to speak out about those things and those attacks on our province, our country, and our prosperity.

We are not telling a story of how our resources represent freedom, social stability, compassion, authenticity, and how our resources have created the world we live in now. Why are we not telling the story, a national story of connection, of how resources have brought us together as a country and as a nation? Why are we not building up our nation and creating pipeline infrastructure, that means something, Mr. Speaker, that is so much bigger? You are building the morale of a country through claiming what is ours and being so proud that you are filled with joy to help seed growth, opportunity, and prosperity. We need to do better because Albertans are counting on us. As my friend Cody Battershill says: our natural resources are a great story, and all of us should be telling it.

Thank you.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Westhead: Affordable housing has been a long-standing concern in Banff-Cochrane. Everyone deserves a safe and secure place to call home regardless of their income. Access to a home is about fairness and is the foundation for a better life. This is at the heart of our government's $1.2 billion provincial affordable housing strategy.

I'm proud to say that we've taken concrete steps to implement this strategy in Banff-Cochrane. Just a few weeks ago, in partnership with the town of Banff and Parks Canada I helped cut the ribbon on the Ti'nu housing complex. Ti'nu provides homes for 131 families and individuals in a town with a zero per cent vacancy rate. The week after we cut the ribbon on the Ti'nu project, I announced a $2.6 million investment in the Banff YWCA's courtyard project on behalf of the Minister of Seniors and Housing. This project will provide 33 families and individuals with below-market housing. A more stable housing market is also good for employers, who often struggle to attract and retain workers due to the high costs and lack of housing options.

But affordability goes beyond just housing. Our government lowered school fees, ushered in $25-a-day child care in Banff and Canmore, froze tuition, improved the child benefit, and, together with municipal partners and Parks Canada, created their own public transit system that now connects residents and tourists all the way from Canmore to Lake Louise.

Meanwhile the UCP proposes hare-brained affordable housing solutions like sacrificing wildlife corridors, a $700 million tax giveaway to their wealthy friends and insiders, deep ideological budget cuts, rolling back protections for working people and consumers, and slashing wages for young people.

I know that our plan is getting results, but there's more work yet to do. I'll continue fighting for constituents to have a place that they can afford to call home and to build communities that include Albertans from all walks of life.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Seniors' Housing Placements

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to make a statement about a constituent of mine, an 87-year-old senior who was spoken about in this House earlier. Zoe Bleau is a resident of Bonnyville who needs placement in one of our local seniors' lodges. Her doctors have supported this placement and even wrote letters reinforcing the need for her to be allowed access to care in the Bonnylodge. However, due to a survivor's benefit that she has as a result of the passing of her husband many years ago, she was denied admission to this wonderful facility. Despite desperate pleas from her family and even myself, the government is unwilling to accommodate Ms Bleau in her wonderful, wonderful state that she is in, which is stuck in limbo. The system that is more or less alienating people with pensions is shameful, and the ministry needs to see that seniors have more flexibility getting into our seniors' centres.

Every day outside of a lodge holds the risk of a fall for a senior. One fall, in many cases, is fatal for a senior. Unfortunately, Zoe was doing her household chores, and she had a fall. Her daughter describes this fall as what left her immobilized and, quote, crying and shivering in a pool of water. End quote. As a result of this fall Zoe suffered a fractured hip, that required her to be sent hundreds of kilometres away for surgery in Edmonton. Clearly, this is regrettable news, yet we all knew the possibility that this would eventually come to pass.

Mr. Speaker, what the family asks and what I hope for is flexibility in the system so that people like Zoe Bleau get the care they need. It is unbelievable that in this day and age our seniors have to beg the government for the ability to age in dignity in local facilities like the Bonnylodge. The family of Zoe Bleau is begging, and sadly this government is turning their back on her. This needs to stop.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Budget Revenue Forecasts

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend at the NDP convention they considered a resolution congratulating the Premier and the government on, quote, securing the expansion of the Trans Mountain pipeline. That's curious. The government's entire budget was predicated on securing the expansion of the Trans Mountain pipeline. Does that continue to be the case? Do they continue to plan in their fiscal plan for the completion of the Trans Mountain expansion?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the member will recall, this matter was discussed when we introduced the budget last spring. In fact, the Trans Mountain pipeline is not factored into the assumptions that underline our budget. In fact, our path to balance is secure because it is based on very cautious and conservative and prudent assumptions. You know what else is the foundation of our path to balance? It does not include firing 4,000 nurses. It does not include having to fire 4,000 teachers. It does not include giving a $700 million tax break to the top 1 per cent. It includes conservative assumptions . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the only person talking about firing is the Premier, whose government is planning on taking 2 billion extra dollars out of the pockets of ordinary Albertans through their 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax.

The Premier just contradicted her Finance minister, who, on the day he introduced the budget, admitted under questioning from media that it was predicated on additional revenues coming from a higher price for Alberta oil through the completion of the Trans Mountain pipeline. This is a very simple and objective fiscal question. Can the Premier tell us whether or not her budget and fiscal plan continue to be predicated on the completion of that pipeline?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've actually just answered that question in my previous answer. What I will say, though, when the member talks about the carbon levy: one thing that our government didn't get into office to do was to hurt Albertans, unlike the members opposite, whose Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills decided in a fit of transparency to say that the UCP plan will hurt Albertans. It's going to hurt. That's not what we're here to do. Our plan is not premised on that. Our plan includes cautious, prudent assumptions. We will get to balance, and we will support Albertans in the process.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this government hurt Albertans when it decided to raise income taxes, the carbon tax, property taxes, to support the Trudeau payroll tax increase, to increase taxes on employers and job creators, all of which deepened and prolonged a recession from which 177,000 Albertans are still out of work. The question is: does the government's fiscal plan continue to be based on a 67 per cent increase in their job-killing carbon tax? That would be the same carbon tax that they didn't tell Albertans about in the last election.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I just really do need to correct the record because, in fact, what happened when our government got elected was that we got rid of a health care levy that this member's predecessor party brought in on all Albertans. What we did instead is that we also brought in a progressive tax regime. Now, I understand that the members opposite are very keen to eliminate that and to give a $700 million tax break to the top 1 per cent and pay for it by firing nurses and firing teachers and making sure that it hurts Albertans. That is not our plan going forward. We're going to continue to have Albertans' backs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second main question.

Carbon Levy Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Project

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, nearly half of Albertans don't pay income tax, but one hundred per cent of Albertans pay the NDP carbon tax. It is the most regressive tax in Alberta introduced by the NDP. It makes it more expensive for seniors to heat their homes, for single moms to fill up their gas tank to drive to work, and now the NDP's fiscal plan is to raise that tax by 67 per cent with no increase in the rebate, making it even more regressive. Why does the NDP continue to plan on that 67 per cent increase in their job-killing, regressive carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the member opposite is of course entitled to his own opinions, but he is not entitled to make facts up. We have been very clear, first of all, that the additional costs of the carbon levy and pricing pollution are not built in to our path to balance at this point because of the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal around Trans Mountain. In addition, the fact of the matter is that two-thirds of Albertans get a carbon rebate, so in fact the member opposite . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'm simply referring to the government's own published policy, which in its budget confirms the 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax with zero increase in the rebate – zero increase in the rebate – making this a massively regressive tax. The Premier knows full well, if she wants to be honest with Albertans, that carbon tax fans, like the NDP and their close friend and ally Justin Trudeau, really want the carbon tax to go to $200 or $300 a tonne. Under the NDP plan that means a massively regressive tax on the poor. Why is the Premier still planning on punishing poor Albertans with the increase in the carbon . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I don't know how many times I have to say this. The member opposite knows that he is quoting something that our government has since moved away from as a result of the Federal Court of Appeal decision. Yesterday I made it very clear to the member opposite that the financial implications of that are no longer considered in our path to balance and are not required for us to meet our path to balance, yet he continues to repeat things which are simply not true. The member opposite: if he ever wonders why it is that people don't have a lot of faith or trust in him, it's this kind of thing right now.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in terms of faith we can see the results of recent by-elections, in one of which the NDP won 14 per cent of the vote and the United Conservatives won 83 per cent and then 69 per cent and 20 per cent. We'll trust Albertans to make a judgment on who's telling the truth about the carbon tax.

Now I have a very simple question for the Premier. Is she planning for the completion of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion? Does she believe that will happen?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that we are absolutely committed to getting the Trans Mountain pipeline completed. We are working on it each and every day. We are standing up for Albertans in front of the National Energy Board as the matter goes forward. In about 20 minutes I'll be leaving here to fly to B.C. to continue to make the case in B.C. for why this project is so important, not just for Albertans but for British Columbians and all Canadians. We will not stop fighting until this pipeline is built.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: I take it, then, Mr. Speaker, that the government assumes that the Trans Mountain pipeline will be built, in which case they assume the carbon tax will be increased by 67 per cent. What am I missing here?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what the member opposite is missing is that we are focused on getting the job done and standing up for Albertans and not cheering for the failure of Albertans or the failure for the jobs or the failure for the pipeline like the members opposite have been doing from day one. That's why, of course, we have a Leader of the Official Opposition who said in Ottawa that no pipeline is a national priority. You know what? We disagree. This is a national priority. That's why we're going to keep fighting for it, and that's why the pipeline will get built.

