You know, I just want to start with picking up on some of the comments made by the Member for Calgary-Acadia, and I just want to express my disappointment at the opportunity that she took to take partisan shots at the Alberta Party leader and former Health minister, Stephen Mandel. What is so disappointing is that this is a piece of legislation that I think very likely we will support on this side of the House, and I just think that it really does a disservice both to the importance of the topic of this legislation but also just to the overall tone and tenor of debate in this Assembly when we see unnecessary partisan shots lobbed across the aisle here.

It's not like that particular member. I don't know whether this is some grand strategy kind of cooked up behind the scenes and then she's a part of that or if that's something that she genuinely takes to heart. But it, frankly, doesn't help, and I don't think it actually looks all that good for the government to be doing that. We seem to see that tactic being adopted increasingly, shots at the Alberta Party itself, and I can only conclude, Mr. Speaker, that they obviously see the Alberta Party as a threat in the next election. So here we are.

Having said that, I think that the legislation itself is positive. Perhaps I'll start with a case specifically in my own constituency dating back about a year or so, when an individual who had absolutely no training whatsoever in addiction treatment or counselling had proposed to turn his 25-foot-wide infill house, which was located immediately across the street from an elementary school, into what he called a, quote, addiction treatment facility. As we went through that process, we discovered at the time that there was absolutely no provincial rule that prevented that from happening. There were some zoning concerns with the city, but the project was initially approved by the city of Calgary's planning department, and Alberta Health had absolutely no say about this.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Now, I want to hasten to add and make sure I emphasize the fact that addiction treatment facilities, a diverse and broad range of those facilities – public facilities and private facilities and not-for-profit facilities and faith-based facilities, all of these – have a place in Alberta's landscape for addressing mental health and especially addictions issues.

I want to be very clear that I as the MLA for Calgary-Elbow am very proud to be home to a number of addiction treatment facilities, and they operate very professionally. They operate very ethically. They genuinely help people, and many of those facilities, the ones in Calgary-Elbow in particular, are residential treatment facilities embedded within neighbourhoods, within the communities that make up Calgary-Elbow. And I'm absolutely honoured to have those facilities within the boundaries of my constituency, as I know that many of my colleagues are with the facilities that exist in their communities.

However, there have to be some rules that guide who can call themselves a counselling therapist and who may open a residential or an addiction treatment facility of any kind. This is something I've advocated to the government for for some time, and I'm very pleased to see that most of what I have advocated for has come to fruition in this legislation. That's a very positive thing, so I'm glad to see that.

I have to say that some of the questions I hope to hear answers to from the government side through the course of this debate would revolve around the process. Some of the challenges that I've heard about from some folks who've been in touch with me happened when the College of Social Workers was founded and when there was an expectation that social workers would be licensed. Now, I have to say that beyond a fairly high-level summary that I've received, I actually don't know all of the details of what happened there, but I wanted to just put on the record that some folks have expressed some concerns to me that that process was not particularly well handled from the perspective of the person that raised this issue to me. In particular, it created some confusion, I understand, and also added to the cost burden for, in particular, contracted service providers.

I haven't yet had an opportunity to talk with the contracted service providers for their perspective on this bill. I'll endeavour to do that coming up here tomorrow as I head back to my constituency, as we prepare for debate on the further stages of this bill into next week. I would hope the government could answer some of those questions proactively for us in terms of: have you talked with those services providers? What will the implications be on them for meeting these standards? Although there's a timeline here of November 1, that's actually a relatively short time frame for these organizations to get ready for accreditation and also for the people who work as service providers within those organizations to themselves become accredited or licensed and recognized.

Now, that may, frankly, be a concern or solving a problem that doesn't exist. I have to say that I don't have the full landscape of exactly how this fits together in existing facilities, but it is a question I wanted to put on the record. I hope the government can answer it for us because I think it's an important one. I do understand that in the social work profession, when that happened, there were some challenges there, and to this day it's perhaps created some challenges. Without question, the basic principles of the bill I'm very supportive of.

You know, one of the questions that I had initially was whether either faith-based programs or sort of group programs like AA or Gamblers Anonymous, those sorts of things, whether they would be subject to new regulations or restrictions or constrained in any way. I'm glad to see – and my understanding from the information we have been provided by the minister is that that, in fact, is not the case – that those facilities will be outside this legislation and allowed to continue on as they do.

I was also not surprised to see that there are a number of private facilities that are not regulated. The vast majority of those facilities, I understand, are highly professional in their work. Many of them, I understand, are accredited through Accreditation Canada or a similar accreditation body which has a very high standard of accreditation.

What I would hope is that as the ministry goes forward with the licensing for those facilities, they would perhaps look at an equivalence, if a facility is currently accredited under Accreditation Canada or a similar, very high-standard accreditation regime, that would essentially allow them to pass the licensing process. The concern is that for facilities that have been in business or in operation for a long time, that are providing a very high level of care with very high professional standards – I would hope that the province does not impose a huge burden on them. The cost would be high for that and take money out of what they would otherwise be using to provide care, especially where they've gone through a process of seeking and receiving a high level of accreditation. That's something I just wanted to put on the radar for the government.

A question I have for the province is: how are you going to work with facilities that are on-reserve? I know those facilities are federally regulated, often funded, I understand, by Health Canada and operate to their standards, but the province then would make it optional for them to comply with provincial standards but work with them to license. I'm just interested in exactly how that will work. Same thing in terms of – and of course off-reserve facilities would follow provincial laws, as I think should happen.

The focus of the bill, I understand, is not so much on efficacy of treatment or treatment methods specifically but on safety for folks seeking treatment, on consent, and on an ability to investigate and make sure that that, in fact, happens. I can tell you that, you know, in my experience working with friends and family and people that I know who've gone through the tremendous challenge of trying to overcome addiction, there is no one size fits all. Not one process works for everyone. Twelve-step programs have been proven to be very effective for some people. They're not as effective for other people. I think that we need some flexibility there to ensure that a variety of treatment methods are allowed, because not everything works in every individual case.

The other question, I guess, which I'll close with, Madam Speaker, is that initially there was some conversation about conversion therapy, and that's not included in this bill. As we move forward with debate, I'd be very interested in hearing from the government on what their rationale is for not including that in this bill, if they plan to bring forward further legislation at some point to address conversion therapy. I understand there's a private member's bill, potentially, that may be coming from the government side which would address that. I think that given the lateness of the calendar perhaps we won't get to that this fall, but that is something that I understand other provinces have addressed, and I see no reason why this province should not also address that. I'd be very interested to see what their rationale is for not including it with this bill. I'd love to hear, in fact, if they plan to bring that forward at some point.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will conclude my remarks, and I will move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. As we have done excellent work and been very efficient with the help of the opposition today, I suggest that we call it noon and return at 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:59 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 29, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been humming La Marseillaise to myself all day today because I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the ambassador of France to Canada, Her Excellency Kareen Rispal. As well, she's joined by Mr. Philippe Sutter, consul general of France in Vancouver; Mr. Fabien Agenès, also from the consulate; Mr. Anthony Bertrand, the honorary consul of France in Edmonton; and Mr. Xavier Bonnet, from the embassy of France.

Mr. Speaker, Her Excellency's visit is an opportunity for Alberta and France to explore how we can expand on our strong relationship. The potential for our two jurisdictions to expand bilateral trade and collaborate is high, especially with the Canada-EU comprehensive economic and trade agreement now provisionally applied. We look forward to working with Her Excellency on further developing and strengthening our relationship with France. I'd like the ambassador and her guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's really my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four grade 6 classes from the Simons Valley school. This is in the wonderful constituency of Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. There are 108 students, parents, and teachers here today. It's really big; there are four classes. The students are accompanied by their teachers Shane Spriggs, Andrew Cull, Luc Mackay, Colleen Nabata, Laurie Reeve, Vanessa Blyth and by their parent chaperones Brad Blick – and I apologize for mispronouncing any names – Mana Abbas, Peter Locke, Bahareh Taghipoor, Andrea Kehler, Jennifer Ruff, Joan King, Maegan O'Brien, Julia Bassendowski, and Pamela Chan. If they could all rise, please, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. A big school.

Are there any other school groups today, hon. members?

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce on your behalf someone who's familiar to most of us as one of the many hard-working and dedicated staff members employed by the Legislative Assembly Office. Judy Bressmer has worked as the bills and Journals clerk for nearly 19 years and has her retirement clock on her desk in countdown for her 20th anniversary. Judy is one of many of the staff at the Legislature who puts in long hours processing the many amendments and bills of this House. Without the unsung efforts of staff like Judy, the business of this House would simply grind to a halt. I'd like Judy to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Thank you for your service. There may be a few people in this Chamber that might want to use that counting on the clock that you have for other reasons.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. First, it's my pleasure to introduce the artists who have their art featured this year on my Christmas card. The first – and I'll welcome her to rise as I say her name – is Ella MacNaughton. She's a grade 1 student from Holy Cross school, which is in Edmonton-Glenora. She's joined by her parents, Cindy and Jason, and her little brother Charlie as well as her grandparents, Dan, Denise, Gary, and Yvonne. If they could all stand.

The second artist is Seva, who is a grade 6 student at Brightview school. He's joined by his mom, Natalia – please also rise – as well as his brother Mykhael and his teacher, Tyson.

Both of these schools are in my constituency, and I'm very proud to be part of a government that engages with parents, teachers, and all Albertans in supporting students in achieving their full potential. I'm so proud to have their art featured on my Christmas cards. Thank you very much for sharing your talents and for being here today. Colleagues, please join me in welcoming these students and their families.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: My second introduction today is to honour and introduce five guests who are in the members' gallery from HIV Edmonton. This coming Saturday, December 1, is World AIDS Day. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre and all of my colleagues will share in recognizing this day this weekend, and I believe that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre will be doing a member's statement.

This government shares HIV Edmonton's goal of zero stigma or discrimination, zero new infections, and zero AIDS-related deaths. I am very proud of the work that we did with them in moving forward on PrEP earlier this year. I ask that Shelley Williams as well as Heather, Manpreet, and Thomas please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think my guests are not here yet.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very outstanding individuals. Today with us we have Sarah McCrimmon and Caitlin Fleming from Edmonton Meals on Wheels. Sarah and Caitlin work in fund development and communications. I've had the privilege of partnering with Meals on Wheels by collecting cards made by many of the students in my constituency so that they can be delivered to clients that are facing isolation. I would like to thank Sarah and Caitlin for their service, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests from the St. John's Institute in Edmonton. Later today I will be speaking about the 100th anniversary of St. John's Institute and their legacy of service. I ask my guests to rise as I call their names: board chair Tania Mysak; treasurer Bill Skorobohach; board members Ivan Lypovyk, Diane Pysyk, Myrna Kostash; former board members Orest Fitzowich and Don Lutzak; and last but certainly not the least favourite, the executive director of the institute, Suzanna Brytan. [Remarks in Ukrainian] and thank you so much for joining us here in our Legislature. I would ask all of my colleagues to extend the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Merci, M. le Président. I think I should speak French today in honour of our guests from France, my country of birth, but my guest in the gallery doesn't speak French, so I'll speak in English.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a resident of my constituency of Sherwood Park, Mr. Randy Richards. Mr. Richards approached my office with his concerns over window-tinting regulations for vehicles. He has taken the lead in collecting signatures for a petition asking for changes to this regulation, that I will be tabling this afternoon. As the MLA for Sherwood Park it is my pleasure to support residents in engaging with the legislative process. Thank you, Randy, for your initiative and perseverance. I would ask you now to please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other introductions? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to introduce two guests in the gallery from Fort Myers, Florida. Please welcome Marivic and Isabella Gamez, who are visiting Edmonton for the first time. They came up here for the weather. Marivic is originally from the Philippines, so [Remarks in Tagalog], and Isabella is a professional pairs figure skater who previously won the silver medal at the U.S. national championships and skated for Spain. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Are there any other introductions, hon. members? The Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to introduce some great public servants from the Ministry of Service Alberta, starting with Darwin Barber, Giancarlo Palazzo, and Mathew Neuman from the mailroom. They work to keep our documents moving smoothly between the various departments and buildings in Alberta. Also here are Julie Barber, Louisa Andrews, and not here but one we all know is Zenek from the fleet vehicle department at Service Alberta. For anyone who knows me and cars, you know that we have a very long conversation every time they come into the room. Lastly, from our IT service department we have Cory Kuehn, Richard Dobbin, Garrick Smith, Harpreet Sadhrey, and Ashish Patel. They're, again, from our IT service department. They're the ones who politely tell me when I phone them up that I need to take my phone out of airplane mode. Thank you very much. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House, these hard-working public servants.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

St. John's Institute Centennial

Ms Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perogy, holubtsi, kubasa, a nalynsny, all smothered in golden fried onions and dill cream sauce. Do I have your attention yet? The Ukrainians who arrived in Alberta over 100 years ago as trailblazers and nation builders had foresight to create a haven, a home away from home, for their children attending postsecondary education. That haven, St. John's Institute, still stands proudly.

In 1918 the institute, originally named for Mykhailo Hrushevsky, was built. Parents and students from Alberta farm communities could breathe easier because of quality housing, home-cooked meals, and the offering of cultural life and faith programming in the spirit of the Ukrainian Orthodox tradition. As Alberta grew, a new home was chosen in Edmonton's university area. The cornerstone and chapel of the new building were blessed by the Most Reverend Metropolitan Ilarion on June 8, 1959, and the organization facility was renamed St. John's Institute. On March 29, 1963, a group of community advocates enshrined the charitable goals and purposes of the organization in An Act to Incorporate St. John's Institute, an act proclaimed by Alberta's Legislature.

In 2009 a new board of directors shepherded the institute into the 21st century. This converted the institute into a source of provincial affordable housing, with first-rate meal services, meeting and event space, and support for other nonprofits and charities. Through social enterprise SJI flourishes as a hub of art, culture, education, and human services, where they regularly host organizations of every faith, culture, ethnicity, and recreation. It is a gathering place for generations young and old, for alumni and their children, and for the new faces of Alberta.

As our Premier said following her remarks in attendance at the 100th anniversary celebrations hosted at SJI this past September 8, "For 100 years, with the innovative spirit that has long defined the contributions of Ukrainian people to our province, the St. John's Institute has been [a] . . . beacon of hope, opportunity, warmth and goodwill in our community."

Here's to 100 more for this life-changing organization.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Provincial Response to Crime Statistics

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We in the UCP had to pull this NDP government kicking and screaming to the awareness that a dangerous spike in crime was taking place. The Justice minister spent two years denying that there was even a problem. Now, through newly released stats, we're aware that she would have known all along that crime took a dangerous uptick about three years ago.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me bring some experience to bear on this very sad situation. I served as an incident commander with the Calgary Police Service, and this is what occurs when we become aware that there is an actual threat to public safety. First, we collect all of the facts as quickly as possible. While they're coming in, we're already mobilizing officers on the ground, and we're communicating effectively and establishing a command post, because the "public" in "public safety" means that people will need to be informed. Yes, we tell them when we are in a crisis. As we gain information, we assess and deploy the necessary resources. We then call in specialized teams if necessary, we relay information to officers on the ground, and we liaise with other police services and agencies as required.

In short, we use all the appropriate tactics and adjust them accordingly based on the growing knowledge of the situation. We don't sit back and mutter, "Nothing to see here" or "Move along" or just hope that everything goes away. We find out what is happening, and we react rapidly. We use all of the resources available to protect our citizens because, Mr. Speaker, that is our paramount responsibility. I suggest that the minister should have taken some steps when crime first spiked in 2015, when it climbed further in 2016, and when it clearly got out of control in 2017. As we say in incident command: your response to this crisis is a fail.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

29th Legislature Reflections

Mr. Fraser: Welcome, sports fans, to the proceedings of the 29th Session of the Alberta Legislature, otherwise known as the Bitumen Bubble Classic. Right off the bat we have a lineup change. The Premier is not on the front line of the government. She's been called up to the big leagues federally, where she has yet to make an impact.

The puck is dropped. The Leader of the Official Opposition opens with a question posed by the Alberta Party weeks ago about oil curtailment. The Deputy Premier takes a shot from the UCP leader, stickhandles into the NDP corner. She's cycling the puck and cycling and cycling. Here we go. She takes a shot back, unwilling to accept responsibility after three and a half years in government. It's another weak shot.

Another UCP member attempts to take the shot, but it's stolen by the leader. The leader for the UCP takes a big windup, shoots again, aiming for some other minister of the Crown. The front bench of the government looks back and forth as to who is up in the rotation, and it's back to the Deputy Premier, who takes the question, keeping her teammates seated on the bench.

The UCP leader fires back again with the same question, hits the crossbar. Back in the NDP corner the Deputy Premier seems to be cycling the question in her own corner again. It's an unusual strategy if you thought you had the mandate to forecheck for Albertans.

As we reach the half, we'd like to recognize the contributions of some of the amazing players in this Legislature and hope that one day their jerseys are retired in the rafters of this place: the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Their character, principles, and dedication to this province are commendable. They have served Albertans with dignity, passion, and truth. I will miss them. Alberta will miss them.

Okay, folks. Back to the game. Possession is back with the UCP. It appears they're having some trouble with bench depth, so back to the leader, who fires a shot. He seems to be taking the same shot over and over again, hoping to slip one by, but the government is standing firm and refusing to give an answer. Again the NDP Deputy Premier cycles back in the NDP zone, refusing to answer the question. Hold on. The Deputy Premier shoots. It's on target. Both teams crash the net. The puck is lost in the scrum. Folks, we need to go to video replay. It looks like both teams are so busy fighting each other that nobody managed to get the puck over the line.

With that, the game ends, and Albertans are wondering if both sides have forgotten who they're playing for.

Retrospective by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, to everything there is a season and a time to every purpose under heaven. Now, some of us will remember those words from Turn! Turn! Turn!, a '60s folk tune popularized by The Byrds. Pete Seeger wrote Turn! Turn! Turn!, but the rest of the words were lifted word for word from King Solomon's Book of Ecclesiastes. Now, that scripture has personal importance to me. It was the sermon text at both my father's and my mother's funerals, and it guided the decision I announced yesterday.

Now, I've used these member's statements a lot of different ways, but for what is likely my last one, I just want to say thank you.

First, to the people of Vermilion-Lloydminster: twice you've entrusted me with the tremendous privilege of being your representative. It has been the honour of a lifetime, and I thank you.

Second, to my colleagues of the 28th and the 29th Legislatures: our disagreements, of which there were many, were never obstacles to respect and understanding. I am a better person for having learned from your passion for our province, and I thank you.

Third, to the amazing people who've worked with me, both here in Edmonton and back home: I'm blessed to have worked alongside such passionate people, their dedication and commitment to serving Albertans, and I thank you.

Finally and most important, to my family. To Roland, to Alastair, to Sarah: when I said that I would chase this dream seven years ago, you said that you'd stand behind me, and you've been true to your word. To my wife and my teammate, Alison: seven years ago, when we left veterinary practice together, I said that we'd be moving on to something else. Well, it's been something else, and I look forward to our next something else on our journey together.

As for final words of wisdom, well, Mr. Speaker, I can only think of the words we always recited at TUXIS youth parliament before every sitting: let us pledge ourselves anew in an unselfish quest for the best in our homes, in our churches and communities, in our places of work, remembering always that life is not a goblet to be drained but a measure to be filled. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

To the students, particularly, that are in the Legislature today: you will see exchanges and different opinions shared on the floor here, but you also see a respect for each other. So if there is anything that I would urge that you take away from this event, it's that you recognize that this commitment to democracy also has a human side, a very important aspect of this job. What you saw evidenced here in the last few minutes was exactly that.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank that member for his service as well.

Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, today Alberta oil is selling for its lowest price in history, $10 a barrel. Yesterday it was $12. Last week it was $15. It is taking a nosedive. It's worth less than a bottle of water or a can of pop. Employers are burning through cash and may be on the cusp of announcing major layoffs. When will the government act not for railcars in 2020 but to stop a crisis in the Alberta economy from unfolding right now?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is right that the differential is hurting Albertans, and nothing is more important than fixing this problem soon and with lasting results. The only long-term solution is access to international tidewater, a Canadian pipeline to a Canadian port. But in the medium term, as the Premier announced yesterday, we'll be moving oil by rail to clear the bottleneck and make sure that it doesn't creep back upon us, and in the short term all options are on the table to choose a path that will best close the price gap. We will have more to say on that very soon.

Mr. Kenney: I appreciate that answer, Mr. Speaker. However, if the government is to follow the recommendation to impose mandatory curtailment of production to bring our market back in balance, which could increase the price, it's estimated, from $10 to $30 a barrel, it would need an amendment to the Mines and Minerals Act, section 85. This House is scheduled to rise a week from today. Will the government co-operate with the opposition to adopt that amendment expeditiously – we could do it this afternoon or on Monday – to get that in place at least so the government has an option to curtail production and prevent a potential catastrophe in our economy?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to reiterate that all options are on the table when it comes to getting fair value for our resources. We certainly welcome all members of this House, on an issue of such critical importance, to participate. I appreciate that clearly the member has taken a big departure from his ideology and the ideology of his party, which has championed even as recently as last week and definitely for many years – I know that there are members from his own caucus that went to jail because they fought so freely for the free market. I appreciate that that must have been very challenging to change his position on this matter. We'll continue to have more to say in the days to come.

Mr. Kenney: Facing what some call a five-alarm fire or financial catastrophe, that minister can't help herself but be partisan and chippy. It's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker.

I think we should put aside the politics to find common ground to stop potential massive layoffs for Albertans. Given that the Premier's envoys won't be apparently reporting back until tomorrow and that the Legislature is scheduled to rise next week, will the government at least work with us on potentially expeditious passage of legislative amendments allowing for curtailment of bitumen together with the already existing powers for curtailment of ...

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I very clearly answered the question, and I will continue to do so. There's nothing more important than making sure that Albertans get fair value for their resources. Certainly, much could have been done in the decade that the member spent sitting around the federal cabinet table to make that happen, but today he is here. Today our Premier is in Ottawa fighting and taking on the job that the member could have done when he was in Ottawa, when he failed to save pipelines more than once in the House of Commons because he said that it wasn't his job. On this side of the House we know it's all of our jobs. I appreciate that this must have been very difficult for the member, to divide so far from his ideology and the values that his party was founded on to come up with a solution. We'll continue to work to the betterment of all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.
Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it was actually small "c" conservative governments that used the power of production controls in the past to protect the interests of the owner of the asset. Talk about property rights: property that belongs to the people of Alberta is now being given away.

On this point, there is speculation that the government will incentivize curtailments in production through royalty writeoffs. Mr. Speaker, does the government not understand that that will take time to design and doesn't have a certainty of outcome? We need certainty and action now. Are they considering potential mandatory curtailment to get the action we need to save Alberta jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting to hear "certainty and action" when two days ago the member was calling for voluntary reductions. The week before he was calling for a free market, and today he's calling for arguably changing the way that we engage with the free market. All options are on the table. What I was acknowledging is that, unless the member wants to correct me on history, Conservatives have always talked about the free market. Members of his own caucus, earlier this week, talked about the free market. I appreciate that this must be challenging for many members of the caucus, but the solution here is – whatever decision we make is going to have lasting impacts. We need those to be ones that close the gap, protect jobs, and keep people working.

Mr. Kenney: Well, perhaps the minister didn't hear the question, so we'll try this again, Mr. Speaker. There's been speculation that the government does not intend to support mandatory curtailment, which has been used through most of the history of Alberta's energy industry, but rather royalty writeoffs. We're getting zero royalty for our oil right now at $10 a barrel. If we do have curtailment, the price, it is expected, will triple. All the companies will actually be generating some revenue, some cash flow, some profits. Why would the government give them a royalty writeoff? The people of Alberta deserve something for this resource that belongs to them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our Premier is working on all fronts to make sure that we close the gap in the price differential. This is for no reason – it's not for one person's political benefit or another person's political benefit; this is for the benefit of all Albertans. Eighty million dollars a day is what this is costing us. It is costing Albertans certainty, it's costing the market certainty, and it's certainly impacting the bottom line of those employers. All options are on the table. We will continue to fight each and every day for the people of Alberta. That's our goal, to make sure that we support all Albertans.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the government has spoken about adding additional railcars in 2020, which will not alleviate the crisis we are facing today. Can the government tell us: how much does it budget on spending on those railcars? Private-sector industry leaders: none of them have indicated to me that they're asking the government to buy railcars. The private companies are adding rail capacity to ship oil out of Alberta, so what is the rationale for the government buying those railcars, and how much will it cost?

Ms Hoffman: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to fighting for Albertans, getting fair value, we've said before that nothing is off the table, and we've shown that. The member has shown that on this issue and many others related to oil and gas, he continues to flip-flop. While we are going to make sure that we – we said that we would buy a pipeline if that's what it took to get our product to tidewater. The federal government has acted on that: Canadians now own a pipeline and are working to get that expansion. That's the long-term solution. The interim solution is making sure we get fair value and can move our products east and west, because over a decade in Ottawa the member opposite failed to secure that with a pipeline. The short term: we'll have more to say in the days to come.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Once again wrong, Mr. Speaker: four pipelines, 1.73 million barrels per day in additional movement, most of those pipelines opposed by the NDP. We can keep doing it every day, this ridiculous exchange, but it doesn't get any Albertans back to work.

Unemployment

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, according to a report today from the University of Calgary the duration of unemployment in Alberta has tripled over the course of the past decade. On average an unemployed Albertan is waiting for 20 weeks to find work again. Is the government proud of that record, and does it think that higher taxes, higher debt, and higher regulation have helped in terms of this unemployment crisis that we're facing?

Ms Hoffman: It's interesting because the member in his earlier questions was talking about us having more involvement and making sure we get full value, and now he's talking about less involvement. But what I can tell you is that no matter what, our Premier and this government have the backs of Albertans. We want to make sure that everyone has the opportunity of full employment. That means that no matter what the price of oil is, we're going to keep fighting and make sure that we drive it up while protecting important front-line services, Mr. Speaker. Instead of fighting for a $700 million tax giveaway to the top 1 per cent, the extremely wealthy, we're investing in all Albertans. We're investing in things like two trains, 120,000 barrels per day, to make sure we can get our product to tidewater and fair value.

Mr. Kenney: The minister says that they're investing in trains, but they can't even tell us how much money they're talking about. This is incoherent, Mr. Speaker. I take it that the minister, the government are indifferent about the fact that the duration of unemployment in Alberta has tripled in the past decade, from seven to 21 weeks. Today the Global Petroleum Survey indicated that Alberta has fallen from the 14th-best place to invest in the world to the 43rd-best place during the NDP's government. What has the NDP done to turn that around, to stop the nosedive in Alberta's ...

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I want to reaffirm that nothing could be further from the truth in terms of standing on this side for regular working folks. We are fighting every day to make sure that we get the best price and the best value, and that means the best jobs and the best benefits for all Albertans. Whether you're one of the people actually building the pipeline that's going to be able to pay your family's mortgage from that job or whether you're one of the people who's working in a hospital or a school that will benefit from the additional revenue that the province of Alberta and the country of Canada gets, we are working on the short, medium, and long terms to make sure that we both address the differential and get full value for the resource that we all own for the benefit of all Albertans.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, if the government's policies are working for ordinary Albertans, why has unemployment gone up for each of the last six months to the highest level outside of Atlantic Canada? Why are 184,000 Albertans looking for work? Why has the duration of unemployment tripled from seven to 22 weeks?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We do know that in 2017 90,000 full-time jobs, mostly in the private sector, returned to this province after the worst recession in two generations. We are focused on a number of other initiatives to get people back to work, to support people in their training, and that is having a positive effect as well. We will continue to have the backs of Albertans, as the Deputy Premier has said, as we go forward because we know that a full-time job is the most important thing for a sustainable life with your family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Energy Industry Jobs Oil Price Differentials

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition has joined with us in calling for mandatory production cuts in order to address the oil price differential. We've been arguing that this is the best short-term answer to depressed oil prices for weeks, but hopefully the growing consensus will convince this government to act. However, even with immediate action on the differential we are still in danger of another round of job losses because of low oil prices. To the Deputy Premier: is there a plan in place to deal with further job losses in our energy industry caused by low oil prices?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, our priority is to make sure that every Albertan has an opportunity for full employment, fair compensation, and a good job. That's why our Premier is in Toronto today working with the board of trade and with other job creators and employers to make sure that they know what we're doing in Alberta to address the pressures and the impact that the drop in the price of oil and the increase in the differential have had on those types of employers and others. We're going to keep working to make sure that we address short-, medium-, and long-term impacts of the differential, that we're also diversifying our economy, and that we're investing in health care and education instead of laying off 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We in the Alberta Party caucus believe that mandatory curtailment is the right response to the oil price differential, but we also know it will come with costs. Although curtailment will be a net benefit for Alberta, there will be those who lose work because of lower production. Instead of playing catch-up and helping affected workers like this government did with the coal phase-out, let's be proactive and make sure there are supports in place for those workers. To the Deputy Premier: will you ensure that any plan for curtailment will also include measures to support affected workers?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're certainly keeping working people as top of mind as we continue to have these important discussions. That's why we're not flip-flopping. We're not rushing. We're making sure that the decisions we make are grounded in the best outcomes for Albertans. When one is in government, you know that those decisions you make or those news conferences you hold impact real people, real families, so we're working diligently to make sure that we follow the best path to support job creators, to support working people, and to make sure that we get full value for our resources.

Mr. Fraser: With the current low price of oil every day without action could be more potential job losses. While the Premier has said that they plan to purchase more railcars, that is neither a long-term nor immediate solution. We need pipelines, but we also need immediate action from this government, not railcars that won't be ready for over a year. To the same minister: when can we expect your government to take real, immediate action on the differential?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've been taking action for weeks and months. We've been working directly with employers and with industry. We've created an envoy that is engaging in important discussions and important research to make sure that we make the right decisions moving forward. We've acted on our lobby around Keep Canada Working 2.0, making sure that everyone in Ottawa and everyone across this country knows the impact of failing to have a pipeline, and making sure we're investing in rail to increase the export of our product. We'll have more to say on the differential soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The donation of organs or tissue to another person is literally the gift of life. I think every member in this House was moved by the donation of Logan Boulet, who died following the Humboldt bus tragedy. Logan's choice saved six lives and led to a fourfold spike in registration rates here in Alberta. We know this issue is both deeply emotional and highly complex. To the Minister of Health: what is the current state of organ donation here in Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: I want to begin by thanking the member for important work and advocacy on this issue, Mr. Speaker. Organ donors in 2017 saved 462 lives, which has increased every year since 2015, and more than 550,000 Albertans have registered with the Alberta organ and tissue donation registry since it was launched. About 2,500 Albertans register every week. We are heading in the right direction, but there's definitely more progress to be made.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what work is the government doing to improve registration and donation rates, and what barriers remain to those increased donation rates?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've embarked upon an audit of the donor system, and that is nearing completion. We're specifically looking at ways to make sure that we are taking full advantage of every donation opportunity, and we're also developing stronger information systems to manage donations more effectively throughout our province and our country. Despite all this great new technology, a requirement to mail or fax your consent documents was written right into legislation under the previous government, and the truth is that many young people have never seen a fax machine, let alone used one, so there are certainly areas where the legislation could be modernized.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm looking forward to working with Alberta Health to address these ongoing barriers.

Beyond government policy, what can Albertans do to help ensure that organ and tissue donations are there when we need them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: I'm so proud to work with this hon. member, Mr. Speaker. We certainly have a lot of work to do to optimize our system on the government side, but my main message is to talk to your family, to every Albertan. Families are the final trustees of their loved ones' wishes, and it's absolutely vital to make sure that your family knows what your wishes are. A very close friend of mine received a liver, actually the same week his wife gave birth to their daughter, and last week he walked her to school instead of having her grow up without a dad. So, please, have these conversations with the people you love and make sure that you give the gift of life if you do come to that difficult situation.

Election Advertising Financing

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is facing some very serious issues, and that is why it is so upsetting that our politics are so messed up. In 2015 the Premier passed laws that were supposed to take big money out of politics, but instead they introduced U.S.-style PACs that have made our politics uglier and less transparent. Now big unions and corporations can play dirty politics, and political parties can pretend to be innocent. Will the Premier admit that bringing PACs to Alberta was a mistake and that these shadow parties hurt our democracy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe very strongly that Albertans deserve to know who is trying to influence their opinions. That is why our election system is made more transparent by taking big money out of politics, imposing strict spending and contribution limits, and we now have new accountability measures for third-party advertisers, which is how Albertans know who is behind the various campaigns. It's clear from what we've seen lately that the Conservatives are still hell-bent on getting around these rules and returning Alberta back to the same system of entitlement that Albertans rejected last election.

Mr. Gill: Mr. Speaker, PACs are now calling the shots in Alberta politics, and that isn't right. Given that unelected and unaccountable PACs now dominate political party nominations and our leadership contests in parties like the UCP and given that instead of transparency and accountability we have gotten dirty tricks and the secretive funding of party politics, will the Premier admit that her changes to political funding have failed and fix things before we go into a U.S.-style mess of an election next spring?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans said clearly that they wanted dark money taken out of politics. They wanted a light shone on where the money was coming from and who was speaking. We did just that, and we brought in some of the strongest and most aggressive regulations against PACs in our country. We're ensuring that elections are fair and balanced and that it's regular Albertans deciding the outcomes of the election, not those who spend the most money. Transparency is what we brought to our electoral system.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it isn't just the provincial politics that PACs have invaded since the government has introduced a law which will result in the creation of PACs in municipal politics and given that the changes proposed will make municipal political fundraising less transparent and more like the failed system that we now have provincially, will the Premier admit that her changes to political fundraising will make things worse, not better, and will she withdraw the proposed legislation?

Mr. S. Anderson: This is rich, about ethics, coming from this member, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have the right to know who is influencing their . . .

Mr. Gill: Point of order.

Mr. S. Anderson: . . . elections, which is why rules around third-party advertising are vital. Mr. Speaker, we're making third-party advertisers register with each local jurisdiction they intend to advertise in to disclose their finances. Albertans asked for it, and we are doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Provincial Electoral System Government Caucus Question and Voting Practices

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Canada majority governments are often elected with less than a majority of votes, including this one we have here. The last elections in Ontario and Quebec are good examples, with majority governments getting elected despite having less than 40 per cent of the popular vote. Many provinces across Canada have begun to look at changing their elections to a proportional representation model. This is something many Albertans are interested in and many of my constituents are interested in. Given that it would ensure that every vote counts, to the minister of democratic renewal: has your ministry begun any work on looking into models of proportional representation or into consulting Albertans on this important matter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the work that we've done to strengthen and improve democracy here in Alberta: banning corporate donations, bringing in new spending limits, making PACs more accountable, and thanks to our government voting will be easier and more accessible than ever. We will continue to work to make sure that ideas and not bank accounts decide our elections.

Ms Luff: I'm going to take that as a no, Mr. Speaker.

Given that proportional representation has many benefits, including increased voter turnout, increasing diversity in elected officials, electing Legislatures with more parties, more diverse voices, and given that 80 per cent of OECD countries use some form of proportional representation and given that proportional representation was on the NDP platform in 2012, why is Alberta lagging behind the world and the rest of Canada in improving our democracy?

Dr. Starke: Because they won, for a change.

The Speaker: Order.

Given the speech earlier I'm going to move on past making any comments.

The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've had very constructive conversations about proportional representation with people like the member from our Liberal caucus, and we continue to have conversations about these topics. But I have to say that when I'm out at the doors, people are concerned about the price differential; people are concerned about pipelines; people are concerned about jobs, putting food on their family's table, health care, education. I have yet to knock on a door and have someone tell me about mixed-member proportional representation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Luff: I just had a town hall where at least half of the people who attended asked me to ask about this.

Given that my constituents are concerned about the state of democracy and given that they feel their elected representatives are more concerned about loyalty to their party than to their constituents, does the minister for democratic renewal believe that whipping all votes and scripting all the committees is good government policy?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's very interesting to listen to that hon. member ask a question like that. Clearly she doesn't do well under the team-play situation that we deal with in this House, but that's the nature of this Assembly. The Assembly is designed for teamwork to create teams that can form a government. That's what it's about. It's not about individual members following their pet projects. [interjections]

The Speaker: Students, there are no recesses in this place.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Development

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Social licence doesn't mean complete consensus. It means a majority of people are prepared to go along with it, and that's what we're still working for. That's what it means to me." That's what the Premier said in Maclean's magazine in December 2016. Today the majority of Albertans consistently oppose the carbon tax, a job-killing tax that was supposed to get social licence for pipelines. Those pipelines were cancelled or delayed, leading to today's crisis, $80 million a day. So why are Albertans still stuck paying a carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, carbon pricing is an effective way to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. If one believes climate change is real, then the next question is: what is one going to do about it? The folks across the way believe that we're not to do anything about it, it seems, because they have not been clear about what that plan might be. Our plan carefully balances economic development with environmental protection because we on this side do believe that climate change is real. We also believe there is a tremendous amount of economic opportunities that go along with climate action, and I'll be pleased to discuss those in the supplementals.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the economic crisis is real.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that the new Premier of New Brunswick has proposed a multiprovincial holding corporation to shepherd the Energy East pipeline through the National Energy Board hearings before handing it back to the pipeline company for construction and given that time is of the essence with Bill C-69, the no-more-pipelines act, threatening resource-producing provinces courtesy of the NDP government and their best friend Justin Trudeau, to the minister: do you support Premier Higgs' proposal, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've been very clear from the beginning that we are willing to work with all provinces or municipalities or others who want to see Canada's economy grow through tidewater access for Alberta's energy resources because of the tremendous benefits that accrue to the rest of the country when that happens. That particular individual is welcome to reach out to us any time. As for our approach to pricing carbon and reducing our greenhouse gas emissions and our contribution to climate change, we're doing things like investing in Calgary's green line, that will create more than 12,000 jobs. We're investing in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. B.C. announced earlier this week that they are intervening against Saskatchewan's court challenge against the carbon tax, siding, again, with the NDP's friend Justin Trudeau. Given the crisis of our economic situation, to the Premier: why are you refusing to join Saskatchewan's court challenge and scrap the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House we don't believe it's necessary to back a dump truck of cash onto the lawns of high-priced lawyers in order to tell us that the Constitution is real. What we are doing here is focused on our own plan, which is reducing greenhouse gas emissions, growing the economy, taking our environmental challenges seriously, and working productively with other jurisdictions who share those values. We're not interested in fool's errands that are legal challenges that we see elsewhere. We're focused on our own priorities.

Oil Price Differentials and Provincial Revenue

Mr. Barnes: The NDP government has projected that their $8 billion deficit this year is based on a modest $22 differential. Even though the NDP seem not to be concerned about where their revenue is coming from or if it's even coming, we, the responsible adults in this room, are concerned. To the minister: with this disastrous differential growing daily and assuming that you are not in the dark about what is happening within your own ministry, can you state exactly what your deficit will be under the current $40 differential?

Mr. Ceci: Well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the deficit for this year is $7.8 billion, and in Q2 we'll update everybody again with regard to where the deficit is. We have dropped the deficit $3 billion since our first budget, $3 billion through the worst recession in two generations. We're finding savings that were left behind, savings that we actually took out of the budget because that side was benefiting CEOs with golf memberships. They had a private air force and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. [interjection] Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that this horrendous problem with our growing differential cannot be ignored, postponed, or deflected and given that not giving a direct answer and spouting repetitive rhetoric would be an insult to the 275,000 hard-working Albertans who depend on oil and gas to put food on their table, again to the minister: how much revenue will Albertans lose because of the NDP-Trudeau alliance that failed to gain pipeline access?

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. I just can't help but address the question around a Trudeau alliance. What we've done on this side of the House is create a made-in-Alberta solution that invests in energy efficiency, invests in ordinary folks, and invests in diversification. On that side of the House they're arguing for us to throw it all out and implement – what? – the plan Justin Trudeau has created, Mr. Speaker. I can't help but say that I think somebody else might be best friends with the Prime Minister. On this side of the House we're fighting for ordinary Albertans to come up with Alberta solutions.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that not long ago they used to protest pipelines and given that now the government's response is usually based in rhetoric, future promises, or plans that repeat past failures and that Budget 2018 put Alberta on track for a staggering $100 billion in debt by 2023: how much does this government expect our debt to be past $100 billion because of our current $40 differential?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, if he wants to ask about past failures, all he has to do is look two spots over to his right and ask about the deficit that was accumulated under that person's watch: $56 billion in one year alone, hundreds of billions of dollars put to the federal government debt, and interest payments amounting to hundreds of billions of dollars. We've cut the deficit $3 billion already under the toughest – the toughest – financial situation that Alberta has been in in a long time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

H.A. Kostash School in Smoky Lake

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2012 a RECAPP facility evaluation report was done for the H.A. Kostash school in Smoky Lake, in the Aspen View school division. That report recommended that extensive repairs were required to maintain the integrity of the school roof to prevent leaks. To the Minister of Infrastructure or of Education: were the recommended repairs carried out, and if so, why are pails and garbage cans required to catch water in the hallways and classrooms during rains?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and answer on behalf of the Minister of Education. I can't speak, of course, to the particulars of this file, but what I can tell the member opposite and all members of this House is that our government has been engaged with the largest school construction project in the history of this country. We've built over 240 schools all across this province to make sure that we have room for the students who need to go to school.

What won't help the constituents of that member's riding is $700 million in cuts that they plan to give away to the millionaires and billionaires of this province in addition to the planned cuts that they want to make to the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you for that non answer, but it's raining in Smoky Lake.

Given that Alberta Infrastructure had a feasibility assessment and life cycle cost analysis conducted by AECOM – unfortunately, that report is not dated – that shows many deficiencies in the current building and indicates either modernization or a total rebuild, Minister, can you confirm for the students, parents, and teachers at H.A. Kostash whether they can look forward to a modernization or a rebuild and, more importantly, when, and where does this sit on the priority list?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nothing is more important to this government than making sure that our students have modern, new schools to learn in. That's why we've been engaged in the largest construction project of schools in this country's history.

You know, the member opposite says that it's raining in the school in his constituency. If he had the opportunity to form government with his colleagues across the way, they would have no school in his constituency. He has been very clear that the cuts that he plans to make to the education system are going to hurt, and that's going to hurt the students in Smoky Lake.

Mr. Hanson: Just to be clear, Mr. Speaker, the school is actually in the constituency of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Given that I have personally received over 200 letters from concerned parents, students, and teachers, which I'll table later, and given that the Premier, both the ministers of Education and Infrastructure as well as the MLA for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater have also received these letters, Minister, why has no one, especially their MLA, responded to the valid concerns of these constituents?

Mr. Piquette: Oh, give me a break, Dave. You know damn well I already . . .

The Speaker: Hey, hey.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: Did somebody say "point of order"? Noted.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what kind of response the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has made to those parents, but I can imagine it goes something like this. "Dear parents of concerned students of Smoky Lake: if you elect a UCP government, you can be guaranteed billions of dollars of cuts to education, making sure that the students in Smoky Lake won't get a new school and, in addition to that, that the teachers are going to be put out of work." Our government has done a lot to invest in education. We've got 240 new schools and 4,000 more teachers because of the investments that we've made in education and that those guys want to reverse.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Genetic Test Information Use

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago the Senate of Canada and the House of Commons passed Bill S-201, the Genetic Non-Discrimination Act, which protects folks who want to get genetic testing done in order to be aware of their health risks and prepare accordingly. Individuals who have genetic markers for specific diseases can be charged higher premiums for insurance or denied insurance coverage altogether. To the Minister of Health: is your government aware that some Albertans are being discriminated against simply based on genetic characteristics?

Ms Hoffman: I want to thank CIJA and all members of the Israeli and Jewish community for their work right across this country, Mr. Speaker. I had the honour of meeting with representatives from CIJA this morning, and we reaffirmed our government's commitment to continue to support the federal legislation as it continues to move forward. It's important that no form of discrimination is tolerated.

Mr. Speaker, when members of Alberta who are involved in a number of organizations are behaving in a way that's promoting hateful views, that leadership is to call that out and make sure it has no place in politics or in public service.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that stakeholders like the Centre for Israel and Jewish Affairs and the Jewish Federation of Edmonton and the Talmud Torah Society have told us how this can impact their communities and given that people will avoid getting tested for genetic markers if it means insurance will be more expensive or unavailable, to the same minister: will you ensure Albertans are protected from genetic discrimination by insurance companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the members of CIJA, who are doing this work on behalf of all Canadians. There is federal legislation working its way through. We certainly respect that legislation. We want everyone to know that in Alberta we do not tolerate hate, antisemitism, or discrimination in any form. To the members of CIJA: thank you for your tireless advocacy on this matter. Our government has your back.

Mr. Fraser: Given that Jewish-Canadians are not the only group that is especially affected by genetic diseases and therefore genetic discrimination and given that it would be a help to many communities affected by genetic diseases if they were protected from discrimination and given that genetic testing gives people time to focus on their health, if needed, to the same minister: will you commit to bringing forward legislation similar to the federal legislation to protect Albertans from this kind of genetic discrimination?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, in the meeting that I had this morning with folks from CIJA, I made it very clear that our government fully supports the federal legislation. It applies to all jurisdictions across our country. We believe that it's important that it be enforced from coast to coast to coast. Everyone deserves an opportunity to have proper health information and make good, informed decisions for themselves without risk that it could result in discrimination that could hurt them in the future. So we continue to stand with CIJA and members of the Jewish community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Calgary Board of Education Construction Project Management Costs

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, over the past two years the Calgary board of education covered $43 million for schools on behalf of the government of Alberta, including $20 million in actual construction costs. When I asked about this two days ago, both the Infrastructure minister and the Education minister refused to give a straight answer, so let's try the Finance minister: do you even acknowledge that the government of Alberta owes the Calgary board of education over $40 million?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to answer again on behalf of the Minister of Education and reinforce the fact that every child in Calgary and across Alberta deserves an education that prepares them for success in a fast-changing world. By fully funding enrolment growth, we've put tens of millions of dollars more into the CBE than would have been the case under the Conservatives. As such, I expect the board to balance its budget and continue to provide the excellent education that it's been expecting. What should be made clear is that under their plan the CBE would be experiencing a hundred million dollar deficit in its budget, which would clearly negatively affect the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, given that so far the minister has refused to acknowledge that the government owes the board of education in Calgary over $40 million and given that over $1.7 million in interest has been paid that would otherwise be earmarked for classrooms, for kids of Albertan families, and given that two ministers and now a third have refused to answer questions on this important matter, let's go back to the Finance minister. Why does the government of Alberta expect school boards to fund construction costs out of reserves which are meant to be spent on kids in classrooms?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to refresh the member's memory on some of the investments that we've made in the Calgary board of education. We've increased by $63 million their operating fund. We've provided them $18 million to fully cover the cost of reducing instructional and transportation fees, $13 million in additional funding to classrooms, and over a hundred million dollars in capital investment. If the Member for Calgary-Hays is so concerned about the state of the Calgary board of education's facilities and students, then why is he campaigning on a $700 million tax cut to millionaires and billionaires in addition to firing 4,000 teachers?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, we just heard the minister say that he depends upon schools to balance their budgets, but he obviously depends on the government to balance its budget on the backs of those schools because he won't pay his bills. Again, this is kids in classrooms.

Given that I've asked about kids in classrooms and the minister talks about anything except kids in classrooms, which actually matters, to the minister: do you even acknowledge that your government owes the Calgary board of education $40 million plus?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker. I can reiterate the significant investments that we've made in the Calgary board of education and the students of Alberta all across this province, yet I have yet to hear the member opposite admit that he is campaigning on a $700 million tax cut to millionaires and billionaires that would have no positive effect on the students, and he would include cancelling a bunch of construction projects in Calgary and all over the province of Alberta. I am looking forward to him campaigning to the students of Alberta on that platform because they're going to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Agricultural Concerns

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As of late my office has been getting plenty of inquiries on several important issues that could have far-reaching consequences for Alberta farmers and ranchers. Today I'm hoping to get some clarification for their sake. Minister, recently a cow coming from the interior of B.C. and slaughtered here in Alberta was discovered to have bovine TB. What impact could this have on cattle producers here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the very, very good question. He realizes that we had our own bovine tuberculosis scare here last year or the year before, very close to your own neighbourhood, Mr. Speaker, as well. So we recognize that this can be very stressful for ranchers. This is a file that is led by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. It's my understanding that with the portion of this animal that was discovered, nothing has entered the food chain, there is no risk to human health, and it should not affect our bovine tuberculosis free status. But as minister I will keep a close eye on this file.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that pests may take many forms in Alberta and given that the federal government's pest management regulatory agency is looking at banning the use of strychnine in Canada, used extensively to control Richardson's ground squirrels, commonly known as gophers, Minister, what is the status of this possible ban, and what are you doing to advocate for Alberta farmers and ranchers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the very important question. I understand very well that strychnine is used to control Richardson's ground squirrels, gophers, throughout the province. It had been registered, you know, some years ago. That proved to be disastrous. There were a lot of crop and forage losses, especially in southern Alberta, so I absolutely hear from producers across the province about how important that is, a tool in their tool box to control the pests. So I have told the federal government that we do not support the proposed ban until some other, more effective methods are developed.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that I am also getting plenty of calls on the federal PMRA's possible banning of the use of neonics used to control flea beetles in canola fields and given that this may result in farmers doing more spraying, leading to higher costs and lower yields while also increasing the possible unintended environmental risks, Minister, what help are Alberta farmers getting from your office on this file?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the very important question. The government is committed to supporting Alberta's farmers and making their lives better. We know that farmers, you know, throughout the history of farming in Alberta have been very good stewards of their land. They understand the importance of protecting their environment. It protects their crops as well. But discussions with the PMRA are based, I believe, on limited information that does not necessarily align with the reality here, so again our department is going to share those experiences, sharing our science that we have here in Alberta, with the federal government to ensure that Alberta's concerns are taken . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Bighorn Area Land Use

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, concerns have arisen from companies currently carrying on activities in the public land-use zones in Kananaskis Country. They are under constant threat of legal action, and they are constantly having to defend themselves from environmental groups focused on stopping legitimate and legal economic activities in the public land-use zone. Minister, by creating a huge, new public land-use zone in the Bighorn, are you at all concerned that you will create the same kind of dynamic in the west country public land-use zone?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to congratulate the Minister of Environment and Parks for the work she's done on creating parks for us all to enjoy here in Alberta. As with Kananaskis, with Bighorn there are a number of public engagements that have been going on. There will be a public engagement, a telephone town hall type thing, you know, for feedback on that, and stakeholder groups will be invited, as will all Albertans, to participate.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has recently claimed that broad consultation on the Bighorn has occurred but given that the feedback provided to the Official Opposition has cast doubt on the accuracy of that claim, to the minister: did your office consult with affected forestry or energy companies doing business in the Bighorn area and the new public land-use zone prior to the launch of this proposal last week?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As with many things our government does, we absolutely consult with all stakeholders in those areas, and I certainly have a number of great quotes here from different municipalities and stakeholders. One is, quote: a positive step forward. That's Jim Duncan, who is the reeve of Clearwater county in his comments welcoming infrastructure spending to boost tourism in the Nordegg-Rocky Mountain House-Drayton Valley area. Other comments, quote: I am writing to ask you to keep the government's promise to protect . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjection] Thank you. Time is up.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that there is direct impact on these economic activities that help to drive the economies of communities like Drayton Valley, Rocky Mountain House, and many others, will the speaker clearly state for the record that existing logging, mining, and energy extraction in what will soon be the west country public land-use zone be allowed to continue those activities in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's no problem at all. Certainly, public land-use zones allow for a number of different activities. They balance recreational uses, which are happening right now, and plan them appropriately with logging activities, with extraction of various oil and gas or other mineral resources as well as existing grazing leases. Public land-use zones accommodate all of those various uses. They are a planning tool that allows us to make sure that we've got a working landscape, but people can also enjoy themselves.

Health Care Patient Information Portal

Dr. Turner: I've been practising medicine for over 40 years and have relied on Alberta's world-class laboratory medicine and diagnostic imaging to provide accurate and individualized diagnosis and therapy for my patients. In 2002 Netcare was introduced to Alberta, and it remains the best lab information system in Canada. It facilitates referrals and is essential for quality medical care. To the Minister of Health: the data collected in Netcare belongs to the patients, who have been asking for a patient portal. Please provide the House with an update on making a patient portal available to all Albertans.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for this important question, Mr. Speaker. This member has been a tireless advocate for his patients and for all Alberta patients not just for the 40 years that he's practised medicine but also as a member of this government caucus, and I want to commend him for that work.

He's right that Albertans have been waiting for too long for a time where they have a digital tool in their own possession with their own health care information. They have that in almost every other aspect of their lives, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to be sure that when we launched this portal, Albertans will immediately find it useful, and I look forward to doing that soon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you. I'm very much looking forward to that.

Given that the pharmacy information network is on the same platform and can be accessed by health professionals, including pharmacists and nurse practitioners, will the PIN also be available to patients through the patient portal?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans will be able to see their pharmacy records among other health records, and Albertans will be able to have a wide range of features to help them track their existing records and upload new data that they have from their own mobile devices. Probably many people in this Chamber are wearing Fitbits at this time, and that information could be useful to incorporate from a patient perspective into their own electronic health record. This kind of modernization of personalization of health care is only possible when you have a government that makes health care a priority and invests instead of cutting. I'm proud that this side of the House has chosen to do that.

Dr. Turner: Will the patient portal be useful in integrating the personal directives such as the organ donor consent, that we heard about earlier, into the electronic medical record for Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again for this important question. We plan on rolling out the digital tool, and like with many digital tools, there will be updates in the years to come and months to come. I think it's a good idea. I know that the member has worked on these concepts for many years. Albertans maybe don't always know it because we've had many of these conversations in person, Mr. Speaker, so I'm glad to be able to update the House with some of the tremendous work he's done on this effort. When we do get a time to announce, very soon, I hope all Albertans will recognize the contributions from you, hon. member, and many colleagues that have worked with you on this effort for many, many years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a request for unanimous consent for introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Go ahead, Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce today to the Assembly a group of nattily attired visitors, the board of governors and executive leadership team at Portage College. Access to higher education for rural and indigenous learners is incredibly important to me as well as to Portage College. Portage is a leader in opening doors to higher education for rural and indigenous Albertans. I want to thank my guests for their tireless efforts to make sure that we have an excellent college in northeastern Alberta and for their contributions to the postsecondary system in Alberta as a whole. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce guests today from the Pakistan Canada Association of Edmonton, which has existed for 45 years as a community hub for Pakistanis around this city. Through its programs the PCAE has helped many new Canadians integrate within the greater community while promoting the cultural heritage of Pakistan. I have attended many of their events, and I have to say that the food is always my favourite part. Between the Minister of Labour and democratic renewal we have a number of guests that we'll be introducing, but I'll call, first, Ziad Memon, who's a director for the youth wing, who leads a mentorship program; Khalid Aziz and his wife, Ayesha Aziz – Khalid is the general secretary and works behind the scenes to ensure community concerns are addressed – and my good friends Jamil Shaikh and his wife, Rehana Parveen. Jamil is the chairman for the hall committee and an avid community leader. I'm so happy that my guests could join us today. Please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure as well to introduce members of the Pakistan Canada Association of Edmonton. As I call their names if they would please rise: Mr. Salman Naseer, the president, and his wife, Mrs. Rabia Naseer; Mr. Muhammad Haseeb Khan, who is the director of finance and grants; Mr. Omer Choudhary and Mr. Jawad Choudhary. If there are any other members of the Pakistan Canada Association who have not been introduced, please rise. From organizing cultural festivals, food drives, and major community events, PCAE has contributed greatly to Alberta society. I'm very proud that I and my office work very closely with their dedicated team, be it proclaiming Alberta's first Islamic Heritage Month or working with the association's women leaders. It's wonderful to have community partners like yourselves. I ask you to now please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

We have another introduction, from Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually have two brief introductions. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Ms Andrea Silverstone. Andrea is the executive director of Sagesse Domestic Violence Prevention Society and the co-chair of Calgary Domestic Violence Collective. For over 20 years Andrea has advocated and taken action to combat domestic violence and invest in prevention. I met Andrea earlier today to discuss how we can collaborate together to deal with this issue. Thank you for your leadership and dedication. I ask Andrea to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Speaker, to you and through you I also want to introduce Mr. Jason Loewer. Jason is the executive director of EmployAbilities and a strong advocate for persons with disabilities and their families. I was pleased to meet Jason today and hear about his organization's amazing customized employment program. Our government supports inclusive employment and proclaimed October as Disability Employment Awareness Month to recognize this issue. I ask Jason to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

It's an introduction? Okay.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I have two groups to introduce to you today. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly

Cosette Dubrûle and Celena and Randy Campbell. If they'd please rise. Celena and Cosette are cofounders of All Cycles Edmonton, a nonprofit here that acquires menstrual products for homeless and income-insecure people across the gender spectrum. Their grassroots project helps the most stigmatized and vulnerable people within the entire city of Edmonton. I want to thank them for the great work that they do, and I ask that they please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Dang: Mr. Speaker, also in the gallery today is my constituency assistant, Matthew Callaway. He doesn't want to be introduced, but I have to introduce him because he's the one that keeps me on track and on time, or tries to keep me on time, for all of my appointments. If he'd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Bubik family, who are here to observe third reading of Bill 25. Peter Bubik is an engineer in the renewable energy business and cofounder of Turning Point Generation, the company behind the Canyon Creek pumped hydro energy storage project in Bill 25. He is here with his wife, Corrie, their children Matthias, Nellie, Tobias, and Linnea Bubik. Often it's families that carry the unprecedented burden of business ventures, and they deserve to be recognized. The Bubiks are here to witness the historic moment of Alberta's first ever pumped hydro energy storage project and hope the project will serve as a testament to our willingness to be responsible stewards of our environment. I ask the Bubiks to rise – and they already have – and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I think I see Cinderella's dress up there. We will have Members' Statements continue in 15 seconds.

Government Caucus Practices

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As everyone knows, the NDP kicked me out because I spoke out against their wishes. I wouldn't do what they told me. Luckily, they have 50-plus others who will. The NDP leadership refuses to speak with me. To them I no longer exist. This is how they treat people that disagree with them. What did I do to deserve this mistreatment? I expressed how I felt. I asked for an independent investigation into what I saw as wrongful behaviour. Their response was to ignore and silence. They're continuing with this behaviour. They have removed me from a committee with an action that the NDP themselves described as tuggery just a few years ago.

All I am asking for is transparency and honesty. I'm urging the government again to put in place an independent third-party process that can be followed in cases of bullying to ensure for future governments that MLAs and staff won't be mistreated. I'm asking for them to put in place policies that allow more autonomy for MLAs to represent their constituents. This government is refusing to make it easier for constituents' voices to be heard in this Legislature. They're upholding mistakes of the past. Saying that this is just how it is is unacceptable.

When I ran in 2012 and 2015, I did so because I felt the NDP was different. I told people on doorsteps that the NDP was different. Yet as soon as they became government, they began to run roughshod over democracy and to replace the old PC cronies with new NDP cronies. They feel it's their right as the government even though they railed against Conservatives for the same behaviour for years, and I have no doubt that the UCP would be exactly the same.

My constituents overwhelmingly tell me that they don't believe in politicians, that politicians are all the same, that they don't listen. They're not alone. Nearly half of Canadians don't vote regularly, and recent polls have shown that less than half of Canadians trust their government. Politicians complain about uninformed voters, about lack of engagement. They say that the public needs to change. I say that politicians need to change. Politicians need to represent their constituents. Instead, they hide behind the status quo and point to the structure of the system as a scapegoat.

Well, if the system isn't honouring Albertans – and it's not – then the system needs to change. As MLAs we owe it to Albertans to change it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

HIV/AIDS Awareness

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This coming Saturday will be the 30th observance of World AIDS Day, founded on December 1, 1988, to unite people around the world in fighting HIV and commemorate those who live with or have died from an AIDS-related illness. The first clinical cases of HIV appeared in the early 1980s. Today fewer people are becoming infected, and although there's still no cure, treatment and care are helping most people with HIV stay healthy, avoid AIDS, and live long lives. But while we've made significant progress, there is still work to do. Far too many living with HIV also live with unnecessary stigma and isolation. Today we remember them, and we commit that we will continue to work to ensure that they have the support and dignity that they deserve.

I'd also like to take this opportunity to recognize the many individuals and organizations working in my community to do that work and advocate for those in need and help to curtail the further spread of HIV: HIV Edmonton, Living Positive through Positive Living, the Ribbon Rouge Foundation, team ARCH at the Royal Alexandra hospital, Streetworks, and the Edmonton Men's Health Collective. It's in part because of their work and advocacy that our government recently introduced universal coverage for PrEP, a drug that is up to 99 per cent effective in stopping the transmission of HIV. They have also been promoters of and advocates for making testing more accessible in the community and promoting the adoption of harm reduction such as needle exchanges and supervised consumption sites to support those struggling with substance use.

But most importantly, Mr. Speaker, World AIDS Day is about hope, the belief that through research, support, and education we can slow and prevent the spread of HIV, that we can support those living to do so in health and dignity, and that we can one day find a cure.

This Saturday our city will remember the 36 million lost worldwide by dimming the lights on the High Level Bridge and lighting 11 buildings red, including the Alberta Legislature, to remember those living with the disease. It's my hope that all Albertans will join in this remembrance and wear a red ribbon in support.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I'm rising to advise the House that on the next available Monday written questions 6, 7, and 8 will be accepted. Additionally, Motion for a Return 18 will be accepted, and Motion for a Return 19 will be dealt with.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you get a second opportunity.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to request leave to introduce Bill 31, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been circulated to the opposition parties, and I believe there is consensus on all of the clauses of the bill, so it is our hope it can be passed, therefore, without debate in the House.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Bill 32

City Charters Fiscal Framework Act

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and give first reading to Bill 32, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act.

Calgary and Edmonton are two of the fastest growing municipalities in Alberta, and to support this growth, the cities need permanent, predictable funding for their local infrastructure priorities. This legislation is about establishing a historic partnership that helps Edmonton and Calgary build the infrastructure they need in a way that the province can afford. This framework delivers certainty to the cities by recognizing that they are partners in our growing economy and should share in both the good and the tough times.

The province is also delivering on the long-term transit needs of Calgarians and Edmontonians in legislating long-term transit funding. This historic long-term transit funding will allow Calgary and Edmonton to build out their transit networks, create jobs, reduce greenhouse gases, and make our cities better places to live and work.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move first reading of Bill 32. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a first time]

Statement by the Speaker

Statements during Tablings

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd just like to make a few comments. Yesterday there was an exchange in the House which resulted in some points of order with respect to the process for tabling reports and returns. It has been a long-standing practice of this Assembly that members should only give a brief description of the item they wish to table and not read the item itself.

I'm learning every day. If you would allow me one more opportunity to say that context always applies, almost always. I myself have indicated, as was quoted yesterday, that there have been statements that I've made in this Legislature that were not less than other speakers. I want to just remind the House of the brevity of the issue, and keep that in mind when you're introducing and tabling documents.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: I believe I have Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will try to be brief. These two tablings resulted from a conversation I had at the FCSS breakfast this morning, where we discussed the utilization of their services and how it's increased over the last three years. I'd just like to point out that FCSS is celebrating their 51st year, so hardly an NDP invention. The first document I have here is 2018 Beyond Food Revisited. It's a report about the Edmonton food bank. It shows from 2015 to 2018 an over 40 per cent increase every month in the utilization of the food bank in Edmonton.

The second document is from Food Banks Canada, HungerCount 2016. This is just a brief summary of it, where it shows Alberta's utilization of the food banks increased 136 per cent from 2008 to 2016 while the rest of Canada increased by only 28 per cent.

The Speaker: Brevity. Brevity.

Hon. Government House Leader, we may well be going past 3.

Mr. Mason: Yes. I'd like to advise the House that we're going to continue with the Routine past 3 o'clock.

3:00

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the Law Enforcement Review Board's annual report for 2017.

The Speaker: Are there any others? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the five requisite copies of a petition that was presented to my office by Mr. Randy Richards. I'd like to once again thank him for being here in the Legislature with us today. The petition calls for changes to Alberta's motor vehicle regulations in relation to tinted windows. I would also like to note for the record that there are currently two online petitions on this subject that have collected 18,000 signatures to date.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Now, I believe that we are at three points of order today.

The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Point of Order

Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak on this point of order. In question period today when I was asking questions about the impact of political action committees in our politics provincially and also their impact municipally, I asked the government a very simple question. Like, we see the ads of political action committees everywhere, and we see how the Official Opposition has been using political action committees and the government is using their big unions. The question was: what is the government doing so that this culture, these policies do not impact municipal politics? And the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs said, "This is rich . . . coming from [that] member." Under Standing Order 23(i) and (j): "imputes false . . . motives" and "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

My question was just speaking on behalf of Albertans, like, that we do not convert Alberta politics into the United States style of PAC-driven politics. I think that it's a simple question, and the minister should have given a simple answer instead of attacking me personally. So I ask the hon. minister to withdraw his comment and apologize.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I really wonder what the minister could have been referring to when he was saying that a question about preserving democracy coming from Calgary-Greenway was rich. Well, it's clearly a matter of debate and not a point of order. There's nothing wrong with saying that something is rich. It's not abusive. But, you know, in case the member has forgotten, the reason he's sitting where he's sitting is because he left the UCP caucus because there were allegations that he stuffed ballot boxes in an annual general meeting of his constituency.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Mason: This is all on the public record, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Speak to the point of order.

Mr. Mason: Well, you know, I guess I believe it is. It's a matter of public record. This was investigated by a retired judge for the UCP, and the result was what were termed to be credible allegations, and the hon. member is sitting now as an independent.

Mr. Speaker, the question of whether it's rich or not, I think, is a matter of opinion between members. I happen to share the opinion of the Minister of Municipal Affairs that it is a bit rich to be lectured by that member . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

Mr. Mason: . . . on preserving democracy in our province, Mr. Speaker. On that basis I don't think there's anything to withdraw, nothing to apologize for.

The Speaker: Any other members? I unfortunately cannot see my Standing Orders document here, but the specifics of the case, as I see it, is that this is what was said. "This is rich, about ethics, coming from this member, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have the right to know who is influencing their . . ." And it's at that point that the Member for Calgary-Greenway raised the point of order. I believe that in this particular instance what comes into play, Government House Leader, is 23. As I understand, it talks about "impute" in the House, that this would cause disorder. I find that a comment like that from what I know to be a very professional and committed minister and MLA – upon reflection, he might have thought that that particular comment was not contributing to the constructive dialogue that takes place in this place. I'm not sure if the minister has any reflection comments that he might wish to make on the matter. You do not?

Well, I believe in this particular instance, Government House Leader, that there was a point of order, and it is based upon context.

Second point of order.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, in section 13(2): "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." I am making a request. You know, to suggest that somebody saying something is rich is a point of order, I just don't understand that. I don't understand why if it makes you uncomfortable or it makes any member of the House uncomfortable, that means it's out of order. It either violates the rules or it does not.

The Speaker: The rules are, Government House Leader, that 23 implies: is it going to cause disorder? Is it disrespectful? That's what I understand it to mean. My explanation is based on the fact that I have determined in this situation that that does, and therefore that is my reason under 13(2).

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be extremely brief. Your ruling that there was, in fact, a point of order as it concerns the comments of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, I think, is well taken, but those comments were repeated and affirmed by the Government House Leader. So I think that it's appropriate to find that there would be essentially a duplication of this point of order about the comments made.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're at a point in the jurisdiction that I make the decisions I do independent of whether in any member's opinion that's good or bad. So I don't know that the point you're raising now is going to contribute in any way to the decision that I might make. I will therefore keep moving on.

By the way, I just got a note: we should refer to 318 in Beauchesne's to the point I just made.

The other point of order. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). Earlier when my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was asking a member of the cabinet questions today in regard to a school that's in dire repair, all members of this Assembly very clearly heard the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater using extremely unparliamentary language in this Assembly. I know that you heard it because you did make a stern look in his direction, but I would ask that that member apologize not only to my hon. colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills but also to members of this Assembly and to members of the public that most definitely, assuredly, heard that through their television screens.

The Speaker: Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do believe that, with your indulgence, I do owe the House an explanation and an apology. I do understand the importance of keeping parliamentary language. Generally speaking, I think I've been very cognizant of these rules. I have to say that I was surprised and provoked by the audacity of the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills' statement regarding H.A. Kostash school and that I hadn't been doing anything about it.

This is a school that I have visited on multiple occasions. I've worked closely with the school board to advocate strongly to the Minister of Education for replacing the school. I've had this at the top of my riding priority for the past three years. I've also worked with the town and the county on the same issue. I've spoken to many parents. As a matter of fact, I was at the letter-writing workshop where many of these letters came from, and I actually gave them tips on how to write effective letters, and I wrote my own strongly-worded letter to the minister, which I would be happy to table on Monday. I would've tabled these letters from parents, but unfortunately they were received in my office this week and I haven't been back to my constituency yet.

That's a bit of an explanation of why I lost my temper, but I do understand that it is unacceptable. So I would like to retract the word and apologize to the House and to members in the gallery for my language.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I appreciate that very much. I think the House does as well. That's another example of how those comments made sometimes cause reactions across the hall, across the aisle. My sense was, in your case, sir, that the emotion took over, but let's be cautious about what you say because you may be getting that reaction back.

Hon. members, I think we're at Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Bill 25

Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed my honour to rise today to move third reading of Bill 25, the Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act.

It's a further honour that we have the owner of Turning Point, Peter Bubik, and his family here today to witness this third reading. This act arises out of requirements in sections 9 and 10 of the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. The passage of this bill would allow the Alberta Utilities Commission to issue authorization to construct the Canyon Creek pumped hydro storage project near Hinton. It would also allow the AUC to authorize operation of the facility at the appropriate time. While this act meets our legislative requirements to grant the appropriate authority to the AUC, it does not remove any of the regulator duties of that body or the Alberta Environment and Parks approval requirements, and that's important. As we know, this project brings real economic benefits and opportunities, which I know are exciting for the local area and exciting for the Member for West Yellowhead, who is a cosponsor of this bill.

It's also important that the environmental processes are still in place. I understand that the opposition questioned the province's system of environmental approvals and timelines during discussion. I want to address that and be clear. Albertans deserve to be confident that our regulatory system works to protect and manage our water resources properly, but they also deserve to know that this system imposes no unnecessary delays that would undermine opportunities for economic development. Albertans can be confident that we are doing everything we can to marry both those objectives.

When we took government in 2015, the Water Act approvals process had been aggravated long before that and was further aggravated by the floods of 2013. When we came to office, we found a system that was fraught with delays and complexities, but we took action. Since 2016 we have reduced the backlog of applications by 20 per cent. This is despite the fact that the volume of applications in the last two years was higher than in previous years. Not only are more works planned and under way in Alberta, which is a good sign for economic recovery, but we are processing those applications more efficiently.

Still, given the system that we inherited, some applications continue to take longer than we'd like, and that's why we're doing the long overdue work of improving our systems and streamlining our processes, like moving to online applications. It's also why we have developed an environmental approvals plan to reduce times for approvals under the Water Act, Public Lands Act, and EPEA. We are tackling this backlog and confident that we will eliminate a problem that we did inherit. The Canyon Creek project along with hundreds of others we received this year are benefiting from the improvements that we made in that process.

With that, I'd like to thank all my colleagues in the House for supporting this bill and allowing the private-sector proponents of this project to move forward in their development efforts. Again, it's not often we actually see the face of a project, and I want to thank the Bubiks for coming here today. Lastly, I'd also like to thank my cosponsors. I'm very glad to join with my cosponsors and our House here to promote this strong and good project.

With that, Madam Speaker, I conclude my remarks. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreesen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would just like to comment again on this third reading of Bill 25 – and I rise to speak on it – the Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act. The fact that we've had to have this debate in this Assembly just shows the serious indication of red tape in this existing legislation. The Turning Point Generation received approval from the Alberta Utilities Commission back in August for a pumped-hydro energy storage project on Crown land 13 kilometres northeast of Hinton in a former Obed mountain coal mine site. The project is 75 megawatts of green energy capacity, over 37 hours of full capacity generation, acting as essentially a battery with 80 per cent efficiency.

Now, Madam Speaker, it's November 29. The NDP held up this bill. We could have had this passed a lot sooner. It's already been delayed by red tape for three months, so let's not delay this project any further. I hope Alberta Environment and Parks will not be holding up water and land-use permits for this project. However, that minister has protested and opposed Alberta energy development in the past. But I hope that won't be the case going forward. Let's pass this bill and watch over $200 million in private investment, which, again, I think is a foreign concept to this government. Three hundred construction jobs near Hinton will have a great impact to that local economy.

I do appreciate the opportunity, Madam Speaker, of speaking to this important bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I also would like to rise and speak in support of Bill 25, the Canyon Creek Hydro Development Act. I will try to be brief. The other speakers have already spoken on a bit more of the details of the project. What I'd like to do is highlight what is admirable about it and, you know, also how it demonstrates a clear contrast between ourselves and our predecessors. It's almost a metaphor for, you know, the direction that we're taking in this province compared to the direction it had been previously.

Before I talk about that, I would like to very strongly commend the MLA for West Yellowhead for his advocacy for this project. He's done his legwork, and it was because of that that I felt quite comfortable being able to cosponsor this. I know he'd spoken to the stakeholders, you know, on the initial thing and that the community was definitely behind it. In fact, this is very welcome.

Now, on what I was looking into, the wording of the bill. You know, it's a beautiful concept. It's my understanding that Ontario has had a similar type of hydraulic battery storage system that's been in operation since the 1950s. I know the United Kingdom has a very large, significant facility that's been set up, tasked specifically to be able to store the excess for wind power and to be able to balance out power draw, which does go to show that all the naysaying that renewable energy, especially wind power and solar power, was unrealistic and unworkable for the province – some of this was actually put about by our opposition – and that there are simple technological fixes that are environmentally friendly, sustainable, and quite affordable to be able to balance demand with power capacity.

Now, as I go back to it, when I was looking at the location for this new project, as the hon. member just pointed out previous to my speaking, it's at the old site of the Obed coal mine. I remember this site quite well, Madam Speaker, because I live in the community of Boyle, which, like many of the communities in my riding as well as many communities, period, draws our water from the Athabasca River. All of us were horrified on October 31, 2013, to discover that a dam holding up a tailings pond burst on the Obed site, dumping almost 1 billion litres of toxic slurry into the Athabasca River, causing the water to be undrinkable for about the first 40 kilometres. The long-term effects of this spill remain to be determined. My family drinks this water, as do thousands of other Alberta families, and it was something that was obviously upsetting to us.

What was also very upsetting was to discover in 2015, due to the auspice of the Auditor General, that, in fact, this dam had never even been registered by Alberta environment. It had never been inspected. You know, they had no record of this, so there was no due diligence, there was no oversight. When it burst, there was no warning, and whatever steps might have been taken couldn't have been taken because nobody was watching. After this fact, of course, the coal company was fined 4 and a half million dollars.

The Auditor General's report was damning on this in 2015. Basically, it pointed out that there were over 1,500 dams within the province of Alberta and that the government did not know where these dams were, they did not know the status of these dams, and they didn't even know how many had been registered. Of course, of the ones that they did know about, many of them hadn't been inspected until the 1980s or 1990s. Our Premier, a private member at the time, characterized this as gross negligence, and I think that was a very apt description of it.

Now, why do I think that this project in that sense stands as a metaphor for, you know, the type of situation we find ourselves in as a province? Well, the previous member talked about red tape. You know, this is a theme that the opposition likes to harp on: "Get rid of red tape. Get rid of red tape." They're promising to roll back the long overdue changes to regulations, to consumer protections, to environmental protections that we've brought into force, all on this weird ideological quest to give the impression that any type of government oversight, any type of due diligence, any type of looking out for the public interest is something to be avoided. I think that this bill gives you kind of an objective lesson in what can happen when you don't, you know, do due diligence and when you're lackadaisical with your responsibilities as a government, which unfortunately characterized our predecessors far too often. Even more unfortunately, the opposition promises to bring this back to the province if they become the government in 2019. You know,

I don't think that's a good direction for the province to be going in, obviously.

What type of direction should we be going in? Well, we should be going in an environmentally friendly, sustainable way. We should be acting progressively rather than regressively, and we should be supporting projects like this that make sense to the community, that make sense environmentally, and make sense to, in fact, humanity by responsibly doing what we can to reduce our carbon usage while being able to maintain our economy and, you know, all the good things that that economy brings to us.

I'm a big fan of this project, and I urge all members to support it. It was an honour to be able to speak on this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to everybody who's speaking about this. I just wanted to say to one of our newest members, from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, that I want to thank you very much for your passion on this and having just so much knowledge that you're showing in this very small amount of time that you've had in this Legislature. Thank you so much for that work. It's pretty impressive.

I wanted to actually mention to the hon. member across the way: you were talking about a metaphor, and what you just described – thank you very much for bringing that up. It's a very, very important piece of information. You're right. There are absolutely things that are needed to be looked at with the environment, that need to be fixed and changed, absolutely no doubt. However, what I find interesting is that you speak about that with such passion and legitimately so – you lived there; it was your drinking water, absolutely – yet you're okay with your government postponing this bill and with pushing it forward with the red tape that's actually disallowing this kind of infrastructure to go forward. This is like a piece of low-hanging fruit. This is a fantastic idea, so why are we waiting? Why isn't this going forward? To your point, I'm not quite sure I understand the red tape that's holding this up at all. Again, I thank the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for bringing that forward.

Part of the issue that we have with so many of the things that are going on is the inability to actually get things done like this. I mean, there's a regulatory burden, and the AUC had already approved this project. So if the AUC had already approved this project, to bring it into legislation to debate it at this level, I'm not quite sure I understand why because of how the hydro and electricity act is written. If somebody could please explain to me that piece of it, I would be very, very grateful. If the AUC approved the project and the proponent is waiting for their permits under the Public Lands Act and the Water Act from Environment and Parks so they can proceed, so proceed. Correct? Am I understanding this correctly?

The thing is that if that has already been okayed, why aren't the permits issued? Maybe that should be the question that we're asking in here. The question should be about the regulatory burden, about the permits not being issued so that this project can go forward, right? I'll give you a chance to answer in just a second.

The other thing, too, that I wanted to mention, from the member across the way, is that you talk about the metaphor. A metaphor is saying one thing is like another, correct? I'm assuming that you are trying to put us into a metaphor of whatever it was that you were talking about, about the past and past decisions.

Well, one thing I would like to say is that I'm extremely proud of our industry, hundreds of thousands of jobs. They were able to bring oil out of sand. This is an industry that is the greenest in the world, and if you have not figured out yet that it is our responsibility to tout the energy industry in this province, you are sorely mistaken. Our energy industry is the best, cleanest, greenest, most incredible industry in the world, and it happened long before any of us were in this Legislature. If the members on the government side are still going to continue to advocate against the very people of this province that grew this province, to the privilege that all of us have to be here right now, it brings into question whether or not you actually understand how this province was built.

I would like to thank the government for this piece of legislation. However, the red tape that it took us to get here is a little bit disturbing considering that this project was already passed by the AUC and only required the approvals and permits to be issued by Environment and Parks.

Thank you.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll just be very brief. I would like to offer some comment, more importantly saying hello, to Molly and Brady, my children, who are watching online right now.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been an honour to stand and speak to this bill. I have to assure all members that it is a requirement that we have to put through this law. It was faster to do it this way than to change the law, so we have worked expeditiously. I also want to say that we co-ordinated third reading today so that we could accommodate the Bubik family to be here for it today. I urge everyone in this House to please pass this bill so that they can get on with their project.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a third time]

Bill 24

An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights

The Deputy Speaker: I'm looking for someone to move third reading. Banff Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon to move second reading on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health for Bill 24 . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you're moving third reading?

Mr. Westhead: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Westhead: Oh. I apologize. I said second.

I'm moving on behalf of the Minister of Health third reading of Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights.

This is a bill that, we all know, formalizes a long-standing relationship that has existed informally between the AMA and the Alberta government. This is something that doctors have overwhelmingly spoken to us about and said that they'd like to have this move forward, so I'd encourage all members to vote in favour.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in opposition to third reading of Bill 24, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights. Bill 24 is slim, only four pages long, even though it is amending the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, which is important to individual doctors and patients alike. The concern with slim bills like this one is that they leave almost every detail to the minister to determine through regulations. In effect, this bill gives the minister a blank cheque. She gets to fill out all the details.

Madam Speaker, during Bill 24's passage through this House we in the opposition were hoping to learn more about it than what we found out in the four pages, but our well-intended questions went unanswered. Let me point out that we were asking these questions on behalf of physicians blindsided by the bill and patients, who today still have no idea of its existence. UCP members in this House did due diligence by checking with the physicians in our communities about their awareness of Bill 24. We were alarmed that they did not know about it, yet the government had presented a different scenario. That sent up red flags for us.

It's important for us to respect that this bill makes the AMA the representative of all doctors, whether they want it to be or not. The more we asked doctors about whether they voted in favour of this bill, the more we heard that they did not vote on it. They didn't even know about it. I would think that physicians would have been interested to know that this bill is a blank slate, and they would also have preferred the opportunity to weigh in on it before cabinet makes arbitrary decisions behind closed doors that fill in the empty spaces in it.

Actually, when we look at the many vague subsections in Bill 24, the regulations will probably end up being much longer than the slim bill itself, and what else might the government decide to include in regulations while it's making them? Hardly anyone scrutinizes orders in council. The fact is that they generally go under the radar. Is the minister counting on this? The UCP is also concerned about patients' awareness of the changes. Patients seem to be a forgotten factor in this bill. We brought forward an amendment to bolster transparency for patients, but the government rejected it.

To sum up, Madam Speaker, the lack of consultation with physicians and their awareness of this bill, the bill's lack of content, and the government's dismissal of patients' right to know what's going on are all reasons I am voting in opposition to Bill 24.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to both members who just spoke on this matter and particularly to my caucus deputy whip for standing in in my place. I specifically want to respond to the reference to there being outstanding questions. We did respond to questions in second reading and in committee, and they certainly are in Hansard. I don't want to spend more time reiterating those same responses.

I will give the general theme, which is that this is something that the previous Conservative government committed to in 2011 through discussions that looked a lot like negotiations. They weren't necessarily negotiations, but there was back and forth, and there was an agreement reached that they would embark upon this process. They didn't. In 2016 we reached an amending agreement with the AMA. This came up again, but it wasn't part of the amending agreement. In the final, new agreement, Madam Speaker, in return for a lot of the concessions that were made, this is one of the asks that was given, that there be formal recognition so that in the future the kind of constructive relationship . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, my apologies. I understand we've got a little procedural thing that got messed up.

Ms Hoffman: Because he moved on my behalf?

The Deputy Speaker: Exactly. You can't speak right now. You'll have to just close debate.

Mr. McIver: She's not closing it, right?

The Deputy Speaker: No, no.

So, you know, we'll start over again. Is there any other member who wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm grateful for the opportunity to speak on Bill 24, the government's bill intended to recognize AMA representation rights. That is what they call it, An Act to Recognize AMA Representation Rights.

Now, Madam Speaker, not the minister but the previous speaker from the government side actually had the, I'm trying to think of a polite word, courage – that's a polite word – to say that there was overwhelming support. Now, with all due respect, I don't think the hon. member knows whether there was or not. The government continually points at some 89 per cent vote, but the 89 per cent vote, we've come to learn from doctors that have talked to us, was not on the topic of AMA representation. Further, when that vote happened, only 30 per cent of the members were in attendance. So they got 90 per cent, apparently on a different topic, of 30 per cent. So they had 27 per cent, if you do the math, or just under 27 per cent of a discussion on a different subject matter, and the government turns around and calls it overwhelming support. Sorry, but that's ridiculous.

We've heard from doctors across Alberta that were somewhat dumbfounded to hear about the legislation because they hadn't even been let know about it, let alone been aware that they had a voice or a vote on it. I guess it would seem that potentially zero per cent of doctors had a vote on it if you go by the 30 per cent vote that the government keeps waving around and calling overwhelming support.

Madam Speaker, you can hardly blame Albertans and you can hardly blame the opposition for not taking the government's word for it on this or on any piece of legislation where they constantly stand up and talk about how well they've consulted and then get proven time and time and time and time again to have not done so, to have exaggerated the comments. I would say to people on this topic and other ones that sitting in the same room answering e-mails while someone is talking and not listening to them and then saying, "The time is up; you've got to go" doesn't really qualify as consultation, and too many ministers of this government, I believe, think that that does pass for consultation and have represented that as passing for consultation for some time over the last three and a half years.

Here are a couple of examples. An ophthalmologist from Calgary:

I'm writing to express concerns on Bill 24 . . . [before the] final vote in the Alberta legislature.

So I guess the letter got here on time.

The main objective is to . . . recognize . . . the [AMA] as the sole representative.

It says that medicare and the Canada Health Act have always considered physicians as independent contractors.

The doctor considers that to be a fundamental principle.

One needs to ask why the need for change and why the rush for change.

In fact, even if what the minister said just now is true – and I'm not challenging her on the part of her remarks when she said that some form of this has been talked about for some time – perhaps the reason the previous government didn't do it was because there wasn't the overwhelming support that the government talks about having at this point. That would be, actually, a good reason for not doing it.

This letter talks about how this law has not received the consent from the AMA physician membership.

Even the doctor here says:

It has been stated [that] 89% of physicians approve . . .

While that number can be seen as . . . impressive, it is not unanimous. Also, only 30% of all AMA members voted on second agreement to amend the AMA agreement in which the above clause is contained. Thus, effectively only a quarter of all AMA physician members were demonstrated to be in favour of this.

It also says in this letter:

It must also be recognized that clause 1(h)b) speaks of the need for "further input from others will be required."

Well, apparently, the government is going ahead without further input from others even though that is in the communication from the AMA to the doctor.

You know what? The government hasn't really met the test of showing that they've done their work. They haven't met the test of showing that they have consulted in a way that they can demonstrate that the majority of doctors want this.

Here's another communication, from the Alberta Society of Dermatologists. It says:

We've been apprised that the sole representative of doctors will be the AMA, as mandated by Bill 24. We feel the mandate was achieved without the full knowledge or agreement of physicians of Alberta, and we feel that sections of the AMA should be consulted and represented in any negotiation with the government. If the AMA truly represents its members, no legislation is necessary to force its membership to accept the AMA as its representative.

Isn't that a fair comment? If you are forced into a relationship where somebody is talking on your behalf and you don't agree to that relationship, I'm not sure that that is a healthy relationship. Yet these are the grounds upon which this government is passing legislation forcing that relationship on, potentially, a majority of doctors in Alberta, that do not want this exact relationship. Yet they are going to get it delivered onto them, whether they like it or whether they do not, by this NDP government, this government that so very consistently doesn't consult the way they say they do.

You know what? This is textbook from this NDP government. They roll in here with a piece of legislation, talking about the consultation that they did, and then the next thing you know, whoops, all this evidence that they didn't do it actually comes forward, and they just can't bring themselves to admit that what they said wasn't so, as with several pieces of legislation. I certainly remember a piece of legislation that the Minister of Municipal Affairs brought through this House not long ago. He ranted up and down that everything was perfect and walked in the next day with major amendments to the bill. Bill 6 comes to mind, where they talked about what great consultation they did. The next thing we knew, we had thousands of people on the doorstep. This is a pattern of behaviour by a government out of touch with Albertans, and this is one more example today.

You know what, Madam Speaker? Here's the silly thing. It could be that the majority of doctors do want this. The fact is that the government hasn't done the work to actually know whether they do or whether they don't. You'd think it would be incumbent upon the government of a province of Canada, if they make a statement about that level of support, to actually be able to demonstrate it in a way that is credible. They have not met that test.

Madam Speaker, I can't support this. No one should because it's making a permanent change, forcing a relationship that quite potentially the majority of doctors in Alberta do not want. It's irresponsible under those circumstances to vote for it, and I will not. I recommend to other members of the House that they shouldn't be voting for it either.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Just to follow up, I do want to rearticulate and ask a question. Hon. member, I hear that the main reason why members of the opposition don't feel like this is valid consultation is because even though physicians were notified through the monthly newsletters of the AMA and had an opportunity to vote on ratification of the contract, the majority didn't choose to vote on ratification. It was less than 50 per cent who voted on ratification. While I understand that that can be frustrating, even in the most recent by-elections the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake had over 80 per cent support of the constituents who voted. They voted for him, but only 31 per cent showed up to vote. The Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin had 32.6 per cent voter turnout in her riding. While clearly the majority of constituents didn't vote for those two members, the majority of people who did vote did clearly vote for those two members, and as a result they have the right to take their seat in this Assembly.

It's the same when we have democratic processes around organizations that represent people. Whether they see themselves as a contractor or a member of an organization or an employee, they have an opportunity through a democratic process to have their voice heard, and certainly that was the case in the AMA ratification of the agreement. Again, this has been communicated to members since 2011 in various iterations based on discussions that were had between the government and the AMA. This is about reaffirming that relationship and actually putting it in legislation, something that I think is fair.

We've had an excellent relationship with physicians in the province of Alberta even during the difficult economic downturn, when we asked them to put money back on the table so we could put it towards expanding front-line services instead of individual compensation. They have worked with us along the way, and I think that we owe it to them to continue to have fair and respectful discussions when it comes to compensation as we move forward. That's what they've asked for in this agreement. They have taken zeros, they've put money back on the table, but they want us to say that we will enshrine the relationship, which has a duty to consult. Again, a vast, vast majority of those who did choose to vote, a greater percentage than either of the by-election percentages and a greater percentage turnout.

Either way we still respect the democratic process. I guess my question to the hon. member is: if you disagree that this was democratic, how do you feel about your colleagues sitting in this Assembly in the seats that they've earned through their by-elections?

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. McIver: Madam Speaker, let me point out to the hon. member – and I'm grateful that she admitted that she doesn't know if the majority of doctors support this or not. I'm grateful that we finally heard that out loud from the minister.

But here's what's different. Both of our members who won in the by-election won by bigger numbers than this NDP government did, but there's another key thing here, too. When an election happens, there is no system in place that goes on. The mandate of the previous MLAs expires, and you actually need to have a government there. The mandate of the AMA has not expired, so you're actually not required to put something in place that you can't demonstrate the majority of doctors want. That's a fundamental difference, minister. A fundamental difference.