Mr. Kenney: That's a complete misrepresentation. I said that getting Canadian energy to global markets was a national priority. It's the Premier who said that she only wanted one pipeline, Mr. Speaker, and that's how we got into this situation.

Let me ask the question again since she didn't even try to answer it. Since the government's assumption is that the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion will be completed, is it not also the government's assumption that it will raise the carbon tax by 67 per cent? You can't have one without the other under the NDP's policy.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think I've answered that question enough times already. What I will say is that there is something missing in a budget that would be put forward by the members opposite if they ever, God forbid, got the opportunity, and that's the $700 million a year tax cut that they want to give to their friends in the top 1 per cent. The members opposite say that they can balance the budget, that they can give massive tax cuts, that they can get rid of the carbon levy, but they never say how they're going to pay for it except when the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills speaks, and he says that it'll hurt.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

I think we're at the second supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, let's try this another way. Is the Premier ruling out under any circumstances the government's planned 67 per cent increase in its carbon tax? For clarity, I'll repeat it. Is the government ruling out the planned 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax under any circumstances?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite knows the plan that this government had in place with respect to the pricing of pollution in the province of Alberta. The member opposite also knows the position that I took as Premier of Alberta when the Federal Court of Appeal rendered its decision on Trans Mountain. This is all a matter of public record. I have since talked about what the implications of that are for our path to balance, which is that our path to balance is secure. We have this under control. The member opposite, however, needs to explain to Albertans what will happen if he cuts the levy altogether or he gives his $700 million tax break to his friends.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The Member for Calgary-South East.

Grande Prairie Regional Hospital Construction

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Grande Prairie hospital is still sitting incomplete, and with the construction manager having left the project back in September, it's unclear when exactly the people of Grande Prairie and region will be getting this much-needed hospital. The Minister of Infrastructure assured Albertans that a new manager would be hired by the end of October. Well, we're one day away from the end of October, and there's been no news from the minister or this government. To the Minister of Infrastructure: has a new construction manager been hired for the Grande Prairie hospital, and if not, can you please explain to this House why?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the member well knows, we both sat in government, the two of us together as colleagues, when this issue first came up. Certainly, we have decided not to make this a political issue. Now, I've had wonderful conversations with the member from Grande Prairie, and as we work through the process, I have kept him fully involved in what's going on. You and I both know that as we work towards a solution for the people of Grande Prairie, politicizing it is the last thing we should be doing.

Mr. Fraser: I would agree, Mr. Speaker, but it's about transparency and honesty.

The original timeline for the Grande Prairie hospital has construction finishing by the end of 2019, with the doors opening to the public in 2020. The lack of progress over the last two months and the absence of an updated timeline from the minister points to those dates being pushed back. This is troubling news for the residents of Grande Prairie, who have been anxiously waiting for this important piece of infrastructure to be completed. Minister, the people of Grande Prairie deserve to know when they can reasonably expect this project to be completed. To the same minister: is your department able to issue an updated timeline on when we can expect the Grande Prairie hospital to be completed and open to the public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are actively working to ensure that we have a new construction manager in place. It's a process that we consider extremely important for the people of Grande Prairie. I would ask this question of the member. My door is always open for a conversation. I have had many conversations with folks about the Grande Prairie hospital. I would question that if he is so concerned about it, why has he not approached me for a conversation, with my open-door policy?

Mr. Fraser: I appreciate the open door, but it's also open aisle, and this is question period.

The last construction manager left the project in part because of the large number of change orders and design clarifications, changes that the manager claimed weren't properly accounted for in the funding. This means that we're likely going to see the cost of this project moving higher, and a new construction manager will want to make sure the province actually commits the necessary funds. In addition, given that the previous manager was treated the way he was treated, the new manager will probably ask for a premium to offset the risk of a public fight with the minister. To the same minister: will you detail to this House the additional cost overruns, and will you admit that your treatment of the previous contractor will make completion of this project more difficult?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as we looked at this project – and the construction project contract was signed in 2016 – both sides agreed to both the scope of the project and the cost of the project. Both groups signed that contract and agreed that that was completely reasonable. We have a situation now where we want to move ahead and get this project done, so we have taken the actions that we've taken in order to make sure the people of Grande Prairie have a hospital as quickly and effectively as possible. We will shortly have a construction manager in place and move forward from there as quickly as possible, and we are pleased to be able to say that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control and Wildfire Prevention

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. There has been a large influx of mountain pine beetle into the Jasper area in recent years. Now we are seeing large areas around Hinton being impacted by the beetle. What is your department doing to fight this pest that threatens our pristine forests?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. The fact is that successive federal governments have not adequately addressed this issue in Jasper national park. Through my department we're active on a mountain pine beetle working group with stakeholders in the Hinton-Edson area and other orders of government to co-ordinate efforts to control the pest. The Member for West Yellowhead is in that group, as are local governments and forestry companies. To date the government has invested more than $500 million to address this concern, and more recently we called on the federal government to help contribute to this fight, just as they do for pests that have affected forests in eastern Canada.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Minister. Given that thousands of Albertans rely on our forests for jobs and that more than 70 communities rely on the forest industry, how are you working with the industry to ensure that this pest doesn't impact the jobs and prosperity of our communities?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to continuing aggressive survey and control activities to address the mountain pine beetle and to maintain a vibrant forest industry. Our 2017 budget maintained funding at about $25 million for those activities, with about 70 per cent of those funds going to the Edson forest area, with the main goal of protecting provincial resources. We've also given a grant to FRI Research to study the mountain pine beetle so that our policies are informed by science and the best available data. As always, we co-ordinate our efforts with stakeholders in the forestry sector to ensure the most effective and co-ordinated use of provincial resources.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Minister. Given that the trees that are killed by these beetles increase the risk of wildfires and given that there are increasingly large sections of forest impacted by this beetle, what are you doing to ensure that the beetle-impacted communities are safe from wildfires?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, community safety is always the top priority when it comes to forest and wildfire management. The best way to fight fires is to prevent them in the first place. I'm proud that this government more than tripled funding for FireSmart initiatives. The FireSmart program helps communities and residents reduce the threat of wildfire through things like vegetation and fuel management, public education, and emergency planning. Furthermore, we updated our laws to address things like the use of fireworks and exploding targets, which increase the risk of fires during dry conditions. We have extensive contracts with firefighters and heavy equipment operators should the need arise. We have agreements with other provinces, states, and countries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Emergency Medical Worker Wait Times in Hospitals

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, 650,000 hours spent by two paramedics in Alberta emergency rooms in 2016 with their ambulance out of service waiting to transfer care to the emergency room staff, four times longer than the best standard; 135,000 hours of overtime of paramedics in 2016. This summer our survey of paramedics got the response that there is increased frustration, that their patients' health and their own continues to be compromised, as is confidence in their leadership. To the minister: what has changed since 2016 in hallway waiting times?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We are incredibly proud of the paramedics and all EMS professionals and the work that they do every day to ensure quality care for Albertans. Last year our dispatch system handled more than half a million requests for service. Certainly, demand is up, and despite the significant increase in calls, response times have remained steady. We know there's absolutely more work to do. That's why we increased the budget for EMS by $23 million. That's why we're getting more boots on the ground. That's why we're expanding community paramedicine, and we won't let up.

Dr. Swann: That's all very interesting, but what has changed in hallway wait times?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:10

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some of the work we've done to ensure EMS professionals are being used more effectively is reducing the use of ambulances doing interfacility transfers; building new long-term care beds to ensure that there are appropriate places for folks who are waiting in hospital for placement, to ensure that residents who need to access those beds in emergency rooms have a way to do so; encouraging crews to consolidate patients so that fewer crews are waiting in hospital. We know that there is more work to be done, but as we've seen under previous governments, firing nurses, closing hospitals won't do the job. It is something that you can close things quickly, but it takes time to build. There is more to do.

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Dr. Swann: Again to the minister: has anyone in management been held accountable for this continued waste of resources and manpower?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Certainly, there are a number of issues that we've been working diligently to address. Actually, indeed, I believe that all of the recommendations that the member opposite brought forward are initiatives that we are implementing, Mr. Speaker, and already had been prior to the release of his recommendations. More is absolutely to be done. One of the reasons why we're in this situation is because we lack acute-care hospital space where it's most needed. That's why we're building the Calgary cancer hospital. That's why we're building a new hospital in Edmonton on the south side. That's why we're building the Grande Prairie hospital. We need to invest. The Official Opposition wants to slash billions of dollars from the budget. That would only make things worse.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On page 84 of the NDP budget this spring it says: "Beginning in 2021, additional revenue resulting from the federally-imposed carbon price tied to the construction of the Trans Mountain Pipeline will be used to support vital public services.” Does that continue to be the case? Will the increase in the carbon tax to $50 a tonne continue to be implemented in order to “support vital public services”?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Our budget is not tied to the federal increases in the carbon levy. Our Premier was very clear that until Trans Mountain pipeline construction is well under way, we have removed and pulled out of the federal climate leadership plan. Quite frankly, without Alberta there is no federal plan. I can tell you that our Premier and our government will continue fighting for Trans Mountain. We've been strong advocates. We've supported Keystone XL with 50,000 barrels per day because we need better prices for our top-notch resources.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. the minister just said that a planned increase in the carbon tax is, quote, not part of the NDP's budget, end quote. Page 84 of that budget says that the government is banking on a 67 per cent increase in carbon tax revenues. Why did the minister just contradict the black-and-white words in the budget presented and voted on by his government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me be clear. Our path to balance is intact, and the member opposite should look at our last budget. Now, our Finance minister will provide clear evidence at the appropriate time that it is intact. Let's be clear that we are fighting to get the Trans Mountain pipeline built and that it will get built. Team Failure across the aisle there wants to see this project fail, with 37,000 jobs lost and more than $15 billion to the national economy. I wonder when the members opposite will stop cheering for this pipeline and our energy sector to fail.

Mr. Kenney: Albertans would be forgiven for not understanding the position of the government, Mr. Speaker. The government is claiming that it will ensure the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline and that if it is constructed, there will be a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax, but now it's telling us that there may not be a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax. So which is it? Should we believe the budget or what the government is saying in the House today?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, we're very proud of the fact that we have reduced the deficit by $3 billion. We are on track to balance the budget by 2023. That will continue. In due time the Finance minister will make clear that our budget is intact. What is interesting is – let's look at the history of the Leader of the Opposition when he was in Ottawa: six straight deficit budgets, a $56 billion deficit in just one year. He added $145 billion to our national debt, and $309 billion have gone on interest payments alone. Pretty rich taking advice from the opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the Premier claimed that the construction of Trans Mountain was not factored into the government's budget projections, but a Global News headline the day the budget was presented says: Alberta factoring in Trans Mountain pipeline in budget forecasts. They reported that because the Finance minister said, quote: we've built the revenue associated with higher prices from Trans Mountain into the budget because that's what everybody believes will happen. Why did the Finance minister say that the budget was based on the completion of Trans Mountain in the spring but the Premier claimed that that was not the case today? Why does the government not understand its own budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll say it again for the hon. member that our path to balance is intact, that we will have and we have a clear path to balance by 2023. The difference between this side of the House and that side of the House is that we are not going to fire 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses and give a $700 million tax break to the richest 1 per cent of Albertans. We're fighting for Albertans, we're standing up for our energy sector, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I feel for the hon. minister – I understand the bafflegab and the attacks and the distractions – because he's incapable of explaining this profound contradiction in the government's fiscal plan. According to the Finance minister – I just quoted him – his budget is based on higher royalties coming from the completion of Trans Mountain. Not my words, his. According to page 84 of the budget it's based on a 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax, a $2 billion increase in revenues. Is the government now saying that all of that additional revenue has been . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for asking the same question yet again. I'll give him the same answer, that we have cut our deficit by $3 billion. We are demonstrating that we can invest in Albertans, that we can invest in front-line services like education and health care. Unlike the members opposite, who would fire 4,000 teachers and fire 4,000 nurses, we are showing a clear path to balance while supporting small businesses and the business community and our energy sector across this province. We have their backs. The opposition would let them fail.

The Speaker: I believe we are at the second supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's so-called path to balance takes us to a projected $96 billion debt in 2023, but that's based on $2 billion in additional carbon tax revenue and additional royalties from a higher price after the completion of Trans Mountain. Now the government is saying that neither of those things are in the budget or the fiscal plan. Fine. You know, events happen and governments change policy. That's okay, but can they tell us, then: how are they going to make up for the billions of additional revenue that they say they've now taken out of their fiscal plan?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member. Again, as I've mentioned to the hon. member, our Finance minister will provide clear evidence at the appropriate time and demonstrate that our budget, our path to balance, remains intact. But what we do have in front of us are the numbers, the fact that our economy is growing. In fact, last year Alberta led the country in GDP growth of 4.9 per cent. Part of the reason is because we had a choice, and four years ago, when the price of oil collapsed, we chose to invest: invest in Albertans, invest in our economy, invest in health care. Members opposite would have fired teachers and nurses and hurt our . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'd like to stop the clock for a moment, please. I'll be back with you.

Could I have a table officer here.

I'm sorry, hon. member. Please proceed.

Provincial Revenue and Carbon Pricing

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, on April 10 of this year the hon. Finance minister said, quote: we built pipeline revenues into our path to balance projections; we're confident all the pipelines will be built, so we're just going to keep going down this road. Unquote. The government's fiscal plan: is it still based on an assumption that Trans Mountain will be completed, and is it not therefore evident that it's still based on a planned 67 per cent increase in the carbon tax?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has been clear as far as our position on the federal price on carbon and the fact that Alberta has withdrawn its support from that plan until the Trans Mountain pipeline construction is well under way. What I can tell you is that we know that Enbridge's line 3 is well under way, that the pipeline was approved, and that this is creating good jobs right now, today. We know that Keystone XL is proceeding next year. We've committed to supporting that project with 50,000 barrels per day because we know that this project alone will help reduce the differential and get Alberta producers a better price.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Given that the minister just said that the budget was based on the federal climate plan and given that that plan is predicated on a $20-a-tonne carbon tax this year, why are Albertans paying a $30-a-tonne carbon tax? Why does the government think that that'll show Ottawa by imposing a higher tax on Albertans than the one that their close friend and ally Justin Trudeau is asking for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll encourage the hon. member to get out from under the dome and talk to some companies like Exxon Mobil and other major energy industry leaders who have a fund to be advocating in favour of a price on carbon. You know why? Because these companies have invested hundreds of millions of dollars into energy efficiency, reducing their greenhouse gas emissions, increasing their efficiencies, decreasing their costs. They are world leaders, and they celebrate and agree with us on our price on carbon because it is getting us to where we want to go. They do not want to go back into the Dark Ages.

Mr. Kenney: Modern Alberta is the Dark Ages according to the NDP, a government that has members that praise the socialist dictatorship in Venezuela. You can't make this up.

Mr. Speaker, the government says that it's pulling out of the federal climate plan. Will it therefore join the governments of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and New Brunswick in challenging the constitutionality of the federal carbon tax plan, which this government claims it's pulling out of?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, Saskatchewan is the last province I'm going to take advice from. If we look at the tale of Saskatchewan and the choices they made four years ago, when they brought in an austerity budget, they cut services across the board, they fired thousands of teachers and nurses, and they increased taxes. What is the result of that? Last year Saskatchewan created 1,000 new jobs. In Alberta we created 90,000 new full-time jobs, most of those in the private sector. I can tell you that Alberta is leading when it comes to manufacturing, exports, and growth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Refugee Claimant Driver's Licence Eligibility

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency office works closely with refugee families that are moving to Alberta and are fleeing violence and persecution so that they can begin a new chapter in their life. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what is the province doing to remove those barriers that they may face when they're trying to settle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for my first question in this House as a minister. I couldn't be prouder to answer a question about how newcomers are a valued part of Alberta in our province and deserve the same opportunities to succeed as every other Albertan. I've heard from many new Albertans who are unable to work or even to drive a pregnant partner to the hospital because they couldn't drive. That's not right, and that's why we took action. I'm so proud to say that since June of this year our government has allowed refugee claimants to get a driver's licence in Alberta, and I'm proud of the work that our government has done on that point.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister once again: please explain how this will benefit newcomer families in my constituency and across this entire province.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have the right to live in a province that respects and celebrates diversity and where we can all belong. Refugee claimants endure a considerable amount of hardship and loss to get to Canada, and they shouldn't be forced to face unnecessary barriers for building a better life for their families once they get here to Canada. Many jobs require employees to have an Alberta driver's licence, so waiting unnecessarily to apply for a driver's licence can also mean waiting for work. That's not something I support. With this change Alberta joins the rest of the country in helping refugees get to work as soon as possible so that they can support themselves.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After a Syrian refugee brought this issue to my attention, I found out that Alberta made changes back in 2012, under the previous government, and that they no longer allowed refugee claimants to obtain a driver's licence. How did it occur that Alberta became such an outlier in this area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Malkinson: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member correctly stated, the changes made in 2012, under the previous Conservative government, made us an outlier in Canada. Those changes happened while at the same time the Leader of the Official Opposition was in Ottawa cutting health benefits to refugee claimants, and apparently his Conservative colleagues here in Alberta were following his example. At the same time, he was detaining refugees in jails, described as a former three-star hotel with a fence around it. He even went so far as to separate mothers and children in these facilities.