At the end of this term someone will become government. It might be your side, it might be our side, it might be somebody that we haven't heard of yet, but the point is that all of our mandates to govern this province expire at the time that that election comes, and you actually must put somebody in place. You have to go with the system. That's what's different. The AMA isn't going anywhere. That's why you don't force a new mandate upon all the doctors. They're not going anywhere either. At least we hope they're not because we need them. Albertans depend upon them.

I think the minister asked a fundamentally sound question. I'd like to think I'm giving her a fundamentally sound response because it's completely different. You leave an important institution with no representation, which is what would happen at a general election or even a by-election with the province, whereas with the AMA and the doctors you are not leaving a vacuum when you make a decision that the majority of the doctors may not want. There is a system in place. There are doctors that can negotiate on their own. There is the AMA that, if doctors want, can negotiate for them.

You know what? Again, I'm grateful that the minister has finally acknowledged what the opposition has been saying since the beginning of this debate, that the government truly cannot demonstrate that the majority of doctors in Alberta support what the government is doing today. That is exactly our argument. It's not our only argument, but it's certainly the biggest and most obvious one. It's that the government's main claim cannot be substantiated. Again, we got letters from doctors that actually are making exactly the same complaint as the Official Opposition.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just to comment on the Deputy Premier's comment about my by-election in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, yes, it is true that I got over 80 per cent of the vote and the NDP did get less than 10 per cent of the vote in that by-election. I think her point was that not over 50 per cent of everyone in the riding actually voted and that the turnout was low. Again, I would like to remind her that it was the Premier that called that by-election during the middle of summer. It was the heart of July and it...

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, are you speaking to the bill?

Mr. Dreeshen: Sure. I was just commenting on the point of voter turnout, Madam Speaker.

With that, there was a clear ballot-box decision, there was a clear question put to the voters when they came out and had their voter turnout in my by-election. The fact that doctors in this situation were not given a clear question, a clear decision of what they were actually voting on I think is the biggest issue and, again, something that my colleagues on this side of the House are addressing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any further speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just want to reiterate that I'm very proud of the positive relationship that has enabled us to stabilize health care spending, improve patient care, and focus every dollar that we invest on expanding those front-line services. If passed, Bill 24 will provide the Alberta Medical Association with statutory representation for physicians in Alberta. This new legislation, of course, would formalize existing processes that have been in place between government and the AMA, and it clearly establishes and articulates the roles and responsibilities of the AMA.

The question that was asked to physicians is: do you support ratification of the agreement? This was one of the pieces that we had to hold up in ratifying this agreement. That being said, I'm very proud of the fact that our government made a promise, that we're living up to that promise, and that we continue to do that, Madam Speaker, on this side of the House.

We know that physicians are a critical part of Alberta's health care system, and I want to thank the AMA and all physicians for the work that they've done with our government to meet Alberta's health care needs. I ask that we have the support of all members regarding third reading of Bill 24 so that we can not only fulfill our promise to the physicians through the AMA but also make sure that we move forward establishing that relationship that is built on trust and collaboration and having fair dialogue as we continue to move forward, Madam Speaker.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: I've had a request to revert briefly to Notices of Motions. Is anyone opposed to the request?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Notices of Motions

(reversion)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It appears that when I was providing notice of written questions, I may have omitted to mention that the government intends on accepting Written Question 9. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I'm rising to advise the House that in addition to the items given notice earlier today, Written Question 9 will be accepted.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the progress we've made today and the hour, I would move that we adjourn the House and reconvene at 1:30 p.m. next Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:55 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018)

Activity to Thursday, November 29, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Today the Assembly hosted a ceremony to commemorate the United Nations International Day of Persons with Disabilities. Let each of us take a moment to think of how we may meaningfully engage with and lead by action for the positive inclusion in our society those living with disabilities, their families, and their advocates, including those disabilities that may not always be obvious to us.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. R.J. Chambers. I would invite all of you to sing along in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of grade 6 students from Hillview school. They are seated in the members' gallery, and today they are joined by their teachers, Herman Chang and Rebecca Price. I would like them to rise, please, and have the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today if I may. To you and to the House I want to introduce Leah McRorie. I'll ask her to stand. She's a long-standing advocate for seniors and people with disabilities in the community and was here for the celebration today. She's also our candidate in Edmonton-West Henday. Let's give her a warm welcome.

I'm also privileged today to bring in at least half of my grandchildren. They're in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I'm blessed that my two daughters are here with them, and I'll ask them to stand: Kirsten and her three – four. Four. Sorry. On the right is Kloe; Kiel, a hockey player from Calgary; another hockey player, Uziah, from the other family; and Konnor, who's an all-sports kind of guy; Uziah's mom, Tandela, and Eden are there; and on her right is Rafayel. They're all here to wish me well in my next phase of this journey. Oh, there's one more. Oh, yes. Don't ask me their birthdays, Mr. Speaker. And this is half of them. On the left is our premier danseur, Koen, also a graduate of Alberta Ballet School. Let's give them the warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'd just like to remind you that Christmas is coming. Knowing names is going to be very important.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services and Minister of Status of Women.

Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the Metis Settlements General Council executive and the General Assembly and their fantastic staff who support them in doing their good work. This year marks the 80th anniversary of the very special relationship between Alberta and the Métis settlements. When the Métis Population Betterment Act was enacted, for the first and only time in Canadian history Métis people had a land base to call home. It is an honour to stand here and introduce all of these Métis leaders today, who are working so hard for the community every day, for the protection and development of Métis culture, identity, and language. I'm fortunate enough to know many of these Métis leaders here today personally, and I consider them my friends. They represent three of the settlements: East Prairie, Gift Lake, and Peavine. Métis people in Alberta are an integral part of our province's history and our future, so please extend the warm welcome of the House and join me in a round of recognition for our guests, the Metis Settlements General Council and the Métis leaders and their incredible team of staff that supports them right across Alberta.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. As such, it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some people from St. Albert, from the Lo-Se-Ca Foundation and Transitions. I would ask that my guests stand as I say their names. Here from Lo-Se-Ca are Tracy Hughson, Cheri Lefebvre, Dan Huising, and Sue Duffhues; from Transitions, Dan Atkinson and Megan Poltorak. I thank all of my guests for their service to the community, and later today I will speak more about supporting people with disabilities. I ask that my guests receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

With the indulgence of the House, there's a visitor that I believe the Leader of the Official Opposition would like to introduce.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce my friend Elaine Taylor, former Deputy Premier of the Yukon Territory. She represented Whitehorse West in Yukon's Legislative Assembly and was a very formidable opposite minister to me in labour markets and employment. First elected in 2002, she served until 2016, having won re-election in 2006 and 2011. She's accompanied by her son Will and her brother Cory Raketti, who is an Edmontonian working with EllisDon. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of introductions. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. This group of exceptional advocates provides advice about inclusion and opportunities for persons with disabilities to participate equally and fully in society. The council is made up of 15 members with a broad range of diverse disability issues, representing regions across Alberta. Two representatives of the council are here today in honour of the International Day of Persons with Disabilities along with the great secretariat staff that supports the council: Mr. Cam Tait, a member from Edmonton; Ms Vicki Bertoia, director of council secretariat; Mr. Doug Darwish, manager of council secretariat; and Mr. Devon Winters, staff member. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Sabir: My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, through you and to you, is the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Review Panel. For the last two months the PDD panel has been travelling across the province to seek input from people with developmental disabilities, their families and guardians, agencies, and community leaders. This week they are in Edmonton. Five representatives of the panel are here today. I ask my guests to please rise as I announce their names: Dr. Dorothy Badry, co-chair and mother of a young adult that receives PDD services; Mr. Ryan Geake; Mr. Lloyd Thornhill; Mr. Dan Huising; Mr. Johnathon Red Gun. I ask my guests to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

This is my last introduction. Through you and to you, Mr. Speaker, I want to introduce Alberta's first disabilities advocate, Mr. Tony Flores. Mr. Flores is the first-ever Advocate for Persons with Disabilities in Alberta and is doing a great job. The advocate's office opened last month and is very busy helping Albertans. Mr. Flores is a strong advocate for the rights of persons with disabilities, and he joined us for the International Day of Persons with Disabilities celebration in the rotunda today. I want to thank Mr. Flores for all his work and the work of his office to assist Albertans with disabilities. Please extend a warm welcome to Mr. Tony Flores.

The Speaker: Welcome to all of you, and thank you for your service.

The Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly J.P. and Danielle Fortin. They operate Pursuit Adventures, based in Red Deer since 2010. Pursuit Adventures' goal is to make sure Albertans are able to find their unique adventure in our mountains, snowshoeing in the winter, today, hikes in the summer. Among their many tours J.P. and Danielle offer special excursions in the Bighorn for international visitors. They've been waiting for more than five years for government to support this region and to provide investment certainty, and they're looking for a real plan on the table that supports their business west of Red Deer. I now ask J.P. and Danielle Fortin to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly members of the Eastside Grannies. On December 1 it was World AIDS Day. The Eastside Grannies are a group of local volunteers who work in partnership with the Grandmothers to Grandmothers campaign. Grandmothers to Grandmothers was launched in response to the crisis faced by African grandmothers who care for millions of children orphaned by HIV and AIDS. The Eastside Grannies raise money for the campaign in a number of creative ways like their Annual Rhubarb Rally and the Scrabble tournament called Good Words for Africa. They will always be glad to take your unwanted rhubarb and turn it into amazing jams. I would like to introduce today Charlotte Bragg, Cora Rolph, Lynn Wilson, Gladys Teske, Lesley Ratcliff, Shirley Reid, and the creator of Good Words for Africa, Carol Maier. I would also like to add that these incredible women are also involved in the Canadian Federation of University Women, the ecumenical mission of Strathcona county, and are world travellers. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To follow up the Member for Sherwood Park, I would just like to also introduce a few other members from the Eastside Grannies, who have been raising money for decades, and to thank them for their work. Since 2006 the Grandmothers to Grandmothers campaign has raised over $33 million, and 90 per cent of that money has been sent directly to community-based organizations. I would just like to introduce to you and through you Joyce Armstrong, Etty Cameron, Colleen Middleton, Vivian Cloutier, Helen Rawa, Iona Froehlich. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. First, it's my pleasure to introduce a group of medical students who are here from both the universities of Alberta and Calgary, and they're seated in the public gallery. Today is their annual public education day at the Legislature, and each year a group of students from both programs visits the Legislature to meet with MLAs and the Minister of Health and talk about their vision for health care. We had an excellent discussion earlier today about increasing awareness and specifically the number of organ donors here in Alberta and successful donations. These leaders make me very excited about the future of our health care system. I now ask that Kaylin, Angela, Harleen, Naik, and their other colleagues who are here please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: For my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you Basically Babies, a registered charity that's in the riding of Edmonton-Glenora that I have the honour to represent. They are celebrating their 25th anniversary this year. They provide the utmost care in assembling beautiful layettes to help provide clothing, blankets, and, of course, a few special extras that are all colour co-ordinated to newborn babies and their families to support that first year and making sure that that's something that those families don't need to worry at all about. It's a great way to support families. I know there are a number of parents in this Assembly who probably are holding on to some special keepsakes, and if you want to pass them on to a family in need, I encourage you to consider doing that for Basically Babies. I ask that their founder, Shannon Stewart, please rise, along with Rod, Sawyer, Donna, Jeff, Arlene, Chelsea, Donna, Shannon, Candace, and Gillian, their board members and volunteers, and if I missed anyone, please also rise. Thank you so much for what you do for our community.

The Speaker: Thank you very much and welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Labour, it is an honour to introduce to you and through you 15 staff in the Ministry of Labour, who are here today to participate in a Labour policy team-building activity group. These public servants work hard to keep our workplaces safe for all Albertans, and it is my distinct pleasure to thank them for that. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Métis Settlements 80th Anniversary

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year we celebrate the 80th anniversary of Métis leaders and the Alberta Legislature coming together and setting aside land specifically for the Métis. In 1938 the province enacted the Métis Population Betterment Act, marking the beginning of a new relationship between Alberta and Métis people, with a vision for Métis self-governance and self-determination. As a proud Métis person and a member of this Assembly I am honoured to speak to the historic relationship between Alberta and the settlements, acknowledge our achievements, and look to the future of our strengthening relationship.

In the 1930s the provincial government held a royal commission, the Ewing Commission, to investigate Métis socioeconomic issues. They came together and decided on land settlements as a solution to economic problems and as a way to protect linguistic and cultural identity. This led to the first and only land allotment specifically set aside for the use of Métis people in Canadian history. A place that Métis people could call home was the vision of Gabriel Dumont and Louis Riel, who spent their lives fighting bravely for their people. This was also the vision of the 1975 Métis leaders Adrian Hope, Maurice L'Hirondelle, Lawrence Desjarlais, Sam Johnston, and Richard Poitras of the Alberta Federation of Metis Settlements, who in 1989 signed the Alberta-Metis settlements accord, which promoted Métis advancement and preserved Métis identity and heritage.

We celebrated the anniversary of this accord on November 1 and raised the Metis Settlements General Council flag. On the 80th anniversary of the settlements I am inspired thinking about the future of the relationship between Alberta and the Métis. I'm excited about the work ahead as the Métis settlements continue to develop in local autonomy and self-determination. It is important to acknowledge the contributions that Métis people have made to the development, success, and history of our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Energy Industry Opposition

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's oil industry is in crisis. The oil price differential is causing us to sell our quality oil at a massive discount, hurting Alberta jobs and our economy. It's truly sad to see Canadian companies targeting our oil and gas industry in these times. However, this is exactly what Lush cosmetics is doing, leading fear-driven campaigns aiming to land-lock our oil by protesting pipelines, the safest, most environmentally friendly way to move oil.

They are a so-called ethically conscious company calling for a tanker ban off the west coast, attacking the oil sands, and proudly funding eco-activist organizations. They even celebrated after Keystone XL and Northern Gateway were denied and took credit for these decisions. For a company that claims to pride itself on taking ethical stances, they seem to have no issue operating storefronts in countries like Saudi Arabia and Iran, two countries that have absolutely atrocious human rights records and basically nonexistent environmental standards.

This is exactly why Alberta needs a fight-back strategy to counter the misinformation being shared by these anti-Alberta, left-wing eco-activists. As such, I applaud all those who are taking a stand and are choosing to purchase their bath bombs and lotions elsewhere. I would hope that all members of this Assembly choose not to support this anti-Alberta company. Personally, I have not made a purchase at Lush since they took a stand against the oil sands many, many years ago.

While I understand that the glitter and the smells can be enticing, I would urge all Alberta shoppers, especially as we enter into this holiday season, to choose to buy their products from stores that celebrate and support Albertans. I would hope that all Alberta companies such as Lush that want to see hundreds of thousands of hard-working Albertans lose their jobs and livelihood are avoided. This Christmas I hope that Santa leaves some quality Alberta oil sands in Lush's stocking in place of the coal that they deserve.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Oil and Gas Production

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to commend the Premier on the very difficult but necessary decision that she announced last night to give some short-term relief to our energy sector and save jobs. I would also like to thank the government for having approached this in a nonpartisan manner. I think we've demonstrated to Albertans that when it comes to our vital economic interests, sometimes we actually can work together in this place. Some people are concerned, however, that this will be a permanent new level of intervention in energy markets in Alberta. Could the Premier confirm that there is effectively a sunset clause on the mandatory curtailment?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me also say that on this side of the House we appreciated the constructive contribution to the conversation that we received from both the Official Opposition as well as the third party in the House on this important matter. With respect to the sunset clause, by moving forward by way of regulation, we have committed that the matter will be reviewed every month with a view to dialling back the amount of curtailment and the volume of curtailment and moving off of it as quickly as possible.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the hon. the Premier for her response and confirmation that this is a temporary measure. Mr. Speaker, would the Premier join with me in calling on the government of Saskatchewan to follow Alberta's lead insofar as Saskatchewan produces about 15 per cent of Canada's crude oil? It's understood that a portion of their market in the Bakken and the southeast is fully integrated into the U.S. market, but would the Premier agree with me in principle that it would be helpful if the government of Saskatchewan were to replicate the call made by the Premier last night?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I mean, there's no question we've reached out to Saskatchewan, and we've indicated to them what we are doing. Of course, it would be great if they joined with us, but what we also know from our work and from our research is that the size of the Saskatchewan market is not of such a nature that it would have much impact on the work that we are doing and that the curtailment that we have engaged will be adequate to bring about the objective that we're seeking. If they joined us, that would be great, but it's not actually necessary.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In responding to this disaster of a $40 price differential in Alberta oil, we should not lose sight of an equally problematic differential loss of value in our natural gas. Alberta natural gas typically is selling at 80 or 90 cents per bcf today, but in Chicago at the Henry hub market: $8 per bcf. Does the Premier have any plans to address this massive loss of wealth to our natural gas markets?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we have been meeting with industry players in the natural gas sector. We have established a working group, and we are talking with them right now to look at the depth and breadth of the problem there. It's not as urgent as what we're dealing with right now in the oil sector. But, nonetheless, the work is there, and we are waiting to receive advice from that working group.

Oil and Gas Transportation

Mr. Kenney: I thank the Premier for her answer. Mr. Speaker, many leaders in the Alberta energy industry have indicated that one of the reasons we got to this absurd $10 giveaway fire sale of Alberta oil last week was because of mischief in commodity markets, where commodity traders have been nominating barrels of oil for the Enbridge main line, barrels that do not actually exist, pushing many real barrels back into storage through apportionment. They're calling for more rigorous regulation to ensure that only real barrels are nominated for real destinations. Will the Premier agree to look into this matter?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we have been engaging with industry leaders on the matter of apportionment, and in fact, as the member opposite probably knows, there is a committee of industry players in Alberta that is working on that matter right now and is very close to coming up with a consensus set of recommendations.

On one hand, we're going to observe how the action that we announced yesterday impacts the market. On the other hand, we're going to continue to work with that industry group to determine whether there is additional work that we can do on their recommendations, much closer to consensus than they were on the other matter.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Pleased to hear that, Mr. Speaker. The government has announced the intention to acquire railcars that would come into service in 2020 to move an additional estimated 120,000 barrels per day, but the industry has already announced contracts that would add about 200,000 barrels per day of shipment out of Alberta at their cost. What will the cost of these government railcars be, and by intervening in that market, are we going to end up elevating the price of the railcars that the private sector is bringing onboard?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the intended acquisition of additional railcars by the private sector is part of the overall need that we have established and has been worked into the formula that we used to come up with the numbers that we're pursuing.

Part of the reason that we are also engaging in it is because not all producers can actually get access to the railcars that the big, big producers can afford to bring online. As a result, we are also doing that work. In the long term we think it will help us clear the market and keep it cleared in that time between line 3 and TMX.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the federal government is accelerating the phase-out of the jacketed 1232 oil cars, which are the mainstay of the fleet currently moving Alberta oil by rail. Would the Premier join with me in calling on the federal government to explore extending the life or maintaining the original lifespan of those cars, which could be repurposed to shipping bitumen, which has a lower flashpoint than light crude? They could move bitumen safely, it is widely believed in the industry. Would she join with me and the opposition in calling on the federal government to review this matter not to take these cars out of service if not strictly necessary?

The Speaker: Madam Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the work and the conversations that we've been having with people in the rail industry suggest that that's not necessary, that they can meet our needs and also meet the new safety standards that have been put in place by the federal government. Of course, it's fundamentally important to ensure that we do maximize safety as much as possible as we significantly increase the amount of crude by rail. At the end of the day, we know it's more expensive, more greenhouse emissions, and not as safe as pipelines. Of course, the irony is that those who fight pipelines on behalf of the environment are now actually creating a less safe situation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Third main question.

NDP and Pipeline Development

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of fighting pipelines, I do recall that the Premier opposed the construction of the Northern Gateway pipeline, saying that, quote, we're against it, referring to it by saying that there's no realistic objective of its construction. Last week, being interviewed in Ottawa, the Premier was asked: do you think you were right to oppose Northern Gateway? She said: no; I think we should have kept all of our options open. To clarify, does the Premier think it was a mistake for the government to have opposed the construction of Northern Gateway?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The comments that the member opposite is referring to are my comments with respect to Bill C-48 and the tanker ban. You know, the Northern Gateway project, as the member opposite knows because he was in government when the decisions of his government were rejected by the court, was rife with challenges, and it was probably not fixable. That being said, the subsequent decision of the federal government to ban tanker traffic off the west coast means that a better project cannot get started. We need to consider that. We need to keep those options open because we ultimately need to be able to get our product to tidewater.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, we all make mistakes. We have a very capable Premier, but I think that perhaps she might admit that she made a mistake in this respect. I commend her because on November 28, when asked by Vassy Kapelos, quote, "Do you agree with the decision not to approve that pipeline?" Northern Gateway, the Premier responded: no; I think we should have kept all our options open. To clarify, does the Premier now recognize it was a mistake for her initially to oppose Northern Gateway?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I've said, I believe I've answered that question. The issue that we are raising now is the matter of keeping options open with respect to Bill C-48. I mean, everyone makes mistakes. The member opposite was in Ottawa for many, many years and was part of one of the many successive federal governments that failed to get us a pipeline to tidewater. You know, there's a long list of mistakes to be shared around this room, I'm sure. But right now the key is that we act on the current issue, that we engage in curtailment, that we invest in rail, that in the long term we get that pipeline to tidewater, and that we build our upgrading because that's what the people of Alberta need to happen.

Mr. Kenney: The only coastal pipeline to come before the Harper cabinet was Northern Gateway, which approved it while the NDP was opposing it.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP also opposed Keystone XL. In fact, the Premier called it a threat to Alberta's natural resources in September 2015. Would the Premier now stand and recognize that it was an error for the NDP to oppose the approval of the Keystone XL pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify, the decision of the Harper cabinet around Northern Gateway was the subject of an extensive critique by the Federal Court because of numerous errors that were made and failures to consult, failures to consider environmental issues, failures to consult with the community. That is why the project failed.

Now, that being said, with respect to Keystone there is no question that as we got to the point where pipeline capacity was being threatened, our government reconsidered the matter, as we need to do on behalf of the people of Alberta. We invested in Keystone, we supported it, and we still do, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Oil Production Curtailment

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lack of market access has led to a crisis for our energy industry, and low prices are hurting our provincial revenue. The steps the Premier announced yesterday are necessary, and I want to thank the Premier and all the members of this Assembly for listening to our call for curtailment. It's a reminder of what we can accomplish when we focus on Alberta first with an Alberta-made solution. To the Premier: how soon will we begin to see the effect of curtailment on resource prices?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to echo the Premier's thanks to both the opposition party and the third party for their input on this most important decision. As was mentioned, we've been fighting all along for a pipeline, which is going to be the long-term solution. You know, we're taking steps to upgrade our product, more value-added, in Alberta, which is, again, a long-term solution. In the medium term, as was discussed, it is crude by rail and railcars. Certainly, the moves that we made yesterday are going to help the differential in the short term.

Mr. Fraser: The timeline of when we will see results is important because every day at current prices costs us $80 million. It's also important because it shows the need to approach problems proactively. Premier, in the March fiscal plan you identified that supply would exceed our oil takeaway capacity in 2018 and that this would have a negative impact on oil prices. To the Premier: if your government knew about this impending crisis, why are we playing catch-up now, and why weren't plans developed when this first appeared on the horizon?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that we have been working on a number of solutions. Certainly, the solution that was announced yesterday is not our first go-to. We struck a committee to look at the natural gas sector, crude by rail. We have engaged immensely with industry on all of these. I have to say that yesterday was a very serious move. We didn't take it lightly, but we are taking it because we know that leadership matters, and we need to fight for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A call for curtailment came as a result of consultation that our own caucus undertook with the energy industry. I understand that the opposition party eventually consulted with the industry and came to the same conclusion. In a briefing ministry officials also stated that they'd consulted with industry last summer and that that informed yesterday's decision to curtail production. Clearly, curtailment was the best short-term solution for dealing with depressed prices. Respectfully, Premier, at $80 million a day, was it worth waiting for Brian Topp to tell you what you and everyone else already knew?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we first engaged in talks with industry about other options, we weren't at the $80-million-a-day figure. It was much lower. As with anything, there was disparity in what some of the options were, so we struck the committee not that long ago to see if we could bridge some of those opposite sides. Again I want to reiterate that this is a serious decision we took yesterday. It's not one we would take lightly, and it wasn't our first go-to to jump into.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Energy Policies

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday our Premier made a difficult decision. She announced the short-term reduction in oil production to defend Alberta jobs and the value of energy resources owned by all Albertans. To address the excess supply, starting in January 2019, Alberta is reducing or curtailing production by 325,000 barrels per day till we have enough shipping space to clear the current glut and improve prices. This is expected to take three months. To the Minister of Energy: why did the government decide this difficult decision was necessary?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've mentioned many times in this House, we had a number of years of people not having that vision to look at getting pipelines to tidewater. All of our pipelines were going south, and we needed to expand our markets. That said, we are in a situation where we have one customer and an excruciating differential right now. In the last few weeks that's reached epic proportions, so we made the difficult decision yesterday to start moving the backlog of what we have and draw down our supply.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Mr. Speaker, given that the decision to moderately and temporarily curtail oil production to clear the glut in the market was a difficult one and given that this is only a short-term solution to defend Alberta jobs and increase the value of Alberta resources, again to the Minister of Energy: what steps is the government taking to close the price differential in the medium and, more importantly, in the long term?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as was announced yesterday, the short-term solution is curtailment. You know, that will draw down the supplies. We are full. We need to manage our supplies going forward. But, again, you're right: that's short term. The long term, absolutely, is pipelines. We need to get other markets. We need our pipelines to go both east and west. We need them operational. But in the meantime another option is our crude by rail, to try to ship that extra supply until we can get those pipelines built.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans have long believed that we don't get enough value for our oil and gas and given that successive provincial governments since Premier Lougheed have failed to make upgrading and adding value to our resources a priority, to the Minister of Energy: what is the government doing to diversify our economy to get Alberta off the boom-and-bust price roller coaster?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, Premier Lougheed was the first Premier in my voting life, and at that time he painted a wonderful vision of value-add here in Alberta and made a good start when their government provided incentives for NOVA Chemicals. But that vision was lost. In the meantime we're the government picking that vision up. We've announced PDP programs, energy upgrading, and there'll be more to come on that. But it's good news for Alberta because the money is staying here.

2:10

Mr. Fildebrandt: For weeks now the Tories and lobbyists have been demanding that draconian supply management be imposed on the oil industry. If these measures had been first proposed by the NDP rather than the Tories, they would have been denounced as Chavista economics. The Premier's announcement last night was dangerous and destructive but was bizarrely less intrusive to the market than other proposals, with a less extreme production quota. Why has the government decided that a supply management reduction of 325,000 barrels is preferable to the proposed reduction of 400,000 barrels?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. As has been noted, the government, the Official Opposition, and the third party have all agreed that it's important that at this time we engage in supply management to ensure that we get the right price for our commodity. We didn't engage in this decision lightly, that's for sure. This side of the House looked at all of our options. Long term the only solution is more market access through pipelines, in the interim increasing rail, and of course in the short term it was necessary for us to engage in supply management, which the Leader of the Official Opposition supported.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Now, try as I might to warn the NDP that their beer tax tariffs violated our free trade agreements and the Constitution, they assured us that everything was all right until they lost in court half a dozen times. The NDP-Tory plan to impose supply management on oil production runs the very real risk of violating our obligations under the USMCA, raising the possibility of retaliatory measures from the Americans, yet the Premier assures us again that everything is all right. Is the government as confident in their oil supply management as they were with their beer tax tariffs in free trade agreements?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Premier's announcement on curtailment yesterday we've already seen a positive impact on the differential. We will continue to monitor the situation closely, but we are fighting every day to protect and to improve opportunities for employment in Alberta in all sectors, of course including the oil and gas sector. This morning our cabinet firmed up rules that have given the Alberta Energy Regulator the power to curtail, and we will revisit this regulation and the amount of curtailment every month because it's important to us that we protect jobs and we protect the wealth that belongs to every single Albertan.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you've noticed that in the last few days the House has been more tolerant around supplementals and maybe some matters, but I would just use this example to all of you, particularly to yourself right now, to try and stick by the minimization of the supplemental issue and focus on the policy question if you wouldn't mind.

Please proceed.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing so permanent as a temporary government program. When Milton Friedman said that, he could have been talking about dairy supply management, the Wheat Board, or the income tax, but he very well could have been talking about the NDP-Tory supply management plan for oil. When governments grant themselves new powers, the market conforms, special interests take hold, and governments seldom give them up. Extreme government control over the economy always takes place in times of crisis in a matter of weeks, but undoing those controls takes decades. Does the government believe that supply management has ever worked?

The Speaker: Maybe I should stand up this time. Again I urge the House: please try and focus on policy. This is the time for question and answer – this isn't Members' Statements – so please focus on that. I apply that to all members, not just the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government believes that it's important that we protect the resources that belong to all Albertans, that we work with industry to make sure we get full value, and that, of course, there are times where supply management is an important necessity. Even the Leader of the Official Opposition and members of his own caucus who have gone to jail fighting for free-market access have acknowledged that it's important that we engage in making sure that we get full value, because for a decade, while the Leader of the Official Opposition was in Ottawa, he failed to get pipelines. That's the only long-term solution, a pipeline to tidewater, and I know that he's had a decade of failure. That's why it's important that we react on short-, interim-, and long-term solutions.

Provincial Fiscal Update

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, one of the first things this government did after being elected was increase taxes on corporate job creators by 20 per cent. The opposition warned this would result in a decrease in revenue, and that's exactly what happened. In this Finance minister's second-quarter update corporate taxes were budgeted for $4.5 billion, but only $4.1 billion were collected. When will this Finance minister quit hiding and start recognizing the damage that his tax policies are doing to Alberta's wealth creation?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member didn't say is that personal taxes went up in the second quarter. We will see more of those as a result of the actions that we are bringing in to diversify the economy, to support people in good jobs in this province, and to make sure Albertans know we have their backs every step of the way. We were dealt a tough hand with the collapse in oil prices, but we're coming through the worst recession in a generation, and we're going to balance in 2023. That's the important part of all this.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Finance minister's update also doesn't recognize the fact that because of the differential Albertans are receiving no value for our world-class oil and that a corporate and economic slowdown is intensifying and given that the minister refuses to acknowledge in his estimates that Albertans' paying billions of dollars of carbon tax have failed to increase pipeline takeaway capacity, will the minister quit hiding and conduct an economic assessment and objective budget forecast so Albertans know that our social programs and front-line providers will be protected?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, just Friday I gave the second-quarter fiscal update. By the end of February I have to give the third-quarter fiscal update, and I'll follow that. You know, he talked about tax advantages or competitiveness of Alberta, and I can say that there's no sales tax, no payroll tax, no health care premiums. Alberta is the best place in the country to do business, and we are getting back to growth in 2019, again, at 2 per cent, which is a good cruising rate.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta's fiscal report card also shows $52.8 billion in debt, almost $2 billion in annual interest expense, and now the Alberta government is borrowing at 3.3 per cent, why is this minister hiding from the fact that the significant transfer of wealth to rich Bay Street bankers could have been used – could have been used – instead to hire thousands of nurses, teachers, or addictions counsellors?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. I want you to know that instead of the deep cuts and privatization that that side always wants to do and make sure happens in Alberta, we won't let that happen. We're focused on the issues that matter for Albertans, and that is jobs, diversification, health care, and education. Our plan is working. We've cut the deficit by $3.2 billion already from our budget of 2015, but we know there's more work to do. We'll continue doing that for Albertans each and every day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago I asked the Finance minister if he was bracing for Alberta's seventh credit-rating downgrade on his watch. The minister assured us the soon-to-be-released second-quarter fiscal update would bring good news, but the best he could muster last Friday was an evidence-free claim that his government is on track to balance the budget. To the Finance minister: how can the minister deny our credit rating is poised to fall again when billions of dollars in expected resource revenues are just plain not coming in?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, our borrowing costs are lower than B.C. and Saskatchewan and Ontario, and Alberta has the best balance sheet of any province in the country. That will still be the case in 2023, when we balance. We've dropped the deficit $3.2 billion already. That side, to drop the deficit, would have fired 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses, and that would be just the beginning.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is doing his best to erase that advantage and given that the Finance minister's press release cited revenue losses to the Canadian economy but did not reveal losses to the provincial economy – you know, the one he's in charge of – and given that the Finance minister continues to hide the fact that Albertans must be losing at least $60 million a day in resource revenues, to the Finance minister: does the minister not realize that this shell game will not work with credit-rating agencies and that the truth really is out there?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, again, somebody is attacking Alberta and our competitiveness. I want you to know that when the Leader of the Opposition was in India recently, he said of Alberta's tax advantage, in fact: we are competitive; we have low taxes and low power prices. I think that's really accurate. Why doesn't the member over there listen to his leader?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is still trying to erase the advantages he's talking about and given that every time our credit rating drops, we pay more to service the growing NDP debt, and given that debt payments cost almost $2 billion a year now and that money is lost for government programs and services, to the minister: when Alberta's credit rating drops the next time – and it will – how much heavier will debt payments be on the backs of Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we put forward a plan to balance a budget in 2023 without firing thousands of teachers and nurses, something that side would do, a repeat of 1993, when they cut budgets 5 per cent across the board and thousands of people were out on the streets protesting all of that. We're putting jobs and the economy first. We're backing up Albertans to make sure they have the supports they need to get through this recession. We're into recovery, and in 2019 we will grow 2 per cent.

Workers' Compensation Sustainability

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, recently I was reading through the 2019 premium rates employer highlight report published by WCB, and I noticed that fully funded claim costs had risen almost 40 per cent since 2015 whereas assessable earnings have decreased in this same period. The fully funded claim costs have risen from $768 million to over a billion dollars since this government took office. Is the minister aware of this, and can she tell us: why the increase?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, with regard to WCB we are continuing to support Albertans. Claim costs are one thing, of course, that – employers contribute to WCB to make sure that workers have all they need. We'll continue to watch this as we go forward.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the highlight report also brought to light that WCB will not be able to collect enough dues to cover the costs accumulated for 2019, can the minister tell us how many times in past years this has happened, and can she provide this House with assurance that WCB is sustainable and that large rate increases are not imminent?

The Speaker: The Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. WCB is, of course, a program that is absolutely critical to workers throughout the province. We're very proud of the changes we made to that program to make sure that we have the backs of workers and that we'll continue fighting for them. These rates are set independently of government, and they're set based on the financial sustainability of the plan, and they will continue to be so in the future.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the NDP's Bill 30, passed in 2017, made changes to the WCB by removing the previous cap on insurable earnings, which we now see has increased claim costs by 40 per cent, Minister, does your government not see that their poorly thought out policies like those made with the electricity system, the expensive carbon tax, and also now with the WCB premiums are making things more expensive and unsustainable for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we know, WCB premiums in Alberta have been lower than anywhere else in the country for quite a long time. These rates are, as we've said, set independently. At the end of the day this government is a government that has the backs of workers and has the backs of families, and we're not going to apologize for that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Justice Services in Indigenous Communities

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Justice: as many First Nations reserves do not have courthouses, thus requiring their people to travel off-reserve, what is Justice doing to ensure fairness and reduced discrimination in the court systems for indigenous constituents?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the incredibly important question. We work closely with indigenous communities and organizations in the courts to ensure that the justice system takes into consideration the cultural and personal experience of indigenous people. That's why the indigenous court worker program is available in 37 provincial court locations across the province. I think we've made real progress with Gladue reports under this government, and we will continue working with those communities to ensure that everyone feels respected in the system.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the proximity of courthouses impacts the outcome of court cases for people living on reserves, does the minister have any plans to put either courthouses or courthouse processes at Maskwacis, where the population is greater than neighbouring communities, which each have a courthouse?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, the courthouse renewal initiative does not include funding to establish a courthouse in Maskwacis currently. We are open to continuing discussions with all four nations regarding a court facility in Maskwacis. I was happy to meet with the member and with members of those nations to discuss this issue just last week. As discussed there, there are several complicating factors, but we're happy to continue to work with those nations to ensure that where we can make services available in a way that's accessible to them, we do that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Yes. Again, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank to the minister for meeting with the Maskwacis chiefs, the councillors, and the justice committee members. Can the minister provide some insight into possible viable steps for on-reserve court processes, control of civil enforcement, and fine redistribution?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are working with those nations on some of those issues and also many others. At the end of the day, we will continue to work with those individuals to make sure that we are creating a process that is respectful of everyone. At the end of the day, the justice system relies on individuals to buy into it. That is a system that is there for everyone, and therefore that system must be respectful of everyone.

Thank you.

NDP and Pipeline Development

Mr. Loewen: In recent months this NDP government has launched a campaign to convince Albertans that they are fighting for pipelines. They are trying to sell a message that they have been advocates for our industry in expanding market access. Luckily, we have the ability to look at their record, like the Premier opposing Northern Gateway and Keystone. We can also look at what they laid out as priorities in their past throne speeches, and – you know what? – I looked back, and in 2015 they didn't mention pipelines once. In 2016 the word "pipeline" only appeared two times. Obviously, pipelines weren't a priority for this government at that time. To the minister: is the NDP really committed to pipelines, or did you just start supporting them as the election started to draw near?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our record on tidewater access, on upgrading and refining, on strengthening our oil and gas sector through this recovery from a devastating recession: all of these things speak for themselves. We had a very nice nonpartisan moment with respect to the conversation around taking action on the differential. Now it would be great to have a nonpartisan moment on protecting the environment or acknowledging that climate change is real.

Mr. Loewen: Given, Mr. Speaker, that in the last couple of years the NDP have started to claim that they are all about pipelines but given that they have not seen a single pipeline completed on their watch and given that what has happened is that Northern Gateway and Energy East were cancelled, Keystone and Trans Mountain significantly delayed and given that we have seen the NDP prematurely claim victory despite saying that they wouldn't celebrate until oil started to flow, how can this NDP government claim that their record on pipelines is anything but one of failure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the Leader of the Opposition had 10 years to get action on tidewater access, and he failed. He failed Albertans. He failed Canadians. Now, on this side of the House we understand how important it is to get those pipelines not only approved but built. We understand how important things like indigenous consultation are. These are lessons that the folks across the way could use, both in opposition and in their time in government in Ottawa.

Mr. Loewen: Given that on October 27, 2015, a notable Albertan said, "Can the Premier tell us what the strategy is going forward: leave it in the ground or get it to market?" and the same person asked the Premier, "Will you back away from these beliefs and act to protect Alberta jobs?" and given that she went on to ask, "When are you going to . . . start selling Alberta and its industries the way we desperately need you to now?" and given that this notable Albertan is the Member for Calgary-North West – sorry; I mean the Minister of Infrastructure – can anyone in government explain why they didn't support our oil and gas sector when the opposition was begging you to?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure members in this Assembly that we have fought for market access from day one. I have worked personally very hard, as have my colleague the Minister of Environment and Parks, our Premier, many of our ministers, to engage with industry on a number of matters, but the most important one has been on pipelines access. Yesterday, when we made our announcement, we immediately had validations from Nexen, Cenovus, CNRL, many small industry players who support what we're doing. Derek Evans from MEG Energy commended us for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

2:30

Environment and Parks Minister

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, last week ministers had to rise in QP to take blame for the Premier and the minister of the environment for opposing and protesting Alberta oil pipelines for over a decade while from 2006 to 2015 Conservative governments supported and approved pipelines. The 2008 Tar Sands Campaign strategy said, "land-lock the tar sands so their crude could not reach the international market where it could fetch a high price per barrel." Is the minister of environment satisfied that her activism achieved its objective of a historic oil price differential and the current financial situation the Alberta government is in today?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I will help him with his trip down memory lane. Last week his leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition, who spent 10 years in Ottawa at a cabinet table and two of those as the minister responsible for employment, said it wasn't his job to fight for pipelines. Guess what? This side of the House disagrees. I think Albertans disagree. I think they'd be shocked to hear that somebody who's campaigning to be Premier and who sat around the Prime Minister's cabinet table failed to fight for pipelines, only mentioned the word once in his 10 years around the cabinet table and 10 years before that in the House of Commons as well. That is our record. This side of the House is fighting hard for pipelines.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, it seemed like it was his job because four pipelines were completed in Alberta under the Harper Conservative government despite the decade of pipeline protests under the NDP. Given that a fifth pipeline was actually approved to tidewater despite the Premier saying, "I think Gateway is not the right decision" and the well-known fact that the environment minister protested it, did the minister, from her time as a Greenpeace activist, introduce concepts from the tar sands campaign to the NDP cabinet and the environment department?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, you know, we saw the Premier last night on television. Albertans see her in Ottawa, they see her in New York, they see her in Toronto, everywhere fighting for pipelines, the fantasies of some members on the other side notwithstanding. They're not listening to that nonsense; they are listening to the Premier, and they're seeing her in action and this entire government fighting for pipelines day after day after day.

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, we don't see the Premier actually advocating for pipelines here in Alberta when she was protesting outside the Legislature.

Given that the minister of environment went to the NEB to oppose Northern Gateway, given that she invited federal MPs to protest it with her, and given this government's record of attacking our oil industry, is it safe to assume they are still opposing it, just more quietly given that the Premier said that she has a hundred per cent confidence in her minister of the environment? Given the fact that investor confidence in Alberta has nearly vanished, what confidence would the Premier be referring to?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll put my record as a private citizen up against the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake's any day of the week given that he did spend 10 months of his life campaigning for Donald Trump on team Breitbart. Now, here's the actual record of his leader and the cabinet table that he sat around. Here's what the federal court had to say about Northern Gateway. The FCA went on to say that the Harper government, at paragraph 186, "failed to make reasonable efforts to inform and consult . . . fell [way] short of the mark," "was less than willing to hear the First Nations on this," that their errors were massive in size, that they fell . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Pipeline Development and the Carbon Levy

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the sake of my constituents and all Albertans I'm glad that this government took advice from the United Conservative Party, experts, and industry by announcing a temporary reduction of oil production in response to the price differential that is costing our economy $80 million a day. We need to get our oil to new markets. Minister, why did your NDP government offer no opposition to the Trudeau Liberals' decision to scrap the Northern Gateway pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Energy minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, thank you to my hon. colleague, who pointed out that we did engage, in fact, with a number of people on a number of matters. As we've outlined, we have a long-term solution, which absolutely is pipelines. Medium term: rail capacity, increase that. Another long-term solution is upgrading. The short term is what we announced yesterday. We know that that matters. We know that Albertans expect leadership, and they're seeing leadership from this side of the House.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They are not showing leadership on the Northern Gateway pipeline given that the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers said, and I quote: if Northern Gateway had come on as planned, we wouldn't be in this situation. End quote.

Given that our oil and gas companies are fighting to stay afloat and that the NDP's carbon tax has clearly not helped us get a pipeline and given that many Albertans are struggling to just make ends meet, Minister, my constituents want to know why they're still paying a carbon tax to put gas in their cars and to heat their homes.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we're talking about the Northern Gateway, had the job been done properly, we would have had it. To be fair and clear, the job that was missed was the federal government's with the opposition leader in that cabinet, who failed to do their due diligence to consult with indigenous, to do their proper work. That's what the Federal Court of Appeal said.

At the end of the day, that pipeline was dead in the water because of their failures.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that I have constituents that are expressing deep discontent with the Trudeau Liberal government and given that our Prime Minister doesn't show any compassion or respect for our oil industry and its workers and given that the NDP's carbon tax is hurting Albertans, Minister, why do you continue to stand even now with the Trudeau Liberals, and why won't you join us and other provinces against a carbon tax?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In actual fact, we have a made-in-Alberta climate change plan in this province, that provides an on-site processing exemption. It provides robust methane policies, investment in clean technologies for the oil and gas sector. Contrast that with the opposition plan, which is to have the Trudeau plan imposed on us, to roll out a red carpet for Ottawa to make decisions on our oil and gas sector here in Alberta. I know whose side I'm on, and that's Alberta's.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday the publisher of BOE Report published an open letter to the Premier calling for production cuts to reduce the oil price differential caused by the lack of pipeline capacity. He said, and I quote: if this continues, historic, record-setting layoffs will be coming within weeks, and $12-a-barrel oil is the most efficient, aggressive job killer there is. While our leader supports the government's actions, my question is: why did it take so long for your government to act?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said many times previous to today and today, we spent the time to get this right because we know that what we announced yesterday is precedent setting. We used powers that we already had, but it was important to get it right. We consulted with industry. When we first started consulting, the differential wasn't as wide as it has become recently, but we took that decision from early accounts from industry. It was the right decision. We're going to monitor things closely, and we're also going to keep fighting for pipelines and upgrading.

Mr. Orr: Given that in the same letter to the Premier, BOE says that this job loss will be coupled with historic, record-setting bankruptcies and all the terrible economic changes that will follow and given that businesses are seriously at risk, why has this government not enacted a curtailment that takes effect immediately but, rather, waits until January 1, leaving industry to bleed another 30 days, losing a potential $2.5 billion more?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason that we are starting January 1: that's when the curtailment will start, but we took action today, last night and today, because industry is planning for January. It's important that we get this in place today so they have the assurance that this is where we're going forward. They know what the rules of the game are. They helped us with that, and we're providing that certainty for them, but they're doing their planning now. They don't just wake up on January 1 and decide what they're going to do that day.

Mr. Orr: I think that the BOE publisher also cites the effect the loss of revenue will have on the provincial coffers, with billions lost. When can Albertans expect to get a deficit and debt update that actually takes into account the loss of revenue to the provincial government caused by this massive failure of government policy?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I've laid that out in the past, and I'll just lay it out again. We had a Q2 update on Friday. That takes us to the end of September. We're two-thirds of the way through, two months through the next quarter, the third quarter, and we know that the impact on our deficit is that we've dropped it $3.2 billion and perhaps even more at the next update. We will continue to monitor the situation. As we go forward, a path to balance will be included. Budget 2019 certainly is our path to balance, and we'll show more then.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Highway 15 Fort Saskatchewan Bridge

Ms Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For 40 years highway 15 has been a subject of discussion in this House, with issues in my area going back to the former Social Credit MLA Walter Buck's time. My constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville are hoping for an update on the highway 15 Fort Saskatchewan bridge, a badly needed infrastructure project neglected for years by each and every Conservative government. To the Minister of Transportation: would you be able to give us an update on when the intersection beside the new bridge will be complete, share with us where the plan is, and also let us know if the final bridge design will require any homes to be moved?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for that question. Unfortunately, the people in Fort Saskatchewan had to wait a long time to get rid of the PC government, but that's now happened. I want to thank the member for her question. The highways 37, 15, and 825 project is now in the construction phase. It's in winter shutdown, but it's 70 per cent complete, and it will be finished in August 2019. The design of the bridge is complete. No homes will be required in order to complete this project.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that very welcome news. Given that residents and businesses expressed concern that the project will require a disruption of the rail service that runs over part of highway 15 and given that the Ministry of Transportation has been in discussions with CN to try to mitigate this issue, would the minister be able to provide us an update on whether there will be any rail disruption as a result?

Mr. Mason: Well, I want to thank the hon. member for that follow-up question, and I want to particularly thank her for her advocacy on behalf of this project. She's been a very effective MLA for the people of Fort Saskatchewan, and this is largely due to her work. I'm pleased to report that there will be no disruption because CN – we'll be able to do the work during blocks of time when they have no rail traffic, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the lack of a few connection points to the Trans Canada Trail, residents also want to know if the new bridge will have, for the first time, pedestrian access, and they would like to know who's paying for it. Could the minister provide to this House an update so that I can inform constituents who have been long advocating for hiking and cycling paths that connect the region?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. I can confirm that the River Valley Alliance, the city of Fort Saskatchewan, and Sturgeon county have entered into an agreement to raise funds to provide for pedestrian access. Ultimately, funds will flow from them through Alberta Transportation for this. Discussions are ongoing. The design will be the responsibility of the alliance, and they're working on it as we speak. I hope that we can provide more information to the member's constituents in the future. It's very important. We have 25,000 vehicles that go across the bridge every day.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

International Day of Persons with Disabilities

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1992 December 3 was proclaimed International Day of Persons with Disabilities by the United Nations General Assembly. This year's theme is Empowering People with Disabilities and Ensuring Inclusiveness and Equality. Nice words. The work of ensuring inclusiveness and equality is complex and requires dogged determination and focus. Words are nice; action is vital.

Creating communities that are inclusive and equal demands that we use a specific lens in all of the work we do and all the decisions we make. Using inclusivity and equality as a measure of success is not easy, particularly in an environment where forces exist that flirt with populism, austerity, and a return to a pull yourself up by the bootstraps mentality.

Still in 2018 people with disabilities face rates of unemployment that far exceed the numbers of peers without disabilities. People with disabilities make up almost 40 per cent of self-reported incidents of violent crimes. These numbers increase to 45 per cent when we look at female victims. Poverty is all too familiar of a life-defining reality for people with disabilities. Financial exploitation, isolation, and segregation of Canadians with disabilities exist.

On this day, International Day of Persons with Disabilities, we must recommit to action because words without action don't mean much. We must all commit to supporting inclusive education and employment. We must work towards building a barrier-free community and province. We must address the alarming rates of violence against people with disabilities. We must acknowledge the pervasive poverty of people with disabilities and be courageous in the steps we take to address this reality. So today, on International Day of Persons with Disabilities, I hope all members of this House will join me in committing that no one be left behind.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to wish a Happy Hanukkah to all those celebrating in Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're going to get your time back. I think I might have screwed up the order again.

The Member for Airdrie. My apologies.

Support for the Energy Industry

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, politicians would be wise to heed the words of notable Canadians who are valiantly fighting for our energy sector. One of them, Rex Murphy, recently addressed Albertans at a conference in Red Deer. He called for the onus on jobs and development to be reversed. He asked thoughtfully: why do those who offer development, technology, and jobs have to stagger through years of hearings, assessments, protests, court cases, and appeals to get permission to supply a basket of incontestable benefits? What are protestors bringing to the table that merits them standing?

Another notable Canadian, independent researcher Vivian Krause, has been bringing awareness to how some American foundations like the Tides Foundation are funding the fight against Canadian oil sands and pipelines. She estimates that as much as $90 million U.S. dollars have been used to oppose our energy industry in the last decade. These foundations are focused on destroying the Canadian energy industry, not the American energy industry.

Being complacent is no longer an option if we want an economy that allows families to flourish. We follow the highest possible standards in Canada, and there's no reason we should resign ourselves to sit on the sidelines while the United States, Saudi Arabia, Iraq, and Norway reap the benefits of our oil.

Tim McMillan, CEO of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, says that a lack of pipeline capacity is now costing the economy as much as a hundred billion dollars per year. Think of what that money could be used for, Mr. Speaker.

Charities like the David Suzuki Foundation should not be allowed to engage in activities aimed at hampering job creation and economic growth in Canada.

Citizens can play their part by shopping at businesses that support our vital energy industry. Unfortunately, a few companies like Lush cosmetics side with the bogus charities.

It is time to stop being a soft target and fight back against the foreign meddling in our energy industry, do the right thing, and get pipelines built.

The Speaker: Now Edmonton-McClung.

Hanukkah

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to wish a Happy Hanukkah to all those celebrating in Alberta. Yesterday at dusk I was honoured to participate along with you, sir, as well as Chabad Edmonton's Rabbi Drelich, Rabbi Claman from Beth Israel synagogue, our Deputy Premier, the MLA for Edmonton-Centre, and a large crowd on the Legislature Grounds. The lighting of the candles represents the spread of light, wisdom, enlightenment, and faith throughout the world. Hanukkah celebrates and commemorates the strength and perseverance of the Jewish people and their struggle for religious freedom. It is a demonstration of how every individual has the ability to change the world for the better.

As dark voices rise around the globe, with the growth of right-wing hate groups which threaten to invade mainstream politics, let us all take this time to remember that a little light goes a long way. We must never be afraid to stand up for what's right, to call out hate and anti-Semitism, and to embrace our differences. Alberta's long history of cultural diversity makes us strong.

As the MLA for Edmonton-McClung I am proud to represent a diverse constituency that overwhelmingly welcomes everyone into the community. McClung is home to two synagogues and the Talmud Torah school that has been educating Edmonton Jewish children for over a century.

The Jewish community in Alberta has a long and proud history of contributing to the growth of our province. In fact, 2019 will mark 130 years since the first permanent Jewish settlers made Alberta home.

I hope that this year as we celebrate the holiday season in our own special ways we take a moment to acknowledge that Alberta Jews feel threatened in their own communities and places of worship. The right to worship without fear is a right that we must vigilantly protect by standing against hate and injustice with love and with light. Our NDP government caucus is resolutely committed to doing just that. While making that pledge, let me express my hope that everyone celebrates Hanukkah together with family.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

29th Legislature Reflections

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we approach the end of the 2018 fall session, this may be my last opportunity to wish Albertans a very Merry Christmas. Unfortunately, for many Albertans this Christmas will be anything but merry. Let's talk about this government's record over the last three and a half years and where it has left the good people of this province, especially at Christmas.

While we constantly hear that things are better, that the sun is shining, you get a totally different picture when you actually get out and talk to Albertans. I attended an FCSS breakfast last week. Speeches given by the Minister of Children's Services and the Minister of Community and Social Services made it fairly obvious that an election is just around the corner, which may be the best Christmas gift this government could give Albertans. I also heard at that breakfast that services provided by FCSS in our communities are seeing ever-increasing demands.

Last week I tabled in the House some statistics from Food Banks Canada and the Edmonton food bank. I'd like to take a moment to discuss some stats from those tablins. Where do our food bank stats sit nationally? 2015-2016 saw an increase of 17.6 per cent in food bank usage across the province. Overall, from 2008 to 2016 we saw an increase of 136 per cent, the highest in the country. If we want to focus on Edmonton, over a four-year period from 2015 to 2018 we saw a monthly average increase of 40 per cent per month. In addition, the Edmonton Christmas Bureau announced last week that they expect to provide 24,000 hampers, which is up 7,000 from last year.

These are just a few examples of the organizations that have been hit hard by the economic downturn and the carbon tax. I know that the Minister of Finance claims that we have the highest growing GDP of any province, but if there is actually a recovery in progress, then average Albertans are not feeling it. Tell that to those Albertans facing layoffs three weeks before Christmas.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time I wish to give notice that I will be presenting a motion under Standing Order 42 requesting an emergency debate on issues before us today that are obviously very pressing concerning the oil differential and different policy proposals that have been presented.

I'll present written copies right now if Mr. Speaker will allow.

The Speaker: Yes. My apologies. You're required to read the motion. If you would.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah. Thank you. I'll be introducing the following motion.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly support facilitating market-oriented development of Alberta's diverse, abundant, renewable, and nonrenewable energy resources as a key driver of economic prosperity, ultimately benefiting all of Canada, and in restoring the independence of our energy regulators from political interference and that this Assembly rejects any attempt to impose supply management on Alberta's energy industry by the use of quotas or any other legislative or regulatory measures to curtail production as proposed by the government and Official Opposition.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the required number of copies of the Report of Selected Payments to the Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly, also known as the MLA report. This is tabled for the year ended March 31, 2018, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act and the Conflicts of Interest Act. This disclosure of MLA payments ensures that all remain accountable with public dollars, ensuring they are spent responsibly and in line with legal and ethical standards. Information listed in the report includes salary, expenses, benefits, allowances, fees for serving on standing committees of the Legislative Assembly, and travel expenses while travelling on MLA or government business.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other documents to be tabled? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have three tablings today. Last Thursday during question period I made reference to letters written from students, teachers, and parents from H.A. Kostash school.

The second tabling is also in that same question I referred to, a RECAPP facility evaluation report done for the Aspen View region that recommended roof repairs.

I also referred to an executive summary where they did a cost analysis of either a rebuild or upgrades to the school.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the 2008 Tar Sands Campaign strategy which I made reference to in my questions to the environment minister earlier, where many of my constituents are concerned about the environment minister's involvement as a Greenpeace activist. In the strategy that I'm tabling, the main strategy of it, which was to land lock the tar sands so their crude could not be . . .

The Speaker: I think we've got it, hon. member. I think we've got it.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yeah. I hear a point of order.
Point of order, hon. member.

Point of Order

Points of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Mason: Under 23(h), (i), and (j) I want to be clear for the hon. member. That's the second time he's said that the environment minister was a member of Greenpeace. That is not true, and I would ask the hon. member to check his facts before informing the House incorrectly about the previous history of hon. members of this House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, apparently the practice has been that you would make those points of order at the end of the Routine, but I am at this point now, and I suggest that we keep going.

Mr. Nixon: I think, Mr. Speaker, we discussed this last time. That's a separate issue, I guess. But at this stage, I thought your instructions were to us that the points of order would be at the end of question period so we didn't interrupt question period, but we're past that, so that might be part of the confusion. I await your instructions, though. Would you like to wait until after?

The Speaker: I'd like to proceed. That was the point that we discussed last week.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wouldn't want to not comply with the instructions.

First of all, I think this is a matter of debate, but the hon. member did not say that. I didn't hear him say that she was a member. He did say that the minister of the environment was an activist associated with Greenpeace. There's been lots of things that have been tabled to document that, so I'm not really sure what the argument is on that. With that said, I do think it's a matter of debate, and we should move on.

The Speaker: Hon. members, even though this is a relatively small issue, maybe, I would in fact like to think about that position being made, and I might well be asking for a discussion with the House leaders with respect to the length, the preamble issues, these sorts of related questions as well. I think we need some more discussion in this House if for no other reason than to give me greater guidance of the House's expectations on these kinds of matters.

3:00 Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: I believe we are under Standing Order 42, with the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Just to remind the member, your task here is with respect to the urgency of the matter and the pressing necessity of the matter being discussed today. Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Fildebrandt: So this is speaking to the necessity of the debate right now, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you.

Energy Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly support facilitating market-oriented development of Alberta's diverse, abundant, renewable and nonrenewable energy resources as a key driver of economic prosperity ultimately benefiting all of Canada, and in restoring the independence of our energy regulators from political interference, and that this Assembly reject any attempt to impose supply management on Alberta's energy industry by the use of quotas or any other legislative or regulatory measures to curtail production, as proposed by the government and the Official Opposition.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that in the very number of SO 42s and, I believe, 30s, the various different forms of emergency debates in this House, there has been disagreement over time about the level of urgency, and many of those things are political differences. But I think it is very fair to say that this is the single most urgent issue facing Alberta today. There seems to be at least some degree of political consensus if not economic consensus but certainly not unanimity. This is an incredibly important policy decision and debate, currently supported by the government, the third party, and the Official Opposition, obviously not supported by the rather lonelier FCP caucus, but it is a debate of incredible importance to Albertans.

It is largely unprecedented in Alberta history to be going down this road. For some time the Alberta opposition parties and various lobbyists have been calling for this, and the Premier made an announcement just last night, a significant announcement. And you can tell how significant it is if a government decides to purchase advertising time to make an announcement on television, which the Premier did last night, obviously demonstrating the urgency of it. It is very rare that a government would make a paid major announcement on prime time television on a Sunday. That obviously refers to the government's own belief in the necessity of this, that it had to happen on a Sunday, which is quite extraordinary and rare.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order. Cite the rule here.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Nixon: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), language to create disorder. The Premier did not do a paid announcement; neither did the Official Opposition. They had a press conference. The facts that the hon. member is presenting are very far from the truth, and we should get that clear, I think.

The Speaker: I have a sense, hon. member, that this might be with respect to the interpretation of the events. Nonetheless, try and keep it on the urgency and necessity issue.

Mr. Fildebrandt: With regard to the point of order it was my understanding that this was paid time on networks, but the Government House Leader informs me with his facial expressions that that was not the case. If, in fact, it was a regular TV slot and not paid time, then I would withdraw those remarks as incorrect.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fildebrandt: But it certainly does not change my primary point, that the Premier made a rather extraordinarily timed address on prime time on a Sunday, which is very rare. This is obviously a major issue facing Albertans and has not been debated before this House in any kind of detailed manner.

I would just conclude by stating that since there is no bill coming forward on this and that these changes proposed by the government are to be regulatory in nature and that there will not be a bill coming before the House but that it is still a very significant piece of policy, I think it behooves us to at least take a little bit of time here to debate the issues today. I would certainly be in favour of making my point and keeping it as short as possible so that the government and private members can get on to other business that they have if they were to agree.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 42, as you may recall, requires unanimous consent to proceed with the motion as proposed by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Yes, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I believe we can call a division on any vote before the House.

The Speaker: The question was on unanimous consent. There is no vote on that. Unanimous consent was not granted, and we need to move on.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

[The Acting Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Power Purchase Agreements

- Q6. Mr. Panda:
From May 1, 2015, to May 31, 2018, how much money has been spent by the government, broken down by contract, to terminate power purchase agreements before the agreement expiration date?

Trans Mountain Pipeline Construction Costs

- Q7. Mr. Panda:
How will the government fund the up to $2 billion commitment on potential cost overruns for the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, as referenced in the government news release dated May 29, 2018?

Service Dogs Qualifications Regulation

- Q8. Mr. McIver:
Between August 1, 2017, and June 1, 2018, what organizations have been added to the qualified list, as referenced in the service dogs qualifications regulation, Alta. reg. 59/2017?

Orphan Well Association Contracts

- Q9. Mr. Panda:
Does the government collect information on which companies have received contracts from the Orphan Well Association to reclaim orphan well sites or orphan pipeline segments, and if so, what companies have received these contracts from April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2018?

Motions for Returns

[The Acting Clerk read the following motion for a return, which had been accepted]

Orphan Well Association Correspondence

- M18. Mr. Panda:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and the Orphan Well Association from April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2018, concerning the Orphan Well Association's criteria for awarding contracts to companies to reclaim orphan well sites or orphan pipeline segments.

Electricity Price Cap Documents

- M17. Mr. Panda moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including tables and graphs, prepared between May 5, 2015, and May 31, 2018, in connection with the projections and forecasts used by the government to determine the 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour price cap on electricity.

[Debate adjourned November 26: Mrs. Aheer speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak?
Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion for a Return 17 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:08 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

[Motion for a Return 17 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: I think the government goes first, don't they?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, I just need the hon. member to move it first, and then I can address you.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that.

Service Dogs Qualifications Regulation

- M19. Mr. McIver moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all policy documents and recommendations prepared by Alberta Community and Social Services or its predecessor between January 1, 2016, and August 1, 2017, in connection with the development of the qualified list, as referenced in the service dogs qualifications regulation, Alta. reg. 59/2017.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would wish to inform the House that the government is going to recommend rejecting Motion for a Return 19. The reason, primarily, is that it is a request for recommendations to the minister that the minister received and considered before making his decision. As such it's an excluded category under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. So the government is recommending rejection.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? You've already moved the motion, hon. member. You can close, but if there are any other members that would wish to speak first – the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays did not quite understand what was going on there because of the confusion, but I will attempt to stand in for him.

It's interesting to hear the government's comments – actually, you know what? Alberta regulation 59/2017 is the service dogs qualifications regulation. The document requested by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays will aid in answering many questions such as some of these. Section 1(2) requires that the minister establish a "Qualified List" of accredited organizations to provide service dog training in Alberta. Since then 12 organizations have been accredited and are listed on the government's website.

How did the minister develop the training standards in subsection (2)(b)? Did the training standards meet the national and international standards? Seems like a reasonable question. How many of the 12 organizations on the current qualified list had been performing service dog training prior to the province announcing it would create this list? How many organizations actively training service dogs prior to Alberta regulation 59/2017 applied and did not qualify for the qualified list? Is there an appeal process? Do organizations seeking accreditation for the qualified list need to display a track record of successful training in partnership with clients? Organizations are required to include proof of incorporation in their application for the qualified list. Is that information made available to the general public?

Section 1(5) states: "The Minister shall publish and maintain the Qualified List and the Training Standards referred to in subsection

(2) as the Minister considers appropriate.” What was the minister’s rationale for including the 39 specific qualifications outlined in the Alberta service dogs qualifications assessment? According to subsection (5) the 39 assessments exercise are those the minister considers appropriate. Were there some deemed not appropriate? Another reasonable question. What consultation was involved to create the qualifications assessment list? Was any consideration given to provide flexibility for the list for the service dogs assisting with unique conditions? If so, how is that reflected in the 39 qualifying exercise? The mitigation tasks are blank. Does that mean they are at the discretion of the assessor? What kind of medical information is required by assessors to determine if the service dog is able to meet the needs of the person it is assisting?

Seems like lots of reasonable questions, which is why the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has brought forward Motion for a Return 19, that says:

copies of all policy documents and recommendations prepared by Alberta Community and Social Services or its predecessor . . .

The reason he has to add “its predecessor” is because, as you know, the Premier had to split the ministry in two when the government fumbled the Serenity file, so what the hon. member is looking for is from both those departments now.

. . . between January 1, 2016, and August 1, 2017, in connection with the development of the qualified list, as referenced in the service dog qualifications regulation, Alta. reg. 59/2017.”

All of us in this House have heard from people associated with both training of service dogs and people with needs for service dogs and some of the frustrations that surround getting dogs at appropriate times, some of the issues around that. I think we all also know how important it is for people who ultimately are able to obtain service dogs to help them in their everyday life.

I don’t have much experience personally with service dogs, but I do remember when former Leader of the Opposition and former leader of the legacy party that I belonged to, Heather Forsyth, a long-time cabinet minister in this place, had a service dog, and the members that were here back in the 28th Legislature will remember Quill. In fact, Madam Speaker, it had its own Twitter account, and before I was an MLA, I would follow Quill’s Twitter account, fascinating to me. It seems that Quill always interpreted the day very differently than the members of the Assembly. But that service dog helped my good friend Heather Forsyth to be able to hear. She had some trouble with hearing, still does, and Quill is still around. I saw Quill not too long ago, a pretty cute dog, actually. He used to sit on this Chamber floor to help that hon. member as she did her work.

We know and we hear stories like that all the time, and I think that it’s important that the member brought these questions forward. I suspect that when he closes debate, he will have more to say about that. But I think it is disappointing that the government will not co-operate with such a simple request for information on – well, really, I can’t see this being a partisan issue such that the minister would want to not provide accurate information to this House. It seems to me the Government House Leader’s argument was that the minister does not have to provide this information because it was provided to the minister as advice. Well, I don’t think that’s fair, and I do think that the Government House Leader could still provide that to this House even if there is a rule that would allow him not to. I’m not sure. I’d have to check into that. But I certainly think that he still could if they so chose. One would have to ask why they would not want to talk about something as simple as this, and hopefully somebody over there will explain why as this debate progresses.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I hear that the hon. member is asking many good questions. However, as I understand it, there doesn’t seem to be any reason that asking for these briefing documents would bring any of the further information that he is requesting. However, I am sure, as I understand it, that he would be able to submit these things as written questions, and I do believe that if he were to submit them as written questions, they would produce many of the answers that he is in fact seeking out.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yeah, I’d like to take a moment to talk on this, too. I guess I thought it was kind of interesting that the member opposite suggested that the reason they can’t answer this question is because it’s excluded by FOIP. That’s kind of the point of the operation here, to get information to provide some clarity on different things going on in government. To use that excuse I thought was maybe kind of a little bit strange, but whatever excuse they want to use, I guess they can. But when I was kind of looking through this, too, myself, I think there are a lot of questions that we could answer by having this information. I think the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre had mentioned some of the things, the questions that could be answered had we had this information.

But when I kind of looked through here myself, I looked at the regulation itself, and under Qualifications it says:

A dog has the qualifications of a service dog for the purposes of the Act if

- (a) the dog has successfully completed a training program delivered by a school or institution that is accredited by, or that has candidacy status with, Assistance Dogs International Inc., or
- (b) the dog has successfully completed
 - (i) a training program delivered by an organization identified on the Qualified List referred to in this section, or
 - (ii) a test administered by an organization identified on the Qualified List referred to in this section.

Madam Speaker, there are some guidelines, I guess, there, and those guidelines don’t necessarily answer the questions that we would like to find here today. But if the government would provide these documents and the recommendations, then we would know exactly, you know, what process was used to get to this point.

Now, it goes on to talk about a “Qualified List” here under Qualifications in subsection (2).

The Minister shall, by order, establish

- (a) a Qualified List, and
- (b) the Training Standards that must be met for an organization to be eligible for the Qualified List.

It brings up these training standards, and that was one of the questions we had as far as the training standards. Where did they come from, who helped to make recommendations, and, you know, how did this all come about?

Now, when I look at the training methods, the list that’s created here on the government’s website: training methods and standards for dogs. Of course, this is the information that we’d be looking for, the documents and recommendations prepared by Alberta Community and Social Services or its predecessor between January 1, 2016, and August 1, 2017, in connection with the development of the qualified list as referred to in the service dogs qualifications regulation.

Getting back to Training Methods and Standards for Dogs, that the government has listed on its website, it says:

1. The organization uses training methods that support the ethical and humane treatment of service dogs that do not cause fear, pain or other negative responses in the dog, for example, no shock collar, prong collar or similar equipment is to be used in the training or testing of a service dog.
2. The organization has a service dog training or testing program that ensures dogs that are trained or tested meet the following standards.

It goes on to talk about health, public appropriateness, behaviour, basic obedience skills, advanced skills. Under Health – again, this is under the Alberta training standard that the government has listed here – the dog is between the age of 18 months and nine years old, has current vaccinations, has been spayed if female or neutered if male, have an operating microchip that is a full duplex type conforming to ISO standards. That's on the health end of things.

Then under Public Appropriateness:

1. Are clean, well-groomed and do not have an offensive odour.

Of course, that would be pretty valuable if you have your dog in public.

2. Toilet only in appropriate circumstances and locations.

Also good if you're in public.

3. Display a jacket, cape, harness or other equipment to indicate that it is a working animal assisting a person with a disability.
4. Present as healthy and able to work.

Now under Behaviour:

1. Do not solicit attention, visit or annoy any member of the general public.
2. Do not disrupt the normal course of business.
3. Do not vocalize unnecessarily, i.e. barking, growling or whining.
4. Show no aggression towards people or other animals.
5. Do not solicit or steal food or other items from the general public.
6. Work calmly and quietly in a harness [or] leash.
7. Are able to perform tasks in public without showing distress or avoidance.
8. Are able to lie quietly beside the handler without blocking aisles, doorways, etc.
9. Stay within 24 inches of their handler at all times unless the nature of a trained task requires them to be working at a greater distance.

Madam Speaker, my wife actually has been working in child care for some years now, pretty much her whole life. She retired from that just this year, and she decided that she was going to take up volunteering for search and rescue. We both have a love of dogs, and particularly we like Jack Russells, and right now we have a Jack Russell-German shorthaired pointer cross, which, of course, is a high-energy dog but pretty intelligent, actually. That kind of interested my wife as far as maybe a search and rescue dog and the training that it would take to do that.

Now, I wish I would have paid a little closer attention when she was talking to me the other day and explaining to me the process to be able to have a dog trained for search and rescue, but I know it was very extensive. In fact, I think it even took a year or two of working with somebody that had a trained dog as a helper kind of thing in order for you to be able to handle your own dog on your own. I know the training was extensive for the dog, and I know the training for the handler was extensive, too.

We have a situation where we have these guidelines here for these dogs, these service dogs, and we know, like I say, and I've heard how extensive the training is to have a search and rescue dog and what the handler and the dog have to go through, so it's interesting to see the guidelines that the government has here. I think that's why we would like to see these documents and these recommendations, so that we would know exactly how the government came up with this list.

Now I'll go back to the list of the requirements for the dog. Under Basic Obedience Skills the dogs:

1. Are able to demonstrate mastery of basic obedience skills sufficient to support a disabled person having public access with that dog.
2. Are able to focus on the person with a disability despite distractions, such as children running, loud noises, flashing lights, traffic, and presence of food, balls, toys or other attractants.

I know one thing about Jack Russells: if you throw a ball out there, then the chances are that that's going to take the attention of the dog. So, obviously, service dogs can't have that issue.

3. Have prompt recall directly to the handler.
4. Respond to commands 90 per cent of the time on the first command in all public environments.
5. Exhibit good canine citizenship and be able to demonstrate that the dog is safe to be in a public setting.

And under Advanced Skills. Of course, I think a lot of these things that we've discussed here so far are fairly basic for a dog to have in public.

1. Have mastered the Basic Obedience Skills set out above.
2. Are capable of performing three (3) or more tasks in order to mitigate aspects of the handler's disability, i.e. performing specific tasks which the handler is unable to do themselves due to their disability.
3. Have received a minimum of 240 hours of advanced training.

That's a fair number of hours there for advanced training.

Madam Speaker, again we go back to this motion for a return. The request is fairly simple: "policy documents and recommendations prepared." I don't feel that there should be a big issue with providing this. I don't think this is anything that would be out of the ordinary to provide. There's nothing to hide here from the public or from the opposition. This should be nonpartisan. I don't think the excuse that, "Well, it's excluded from FOIP, so we're not going to do it" is really a justifiable answer as far as being able to answer some of these questions.

We don't know what consultation was involved to create the qualification assessment list. We don't know if there was any consideration given to providing flexibility for the list for service dogs assisting with unique conditions. We know that the people that these dogs are for could have a variety of disabilities, and we don't know what kind of flexibility was allowed on that list for that. Also, what kind of medical information was required by assessors to determine if the service dog is able to meet the needs of the person it is assisting? You know, when we look at these training methods and standards for the dogs, I think we need to be sure.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today is the International Day of Persons with Disabilities, so I'm thrilled to stand up and speak to something that is sort of peripherally related, service dogs. I don't know about you all, but when all of this came out quite some time ago, I read through all of the lists and information that you just proceeded to go through. I am happy to talk about service dogs any day of the week. I do so in St. Albert, I do so online, and I do all the time. We talk about it. I understand it. I've gone to see the organizations that work. I know the testing standards, as do we all, because we actually understand this information.

So I'm kind of left with: what are you doing? I get the feeling sometimes that on Mondays, when it's supposed to be private members' business, we need to talk about really important things other than what your question is and, you know, your ability to run the clock out, talk about bills like private members' bills that address hate groups that want to register in Alberta. So I just wanted to stand up and say that I think service dogs are vitally important. I always have. I'm amazed and I'm thankful for the work that we've done. I know we're going to continue to do the work. I know we have lots of work to do in the future, so I hope we can wrap this up and move on to some private members' business, which is what Monday afternoons are all about.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays to close debate.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you. I appreciate the introduction from the previous speaker. As is usual here, the previous speaker is wrong about almost everything she said, starting with the fact that she's talking about the opposition bringing this item together on a Monday and making suggestions about why that is. But it occurs to me, if I shuffle through my papers here and find the Order Paper for today, that this was actually due last week. As it turns out, it was the government's decision to do this today, so the main complaint by the member across is entirely unfounded.

Ms Renaud: We didn't ask you to read the rest.

Mr. McIver: Huh?

Of course, when you file a motion for a return, I'm not sure that anybody looks at what day it will come to the House. You have a question, you ask it, and it comes when it comes. So the hon. member's comment is completely unfounded and off base, but that's not a surprise.

But what she was right about is that this is the international day of people with disabilities. It's kind of apropos, really, that we should be talking about services dogs today, and I'm proud to have raised this important issue. Now, as my good friend and hon. colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre pointed out, there was a member in this House at one point that had a service dog, and certainly I became somewhat acquainted with that member and other people with service dogs, too.

It's also appropriate to raise it today, Madam Speaker, because it wasn't very long ago that a person was not allowed in the Legislative Assembly with their service dog. The only thing I'll say about it is to acknowledge that my understanding is that there are legal proceedings on that right now as a result of the person not being able to stay in here, which is probably another good reason to have a discussion about this. I won't be talking about that particular case. That would be inappropriate.

The fact is that what you have is a Government House Leader stating that he won't give the information because he doesn't have to, and you have a government backbencher saying that everybody knows. Well, if everybody knows, then the government backbencher should probably be pushing the minister to release the information that everybody knows. [interjection] Now, the hon. member had her turn to speak, but she's not done yet, so I think perhaps we'll hear more at another time.

There are several questions here, and some of my colleagues, Madam Speaker, touched upon those. They're legitimate questions. I think it's fair to ask how, when this thing came forward, the minister developed the training standards and whether indeed those training standards meet the national and international standards because, of course, people with service dogs, like the rest of us, live their lives where they want to, and if they travel from province to province, it would be certainly convenient if the standards were the same across the country and internationally. That would have been a simple question for the government to answer, and they had the opportunity but chose not to.

Again, how many of the 12 organizations on the current list had been performing service dog training previous to the government announcing that they were going to create the list? It's a legitimate question. In other words, how many of those operators are long-time, professional, experienced operators that are just registering now that it's time to register, and how many started in the business – it could be zero, or it could be 12; I don't know – just because the government was creating the list?

Another legitimate question might be that we would have hoped to know, with communication between the government and others on this: the 12 organizations, do they all train the dogs themselves, or do some ship the dogs out to somebody else or subcontract someone else to train those dogs? Now, if they're supposed to be qualified, it's a legitimate question about whether they would actually send the dogs out somewhere else or train them themselves.

You know, really, the question that the hon. backbencher from the government asked was: what is there to know? I guess the question I would ask is: what's there to hide? That's the real question here. When the government backbencher is claiming that everything is so simple and well known, yet the government won't disclose it, one really has to ask, Madam Speaker: what, indeed, if anything, does the government have to hide? Of course, when they refuse to give any information, we can't answer that question.

Again, organizations: do they display a track record of successful training in partnerships with clients? How often does the government check on them? What was the government's motivation for making the rules that are there? Another question that one of my colleagues asked, that I think is a fair one, too, is: how much health information is asked of the person that needs and requires the service dog? One would think that primarily they would only need to know the fact that they qualify for a service dog.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am requesting unanimous consent of the Assembly that notwithstanding Standing Order 8(1) Bill 206 in second reading be the first private member's bill we discuss going forward today.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill 206 Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018

[Debate adjourned June 4: Mr. McIver speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am rising in support of Bill 206. I think we can all agree in this House that the promotion of hate and bigotry in our society is unacceptable, and the United Conservative Party stands resolutely against it.

Alberta has been successful because it's been a welcoming place for all people from all backgrounds. This needs to be protected. It needs to be maintained, and it needs to go on into the future. This has to be a place where everybody is fully part of society, with all the rights and privileges. We need to stand against those that would promote hate and bigotry in every case. It's a positive step, in my view, that we as a Legislature are making that statement and making that stand through this piece of legislation today. I commend the member opposite for bringing it forward. Thank you.

You know what? There's just so many reasons. The fact is, Madam Speaker, that society hasn't fully learned this lesson. We see examples all the time where people need to be if not reminded, then to learn the lesson of equality in the first place. We will know, when we are finished this debate, that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta has stood for equality not for most Albertans, not for some Albertans, but for all Albertans. That is something where, on the one hand, it is sad that it has to be said; on the other hand, it's a very positive thing that it is being said.

Madam Speaker, it's certainly my feeling that this will set a tone that's positive, that sends a message not only to people coming to Alberta but in some cases to people that have lived here their entire life that we need to, in order to stay strong, remain a place that's welcoming to everyone.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would like to invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is great to rise to close debate on Bill 206, Societies (Preventing the Promotion of Hate) Amendment Act, 2018. It's been a long time to get here, but I'm glad we're here. I believe this piece of legislation, although simple, is a very important one. Since it has been several months since we have discussed this, I thought I'd take a few minutes to refresh our memories on the purpose of Bill 206. This bill seeks only to keep hate groups from becoming societies in Alberta and to keep them from becoming legitimized under the law.

Madam Speaker, Bill 206 amends the Societies Act by adding the term "lawful purpose" in subsection (1). This is the most important part of this legislation as it gives the registrar the ability to consider the purpose of an applicant to become a society from a perspective that considers whether its intentions are for a lawful purpose. While this seems obvious, as I've noted before, the KKK, the Ku Klux Klan, was a society until 2003, and without passing this legislation, there is nothing to stop this infamous hate group from reregistering as a society in Alberta.

The second primary change in Bill 206 is that it puts the onus on the director of a society that the group applying for society status has a lawful purpose and to ensure that this is not only valid at the time of application but that this declaration is carried out in perpetuity.

Now, a very important and positive consequence of the changes being proposed in Bill 206 is the fact that without being able to become a legitimate society, hate groups will not be able to accumulate wealth as a society. Societies are able to own and inherit property, and much like with any other organization, Madam Speaker, it is money that enables a registered society to sustain itself and grow.

We recently saw the hate group Soldiers of Odin show up at a UCP fundraiser to take selfies with the three UCP nomination candidates. Two of these candidates claim to not have known who the Soldiers of Odin were or what they represent. If we take this at face value, it lends more importance to ensuring that Bill 206 is passed in this Assembly. If potential political candidates aren't aware of an infamous hate group – apparently, they've changed their name again – why would we expect registrars to be familiar with organized hate groups? Which is why, as I stated last session, registrars will be encouraged to have a relationship with hate crime units to keep apprised of what hate groups are operating in the province and under what names.

Madam Speaker, as we know, there has been a disturbing rise in organized hate groups around the world, and unfortunately, this is very true right here in Alberta. They have become emboldened, and they've become highly visible. The fact is that hate groups appear to feel that it's a good time to rise, and Albertans should be concerned and appalled. It is the brazenness of these groups in Alberta that was the impetus for me bringing Bill 206 forward. Seeing groups such as the World Coalition Against Islam, or the WCAI, openly promote their message on the steps of Calgary city hall was very disturbing.

Now, I think we have seen good bipartisan support for this bill, as it should be, and I thank the previous speaker for his comments. I do hope that this continues. Bill 206 is a small but important part of combatting hate and hate groups in Alberta. It's small in the sense that it's not going to really reach into systemic hate, Madam

Speaker. We know that. However, we cannot as a society legitimize these groups by allowing them to become a society under the law.

With that said, Madam Speaker, I encourage all members of this Assembly to support this bill, move it forward, and send the message to these hate groups that they are not welcome and will not be legitimized as societies in Alberta. Thank you.

Motion to Concur in the Report from the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Bill 201
Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave)
Amendment Act, 2018

[Debate adjourned November 5: Mr. Hunter speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to stand and speak to this bill, that was brought forward by our Member for Highwood. One of the things I wanted to talk about, first of all, really quickly, is that we had on September 11, 2001 – 9/11, the infamous day of 9/11 – a terrible event that happened in the world, but in 2017 on September 11 another terrible event also happened, and this was the Kenow fire in my riding.

What happened was that the fire came from B.C. When I came to check on the firefighters that were there, in anticipation they had done the necessary preparations. They had done the work that they needed to do in terms of being able to protect the townsite, to protect the park structures, and to protect one of the landmarks in that area, the Prince of Wales Hotel. What was interesting was that there were 135 firefighters that had come to help in that support. Sixty of those firefighters were structural firefighters from many jurisdictions outside of that area. They came with one purpose, and that was to protect heritage and history and to protect the property of Albertans. Many of them were volunteers. Some of them were not volunteers – they were professional firefighters – but many of them were volunteers.

When I went to visit them, I looked into their eyes and I could see that they were concerned. This was a very fast moving fire, as we found out on September 12. When it actually came down over the Akamina Pass, it came so fast, because of the wind, that there was fire that was actually, I think they said, over a hundred feet above the treetops. It moved at breakneck speed, Madam Speaker, moving directly towards the town. They had done their necessary preparations. They had set up sprinkling units all around the outskirts. They had set up units that would immediately get to areas where these fireballs were falling from the sky because of the size and immensity of this fire, and they were able to respond quickly.

These units would actually go around to the different homes and watch the roofs and make sure that the roofs weren't on fire. If there was fire that was falling, even on them, they still got in there, and they made sure they put those fires out. They didn't lose one of the structures that they had originally planned on not losing. It was amazing to see. And it was amazing to see the brotherhood and sisterhood that was felt by all that were doing this, that were actually fighting this fire. This event showed to me the value of our hard-working and devoted firefighters.

I know that when the Member for Highwood brought forward this bill, he brought forward the bill with the intention of being able to help those firefighters, with the intention of being able to say: "You know what? We need to recognize that if they're going to step up, if they're going to stand up and do this sort of act of heroism, we need to make sure that we protect them." He had heard concerns, that had been brought forward by some of the firefighters, that perhaps if they did step up, if they were willing to be able to take the time – and even in the preparation for this Kenow fire that these firefighters had to go do, they had to take time away from their work, time away from their families. They had to sleep out there because they didn't know when it was actually going to happen, when that fire would come down over the Akamina Pass.

When the call was made, they were ready, and they were willing. What's interesting about this bill is that it was designed to address that. So, in good faith, this is the reason why the member brought this bill forward. He brought it forward with the best of intentions, but here's what happened, Madam Speaker. He brought it forward, and then we went to committee. It was sent to committee in order to be able to find out if there are any unintended consequences to this bill.

What we heard was a lot of information from business owners that if we were to pass this bill, the business owners would be, under legislation, at a disadvantage. So they implored us to take a second look, a sober second look at this bill and to try and focus on the fact that – you know what? – generally speaking, whether you're an employer or you're a reserve firefighter, Albertans are good people, and we'll rally around each other. This was what we heard.

Now, the importance of this process is that we have seen how this House can work, where you bring forward a best-intentioned bill, and then you take that best-intentioned bill and you vet it. You find out whether or not there are any unintended consequences. What we found was that this bill had some unintended consequences that we hadn't seen, that the Member for Highwood had not intended. So we took a step back and we said: "You know what? We shouldn't have this thing go forward. We should believe in Albertans that they can do the right thing when it comes to not firing our volunteer firefighters." This was a good process, Madam Speaker.

Unfortunately, what we've seen in the last three and a half years is that we have brought forward these concerns and asked this government to bring their bills to committee so that they can be properly vetted. What we've seen, unfortunately, is a complete disregard for that vetting process. Now, in this House we have the opportunity of being able to do some back and forth when we get into Committee of the Whole. That is a committee – I grant them that – but it is not where we can have a stakeholder or someone who's going to be affected by these unintended consequences come forward and give material evidence that it will be a problem for them.

We've had this discussion and conversation a few times, but I wanted to bring your attention, Madam Speaker, to the fact that we have now seen how the process can actually work properly and effectively. I think that the value of being able to say, "Let's vet these bills; let's take them back and see whether or not there are any unintended consequences" can only benefit Albertans, can only benefit the people whom we decide we're going to add a regulatory burden onto. I hope that the government has had the opportunity to be able to see this process, to be able to see it and how it can be effective, and I hope that they'll reconsider future bills.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

4:40

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Anybody else wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise today in the House to speak on the concurrence motion for Bill 201, the Employment Standards (Firefighter Leave) Amendment Act, 2018, which was introduced, as was mentioned earlier, by my colleague from Highwood earlier this year.

This bill would have prevented employers from discriminating against employees who are volunteer firefighters, Madam Speaker. With this legislation employers could not dismiss employees based on their work as a volunteer firefighter. I commend my colleague for introducing this legislation. As the Member for Highwood has said, this bill was introduced after a volunteer firefighter was actually dismissed because of his role as a firefighter. His employer ultimately gave him an ultimatum, saying: you either give up firefighting, or you give up this job. This was obviously a very unreasonable employer. However, this situation did happen, and there is a possibility that a volunteer firefighter could be in this situation again. The Member for Highwood heard this concern and introduced this private member's bill as a response, which I give him credit for. That's what our role as legislators is. It's to listen to Albertans and to represent their interests in this Assembly.

Now, Madam Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the firefighters of our province. There are few other occupations where workers sacrifice time away from home and away from their families to protect other Albertans, and firefighters are often putting their own lives on the line to ensure the safety of others. Answering the call as a firefighter means you have to be ready for anything, and you don't know what you could be facing. You never know the situation that you will end up in, and you never know the danger that you will be put in. However, the firefighters that I know would not have it any other way, and they are truly honoured to serve.

Now, the riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, that I represent, covers a large rural area, and I know first-hand how volunteer firefighters in my riding and in other rural ridings across the province are vital to Alberta's economy. Industries located outside of major centres need to have fire services close by. However, in rural counties and small towns they simply cannot afford to staff a fully functional fire detachment, and that is where volunteer firefighters come in. They are able to come in and assist when needed but are still able to work at a full-time job. Really, a volunteer firefighter is a story of being a good citizen. It's about helping your neighbour, and there are few better ways to serve your community.

In fact, just last month in my constituency a truck carrying hay bales caught fire just south of Innisfail on highway 2. Of course, everyone in this Assembly knows how busy highway 2 is and can be. Knowing that, they can imagine how many people could have been put at risk because of this fire. However, the hard-working firefighters from both Bowden and Innisfail, both in my constituency, answered the call and were able to secure the scene. They kept people out of harm's way, and after four hours they were able to extinguish the fire. A local farmer even came out to assist. Stories like these from firefighters: they happen every day, Madam Speaker. In Alberta we have to give a tremendous amount of respect to those front-line personnel. Again, on a personal note, last Saturday I was in Springbrook honouring firefighter Thomas Crozman with an Alberta emergency service medal, and two weeks ago I was at Gleniffer Lake honouring firefighter Logan Dye with another Alberta emergency service medal.

Now, Madam Speaker, as a rural resident I know the struggles that rural and small-town fire departments face trying to recruit firefighters. Many of these firefighters are my friends, neighbours, and important community members. When fire detachments cannot find volunteers, they have to start looking for paid staff. This puts an increased burden on municipalities and their tax base as they don't have the population to support it. Businesses suffer, and residents have to pay more in taxes to support the fire department. This has a possibility to make municipalities uncompetitive to businesses and hurt their economy. We know that this current government has already taxed Albertans enough, so any measures that can help recruit volunteer firefighters and lower the tax burden are a good thing for Alberta.

Another issue that arises in rural areas is response times going up when there are not enough volunteers. This is also bad for businesses, but it can also be a serious safety issue if municipalities are unable to provide enough firefighters to adequately provide this service, which brings us to the bill that is before the Assembly. Bill 201 would attempt to make it easier to recruit firefighters by preventing employers from discriminating, losing them their job because of their involvement as a volunteer firefighter. This could solve this issue. Businesses would be more viable to recruit, and recruitment would be easier, and taxes would be lower, and our rural economy could thrive. If this bill could accomplish this, I believe that it would be a very noble and worthwhile cause.

However, as this bill was studied at committee, some concerns were brought up by stakeholders. One of the first concerns that was brought up was the creation of an adversarial relationship between businesses and the fire departments. Businesses do not want to be handcuffed with this legislation. The stakeholders that spoke expressed concerns for the unintended consequences of this bill if it was brought into law. As I mentioned earlier, there is a great concern with the recruitment of firefighters, and some felt as though putting this additional regulation on employers would make it more likely that an employee would not volunteer to be a firefighter as they would not want to damage the relationship with their employer.

Madam Speaker, further to this, a few rural fire chiefs expressed concerns that this bill would undermine the work that they have done to build relationships with local businesses and recruit firefighters. Rural fire chiefs know that they have to work hard to get recruits, which is why they try to create partnerships with employers that potential recruits actually work for. This is a strategy that, according to stakeholders, is helping recruit additional volunteers. I have concerns that passing this bill would undermine some of that work. I trust that what the rural fire chiefs are doing is actually working and that they know the business. I believe that they know what is the best way to actually recruit firefighters.

Madam Speaker, I appreciate the efforts of my colleague bringing forward this bill, and I appreciate that he was able to attempt to create a solution for this problem of recruiting volunteer firefighters. I believe that that was a worthwhile goal, and I respect that he was able to listen to Albertans in developing this bill.

I would also like to acknowledge the work of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future as it was able to study this legislation carefully and gather input from relative stakeholders. This is how legislation should be developed. The work of committee is very important in the legislative process, and I am happy that we were able to use it in the progression of this bill. I know that this government can actually take a few lessons from proper consultations, and listening to stakeholders is something that the NDP might actually be able to learn from. Maybe they wouldn't have put forward their carbon tax, that they never actually proposed to Albertans, or maybe they wouldn't have introduced Bill 6, which, again, was a disastrous record for consultation. But committees ultimately are set up to study legislation in depth, and it would be wonderful if this government would use committees to actually study its legislation. But at least this time around, for Bill 201 we were able to listen to stakeholders and do our due diligence to ensure that we got it right.

Bill 201 was a very well-intended piece of legislation, and its desire was the increase in availability for rural fire detachments to recruit and retain volunteers. However, Madam Speaker, I hope all members of this House and especially the government continue to consult with firefighters in Alberta and find out additional ways that we can actually support them. As I said earlier, firefighters have a very important role, and they sacrifice much to serve the community. As elected officials let's continue to reach out to rural communities and rural fire chiefs and study other ways that we can be of assistance to first responders in our province. They truly are the heroes of our communities.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you. It's a pleasure to rise today. I would just like to thank my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for his thoughtful comments as well. You know, if there's one thing he knows about, being the son of a farmer, it's rural Alberta and the unique challenges that rural Alberta faces. He's done a great job in many respects here in the House already in his short time; as well, he has done a great job in the constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I know that I have the opportunity to speak to lots of his constituents. As you know, Madam Speaker, our constituencies are side by side. Not yours and mine, but the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake's and the constituency that I have the pleasure of representing are side by side, so we wind up with a number of different joint projects as well as constituents that share information with both of our offices. I just so much appreciate the collaboration and co-operation that can take place in that great central Alberta region.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has done a lot of great work on rural fire protection and has been a strong advocate for volunteer firefighters in that region. I know that you know, Madam Speaker, the vital role that volunteer fire departments play not just in rural Alberta or in central Alberta but clear across our province. The vast, vast, vast majority of all those who protect our property from fire are actually volunteers.

In fact, just yesterday many folks in this very Chamber had the pleasure or the displeasure . . .

Mr. Strankman: Adventure.

Mr. Cooper: Adventure. I think my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler has hit the nail on the head here.

. . . the adventure of travelling to the capital. You know, we're so blessed and honoured to be able to do that week in and week out, and some weeks are more exciting than others, in particular yesterday, Madam Speaker, even here in Edmonton. I can only imagine that your commute was a few blocks, but for some of us, travelling up and down highway 2 can be an adventure. It certainly was that yesterday.

I know that the good, the outstanding volunteer fire department from Olds was out on the highway for an extended period of time yesterday protecting not just the lives of those who had been involved in a number of motor vehicle accidents but also protecting everybody else using the highway to ensure that they were also safe. I know that my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills or Bonnyville-Cold Lake or whatever the new name is of the constituency was in Calgary this weekend and also travelled through that particular area of the province and saw the good work that our volunteer firefighters do. It's not just fighting fires, but it's also spending time saving lives, predominantly, at least in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, along the provincial highways, in particular highway 2. Those of you who are from the east side of the province will certainly know they do a lot of work on highway 21 as well, these busy transportation corridors, protecting both those who have been in motor vehicle accidents and those using the highway.

One of the reasons why I was pleased to see my colleague from Highwood bring forward this particular piece of legislation, Bill 201, that protects individuals from loss of employment because they are or have become a part-time or casual or volunteer firefighter: I think that it's important that we respect and honour the commitment that these volunteer firefighters make and that we respect and honour the fact that they are putting their lives on the line. Some have experienced hardship in their employment situation as a result of that commitment to the public. I know that my colleague from Highwood was seeking to endeavour to create some solutions around this very problem.

Like the government so often does – and I know my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler is very familiar with this process, very, very familiar with the process with respect to private members' business. As they so often do, they send a piece of private members' business to committee, and that's exactly what happened here on Bill 201, as you know. I know some of my colleagues have chatted at some length about this particular bill and the fact that it wound up in committee. More often than not, with respect to government business anyway, members of the Official Opposition or other independents or whatever other folks here in the Assembly will make a recommendation to send bills to committee. The reason why they do that is for thoughtful consideration. I think that it really helps the process and creates certainty around the legislation.

Now, it's unfortunate, though, that the government, during this term of the Legislature anyway, has actually used committee as a place to send legislation – they would like to send it to die.

Mr. Strankman: Terminate.

Mr. Cooper: Terminate.

Really, more often than not, the legislation that the government has sent with respect to private members' business has been dead on arrival at committee, and I think that's also what we've seen here with Bill 201.

Now, I understand that there were a number of stakeholders who presented at the committee, particularly the professional firefighters. Let me just take a moment to thank those individuals as well, the men and women that protect our cities and the larger communities across the province, that put their lives on the line and do so in a professional manner. You know, they do incredible, incredible work. But in this case many of those associations and organizations, along with the professional firefighters, had some concerns about this legislation, and I think the government heard those concerns more than – sorry. I will apologize and withdraw that particular reference to the government because it certainly wasn't the government that heard those concerns louder. It was certainly the committee that heard those concerns louder than the concerns of some of the smaller rural fire departments or smaller rural firemen or -women that defend our smaller regions across the province.

The committee definitely, it would seem – and I know that you have read the report with, I would imagine, bated breath while you read it with anticipation of just exactly what was in the report, so you'll know that that report raised some significant concerns.

I think that it's important that we reiterate that across rural Alberta and in these smaller departments – you know, I think of departments like the communities of Carstairs and Didsbury and Three Hills, all of which would have less than 30 members, many of which have employment outside of the community. If we were just to use the example of Sunday's call, I know that the department was out on the highway for upwards of six hours while they cleared multiple vehicle accidents. So here's a situation where these folks have left their families and the ones that care the most about them to go out and stand in the middle of a blizzard to protect the needs of those who have been injured in this accident and to manage the highway for the rest of us.

While on this particular occasion it was on a Sunday, so there was no loss of employment and there were no concerns for most of them – obviously, some of them would work on a Sunday, but the vast majority of them would have not had to leave work in order to do that – should that have been any other day of the week, it does present a challenge for those individuals that have to leave work and could potentially have a negative impact on their employment. I was a little disheartened that the committee didn't take the concerns of those rural departments and the ability . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, the time limit for the consideration of this item has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: I will now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Active Transportation

508. Mr. Shepherd moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to undergo an examination of government of Alberta websites, educational resources, and public information campaign print material to develop new content to encourage active transportation through physical activity and to ensure that existing communications do not create barriers to engaging in active transportation through physical activity.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise in the House today to bring forward Motion 508. Now, the reason I brought this forward is that one of the challenges we face as a very technologically engaged society, where it sort of is part of everything that we do, is that often we don't understand the full impact of adopting a new technology until well after it's become so fully adopted that we can't imagine living without it. By that point it can be incredibly difficult to make changes to counteract what may be some negative effects while hanging on to the positive changes.

One significant and transformative shift in the last century was the introduction of the automobile, bringing cars in. You know, they started out as a novelty, but as prices came down, more and more people started buying them. The number of cars on the streets started to increase, and we had to figure out how we were going to accommodate them in what was at that time a public space. In the 1910s and '20s there was a lot of fierce debate over how we were going to use our city streets because at that time they were a public space. They were full of pedestrians, street vendors, horse-drawn carts, and streetcars, and cars coming into that space changed that dynamic.

By 1925 we had nearly 16,000 people dying annually, mostly children and seniors, after being struck by cars. That's a 16-fold increase over 20 years previous. As we had more cars, we had more incidents of people dying, and we had to figure out how this was going to be addressed. Those accidents at the time were largely viewed as the fault of drivers in vehicles because they were the new piece on the road, and there began to be real advocacy amongst people for limits on vehicles, including putting limits on how fast a vehicle could go, building that right into the cars.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Car companies, of course, got concerned that it could impact their sales. They mounted an intense campaign to change public perception. They implemented school safety classes, that they paid for, to teach children that streets were for cars and they should not play there. They lobbied for new traffic laws, creating the brand new crime of jaywalking, along with a public campaign shaming people who entered to cross a street anywhere but in a crosswalk. They spent money to influence newspaper coverage.

That was a perception that began to take root, so eventually we had that change in public perception. Streets became dedicated to cars, and as our cities grew, we began to design our streets and our communities around them. The result is that a vast majority of people now drive instead of walking, biking, taking transit, or using some other form of active transportation, and the unintended side effect is that as a result we're much less healthy.

We know that chronic conditions and diseases are responsible for about 80 per cent of health care costs, illnesses, and disabilities because of hospitalizations, emergency department visits, and family physician visits. Indeed, we know that the risk of obesity increases by 6 per cent for every hour that an individual spends in a car each day. Indeed, the Canadian physical activity guidelines note that being physically active can in fact help prevent many chronic conditions and diseases such as being overweight and obesity, type 2 diabetes, heart disease, certain types of cancer, and stroke.

Even though we know that is true, we also know that 43 per cent of adults in Alberta are not in fact getting the recommended 150 minutes of physical exercise and activity per week that would achieve those health benefits. We know that just even the simple act of walking to and from public transit can help an adult achieve 8 to 33 minutes more of physical activity each day. For 11- to 12-year-olds walking to and from school can contribute 22 minutes, or over one-third, of the total recommended daily moderate to vigorous activity to maintain their health.

With health care being the largest line item in the provincial budget and chronic conditions being a significant driver in the growth of those costs, it makes sense to me that the government of Alberta should want to encourage more people to use active transportation when and where they can. But at times, unfortunately, this hasn't always been true. I don't think that's intentional. I think it's more just a case that, understandably, sort of the patterns that we've built as a society, these longer term cultural biases, just happen to lead to these sorts of views appearing in some of the longer standing educational resources and safety campaigns.

A couple of years ago I had some constituents that reached out to me to express concern about an Alberta Health web page on cycling safety that suggested it was dangerous for parents to transport young children by bike because of the danger of falling or being struck by a vehicle. That's despite the fact that new equipment like bike trailers and cargo bikes greatly reduce the injury in a fall and that the growth of protected and separated cycling infrastructure gives many parents safe places to ride.

As Edmonton's downtown continues to be revitalized, with more and more people living and moving through our streets in my constituency, and recognizing that those streets can have a high volume of traffic, I've had constituents reach out to me to express concerns about the traffic safety messaging from Alberta Transportation that they felt suggested that the sole responsibility for safety lies with pedestrians.

As I noted in telling that story initially about how we got to the point where we are and the advent of jaywalking and some of these other things, the public messages we send and the priorities they communicate can have a real impact on how individuals perceive and choose to behave. That can ripple out and have far larger consequences. That's why I've brought this motion forward today to encourage the government of Alberta to conduct a review of all the materials it produces on the question of traffic safety and active transportation to ensure that it aligns with what is clearly a goal for all orders to government, to encourage and enable people to be more active in every aspect of their everyday life.

On that note, I'd like to acknowledge some of the progress we've already made on that front. In both of the instances I mentioned with Alberta Health and Alberta Transportation, I was able to reach out to them to share my concerns. In the case of Alberta Health they immediately removed the incorrect information from their website, and it was shortly replaced with updated and more accurate information. In the case of Alberta Transportation I had the chance to first reach out to and speak with and later have a meeting with some of the leads of the communications team in that department to discuss their pedestrian safety campaigns. We were able to work together to find some adjustments that helped improve some of their messaging.

I'm also aware that Alberta Transportation has been working with local municipalities to create standards and guidelines for active transportation infrastructure such as bike lanes and that Alberta Health Services supports and funds initiatives like the UWalk website, WalkABLE Alberta, and the Alberta Centre for Active Living, which work to help get more people out and get active in getting to work or around in their communities. My motion is intended to build on that good work in partnership with many in the community who are also advocating to make active transportation a truly safe, accessible, and enjoyable option for Albertans across the province in all communities.

I've had the pleasure of working with my colleague the MLA for Sherwood Park in supporting a coalition of cycling organizations in preparing a report with recommended updates for cycling legislation. This came together after five cyclists were injured while on a group ride in August after being struck by a vehicle on the Sherwood Park freeway. I'd like to thank the Minister of Transportation and his staff for their willingness to hold an open dialogue on that work.

The city of Edmonton also continues to make improvements. They've recently implemented scramble intersections in some high-traffic areas of our city. Scramble intersections provide a light cycle that is only for pedestrians, where pedestrians can cross either on the diagonal or other ways. This reduces interaction between vehicles and pedestrians, making things safer and more efficient for everybody.

When Stantec, a major international engineering firm based here in my constituency, recognized that many of the employees they were recruiting wanted to live downtown and be able to walk and bike to work, they conducted a free study and analysis for a protected bike grid in downtown Edmonton. They presented it to the city of Edmonton, who immediately adopted it and funded it, and it opened last year.

I've also had many good conversations with Greg Christenson of Christenson Developments, a passionate supporter of walkable communities who works to design and build residences for seniors that incorporate infrastructure and are built in areas that allow and encourage them to be able to safely walk and be active as they go about their day.

I've had the chance to work and talk with folks in organizations like Safe Healthy Active People Everywhere, or S.H.A.P.E., Ever Active Schools, and others about their work to help establish programs to support kids to safely walk, bike, and wheel to school. Of course, I've had the opportunity to work with some of my local community leagues and folks like Bike Edmonton, Paths for People, and the Downtown Edmonton and Oliver community leagues, who all continue to raise and advance these conversations around safety and accessibility.

I'm very pleased to hear about the work that's being done in various ministries across government to promote and support active transportation, and it's my hope that this motion can support that work by ensuring that all government resources and communication support the goal of encouraging and enabling Albertans to find more opportunities to incorporate physical activity as a natural part of their everyday lives and does not discourage them from doing so.

I look forward to the debate here and hearing from some other members, and it's my hope that we will see this motion pass. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to Motion 508? The Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One thing I appreciate is that when the MLA for Edmonton-Centre speaks about active transportation, I know that he practices it. I think we all know that this MLA is dedicated to cycling to work. I really admire him because he's so passionate about active transportation and he lives out the talk. I think that as an MLA this is something incredible, and maybe we should all follow his example of doing that.

I really appreciate the motion because we all know the importance of active living. Since I'm an older adult, I have come to really understand that if you don't start active living and if you don't start walking, cycling, or really rethink your attachment to your car when you are younger, as you get older you won't be able to continue to have an active lifestyle. I can say that this is one of the lessons that I personally have experienced, and I'm so glad that we have this motion that hopefully will incite the government to really start working not only on their websites but also with community to make sure that young people really start to have an active lifestyle earlier.

I don't know about you, but I wear a Fitbit, and if we were able to talk to each other in this Assembly, I'm wondering how many of the MLAs are attached to their Fitbit and make sure that they do their 10,000 steps every day. It's probably easy for us because we go between the Federal Building and the Assembly and we run up and down the stairs, so in a way we're very lucky. But I think that, apart from the Member for Edmonton-Centre and a few of the MLAs that live around the Legislative Assembly, we come here by car. Some of us, unless we are addicted like myself to our Fitbits and go up and down the stairs, probably have no opportunity to walk, and we might regret it in later years.

I've kind of looked at examples of what the government has supported in the past around active living and especially what communities have done around Alberta. The first thing. I think today we heard a really perfect example of encouraging the government to be active in active transportation with the discussion that the Minister of Transportation had in response to my colleague from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville when talking about how the river alliance is going to connect trails to a bridge. Having been on those trails that the river alliance has been working on along the river, I know that there are many hikers, walkers, and cyclists who are going to really use that connecting bridge to possibly make it easier for them to commute into Edmonton from Fort Saskatchewan or Sherwood Park. I think that's a really good example of what the Member for Edmonton-Centre is looking at.

I used to work for a university where if you cycled to work, you had an incentive. You could benefit from discounts and so on. That was a way that that employer used, through their website and through employee programs and so on, to incite the workforce and the students to use a cycle. Maybe the government, as it does the examination of its website, educational resources, and public information campaigns, might also develop some incentives to encourage people.

Then I think of an organization like folk fest. Now, I don't know about the Calgary folk fest, but I'm a huge attendee at the Edmonton Folk Fest, where there is encouragement to bike or to walk because there are safe places to put your bike. Maybe through this information campaign the government could work with other organizations to make sure that there's safe parking for bikes and also that they encourage their patrons at other festivals to walk.

Then I'm looking at older adults. As I've said, I'm an older adult. I look to see what's happening with the older adult population. There's a club here in Edmonton. I'm sure there's probably the same one in Calgary. It's called the Rocky Mountain seniors club. What do you think these seniors do? During the spring and summer and fall months these seniors cycle, and they don't just cycle 10 kilometres and so on. They understand the importance of active transportation, and they cycle 40, 50, 100 kilometres. They do it every day. I could see that this website could give information about a club like the Rocky Mountain seniors club. This group cycles during the summer and spring, and then they ski in the winter.

Then I'm thinking about the work that the Member for Edmonton-Centre and I have done with the cycling coalition around safe cycling. One of the things that prevents people from cycling is that they don't feel safe on the roads. The bike lanes in Edmonton are going to result in a lot more people looking at cycling.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Every time I see an adult cyclist on the sidewalk, I know that they're on the sidewalk because they don't feel safe on the road. If you're an experienced cyclist, you know that cycling on the sidewalk is often more dangerous than cycling on the road because nobody knows that you're on the sidewalk. So I'm very, very delighted by efforts of Calgary, Edmonton, Red Deer, Lethbridge, I think, and other municipalities. They really understand that if they're going to encourage people to cycle or to walk, then they need to make sure that we have the appropriate bike lanes.

When I look at the need, I also think of what's happening in schools. We know that we have built our communities so that it's more and more difficult for children to cycle or to walk to school. We have school of choice, and parents are transporting their children not by the bus. When I was more involved with the elementary school system, when my kids were younger, there was a really interesting program that's called the walking school bus, where parents got together to encourage children to walk to school. They pretended it was like a bus. There was a leader that was the bus driver, but it was a walking person – I can't remember the term – and then children all followed up in a bus. I could see this website helping parents or parent councils develop more walking school buses so that more and more children and parents feel safe to have their child walk to school.

I know that the Member for Edmonton-Centre has looked at the whole issue of safe bike racks for schools, right? If the parents and the children, the students, feel that they can cycle to school and that it's safe and that there's an appropriate bike rack for their bike, then they're more likely to cycle. There's nothing worse for a child than to cycle to school and then go and pick up their bike at the end of the day and find that their bike is gone.

There are all kinds of things that could happen through these enhanced websites and educational resources around looking at what the barriers are to active transportation, be it among the young people, adults commuting to work, or the older adults who really want to remain active. I know there's somebody that I know that's going to be coming later on this week to be introduced. This is an incredible lady. She's in her 70s, and she can do 100 kilometres per day on her bike. The reason that she can do it is because she's maintained an active lifestyle all through the years, and she really didn't just drive around the car without walking or cycling.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I really appreciate this motion. It sounds like, at first ring, it's a motion that is status quo. But the more that you kind of look down at some of the existing barriers to active transportation among the various age groups, as you look at municipal planning issues, when you look where the schools are located, when you look at the lack of information, you realize what an important motion it is.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I'll ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will take it from the lack of debate that there is general support for the motion in the room. I recognize that this is not something that perhaps rises to the level of some of the current issues that we're dealing with in the province, whether those be some of the fiscal challenges and realities or the current crisis on the oil differential or some of these other things, but as I outlined, I think it is part and parcel of the work that we do as a government.

As I outlined earlier, I think the way that we communicate things, the way that we talk about things does have an influence on the behaviour that people choose. I think we are working now towards trying to adjust some elements of the culture that we've developed around transportation and the way we design our cities and other things in light of recognizing the impacts that have begun because small things ripple out and have larger effects. As I outlined, the kinds of health crises that we're facing, that we're dealing with, the kinds of challenges we're facing in our health care system: many of them are preventable, but it requires a new approach and some adjustments in our lifestyle. Part of how we help people adjust lifestyle is that we adjust how we think about some of the different systems and indeed the impact of design on people's everyday life. I know that many of our municipalities, the city of Edmonton and others, and indeed cities across Canada and around the world are beginning to have these conversations about how we better design our environments to provide people with incentives and natural opportunities to be able to change the way we move around.

Now, to be clear, Madam Speaker, I am not against cars. I own a vehicle. I've owned a vehicle steadily for many, many years. I recognize there are times when I need to drive. Indeed, this is probably the year when I've cycled less than I ever have before for a number of circumstances, some to do with health, some simply to do with my schedule and other issues. But I recognize that driving is a necessity, and it needs to be still supported and incorporated as part of how our cities move. Indeed, the lifestyle that we have depends on being able to move and transport goods and people by vehicle. That's important. But what I am saying is that it's important that we continue to work on what changes we are able to make to help people be able to live a healthier lifestyle by providing the supports and infrastructure that allow them and, in fact, incent them to use active transportation.

The city of Edmonton has been doing some great work on this. They've signed on to the Vision Zero campaign, which is a campaign that's working towards zero fatalities from collisions between vehicles and pedestrians or cyclists. The Vision Zero campaign works not by shaming anybody involved in that, whether that be drivers or pedestrians or cyclists, but on improving design. They've found many tried-and-true methods simply by changing how an intersection is structured or signed or how paint is laid on the road. It changes how people perceive, how drivers behave, and indeed how pedestrians, cyclists, and other people that are engaging on the roadways act. These provide natural nudges, as it were, kind of like they do with advertising and other psychological nudges, that just create a safer environment and make it easier for everyone. I think that's incredibly important.

As my colleague the hon. Member for Sherwood Park noted, seniors, young people, that traditionally used to be much more active in the community, used to play in the streets, used to ride their bikes around the community – seniors want to be able to do that still. I have a number of seniors' residences downtown, and I often hear from them about their concerns about crossing busy roadways or changes in infrastructure that make it more difficult for them to get around and how that limits them. Then they end up having to stay at home more. They're not able to get around. That lowers their opportunities for social interaction and leads to degradations in their mental and indeed their physical health.

These are very important steps to take, and what this motion is about is simply recognizing that we ought to continue to update how we talk about this as a government, as one of the leading bodies that is working with health care providers, that is working with sports and recreation groups, that is working with the population, that we want to show leadership in using messaging that doesn't discourage people, that doesn't create further shame but instead helps advance that conversation for cyclists, for drivers, for pedestrians.

I really appreciate that groups like the AMA, the Alberta Motor Association, have been very active on this front. They've been working with the cycling coalition that the Member for Sherwood Park spoke about, that we've been working with. They've been showing real leadership in wanting to advance that conversation, improve our messaging, our education, and help move this forward as well. I really want to recognize all the folks that have been doing this work in the community.

Thank you, everyone, for this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the time and the progress we've made, knowing that we've got an evening ahead of us tonight, I would propose that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:27 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 3, 2018

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ethics Commissioner

34. Larivee moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices tabled on November 7, 2018, Sessional Paper 353/2018, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that the Hon. Marguerite Trussler be reappointed Ethics Commissioner for a term to expire on May 25, 2024.

Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Anybody wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you very much, Madam Chair – Speaker. Sorry. We'll get to Madam Chair a little later tonight. I will also rise on behalf of the opposition caucus in regard to this motion from the Government House Leader and indicate our support for the reappointment of Justice Trussler as Ethics Commissioner, and I would suggest to all of my colleagues that we vote in support of this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, would the hon. Deputy Government House Leader like to close debate?

Larivee: Sure. I would now like to close debate.

[Government Motion 34 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Statutes Repeal

37. Larivee moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to section 3 of the Statutes Repeal Act, SA 2013, cS-19.3, the Legislative Assembly resolves that the following statutes, appearing on the list of statutes to be repealed which was tabled in the Assembly by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General on April 11, 2018, Sessional Paper 81/2018, not be repealed:
1. Black Creek Heritage Rangeland Trails Act (2004 cB-2.5)
 2. Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004 (2004 c9) s8
 3. Health Professions Act (RSA 2000 cH-7) ss155(1)(c), 156(n), (u), scheds. 1
 4. Health Professions Amendment Act, 2008 (2008 c34) ss12, 13, 15
 5. Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act (RSA 2000 c34 (supp)) s8 (adds s8.1(3)).

Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, Deputy Government House Leader, do you want to close debate?

[Government Motion 37 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Enactment Continuation

38. Larivee moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly approve the continuation of the following enactments:
- A. the ATB Financial Act;
 - B. section 2 of the Rural Electrification Long-term Financing Act;
 - C. sections 32 and 33 of the Rural Utilities Act; and
 - D. sections 3 and 36 of the Rural Electrification Loan Act.

Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, Deputy Government House Leader, do you want to close debate?

Larivee: Yes, please.

[Government Motion 38 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 30

Mental Health Services Protection Act

[Adjourned debate November 29: Mr. Clark]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. A privilege to rise and speak today to this bill. I think it's an important bill. Of course, we're just getting into it, so there are lots of questions yet. I'm optimistic, though, that there are some good things here. I have a series of questions, though, that I think will be helpful.

Let me begin by saying that good counselling is extremely important. I really do believe that many, many people in life do profit from the opportunity to sometimes just share their concerns and have somebody to think their way through their problem with, sometimes to receive encouragement and help, sometimes to get some, actually, concrete guidance that's useful for them to appropriate. So I think it's important that we consider this.

Of course, there are two pieces to this Bill 30, one with regard to counsellors, the other with regard to the licensing of addictions centres, which is a different consideration altogether in many ways. I've had the privilege of being quite involved in a number of addictions treatment centres and counselling situations throughout the years.

Let me begin, first of all, by talking about the college of counselling therapy. One of the values here of this will be that the insurance companies will have a clear understanding of who is an accredited or a reliable counsellor. So in many cases there are health policies and mental health policies that they would pay toward, but in some cases now they're unsure about that: they're not, they do.

It's a questionable issue for them, so I think it will be helpful in that way. I spoke to a counselling centre this afternoon in Red Deer, and they're actually in support of this bill basically for that very reason, because they feel it will help make clear for both them and the insurance companies when payment is to be authorized and when it's not.

They also feel that creating a college of counsellors may in fact help to relieve the shortage of qualified and capable counsellors in Alberta. We are facing tremendous addiction issues and the challenge of fentanyl and other things, and there is a need for counsellors. In many cases people are having to wait for months and months to actually be able to see a qualified therapist, so by creating a college, this will I think help to clarify some of this, help to make it just a better relationship all around because, quite frankly, it is quite a wide open field at this point in time. So I think that it will be helpful in that regard.

Smaller associations, though, have expressed some concerns about representation rights, so I hope that that will be addressed, whether the representation will be fair and equitable all the way along. Yeah. There are about 14 different associations across the province, so pulling them together and making an equal playing field for all there, I think, will be a useful exercise.

With regard to the addiction treatment centres and licensing for them, I do have some questions on this, and I suspect that while this bill is going through, again, in a rushed format, a couple of days – we just got it Thursday. We expect to have this passed in a few days here. How much consultation has actually taken place with some of those that are really doing addictions treatment? I suspect not a lot. I know that a couple that I have phoned, no one ever spoke to them about it. So once again we have a government that's rushing through with ideas. Don't know where they get them from because in many cases they're not speaking to the people who are actually doing the job, the people who are actually creating the assistance for people.

There's a question that has been raised by one of them about the possibility of regulation of fees, particularly for private centres. Will the fees be regulated? How will they be set, and on what basis will they be set? This is an important question for them. They would like to know, with regard to fees, how that's going to be managed or how it's going to be regulated and how that will compare with the cost of government-run facilities.

There's also clearly expected to be an increased cost to participants in some cases. For many people finding treatment is an extremely expensive proposition. Residential treatment is not cheap anywhere. Is this going to push the cost up again in a way that will exclude some people and actually create fewer people being able to take advantage of addiction treatment?

There are questions about how this will influence AADAC. AADAC was originally created as a forum or as a context where Albertans could help Albertans. There has always been a huge value of humans helping humans. I get a little bit concerned if we take the idea that all help has to be somehow elitist or somehow professional, as if ordinary people can't help ordinary people. In many cases it's friends, it's neighbours, it's family that stick with people that have addictions challenges, that walk with them through the journey, that pick up the pieces with them over and over and over again. I think it's important that we somehow in the midst of this preserve the idea that all Albertans actually have something to contribute to this conversation because it impacts their families, it impacts their lives, and it impacts their jobs. So I think that we really do need to make sure that this does not make it somehow exclusive in the sense that Albertans can't help Albertans, can't participate in that.

It's been an ongoing challenge for new treatment centres to open. Sometimes it takes real spontaneity and creativity. I can cite two, for example, that are somewhat unique to the average, run-of-the-mill centre. In my riding there's one out in the country. It's out in a very rural area. It was started by, actually, a worker from Fort McMurray who used to work up there or do some contracting up there. His daughter was killed by an alcoholic in a driving accident. Rather than just get mad and be mad at the world forever, this individual chose to try to do something about it. He began to start to work just with people that he knew. He slowly built up a counselling centre. He has professional staff on-site. He has detox on-site with 24-hour medical people available. He's expanded. He now has another one in Kelowna, one on the east coast, one in California and is still growing. The kind of innovation and creativity and spontaneity that he was able to exhibit to create a centre that now touches, has touched over the years hundreds of people's lives.

I'm concerned when government regulation gets in the way and prevents those kinds of very good things from happening in Alberta. I hope this doesn't become an issue where those kinds of new initiatives are restrained, are prevented through excessive regulation, where these kinds of good works for Albertans are no longer able to happen.

I was also going to say that the other centre, of course, is in Calgary. A lady there, whose daughter also was having addictions issues, has been able to create some addictions treatment by really using the challenge and the effort and the discipline and the training of running. By taking patients and working with them and challenging them to get to the point where they can run marathons, it helps them to get their lives under control, to develop some of the discipline and the inner strength to overcome. It's their own counselling. Again, something that probably wouldn't start in a traditional professional sense, a very creative, innovative, unique, spontaneous kind of approach, and yet it's proven itself to be a very effective way of helping certain individuals find a way to manage and to deal with their addictions issues.

In each of these cases unique and creative stories of how Albertans are helping Albertans, and I think that's an important piece that we need to not lose in the rush to regulate everything.

Other questions have been raised. Who will be doing the inspections? Who will be going around and certifying and approving? The point was made by a couple of different people that, hopefully, it's somebody with both credentials and also real experience, someone who's actually worked in the field. To just send someone around with theoretical knowledge, with academic training, and straight out of school but with no real experience isn't likely to be very effective, so it's one of the concerns that was raised.

Quite frankly, to be blunt, the statement was made that we really hope it doesn't become a nitpicky, rule-driven situation versus one with common sense. Sometimes we get too much government regulation, and rules become more important than actually helping people and actually creating human, innovative, creative, engaging ways of helping people. It will be good to have some guidelines, but there are certainly some questions. There are certainly some concerns.

I think also that there are challenges going forward with how things will be defined. What will be the impact of those kinds of definitions? For instance, who will be providing the training for residential addiction, and again how do new ones ever get started? We certainly, clearly, need more than we have in our province right now. So where does this professional development come from? I mean, there have been many, many studies done that in many cases professional counselling doesn't even work, that people statistically have as much success on their own as they do with so-called high-level professional training.

Is this going to become a very siloed, single-focused model of treatment based only and entirely on a medical model when, in fact, the problems that in many cases bring people to addictions in the first place are not medical? They're personal, they're social, they're economic, they're spiritual, and sometimes if you don't address these underlying issues, the addiction isn't actually dealt with in a way that's helpful.

Then how much will all this cost? What is the licensing cost to the facilities? What is the licensing going to involve for the government to manage all of this? I think these are important questions. We have no idea what this is supposed to cost.

Will standardization of practices – I've kind of already said this – create a single model or a very narrow focus of what counselling or, particularly, addiction treatment centres can actually look like? Again, as I've just outlined, two unique, different models, one out in the country, where being out in the country, out of the rush of the city has proven to be a very helpful environment for a lot of clients. Will this exclude the opportunity for private facilities to even operate or to begin? Much the same as I would argue for choice in education, I think those with addictions ought to have the opportunity of choice in treatment. Not every facility, not every model works for everyone. One size does not fit all, and unless we allow an openness and a freedom to create many useful forms of service – we need a diversity of service in this as well. If we really believe in diversity, then the policies and the regulations need to reflect that. They need to be supportive of that. So a couple of those questions.

I think those are my main points, my main concerns. I think that I will leave it at that, and hopefully we'll get some answers, as we move forward, to some of these kinds of things.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Pleased to rise and speak today to Bill 30, Mental Health Services Protection Act, and at the outset to congratulate the minister and the government for taking on what is obviously a thorny issue after so many years of neglect. Somehow in this province we have allowed practitioners to put up a sign that says that they can do such-and-such in the mental health area but that they can't do it in the physical health area or in any other profession: law, engineering. It's long overdue that we put some kind of standard in place, training requirements, consistent evaluation, ongoing education, evidence that they are moving with the times and learning new approaches to mental health and addictions issues, the most complex issues that our society deals with.

It is eminently reasonable that we use the best available evidence and ensure that we not only license people that are capable of providing the services they say they are but evaluate them in an ongoing way so that we don't allow slippage, so that we don't allow incompetence, so that we don't allow some of the failures that we have experienced in our own personal lives through a failure to either see the right professional or be referred to the right professional or have those professionals accountable for results.

I guess I would have to say that the whole system suffers from a lack of evaluation, whether it's medical doctors or others. We need a rigorous system of evaluation that points to issues that are not satisfactory either in terms of personal competence or in the practice of referral, when people recognize that it's beyond them and refer to someone else whom they feel has the competence to deal with that particular issue, or if it's an institution that is providing suboptimal environments for healing and health to develop.

I was very much involved with the organizations under the acronym FACT, the Federation of Associations of Counselling Therapists and their 13 associations, who have been pressing this for several years. I supported them and was very pleased to see the minister take the time, create the energy around this, and provide some leadership that would ensure that people do get appropriate referrals, appropriate treatment, at least to the best of our knowledge. That includes, as I say, continuing education for these folks, because we have to be evaluating, researching, and learning all the time to provide the best, especially in a society that's changing as quickly as ours. The stresses upon us clearly are changing with the times given, for example, the virtual reality that we now live in and the tremendous impact of social media and the new addictions that we're identifying in relation to social relationships and issues, including the different drug problems.

I was pleased to see this come forward. I have a few concerns about some of the sections, and I'll raise those in passing, but for the record this bill does create a new college of counselling therapy to oversee and regulate the profession, oversee training, licensing, continuing education, and sanctioning when there is a failure to meet standards. It requires residential addiction treatment facilities to be licensed, which will empower the province to enforce minimum standards and to address complaints. Part of the concern I have is that if the province can enforce minimum standards, what's the role of the college in enforcing minimum standards? I think one of the questions has to be: what is the role of the province versus the role of the college in terms of individual centres and individual practitioners? The residential treatment facilities will be able to apply for a licence for up to four years, starting July 2019, and will need to have something in place by November 1.

This is all good. Licensing and inspection and evaluation are all, I think, going to improve the protection of the public. In response to complaints, section 9 of the bill permits facility licences to be amended, suspended, or revoked, and inspectors can enforce standards by issuing stop orders and administrative penalties of up to $10,000 a day. All those, I think, are consistent with our standards for seniors' care, for example, and they need to be present for all public services as far as I'm concerned.

Section 24 troubles me a bit in that it authorizes the minister to give directions to a service provider or any other person for the purposes of this Act where the Minister considers it to be

- (a) in the public interest, or
- (b) appropriate for the purpose of providing for matters related to health or safety.

Again, this muddies the waters, I think, unless it's more clear than I recognize, in relation to practitioners' quality versus the institutional setting and how far the government will step in where there's an ambiguity around whether it's the working conditions or the environment versus the quality of care provided by the individual practitioners, where the college should rightly have the primary role.

Section 29(2) protects the designation "psychotherapist" for the exclusive use of the college of counselling therapy, the College of Alberta Psychologists, and the College of Physicians & Surgeons. Section 29(3) creates a new college of counselling therapy to regulate the profession and set standards for education and licensing and the titles of counselling therapist, addiction counsellor, drug and alcohol counsellor, child and youth care counsellor. These are specific expertise areas that really do need to be clarified. Training is somewhat unique, and it should be. The research has pushed us to new levels of understanding of family dynamics, child development, the need to distinguish between adult and child therapy, whether it's in addictions areas or other mental health issues. So I am pleased to see that.

Currently the residential addictions treatment facilities are not subject to inspections and are not required to follow minimum standards. This has to change, and I'm pleased to see that with the passage of Bill 30, Alberta will become one of three Canadian provinces to regulate residential addiction treatment centres and the fifth to regulate mental health counsellors. So we're making progress, as far as I'm concerned.

Now, the devil is in the details. What standards are we going to require? What level of evidence will we base some of our evaluations on? One has to believe that in the process of evaluation we'll provide the best of evidence from around the world, that we will set standards that are world class, that we will have evaluators and accreditation experts that have looked at the literature, that have gotten a balance between the rigid medical model, which I heard the previous member mention – I would say the rather narrow focus of the medical model – and the need to expand that model much more broadly around mental health and addiction services to the social, to the spiritual, to the environmental and other dimensions of well-being.

With the passage of Bill 30, 65 per cent of clinical facilities in the province, which are privately operated, and 5,000 currently unregulated practitioners will be brought under some kind of an umbrella of oversight, which, to me, speaks to why we have a postsecondary institution. We set standards, we train by standards, and we evaluate by standards. It's imperfect, but it's the best we have, and we have to bring that to bear on the mental health and addictions system.

I'm interested to note that Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous will be exempt from these. I'm not quite sure why, but I suppose it's partly because they don't enjoy the same public funding. I'd be interested to know more about that.

The lack of clarity around where the government has a role to intervene and where the college has a role to intervene in quality-of-care services: it's not yet a clear area to me, and maybe it needs to be fleshed out in the regulations as it is with other colleges, where it is more clear what the institutional responsibility is and what the professional responsibility is for quality of care and ethical practice guidelines.

I see very little in this to cause consternation except for the timelines. Let me say, as my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster has pointed out, that this could impose a significant increased cost. No doubt. It's worth it as far as I'm concerned to provide some security and accountability for those systems, but how will we deal with grandfathering those who are competent, who are effective, who are successful in their programs? To pull them out of their setting and force them to do a degree program or to do something to provide a whole new standard of degree is inappropriate. There needs to be some grandfathering over a period of five to 10 years for those who have been in practice for years and who have demonstrated a level of clinical competence, not necessarily academic competence. I'm sure the minister is considering how to deal with transitioning and the timing that's required for that as well as the respect for those who have learned on the job.

Here I'm thinking also of what are called peer counsellors. Peer counsellors and people with lived experience, former addicts, people with bipolar disorder, those who have been effectively cared for and managed to heal to whatever extent they can and to be treated successfully. They are tremendous potential candidates for therapy, for being in group therapy, for being one-on-one counsellors. They have a tremendous life experience that must not be dismissed and must not be sidelined simply because we establish a college that needs to, indeed, set some standards for training and some standards for evaluation.

This transition is going to be critically important. It could be very harmful to some communities. It could be very harmful to getting the results we want if the cost becomes prohibitive for individuals to pull out of what they're doing to establish a new credential in a short period of time. That cannot happen. We have too much stress on the system at the present time. We need these people to stay, in many cases, exactly where they are, do what they do but to offer them the opportunity to upgrade, to learn new skills, new approaches to addictions and mental health issues. It should be a bonus for them, to not penalize them but, in fact, add value to their own lives and to their own work.

I'm quite supportive of this next stage in Alberta's mental health and addictions programming, and I applaud the government for bringing this forward at a very challenging time in our history. That very challenge with the opiate crisis, with the new methamphetamine crisis, with the suicide challenges, the mental health issues that are increasing in our society: it begs even more the need to set standards and to have some confidence in where this whole service area is going. I think this is a very positive step in the right direction.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise tonight to speak to Bill 30. I want to say from the outset that in general I support the intent of this bill, and I support the notion that mental health and addictions treatment facilities should be brought under some form of regulatory purview and that this is required. But as my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View just correctly pointed out, there are concerns that have been raised by existing organizations that have a long track record of successfully working within the addictions treatment area.

I want to specifically talk tonight about one such recovery centre that is in my constituency, the Thorpe Recovery Centre. The Thorpe Recovery Centre was founded in Lloydminster in 1975, 43 years ago, by a gentleman by the name of Walter A. "Slim" Thorpe as well as Ron Harris Sr. These two gentlemen, who were absolutely instrumental in getting the recovery centre going, recognized the need within the city of Lloydminster for an addictions treatment and detox facility, and they set up a two-bed facility in an old nurses' residence that was no longer being used for that purpose in Lloydminster. From those humble beginnings in 1988 a 30-bed facility in Lloydminster was constructed. Most recently in 2012 I attended along with former Premier Alison Redford when the 72-bed Thorpe Recovery Centre was officially opened, a 54,000 square foot facility just west of Lloydminster near the community of Blackfoot.

I give that background, Madam Speaker, because the Thorpe Recovery Centre has a 43-year track record of providing absolutely essential and outstanding treatment to literally thousands of individuals. I'm always gratified when I hear the issue of addictions treatment and when this issue comes up in the popular media and when I hear it discussed on various radio programs, with the number of people that refer to having been former clients of the Thorpe Recovery Centre in Lloydminster. This is truly an outstanding facility. It is a facility that is not-for-profit. It has a volunteer board of directors, an extremely hard-working staff, and is running with some significant financial challenges. The Member for Calgary-Acadia, the former Associate Minister of Health, is well aware of the Thorpe Recovery Centre. She was very helpful in terms of providing support, and I wish to thank her for that this evening.

But the Thorpe Recovery Centre is having some challenges financially. We have invited the Minister of Health to visit the centre, and we certainly hope that at some point she takes us up on that invitation. I think she will be impressed like everybody else who has toured the centre not just with the building but with the whole ethic, the whole culture of the Thorpe Recovery Centre. When it celebrated its 40th anniversary three years ago, Scott Oake, the noted CBC television sports personality who tragically lost a son as a result of addictions a few years ago, was the keynote speaker at that event. I can tell you that the impact of having a professional detox facility, a professional addictions treatment facility, a facility that does not just treat addiction of alcohol but also addiction of various drugs, of gambling, of sex, of a wide variety of things that we as human beings are susceptible to – the Thorpe Recovery Centre is there, and it has been there for many, many years.

When Bill 30 was introduced, I immediately got in touch with the Thorpe Recovery Centre, and I said: "What do you think? How would this impact you, an organization that has been operating and operating with a level of success for many, many years?" There are a number of significant concerns. Once again, they said that they welcomed the opportunity to be licensed, to be regulated and that they hoped that that accreditation would open the doors to additional clients from other parts of Canada because I know there is some disappointment that despite its location both the Alberta and the Saskatchewan governments fund a very small number of beds within that facility. The vast majority of the beds are funded privately, quite often by employers of people who are facing addictions.

While licensing will offer opportunities, there's a lot of ambiguity within the bill that caused concern for the recovery centre. For example, in section 7, the licensing fees: what are those fees? What are all those fees going to be? They're to be set at some point in the future, but for a not-for-profit organization that is already running on a very tight budget, that is already running in many cases with a lot of volunteer labour, an additional licensing fee, especially if that fee is for a license that has to renewed annually, is a concern. My own feeling would be that that licensing term should be no less than three years and preferably the full four years that is being suggested in the legislation.

There is concern that requires that the staff be regulated members of the college of counselling therapy. Again, I certainly want to echo the comments of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. It's not just about your academic accreditation and qualifications. There's a gentleman in Lloydminster who two years ago was a guest of the Crown, I guess we could call it. He was in and out of prison and remand centres on a regular basis. He was fortunate in that he got the necessary counselling services to address the underlying mental health issue that he had that was causing his addiction, that was driving his criminal activity. Today that gentleman, Tyler Lorenz, has opened a counselling organization in Lloydminster called Residents in Recovery, where he provides counselling services and just support services and education to people trying to escape from a life of addiction that Tyler is incredibly familiar with, and he became familiar with it the hard way. Tyler is an individual who went to school and got a certificate in addictions counselling, but does he qualify under these regulations? Would he be able to be at that facility? It's unclear. There are concerns about that.

There are concerns about the penalties, you know, that it's not to exceed $10,000, but here again we are talking about an organization that operates on a very tight budget. It is extremely efficient, and a good chunk of their budget comes through donations from the general public. A $10,000 penalty for what may be a clerical error would be a significant impact to that organization, so they have a concern about that.

Another area that they pointed out to me is under section 12(1) in terms of notice of inspection, where under 12(1) currently there's no requirement for any notice or previous indication of an inspector visiting the facility. I can tell you that in a residential addictions treatment facility that is just plain unfair. This facility is the people's home, and to have an inspector walk in unannounced is simply unfair and can cause significant setback and damage to their treatment. The suggested minimum period for some form of notice that I've received from the Thorpe is four hours. Now, if you've got major problems in your facility, four hours is not enough time to gloss over the problems in your facility, not even close. But it is enough time to let your residents know that you're going to be receiving a visit from an inspector and that if they are uncomfortable being seen by that person or that sort of thing, that they know that there will be a stranger in their midst.

Now, I've visited the Thorpe Recovery Centre a number of times, but I will tell you that each and every time that I go, I'm very well informed that there are folks I won't see that will be staying in their rooms, or they'll be staying in areas that are not open to the general public simply because they don't feel comfortable with people from the general public in their home.

So I will be planning in committee on moving an amendment to at least mandate a minimum four-hour notice period, which I think is only fair. When I was in veterinary practice, Madam Speaker, we were inspected every three years by a practice inspector, and we received one day's notice that that practice inspector was coming. That was certainly very helpful because it meant that we could make sure that the things that were necessary for the practice inspector to see were readily available to them and that we had at least one staff member available on that date to tour them through our hospital. If they arrive unannounced on one of the busiest days of the year or a day where you have got, you know, an incredible amount of other things going on, again, in my view, it is simply unfair to the facility. This is another concern that I have and that I share with the Thorpe Recovery Centre.

Critical incident reporting is another facet that concerns the Thorpe Recovery Centre. What about the critical incidents that happen after an individual leaves the care of the facility? If that individual should happen to have something serious like, for example, a suicide attempt after they leave the care, the truth of the matter is that the facility is only able to track that individual if they stay in touch with the facility through one of their alumni programs. If they by their own choice decide not to do that and they have a critical incident, there is no way that facilities like this can be aware that they've happened. So because of that, how can they do the reporting that is mandated under this?

There are additional concerns about duplication between AHS and Alberta Health, and I'm sure that this is probably already causing my colleague to smile because this is a favourite topic of his. There's ambiguity within the legislation as to whether now these recovery facilities are responsible to AHS, with whom some of these facilities have contracts and are required to report to, or Alberta Health and whether they, in fact, now will have to report to both, which, in my view, is an unnecessary duplication and requires additional administration. Clearly, these facilities want to put their limited resources into counselling and treatment and not into administrative overburden.

For example, once again in the reporting of critical incidents, under the service contract of AHS the Thorpe centre is currently required to report critical incidents to AHS. Now under this legislation it's expected to be reporting to Alberta Health as well. The concern that the Thorpe has communicated to me and that I wanted to talk about today is that while they welcome accreditation and they welcome the idea that somebody is going to monitor and regulate organizations like theirs and they have absolutely no concern because they're already accredited under the national addictions treatment centres, they are concerned with the additional costs that this will confer upon these facilities.

I want to say one other thing. The Thorpe Recovery Centre operates near Blackfoot, Alberta. The closest large centre is Lloydminster, but it is very much a rural located centre. It is not easy to recruit qualified staff to that centre, and if these qualified staff members have to go for repeated reaccreditation visits and if they can't get that accreditation done within the centre and have to travel to Edmonton or Calgary and if they have to do it every year and if there is a fee involved in being part of an accredited college, that's yet another additional cost that has to be borne either by the counsellor or borne by their employer.

Some of these costs may not sound like they add up to a lot, but I can tell you, from having many conversations with people at the Thorpe, that they will tell you that every penny is very carefully scrutinized. All they see in this piece of legislation are additional costs, and they don't necessarily see a great deal of additional benefit because many of these things are already being done in some way, shape, or form. That said, they're not opposed to the idea of scrutiny. They welcome scrutiny because they're proud of the work they do.

Madam Speaker, I have concerns about Bill 30. I will support Bill 30, but we certainly hope that in these last days of this fall session the government is open to looking at some amendments that I think would improve it and would certainly assist with organizations that are already operating. I would restate and certainly repeat my invitation to the Health minister to attend and to visit the Thorpe Recovery Centre because I'm sure that she will be very impressed with what we are doing.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I was going to try to keep all of my remarks until the end of debate, but I think that there are a few questions I want to address now that were raised by the hon. member and that relate to the questions from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View as well.

I just want to begin by saying that the reason why AA, NA, faith-based therapies, volunteers, MAT program shelters, people with lived experience who aren't calling themselves counselling therapists are excluded is because they're working in a peer support environment or drawing on that lived experience. They're not calling themselves counsellors. That's why they themselves wouldn't be part of the college, because they're coming at it from a different skill set and a different level of expertise, but they also have a different trust relationship with the client.

I think back to a piece of legislation that we just passed earlier this session around protecting patients accessing health care services. The level of engagement with somebody who calls themselves a counselling therapist: when it comes to that level of engagement and trust, the risk that could be in place around sexual assault and those types of things speaks to why it's so important that we actually do bring about a licensing process and a college and that we move this profession so that with that level of trust – as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has said, many people have hung a shingle and called themselves counselling therapists and put themselves in that position of trust – there will be a level of responsibility. That's the role of a college, any college in any governed profession. I did want to respond to that in relation to this question that was asked.

The other piece I just want to say is that we use the same baseline around inspections that we have for the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act that would apply to long-term care, and it's also the same licensing that we have for foster homes. Certainly, I believe that long-term care facilities and foster homes are homes for the residents that live there. I think that because of that it's important that we have that level of privacy honoured, obviously, but also that level of safety and confidence in a facility. The language around inspections was pulled specifically from those two pieces of legislation, where we also believe people are living in a home, to have it in alignment with that, that somebody living with a substance use condition not be treated any differently than somebody else who has another health condition that's requiring long-term care. That's where we got the inspection language.

I'll just deal with those two points at this time, and I'd be happy to respond to additional questions in closing, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to raise a question with the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I have some difficulty in inspections being planned and predictable. I think that where there are some really unhealthy and unfortunate things going on in institutions, we need to find that out by showing up at unexpected times. It may well be true that it's inconvenient and that it discomforts some people. But would he not say that in the public interest, the patient interest, we do have to have unannounced inspections to uncover some unsavoury things that you would not otherwise identify?

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, with the greatest respect to my colleague, I'm specifically talking about the specific centre that I represent. I have a high level of confidence that even if you did walk in with zero notice, they would happily and easily pass any inspection. But this is the level of the concern that they have for their clientele, and they are protective of their clientele.

With all due respect to the Health minister, I do think there is a difference between a detox or an addictions treatment centre and the protection of privacy that the clients of those centres deserve and a residential or a long-term care facility. I absolutely think it's a different level. So I don't think you can just simply carte blanche lift a section out of another piece of legislation, that may well work fine for that piece of legislation, and transplant it into something like this. I think that had the time been taken to talk to people in addictions treatment – perhaps that time was taken, but certainly nobody talked to the Thorpe – they would have been happy to offer that piece of advice.

You know, with due respect, I don't disagree with what my colleague says with regard to finding out about unsavoury practices, but four hours will not allow you to cover up an unsavoury practice. I can tell you that right now. But four hours will at least allow you to provide a dignified level of notice to vulnerable persons who are receiving addictions treatment at a time in their lives when they, too, are vulnerable. I think it's incredibly important that we provide that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise in the House today to speak to Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act. I'd like to start by acknowledging that this government has chosen to respond to two very real and important issues that are facing our province. Maintaining good mental health services is really crucial if we are going to help our most vulnerable within society. The attempts to do this through the creation of the college of counselling therapy aims to bring accountability to our mental health professionals. It also brings in mandatory licensing for addiction treatment centres, which will hopefully increase the level of care provided to those that are requiring these services.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

This legislation is coming at a time when the mental health needs of our province have continued to plummet due to the difficult economic times and the deterioration of our mental health services. This is especially the case in my riding of Fort McMurray-Conklin. As is the case after most serious natural disasters or tragedies, the demand and need of mental health services increased substantially. In fact, there was some research that was released at the end of October of 2018, just a few months ago, that suggests that the effects of the fire are still lingering within my community, and they're continuing to see an increased rate of depression and other related mental health issues. The survey based its research on about 486 responses that were completed using a standard psychiatric test to assess the mental health effects of the fire, and then through this research it found that close to 15 per cent of the respondents were suffering from some form of depressive disorder. It's worth noting that the average rate in Alberta is about 3.3 per cent, so this is still staggeringly high compared to the Alberta average.

It also found that those with depressive disorders were far more likely to have alcohol abuse and substance disorders. The research also found that emotional and social supports were absolutely elemental in ensuring the resilience of people. It found that people that received little to no support were 13 times more likely to have a depressive disorder compared to those that did. It also found that those with a depressive disorder were substantially more likely to have substance abuse or alcohol abuse issues.

Under this government we've seen the mental health budget nearly double, yet we haven't seen any real result increases with that doubling. We've seen that of 74 per cent of children and youth that are offered mental health service treatment – that's down from 89 per cent in 2014-2015 – unfortunately, only 64 per cent of these children and youth actually end up receiving the mental health treatments that they're seeking, which is down from 82 per cent in 2014-2015. We have a long ways to go, and I hope that this bill actually serves to make this better.

As I stated earlier, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are suffering, and the need to have access to appropriate services is more important now than ever. I'm glad to see that this government has closed some of the gaps in our services and is aiming to address them. For example, by establishing a college of counselling therapy, we will hopefully restore confidence in our counselling professionals and ensure that all Albertans are receiving the absolute highest standard of care available. Through regulations established by the college, we will hopefully be able to ensure that all professionals calling themselves counsellors will have adequate credentials, education, or life experience to be able to provide Albertans with the care they need. Right now anyone in Alberta can state that they're a counsellor, and that can be really misleading to those that are really requiring this help.

One of the things that I find might be especially of benefit is that the college will also be able to hold its regulated members accountable for their actions. I truly believe that accountability is so important in our society, and I think that that's a really good step in the right direction. But as we've seen in the past, colleges don't always have the tools they need to deal with the issues that they face. In fact, the government is going to have to continue to work with this college to ensure that the outcome and the interests of Albertans are always at the forefront and are the top priority. It will also help to create a higher standard of care for all Albertans.

This government seems to have done some consultations before tabling this bill, which I'm very grateful to see. Consultation prior to tabling a bill is something that I believe is truly invaluable, and I was happy to hear that all 14 counselling associations were consulted and are in favour of this change. However, I must admit that upon doing some consultations of our own, I was disappointed to find out that the government neglected to consult with the Canadian Addiction Counsellors Certification Federation, which represents about a fifth of all counsellors in Alberta, including indigenous addictions counsellors, international addictions counsellors, national defence addictions counsellors, amongst others, and as we've heard from some of my colleagues, facilities in their communities also were not consulted.

By creating a medical college, we can also have some negative aspects. For instance, we've heard that smaller associations might feel like they have fewer rights when they're grouped in with larger associations in the same college. It's also harder for regulations to address each individual association's needs. As we've come to learn, a one-size-fits-all system often doesn't work, but I really do hope that the college will do its best to meet the needs of all of the 14 existing associations.

The licensing aspect of the residential addiction treatment centres also has some positive aspects. For instance, it establishes who is able to open a residential addiction treatment centre by requiring licensing. Currently any person or organization can open up a centre, regardless of their qualifications, education, or experience. While this can be a major benefit, this can also be a downside, and this bill will help to ensure that all centres are maintaining the highest standard of care for those with addictions.

The collection of records and reporting to a director will ensure that the standard of care is maintained over the long term, allowing facilities to perhaps find and identify trends. However, it's often difficult to get these statistics as many of these organizations operate, as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster indicated earlier, where they don't necessarily have the long-term aspects unless the patients themselves choose to join in the alumni statistics.

Furthermore, mandatory inspections will help ensure that the centres are meeting a level of service that Albertans would expect. However, as was previously pointed out, there are some concerns around the inspections and the timing and making sure that everyone within the facility feels safe and at home. Typically when you're at one of these addiction centres, you're not necessarily there at the best times of your life, so making sure that there's adequate protection for these people that are already feeling very vulnerable is, to me, something very important.

One thing that really does worry me is that we can only assume that licensing will come with some kind of a cost to the facility and the organization. These facilities are often nonprofit organizations and are run by grants and donations, with very limited government funding. I'm concerned that from some of the facilities I've reached out to, they're very concerned with what the cost of the licensing will be and how long the licence will last. If they have to get relicensed every year, that could add some financial burdens as well as some serious administrative burdens. In fact, we heard from stakeholders who have expressed serious concerns about the potential cost increases that may come down the road and how they might be able to even accommodate these.

The increased regulations will result in higher credentials being required to provide these services, and while we must ensure that Albertans are receiving the highest standard of care, we also must ensure that these services remain viable over the long term. There's value in having a variety of different counselling options available. One size, method, or option does not work for all seeking assistance.

Furthermore, the vague definition of residential treatment centres is also alarming as many services may potentially be impacted. For example, it seems to me that a homeless shelter might possibly fit into the definition put forward by the bill. This bill could also potentially increase the cost to taxpayers at a time when Alberta's economy is already suffering. For me, there are way too many unanswered questions in the legislation, and I hope that this government will give us some time to find some of these answers. I think that that would be extremely helpful, if we can get some of these answers. I'd like to ask the government: how much will the increased regulations cost the centres affected? What is the cost of the licensing? How long will the licensing last? Like I said, we've had multiple stakeholders express concern over the cost, and to me this is a very real issue. How does the government intend to maintain the viability of these services as the costs rise? Mr. Speaker, did the government intend for this bill to have such wide-ranging implications? Do we perhaps need to tighten up the language on the definition to make sure that it's truly serving the intended goal?

With that, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 31

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Government House Leader I move second reading of Bill 31, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any speakers to Bill 31?

Seeing and hearing none, are we ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services to close debate.

Larivee: Yes, I would like to close debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

Bill 32

City Charters Fiscal Framework Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise today and move second reading of Bill 32, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act.

Last week, when I stood together with the Minister of Finance and the mayor of Edmonton, I said that it was truly a historic day. Our province is entering a new era in the provincial-municipal partnership. I emphasize the word "partnership" because for the first time the province and our two largest cities have come together on a fiscal approach that works for everyone. If passed, this act will provide permanent, predictable funding for local infrastructure. As we all know, local infrastructure is vital to Albertans. It connects people to their families and friends and workers to their jobs. It enables trade and can help spur development.

Mr. Speaker, more than half of Albertans live in Calgary or Edmonton. This act will have a direct impact on the quality of life for 2 million plus people. A historic partnership will help Edmonton and Calgary build the infrastructure they need, in a way that the province can, to move forward. This framework also delivers certainty to the cities by recognizing that they're partners in our growing economy and should share in both the good and the tough times.

This framework respects the province's path to balance and is fiscally responsible. Specifically, it will move people and goods more efficiently with better roads and bridges. It will improve the quality of life for families who rely on rec centres, pools, arenas, and parks. It will increase the safety of residents, with more fire halls, police stations, and water and waste-water systems and will reduce emissions through stronger mass transit systems.

Bill 32 would also legislate historic long-term transit funding for Calgary and Edmonton so they can build out their transit networks, create jobs, reduce greenhouse gases, and make our cities better places to live and work. Starting in 2027, an additional $400 million will go to transit projects in these two cities every year. This money will come from the climate leadership plan revenues and create jobs, support the quality of life, and help protect our environment now and into the future. Edmonton and Calgary are two of the fastest growing municipalities in Alberta, and as their populations increase, so does the demand for robust transit networks. We want to make it easier and faster for Calgarians and Edmontonians to commute throughout their city, access essential services, and travel to and from work and school.

As many members of this Assembly know, we have been working towards a new funding agreement with our two biggest cities over the past number of months. The process began as part of the work to create city charters for Edmonton and Calgary. Charters recognize that our two largest cities need a little more flexibility in how they operate so they can continue to build strong, vibrant, world-class cities that attract trade and investment, and I'm proud to say that we were able to come to an agreement for a new fiscal framework.

I'm sure many of the members who represent constituents outside of Edmonton and Calgary will want to know about the rest of the province. There are, in fact, 340 other municipalities that also want a permanent, predictable funding program. To these members, I say: we are working on this. We recognize that all municipalities require stable, predictable infrastructure funding, and that is certainly our intent. Right now we are working with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Rural Municipalities of Alberta on a replacement program for all municipalities. The associations wanted more time to review the approach and talk to their members before they signed on. I certainly respect that need. The good news is that we do have time. MSI does not expire until 2022, and all municipalities, including Edmonton and Calgary, will continue to receive MSI up until that point.

Now, turning to the details in this proposed bill, the funding is split into two parts, general infrastructure funding and funding specific to transit. Let's start with the general infrastructure funding. This is the portion that could be considered the replacement for what is now MSI. In the first year of the framework, which is fiscal '22-23, the two cities will share $500 million. The exact split will be determined based on a formula that takes into account things like fuel sales, population, and kilometres of roads. Our current estimate is that Calgary will receive about $289 million and Edmonton about $211 million. Importantly, this funding is tied to provincial revenues. Edmonton and Calgary are partners in our growing economy, and revenue sharing recognizes this contribution. The cities will receive more funding in good times, when revenues are growing, but also less when times are tough. That's a true partnership.

Looking at the transit portion, the two cities will share $400 million each year, split down the middle. This funding will kick in in 2027, once the current LRT funding agreements are complete. Funding for transit will come from revenues generated under the climate leadership plan. This is an important link to make since investment in mass transit allows us to make GHG reductions. For those of us who believe in taking action to fight climate change, that's a big step in the right direction.

Overall, this is a significant piece of legislation, one that will help Edmonton and Calgary attract investment, support growth, and create jobs. It is equally important to note that this is an approach that we can afford as a province as it supports our path to balance. Mr. Speaker, this is the type of approach that the cities have been looking for. We listened, and we delivered.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to see you in the chair this evening, sir. Good evening, everyone. Thank you to the minister for his presentation. It's my privilege tonight to speak to Bill 32 briefly. It's called the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act. A bit of background, I think, would be appropriate. Funding for Alberta's municipalities has been a struggle faced by successive governments here in Alberta. I think we've heard for years and years about predictable, sustainable funding. I know I have since I was elected in 2004 on a local council, and it was always a contentious issue then.

In fact, in 2007 the Stelmach government introduced the municipal sustainability initiative, or MSI, as we know it today, which is basically a provincial grant that helps support local infrastructure priorities and build strong, safe, and resilient communities. The grants have fewer strings attached than other municipal grants, and funding is based on a formula for distributing provincial funding for capital projects and is not necessarily project specific. MSI funding is allocated annually and paid to municipalities following legislative approval of the provincial budget, a submission of sufficient project applications, and submission and/or certification of statements of funding and expenditures.

It should be noted that the Stelmach government promised municipalities to provide almost $11.3 billion over 10 years.

However, MSI funding never really lived up to that promise too well over the years, in some cases. It only met those promised amounts twice annually, once in 2007 and again in 2014.

Now we get into some details. It actually has been based over the years on a funding formula. It's been something that was worked on by municipalities for a long time and has had widespread buy-in for many years from all of the major stakeholders because it was so complex that everyone was consulted. It's worked reasonably well, I should think.

It actually incorporates two different formulas, one for MSI and another for the basic transportation grant, which was an existing grant that was incorporated into funding allocations when MSI was first established. For MSI, the formula for this funding is a complex equation, and I think we probably have seen that. If you've looked at the bill, it's still there today. It's basically the same as what it's been. It is extremely complex, and it's based on municipal populations, education property tax, requisitions, kilometres of local roads, and it includes base funding for all municipalities and sustainable investment funding for municipalities with limited local assessment bases.

The transportation grant portion is based on municipal status, with Calgary and Edmonton receiving funding based on litres of taxable road-use gasoline and diesel fuel sold in the province, and the remaining cities and urban service areas based on a combination of population and the length of primary highways. Towns, villages, and summer villages, actually, improvement districts, and even the townsites of Redwood Meadows receive funding based on population only. Rural municipalities and Métis settlements receive funding based on a formula that takes into account, in their case, kilometres of open road, population, equalized assessment, and terrain, in fact.

Here today we are looking at a new bill that's been put together in an interesting way and presented here in this House. It's the first time I've seen a bill like this come forward where the actual agreement that the government is making in terms of funding to municipalities is brought to the House for discussion and debate. In the past they've just gone ahead and made these announcements over the years and worked with the municipalities to the best of their ability. But here we have a bill that's very complex because of the formulas, very complex because of the years that it spans.

I would like to say at this time, Mr. Speaker, that we're somewhat supportive of what is being proposed in the bill, but the new arrangement described therein is so complex that we have a lot of concerns and many questions that we look forward to debating in more detail in Committee of the Whole and during the rest of the bill process. It proposes to enshrine in legislation, therefore, a funding framework for the cities of Edmonton and Calgary that will replace, actually, the capital funding regime for them at this time.

According to the government website information, it says that if passed, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act would provide Edmonton and Calgary with infrastructure funding tied to provincial revenues.

I think the minister talked about this already. It would provide Edmonton and Calgary with a baseline of $500 million in the first year [apparently], split between the two cities [only]. This new agreement would replace the cities' Municipal Sustainability Initiative (MSI) funding when the program is complete in 2022.

The framework would also support growth in the Calgary and Edmonton regions with $400 million annually for long-term transit funding, split between the two cities.

And I underline: split between the two cities.

In addition:

A $50-million annual program to fund significant regional infrastructure projects that support economic development would also be introduced in 2022, supporting cooperation and collaboration between municipalities. One third of the funding would go to [also] the Calgary Metropolitan Region Board . . .

That's the new growth board they've put together.

. . . one third to the [existing] Edmonton Metropolitan Region Board . . .

That's been operating for several years now.

. . . and one third to other regional entities on a competitive basis.

That's interesting. There's not a lot of detail to that, but that's an interesting idea.

As a side note, all the other municipalities outside Edmonton and Calgary have not got a program ready to go yet, and I understand through the minister and some of the statements made tonight and earlier that they are working on that with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and also the Rural Municipalities of Alberta or what we used to know as the AAMD and C. But it's a very complex issue there with all the different sizes of municipalities, I suspect, and it's going to take some time, I would imagine, for those kinds of negotiations to come to a conclusion.

Looking at the new proposal, we see some benefits. It provides a stable, predictable, long-term funding model for Calgary and Edmonton. We have been talking about that for years, as I said earlier in this presentation, and it would appear that they have addressed this in some regard for the two cities. The amount is less than the cities received in the combined funding for 2014 to 2017, initially. The funding will result in cities more directly impacted by a fluctuation of provincial revenues. Calgary and Edmonton will have funding certainty when they are approving their capital and operating budgets, and we all know that they have to do these three-year plans and these five-year plans, so that certainly should be of help. However, we have quite a few concerns and questions that we will be raising slightly now but also in the Committee of the Whole process.

The first observation, among many that I'd like to make, is that this bill is extremely complex. We've basically got a negotiated settlement here in writing in the form of legislation. I would not like to have been necessarily at the table on some of these negotiations; it must have been extremely difficult. However, it would have been interesting to be there, I should think. What it does is it commits the province to funding levels regardless of the fiscal situation. That's an interesting little situation just in that statement itself. Another observation: the funding is linked to a carbon tax. Perhaps a questionable strategy these days. Based on a three-year delay, too, it may result in cities' funding increasing despite actual decreasing in provincial revenues during a downturn or a recession. There could be a little bit of a timeline issue there when you're working on a baseline two or three years in prior days.

Again, we do say that we've noticed that there's no deal with other urban or rural municipalities. This is going to give a little bit of concern to those other municipalities. Will this allocation therefore take away from other municipalities' allocations in the future? These are some of the things that we are hearing about these arrangements. Politically speaking, a lot of the other municipalities are saying: well, this is special treatment for the cities. We can understand how they might say that. It looks like there's going to be a future change to this funding agreement perhaps, therefore, and it will require, if that is the case, additional change to the process.

Another observation we have is that any changes to capital and transit funding will therefore have to be debated in the Legislature as a result of this, which, of course, may increase the public awareness but it certainly may increase the public involvement.

A bit of a note on something they released at the same time if I may. I know it's not a part of this bill, but they did release a large set of amendments to the existing city charter regulations. And with this change, that charter is going to be effective. There will be a number of regulatory changes that have the building industry and others in investment, in that type of world, greatly concerned. Of particular concern they have noted, wondering about off-site levies and inclusionary housing, where, in the case of these new regulations that are proposed with the bill, there are no quantifiers as to limits. They're very worried about that, and they just are not sure how far cities may go with their new freedom to put these additional burdens onto their industry and onto our economy. Will that perhaps have a little bit of a negative aspect to investment in Alberta? One has to ask these questions.

Now, despite the fact, as I've said, that these are not debated in the House, we will be looking forward to raising some of those questions during the debate in Committee of the Whole, especially because they coincide with this new funding model with the cities. So it is relevant that we talk about that.

So to conclude, Mr. Speaker, this is a complex bill. This is something new. We do have to be careful with it. We will be presenting our concerns during Committee of the Whole, as I've said, and I look forward to those discussions in the next couple of days.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other speakers to Bill 32?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak on Bill 32, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act. It's really my pleasure to help the minister and cosponsor of this bill as this is such an important bill, and it's such a great bill for Calgary and, of course, for Edmonton. But we mostly care about Calgary because it is the better city, obviously.

The municipal sustainability initiative, MSI, as we all know, will expire in fiscal year 2021-2022. Our government is committed to replacing the MSI program with a provincial revenue-sharing agreement for municipal infrastructure prior to its expiry. Discussions on a new program began with Edmonton and Calgary as part of city charter discussion for a new legislated fiscal framework to replace MSI and promote sustainability and predictability.

Now, as we all know, Calgary and Edmonton are two of the fastest growing municipalities in Alberta. To support that growth, the cities need permanent, predictable funding for their local infrastructure priorities. This historic partnership helps Edmonton and Calgary to build the infrastructure they need in a way that the province can afford. The cities need a permanent, predictable program that allows them to plan long-range projects. We listened, and with this bill we delivered. This framework delivers certainty to the cities by recognizing that they're partners in our growing economy and should share in both the good times and the tough times. This framework respects the province's path to balance and is fiscally responsible. The revenue-sharing agreement takes effect after the municipal sustainability initiative is complete in 2022. It's a historic and first-of-its-kind partnership in the country.

The province is also delivering on the transit needs of Calgarians and Edmontonians by legislating long-term transit funding. I'll touch on this a bit more in a couple of minutes. Now, we are building a long-term future together with our municipal partners and continue to work with AUMA and RMA to develop a funding agreement for all Alberta municipalities. We committed to having a new system operational by the time the MSI commitment expires and to legislate that system. That is still our commitment for all municipalities.

The City Charters Fiscal Framework Act provides Edmonton and Calgary with infrastructure funding that is tied to provincial revenues. We know that Calgary and Edmonton are partners in growing Alberta's economy, and this agreement recognizes that. Revenue sharing ensures that the cities receive more funding in good times when revenues are growing but also less when times are tough. This approach is consistent with our path to balance. It's fiscally sustainable and maintains the strong level of support our government has always had for municipalities. The cities have made it clear to us that they are prepared to accept both the risks and rewards of linking funding to provincial revenues.

Now to go back to long-term transit funding. The province is delivering on the transit needs of Calgarians and Edmontonians by legislating long-term transit funding. This historic, long-term transit funding will allow Calgary and Edmonton to build on their transit networks, create jobs, reduce greenhouse gases, and make our cities better places to live and work. Starting in 2027, an additional $400 million will go to transit projects in these two cities every year. Edmonton and Calgary are two of the fastest growing municipalities, like I already said, and as their populations increase, so does the demand for robust transit networks. That's something that previous governments before us have constantly failed on.

As we know, here in Edmonton it can be quite difficult, and even in Calgary, to get around on transit. It is impossible to get from one end of the city to the other in Edmonton just on the LRT, and that's not right. We need to make sure that our cities are sustainable and are looking towards the future. That's why our government was so proud to support the valley line here in Edmonton and the green line LRT in Calgary. They're vital to the infrastructure and the growth of our cities. That's why I'm so proud of this bill and our Minister of Municipal Affairs for really getting this work done. We deserve future cities where more companies want to invest, where companies know that if they do decide to move to Calgary or Edmonton, they're going to have that basic transit infrastructure that they need to support their workers. I'm very proud of this bill, and I'm very happy to support it. I really hope my colleagues will support it as well.

We want to make it easier and faster for Calgarians and Edmontonians to commute throughout their cities, access essential services, and travel to and from work and school. We have made a $3 billion commitment to Calgary and Edmonton for transit funding through the climate leadership plan, that has seen historic investments in the green line in Calgary and the valley line in Edmonton, like I already said. After that, this long-term transit investment will begin.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, this is really why this bill is important, to make sure, like I said, that our municipalities have the funding they need to grow, to make sure that our communities have access to the funds they need to improve upon themselves. Once again, I would ask all my colleagues in this House to support this bill and our minister.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: I'm trying to move a motion. You can do 29(2)(a).

The Acting Speaker: Okay.

Any other members under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, any other members? The Member for Rimbe- Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we go to one-minute bells for the duration of the evening both in and outside of Committee of the Whole.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 32? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

9:00

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to speak to Bill 32, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act. Now, this is an interesting kettle of fish, this particular bill. There's certainly things, I would say, to like, and there's things to wonder about. I just want to touch on some of those if you don't mind too much.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill to some degree is to replace the MSI, the municipal sustainability initiative, that was passed – I don't know – 10 or 15 years ago. Interestingly enough, the MSI was passed at a time when I was both on Calgary city council and on the AUMA board, which I think might make me just slightly unique in this Chamber right now. But here's a couple of the things that I remember when that was done back then. [interjection] The minister is making fun of me because I'm old.

An Hon. Member: I think you're special.

Mr. McIver: Oh, special. Okay. Special but not old, Minister, is that it? Okay. Thank you. I appreciate the clarification. He's still making fun of me, but that's all right. I'm okay with that, Minister.

So here's a couple of things that I think members of this House might find either interesting or instructive or, if none of that, I hope just slightly entertaining. Back then the municipalities, through the AUMA and the AAMD and C – the AAMD and C has now become the RMA. If you go back enough years, then that happens; sometimes things have changed their name. But at the time the government and the municipalities, both Calgary and Edmonton as well as all the other 300-plus municipalities in Alberta, had been talking for some time about a new fiscal framework, and the formula was actually done in a way that was somewhat ingenious by the provincial government.

Let me explain what I mean by that. With 300-plus municipalities, as you might imagine, when the government puts some money on the table and says that it is for municipal infrastructure and you're dealing with the largest municipality in Alberta with over a million people and the smallest municipality in Alberta with a population of probably somewhere in the neighbourhood of the hundreds instead of the thousands... [interjection] I appreciate that, Municipal Affairs minister. I don't know the exact number, and I don't want to be too far off it.

But the whole point is that there is a wide variation of audience for the particular plan that the government put forward at the time. The ingenious part would be, if you don't mind my saying – and I'm okay if everyone disagrees with me, but I think some of you might even agree with me – that the government said at the time: "We've got this much money to put on the table, about $1.2 billion, and you municipalities can have it, but you've got to figure out yourselves how to divide it up. So there it is. It's there in a bank account, and the minute you tell us how you've agreed to divide it, then you can have it." So you can imagine that that was quite a discussion. You know, with municipalities with populations in the hundreds and municipalities with populations in the millions all sitting around the table together determining how they're going to split up $1.2 billion.

I wasn't privy to all of those conversations. I was privy to some of them, and you can imagine that they were pretty entertaining, of course for proper reasons, because every elected person from every municipality, big or small, was doing their best to represent their own constituents in the way that was best for them. Of course, the larger municipalities said that what was best for their municipality is that they should split it up by population – done; let's go home; let's call it a victory – and the smaller municipalities said: not a chance; not a chance ever that we are going to agree to that. Some of them said something to the effect of, "What if we did it by kilometres of road and number of culverts?" something that would severely favour the smaller municipalities.

Mr. Strankman: Culverts are important.

Mr. McIver: I couldn't agree more, hon. member. Culverts are important; roads are important; population is important. It's all important.

But my whole point here is that there is a diverse audience when it comes to municipal funding agreements. As a result of that, then there was a fairly complex agreement that I would dare say had the government of the day – and this is why I think it's ingenious. Had the government of the day come forward and said, "This is the formula that we are imposing upon you, and you all have to sign off on it," I would suggest to you that 330 out of the 340 or 350 municipalities would have said: no way. But by having the municipalities come up with the formula, then they agreed to it before it went to the government.

I think that you've got to admit that was a little bit ingenious in order to bring agreement to a group that isn't – while they're all nice people, and they understand each other's problems, they wouldn't naturally agree on this unless, of course, they had to in order to get their mitts on $1.2 billion. Given that challenge, they rose to that challenge, and they came up with an agreement. And that was pretty fantastic.

Madam Speaker, this is a little bit different. This is where the government has gone to the two largest municipalities, Calgary and Edmonton, saying: we're going to cut you a special deal; it doesn't mean we're going to be bad to the other municipalities. The government didn't say that, and I won't accuse them of it. It doesn't say: we're going to be better than the other municipalities. The government didn't say that either, and I'm not going to accuse them of it. But this is a different kettle of fish in the way the government has gone about it.

Consequently, that is part of the reason why when it dropped on the table with, you know, very few days left in the scheduled sitting of the Legislative Assembly, it makes it just a little bit hard to internalize, understand. Indeed, one of the big outstanding questions which none of us, at least none of us on this side of the House, can answer is: how will that affect the other 300-plus municipalities that are not called Edmonton or Calgary? Of course, this legislation doesn't give us any answers to that question.

Knowing that, I think that was – I don't know if I put everybody to sleep. If I did, I apologize. But that background, I thought, was pertinent, and I thought it was genuinely meaningful in terms of how we look at this piece of legislation, this Bill 32, in front of us, Madam Speaker. That is a big question mark: what happens to the other 300-plus municipalities if indeed the Legislative Assembly of Alberta passes this agreement?

So what we have here in the legislation is – and it purports to provide stable, predictable, long-term funding for Calgary and Edmonton, something that is important to them. The mayors of the cities seem happy. Because I live in Calgary, I've heard more in the media from the mayor of Calgary than Edmonton, so, Edmonton's mayor, please forgive me. It's just that where I live, I hear the other mayor's voice on the radio more often than I hear yours. But what I have heard is the mayor of Calgary saying that indeed it is less than they're getting right now until I think he said 2027, in which case it becomes more. So that's an interesting variation. Also, the funding agreement will result in cities being more directly impacted by a fluctuation of provincial revenues.

Now, here are some things I just heard from the previous speaker, from Calgary-Hawkwood, and just so the speaker knows, these are things that I think he's right on and I agree with him on. He said that the revenue sharing will start after 2022 if I heard him correctly. He's nodding his head. Okay. I think he said that the transit funding will start after 2027, which is the same year when the mayor of Calgary said that this agreement will provide more dollars than they're getting today.

Mr. Cooper: My kid is going to be in university then. He's in grade 6 now.

Mr. McIver: That is 10 years from now, just about, yes.

Here's the funny thing, and it's a little odd to me. I also agree with the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood who said that this agreement will provide more money to the two largest cities in Alberta when times are good and less money when times are tough. It sounds quite a bit like riding the oil and gas roller coaster, if you ask me, when you actually think of it that way. Having said that, Madam Speaker, I'm actually not saying that the legislation is bad. I'm just saying – I'm trying to look at it with an open mind here, but nonetheless that does look just a little bit like riding the oil and gas roller coaster up and down, as the current government has said they don't want to do anymore.

Now, here's a little piece. There's something very similar if not exact in the previous formula. In section 4(2) of the legislation:

For the purpose of subsection (1)(a), the percentage for an applicable fiscal year is calculated in accordance with the following formula.

If you're at home trying to keep up – I know I can't keep up, and if you can keep up at home, you're smarter than me, which isn't hard to do. Here's the formula:

$$[(0.48 \times A/A + B) + (0.48 \times C/C + D) + (0.04 \times E/E + F)] \times 100\%.$$

So I'm sure everybody now knows exactly how much Calgary is getting and how much Edmonton is getting.

Now, in fairness to the government and in fairness to the minister, this particular calculation is something that was pretty similar to what was in the previous legislation from the previous government. So while I'm making fun of the calculation, I can't genuinely make fun of this particular government without at the same time making fun of the previous government because the calculation is the same.

But my point, which I'm sure you're all waiting for with bated breath, is that with all of this complexity and with the short period of time in which we've had to look at this to understand it – and we do care. Of course, while we care about all Albertans on all sides of this House, we all understand that the two major cities comprise over half of the population of Alberta, so it's pretty important for the two major cities. It's also pretty important because whatever gets spent there can't get spent in the other almost 50 per cent of the population and all of the other 300-plus municipalities across Alberta. So I think it's reasonable that I could move an amendment, Madam Speaker, which I would like to move now. Unless you tell me differently, I'll sit down until you give me permission to continue, okay?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. If you could just wait till the table has a copy.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Here's what the amendment says for those folks following at home. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 32, City Charters Fiscal Framework Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 32, City Charters Fiscal Framework Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Now, Madam Speaker, the first part of my speech was all about setting the table about just how complex this is and how important this is and that we've only had it for a very short period of time. I think it's legitimate that the Legislative Assembly would want to look at this in committee so that we could as a team look at this. It's important. What you haven't heard me say is that the bill is bad, and you haven't heard me say that the bill is good. I think the bill is interesting. It's worthy of further discussion.

With that, Madam Speaker, having moved this amendment and getting close to running out of time, when you're going to force me to sit down and stop talking, I will now move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 31 Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? We're in Committee of the Whole right now. Is anybody wanting to speak?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 31 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 27 Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the chance to rise today and talk about Bill 27, Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act. Of course, I spoke at great length at second reading about how good our public servants are, how hard they work, the quality of services they provide for all Albertans, and how important it is to protect their pensions, protect their compensation, and to ensure that, in competing going forward, Alberta not only competes in the world with our great commodities and our great tech sectors but also competes with top-drawer public services. That, of course, is crucial. That, of course, is dear to the hearts of so many of us. I spoke during second reading about how you don't have to turn around too many times or go to too many places before you get the chance to engage and talk to some of our fine public servants, both for the province of Alberta and our municipalities, our school boards, our irrigation districts.

It's been a bit of a whirlwind, getting a 119-page bill less than a week ago. Of course, we know that that's how this government likes to do things, fast and furious and never mind what the unintended consequences may be. I've had the good chance to talk to many, many Albertans. Some felt that the consultation was good, but many said: what consultation? Some felt that it just kind of scratched the surface, again one of the reasons why all these bills should go a little slower and to committees and that kind of thing for a second reflection and also for the opportunity to have some experts.

I want to propose three amendments, and these amendments are based on accountability, fairness, and effectiveness, just to make sure that Albertans' pensions, our public service pensions, have the best chance going forward and that Albertans have the opportunity to make sure that as a taxpayer things are in order.

Madam Chair, I am a bit concerned. When I reached out to experts about some of the things that surround the liability, the transfer of the liability, there is concern about the government dipping into these funds and using them for their incredibly huge deficit. There is concern – there is concern – about the discount rate that these funds are based on and the sustainability. Again, in a week it's hard to talk to many people, but I'm so pleased with my team and my assistants and my colleagues. We certainly did our best.

There are concerns around some of the effectiveness, with some of the agreements around unanimous votes going forward, and again with the lack of consultation. Nevertheless, let's move forward. I would like to start by making a notice of amendment. I'll just give our hard-working pages the opportunity to pass this around. The first amendment has to do with . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could just wait until I see the original, please, just to make sure it's in order.

Please go ahead. Your amendment will be referred to as A1.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. Amendment A1. I move that Bill 27, Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act, be amended as follows. In part A schedule 1 is amended in part 2 by (a) striking out section 13 and substituting the following:

Auditor General

13 Notwithstanding section 11 of the Auditor General Act, the Auditor General is the auditor of the Corporation and the Plan.

And (b) by striking out section 19(4).

In part B schedule 2 is amended in part 2 by (a) striking out section 13 and substituting the following:

Auditor General

13 Notwithstanding section 11 of the Auditor General Act, the Auditor General is the auditor of the Corporation and the Plan.

And (b) by striking out section 19(4).

In part C schedule 3 is amended in part 2 by (a) striking out section 12 and substituting the following:

Auditor General

12 Notwithstanding section 11 of the Auditor General Act, the Auditor General is the auditor of the Corporation and the Plan.

And (b) by striking out section 18(4).

Again, Madam Chair, I just want to restate the objective. We're proposing a few amendments to Bill 27 because we want to ensure that the joint governance framework is fair, that it's effective, and that it's effective for all the members of the new boards, all the pensioners, all the beneficiaries, and we want to ensure a high level of accountability for members of the pension plan as well as Alberta taxpayers.

Interestingly, the Auditor General is currently the auditor of these plans. I was a bit surprised when I saw the section of the plan that said that the Auditor General cannot – cannot – be the auditor of the three pension plans that this Bill 27 pertains to. I just thought that, for the sake of the taxpayer, for the sake of the beneficiaries, the Auditor General needs to remain auditor to ensure that the billions of dollars in these plans are protected, to ensure the continuation of the people that have been looking at it on behalf of the taxpayer. Not having the Auditor General do this, Madam Speaker, may put taxpayers' dollars at risk. Of course, the government of Alberta is the main employer contributing to the public-sector pension plan, which is now worth some side of $13.5 billion. Again, the government of Alberta is the main employer-contributor, the taxpayer of Alberta, for the $42.8 billion local authorities pension plan as, of course, this one funds Alberta Health Services. According to the Auditor General's 2014 report, so we're back almost four years, the government share in each of these plans is approximately half of the total, or approximately $30 billion.

Madam Chair, it seems like good sense. The Auditor General, in my six years being in here, has only impressed me, past and present, with the thoroughness, the quality, the effectiveness, and it just makes absolute sense to me to have this continue and to have the taxpayer of Alberta's representative continue to monitor these funds. I want to say that I was surprised that the Auditor General's office was not consulted about being removed as the long-standing auditor for these three pension plans. The office was informed of it Monday, November 19, the day before the minister introduced the bill in the House. I don't know. It's sort of like breaking up by text maybe.

Ms Hoffman: What do you know about that?

Mr. Barnes: I'm married 31 years. I know little.

We have this great department, who's done great work for years and years, from whom at the PAC committee, every time we asked for something, the response was amazing. They didn't even consult in the proper way. Perhaps the minister can tell us today why he included this section preventing the Auditor General from being the auditor for billions of dollars – billions of dollars – of pension funds, pensioner and taxpayer. The Auditor General has been the auditor for these pension plans for decades. He has an in-depth knowledge of the risks associated with these investments. The Auditor General's office also audits AIMCo, the plan's investment manager. So the Auditor General, again, has comprehensive, overarching knowledge and experience. The Auditor General is in a rare position to analyze all the implications for the taxpayer of the government's investments in these pension plans. Having the Auditor General continue to audit the pensions guarantees public transparency because the Auditor General reports to the Legislative Assembly. After all, Madam Chair, we're Albertans' representatives, both the pensioner and the taxpayer.

Madam Chair, an independent auditor may not have the same formal requirement to report to Albertans. Does this government want to hide our financial position from the pensioners and from Albertans? That's absolutely what it looks like. The Auditor General also has in the past recommended better risk management practices regarding the sustainability of public-sector pension plans. One of the concerns, again, that I heard was on the discount rates that are being used, and we'll see when that rooster comes home to roost. The Auditor General points out that taxpayers are ultimately responsible if the plans are not sustainable. That's why it's crucial. The Auditor General points out that taxpayers are ultimately responsible if the plans are not sustainable.

Madam Chair, colleagues, I ask you to support this amendment. Let's enhance the protection for our pensioners and our taxpayers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, I just want to stand and say that I think that this is a very reasonable amendment, and I am actually disappointed to hear that the hon. members from the government side are not willing to even address this issue.

An Hon. Member: Terrible.

Mr. Hunter: And then they're mocking it.

We're talking about accountability for a $60 billion fund. To make sure that we have some kind of clarity on why this is happening, if there's someone who is willing to speak to this, I would absolutely love to hear from them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, we of course care about accountability on this side, transparency, and I can tell you that we are ensuring this through this joint governance bill. For about 30 years these pension groups have been asking for independence from government. They want to set their own pension deal, they want to set their own way forward, and the government of the day always stymied that. The governments of the day promised that they would bring this joint governance in and never did. We are following through with a commitment we made.

I believe, of course, in properly looking after pensions for people. That's why we're setting up independent boards, both for the pension deal and for the administration and the corporations. When you grant this kind of independence, you also are allowing them to make sure everything is in place. They have to structure their own reviews of their books by hiring an auditor, by engaging an auditor. They are going to be doing that on their own.