Instead of putting up barriers for newcomers, Mr. Speaker, we are removing them and helping them build a new life for themselves.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Dementia Care

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I've been pushing this government to come up with a proper plan for dementia care for nearly two years, but Albertans continue to struggle. The dementia strategy put forward on the last business day before Christmas simply is not good enough. Albertans are right to question the NDP's commitment to dementia care when the word "dementia" is mentioned only a single time in the 165-page business plan for the government of Alberta and exactly zero times in the 172-page fiscal plan. To the Minister of Health: is your dementia strategy working, and how do we know?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our targeted and strategic approach will lead to quality care, timely diagnosis, better brain health, and stronger community supports for years to come. I want to commend everyone in the community who was involved in this. We had experts in public health, and we had people with lived experience. Albertan Roger Marple said: "As a person living with dementia, I have never felt more optimistic. I would like to extend my heartfelt gratitude to the provincial government on the release of the dementia strategy." I really want to say that we're fighting for Roger, and we're happy to work with him to help address the needs that he has and that his family has.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those are a lot of words, but I'll simply ask again: what specifically has changed in the time between December 22, when you released the dementia strategy, and today?

Ms Hoffman: I'll go back even a little bit before that, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to note that since 2015 roughly almost $7 million has been invested in measures specifically to give families tools to support their loved ones living in a home or in the community, including expanding the First Link program, almost $2 million; mental health first aid for seniors, more than half a million dollars; and we specifically have dementia-trained nurses through Health Link. If anyone calls 811, they can get support from dementia nurses right over the phone. These are a number of important initiatives that were driven by the community to help support the community.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, again, with respect, those are not net new dollars, and it's not like we did nothing for people with dementia before this government came into power.

I'm going to ask about stigma as something the minister mentioned. Given that stigma continues to be a challenge both for people living with dementia and those who fear the stigma and therefore do not seek a diagnosis, again to the Minister of Health: I would like to know what specific, measurable efforts have been undertaken to reduce stigma in the 10 months since your strategy was released, and what are the results?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, we're proud to work with people with lived experience and with folks who are experts in public health around this important initiative, including the appropriate use of antipsychotics. We are working to reduce stigma, as the member mentioned, with partners like the Alzheimer Society. There is a significant effort under way, and we're proud to work with the community and support them. The Official Opposition wants to fire nurses and teachers, 4,000 teachers, and give a $700 million tax break to the richest 1 per cent. We're proud to work with the community and to invest in the things that matter to them and to support Albertans living with dementia.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Government Spending

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I spent this summer connecting with my constituents, and I found time to consult with Albertans on the state of our province's finances. What I heard repeatedly was that they are very concerned with the government's wild spending ways. Since 2015 the NDP's unrestrained borrowing has ballooned Alberta's debt by 668 per cent to $50 billion. That is a burden of $50,000 per family of four. To the minister. Debt means more in interest costs, less in services. What is your government's plan to get Alberta's debt back under control?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me be clear that we have a path to balance. Our path to balance is intact. We have that in addition to the fact that we've reduced our deficit by $3 billion. I'm very proud of the work we're doing investing in critical infrastructure in this province, which is helping our small businesses as far as growth goes. I'm not going to take advice from the members opposite. We've heard that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills had said that their plan is going to hurt, is going to hurt Albertans. Well, you know what? There's a different choice, one where we invest in Albertans, invest in infrastructure, and get . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Given that many of the Albertans I spoke to noted that since the NDP raised personal and corporate taxes, they have actually brought in less revenue and given that stakeholders overwhelmingly favour the UCP's plan to conduct a thorough review of government regulations with an eye towards meaningful reductions of red tape and a focus on free enterprise, calling it thoughtful, reasonable, and justified, to the Finance minister: will you commit to a full review of provincial regulations and focus on free enterprise, or will Albertans have to wait for a change in government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd love to know how many constituents of the member opposite like the fact that they're proposing a $700 million tax cut to the richest 1 per cent of Albertans, which means that the majority of his constituents would see nothing.

Mr. Speaker, we've invested in this province, and we are seeing the benefits of our government's decisions through the 90,000 new full-time jobs that were created last year, most of those in the private sector. We've seen businesses expand in the province. Flair Air moved their headquarters out of British Columbia over to Alberta. We see Nexen. We see Amazon, Champion Petfoods . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that NDP unrestrained spending levels lead to massive borrowing, which leads to skyrocketing interest costs, and given that annual government interest costs already total $2 billion, nearly $2,000 a year per family of four, and given that $2 billion is more than most departments spend each year, making the department of debt the fifth largest department in this government, to the minister: will you acknowledge that your undisciplined spending plan, six credit downgrades, and now rising interest rates are jeopardizing the futures of Albertan families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you what: Albertans pay $11 billion less in taxes than the next lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada. Eleven billion dollars: that's with the carbon levy.

But I'll tell you what else. Let's review here. If the member opposite dislikes deficits, let's talk about what his leader did when he was in Ottawa: six straight deficit budgets, a $56 billion deficit in just one year. I'm surprised you're not applauding. This was your leader. Mr. Speaker, he added $145 billion to our national debt and $309 billion in interest payments. I think the member opposite . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

High-risk Offenders

Alberta Review Board Decision on Patient Transfer

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, on April 15 of 2014 Matthew De Grood murdered Kaitlin Perras, Jordan Segura, Lawrence Hong, Josh Hunter, and Zackariah Rathwell, five young people less than five years ago. Under the Not Criminally Responsible Reform Act it is the responsibility of the province to pursue a high-risk designation. To the Minister of Justice: does this government deem the worst mass murderer in Calgary's history to be high risk?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, as I've said, the entire province was shocked by those tragic incidents. This province lost five young people, and I think it's of great concern to everyone throughout the province. As I've said before, those decisions are made by independent Crown prosecutors. They are based on the facts and the law. That law is governed at the federal level. The member opposite clearly has a concern about the way the law is written. I would suggest that she write to the federal government about that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have written the federal minister. I'll table that letter later.

Given that the families of the victims have to live their lives with permanent scars of grief and loss and given that the province is responsible for the Not Criminally Responsible Reform Act and the Alberta Review Board – facts – and given that Albertans have been communicating their concerns about the very real chance that a violent murderer will be released from our justice system, Minister, what are you doing to ensure that this individual will not walk freely in Alberta's communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I completely understand the concerns around this case. I don't think that there is any Albertan in the province who doesn't feel for the unimaginable loss that these families have suffered. The member opposite is incorrect. The province is required to set up a review board based on, again, the federal legislation. We are governed by that law, and we must abide by it. I do understand that the families have some concerns about the process, and I . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I'll help her out. Section 672.72 of the Criminal Code states that within 15 days any party may appeal against a disposition or placement decision made by the review board. Given that the administration of justice is within the provincial jurisdiction and that this minister is totally wrong to claim yesterday and just now that this is a federal process, why has this minister refused to listen to the victims' families and do something about the review board's decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, the member opposite has just cited the Criminal Code, which, as all members in this House should know, is, in fact, federal legislation.

Mrs. Pitt: Provincial jurisdiction.

Ms Ganley: It's federal legislation, Mr. Speaker. She can yell and scream and heckle me all she wants, but this is a very serious case, and I think it should be taken seriously and nonpolitically. I am happy to work with the families on the things within provincial jurisdiction, but the Criminal Code is not one of those things.

Renewable Energy Environmental Concerns

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, it appears that once more the current NDP government is borrowing from the UCP playbook. This time they have decided that it would be a great idea if renewable projects were required to make the land whole again. Now, as of September 14 of this year, there will be reclamation directives that need to be followed. Minister, why is there still no equivalent of the oil and gas industry funded orphan well fund included in the directive despite landowners and the Property Rights Advocate repeatedly asking for one?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're very proud of the projects and legislation we have brought forward as part of our renewable plan to replace 30 per cent with renewable electricity by 2030, our 30 by 30 plan. When we brought forward that legislation, we also brought in tools for landowners to negotiate with the companies who wish to be proponents of the projects, and there are a number of tools available to landowners. It is not subject to the Surface Rights Board, as is oil and gas, but there is a lot of help . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government provided lucrative incentives for renewable companies to set up and operate in Alberta, Minister, why has it taken three years before you have finally acknowledged landowners' and the opposition's concerns, before you issued these new directives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we do a lot with landowners, both in my ministry and in my colleague's Ministry of Environment and Parks. First and foremost, when we talk about oil and gas, we have a certain set of rules, and when we talk about Environment and Parks, there's another set of rules. A number of the rules are administered by the AER on both of our behalves, but there are other ones that fall outside of that. Again, there is assistance for landowners, should it be through the Farmers' Advocate or through the workbooks and tools that we have provided for renewable projects.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has continued to make things harder for Alberta's farmers and ranchers and given that I'm sure the minister of agriculture agrees with the seriousness of this issue, Minister, in this directive's best practices guideline why is it that the Alberta clubroot management plan is the guideline that only should be adhered to when the possibility exists that contamination could occur?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we've listened to a number of folks in all sectors, including the agriculture sector. When we did our climate leadership plan and the carbon levy, we excluded farm fuel, as an example of one of the things that helps. We've also provided regulation and legislation to help farms, for example, get solar panels, to work on irrigation and other energy efficient projects. We've invested $225 million on innovation projects just in the ag sector alone to support research, commercialization, and investment. We continue to listen to our farmers, as we . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budgeting is about priorities. Given the collapse in the price of oil our government must find savings. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: can he give us examples of what savings he's found?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. It's true that when the price of oil collapsed, our government had some difficult decisions to make. Now, we could have followed the advice of the opposition and fired 4,000 teachers,

4,000 nurses, and recklessly cut services that Albertans rely on. These cuts, as the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has said, are going to hurt. But instead we made a decision to carefully find savings and also to invest in much-needed schools and hospitals. We cut government waste created by the PCs like the sky palace and lavish golf memberships. Our plan is working. Our GDP is up. Our economy is recovering. Jobs are up. Manufacturing is up. Exports are up. I'm very proud of the work that our government is doing standing up and fighting for Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans were tired of the sense of entitlement by the previous Conservative government: private jets, the sky palace, runaway salaries for their insider friends, and through-the-roof hospitality charges. Can the minister tell us what he's done to correct these issues and how expenses compare to the previous Conservative government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since we formed government we've been bringing salaries in line with other provinces. We've cut perks that certain executives have had like access to private health care. In fact, if you compare travel and hospitality expenses with the previous government, we've brought expenses down by a whopping 933 per cent. Now, while we work to eliminate the waste that the previous PC government exuded on a daily basis and get the budget priorities right, we know that Conservatives only care about a massive $700 million tax cut for the richest 1 per cent of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that beyond cutting Conservative government waste, our government has found additional savings, savings that were achieved without firing thousands of teachers and nurses. Can the minister tell us more about those details?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. We also extended the salary freeze for management and non-union employees. That saved us about $29 million. We strengthened the hiring restraint. That has saved us over $107 million. Now, all in all, we found about $750 million in savings without firing 4,000 teachers, 4,000 nurses, which is what the Conservatives are looking to do. As a result, we've cut the deficit by $3 billion, and we're going to continue to work hard to find those savings.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will continue with Members' Statements in 30 seconds.

Day of Arbreen

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday marked the Day of Arbreen, which occurs 40 days after the Day of Ashura, when Husayn ibn Ali, the grandson of Prophet Muhammad, peace be upon him, was martyred in the Battle of Karbala. Husayn ibn Ali was a seventh century revolutionary leader who sacrificed his life for social justice. The Day of Arbaeen is the day on which Husayn's family returned to the land of Karbala to properly bid farewell and grieve their loved ones.

Today, 1,400 years later, the Day of Arbaeen is mourned by millions of people around the world. It is a day to pay tribute to the sacrifice of Husayn for social justice. Large marches are organized in cities across the world to symbolize the eternal nature of Husayn's revolution and to show that they stand for social justice, honour, and peace.

Yesterday the march of Arbaeen was also hosted in Calgary by the Hussaini Association of Calgary. To commemorate Arbaeen, people from all over the globe participate in the tradition of walking 80 kilometres from Najaf to Karbala every year. Volunteers distribute free food and drinks to those undertaking the pilgrimage and offer places to relax, wash, and sleep.

Arbaeen is the largest peaceful gathering in the world. The number of pilgrims has risen to 25 million despite the threat of terrorists who have vowed to attack this stand for peace and social justice.

As the Minister of Culture and Tourism said yesterday, "No one should have to worry about their safety when they . . . worship." I am proud to be part of a government that is committed to standing up against intolerance and ensuring that Alberta is a place for all people of all faiths.

Thank you.

International Trade

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, over the summer I was honoured to be chosen by the Leader of the Official Opposition to be the trade critic, and with the inaction of this NDP government on numerous trade files, it's going to be a busy role. I've worked in a federal Conservative government that signed over 50 free trade deals, each one gaining more market access and economic opportunities for Canadian businesses and families. I've represented Canada on numerous trade missions, promoting free trade, open market access, and reduced trade barriers for Canada in Hong Kong, Beijing, Moscow, Istanbul, and the United States.

Mr. Speaker, over the last few years we've come to an unfavourable position in Canadian trade relations, stemming from the NDP-Trudeau alliance. CETA and the CPTPP were negotiated years ago by the former federal Conservative government, both yielding huge benefits to Canada's exporting industries and workers. However, it took over three years for Canada to sign off on one, the trans-Pacific partnership. Both these trade deals are important for Alberta, and to use a sports analogy, the walk-off home run for a Team Canada win happened years ago. The NDP government just needed to convince their ally Prime Minister Trudeau to sign the ball.

Regarding NAFTA, Mr. Speaker, this government did a disservice to Albertans. There were no economic gains, no demands by this government. No expectations were set for Canada going into this negotiation. The best this NDP government could do was to join the media commentators and decide that a do-no-harm outcome was the best outcome for Canada. That's not how you win at baseball, and that's not how you win in free trade negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, under this government we don't have new pipelines, our rail lines are clogged, we can't get our products to market, and when we do, there's a massive discount that we receive. The NDP has recently put on a show of caring about pipelines, but it doesn't . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Bill 21

An Act to Protect Patients

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise and introduce Bill 21, An Act to Protect Patients.

Mr. Speaker, our government believes that women and all Albertans deserve to feel safe while accessing medical services. Albertans place their trust and even their lives with their health care providers. They must know that without a doubt they are in safe hands. This past spring I was made aware of a situation where a doctor was convicted of a sexual assault and got his licence back. When I dug into this situation, I was frustrated to learn that the tools available to the regulatory colleges here in Alberta were inadequate to protect patients.

Bill 21 will strengthen protection for patients from sexual abuse and sexual misconduct by regulated health professionals. I am so proud to be able to move on this with first reading for Bill 21, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table some of the letters and technical submissions that my colleagues and I have written to the government of Canada with respect to Bill C-69 and Bill C-48. The first of these letters is dated as far back as April 12, 2017, the latest just a few weeks ago. While this doesn't record the numerous conversations and meetings that have been held with our federal colleagues, it does in fact establish a timeline of how long our government has been speaking up on behalf of Albertans on these important matters.

The Speaker: Any more reports? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an e-mail correspondence from the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada. I'd like to highlight the part in her letter in response to the Matthew de Grood case here in Alberta: "The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General of Alberta, who is the appropriate authority in this regard." I think the minister is wrong.

I would also like to make a second tabling, the requisite copies of a copy of the Criminal Code, that states under Grounds for Appeal in section 672.72(1): "Any party may appeal against a disposition made by a court or a Review Board, or a placement decision made by a Review Board, to the court of appeal of the province . . ."

The Speaker: Move along, hon. member. They can read it themselves.

Mrs. Pitt: Sorry. That's just an excerpt. That's all I have, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter to table from Mrs. Zoe Bleau. An excerpt from the letter:

We are desperately pleading that [my] Mom be put into the lodge in the first available opening. She is in dire need! If Mom had been placed in the Bonnylodge sooner, she would not have been performing household chores that could put her at risk of a fall. Also, in the event of a fall, she would have been in a safe place where . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the same issue. I'm sure they're going to read it.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other reports? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a newspaper article by Ms Corbella from the Calgary Herald discussing the neglect of this government when it comes to Bill C-69 and the hypocrisy that we've seen from them when it comes to Trans Mountain. I would encourage everybody to read it. It's a good article.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe there were no points of order today, so I believe we are at Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

The Acting Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 8

Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018

The Acting Chair: Are there any speakers to the bill?

Seeing and hearing none, are we ready for the question on Bill 8, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2018?

[The clauses of Bill 8 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The Hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Chair. At this time I'd like to move that the committee rise and report Bill 8.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 8.

The Acting Speaker: Having heard the report, are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? That's carried.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 19

An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education.

Our government is committed to fair legislation that improves the lives of all Albertans, including the many postsecondary students that study here in our province. This includes our proposed bill, that will update the Post-secondary Learning Act to ensure that Albertans have access to affordable, high-quality postsecondary education now and in the future.

Back in 2015 our government committed to stable and predictable funding for postsecondary institutions. We also began a tuition and fees freeze that has kept tuition at 2014-2015 levels. This freeze has since been extended through the current 2018-2019 academic year. Because we've frozen tuition at 2014-2015 levels, the average undergraduate degree program tuition in Alberta is now more affordable and is now among the lowest when you compare average tuition across the country.