If we were to say, "You can have your independence, but you can't look into who's your auditor; we don't want you to have that responsibility," well, that's not really granting independence. That's keeping a chain on these boards, and frankly that's not what we agreed with them to do. I'm confident that they will seek auditors who will provide a clear indication of the finances of their pension monies and be able to pass that on to their members, both their retirees and their current members.

Madam Chair, I would not accept this amendment because these pension boards, both administration and sponsor boards, will be able to do this on their own. They can engage an auditor. Auditors have a responsibility to operate under the proper rules of accounting, actuarial and other kinds of things, and provide that to their clients, which are the corporation boards. We are supporting the choices of independent, jointly governed pension plans. That's in the best interests of both them as operators, as people who own, along with the employers, the monies that are for their pensions, long-term pensions.

Madam Chair, I'm not going to be accepting these. I'm looking forward to other amendments.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, and thanks to the Minister of Finance for standing up and clarifying a bit. I guess I'd just kind of like to ask him to please do that again and talk a little bit about, you know, the superintendent of pensions, what his involvement is going to be, what his role is going to be, particularly if we run through a tough time, a downturn, particularly if something in the market changes. Hon. Minister, could you talk about that, please?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you again. You know, a key component of legislation is that the three plans will be registered under the Employment Pension Plans Act, meaning that they will be subject to regulatory oversight by the superintendent of pensions. That superintendent is charged with the administration and enforcement of this act and must ensure that plans comply with the legislation. Boards will be expected to submit annual audited financial statements – of course, they'll be hiring their own auditor to do that – annual information returns, and actuarial valuation reports regularly to the superintendent. That superintendent, of course, has oversight, as given by the Employment Pension Plans Act, not only for these pensions but pensions in Alberta.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise again to propose another amendment. We've obviously seen less than a concern for the liability and the protection of 275,000 hard-working Albertans' pensions and taxpayer dollars, but the next thing I'm concerned about is the speed at which this government is trying to do things. Again kudos to the very, very hard-working, capable UCP staff, who immediately got on the phone and phoned countless people involved in this, from the Auditor General, to lawyers, to pensioners, to hard-working public servants. A lot of the answers came back: they had no idea what was going on. A lot of the answers came back: geez, this is pretty rushed. I saw some government members across the floor shaking their heads when I passed on the concern that one person was concerned that the government was dipping into these funds to cover their other deficits and debts. It never hurts to go a little slower. It never hurts to get things right. Of course, the way this bill is set up is that by March 1 the three sponsor boards, the three corporate boards can be started to be set up, could be set up.

Madam Chair, the amendment that I wish to make to Bill 27, Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act, is to move that it be amended as follows: first of all, schedule 1 is amended in section 1, (a) in subsection (1)(u) by striking out "March 1, 2019 or, subject to subsection (2), such later date as set by the Lieutenant Governor in Council" and substituting "September 1, 2019," and (b) by striking out subsection (2). Schedule 2 is amended in section 1, (a) in subsection (1)(u) by striking out "March 1, 2019 or, subject to subsection (2), such later date as set by the Lieutenant Governor in Council" and substituting "September 1, 2019," and (b) by striking out subsection (2). Schedule 3 is amended in section 1, (c) in subsection (1)(u) by striking out "March 1, 2019 or, subject to subsection (2), such later date as set by the Lieutenant Governor in Council" and substituting "September 1, 2019," and (d) by striking out subsection (2). Schedule 4 is amended in section 5(3), in the proposed subsection (1.1) by striking out "March 1, 2019" and substituting "September 1, 2019."

Thank you, colleagues. Thank you, Madam Chair. Not much of a change to go from March 1 to September 1. My goodness, March 1 is, like, 85 days away. I mean, we have Christmas in there, we've got the normal government business, we've got $65 billion of hard-working Albertan beneficiaries, their pension assets, under trust, not to mention the liability held by taxpayers, and this government is in a hurry to get things done by March 1. Does that relate to some other promises or some other negotiations that have happened? Who knows? But let's get to the point where we're doing things the right way. I can't imagine, you know, $65 billion in some side of 85 days and where it could go.

I think the objective is to allow sponsorship and corporate boards and the corporations themselves – the people that work at Alberta Health Services and municipalities, the irrigation districts, the school boards – six months longer to establish. I think I heard my hon. colleague say that for decades – for decades – the past government had not done what was being asked of them by some Albertans. Well, two ways to look at this, of course, Madam Chair, and one of them is that if it's been decades, what the heck difference is six more months going to make? I would recommend that a little, you know, somber second thought, a little reflection, a little opportunity to get the right people in place and do the right things are probably a good idea.

What I'm trying to do here is improve the effectiveness of these new governance boards. We're going to be setting up six new boards – can you imagine all the moving parts in that? – and legislation: I mean, I just read in two minutes 10 or 15 subsections. Can you imagine all that these hard-working people have to go through? The transition date for Bill 27: again I want to remind you, Madam Chair, that more than $60 billion of pensions are being transferred to the new corporations in 85 days. $60 billion. My goodness.

I was at a little Christmas party yesterday at Suffield, and God bless our men and women in uniform that serve to protect Canada. Commander Onieu was having a little Christmas party. We have a lot of British training soldiers there as well. And my goodness, the Phoenix pay system – the number of people I talk to that have encountered hardship because of the Phoenix pay system. I think, if I remember right, it was between three and four years that they've been dealing with this. Can you imagine? Can you imagine if you guys get $65 billion worth of pension transfers wrong because of your haste to get in before March 1? We all know what March 1 to May 31 is all about. We just hope you do it right.

Madam Chair, the employee-employer organizations identified in the legislation currently have about 85 days to recruit members, appoint members, train members, establish quorum and voting requirements, set up administrative support, and establish offices.

Can you imagine if one of those areas at one of those boards, whether the special forces and then God bless the service people that are part of the special forces pension, can you imagine that because of this government's haste to beat March 1, something goes wrong? Can you imagine the headlines then? Can you imagine – again, I think of that poor taxpayer that will be working a little longer, a little harder, to cover a mistake that we could do something now.

Madam Chair, Bill 27 offers no guidance on the kind of background expertise that these board members will need or what training will be required to ensure educated stewardship for the billions of pension funds that will come under their control. Billions of pension funds.

Madam Chair, that's obviously not a process that should be rushed. Delaying the transition date by six months will ensure that members are better prepared for the responsibilities that will fall to them when acting as trustees for the billions of dollars worth of funds in the three pension plans.

Madam Chair, ever talked to someone that's been executor or coexecutor for an estate? It's such an important responsibility, but I'm always aware of how that impacts people in their desire to get it right and be fair and all those things. Now we've got billions of dollars, 275,000 Albertans direct beneficiaries, 4.1 million Albertan taxpayers that have ultimate responsibility for the liability. And this government is in an 85-day rush.

Providing more time will also ensure employees and employers and pension plan members can have confidence in the transfer of these public-service pensions to the brand new boards. Confidence. Again, just a short time ago one of these recipients told me that he thought the government might dip into his funds and use it for something else. Confidence.

Madam Chair, I would ask all my hon. colleagues for their support in this amendment, and let's do all we can to protect our hard-working public services pensions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. With regard to the rapidity of the consultations, I want you to know that we didn't just start this yesterday. We started working with the representatives and others back in the early, early summer. Meetings started taking place, and there were a lot of meetings from all representatives of the pension plans, the employee representatives, and government that came to the table. There were consultations and there was a letter-writing campaign that I received 1,800 plan members' requests to call for the changes that we're bringing forward now.

Over the summer we considered input gathered from multiple stakeholders, Madam Chair, including survey respondents, written submissions, and, as I said, there were numerous meetings.

We got a number of those organizations who were involved as representatives of employees writing us and urging us to get on with it. In fact, as I said earlier, there were promises that were made back almost 30 years ago. Governments have been making promises to move on the practical reforms that are in our bill, and I'm proud, Madam Chair, to say that our government, this government, is finally making good on those promises and those good intentions.

We have had legal experts involved from all sides getting the organizations ready to undertake this responsibility, and they have prepared themselves well. So it's not just 85 days. It's not just 90 days since I tabled this. It is actually months and months of activity. Frankly, there are writers from across the province who say: get on with it. They have a deep mistrust. This person says that they have a deep mistrust for previous actions of previous governments. They want to see the pensions in the hands of the joint governance representatives, meaning employee representatives and employers. Right now I'm the sole trustee and administrator of these pensions, and frankly the pensions can probably get greater stewardship, more regular involvement every step of the way by having the owners of those plans at the tables, whether they're the sponsorship tables or the administrator tables, and stewarding those things.

Madam Chair, I think this is in the right direction of what we need to do. The organizations that have been involved have been involved since the summer. They have legal representatives who are giving them guidance every step of the way. They have skills and abilities and energy to undertake what's necessary to get them ready. I think we should not support these recommendations of delaying yet again the commitments to joint governance. Actually, this government made a commitment to take care of this business so that it doesn't wander and get reversed potentially by somebody else being at the table. I'm at the table now, and my commitment was to bring this in, and I'm going to stick to my word about what we did.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, I appreciated listening to both my colleague and the Finance minister. I guess the question that I have is: if there was such a need to get it done and you've been in office now for three and a half years, what took you so long?

Mr. Ceci: Madam Chair, I don't know how many bills our government has brought in, but there's more than this many that we've brought in and passed in the House. We have had a full legislative agenda, full and useful and in the direction of where Alberta needs to go. I think that we're getting to it now because, frankly, it's an important piece of legislation to get done. I want to continue to build the trust of important employee and employer groups as we're following through with what we said we were going to follow through with. We started working on this bill in the early summer, and now we're here on the 3rd of December. The timeline for this kicking off will be March 1. So I think, all things considered, that we've got an activist legislative agenda that we've been fulfilling for three and a half years, and this is just a continuation of it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

10:00

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Madam Chair. Thanks to my colleagues. Okay. We've seen a government that's in a hurry, that they're not concerned about liability, unintended consequences, not concerned about getting it right, but we'll keep trying. You know, as I said in my opening remarks, I've looked at this amendment idea, and I've looked at the bill with the idea of enhancing accountability, fairness, and effectiveness. We want to talk about accountability and effectiveness in this one, and I will propose another amendment, please.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A3. Please go ahead.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you again, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 27, the Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act, be amended as follows: (a) schedule 1 is amended in part 2 by adding the following after section 20(1):

(1.1) An appointment to the board of directors under this section shall not be made if it results in other than one half of the directors being appointed by employee organizations and one half of the directors being appointed by employer organizations.

And (b) schedule 2 is amended in part 2 by adding the following after section 20(1):

(1.1) An appointment to the board of directors under this section shall not be made if it results in other than one half of the directors being appointed by employee organizations and one half of the directors being appointed by employer organizations.

And (c) schedule 3 is amended in part 2 by adding the following after section 19(1):

(1.1) An appointment to the board of directors under this section shall not be made if it results in other than one half of the directors being appointed as employee representatives and one half of the directors being appointed as employer representatives.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

This legislation as it's written now provides flexibility for the sponsor organizations. Again, each of the three pensions have a sponsor board and then a corporate board with different roles and responsibilities. But one of the responsibilities of the sponsor board is to appoint different representation to the corporate boards than on the sponsorship board, and I just think that the balance going forward, the balance of fair and timely and sustainable remuneration for our good, good public servants, our hard-working public servants, needs that balance of the government representative from Alberta Health Services through the sponsorship board, of course, through the government representative from a municipality or a university or an irrigation district. I think it's important to have that balance and that safe route: yes, the employees as well but, ultimately, for somebody who's representing that government corporation that is responsible generally for at least half – at least half – of the contributions to these pensions, and, Madam Chair, sometimes more. Sometimes the employer is paying a greater contribution than the employee. If that's what's been negotiated, that's fine, but equal balance and fair representation on the board doing the text, on the board doing the other rules and regulations seems paramount to me. We address fairness by ensuring that in the new governance boards the balance is always equal.

The NDP has stated the importance of equally weighted employee-employer representation on the sponsorship and in corporate boards for each pension. It has indicated that the representation would be the same for both boards. However, Madam Chair, Bill 27 allows the sponsor organizations to appoint a different number and balance of members to the corporate boards. We've looked through this thing. We couldn't find anywhere where it said that the corporate boards had to have the same fairly balanced representation as the sponsorship boards, hon. Finance minister. Hopefully, it's an oversight. Okay. Hopefully, we can pass this amendment and ensure that . . . [interjection] I've had a few, but maybe not this one.

Okay. As indicated, it looks like it allows the sponsorship organizations to appoint a different number and balance of members to the corporate boards. Let's change that. The rules for the sponsor boards require an equal number of members appointed by employee and employer organizations. This requirement does not exist for the corporate boards. Again, in our short time with this we've looked through it, we've read it, and on and on, and it appears not to be there. This amendment matches the language in Bill 27 that requires parity – and thank you to our hard-working table officer people for helping us with that – between employee- and employer-appointed representatives on the sponsorship.

Colleagues, approving this amendment will extend the same requirement to the corporate boards, and why wouldn't we want it so? Please support my amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm looking through information that I have, and it says that sponsor boards and the board of directors of each corporation will have an equal number of employee and employer appointees and will be selected by sponsor organizations without government approval. The initial distribution of seats will be set by government, but sponsors are authorized to change the composition of the sponsor boards in the future while maintaining the equality of employees and employers.

Madam Chair, it's fairly straightforward that this amendment is not required because there is no intent to have a different number other than an equal number of employee representatives and an equal number of employer representatives as directors. So it's not needed, and I just want to say in this House that the joint governance of public pension plans is something government took very, very seriously. We have worked diligently, and a lot of people have put in significant time and energy both on the employee side, on the employer side, and on government side to make sure there were no unintended consequences, and I don't believe there are any unintended consequences. The owners of these plans will have the opportunity to address their own plans in the future.

At this point there is no change at all contemplated to plan benefits or how the plans are funded, and there is no cost to government as a result of this change. I have used all the people in my department, in my ministry, and we have committed to our due diligence in making sure there are no unintended consequences. We're so proud of the work that is finally going to culminate in the joint governance of three public-sector pension plans, which was promised and started 30 years ago. This government took their responsibility seriously and followed through with something that these plan sponsors have had for that amount of time. We're confident that we've covered all the bases, and we're not the only people inputting into this. It was the representatives of employees, too, who have taken all of this with great sincerity and been chomping at the bit to make this happen, and it's going to happen.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to add a few words here if I could and particularly to those words of the President of the Treasury Board because I know that he is trying to do his job with the greatest of due diligence, as is the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. I don't believe that there is any intent for inappropriateness here. It's part of the responsibility of our jobs here in the Chamber, Madam Chair, to try and improve this legislation as we go forward. I think the minister also recognizes that sometimes things do get by, and sometimes there may be unintended consequences. Therefore, I'd urge the minister again to revisit the amendment made by my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat because he's making that with the best of intentions. I'd like to support the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. It's an important part of the legislation that we go forward with, and I'll just leave my comments at that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. During this past week, throughout AIDS Awareness Week people around the world took time to remember lives lost and forever changed by AIDS. Let's take a moment today to reflect on ways we continue to support and help those persons who are living with HIV and AIDS along with their families and loved ones.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Amendments to Standing Orders

22. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended as follows. Standing Order 61 is amended by adding the following after suborder (2):
- (2.1) Notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1) and 4(2), (2.1) and (3), if at the time at which the Committee of Supply must rise and report in accordance with Standing Order 4(3) there are fewer than 15 minutes remaining in the time allotted for consideration of the interim or supplementary estimates then under consideration by the Committee, the Committee of Supply, subject to suborder (2.2), shall continue its consideration beyond the normal adjournment time to fulfill the time allotted for consideration of the estimates.
- (2.2) If under suborder (2.1) the Committee of Supply does not fulfill the time allotted for its consideration of the interim or supplementary estimates within the 15 minute period immediately following the normal adjournment time, the Chair shall interrupt the proceedings and call on the Committee to rise and report without question put.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. By way of explanation, Madam Speaker, I can indicate that this is a minor change aimed at closing a loophole whereby a three-hour allotment of debate in Committee of Supply could find itself unfinished, with the supply schedule or vote potentially delayed as a consequence of a minor interruption or minor delay at the beginning of Orders of the Day for that sitting day.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: This motion is debatable. Any members wishing to speak?

Hearing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Ms Ganley: So closed.

[Government Motion 22 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Committee Referral for Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act

30. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:

Be it resolved that:

1. The Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities and the committee shall be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review pursuant to section 14 of that act;
2. The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
3. In accordance with section 14 of the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act the committee must submit its report to the Assembly within six months after beginning its review, and that report is to include any amendments recommended by the committee.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Government House Leader I move Government Motion 30.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Government Motion 30. I rise with some concerns that I have in regard to the special Standing Committee on Families and Communities. I appreciate that work is being forwarded to the committee from this Assembly to debate and explore. My concern is that this particular Committee on Families and Communities hasn't met since April 27, 2018. That's a significant amount of time since this committee has last met, and there have been a number of things that have come forth to this committee that could have been dealt with.

In particular, on August 24 I sent a letter to the chair of the Families and Communities Committee asking for a review of the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, or the PCHAD Act. This is in response to the feedback that I have from a constituent of mine. Her name is Lisa, and she approached me because she's had some personal experience regarding this act and been touched very closely by it and has highlighted a number of problems that she feels need to be addressed. She doesn't have the solutions, Madam Speaker, but given that this act hasn't been reviewed in 12 years – it took effect in 2006; it is now 2018 – and there are a significant number of changes that have happened in society in the last 12 years, I think that all members of this Assembly would agree that this should be or is an important review that needs to happen.

This particular Committee on Families and Communities hasn't been doing any work over the summer. There's been no legislation before it. There's been nothing. There's been no meeting, yet when I asked for a review on August 24, 2018, I received a response from the chair on September 4. In my opinion, that would be a timely response.

I'll just read the letter that I sent to the committee, and then I would like to read the response – this is important – and then I will have more to say. I am writing to the chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities.

I am writing to request that the Standing Committee on Families and Communities consider a review of the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act.

Constituents have reached out to me with concerns that the legislation needs to be updated in order to better support families with children suffering from drug addiction. In particular, it may be worthwhile to explore options to better encourage long-term rehabilitation.

The concerns I am hearing would not be limited to residents of Airdrie, as drug addiction affects many individuals and families throughout the province.

As you are the chair of this committee, I thank you for your consideration of this matter.

Madam Speaker, I know that you know that we are facing a crisis in this province not only with the increase in opioid addictions, but children's mental health issues are on the rise, and many are not able to access treatment. Times have changed, and legislation should change with it.

The response that I received from the chair I will also read.

Dear [Member for Airdrie]:

Thank you for your letter of August 24, 2018, recommending that the Standing Committee on Families and Communities (the "Committee") conduct a review of the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act (the "Act"). I will provide a copy of your letter, and this response, to committee members for their consideration.

Side note: again I will remind you that the committee has not met since April.

Comprehensive statute reviews are mandated through legislation or a referral by the Assembly. The Act does not provide for a statute review in this case, however, much of what you would like to be accomplished could... be achieved by reviewing the subject matter through an inquiry, public meeting or review of a related regulation. If committee members are interested in pursuing work involving this... matter I would encourage them to speak to you directly to find out more information about the issues involved. You may also want to speak [with] the Ministry of Health, which has responsibility for the Act, if you have specific suggestions for legislative changes that [may] be brought forward through a Bill.

Thank you for... [your] time to share your concerns with the Committee. Should you have any questions please contact the Committee office.

Madam Speaker, the letter very clearly states – and so also does this Government Motion 30 – that the Assembly may direct the committee to review legislation. The government has done so, and they've chosen not to do the PCHAD review and direct it to the committee for review, but they've chosen the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, which is a very important piece of legislation. But I'm saddened to hear that in this day and age the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act is not top of mind for the government, in particular to review in the Assembly.

I also wrote to the Health minister on behalf of my constituent, who wrote back to me in a very confusing manner. I could read the letter into the record, actually, and I will, and then I will highlight the concerns that I have and again why this review is important.

Thank you for your email [and] your experience with the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs... Act program.

The PCHAD Act took effect in 2006, allowing parents and legal guardians to apply for protection orders from the Courts wherein their children under the age of 18 can be taken to a protective safe house for up to 10 days, even if they do not want to go. This 10-day period provides children with a structured and protective setting in which to begin detoxification, which can be extended for five additional days with a second court order. The time spent in the protective safe house also allows counsellors a chance to assess substance use and offer treatment recommendations to follow once they have been discharged from the program.

Please know that improving the substance use and mental health treatment system is a priority for our government. We released Valuing Mental Health: Next Steps on June 27, 2017 in response to recommendations from the Valuing Mental Health: Report of the Alberta Mental Health Review Committee. The Ministry of Health worked with government and community stakeholders, including people with lived experience, to develop 18 actions that build upon and support the good work already happening on the front lines.

And this part is very important, Madam Speaker.

While I appreciate your invitation to meet to further discuss your experience with the program, my schedule does not permit me to do so.

I wonder what the minister is doing.

I encourage you to contact...

I actually won't say the name.

... [the] Director of Child, Youth & Family Initiatives, Community Seniors, and Addiction & Mental Health... to discuss your concerns.

Madam Speaker, I don't know what could be more important, first off, than meeting with a parent who is going through extreme hardship. The family is in utter chaos. All she wants to do is make it better for those that will go after them. That's all she wants to do. This family is thinking of other people and trying to help, using their experiences to do that.

What an important step this Assembly could have taken today or in the last six months, while the Standing Committee on Families and Communities wasn't reviewing any legislation. Review of PCHAD could have taken place while members of this Assembly on that committee were on summer vacation. We could have been working hard for our constituents and making use of this committee, Madam Speaker, and I know – I know – that there are other members of this Assembly that surely agree with me. There have been conversations amongst the members in regard to this legislation. I know, if I could be so bold, that every single member in this Assembly has had a constituent that has reached out to them with their concerns, with children going through a life of drug abuse and various other issues. These parents just simply want to help, and this Assembly had the opportunity to do so.

So I'm very disappointed, Madam Speaker, that the government has not chosen to take an opportunity to do the right thing for families in our province and, in particular, for children who are facing a very difficult future. I don't know what the answer is to strengthening the PCHAD legislation. It's been highlighted in here that perhaps the 10-day period that allows for children under the age of 18 to be taken into a protective safe house needs to be changed and reviewed. It's been suggested as such. There needs to be a longer time of assessment and treatment of the disorder. I would like to highlight that on behalf of my constituent for the members of this Assembly. I would hope – and I would encourage the government to consider this as a review, at a future date, through this committee. Hopefully, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act will move through quickly, and we can get to some other important work as well.

Thank you for your time, Madam Speaker and to members of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I speak in support of what the previous member was raising. As part of the mental health review I heard lots of concerns about the protection of children addicted to drugs, the PCHAD Act, and wrote letters to both the minister and to the chair just in the last month about the critical need to review PCHAD. It's not working as it could and should for a number of reasons. There are many issues, including the length of time, the process of going through court, the lack of wraparound services when people are in this position, the lack of real, I guess, concerted efforts around helping young people with a life-and-death situation.

Notwithstanding that this is not necessarily focused on this particular motion to refer, I hope the government will take this opportunity to refer the PCHAD Act to committee for review. That's based on a number of mental health professionals that continue to contact me to say: "It needs to be reviewed. It needs to be updated. It needs to be changed." I just want to get on the record to support the awareness that this act hasn't been reviewed in 12 years, and it needs to be. There's a tremendous momentum out there in the health care community to make this act work better on behalf of children and families with addictions.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Mr. Ellis: Madam Speaker, I just want to take a moment to echo the last two speakers. As someone who has understood the positive effects of PCHAD, in my policing career I've had the ability to effectively use that piece of legislation in order to help a child get into some form of start on a recovery road. However, I think, as I've discussed with previous members in this House before and as the previous speaker from Calgary-Mountain View had indicated, this piece of legislation hasn't been reviewed in about 12 years and, certainly, I think, requires some assistance to make it better.

One thing, certainly, from my experience in dealing with somebody who is an addict is that, you know, a 10-day assessment sometimes is not enough. I wish I could tell you what that number is, Madam Speaker. However, that's where that committee comes into play, to help us better understand from the experts in the field what that specific number is. In my experience, when dealing with the kids that I've had to help out, of course, by using that piece of legislation, sometimes they spent that 10 days really just surviving the 10 days, with the full intent to continue down a negative path of addiction.

Certainly, I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and the Member for Airdrie for bringing up some very important points in regard to sending this to a committee, which, I think, would be able to bring in all the necessary experts to help strengthen that piece of legislation, which I believe, at the time of conception over a dozen years ago, was one of the first, if not the first, bills of its kind in Canada. Again, Alberta was leading the way when it came to this important piece of legislation, and I know that we as Albertans can make this legislation better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Question or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the comments from all around the House today. I think they raise some interesting issues. Certainly, it would never be our intention to delay a review. In fact, the motion itself is intending to create a review of an act, an act that we are reviewing as a result of an amendment that I actually accepted, being the minister who sponsored this initially.

10:20

I think the members raise excellent points, Madam Speaker. You know, I think all of us in this House have a deep desire to move the province forward. We've done a number of reviews of acts. We had the opportunity recently to update labour laws that hadn't been updated since 1988. Certainly, I've started looking at the Police Act, which also harkens from 1998. I think the members are absolutely correct. There's certainly a lot of progress to made in this place. I think we have made some of this progress over the last three and a half years, but I guess I would concur with their comments and say: much done; much more to do.

With that, thank you very much.

[Government Motion 30 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 30 Mental Health Services Protection Act

[Adjourned debate December 3: Ms Goodridge]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Madam Speaker, thank you so much for allowing me to speak to the Mental Health Services Protection Act. I rise on this Bill 30. You know, there's a lot to be said in regard to this particular bill. Regarding structure and importance of a bill of this magnitude, I certainly understand the importance of it and it certainly is, without doubt, complex.

Now, our health critic has done very much due diligence in reviewing this bill. You know, that's not easy in this Assembly, where bills sometimes are introduced very quickly and swiftly through the House, which obviously to me has always been a bit of a concern, especially when there are these, we'll call it, possible unintended consequences when bills come in and out so quickly, which is why it's always important to consult with the necessary stakeholders, either before or certainly if anything is ever referred to a committee. Then you really have that opportunity to bring in those necessary stakeholders in order to assist with strengthening a bill of this magnitude.

I have a few stories I wanted to touch base on, and I will get to my notes on this. You know, there are so many fields that this particular bill touches on when it comes to counselling and people who are peer supports and advocates: people that provide spiritual faith guidance, as an example, rehabilitation, problem-solving. As I've stated before, I'm certainly for structure and understanding that there is an accountability portion to anything, really, that we do. I certainly have a concern, questions that I think will be reasonably brought up in Committee of the Whole, which of course has to do with those people that do peer support. Many of them who do that were at one point in time former victims of addiction, some of whom themselves are going through the process.

I myself have an acquaintance who was a constituent, who has reached out to me. We've stayed in touch over the last four or five years. His name is Sheldon. He's a very nice young man. He's one of these fellows, you know, that had a great job, had a beautiful family, had the house, had the car, had everything going for him, but sadly he fell into the depths of addiction and drug abuse and lost it, lost everything. When I had the fortune in this House of passing Bill 205, the pill-press bill, and the work that I've done in regard to the fentanyl crisis, he reached out to me.

Over the last few years, obviously, he's been struggling in order to find work, work in a field that he had been in before, which, I believe, was the oil and gas industry and which, sadly for him, he's been unable to find over the last several years. Through conversations I've had with him, he's trying to get involved in helping others, addictions. Now, he himself struggles, right? However, on a positive note, he always updates me as to how often he remains clean and sober, which is very important and a struggle that many of these people have to go through every day.

What I love about him is his enthusiasm to help others. It has become very infectious. You know, we've had great discussions regarding the fentanyl crisis. We talked about cocaine addictions, crack addictions, crystal meth addictions, and, obviously, fentanyl, carfentanil, heroin, all of these drugs that have sadly plagued our society.

You know, he sent me a note not too long ago, and he was really excited that he was getting an interview with an addictions advocacy group for people on active addiction. It's very much harm reduction based. He's doing this not because of his qualifications in the oil field; he's doing this because of his experiences as an addict and what he has overcome in order to help others, to help guide them.

One of the things that I've certainly experienced in my time dealing, again, with people with mental health and addictions – I guess we'll stay on the addictions topic at the moment – is that when you're trying to help somebody with that addiction, a lot of times the respect comes from those who have walked the walk and talked the talk. Not everything can be derived from the person who has that doctorate in the field of whether it be counselling or addictions. However, sometimes the best experiences and the best help can come from those who are in the peer support area.

As we relate it back to the bill, which has to do with the Mental Health Services Protection Act, certainly, those who have the experiences that provide huge value to those people who are going through the addictions themselves currently, I wouldn't want to see them prohibited in any way from helping people that are going through those struggles. We can include, of course, the mental health portion of things as well, Madam Speaker. Anyway, he provides what I consider to be a huge value, and I wouldn't want to see him or anyone like him having any sort of barrier to prevent them from helping others who are also going through any form of mental health and addictions struggle.

I think of another lady who has reached out to me. She herself was an addict – sadly, one of her kids became an addict who became very much lost within the system – again somebody that I have maintained contact with over the last several years. I'm proud to say that she's a very vibrant lady who has really pulled things together. She is providing support and helping people who are also going through mental health and addictions issues, and while doing that, she is providing support for her daughter, who herself has become a mother. I think it's important that she be allowed to continue her work that she's doing as a peer support for people not only in the community but within her own family.

As I worked downtown, Madam Speaker – this is in Calgary, of course – for about two and a half years and then also worked as a judicial interim release hearing officer in the jails for also, again, two and a half years, I dealt with many people, and I would say that, well, pretty much the vast majority of them had mental health or addictions issues. I saw the benefits of places such as the Mustard Seed, the Centre of Hope – what are some of the other ones that were downtown? – the Salvation Army, as an example, even one of our detox areas in Calgary called the Alpha House. You know, many of these people that are working there do what they can to help people. They provide coaching and, again, that peer kind of support. Some of them themselves had been in the system, and they've lifted themselves up through the assistance of others, where they've got a job, again, helping others. I certainly wouldn't want to see any sort of a barrier for them in regard to this bill.

As my friend and colleague from Fort McMurray had indicated, this is a very complex bill, and I think it's important that we have the ability to analyze all components of it to make sure that there are no unintended consequences and that there is achievable buy-in from all stakeholders involved. Again, in Alberta specifically – and every jurisdiction has different little nuances – there is so much good work being done by so many different organizations, and I would not want to see any one of those good things being done by people from northern Alberta to central Alberta to southern Alberta have an unintended consequence of somehow being precluded from doing the good work that they're doing because of a bill that may not have been thoroughly thought out.

Again, Madam Speaker, I certainly appreciate the bill that's coming in. I understand the structural component. I certainly want to make sure that people themselves have – you know, I think that there has to be some form of structure, that there has to be consequences sort of as part of making sure that not just anybody, I guess, can do this. However, we also must appreciate and understand those services that are being provided throughout Alberta. There's just so much great stuff, and I just wouldn't want to see anybody precluded from doing some of the great stuff that they're doing.

If I may add, what I've found, too, is that – we're talking about essentially maybe a college that's potentially being created – we have to understand the nuances of the people who sometimes face these mental health and addictions problems. Some of them, sadly, in the throes of their addictions have fallen in to trouble with the law, and some of them may have criminal records. I certainly wouldn't want to see any of them precluded from doing the good work that they're doing as they've turned their lives around in order to help others within the community.

Madam Speaker, I just would like to add maybe a story that really just comes to mind from a gentleman that was downtown in Calgary. Sadly, I think he's still on the streets of Calgary, and this is going on probably about at least 15-plus years now. This is a gentleman that, sadly, fell into the throes of schizophrenia. You know, I myself had dealt with him, and . . .

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, any other individuals wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act. There are two parts to this bill – I think it's important to recognize that – one part being the piece around licensing of treatment facilities, and then the second piece being around the creation of the college. I am pleased to see especially, in addition to my comments from this morning in regard to the PCHAD legislation, that there is some action being taken by this government in regard to improving mental health services in this province.

Madam Speaker, I have a constituent named Mike. Mike is a constituent born and raised in Airdrie. We actually grew up together. Mike went through a significant battle with mental health and addictions. If you ever have the opportunity to meet Mike, he has become this fantastic advocate in our community and this wonderful speaker. He does this spoken word piece, and he does it in various avenues throughout the community. He's recently started to go into the schools and speak to those high-risk youth in our schools about the life he's lived, how he got there and the challenges that he had and the challenges that he still currently faces. He's wonderfully open about it, and he's making such a difference and having such an impact on the people that meet him everywhere he goes.

Mike was actually recently the recipient of the Lieutenant Governor's true grit award. I wrote a letter of recommendation for him to the Lieutenant Governor, and I know that a number of community leaders in the city of Airdrie also very proudly spoke for him in regard to winning this award. He is an individual that is unforgettable, and I truly believe that he is changing lives in a way that most people will never be able to, Madam Speaker.

He is everywhere in our community. Just this fall he completed the fourth annual unmasking mental health event in Airdrie, that brings families together around Halloween time. They dress up, and Spider-Man always comes, and there's face painting and lots of candy. It's a great event.

He raises money for various charities in our community, and he does so with a smile on his face. This year it was particularly challenging for him because he was receiving his true grit award on Friday here in Edmonton and then Saturday was his event, that's become quite a large event in Airdrie. But he was able to manage those things and be very successful with that and get it done despite the freezing cold weather that happened at that time.

Airdrie is pretty proud of Mike and the work that he's doing in our community, Madam Speaker. But Mike never went to postsecondary education. He doesn't have a degree. Yet he's having an impact on so many different people: young people, high-risk youth, adults who are battling addiction. This is a guy that you can phone at 2 o'clock in the morning, and he will answer the phone, and he will come over and talk to you. He has saved many lives. I know that Mike has been to houses at 2 o'clock in the morning for friends that were trying to kill themselves. Mike has been there, and Mike is able to have these sort of real-life conversations with these people, that are impacting their lives and are saving lives.

It's just absolutely wonderful to see. I'm so honoured to know Mike and to hear of the work that he's doing in our community, not just from him, but you hear it from everybody else. My concern, Madam Speaker, with this legislation is: does this limit Mike's ability to be able to help those around him? Does this limit his ability and the ability of others to participate in peer support groups, peer support settings unfacilitated? I would have some questions surrounding a lot of those things.

I know a great man in this province. His name is Theo Fleury. He's a former hockey player for the Calgary Flames, Madam Speaker. There are many in this province that know him and his story quite well. He facilitates these peer support groups, and I have yet to actually see in this legislation if this is now going to be shut down. That's the concern that I have: will Mr. Fleury and will Mike in Airdrie still be allowed to run these groups that are having an impact? I've been able to participate, just sit in the corner and see and hear what this is doing in people's individual lives. So I do think of Theo and Mike when we talk about this type of legislation, and that needs to be addressed by the government, absolutely. I'm certain that the Minister of Health will respond under 29(2)(a), hopefully, and address those concerns for myself and for my colleagues and for Mike and for Theo and for many others who are making a difference in our communities in that regard.

Madam Speaker, as you may know, there are many former addicts that are the ones that are paying it forward and facilitating these types of activities, and if this legislation hampers that in any way, shape, or form, we are doing a disservice to those in the industry and to those that struggle with addictions and mental health. I don't think that's the intent of this House, but that does need to be addressed because we are at crisis levels in our province when it comes to help, whatever you might call it. It's trauma specialists, on this end, that have really specific training, and then there's Mike who helps people, and there's AA, Alcoholics Anonymous. Those are people that have just been through it, that have come together to support each other, and it works for a lot of people. A lot of these peer support groups work for a lot of people, and this is the point I'm trying to stress here today. So I hope that the government can address that for me as we move forward.

I do have some concerns around the process for treatment facilities and sort of the red tape and the regulation that could bog down these very, very slim financial operations, that we know don't always have the manpower or the dollars to get this paperwork done. Is this going to bog them down? I actually think it's very important to have quality when it comes to treatment of mental health and addictions, Madam Speaker – and I applaud the government for addressing that – but there are some concerns for a lot of these organizations that deliver these services that do not have the ability to hire somebody to do the paperwork. So what does that look like? I think there are a lot of questions that these organizations have around that.

Those are some of the things I will address here in second reading of Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act. I ask that the government consider Mike and consider Theo and people like them that are doing good work in our communities and, hopefully, not limit their ability to pay it forward, to give back, to make a difference, and to save lives for our constituents and the people in our communities.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I did respond to some of the same line of questioning last night, but I'll be happy to do so again today just to provide that clarity and assurance that this is in no way about peer support programs or other types of programs where they aren't indeed selling themselves as counselling therapists or addictions counsellors. Definitely, 12-step programs and peer support programs, whether they're faith based or not, such as AA, as has been mentioned, or NA operate outside of residential treatment facilities and operate outside of classifying themselves as health professionals. They are certainly providing a service that is health related, but they're doing it from a position of lived experience. We really want to honour their expertise, and this is in no way to limit that.

This is about providing assurance to people that are often in some of their most vulnerable positions, when they're reaching out for help, living through substance use issues and asking for help for themselves or for a child or another loved one, for example, Madam Speaker. It's incredibly important that we give them the assurance. For somebody to call themselves a therapist, they have to actually have some kind of oversight training and expertise through a college.

The other piece that it does, of course, is that by bringing people who are counselling therapists or addictions therapists under a college, it creates that assurance to the public that they are held to a high standard around things like the bill we just passed earlier this session, around protecting patients from sexual assault, sexual misconduct, and being able to revoke a licence for somebody to practise in that field if they've engaged in any of those inappropriate behaviours. Today if that's the case with somebody who calls themselves a therapist, we don't have those tools. By passing this legislation, there will be oversight, there will be protection, and that's important for patients. It will indeed not impact services that are provided through peer support and mentoring as it's so important, as mentioned by the hon. member and many others.

I just wanted to give that extra clarity that this is not about peer mentors. This isn't about people with lived experience who provide an important service to their community and help people living through their substance use. This is about people who call themselves addictions counsellors and addictions therapists and making sure that they're held to a high standard, that they're working with the public in a way that we would all be proud of, and if they're not, that they don't have the ability to continue doing that work, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a follow-up question. I'm seeking clarification on the creation of the college and those that are regulated under that. This may not be a question that you can answer. But when a college is created, for third-party insurance purposes to be eligible, there needs to be a college and a number that insurance companies can process, which is great. I actually think that's a good step forward to improving access to quality mental health treatment and will address a number of various concerns because financial barriers are certainly one of those, and there are many with third-party insurance that would like to access a marriage counsellor or addictions counsellor, those types of things, and may be able to do so with the creation of the college. Have you had any conversations with third-party insurance companies or the college itself? Will this be a further step down the line that is considered? Speak to that, please.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, hon. member. Well, that college hasn't been created yet. Because this is an area where there is no existing college or oversight per se, we aren't in a position to be able to liaise with them on those questions, but should the bill be passed, then regulations will be created to support the creation of a college. Those are the exact kinds of things that government, the college, and the people of Alberta can work through. It usually takes about a year to set up a college from scratch, so these are the kinds of questions that will be worked through to make sure that we not only protect patients but also find ways to increase access.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Right. I still have time. Is there any response from, particularly, Alberta Blue Cross that this is something that they're considering or see as a good step forward? Could you speak to that?

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. For Blue Cross, through the government programs that are public access programs, definitely we work with them on making sure that we have a good scope of services available. Then with private insurers, of course, they have a responsibility to the owners of those plans to make sure that they consult with them on those pieces. I regularly meet with Blue Cross and so do officials from my department to talk about the public plans and the . . .

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to my colleagues for their engagement in this important discussion. When Albertans access substance use treatment or mental health services, they should absolutely feel safe in doing so, and Bill 30 aims to ensure that Albertans are able to access these professional mental health care services in a safe, regulated environment.

We've heard this call from many in the field. Focused consultations were held in the summer in both Edmonton and Calgary, and there was an online survey available to members of the public in addition to that. Of course, there are many very well-run facilities with dedicated caregivers throughout our province, and for them this bill will formalize standards and policies that already exist. It's important, I think, that workers be recognized and have the recognition of their expertise.

Albertans have needed this kind of help and have shared stories about facilities that offered services of questionable value, in some cases were even unsafe. At the announcement we referred to the 2007 fatality of Taylor Argent. Taylor was a young man, a very young man. After struggling with his substance use, his family admitted him to a facility that they assumed had safeguards, oversight, and protections. What happened to Taylor at that facility was heartbreaking. He consumed a poisonous substance – it was stored unsecurely in an unlocked shed – and he suffered for many hours before he was finally taken to hospital and later died.

In 2010 there was a fatality inquiry by Judge Hunter. It recommended that the government set up minimum standards of care at these facilities and that they be licensed and inspected on an ongoing basis. These recommendations were ignored by the government of the day and by successive Conservative governments as well.

In 2018 we decided that it was very important that we act on this. We committed to introducing legislation in our throne speech to ensure safety, quality care at private treatment facilities, and we're proud to deliver on that promise for the Argent family and for every Albertan who accesses this kind of care. We did this because we know how important it is for Albertans to trust that they will receive quality services from appropriately trained professionals in a safe environment.

I have to say that I wish this legislation was passed in 2010 following the fatality review. I actually wish it was passed before 2007, before Taylor was in this facility and any other person who suffered in an unregulated environment and assumed that there were these protections and safeguards. But I am very proud that our government is taking action to make sure that this can't continue, that we protect those who are accessing services in these facilities and in other areas in the community.

I'm very grateful that so many members of the public and people who work in these fields have reached out to us to work with us through this process and make sure that we have the very best protections for patients and make sure that Albertans get the kind of care and assurances that they deserve.

Thank you, hon. colleagues. I look forward to this bill proceeding.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a second time]

Bill 32
City Charters Fiscal Framework Act

Mr. McIver moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 32, City Charters Fiscal Framework Act, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 32, City Charters Fiscal Framework Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment December 3: Mr. McIver]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members?

Mr. McIver: I’ve actually got a minute and a half left or something, right?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. McIver: Okay. The amendment was to refer this to committee because it’s a fairly complex bill, as I stated. I really think that it’s worth taking a look at. Obviously, it affects the two largest cities, and it affects all Albertans, of course, because if 53 per cent live in the two largest cities, then whatever dollars, assets, things that go to those cities are unavailable for the rest of the province. So it really is important to the whole province and not just to the two major cities. It’s a fairly complex change to what we do now. As such, I think it would be responsible to take a look at it together. Particularly, as part of Bill 32 there are a lot of changes to the way that land-use approvals will happen in the future, dedication of land during the approval process.

I hope everyone will support this.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment?
The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s always a pleasure to rise in this building to discuss legislation that is important to all Albertans. Of course, today is no exception as we discuss Bill 32, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act.

Now, I’m prepared to cautiously support Bill 32 at this point, for the moment. It talks about city charters and how the funding would work and has been going on for some time now in the background. I support it for the moment and look forward to hearing some of the questions that we ask being answered, I’m sure. The minister is usually good at that. We’ll see what happens as we approach Committee of the Whole stage.

Anyway, I was watching the Legislature on TV last night – I know it’s hard to believe that you’d sit here most of the day and then go home and watch it on TV – and I saw the Member for Calgary-Hays make a referral motion. Now, I support that motion. Like he just finished saying, this is a very complex piece of legislation, so I certainly concur with the fact that having a committee look at that would be a good idea.

Bill 32 proposes to enshrine in legislation a funding framework for the cities of Edmonton and Calgary that will replace the current municipal capital funding regime. Now, that municipal capital funding regime is known as the municipal sustainability initiative, that we always called the MSI. That deal was reached with input from all of the municipalities, by the way, back in 2007.

I believe the Premier of the day – I think it was Stelmach – initiated the MSI way back then and left Alberta municipalities with $11.3 billion over 10 years as a support for local infrastructure priorities and a way to build strong, safe, and resilient communities. He left the Alberta municipalities with that much money, but he left the municipalities themselves to determine how much money would be handed out and who would get how much money. That seemed, to me, to certainly be a fair way to do things, a fair way to have the money administered. In my days as a councillor we certainly were appreciative of the fact that we were eligible and able to receive money from the province. That was certainly my opinion.

Now, as I recall, governments between then and now have toyed with the length of the years that that municipal sustainability initiative money might be paid out to municipalities. At any rate, the two largest cities in Alberta will, when this deal comes to fruition in 2022, no longer be receiving municipal sustainability initiative funding from the provincial government. No municipality in Alberta will actually be receiving any funding because that grant is set to be completed by that time. Now, I have to say, because it has recently come to my attention, that it sounds like the minister is certainly working with the Rural Municipalities of Alberta and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association on developing a replacement model to the municipal sustainability initiative. I’m certainly not aware of any details of such an agreement yet, mostly because, I suspect, there are no details yet.

Now, Madam Speaker, Bill 32 is the Edmonton and Calgary funding model that, of course, replaces MSI. It was way back in ’07, when I was elected for the first time to a rural municipal government – and the announcement had already been made before I took office – but I recall the municipal sustainability initiative being a very big deal for a lot of communities within our rural area. It was a big deal, certainly, for our municipality as well – don’t get me wrong – but there are a lot of municipalities in Alberta that have no way to raise money, over and above taxation, for capital projects. Believe me, MSI funding for those municipalities was and still is a very important part of their operations. It was the be-all and end-all of its time, I believe.

For the next minute or two on behalf of those area municipalities I will ask a question of the minister. I know that it has nothing to do with Bill 32, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act, but it is a question on the lips of the municipalities from all over this province. We now have seen what is intended for the two largest municipalities in Alberta when the MSI funding ends in ’21-22. Fair enough. The two largest municipalities in Alberta, I think we all realize, have very different issues than the other municipalities in Alberta. But the question I’m hearing from some of the other 350 municipalities in Alberta is: what is the funding agreement or the funding legislation, and what will it look like for them in ’22-23? Cities and towns and rural municipalities are worried that the uncertainty about MSI’s replacement, whatever that may be, cannot help but leave a terrible gap or some kind of a breach in their capital budgets: water infrastructure in their municipalities, roads in their municipalities, fire protection in their municipalities. These are the questions that all municipalities in Alberta, certainly the municipalities that I talk to, are starting to ask questions about.

The funding for things like that is based at the community level, of course, and the Municipal Government Act makes it very clear that the responsibility for services like I just mentioned, which are needed to enhance quality of life in those municipalities, falls entirely on those municipalities. So, clearly, while it may be nice to see that the two biggest municipalities within the province seem to be looking forward with a degree of certainty to what their funding looks like in ’21-22 and onward, the other 350 Alberta municipalities are wondering what theirs will look like, and I can’t really blame them.

Just one final thought on that. All municipalities in the province initially, when it was rolled out in 2007, of course, just fell in love with the program. It was a source of money that they really were lacking. Actually, they have counted on MSI funding since 2007, so they more than initially liked the program. They fell in love with it, and they have come to rely on the funding offered by the province.

I've spent a lot of time at the AAMD and C conventions over the years, talked with other leaders from other municipalities, and we were all in agreement that we liked the program, that we liked the formula, and certainly everyone liked the money. But as the program moved through the years, what we found was that we could no longer count on the funding as it was when the program was started. The Finance minister and the Minister of Municipal Affairs pretty much decided what the funding would be in a given year, depending on what the other needs were in the province at the time, because MSI was a grant. Therefore, the funding became less per year, and the time to the end of the funding period was stretched out. What we find now is a program that was to end in 2017; we now see it ending in the '21-22 fiscal year.

I want to be clear that I'm not blaming any one government for the way the program is ending up, just relaying the thoughts of those that I've spoken to over the years with regard to the MSI program. The common complaint has been – and I'm sure that the minister has heard this as well – that municipalities wanted a legislated agreement so that their funding would be more predictable and stable. Anyway, I had to get that little thing off my chest. Rural municipalities are who I deal with; I've been listening to them for years.

But we are here to talk about Bill 32. This bill sets out to provide predictable infrastructure funding from the provincial government for a number of years to come to the two largest cities. Starting in 2022, both Edmonton and Calgary will split $500 million in funding. After that point funding levels will be tied to provincial revenue. It will increase or decrease based on both a revenue component and a fuel component. In 2022 the funding arrangements consist of $252 million from the revenue component and $248 million from the fuel component. In subsequent years the revenue component increases and decreases based on the changes in total provincial revenues in the fiscal year three years prior. Now, that number will be excluding the carbon tax and any new fiscal policy changes. The fuel component, in contrast, increases or decreases based on changes in the number of litres of gasoline and diesel fuel sold in the fiscal year three years prior that is subject to taxation under section 4 of the Fuel Tax Act but does not include tax-exempt fuel as defined in the act. There's nothing complex about that at all; that's a joke.

For the revenue component of this financing deal, the formula for both cities, the formula for what each city will receive, is the same as the formula used for the municipal sustainability initiative funding. On page 8 of the legislation that formula, from what I understand, is the formula that has been used since the program was introduced, where the municipal populations of Calgary and Edmonton are determined in the fiscal year three years prior to the applicable fiscal year; where the aggregate amount of the education property tax requisitions to be paid by Calgary and Edmonton are calculated as of the day, in the fiscal year three years prior to the applicable fiscal year, on which the consolidated fiscal plan is required to be made public under section 4(4) of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act; and then the number of kilometres of open roads maintained by Calgary and Edmonton as of December 31 in the fiscal year three years prior to the applicable fiscal year, as reported to the Minister under section 577 of the Municipal Government Act. The revenue component ends up being $252 million. Now, that represents how the revenue component of the deal works for the two cities, and it is represented on pages 8 and 9 of the legislation.

Now, the fuel component is just a little different. The city of Calgary's allocation is 55 per cent of each year's total fuel component while the Edmonton component shows them with 45 per cent of each year's total fuel component. Now, remember that the fuel component increases or decreases based on changes in the number of litres of gasoline or diesel fuel sold in the fiscal year three years prior that is subject to taxation under section 4 of the Fuel Tax Act. Of course, that doesn't include tax-exempt fuel as defined in the act. For the '22-23 fiscal year the fuel component funding for Calgary ends up being $136.4 million and $111.6 million for Edmonton, a total of $248 million.

Now, to further complicate things for the tens of folks watching at home, there is also a transit deal that is part of this legislation, which will be paid with the carbon tax revenues. Starting in 2028, each of the two cities will get $200 million per year to build out their mass transit systems, and it appears that this particular deal goes all the way out to 2041. Before that, however, the government will provide transit funding to the two cities that has been raised from the carbon tax to the tune of $3 billion, which is to be paid out from the time of royal assent to 2027, or, to be more accurate, from fiscal year 2018-19 to fiscal year '26-27. Now, the funding is not to exceed $3 billion, and that amount represents the total amount of money announced for funding to Calgary and Edmonton transit previously. This is, of course, to provide some sort of certainty that if government proposes changes any time from now forward, the legislation would have to go back to the House and through the parliamentary process right here, with input from the two municipalities.

Now, I think we can begin to see how complicated these formulas are becoming as we get further into this bill, which, from my standpoint, is another good support for sending this entire thing to committee for some fulsome research.

Also, it should be noted that despite some speculation by pundits when this was rolled out, there are to be no new taxation powers for either city, but there are some changes to taxing powers that already exist in the two cities. That shows up particularly around the discussion of off-site levies. Now, Madam Speaker, these types of levies are typically put on new developments in a city and used in order to help pay for things like fire halls, water, and sewer. I think I talked about that a few moments ago. However, I believe that if either of the two cities wants to put an off-site levy on something like a recreation centre, I believe that is to be allowed.

Something that isn't specified in the bill is whether the money will go to the municipalities with no strings attached or whether the province would have the final say on some of the issues with regard to the $400 million, that I spoke about a moment ago, in transit funding from the carbon tax. Now, that's a good question for the minister and another reason for some more clarity, which again supports sending Bill 32 to committee.

Now, Bill 32 also changes eight important areas of city charters for Edmonton and Calgary. These are very important changes, in my opinion, and I'd like to discuss a few of them here. These changes, Madam Speaker, include allowing cities to establish their own debt and debt-servicing limits, meaning that the cities would have to obtain their own credit ratings. Specifically, the exemptions from debt limit regulations do not come into force until such time as the cities have approved the debt limit and debt-servicing limit policies and have obtained an external credit rating. Now, that's an important aspect, because we all know that some of these municipalities – I’m not pointing at anyone in particular – simply aren’t good at controlling their debt load compared to their income.

Additionally, the changes also establish a requirement for each city to hold public hearings in their respective cities on these changes, which can only be beneficial to residents and stakeholders residing and operating within those cities.

Well, I think my time is about to expire here. We did hear from build Alberta, that has some concerns, but we’ll probably talk more about that as the legislation moves forward. Despite that, Madam Speaker, I’m considering the benefits of this new framework, and I hope that during the next stages of the debate any concerns that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 32. It’s a pleasure to rise to speak on Bill 32, City Charters Fiscal Framework Act. I’m rising to speak on an amendment to refer this to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship to be able to bring some transparency and some accountability into the process. I believe an important aspect of our job here is to ensure Albertans are confident that decisions made here are done in a way so that true consultation is taking place and that the people that are impacted by these decisions have been able to witness those decisions and have been able to have input into those decisions.

With regard to Bill 32, City Charters Fiscal Framework Act, I believe the Resource Stewardship Committee is the right committee to review this and to bring some more transparency to this process. I believe that calling in witnesses such as the mayor of Calgary, Naheed Nenshi, to appear before the standing committee would certainly add a spark of interest around here to our legislation process. I believe Mayor Nenshi is a colourful character, and this would help to highlight the process that we’re currently going through and highlight the decisions that are being made here. I would welcome having the mayor appear before a committee of the Legislature to give his opinion and his two cents into the process and be able to answer questions that others might have with regard to how best to move forward with a fiscal framework that will work for the two largest cities in Alberta.

I also recognize that the mayor of Edmonton, Don Iveson, essentially by his proximity to the Legislature has been able to be leading the charge on city charters and the fiscal framework required. I believe that Mayor Iveson’s insights would be a very valuable piece on this legislation and that the Resource Stewardship Committee would allow this to be able to come out in the open and be able to be discussed in a very transparent manner.

Missing from Bill 32, I believe, is that we need to call on the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the AUMA, and their CEO, Dan Rude, and the chair, Mayor Barry Morishita from the city of Brooks. I wonder how the other urban municipalities throughout Alberta feel about the fiscal framework that is being proposed for the two largest cities and about the funding that the two largest cities have negotiated, or that has come forward, anyways, in this fiscal framework and about how that’ll impact the other municipalities, the urban municipalities throughout the province, and about what funding deals those smaller urban centres can expect to get or possibly should get. I believe that these individuals that come forward from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association will help to have input into how we best move forward not only with Bill 32, but then we take a look at how to move forward with funding deals for these other municipalities.

I also would like to hear from the Rural Municipalities of Alberta, the RMA, to get an understanding of if they are comfortable with the funding framework that’s being proposed for the metropolitan centres and how the metropolitan centres have been able to get these funding arrangements. I would like to hear from Mountain View councillor Al Kemmere, president of the RMA, and see what he has to say and also to see what other rural municipalities might want to say. Rural municipalities are facing pressures also. Now, the rural municipalities don’t have stadiums and LRTs to look after, but they do have other things that are needing to have the assistance of the province to fund, their bridges and so on.

You know, we take a look at what has been transpiring in municipalities in the southern end of the province, Vulcan county, Lethbridge county. They’re needing to try and understand how they’re going to fund their culvert and bridge replacements. As many of these are reaching end of life, they have questions and concerns on sustainability going forward and how the funding arrangement for the cities, those metropolitan areas, is going to affect their ability. We saw Lethbridge county take an unusual step of imposing a head tax on the intensive livestock operations in their county, the feedlots. The specialized head tax for the intensive livestock operations was in order to help pay for some of these concerns that they have with regard to their crumbling infrastructure.

Now, this wound up in court, and I guess what’s needing to be discovered here is what the special funding arrangement will be for rural Alberta. Will the water/waste-water infrastructure still be a separate application based on competitive grants in that they’re applying to the province and never really knowing if they’re going to be funded or not funded?

Bill 32, you know, Madam Speaker, is taking into consideration the current MSI, municipal sustainability initiative, funding program. That formula runs until ’20-21. Both of our legacy parties, the Progressive Conservative Party and the Wildrose Party, supported MSI. The Wildrose, I know, worked for many years to try and find improvements to make MSI even better, and I believe that Premier Ed Stelmach and his government should be commended for their foresight in implementing the MSI funding model. The MSI funding model that we see in Bill 32, the way I understand it, is that that funding model was very instrumental and adopted into Bill 32. I believe the formula, although being quite complicated, was developed by the municipalities. Municipalities came together in negotiations with each other to come up with a formula that could be workable for all sizes of municipalities: large, medium, small, rural, urban. All entities had the ability to have input into how to move forward with the funding model.

The funding model I believe has worked well. Going forward, I think what I hear from my municipalities is nervousness about whether or not this year or next year or the years going forward they are going to receive the funding. This Bill 32, I think, tries to address some of that so that they can have some certainty in funding going forward.

In the development of the formula the two largest cities, the AUMA, the RMA, all put their differences aside and came to an agreement on how the MSI funding would be allocated. Now, like I said, the MSI wasn’t perfect. While the formula is very good, the level of funding was not always predictable. We see that over the course of the original agreement, from 2007, I believe, the first 10 years or so, the funding that was promised was repeatedly reprofiled and extended over a longer period, where we now see Bill 32 recognizing the amount of funding under the MSI, the current program, stretching that out to years 2021-2022 and then the Bill 32 framework kicking in in the fiscal years after 2021-2022, essentially kicking in in the year 2022.

I think that one of the issues we have heard from municipal stakeholders, that I've heard from municipal stakeholders, is that MSI funding fluctuated fairly significantly from year to year based on the province's overreliance on nonrenewable resource revenue. I'm not exactly sure, but, to me, when I go through Bill 32, it looks like we have not necessarily been able to address that part of the concern. If I can find it here, we see in the calculations that it's the provincial revenue for fiscal years 3 and 4 prior to the current year to essentially describe what's going to be in calculations, provincial revenue. The only revenue stream, I think, that is specifically left out is the carbon tax, the carbon levy, that's currently in place. Otherwise, it still is susceptible to that revenue stream, possibly faced with significant fluctuation there.

Bill 32 attempts to address the issue of unfulfilled promises by legislating the funding aspect. This leaves much speculation as to why the government did not use a more stable revenue stream such as the corporate personal income tax revenue stream, which is somewhat more stable and is less susceptible to fluctuation. Those kinds of questions could be sought out and tried to be understood during committee work and to possibly come up with a better standard to work from for calculating the provincial revenue that would allow these municipalities to have some more level of certainty going forward.

These types of questions, I believe, we can find answers to if we send Bill 32 to committee. We can grill the Deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs to get the answers we need in a transparent and a very accountable manner. Madam Speaker, I hope that I have been able to elaborate a little bit on why the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship needs to see Bill 32 and why we need to hear from the mayors, Mayor Nenshi and Mayor Iveson, going forward. We also need to hear from other stakeholders like the AUMA and the RMA, the Rural Municipalities association.

Finally, I believe that we also need to hear from the department itself. The Resource Stewardship Committee can ask questions of the department to get the answers that they would need to feel confident that the formulas being described here and the revenue streams that are being anticipated to be used in the formulas are the right numbers that will give us a certain level of comfort, that the cities and all the municipalities, as we move forward with these types of arrangements, can all feel confident that they are being recognized as an arm of the province established by the province to help these communities to function and to govern themselves and also to take care of the things that their municipalities need to take care of in ensuring that they're providing the roads and the services necessary to their stakeholders.

I'd like to thank you, Madam Speaker, for granting me the time.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to the members for their comments today. I appreciate that.

I'll be really brief, with just a couple of things about this bill and about what the members are talking about. We've done extensive consultation with the two big cities. We have also been and continue to be involved in conversations with the AUMA and the RMA about legislating a deal with them because it's something they've asked for for quite some time, to have sustainability and certainty. It's a promise we made, and it's a promise we will keep, as we are doing with the big cities.

Just a real quick point that the 340 municipalities and Métis settlements outside of the two big cities have been kept whole with MSI. It's in the budget. It is there until '21-22. So they have that certainty of that funding. The big cities, as Mayor Iveson has said, took a haircut of $152 million a year each. So they've helped us get to our path to balance. We've worked with them on this. We wanted to make sure that we legislated something so that in the middle of their budget cycle they weren't worried about this going away, that they have certainty.

As I said, it's a promise made and a promise kept. Though I applaud the member's tenacity in wanting to send, I think, almost every single government bill to committee, unfortunately I will have to say that I am not in favour of sending this to committee.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 32 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any further members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to close debate.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to all the speakers so far for bringing up very valid points. I really appreciate it, and I look forward to Committee of the Whole, where we can have a little bit more of a robust discussion on this. I think it's a good bill, and I'm looking forward to, like I said, having that discussion.

With that, I will close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 28 Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd just like to take this opportunity to address some of the additional questions that were raised at Committee of the Whole. One of the questions that came up was about what will happen when parties disagree as to when the adult interdependent relationship began or whether they are adult interdependent partners. This was raised previously in Committee of the Whole.

Of course, this is one of the issues that may potentially arise. The sort of pool of common property begins at the time when folks became adult interdependent partners. In most cases, I would say in the vast majority of cases, it's going to be clear, but it is possible that a dispute would arise. I want to reiterate again that in this legislation, if passed, in the event that parties are unable to agree on when the relationship of interdependence began or if one of them maintains there was no such relationship, it would ultimately fall to the courts to decide the matter. There may still be some areas of a little bit of uncertainty, but the idea here is to create as much certainty for as many people as possible so that we can keep as many people as possible out of sort of high-conflict court matters. The courts will be guided by the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act in terms of answering these questions. That act has been in force for 15 years, so family law judges and lawyers are fairly familiar with it.

Another question that was asked, Madam Chair, was how people can prepare an adult interdependent partnership agreement. In order to be valid, an adult interdependent partnership agreement must be in the form set out in the adult interdependent partnership agreement regulation. In addition, there are a couple of rules around this. Both parties must be at least 16 years old or at least 18 years old if the parties are related to each other by blood or adoption because, of course, the adult interdependent partnerships act can take into account a few different types of relationships. Neither party can be in an ongoing marriage or have another adult interdependent partnership agreement. The parties must live or intend to live together in a relationship of interdependence. Finally, each party's signature must be witnessed by at least two witnesses.

The parties do not need to get legal advice in order for an adult interdependent partnership agreement to be valid. However, they may wish to get legal advice in order to better understand their rights and obligations. Entering into an adult interdependent partnership arrangement can be thought of as similar to entering into a marriage. We do not require couples to obtain independent legal advice before they get married although it's not always a bad idea.

Finally, with respect to custody issues a member also asked whether this bill would address custody issues for children whose parents are separating. Bill 28 addresses property division for unmarried partners and eligibility criteria for adult child support. Parenting arrangements, parenting time, child custody, and access issues are outside the scope of this particular bill. Madam Chair, these issues are addressed in the Family Law Act. The impact of that will vary in the individual cases, but the act, again, emphasizes the best interests of the child.

At the end of the day, one of the reasons for this act is that clear rules often shorten the duration of conflict, and that shorter duration of conflict will be very beneficial for the children of those relationships, but the specific custody issues are addressed already in that act.

With that, I believe that was the answer to all of those questions. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 28?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 28 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 28.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, say no. So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the incredible progress we have made this morning and the hour, I would move that we call it 12 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:37 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 4, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly our distinguished guest, Ms Lucia Piazza, consul general of the United States for Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Northwest Territories. She's accompanied by Mr. Keith Gacek, political and economic specialist with the U.S. consul general in Calgary. The U.S. is Alberta's largest trading partner, and bilateral ties between us remain deep and far-reaching. In 2017 our bilateral trade was more than $106 billion, supporting jobs on both sides of the border. Alberta is also the largest foreign supplier of crude oil to the United States, greatly contributing to its energy and economic security. Alberta will be home for Consul General Piazza for the next few years, and I hope she enjoys the warm hospitality of Albertans. I look forward to working with her during her tenure in our wonderful province. I would like to ask Consul General Piazza and Mr. Gacek to please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Thank you for your visit.

The hon. Minister of Transportation and Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First, I'll introduce my school group, and then I have another introduction for the minister of . . .

The Speaker: We're at visitors now.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Sure. I'm happy to do that then, Mr. Speaker, in that order.

It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Health, Minister Glen Abernethy of the Northwest Territories. His wife, Carolyn, and son John are with him today, and they're seated in the Speaker's gallery. Re-elected in 2018, Minister Abernethy has several portfolios, including Health and Social Services, the Minister Responsible for Seniors, the Minister Responsible for Persons with Disabilities, and the Minister Responsible for the Public Utilities Board. That's a lot, I think. I know that the Minister of Health deeply appreciates their working relationship and regrets that she's not able to introduce him herself. I will now ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome. It's particularly nice to have that child; this place could use more of those sounds.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Now the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Now, Mr. Speaker, it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly a group of 20 brilliant grade 5 students and their teachers from the north side Al Mustafa Academy, which is located in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. These students have been very busy here today and have already visited the Borealis Gallery and the Pehonan Theatre in the Federal Building. They have also just finished a tour of the Legislature Building. They are accompanied by teacher Lahoucine Saheem and Mohammed Saheem as a chaperone. I would ask them and their teachers to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you some fantastic students from St. Theresa school. St. Theresa has a Ukrainian program, and it's a school where every time we have an election, municipal or provincial or federal, the students get together and have a forum. Today the students from St. Theresa have their teachers, Lisa Hall and Kurt Davison, and they have chaperones Amie Gartner, Rae Rees, Rebecca Kostura. I would like to ask the students to please stand up and receive the customary welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members roughly 30 students from Millwoods Christian school who have been spending the day here learning about the Legislature. They are joined by their teacher, Ashley Merta. I would like to ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups for introductions today?

I've looked at my pages and pages of invitations here, so I just remind you about brevity as we move along. The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions on your behalf. The Salvation Army is very visible during the festive season, but they actually do good work throughout the year. They are the largest nongovernmental direct provider of social services in the country, serving over 1.7 million people a year in 400 communities across Canada and 16 Alberta communities, where they provide emergency shelter, transitional housing, addictions treatment, mental health support, food security, outreach counselling, family supports, and so much more. The Salvation Army Christmas kettle campaign is one of Canada's most recognizable charitable events, and it's now under way. It has raised funds for more than 125 years. We are very pleased today to have in your gallery Major Margaret McLeod, who is the divisional commander for Alberta and the Northwest Territories, stationed in Edmonton. Major McLeod has served across Canada in postings of ever-increasing responsibility. She was raised in Medicine Hat and is a keen skier. Major Alan Hoeft is the divisional secretary for public relations and development and area commander of the northern region. He and his wife, Karen, most recently stationed in Yellowknife, are both Rotary Paul Harris fellows. Major McLeod and Major Hoeft are in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Jabbour: It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you three members of the Aramark team here at the Legislature. We have Patricia Jimenez, who has worked here at the Legislature for almost 10 years, since November 2009. She is our baker, cashier, a hard worker, and an important key to our daily operations, always focused on providing the best customer service. We have Guruprasad Kulkarni, who recently joined the team at the Legislature in October. He's the food service supervisor at the cafeteria. And we have Luiss Vaskess-Kilsans, who has worked here at the Legislature for one year, since November 2017. He has worked for Aramark for five years, is the chef manager, managing the three cafeterias at the Legislature and the Haultain and Terrace buildings. On your behalf I'd like to thank them for their service in keeping us well fed and fuelled, always being friendly and providing great customer service. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Mr. Manager, I want to point out that Pat is a great public relations agent.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two constituents from Strathcona-Sherwood Park, Rosella Bjornson and Bill Pratt. I'd ask them to rise as I continue on. Rosella has shown that when it comes to living your dream, the sky is the limit. She recently received the highest honour that the province of Alberta can bestow upon a citizen, the Alberta Order of Excellence. Rosella was recognized for her leadership in the aviation industry as the first female airline jet pilot in Canada, the first officer in a twin engine in North America. She paved the way for other women to enter into the world of aviation. Rosella's husband, Bill, has literally been her co-pilot in life, and they both continue to fly today. I ask Rosella and Bill to rise, which they have already, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood-Park.

Ms McKittrick: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was just thinking about flying and the incredible work that the previous person did.

Today it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Jeannine Basken. Ms Basken received her degree in interior design from the University of Alberta and is currently an interior designer in Edmonton. She has travelled the world and worked overseas as an au pair. This is her first trip to the Legislature. She is with her grandfather, my constituent Mr. Reg Basken, who just recently also received the Alberta Order of Excellence. I would ask both of my guests to rise and receive the customary welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm introducing guests for Human Rights Day, and I'd ask my guests to rise as I call their names. First, Manwar Kahn is dedicated to raising public awareness of bullying across Alberta, and he launched the province-wide antibullying campaign Do Not Be a Bystander, which empowers bystanders to intervene in a safe way through antibullying techniques. Manwar has received the Governor General's caring Canadian award and the Alberta community justice award in the category of community mobilization.

Marco Luciano is the founder and director of Migrante Alberta, which carries out education and advocacy work for persons who are in Canada on temporary work visas. He assists individuals who are facing discrimination and ensures that public policies change to treat temporary workers fairly. Marco also organized a memorial candlelight vigil in solidarity with Syrian refugees and was a key organizer in the campaign to make Edmonton a sanctuary city.

Ali Mahdi is a family and youth community worker with the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers. Ali has worked tirelessly in many ways, including through a program which helps Somali youth successfully graduate high school. As a mentor with the police and youth engagement program Ali works with other community leaders to teach youth the role of police and Canadian laws and to help police understand the challenges that newcomer youth face. Ali also recently started free citizenship preparation classes.

Giscard Kodiane is the president of Pont Cultural Bridge. Giscard works to rally and unite communities, community members, and community structures in Edmonton. Giscard uses oral history traditions to teach history to future generations. Giscard also contributes to the Ivory Canadian Community of Edmonton and the community of African francophone associations of Edmonton and the establishment of the Ivory Coast consulate representation in Edmonton.

Chantal Hitayezu is the founder of the African Canadian Performing Arts Foundation. She dedicates her time to planning activities for local and international artists and connects with accomplished refugee artists, world peace ambassadors, genocide survivors, and emerging and underrepresented female talents. Chantal works as a home support operator and volunteers as a settlement counsellor for Rwanda social services and family counselling.

I thank all my guests for their impressive service and leadership, and I ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to introduce three incredible individuals from the 4-H community. Nora Paulovich, Mark Sayers, and Pat Sayers will be inducted into the Alberta 4-H Hall of Fame this year. Nora Paulovich is a volunteer 4-H leader in the Peace region, a role she has had for over 20 years. Nora was active at the district level as district president and district representative and at the regional level as rep for the provincial 4-H Beef Advisory Council. She is currently serving as the Peace representative on provincial council. Nora is an excellent organizer, 4-H mentor, and she continues to make a lasting impact on 4-H around the province. She's joined by her husband, Bob Noble. Both Nora and Bob are active farmers in Manning, Alberta. Mark and Pat Sayers have both been involved in 4-H since 1993. They have been instrumental in planning well-remembered leaders' conferences and highly successful provincial beef shows. Both Pat and Mark have served on the 4-H Council of Alberta, with Mark serving as president during his time. From their local club to national events Pat and Mark have made a significant impact on the 4-H community. They currently live in Lethbridge and are just as active in their community as ever. With them is the Peace region 4-H specialist from my department, Nicole Hornett. I would now ask all my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. I think you have two.

Mr. Nielsen: I do have two introductions, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly local entrepreneur Sandi Jewett. Sandi owns and operates the award-winning business A Ribbon in Time, which offers training and business services. Sandi is also here as a representative of Coming Home Alive, an organization that promotes education and safety in the commercial driving business. I would like to thank Sandi for all of her work enhancing our community and for promoting safety on our roads. I would ask that she now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Of course, it's also a privilege again to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of individuals from the Today Family Violence Help Centre. With us today we have Richard Ouellet, Merle Linton, Cindy Furlong, Monique Methot, Danielle Sehn, Maryam Chamanifard, Kaitlin Schmitz, and Cecilia Kasten. The Today Family Violence Help Centre's mission is to raise awareness and build capacity by providing immediate, inclusive, integrated services for those impacted by family violence. They are the first stop for anyone affected by family violence and provide nonjudgmental help to anyone regardless of their situation, gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity, or culture. I would certainly like to thank them for all of their help in creating a safer and more inclusive society. I ask that my guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the incredible pleasure and honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Emily Pitchers, Christina Ryan, and Christina's partner, Ron Taylor. Emily and Christina have long fought to make sure that all adult children with disabilities can apply for child support regardless of their parents' marital status. I think that this is an incredible story of how someone can, despite all odds, make a difference in the lives of those around them. I'm glad that they were able to join us today for third reading of the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, and to work to help to modernize this act for all Alberta families. I'd like to ask Emily, Christina, and Ron to please accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House three constituents of Red Deer-South. Cindy More has been married to Rick for the past 36 years, is the mother of daughters Lindsey and Stephanie and sons John and James, and is the cofounder of the Smiles Thru Lindsey foundation. Cindy is employed at the Cosmos group of companies, where she helps to improve the lives of those with developmental disorders. Rick is the cofounder of Smiles Thru Lindsey, and he is an amazing advocate for mental health and depression in our youth. Rick is on the board of the Central Alberta Child Advocacy Centre, and he's the current interim CEO for the Red Deer & District Chamber of Commerce. Steph is the daughter of Rick and Cindy and big sister to Lindsey. Losing her sister to suicide has shaped her life in a direction she would never have imagined. She resides in Red Deer with her fiancé, Marshall, and is employed at the Collicutt Centre. Would you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I'd like to welcome back the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an inspirational senior from Edmonton-Riverview, the riding I have the honour to represent, Mr. Bill Gilroy. Bill turned 90 in November, and he attributes his longevity to exercising every day. He exercises with the November Project and is the oldest member in the world. He's also a member of the Edmonton Hash House Harriers, a social running group, and he's run more than 1,500 times with hashers around the world and is also the oldest hasher in all of Canada. Bill says that the key to healthy aging is staying active, and certainly he exemplifies that. Bill Gilroy is here today with his family: his wife, Margaret Golberg, his daughter Christa Gilroy, and his daughter-in-law Kathy Kiel. I'd like my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Government House Leader, unanimous consent to continue with introductions?

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Will we return to this after question period?

The Speaker: We could, or we could complete the introductions now with unanimous consent.

1:50

Mr. Mason: I will ask the House, then, Mr. Speaker, for unanimous consent to finish the supposedly brief introductions today and then go to question period.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Government House Leader. I will keep it brief.

I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly six outstanding Albertans who are here today celebrating Human Rights Day at the Legislature with us. First, from Canadians for a Civil Society I would like to introduce the president, Vasant Chotai, and board director Prabhjot Punnia. Also here from Canadians for a Civil Society is board director Netta Phillet. Glori Meldrum is the founder of Little Warriors. Jonn Kmech is the program manager of the homeless partnering strategy with Alberta Rural Development Network. Lastly, I introduce Colin Campbell, regional manager of Native Counselling Services of Alberta. All of these individuals are outstanding advocates and leaders in their communities. Thank you, all, for all the work you do to create a safe and inclusive province for all Albertans. Please know that our government stands with you. I ask my guests to rise, which they already have, and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to introduce six guests who are here today for Human Rights Day at the Legislature. I ask them to rise as I call their names. From the Edmonton Police Service: Sergeant Colleen Mooney and Sergeant David Jones. Sergeant Jones co-ordinates a multi-agency project working to prevent violence, extremism, and radicalization in Edmonton. He also volunteers his time serving on the board of directors of KidSport Edmonton. Sergeant Mooney is a patrol sergeant and co-ordinates the reintegration team that implements a program to help police officers affected by PTSD.

Maigan van der Giessen is a program facilitator and arts lead with the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights. Maigan brings youth perspectives on human rights issues to the forefront through a number of different programs and initiatives that she has led.

John Kolkman is a research associate for the Edmonton Social Planning Council, a nonprofit focused on finding solutions to poverty. John has researched, published, and presented on many social policy issues, including poverty, wealth, income inequality, and the list goes on, Mr. Speaker.

Oliver Kamau is a manager at the Edmonton Immigrant Services Association, where he oversees settlement and integration programs offered at 82 locations in the greater Edmonton area.

And last but not least is Jitendra Shah, president of the Mahatma Gandhi foundation in Edmonton. Jitendra provides active leadership in the local community. He has been the founding member and chair of the Mahatma Gandhi Foundation for World Peace. He recently received the Polovnikov-Mokray lifetime service award from Project Ploughshares.

I'd like to thank my guests for their contributions and invite them to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. I rise to introduce to you and through you five members of the Muslim Association of Canada, also known as MAC, who are joining us in the public gallery. MAC is one of the largest Muslim organizations in Canada, with a national presence across 13 major cities, and recently they celebrated their 20th anniversary. They provide essential leadership for the Muslim community and beyond. Their MAC Rhama mosque in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung is a key community hub and a welcoming space for all. I ask my guests to rise as I call their names: Sharaf Sharafeddine, Abdussalam Nakua, Ali Assaf, Hassan Gabbara, Angie Teliani, and Issam Saleh. Please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Dach: I also want to introduce guests, Mr. Speaker, who are here today to celebrate Human Rights Day. I ask my guests to rise as I call their names, starting with Reverend Audrey Brooks, a pastoral minister with the Unitarian church of Edmonton who has focused her actions on human empowerment and social justice. Her many activities include the Women's Wellness Advisory group at Grey Nuns hospital, initiating the annual Genocide Memorial Service, being a member of the famous Raging Grannies, and being a spiritual counsellor and support for LGBTQ2S youth. As a U of A chaplain, she helped found the pride alumni chapter and offered spiritual support at the TRC hearings. Reverend Brooks also serves on the capital region interfaith housing initiative board.

I'm also pleased, Mr. Speaker, to introduce Katherine Tracy, who is here on behalf of Jan Fox and the Reach Edmonton Council for safe communities. Reach is a co-ordinating council that works closely with social agencies, businesses, and citizens to make Edmonton a safer place to live, work, and play. As Reach's executive director Jan Fox has been an outstanding champion for human rights. Jan's experience includes being the first warden at the Edmonton Institution for Women, founder of Women in Police and Corrections, and a leader of the Rotary aboriginal partnership.

Next, Noel Somerville is with the Seniors Task Force of Public Interest Alberta. In 1997 Noel retired as executive secretary of the Edmonton public teachers' local of the ATA. Since then, he has been active in social justice issues and serves on the city of Edmonton's Subdivision and Development Appeal Board. Noel has served on the board of directors of Public Interest Alberta and has been chair of the Seniors Task Force for 14 years.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, from the Earth Group I introduce Kori Chilibeck and Matt Moreau. The Earth Group is a social enterprise which produces bottled spring water, Alberta-grown tea, and fair trade organic coffee. The Earth Group exists entirely to provide free food, water, and education to children globally through the United Nations world food program and donates 100 per cent of their profits to fund school meal programs. They have provided nearly 4 million school meals globally and have the only business card which you can plant. Thank you for all your work.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to also introduce guests joining us today to celebrate Human Rights Day and the 70th anniversary of the UN declaration on human rights. I ask them to rise as I call their names. Meghan Unterschultz is assistant dean with the Faculty of Graduate Studies and Research at the U of A. She also volunteers as a big sisters mentor and serves on the boards of Goodwill Industries of Alberta and the YWCA Edmonton. Meghan has served on the EndPovertyEdmonton community well-being committee and on the Parkland Turning Points Society board, that offers counselling and programs to end the cycle of family violence.

Marnie Suitor is a founding member of Aspiring Women in Leadership and Legacy, which provides a forum where women from all backgrounds can come together to give and receive wisdom, support, and mentorship. AWILL's vision is to see all women fully living out their leadership potential. I thank my guests for their service to Albertans and ask that they now receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike some of the people that have gone before me, I will try and keep this brief. I would like to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Maryanne McGrath, who is here today to watch her very first QP live. Maryanne is a fourth-year political science student at MacEwan University who was born and raised in the fabulous community of Fort McMurray. She's an expert campaigner, having worked on countless campaigns for her father, one of the regional municipality's councillors and Catholic school board trustees. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I request unanimous consent to move immediately to question period.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oil Price Differentials Keystone XL Pipeline Project

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often that we can celebrate good news here, but today Alberta oil is trading at $28. Last week it was at $10. The differential has come down from $45 last week to $25 today. Will the Premier please confirm that this appears to be the result of the very difficult but necessary decision around curtailment of production?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed the member opposite is correct. Preliminary responses within the market are positive, and we are certainly seeing the differential come down. We're not, you know, out of the woods yet by any means, of course, and we know that it's likely to pop back up a bit as the market unfolds, but it's a good start. We're going to continue to work with industry to make sure that we find the right amounts and that we can clear the market as soon as possible and move out of distressed-barrel economics as soon as possible and do a better job of getting our product to market.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the Premier, and I'm glad that she's not tempted to do any victory laps on this one, Mr. Speaker, as there's a long way to go.

Mr. Speaker, one of the concerns raised by some Albertans about the policy of curtailment is that cuts in production will result in cuts in jobs. Our view is that by increasing the price and getting some positive cash flow into the energy sector, this will actually help to save jobs by saving capital spending in 2019. We understand that MEG Energy, for example, has confirmed that this has saved jobs. Would the Premier like to comment on how this policy could actually help to prevent unemployment in Alberta?

Ms Notley: My goodness. I almost feel like the member opposite was in our caucus meeting and we were putting together some – I thank him for that question. There is no question that our focus as we moved forward on this policy was very much front and centre on saving jobs and, with any luck, in fact, encouraging the kind of capital flow that would see jobs increasing as we go forward into the next fiscal year. On a preliminary basis that seems to be what we're seeing. As I say, we will continue to work with industry to make sure that that's the outcome for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kenney: Yes. If I carry this on, I might be accused of lobbing puffballs, Mr. Speaker. Heaven forbid.

Mr. Speaker, as we know, there was a negative decision on the Keystone XL project at a federal court in Montana two weeks ago. The U.S. administration is appealing that decision to an appeals court. Is it the intention of the government of Alberta to intervene in any way either in that appeal or in the pending regulatory reassessment being led by the United States State department?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there's no question that we have been in touch with TCPL to offer them any and all support that we can provide. Certainly, we've seen our minister of environment travel and make representations where there were regulatory hearings around line 3, and there may well be the opportunity to do that with KXL as well. We'll continue to work closely through our office in Washington as well as through our relationship with TCPL and offer assistance and support wherever we can.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Carbon Levy and Federal Carbon Pricing

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the United Conservative Party has filed an application before the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal to seek intervenor status on the pending constitutional reference brought forward by the government of Saskatchewan and supported by the governments of Ontario and New Brunswick, challenging the constitutionality of a threatened federal carbon tax. Will the government of Alberta join in support of Saskatchewan, Ontario, and New Brunswick in that challenge if for no other reason than to protect provincial jurisdiction over our own regulatory authority?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think on that matter we're going to have to agree to disagree, and I'm sure that the member is very disappointed that we've ended this wonderful relationship. Nonetheless, you know, our commitment is to spend our legal dollars on taking positions that support our government's efforts to support our oil and gas industry, to get our product to market, and to pair that with the work that our government is doing, a made-in-Alberta plan that supports our industry as it becomes more and more sustainable and more and more marketable to more and more markets that care about greenhouse gas emissions. We will keep on doing that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, on the question of the carbon tax the Calgary board of education has confirmed that they are spending an estimated $3.3 million per year on the NDP's carbon tax. As a result, they've had to reduce bus service for Calgary students. How does it help the environment or Albertans to make kids wait longer to get a school bus ride to get to class?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, under our government's leadership the Calgary board of education has received extensive support and financial support over the course of the last three years. We have put across the province roughly 4,000 more teachers into classrooms because we support our public education system. We have also funded the reduction of school fees across many parts of this province because we support public education. We have funded class-quality improvements because we support public education. We expect the Calgary board of education to manage that money.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the NDP's carbon tax, which they want to raise by at least 67 per cent, makes it more expensive not just for people to heat their homes and drive to work but for school boards to operate. As a result of the NDP's carbon tax forcing the removal of five Calgary school buses, this means that this affects 400 students, many of whom are now being driven to school by their parents, actually increasing emissions. Does the government not understand that this is one of the many unintended consequences of their carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what would make things more expensive for the Calgary board of education would be if we had engaged in the funding plans that the member opposite's previous party would have put forward; i.e., freezing funding at 2015 levels. What we have done is that we have funded enrolment. We have funded more teachers. We have funded more class-quality improvements. We have done the things that improve public education. The Calgary board of education needs to use the generous amount of funding they have received from this government over the last three and a half years to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Third main question.

Federal Bill C-69

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in 1981 Premier Lougheed won a historic fight to establish in section 92A of the Constitution exclusive provincial jurisdiction over the production of oil and gas, recognizing that this Legislature has exclusive authority over exploration, development, conservation, and management of nonrenewable resource development. This constitutional authority is being challenged by Justin Trudeau's Bill C-69. Why is the NDP government not challenging this attack on our constitutional authority?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the member opposite knows, there is joint authority when it comes to environmental issues. The member opposite is fully aware of that, but he also knows that we have been working very hard and pushing very hard to have the federal government change and amend Bill C-69 in order to reduce the uncertainty that that bill is creating for industry. We have seen some minor progress, but it is not good enough. It happens to be one of the issues that I will stand up for Albertans on when I'm in Ottawa with the first ministers next week.

Mr. Kenney: I'm glad to hear that the Premier will do that. It's unfortunate that her Energy minister signed on to a communiqué from provincial energy ministers that raised no objection to C-69 even though Ontario and Saskatchewan did. It's odd that we have Ontario defending our rights more strongly than the government of Alberta. The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the government has only objected to the federal assessment of downstream carbon emissions associated with pipelines. Bill C-69 attacks our authority over upstream regulation, which section 92A says is the exclusive authority of the provincial Legislature. Why is this government surrendering our exclusive authority?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, two Fridays ago, I believe, so about 10 days ago the Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment issued a communiqué in which Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba ensured that there was language around Bill C-69. In addition to that, the regulatory authority over upstream emissions, we have said to the federal government, shall be covered off through Alberta's climate plan. The existence of that climate plan then keeps the federal government out of our jurisdiction.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it seems the government is missing a critical point here. The exclusive provincial jurisdiction over the regulation of upstream production of oil and gas is not a matter for negotiation. It is nonnegotiable thanks to the victory of Peter Lougheed in 1982. This is not about haggling about whether the feds or Alberta will punish consumers more for driving to work. It's a question of defending this hard-fought exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Will the government join with us in doing so and objecting to those provisions in the federal no more pipelines act, Bill C-69?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has stood up for the rights of the province of Alberta since day one. We have stood up for the need to get our product to market since day one. We have also stood up to ensure that we can work with industry to develop a responsible plan for protecting our climate now and into the future. Now, I understand that the members opposite want to object to every effort to protect our climate now and into the future, but that is not our vision of leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Unemployment

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unemployed Albertans are out of work 50 per cent longer now than they were two years ago. The University of Calgary's School of Public Policy recently cautioned that longer unemployment means increased difficulty in finding re-employment. I know I've spoken to a number of my constituents, previously in professional careers, who cannot find a job after three or four years. People looking for jobs are significantly worse off today than they were two years ago. What specifically is the government doing to address this critical issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the drop in the price of oil has caused the worst collapse and recession in Alberta's recent history, for two generations. It's worse and it's been longer than the collapse in 2008. We know that this is really hard on all Alberta families, of course. That's why we know that there's much more work to do, and we are doing that work so that all Albertans feel the economic recovery.

We're putting jobs and economic diversification first, investing in training programs across our economy so that Albertans have greater hands-on experience with $10 million through the integrated training program. I'm sure I'll address more things later.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms McPherson: There were three times the number of men aged 15 to 24 looking for work for six months in Alberta in 2017 as there were women. Experienced professionals, engineers, geologists, and systems analysts are having trouble finding work bagging groceries or working in security. Employers are turning them away because they are overqualified. When does the government believe that these people will have the chance to rejoin the workforce?

Mr. Ceci: Certainly, I hope that all Albertans have a great chance to rejoin the workforce and for prosperity for their families. In addition, we're creating workforce placements so that Albertans can build the connections with employers, Mr. Speaker. There are 1,300 of those workforce partnership placements. We know there's more work to be done, and we won't stop until all Albertans feel this economic recovery. In addition, we're investing in building much-needed infrastructure, that has helped put companies and Albertans back to work, and we're going to continue to see that bill go forward.

Ms McPherson: The number of women in their peak earning years looking for work for a year or more has almost doubled in the last two years. We know that different groups experience unemployment and underemployment differently. Indigenous populations usually see a decrease in employment rates after a downturn. We need to tailor supports so that people can access help in an appropriate way. What specific measures has the government implemented to recognize the differences in unemployed groups?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, perhaps this is a better question for other ministers. I know that they are supportive and I've been supportive of making sure there's increased monies there for social assistance caseloads when we need them and people are unsuccessful in getting employment. We, of course, pushed Ottawa in the past around EI benefits and extending those to Albertans who were suffering through the downturn. We're going to continue working on the jobs front, supporting diversification and getting more Albertans back to work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Federal Mortgage Rules

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the changes to the federal mortgage rules over the past 10 years, it's become harder and harder for first-time homebuyers to purchase a house. Now it seems the new federal stress test involving the Bank of Canada benchmark is forcing Alberta to address a problem it doesn't have to counter issues in B.C. and Toronto. More and more Albertans are unable to purchase a house or refinance their homes when dealing with hardships because of these rule changes. To the Minister of Finance: what communications have you had with your federal counterpart surrounding this issue?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much to the member. You know, it does seem like Ottawa is on a different economic plane from time to time and not looking at our needs. This stress test was intended to deal with issues in Vancouver and Toronto, but it has had an impact here in Alberta. I've heard from hard-working Albertans that it's difficult to buy a home at this point in time because of these rules. Now, it's important for Albertans to be able to afford their homes with good, mortgage-paying jobs, and that is challenging for many Albertans. That's why Ottawa cannot ignore the punishing differential. We need support around that so we can get back to good, mortgage-paying jobs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these rules are imposed by the federal government because they are concerned about rising consumer debt and given that the federal government has done nothing to curb issues like credit card debt, which is the root of the problem, to the Minister of Finance: are you looking into solutions to either empower ATB or our credit unions to provide alternative solutions for consumers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much again, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, Ottawa doesn't seem to get it. That's why here in Alberta we've done things to make life more affordable like axing payday loans, that were put in place by the previous government. We brought in $25-a-day daycare to make life more affordable, and we froze tuition fees. Those things are making life more affordable . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

Mr. Ceci: . . . for more Albertans as we go forward. On the personal banking side of things, Mr. Speaker, we'll continue to work with ATB and our credit unions to find solutions to community issues like this.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that consumers and brokers are having a hard time renegotiating mortgages, preventing them from being able to qualify for financing, and given that all real estate markets are local and the federal government's national solution has hurt Alberta's housing market, will the Minister of Finance urge the federal government to consider measures which reflect the regional nature of Alberta's real estate market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his advocacy. A couple of months ago I did write a letter to Ottawa saying that any interest rate decisions should take into account Alberta's situation and that we're looking at the Bank of Canada's next potential increase and thinking it may not happen as a result of some of the things going on in our economy. We know there's still more work to do, and until all Albertans feel this economic recovery, we're not going to stop. We know that the path forward is not to cut 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses from their positions like the opposition wants to do every day of the week. Next week I'll be in Ottawa talking to the finance ministers . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Energy-sector Unemployment

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier claims that government oil production cuts will not result in job losses, but production cuts of 9 per cent, more than 325,000 barrels, mean fewer workers needed. Canada's banks estimate that Alberta's GDP growth will fall by 50 per cent next year. This will cause economic pain. Does the Premier have a plan to deal with a 50 per cent decline in GDP growth?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We knew when we made our call the other day that the cost of doing nothing was more job losses and a continuance of $80 million a day in the Canadian economy, so we took the action, a short-term curtailment, to help our companies get more cash flow, take care of the resources that we have here in Alberta, the resources that all Albertans know. We're working on crude by rail, we're working on energy upgrading, and we're working on pipelines.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, Christmas is coming. What assurance can the Premier give to Albertans working in oil and gas related work that they will not be losing their jobs this Christmas season?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have such a variety of industry in this province, and every industry will be affected differently by this curtailment. We have protected the small producers, and we're working with the 25 producers in this curtailment through the AER, listening to any concerns they have or questions, and we're working with every industry. But we know that had we done nothing, there would have been job losses.

Dr. Swann: A last question, again for the Premier: will the Premier, given 70 layoffs recently at Trican Well Services and reduced drilling budgets for the 2019 season, join the Alberta Liberal opposition and support our call for the federal government to reinstate enhanced unemployment benefits to hard-hit Albertans who have lost their jobs, especially in Calgary, where we've hit an unemployment rate of a phenomenal 8.4 per cent?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to working with our industry, we are working with a number of critical groups like PSAC, the small drillers, CAODC for their impact, and I thank them for their advocacy. PSAC has been out to Ottawa many times talking about the impact that this whole crisis has on their members. We are working together as a group because Albertans own the resources, the industry helps extract the resources, and we need to work together. Together we can tackle this crisis and get ahead of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Prime Minister's Remarks on Construction Workers

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canadians were absolutely horrified to hear the Prime Minister's condescending and demeaning comments at the G-20 summit regarding the hard-working men and women that literally build our country. My question is to the Premier. Do your policies support your friend Justin Trudeau's gender-lens analysis of our hard-working pipeline construction workers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services and Status of Women.

Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I first want to say thank you to all our hard-working men and women in the oil and gas industry in this province, who are out there working so hard, and to the families that they have, who make many sacrifices on their behalf as well. You know, we have a stand-alone Status of Women ministry here in this province because we all do need to work together across all industries in order to ensure that we support women to be successful, to support women to continue to do better. We'll continue to work across all those sectors in order to do so and look forward to continuing to improve the well-being of women in the province.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this government will not stand up for the hard-working men and women who work on these national projects but instead hides behind their friend Justin Trudeau as he creates excuse after excuse to promote and justify his no more pipelines bill, Bill C-69, to the Premier: are you going to stand up for our construction workers, or are you going to continue to allow the Prime Minister to bash our industry, our resources, our province, and the hard-working folks who work on the pipelines that you supposedly want built?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I can't help but set the record straight. On this side of the House we are fighting every single day for working people – working men, working women – for their families, making lives more affordable. On this side of the House we know that it's government's job to stand up for pipelines. The Leader of the Official Opposition, when he was a minister of the Crown in the federal government for 10 years, two of those as a minister responsible for jobs, failed to act on pipelines. He only said the word "pipelines" in the House of Commons once, and when we asked him why, he said: because it wasn't my job. You bet it was his job. It's this government's job, and every single one of us is standing up for our sector.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that a large percentage of the folks working directly on these crucial infrastructure projects is male and given that the social impacts of the people working on these projects are that they live in local hotels, they buy food from local restaurants and grocery stores, and they buy their clothes there and their supplies and ultimately actually contribute to the economic prosperity of these communities, to the Premier: will you commit to calling out Mr. Trudeau on his derogatory comments and set the record straight for Albertans and Canadian workers?

Ms Hoffman: I commit, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Health and the Deputy Premier to fight for the people of this province, including fighting for pipelines. I don't need somebody to put it in a mandate letter to know that that's my job. For the Leader of the Official Opposition to have his left hand stand up and criticize us for the work we're doing on this project when we've taken it further than he ever did when he was in Ottawa is mighty rich. I have to say that we will continue to fight for the women and the men of this province every day because that's our job, and it should have been his job when he was in Ottawa.

NDP and Pipeline Development

Mr. Nixon: The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers says that the cancellation of Northern Gateway was the most damaging thing that has been done in our economy. Now, back in April 2015 the Premier told the Calgary Herald that Gateway is “not the right decision,” and then this NDP government supported the Trudeau Liberals in Ottawa as they scrapped the project. Sadly, now Albertans are living with the consequences of that terrible decision. Will the NDP, after denying it so long in this House, finally admit their mistake and apologize to the people of Alberta for not supporting Northern Gateway?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, what I will admit, first of all and foremost, is that all of us on this side of the House are fighting for pipelines every day. Northern Gateway was dead in the water a long time ago, and it was dead in the water because the federal government under Stephen Harper did not do their job, nor did the Leader of the Opposition, who was at the cabinet table at the time. The Federal Court of Appeal clearly outlined that there were mistakes made, but it wasn't mistakes on this side; it was mistakes by the federal government. We stand by that.

Mr. Nixon: Given that this alliance the Alberta NDP has pursued with the Trudeau Liberals in Ottawa has had dire consequences for Alberta – the NDP have sided with Trudeau over and over instead of with the people of Alberta – will this government finally admit their mistakes and apologize for opposing Northern Gateway; for siding with Justin Trudeau over Albertans; for voting in this House to support Bill C-69, the no pipelines law; for protesting against Keystone and not fighting for it; for standing by idly as Trudeau killed Energy East; and for standing with Trudeau over and over and over while he decimated Alberta's energy industry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you. You know, the mistakes that were made were a lot of inaction by the federal government when it mattered – they should have had a vision 10 or more years ago that we needed pipeline capacity and not just more capacity to the U.S. but capacity east and west; that was not done – a cabinet that, when times were good, did not pay attention to the matter. Mr. Speaker, we are paying attention to the matter. We're fighting every day for access in all directions because we see the result of a lack of pipeline access. We have a huge differential right now, and we are addressing that and many other things such as pipeline capacity.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. At the same time period that she's talking about, the minister, these people across from me were protesting that pipeline and our energy industry. Again, will this government finally admit their mistakes and apologize to Alberta, apologize for opposing Northern Gateway; for siding with Trudeau; for supporting Bill C-69 in this Chamber, the no more pipelines bill; for protesting against Keystone and not fighting for it; for standing by idly as Trudeau killed Energy East; and for standing with Trudeau over and over while he decimated our energy industry?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I along with my colleagues here stand up every day for the energy industry. We know it's our job to build pipelines. We know it's our job to get market access, something the previous federal government and our previous colleagues across the way did not understand and did not know and did not do anything about. We are working very hard with our industry partners. We know that pipeline access matters. That's a long-term solution. In the meantime we've got crude by rail, that we're working very hard on. As of Sunday we are doing curtailment because we know that that will make a difference in the short term. At the end of the day, these are resources Albertans own. We are responsible for those resources.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Energy Industry Opposition

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil sands and Alberta's oil industry in general have been under attack for far too many years. Unfortunately, many of these anti-oil and antipipeline campaigns have successfully helped to see pipeline projects delayed and denied. We are hearing of a growing number of layoffs throughout Alberta's oil patch, and foreign-funded campaigns to land-lock our oil are working as hard as ever. What, if anything, is this government doing to fight back?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, we are doing a number of things. Short term, as was announced last Sunday, we are doing a curtailment because we have too much supply. We're not able to ship everything we can produce, so we're managing that oversupply in the short term. In the medium term we're working to get more railcars so we can move product in many directions. Longer term we have a made-in-Alberta energy upgrading strategy that you'll hear more about soon as we are working on the pipelines.

Ms Goodridge: Mr. Speaker, given that in Fort McMurray and across Alberta we have watched countless Greenpeace protestors, left-wing eco-activists, and celebrities talk down our oil industry and my hometown and given that the minister of environment used to be one of the far too many anti-oil, antipipeline activists and given that I would hope all Albertans are cheering for our oil and gas industry, will the minister of environment finally admit that standing up against Alberta pipeline projects was bad for Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, for many years we've heard talk about diversification, but this is the government that is taking that in hand and working with it – folks in Fort McMurray are going to be a critical part of that – in using bitumen for a number of things here in Alberta. That's going to keep jobs here in Alberta. It's going to create new jobs, more taxes, more jobs, more people working in our industry to create value here, keeping the money in Alberta rather than shipping it out elsewhere.

2:30

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Dan Woynillowicz was formerly of the Pembina Institute and who's now with a group named Clean Energy Canada and given that Mr. Woynillowicz was a presenter at the infamous Rockefeller Brothers meeting wherein they schemed to land lock our oil sands and given that at this meeting he advocated for stopping and limiting pipelines and refinery expansion and reduce the demand for oil sands, I'd like to know: how many times has the minister of environment spoken to Mr. Woynilowicz since becoming the minister of the environment?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe it's once, when Dan – I don't know his last name – stood on a stage on November 22, 2015, with the CEOs of CNRL, Suncor, Shell, and Cenovus in announcing the climate plan. So perhaps the hon. member should direct her question to CEOs of the largest employers in her riding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Racism and Hate Crime Prevention

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We live in an interesting age, a time when the rise of social media has combined with economic and political disruption to create an environment where voices of hatred and intolerance have been able to rise, and in my work with Alberta's diverse communities – Muslim, indigenous, African, Caribbean, Jewish, South Asian – they regularly tell me about the fear and anxiety this creates for them and their support for our government's work to take action on racism and questions about our progress so far. To the Minister of Education. The applications for the Anti-Racism Advisory Council closed in September. When will you be announcing the first 25 members?

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and answer this question on behalf of the Minister of Education. Interviews for the Anti-Racism Advisory Council are ongoing as we speak and will continue for the next week or so. We've had over 300 applicants to the council, with interviews for more than 100 of them. We're taking the time to be mindful and considerate of all of the powerful personal experiences that applicants have shared and to ensure a diverse membership that accurately reflects Alberta's population. Appointments will be announced early in the new year, with the council's inaugural meeting to take place soon after.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that experts suggest there are at least 130 extremist right-wing groups operating across Canada and given that hate crimes in Canada are on the rise and given that these groups are growing increasingly bold and working to infiltrate and influence both the military and conservative political parties, to the Minister of Education: how close are we to establishing a provincial hate crimes task force, as called for in your report?

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, we're actively working on all priorities addressed in our government's antiracism report. We know that the data clearly indicates that indigenous and black Albertans are disproportionately affected by certain practices and that there is a rise of Islamophobia demonstrated through disturbing examples of intolerance and prejudice in our province, our country, and in other parts of the world. The hate crimes unit is an important part of our antiracism work that will directly impact these realities and create a safer, more inclusive Alberta for our diverse communities. Consultation and development of the hate crimes unit is ongoing, and I look forward to continuing to work closely with the Minister of Justice and ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that one of the best ways to combat racism is education and that when people know more about others, they're less prone to hate and given that we've committed to include the history of indigenous Albertans, including residential schools, in our curriculum, are you also working to ensure that the history of Alberta's other many diverse communities, such as African-American settlers, Muslims, and Sikhs, will also be taught to students?

Mr. Schmidt: Our government is fostering inclusion and diversity within schools and across the province. We know that standing up against racism and hatred is the right thing to do. That's why we're listening to diverse perspectives in writing the new curriculum, because when students see themselves reflected in what they learn in the classroom, they're confident in their identity as Albertans and as Canadians and they feel empowered to speak out against hatred. The minister has had the opportunity to directly engage with thousands of Albertans from many cultural backgrounds and faiths on both the antiracism initiatives and the new curriculum, and he's very thankful for their ongoing advice and support. In fact, this afternoon his staff are meeting with engaged individuals from ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Health Facility Construction Costs

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has continually failed to meet the needs of our health care system despite increasing our health care spending by over $2 billion. Under the ASLI program the previous government with its partners were able to build beds for $65,000 a bed. Meanwhile in Fort McMurray 144 beds are being built at a price tag of $110 million, or $764,000 per bed. Can this government provide the logic and explain the difference in the construction costs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the hon. member is well aware that many things in Fort McMurray cost a bit more than they do in other parts of the province like Edmonton and Calgary. I imagine that he probably experiences that when he's visiting his riding in his time away from this place. We certainly are aware of that. We also worked with the hon. member and the former Leader of the Official Opposition on which site they felt was most appropriate, something that we thought was important that the people of Fort McMurray have a say in, and they chose a site that requires more investment to make sure that it's the right fit. The reason why we're investing in Fort McMurray is because Conservative governments failed to do so, but we will act as the NDP government.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the private sector will have created 72 per cent of the 2,081 beds projected to be built by this spring. Given that the ASLI program was able to build these builds for about $65,000, a significantly smaller number than those being built in Fort McMurray and other places, and given that when asked about these numbers, we just don't get a clear answer from this government, to the minister: why did you scrap the ASLI program?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we worked with partners to make sure that we increased the level of care to long-term care and dementia care beds throughout our province. I want to rearticulate, though, that it isn't fair to present the Willow Square project or any other project on a cost-per-bed basis because the total projected budget includes costs associated with developing space for outpatient and in-patient programs as well. We're doing this in a way that respects the community's feedback. You'd think that's something that the MLA who represents the riding would want, that he would want us to actually build the project in the core of the city, where the community said that they wanted it, not on the edge of town, that he'd want to have these wraparound services in a fantastic public build close to the hospital rather than having people outsourced to other spaces.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, here's an example about construction costing and management. There's a superlab being built in this province in this city. It initially cost $290 million. It has doubled in cost to $600 million for a building. It is a big box. It is a superlab. It is a space that you could have leased in any old Sears space. The value in a lab is the people and the equipment in the lab. Why did it cost that much? Why did it double in cost?

Ms Hoffman: The fact that we continue to have members of the opposition refer to quality health care environments that people work and live in as fancy boxes is outrageous, and it is so out of touch with the reality of ordinary Albertans, Mr. Speaker. We're not talking about petri dishes and test tubes in a shopping mall, for heaven's sake. We're talking about top-quality lab materials, making sure that we have safe results. These decisions impact patient care. I won't apologize for investing in the people of Alberta and making sure that we don't privatize and outsource to multinational corporations things that should be done within Alberta. I'm proud of that, and the member opposite should be ashamed of himself.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had a lapse there. Forgive me.

Health Facility Policies on Assisted Dying

Dr. Swann: My questions are for the Health minister. The Catholic church hasn't managed hospitals in this province for over 50 years. I'm wondering to what extent the minister believes that Covenant Health should be in charge of restricting constitutional rights for people who request assistance with medical assistance in dying in this province as a publicly funded institution.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every patient in Alberta deserves the same level of dignified, compassionate care no matter what facility they happen to be in. The federal direction is that this is a legal procedure. It's our direction, of course, that there be ease of access and that the patient's choice be respected. Covenant did ensure that their updated policy reflects that assessments can be done on-site as well as signing of final papers. I think that that reflects the will of the people of Alberta, and I'm proud that we're going to be moving forward with patients as the number one guider in that policy.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been hearing from both physicians and patients that, in fact, this policy does not reflect the will of Albertans and physicians, who see a discriminatory approach within Covenant Health, who feel that the process of providing – the policy says: may provide those services on-site – does not go far enough, that it should be mandatory to provide constitutional rights. Will the minister require all publicly funded institutions in Alberta to provide assessment and care regardless of institutional support?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that today's – or I guess it was yesterday's now – policy update is a very good step moving forward, and we will continue to work with our partners who provide care on the front lines to ensure that patients are supported and that their wishes are respected. Anyone who read those stories about citizens who were accessing their health care at a bus stop or outside of a facility knows that that was wrong, and that's why I asked Covenant to update their policy. That's why they made sure they did so. But we're not going to make it mandatory for it to happen there if they want to go home to have their assessment done there, but absolutely, if they want it done in the facility, it will be.

Dr. Swann: I believe that's a red herring, Mr. Speaker. We're not talking about mandatory on-site; we're talking about the policy of the institution requiring them to, where it's requested, allow the services on-site. This is a constitutional right. This minister said that she abides by the . . .

The Speaker: The question only. The question.

Dr. Swann: Given that she has said that she will abide by the Constitution of Canada on health care, why will she not insist that this be a required service in our publicly funded institutions?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, it's important to me that we make sure that every Albertan who wants to exercise their right to choose with regard to legal health care procedures be supported in that, and that is why we made sure that the new Covenant policy confirms that when a patient request is made, an AHS care co-ordinator service will assume responsibility for arrangements for that process, and our care co-ordination services are a made-in-Alberta plan to ensure Albertans who want medical assistance in dying can access that help and support throughout all stages of the process. This is still a relatively new procedure in Canada, and we are continuing to work as it moves forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Social Studies Curriculum Redesign

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week a hand-picked member of the government's secretive curriculum working group resigned citing a litany of problems with the process and results of the curriculum redesign. It turns out that many of my concerns about the new curriculum learning outcomes, its dearth of instructional resources, and its one-size-fits-all approach are shared by someone with a PhD in curriculum studies and by many of his former colleagues. To the Minister of Education: now that some of your experts have lost confidence in the curriculum redesign, will you finally admit that the process has been flawed?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure it'll come as no surprise to the member opposite that I'd make no such admission. In fact, it's long past due that our province undertake this work in updating the curriculum. We're sorry that the member of the curriculum redesign group resigned. We understand his differences of opinion with the way this is going, but, you know, it's been a long time to take to get to this point to review the curriculum, and we won't make any apologies for updating something that was more than 30 years old.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this professor stated, and I quote, that the rationale and the justification offered for redesigning the K through 12 Alberta curriculum was not relevant to the current Alberta social studies curriculum, end quote, and given that the professor is clearly not a UCP supporter, concerns about this agenda-driven curriculum redesign are clearly across partisan lines and given that this social studies curriculum expert does not believe the government's talking points, to that same minister: what was the real reason for redesigning the social studies curriculum?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, it should come as no surprise to the member opposite that in our schools right now we're still teaching about the Soviet Union as if it still existed. It's long past due that we update the curriculum. It's something that their government refused to do when given the chance. We're finally undertaking the work to make sure that our students learn a modern social studies curriculum that's updated to reflect the current realities of the world that our students live in today so that they're better prepared to engage in the democratic processes of their communities, their province, and their country.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the professor stated that, quote, much of the work completed during social studies curriculum working group meetings has been altered or revised by Alberta Education staff and given that he also stated, quote, that decisions about the architectural design and structure of the social studies curriculum were made before the curriculum working group ever met, end quote, when will the minister apologize to the curriculum working group and to the members of the public he supposedly consulted for using them as a cover for this predetermined, agenda-driven curriculum redesign?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me answer that question with a question. When will the member opposite and all of his colleagues apologize to the people of Alberta and the members of the curriculum working group for smashing their names in public and promoting conspiracy theories about their secret, hidden agenda to indoctrinate our youth? The only members of this House who need to apologize for their comments about the curriculum working group are that member opposite and all of his colleagues in that party.

The Speaker: Two more days, folks. Two more days.
The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's cost-effective, performance-based road maintenance system offers Albertans the best value for their tax dollars. Now we hear that the Minister of Transportation is plowing forward with wholesale changes that will result in a more costly model. Can the Transportation minister assure Albertans that adopting B.C.'s model will not increase the cost of road maintenance for Alberta's taxpayers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not quite sure what the hon. member means by "B.C.'s model." I can assure him that the changes that we have implemented and are implementing, which have been done in consultation with the industry, will make it a more performance-based model, will improve the performance, I believe, and will find economies; for example, working with rural municipalities doing the same work on the same roads. When they cross, they raise their blade and put their blade back down on the other side. There are all kinds of efficiencies we can find.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the B.C. model shifts all risk to road maintenance contractors and that will require contractors to adjust their business plan to take on more costs and given the minister recently retendered some of the road maintenance contracts using this system and the tenders are closing in a couple of weeks, to the minister: why the urgency? Usually contractors have much more time to bid. Is this just another way to justify taking road maintenance in-house?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the member, the House, and the industry that we have no plans to bring highway maintenance services in-house. However, I've told the industry that because of the financial difficulties that we're facing, we're going to have to sharpen our pencils, and they're going to have to sharpen their pencils. We need to get better value for money, and we need to make sure that we do things in a way that keeps our roads safe and operable year-round.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that snowplowing is an essential service, as evidenced by the recent snowfall that caused havoc on our highways across the province, and given that expediting this new model could result in contractors changing their priorities to absorb the extra cost of liability, to the minister: is this new contract going to cost taxpayers more or decrease the service? You can't have it both ways.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to assure the member and all Albertans that the safety of our highways is the highest priority. We need to make sure that we get good value for our money from contractors, but I think there are better ways to do it that require a little bit more innovation on the part of the industry, and I am sure that they are up to the challenge. They do a good job for us, and they are going to continue to do a good job for us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Workplace Safety

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fourteen years ago the government of Canada introduced the Westray law. This law was meant to hold employers criminally responsible in cases where workers lost their lives in workplace accidents where employers ignored the health and safety of their workers. But it's been a decade, and we still haven't seen much progress. To the Minister of Labour: what are you doing to ensure that Westray is enforced and supported?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is fighting for what matters to Albertans, and that includes ensuring that workplaces are safe and healthy and that workers get home safe at the end of the day. That's why last year we signed a memorandum of understanding with 10 different police services across the province that clearly defines the protocols for investigating workplace incidents and ensures that OHS and the police are able to work together to assess when charges might be laid. This MOU will help ensure that in the case of a tragic incident the intent of the Westray law is not only followed but the families can feel confident that, where warranted, action will be taken for their loved ones.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that employers have the most responsibility to keep workers safe and given that if they ignore this responsibility, there can be tragic consequences like we saw in the Westray mine disaster, to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that employers know what's expected of them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, when we were elected three years ago, we inherited a set of labour laws that had not been updated in decades, 30 or 40 years in many cases. That wasn't right. I'm very proud of the work that we've done to make workplaces safer and healthier. It's now every employer's responsibility to ensure that their workplaces are safe not only from physical hazards but from bullying and harassment as well. We're continuing to work with employers and workers to make sure everyone understands the new rights and responsibilities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that workers have often been shut out of health and safety discussions in their workplace and given that we know that when workers are involved in these decisions, workplaces are more efficient and have better results, again to the minister: what are you doing to ensure that workers have a say in their own safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. By giving workers the right to know about hazards in their workplace, the right to participate in health and safety on their work site, and the clear right to refuse unsafe work, we are able to keep workers safer and ensure that fewer Albertans are hurt on the job. These are all rights that the Conservative leader has promised to roll back at the request of Conservative insiders and the highest bidder. I know that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills promised that the Conservative plan would hurt workers, but even I was surprised that they would be so literal about it. We're not going to let that happen. We're going to keep fighting for workers and make sure that every worker comes home safe at the end of the day.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've been asked if there is unanimous consent for the introduction of a guest. It's been an unusual amount of time already. Is there unanimous consent?

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: I would ask that members depart.
Government House Leader, you might have a request.

Mr. Mason: I was going to make it a little closer to the wire, but I can inform the House that under Standing Order 7(8) we'll be extending the Routine past 3 o'clock.

Members' Statements

Human Rights

Loyola: Mr. Speaker, the UN declaration of human rights is an international agreement outlining the fundamental rights of all human beings. Within this document is the acknowledgement of the sovereignty of each nation and their responsibility to uphold these rights for their citizens. This is accomplished through a collaborative approach by governments working together with civil society.

I want to acknowledge the organizations joining us today to recognize this important partnership. Together we are all working hard on ridding our society of systemic injustices that violate the human rights of all who call Alberta home.

Standing up for human rights requires more from politicians than just lip service at election time. It requires action. On this side of the House we've got the backs of newcomers and cultural communities, and we're fighting for what matters to them. Whether it be for the religious freedom of the Sikh community or for refugees' access to drivers' licences, we're making real, concrete changes that are making life better.

Unfortunately, though, even with all this work we're still seeing an upsurge of Islamophobic and anti-Semitic views. Even worse, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that these views seem welcome in the Conservative party. This fall the Conservative leader approved candidates who again and again expressed Islamophobic views, including one who compared Muslims to bank robbers. But this is nothing new. The Conservative leader was part of a caucus that openly attacked Islam. They stated that the niqab is firmly "rooted in a culture that is anti-women." He did nothing to speak up against such bigotry.

To all Albertans I say: let's fight racism and hatred together. The first step is to get to know one another. Don't let fear of the other inhibit you from learning more about your neighbours and their religious and cultural practices. Mr. Speaker, when we observe and protect the human rights of all, we prevent violence in all its forms, and if we abandon these rights and freedoms, we put people at risk, especially those from cultural communities. To quote one of my heroes, Nelson Mandela, "To deny people their human rights is to challenge their very humanity."

Christmas

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, Christmas is my favourite time of the year. I love everything about Christmas. I love the traditions that are associated with this joyous season. I love that it represents the birth of the baby Jesus to the virgin mother, Mary, in a stable in Bethlehem. I love the strong element of family associated with Christmas. In fact, every year when my children were young, we would enact the nativity play, with the girls always wanting to be Mary and the boys always wanting to be the donkey. I'm not sure what that says about the boys, but I'll leave it at that.

I love the songs, both traditional and modern. One of my favourite songs is Silent Night, which was composed in 1818 by Franz Xaver Gruber to lyrics by Joseph Mohr in a small town in Austria. It goes:

Silent night, holy night!
All is calm, all is bright.
Round yon Virgin, Mother and Child.
Holy infant so tender and mild,
Sleep in heavenly peace,
Sleep in heavenly peace.

Now, I would have sung that for you, Mr. Speaker, if it weren't for the fact that my singing voice is roughly as bad as Elmer Fudd's.

In all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can take time this Christmas season to light up the world around us, to lift up the downtrodden, to share a meal with someone in need, to talk a little longer with an aging grandparent, to help in a soup kitchen, and maybe even get out and do a little carolling.

Mr. Speaker, to all my colleagues in the House and to all Albertans: may you have a truly wonderful Christmas and a Happy New Year; may your holidays be spent roasting chestnuts by open fire with families and friends close by. As little Timmy says in Charles Dickens' classic, A Christmas Carol: May God bless everyone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Smiles Thru Lindsey Foundation

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to talk about Smiles Thru Lindsey, a charity started by Rick and Cindy More after their family experienced one of the most tragic losses a family could ever endure. Lindsey More was beautiful inside and out. She had a big heart, and she loved to laugh. She had an outgoing personality, and like 1 in 5 Canadians, she battled mental illness. Lindsey's passion for helping others masked the sadness inside her.

With the sudden passing of a friend who took his own life, Lindsey was determined to make a change. She wanted to start a foundation that would be able to help children, teens, young adults get the help they need to fight mental illness. Sadly, Lindsey did not live to see her dream come to fruition. On September 20, 2015, Lindsey More lost her battle with depression, and she took her own life. She was 22 years old.

One month later the Smiles Thru Lindsey foundation was created. The foundation is an endowment fund created under the Red Deer & District Community Foundation. Its mandate is to finance programs that will directly aid youth dealing with mental health and depression issues. Only 1 in 4 youth facing mental health challenges will receive treatment. Research has shown that half of all lifetime mental illness begins by age 14 and that early support and intervention is vital to our children and youth. Thanks to Smiles Thru Lindsey over $300,000 has been donated by businesses, citizens, and anonymous donors in central Alberta to help our children and youth living with mental health.

I personally would like to thank Rick, Cindy, and Stephanie, the Smiles Thru Lindsey team, for carrying on Lindsey's amazing legacy to help others. Lindsey, you may be gone from this earth, but your memory will live on forever in Hansard.

Thank you.

Retrospective by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, on May 5, 2015, I had the immense honour of being elected to serve the people of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. When selected, I committed to my constituents that I would go to Edmonton and serve their interests and make sure their priorities were heard. Specifically, I committed to improving relationships between our municipalities, moving forward the Bonnyville waterline that had stalled for 15 years, and advocating for improvements to highway 28. We've seen the headway in all of my commitments during my mandate as the MLA.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to empower my constituents and my communities, raising issues that really matter to them. Part of doing this meant helping to fulfill my constitutional duty of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to oppose the government when they forgot the interests of the everyday Albertan, to voice the concerns of many Albertans who disagree with the direction this government has taken, and to uphold the tenets of our Westminster democracy, upon which our province and our country was built.

The other part of my job, as I saw it, was to work collaboratively with the government where possible and get things done for my constituents. Additionally, through hard work with both the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Education, which I thank adamantly, I was able to pass a private member's bill, finally providing Albertans with statutory protections against unwanted distribution of intimate images.

Following the next election, as I return to private life, I want to leave this House with two things: first, by thanking my family, friends, constituents, and all those who supported me through this wonderful journey that I've been on; and second, by saying that serving in this House, serving the people of Alberta has been and will always remain the greatest honour and privilege of my professional career.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to wish my oldest daughter, Amelia, a happy 13th birthday today. I love you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, and thank you for your service.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Soutien à la Francophonie

Ms McKittrick: Merci, M. le Président. Je suis fière d'être une francophone en Alberta. L'Alberta a une des plus larges et diverses populations de francophones.

Notre gouvernement a prouvé que nous sommes engagés à travailler avec les franco-albertains. Nous avons annoncé la première politique de service en français. Nous avons proclamé le mois de mars comme le mois de la francophonie. Nous avons désigné le drapeau franco-albertain comme un symbole de distinction sous la loi albertaine gouvernant les emblèmes officiels. Nous offrons un financement stable et prévisible pour les écoles à travers l'Alberta, incluant nos écoles francophones, qui s'accroissent rapidement. Nous construisons et modernisons également 11 écoles francophones. À travers la province j'observe l'immense contribution que la francophonie albertaine apporte à nos communautés, à notre économie, et à notre société en général.

Comme les autres francophones à travers le Canada, je suis choquée et déçue par l'annonce de Doug Ford portant sur la suppression du Commissariat aux services en français et l'université francophone. Ces attaques sur les minorités sont honteuses et auront des effets nuisibles et persistants sur la communauté franco-ontarienne. N'oublions pas que le leader de l'opposition albertaine dit que lui et le premier ministre Ford sont bon amis et chacun peut finir la phrase de l'autre. Je suis profondément inquiète quand je vois Doug Ford attaquer les droits des minorités et le chef de l'opposition albertaine et le parti conservateur uni observent assidûment et prennent note.

M. le Président, en regardant l'Ontario de Doug Ford, nous pouvons prévoir ce que le chef de l'opposition albertaine et ses collègues veulent dire quand ils planifient des coupures budgétaires qui vont faire du mal aux albertains. Ce qu'il dit aux franco-albertains c'est qu'ils ne comptent pas, leurs droits ne comptent pas.

Sous ce gouvernement cela n'arrivera jamais en Alberta. Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] I am a proud francophone Albertan. Alberta has one of the largest and diverse francophone populations.

Our government has demonstrated that we are committed to working with francophone Albertans. We introduced Alberta's first-ever French policy. We proclaimed for the first time March as Alberta Francophonie Month. We designated for the first time the franco-Albertan flag as a symbol of distinction under the Emblems of Alberta Act. We have created the first Alberta Advisory Council on the Francophonie, to ensure Alberta's French-speaking population has a voice to help government enhance services in French in meaningful ways. We are providing stable and predictable funding for schools across Alberta, including our fast-growing francophone schools. We are building and modernizing 11 francophone schools. Across the province I see the tremendous contributions that Alberta's Francophonie make to our communities, our economy, and our society as a whole.

Like my fellow francophones, I am shocked and disappointed by Doug Ford's announcement that he will abolish the French-language services commission and the French university. These attacks on minorities are shameful and will have lasting, damaging impacts on the Franco-Ontario community. And let's remember that the Leader of the Opposition says that he and Premier Ford finish each other's sentence. So it is of deep concern to me, when I see Doug Ford attack minority rights, to think that the Leader of the Opposition and the UCP are watching closely and taking notes.

By looking to Doug Ford's Ontario, we can see what the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and his caucus mean when they say that they are planning cuts that are going to hurt Albertans. What he is saying to Franco-Albertans is that they don't matter, their rights don't matter.

Under this government, that will never happen in Alberta. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Thank you. Merci.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Official Opposition and Government Policies

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a well-intentioned person provides good advice, most people will accept it with grace. Unfortunately, we rarely see that kind of wisdom from the NDP when the Leader of the Official Opposition provides this government with his wise counsel on challenging issues.

Let me give you a few examples. Our leader was ridiculed when he recommended that Alberta's government turn off the taps to B.C. He was attacked for suggesting the NDP government oppose Justin Trudeau's pipeline-killing Bill C-69. He was mocked when he and other UCP members called for emergency action on rural crime. He and the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View were criticized for pushing the government to protect patients from predatory doctors, and he was attacked in this House for urging the NDP to curtail oil production in the face of a record-high differential. The Premier actually suggested that our leader was advocating for collusion.

The NDP acted like the advice was worthless, ridiculous, uncalled for, but, Mr. Speaker, what was the end result? They introduced turn-off-the-tap legislation. They finally spoke against Bill C-69. They finally admitted rural crime had reached crisis proportions. They not only introduced legislation to deal with predatory doctors; they buckled to our calls for a lifetime ban.

Each time the NDP finally agrees with the opposition, their decision-making improves. You see, we are the government's best advisers. The NDP's pattern of dismissing our leader's wise counsel only to adopt it a short time later does not concern him. You see, he's looking to help Albertans because, Mr. Speaker, that is the mark of a true leader.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Respectfully I raise a question of privilege pursuant to 15(2) of our standing orders for the purpose of calling the Member for Leduc-Beaumont in contempt of Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) of this Assembly for interfering in the lawful investigation conducted by an officer of this Legislature.

The purpose of raising privilege in either House of Parliament is to maintain the respect and credibility due to and required of each House in respect of these privileges to uphold its power . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, just to clarify, you will get an opportunity to speak to the substance of that. I would ask, though, that you read into the record the specific motion.

Mr. Gill: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday the Minister of Municipal Affairs and especially the Minister of Transportation engaged in accusing me of the worst crime by an elected official. You ruled that the comments were out of order. However, the comments were never withdrawn and apologized for. All I want is just to take some time and clear my name. I have the requisite copies of the motion.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Bill 209

Strategies for Unemployed and Underemployed Albertans Act

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Strategies for Unemployed and Underemployed Albertans Act.

Even though the economy is showing signs of recovery, many Albertans haven't found work since losing their job, or they haven't been able to find suitable work. Bill 209, the Strategies for Unemployed and Underemployed Albertans Act, will provide them with a framework to find jobs.

I've spoken to many unemployed Albertans looking to get back on their feet. They're frustrated by a lack of useful supports that recognize their employment situations. That includes many young men entering the workforce and experienced career professionals who've been out of work for years. I've spoken to employment-training providers who want to work with employers to retrain and upskill employees to meet the challenges of a modern economy but have experienced resistance when proposing their plans. I've spoken to economists who see opportunities for Alberta workers that aren't being developed. I've spoken to employers who are frustrated that they can't find qualified workers in Alberta.

This bill will enable stakeholders to pool their knowledge and insights in a quick and responsive manner to help address Albertans' employment needs with alacrity. I look forward to debating this bill with my colleagues in the House, and I thank you for the opportunity.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Apparently, my petition hasn't gone to the table officers, so I'll bring it at a future date.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies to table from the Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta, which calls on the government of Alberta to take quick action to reduce youth vaping simply by proclaiming a section of the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act. I'll table the appropriate copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other returns or reports?

Hon. members, yesterday, you may recall, there was a point of order raised by the Government House Leader.

An Hon. Member: Mr. Speaker, she's been standing.

The Speaker: You have a tabling? Go ahead.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of two reports that I would like to table, the first being the tar sands campaign that I referred to earlier today in my question, where Mr. Dan Woynilowicz gave a presentation to the Rockefeller Brothers meeting, where, amongst other things, he advocated for stopping and limiting pipelines and refinery expansion and reducing the demand for oil sands.

The second document I would like to table is a tweet from the minister of the environment from March 14, 2018, where she said, "Great to run into @DanWoy" and included a photo of them together. Considering that the minister of the environment said earlier today that she'd only met with him once, I believe that she perhaps has misled the House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think, give the members an opportunity to read that once you circulate it. That would be ample.

Are there any other tablings? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You have a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm going to speak to this issue in a minute. Point of order is noted.

Mr. Mason: Thank you.

The Speaker: We will deal with it after the Routine.
The Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Yes. I have a tabling on behalf of my colleague from Drayton Valley-Devon, five copies of a Twitter thread where Dr. Lindsay Gibson explains his reasons for resigning from the social studies curriculum working group.

The Speaker: For the third time, hon. members, are there any other tablings?

I do hope that the members appreciated my going back to that item. We actually missed it by two turns, tabling returns and then Tablings to the Clerk, so I urge you to make those tablings at the appropriate time into the future.

Point of Order

Points of Order

Allegations against a Member

The Speaker: You'll recall that yesterday there was a point of order raised by the Government House Leader during, ironically, Tabling Returns and Reports. I took the matter under advisement as there was a question raised pertaining to the correct procedures to be followed on points of order during the daily Routine. To deal with the matter procedurally first, the usual practice, I'm told, is for points of order raised during the daily Routine to be considered following the conclusion of the daily Routine. The Speaker may on occasion hear a point during the Routine if the matter needs to be dealt with urgently, but the normal practice to wait until the end of the Routine is preferred as there is a limited amount of time to get through the number of business items prior to 3 p.m. Now, I know that yesterday both the Government House Leader and the Opposition House Leader had a different understanding of that, but the record seems to suggest what I've outlined.

The point of order raised by the Government House Leader related to comments made by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. While tabling a document, the member characterized the Minister of Environment and Parks as a Greenpeace activist. The Government House Leader rose on a point of order and clarified in his remarks that the Minister of Environment and Parks was not previously a member of Greenpeace. This clarification closes the matter in terms of the remarks made in relation to the minister. But this also – hon. member, it's important that you hear this part – provides an opportunity to remind all members of the manner in which documents should be tabled.

As I did on March 20, 2017, I will again cite Speaker Schumacher's ruling from April 11, 1995, at page 1159 of Hansard for that day.

The tabling should consist merely of a brief almost mechanical description of the document being tabled. Members should resist the urge to embellish, expound upon, decorate, editorialize about, emphasize, ruminate, extrapolate, [or] annotate.

Had this practice been observed while the document was being tabled yesterday, the comment leading to the purported point of order would, I believe, not have been made in the first place.

Again, I encourage all members during Tabling Returns and Reports to be brief and keep their comments limited to the document being tabled. I believe that closes the matter other than to reference again that a couple of times over the last couple of weeks we've had interactions in the House respecting personal comments about members. I want to underline the importance of staying away from that practice into the future.

Now, speaking of brevity, I think the next point of order might be related to that matter. I would recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Point of Order

Brevity

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel a certain need to keep my point of order brief in the spirit of brevity. I will do so to the best of my abilities. Under Standing Order 7(2) and 7(3), citing introduction of visitors and guests, it speaks of brief introductions made of groups or individuals, et cetera. We've gotten a bit out of hand here. I would just ask the Speaker to remind individuals that introductions are not members' statements and that we should really try to limit the use of introductions and keep them as brief as possible. I would leave it at Mr. Speaker's discretion to notify members who might be particularly less brief than others.

Thank you.

3:20

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this particular instance I agree with the hon. member and regret that what happened today during introductions took up far too much time in the House. We will endeavour in the future to co-ordinate these activities more effectively so as to proceed through introductions in a timely fashion.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader. To the same point?

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. Very briefly, again, I completely agree, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that you could help us do that. We will also try to help the government and other parties in this House accomplish that goal.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I appreciate the exchange and the agreement in the House. I think it's important to underline. You'll note that I mentioned brevity, but we ought to remember, all of us, that when we take that amount of time, we may be showing disrespect to other people that are waiting to be introduced and also to your fellow members, so I wanted to encourage you. I chose not to interject today out of respect for the people in the Assembly, but please, I don't want to interject on this. Try and practise that brevity principle, which I realize is a relative point.

To point of order two.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, let's see if we can continue the spirit of brevity, Mr. Speaker. Referencing Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), I want to refer – I don't have the benefit of the Blues at hand – to the comments from the Minister of Finance. It's not one for me to defend the previous government, but the Minister of Finance's comments, if I got them correctly, that he stated that the previous government introduced payday loan stores – I wasn't around when the Socreds came to power, but I do believe payday loan stores have been around longer than the previous ruling party or the previous Premier when he had come to power. Referring actually to a ruling you just made involving tabling of documents, you referred to the importance of making sure of, in addition to the brevity issue, the importance of factual information.

Many issues are for debate here and are matters of perspective, but some things are just very clear. The Government House Leader made the point that the hon. minister of the environment was not in fact a member of Greenpeace, and we take that at face value, but that was a matter of fact and setting the record straight. Just the other day the Government House Leader and Opposition House Leader corrected a small factual matter that I got incorrect around a paid advertisement. So I would just ask that on behalf of the Finance minister the Government House Leader would withdraw the comment or clarify that the previous government did not in fact introduce payday loan stores.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not intimately familiar with the history of payday loans in the province of Alberta. I could take the hon. member's comments with respect to that. Just to indicate, in my view, what the Minister of Finance meant is that the previous government had failed to deal with the problems with payday loans, something I am quite familiar with being in opposition and having raised that issue in the House and others outside the House trying to get some resolution to this difficult issue that the previous government failed to deal with. I don't know if they caused it or not. I remember when some of those stores first popped up. This was well after Social Credit, hon. Opposition House Leader, but it was during the PC period when these payday loans became more prevalent. Whether or not they existed in the ancient history I have no way of knowing.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I won't try to argue too much with the hon. Government House Leader on history. He's certainly been around a little longer than I have. I do appreciate the Member for Strathmore-Brooks trying to get a straight answer from the government, which are very few and far between in this Assembly, but this is very clearly a matter of debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Blues said – and I'm just reading – “that's why . . . in Alberta we've done things to make life . . . affordable like axing payday loans, that were put in place by the previous government. We brought in $25-a-day daycare to make life more affordable, and we froze tuition fees,” et cetera. I acknowledge the Government House Leader and Opposition House Leader. I think this is a matter of opinion, and I certainly am not aware of the facts other than what members are. But, again, it seems to me that it's an illustration of blame. We all need to be responsible in here about making facts rather than just allegations.

I believe we have a third point of order from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. No?

Ah, yes. I get confused, you know. You're always standing up.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During tablings the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin tabled a copy of a tweet with the Minister of Environment and Parks with an individual and claimed that the minister had said that she'd only ever met with this person once and then suggested that the Minister of Environment and Parks may have misled the House. That is, as you well know and all members should know, completely unacceptable, especially on the basis of a photograph on social media of somebody that the minister clearly said she ran into. That does not constitute an additional meeting.

I think this is a ridiculous way of twisting things to make allegations against the minister, and to suggest that because she ran into somebody, posted a picture on social media, that constituted a meeting and therefore the minister was allegedly misleading the House is beyond acceptable, in my view, Mr. Speaker. The member is relatively new, but by now I think all of us should be familiar with some of the rules around suggesting that a member has misled the House, and on the basis of such sketchy evidence it's doubly bad, in my view.

The Speaker: The House leader for the opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do find it a little weird that that same House leader once argued a point of order and a point of privilege in regard to a similar issue by saying that a picture on Twitter constituted a meeting, but I will not bother to go down that road.

Let me be very clear. The member said, and her exact words were: I believe that she may have misled the House. So the member did not accuse the minister of misleading the House. She was pointing out that she felt that she had some evidence that shows that the minister may have been mistaken or the facts that she presented may not have been factual.

Having said that, certainly, to use the words “misled the House” is something that we would avoid. It’s a serious accusation, certainly, within the tradition of this institution. The member is one of our newest members, so I would be happy to withdraw that comment on her behalf.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Again, I remind about the point I made earlier: be cautious about the remarks you’re making about other members in the House. This is free speech, but it’s not unmanaged free speech.

I believe we are at the point of privilege. The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m rising on a point of privilege. On Thursday the Minister of Municipal Affairs and especially the Minister of Transportation engaged in accusing me of the worst crime an elected official can be accused of, corrupting an election. You ruled that the comments were out of order. However, the comments were never withdrawn or apologized for. So I now rise at the earliest opportunity to present my privilege complaint and take a few minutes to clear my name.

3:30

An accusation of this nature goes beyond a point of order in that it goes to the fundamental nature of democracy. Being accused of stuffing a ballot box is such an affront to democracy, such a corrupt act that it impairs my ability to conduct my business as an MLA. It’s an obstruction, and it is an interference and an intimidation of the worst form.

In House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 111, Speaker Fraser ruled:

The privileges of a Member are violated by any action which might impede him or her in the fulfilment of his or her duties and functions. It is obvious that the unjust damaging of a reputation could constitute such an impediment.

Mr. Speaker, because I cannot use the courts to correct the ministers, I ask that you give me a few minutes to clear my name and to get the real story into Hansard. I have been accused of something ridiculous, something that no one in their right mind would ever do. I was subjected to a flawed investigation, just how flawed I did not know at that time. Even the flawed investigation only found one accuser against me.

I was threatened with a massive disruption to my personal and family life and with financial harm if I pursued my rights. The ambition and purpose of my friends and supporters would have also suffered if I had pursued my rights. In my weakness I caved in and agreed to quietly sit as an independent. But by not defending myself to the fullest ability, Mr. Speaker, I left the impression that I had done something wrong, and now the Minister of Transportation, who, to be fair, knows nothing about that issue, has left a permanent record in this Assembly that I tampered with the ballot box and corruptly interfered with democracy. It will be there in Hansard forever, and I must have an opportunity to correct the record.

Mr. Speaker, the accusations against me all have to do with crooked and racist nomination politics. After my Calgary-Greenway constituency was radically redrawn, I considered which other areas to run in. I was told by Alan Hallman that the leader of the UCP wanted me to stick to ethnically Indian areas in Calgary and that they would not interfere in my nomination if I did so. In truth, they interfered a lot. They accused me of stealing blank AGM board ballots and running away with them to distribute them to ineligible supporters. When she made her accusation, there were no other witnesses who confirmed it, but within a short period of time Alan Hallman appeared on the scene and convinced the party official to cancel this meeting.

The party then called a sham of an investigation, which resulted in the investigator concluding that the situation was as he said, she said affair and that they believed my accuser. The investigator did not interview several key witnesses who were in immediate proximity at the time of the allegations, including employees of the Legislative Assembly and practising lawyers. These witnesses were sitting at a balloting table mere feet away from the individual who made the allegation, but they were denied the right to testify as to what they saw. I subsequently complained to the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays about this issue, but he was not willing to risk the wrath of the party leader and speak up for me.

After the sham of an investigation I was told in no uncertain terms that my political career was done, and it was suggested to me that if I continue to fight to defend my name, the party would use massive financial resources to bankrupt me in court. This was happening at a complicated time in my personal life. If I did not resign my position in caucus, I would be kicked out. I decided to go quietly and not risk disruption to my life and that of my friends and family. In doing so, I left the impression that I had done something wrong, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Transportation now has put the impression permanently in Hansard and, in doing so, obstructed and interfered with my ability to conduct my role as an MLA. Mr. Speaker, the accusations against me are part of crooked party politics inside the UCP. The grassroots UCP members have meddled with dozens of nomination races, backroom party elites interested in installing yes-men who will never object to the party . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I want to point out that you’re raising a point of privilege against a member that said something at an earlier sitting. I think you need to focus on that matter rather than the details.

Mr. Clark: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that what we are hearing from the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway is relevant to his arguments for privilege.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I’ve consulted with the table here. At this juncture that is not a point of order but one of guidance to the Speaker to facilitate this matter. I’m sure you would agree with that.

The hon. member.

Mr. Gill: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I will be very brief. The accusation against me is all part of crooked party politics inside the UCP. The grassroots UCP members have seen dozens of nomination races meddled with by the backroom party elite, interested in installing yes-men who will never object to the party leader and not the candidate who has the real support of Albertans. We all know that politics can be dirty, and the leaders and their backroom operatives in the establishment parties have run the processes for their own interests. The Tory elite bosses of today are as bad as they have ever been. They are obsessed with appointing candidates based on race and sex in scores of constituencies across Alberta, and they have interfered in democracy to do so.

Only one person, who supported my opponent, accused me of this, and no one else confirmed her allegation. Independent observers in the room saw nothing, and all of this supposedly happened while I had blown out my knee and could only shuffle slowly from place to place. The investigation was a farce, and my reputation was harmed. But the truth should be in Hansard, and I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for letting me put it in Hansard. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Transportation should withdraw their remarks and apologize, like you asked them to do last Thursday. Not to apologize is to violate my privilege as a member.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much for the opportunity given to me.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to address a purported matter of privilege raised by the independent Member for Calgary-Greenway. Many Speakers have ruled in the past that a point of privilege is one of the most serious matters that can be brought before the House and should only be brought in the most serious and grave of circumstances. I strongly submit that this is not a matter of privilege for three primary reasons. First, the allegation mentions the interference to a lawful investigation conducted by an officer of this Legislature, yet as far as we're aware, there is no such investigation. Secondly, the matter, I believe, is out of order in that it reflects on a decision of the Speaker that has been made and therefore ought to be considered closed. Finally, it alleges that the accusation of corrupting an election took place. No such allegation was made by myself or the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. I'll try and deal with each of these three principles in turn.

First, the member's letter alleges that the minister should be guilty of contempt for interfering into a lawful investigation conducted by an officer of this Legislature. Mr. Speaker, we do not know what lawful investigation the member is referring to, nor do I know in what way it was interfered with. Had the House ordered an investigation into a matter, then perhaps the minister could be found in contempt for interference, but as far as we are aware, no such investigation has been ordered, and therefore no such investigation can have been interfered with.

Secondly, as I mentioned, the member ought to know that he should not be reflecting on decisions made by the chair, as outlined in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, edited by Bosc and Gagnon. At pages 620 and 621 it says:

Reflections must not be cast in debate on the conduct of the Speaker or other Presiding Officers. It is unacceptable to question the integrity and impartiality of a Presiding Officer and, if such comments are made, the Speaker may interrupt the Member and request that the remarks be withdrawn or immediately give the floor to another Member. Only by means of a substantive motion, for which 48 hours' written notice has been given, may the actions of the Chair be challenged, criticized and debated. Reflections on the character or actions of the Speaker or other Presiding Officers have been ruled to be breaches of privilege.

As the member has noted, the minister made a comment, the member raised a point of order, and the Speaker ruled that it was indeed a valid point of order. I can only presume that that concluded the matter.

Indeed, page 625 of the same book continues:

Should the Speaker find the utterances of a particular Member offensive or disorderly, that Member will be requested to rise in his or her place and withdraw the unparliamentary word or phrase unequivocally. The Member's apology is accepted in good faith and the matter is then considered closed. However, if the Member refuses to obey the directive of the Speaker to retract his or her words, the Chair may refuse to recognize the Member until the words have been withdrawn.

It is argued in the member's letter from this morning that the comments were never withdrawn or apologized for. Mr. Speaker, anyone who watches this place knows that not all points of order, even if found to be valid, result in the corrective action outlined above being taken. Now, the member might have had more of a case had the Speaker ordered the member to apologize and had the member refused, but that was not the case. Had it been the case, it would presumably have been dealt with immediately, not a number of days later.

Third, Mr. Speaker, the member claims that a serious allegation has occurred, the allegation of corrupting an election. No such allegation has been made. As I outlined when speaking to this matter last Thursday, I was of the view that the matter constituted a legitimate matter of debate given that reference was made to allegations that are now on the public record and have been documented in news reports. In your wisdom you ruled that there was a point of order, and rightly so. We will not revisit the argument other than to reiterate that only information on the public record was referenced by the minister and myself.

In conclusion, I'd also like to point out that in addition to not meeting the threshold for being a prima facie case of privilege, I don't believe that this motion is in order in the first place, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 15(2) states that notice of at least two hours must be provided to any person whose conduct is called into question. My office did not receive notice until approximately 12:30 this afternoon. Further, the matter was not raised at the earliest opportunity. As noted in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 142:

A complaint on a matter of privilege must satisfy two conditions before it can be accorded precedence over the Orders of the Day.

First, the Speaker must be convinced that a prima facie case of breach of privilege has been made and, second, the matter must be raised at the earliest opportunity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, members know that the alleged breach took place on Thursday of last week, five full days ago. The member could perhaps have raised the matter at that time or yesterday instead of waiting until today. Apparently, what the member has done is to raise a point of order successfully and then attempted to deal with the same matter again several days later as a point of privilege. I would leave it to you as to whether or not that is the intention of the rules of this place.

Lastly, I should note that the specific allegation raised in the letter from the member states that the minister should be found in contempt of Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), Mr. Speaker. These particular standing orders, of course, relate to points of order, specifically to when members ought to be called to order. I believe that this point further reinforces my view that the matter in question was a point of order and not a matter of privilege as indeed those very same standing orders were cited by the member in arguing the point last week.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, Speakers have consistently stated that a point of privilege is one of the most serious matters that can be brought before the House and ought to be done so only in the most serious of cases and with well-founded arguments and evidence to support them. I would submit that this fails dismally with respect to that test, and therefore I'd argue that there is no point of privilege.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't belabour the point by resubmitting to you the same reference points that the Government House Leader has. I'd just, rather, reinforce a couple of quick points and then turn this over to you. The first is that I believe this is a matter that you already ruled on in this Chamber. It was a point of order. I really am indifferent to the content that went back and forth between the government and the independent member of the Chamber. But you did make a ruling. This seems to me like a backdoor attempt to revisit something that you've already made a decision on. That concerns me. I do think that that alone makes it out of order.

Second, I do not believe that we received notice in time either, which also would make it out of order.

I have another point that I'd like to make. It seemed to me that the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway was referring to some sort of investigation by an independent officer of this Chamber. I'm not aware of any such investigation, and I certainly have not heard anybody speak about an investigation of that kind. I would also reinforce that the United Conservative Party and the members that I represent as their House leader in this Chamber have not referred to any such investigation in this Chamber. I do not know what bearing any investigation, whether it be a party or an independent officer, would have on this place because I don't believe it's part of our proceedings.

Lastly, the member makes some references to a situation that happened from a political or party side. I won't go through that here because I actually suspect that it has no relevance in this Chamber, but if at any time, Mr. Speaker, you need that information to help you with this point of privilege, I would be quite happy to provide that to you.

With that said, I do not believe that this is a point of privilege, and I would hope that you could rule it out of order. I await your opinion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to add to this debate. Both the Government House Leader and Opposition House Leader have stated that they did not receive notice in time. The standing orders require that two hours' notice be given. I think that all members can reference the document placed on their desks, stamped that it was received by your office at 11:22 a.m., which, if I'm correct, is more than two hours before the beginning of question period and the daily Routine. Now, how quickly that got from your office to other offices is a matter for the courier, but I think that according to the document on all of our desks, unless the photocopy misleads us, this states that it was received at 22 after 11 today in your office.

Now, in reference to this, this is not dealing with necessarily the same matter as your point of order ruled last Thursday, Mr. Speaker. This is referring to the breach of privilege in that the Member for Calgary-Greenway successfully made the case that there was a point of order. In the standing orders in section 23, dealing with calling a member to order, if you'll just allow me to jump to 23, you ruled that there was a point of order under section 23.

23 A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion . . .

In this case it was found under sections (i) and (j).

- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member.
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

You ruled that there was, in fact, a point of order there.

The next section following immediately after, section 24, states:

Naming a Member

24(1) If a Member, on being called to order for an offence . . .

I do believe that Mr. Speaker did find there was offence, and he should therefore be called to order.

. . . persists in the offence or refuses to follow the Speaker's directions in the matter, the Speaker shall name the Member to the Assembly.

Section 2 prescribes escalating consequences to defying you, and your wrath from there, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I don't have the benefit of Hansard in front of me, but I do believe that you requested that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs do apologize. I could be corrected if I'm wrong about that. I'm unsure if you requested that the Government House Leader apologize, but if I am correct, you did ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs to apologize, to which there was no apology, which would constitute under section 24(1):

If a Member, on being called to order for an offence, persists in the offence or refuses to follow the Speaker's directions in the matter, the Speaker shall name the Member to the Assembly.

In that case, it has not happened.

In reference to comments from the hon. Government House Leader, I would refer members and you, Mr. Speaker, to section 484(3) of Beauchesne's.

I will cite the very same section, actually, that the hon. Government House Leader has been citing.

In the House of Commons a Member will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the House itself as a political institution; or to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case.

Now, in this case, I believe the Government House Leader has been imputing that there are motives for the Member for Calgary-Greenway in trying to reraise an issue, so I do believe there would be an issue there, but that's not my point, Mr. Speaker.

I will skip ahead to: "[no member shall] question the acknowledged and undoubted powers of the House in a matter of privilege." It is, I think, very obvious that if this was a matter of privilege, the House would have the power to deal with it. The hon. Government House Leader has called into "question the acknowledged and undoubted powers of the House in a matter of privilege."

Mr. Speaker, it is your decision to decide if this is a matter of privilege or if this is a continued matter of a point of order. But I think it is very clear from your ruling on Thursday that there was a point of order and that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs was called to order, asked to apologize, and in the event that he did not do so, that section 24(1) – I won't say requires – generally behooves you to require that the member abide by your rulings.

The Speaker: The House leader of the Alberta Party, you had at one point wanted to say something?

Mr. Clark: No. I certainly appreciate the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, but no. I think that both in the interest of time and I think that the landscape has been covered here. I will say that I think the Member for Calgary-Greenway does make a compelling point, and I'm pleased that he at least had the opportunity to put out his side, his version of events, which has been bandied about a lot in public and in private. I think those were very serious allegations coming from the other side. I'm pleased that he had the opportunity to do so. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just to repeat what several of the members have said, a point of privilege is probably the most fundamental principle that exists in this institution. There have been several over the last three to four years. In accordance with that principle I will take your views into consideration today and reflect upon the point raised, and I would hope to come back to the House and report at a future date.

I believe, hon. members, that now leads us to Orders of the Day.

Third Reading

Bill 28

Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Good afternoon. It's an honour to rise today and move third reading of Bill 28, the Family Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

I want to thank my colleagues from around this room for acknowledging their commitment to this bill. The proposed legislation will modernize family law in our province and better support families and ensure that they are treated fairly. Conflict is hard for partners, and it's damaging for children. This legislation will allow couples to resolve their disputes more quickly. Passing the Family Statutes Amendment Act means that the justice system will work more fairly and efficiently for today's families when they need it.

Our legislation would provide clear rules about property division for unmarried partners. Generally the new rules would presume that property acquired during a relationship would be divided equally; they would also allow people who want to make different arrangements to make their own agreements. The proposed amendments would promote unmarried couples settling out of court, saving money and stress on these individuals and on their children.

Madam Speaker, I suppose it is somewhat of a lawyer thing to be excited about the orderly and sane and rational resolution of disputes, but I must say that I'm very excited to move this bill forward. I think it will help a number of Albertans to have clear rules to allow them to resolve their debates more quickly and, at the end of the day, to not get into legal battles that will ultimately be very trying for them and very trying for their families.

Madam Speaker, another thing in this bill that I think is a very exciting story has to do with amendments that would make it clear in legislation that applications for child support can be made for adult children with disabilities or illnesses regardless of their parents' marital status.

Madam Speaker, when I think of this bill, I will always think of Emily and Christina, who are still waiting in the gallery to see this bill pass. Previously, Madam Speaker, a parent of some of our most vulnerable adult children with disabilities, like Emily, could not seek child support under the Family Law Act. When we introduced this bill, Christina told us: it's so important because my daughter is nonverbal, so for her to be able to change legislation is remarkable, and not many people get to do that. This amendment will make our laws more fair. Thank you to Emily for bringing to light this important issue and to you and your mom for helping us to change a law that will benefit Alberta families for generations.

Madam Speaker, in closing, I will just note that this is truly an amazing story of how someone can, despite all odds against them, make a difference in the lives of those around them. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is a pretty emotional moment for us here in the Assembly, and we don't often get the opportunity to do something quite like this and to have Emily here to witness it, and Christina and Ron. So I just wanted to say thank you to the minister.

I won't go into all of the details, but this has really been a remarkable journey for Christina and Emily and Ron. You know, what is quite amazing is when the government takes up a cause that is an important one but doesn't require the courts to force the government to do something. It realized as this was making its way through the legal process that there was something fundamentally wrong with the way the legislation was set up such that someone like Christina needed to spend a tremendous amount of her own money, put a lot of herself out there to fight against the monolith of government.

To the government's credit, instead of fighting back and digging in their heels and waiting for the courts to force them to do something, they recognized that there was a fundamental injustice here and took up the cause. I want to thank the minister for her work on that and all the people behind the scenes, who we don't get to see and who don't get a lot of credit in public for this. I want you to know through the Assembly that I know that a lot of work happened behind the scenes and that there are a lot of people who deserve credit but none more so than Emily and Christina and Ron as well for their incredible bravery to get to this point. You've made a huge difference in the lives of many, many people.

Again, thank you to the hon. minister and to all members for supporting this very, very, very important bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be very brief on the subject here as well. As many members in the House have alluded to, any breakdown in a relationship is never a pleasant experience, but it does happen from time to time. There are many reasons around it, but the one thing that I really appreciate, the focus that was on this, was really this thing that centred around the care and compassion around the children and making sure that we protect those who need to be taken care of within our society.

You know, one thing I'll touch on as a personal note. As I alluded to, just like many members in this House I've also been through a separation myself, and I remember saying to a member: "Well, maybe I should have been common law. Maybe I shouldn't have gotten married." And someone said to me: "Well, no. You should have gotten married because in Alberta it is a disaster to try to get separated if you're common law and you own property and you have kids." Now that has changed, and I feel blessed that no one has to worry about that moving forward.

To be honest, I'm very fortunate. When you go through a separation, you're very lucky to have the law, and it's very cut and dried and black and white when you go through this process. If you have someone who's a caring parent or people who are very respectful, just as I'm very fortunate to have someone who is a very good mother to my three kids, once you know what the law is, you can move through the process as amicably as possible because we all know how the courts are going to rule. We all know how the process is going to move forward, and at the end of the day it's a lot more affordable to those who are going through a very stressful situation.

I want to thank the legal community, who has come forward and been very vocal on this. I want to thank the minister for ensuring that she listened to many of the stakeholders moving forward. Realistically, even though lawyers were the ones who under this circumstance were likely going to make the most money from it, the legal team, the family law teams, were some of the most vocal advocates around this, about improving it, because they do care about the compassion of their clients.

With that being said, I want to thank the House for moving this forward and for its co-operation, and I look forward to seeing this pass. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, I'll be brief as well. I just wanted to get up and express my support for this bill. I think it's a good bill. You know, as time goes on, increased numbers of people are living in common-law relationships. Fewer people are getting married, so from time to time modernizations and changes to laws are necessary, and I appreciate that the government took this into account and looked at this and listened to lawyers who were saying that this kind of law was necessary and decided to make this change. I myself lived, I suppose, in a common-law relationship for 12, 13 years before my husband and I decided to get married, much to the consternation of my grandmother.

Dr. Starke: Was it the getting married part?

Ms Luff: The getting married part, yeah. She wanted it to happen before she died. I think that was the concern that she had. She liked my husband very much.

You know, we bought a house before we got married. The folks who live across the street from me, I believe, are in a similar situation. As more young people make different choices and don't adhere to traditional sort of mores of how we are supposed to go about things in life, this kind of change to law becomes increasingly necessary. I like that it has flexibility. I like that it provides the safeguards there for people who need them when they need them. If your relationship should break down and you manage to part amicably, then that is something that it allows for as well.

I think, you know, they listened to the experts. They listened to the people who were affected. It's something that is increasingly affecting more and more people in our society. I do of course particularly appreciate the changes to child support for adult children with disabilities. I think that's huge. It's very important. I can think of several of my constituents who've come and talked to me about things like this, and it will make a big difference. I just wanted to be on the record as being supportive of this bill, thanking the government for bringing it forward, and I assume that everyone will be supporting it.

Thanks very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I do not rise to speak. I rise to move the following motion, that we move to one-minute bells for the duration of the night both inside and outside of committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Just to clarify, no ruling has yet been made on a night sitting, so you can make it for . . .

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, I don't know what the procedure is, but I would be happy if that motion continued even into a night sitting. I don't know if that's legitimate, but what I am trying to do is at least make sure that between now and supper we are on one-minute bells.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. I don't even know if I can do this. I would like to move to amend the motion to indicate that the first set of bells would be five minutes, just to allow members who may be outside the Chamber and unaware of this conversation to return.

The Deputy Speaker: You accept that as a friendly amendment? As I understand the motion, the very first division will be for five minutes, and then any subsequent division bells will be for one minute for the duration of the afternoon.

Mr. Nixon: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: That's correct. All right.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Hearing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think that for the most part everything that needs to be said has been said on this bill. I'll just take one final opportunity to thank Emily for her contribution to all Albertans.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 22 An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities

The Chair: Questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak today on Bill 22. As I have pointed out throughout the debate on this legislation, we've talked a lot about the fact that the child intervention panel, primarily through efforts by the NDP members on it, blocked the panel from being able to talk about Serenity during those panel meetings. But I do think there's another issue that panel members were forbidden from being able to speak about that is very relevant to this piece of legislation, and it is not directly associated with the Serenity end of it, though. That, certainly, I would say, is the most important thing that was blocked.

As you know, Madam Chair, we were forbidden from discussing the publication ban during the panel. Panel members made it clear that we wanted to discuss the publication ban and how to properly balance transparency with privacy. It was an extremely complicated issue – I will grant that to the minister and to the government members on the panel – but it was fairly clear during the sessions the panel had that this was one of the most important issues that people wanted to see addressed. The suggestion from the NDP members and the minister was to leave that with the department. It was certainly the perspective of many people on the panel that that was a mistake and that we should have completed our mandate in regard to that.

Now, let me read the formal wording of a motion that achieved consensus, actually, on April 19, 2017, in the panel meeting. For some members that may be confused on how that achieved consensus, one of the things that was interesting about the ministerial panel is that it was not a standing committee, as you know, Madam Chair, but it also included outside experts. So while the government members who were on the panel did outvote the opposition members who were on there, there were certain circumstances where the experts managed to side, quite frankly, with the opposition members. This was one of them, and this is one of the reasons why it passed.

The motion said that the minister will bring a consultation plan to the panel within two weeks; that the minister will pull information related to the subject from the 2014 review, including details noted as available and information from other provinces regarding a publication ban; that the minister will also provide advice as part of the plan as to how this consultation can be incorporated into phase 2 of the work.

What that did, in addition to asking for that information, was that that then made a decision to take the publication ban issue and put it into the second phase of the ministerial panel. It allowed the panel to build a report on the first phase so that we can get some legislation to this Assembly on the first phase. If you recall, Madam Chair, the panel was broken into two phases. It was responsible to report to the minister twice.

Now, interestingly enough, Madam Chair, the information never came even though the panel went overtime and met for a year. It met longer than originally scheduled. There seems to be no circumstance where the minister can justify the fact that her panel asked for that information within two weeks. The panel certainly went well beyond that two-week period. It was clearly the will of the panel to discuss this issue in phase 2, but it kept being blocked by the NDP panel members, who, I can only assume, were taking orders from somewhere else, particularly because during the publication ban discussion most of the NDP members on the panel indicated they wanted to speak about it. Something changed.

The panel members were told that it was a complicated issue. I can assure you, Madam Chair, almost every issue that was addressed during that panel was a complicated issue. I think that you would concur with me on that. It's one of the most complicated subjects that had to be dealt with. Now, I would also say, though, that that is a fairly patronizing comment. Everything about the child intervention panel, of course, is complicated. As I said, the panel's mandate was incredibly broad, also one of the concerns that came out of the panel. But that panel consisted of several members of the Legislature and many experts that understood the issue significantly well and certainly should have been allowed to complete their mandate.

Now, UCP panel members were baffled as to why government members of the panel were being ordered to block discussions of the publication ban. That still has not been explained despite lots of debate during the process and questions from the media. At this point it was not about taking a position on what the publication ban regulations should look like. It was about discussing it, period – discussing it, period – which is all the panel wanted to do, make sure they could complete the mandate that they were sent there to do. We know for sure – I mean, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays will verify this – that this came up several times from people who presented to the panel.

Again, a very complicated issue, balancing the privacy of children and their families during some very horrific circumstances but also balancing that with the need for transparency both within the media and the department to make sure that those horrific circumstances do not take place again. I would say that some of the witness presentations to the panel on that were some of the hardest to watch. I do not deny that it was a tough issue, but I do take offence that we weren't allowed to tackle that tough issue. At this point I still haven't heard anything from the minister or the ministry on how they've attempted to deal with it on their own.

Then we discover that back in 2014, when the current Premier was in opposition, the leader of the third party, I believe, she had an amendment to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act pass in this House, in this very Chamber, saying that changes could not be made to the publication ban regulations without them first being considered by an all-party committee of the Legislative Assembly. Now, to be clear, the panel was not that. The panel was not an all-party committee. As you know, the government fought to make it a ministerial panel and not have it as an all-party committee.

The NDP refused to let that actual committee of the Legislature look into the Serenity case, which is now history, obviously, instead setting up a consensus-based panel, which I have articulated to many members during my time in this Chamber on this issue was only a consensus-based panel when the opposition agreed with the government, but if there was any argument from the opposition side, then all of a sudden it was a voting panel. Basically, they wanted to have more control. That is the only reason why the minister would want a ministerial panel, to have more control. They didn't want to have it in a standing committee or someplace like that, where the control would have been a little bit more limited from the minister's office.

Now, a legislative committee would have met on Hansard, creating transcripts of the meetings, and adhered to Robert's Rules of Order, something that certainly did not happen during the process that we undertook. The opposition had to fight hard, as I've talked about before, just to have basic meeting summaries, just to even get that created for the panel meetings, let alone a proper record of the proceedings.

It really seemed to me, Madam Chair, that the NDP refused to let the panel talk about the publication ban because they did not want to bring attention to the fact that because they refused to make it a legislative committee to begin with, the panel's recommendations on the publication ban would then have needed to receive a seal of approval from the legislative committee because of the Premier's motion in this Assembly when she was the leader of the third party, something I would have voted for if I was in the Legislature. I think she is right, that that should have been dealt with in a panel. It could have been slightly embarrassing for the government perhaps – maybe that's why they chose not to do it – and this is honestly the only reason I can think of. There is no other reason why that issue should not have taken place.

Now, the opposition members participated in this process in good faith, and instead of being transparent, the NDP put politics and self-interest ahead of good policy and honouring the wishes of the panel.

Madam Chair, the Premier is on record as saying, “The regulations as passed are deficient and do a disservice to the children in government care and to the public interest in improving conditions for them.” That was in 2014. The Premier also noted while in opposition that a number of different concerns had been expressed about the publication ban regulations in their current form. The now Premier’s concern, as I understand it, was that the statutory director, the government, can apply for a publication ban, so the director might apply in order to hide wrongdoing rather than to protect the privacy or the best interests of a child. So it is really too bad that the panel wasn’t allowed to talk about those concerns that their current leader brought up in this very building.

Moreover, because the bill before us today does not open section 131.1, where the Premier’s restrictions are listed in the legislation, I can’t even move an amendment today to repeal this section so that we do not end up in the same situation again. I cannot endorse this government’s deliberate oversight on the publication ban. While there are still some good measures in this bill that I am pleased to see, for this reason and for others, though, I cannot support this legislation, and I would suggest to my colleagues that we cannot support this legislation.

In addition to the publication ban, we have seen in this Chamber over the last few weeks this government repeatedly vote on this bill to block amendments to bring transparency to this process. The number one issue that the panel determined, without a doubt, was that transparency was the biggest problem that was happening within the system, the fact that things continue to be hidden from the public eye and that reporters had to break stories about murdered children in our care that nobody knew about, that sometimes, in some cases, like the case of Serenity, the police did not even have files for.

That was the number one issue, and in this Chamber over the last few days, underneath, I would assume, the minister’s instructions, they have voted to block the Child and Youth Advocate from having more transparency in the process, making sure the public could see what was going on, and have continued to leave the solution, ultimately, to this great problem to the very people that already failed on this issue once in regard to Serenity and others.

So while I do applaud some of the issues within this legislation, it falls well short. It is troubling to see the government continue this practice, that they have done on this issue for several years, of avoiding transparency and of avoiding actually getting to work on this very issue. If we are fortunate enough and given the privilege by Albertans in a few months to form the government, we will get to work on this issue. We will stop sweeping it underneath the rug, which this government seems bound and determined to do.

As such, I cannot support their legislation.

The Chair: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I was part of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. I sat with that hon. member and with the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and later the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, and I’m struck by the difference in tone by different members of that caucus when participating in the committee process.

You know, I’ve held my tongue as best I can when listening to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre talking about this process. What this brings me back to is what we on the opposition side expect from government. We say things all the time like: “If only you’d listen to the opposition. If only you’d incorporate our feedback into government process. If only you’d hold all-party committee meetings. If only you’d talk to stakeholders. If only we’d travel the province. If only you’d tackle the root cause issues that have caused challenges in the government.” All of those are things that happened as part of this process, so while this is not a perfect process, it is not a perfect bill, it is a world better than what it could have been. Frankly, I wonder sometimes what exactly the UCP expects from government.

Now, I’m not going to be a permanent apologist for everything this government has done. There are plenty of things I disagree with this government on philosophically: job creation, on the way they’ve handled the carbon tax, on the electoral reform process. There are a lot of shortcomings in this government. But, Madam Chair, this bill and this process are not one of those shortcomings, and I find it frankly disingenuous for the UCP to continue to raise this bill and the issues surrounding this bill as some negative.

Frankly, let’s just talk through some of the history of how it is we got to this point here on December 4, 2018. Almost exactly two years ago the government created an all-party panel, ostensibly, but the terms of reference were incredibly narrow, so myself, the leader at the time of the Wildrose Party, the then interim leader of the PC Party, and the leader of the Liberal Party at the time held a news conference in the basement of this building, and we said: we will not participate in this panel unless the government changes the terms of reference. So the government changed the terms of reference, and we participated in the panel. That’s a good thing. That’s a government being responsive to what the opposition says. That’s what we should want.

Then as we went through the process, we found: “You know what? With the timeline that has been created for this bill under the leadership then of a new minister, the current minister, we just simply haven’t got enough time to dig into this thing. It’s a big, big, big challenge.” So in response to the request from the committee the minister said: okay; we’ll extend the timeline.

Then we found that, you know, it doesn’t make any sense for us, as we dig deeper into this issue of indigenous kids in care – well, here we are sitting in almost literally an ivory tower in Edmonton, the representation of a lot of very tragic and shameful history in this province, and expecting indigenous people to travel here and tell us their stories and then wondering: why is it that we’re not getting a representative sample of what actually happened? Well, that’s because we needed to go visit and travel to where people live, so to the minister’s credit she said: okay; let’s find a way to do that. So we travelled on-reserve in treaty areas 6, 7, and 8. We engaged with Métis people as a direct result and as a response to what the opposition and the public and stakeholders had asked for.

As part of that process we discovered: you know, we really probably need more indigenous representation on this child intervention panel. What government, even this government, so often, far too often does is to say: “No, no. This is the way it’s going to be. The answer we get depends on the question we ask, so we’re going to form it in a way that gives us an answer that we want.” Instead, the government asked an open-ended question and said: how are we going to fix what has been broken for so very long, what has been the subject of so many panels and so many reports, all of them thoughtful, all of them well intended?

All of those reports, in varying degrees, have ended up as a report on a shelf, no meaningful action, and nothing significant has changed over time. One of the big pieces of feedback we received through the process is that we needed more indigenous representation. So what did the minister do? She added Tyler White to the panel, added more expert representation.

The opposition likes to raise the Serenity case as a failing of this process. Well, there are some very legitimate reasons why that case could not be fully explored by the committee, primarily because it was before the courts and remains so. The government is legally prevented from raising that issue in any sort of fulsome way, but they still did offer an in camera review to Members of the Legislative Assembly who were part of that panel to provide whatever information they were legally able to provide as an update of the Serenity case itself.

The Serenity case is incredibly tragic – deeply, deeply tragic – and my heart breaks every time I think about that little girl, every time I think about her family, her mother, and I know that the minister feels the same way. It is not acceptable that that happened. We can never know if this bill that we’re debating here means that that can never happen again. We can’t know that. But I think that what I can say with some certainty is that this bill moves us closer to a place where the terrible situation that Serenity found herself in is less likely to happen.

When dealing with child intervention and the results of decades, more than a century of colonialism, dealing with poverty, with addiction, with the many, many, many complex issues that we’re dealing with as it relates, in particular, to indigenous children but not just indigenous kids, we can never have a hundred per cent certainty. For those of us in opposition to somehow expect the government to be perfect on this file is not realistic.

At the same time we should never let up in holding the government accountable. I feel that through this panel process, through the Legislative Assembly we have done that. Frankly, I would like to see far more from this government that looks like the child intervention panel, far more legislation that is the result of a long and thoughtful process, far more times when the government actually accepts amendments from the opposition that seek to replicate that consultation process, just exactly like the government has done in this case.

I am not a New Democrat; I never will be. I don’t agree with this government on a lot of things. But on this thing, on this particular bill, it is a vast improvement and a step on the road – it is not an end in itself but is a step on the road – to making things better for kids in care, to preventing children from coming into care in the first place, and for those kids who are already in care, to re-establishing family connection and becoming more connected with their culture, to genuine healing.

It’s not perfect. It never will be perfect, Madam Chair. But this bill makes things much better for kids today. It will make things better for kids in the future, and I think it’s important that this House recognizes that and recognizes the government for the work they did to get us here.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak?

Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I listened to that little bit with great interest. It’s interesting to hear a member stand up and say, “I won’t be an apologist for the government,” and then immediately become an apologist for the government, which is what he did. Then he said, “We’ll never let up on holding the government to account,” after which point he immediately stopped holding the government to account. It was actually kind of sad for me to watch. We should all have been sad to watch and hear the performance that just went on here.

You know what? We’ve tried on this side to be fair, but the hon. member has an interesting recollection of some of the events. I’ve said, Madam Chair, that I believe that the government members and all members, including the one that just spoke, tried during the panel to be nonpartisan when we went through this thing, and I stand by that because I really think that was the way it was. But what the member failed to say is that the terms of reference that we were stuck with – and he’s right; we had a media conference. We went and talked to the world and said that we weren’t happy with the government’s terms of reference, and we changed them.

But the hon. member forgot to mention just now that we still weren’t happy with them, and we actually had to make a decision: do we actually not be involved in an imperfect process, or do we stick with an imperfect process because it’s a little bit better? We decided, for the sake of children in Alberta and the memory of Serenity and other kids, that we would do that. He makes it sound like the terms of reference were made perfect by the government. They weren’t. They were barely workable, but we worked with them anyways because the issue was important enough.

He also forgot to mention some of the other shortfalls. We tried to talk to staff, and I believe they were either afraid to talk or told not to talk. I can never know that for sure. But it was pretty obvious to us that some of the staff could have actually shed light on a lot more of what goes on within the system. I had the feeling that they wanted to talk, but they weren’t able to.

To make this sound like the member just did now, like everything is perfect – it isn’t. The government didn’t even say that it’s perfect. They said that it’s report 1 of 3. Good for them for saying that out loud. I commend them for that. But for the member that just stood up to try to paint this as some perfect process when we didn’t get to talk about Serenity, when we didn’t get to deal with the privacy issues is pretty disingenuous. He really is acting as an apologist for the government and has stopped holding the government to account.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Minister of Children’s Services.

Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do just want to take a moment to reiterate what is in this bill as opposed to a lot of conversation about the process of the panel.

Madam Chair, thank you for your role in it as well, and thank you very much to the Member for Calgary-Elbow for participating in that process in the way that it was intended and really contributing throughout.

You know, Madam Chair, this bill is giving First Nations standing in court in terms of their kids, something that they have been crying for.

It also deals with the fact that at this time, children who are in care – when a person is applying for private guardianship, there are two separate and possible, concurrent and conflicting processes that can happen. One of them, at this point, does not include a mandatory home study or a mandatory cultural plan, something that again our indigenous friends have cried long and hard for change on.

It’s putting important and essential guiding principles in place that will ensure that all caseworkers and the courts, whenever they’re making important decisions about children who are in care, are making them based on what is most important, and that is safety, embedding safety throughout the act as well as ensuring that they have that connection to family and community, that we have the voice of the child reflected in those decisions. As well, it also includes a number of matters to be considered, you know, that will ensure again that it’s not just cherry-picking a few items to make some decisions but looking at a comprehensive understanding as we make any decision about children who are in care.

Madam Chair, this is important work. This is important work that's based on the action plan. Cindy Blackstock, one of my own personal heroes – and it was my privilege to work with her through the ministerial panel – said that, you know, if we actually put it into action, it's going to be life changing. This is putting it into action. The Child and Youth Advocate for the province said virtually the same thing as Cindy Blackstock and, again, looking at the bill, couldn't believe that we were actually taking the kind of aggressive progressive action to make the real change that needs to happen with the child intervention system.

You know, Madam Chair, I have to say that I am disappointed with the Official Opposition's choice on that. This is not about the panel and whether they were happy with the panel process or not. This is about the fact that we are making real change on behalf of the child intervention system, taking the steps forward that should have been taken 40 years ago. I for one am incredibly proud of this bill and cannot wait to be able to vote on it.

With that, I will now be quiet, but thank you for allowing me to make those remarks.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 22 agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 23

An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to the bill, Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. As you know, Madam Chair, I find some irony in the name, particularly given that it implies that local democracy is in some sort of massive need of a saviour in the form of the minister riding in on his white horse to save local democracy and to renew it.

Mr. Nixon: With his reindeer and his beard.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. In a very Santa Claus kind of way.

Yet at the same time it does the exact – maybe not the exact opposite. It has many consequences that don't in fact renew local democracy in Alberta and does a number of things that will actually create challenges to local democracy being renewed. So I'd like to propose a number of amendments this evening. I know that my colleague the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, who is a thoughtful, well-rounded individual, will consider these amendments in the fullness of their completeness and support many of them.

In the name of time I will move the amendment, and then I will continue at your command.

The Chair: This will be amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. Madam Chair, the purpose of A4 is to create some similarities in the rules between making political contributions municipally that you can provincially. What the minister has done in this particular piece of legislation is that he's defined the campaign period as January 1 to December 31 of an election year. Donors are allowed to donate up to a maximum of $4,000 in aggregate for a campaign period. What that does is that it limits an individual's ability to donate to a municipal candidate at any other time than in the year of an election.

Let me be very clear that we on this side of the House have supported donation limits at some length. You know, Madam Chair, that this government has introduced now seven pieces of electoral reform legislation, and on many occasions the Official Opposition has supported those.

Now I'm going to recommend to my colleagues that they join me in voting against this piece of legislation because I believe the unintended consequences of the legislation are actually greater than the good that it's going to include.

One of those things that I'm certain that we're going to hear from the minister in his response: doing this, allowing candidates to only receive donations inside an election year, actually is going to benefit new people to the table, and it will harm incumbents. But those that I have spoken to that are nonincumbents – and I know the minister has done, you know, every single piece of consultation that one could ever imagine, although he did have to amend his own piece of legislation because he didn't consult on that one little piece or whatever the case was. The folks who are the nonincumbents that I have spoken to actually firmly believe that this is going to create a greater incumbent advantage: to limit their ability to spend any money outside of a campaign period – correction: $2,000, which is virtually nothing – and to not raise money outside of a campaign period.

This amendment: what it does is that it actually extends the campaign period so that individuals could donate to those campaigns on a year-over-year basis. As you know, Madam Chair, an Albertan can donate $4,000 to your campaign in the north, or they can donate $4,000 to any political party of their choosing, or they can break that up, or they can also donate $4,000 in the municipal field of politics. They can do that year over year over year over year provincially, but municipally they can only do it one time in the year of the election.

That doesn't make such an impact in communities like Carstairs or Olds or Didsbury or Carbon or Acme or Linden, all of the small communities across our province, but in areas like Red Deer, Lethbridge, Grande Prairie, particularly those areas where candidates don't represent a ward system but they run in the city and the top six across the line are elected, you know, a simple mail-out to the whole city can cost a significant amount of money.

The other challenge in some of the large municipalities: for example, if you were looking to take on the incumbent mayor of Edmonton in the form of Mr. Iveson and you wanted to start doing some market research, some polling, some focus grouping, these sorts of things, the way that this legislation will likely be passed would prevent a nonincumbent from doing that. I firmly believe that we're going to see PACs or political parties engaging at the municipal level as an end around to this particular problem that the government is now creating, that is limiting people's ability to donate to a municipal politician in the previous years leading up to an election and only allowing them to do it in the year of the election.

I also question the constitutionality of such a piece of legislation, that essentially limits an individual's ability to engage in the political process at the municipal level outside of the year of an election, which is exactly what the minister has done.

I think that this particular amendment allows transparency. It allows openness. It also creates similarity in the rules between the municipal government and provincial government. I think that it's common sense.

I would never speak on behalf of the minister, but I can assure you that I am most likely to be disappointed by him in the fact that, you know, I can only imagine that he's going to say, "No, no; the member from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills couldn't be more wrong" and that he's actually going to help nonincumbents and that he's going to help get big money out of politics and all of these talking points that they like to deliver. But just like so many other pieces of legislation that this government has passed, they've either had to come back and fix it, or they've created all sorts of problems inside the process.

So I strongly encourage all members of the Assembly. If you believe that municipal politicians are equally as honest and should be treated as equals to provincial politicians, then they should have similar or the same donation rules and donation limits. We should support this amendment, which does just that.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for his amendment and for his comments. You know, I appreciate where he's coming from. I'll just make a few comments here. He won't be happy at the end of it, but I'm sure he'll get over it pretty quickly.

When we talk about who we consulted with and who we went out and spoke to, there were over 1,500 responses to our survey, overwhelmingly in favour of getting big money out of politics. I will give a list of some of the people that we consulted with so that he has an understanding: AUMA, RMA, city of Edmonton, city of Calgary, Local Government Administration Association, Alberta Rural Municipal Administrators Association, Alberta Municipal Clerks Association, the Association of Summer Villages of Alberta, Alberta School Boards Association, and quite a few more.

What I will say is that there are differences with provincial and municipal elections. What we have found is that when we did an analysis of who is raising funds outside of that one-year campaign period, it was overwhelmingly incumbents, so it gives them the advantage. They already have the advantage of being there, their name, their face. They're already in the public. That's great for them, of course, but we know that that will benefit them to raise this money. If we extend it outside this one-year campaign period, it will overwhelmingly benefit them.

So this is one way, out of a multitude of ways through this legislation, that we are trying to level the playing field, and we heard this loud and clear. These are not things that I just magically thought up. These are things we went out and consulted on and that we heard directly from the people out there that they wanted.

Unfortunately – I know the member was hoping differently – I will have to say that I do not support this amendment, but I do thank him for bringing it forward.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. After this amendment I will cede to my colleague from way down the bench there.

I would like to move another amendment, that is equally as amazing. I'll just make sure I get the copies here for you. This is a good one. The last one was good, too, but the minister doesn't agree.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A5.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, be amended in section 56 in the proposed section 162(1)(e)(i) by striking out "May 1" and substituting "January 1." Again, this comes to a point of creating continuity, and the minister has spoken at some length about his desire to create continuity. In fact, just last week we had the ability to work together, and you know that teamwork makes the dream work. We passed an amendment because we needed to change something from "election expenses" to "campaign expenses." This particular amendment does similar sorts of things in creating the same rules for third-party groups or other groups as for those who would like to contribute to a campaign.

This amendment amends section 56 in the proposed section by extending the period in which campaign expense limits are placed on third-party advertisers to align with the same period as for the candidates. The amendment would move the start date of the campaign expense limit from May 1 to January 1, which is when the expense limit is proposed for candidates. This amendment is simply about levelling the playing field and fairness. It's a common-sense, no-brainer amendment. The same rules should apply for everyone, both third parties as well as the candidates. Currently the candidate campaign period begins January 1, and for the third-party advertisers or additional groups – like we spoke at some length about last week, with the minister creating one set of rules for certain organizations and another set for others – this particular amendment would make the dates the same, being January 1.

The current bill provides a huge advantage for third-party advertisers over candidates as their campaign period wouldn't begin until May. As such, candidates are already limited to a $2,000 spending limit outside of a campaign period while third-party advertisers have absolutely no limits on what they can spend. On top of that, their campaign expense limit doesn't begin to start counting until May. As such, the third-party advertiser could be spending at some length during the months of January, February, March, April, and May, and we've already heard that the last amendment that this government defeated is quite likely to lead to more third-party advertisers at the municipal level.