This has had a substantial impact on the lives of learners and their families all across our province. During the four years that our tuition and fees freeze has been in place, we've worked diligently to consult with stakeholder groups, including students in postsecondary institutions, to develop a long-term strategy to protect and strengthen our postsecondary sector. This bill represents the culmination of years of work by our government and by the staff of Advanced Education.

Now, Madam Speaker, those keen observers of legislative history will recall that I was questioned on when we would release the results of our consultation on tuition. When asked, I said that we would deliver those results in the fullness of time. Now, at the time the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster heckled me and informed me that the fullness of time, as he understood it, meant never. In fact, I don't blame him for thinking that, because when he was a member of the government, they had a strong tradition, a proud tradition of making a bunch of promises that they never delivered on. So it's natural for him to think that when he heard the phrase "in the fullness of time," that was the old Tory way of telling people it was never going to happen.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

That has changed under this government, Madam Speaker. When we make a promise, we deliver it. We promised to review tuition and come forward with a framework, and in fact we have delivered it today.

Bill 19 proposes a number of updates to the Post-secondary Learning Act that will set our province's postsecondary learning system up for continued success. This bill will create the checks and balances needed to better control tuition and fees for domestic and for international students.

First, in order to ensure that tuition costs remain affordable and do not spike, we will be tying tuition increases for domestic students and apprentices to the consumer price index. This will mean that the average tuition costs at each institution cannot increase more than the consumer price index, with each program capped by a 10 per cent increase maximum per year. Secondly, we're updating the bill to give the Minister of Advanced Education the authority to order future tuition and fees freezes so that the government can keep the cost of postsecondary education affordable in the face of an unexpected economic downturn.

Finally, this bill will also provide the regulatory authority needed to implement the new tuition framework that will deliver on our promise of affordable and predictable postsecondary costs for domestic and for international students.

Passage of this bill will give our government the authority to enact our proposed extension of the tuition and fees freeze for a fifth and final year through 2019-2020. This bill will also allow us to ensure that postsecondary costs don't spike once the freeze ends in 2020-2021, when we institute a new tuition framework for domestic and international students. This new tuition framework will formally remove market modifiers put in place by the previous government and will place unprecedented caps on the amount of tuition that can be raised through the regulation.

We're also capping mandatory noninstructional fees. These fees are often used for things like health services, athletic facilities, and the like and have been a point of contention that was mentioned repeatedly in our consultations. We heard the voices of students during our consultations through both formal and informal consultations, so to keep students, our largest stakeholders, a part of the conversation, institutions will not be able to create new mandatory noninstructional fees without student approval.

Our changes to the tuition framework will also impact apprentices, who will now be part of the PSLA for the first time. As we're doing with postsecondary tuition, we're capping apprenticeship tuition so that increases cannot exceed the consumer price index.

Madam Speaker, our government is also taking unprecedented action when it comes to international student tuition. For the thousands of international students who study and live in Alberta, our government is removing the fear of unknown changes in tuition and fees by creating a tuition guarantee. With this guarantee international students will be told the tuition cost for each year of study before they accept admission in a program. That way international students will have the peace of mind of knowing what their education will cost and will be able to study in Alberta without the fear of unpredictable tuition spikes.

In addition to the introduction of new protections which will keep tuition and fees affordable, we'll also be modernizing and reorganizing the postsecondary system to create increased access for students across Alberta. Since our government was elected in 2015, we have received requests from many institutions asking us to grant approvals that would allow the institutions to facilitate student success and ensure that students across our great province have access to high-quality education close to home. Therefore, we have allowed Red Deer College and Grande Prairie Regional College to pursue degree-granting status and have moved both institutions along the path to becoming universities. We also approved the Alberta College of Art and Design's request to change to university status to better reflect its programming and mandate. This legislation will formalize these changes and will ensure that the postsecondary system continues to adapt to best serve the needs of students, communities, and the province.

In addition to these changes at these institutions, this bill will also update the current six-sector model to better reflect the unique roles of each sector and to describe the sectors in terms that are relatable and easier to understand. All of the proposed updates to the roles and mandates outlined in the bill serve four purposes. First, they increase collaboration between sectors, creating new programming for students and increasing accessibility. Second, they clarify mandates, ensuring that a wide variety of programming from foundational learning up to graduate degree programming is available in all regions. They ensure research across the province is co-ordinated and aligned with the Alberta Research and Innovation framework, and they increase degree access for Albertans, especially those in rural areas, because in certain circumstances comprehensive community colleges will now be able to offer degrees autonomously.

As you know, our government is taking steps to ensure that boards at all agencies, boards, and commissions are as diverse and as varied as our province. In fact, Madam Speaker, you'll remember that when we took office, the public members at our postsecondary institutions were comprised two-thirds of men. I'm happy to say that as of today the majority of public members appointed to the boards of governors at postsecondary institutions across the province are women, which is a better reflection of the student population that they serve, also a majority of women.

To ensure that boards of governors at PSIs follow this larger government trend to increase diversity and variance, we're making changes to update representation so that the unique voices of all of our stakeholder groups can be represented. We're proposing changes so that all publicly funded postsecondary institutions have two student representatives so that our largest stakeholder group, students, have an amplified voice on their campuses. This bill will also allow for an additional public member to be added to the board at all institutions so that diverse voices and underrepresented populations can be heard.

All of these changes are necessary to keep Alberta's postsecondary learning system affordable, accessible for all, and functioning at the highest level. This bill demonstrates our government's commitment to improve the lives of students in our province so that they can achieve their educational goals, get good jobs, and contribute to Alberta's diversifying economy. Albertans deserve a postsecondary system that provides high-quality education that's accessible and affordable for all, and this bill delivers on that promise.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise in the House today to speak on Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. As the UCP caucus critic for Advanced Education I'm happy to kick off the debate. Bill 19 will legislate an inflation-based cap on increases to domestic student and apprenticeship tuition. Tuition increases will be tied to the consumer price index. This means that postsecondary institutions will not be able to raise the average tuition past Alberta's consumer price index. From my understanding, individual programs will be able to raise tuition up to 10 per cent as long as the average, across-the-board tuition does not exceed the consumer price index. Bill 19 also gives the minister power to regulate noninstructional fees such as fees for athletic facilities and bus passes. The minister will also have regulatory authority over international students' tuition. Further, students will have a greater representation on the institutions' boards of governors as all institutions will now have at least two student representatives.

Madam Speaker, much of the bill also looks at updating the six-sector model with new names for the different types of institutions. The new names of the institutions are the comprehensive academic and research universities, undergraduate universities, polytechnic institutions, and comprehensive community colleges. Specialized arts and culture institutions and independent academic institutions keep the same name. These sectors more or less carry over from what they were called before with a few minor changes. I see nothing wrong with updating the names.

Madam Speaker, as Advanced Education critic I've had the pleasure of speaking to many students all across this beautiful province. I know the struggles that university students face. Schooling isn't cheap, and many students have to work at least one, sometimes two jobs to cover their expenses. I have a great deal of respect for university students. I know the hard work they put in. Postsecondary students have been asking for predictable tuition increases since this tuition review started, and I commend the government for listening to the students and tying the tuition to the consumer price index.

The government also took action, good action, when they increased the representation of students on postsecondary institutions at the board of governors level. Previously some institutions such as Grant MacEwan in Edmonton and Mount Royal University in Calgary only had one student representative, which would have been quite a burden for one student to carry. All institutions will now have two student representatives and a third if the school has a graduate program. I'm also pleased that the government legislated this change and that they were able to listen to the student groups.

Madam Speaker, my greatest concern, though, with this bill lies with the power this will give the minister. If Bill 19 passes, the minister will be able to control almost all revenue-generating capacity of the institutions. I believe that our postsecondary institutions should be able to make decisions independently and in the best interests of their own institutions. I do not like having so much government control.

So much of the action that the government is taking on in this legislation is up to the discretion of the minister. The minister, for example, can dictate international student tuition. Same with the mandatory noninstructional fees. The minister says that he will increase transparency and predictability for both international student tuition and noninstructional fees. I fully support this move. However, how do we know that this is the case?

The minister is asking us to trust him with these regulations. Trust him. The problem is: how can we trust this government? I don't believe that Albertans trust this government. Why should they? The government has already broken trust with Albertans over the past three and a half years on a number of occasions. The Bill 6 fiasco in the first year of the NDP mandate caused more than just a little bit of anger from Albertans, especially in rural Alberta. The increased red tape for business has made Alberta a much less economically viable place. And most of the carbon tax, which has never been campaigned on and is imposed on Albertans, is affecting jobs, household income, and day-to-day expenses for all Albertans. This government has had so many missteps since they've been elected. Why should we further trust that they'll get it right with Bill 19?

Speaking of the carbon tax, Madam Speaker, universities are on the hook to pay for the government's ideological agenda through this tax. This can be a burden costing our institutions millions of dollars every year. I hope the government understands how many instructors or teacher assistants or student services this could fund. There is also no rebate option for postsecondary institutions, so universities are forced to bear the full cost of the carbon tax. This can really affect their budgeting. At the end of the day, taxpayers are supporting the universities, so taxpayers are getting less value for the money that they give to the institutions and the universities. If the government cares about helping students and cares about increasing the amount of money institutions can provide for students, maybe they should look at repealing their carbon tax.

Speaking of budgeting, the tuition freeze will be continued through the 2019-2020 school year. A decision to earmark money to postsecondary institutions to make up for this freeze won't be made until budget time next March, which means that we don't know for sure whether money will be made available for postsecondary institutions. It's a guessing game. The government says that they will provide the money. However, once again they're asking us to trust them, and once again we have to ask: why should we trust them?

Madam Speaker, I support the Alberta students in the province, and I'm glad that they were able to advocate effectively to tie the tuition to the consumer price index and to put some form of regulations on other fees. However, I have many concerns with this bill, and I'm very concerned with the power that will be vested and given to the minister. Therefore, at this time I have to say that I will not be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Postsecondary Education. As with so many government bills, the name of this one is ironic. Why? Well, because the NDP's homegrown carbon tax has already created operational issues for Alberta's stellar postsecondary institutions. Quite simply, it costs them millions of dollars more to operate under this government when the NDP surprised them and all of Alberta with a carbon tax. They continue to struggle with ways to cut back so that they can incorporate Alberta's carbon tax into their budgets, and they have to figure out ways of absorbing future increases that this government will continue to add on when it adds the Trudeau carbon tax on top of Alberta's existing tax. Now the government introduces an act to improve accessibility and affordability of postsecondary education without regard for the already struggling institutions' ability to lose even more revenues.

We're concerned that the financial model the NDP is imposing on postsecondary institutions is not sustainable. The bill, if passed in the House by the majority of the NDP, is another case of unintended consequences, a theme that has occurred over the past several years. The reality is that it will very likely erode the quality of postsecondary education in Alberta. Who suffers for that, Madam Speaker? Why would an NDP government create a fiscal model that would cause this to happen? Time and again they do not think their policies through to the obvious conclusions. Curiously, these conclusions are obvious to others, but we know that short-sighted policies are something of a bit of a hallmark with this particular government, like the carbon tax itself. Wasn't that going to bring us the social licence for the Trans Mountain pipeline? We certainly heard lots about it in the first two years of this government. Now they hardly mention it except in a defensive manner when Albertans point out that the carbon tax has failed to display any form of social licence.

In fact, my newest colleague on this side of the House, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, was able to ask representatives of the Energy ministry in committee last week if they had quantified the carbon tax. The reps, to their credit, answered honestly: no, the department had not put a dollar value on social licence. Now you will hear differently from government members. They will tell you that it is invaluable, but Albertans and constituents in Calgary-West, however, know the truth. There is no value to those 13 letters.

So you can see why I am looking at Bill 19 with a bit of a critical eye. The NDP is setting up to add more fiscal constraints on postsecondary institutes, and they just don't see it. That's why we need to point this out, and we have precious little time to do that in this Assembly, Madam Speaker.

Let's look at the long-term consequences of further constricting the budgets of postsecondaries. If they have to cut back even further, first due to the carbon tax and now because of Bill 19, they will have less funding for research, which is so critical for them, and less funding for instructors. In fact, Madam Speaker, when I was part of the heritage trust fund committee meeting just only a few days ago, there was what I believed to be a doctor or professor, a researcher, that certainly had concerns about funding for some of his projects as well, and he and others may be facing even further constraints, which for sure is a concern. If they're not offering tenure, as an example, because they cannot afford it, they will not be able to attract the kind of quality instructors that they would like.

When students are investigating their options – and remember that they have options for higher education all over the world – they may well take a pass on Alberta even if it is their home province. That would be a loss to Alberta, and how unfortunate that would be. Madam Speaker, this is a competitive sector, one of the most competitive around the globe. Students are educated about their choices, and they're mobile, especially in this era.

Bill 19 is looking to cap much of the flexibility to fund their programs, their operations, and their personnel. Restricting funding sources on top of the carbon tax is not a positive move for a government that purports to focus on affordability. It is absolutely forgetting the affordability for institutions.

Let me quickly address another concerning aspect of Bill 19, as mentioned by my colleague, and that is the amount of authority it gives the Minister of Advanced Education to set noninstructional fees in international student tuition. Handing authority to ministers is another hallmark of the NDP legislation. If Bill 19 passes, a minister can choose not to consult with postsecondary boards. The minister can make snap decisions that once again result in unintended consequences.

As this bill moves through the House, we look forward to the minister addressing these concerns if he chooses to. I would request that he particularly address the issue of competitiveness within the broad sector. Alberta has world-class institutions and other institutions that are still fairly new to the university sector, but they all need a fiscal model that lets them focus on the areas that will provide them with the greatest ability to compete in their specific areas of expertise. Madam Speaker, if Bill 19 hampers them from doing so in any way, then the concerns we are voicing today must be taken into account as the bill moves through further readings of this Assembly.

I thank you for your time, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-West for his comments and just take a few moments to address them if I could. First of all, one of the issues that he raises in debating this bill is his concern around financial constraints that we might be placing through this bill. Now, certainly, we are limiting the amount by which tuition can increase. That is, in fact, the goal of this legislation, to promote affordability for students. Students are the number one priority of the higher education system, and we're just reinforcing that by making sure that affordability for students is the number one principle when considering the institutional budgets.

But on the matter of fiscal constraints, you know, let's talk about their record of imposing fiscal constraints on universities and colleges. It was only six years ago that the then minister of advanced education, who currently finds himself unemployed, imposed a 7 per cent cut on the budgets of advanced education institutions all across this country. Staff were fired. Students were crammed into classrooms. Faculty had to give up their telephones, Madam Speaker.

But not only that; they weren't happy enough to make those kinds of cuts back in 2012-2013, Madam Speaker. When those guys existed as the Progressive Conservative caucus, they brought forward a shadow budget that actually proposed a $450 million cut to the higher education sector. In fact, the last PC Premier proposed a budget before the 2015 election that cut more than $550 million from the budgets of advanced education systems. And, you know, if they ever have the opportunity to make a budget again, we can expect those kinds of cuts to come as they pursue tax cuts for millionaires and billionaires and throw students under the bus.

Now, Madam Speaker, the Member for Calgary-West also issued some concerns about the carbon tax, and I want to just make him aware of an article that ran on a news site that's dedicated to University of Calgary news, called UToday. This article is dated September 18, 2018, and it's entitled "Ahead of the Curve: UCalgary Reaches Canada's 2030 Target to Reduce Greenhouse Gas Emissions More than a Decade Ahead of Schedule." I want to take this opportunity to commend the good work of the University of Calgary in reducing their greenhouse gas emissions by 30 per cent, ahead of schedule. They had committed to reducing their greenhouse gas emissions by 30 per cent by 2030. They are well ahead of schedule. Part of that is due to the action of our government. We loaned the money to invest in energy efficiency programs through the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, millions of dollars that we invested in the University of Calgary through that loan, that are yielding positive results in energy efficiency, renewable energy, and greenhouse gas emissions reductions here in this province.

I think that there is a lot of other exciting work going on at university and college campuses all across this province to tackle climate change because, unlike the members opposite, people at universities and colleges recognize that, one, climate change is real, it's human induced, and we have to do something about it to prevent it from having a negative impact on our world. They are actually taking action on that, and I commend them.

Now, the third issue that the Member for Calgary-West raised was this issue around quality. I want to direct the member to the section of the Post-secondary Learning Act where we talk about tuition and fees and, in fact, authorize tuition freezes through the tuition framework that we're proposing to create through regulation. In fact, that regulation will contain a system for exceptional tuition increases in cases where programs may be needing additional revenue to improve the quality of their instruction, Madam Speaker.

It will be incumbent upon the institutions to demonstrate how additional revenue for that program will improve the quality of the program that they deliver to students and get students' buy-in for those increases. Under the old system, that was, you know, created by those guys over there, students had no voice. University and college administration could jack up fees willy-nilly, and students were left to pay the bill. In this case, a university will have to be completely open and transparent about how they intend to spend the money and how that money will be used to directly improve the quality of education in their classrooms, and students will have the power to say yes or no, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very proud to rise in the House today in support of the bill and one of the cosponsors of Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. This bill is very close to my heart because when I came to Canada with my family, when we immigrated to Canada, one of the biggest excitements for me was to pursue higher education, in particular postsecondary education.