Given that the third-party advertisers can actively campaign for or against a candidate, it seems totally unfair, the result of this particular section. I hope that this was a small oversight since during the tech briefing the minister's staff originally stated that third-party advertisers' expense limit would be the same as for candidates. However, inside the legislation they have not been treated the same. My proposal in this amendment would be that we treat both organizations the same.

I encourage the minister to do the right thing and make this small adjustment.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is an incredibly interesting bill. I don't know why nobody else wants to speak to it, but of course I'll go back and forth with the member.

I do appreciate the intent of this amendment – of course I do – to reduce the risk of third-party influence in local election campaigns. The amendment to this act does aim to increase transparency and accountability among third-party advertisers while striking a balance with the right to free speech. Provincially restrictions on third-party spending are only in effect for between four to six months leading up to the election. The proposed LAEA timeline would enact restrictions for five and a half months, lining up with the time frame used provincially and set out in the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

Unfortunately, I have to recommend that all members not support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to introduce an amendment as well this afternoon.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A6.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms McPherson: Thank you. I'd like to move that Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, be amended in section 33 as follows:

- (a) by adding the following after clause (a):
 - (a.1) in subsection (4) by adding "or relative" after "the elector's friend";
- (b) in clause (c), in the proposed section 78(5), by adding "or relative" after "accompanied by a friend."

I believe this is simply an oversight in drafting this bill, and I'll provide a little bit of background.

The current Local Authorities Election Act states in section 78(3):

The deputy, if requested by an elector described in subsection (1) who is accompanied by a friend or relative who is at least 18 years of age, shall permit that friend or relative, on making the prescribed statement, to accompany the elector into a voting compartment for the purpose of marking the elector's ballot and the ballot when marked shall be delivered by the elector or the friend or relative to the deputy to be deposited in the ballot box.

However, in section 78(4) of the LAEA it refers to an elector's friend only and not to their relative.

The deputy shall not permit an elector to vote under subsection (3) until the elector and the elector's friend have made the prescribed statements.

The bill before us proposes to make a small change to 78(5) of the LAEA using the following language:

If an elector who is blind is not accompanied by a friend into a voting compartment under subsection (3) and the municipality has passed a bylaw setting out the blind elector template in accordance with subsection (4.1), the deputy must

- (a) provide the elector with a blind elector template, and
- (b) instruct the elector in its use.

The amendment I'm proposing is to make references to "friend" in subsections 78(4) and 78(5) consistent with references to "friend or relative" in subsection 78(3).

We, I think, intend to have electors who need assistance be able to request the help of a friend or relative under subsection (3). Mechanically, if an incapacitated elector chooses to bring a relative to help them vote instead of bringing a friend, we want the elector's relative to be able to make the declaration under subsection (4).

With the act's current wording, only an elector's friend could make the statement.

Similarly, the bill proposes that an election official must provide information to a blind elector about how to use the voting device if the blind elector is not accompanied by a friend, but it is silent about when a blind elector is not accompanied by a relative. This amendment would make sure that a blind elector would still receive instructions on how to use the voting device if they are not accompanied by a relative.

I assume that this is simply an error of omission, and I hope that everyone in the House supports this amendment to make voting work better for all Albertans.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill bringing this amendment forward. A goal of this legislation is to remove barriers for Albertans to enable further participation in our elections and democracy. Voting is a democratic right in this country, and we want to ensure that we make it as accessible as possible. This proposed amendment helps to ensure consistency throughout the section where it references "friend" to also include "relative" and does not change the intent of the legislation or this particular section.

On that basis, I am prepared to support this amendment, and I encourage all other members to support it as well. I thank the member for bringing it forward.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A6 carried]

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm glad that we provided that clarity, because very few of my relatives are also my friends. I'm just kidding. Love you, Mom. I'm pretty certain that if I wasn't wearing this amazing Christmas tie, I would have worked my way off all of my relatives' Christmas lists and card lists, but since I am wearing this awesome tie, I'll be safe.

I would like to propose another amendment this evening. I hope that I will have the success that we have just seen previously. I'll wait for your instructions.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A7.

Go ahead.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. Madam Chair, I rise to speak to amendment A7. This particular amendment provides some clarity around who, when, why, and how one can vouch for an elector. I think that it is very important that the integrity of our elections is upheld. I want to reiterate, as I've said in the House on numerous occasions, that most people want to follow all election laws and have no desire to do an end around, usurp, or work against the democratic process.

Having said that – and I know it's hard to believe, Madam Chair – there are some people who don't have the same respect for the electoral laws as others. Sometimes people make bad choices with respect to elections. Sometimes they even do things that are untoward that may or may not get them removed from political organizations. So we can ascertain from that that it's possible that people won't do the right thing on election day.

In Bill 23 there is no certainty around ensuring that that happens with respect to vouching for an individual who is not on a voters list or may or may not have ID or may or may not have a residence, all sorts of scenarios like this. I know that I heard on some radio interviews that the minister spoke at some length about how he would be ensuring that all polling stations had voters lists. I know that a particular radio host on QR77 asked that particular question, about whether or not voting stations would have voters lists, and the minister assured us although that's not included in any piece of this legislation. So I have some concerns about that, and I hope that he can provide some clarity around that voters list.

But let's just say that there was no voters list and that someone who wanted to vote didn't have any of the appropriate ID or that sort of thing. I also think that it's reasonable that those people can still vote if they have someone who can vouch for them to prove their identity. This particular amendment will create some limits on the ability of individuals to do that. As such, they couldn't vouch for a whole group of people, like tens and tens and tens or hundreds or whatever, I suppose, busloads, or however they arrive.

In the current legislation it says that a person can vouch for a person, but it doesn't create any limit on the number of times they can do that or the number of polling stations they can do that in. This particular amendment would limit the number to three people. So you could vote, and you could also vouch for three other individuals.

I will be the first to admit that three was selected as a number that seemed reasonable, that wasn't over the top but also would allow an individual who, you know – like, let's say that I was taking my grandma and grandpa to the polls and they forgot their wallets. I'm not suggesting that we make vouching so restrictive that I couldn't bring my grandma and grandpa, two people, to the polls and still have them vote but not so wide open that you could vouch for literally a bus full of people. We selected three because it seemed like a reasonable number, not too big, not too small. That is how we arrived at that point.

I think it's important, though, that we provide some checks and balances in what some would say is the most important process that the public engages in, the election of those who represent us. I think that this is important.

I know the minister has liked to pick and choose when he creates certainty and similarities at the provincial level and the municipal level, and he hasn't applied that same rule all across this piece of legislation. So my sense is that he'll rise and say: listen, we don't have any checks and balances at the provincial level. My words; not his. He might use some slightly different words but essentially say that, you know, you can vouch for as many people as you want provincially and that we shouldn't be doing things to restrict access to democracy and a number of other points. But I would also submit that when we made changes to previous pieces of legislation, we had suggested that this vouching challenge was also an issue then, and it wasn't adhered to. I would say that now would be a great time to do that, to adhere to a good, common-sense, balanced approach that doesn't say no one, that doesn't say just one person but provides you some flexibility, even a family of individuals: mom, dad, or aging parents, and another relative, an uncle or whatever, who lives at the same house.

I think that this makes good, solid sense. I would encourage all members of the Assembly to go ahead and support this amendment as I think that protecting our democratic institution and elections is exactly what we need to do. It would be my strong recommendation that the minister heed the advice of the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It is true that these elections that we do with municipalities, irrigation districts, schools, Métis settlements are very complex, so there are subtle differences here and there between provincial and municipal elections. As I've said before, this bill is about increasing transparency and aligning municipal campaign rules with those that currently govern provincial elections as much as possible. This proposed amendment would result in different rules between municipal and provincial elections, and these current provisions align with the provincial Election Act.

As in the Election Act we will be clear that a person may only vouch for another person if that first person has the appropriate identification. In other words, a person who has been vouched for may not then vouch for another person. The Election Act does not place any restriction on the number of persons someone may vouch for, and to our knowledge this has not created any significant problems in provincial elections since the turn of the century. In fact, these particular rules have been in place since 2000. We've also added teeth to the legislation, which has empowered the Election Commissioner to investigate any and all complaints brought forward.

With that, I won't be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do have another amendment I'd like to move this afternoon.

The Chair: We're still on amendment A7.

Ms McPherson: Oh. I'm so sorry. It's been a long sitting.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7?

Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Obviously, I need to meditate more so I can be more present. I do have another amendment I would like to introduce.

The Chair: This is amendment A8.

Ms McPherson: I'd like to move that Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, be amended in section 51 in the proposed section 147.22 (a) in subsection (3), by adding "Subject to subsection (4)," before "Subsections (1) and (2) do not apply" and (b) by adding the following after subsection (3):

- (4) Subject to subsection (5), an elected authority may, by passage of a bylaw on or before June 30 of the year following the year in which a general election occurs, adjust the amounts specified in subsection (3) to which subsections (1) and (2) do not apply for
 - (a) that local jurisdiction, or
 - (b) one or more wards in that local jurisdiction.
- (5) An elected authority in adjusting the amounts specified in subsection (3) may consider only
 - (a) the number of electors in that local jurisdiction or its wards, and
 - (c) the geographic size of that local jurisdiction or its wards.
- (6) A bylaw made under subsection (4) may not increase either amount specified in subsection (3) to an amount greater than $7500.

This amendment makes candidacy more accessible to new participants by addressing the $2,000 precampaign fundraising and spending limit proposed in the bill for nonincumbents. This amendment would allow local election authorities to set precampaign fundraising and spending limits according to local conditions if they do not find that the default $2,000 limit is appropriate for their circumstances. On the one hand, incumbents in large cities have a huge advantage in using public resources to communicate with electors, which can be worth far more than $2,000. On the other hand, some local positions in remote areas struggle to attract any attention or candidates, so the $2,000 limit may be too high. We also need to consider how many electors must be reached and how they're distributed in a local jurisdiction or ward. Travelling around a large municipality has different costs than canvassing apartments.

The amendment would enable an elected authority to set the precampaign spending limit well in advance of future elections so that the limit is known to challengers ahead of time. Practically speaking, in the absence of a sensible precampaign limit, folks interested in becoming candidates might choose to be really active in their own communities on a particular issue, to become well known that way. Meanwhile they're raising and spending unlimited funds to get attention and collect information about potential voters, and all they have to do is declare their candidacy at the last minute in order to avoid this $2,000 precampaign limit.

This amendment was born of conversations with recently elected municipal officials who expressed concerns about the ability of people who are not incumbents to be able to be elected. It was identified that the $2,000 limit really was a problem. It would prevent people from being encouraged to put their names forward. Democracy, you know, dictates that positions should be available to people to take a chance, to put their name forward. Based on that, I would encourage all members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Although I understand the intent of this proposed amendment, unfortunately I cannot support it. We've given this particular section a lot of thought and consideration, and we feel that this is an adequate amount to allow individuals to take part in precampaign activities.

I'd like to remind all members that one of the key intentions of Bill 23 is to reduce the impact of big money in the local election process and make running for office more accessible to those without deep pockets. Increasing the amount of money that can be spent in the years leading up to the campaign period isn't consistent with that objective. I would also point out that increasing the amount that can be spent prior to the official campaign period generally tends to create a significant advantage for incumbents whereas our intent is to create a more level playing field for all candidates.

I also worry that this proposed amendment will create greater confusion across the province and even within individual communities because not only could each municipality and school board have the potential to have different limits, but those amounts could vary between individual wards within local jurisdictions, and that would make transparency and clarity for local electors much more difficult to achieve.

For all those reasons, I am not able to support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A8?

Hearing none, I will call a vote.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Cooper: Well, it truly is the most wonderful time of the year, and it is a pleasure to rise at such a time as this to move an amendment. I will provide it to the page and await further instructions.

The Chair: This is amendment A9.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. Well, Madam Chair, what we have seen here this evening and over the last week is this minister, you know, not materially accepting changes to his legislation. I say "materially" because we did accept an amendment today which basically defined a friend as a relative or a relative as a friend, and we did find in the last week that the minister meant to call something a campaign expense, and he called it an election expense, an election expense a campaign expense. So we fixed some grammar in his legislation.

Broadly, the minister has introduced a piece of legislation in the House called An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta. It is a bold title. It is a broad, self-congratulatory title where he essentially implies that the legislation, in fact, will do just that, renew local democracy, as if it was broken.

The reality is that the consequences of this bill are going to not do what he says. In fact, in many cases I believe it's going to do the opposite. I thought that what I would do is do the minister a favour and allow him the opportunity to actually change the name of the legislation so that in a period of time, certainly after the next election – you know, there’s a good possibility that one of us will remain in this House, and in all fairness we’re going to miss him. But I think that as a legacy, if you will, of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, when he looks back and sees that the changes he has made don’t renew local democracy and do the opposite, create third-party advertisers, engage political parties in the municipal process . . .

Mr. McIver: Put a lot more dark money in.

Mr. Cooper: Put more dark money in, less transparency as a result of his legislation.

I think that he will want to not bear the burden of implying that he was going to renew local democracy but failed at that. As such, the local authorities election amendment act, 2018, would be a much more appropriate title for such a piece of legislation as this. He still gets to accomplish everything he wants, but we depoliticize the title and also create an opportunity in the future, when the results aren’t as he’d hoped they would be, that the title will just reflect what we actually did, which was amend an already existing piece of legislation in the Local Authorities Election Act, and refer to the year.

You know, frankly, so many pieces of legislation should be titled such that we are amending legislation that already exists, but we’ve seen time and time again – and not just this minister. I don’t mean to pick on him specifically. I would never want to do that for obvious reasons. But time and time again the government continues to overpoliticize the names of legislation. They overpoliticize so much about the process.

This would accurately communicate what we are doing here, what we did do. It’s an easy change. It doesn’t change anything to the mechanics of the legislation but names it more appropriately. I strongly recommend that all members of the Assembly vote in favour of this amendment.

Mr. Shepherd: Madam Chair, though I recognize given some of the events today that this may be a fraught request, I just wanted to see if I might be able to get unanimous consent of the House for what I assure them would be an extremely brief introduction.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’d like to introduce to you and through you to the House some constituents of mine who are here for the Legislature light-up ceremony: Heather MacKenzie, who is a local community advocate, consultant, and a former municipal and federal candidate; her husband, Justin; and her two children Grace and Jaycen who join us here today. Please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 23

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A9?

Mr. McIver: No. I just wanted to thank the hon. member for making that short, and perhaps he could give lessons to some of his teammates.

The Chair: Any further speakers on amendment A9? The hon. minister.

5:30

Mr. S. Anderson: Yes. I will try to be brief on this, Madam Chair. Thank you to the member for his comments and for his humble way of talking about this House. I really appreciate it over there. I’m not sure why he thinks the name of this is highly politicized. I mean, we didn’t call it making democracy great again, or anything. We could have made it highly political. We chose not to.

Madam Chair, I appreciate all the comments in here and the commentary on this bill. I heard loud and clear. I’ve had many, many messages from before the last municipal election and since about what the public has seen and what they want to see in this province. It’s accountability. It’s transparency. It’s people getting into politics for the right reasons. It’s people getting in there to help one another, to help their communities, and to push their communities forward. We think that this bill is a huge step towards that.

The member likes to say that I say that everything is perfect. Well, nothing is perfect, Madam Chair. I’m sure that in the future there might have to be changes, but with the amount of consultation we’ve done and the people we’ve spoken to, we feel that this is a good piece of legislation. I am very proud of the people that have worked on it. My staff has been incredible.

I will not be supporting this amendment today.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A9?

Seeing none, I’ll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: We’re back on Bill 23. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Hearing none, are you ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 23 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That’s carried.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would move that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 22, Bill 23. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official record of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

Bill 31
Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Government House Leader I would like to move third reading of Bill 31, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to speak to this bill?
Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. At this time I would like to notify the House that pursuant to Government Motion 36 no evening sitting will take place and the House shall adjourn until 9 a.m. tomorrow.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, go ahead.

Larivee: Okay. I'd like to move that we adjourn.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:35 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. Hon. members, as the end of this sitting approaches, our staff from all across the province are gathering in Edmonton for their winter constituency seminar. Let us reflect on these dedicated individuals. For most of them, like for all of us, they view their roles as one of great privilege and responsibility, and they carry it out with great integrity on our behalf in our constituencies representing us. They're truly part of our team, and we greatly appreciate their role, so let's recognize their contributions to each of us and to the institution that we represent.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 32

City Charters Fiscal Framework Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Yeah. I want to take this opportunity to speak to Bill 32, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act. As we look at this bill and everything, I think there's some good things in this bill, of course. I think that the cities, Edmonton and Calgary, you know, should have stable, predictable long-term funding. I think that's a good principle though I also think that the other municipalities should have that same expectation, too. Of course, this bill doesn't address that, and I would hope that the government is working on that at this point, too, though I haven't heard what the government has in store there or what they're planning to do or if they're actually in any kinds of discussions on that. I guess, maybe to start off with, I would like to ask the minister on that: is the government in any kinds of discussions with the other municipalities, RMA or AUMA?

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just asked a question. I guess I'm not getting a response on that one. Like I say, I was concerned about whether the government has been talking to the other municipalities as far as some sort of stability in long-term funding. I think all municipalities in Alberta are concerned about their funding going forward as they make their budgets now and try to decide where they're going in the future. I think it's good to have some sort of framework in place on that issue.

Maybe in the future – I'm not sure what's going to be happening, but I'm guessing that since we have this Bill 32 that deals with Calgary and Edmonton specifically, maybe there'll be more different funding agreements with the other municipalities. I don't know if that means there will be three or four or more different funding agreements with the other municipalities, but it would be nice to find that out and find out what direction this government is going on that.

Right now the government is using, you know, a funding model here that provides basically a base, I guess, amount of income. Some of their revenue is dependent on different incomes within the government. I guess there's maybe in some parts of it somewhat a stable funding model, and other parts of it are maybe a little more fluid, so I wondered if there wasn't a more stable revenue stream such as corporate or personal income tax to be basing this funding model on. Maybe I'll pose that question to the government again to see if I get an answer to this one. Why did the government not use a more stable revenue stream such as corporate or personal income tax?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 32, City Charters Fiscal Framework Act. Just on the point of whether we're in consultations with other, smaller municipalities, of course, we've been able to reach an agreement with the two larger cities, the two big cities, which is very important in terms of stable funding moving forward. We recognize that all municipalities require stable, predictable infrastructure funding, and, as was mentioned, we were able to reach an agreement with Edmonton and Calgary through the charter process. We will now move on to the next phase in partnership with municipal associations. As the minister, I believe, stated, we are currently in discussions with the AUMA as well as the RMA right now, and we are committed to coming up with a funding agreement with them as well.

It's also important to note that other municipalities will have stable funding until 2022 under the current MSI framework while Calgary and Edmonton did take a $456 million cut over three years just to ensure that we're able to reach our budgetary constraints or that we do address those. We're committed to making sure that Alberta's mid-sized cities, towns, villages, MDs, and counties are able to meet their infrastructure needs. We do believe that a legislated capital funding framework will allow these communities to continue to build and thrive, and we're committed to seeing that happen.

As I mentioned, we are currently in negotiations with the AUMA and RMA. We weren't able to come to an agreement at this point, but we are very sure that we will be able to make that happen in the future. We've also said that, as part of the city charters we developed for Edmonton and Calgary, there will be a fiscal framework based on provincial revenues to support capital projections.

On the question of stable funding in terms of where the revenue stream is coming from, I think that on the transit funding side of things using the money put forward by the carbon levy and the climate leadership plan is as stable as it gets. Using that money to build important infrastructure projects and transit, like the valley line LRT moving towards my side of the city, the west leg: I think it's a good plan. Obviously, we'll see emissions reductions with more people taking transit and also just more opportunities for people to be able to move throughout the city without necessarily having to use their vehicles. Obviously, smaller municipalities will have different needs than the big cities, but that's something that we're hoping to address through the ongoing consultations with the other municipalities.

Thank you.

The Chair: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Well, thanks for the answer. I appreciate those comments there. I did have kind of one quick comment here. You said that part of the funding was going to come from the carbon tax, of course. I understand that the idea of the carbon tax is to reduce emissions. If the emissions are reduced, then I would presume that there would be less consumption of carbon-based fuels. I'm wondering if the government is predicting a reduction in income from the carbon tax, thus affecting the funds going to the cities of Edmonton and Calgary as the consumption is less. If the point of the carbon tax is to reduce emissions, obviously that would mean less carbon tax being paid, less revenue, so does that mean less money to the cities of Edmonton and Calgary?

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Carson: Just quickly, to address that, I don't necessarily have a perfect answer for you, but I don't see the changes in terms of the funding that we would receive from the carbon levy. I think that they would be somewhat negligible, but I will try and get you an answer for that.

Thank you.

9:10

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much for that. You know, I think, when we look back at the MSI, I mean, that seemed to be something that was working fairly well. I'm sure it wasn't perfect, but the municipalities have worked together to decide how that money was going to be split up and everything from the beginning. I think, like I say, it was probably complicated. Admittedly, I don't know that this one maybe is much less complicated as far as the formulas that they use to calculate the money. But I think, like I say, it's good. Like, we support the principle of this bill, of course, having the stable, predictable long-term funding. I think that's good.

Now, of course, when we see that part of this money is going to be dependent on other different things and relies on special formulas and some of these formulas will be changing as we go on as each year there's different percentages and everything, I guess I would hope that the government, as they go forward with this, will be able to ensure that the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, since that's what we're talking about in Bill 32, will have that stable funding going forward and be able to keep that money somewhat steady. I know that when I'm in discussions with the local municipalities and towns in my constituency, they sit down and try to make up budgets, and of course they're looking two, three years down the road because some of the commitments they make are multiyear commitments. That makes it very necessary that they have a proper funding model that has that predictability and long-term funding.

But I appreciate the answers to those questions so far this morning, and I may have some more later as we go through this morning session. Thank you.

The Chair: Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just on the point of MSI being a good program used over the years, I would tend to agree with that. I think that it's been able to build some important infrastructure throughout our province. Obviously, the main concern is the sustainability of it moving forward. Obviously, we've seen a reduction to the MSI for the cities, so moving forward, as we look at budgetary constraints and returning to a balanced budget in '23-24, we had to make some hard decisions. I think that through the negotiations with the big cities, both Calgary and Edmonton, they also recognize that, which is why we were able to come to an agreement the way that we did. I know that the city of Edmonton – I can't speak for the city of Calgary – is currently in their budgetary consultations, and they were greatly concerned with being able to come to an agreement before those proceedings ended.

Here we are today with Bill 32, which I think is very important for them to be able to commit to their long-term sustainability. Also, of course, as has been mentioned, MSI was planned to end or conclude in '21-22, so we had to come to a new agreement, which is why we are here today.

I've had many conversations with my city councillor of ward 1, Andrew Knack, about the concerns moving forward and the potential for them having to create a budget without having this funding or framework for the funding. I'm very happy that we're able to move forward on this, hopefully with the will of the House, to make sure that they're able to build the things that they need to build moving forward.

Thank you.

The Chair: Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Good morning. Thank you, Madam Chair, for recognizing me this morning. Good morning to everybody. Suddenly we're on to Bill 32 this morning, I just understood, so I'm just putting things together here at this moment in time. Anyway, this is an interesting topic that Bill 32 has brought forward. It's actually a new agreement between the province as the parent and its children, the municipalities, particularly the two main municipalities, the cities of Calgary and Edmonton.

As I had said in my earlier remarks a couple days ago in second reading, in 2007 the Stelmach government actually put together the municipal sustainability initiative. I can remember those days as a councillor. There were an awful lot of circumstances that led to this new initiative, and it was not something that happened overnight. It was a long, long era of constant battle on behalf of municipalities, who came literally with their hat in their hand every year to try to figure out how they could manage their infrastructure funding requirements and their needs for grants to keep managing their municipalities. Just imagine a small municipality, Madam Chair – a small village, a hamlet, a town – who did not have the tax base to bring in the thousands and thousands and millions of dollars to support the upgrades to their utility systems, to their roads, maintenance, buy new equipment. In those days costs, just like today, were going crazy in terms of buying equipment and paying their skilled labour forces, et cetera, et cetera.

In those days the government finally realized that they would have to put together some sort of a fair system, and it was called MSI. It really doesn't have a lot of strings attached to it as it has been. It has been something that they have gone over and over and over and tried to look at each year in some way or form of speaking, and they tried to hand out to municipalities, as the budget would see fit, sufficient monies to satisfy the needs of the municipalities.

Unfortunately, a few years ago municipalities were required to do three-year and five-year financial plans. This put a little bit of a problem into the whole system because MSI has been something of a moving target every year. Like a cork on the water, it's floated around. Different amounts of monies were distributed over the course of the past few years with it. In fact, as I mentioned the other day, even though $11.3 billion over 10 years was promised, only twice did it meet its goals, in 2007 and '14. The full commitment was never realized until the last promises of this current government, where they extended the program.

Here we are today with a bill called 32, and as I said the other day, we are more or less supportive of this, but we do have a lot of questions. What we have here, for the first time in my experiences so far in the past seven years, is actually, basically the general idea and principles that were decided in the months of negotiation between the two major cities and the province, and it deals with a fair number of topics. Just if you look on the first page of the bill, it talks about the authority to provide funding, the amount of funding, the payment plan, how the money is to be used, eligible expenditures, transit, accounting for the use of the funding, and other kinds of terms.

Yet the whole bill is called the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act. It encompasses an awful lot of big dollars, and it's based upon a formula that was agreed to years and years ago with the help of municipalities from every portion of the province, who had to try to work together, both AUMA and, at the time, AAMD and C, in determining what would be fair to work with in terms of a formula, if you will, to make sure that this would be something that could be utilized across the whole base. If you look at page 8 in the bill, you'll find that the funding for Calgary is described, and that basic formula is used for Edmonton as well. It's in section 4(2). It looks like I've been taken back in time to my math classes of 1973, when I took extra courses just to get a little handle on calculus. It is very complex, this whole system that they've put together. It has worked reasonably well over the years.

But now the government has decided, I guess, after months of these negotiations, to release it in a new way, and that new way is to participate in revenue sharing. That's a very open statement, but it basically means that instead of assigning a certain number of dollars in the budget every year from a fixed standpoint, they're now going to have a little bit of a variable in there. In good times, as the system works out, the province will be providing a little extra funding, and in tougher times the province will be providing a little less. When times are good, we all do well; when times are bad, we don't do so well, I think, is the basic concept. I don't want to get in to specifics because if you look through the bill, you'd have a lot of trouble getting in to specifics.

I suspect that for months and months and over the course of the past three years, while this government has been in power, we all know there's been an awful lot of discussion between the municipalities and the associations – it goes from small towns, big towns, mid-cities, the two main cities – on how all this could be done. In fact, what we find is that this bill is only regarding the two cities and how they're now going to be allowed to work with different mechanisms within this agreement and through the regulations to adjust and change the way cities are basically financed. That's what the city charter system was all about.

Just a couple of years ago I had a whiteboard with a number of us working on about 15 to 20 topics. If you remember Bill 20 or Bill 8, I identified at one time 55 different topics in those huge MGA amendment bills that were of concern: you might remember the 5 to 1 ratio, you might remember the intermunicipal collaboration, you might remember the requirements to do municipal development plans. Of course, all of those kinds of needs were really having to be based upon budgets. How could municipalities work with all these new costs? Naturally, they had their own tax bases to work from, and they would have to look for extra support to the government, which the government did in fact offer, to some extent, for those new requirements. Nonetheless, these new funding models that we're seeing now are a result of all of those discussions.

I suspect that department managers and the people that we call – and I hate the word, frankly – bureaucrats, the people that we have working in Municipal Affairs, some of them for many years, some of them that I know and have known for a long time, were probably scratching their heads and talking to the legal world and the accountant world. Compared to our two people that we have for staff that have helped me with this, they have reams of people in the backrooms. You people probably know about them. They probably have reams of people back there or reams of paper being used every day, dozens of people that have talked to their counterparts in the two cities to try to come up with something that makes sense.

I guess, from our standpoint, it's hard for us to dig into this in any great detail this morning with respect to all of the different things that this really entails. Nonetheless, we do have a few questions. I did the other day raise some concerns, and I'd just like to pore over some of those this morning if I could because we had a few observations that day. I might say, first of all, that the amount is less in the initial few years than what the cities have been used to getting. We've done some graphs, and we've run some numbers, and in the first three years, up to 2022, it certainly looks as if there's going to be, you know, a bit less.

It makes us wonder if, with the variable that's involved in this agreement, when times are good, this will affect how the formula works, this will affect how funding is coming forward. When times are good coming ahead, then the numbers for a few years later will be good. But what if at that time the numbers aren't so good for other things? How is this variable going to work if it's going to look like a sine wave? I'm wondering if the member across the way that was responding earlier could speak to that variable and how the system of future payments to the two cities will be affected. Do they have concerns about something being based on two years in the past, that could bite them later on in the future when times are bad?

I'll wait for the response, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Stier: Well, Madam Chair, in the absence of a response to my question I guess I'll move forward. Those fluctuations in the provincial revenues, obviously, from our side anyway, in the absence of a response – and I notice that we have the Minister of Finance here as well. Perhaps he could assist. Calgary and Edmonton have huge operating budgets, which he was involved with in the past. We think that this bill seems to commit the province to solid numbers, regardless of the situations. Transit funding is another one that is in there, and that's always a huge number. With these variables, perhaps I could ask the Minister of Finance: does he have any comments to make with regard to our concerns about the province committing to these funding levels, regardless of the current fiscal situation at the time in the future?

The Chair: Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to go back to the funding framework here, of course, monies are calculated based on revenue growth, as was mentioned, from three years prior, and the percentage change in revenue is multiplied by a constraint factor. The factor will be 50 per cent for the '23-24 calculation, increasing by 5 per cent each year until it reaches 100 per cent in '33-34, after which it will stay at 100 per cent. I think that's something that's been addressed through the House.

Of course, last year we saw our GDP growth be the highest across the country, of all provinces. We're projected to be somewhere around there again this year as far as I know. As far as we can see, the projected revenues are to rise in the future. I mean, really, this framework is about predictability. That was something, as was mentioned by the member, that we weren't necessarily seeing under MSI, whether it was a change in government or financials changed for the province. I think we need to move away into something more sustainable. While I do appreciate the questions, I think that this new framework is more predictable than what we were seeing.

I believe there was a question of whether the cities were in support of this entirely, and they are. We saw Mayor Iveson standing with the minister a few days ago, I believe, in support of this. Once again, I mean, they're going through their budgetary process, and they were very concerned about whether they were going to be able to have a number in front of them, so we committed to that. After some tough negotiations from both sides, we were able to come to an agreement.

Thank you.

The Chair: Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for your response, Member. As we have looked at the way this is to be funded, we have got a question related to what we just were discussing, and that is that there are some portions of the revenue stream for the province that we think were not perhaps considered to be in this revenue stream that this is sourcing. I'm wondering if the member would have a comment as to why the government did not use a more stable revenue stream, such as corporate and personal income taxes, in these arrangements. While those two seem to fluctuate up and down as well, it's one of the more stable revenues, I should think. I'm just wondering if the member could respond as to why those items weren't considered, please.

The Chair: Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Chair. CIT and PIT are in fact included in the revenue model. Yeah. Thank you.

Mr. Stier: Thank you for that clarification. Through the chair again, Madam Chair, another observation we had – I mentioned it briefly here just earlier this week and today – this amount of money is going to be coming out of the budget, more or less, each year. It's dollars that will be assumed to be spent, I should think. I'm just wondering. This particular agreement with the two cities: will this have any impact, will this have any bearing or be taken into consideration in discussions, I believe, as the minister said the other day, between the municipal associations and the municipalities they represent? Will it have any impact or any effect on a potential new deal for municipalities throughout the province that are not the two cities, please?

The Chair: Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's an important question, indeed. Of course, Edmonton and Calgary have worked with us to achieve our path to balance. They saw their funding reduced by $456 million over three years to help us achieve those savings. No other municipality in Alberta, I think it's important to recognize, saw a reduction in their MSI over the last few years, and they were able to enjoy constant funding. That was a conversation that we had to have with the bigger cities, and we appreciate their willingness to help us get back to balance.

I think, once again, it's important to recognize that though the major cities or the big cities saw a reduction in their funding, none of the smaller municipalities did. We do remain committed to legislating a replacement for MSI for all municipalities. No, the agreements that we've made with the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary do not have any bearing on the negotiations that we'll be having around MSI with other municipalities.

Of course, we do recognize that all municipalities do require stable, predictable, and permanent capital infrastructure funding, and that is why we continue to be in negotiations with both the AUMA and the RMA regarding a long-term revenue-sharing agreement.

Thank you.

The Chair: Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. To the member that has responded, thank you for your response once again.

Madam Chair, there are a number of other implications that come from this. Because this is the funding and it is partially being legislated in some degree regarding other matters, which includes a lot of those that are controlled by the regulations that we've already had – as a side note, I should say that when city charters were first discussed one and a half to two years ago under the previous Municipal Government Act amending bills – I think it was 21, 20, and 8 – some topics like inclusionary housing and a lot of topics to do with off-site levies came up. As I said earlier, in those bills there were a lot of topics, and we didn't get into the roots and evils of all of them. Nonetheless, it was intended that when the city charters were going to come forward, there was a great amount of concern from the building industry, from the development industry, from the contracting industries, from all points of the province regarding what the implications may be when the city was granted certain powers.

Today we're seeing, as we discuss the bill, some answers on some of the things we have, but while I recognize that regulations are not normally debated in the House, the government chose to release the new regulations, that are tied to this legislation in some respects, on how the cities will be responding, in turn, when they set up bylaws and other things to be able to comply with the new regulations. I understand these regulations are not in place yet. There's a 60-day window yet for comment. Members of this Assembly, constituency offices all across the province are now receiving an awful lot of concerns from those industries in our e-mails, et cetera, et cetera, phone calls, what have you.

To the member: I'm wondering if he could respond with regard to these two topics in any way. While we don't discuss regulations, they are directly – directly – involved in this legislation. We know that in these regulations municipalities are required to put together bylaws and an awful lot of other things to work with developers on these two critical topics, and those are inclusionary housing and off-site levies. Developers are working and acquiring land for their developments and are going to the municipalities to see what the rules are going to be. The administrative costs and fees, as time goes along, and commitments for roads and all the other things that they have to put in – and it varies in different municipalities – are extremely costly. It gets down to the point where if you're a developer and you're going to be creating a whole new subdivision, a place for people to live, for thousands to live and recreate and enjoy, there's a cost to doing that, and it's a huge cost. The city sets density rules and the city sets all kinds of guidelines and principles that have to be met before a developer can proceed. Taking into account what has happened in the years gone by without some of these new requirements, developers have had to struggle with increasing costs for materials and all other kinds of extra administrative expenses.

Nonetheless, now they're being faced with a release of control, to some extent, in terms of where the rules came from. Originally, you know, in land planning you have the regional plans, which affect the municipal development plans, which affect the intermunicipal development plans, which affect all these things in the hierarchy of planning, but now the developer has to look at a new risk venture in his idea. If he wants to come and put in an area structure plan that will involve several hundred homes, parks, he has to consider whether there's going to be a municipal reserve being taken from his property, whether there are going to be other hindrances, and one of the biggest worries they have is that it won't be predictable. We're talking about predictable funding in this discussion.

So what I'm wondering, hon. member, if you can respond to some extent here: do you know why this regulation was released at this time and if the government would consider extending the time for proper discussion on these regulations for public input? These have been announced just prior to the Christmas season. There's been a lot of focus these days on different priorities that people have this time of year. Why was this brought out at this time, and when will these regulations possibly be put into place?

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will do my best to address some of the points that were brought up by the hon. member. First, I would like to recognize that while the city charter framework was put into place in the spring of this year for the big cities, any time that they do want to make a change, it must be posted for 60 days, as I believe the member did recognize, before a regulation can be amended.

I think we have to recognize that Edmonton and Calgary are home to 53 per cent of all Albertans and that they have to be able to make decisions on their own as well. I do want to recognize once again, as the member stated, that these regulations aren't within this bill, but they are important questions that go along with it.

I just want to first of all touch on the eight regulations that were proposed. The amendments do give the ability to define types of development that qualify for off-site levies, which was mentioned; develop their own inclusionary housing programs; manage their own debt limits; more time to impose local improvement taxes; more flexibility in how they advertise or notify residents about large-scale rezoning; clarification for disposal processes for school properties that have been acquired at no cost; and the ability to work with school boards to develop broader uses for the lands around school sites.

It's important once again to recognize that these cities have to have the ability to make these decisions, and I think that modernizing these regulations is an important move forward. I believe that there is an ability to comment on these changes until January 28, I believe, so if people have comments, they are able to do so online.

I do also recognize that there are stakeholders, industry stakeholders who have concerns, and those are things where we need to be able to sit down – those consultations or conversations have begun already – and come to an agreement, just as we did on the entirety of this framework.

I'm not sure if I addressed some or all or none of his concerns, but we will do our best to do that in the future. Thank you.

The Chair: Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thanks again, Madam Chair. I note that the minister perhaps will be able to respond himself, I suspect, at this time if I was to redirect a couple of questions his way. I had mentioned this, Minister, to the other member that was responding this morning with regard to a lot of concerns we had in relation to this, but for your benefit, just to let you know, I did recognize that there must have been a lot of discussion with a lot of important people to come to the complex agreement that you've arrived at that is contained in the legislation.

But I would like to say that I'm a little concerned here that the regulations – they are sort of not normally discussed in the House, which I recognize, but are sort of tied to this bill – were released at the same time. Would you like to speak to that, and could you perhaps clear up a couple of things for me here?

There's a great amount of concern about what's contained in the regulations. The updates were made at the same time as the new bill for funding came out, and therefore I believe it is a fair topic to discuss, to some minor degree, in the House. I'm just wondering if you could speak on why these regulations have come out now. Could this consultation period be extended, perhaps, beyond what is now in the midst of the Christmas holiday season? Could that be extended? Why did they come out now?

As well, I'm wondering if you could speak, in addition, to this. It seems like there's no limit, if I could use that term loosely, sir, with respect to the power that the city would have in terms of quantifiers on just how much inclusionary housing, just how many off-site levies. How much does the developer perhaps have to be worried about in his risk assessments when he's doing his development plans with such open-ended clauses that appear to be in these new regulations?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. The member is right: it is a complex piece of legislation. It's something that we've been working on for – I can't say – a long time with the cities and a lot of experts that know a lot more about some of the things you're talking about: inclusionary housing, off-site levies, and these types of things. These are the types of things that the cities have been asking for for quite a long time, actually. In fact, when you talk about the off-site levies, what we're doing here is basically codifying some of the stuff that Calgary already does. They work with the developers on their communities to build sustainable and smart communities that people want to move to. What this does, with all of these provisions, in fact, is that it allows them to work with the city to develop the bylaw with them or to be consulted on the bylaw, to have public open houses on the bylaw, to make sure that they have certainty on where they're going to go.

Really, it's making sure that all parties are accountable and that they work together on this. I think that, as I said, this is something that Calgary already tends to do a fair amount. The big cities need to make sure that they hold these consultations and talk about these in a broad-based way with as much public input and developer input as possible. I know that some of our members spoke to developers last night about that, and I know that some of the developers were concerned and were kind of unsure. But, like I say, it is something that is already done in Calgary. It's just codifying it. The same with inclusionary housing: they're going to have to work together on this.

Sometimes when we put parameters on the 342 municipalities, they work in a broad-based sense, but the two big cities are kind of a bit of a different animal now. Working together with the developers, I think, is a smart way to do this. They have a lot more complexity to them in the big cities, so that's why we want to give them that ability and to make them accountable for themselves and to the public. That's kind of where we're at right now. That's why we did that. It was something that was asked for. We spoke to the developers about this, too, and they understand where we're going with this legislation.

If there's anything specific, obviously I will try to answer that for the member.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Madam Chair, thank you, and I appreciate the response from the minister this morning. As I've taken a fair amount of time this morning in discussing the bill, I will probably be concluding here shortly on my portion of this. But I would just like to say that there were a lot of conversations we had, Minister, prior to your attending. We discussed the RMA, the AAMD and C, and the other associations and how those discussions are probably ongoing. I recognize that there are a lot of people in the department with their pencil over their ear and their sleeves rolled up doing their job, trying to get that together.

Nonetheless, as you and I have discussed before and some may know, I spent quite a few years in Municipal Affairs and worked on appeal boards and subdivisions, and in our planning committee we discussed municipal reserve. Municipal reserve over the years has been taken from developers when land is subdivided and worked with or developed. Municipal reserve normally does not have any compensation attached to it. Developers have to supply land for municipal reserve. It's right in the act. I can't remember the number, but I believe it's in the 650s somewhere. It's also in the subdivision and development regulations, which is a smaller pamphlet, but nonetheless it's regulations. It says that most of the time municipalities may take up to 10 per cent of the original property in terms of municipal reserve and that it's at the discretion of council. Now, a lot of municipalities would take the full 10 per cent. If a guy was coming in with 120 acres, he would therefore be acknowledging ahead of time that he was going to probably lose 12 acres.

That land would be held in reserve by the municipality and had to be used only for certain things: schools, parks, et cetera. That was in the act. Municipalities, however, could do something with that land as they chose, including selling it if they decided to do so in a proper process. Nonetheless, when developers are looking at this inclusionary housing and when developers are looking at land reserves that they're having to give and other costs, if they can set aside a clause in the act of up to 10 per cent, it would make sense to me that in the regulations you might consider – or they may have considered and decided against; I'm not sure which – to put in some sort of a percentage to have a quantifier or a limit on what these developers and/or landowners may have to look at in terms of the risk potential of their projects.

Would the minister have any comments on that, please?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. I appreciate where the member is coming from with that. During our discussions with the cities and with the other folks that we've included in these conversations, inclusionary housing did come up in a big way because we know that in Alberta we need more of that. Again, when we talked about the percentages, what kept coming up over and over again was the ability to work with the developers on it long before that development was started. That's what was worked on with them, that every situation is going to be a little bit different. So if we set a certain number on it, then you have to meet that threshold or be above or below it, whatever the case may be. It wasn't something that the people, when we talked to them, and the cities were in favour of. They wanted the accountability to work with the developers because if some developers wanted to go higher than that, they wanted that ability, too, just depending on the developers. We wanted to use that I guess flexibility is the word I'm looking for. There was the need to do that. That's why we left it that way, so that they can work together on that and make sure that they collaborate in the best way that's going to fit the community in whatever part of the city they're going to build.

Mr. Stier: I thank the minister for his response, and I believe that one of my colleagues will be following up.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. Good morning. I just wanted to stand and speak to this bill. I would not assume to know even a tenth of what my colleague who just spoke knows about this bill. I received correspondence from BILD, which I think probably the minister is aware of. I just wanted to be able to bring this to the attention of the House so that those members in the House realize that once again we have an issue here, I think, of transparency that has been lacking and also consultation that has been lacking.

Now, from what I understand, "the Premier committed to working with industry and meeting with BILD Alberta in a letter dated November 20" and "failure to consult with industry on Bill 32 will be addressed." They talk about how they're going to address that in future days. What they say is that BILD "was notified . . . moments before a joint press conference with the Municipal Affairs Minister and the Mayor of Edmonton." Here's the association that is going to be building the homes, the communities, the subdivisions, and they are only addressed and notified moments before a joint conference with Municipal Affairs. As they put it, BILD Alberta is extremely disappointed.

Now, it goes on to talk about their concerns, but I don't need to stand here and talk about their concerns because I believe the Member for Livingstone-Macleod has done an adequate job with that, but it once again smacks at the concern that I've been hearing from Albertans for three and a half years now, which is that there is an agenda and that the government is pushing the agenda at breakneck speed and that there are unintended consequences.

You know, this is a big bill. It's a complex bill. I will readily admit that I have not dived into this bill as deeply as I would have liked just because of some other labour bills that came forward, but it is concerning when you think about the ramifications of this bill, the potential ramifications of this bill to Alberta and to the ability of a potential NDP government balancing their budget, their ability to provide . . .

Mr. S. Anderson: What does this have to do with anything?

Mr. Hunter: The minister just asked what this has to do with it. I'll explain it if you'll indulge me. It looks like he hasn't had his coffee this morning.

The issue here is that this government can promise a whole lot of stuff, thinking that they're going to be able to get into government by promising those things, but the question that Albertans all have on their mind is: if they promise something, can they fulfill it, and can it be sustainable? With this government's past record, I can't see how Albertans would agree that they have the ability to be sustainable in their promises.

They're either going to balance the budget in 2023 or they're not, but Albertans have to make an electoral decision in 2019. They can make all sorts of promises to Albertans, saying, “We’re going to give you this; we’re going to give you that, and we’re still going to balance the budget,” but, in reality, it’s about as good as their forecast to be able to balance the budget in 2019. I think that was the first time you guys said you were going to balance the budget, and now it’s 2023. So it seems to be a moving target. I’m wondering whether or not this is one of the components that is going to knock off their budget, just as the differential is, just as all of the other factors that they’ve brought in that are destroying the revenue streams for any future government.

This is the reason why I have concerns about this. Again, I haven’t looked into this. I will say that in terms of the positive – I don’t want to leave on a negative. It is Christmastime, so I’ll leave with a positive. I imagine that being able to come to a consensus on this was very difficult, so I give the government and the minister credit for being able to sit down with both of the two largest cities in Alberta to try to draft an agreement. I do give him credit for that. I applaud his efforts. I just think that in their haste to be able to get something that they can take to the electorate and say, “You know, Calgary, we are better than you think we are; come vote for us” – perhaps they could have thought this thing through and had some meaningful debate and consultations with someone as substantial as the BILD Association of Alberta.

That’s the only thing that I wanted to say here today. I do appreciate the opportunity to speak on this bill, but once again, as I said, the Member for Livingstone-Macleod is the guru on this issue, so I will abdicate to his better wisdom on this.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’d like to start with a quote from Mayor Don Iveson.

This new funding formula recognizes the key role our city and region have in driving growth in the provincial economy. It offers a sustainable funding mechanism that will allow us to plan our upcoming budgets more effectively, and continue to build out critical infrastructure that will benefit over a million people living in the Edmonton Metro region. Most importantly, this is a deal that respects our taxpayers, by fairly balancing their interests as Edmontonians and as Albertans.

To address the previous member’s comments, you know, the municipal sustainability initiative was never meant to be a long-term solution. It had an expiry date. We had extended that. Our minister has worked in-depth with both large cities and the AUMA and the RMA and is coming to agreements on all of those things with the different parties involved. There’s been a lot of consultation on this bill, Madam Chair.

For the first three years the funding amounts are specified, and after that they’re subject to changes in provincial revenues and provincial fuel sales. Those can go up and down, so the cities are putting that on the line. They think that they are going to be able to handle that as large cities. You know, we’ve heard consistently from the cities that their long-term capital planning is held back by not knowing how much money they will receive from the province in a given year. The lag ensures that the information required to calculate the funding is available long before the funding is provided, so we’re not doing this in last-minute stints. This will provide certainty to the cities about how much they can expect to receive, enabling more informed decision-making.

Madam Chair, you know, this is a permanent program. This is the reason that we have to replace MSI. It’s historic. It’s the first of its kind in our country. It provides funding tied to provincial revenues, which will ensure predictability and sustainability for our large-city funding. It’s a much better program for municipalities and Albertans. That’s why we didn’t just extend MSI again.

Provincial revenues. They’re going to include all of the province’s consolidated revenues as published in the annual report minus the revenues associated with the climate leadership plan, and that means all revenues other than the carbon levy and contributions to the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. Simply put, this is designed to make sure that municipal funding isn’t dependent on policy choices of the provincial government, to address the previous member’s comments. One of the goals of this process was to give our cities more predictability in their capital funding so that they can make more informed fiscal decisions. This section further strengthens that predictability by making sure that provincial changes do not ripple through to the cities, so they can make needed investments in their communities even if the province reduces its own revenues.

The minister and this government recognize that all municipalities require that stable, predictable infrastructure funding. You know, they were able to reach an agreement between Edmonton and Calgary through the charter process and now move on to the next phase in partnership with the associations as stated, the AUMA and the RMA.

Alberta has the highest provincial funding of municipalities in the country because we understand the importance of local infrastructure to all Albertans. During the depths of the recession we resisted calls from the opposition for cuts and maintained strong supports for each of our municipalities. I know that in my local municipality it made a big difference. There are projects that were on and off the books for almost 20 years, Madam Chair, that had never been accomplished, and now those projects are moving forward in a timely fashion.

This is all about their long-term funding sustainability and predictability, which MSI has never given to any of our municipalities. There was a commitment made in the spring to have the new system operational by the time MSI expires and to legislate that system, and that is the commitment that the minister has continued to make.

It’s important to note that all other municipalities have stable funding until 2022 under the current MSI framework. While in Budget 2018 Calgary and Edmonton took a $456 million cut over three years, we’ve committed to making sure that Alberta’s mid-sized cities, towns, villages, MDs, and counties are able to meet their infrastructure needs. We believe that a legislated capital funding framework will allow these communities to continue to build and thrive, and we’re committed to making sure that happens. We’re taking the time that is needed to get this right. There’s been a good amount of consultation, and there will continue to be consultation as the current MSI program, again, doesn’t expire until ’21-22. We won’t rush the details of the important agreements that the minister is working on.

This funding is going to allow neighbouring municipalities to partner on projects that benefit the entire region and recognizes that all residents of a region utilize the same infrastructure, whether they live in Calgary or Airdrie, Edmonton or Sherwood Park. I know that the EMRB has had some discussions with the minister on this as well. This program will help communities work together to build the type of province that Albertans expect and avoids the costly duplication of infrastructure within the same region. We can all work in our little silos, Madam Chair, and we can have something good in every small community and every mid-sized community and have something really good in each city, but when we work together as a region, we get something great when we pool our resources and we no longer work in silos.

It's important to notice that neighbouring municipalities can take that collaborative and co-ordinated approach to local infrastructure. It supports jobs, creates a regional economy that offers more opportunities. This is something that I see in my region every day. The trimunicipal region of Stony Plain, Spruce Grove, and Parkland county is much more successful because they work together so well. Details of this new regional program are going to be developed and released closer to when the program launches in 2022, but we expect eligible projects to be of regional significance that support the economic development of an entire area.

You know, Edmonton and Calgary have worked really closely with this government to help us achieve our path to balance. They were reduced in funding, again, by $456 million over three years. No other municipality in Alberta saw their funding reduced. All other municipalities have enjoyed constant funding throughout the downturn, and they will continue to do so until 2022.

We remain committed to legislating a replacement for MSI for all municipalities, and there's lots of time to do that. We're working very closely with the AUMA, the RMA, and the municipalities themselves. You know, everybody needs sustainable, predictable, permanent capital funding, and that's why we're engaged in continuing these discussions, so that we have a long-term revenue-sharing agreement with the province. The infrastructure needs of Albertans in mid-sized cities, towns, villages, MDs, and counties are important. Our commitment remains to form a legislated capital funding framework so that these communities can continue to build and thrive.

Madam Chair, as a rural MLA I will say that I am very impressed with the work that the minister has done on this file working with our big cities and that he continues to do working with the RMA and the AUMA every single day.

I will end with one more quote if I can find it. I just wanted to have a conversation about – I can't find it, unfortunately, so that is all I have to say.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 32 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 30

Mental Health Services Protection Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to bring forward the next important step in ensuring that Bill 30, Mental Health Services Protection Act moves forward to indeed protect the mental health services that so many Alberta families are counting on these days.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I am incredibly proud. As has been mentioned, there are two main sections to this legislation, one that regulates health professionals that are billing themselves as counsellors or therapists and the other that regulates residential treatment facilities. Both are incredibly important in making sure that we address the mental health crisis and substance use challenges that we are facing in our province. I've had the honour of discussing this bill with many of my colleagues both in this House, in the hallway, and in my office. It's incredibly important legislation.

I heard a desire to ensure that this doesn't impact peer-support programs, including 12-step programs, and I want to assure all hon. members that I completely agree. Those are important, valuable programs, and it's important for peer mentors to have an opportunity to continue to support each other without fear that a college could negatively impact that. It's my understanding that it wouldn't, but to ensure certainty, I have the following amendment and the requisite number of copies to provide that absolute clarity to all hon. members and all Albertans.

What I'm proposing is that we amend the bill as follows: that section 29(3) be amended by adding the following after 3(3) of this proposed schedule 3.1.

(4) For greater certainty, in this section, "counselling relationship" does not include providing emotional, social or practical support between individuals who share a common lived experience.

I think this is fundamental to what my colleagues have been saying. I don't believe that the legislation would have negatively impacted that as the college will be defining the role of therapist and counselling therapist, but I appreciate the concern that they had in wanting to ensure and enshrine that that would not be the case, Madam Chair. That's why we've proposed this amendment as it is.

Some might say that we should remove addiction counselling from this bill entirely. I don't believe that that's the solution. In fact, this morning I was reading – and I'll be happy to table this piece during tablings later in the day – in the Vancouver Sun piece The Missing Harm-reduction Measure? Regulating Mental Health Professionals. I'll just read a few sections. It says:

For more than 20 years, mental health professionals have warned that unqualified or bad practitioners are killing British Columbians. Finally, the overdose crisis may have pushed their concerns on to the public agenda.

The journalist goes on to say:

Anyone in British Columbia can build a website and sell their services as an "interventionist" promising to rescue people from the throes of addiction and get them into care.

In fact, without government regulation, anyone can claim to be a mental health professional, use the name "counsellor" or "therapist", set up a private practice and charge whatever they want.

The problem has festered [in the last] two decades. But now, it has taken on more urgency as the province [British Columbia, this being] enters the third year of a public health emergency due to the illicit-drug overdose crisis, and an increasing number of grifters are taking financial advantage of desperate families willing to pay anything if it helps their loved ones.

Madam Chair, it is with that same thrust – and this is very timely. Just this morning in British Columbia this piece came out calling on the federal government to indeed regulate addictions therapists and folks working in that space. That is why I think it's really important that we do regulate it through our bill, which is the case in the bill as proposed, but that we do provide that certainty to folks working on a 12-step program and a peer-to-peer program. That's why my amendment didn't go further. That's why my amendment specifically outlined that the counselling relationship doesn't apply to peer support or people with lived experience working in a mentor-type way.

I believe that Albertans seeking relief from substance use have a right to know that the people supporting them are held to a high standard and that they are regulated health professionals. People who are counsellors or counselling therapists have called on governments to do this for a number of years, and I am proud to be acting on that. So have the family members, as we mentioned when we introduced this bill, called for that greater oversight. With this amendment I believe that we will ensure both, that peer support, like 12-step programs, is supported and that counselling therapists are regulated, including addiction therapists, which I believe has the ability to save lives, Madam Chair, and help Alberta families. What's more important than that? I don't think much. It's hard to think of anything more important than saving lives and helping families. That's why I'm proposing this amendment, to give that clarity to all Albertans and to my hon. colleagues and to make sure that we do move forward with that as our utmost focus.

With that, I'd be happy to address questions or concerns regarding the amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the Health minister for this amendment. I do think it improves the bill and provides for that. I guess I just do have one question, though, and it's a clarification. The last few words of the amendment include the words "who share a common lived experience." Certainly, we know that the folks who do share a common lived experience are very valuable in terms of their expertise and that lived experience. But what about those who do not share the common lived experience? Are they then disqualified from providing these services? I just want to make sure that we're not being unnecessarily too restrictive. I mean, I certainly agree with the value of people who have a shared experience, but I know there are also people that provide counselling that don't necessarily have that common shared experience. Would they be unable to provide those services? If I could get some clarification.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Certainly, if they want to deem themselves to be in a counselling relationship, if they're there to counsel, they would need to become part of the college and become counsellors. The lived experience piece speaks to the 12-step programs like AA, NA. Those are all peer-support programs that are run by people who have lived experience. Our intent is to specifically carve this out in terms of addictions expertise and say that the legislation, and specifically the requirement to become part of a college and a regulated health professional – if you're coming to this through those avenues, through your lived experience, then you're not billing yourself as a counsellor or as providing that counselling therapy relationship.

That's why if people that don't have lived experience want to work in that field and want to do it as a profession in a trusting relationship, they should indeed become part of the college, regulate, and make sure that they are providing that assurance to the public and to their clients. But for people who are part of programs like NA and AA and other community-driven peer support, faith based and non faith based, they're not billing themselves as being health practitioners, and therefore they shouldn't have to be part of the college if they don't choose to act in that way. That's the rationale.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair, and through you to the minister. Minister, I appreciate the effort with this amendment in terms of peer-support groups, which I think is what this addresses in the amendment. What is not addressed specifically is counselling services provided by a minister or a pastor in a church setting in terms of addiction or mental health treatment not going under the banner of the college. The question is: will the pastor or minister within a church be able to provide counselling services to their members?

10:30

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I want to start by addressing the Member for Airdrie, who spoke about her constituent – I think his name was Mike – in previous iterations of this debate. It's exactly for people like Mike, who are coming to this from that angle as, you know, a peer mentor with common lived experience, that we crafted this amendment, this wording to specifically make sure that we had carved that piece out.

Just to reiterate, this is about people who are talking about themselves as counselling therapists and using that title to bring in folks from outside. In terms of the religious relationship with somebody who's your spiritual adviser and who may be counselling you from that angle, spiritual counselling isn't part of the legislation. Certainly, when you're working with somebody through a religious organization, that is the focus of the counselling that they're providing. The legislation isn't intended to address that relationship with somebody who's working spiritually. It's around people who are billing themselves as being health professionals, counselling therapists, and using that health title, essentially, and making sure that it has a parameter around it, just like a paramedic or a pharmacist or a doctor has a title around it.

You might go to your spiritual adviser, your priest, your pastor, somebody else in your spiritual community, a mom to get advice that relates to those types of things in your life, maybe even health advice, but you wouldn't go to them with the same level of relationship as you would to your physician. That definitely is a unique kind of relationship that this piece doesn't apply to.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise and speak to the House on this Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act. I want to take this opportunity, and I'm hoping the government side will listen . . .

The Deputy Chair: Just to clarify, we're on amendment A1. I just wanted to make sure that you're aware of that.

Mr. Yao: Yes. On this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Yao: I appreciate the fact that we have been trying to work together to get this bill good. We have been relaying information back and forth. With all due respect, I don't believe that this amendment addresses the issues that we're trying to accomplish. This is a good bill. Mental health is a serious issue, as we all know. I guarantee you that when this session is over, there are going to be 87 people who have fewer issues with mental health because of getting out of this House here. Honestly, Madam Chair, I was pretty jaded coming into this session, and then I see this bill. Up till now we get no answers to questions in the House. The government side ultimately outnumbers us on everything, gets everything through. Then I saw this bill, and this bill gives me hope that we can work together and address these issues surrounding mental health.

What my references are in regard to this bill are learning lessons from other jurisdictions, learning from Ontario, as an example. Ontario, as your staff mentioned, did this back in 2007. There are some interesting things to note about Ontario's legislation. It started in 2007; it doesn't get finished and proclaimed until December 31, 2019. Why? They recognize that it was a very comprehensive bill, that it captured more people than they recognized, so much so that they felt it necessary that they had to put in a buffer to allow the college to evolve and develop. That's another aspect of this bill, that any time we're asking a college of professionals to develop their own institution that will be self-managed, we aren't necessarily sure about what rules they're going to impose.

When you have the 14 groups come together with all their representatives, they're looking at anything that touches mental health, and they're going to be bringing all that into their jurisdiction. The problem with that is that our society still doesn't understand mental health. We are still evolving, we are still learning, and we will be doing that for a long time because, you know, it is complex. Those are the concerns.

But what we can do is that we can learn from other jurisdictions. Again with Ontario, they started theirs in 2007. It won't be finished until the end of next year, but if you were to look on their psychotherapist website, you would see information pertaining to things like a draft policy. These draft policies – they have a couple on there – are quite firm in their language because they've taken 11 years to develop this. They only released this information this year. I will be tabling this later. They provided a list of activities that may be deemed to be outside the control of active psychotherapy.

A registered psychotherapist may do some of these activities as an ancillary activity within the scope of their psychotherapy practices, but providing only the services below would not constitute the controlled act. These activities include, but are not limited to . . .

and there's an entire comprehensive list of descriptions of some of the services available that they have excluded from their bill that they figured out after 10 years, after a decade of studying this, after a decade of working through, after a decade of imposing rules on a lot of these groups and then finding out that there's a bit of kickback. We can learn all the lessons from them, or we can experience them all ourselves. I don't want to go through – I'm someone that learns from our history.

This is so important. If you look at this list, it describes everything from 12-step programs and problem-solving to rehabilitation to spiritual or faith guidance and counselling to teaching social skill development, emotional regulation, from counselling and support, advice giving to instruction, assisting in resolution of dilemmas. The list goes on. I will table this. It is a very comprehensive list of all the groups that they recognize they had to exclude.

Again, mental health is something that we're still learning about. We're still evolving to that point where we can grasp everything surrounding our mental health, and it is so important that we get this bill right. This minister has to understand, this government has to understand that by instituting this bill, you are planting a seed, a seed that will develop and grow. It is a bill that is responding to the needs of a good portion of our community as well as a group of professionals that want regulation so that we don't get the very same things that you said. But it is so important that we can learn from Ontario on these issues.

Again, with that in mind, we're trying to make the bill better. In discussions with counsel, I'd like to add a subamendment to this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you can just wait until I have copies at the table before you speak to it so that I can make sure it's in order.

Mr. Yao: Certainly.

Now, we only have a few minutes to absorb this, so I hope I get this right when we discuss it.

The Deputy Chair: Just wait.

Mr. Yao: Yeah. Absolutely.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as SA1. Please go ahead.

Mr. Yao: I move that amendment A1 to Bill 30, Mental Health Services Protection Act, be amended by striking out part A and substituting the following:

A Section 29(3) is amended in the proposed Schedule 3.1 as follows:

- (a) in section 3 by striking out subsection (2), and
- (b) by adding the following after subsection (3):
 - (4) For greater certainty, in this section, "counselling relationship" does not include providing emotional, social or practical support between individuals who share a common lived experience.

10:40

What I'm trying to do is that I'm trying to capture the essence of Ontario's policies that they are finalizing right now, putting some buffers in to ensure that so many of these groups don't get affected. If we're concerned about a lot of these groups providing some of the services that they require, I would certainly consider and recommend that we send that aspect of this bill to committee to discuss it further. Again, when you're discussing spiritual groups and crisis intervention and just overall case management, clinical follow-up and discharge, coaching, co-ordination services, parental co-ordination, mediating, problem solving, psychometric testing or assessment, there's a reason why they thought that these things need to be excluded from the psychotherapy bill in Ontario. They recognize that it is complex. They recognize that people are complex, that mental health is complex, and that we can't necessarily address all issues immediately through this legislation. We have to give some aspects time to evolve and to grow.

As I stated previously and other times I've spoken on this, I mean, at the heart of mental health is the ability to talk to somebody and to be able to vent and express your concerns and have someone listen and understand, and for 99 per cent of the issues, for 99 per cent of the people that is more than enough. How many of the members of this Legislature walk out of here and talk to a loved one or a friend about what they have experienced in this Legislature today or yesterday or for the last four years? We all do, I hope. Even as a young paramedic student these are the things that they emphasize with us, that the one thing you need to understand if you're going to deal with the stresses of the stuff that you're going to see is that you need to be able to have someone to talk to. Okay?

Since people have been around and we have had civilization, the institutions that have actually been providing that kind of support have been our religious institutions. People who need someone to talk to would be able to talk to their pastor, their priest, or their holy person, whatever they may be. That's what they're there for. That's what we emphasize in our religion, the ability to help one another. I mean, that alone, the spiritual and faith guidance counselling, is quite specific in this draft policy that's been proposed by the Ontario psychotherapists.

I can't preach enough about how important it is that we get this bill right, because it does affect mental health. We need to just adjust it. These are just slight variations to this. Again, it's not to say that we ignore the aspects that you identified that we learned from British Columbia as well, but we need to send that perhaps and study it further. There's nothing to say that we can't take portions of this and study it through a committee and do proper outreach and try to come up with some more firm professional credentials for people that would say that they are mentors or counsellors.

Madam Chair, I truly hope that the government will consider this, that we will fix this bill to make it better than what it is. As I've said, we have been working with your Health ministry to figure this out, to draft it. I provide them with all this information, I provide them with my amendments, and in turn you guys provide me with an amendment. But, again, that amendment that you're providing doesn't quite address it. So I'm really looking for your support in approving these amendments that I'm trying to provide. They are not spiteful. They are not vengeful. They are not partisan. This is about getting it right for our mental health workers. Again, it is about learning from our peers. It is about learning from Ontario, who have been studying it since 2007, and only in 2018 did they come out with some draft proposals and say: we need to exclude all these things because we were overreaching and we were overbearing.

Again, when you develop a college, we are making assumptions about what this college is going to accomplish. We are trusting their professional instincts to provide that guidance and that structure for mental health workers. But with that, they are going to embrace all of them. They are going to take them all under their jurisdiction. They are going to be telling groups that they cannot provide certain therapies or provide certain counselling. Again, a lot of those groups don't necessarily work with your description of those who live a common lived experience, as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has identified.

We need to get this bill right because this is about mental health. If we do not, we risk exposing many people who would ordinarily get supports from certain groups, and they may be discouraged from that. At the same time, I recognize what the minister is saying about what's happened in British Columbia, where you get a lot of fly-by-nighters. In Fort McMurray, with the fire, I saw hints that there are a lot of unregistered therapists and whatnot. Their intent was good, but again we ultimately don't know what quality they're providing. I understand what this bill is trying to provide. We are trying to ensure that quality. But, again, we can't knock out so many other groups that provide the type of counselling that the majority of the population can absorb, manage, and feel good about afterwards.

I would certainly like to hear from the minister on what her thoughts are on this subamendment. Again, this is part of some subsequent amendments to address the issues that we're trying to accomplish here, and that is to learn from Ontario and figure things out.

You know what? There are other issues surrounding this bill that I have concerns about. Again, it's about consulting. How many times do we have to teach you how to consult?

If I just might point out one group that this bill will affect, and it's called the Canadian Addiction Counsellors Certification Federation. This is a group that has managed to get nation-wide certification for their counselling sector. I guess what is affecting this is the fact that this is the group that manages all of the counsellors that are on our federal military bases and in all of our indigenous communities. With our indigenous communities and our military bases, this bill can potentially knock out those people from getting the counselling that is presently being provided to them.

I've received information from the Canadian Addiction Counsellors Certification Federation. They have over a thousand members in this province operating as counsellors. They are concerned that this equates to one-fifth of the total counsellors that are certified here in this province. They are concerned that because of this bill a thousand of their members are going to be excluded, that every indigenous reserve in our province and every military base in our province is going to have counsellors knocked off their premises, that they won't be able to function legally due to this bill. This is a big concern.

Let us be clear: this group does support regulation. They were the first ones to be able to accomplish that at the national, the federal level. But this bill, as they've identified, could potentially knock them out because they have not been included in this college. They have not been asked to participate. This is a group that represents one-fifth of the official members in this province. So that is concerning.

It is interesting to note that of all the associations that are a part of this bill, none of them are addiction counsellor associations, unless you can clarify that for me. I did not see anything in that list that indicates that there are specific addiction counsellor groups in there. They weren't even included in the discussions.

With that, I thank you, Madam Chair, for this opportunity to speak to this House about this very serious issue that I believe we're all working together to come to an arrangement on.

Thank you so much.

10:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I know that when some people use the term partisan, they mean it in a derogatory way. I just want to clarify that I absolutely did this work thinking about the values of the party that I was elected to represent: the values of working people, the values of ordinary families. It was in that effort that we crafted this legislation, working with folks who were incredibly negatively impacted by people who took advantage of them in a time of extreme need.

I want to clarify that, absolutely, we talked to people that work in this field. The Health Sciences Association, which many paramedics are members of and also represents many people who work in the addictions world, has been lobbying successive Conservative governments to make this change, to protect their profession, their title, and the work that they do, for years. I'm glad that as an NDP government we worked with them to make sure that we are helping protect the profession and protect patients.

I also want to add that I think that the proposed amendment would weaken the legislation. I think that not only are we learning from things that have happened in Ontario over the last decade – it's true that they passed their Psychotherapy Act in 2007 – but we also have Nova Scotia who had the Counselling Therapists Act in 2008. New Brunswick has the Licensed Counselling Therapy Act. Quebec had marriage and family therapists incorporated into their order of their legislation as well, Madam Chair.

Definitely, I think that we need to retain addictions counselling in this legislation. Taking it out would be incredibly dangerous to the profession, to people who work in this field, who we have absolutely worked with to make sure that we get this right, but also dangerous to people who count on people who call themselves addictions counsellors to be held to a high standard, to make sure that they are conducting themselves in a way that is regulated, that is professional.

When I think back, again, to the bill that we just passed, I believe unanimously in this House, not that long ago around protecting patients from regulated health professionals who may violate them through sexual misconduct or sexual assault, if we pull this section out, if we exclude people working in the addictions field, we don't provide that same level of protection to those patients, and I think there would be real harm to the people of Alberta and to the legislation.

Not only are we learning from what I'd see as the gaps in these other jurisdictions that pass legislation, but again we are learning from the extreme hardship that is being faced by families in British Columbia right now. There are calls ongoing in that jurisdiction for people to act before more people are taken advantage of, by creating a college and a regulatory body to govern people working in the addiction counselling field.

I am speaking in strong opposition to this proposed subamendment. I believe that it would undermine the intent of the bill and the protection that we've been called on to bring for people working in Alberta, but I appreciate the interesting arguments that were put forward by my hon. critic.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Okay. I guess, Madam Chair, just to clarify the lessons that they did learn in Ontario. Even the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster pointed out that the government's description regarding those who live a common lived experience still excludes a lot of groups in here. Again, without taking the time to go into the nuances and understanding the very details of the bill – I know that the government has received this list, the draft policy, of activities that do not constitute the controlled act of psychotherapy. There's a reason why they came up with this list after 10 years in Ontario, that only now, this year, did they release this list. It was because of all the issues that they addressed.

Again, this government has the right intention – the legislation, legislators have the right intention – but it is the college that is ultimately going to create the rules and regulations. They are the ones that are going to look at anything in mental health. Think about that: anything that reflects mental health, which is virtually everything. Any type of medium where you're talking to another person about an issue would be under their purview.

I mean, if we have to look at this list, if I have to read this out, just so you understand some of the things that they recognize, that are only descriptions because they don't even have titles for so many of these things – and there's a reason for that. It's because of all the issues that they found were impairing the process. Advocating – simply advocating – was out. Applied behavioural analysis is out. Case management is out. Clinical follow-up, care, and discharge planning is out. Coaching is out. Co-ordinated services, including parental co-ordination, is out.

Counselling and support includes advising and advice giving, instruction, assisting in resolution of dilemmas, assisting in improvement of coping strategies; with subheadings for crisis intervention and management, including de-escalation, safety planning, referral to other services; information, advice, and knowledge transfer; instructing; intake and referral. Even hypnotherapy is knocked out of this, and mediating, milieu therapy. Just so you guys understand what that is – and I don't say it with a very good French accent – it's the psychotherapy in which you control their social environment, who they interact with, right? Addicts: sometimes you want to keep them away from their regular friends, who might bring them down a certain path. Then monitoring; problem solving, including information, advice giving, 12-step programs, social skill development; psychometric testing or assessment; rehabilitation; single-session counselling; spiritual and faith guidance; and teaching are in here.

I guess the point is that in 10 years – sorry, 11 years because this has only been released this year, and they started the process in 2007 – they recognized that there are so many nuances to all these issues, that they couldn't put a descriptor for a lot of the people that were providing these services. But they also recognized that it's a step-by-step process, and this government can also recognize that it's a step-by-step process. The intentions are good, but what you're doing is planting a seed that will grow into a beautiful, beautiful bill. They recognized that they were overreaching on a lot of their stuff.

What we're trying to do is confine the descriptions of the people that we're impacting to give it a little bit more flexibility. Again, these things are going to evolve and grow, but the variable that we cannot control is the college that you are creating with this and the rules that they are going to impose on so many of these groups. By not including them in the discussions and now creating a group that is going to oversee them, this is going to create great difficulties for a lot of these institutions that I just described. These are institutions, these are groups that are in every one of our 87 constituencies, and every one of them is going to be affected by this, depending on what the rules are that the college creates.

You can't tell me that you can't – our obligation is to allow that college to grow, those professionals to develop it based on their understanding. But, again, when addictions counselling isn't even included in the group and you have a federal group that wasn't even consulted on this, you know, that's tough. There's nothing to say that we can't study these things, send that portion to committee, and try to figure it out with the college that is being developed. There's nothing to say that we can't do that, that this government doesn't have it within their abilities to do that.

I implore you guys to consider this amendment and help me with the definition of addictions counsellors. That's what this is about. We're trying to influence the definition of addictions counsellors with this amendment, okay? If not, again, we risk pushing out a lot of groups with that. I don't know if I can convince you guys any further of this. Again, this isn't a spiteful change. This isn't partisan. This is about ensuring that so many of the groups that help our community aren't knocked out.

We need to learn from another province. We need to learn from the biggest province in our nation, the province that is considered to be the most progressive, the province that only this year released a list of things that: "Jeez, you know what? We were overreaching. We were overbearing." They recognized that they still have to study these things, as we all do, because we still don't understand mental health.

If anyone says that we have perfected the science of mental health, they're daft. Okay? We are so far away from understanding all the nuances of our brains and how we all work and how we are wired, and we need to get this right.

This is a good bill. The intention is fantastic. Again, these mental health therapists have been asking for this for a long time, but so have all the other health professionals. You know, this minister prides herself on the fact that they approved the paramedics, which I was, to become a proper college, and some other health professions. The thing is that we took a long time to evolve to that state, and I agree that we had to take time because we had to develop our own repertoire of skills and stuff like that, just so we understand how these colleges work. Those are my peers. Those are other paramedics saying: "You know what? We have the skills. We have the knowledge that we can do pericardiocentesis decompression, that I can stick a needle into someone's chest and I can pull those fluids out or that air out and save that life." That is something only a doctor could do. We had to prove that we could do that in the streets.

We had to get a doctor to say: "You know what? I've worked with you guys. I understand your quality and your skills. You guys know how to do landmarking. You understand anatomy and physiology. I know that you can do this truly life-saving treatment that only physicians can do." We had to demonstrate that over years, that we could do chest decompressions, that we could do a cricothyroidotomy, that I could do an RSI, that's rapid sequence intubation, where I could give a patient a lot of medications and drugs to sedate them in order that I could breathe for them.

It took time because before that we were ambulance drivers. Our job was to get people into a vehicle and get them to the hospital as quickly as possible. It was only after the Vietnam War, when all these medics from Vietnam, American soldiers, came in and joined their fire services, that they recognized that, hey, they can provide medicine in the streets. You know who they were inspired by? A good Canadian, Bethune, a physician who went to China and Asia and helped out providing medical services in the field during some bad wars. But I digress.

The point is that colleges need time to evolve and develop, and if we impose these rules on them now, we may be enabling, even though their intentions are good, that they're actually restricting a lot of the services that we need in our communities, that we don't have quite that definition for. With that, I implore this government to please consider this recommendation and limit the colleges' ability to embrace all aspects of mental health, which is everywhere – so many groups provide that – that you consider this and that we do an evolution on this, evolve.

With that, I'd ask for any help on that. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Just very briefly, I want to ensure that the hon. member is aware that actually addiction counsellors are captured by the Ontario legislation. They just fall under the definition of psychotherapy or psychotherapist. They are actually encapsulated in this, and taking them out of our legislation would not just be a harm to the international comparator, who the hon. member's leader, I think, said was the heartbeat or economic engine. I forget what the word was.

This member talks about the most progressive province. I'm pretty proud of Alberta and the work that we're doing here with our health professionals to make this work, align with the needs of Albertans and with the people working in the field. Again I recommend that we vote against this. The amendment is indeed pulling out – for anyone who's looking at the hard copy of the bill, it's page 23, the left-hand side of the page, subsection (2), which actually talks about the actions that addictions counsellors take. I think it's incredibly important that we keep that in the legislation for certainty of the profession and for public confidence. I again strongly recommend that we vote against the proposed subamendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on subamendment A1-SA1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now on the original amendment, A1. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would just like to refer to this amendment. I will say that mental health issues are extremely important. It is an issue that all of us need to be concerned about and aware of. Quite frankly, it probably affects everybody's family, all of our families, extended families in some way or another. While I applaud the amendment that has been put forward by the government to include peer counselling, I am concerned maybe a bit more about the implication partly with regard to the newspaper article that the minister used to support the movement going forward.

I guess some of my questions to the minister on this would be, first of all: does the minister have any figures or facts with regard to how much counselling occurs in this province? How many clients are served by government medical addictions treatment versus what I would call nongovernmental – in other words, private – whether they're for profit or nonprofit? The majority of them are probably nonprofit. What's the percentage? How many people are actually being treated by either those currently under the authority and regulations of the government and those who are currently not, which this bill would hope to achieve?

Then following up on that, the newspaper article that was cited gives the implication that all of those services that are not under government control and mandate, all of those private services, are somehow disreputable, somehow dishonest to clients, that somehow all of them are providing terrible services. I will agree that there are some individuals out there who are providing inadequate and inappropriate services, and they need to be addressed. But to advance the bill on the implication that all other services that are not government-controlled are somehow terribly defective, terribly abusive, I think, is a mistake, and I don't think it will do anyone any good.

I guess I would ask the government, then, in that regard: does the government have any actual, real statistics on the government-controlled and -mandated individuals and facilities that actually report to us on how well they are doing, how successful they are in their treatments? Generally government reporting gives us procedural reporting, it gives us statistical reporting, and it gives us busyness reporting. But I'm asking about real health outcomes, real recovery results. How many people that go through government facilities are actually successfully able to overcome their addiction and stay unaddicted for a year, two years, five years, whatever the number might be? I guess in that regard I just felt the urgency to rise and ask these questions.

With regard to a story – actually, it's more than a story – a letter that we received from an Albertan just recently, it says:

Our journey started with my son in grade 7, we visited many doctors and psychologists . . .

To be clear, these are the government-approved and -authorized ones.

. . . who either wouldn't share with me what was going on in their discussions . . .

Here's a family with a child. Family support is extremely important in any kind of mental health intervention.

. . . or [they were] prescribing Vitamin D and another prescribing nausea medication that those on chemotherapy take. This ultimately led to a suicide attempt . . .

under the management of government-authorized addictions counsellors,

. . . and being admitted to ACH mental health unit for 3 weeks where they focused on sleep therapy and referred to youth addiction. Youth Addiction is a voluntary program and they were unable to provide any meaningful treatment to a youth in active addiction. Things continued to spiral out of control as his addiction condition continued to progress – we landed back at ACH mental health unit for another 3 week stay. This time when he was released we were under the care of a [government-authorized] psychiatrist from ACH who saw my son once a month basically to renew his prescription for anxiety and sleep medication.

Not a lot of help and counselling there.

She even told me after about the [third] followup appointment that she believed that he was [fully] recovered. In hindsight nothing could have been further from the truth. She did refer us to the Youth addiction outpatient program at Foothills. After many months waiting [that's helpful] for our assessment, Dr. Chang advised that my son had two choices, go into treatment at [a] Youth Addiction site out of town or Woods Home voluntary program. My son ran and it took us many terrifying hours to finally find him and with the help of the police he was admitted to Foothills [again] and after a night in emergency he was transferred to Unit 26. While on Unit 26 they put [my son] through extensive testing and [the doctor again] advised us that we only had one option – The Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre. Our lives felt like we were on an out of control merry go round in a [real] horror movie! It was at [Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre] that we finally found a treatment centre and counsellors who understood the situation and how truly sick my son was. After 10 months of treatment and no government funding, we graduated.

So here's my question to the minister: how is this legislation going to guarantee effective and adequate real treatment to truly help people so that we don't end up with more stories like this under government-approved, -authorized, and -mandated medical help and control? We need a broader, wider, fuller solution.

I'm not advocating that we should allow people who are scammers and abusers to exist, but I also want to know: in the process how are we actually going to create a system that isn't just about busyness and bureaucracy and creating a monopoly for a certain group of professionals so that they can have their profession protected and have a franchise on something that excludes everybody else when, in fact, it's the other people that probably provide the majority of counselling services in this province and in many cases do the best amount of work?

In this case, the government-authorized person had a terrible experience and had to go to a nonprofit with no government funding, no government authority in order to get the kind of help they needed. Those are just some of the questions I have. Again, I'm in favour of the bill, and I'm in favour of the amendment, but what I really want to see in Alberta is really effective treatment, and just government authority will never, never do it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks very much. I'll be happy to respond to the questions.

The first question that the member asks is about the percentage of people that are in facilities that are run by AHS or contracted by AHS versus facilities that aren't. This is the exact reason why we need this legislation, because there is no way that there is any kind of reporting or evidence given to the people of Alberta to be able to make those kinds of decisions. They operate in their own silos without any oversight or accountability.

One of the pieces that this legislation will enable is the ability to answer that question once all of the residential treatment facilities are registered. It will be about a year, probably, for that process to unroll. By this time next year they should all be registered, and we should be able to have some better accountability to the people of Alberta, particularly people who are making choices that are literally life and death in trying to save the lives of their loved ones and themselves.

I just want to tell about one more piece that relates directly to the member's question. It was actually a facility in the member's own riding, where the family that stood with me on the day we brought this legislation forward talked about how they took their son to that facility because they trusted that he would be safe there. What happened is that he went to a storage shed, I believe the mom said, that was unlocked, and he consumed what was essentially poison. She thought it was antifreeze or windshield washer fluid of some kind.

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

Having some oversight would say things like: poisonous substances need to be controlled, they need to be locked up, they need to be secured. If somebody does consume a poisonous substance, you have an obligation to call EMS and to bring in health professionals or to take that person to a health facility to get them help. Instead, what happened, according to the mom and according to the fatality review, is that this young man, Taylor, suffered for many hours. Eventually he was brought to a hospital, but it was too late, and he died.

There was a fatality review, that was completed in 2010. He died in 2007, so it took a number of years. They said that regulating and having oversight of these facilities potentially could have saved his life. That's my summary of it. Those weren't exactly the words, but that was the recommendation from the fatality review, that there be oversight on this. The government of the day said: "Yeah. We get it." And now it took a new government for us to bring in this protection. This is really about giving answers to the questions that the hon. member has asked.

The original amendment – I think we're still dealing with A1 – is about making sure that peer support programs can continue on without nervousness that they might be hampered in some way. That's why we brought forward this amendment, to make sure that there was absolute clarity. We've looked at other jurisdictions and at what's been done there, and we certainly believe that peer support programs – AA, NA, 12-step, and others – have a role to play in society in making sure that people are connected and have supports outside of residential treatment facilities or other types of substance-use treatment facilities in an ongoing way.

Again, I'm still hoping that everyone will support the amendment. I'm happy to have been able to address the questions, and I look forward to being able to answer them when this bill passes and there's some information that is brought in and able to be shared more publicly to give that certainty to all Albertans.

Thank you.

Mr. Orr: I thought I'd just respond briefly. Yes, I'm fully aware of that situation, and I'm not surprised it got raised. I will say, though, that part of the situation there – and I agree about the importance of locking up controlled substances – is that it was supposed to have been locked up, but it was accidentally left open. The reality is, too, that the individual actually did not notify anyone that he'd even taken anything. Nobody knew, and he was hanging out in his room.

While I sympathize with the family, I think it's a little bit unfair to blame the facility overly much because they have actually gone on over the years. They have become fully accredited with a number of different agencies. They've grown and spread. They have instituted all kinds of practices that actually have made them into a very good facility, but still the government will not – they've tried for 12 years, quite frankly, even though they're accredited, to be cited on the Alberta government website as a treatment facility that is accredited. They're continually refused.

There are many facilities that have made mistakes, and quite honestly government facilities sometimes make them, too. So my real plea is: how do we focus away from just the bureaucratic process and actually create effective, safe health care that produces, really, health outcomes and not just numbers outcomes and statistics? That's my real concern.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 30?

Mr. Yao: On the main bill?

The Chair: Yes. Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. We need to ensure that this bill is good and has an adjustment period to ensure that all the aspects of this bill are firm. Again, it is about learning the lessons from other jurisdictions. In Ontario they put in a transition period of 12 years. The Ontario Psychotherapy Act was proclaimed in 2007, but they were given a 12-year buffer, which they call a transition period, which ends on December 31, 2019. The reason is that they did recognize that by empowering a college, they didn't necessarily have all the assurances as to who it was going to impact, because mental health is such a broad subject. Again, we see the result of their review and research and real-life experience over 11 of those 12 years. They came out with that list, which I read out to this House, that talked about a description of activities that were excluded but empowered to continue on.

With that, Madam Chair – and I'd be looking at any friendly amendments to this – I'd like to move an amendment.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

11:20

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. In this amendment I move that Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act, be amended as follows. In part A section 28 is struck out, and in part B section 30 is struck out and the following is substituted:

Coming into force

30(1) This Act, except section 29, comes into force on January 1, 2029.

(2) Section 29 comes into force on Proclamation.

What we're trying to do is recognize that we as bureaucrats, as politicians may not understand all the nuances, all the idiosyncrasies of the mental health profession. Though we are empowering this college to be developed and to set out rules right away – and there's nothing to say that they cannot set out many of the rules right away, immediately. But it does give a buffer, a 10-year buffer, for them to work out all the aspects of it. Please recognize that Ontario gave theirs 12 years. We're that much more efficient here. We can do it in 10 in Alberta, right?

Mr. Ceci: We can do it in one.

Mr. Yao: We can do it in one? Well, you know what? That's another aspect. I'd be looking at any friendly amendments to this, but the point is that we need time. A year might not be enough, quite honestly, because it's the unintended consequences, sir. It is the unintended consequences that we get with this. In Ontario they figured it out. They put in 12 years, and only in year 11 do they come out with amendments. We need to give our health professionals, our mental health professionals, time to figure this out.

Again, you know, one group that is very prominent that has concerns about this is the one national/federal mental health group that we have, the Canadian Addiction Counsellors Certification Federation. They weren't even included. That's one-fifth of the members in this province that could potentially be knocked out.

With that, Madam Chair, I certainly ask that the government side consider this friendly amendment adding some sort of buffer in order to allow the college to evolve and develop without impairing so many other institutions and groups that we have a hard time putting into a box, putting into a descriptor.

With that, Madam Chair, I thank you very much for this opportunity to speak to the House, and I hope that the government side truly considers this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair. I've been listening for the morning. I have a couple of comments, specifically to this amendment. I can't support this amendment based on, well, actually, quite a bit of what I've been hearing this morning. We talk about the importance of mental health. We talk about the importance of supporting Albertans and addressing the concerns around addictions and mental health and the urgency that is attached to it. For me, to see an amendment that says that we should wait 10 years until we put legislation in place to actually address the urgency of the issue is a little counterintuitive.

Just to give you a little bit of background, I've worked in addictions and mental health most of my career. I actually did my very first practicum as a social work student at AADAC, before it became Alberta Health Services, a long, long time ago. I understand the dialogue that is happening around ensuring that the people that are supporting Albertans through their addictions and mental health are actually people that are certified.

The reason for that is that this isn't about government versus nonprofits versus private health care. This is about the fact that we need to ensure that the people that are working with people with mental health and addictions are trained in the areas that they're working in. Coming from that background and coming from working in social work – I worked at Boyle Street in the inner city, which was primarily a hub for addictions and mental health – there wasn't a single person in that nonprofit or any partner that I worked with in youth mental health, in youth addictions that wouldn't be willing to be registered and willing to, like, be held accountable to their profession.

People that work in this area understand the importance of being educated, understand the importance of having that expertise. They understand that they need to be continuously upgrading their training and learning about the new drugs that are being introduced into the community, the different strategies around managing behavioural and social counselling. There's also recognition in the profession that people have different expertise. I'm a registered social worker, but I don't do clinical social work practice because I don't have the expertise to be a clinical social worker, which means that I don't do one-on-one counselling. Even within our professions there's a recognition of skill-based education and being able to do the work that we're doing.

So, for me, having an amendment that says that we should wait 10 years to figure out who should be included in this and who shouldn't doesn't address the issue that we are talking about today, which is that we have a responsibility to support the area of addictions and mental health, and that includes supporting Albertans that are needing the support. But it also supports the workers that are in that area because it gives them a guideline around the expectations of their profession, and there is nothing wrong with that.

When we hear the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo speak about when he was working as a paramedic, the importance of them being registered and being part of an association, well, this is the same thing. Addiction counsellors, mental health workers want to be part of an association. They want to have those guidelines, those expectations. Unfortunately, I can't support us waiting 10 years to set those regulations in place.

The Chair: Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to clarify. All those things that the Member for Edmonton-Manning has expressed: I'm not saying that those things get knocked out or are delayed by 10 years. Again, it gives the college 10 years to figure out unintended consequences.

Just so we can clarify what unintended consequences are, in looking at that draft policy that the College of Registered Psychotherapists of Ontario figured out and put on their website, again, it is everything from advocating to teaching, with spiritual and faith counselling and co-ordinating services and peer-to-peer supports and everything else in between there. Those were the unintended consequences that they discovered were happening, that were impacted by this college. Eleven years it took for the College of Registered Psychotherapists of Ontario to release this list and say: "You know what? These are all excluded from our purview." Ontario's won't even be finished till 2019.

The work will still start. The college will still develop. There's nothing to say that they can't put in some of their rules and regulations almost immediately, especially if they have some things developed and figured out. But we need to give them time to understand all the unintended consequences. Again, we're empowering one institution now to develop everything regarding mental health. The consultation didn't include every group, specifically the Canadian addictions counselling group, as one example, one federal group that manages one-fifth of the therapists in our province currently.

Again, I just implore this government to consider this 10-year option or if you choose to have some other wording in there that would still address the issues of ensuring that they have a buffer of 10 years or some time to figure out the nuances, that no one in here is an expert on. Okay? Let's be clear about that. There's no one in here that is an expert on mental health, and we're putting all our weight and resources into one group, experts. I would question that.

With that, I'll certainly say thank you very much, Madam Chair, for this opportunity to speak. I would certainly ask the government if they would consider any kind of a buffer to develop this, or, as Ontario put it, a transition period. They put in a 12-year transition period. Surely, we can do a 10-year.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a very brief comment. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has made a few references to the CACCF not having the opportunity to be involved in this conversation. I just wanted to note that FACT-Alberta, the Federation of Associations of Counselling Therapists in Alberta, has been listening to the debate and the conversation, and they have made a comment online via Twitter noting that they have on a few occasions invited the CACCF to join with FACT-Alberta and work together with them but that there hasn't been mutual interest in that. They do also note that two of the members of the CACCF do in fact sit on the steering committee for FACT-Alberta. So they are indeed involved in the conversation. They are indeed part of the group that's been discussing this, perhaps not quite in the way that the member might have wished or feels that it should have taken place, but I felt it was important to have some clarification on the record that they have not indeed been shut out of the consultation. They have the opportunity to participate through their involvement on the steering committee and through an ongoing offer of collaboration with FACT-Alberta.

Thank you.

Mr. Yao: Just to clarify where my comments came from, Madam Chair, I only spoke with the head of the Canadian Addiction Counsellors Certification Federation and expressed their concerns through the head of the institution. Obviously, there might be discrepancies even within their own organization. Again, we spoke to the head of the organization, who expressed concerns about this bill, who expressed concerns about the thousand people that they represent, who expressed concerns about the thousand members that they have who are going to be knocked off every indigenous community as well as every federal institution, which includes our military bases.

Ms Hoffman: Don't make stuff up.

Mr. Yao: I'm sorry; what?

The Chair: Hon. members, though the chair, please.

Mr. Yao: Oh, no. This is directly from them.

The Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Yao: I'm going to bite my tongue on that heckle that I got from the Minister of Health. I could say that about everything that she's ever done in this House.

I'll leave it at that.

Mr. Orr: Madam Chair, I would just like to clarify a comment I made a few minutes ago. I think I may have misspoken or misheard; I don't know which. I did not intend to say that organizations should not be held accountable for what happens on their site. What I do mean to try to suggest is that all organizations across the spectrum, whether they're government or not, should be held accountable. There needs to be a fair and equitable assessment of that, and it shouldn't be used as a way to sort of attack private or nongovernmental institutions. As the Member for Edmonton-Manning has said, this isn't about that.

I think it needs to be kept clear that there needs to be a fair and equitable accountability across all, and the assumption that's implied that nongovernmental organizations are somehow unaccountable or irresponsible or out there creating all kinds of havoc is not entirely a fair statement. I'm going to want to assume that the government isn't trying to imply that, but sometimes it almost comes across that way. I'm just asking that there be a fair and equitable approach. Some of the institutions are actually doing a lot of good out there.

In response to the minister's point – and it's a valid point; it is an important issue – I think, though, that we should also point out that that very same facility has done a massive amount of good work in many people's lives. They have hundreds of people who actually are in support of what they have done, who have been helped, who have gotten off their addictions, who have learned how to manage their lives and manage the issues. I think we need to keep a balance there. Accountability is always extremely important at every level, but let's also give credit where credit is due.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do appreciate the opportunity to address Bill 30 this morning. Again, as I said during debate on second reading, I'd like to thank the hon. minister for bringing this forward.

I'm not wanting to dwell too much on the previous amendment, but I would say that while we are always endeavouring to craft the best legislation we can in this House, I think sometimes we have to also apply the 80-20 rule, and that is that if you get it 80 per cent right, to try to get that last 20 per cent perfect is, sometimes, in fact, like Voltaire said, perfect can be the enemy of the good. Or as another old philosopher said, better to have a diamond with a flaw than a perfect pebble. This may well be a flawed diamond, but I think we should proceed with the flawed diamond. There is still one flaw that I'd like to get my jeweller's tools out to fix. So I do have an amendment. If the pages will pick it up, I will wait until it's distributed before I read it into the record.

In prefacing my comments, Madam Chair, I do want to say that I think balance is something that I've talked about in this House before. In speaking again, as I did in second reading, about my conversations with the Thorpe Recovery Centre, we talked a lot about the balance that's required. It is, I think, absolutely necessary that there be some regulation of counselling and addictions treatment services in our province. You know, the fact that there is really nothing there currently and that many of the organizations and institutions that provide these services are doing it on a voluntary basis does leave the potential for some, shall we say, abuse or the potential for some people who are not skilled or not properly trained to enter into this very, very important area. Certainly, we know that the whole issue of addictions has been brought into greater focus in recent years as a result of the opioid crisis.

Specifically, in my conversations with the Thorpe Recovery Centre there was concern expressed when I spoke with the executive director about section 12. Just to reiterate, section 12 deals with inspections of accredited facilities. Section 12(1) deals with inspections that occur as part of, shall we say, the general assurance of compliance with the act. So I would call that a routine inspection, if you like. Section 12(2) deals with inspections that occur as a result of a concern over a possible breach of the act or, as my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned during second reading debate, the potential that there is some unsavoury practice going on. Certainly, this is something that we would want to see rooted out as quickly as possible.

I mentioned during debate on second reading that I felt, especially when we're dealing with an addictions treatment facility, that the residents in that facility deserve some degree of notice that an inspector was going to be coming for a visit. The Health minister justifiably asked me why an addictions treatment facility should be any different from, say, a long-term care home or a group home and said that, in fact, language in this bill was being lifted essentially word for word from the acts that govern those institutions. The difference, Madam Chair, is that for people who are in a long-term care centre with, for example, dementia or some other specific health needs requiring long-term care, there's no stigma attached to that. There's no stigma, and in fact in many long-term care centres people come and go and visit on a very regular basis.

But if you're in an addictions treatment facility, in a residential treatment facility like the Thorpe Recovery Centre near Lloydminster, you have an addiction, and you're addicted either to alcohol, drugs, gambling, or sex. Those are the four areas that are being treated at the Thorpe, and I can tell you that there's a considerable amount of stigma attached to all of those. The people who are receiving treatment for any of those addictions I think have a justifiable concern about their privacy. So one of the things that the Thorpe Recovery Centre always does when someone is going to visit the facility is make sure that the residents who are currently there are aware of that so that if some residents would prefer not to be seen in public areas, they have that opportunity to stay in their room. You know, it's just so that people are aware.

Now, there was some concern expressed that perhaps an institution that was doing some things that were against the regulations or against the law would hide something. I tried to assure people that a four-hour notification was nowhere near enough time to cover up things that are unsavoury. But in speaking again with the executive director at the Thorpe Recovery Centre, I suggested: how about a two-hour notice for a routine inspection only, not for an inspection covered under 12(2). I'm not suggesting that we should amend 12(2) in any way. If there is suspicion of some improper activity going on within a residential detoxification or addictions treatment facility, then I fully agree that the inspector should be able to enter that facility without warrant or without notice. But in the case of a routine inspection visit, I think that in those situations it is reasonable given the sensitivity of addictions treatment and given the need for confidentiality especially, I am going to say, in a small community – I mean, again, it may be a little bit difficult for someone living in a larger centre to appreciate this, but when you're living in a smaller community and you walk into one of these facilities, the chances are pretty good that you will see somebody that you know, and they may not want to be seen by you.

Because of that, I'm going to introduce the amendment that has now been distributed. Madam Chair, you have the original. I move that Bill 30, Mental Health Services Protection Act, be amended in section 12: (a) in subsection (1) by adding "subject to subsection (1.1)," after "at any reasonable time" and (b) by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) An inspector or a person authorized in writing by the inspector shall give at least 2 hours' notice of the time and place of the inspection to the owner of the facility, location, premises or place that will be the subject of an inspection under subsection (1).

Madam Chair, again I stress that this is for a routine inspection that is being done to ensure compliance with the act. I know that the frequency of those inspections is going to be dealt with under regulation, and there are different arguments as to how frequently that should occur. I think this is a needed change that recognizes the unique nature of an addictions treatment facility and the unique nature of the need for the residents of those facilities to at least have the option of having notice and not being in public areas or being seen. People guard their privacy. These institutions do not have a lot of visitor traffic; in fact, they have very little visitor traffic.

Again, I return to what I said in debate on second reading. The Thorpe Recovery Centre has an outstanding 40-plus years track record of treating people with addictions. I think that we should draw on that experience to try to perhaps remove this small flaw in the legislation. I do think that this improves it, and I do think that it strikes the balance between the need to be able to inspect institutions that are perhaps engaged in activities that are not compliant with the regulations or with the act but at the same time providing a balance such that residents of that institution are given appropriate notice that their privacy is being protected.

I would ask for support of the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the amendment and for bringing this notion forward in second reading and having further dialogue with us on it over the last few days. I think that what he's asking for around the ability for folks to be able to guard their privacy is fair and reasonable around routine inspections. Obviously, if it's a safety concern and it's a focused inspection, this section doesn't apply to those. The hon. member understands why we won't be able to give prior notice to the facility and to the residents because we want to ensure their safety. I think that this is a reasonable and fair amendment. I'll be keen to support it.

I just wanted to clarify with regard to some of the information that was shared previously. There are approximately – and we say approximately because, again, not everyone needs to report to us because there is no official oversight or regulation regarding residential treatment facilities. But we believe there are approximately 16 on-reserve that we know of. They don't employ thousands of people. The bill does not impede operations of facilities on First Nations. A person working in those facilities may choose to become a member of the college, particularly if they use the protected titles that the college will have with regard to a counselling therapist or addiction therapist. Elders and peer support are exempt. They are federally funded and are required to meet standards that exceed those in our act that we're proposing. That's a little bit of fact to connect back to the previous speaker.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 30 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Feehan: I move that we now rise and report bills 32 and 30.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 32. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 30. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official record of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, say no. So ordered.

Third Reading

Bill 32

City Charters Fiscal Framework Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise and move third reading of Bill 32, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act.

This historic legislation will help Edmonton and Calgary build the infrastructure they need in a way that will move the province forward. This framework also delivers certainty to the cities by recognizing that they are partners in our growing economy and should share in both the good and the tough times, and this framework respects the province's path to balance and is fiscally responsible. It will improve the quality of life for families who rely on rec centres, pools, arenas, and parks. It will increase the safety of residents with more fire halls, police stations, and water and waste-water systems, and it will reduce emissions through stronger mass transit systems. Bill 32 would also legislate historic long-term transit funding for Calgary and Edmonton so that they can build out their transit networks, create jobs, reduce greenhouse gases, and make our cities better places to live and work.

I want to thank opposition members for sharing their questions on a few key items related to this bill. They are legitimate questions, so allow me to speak to a few of those. There are, in fact, 340 other municipalities that also want a permanent and predictable funding program. I represent three of those municipalities, and I would like to reiterate that we are working closely as we speak with RMA and AUMA on a long-term funding framework for all municipalities. This is because we recognize that all municipalities require stable, predictable infrastructure funding.

The associations wanted more time to review the approach and talk to their members before they signed on, and I would certainly respect that need. The good news is that we do have time. MSI does not expire until 2022, and all municipalities, including Edmonton and Calgary, will continue to receive MSI up until that point.

Now, turning to the details of the city charter regulations. As has been noted on all sides, these are not part of Bill 32 in a formal way, but as the Member for Livingstone-Macleod has rightly noted, they are related. Let me just make some comments about off-site levies and inclusionary housing.

Proposed off-site levy reforms would allow Calgary and Edmonton city councils, via bylaw, to identify the types of infrastructure for which an off-site levy may be imposed and establish the method for calculating off-site levies. As I've noted, this is already practised in the city of Calgary. Inclusionary housing reforms would allow Calgary and Edmonton city councils, via bylaw, to design and establish their own inclusionary housing program. Bylaw changes to off-site levies or to establish inclusionary housing programs will be determined by city councils, not the government of Alberta, and councils will have to work with developers and hold public hearings to institute any changes as part of a public and transparent bylaw process.

Processes to change off-site levies or establish inclusionary housing programs will have to go through a public bylaw process, and that means ensuring industry input on any changes. There will continue to be transparency on these issues, and cities will be compelled to work with developers. This is about building smart, sustainable cities that balance the needs of everyone.

City charters, at their very core, are about empowering Alberta's largest cities to better meet the needs of their citizens. I'll remind this House that Calgary city council and Edmonton city council are elected bodies. Councillors are elected in larger wards and represent more people than any member in this House. I believe that these councils deserve the right to work with developers and their citizens to ensure they can grow their cities in smart, sustainable ways, and I believe that they are best positioned to implement inclusionary housing programs to create more affordable housing spaces.

Finally, I believe we should respect locally elected officials and the fine people who work at the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton to make the right decisions for their communities and their economies. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the minister's speech for third reading. I only have a few brief comments. I'd like to say that this has been a complex issue that has been an ongoing situation for many years in Municipal Affairs, and it's good to see that we're making some progress. I'm just not sure how well this is going to turn out, frankly. Funding Alberta municipalities has been a struggle faced by successive governments, and I think it will likely continue to be the case given the current state of the province's finances.

We've always talked on our side of the House here about moving to some sort of revenue-sharing model for municipalities that all municipalities could work with and have – as the minister has said as well – predictable and sustainable funding. Hopefully this will address that, and I look forward to being able to work with this in the future, and perhaps as we return to a better revenue stream in the next few years to come with this province, we can somehow rely on some sort of municipal funding program like this, whether it needs amending or not, and make sure that municipalities receive the funding and stability that they require.

Those are all my comments. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just have a few brief comments on this. Overall, I have to say that it's a good framework, and I'm pleased with the bill on the whole. I do represent a riding in Calgary, and certainly, you know, it provides predictable funding and the ability for Calgary to move forward on key transit initiatives that are important to my constituents, key transit initiatives like the green line and the 52nd Street mass bus transit, and that predictable transit funding is something that's really important and something that I appreciate and residents of Calgary appreciate in this bill.

However, in the short term I do just want to note that I have heard from councillors in the city of Calgary that this does actually represent a cut to municipal funding for the city of Calgary, and it will make it difficult for Calgary to do some of the things that it needs to do over the short and medium term in planning for a growing city. While I appreciate the collaborative nature of how this came about, and I appreciate the predictability of the funding, I do just want to make a note that it does in the short term represent a cut to funding for Calgary and for things that Calgary wants to do.

Ultimately, when I speak to my constituents, municipal issues are some of the things that come up the most often, things like snow clearing, transit, road maintenance, bylaw maintenance, all of these things. The things that really matter to people on a day-to-day basis are often things that happen at a municipal level. A bill like this really does affect everybody who lives in the city of Calgary, who lives in the city of Edmonton, because it affects how those cities have the ability to pay for the things that residents of those two cities – most of the residents of Alberta live in the two cities now – need and want.

I appreciate the effort that's gone into this bill in order to, you know, work collaboratively with the two cities and provide predictable funding that both municipalities and cities have looked for over a long period of time. I think it's important that we are enshrining this in legislation because what that does is it does provide the predictability and makes it more difficult for subsequent governments to change these rules that are laid out.

Overall, I'm supportive of this bill. It does, I think, have a few shortcomings, but I appreciate the minister for bringing it forward. That is all I wanted to say right now.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any others wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to close debate, please.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Noticing the time and the good work that has been accomplished this morning, I would recommend we call it noon and adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:57 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 5, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 70 students from Millwoods Christian school who are here to visit the Legislature. The students are joined by their teachers, Jose Reyes and Sarah Inman. I would like to invite all of the students and their teachers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. minister, I'm glad you chose not to introduce each one individually. Thank you for that.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the students and staff of H.W. Pickup school in Drayton Valley. Some of the people in the gallery today are former colleagues and some are former students of mine, bringing their kids here to see the Legislature. At least one is a former pastor of mine. I consider all of these people special to me as we live in community together in Drayton Valley. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

And, yes, hon. members, I would remind you of the event we had yesterday, so out of respect for all of the guests and your fellow members, please practise brevity.

The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Sergeant (Retired) Bill Patton, whose ongoing contributions to Alberta are truly remarkable. After joining the RCMP in 1957, Mr. Patton moved to Blairmore, Alberta. Over the next 61 years Mr. Patton and his family lived in more than 30 communities throughout our province. After 37 years of exemplary service with the RCMP Mr. Patton became active in the RCMP Veteran's Association, serving first as president of K Division, followed by president at the national level. He's been a volunteer in his community for 50-plus years, and he enjoys retirement living in the beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. Today Bill is joined by his daughter Carolyn Patton, his grandson Dane Patton, his sister-in-law Barb Pearson as well as his brother-in-law John Pearson. I ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests from the town of Vermilion, Susan and Brian Hodges-Marlowe. Now, Brian recently was recognized with his 10-year service pin as an instructor in the fire training school at Lakeland College in Vermilion. Susan has served for the past five years as my constituency assistant in the office in Vermilion, for which she will be recognized with an award tomorrow and, I understand, also qualifies her for sainthood. I'd like all of my colleagues to join in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you my constituency assistants, who have travelled here from Fairview. Dianne Nellis and Eileen Coristine do stellar work every day in my office back home, keeping me in touch with my constituents. I know everybody in this Assembly appreciates the work our CAs do while we're here in the Chamber. I'd ask Dianne and Eileen to stand up and please receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this House some long-time constituents, friends, and supporters of mine who are visiting the Assembly today. Of course, we know Blake Evans, who's our very talented director of House business. He and his staff do wonderful work on behalf of the government caucus and the Assembly as a whole. His partner, Myfanwy, home-schools their children, dog-sits, and is a member of a very active group of Edmontonians that sponsor Syrian refugee families as they resettle here. Their son Marlowe is deeply into strategic board games as well as Jamaican meat patties, and their daughter Ilya loves music and dancing. I would ask that Blake, Myfanwy, Marlowe, and Ilya please rise now and accept the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I've got two introductions today of two nurse heroes of mine. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a friend and colleague who I've worked with at the Cross Cancer Institute for years, and she was also a teammate of my wife's on several women's soccer teams. Val Kamitomo was mentioned in my member's statement recently on the RAM iron lung exhibit. She worked with polio patients who survived the iron lung. Her late husband, Gary McPherson, was one of them, and she helped Gary lead a fully rewarding life.

The second introduction is for Shirley Fisk, an RN at the Royal Alex for many years. She's also an accomplished cyclist and has represented Alberta on two occasions at the Canadian ladies' curling championship on team Betty Cole. I ask Val and Shirley to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Begging your indulgence, but I have two sets of visitors this afternoon. My school group will be arriving at 2 p.m., and I do hope I can get consent to introduce them at that point.

I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two members of the Sturgeon bus contract association. Mr. Dean Millar is the president, and he is here with a fellow bus contractor, Darrel Granger. They've visited me today in the Legislature to discuss their concerns over school busing. I would ask that these gentlemen please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. member, normal practice is that we wouldn't be asking for unanimous consent in the OQP time, but maybe your group will be able to stay.

The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you some members of Islamic Relief Canada. I ask my guests to please rise as I say their names: Imam Sadique Pathan, Mohamed Rahall, and Ayan Abdille. Islamic Relief Canada is Canada's largest Muslim charity, dedicated to providing humanitarian aid and relief within and outside Canada's borders. With operations in over 35 countries Islamic Relief has done a tremendous amount of work both internationally and here in Canada. I thank them for the work they do, and I ask my guests to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

1:40

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two great, special constituents from Grande Prairie-Wapiti, Sean and Megan O'Toole. It's not too often that I get visitors all the way from Grande Prairie, but I'm pleased to have them here today. The reason they're so special: Sean is my plumber. I ask them to now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

Provincial Election 2019

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, 1,311 days since the last election, yet for some it seems like an eternity. I could talk about the 46,000 fewer jobs in the private sector; a lack of investor confidence; misguided public policy; regulatory burden; a perception of less than business-friendly government; 167,000 unemployed; 115,000 no longer receiving EI benefits, struggling to make ends meet; lineups at food banks; families falling behind on bills and mortgage payments, fearing foreclosure and homelessness; depression; substance abuse; domestic violence; marital breakdown; and, with great finality, suicide.

But, Mr. Speaker, I prefer to talk about hope of a brighter future for all Albertans and a return to the Alberta advantage. What does that mean to me, to my colleagues, and to Albertans? Reigniting our renowned entrepreneurial spirit, building on the strengths of our world-famous prairie work ethic, taking our rightful place as a free-enterprise leader, and championing our role as a trading nation on the global stage; jobs for new graduates, work experience opportunities for youth, employment options for those with disabilities, and mentorship roles for active agers; jobs for moms and dads to support their growing families; empowering seniors' organizations, recreation facilities, places of worship, and nonprofits to enrich their communities; regulatory certainty, open for business, investor friendly, job creation, and prosperity; and pipelines. Yes, pipelines to world markets. Goodbye social licence croquet and hello to good old Alberta hardball. Real investment, real jobs, real prosperity, and a return to fiscal sanity.

Mr. Speaker, respectfully, election 2019 cannot come soon enough for the Albertans I speak with every day. Let us all remember that forming government is not about power. It is about the privilege of representing hard-working Albertans as we support them in fulfilling their hopes, wishes, and dreams for a brighter future.

Thank you and Merry Christmas to all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Community Grants in Red Deer

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Thursday I had the distinct pleasure of hosting the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross in my constituency. With a gathering of 100 stakeholders it was amazing to learn more about the initiatives and enhancements from the Ministry of Culture and Tourism's community initiatives program and community facility enhancement program.

Focus on the essence of community brought to light the diversity of projects that have been happening in my city over the last three and a half years and a strong recognition of the community champions who are incredibly invested in drawing attention to Alberta's third-largest city. While I have met with most and have written many support letters to encourage their projects, it was a proud moment to look throughout the room to see how CIP and CFEP grants truly make Red Deer a phenomenal place to live.

Red Deerians are invested Albertans. They seek to evolve the cultural experience of our city, and the aforementioned funding streams enable this. During my tenure we have seen community initiatives that are environmentally, historically, and socially responsible and encompass elements that serve to drive the economic stability and viability of growth within Alberta's third-largest city. But what is most influential is the passion and drive that Red Deerians have to make their community a great place to live, work, and raise a family.

I have spoken before on Red Deer being an important hub for the surrounding municipalities who share our resources, and I am eternally grateful to those who push limits to enable the growth of my city. Having this event with the Minister of Culture and Tourism was a strong example that this government recognizes the true potential of Red Deer and those who seek to build upon its legacy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Retrospective by the Member for Battle River-Wainwright

Mr. Taylor: As we approach Christmas, we celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ, who was and is the greatest gift that mankind has been given. We also recognize the gifts that we have been given from our friends, families, and at times from complete strangers. Today I want to say thank you to my constituents for giving me the confidence and the gift to be able to have served these three and a half years as MLA. Every day that I walk up the steps of the Legislature, I pause and reflect within myself on what an honour it has been to serve here and represent not just Alberta but specifically the constituents of Battle River-Wainwright and their concerns.

The job of an opposition MLA is to hold the government to account and to represent his constituents. These past years I've had the distinct privilege to hold the critic positions for Advanced Education, Infrastructure, and property and surface rights. However, working with the communities has been the most amazing privilege I've had. I've seen many victories I fought for, like the construction of a new school in Irma and a hospital upgrade, and although it was not a new hospital that I was fighting for, we have an expansion to our existing facility that will include a new ER and a CT scan, that are coming soon. With this, more doctors are attracted, with a better lifestyle because of less on call and a wider range of services. But in the past this has not been the story for our hospital.

Unfortunately, this contrasts with fighting for justice for the Dahl family and the tragic accident that they are still reeling from today. Two lives were lost, one seriously injured, and still many unanswered questions. It is my fervent hope that we all make sure that other victims' families don't have to sacrifice justice and closure for the sake of expediency.

Thank you to my friends, family, and the constituents of Battle River-Wainwright and to my colleagues in the UCP for the gift and the privilege of serving them and serving with them. It's a great honour. I wish you all the best. Merry Christmas.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, and thank you for your service.

Recreational Use of Public Lands

Mr. Westhead: If it wasn't bad enough that the UCP plans to experiment with private health care, they now propose to privatize Alberta's public lands, some of our best and most important wildlife habitat. Pay to play might appeal to the UCP's well-heeled donors, but the rest of us like to keep those lands just like our health care system, public. Perhaps this is why the UCP is so against protecting Bighorn Country. Maybe they'd rather sell it to their rich pals, too. Alberta Backcountry Hunters and Anglers say that the sale of public lands will be, quote: a disaster for Alberta hunters and anglers. End quote.

In stark contrast, the NDP has worked to make hunting and fishing more accessible. We made hunting more affordable for seniors. We increased tags for elk and deer and gave landowners more opportunity to hunt elk on their property. We reversed a proposed angling ban on the Ram, Clearwater, Kakwa, and North Saskatchewan rivers. We ensured that hunting and fishing would continue in the new Castle parks. We also put land-use plans in place that improve habitat security for elk, grizzly bears, and native trout.

Hunters and anglers are some of the most conservation-minded folks that I've ever met. Now their way of life is being threatened by the UCP's leader, who says that he doesn't want to get bogged down with consultation and threatens to move so quickly that Albertans won't have time to react. For all we know, he's already promised the lands in exchange for donations, just like he's done with car dealers seeking to roll back workers' rights and consumer protections.

Alberta's hunters and anglers and other conservation-minded organizations stand to lose in a big way from the UCP's public land liquidation plans. Nobody who cares about conservation, habitat, or public access to our land should take this lying down. I'm calling on hunters and anglers and everyone who cares about wildlife to stand up against this land grab by the UCP. Let's keep our public lands in public hands.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Christmas Memories

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Christmas is a special time for many Albertans, a time that creates many memories for generations. A few of my favourite memories began as a small child, when my father would pack my brother and I into our car to drive from Sparwood, B.C., to Pincher Creek every Christmas Eve. He would turn on the Santa Claus report, and we would listen as we followed where he had been seen around the world. We would arrive at my uncle's farm in time to attend the Christmas Eve service at the Mennonite church on my uncle's land. My cousins would always play Mary and Joseph in the nativity scene, and all of us children would receive a small brown bag full of sweets and a mandarin orange. At the end of the service the congregation was invited across the road to the homestead, where we would have our midnight supper.

On Christmas morning all of my 13 cousins and 10 aunts and uncles along with my grandparents would head into town for the Christmas morning service at the Baptist church, a special church to my family, that my grandparents helped build. We would sing our favourite hymns, and all of us children would sit around on the steps of the pew and listen to the story of Christmas.

We would then head back to my grandmother's house, where the living room was full of games and the largest puzzle a person could find. We would spend hours trying to put that puzzle together.

One of my favourite treats of our Christmas dinner was the fruit punch that my grandmother made. No one knew exactly how it was made, but it sure tasted good. None of us have ever been able to make it since.

Mr. Speaker, as we move into the Christmas holidays, let us all remember those fond memories, whether it be attending a church service, a Christmas concert, a staff party, or just having those precious moments with loved ones. Christmas is about the memories, memories that I can't wait to share with my future children. To those who are celebrating: Merry Christmas and God bless.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and Merry Christmas to one and all. Lovely to hear the seasonal spirit here today.

Pipelines to the East Coast

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I have discussed with the new New Brunswick Premier, Blaine Higgs, his plan to revive a coastal pipeline like Energy East, that was killed by Justin Trudeau's new regulations on up- and downstream carbon emissions. Will the hon. Premier commit to meet with Premier Higgs at the first ministers' meeting to commit Alberta's support to his plan to revive the Energy East pipeline?

Ms Notley: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kenney: The best answers are the shortest, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the new Quebec Premier, François Legault, indicated yesterday that he will oppose that plan even though Quebec is receiving $9 billion a year from the federal government in net transfers, much of that coming from Alberta and our energy sector. Will the hon. the Premier commit to raise the concern of Albertans with Quebec's Premier Legault that if they want to benefit from transfers that come from Alberta, they should be partners in resource development?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There is absolutely no question that we have already been engaging in conversations with provincial leadership across the country about the need to find a renewed path for energy infrastructure to the east of Alberta, and we're not going to stop doing that. Now, I don't know that we necessarily need to immediately accelerate to public threats. I think that at this point we'd like to have some conversations with the new leadership in Quebec and to look at ways in which we can come up with some mutually beneficial strategies, and we are committed to doing that on behalf of the people of this province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No one was suggesting threats but, rather, raising the legitimate concern Albertans have when they see billions of our tax dollars effectively being transferred to the Quebec government. While we're in a deficit, they're in a surplus. They have 5 per cent unemployment; we have 7.2 per cent unemployment. They've had years of growth; we've had years of stagnation or economic decline. Is it not reasonable to make the point to the Quebec leadership that if they want to benefit from the resources of Alberta, they should be partners in the development of those resources?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the member opposite doesn't actually spend a lot of time listening to the speeches that I give. I mean, he should because they're sometimes somewhat helpful. Nonetheless, the fact of the matter is that I've been making the point across Canada for well over a year now that Alberta is a net fiscal contributor to all of Canada and that obviously those provinces that are not net fiscal contributors benefit from all of the economic growth and economic prosperity and the downright good, hard work of Albertans. I've been making that case for a great amount of time, and I will continue to make it because Canada needs Alberta, Canada needs Alberta to be working, and Canada needs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: We share that sentiment, Mr. Speaker. The point is that the leadership of Quebec needs to hear that clearly from Alberta's leadership.

Federal Fiscal and Energy Policies

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Albertans contribute net about $20 billion to the rest of the federation through their federal taxes; that is, we pay $20 billion more to Ottawa than comes back in the form of federal services. Does the Premier agree with me that the strongest leverage we have with Ottawa on getting market access and a fair price for our assets is those transfers? Will she raise the need for equalization reform with the Prime Minister at the first ministers' meeting?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the net fiscal $20 billion: I do actually speak to the federal government, to business leaders, to community leaders, to schools, to schoolchildren from coast to coast to coast on a regular basis about the import of Alberta's strong economy. That transfer is not a function of equalization; that is a function of the tax system. We will continue to make the point that all of Canada needs Alberta to do well because, quite frankly, there is not a school, a hospital, a bike lane, or anything else in Canada that doesn't owe itself to Alberta's industry.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. the Premier commit to ask Prime Minister Trudeau at the first ministers' meeting to repeal and reverse his veto of the Northern Gateway pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the Northern Gateway pipeline is not currently a project that is being pursued, but what we have said is that we want them to review their tanker ban so that those proponents of additional projects that are better put together can get investment dollars and get off the ground. That is exactly – exactly – what we have already done, and we will continue to do that. As I've said before, we need to get our product to tidewater because all Canadians need for that to happen. We will continue pushing for that because we are going to continue to push for Alberta's economy.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier just committed to asking Ottawa to, quote: review its tanker ban. Will the Premier instead ask Ottawa to withdraw its proposed tanker ban, Bill C-48?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, in fact, I've already done that. It's very clear. I've been very clear for the last week and a half that Bill C-48 and the discriminatory treatment of Alberta's nonrenewable energy products need to stop. It doesn't make sense that big tankers full of LNG are okely-dokely but refined product or other kinds of nonrenewable product from Alberta are somehow not. In fact, what we need to do is to be able to operate like an economic country and an economic nation that can punch above its weight and be effective on the international stage. We need to stop these barriers, we need to stop the internal fighting, and we need to get on with building our economy as a whole.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate, then, that the NDP voted against a motion from the United Conservative Party calling on the federal government to withdraw its tanker ban, Bill C-48.

Energy Policies and the Provincial Fiscal Position

Mr. Kenney: In northern British Columbia there is a consortium of First Nations who are in favour of a coastal pipeline for Alberta energy, for Alberta oil, who are opposed to the federal tanker ban, Bill C-48, and are trying to raise funds on the Internet to sue the federal government for failing to consult with them before the Trudeau government vetoed the Northern Gateway pipeline. Will the Premier commit to work with those First Nations who make up the Eagle Spirit consortium?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, last week in Ottawa my speech specifically spoke to the Eagle Spirit project. It also spoke to the fact that we needed to allow for the opportunity for a variety of proponents that were able to put together a proper plan, that had proper consultation with all communities and met the standards that were required for them to be able to get off the ground, to attract investment, and to go forward and that, in fact, Bill C-48 barred that and that it was effectively discriminatory to Alberta's product. Those are exactly the points that I made when I was in Ottawa last week. Those are exactly the points that I will continue to make because, once again, Canada needs Alberta to succeed.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, recently released StatsCan data indicates that the total monthly compensation in Alberta has declined significantly since the NDP came to office, from $12.7 billion to $11.8 billion. Is this evidence that the NDP's economic plan is working, that Albertans three and a half years later are making less money?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that the data that StatsCan relied on is a bit out of date. What we know is that Alberta's average weekly earnings have recovered to postrecession levels and that we always were leading and continue to lead the country in terms of average weekly earnings. We also know that since the depths of the recession the economy has created well over 100,000 jobs. The differential crisis was threatening to stall that growth, but because we took action, we're going to make sure it doesn't, and we're going to continue on the path to recovery, not just for a few Albertans but for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this is very new data. In fact, it's based on income reported in September, just a couple of months ago, and it's down by 10 per cent since prior to the recession, a mark of failure of this government's policy. Professor Tombe at the University of Calgary estimates that if the economy had continued to grow at its same pace that it did prior to the NDP, Albertans would be $5 billion better off in monthly payments. So why does the NDP continue to threaten us with a further tax increase to the carbon tax given that Albertans are poorer under the NDP?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know that the members opposite love to say "prior to the NDP" and just completely forget, of course, the fact that the price of oil dropped by 75 per cent. People aren't buying that. What they do know is that our government has been focused on standing up for regular Albertans. We have been focused on job creation. We have been focused on making life more affordable. We have been focused on protecting those important public services that all Alberta families rely on. Schools, hospitals: those are the things that build the economy. Those are the things that have Alberta leading the country in economic growth. Those are the things that are making us come out of this much differently than those places that adopted . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Calgary-South East.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Party caucus is fully supportive of GSAs in schools and a student's right to privacy and safety in joining. Recent reports that a child was taken off school grounds by an adult not affiliated with the school without the parents' awareness have raised some questions, though. We need to be clear. A student's right to privacy is intended to ensure their safety, not circumvent existing protections. To the Minister of Education: how is your department going to ensure that any visitor coming into a school has to register with the front office, and can you explain how that policy was overlooked in recent reports regarding GSAs?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. We know that GSAs are an important part of our schools. GSAs help to save lives in schools. We also need to know that there's a separation between the GSAs and the policy that we built here and field trip policy and so forth. It's my expectation that schools and school boards follow field trip policy to the fullest extent that they have built that policy and that we make sure that kids are safe every step of the way. That is what we're here for, and that's what we will continue to do.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Minister.

GSAs are a vital peer-to-peer support group for young people struggling with bullying and/or acceptance, and the right to privacy is necessary to assure participants that actually it's safe to participate. We also need to be aware that there must be reasonable limits placed upon what activities are appropriate when parents aren't being informed, especially activities that take place off school grounds. To the same minister: is your ministry considering the development of standardized policies around GSAs, what activities are acceptable, and what activities are not appropriate without parental notification?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know here, GSAs are support clubs in schools. As I said in my last answer, field trips are a separate issue that has to be dealt with, a separate policy. Schools and school boards have those policies in place. It's very important, the confidentiality of students in GSAs. The idea of outing kids who join GSAs goes against the very grain of what they are supposed to be as a safe and caring place. Anyone who suggests that kids should be outed in a GSA doesn't understand and, in fact, is hurting the basic idea and the kids that are in a GSA in the first place.

Mr. Fraser: Minister, six months ago I asked a very heartfelt question about how your government is working with families of LGBTQ children and those who are supportive and those who are just not there yet. To the same minister: can you point to one specific example of how you're working with school boards to foster an open sharing of LGBTQ students along with their parents and families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Good question, and I thank the hon. member for his assistance on this matter. I'm very proud to say that all public school boards in the province of Alberta, all Catholic schools, all francophone schools, all charter schools, and the vast majority of private schools have built their own safe and caring policies, with faith-based principles built right into them if they chose to do so. I'm so proud of that process that we've gone through over these last three and a half years. But I also must say, Mr. Speaker, that if you take public money for schools here in the province of Alberta, you must follow the law just like anybody else.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Political Participation

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past year we've seen the rise of many different political action committees, or PACs, here in Alberta. These organizations often work in the shadows and have a big influence on the elections that we've seen in both Calgary and Ontario. To the minister responsible for democratic renewal: what are you doing to make sure that PACs don't have an unfair influence in Alberta elections?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is fighting for what matters to Albertans, and that includes having control over their democracy. For too long in Alberta, elections were controlled by those who had the most money. I know that some parties think that they can auction off their platforms to the highest bidder. That is not how our democracy works. The first thing we did when we came into office was to get big money out of politics. Contrary to what the members opposite shout at me, we know that banning PACs is not constitutional, so what we did was bring in the strictest rules around PACs in the whole country.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that PACs often also rely on this big money, again to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that we keep that big money out of politics and PACs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased that as of last Saturday all PACs in Alberta are now under a $150,000 pre-election spending cap. That means fewer newspaper wraps, fewer fake calls and radio ads, and a clampdown on these attempts to put big money back into politics. We've all seen the unbelievable rise in third-party advertising over the last few months, and we know that while we'll never be able to stop the Conservatives' rich friends from trying to buy the election, these rules will help ensure that it's regular Albertans, not just those at the top, who have a say in their own elections.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a healthy democracy relies on people getting out to vote and sharing their opinions, again to the minister responsible for democratic renewal: what are you doing to encourage more Albertans to vote?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a great question. Thanks to the changes made by our government, voting over the next election will be easier and more convenient than ever. We're ensuring that all Albertans are enumerated so that when election time comes, they'll be on the list and they'll know where they're supposed to go. We're taking advantage of voting technology to ensure that those who have different mobility needs can vote as easily as possible. We've increased the number of advanced polling days and are ensuring polling stations are in more places than ever before.

Agricultural Methane Emission Reduction

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the climate leadership plan calls for a 45 per cent reduction in methane emissions by 2025. Now, 70 per cent of Alberta's methane emissions comes from the oil and gas industry, and last year regulations were released to tackle this objective. But 24 per cent of Alberta's methane emissions comes from agriculture, and much of that is from the livestock industry. To the minister of agriculture: what measures are being taken to reduce methane emissions from livestock production in Alberta, and what results have been achieved thus far?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very good question. I've had the opportunity to talk with genetics people at the University of Alberta and look at the very exciting research they're doing around feed, around different practices for the agriculture industry to do their part, too, because when I talk to producers and ranchers across the province, they want to do their part to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, including methane. Some really exciting new technologies, that I'm looking forward to being implemented in the future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, long on rhetoric but short on results. Other countries have aggressively tackled this challenge. Given that an Australian study that added red algae to sheep diets resulted in an 80 per cent reduction in methane production and given that work at the University of California, Davis, feeding cows a strain of seaweed has resulted in a 55 per cent reduction in methane production, to the minister of agriculture: what comparable work – and give me the numbers, please – is being done in Alberta?

Mr. Carlier: Thank you for the very interesting question, for the little tidbits there, you know, understanding, too, that there are different charcoal products that can be used to reduce methane. But over and above the feeding of the cattle, we have had the opportunity to use funds from the climate leadership plan to assist JBS, a very large meat-processing facility near Brooks, Alberta, to reduce their methane over some of their effluent ponds. There are opportunities right across the sector, Mr. Speaker, to find those efficiencies.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, given that measures to reduce methane from livestock production have the potential to reduce global greenhouse gas emissions by some seven gigatonnes – that's 10 times Canada's annual output and 28 times Alberta's – and given that the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency, or ALMA, that used to support research like this, was disbanded by this minister in 2016, to the minister. Alberta is falling behind in areas that we could and should be leaders in. Will you re-establish ALMA or a similar agency so that Alberta can once again assume its leadership position?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and Member again for the very, very interesting question. You know, work is going on. Progress is going on with our higher institutions, with the Alberta Beef Producers, with a major packing plant. Everyone wants to be able to find those efficiencies. Within those efficiencies are some economics as well, using genetics, the science of genetics, where there are now beef cattle that are eating upwards of 400 pounds less feed in their lifespan than they were even a few years ago. Research is continuing to be able to find those efficiencies within our processing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

2:10 Adoption Advertising Legislation Proclamation

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Adoptive families across this province are still waiting on the proclamation of Bill 206, the child, youth, and family enhancement amendment act, which would allow families to put their profiles online. While we wait, adoption rates actually continue to drop in this province and the list of families looking to give a child a loving home continues to grow. To the minister – I'll ask again because Albertans are continuing to ask me – when will Bill 206 be proclaimed? Why is the government delaying it? It passed in the Legislature over a year ago.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, all children deserve safe, welcoming, and loving homes, and adoptive families do play a critical role in helping to ensure that children in our province get exactly that. We share the member's commitment to ensuring that the adoption process gives both children and parents the best possible outcomes. We continue to consult with Albertans on next steps, but we do need to take the time to make sure that we get this right on behalf of all those involved.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, Mr. Speaker, it's been a year. Last week I had the opportunity to speak with the minister's team about this important issue during the Public Accounts Committee. They informed me that their consultations are ongoing and that they have not yet done the work of summarizing any of the concerns highlighted by the stakeholders through this process. Minister, given that your department has had over a year to complete this work, I can only assume that you've not made this a priority, that you're deliberately choosing not to proceed for partisan reasons. Why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, what I can say again is that this is about the well-being of children and making sure that the process gives the parents and children who go through this process the best possibility of a solid and sure outcome. It is incredibly important that we get it right, so we are talking to young people, to families, to parents and organizations, and we're working together to look for improvements. I know that the Conservatives might have no problem in rushing through changes to make life harder for families, but we're not going to do that.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, Mr. Speaker, the amount of correspondence that is coming into my office and the offices of my colleagues: these are the messages of desperate families that are wanting to complete their forever loving homes. I need to ask the minister as I head home to chat with constituents over the Christmas holidays: what do you want me to say to the families about why they won't be celebrating Christmas with the child that they so desperately want?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will say is that when we talk about adoption, it's an incredibly complex issue and, in fact, there's a lot of different perspectives around how we need to proceed as a province going forward. That's why it's so incredibly important to talk to people and to get it right. You know, while the Conservatives want to hurt families with big cuts to health and education . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Larivee: . . . we've got the backs of Albertans, and we will continue to fight to get this right and ensure we do what we need to do for the things that matter to Albertans.

Financial Reporting by Government

Mr. Barnes: The Finance minister has sent my friend and colleague the chair of the Public Accounts Committee a letter stating that the Finance department will be changing the way it reports its financial position to Albertans in just over 90 days. My colleague received this letter just yesterday. My question to the minister is simple. Why did you decide to change the way Treasury Board and Finance reports key financial information to Albertans just weeks before a provincial election and your four-year mandate is over? What are you hiding?

Mr. Ceci: Nothing. We're not hiding anything on this side. We have, you know, different groups who've said that we've got the best reporting of any province out there, and we're going to continue to win that race amongst all the provinces and do the best job reporting. What I'm changing is actually going to save the government of Alberta money. I'm not going to be requesting audited financial statements from each minister because we have an auditor who looks at the final audited financial statements of government. We don't need to do that work with 20 auditors and then another auditor. We can do it once, do it well, and save money.

Mr. Barnes: What you're changing is all the red ink the printer is now using.

Given that the minister held notification until after the Public Accounts Committee had completed and he has unilaterally changed how Treasury Board and Finance will report revenues and expenses, including removing all of the department's individual revenues and expenses, and given that on March 31, 2018, the financial report showed that Albertans are already $67 billion in debt, paying $1.4 billion in interest annually, with our last borrowing at 3.61 per cent, Minister, what are you planning on hiding . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. [interjection] Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: Nothing could be further from the truth. We're not hiding anything. Though he can say it every time he gets up, it's not true. You know, no information will be lost. No financial information is lost. The Auditor General: remember that person? Actually, they recommend and support the action we're taking with regard to one final audited statement of all the government ministries. Instead of re-creating this and making busy work with 20 auditors, we're saving government money, and we're following the AG's advice.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, curiously, this was disclosed to Public Accounts after our last meeting, and our last meeting, just yesterday, was with Treasury Board and Finance, the very public servants who will be dealing with this change in 90 days on how this Finance minister and this NDP government want to disclose information.

The Speaker: Get to the question.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, all committee members, from both sides of this Legislature, were denied the opportunity to demand answers yesterday for Albertans. Minister, what are you hiding... [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon members.

Hon member, the question is on government policy.

Minister, answer the question.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just remind the member on the other side...

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Ceci: ... that the Auditor General supports the work we're doing. The Auditor General believes we don't have to re-create audited financial statements for all of the ministries and then do it again as a government. They trust the information that our ministries bring forward. We're rolling that up into an audited statement at the end, which is reviewed by the Auditor General. Mr. Speaker, we have one of the best reporting processes of any province out there. We are given an A plus every year, and we're going to continue to get that.

Gas Price Differentials and the Carbon Levy

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, now that we have dealt with the oil differential price crisis, it is time to deal with the crisis facing natural gas producers. On Monday in question period the Premier alluded to a working group of industry players that the NDP government is waiting to receive advice from. Sources indicate there is a draft report. To the Premier: who is on this working group, how long has this working group been running, and when will the report be released?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is quite correct that we appointed a natural gas advisory group, that we've been in constant contact with. We are receiving their advice, and we will be having more to say soon. In addition to pipelines, that we are working for every day, we do have issues with natural gas, and we're looking at things that we can do to help with that. I'd be happy to say more in the next question.

Mr. van Dijken: Given, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta natural gas producers have to contend with British Columbia producers dumping gas onto Alberta's pipeline network, causing prices to drop so low that sometimes gas sells for a negative price, and given that the NDP's fellow-travellers in British Columbia continue to act as an impediment to moving Alberta's oil to market and given that we have not seen any social licence granted by the B.C. NDP government, when will this government admit their climate leadership plan has failed and scrap their job-killing carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been listening to our gas producers and many other producers, for that matter, and some of the things we're hearing are that we need to add more value here in Alberta, and that's exactly what we're doing. A while back we did our first PDP project, and it's well under way, Inter Pipeline in the Alberta Industrial Heartland. It's creating jobs all around the province. A second one is about to announce their FID. With last year's bill we are incenting more projects, that I'll be happy to talk about in the third question.

2:20

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that these carbon taxes are all pain and will have no measurable impact on our climate or on emissions and given that Albertans recognize that the carbon tax is a sham – it's no wonder the NDP hid the carbon tax from Albertans in the last election – will this government admit that their plan has failed and apologize for the unnecessary pain the carbon tax has instilled on all Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is mistaken. In fact, our climate leadership plan has already reduced greenhouse gas emissions by 11 megatonnes, roughly the annual emissions of Newfoundland. This is not immaterial, and Alberta is showing that kind of leadership. Another thing that we're doing for natural gas, though, is making sure that we are phasing in natural gas electricity sources. This is a very good thing for natural gas producers here in Alberta. It is cleaner burning, obviously. We're making sure that we've got the capacity market in place to make those projects economic as we phase out coal. The previous government obviously failed to do...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

School Bus Safety

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that seat belts save lives and prevent injuries. In 2010 Transport Canada released the results of a study which concluded that in the event of side impacts and rollovers children travelling on our school buses were more vulnerable to injury. This study was not made public until October 2018 and poses a great concern to our Albertan students who are bused back and forth to school daily. To the Minister of Transportation: can you speak to the precautionary measures being currently considered to protect our students who require buses to attend school daily?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. You know, it's absolutely important to us that safety of our children comes first, and it's one of our most important responsibilities. All school buses in Alberta must meet the engineering and design standards of Transport Canada, but some new evidence has come to light which we take very seriously, and I've asked my department officials to look into this and to contact Transport Canada as well as other jurisdictions in order to provide me with the best possible advice to continue to keep our children safe.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that Albertan seat belt laws govern the safety of all who travel our roads and highways and given that even bus drivers are required by law to buckle up and that there is, however, currently nothing in place which supports our most vulnerable assets, our children, to the minister: can you speak to the importance of school buses being equipped with seat belts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the question was very similar to the one I just answered, and of course the safety of our children is of paramount importance. We are looking at the best way to do that. Based on historical research, the advice was to not have seat belts in school buses. There is new research that would contradict that, and the department is working very hard in order to provide me with some options to make sure that we can continue to have the best practices to keep our children safe.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that just this school year there was an unfortunate accident involving a school bus in which some of our Albertan children were physically hurt and in shock and given that three-point seat belts would prevent injuries and save lives, to the same minister: can I count on your support to put the safety of our Albertan students first and foremost and address the seat belt issue in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Absolutely, hon. member. This is something that we take very seriously, and as I've indicated in the answer to previous questions, we are studying this as we speak. I've told the department that I wish to give it the utmost priority, and we're going to come back with the best options in order to keep our kids safe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Tow Truck Driver Safety

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall my colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti's private member's bill would have allowed tow trucks to use blue and white warning lights along with the currently permitted amber. The industry repeatedly asked for this change because their work on Alberta's roadsides creates hazards for them as well as members of the motoring public. During last week's snowstorm two tow trucks were struck by passing cars. Minister, you opened up the Traffic Safety Act twice while in government. Why hasn't this legislation been changed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to remind everyone that safety, including of our tow truck operators, who operate in hazardous conditions, is the highest priority. People are required, if they're passing a tow truck with lights on in an adjacent lane, to slow down to at least 60 kilometres an hour. That's the law. They're treated in that respect the same as any police, fire, or ambulance vehicle that might be on the highway.

With respect to changing the colours of the lights, that is under active consideration, Mr. Speaker, as we speak.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that allowing tow trucks to use more visible blue and white warning lights increases safety for all motorists and given that Saskatchewan and four other provinces successfully made this change, to the minister. You can easily make the required changes to this act through regulation. What's stopping you from making this change before a fatality occurs?

Mr. Mason: Well, the hon. member has posed the question as if, Mr. Speaker, if we made this change immediately, people would not be killed in accidents. What we need to do is make sure that people slow down and move over when they're passing any vehicle with flashing lights, first of all. We are studying the experience of Saskatchewan in particular, that has added blue lights. If that improves the safety of tow truck operators, we will do it.

Mr. Strankman: Well received, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the occupation of tow truck drivers is one of the most dangerous jobs in North America and given that you have repeatedly stated you would look into this since I first asked you about this issue in 2015, Minister, you could commit today to enacting this change immediately and help these Albertans return home safely every night.

The Speaker: Was there a question in there, hon. member? That was a question, was it?

Mr. Strankman: Could the minister commit today to enacting this change immediately?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Mason: I will commit, Mr. Speaker, to doing whatever is necessary to improve safety on our highways, including for tow truck operators. When I have a clear understanding of the best option to put forward, that's what I'll do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Carbon Levy and Agricultural Costs

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farmers in my riding are sending me copies of their natural gas bills, pointing out the NDP's carbon tax. In just one month a grain farmer spent $3,761 just on natural gas and a staggering $1,766 in carbon tax, over $1,700 in carbon tax in just one month: not rent, not groceries, just a carbon tax. Given the devastating impact the carbon tax has had on Alberta farmers, will the minister of agriculture be a minister for farmers or just their carbon tax collector?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that slightly odd question. We've done a lot with farmers. We were able to make sure that marked fuel is carbon levy exempted. We've also reduced small-business tax by one-third, which, of course, helps farmers right across the province. From the climate leadership plan we've injected $81 million to find efficiencies. When I talk to farmers across the province, they want to be able to know: what can they do for their part for greenhouse gas emissions? They have been great stewards of the land for generations and continue to be so.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, Mr. Speaker, farmers do find it odd that they have to pay a carbon tax on natural gas just to dry their grain on a very difficult harvest.

Given that the minister actually had a very similar response in a letter that was written to him, where he was quoted as saying that Alberta has one of the lowest natural gas prices in North America, to the minister of agriculture: are you actually telling Alberta farmers that the government is eroding our ag industry's competitive advantage with the NDP's carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again for the very odd question. You know, Alberta continues to have the lowest taxes overall, even with the carbon levy, across the country. So to say that we've somehow eroded our competitive advantage, of course, is very false. Through the climate leadership plan we are devoting funds, as a matter of fact a 50 per cent rebate for those farmers that are upgrading or retrofitting their grain-drying operations, looking to find those efficiencies, efficiencies not only to reduce greenhouse gas emissions but economic efficiencies as well.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it is odd that the minister is unaware that farmers actually do not want to pay their carbon tax.

Given that the NDP seems eager to pick winners and losers of who has to pay the carbon tax and those who don't have to pay their carbon tax and given that Alberta's carbon tax does nothing to reduce greenhouse gases and given that, unlike other sectors, farmers actually grow plants that remove CO₂ from the atmosphere, can the minister of agriculture explain why hard-working farm families are being forced to pay the NDP's job-killing carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:30

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. Again for the member, I'll let him know that a lot of farmers use marked fuel for their operations, the kind, you know, that they put in their tractors and such things. Actually, that fuel is exempted from the carbon levy, knowing that that's a big part of their operations, making sure that it works for industry, including the agriculture industry, and that at the same time we'll find those efficiencies. It has been very successful. That's the second member now that says that carbon pricing is not effective. It's been effective around the world. There's a Nobel prize winner who won for coming up with the concept of carbon pricing. It is working, and I'm very proud of that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Economic Development and Energy Project Approval

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, as every MLA in this House knows, Alberta is in a tough spot. Many, many Albertans are unemployed or underemployed, and many Albertans also are struggling to put food on the table, fill their gas tank, and send their kids to hockey practice. Unfortunately, it seems when job creators set out to spur the economic activity to create jobs in Alberta, they end up facing overbearing and cumbersome barriers of regulation. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: will the government finally admit that its obsession with overregulation is hurting Alberta's international profile?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, what I will admit is that when the price of oil collapsed, it had a significant impact on every business, every community, every worker in this province. We recognize that it's been a very challenging period of time. That's exactly why the Premier recreated the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade, so that there is a ministry solely dedicated to supporting our businesses, helping to take our companies internationally to support new markets. We've introduced a number of different tools that are helping to create jobs, that are supporting our job creators here in the province, that I'm very proud to talk more about momentarily.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Cyr: Given, Mr. Speaker, that one example of regulatory overreach can be seen in the case of Prosper Petroleum, an Alberta company that has been waiting since 2013 for regulatory approval of a new oil sands project, and given that despite finally receiving the project approval from the Alberta Energy Regulator in June, the government continues to sit on an order in council that they need to proceed and given that this project represents nearly 11,000 potential jobs for hard-working Albertans, to the Minister of Energy: can the NDP government tell us why the order in council has not been issued already?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We absolutely recognize the importance of this project to the proponent and the investors, and we also recognize the potential economic benefits for Alberta. The Alberta Energy Regulator submitted a recommendation for an order in council to the Department of Energy this past August 2018. The matter is currently making its way through the decision-making process. I can tell you as Energy minister that my number one focus is supporting our energy sector and the good jobs it creates. We are fighting for pipelines, we are fighting for a better price in oil, and we are fighting to upgrade our resources.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Cyr: Given, Mr. Speaker, that this isn't a unique circumstance and given that according to CAPP there are 13 separate projects waiting for regulatory approval, including projects from companies like Osum, which directly creates jobs in my constituency, and given that these held up projects represent jobs and prosperity for Albertans in a time when they are needed the most, to the Minister of Energy: will this government finally stop standing in the way of wealth-creating private enterprise, streamline the regulatory approval process, and let Albertans get back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm very proud of the work that the Minister of Energy has done, working with the AER to look at ways that we can improve efficiency to approve projects. Now, I'm very proud of the fact that Imperial has made a final investment decision to move forward with their $2.6 billion Aspen oil sands project. Nexen is also investing $400 million in their Long Lake expansion. There are a number of companies that are making investments in our province that are helping to create jobs. But you know what's not going to help our economy? Firing 4,000 teachers, 4,000 nurses and giving a $700 million tax break to the richest 1 per cent. That's not going to help.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Private-sector Job Creation

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, in spite of what we just heard, there are 46,267 fewer private-sector jobs in Alberta than there were three years ago. The Minister of Finance tells us that everything is up, up, up, and the minister of economic development sings the praises of this government's supposed green shoots. Investors and businesses have lost confidence in this government. To the minister of economic development: given this dismal statistic, can you please tell us when private-sector job creation will overtake job losses in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'll start off by saying that we recognize that it has been a very challenging time. The global collapse in the price of oil has impacted every sector, not just our energy sector but all sectors. That's exactly why our government has rolled out a number of supports, including three different tax credits, funds to help companies access new markets as well as supporting our start-ups but also recapitalizing the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, which helps investment come back here into Alberta. These are all very positive moves. We know that there's more work to do, but firing 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that there are 78,733 new jobs in the public sector and given that, as the Fraser Institute notes, "a robust private sector is needed to generate the wealth to support government activity – including government jobs," of course, and given that uncontrolled growth in public-sector employment will inevitably lead to tax increases, negatively impacting private-sector jobs to support them, to the Minister of Finance: how does your path to balance address the need to grow private-sector investment and jobs given your path to dismal performance to date?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, we have a commitment of balancing in 2023, and we're doing that by a number of things. First of all, we're cutting out all that waste that was left behind by the Conservative government, things like sky palaces, an air force, golf memberships, and other things. We're getting back to balance by finding their waste, we're getting back to balance by diversifying the economy, and we're getting back to balance by making sure Albertans have good schools and hospitals and places like that to get a better education and health care.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. We see robust investment in job creation in the U.S. in their energy sector, but given Alberta's flat GDP, reduction in total employment, record unemployment, lower negative interprovincial net migration, dismal job creation, and depressed tax revenues and given the flight of over $40 billion in foreign direct investment on your watch and given that the wealth and job-generating engine of the private-sector activity is faltering, to the minister of economic development: can you tell Albertans today, right here, right now, how you expect to bring back investor confidence and create more good, stable, mortgage-paying jobs in Alberta?

Mr. Bilous: Well, I'll start off, Mr. Speaker, by – I don't think that the members opposite forming government would bring back investor confidence. We'll start with continuing with a government that supports not only the public sector but the private sector. You know what? A lot of international companies that are looking at setting up shop north of the border are looking at things like high-quality health care. They want good schools for their kids. They want a high quality of life. All three of those we offer here in Alberta, including continuing to be the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the country. We have some of the best talent. We are investing in our postsecondaries. That's how we're going to attract companies, by having high-quality talent and the right regime.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Flood Mitigation on the Bow River

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents from my constituency who reside in riverfront communities suggest that limiting the 100-year return period target flow rate on the Bow River in Calgary to 1,230 cubic metres per second, as addressed in the city's Flood Mitigation Measures Assessment report, will not be sufficient to protect these communities from damage from groundwater flooding, that constitutes about 80 per cent of the damage from flooding events. Can the minister update this House on flood mitigation measures on the Bow River?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for her advocacy for the people of Calgary-Bow. Of course, we're investing $150 million for local flood protection projects in the city of Calgary. We made that commitment in 2015. We're making good on it. We also are investing in a feasibility study for our options on the Bow River Working Group. Of course, that means different recommendations on modifying operations at TransAlta, new structural projects. I'll give more detail in the supplementals.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What can the minister say to my constituents who are concerned that to efficiently reduce groundwater damage, the peak flow rate needs to be reduced to below 800 cubic metres per second through upstream mitigation, as was projected as a target in the advance to government on water management for the Bow River basin?

2:40

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're moving forward with short-term options, obviously, for the Bow, and then we need to make sure that we've got all of the correct studies and recommendations in place on the longer term projects. These are large-scale projects. Some of them can be quite expensive, including the addition of Spray Lakes and Lake Minnewanka using Barrier Lake for flood mitigation rather than drought mitigation. All of these things require a government that is committed to keeping the people of Calgary safe and making those investments in the infrastructure to make it so.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the province has recently commissioned a study to further define the upstream options for the Bow River identified in this report, to what extent will the study look to identify flood mitigation schemes that reduce the peak flow rate to 800 cubic metres per second?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, all of the recommendations are being studied for how they are going to keep the people of Calgary safe, including the people of Calgary-Bow. But I can tell you this. Ideological cuts to our infrastructure program will not keep the people of Calgary safe. It will mean no investment in long-term flood mitigation. Waffling on the Springbank dam will not help the people of Calgary, and failing to invest in the Bow will also not keep the member's constituents safe or anyone else in Calgary safe.

The Speaker: We will proceed in 30 seconds with Members' Statements, hon. members.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request your permission to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Please proceed, hon. member.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 35 students from H.A. Kostash school in Smoky Lake. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Ashley Romaniuk and Mr. Murray Lalonde along with their chaperones, Mr. Adam Edwardson, Mr. Brendan Melnyk, Mrs. Stephanie Mahon, Mrs. Roxanne Kozakewich, Mrs. Kelly Klein, and Mrs. Shawne Bishop. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Piquette: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, they're looking forward to my tabling hundreds of letters from the Smoky Lake community, that they brought with them this afternoon, advocating for a new school as well as giving their own letters directly to Minister Eggen. I think the minister knows what they want for Christmas.

The Speaker: Welcome to the Assembly. I'm glad the member got a chance to introduce you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Water Fluoridation in Calgary

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Have you ever held your child's hand as they go through intensive dental intervention, pinching your pennies to pay for it, wondering where you went wrong or how this could have been prevented? Well, I, like many parents in Calgary, have, and a lot of this occurred after fluoride was removed from Calgary's drinking water. Since 2011 dentists as well as not-for-profits in Calgary have seen a spike in the number of cases of tooth decay in our city. The impacts are even worse in lower income areas, where families may not have the means to pay for regular dental care. This was all done to save the city only $750,000 per year. If you add that up per citizen over their lifetime, it's less than one filling.

The fact is that fluoride naturally occurs in our water supply, including some Canadian communities that have the recommended .7 milligrams needed. However, the clear, mountain water from the Rockies only carries .1 to .4 milligrams at best, which is not enough to help prevent against oral disease. Meanwhile, Health Canada's research proves that it has no negative impact on your personal health.

Organizations in our city like the Alex and CUPS support this being a priority as they recognize that community water fluoridation is one measure that helps decrease dental disease within our population. For the Alex, 46 per cent of the children they support have tooth decay. Let's talk about these savings. Is that costing us in AHS when these infections get out of control, in FCSS for additional preventative measures, or additional resources for our not-for-profits that they have to pay?

Right now Calgarians for Kids' Health are advocating to return this basic right to our city's drinking water, and if you support them, I urge you to get involved. This decision by the city of Calgary in 2011 to override the decision that was made by Calgarians in a referendum has caused a tremendous amount of pain to children and a financial burden to families. I urge the city of Calgary to re-examine this and AHS to be part of the conversation or at the very least to bring this question back to citizens.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, as the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I am pleased to table five copies of the 2018 report for the Standing Committee on Public Accounts covering its work during 14 committee meetings for the period of January to December 2018 for the Fourth Session of the 29th Legislature.

I want to acknowledge the hard work and commitment of the committee members past and present as well as the LAO and the caucus staff who provided support to this committee and its members. I also would like to thank all of the ministries, agencies, boards, and commissions who participated in these meetings.

This report will be posted to the external committee website, and copies will also be available through the committee's office. Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to present a petition on behalf of 1,625 Albertans. The petition seeks to urge the Alberta government to reinvest at least 50% of any savings anticipated from generic drug cost reductions resulting from the 5-year agreement recently negotiated between the Pan-Canadian Pharmaceutical Alliance and the Canadian Generic Pharmaceutical Association effective April 1st, 2018, into frontline pharmacy services and programs to ensure the delivery of better healthcare for Albertans and the sustainability and job security of the thousands of Albertans employed in pharmacies and drugstores across our province, including Alberta pharmacists who have a demonstrably positive impact on the healthcare outcomes of Albertans and [while they do so] do save the healthcare system money.

I have two petitions, one signed by myself and one I am tabling on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with section 4(5) of the Election Act the Chief Electoral Officer has prepared a report on the July 12, 2018, by-elections in Fort McMurray-Conklin and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Pursuant to section 4(6) of the same act as chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I am pleased to table five copies of that report.

The Speaker: The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table 11 letters from various groups that are concerned about the legislation on mental health.

I also would like to table one more letter that comes from the Canadian Addiction Counsellors Certification Federation. I just want to say that this morning I was disappointed by the unparliamentary language used by Edmonton-Glenora and the statement by Edmonton-Centre on this particular issue. I just want to read out one portion of this that the Canadian Addiction . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I understand you had some concerns that may have been expressed with regard. I don't think this is the time that you raise them. Are there any other documents you could put forward?

Mr. Yao: Just this letter from the Canadian Addiction Counsellors Certification Federation that expresses concerns that they were not included.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

2:50

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the five requisite copies of two documents, both of which I made reference to in my comments on H.A. Kostash school in the House last week. The first document is a collection of the most recent letters from community members in the Smoky Lake area advocating for the replacement of H.A. Kostash school.

The second document is a letter which I wrote to the Minister of Education asking for the same school replacement project.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a letter from the Finance minister to the chair of Public Accounts, our MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, that clearly outlines that he is going to change key financial information to Albertans just weeks before the provincial election.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise in this House to table the five requisite copies of responses from the Alberta Federation of Labour's Fair Start campaign. Having begun my own search for good-quality, affordable child care for my children some 45 years ago, with little success, and knowing that many of my constituents are doing the same today, I'm very supportive of the Fair Start campaign, which calls for the expansion of the $25-per-day child care centres pilot.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter from the Backcountry Hunters and Anglers dated November 27, 2018, that I referenced today in my member's statement, where they call the plans to sell off public lands, the liquidation of public lands, a disaster for all Alberta hunters and anglers.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table various articles in support of my member's statement and question period today. The first one is from the Calgary Herald: Suncor CEO Warns Foreign 'Exodus' from Oil Sands May Not Be Over.

Secondly, I have from the Fraser Institute a research bulletin: The Illusion of Alberta's Jobs Recovery: Government vs. Private Sector Employment.

Thirdly, I have an article from Global News: Number of Unemployed Albertans Living Without EI Benefits Remains High, at over 100,000; 133,000, to be exact.

Lastly, from Statistics Canada statistics on the number of unemployed in Alberta in 2018 versus 2017.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a copy of an article that I referred to this morning in Committee of the Whole for Bill 30. It's a Vancouver Sun piece: The Missing Harm-reduction Measure? Regulating Mental Health Professionals. I referred to this in my remarks, and I'm tabling the requisite number of copies in accordance with that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the five requisite copies of an editorial from the Edmonton Journal entitled Mental Health Professionals in Alberta Need Regulation from March of this year. It outlines the need to regulate counselling therapists, which I'm proud to see our government addressing through Bill 30.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Do any other members wish to make a tabling? The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies plus a bonus sixth copy for the minister of agriculture of an article that I referenced in my question from MIT Technology Review cleverly entitled Seaweed Could Make Cows Burp Less Methane and Cut Their Carbon Hoofprint.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would have a tabling? Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two documents today, the first being a letter that I wrote to you and sent yesterday just outlining some things that I think would make the Legislature a better place for all MLAs and that I hope to see considered in the next meeting of the Members' Services Committee; secondly, an article from the Edmonton Journal from November 25 of this year entitled 'We Are Stuck': Mobile Home Residents in East Edmonton Lose Advocate for Change, just outlining the issues that mobile-home residents are facing in Alberta right now.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Sabir, Minister of Community and Social Services, pursuant to the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act Alberta's Promise annual report 2017-18; pursuant to the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Act the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities annual report 2017-2018; pursuant to the Protection Against Family Violence Act the Family Violence Death Review Committee 2016 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we might be at points of order. The Member for Airdrie.

Point of Clarification

Mrs. Pitt: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 13(2). When my hon. colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat was asking the Minister of Finance questions regarding secrecy in the way that Treasury Board and Finance were changing reporting of key financial information to Albertans and highlighting the fact that this could appear to be hiding something, a very sneaky way of changing reporting to Albertans, you asked that the member at that time stick to government policy. I can't think of a policy more important than financial reporting of government budgets and financial statements. I would ask that you explain your ruling.

The Speaker: To be clear, I'll just read it. I think I said, "Get to the question." I also said to the member to get to the government policy question. As well, I told the minister to answer the question.

The issue is this. The member at the time was clearly moving on the edges of the parameters of preamble that has vague – vague – barriers in this House, but the member was delving into committee activities, which is an intervention which, in my view, is not appropriate here. If you go to House of Commons Procedure and Practice page 513: "When questions have been asked about a committee's proceedings, Speakers have encouraged Members to rephrase their questions, or have ruled the questions out of order." Therefore, that is my reason.

The other point of order you are withdrawing? Is that correct?

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: Yesterday at 11:25 a.m. the Member for Calgary-Greenway provided notice to my office of a question of privilege that he intended to raise in the Assembly. I did hear arguments yesterday, and I am prepared to rule today. Under Standing Order 15(2) a member wishing to raise a question of privilege must provide notice to my office at least two hours before the opening of the afternoon sitting. While this deadline was met, the member did not, based on the comments by the Government House Leader, provide a similar notice by that time to the members whose conduct would be called into question, which is also required by the standing order.

Notwithstanding the procedural deficiency, I did review the substance of the matter and concluded that the Member for Calgary-Greenway has not met the test for a prima facie case of breach of privilege or contempt. In fact, the member for the most part in his arguments drifted into matters pertaining to political parties, and little was said as to the reasons why the comments made by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Government House Leader on November 29, 2018, would give rise to a question of privilege.

An alleged breach of privilege or contempt, as I have said in this House many times, is a very serious matter, and the member's arguments did not support such a finding. As the Member for Calgary-Greenway notes in his letter providing notice of the question of privilege to my office, I ruled last Thursday that the Minister of Municipal Affairs was indeed out of order. The Member for Calgary-Greenway could have raised a question of privilege under Standing Order 15(5) on the day the words were spoken, but he chose to proceed by way of a point of order. He cannot now revisit the matter as a question of privilege.

Furthermore, the member was clearly aware at the time that comments were made that were offensive to him, and by waiting until yesterday to raise the matter as a question of privilege, he has not done so at the earliest opportunity, as required by Standing Order 15(6). Accordingly, I find that there is no prima facie question of privilege.

I believe we are at Orders of the Day.

Third Reading

Bill 27

Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Clerk and Madam Speaker. I rise today to move third reading of Bill 27, the Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act.

Over the past week I've enjoyed reading in Hansard and listening to the debate about this important legislation. This legislation has been a long time coming, over 28 years, Madam Speaker, and I have been happy to see it move forward in the last couple of weeks.

With regard to the purpose of the bill, as I've mentioned earlier, the proposed legislation is to implement a joint governance structure for three of Alberta's major public sector pension plans – the local authorities pension plan, the public service pension plan, and the special forces pension plan – and register them as jointly sponsored plans under the Employment Pension Plans Act. We proposed to do this because it makes sense. Our government believes that hard-working Albertans who have been saving up and paying into their pensions for decades should be able to retire in dignity.

The plans are funded by employees and participating employers, and the plans' assets rightly belong to the plans' members. By giving equal voice to employees and employers, we're taking the politics out of pensions. The owners of the plan will now get to make decisions about their plan. Those who bear the risk should be in charge.

Under joint governance the establishment of benefits provided under the plan is subject to agreement between employee and employer sponsors. Employee and employer sponsors also share responsibility for the risks associated with funding defined-benefit plans and are empowered to make the necessary adjustments when required without approval from government. The benefits of joint governance are numerous, including clear roles and responsibilities, shared trusteeship of plan assets, and equal representation of employee-employer groups.

Madam Speaker, I realize that any time a government proposes pension changes, a number of questions may be associated with that, so let me provide a few assurances. The plans are well funded, well managed, and have well-established risk management systems in place. They are well equipped to take on additional responsibilities associated with joint governance. The plans will be subject to regulatory oversight by Alberta's superintendent of pensions. For plan members the legislation will not change their pension benefits. The legislation will also provide further protection to accrued pension benefits, which may be particularly reassuring to retired members of these plans.

For those still working, their pension plan will continue as before. Behind the scenes their plan's governance structure will change, but the contributions they pay into the plan and the benefits they earn will continue, and their employer will also continue to make contributions on their behalf. There is no change to planned benefits or how the plans are funded and no cost to government as a result of these changes.

Madam Speaker, by giving equal voice to employees and employers, we're taking the politics out of pensions. Under joint governance pension management decisions will no longer happen to the owners of the plans; they will happen in partnership with the owners of the plans. The proposed legislation has the support of employers and employees and provides a path to transition these plans to joint governance by March 1, 2019.

Madam Speaker, I support this bill, government supports this bill, and we ask all members of this House to do the same. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, rise today to speak in support of Bill 27, Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act. Nine days ago, when I spoke to second reading of Bill 27, I highlighted that stewardship of the three public-sector plans covered by this legislation will be a privileged trust on the part of the new boards. As our UCP caucus prepares for third reading of Bill 27 this afternoon, I want to reiterate that statement.

Madam Speaker, today we heard a lot about joint governance and the establishment of sponsorship and corporate boards as well as other bureaucratic sounding terms. Understanding these important terms is important because they will form the foundation of the framework that shifts stewardship of the local authorities pension plan, the public service pension plan, and the special forces pension plan from the Minister of Finance to the contributors of each of the plans.

You know what else is important, Madam Speaker? The 350,000 – 350,000 – members of the pension plans. Every time we spoke of Bill 27 in this House, we thought of these members because they are Alberta's important public-sector employees. They are the firefighters, municipal snowplow operators, MRI technicians, home-care workers, and many, many more who dedicate their working hours to Albertans, to the people of our province. Bill 27 transfers $60 billion of their pension funds – $60 billion – to the new governance boards created by this legislation.

UCP supports moving to a joint governance model, but we still spent a lot of time scrutinizing this legislation because we wanted to ensure, Madam Speaker, that this transfer occurs as responsibly as possible. When reviewing the details of the proposed legislation, we looked and asked ourselves the following key questions. First, does Bill 27 provide fairness and balance for all employee-employer groups involved in the plan? Second, can the boards establish quickly enough to provide effective stewardship from the start? You'll recall that that's March 1; that's less than 90 days. Third, does Bill 27 ensure a high level of accountability for the members of each pension plan as well as Alberta taxpayers? With these questions guiding us, we used our initial time in the House to pose these questions to the Minister of Finance. Then during Committee of the Whole we proposed three amendments – three amendments – that we felt would strengthen the bill for the betterment of all.

One of these amendments, Madam Speaker, addressed the NDP's decision to choose March 1 as the quick-change date for the pension plans to transition to the new trustee boards. If the NDP government had introduced the legislation prior to the fall session, we wouldn't have thought it was rushed, but as the boards, including the pension corporations, have only a few months to get established, we believe the NDP is rushing and expediting the governance transfer. Our amendment was fair and simple. It would have extended the transition date to September 1, 2019, still much short of a year, and the opportunity to get it right and avoid some unintended consequences. This would have given the board six more months to fully set up before they accepted the stewardship of billions of dollars of pension funds, the hard-earned property and the hard-earned rights and savings of Alberta public servants and their families. It seemed to make a lot of sense. Delaying the implementation to the fall of 2019 is not a long time, but it would have ensured that members could be fully prepared to become the trustees of these three plans. I spoke at length about the significance and the importance of trustees. We were disappointed when the minister quickly dismissed this common-sense suggestion.

The next amendment addressed the balance of employee-employer representation on the boards. Madam Speaker, the minister spoke many times of the need to ensure a balance between employees and employers on the sponsorship and corporate boards. In fact, he described it as a key foundation – a key foundation – of the new joint governance structure. However, I pointed out to the minister that there may have been an oversight because we noticed that the bill requires equality on the sponsorship board but not on the three corporate boards. My amendment would have ensured even representation on all boards. The minister assured the Assembly, he assured Albertans that Bill 27 requires fully balanced membership on all boards. However, he did not point to the section in the bill that addresses this for corporate boards. He just went on to reject our amendment and asked NDP caucus colleagues to do the same.

Our third amendment, which is actually the first I brought forward, would have required that the Auditor General of Alberta be the auditor for the new pension corporations, which is currently the case. Madam Speaker, this amendment addressed a key issue I mentioned from the outset. That key issue is accountability for taxpayers' hard-earned funds. Again, the Auditor General has audited Alberta's public-sector pension plans for decades. The Auditor General also audits AIMCo, which is the investment manager for the pension plans and has been quite successful.

As you can see, the Auditor General's comprehensive analysis cannot be replicated by an independent auditor. This isn't a mark against independent auditors. It's just a fact. It's a fact because the Auditor General is in such a rare position to look at the whole picture, the totality of all of Alberta taxpayers' hard-earned tax dollars. That's one point. Another key point is that the Auditor General reports to the Legislative Assembly, so there will always be full disclosure to Albertans. Through 87 of us there would have always been full disclosure to Albertans. An independent auditor, on the other hand, will have no such requirement to provide an annual public report.

Why is this important to our UCP caucus? Because, Madam Speaker, approximately half of the funds in these pension plans, around $30 billion, has been contributed by Alberta taxpayers, the 4.1 million hard-working Albertans. These are, after all, public pension plans, and governments both provincial and municipal are major contributors to them. To our UCP caucus it only made sense to amend Bill 27 to ensure that the Auditor General remains the auditor of the plans. That they are moving to a new governance model does not seem relevant to the fact that $30 billion worth of government funds are invested in these plans.

Madam Speaker, let me also point out that the Auditor General's office was not consulted when the government was deciding to remove it as the pension plan auditor. One of our best, hard-working departments was not consulted. The office, however, was informed about it the day before – the day before – the minister introduced the bill in the House. My goodness. Why are they in such a rush?

The minister chose not to support this common-sense amendment either. Madam Speaker, while we're on the topic of accountability, I want to note that I have been unable to obtain a clear answer. I've been unable to obtain a clear answer from the minister about where the liability from the plan rests after the transition occurs, billions and billions of dollars, the important property and in some cases life savings of our hard-working public servants.

Let me explain, Madam Speaker. Bill 27 transfers all authority for these plans from the Minister of Finance to the new sponsorship and corporate boards. All authority. The transfer of authority presumably includes transferring liability for the $60 billion worth of investments to the new pension plan corporations. I asked the Minister of Finance and his office to confirm this interpretation of Bill 27. They did respond, but the answer was not as clear-cut as I would have hoped. I then posed the question to the Minister of Finance, but unfortunately I did not receive an answer.

So, Madam Speaker, as you can see, the UCP has performed due diligence with Bill 27. I am happy to note that an important point we have learned during this process is that all three pension funds report good health today. There was some concern about the discount rate being used, but all three pension funds report good health today. According to information we received from the minister's office, they are either fully funded or almost fully funded.

We also appreciate that joint governance is considered a best practice and many jurisdictions are moving towards it. In fact, Ontario, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia have already transferred stewardship to the contributors of their plans.

So, Madam Speaker, we certainly have faith in this structure. Still, as the Official Opposition it is our job to do our best to ensure Alberta's framework is well constructed, the foundation is strong...

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member. Hon. members, please take your seats. We're not in committee. Thank you.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Still, as the Official Opposition it is our job to ensure Alberta's framework, Alberta's foundation is well constructed from day one.

Madam Speaker, I accept that the government is absolutely keen to transfer all authority to the new governance boards in less than 90 days, by March 1. But I also note that the legislation allows cabinet to choose another date. The legislation allows cabinet to choose another date. Hopefully, the minister monitors the process and shows prudence on this point for the benefit of our hard-working pensioners.

Madam Speaker, crafting legislation is complex, and it's always important, crucial, that it is done well. This is especially important with Bill 27 because the new boards created under this legislation will become custodians of billions of dollars worth of workers' and employers' contributions. During the passage of Bill 27 and through our amendments the United Conservative Party sought to ensure that the boards are able to meet the highest standards right from the beginning, to get it right right from the beginning. Again, we were very disappointed that the minister chose to dismiss all our attempts to strengthen this bill. But, in spite of this, we have great faith in the appointees of the new board. We have great faith that the appointees will show great responsibility – great responsibility – as they meet the important challenges before them in this new era of pension stewardship.

Madam Speaker, thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak to third reading of Bill 27. I just wanted to clarify some of the comments and concerns that were brought up by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Having boards, having the governance models changing from the sponsorship to the sponsorship boards: it's not exactly a new thing that's happening within the pension plans. Many – the LAPP, the PSPP – already have boards that must report to their members annually. They provide an update at the end of each year about how much each member has contributed, how much they're eligible for if they are to retire, and what the plan has currently in it.

The difference now, when we're looking at the changes, is that we're just removing the politics out of the game. Joint governance really removes the Finance minister out of being able to be the only person that makes the ultimate decisions of the plan. Now we will have equal representation from the employer and equal representation from the employees. They actually get to discuss and make decisions based on their plan as equals instead of having someone being able to come in and say: well, we recognize you've made these decisions, but now the Finance minister has decided to go a different direction.

One of the reasons why joint governance is something that's supported in many other public pension plans across the country is because of the fact that there can be unilateral changes made by governing parties. We saw this in 2014, when there was a decision being made around whether or not public service pension plans should still have the same retirement age as before, or when we were looking at removing the COLA, which is the cost-of-living allowance. There was a significant pushback in the province in 2004 by many of the holders of the LAPP, the PSPP, and the securities pension because of the fact that there was going to be an arbitrary change to the pension plans. This plan now gives equality between both sides, the employer and the employee.

The other thing that's extremely important about this was the comments about the Auditor General and the fact that, you know, ultimately maybe he should be the one that's reviewing the plans. Well, in other joint governance areas in other areas in the country, it's not the Auditor General that does it. It's an agreed-upon auditor on behalf of the employer and the employee that audits the plan. They still have a responsibility under the legislation to report back to the plan owners. There will be an annual report, no different than under the PSPP as it exists now and under the LAPP as it exists now, and that report will be made public. There's still the ability to have that transparency, like, to the owners of the pension plan. The difference is that it doesn't have to be reported to the Legislature, again removing the politics out of the governing of the pension plan.

The other piece that I wanted to talk to as well is about the investment. The hon. member was talking about how these are public dollars that are being invested in these pension plans, so taxpayers should be concerned about what this all looks like. Well, to be honest with the member and to everyone in this House, as a contributor to the public service pension plan, as a contributor to the LAPP they are also taxpayers. So I'm pretty sure that they're going to be very concerned not only of the fact of what their retirement future will look like – and they will want to have viability in their plan – but also the fact that they are contributing to the plan on both sides.

They are taxpayers, and they are also employees. They have significantly more vested interest to make sure that the plan is successful. The one thing we have to always remember when we're talking about people that work for the government of Alberta is that they are not just people that work for the government of Alberta; they actually pay taxes and they actually contribute to society outside of just being a public servant. So they are very much concerned about tax dollars and what the government is doing around spending and all of those things.

The additional comments as well about where the investment currently sits. There's a five-year transition plan. If the investors of the plan on the employer and the employee side decide that they want to continue to have the plan invested where it is, it can continue to stay there. There is nothing in this legislation saying that they must pull the money out of where it's currently invested, absolutely nothing. If everybody sits down together and they have a conversation and go, "Our plan is viable. The investments are working. We like the relationship that we have with our investor," then they can continue to do that. If for some reason the boards and the governing bodies decide that the relationship isn't working the way that they'd like and the investment isn't viable, then maybe they can change it.

But the reality is that this isn't something that on March 1 all of a sudden billions of dollars are going to be pulled out of an account and transferred somewhere else and we're going to create a whole bunch of pension plans that aren't viable. That's just not the way that it would work. The pension contributors wouldn't want that to happen because that is their retirement fund. They want to make sure that they're just as viable as any other plan that they would be investing in, whether it would be their RRSPs or any of those other things. Investors want to make sure that they have viability in their plans.

I just wanted to clarify that. There isn't much else. I just wanted to make sure that we were clear on that, and I think I'll cede the floor so that someone else can speak to some of the comments that were made.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be brief. I wanted to just say that, first of all, I think that the idea of being able to have control of your own pension is a great idea. I own RRSPs. I'm very interested in being able to make sure that they get their greatest return investment. I think it's a fantastic idea. I like the model, and I will be voting for it.

First of all, the LAPP is 104 per cent funded, the PSPP is 94 per cent funded, and the SFPP is actually 89 per cent funded. The question that I have is: in terms of consultation has the government had the opportunity to be able to bring representatives of each of those pension funds into a room and at least tell the LAPP that you're going to be bringing on a group that is only 89 per cent funded, so they have an unfunded liability? I think that that's something I haven't heard in the debates that we've heard here, and it would be great to be able to get some of that information. I think that that's important for all of these pension funds in order to be able to know what they're getting themselves into.

The other point, really quickly, that I wanted to make, Madam Speaker, is that when I asked the Finance minister why it took him three and a half years to bring this forward, I was actually very disappointed in his answer. His answer was, after lots of scoffing and mocking on the other side: we've had a busy slate. Now, if this was so important to do, you would think that this would have been done in year 1. I guess the disingenuousness of the argument, that "we had a busy slate; sorry we couldn't get to it until right at the end of our mandate," is surprising that they would actually make that kind of argument. If this was really that important and really that valuable to the pensions, then they would have done that in year

1. They had the time, and this could have been brought forward. There's no doubt about it. So that argument is very weak. Because I didn't have the opportunity to respond to what the minister said, I wanted to make sure that in third reading here I was able to get that on Hansard.

With that, I actually am, again, happy with what I'm seeing in terms of what it's doing for each of these pensions, being able to gain that control. I will be very much in favour of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Well, thank you very much. It is indeed a real honour and pleasure to rise and speak to third reading of this Bill 27, Joint Governance of Public Sector Pension Plans Act, fall 2018. I have worked as a physician at the Cross Cancer Institute and the University of Alberta for over 40 years. I've enjoyed all of that experience. The success of whatever I've been able to achieve is entirely due to a phenomenal staff at both of those institutions. When I'm talking about the staff, I'm talking about nurses like those two hero nurses that I introduced in Introduction of Guests today, to laboratory technologists and radiology technologists as well as radiation therapists. They're actually the technologists that administer radiation therapy to patients needing it.

There are also research scientists that work at the Cross. In fact, my wife had a 25-year career as a research scientist in radiobiology. Her pension is through the LAPP. I have to tell you, just listening to these comments coming from the other side, that it's clear there's some misunderstanding of the importance of making sure we've got good human relations with our staff in these sorts of institutions and that people feel valued, the folks that are doing this great work. I mean, my nurses are working 24 hours a day. They are the interface with my patients. The success of my treatments, as few as the successes may be, whatever successes I've had, I can ascribe to the ability of those nurses to be able to interact with the patients and because they know that they're valued by their supervisors and by their employer and by people like me. They don't feel valued if they feel that their pension might be altered at some time in the future arbitrarily.

In fact, that was what was going on in I believe 2012, when there was the last sort of big review of public-sector pensions. There was a threat – and it's been alluded to here already – to actually change the terms and conditions of public-sector pensions. It was a dire threat. I felt it as the spouse of somebody carrying that pension. I've heard from the nurses that I work with and the lab techs that I work with and the cleaners in the hospital that I work with that they were feeling very much under the gun because the government of the day, one of the legacy parties of our opposition, wanted to make some dire changes to the pensions.

Actually, Madam Speaker, I'm sure you were going through that same experience at that time, everyone that was working in health care and, by the way, everyone, for instance, that was working for the special forces – our sheriffs and peace officers and other folks – the wildlife officers that work protecting our environment, the hydrologists that I know, that work to make sure that our water quality is really safe. And I could go on and on. All of these people, that this province depends upon to provide quality service, were really worried that the pensions that they had been contributing to were going to be arbitrarily changed and that it was going to be done in a paternalistic way by the government of the day.

What this bill does: it basically removes that anxiety. It tells our valued public servants that they are valued, that we respect them, that they have made a contribution, not just a monetary contribution to their pension plan, but they've made a contribution by being employed by the government of Alberta to provide these services that all Albertans depend upon. This is the main point that I really want to make on this. I have been interested in pension reform for a long time, going back to probably 1992, when the last big changes in the pension structures were made, and there's obviously still a lot of work to be done. I think there were good changes made in 1992, but there is a need to make these further changes.

The last comment I'm going to make is just in response to a previous speaker and some other one who was concerned about whether the LAPP is going to be overwhelmed by the deficit. In fact, as with most other pension plans in this province, these plans are going to be regulated by the superintendent of pensions under the Employment Pension Plans Act. You know, each of the three pensions is going to have a separate corporate and sponsor board. There's not going to be mixing, if you wish – and I don't think that that's all that big a threat – of the funds from the LAPP with the special forces, et cetera.

I'm going to finish with some stakeholder quotes, and I'm going to give one from a registered nurse. Again, those two nurses that I introduced today: I've worked with one of them for over 30 years. She's continuing to work on a part-time basis at the Cross Cancer Institute. The other nurse had worked at the Royal Alexandra hospital for many years. That's our major downtown hospital. It provides a phenomenal service to Edmonton and, actually, to all of northern Alberta. We're dependent upon those folks. Well, let me tell you what a nurse, Karen Kuprys, said:

I am so happy about this. As a nurse and a frontline health-care worker, I want to be able to always focus on the well-being of my patients. So it's great that the promise made by the government almost 30 years ago has finally been honoured.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

Bill 22 An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Larivee: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today to move third reading of Bill 22, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities.

This bill represents a decisive step forward for Alberta and the more than 10,000 children and youth who are currently receiving services across our province. Bill 22 is a first step, one which will make the child intervention system fairer for indigenous peoples and improve supports for children and youth in and out of care. These changes will help protect vulnerable children, support strong families, and ultimately prevent children from coming into care.

Since creating the Ministry of Children's Services last year, our government has committed to improving Alberta's child intervention system and strengthening supports for the children and families that it serves, which is why we formed the all-party Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, which included members from both sides of the Legislature. I'm proud of how all parties came together, putting politics aside, to listen to families and experts like the Child and Youth Advocate and Cindy Blackstock. I want to thank all the members of the ministerial panel for devoting their time and energy to this important endeavour.

As a special note, I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow for standing with us yesterday when the Official Opposition was grandstanding on this extremely important matter, when they chose politics over doing the right thing. The Member for Calgary-Elbow knows and we know that Bill 22 reflects many of the challenges and frustrations heard by the panel. He knows and we know that this bill comes from listening to indigenous voices and that it reflects their concerns. It reflects the ideas and frustrations that I've heard too often from indigenous families, communities, and leaders across our province. Indigenous leaders in Lesser Slave Lake and throughout Alberta have told me over and over again about problems that undermine trust in the child intervention system and about the need to make changes that will meet the needs of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit children across our province. In the lead-up to Alberta's apology for the '60s scoop I repeatedly heard survivors say how devastating it was to lose their connection to their families and communities, their culture, and their language.