I would like to quote something from an article that has been written by the president and CEO of Lumina Foundation. His name is Jamie Merisotis. Talking about how important postsecondary education is, he says that it isn't just about jobs and economic success. When it comes to building a fulfilling life, good jobs and careers are certainly necessary; but they're not sufficient. Intangibles matter, too — things like personal growth and citizenship and the commitment to equity and social justice. And postsecondary education contributes significantly in all of these areas. In fact, statistics show that individuals who have earned postsecondary credentials are healthier, live longer and are more deeply engaged in civic and community life than those who lack credentials.

Talking about providing a platform to students and making sure that higher education is affordable to them and accessible to them is basically saying that we are making a big difference to make the lives of Albertans better. Our government always stands up for fairness. It stands up for every Albertan, and it stands up for the protection of every Albertan. With this bill, by discussing this bill and moving it forward, we are making sure that our objective of improving the affordability of adult learning is achieved, which is crucial for the progress of our society. We need to keep costs of higher education under control so that it gives more certainty and predictability when it comes to affording postsecondary education.

When it comes to universities and colleges, the engagement of students is very important. When there is no voice of the students at the table of discussion of what their overall experience is going to be like for the universities and colleges they are going to sign up for, then basically the institutions are missing a big piece of how they can make a difference in their lives.

When people are committing to pursue higher education, it is a long-term commitment. It could vary from taking a course for a few months to the point where the education would be for a number of years. It is a commitment that a student makes every time he or she applies or when they apply for a university and get admitted into it.

Education is something that is evolving with time and all the time. To keep up ourselves with education will be doing justice to the students by preparing them for how the future is unfolding and how they can have good control when it comes to navigating their own lives by choosing the program they're in and how they can prepare themselves financially to plan their education to ensure that they meet their objectives and they complete their degrees, diplomas, or certificates.

Therefore, this bill is very important and does have complexity because it does involve a lot of matters and a lot of issues that need to be addressed. They have been overdue when it comes to addressing those issues. That's why our government has been engaging massively with students from all over the province, with students from different walks of life, so that we can ensure that we are addressing the barriers that students are facing, so that we can allow them to have access to postsecondary education, making sure that we listen to their concerns and how we can improve our system, which is an ongoing process because our needs are changing on a daily basis.

To make sure that we are able to provide a high-quality education that is advanced and that is addressing the issues that are taking place at a given time, we need to be providing them with a modernized system. That's why this bill is bringing that modernization to the system, to abide with the needs of our students in this time frame. That's why a lot of time was taken to be thorough and to do consultations with the stakeholders when it comes to compiling this bill together. This bill is basically a compilation of the discussions and feedback that has been received from the stakeholders by our government.

Our government heard clearly in our consultations that affordable adult learning needs to be carefully constructed and based on a solution-based approach. We came to a solution that will work now and in the future. To avoid uncertainty during the process, we extended the tuition freeze.

The administrative change is to streamline the process for initiating a freeze instead of having to amend the regulations. It means that the government can respond more quickly if economic circumstances change and a freeze is necessary. Considering the fact that changes happen very drastically, we want to make sure that every time a change happens, it's addressed in a timely fashion, that's when we're making sure that the needs of the students are met. Therefore, this streamlining through this bill is important and is a very efficient way to ensure that when it comes to our postsecondary education, there is no compromise.

In summary, it's an amazing bill because, first, the consumer price index cap is moved from the regulations into the act. This response is to student concerns around transparency. It ensures that Albertans, through their MLAs, will be part of any potential future debate on how tuition increases are regulated. There is a 10 per cent cap on tuition increases for individual programs. The CPI cap applies to institutions.

Tuition for individual programs may vary. We are putting necessary limits on how much they can vary. In at least one case a program saw a 50 per cent increase. New regulations around mandatory noninstructional fees ensure fairness and transparency. Such fees must reflect the actual cost to deliver services without any markups.

Student associations will have to approve any new mandatory noninstructional fees. The market modifier mechanism is replaced with a quality-focused process. This mechanism can be used for a program of study once every five years. Proposals will be joint submissions by student associations and institutions and must show how additional tuition revenue will improve program quality. Proposals must ultimately be approved by the minister in order to be implemented.

A new tuition guarantee will protect international students from unexpected tuition increases. Institutions must communicate to international students the exact amount of their tuition for each year of the program. These amounts will be guaranteed.

All in all, Madam Speaker, this bill is adding security when it comes to postsecondary education. We are making sure that our students feel safe and secure when they're signing up for higher education. We are making sure that we are providing our citizens with the right tools to have a better quality of life by making our postsecondary education more affordable and accessible.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today in the House to speak on Bill 19, An Act to Improve the Affordability and Accessibility of Post-secondary Education. Bill 19 focuses on placing an inflation-based cap on tuition fees for postsecondary institutions based on the annual changes in Alberta's consumer price index starting in 2021. This is being implemented after years of tuition freezes under this government.

Students in Alberta are already paying well below the average annual tuition rates for the country. In Alberta here we're paying approximately $5,700 and change annually while the national average is a thousand dollars more at about $6,800. While reducing fees for students is a great concept, unfortunately we just still have to go back to the fiscal responsibility and the longevity of being able to finance such programs.

Don't get me wrong; I think that in an ideal world we'd love to have our kids have free education. We want all our kids to have that postsecondary because it's brilliant, right? We want our society and our culture to excel. We want our kids to grow up with all the options in the world. I do know a country that does provide free education. Eastern Canada buys all of their oil from Saudi Arabia, and the Saudis actually provide their students with free education. I know because my neighbours are of Saudi Arabian descent, and they stayed despite all the things.

I asked them: "How do you guys get it paid? Like, how do you pay for this education?" You know what? They apply for the school themselves, they decide where they want to live, and then they go into an office. There's a lineup of students going in there, and they just tell them: "This is my school. This is where I'm going. This is where I want to go. I'm going to Canada." "Okay. How much do you need?" They have a chart, and it says exactly what the cost, expenses are, and they basically write them a cheque: "Here you go."

These kids, they live very, very comfortably and a free education. That said, you have to be from a certain lineage in Saudi Arabia to access these free funds. They are extensions of the royal family, but there are thousands of those kids. But I digress.

Here we're broke because we cannot get Canadians to buy our oil. This government has been running multibillion-dollar deficits every year since this government took office, and this bill will continue to suppress postsecondary institutions, preventing them from raising tuition beyond what the consumer price index is. Postsecondary institutions have restrictions on how they can raise money. They can't recuperate their revenue that's lost by the tuition freeze through other means due to these restrictions. Students have already seen the costs of other services skyrocket: student union fees, their parking that they have to pay for. I understand even some of the rents in some of the places, the student accommodations, have climbed a little bit.

Again, where does all this revenue come from ultimately? It does come from us. It comes from all of us. We're the taxpayers. We are all paying. Every Albertan is paying for this education, and Albertans are continuing to get taxed more and more. Now this government wants to add the burden of student tuition fees onto the taxpayer. At the University of Alberta our provincial government grants account for over half of the budget, 51 per cent. Only 17 per cent of the cost of the university is covered by tuition and fees.

Alberta's taxpayers can't keep picking up the tab from this government's meddling otherwise future generations will not be able to afford this education. That's the thing that we have to recognize, the future generations. It's great now while you're in government. You want to show some restraint on what these kids have to pay for their tuition fees, but you're forgetting about future generations, and that is a concern here. But, you know, you're trying to get elected next year. I get that.

With all these revenue restrictions on postsecondary institutions, we risk making our institutions uncompetitive. Postsecondary education should certainly be affordable but not at the expense of the quality. Universities are running out of ways to raise money and pay for their day-to-day operations.

Let us recognize that we do value our postsecondary education. Higher education provides numerous benefits to our economy. It supports higher wages, which ultimately strengthens our economy. It reduces unemployment and increases the overall health of our province and its people. Albertans who choose to attend postsecondary education, who get a postsecondary education make nearly 40 per cent more in lifetime earnings than those with high school diplomas. That allows for more revenue to be collected by the government in order to fund essential services such as our health care system.

The return on investment for a university education is 16 per cent. Businesses would love to receive that kind of return on their investments. Education is the driving force behind our growing economy. Innovation from students in Alberta makes us a world leader in our oil and gas industries, our tech, our health care, and so many other fields. Our economy grows because Albertans know the value of education.

I asked this Health minister: have you looked outside these borders to see how other institutions raise money? I know that in the United States they changed the legislation around universities to allow them to profit from inventions that are made in their institutions. Stanford University in California, which is where Facebook and all those others in Silicon Valley – my cousin is a professor there. They get money from every invention that they come out with, every website that has been developed there where they were working with students. That school, Stanford, has benefited from a lot of those inventions and those initiatives. It's an entrepreneurial way. But it did allow the universities south of the border to have another stream of revenue, encouraging development and ingenuity and entrepreneurship.