Madam Speaker, our government listens to Albertans, and we listened to these indigenous communities in order to get this first step right. When action is needed, our government stands up and does what is right, and nothing is more important than the safety and well-being of children. That is why this bill offers practical, common-sense solutions to problems that have been overlooked and ignored for far too long, for decades, under previous governments.

Under Bill 22 First Nations will be automatically notified and could appear in court whenever someone applies for private guardianship of children of their band. Currently the Family Law Act allows applications for guardianship of a child without requiring a mandatory home study and cultural connection plan. This bill closes that Family Law Act loophole and ensures that every child benefits from a mandatory home study, cultural connection plan, and ongoing supports to meet their needs. Right now children also lose financial supports for permanency if their guardian dies, moves away, or otherwise changes. Madam Speaker, this is wrong. No child should be deprived of the supports that they need, and no caregiver should be prevented from stepping up because they lack the financial means to care for a loved one. We are making sure that financial supports stay with the child to help pay for counselling, respite care, transportation, or other important services.

Madam Speaker, the child intervention system is incredibly complex, with life-changing decisions made every single day. This bill introduces important changes that will help caseworkers and courts make better decisions. This includes new guiding principles that highlight child safety and make indigenous involvement a fundamental component of the system. New mandatory decision-making criteria will also require courts and caseworkers to consider every facet of a child's safety and well-being when deciding whether to remove a child from a home or grant a guardianship order or make other life-altering decisions. Every child's culture and family connections must be respected, and every child's opinion must always be heard. We're ensuring that these aren't just items on a shopping list in our matters to be considered but are embedded in all court and caseworker decisions.

Our government is committed to reconciliation and to creating a stronger, safer child intervention system. We will not let recommendations sit on shelves. This bill is the first step of a three-step review of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. We know there is more work to do, and we're engaging with indigenous peoples this winter on the next round of changes, but Bill 22 is an important step forward, one that addresses the ministerial panel's consensus-based recommendations and fulfills the very first action mentioned in our public action plan. All of these changes are important steps towards creating a stronger, safer tomorrow, where children are kept safe, where indigenous families and cultural connections are better respected, and where children are kept with their families and their communities whenever possible.

If passed, Bill 22 will come into force on February 28, 2019. I am proud of this bill and what it means for the children and families of this province. These changes will help keep children safe, supported, and connected to their community so that they can grow up into healthy, thriving adults. All children deserve that chance no matter where they are born or where they live.

We have still got a long way to go, but make no mistake: we are taking meaningful action to protect children and support families and communities. This bill should transcend party lines, and I ask all members to put aside partisan politics to recognize that we need to do a better job to support the children of Alberta. I urge you to support this important legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have some wow words spinning around in my head after the minister gave that little presentation starting from very partisan standpoints and ending with a "we should not be very partisan on this issue" standpoint.

Madam Speaker, let me be very clear. We are here because of the government's inaction and complete failure on this file three and a half years ago. Three and a half years ago in this Assembly we engaged in an emergency debate over the inaction and complete failure of this government and the mishandling of the Serenity file. The public was outraged because of this NDP government's failure. Not only that, but they refused to put together a legislative committee where we could have open and transparent dialogue through the course of a panel process. Now, I understand that there was good work that happened on this panel. I have been told as much by colleagues of mine that were able to participate in this process. There were good things that came out, and there are some very, very good things in this bill.

The government also mentioned the apology for the '60s scoop, Madam Speaker, which, I should mention, was initiated and pushed forward by my hon. colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. The reason that this government is aware of the issues surrounding the '60s scoop is from the Official Opposition. This is the second case, just in my conversation today, of the Official Opposition leading and the government following. And you know what? Albertans are pretty thankful for that. They're absolutely pretty thankful for the leadership that the Official Opposition has shown on the child intervention file because without that, jeez Louise, we'd still have the minister of human services standing up and saying: I've accepted the report; I've accepted the report, but I will refuse to act on any of the recommendations made in that report. That's why we're here.

This government failed, absolutely, completely failed, and then they come forward with the recommendations from the child and youth panel, part 1 of 3. We are months away from an election. Will we see part 2 and part 3? At what point is this government going to completely do the work, and what is the reasonable expectation that this government has for the Official Opposition to blindly say yes to part 1 of 3? When offered amendments in this House, the government refused to engage, saying: "It's not important. It's okay. We don't need to define family. This isn't what this bill is about. Don't worry about it."

Madam Speaker, there are so many things to say in regard to Bill 22. It's got a great name, An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities. I hope that I've reminded the government of the failures that they've been leading in the last three and a half years and of a "you're welcome" from the Official Opposition to Albertans in bringing these issues forward. I'm happy to see that our leadership over the last three and a half years has proven to be fruitful for the children in this province, most importantly, especially those in our child intervention system.

I think I've said what I need to say in regard to this legislation. I have many concerns around this being a portion of the whole bill that is yet to come. I have concerns that part 2 and part 3 are never going to come to this House, never going to come to this Assembly. The government has all the information now, too, because this wasn't an open and transparent process.

With that, Madam Speaker, I myself will find it very hard to support this for the reasons that I've outlined. I look forward to the government continuing to attempt to fix the failures that they have been a part of in the last three and a half years of their mandate, and I urge all members of this Assembly to think hard and long about the impacts of this legislation for our children in the child intervention system moving forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. When I hear a story like Serenity's or, in fact, the story of any other child when there are reports from the Child and Youth Advocate, my heart absolutely breaks. I think of my own kids, and I think how children are born ready to learn, curious, and full of joy, and I know that every member of this House feels a heavy responsibility to do everything possible to ensure that no child's story ends the way that Serenity's did.

Firstly, I'd just like to thank all of the members who served on the ministerial panel. I know a lot of time was spent travelling around the province, and I know that what you heard was heavy, and it was challenging to hear. I think that this work that you did was extremely valuable and has led to changes, some of which are reflected in this bill, so thank you to every single member who spent the time doing that work over the course of the last year.

There are a few pieces of this bill that I particularly appreciate. The Guiding Principles section at the beginning is really important because it serves to ensure that children's well-being is central to this legislation. As has been mentioned before, giving First Nations official standing in court is huge, and it works to peel back some of the years of colonial principles that our justice system was built on.

Thirdly, the thing that I really appreciate about this bill is that it ensures the voice of the child is included in choices that affect them.

Last fall I had the opportunity to attend a spoken-word performance by the Stardale Women's Group. It was a performance that was written and performed by indigenous girls aged 11 to 17, and they spoke frankly about the challenges – racism, stigma, and mental health issues – that they face. When I had the opportunity to speak to some of the girls afterward, they shared stories of their experiences in the child intervention system and, in many cases, strong desires to be reunited with their parents. It was hard to hear that the system, they felt, hadn't served them appropriately. Also, earlier this fall, at the march for missing and murdered indigenous women in Calgary, I heard the tearful pleas of a young man who simply wanted to know where his younger siblings were and if they were okay.

Ensuring the voices of children are heard is crucial to their well-being and to their safety, so I particularly appreciate this part of the bill. These are good steps, and I'm hopeful that we're on the way to even more good steps. You know, I don't think that the work is done until we know that every child in care is safe in Alberta and that every child's well-being is being considered, and I know that all of us want to work towards that together.

I'm thankful for this bill, I'm happy to support it, and that is all I have to say. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Larivee: Yeah. Let's just go.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a third time]

Bill 30 Mental Health Services Protection Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think I will give the floor to my colleagues to enter into debate and save my remarks for closing on third, but it's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 30 at this time and welcome my colleagues to join in with their questions and comments.

I think we had some fruitful conversation earlier today, and I look forward to that continuing as we take action to improve and execute the commitments that we've made, both in the throne speech that were recommended through fatality reviews and that we know many members of the mental health community have been advocating for for years.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I'm proud to be in a government that makes promises, keeps them, and works to make life better for families. Certainly, the families we've heard from accessing mental health services in times of extreme nervousness, chaos, and uncertainty deserve every certainty that they are being well served, protected, and that the professionals that are working with them are held to a high standard as well as the facilities that they are living in.

I look forward to hearing from some of my hon. colleagues, including the cosponsors of this very important bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on third reading of Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act. This bill consists of two parts, as has been mentioned in this House and as I have read the bill myself as it reads. The portion surrounding the regulation and licensing with treatment facilities and then the second part, being the creation of a college for counsellors here in this province – I'm not sure if I have mentioned this piece before, but this was actually one of the first issues that I contacted my own MLA about, prior to being elected, many, many years ago in response to the creation of a college for counsellors.

It's important for a number of different reasons, I think, most importantly creating a quality and a standard of care in this province and also creating more access to quality counselling services. Madam Speaker, as you know, we're facing crisis levels in this province when it comes to that particular issue, and I think this is a good step forward in helping to address that crisis. Then in relation to the first part of the bill in terms of licensing and regulation of the treatment facilities, providing good, quality care in the facilities is extremely important for my constituents but most certainly for all Albertans.

I look forward to watching the process as this goes along. I think it's important to watch it very closely. I mean, the creation of a college is a process in and of itself, but we've outlined a number of potential unintended consequences through the course of this debate and some examples that have been seen in the province of Ontario, that's done a very, very similar thing. I think it's important that we keep an eye on this legislation, see how it rolls out, and watch it and adjust as necessary as this moves along.

With that, I am pleased to support Bill 30, and I urge that my colleagues support it as well. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm truly honoured today to stand and speak to third reading of Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act. I'm incredibly pleased to see this bill come forward as it's something that I've long advocated for. Prior to getting elected, I was working as a provisional psychologist in High Level, and it was seeing the consequences of decades of neglect of mental health services by the previous government that spurred me to run for election, among other things. My private member's Bill 205, supporting accessible addiction treatment facilities, addressed the need for an online registry of addiction treatment facilities, and I look forward to working with the Department of Health as this part of the bill is implemented.

But I have an even more personal reason to support improved mental health and addiction treatment services, and I'd like to share just some of my family's story to help highlight just who Bill 30 is intended to help. I have a family history of depression, and I've had my own battles with the disease. I've lost family members to suicide and addictions. Depression took its greatest and final toll, however, on my daughter Amaya. She fought the illness for years. When she was suicidal, we'd sit in the emergency room for hours while a stream of people with visible, external pain were seen first. We'd finally give up and go home. As her pain continued with no real relief, she began the cycle of self-medicating. It began with prescription meds, then gradually escalated to more powerful substances.

Amaya did not want to be addicted; she just wanted the pain to stop. She tried to get support and help to get well, but every step of the way she encountered barriers. For example, to get into treatment, you need to be clean, so for days at a time Amaya would have to show up at detox at 9 every morning to see if there was a bed. Can you imagine arriving at emergency sick, bleeding, and in pain, only to be sent away and told: "Come back tomorrow. Maybe we'll help you then"?

Trying to get into a treatment facility was equally difficult. There's no easy way to access information about these facilities and find out when and where there's availability. As we've heard throughout debate on Bill 30, not only are there government-run facilities, but there are many operated by nonprofit agencies and on-reserve. There are no consistent standards or guidelines to help individuals know what that treatment might look like, whether it is offered by qualified staff, and whether they can have confidence in the process. The application process itself is incredibly discouraging. I found it daunting myself to navigate. Can you imagine how much harder it would be for someone who's already desperately ill?

The provisions of Bill 30 will go a long way towards improving access, but it does even more. In my experience as a provisional psychologist, I know how important it is that individuals have confidence in their therapists. In terms of effectiveness the personal relationship between client and therapist matters more than the individual qualifications of the counsellor. Whether they're an addictions counsellor, a psychologist, or a social worker, however, it is essential that these professional titles are protected and recognized. Albertans need the confidence that they are receiving help from someone who is qualified in their respective field to provide it. For far too long in Alberta anyone could call themselves a counsellor. I'm really pleased that this is going to change.

By providing legitimacy and requiring licensing of facilities, Bill 30 will help reduce the stigma and move us further towards treating individuals with mental illness and substance-use disorders as people with medical problems deserving of the same kind of respectful treatment given to those with cancer or diabetes or any other illness.

I think it's really important that we talk about the stigma. The Mental Health Commission of Canada estimates that more than 60 per cent of people with mental health problems and mental illness won't seek the help they need. Stigma is one of the main reasons. In my family we certainly found this to be true. During Amaya's last months of life she went to emergency several times desperately seeking help. She was dismissed as just another addict and sent back out into the street. She told me how horrible she was made to feel by the very people whose role was supposed to be to protect, help, and heal.

The stigma impacted me and my other daughters, too. We all felt it. Stigma allows others to distance themselves and say: "It's not me. It's not my family." This creates a fear of reaching out to ask for help and admitting that there's a problem. The messaging is subtle. You watch your loved one in pain, and you know that they're struggling with an illness beyond their control, but you feel helpless and at times impatient and frustrated with their behaviour. Stigma impacts the way health professionals and front-line service providers react. Stigma creates an environment where someone with an addiction is looked down on as being weak, as having made really bad choices, and perhaps even deserving the consequences.

Well, let me tell you this. Amaya was the strongest person I know. She fought hard. She wanted to get well. She did not want to give up. She did not choose to have a mental illness, nor did she choose to become addicted. She has a family who loved her and did their best to support her. My last conversation with her was about a plan to support her in recovery, and she was ready and willing.

Amaya was beautiful, kind-hearted, generous. She was an incredibly talented singer, musician, and artist. She had a great sense of humour and was so much fun to hang out with. She leaves a large hole in our family and in our hearts that will never be filled. That is what mental illness and addictions look like.

During the process of researching my Bill 205 over this past year, I heard Amaya's story over and over. I heard from many stakeholders that I consulted with: support groups, health care professionals, law enforcement, community elders, and First Nations. I've received numerous letters and calls and was privileged to have individual conversations with many Albertans who shared their own deeply personal stories with me.

One in 5 Albertans experience an addiction or mental illness, and they're very often co-occurring. It is estimated that 1 in 10 Albertans will require substance-use treatment at some point in their lives. Bill 30 takes another step towards addressing concerns highlighted in the 2015 Valuing Mental Health report and is part of more than 100 initiatives under way across the province.

Unfortunately, while starting to implement these recommendations, the government was forced to respond to an opioid crisis, a health crisis of incredible and previously unmatched proportions. And make no mistake. This crisis was a long time in coming and a consequence of years of Conservative government neglect in the area of mental health. In 2017 there were 569 unintentional, fentanyl-related deaths in Alberta. My daughter Amaya was one of them. In the first 32 weeks of 2018 425 Albertans lost their lives to fentanyl overdoses, and we continue to average almost two accidental drug poisoning deaths related to fentanyl every single day. That's why it's so important that this bill be passed and implemented without delay as it will provide yet more support and access to treatment for those dealing with opioid addiction.

As part of the spectrum of treatment facilities I just want to briefly speak about the importance of the supervised consumption services that have been opened in several locations beginning this spring, including at the Royal Alexandra hospital. These programs save lives, reduce the transmission of infections, enhance community safety, and help individuals access treatment. Had these services been in place earlier, they might well have saved Amaya's life.

Bill 30 reinforces that our government is committed to supporting Albertans to access co-ordinated and integrated addiction and mental health services and supports. A better understanding of the co-occurrence of these disorders is needed along with an understanding of the importance of fair, timely, and evidence-based treatment.

Although the provisions of this bill will improve access to treatment facilities and help Albertans have confidence in the safety and quality of the treatment they receive, there's still much to be done to alleviate the burdens and the obstacles facing patients seeking help. When researching my private member's bill, I heard about the many barriers faced: challenges accessing appropriate treatment, the need for locations that are accessible, more supports for families and individuals with children who need access to treatment, and so much more.

We still need to work to ensure that individuals are treated respectfully and with nonstigmatizing language. Not only health providers but peace officers, judges, justices of the peace, other front-line workers, and Albertans in general need to be educated regarding mental health, substance-use disorders, the co-occurrence of mental illness and addiction, and harm reduction strategies. We need to shift our thinking and perception towards understanding mental illness and addictions as a medical issue, thus helping reduce stigma and barriers.

Unfortunately, stigma and shame persist, creating significant barriers for those seeking help, and there also remains a resistance and skepticism to the research and best practices around treatment. Sadly, we've even seen these attitudes coming from the Official Opposition when it comes to programs like supervised consumption, which have been characterized by their leader as: nothing more than helping addicts inject poison into their bodies.

Make no mistake. Substance-use dependency is not a choice. People seeking treatment need many options through which to access immediate care, and we must provide a wide range of support services to help them on the path to recovery, stability, and health. Not only is this essential for the individuals who are ill, but their families also need our support and understanding.

Our government is working to build robust services for people living with mental illness and substance-use disorders. Bill 30 will continue to build upon that work and ensure that Albertans are aware of the treatment services available to them and are able to access these services with the same level of support we give Albertans with other illnesses. Licensing treatment facilities and regulating the counselling profession also enhance confidence in the quality of the treatment itself. I look forward to working closely with the Health ministry as they continue to put these concepts into practice in the effective delivery of mental health and addiction treatment services in the province.

When I made the difficult decision to speak publicly about my family's experience and about the loss of my daughter Amaya, I did so in the hopes of increasing understanding and improving the dialogue, thus reducing stigma. Mental illness and addiction have serious consequences for each and every one of us. It is a disease, not a choice. We need to openly discuss the nature of mental illness and substance-use disorders and educate ourselves about addiction. Individuals with addictions and mental illness are our daughters, our sons, our parents, our neighbours, our co-workers, our brothers, our sisters. They need our support and understanding so they can freely seek treatment and manage symptoms without facing roadblocks and stigma. We need to help them get well and ensure that they are always treated with the dignity and the respect they deserve.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to take the opportunity to thank the member for sharing an incredibly personal experience that none of us would want to have to go through. A number of us were able to come and attend your daughter Amaya's funeral, and it was one of those moments where we realize how small the world is. I didn't know that friends of mine were friends with your daughter, so I had the opportunity to support not only you but my friends at that funeral.

The thing that I remarked on, having the opportunity to share in that and learn a bit about her life, seeing her as a friend and a daughter, an artist and a performer, those things, is that it's tragic to feel that loss in a community. Our Health minister, our Deputy Premier, was just remembering the video that was shared of your daughter singing The Sun Will Come Out Tomorrow. It was an amazing moment to be able to share with you.

The things that we fight for in this House, that there was no movement on before having a Premier and an NDP government to move them forward, things like harm reduction services and having more resources being allocated to emergency housing – people find themselves in very compromised and tragic circumstances, and we need to be able to do more to support those people.

I'm so impressed and honoured to be able to serve in this Legislature with you because your ability to continue to advocate on these issues and be such a powerful voice, to help us continue to do this work even when faced with such incredible loss is an example for us all to look up to you for. Thank you for that. If I had to offer another song, it would be You'll Never Walk Alone by Rodgers and Hammerstein – I think those are the names of the writers – you know, because you're part of this team. We share the same values, and we fight for the same things, and we always, always have your back. We're here for you. Thank you again for sharing an incredible story.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to take a moment to acknowledge the incredible strength and courage and leadership shown by the member in sharing such a personal story. All of us being able to share what our experiences are is the kind of example that we need to set for Albertans, that the experiences that we have are the experiences that they have. I'm in complete agreement with the member about the approach to treating addiction. It shouldn't be a fight; it should just be common sense. It should just be a fact that we provide the kinds of services that are required to prevent and treat addictions. Once again, thank you very much for sharing your family's experience.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In the abbreviated time that's available, I want to thank the member for everything she did to contribute to the ministerial panel after this had occurred. She brought her experiences to the table. I think we're seeing that in the legislation that we're bringing forward. She had a very unique perspective on what was on the table, and because of that, our child intervention system is going to be better off for it, too. I want to thank the member for all that she brought to the table and continues to bring to the table as we discuss legislation in this House.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to take a moment to talk about this bill, Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act. Mental health has been a chief focus for me in many ways in my time as an MLA over the last three and a half years. So I really appreciate the steps that we've been able to take as a government and, indeed, the leadership that the Minister of Health has shown on many fronts, and the former Associate Minister of Health and now Member for Calgary-Acadia. So I really appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill.

I'd like to begin by acknowledging, as others have, the powerful words that were just shared by my colleague from Peace River. Indeed, my sympathy goes out to her. I've known far too many and still know far too many people that have lost loved ones because they've been unable to find the help they needed when they needed it, for whatever reason that might be, and unfortunately decided that their pain was too much. My sympathies are with her, and I thank her for her leadership in bringing forward her private member's bill, which is along similar lines to a lot of what we're debating here today in wanting to lay out a patients' bill of rights in accessing mental health supports or help in addressing substance use for much the same reasons as we're laying out here. We want to recognize that those that are seeking those supports and those services deserve to be able to access them in dignity, in safety, free from stigma and, indeed, as this bill lays out, to be able to access them from people that they know, when they claim that they are offering a level of professional service, indeed have the training and understanding and the qualifications to be able to do so.

Now, I wanted to address some of the comments that were made this morning when we were debating this in Committee of the Whole. As I listened to the members, I had several thoughts come to me, and I wanted to comment on a few. The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka was speaking and expressing his concerns about limiting choice available to individuals who were seeking help, and he spoke specifically about excluding options in accessing supports for counselling for mental health and addictions. He spoke of his concern that we are going to restrict them only to government-approved services and the lack of knowledge about the quality or the efficacy of those services that are being provided.

What occurred to me, Madam Speaker, is that, you know, I've spoken openly often about my own struggles with mental health. One of the things that maybe I have not spoken about as much is my own challenges with physical health. For a number of years I've struggled with severe food intolerance, a number of other symptoms, a number of other issues. I spent a lot of time going to a lot of different doctors, medical doctors, specialists, getting all of the medical tests run. When I exhausted all of those and nobody could provide me with any insight or help, then I saw many naturopaths and many doctors that worked in alternative medicine and a whole gamut of other people because – I can tell you, Madam Speaker – when you're in that situation and feeling that kind of desperation, you'll look for any opportunity for help.

But the fact that I had to go through all of that and that I ended up finding help through a lot of my own research and indeed by going outside the system in many respects – indeed, I ended up finding a naturopath who had an understanding, who I could work with, and I've seen a great improvement over the last couple of years as I've worked with him. But the fact is that I am still very glad that that naturopath works with a college and is regulated.

You know, I may cut myself and be able to bandage that wound myself. I may be able to get help from a friend or an acquaintance who has a little bit of medical knowledge. I could have a sore throat or a pulled muscle. I could have a chronic problems with headaches. And maybe there's an herbal remedy that I might hear about from someone that might help me with that situation. Or I may even be living with chronic pain, diagnosed, and simply looking to an alternative to going on a heavy course of opioids or other painkillers and instead find help maybe through meditation or mindfulness or group therapy or other things that might help me. But the fact that those other options exist does not preclude the fact that we need to regulate the medical services that are involved and the medical people that are involved in those things. Those things can all exist simultaneously.

It is similar with mental health. Now, as I said, I had my own struggles, and through the years I saw a number of different individuals in looking for that help. Starting out as I did, as a young man coming from the faith community, I was sent to see a man who was, I believe, a psychologist. But you know, when I first went to see him, he told me that I was oppressed by a demon and wanted to work with me on that front. When we finally found no success, then he referred me to a psychiatrist.

I saw that psychiatrist, and she – I will be honest that I was not an easy person to diagnose. I was not able to communicate very well because I was in a state of pretty dark despair, severe anxiety, without any language of knowing how to communicate what I was experiencing or what was happening to me because all I knew was what I had lived and grown up with. She diagnosed me with schizophrenia. Didn't tell me that; I found that out later when my family doctor saw the medical records. Tried me out on a few different medications, and I'll tell you that there were some pretty freaky side effects that put a lot of fear into me and made it a lot worse in some respects. It was a long journey. That started out in 1991, 1992. I saw all manner of therapists, counsellors, individuals.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, as I said, that I recognize the need to have different alternatives for different places where people might be. Somebody who's struggling with alcoholism may benefit from a 12-step program. Some people go cold turkey, and they're perfectly fine with working that out on their own. Others need to go into a medical facility and sit down with folks who have the training and the knowledge who are able to provide them with that support. Same with people who are struggling with their mental health. Somebody who's struggling with anxiety or depression, maybe because of experiences growing up or trauma they've experienced: maybe talk therapy is going to be good for them. Maybe for them sitting down with their imam or their pastor or a yogi is going to give them the ability to talk that through and work those issues out.

But for others they may need professional help. They may need a dedicated program like when I had the honour of participating in the day treatment program at the University of Alberta hospital, where I got to spend just over three months with trained therapists in an approved and accredited program that helped me begin to lay the groundwork for, frankly, years later, when I would be able to actually start to pick up on some of the things that I heard and was taught in that room and be able to implement them to improve my own life.

But it's essential that when people in this incredibly vulnerable state – and let me be clear, Madam Speaker. When you are in this place, you are so vulnerable. When your mind is racing, your emotions are out of control, you have lost all perspective, and you don't know where you can turn, it is incredibly important that folks who are representing themselves as professional therapists, who are offering services be regulated, that we know that when people are reaching out and asking for help, the help that they are going to receive from individuals who are representing themselves as such is going to be qualified, particularly for folks that are going into residential programs where they are entrusting themselves physically in a situation of incredible dependence and, indeed, trust. We want to be sure that the provision of those services is being done in a safe and regulated manner.

I deeply appreciate the work that the minister has done on this, the consultation that she's had, and indeed recognizing the work that FACT has done. I remember meeting with the executive director. Her name again was Nicole Imgrund. I remember meeting with her in my office and talking with her, and I really appreciate the hard work and advocacy she has done over an extended period. To be clear, Madam Speaker, this was not arrived at overnight. This has been an ongoing conversation for quite some time, and I deeply appreciate when I see folks in the community who take that time and work carefully in their advocacy, reach out to talk to other groups to build that consensus and come and thoughtfully engage with government about moving forward on these things.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo this morning expressed some concerns around the consultations that have been happening and identified a group that he felt had not been heard. I appreciate that Nicole's organization, FACT Alberta, clarified that, indeed, they'd actively reached out to that particular group and that members from that group, in fact, sit on the steering committee for FACT Alberta and have had some input as part of this.

I do regret that as the member made his tabling today, he seemed to suggest that both myself and the Minister of Health, in discussing these things, have engaged in unparliamentary language. I would certainly encourage that member that if he feels that I used any unparliamentary language in my comments today, he bring that to the record or perhaps would consider at the time calling a point of order. Regardless, I recognize that he's done work in the field, that he himself has probably had some traumatic experiences in his work as a paramedic, so I can understand the passion that he brings to the table in wanting to ensure that people are helped.

But I think we need to be careful in these discussions, Madam Speaker, to be measured in how we're approaching this because, again, I do not think it's unreasonable that we bring in some basic standards, as other jurisdictions have done before us, so that we ensure that the types of services that are being offered to people are clearly identified, that they can clearly know when they are dealing with somebody who is a professional, who has training, who has background, who has education, has schooling and, again, ensuring that as we do so, we leave the room for these other options that indeed need to be available for people.

I recognize, Madam Speaker, that over the years we are just starting to get to the point where we recognize that mental health is every bit as important and as necessary as physical health, and because we have not historically had that recognition, we have not built up the same kinds of systems and indeed public coverage, access. Government has largely been absent from the provision of what are really often key medical services that are every bit as important as a person's physical health, and in the time before we began to recognize that importance, indeed, I recognize that other communities have indeed provided that service, and we are incredibly thankful that that has been there, that people have had the opportunity to talk with, you know, peer counsellors, that they've had the opportunity to find spiritual support when that is what they need and that is what they're looking for, that organizations have stepped up and provided counselling on a free or sliding scale basis.

It's an incredibly important network of services that we need to have available as we continue to address the issue of mental health because we recognize that the more we talk about it, then the more people recognize the need. Indeed, we see growing numbers of people trying to access services, and we just cannot keep up with the capacity to address it, so we need to have folks at all different points on the spectrum of services to help provide people with what they need when they need it. But, indeed, I think we need to move forward with ensuring that we have a level of services that are clearly identified as being provided by individuals who have training, who have knowledge because we do continue to learn. We do continue to find proven therapies. When we get into psychiatry and other areas, there are definitely proven methodologies and approaches that we know are effective, so it's important that we have a layer of services that is protected and regulated.

Indeed, the creation of this college of counselling therapy is not the last step on the road. This is the first step. So members that have been expressing some concerns about how this might impact other groups: there is room after the passage of this bill to have that conversation and to sit down and continue to work through regulation as this is established, just as has been done with every other college that has been created in the province.

I recognize that, again, some groups may feel a bit of fear about this change coming in, and I can understand that. With change comes some uncertainty. Again, these are groups who have provided important and essential services. But I truly believe, having spoken with some of the folks that have been advocating for this – and I think that with the opportunity we're going to have to appoint people and see people elected into positions to take on this work – that we have the capacity to do this well and do this right. This bill is the important first step on that road as we continue to acknowledge the incredible importance of mental health, as we continue to acknowledge the work we need to do to support people who are struggling with addictions in a humane way with a harm reduction approach that, as my colleague from Peace River noted, is rooted in ending stigma.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Like everyone, I'm sure, I was just fascinated by what the Member for Edmonton-Centre had to say, so I would love it if he would continue to talk about why this bill is so important and really sort of impress on everybody what the actual facts are.

4:30

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you to the Member for St. Albert. I'll just conclude briefly. I was just wrapping up my remarks.

Again, as we proceed with this, I think this bill is a very important first step on the road, setting up the structures to ensure that we will have the college that will help determine how we regulate, how we protect. We've had some excellent amendments that have helped ensure that this has a minimum of negative impact on those who provide these services while providing good protection for those who need to access them.

I thank all the members that have shared their thoughts on this. I thank the minister for bringing this forward, and I look forward to voting in support of this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we have a request for unanimous consent to revert back to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker. It's such an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the three most important people in my whole life, my husband, Kent, and my children, Molly and Brady. They are here to learn something as they maybe should be in school, but they are going to see first-hand the proceedings here in this Assembly this afternoon. My husband is wonderful and amazing, and he's here to fix all the broken things over the last year that have happened in my Edmonton residence. Molly, just so you all know, members, is a wonderful, beautiful, smart girl who is into competitive swimming. She's currently trying to beat my 24-year-old swimming record, and I am certain that she's going to be accomplishing that. My son, Brady, is a very, very good hockey player and spent his summer at a camp at the university, building a robot that can solve a Rubik's cube. I would ask that the three most important people in my life, my loves, please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Bill 30
Mental Health Services Protection Act

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that whenever we talk about mental health, clearly this is something that I think has touched almost every person's life in this House. I can say that in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake suicides have been something that have been a very troubling trend, with the lack of work or underemployment.

Having said that, I reached out to my local charities and societies that do counselling in my constituency to get some feedback on Bill 30 – I couldn't get to them all, but I did get to a few – and I've got a few responses, but the one that actually comes forward here, that I would like to read to the House, I think the Minister of Health would be pleased with. It says:

Hi Julie . . .

That's my constituency assistant.

. . . I think that the Bill 30 is a good one and will help . . . consumers to distinguish between a real service and one that is [just] a money grab. As one of the organizations in the region most impacted by this, I would like to see some support [and] compensation to assist with compliance as it will not be cost neutral on our part.

Thanks for reaching out and asking for feedback, much appreciated.

Audrey

Audrey McFarlane is the executive director of the Lakeland Centre for FASD.

When we make laws like this, there are going to be consequences, and one of the consequences here is that there might be some needed training or ability for these organizations to be able to react. I think that she brings up a valid point. She supports this bill, and she says that it really is something that will focus this profession. I think that when it comes to dedicated members of our society like Audrey, we need to commend each and every one of these counsellors that actually are on the front lines doing work within Alberta to make sure that some of our most vulnerable Albertans get the help they need.

That is all I wanted to say. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I actually rise just simply to notify the House that pursuant to Government Motion 36 no evening sitting will take place tonight.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, Minister, would you like to close debate?

Ms Hoffman: I would love to close. Thank you so much, Madam Speaker. I want to say what an honour it was to move third reading of Bill 30, the Mental Health Services Protection Act.

I'm getting emotional thinking about all of the work of our entire caucus. I know it's my title that goes on these bills, but they are such a work of commitment with our caucus committees, with our cabinet committees. This is what happens when you have a government made up of ordinary folks that love and care for one another, that work in these professions, and that move things forward that matter and will make a real difference to ordinary families. To all of my colleagues: I want to thank them for all of their contributions. I know that it's my name on this bill, but it is every single one of us that needs to feel really proud of our accomplishments today.

I want to thank the members of the Assembly for adding their feedback through second reading and Committee of the Whole and now in third as well.

Madam Speaker, all Albertans have a right to feel safe when seeking support for their substance use or for mental health treatment. They should feel confident that they are receiving safe, quality services from licensed facilities and appropriately trained, regulated health professionals. For decades this hasn't been the case in Alberta. This legislation will introduce licensing requirements and core standards that will protect Albertans who seek help from residential substance-use facilities in a much better way than they are today.

I also want to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for his thoughtful amendment in supporting patient privacy. I think that when we had a chance to sit down and talk between second reading and today, it was clear that he was wanting to ensure just that patients have a little bit of time to prepare, that that was something one of the stakeholders that he reached out to said would help. I appreciate that he originally was thinking maybe bigger than he ended up bringing forward in the amendment. He understood that if there were safety concerns, we can't exactly call and say, "We'll be there in two hours to check," that it's still important that we have timely access, but that in routine inspections it's important to think about patient-centred care and how we can give that little heads-up for patients.

I also want to thank the members who asked questions about clarifying that the counselling relationship wouldn't negatively impact people with lived experience. The Member for Airdrie talked about somebody she knows – I think his name was Mike – and how he's providing important supports to members of his community. So we wanted to make sure that we were crystal clear in the legislation that peer support and people with lived experience offering that support aren't captured unless they start calling themselves "counselling therapists," which, of course, they won't be allowed to do because it will actually be a regulated title, a regulated professional title, moving forward. I'm really excited about that.

I want to say that, ultimately, this legislation will ensure that Albertans receive consistent, quality care. As we move forward, Alberta Health will work with the service providers to develop standards that prioritize Albertans' safety and security, and this will ensure that the implementation of this legislation does not cause an onerous requirement on service providers that could negatively impact access to treatment.

We also met with some members of this House to talk about our hope that we'll be able to make it free of cost at the beginning, and if there needs to be a cost, that it be minimal as we move forward, but that there not be any cost for moving forward with regulation at the beginning. We want to make sure that this isn't an impediment to good quality care and that it doesn't result in a reduction of services. Unless, of course, services don't meet the criteria. Then we don't want them to be available. We want them to make sure that they change their criteria, that they make sure that they're rising to that higher standard.

I want to thank the cosponsors, both the Member for Peace River, who is the Deputy Speaker, as well as the Member for Calgary-

Acadia, who was the Associate Minister of Health, with a real focus on mental health, when we started this work earlier this year. I want to say that both of these women have brought forward a number of really thoughtful contributions to the legislation itself as well as the work we've done with the community in preparing for today.

Specifically, I want to mention, obviously, the Member for Peace River, who talked about her lived experience as a mom. I know that, seeing those pictures, there's no way Amaya, when she was that passionate eight-year-old playing Annie in a school play, thought: one day I want to grow up and have an addiction. She wanted to be a star, right? Any one of these kids who comes through this building has dreams and hopes, and it's our responsibility to make sure that we support them in reaching their full potential, that we keep them here another day.

I want to thank the members who've talked about the comprehensive work we've done around mental health and substance-use support in addition to the work that's in this specific bill, because there is no way that it is a choice to live with a substance-use issue. Getting the right help and the right support to be able to exercise your desire to get treatment, I think, is something that we have an onus to make sure we do safely.

This legislation will reinforce the dedicated efforts of highly qualified care as well as ensure that well-run facilities in our province can say that they're part of the proper oversight that's being given and support themselves in continuing to access additional avenues for support. This bill will make Alberta the fifth province to regulate counselling therapists and the third to regulate residential substance-use treatment. I think that nobody in Alberta should feel that they have any less quality of care than any other province, and I'm glad that we will be addressing it in both of these areas to make sure that we move forward with the patient and the family as the focus.

Madam Speaker, everyone in this room knows somebody – I think we talk more openly about it – who has mental health challenges or has substance-use challenges, but we also, probably every one of us, know somebody who's accessed treatment at some point, too. We know that this is something that will continue to be a need as we move forward, so let's make sure we get it right.

Also, when I was with the Member for Peace River this summer, we went and visited the Peace River opiate awareness working group. I want to say that I know we talk a lot about the hon. member's lived experience, but when we were with this working group, we also heard from other people who talked about the lived experience of people in the region as well. It isn't just somebody's daughter. It was somebody's father, somebody's father who in the middle of calving season acquired a muscle injury and couldn't afford to take time off, obviously, in this important season to take care of his body and therefore went and got a prescription.

No community is immune from substance-use addiction, and it is our obligation to make sure that when people are injured, when people have a substance-use issue, we give them the right supports to be able to move forward and reach their full potential, become what it is that they aspire to be. I know that Bill 30 will support Albertans who are seeking this support.

I know that some people have said: "Well, maybe this just isn't the right time. Maybe this will be too cumbersome or too expensive." You know, the right time was before Taylor passed away. The right time was before 2007. The best day to plant a tree was 20 years ago; the second best day is today. So today I ask that all of us plant a tree, move forward in supporting patients in their mental health needs, and make sure that we pass this legislation and don't waste any more time. Don't talk about taking 10 years to fully implement it. Let's make sure that we plant the tree today and that we move forward to make sure that everyone gets the care that they need as we all move forward as Albertans.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and hon. members, for your time and attention on this important matter and, hopefully, your vote of yes. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a third time]

Bill 23

An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise today and move third reading of Bill 23, An Act to Renew Local Democracy in Alberta, on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

I'd like to begin by thanking all the Albertans and stakeholders who helped shape this bill throughout our consultation. We heard from over 1,500 Albertans who expressed a desire for less monetary influence in municipal elections, greater transparency, improved accessibility, and stronger accountability and enforcement, and that's what this bill delivers.

I'd also like to thank the staff at Municipal Affairs. You know, none of us would be able to accomplish what we do in this House without the strong commitment of our teams. These folks work so hard, burning the midnight oil to make it all happen. So a special thanks to Gary, LaRae, Laura, and Cathy, who, I'm sure, are watching right now, and all the other staff who helped contribute to this bill. We all greatly appreciate your work.

Our government made it clear, when we updated provincial election laws, that we wanted to take big money out of provincial politics, and now we're doing the same on the municipal level. We consulted with Albertans, and we know they want to see local elections that are more fair and transparent. People should be running for elections on their ideas, not on how much money is in their bank account. These rules will create a more level playing field for everyone who wants to run. This bill will ban corporate and union donations, mirroring the provincial legislation and reducing the influence of corporate and union donors. This proposed reform will ensure that politicians are working for Albertans not campaign donations. Albertans expect nothing less.

We've streamlined the process to remove barriers for candidates to run and to create more competitive local campaigns. Elected officials should be focused on delivering results for their community, not on building a war chest for an election years away. These new rules will also close some of the funding loopholes currently in the act. This bill will increase voter accessibility to the polls by requiring municipalities of over 5,000 to hold at least one advance poll day for those who can't make it to the polls on election day.

Albertans have the right to know who is trying to influence their elections, which is why rules around third-party advertising are vital. In the last municipal election we saw PACs campaigning without any rules or regulations. This bill will change that, requiring PACs to register and disclose their financing, subjecting them to the same rules that they must adhere to at the provincial level, the strongest PAC regulations in the country. Laws must be enforceable to be effective. The reforms before us today would give new powers to the provincial Election Commissioner to investigate offences and make sure the rules are being followed.

Madam Speaker, it's time to update our laws to get big money out of local elections, make it easier for Albertans to vote, and create a more transparent election process. Albertans asked for these reforms, Albertans support these reforms, and we are delivering. Passing this legislation now would give our local authorities time to learn about, train on, and enact these changes so that the next set of elections run as smoothly as possible.

I thank all the hon. members for their comments and feedback and hope that all members of the House will support this bill. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 23, a bill that I have had the opportunity to speak about at some length over the past couple of days. So in the spirit of the season I will let my comments on the record speak for themselves.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, would the hon. member like to close debate?

4:50

Ms Woollard: I would be happy to close debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the House that notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1) the morning sitting of the Assembly tomorrow be cancelled and that we resume at 1:30.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the excellent progress that I think we have made today, I would now move that the Assembly adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:52 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let each of us reflect or pray, each in our own way. On this National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women let us remember the 14 women who were killed on this day 29 years ago at l'école Polytechnique in Montreal, Quebec. Today we remember Geneviève Bergeron, Hélène Colgan, Nathalie Croteau, Barbara Daigneault, Anne-Marie Edward, Maud Haviernick, Barbara Klucznik, Maryse Laganière, Maryse LeClair, Anne-Marie Lemay, Sonia Pelletier, Michèle Richard, Annie St-Arneault, and Annie Turcotte. Hon. members, these were the loved ones, the women, the daughters, the wives, the mothers. We must not forget that our work in this place must make sure that everyone in our province is safe and never at risk.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a number of distinguished indigenous leaders in the province of Alberta seated in your gallery. I ask that the chiefs rise as I call their names: Treaty 8 Grand Chief Arthur Noskey from Loon River First Nation, Treaty 8 Deputy Grand Chief Gerald Giroux from Swan River First Nation, Treaty 8 Secretary Treasurer Chief Ramona Horseman from Horse Lake First Nation, Kee Tas Kee Now Tribal Council Grand Chief Albert Thunder from Whitefish Lake First Nation, and Chief Rupert Meneen from Tallcree First Nation.

These chiefs work hard in their communities every day to make life better for all their people. They have come here today to remind us of all of their constitutional rights to be consulted before actions are taken that might impact their treaty rights. They're also here to show their willingness to work with Albertans on a new relationship, one built on trust, respect, and understanding. This can only be achieved if rights are respected and efforts are made by every Albertan to build positive relationships. If we could all offer them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, there are staff from constituency offices who will be attending in the galleries later this afternoon. I would anticipate that there will be a request for unanimous consent to continue introductions following OQP.

We do have some school groups here today. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my very great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 27 students and their teachers, Rolanda Beaudette and Ted Wheat, from St. Jerome's school in Vermilion. St. Jerome's has marked a couple of milestones in the last few years, its 50th anniversary just a few years ago and the completion of a major renovation and refurbishing that was started under our administration but completed under the current Education minister's administration; therefore, he claims credit. Nonetheless, I'm very pleased to invite these 27 students and their teachers to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to members of this Assembly the parents, the teachers, the staff, and the grade 6 class of H.W. Pickup school. I'm beginning to sound like a bit of a broken record, I think, but once again with this class today I have colleagues that I have taught with, I have students that I have taught, and I have the kids of students that I have taught. The only thing that I don't have and that I have had at times is the grandchildren of students that I have taught. Could the staff, the parents, and the students of the grade 6 class at H.W. Pickup please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I'm surprised that at your age, hon. member, you haven't taught some grandchildren.

Ms McKittrick: M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour vous présenter 66 étudiants et étudiantes avec leurs enseignants de l'école Our Lady of Perpetual Help school. Ces étudiants parlent très bon français, et je suis fière d'eux. These students speak really good French, and maybe one day you'll speak French in this Assembly. Les étudiants sont accompagnés de leurs enseignantes, Mme Miller, Mme Taylor, et Mme Brown, ainsi que de leurs chaperons, Mme Klinck, Mme Houle, M. Hall, Mme Ramsay, et Mme Bonsant. Est-ce que vous pouvez vous lever, s'il vous plaît, pour recevoir la bienvenue chaleureuse de l'Assemblée.

The Speaker: Au revoir.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on your behalf to introduce to all members of the Assembly members of your family who are seated in your gallery. First of all, your eldest daughter, Shauna Wanner Crowley, who is a stay-at-home mom, one who challenges all the nieces and nephews in the French language as she's the only family member who is completely bilingual. With her is Vincent Crowley, her husband, who is Canadian Fertilizers' chief steam engineer in Medicine Hat; Ella Crowley, who is in grade 9 and enjoys playing the horn and the piano and is an avid volleyball player; and Maiah Crowley, your oldest grandchild and the person who said that her grandfather needed to run as an MLA in 2015. Maiah graduated grade 12 last year and is still deciding what the next chapter in her life will be. Missing is Cian Crowley, who is in grade 12 and felt his studies came first. They're also accompanied by your wife, Joan Emard-Wanner, and grandson Josh Bjorndahl. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. It's nice to have you here.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly someone who you need no introduction to, Megan Ducker. She is the Office of the Speaker's special assistant to you and has proven herself as a dedicated worker day to day in your office. I know that many of you already have a similar appreciation for Megan's work, so I'd ask everyone in the Assembly to give her the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome, Megan, and thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an absolute honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly someone who makes sure that I know where I'm going, that I know when to be there, and that I know what to say when I get there. It is not easy, I can assure you. I know all of you have such tremendous respect for your constituency managers. Jodi Christensen is here today. Jodi is joined by Barb Currie. Barb Currie is the heart and soul of the Alberta Party caucus research staff, Alberta Party caucus employee number one. Barb has a long, long history here at the Assembly and has done a tremendous amount of work on behalf of many members and helps make this place go. If I could please ask Jodi and Barb to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you members of the Edmonton Metropolitan Region Board. We talk a lot about the importance of collaboration and co-operation for the success of our municipalities. These folks are walking the walk. They're an amazing group of people who are working hard with that positive change in their communities and setting a fine example.

Members of the board are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they rise as I call out their names: board chair Dr. Jodi Abbott, board CEO Ms Karen Wichuk, Mayor William Choy from the town of Stony Plain, Mayor Rod Frank from Strathcona county, Mayor Alanna Hnatiw from Sturgeon county, Mayor Cathy Heron from the city of St. Albert, Mayor Ray Ralph from the town of Devon, Mayor Rod Shaigec from Parkland county, Mayor John Stewart from the town of Beaumont, Mayor Barry Turner from the town of Morinville, and Mayor Bob Young from the city of Leduc. I ask that all members join me in providing them with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services and Status of Women.

Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you some very special guests who are working hard every day serving the needs of children and families who need those supports the most. From the beautiful constituency of Lesser Slave Lake I'm pleased to recognize the compassion and dedication of Angela Mulholland, who is a registered nurse and mental health worker who helps support the needs of patients and families through her work at the family care clinic. She's also a mother of five, two of whom are adopted, and I've seen first-hand just how passionate she is about work and family as she's a former co-worker of mine, and I'm proud to call her a friend.

I'm also pleased to be joined by Terri Skinner. Through her work as a home visitation co-ordinator at the Norwood Child & Family Resource Centre in Edmonton, Terri is making a difference to the well-being of the many families who are supported by the centre every year. About 3,000 families benefit, many of whom are in extremely difficult circumstances. I was so glad to see the tremendous impact of the centre when I visited there.

I invite Terri Skinner and Angela Mulholland to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce Rose Seerey and Richard Kennedy, who are amazing volunteers who are always willing to lend a helping hand. They both help out in my office regularly and at community events, and when community leagues call to say that they need help with casinos, they're the first two to help volunteer, and we really appreciate it. I'm proud to have Richard, Rose, and Heather, who's my constituency manager, here today. They're all residents of Edmonton-Glenora. Please join me in giving them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of introductions. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you members of the Association of Islamic Charitable Projects Calgary. This group has been supporting Muslim Albertans since 2012. The AICP provides a space for the Muslim community in Calgary to get together for congregation and prayers and a forum to address issues facing the community. I want to thank this group for their commitment and service to the people of Alberta, and I now ask my guests – Maher Habbas, Shaykh Nasser Ghanem, and Shaykh Walid Badwaki – to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to also introduce to you and through you Balwinder Kahlon, Rajesh Angral, Manjit Singh Piasa, Chand Singh Sadioura. These guests are here from Calgary and are part of an organization called the Drug Awareness Foundation. They work tirelessly to build healthy communities and prevent alcohol- and drug-related problems in society. Every year they hold multiple blood drives to build awareness and bring the community together for a good cause. They're also friends with the Member for Calgary-Greenway. I would like to thank them for their work and ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Continue.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to introduce to you and through you Ms Renée Vaugeois. Renée has worked to advance and promote human rights through education, dialogue, and community building in Edmonton and abroad for the past 15 years. I wish to congratulate Renée on her recent win of the Ram Krishna Bajaj memorial global award and thank her for all the work she has done to make our communities, make our province a better place. I ask Renée to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today, and I'd just like to take a very brief moment to thank all of our Legislature security, who do such a wonderful job of keeping us safe and greeting the public. But for my introduction I'd just like to focus on one particular security guard who does a wonderful job, Garet Bonn. Thank you for everything you do. I also understand that your $20 payment to the Legislature security social fund is currently due.

The Speaker: For a moment there I wondered where that political contribution was going.

Are there any other introductions today, hon. members? The Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dana Francis, who is a constituent of Leduc-Beaumont. Ms Francis has been instrumental in spearheading a petition asking for an amendment to the Cemeteries Act to allow for emerging technologies to be used in place of conventional cremation methods. I would like to thank her for her hard work and enthusiasm. I will table the petition later today. Dana, I ask you to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Any other introductions?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, it's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly someone who did not want to be introduced here but someone who plays a very integral role in helping myself and another MLA in our caucus to do what we do. I'd like to have Shannon Hamelin please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, I believe there will be an introduction for constituency assistants later today.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Treaty 8 Recognition

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today. I'd first like to acknowledge that we're here on Treaty 6 territory. I rise today on something very important, and it's a rare honour for me. I rise to recognize and acknowledge Treaty 8 Grand Chief Arthur Noskey, Deputy Grand Chief Gerald Giroux, Secretary-Treasurer Chief Ramona Horseman, and KTC Grand Chief Albert Thunder, Chief Billy Joe Laboucan from the Lubicon Cree Nation, and Chief Rupert Meneen from Tallcree First Nation. In particular, I want to formally congratulate Grand Chief Arthur Noskey from Loon River Cree, who this summer was appointed as the very first full-time grand chief in Treaty 8's history.

I want to update the House on this historic relationship. In addition, marking a first for me, I've been asked to read a statement from Grand Chief Noskey to all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. His letter:

Treaty No. 8 was agreed to in 1899 between the Dene, Beaver and Cree Peoples and the Crown, Queen Victoria. This Treaty agreement ensured that our ways of life would continue as if we never entered Treaty. Our way of life included Hunting, Fishing, Trapping, and Gathering.

Recently it has been suggested that Alberta should sell crown lands in order to help deal with our deficit. In 2005, the Supreme Court in Mikisew ruled that there is a Duty to Consult First Nations. Mikisew Cree First Nation is a Treaty 8 First Nation and all Albertans should understand and respect our Treaty and the relationship with the Crown before making such statements.

We are challenging the Province's assumption of crown lands. The Treaty people have always had a different position on this. These lands have always been our treasury, our food source, and our pharmacy since time immemorial. When it comes to what is considered Crown land, it is critical that any Government understands Treaty. When government looks ahead, does it plan for the next 7 generations as our First Nations do? Or does it see an environment occupied with nothing but Industrial Development? We worry that some people may intend to undermine Treaty by dealing on things that affect Treaty without consulting First Nations.

I acknowledge that the Province of Alberta is finally recognizing the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and I extend my sincere gratitude to the Government of Alberta for its leadership and commitment towards its implementation. An important part of that Declaration is Article 19 that refers to "Free, prior and informed consent."

Good work has been accomplished by this government especially the resolving the land claim of the Lubicon Lake Band. To complete an 85-year process in their short time in office is an accomplishment to be commended. However, there is a current outstanding land claim settlement with the Beaver First Nation in the Peace Country that must be addressed as a priority by government.

The Treaty 8 First Nations in Alberta are not opposed to economic development, pipelines or beneficial opportunities within the oil and gas sector. We are always open to dialogue regarding sustainable resource development that ensures the protection of our Treaty and Inherent Rights and our way of life.

Grand Chief Arthur Noskey.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to have been able to do that on behalf of the grand chief and all the assembled chiefs. Indeed on this side we respect indigenous consultation. We don't take the word lightly. We know what meaning it carries and how past governments failed to give it proper attention or its deserved respect. In my role, which is unique, I think, with respect to my colleagues, I have the honour of speaking with and listening to indigenous leaders and their peoples each and every day. It's meant some amazing conversations and led to some groundbreaking accomplishments. Sometimes it's things that have been in the works for many years, like the Lubicon Cree land agreement, a historic conclusion to a long-standing concern; sometimes it's recognizing the hurt and the suffering that has happened over the generations and apologizing for our past, like we did with the residential schools and the '60s scoop; and sometimes it's exploring new opportunities for collaboration, that for too long went unheard, like supporting indigenous participation in Alberta's energy market, co-operative management agreements for new parks, new housing and health initiatives, or finally bringing clean water to people on reserves, all of which we have done.

Then there's the work that continues, the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and murdered and missing indigenous women. Government is not perfect. We are not perfect. Trust takes time. It takes effort and commitment. All members need to understand that consultation is not just required; it is crucial.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I am very concerned that in this whole session the opposition has not asked one single question of the Minister of Indigenous Relations regarding any issue for First Nations people. Your silence is deafening. That's why I thought the grand chief should be able to share his words. Consultation is not an open-and-closed book. It's not something to get bogged down by. It's not something to throw your hands into the air and say: enough is enough. It's work. It's trust. It's healing. It's listening. It's moving forward together.

It's important to me, it's important to the chiefs, and it's important to all indigenous peoples, and indeed it should be important to all Albertans. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand and respond. On behalf of the United Conservative caucus I would also like to welcome and recognize our guests here today from the Treaty 8 First Nations. Our caucus recognizes and respects the importance of engagement, consultation, and continued relationship building with the indigenous peoples of Alberta. We are pleased that Treaty 8 Grand Chief Arthur Noskey, Deputy Grand Chief Gerald Giroux, Secretary-Treasurer Chief Ramona Horseman, KTC Grand Chief Albert Thunder, Chief Billy Joe Laboucan of the Lubicon Cree, and Chief Rupert Meneen of Tallcree First Nation could join members in the Legislature today.

I would also want to offer the most sincere congratulations of our caucus to Grand Chief Noskey on his historic appointment. I thank you very much for the invitation. I much enjoyed the swearing-in ceremony that I attended this fall.

We look forward to working collaboratively on many issues that affect the Treaty 8 peoples, Alberta's wider indigenous community, and all Albertans. We know the importance of the relationship between the elected representatives of Alberta, Albertans, and the many diverse indigenous communities in the province.

We also know that, like people all over Alberta, recent years have been very hard on Alberta's indigenous communities. We know that the economic circumstances that we find ourselves in impact indigenous people every day. United Conservative MLAs hear from their indigenous constituents, and we hear their concerns about rural crime, unemployment, and fleeting economic opportunity that makes it harder to provide full and prosperous lives for their families.

What we can tell these indigenous families is that our caucus will continue to work tirelessly to expand prosperity and opportunity for indigenous Albertans and our entire province. We are here to listen, we are here to engage, and we are here to work with you towards a better future for Alberta's Treaty 8 people.

Again, congratulations and welcome to our Legislative Assembly. Hay-hay, masi chok.

Mr. Mason: I would like to ask for unanimous consent of the House to allow a representative of the third party to respond to the ministerial statement.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to acknowledge that we are meeting on the traditional territory of the Treaty 6 First Nations and Métis Nation zone 4. Thank you to Grand Chief Arthur Noskey, Deputy Grand Chief Gerald Giroux, Secretary-Treasurer Chief Ramona Horseman, KTC Grand Chief Albert Thunder, Chief Billy Joe Laboucan from the Lubicon Cree band, and Chief Rupert Meneen from Tallcree First Nation. And thank you to the Minister of Indigenous Relations for sharing these words here today. They are so important for us to hear.

Our caucus wants to be very clear. Reconciliation is the responsibility of each and every Albertan. We are all treaty people, and we must work to ensure that the nation-to-nation dialogue with indigenous peoples is a partnership and that our conversations are respectful and fulsome. We stand with every member of this House in working toward reconciliation in recognition of treaty rights. We recognize that reconciliation isn't possible without acknowledging the truth of our shared past and acknowledging the historic wrongs that were visited upon indigenous peoples. Recognizing and implementing the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples is the minimum that all treaty people should expect of any provincial, territorial, or federal government, and that includes consulting with First Nations before making any announcements about plans for disputed lands.

Indigenous brothers and sisters, thank you. We are grateful that you allow us to walk the path with you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Unemployment

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in May of this year 6.2 per cent of Albertans were unemployed. In October 7.3 per cent were unemployed: six straight months of growing unemployment. Will the government acknowledge that this is the result of the failure of high-debt, high-tax NDP economic policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to any Albertan who is feeling the impacts still lingering from the economic downturn, we absolutely are working hard for them. We're fighting for them to make sure that we have an economic recovery that's built to last and that impacts every single Alberta family. Since the depths of the recession we have more than 100,000 new full-time jobs in the province of Alberta. That's certainly a step in the right direction, but we know it doesn't go far enough. What would make it absolutely worse, though, is to fire 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses to give a $700 million tax giveaway to the top 1 per cent.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP came to office three and a half years ago, 139,000 Albertans were unemployed; now 184,000 Albertans are unemployed, a growth of 45,000 Albertans looking for work. Will the government acknowledge that this is the result of the failure of high-tax, high-debt economic policies of the NDP?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, once again I'll say that for anybody who doesn't yet feel the full impacts of the economic recovery, we're fighting for those families every single day and for all families. Since the depths of the recession we've added more than 100,000 new full-time jobs. We know that the recovery hasn't been felt by every family yet, and that's why we can't take our foot off the momentum that we're building in this province. What would absolutely do that and move the depths of the recession back to where they were is to lay off thousands of public-sector workers, including 4,000 teachers and 4,000 nurses. That certainly would be the wrong direction, and we won't follow the Leader of the Official Opposition's advice on that one.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP came to office three and a half years ago, 62 per cent of young Albertans were employed. That's down to 56 per cent, a huge decrease in youth employment. Sixty thousand women were unemployed when the NDP came to office, and now 76,000 Alberta women are unemployed. Will the government acknowledge that this is the result of the failure of high-tax, high-debt NDP economic policy?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, certainly, for anyone who is feeling the impacts of the downturn in the economy, we certainly are working to make sure that that isn't lasting and to make sure that they have opportunities for full employment. The opposition leader recently quoted Professor Tombe. I will paraphrase what he said when he pointed out that the rate of unemployed Albertans continues to decline. The rise in employment, he said, is due largely to workers coming from places like Saskatchewan, where policies like the member opposite has proposed have failed.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP came to office three and a half years ago, unemployment in Calgary was 5.8 per cent. Now in Calgary it is 8.2 per cent, the highest unemployment of any major city in Canada. Will the government acknowledge that this is the result of the failure of high-tax, high-debt NDP economic policy?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're certainly fighting for the people of Calgary every day, fighting to make sure we get access to tidewater, something that the member opposite said wasn't his responsibility when he was in Ottawa for a decade around the cabinet table and a decade before that when he was supposed to be representing the people of Calgary. This side of the House will absolutely fight for the people of Calgary and for all Albertans. Again, Dr. Tombe said that people are moving here from Saskatchewan because of the kinds of impacts of policies that the hon. member is proposing. We're not going to act on that. We're going to fight for ordinary families and make sure that we have an economy built to last.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP came to office three and a half years ago, 7.8 per cent of Albertans were unemployed for a year or longer. That's now 15.6 per cent. We have seen a doubling of the number of Albertans unemployed for a year or longer during the three-and-a-half-year tenure of the NDP. Will the government acknowledge that this disaster is a result of high-tax, high-debt NDP economic policies?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're fighting every day for ordinary Albertans to make sure they get the things that matter to them like a pipeline to tidewater, that the member opposite said, quote: wasn't my job when I was in Ottawa to fight for that pipeline. It couldn't be further from the truth. Three and a half years ago when we came into government, the city of Calgary had been screaming for a Calgary cancer centre for decades, and they were given the runaround by Conservatives year after year after year. You know what? We've invested in Calgary. We're building that cancer centre. We're putting people to work. There are four cranes on-site today. We're going to make sure that we have an economic recovery that helps people in health care, that helps people in construction, and get that pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, since the NDP came to office three and a half years ago, the per capita gross domestic product of Alberta has declined by 7 per cent. That means the average Albertan is 7 per cent poorer since the NDP came to office. Monthly payrolls have declined from $12.7 billion when they came to office to $11.8 billion today, a billion dollars less in income for Albertans. Will the government acknowledge that Albertans are poorer today because of the failure of high-tax, high-debt NDP policies?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're fighting every day for every Albertan. That side of the House wants to fight for a $700 million tax giveaway to their wealthy friends and insiders. On this side of the House we are investing in ordinary folks. We're making sure that we're building things that matter to people in the province of Alberta. In Saskatchewan, where the member likes to spend time and say his great mentor, Mr. Moe, to the east, they brought in a tax on construction, a tax that certainly impacted ordinary folks working on the front lines. On this side of the House we're building, we're investing, we're freezing tuition to make life more affordable. Austerity provinces like the Official Opposition wants to model . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.
Third main question.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP came to office three and a half years ago, Alberta's debt after 110 years of history stood at $13 billion. It now stands at $56 billion, climbing towards a hundred billion dollars. We are spending more on debt interest to bondholders than we are on services for 19 of the 22 Alberta government departments. Will the government acknowledge that this fiscal catastrophe is the result of high-debt, high-tax NDP fiscal policies?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's difficult to take advice from the hon. member given his record. When he was in government in Ottawa, there were six straight deficit budgets. There was a $56 billion deficit in just one year, and they added $145 billion to the national debt. Will the opposition leader stand up and justify that now?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, since the NDP came to office three and a half years ago, food bank use is up, crime is up, poverty is up, bankruptcies are up, unemployment is up, debt is up, taxes are up, but incomes are down. Will the government acknowledge that this disastrous record is the result of high-tax, high-debt NDP economic policy?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, it's interesting. The previous government was here for 44 years, and they failed to diversify the economy, remaining dependent on a very volatile natural resource for 30 per cent of Alberta's program spending. Everyone knows that the price of oil goes up and down except, apparently, Conservatives.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, given the total failure of the NDP and given their overseeing and provoking economic decline in this province, will the government commit not to come back to this place in the spring with a lame-duck, high-tax, high-debt budget but to allow the people of Alberta to pass judgment on this government's record at the earliest possible date by calling an election on February 1, 2019?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There certainly is a law in place around an election period. We know that Conservatives in Alberta never followed the law when it comes to calling elections, but this side of the House plans on doing so. You know what we also plan on doing? Things that the Leader of the Official Opposition said weren't his job, fighting for pipelines. House of Commons for 20 years and said the word "pipelines" once because it, quote: wasn't my responsibility. You know what, hon. member? You couldn't be further from the truth. The reality is that it was your responsibility. You failed, and we look forward to making sure we get the job done.

Mrs. Pitt: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms Hoffman: That's why our Premier is in Montreal fighting for pipelines at this very moment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Medical Laboratory Service Costs

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP has failed to focus our health care system on its core business, and that is delivering patient care. First, it was bringing laundry services in-house at great expense. Then they decided to take over the efficient and professional outsourced lab services. The cost of building Edmonton's superlab has doubled, and now we're learning the impact that moving lab services in-house will have on Alberta's bottom line. Through a document leaked today to the Alberta Party caucus, we discovered that management positions inside AHS will expand significantly when labs are brought back in-house. Not surprising. To the Minister of Health: why are you increasing administration at a time when Albertans are demanding that we save?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the member opposite sits in close proximity to the Official Opposition, so sometimes he might hear their accusations louder than reality. Well, let me give the reality. The reality is that we stopped the privatization of lab services to a multinational corporation. We stopped the privatization of laundry services, which are in communities throughout all of our ridings, hon. members, ridings in your communities that you represent, hospitals in your communities, good jobs in your local communities that were going to be privatized under the Conservatives. We stopped that. We kept jobs in your ridings. We're proud to do so and to work for all Albertans because that's our job.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, the new org chart for the megalab is called towards a brave new world, which seems like a fitting title given that the original book is a cautionary tale of what happens when government is in control of absolutely everything. The org chart lists 6,218 positions. To the Minister of Health: how many positions exist in labs today, and how many brand new positions will be created by moving the lab into AHS?

Ms Hoffman: Just to go on a trip down memory lane, lab services, we know, impact 70 per cent of health care decisions. Making sure we get lab results right drives good decision-making for health outcomes for patients and, of course, for the bottom line by reducing duplication. Mr. Speaker, Ralph Klein didn't like the results of privatizing the Calgary lab services. He looked at what the reality was, and he brought those services back into a public system. Ralph Klein knew that there were too many things at risk to have patient care entrusted to a multinational private corporation. I am happy to follow that one example that he gave us.

2:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Clark: Truly through the looking glass, Mr. Speaker, when the NDP is praising Ralph Klein.

In addition to that ballooning head count, though, Mr. Speaker, I'm really interested in what this is going to cost Alberta taxpayers. The current model undeniably works, and it won't be improved by adding thousands of managers to an already top-heavy Alberta Health Services. Once again the NDP has set out to solve a problem that we don't have. Again to the Minister of Health: how much do we currently spend on lab services, and how much more will your new model cost to deliver the same service or possibly worse?

Ms Hoffman: If the member thinks there isn't room for improvement in terms of health care, I absolutely think there's room for improvement. I think there are opportunities for even greater outcomes. Mr. Speaker, when I met with the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster just yesterday, we talked about things like people not being able to have their lab results when they move from one part of the province to another part of the province. That certainly is inefficient, and it's not in the best interest of patients. That's why having one lab system that will be able to ensure that those results follow patients throughout the province is something that I'm incredibly proud of. It will be more efficient and lead to better health outcomes. It's a win-win-win.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

ESL and Literacy Programs for Immigrants

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I direct my questions through you to the Minister of Labour. A very large number of newcomers whose first language is not English live in my riding of Edmonton-McClung. Many seek English as a second language training classes that are easily accessible and meet their needs. How do we help immigrants and refugees find available ESL programming so that they can get gainful employment sooner rather than later?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has the backs of newcomers, and we're fighting for what matters to them. That includes making sure they have access to the services and supports that they need. That's why not only are we supporting community organizations and delivering settlement, language, and integration programs but we also recently expanded our training programs to ensure families have even more opportunities for training and skills development. Through our training-for-work programming newcomers can access training to link their education and experience to the Canadian labour market.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again to the same minister: can ESL programs adapt to offer part-time, targeted literacy classes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and for the important question. Ensuring that newcomers get the language training they need is a priority for our government. We currently support a number of literacy programs through Advanced Education, including ESL and foundational learning options, and the Alberta settlement and integration program provides funding to language support services such as English language assessment services, ESL drop-in centres as well as funding innovative projects that support and enhance the ESL system as a whole. We also know that some newcomers face barriers to learning English in regularly scheduled ESL classes, so ESL drop-in centres are available.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the province offer funding for programing for industry-specific language development; for example, level 1 child care or hotel hospitality services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We believe strongly that no matter where someone is from or what their background is, everyone deserves the same opportunities for success and employment. That's why we fund organizations that help immigrants and refugees gain the language and skills needed for certain industries such as hospitality and child care. Programs like the Multicultural Health Brokers' first steps to employment are already providing language, cultural supports, and training to help refugees and immigrants get and keep jobs in the hospitality industry. We know that programs are making a positive impact in the lives of many newcomers. We're going to keep fighting to ensure that they get the support they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Political Action Committees

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a chance that this might be my last question in this Assembly, so please bear with me. In 2015 the Premier passed laws that were supposed to take big money out of politics, but instead they introduced U.S.-style PACs that have made our politics uglier and increased the power of party leaders. Now the party leaders can use PAC money to do dirty politics and shrug their shoulders and pretend to be innocent. Is the Premier aware of reports that PACs are being directly run by Alberta political parties to hide money and get around the law?

Ms Hoffman: No, Mr. Speaker, and certainly if the hon. member has any evidence or information that he'd like to bring forward, I would certainly be very concerned if that were the case. I appreciate him raising this. If he has any information that could bring light to this, I think it is deeply troubling.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Party leaders and the PACs they control now call the shots, and that is not good. Given that there are rumours that the party leaders have used envelopes full of undisclosed PAC cash to interfere with the leadership contest in parties like the UCP and given that instead of clean politics we have gotten more dirty tricks than ever before, has the government asked the Election Commissioner to investigate whether PACs were involved in illegal activities in the UCP leadership race?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the race that we had. We had three fantastic leadership candidates, who ran very fair and reasonable campaigns, and I'm very proud of the kind of democracy we've built through a leadership campaign in our party rather than what it sounds like the hon. member is referring to. Certainly, any time people are making negative kinds of promises based on underhanded concerns, that's very concerning to me. I certainly would welcome the hon. member to raise his concerns with the Ethics Commissioner or an elections officer.

Mr. Gill: Mr. Speaker, given that it appears that there were more than $40,000 in very suspicious donations made to a UCP leadership candidate who attacked Brian Jean in the UCP leadership race and who ultimately endorsed the Leader of the Opposition and given that there are rumours that this money actually came from a PAC associated with the Leader of the Opposition, can the government confirm that the Election Commissioner is investigating this PAC and these questionable donations?

Ms Hoffman: I can't, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the Election Commissioner reports to all members of this Assembly, but if the hon. member has information about that that he is hoping to highlight, I imagine it would be best to go to the Election Commissioner. We know that some people like to say, you know, that things that are alleged fraud belong with internal party mechanisms. I think that alleged fraud belongs with the police, and if there are concerns about alleged fraud in political activities, then it should be brought to the police. I think that if the hon. member has concerns about elections, then he should certainly bring those as well to the election officer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Support for Students with Special Needs

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Too often I hear from parents and teachers that children with special needs are not getting the supports that they require in Alberta public schools. I regularly meet with parents who tell me that they struggle to get their child properly tested. This happens because schools have a limited number of psychological assessments they can offer a year, and these usually go to the students with the most severe behaviours. This can mean that students with less overt needs, who could be helped by early intervention, fall through the cracks. Imagine being the parent of a struggling child who can't afford the thousands of dollars it costs for private assessment. To the Minister of Education: why is there a limit on psychological assessments for students who need them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for the question from the hon. member. Certainly, we know that assessing students' special needs is very important. We have built a structure that allows us to bring in special-needs assessment when it is required and when it is asked for by teachers and from schools. In this last year, for example, we have invested more than $66 million in the regional collaborative service delivery program, which has allowed us to hire more speech pathologists, social workers, nurses, and other front-line staff. Certainly, there's more work to be done, but we're heading in the right direction.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you. Given that there are numerous early learning screening tools available and given that universally applying these tools could find children who need intervention sooner and at lower cost than traditional testing and given that when children have access to early intervention, they have better outcomes, why are we not applying this kind of screening province-wide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we know that by assessing and using screening procedures, we can help to identify issues that require extra attention. I have been working to strengthen those every step of the way, and our entire caucus and government have been working to strengthen that by making the necessary investments in education. You have to put in money and time and effort in order for these things to happen. You certainly can't do it by cutting.

Ms Luff: Given that there are many things that schools need, from playgrounds, furniture, computers, and instruments to education assistants, nurses, and counsellors, and given that many schools have to fund raise for things that should be considered essential and given that this can cause major inequities between schools across Alberta and that every student deserves the same quality of education despite their postal code or their parents' income, will the minister commit to reviewing the per-student funding model and also commit to defunding elite private schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there's a lot in that particular question. We know that, say, for example, playgrounds are a very important part. That's why our government, for all new school programs, is building a new playground as well. It goes with that. That allows us more money to make investments for other communities, building new programming so that we can reach into places where they're having difficulty raising that money. We do all of these things because we believe in education. We believe in investing in education. You can't make cuts and compromise the future of our students.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

NDP and Pipeline Development

Mr. Loewen: We hear the same messages from the government day after day. They keep telling us they are great supporters of our oil and gas industry. They keep telling us that they want to get pipelines built. The fact is that they can repeat these lines over and over again, but it doesn't make them true, and it won't change their record of opposition to critical pipeline projects. It won't change the fact that their ministers used to show up to protest our prosperity. It won't change the fact that a minister's name appears as a contributor to a book designed to impede our economic progress. What might be a good first step forward is an apology for this policy. Will the minister of environment start with an apology for protesting Northern Gateway and for her other . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, from day one our government has fought for what's important, and that's our energy industry and the good jobs it brings to Albertans and indeed the country. We have worked hard, as all members know, on pipelines and diversifying our energy here in Alberta because we know that that's a long-term solution for our industry. In the meantime we're fighting very hard to get more railcars to get the excess supply that we have out. Just this week we announced a curtailment, which will be a short-term solution to that.

Mr. Loewen: Given that it seems an apology isn't forthcoming and given that I'm sure they will continue to tell Albertans that they are champions of pipelines and given that Albertans want the government to prove that their support consists of more than just empty words and given that the Premier has already admitted on CBC that she was wrong for opposing Northern Gateway – it makes me wonder why she said that she's been supporting it since day one – will the Premier at least take responsibility, provide Albertans in this House with the same level of honesty that she provided the state broadcaster in Ottawa, and tell us that the NDP government was wrong to oppose Northern Gateway?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to go back to the Federal Court of Appeal decision that threw out the Northern Gateway decision. Paragraph 255 said that after providing false information to indigenous people, the federal government, of which this member's leader was a part, was "less than willing to hear the First Nations on this and to . . . correct the information."

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take lectures on how to get pipelines or large projects built from a group of people that have that kind of record when it comes to indigenous consultation, when it comes to upholding the honour of the Crown, especially when we had all of the Treaty 8 chiefs here today.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that a sign of a humble government would be to admit where they got it wrong and take responsibility instead of lashing out and blaming Conservatives for NDP failures and given that the failure of the NDP-Trudeau alliance to get pipelines built ultimately means that Albertans are worse off, with thousands of jobs gone and billions in revenue lost, looking forward, can the government commit to Albertans that they will cease both their apathy in some areas and support in other areas for Trudeau's continual barrage of anti-Alberta policies?

Ms Hoffman: I'm incredibly proud of our Premier's and our ministers' record on fighting for the people of this province. MEG Energy corporation's chief executive officer, Derek Evans, said that his company was considering laying off workers and slashing production at its Christina Lake project by 30 per cent until Alberta's mandated oil production cut-offs lifted Canadian heavy crude prices. He said, quote: we were looking at laying off people; we were looking at how we were going to make it through this first quarter and the first half of 2019. He went on to say: the Premier's plan has taken away the belief that we're going to have to lay off people right before Christmas. This Premier is fighting for ordinary folks and fighting for their jobs, Mr. Speaker, and we're not going to back down.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Energy Policies Bighorn Area Land Use

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three questions today about energy. Alberta is an energy province, and despite the best efforts of environmental radicals and the lacklustre efforts of our federal government, that energy will include fossil fuels for years to come. We need pipelines to get some of the cleanest, most ethically produced oil on the planet to world markets. To that end, my constituents in Drayton Valley held a rally and circulated a petition this week. They're coming to Edmonton on Monday to present that petition to the Legislature, and I would like to know which of the government's ministers will be willing to meet with them to receive that petition.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting because I had a meeting today with the Treaty 8 chiefs. We met with them even though the Leader of the Opposition refused to. They said: "We don't oppose economic development. We want pipelines. We want to share in the benefits of the great natural resource gifts . . .

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Phillips: . . . that we have in this province," and that's what we're focused on. We're focused on prosperity for everyone, but we're also focused on what we know are our constitutional obligations. In part, it is a duty to consult.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: I would still like to know if it's going to be the Minister of Energy or the minister of environment.

This is also an energy-related question. Given that Alberta is an energy province and given that the renewable energy company Ever has identified over 20,000 orphaned and abandoned wells suitable for geothermal production and given that I have been putting this concept of geothermal baseload energy before this government for two years and given that repurposing these wells could keep drilling and well-service workers busy for at least 20 years, what possible reason could there be for this government's inaction on this file?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's rather rich coming from a side of the House that has derided renewable energy, that has spread false conspiracy theories about renewable energy. All of a sudden now, because they want economic development, renewable energy seems like a good idea.

We're moving forward with the regulatory framework for geothermal, Mr. Speaker. We have already funded a couple of pilot projects with respect to the Hinton development. I will have more to say throughout 2019. The fact of the matter is that you take action on renewable energy when you believe that climate change is real.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta is an energy province and given that the government's Bighorn plan extends new regulatory controls over an area bigger than some European countries and given the significant forestry, energy, and recreational activity that currently occurs in the proposed west country public land-use zone and given that assurances to stakeholders regarding the Castle region plan were not honoured, how can the industrial and recreational users be confident that they're not being bamboozled on the Bighorn?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think it's strange that folks don't want economic development in their constituencies. I would like the opposition, actually, to write me a letter that indicates that they don't want investment in their constituencies, that they don't want an extension to tourism lease terms, that they don't want a trail pass system for off-highway vehicle users, something they've been asking for for years, and that they don't want indigenous comanagement in parks. That might seem obvious to us all now. I would like it written down in a letter that they don't want us to invest meaningfully in their own ridings.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Provincial Third-quarter Fiscal Update

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the second-quarter fiscal update covered a period prior to the spike in the oil price differential, and the minister has acknowledged this fact. The next fiscal update will report on government revenues from October to December. It was during this time that the oil discount hit a record high and our resource revenues plummeted. To the Finance minister. Albertans will need an honest look at our finances this spring. When will the minister release the third-quarter fiscal update?

Mr. Mason: I can tell the hon. member that the third-quarter fiscal update will be released by the Minister of Finance at the appropriate time.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we've had a really tough hand dealt to us, and it's been made worse, quite frankly, by the previous government's failure to diversify the economy and its failure to diversify the sources of revenue for this government, becoming far too dependent, as we had been telling them for years, on volatile royalty revenue to pay for the costs associated with the government of this province. It's a challenging situation. They've left us a terrible mess to clean up, and we are doing a great job . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, it's kind of rich that the minister would say that when this government has become more dependent upon the price of oil and, as a result, has a higher deficit than has happened in as long as almost anybody remembers. Given that the third-quarter fiscal update is crucial to providing Albertans with the full financial impact of the oil differential and given that the NDP's balanced budget counts on revenues from at least 2 out of 3 proposed pipelines and given that the government's pact with Justin Trudeau has brought zero pipelines, to the Finance minister: will you commit to releasing the third-quarter fiscal update before March 1?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the fiscal update is an important measurement of how the province is doing. The Finance minister, I know, takes it very seriously, our government takes it very seriously, and we will make sure that that fiscal update is released at the appropriate time. But I do want to say that these are challenging times. Our government has risen to those challenges. We have brought the price of oil back by this timely intervention that the Premier made with respect to the differential. We're going to continue to do the right thing for Albertans and their jobs.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that I have to ask because the minister actually failed to provide a second-quarter update in 2015 even though the law required him to do so at that time and given that the third-quarter update will reinforce other economic indicators that show almost no growth in wages and salaries this year and given that the NDP might see the lack of happy economic news as a reason for delaying the third-quarter fiscal update with an election coming, to the minister: will the minister commit to release the third-quarter fiscal update even if we are in the midst of a general election?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I don't know when the election is going to be, but I know that the Minister of Finance is very concerned with making sure that we have a good understanding of the economic situation facing this province. It is a difficult economic situation, made far worse by the previous government's repeated failures to do anything about an overdependence on one commodity to finance government operations. They left this province in a terrible mess, and we've improved the situation significantly, and we're going to continue to do that in term 2.

Support for Survivors of Sexual Assault

Ms McPherson: Yesterday the government announced a three-year pilot program through the Elizabeth Fry Society to provide free legal advice to survivors of sexual violence. Two years ago Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence, removed time limits to bring forward civil claims. Does the Minister of Status of Women agree that removing time limits is effective in encouraging women to come forward to report sexual assault?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. We were very proud to move that bill forward with respect to removing the barriers. At that time the conversations I had with the survivors that I spoke to indicated not that they would necessarily bring forward claims but that they liked to have the option available to them so they didn't feel like they were forced into a decision at a time when they were still traumatized.

Thank you.

Ms McPherson: Given that sexual assault has often devastating effects on survivors and given that becoming strong enough to report an assault can take years, decades in some cases, and that creating the opportunity to come forward should encourage more survivors to report historic sexual assault, what outcomes indicate the success of Bill 2 since 2017, and what are the expected outcomes of this pilot?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. You know, in general with these sorts of instances, to us what indicates success would be survivors feeling better supported moving forward. They've certainly indicated that these are the things that will make them feel better supported and better able to make their own decision. At the end of the day, this is about agency. This is about giving the survivors of sexual violence agency in their lives, the ability to make the decisions when they're prepared to make the decisions and to engage in the way that they're prepared to engage.

Ms McPherson: Thank you to the minister for the answer.

Given that we agree that no time limit is a good thing for survivors to be able to bring information forward in the legal system and that the pilot is a good idea, is there a reason that this pilot does not include women who live south of Red Deer, and what, if any, alternative supports are available to women in southern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the hon. member for the very important and informed questions. Certainly, this is a pilot project, and these supports will be available initially on a limited basis for a few years. We've done a number of other things. Certainly, as the member referenced, we have removed the time limits on bringing forward sexual claims. Another thing that I'm very proud of is that we've worked with police services to put in place guidelines for dealing with victims who do choose to come forward to the police and to seek that particular route. It's important that they be respected at every step of that process, and I think everybody agrees on that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Trampoline Safety Standards

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The growing popularity of trampoline park facilities has raised serious safety concerns, with several high-profile injuries and, sadly, one death in B.C. having taken place in recent memory. Currently these facilities aren't subject to any regulations that set standards for them. I met with the Minister of Municipal Affairs last spring to discuss what can be done to improve safety in these parks. Minister, what progress has your department made in developing regulations to make trampoline parks safer?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for the question and his continued advocacy on this issue. We've had a few discussions, as he said, on this file now, and I appreciate his passion for ensuring the safety of Albertans. We have been working very hard on this file over the past few months. We've been consulting with industry and stakeholders on this file because we want to make sure we get this right. Ultimately, the safety of all Albertans is our top priority.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that spinal cord injuries are common injuries sustained on trampolines and given that specialized first aid training could mean the difference between life and death, to the same minister: will you consider creating regulations that would require employees at trampoline park facilities to have this first aid training?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. You know, the member is right. We want to make sure parents and children alike can enjoy these parks with the comfort of knowing they're regulated and that their safety is top of mind. It is something we have heard from folks out there when we're doing consultation, and I can share with you that we're very close to having new rules in place and a proper regulatory system in place for trampoline parks. I look forward to sharing the details with the folks in this House and all Albertans in the near future.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that trampolines send an average of four Alberta children to emergency rooms across the province each day and given that the majority of these injuries are sustained on backyard trampolines, to the Minister of Health: what consideration has your department given to launching a public awareness campaign to educate parents on the dangers of backyard trampolines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things we have done is to be in contact with the Minister of Health on these types of things and consulting.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity – I'm not sure if I'll get the chance again – to say this. I'd like to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for his service. He's spent a lot of years in public service. He's an honourable, respectful, hard-working person. I have an immense amount of respect for him, and I think I speak for all of us in here: from the bottom of our hearts we wish him all the best in the future. Thank you, Member.

The Speaker: Well, that doesn't happen very often.
Agreed. I think I speak for the House, hon. member.

Labour Relations Board

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, since the NDP took government, the Alberta Labour Relations Board has been granted wide, sweeping powers. The purpose of the ALRB, according to their website, is to be an "independent and impartial tribunal responsible for the day-to-day application and interpretation of Alberta's labour laws." We have seen an alarming spike in remedial certifications granted by the ALRB. To the Labour minister: do you believe that the ALRB, with all the changes you have made, is still an independent and impartial tribunal to both the employee and the employer?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to inform the member that he may have noticed a spike because the ALRB did not have the powers of remedial certification prior to the changes in the law. So, yes, they are now able to do something they could not do before. The Labour Relations Board is absolutely an independent arbitrator. They are there to ensure that both employers and workers are operating on a fair and balanced playing field. I'm very pleased that we were able to update labour laws that were woefully out of date and out of step with the rest of Canada as part of our changes to workplace legislation.

2:40

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the ALRB's role is to serve both the employees and employers fairly and given that when I went through the bios of each of the 34 board members, I could only see about a maximum of seven members, one-fifth of the board, that had any private-sector job-creating experience and given that a large majority of the ALRB's board members are past or current members of unions, does the minister still believe that the ALRB can operate as an impartial tribunal?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. I believe very strongly that the Alberta Labour Relations Board does operate fairly and impartially. We updated the workplace legislation for the first time in decades and brought in clear rules, making sure that employers and workers were able to nominate individuals who would then be chosen for consideration for appointment to the board. We've been including employer representatives in this appointment process as well as labour representatives when it comes to worker representatives on the Labour Relations Board. Mr. Speaker, making sure we have a fair and balanced board is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that David Harrigan, Rick Eichel, Thomas Hesse, Nancy Furlong, and Lyle Kane, all members of the ALRB board, have donated massive amounts of money to the NDP this year alone, does the minister still believe that the ALRB is impartial, and is she concerned that these board members are in a conflict of interest? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.
The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member there seems to be accusing some very upstanding and dedicated servants of impropriety, and I think that's an inappropriate use of his time here in this building. We know the Conservative plan for workers. We've seen it for decades. We saw Albertans falling through the cracks, not getting fairness and justice because their workplace laws were 40 years out of date. We've updated the legislation. We are making sure that the Labour Relations Board is properly resourced. These are wonderful people who are fighting on behalf of both workers and employers, and I'm very proud to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Fort Saskatchewan Area Road Construction

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The northeast river crossing, or NERC, was a project identified in 2011 to serve the Edmonton capital region and Alberta's Industrial Heartland. Four municipalities and Alberta Transportation partnered on a $1.4 million study to identify the location of a future river crossing west of Fort Saskatchewan, but mid-study Alberta Transportation pulled a fast one on the municipalities and announced a $90 million upgrade to the Vinca Bridge for heavy haul instead. Minister, did you betray the voters of the four municipalities, especially Fort Saskatchewan, who have not given up on the building of the NERC?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this member couldn't be more out of touch with the people of Fort Saskatchewan, you know, if he lived on the moon because the people of Fort Saskatchewan spend an hour every morning and an hour every afternoon in congestion because there's not a crossing that's a four-lane crossing in their city. We have provided exactly what they want, exactly what they need. That bridge should have been twinned nearly 20 years ago because the traffic counts are so high. We have done what Fort Saskatchewan and its people want, and that member doesn't understand it at all.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister and the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville announced the upgrade of the Vinca Bridge to handle heavy loads for the heartland but given that the landowner adjacent to both ends of the Vinca Bridge has called us and complained that no one has called him about the project and the impacts to his land, Minister, is the Vinca Bridge project actually real, and if so, will you and the MLA call the landowner to address his concerns around the project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the location of the Vinca Bridge will take heavy- and high-load traffic between the Industrial Heartland and Fort McMurray. It's critically needed. We did a careful study of the entire high- and heavy-load corridor in the province, and this was part of it. So that is well supported in the region as well. I'm sure that the landowner will be contacted in due course about the expansion of that bridge – it's an existing bridge, I might add – because we are working really hard to promote real economic development for northeast Alberta.

Mr. Hanson: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville believes in twinning the highway 15 bridge so much that she's been making sure the traffic count stays high, as witnessed by her 80,000-kilometre mileage claim, and given that there is a lot of dirt being moved around up there right now to fix the intersection at highway 37 but the bridge twinning has not yet commenced and given that the 2018-2019 capital plan does not have any special breakout line items for any bridge twinning to Fort Saskatchewan, are the minister and the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville announcing projects to the voters of Fort Saskatchewan that are not really grounded in reality?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, first of all, in terms of the preamble it was uncalled for and rude and so flippant that it really debases the question. Yes, we have done careful studies and careful consultation with the surrounding municipalities on these needs. If that member thinks that that project isn't needed, I invite him to come to the middle of Fort Saskatchewan and stand on a street corner and tell people that because, you know, they're going to laugh him right out, and he'll be laughed right out of the next election. I know he says that it's going to hurt, but – you know what? – we're here to make it better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Arts and Culture Industries

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the recent commitment from the city of Calgary's budget to invest in creative industries through stable-based funding for arts and cultural organizations and since the industries are a key pillar of their economic development strategy, it appears that Calgary is poised to attract some top talent within the growth sector. My question is to the Minister of Culture and Tourism. What are the plans to support cultural industries and further diversify the economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government recognizes the important economic role that cultural industries play in Alberta not just in times of prosperity but in times of economic challenges as well. That is why we've increased funding to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts by $5 million in Budget 2017. This is a commitment that will allow the AFA to continue supporting this growing sector. The UCP wants to provide $700 million in tax cuts, and we know from their policy proposals that we would see the funding to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts all but disappear.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our creative sector helps diversify the economy and create economic growth, I'd ask the minister: in what other ways is the government supporting creative industries in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. In this government we know that the arts contribute to the economy. In 2016 Alberta exported over $777 million of cultural products, and the industry contributed approximately $1.3 billion to our provincial GDP. That is why in just a few weeks we will be proclaiming January as the Month of the Artist in Alberta to recognize the important work that artists do to strengthen our society and our community.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I ask what could be the final question of the session, I'd like to congratulate the minister on the news of his nuptials over the Christmas holidays.

I'd like to ask him this final question – and to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks: brace yourself – how will the proclamation of the Month of the Artist help the creative industry here in Alberta?

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for those kind words. During the month of January there will be numerous artist appreciation events. We will also release our guidelines to ensure that artists are properly compensated for their work. We'll be naming our first artist-in-residence program in our province's history, and all artists in any discipline who would like to represent and reflect Alberta in their work are encouraged to apply before December 10. The info can be found on the ministry's website.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I thought maybe you were going to consider unanimous consent.

Mr. Mason: Oh. Well, I have something to just announce first, Mr. Speaker, if I may. Under Standing Order 7(8) we will be continuing Routine past 3 p.m.

I would then ask that we have unanimous consent to revert to introductions, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and all members of the Assembly Brian Walters. Brian recently joined the Medicine Hat constituency office and has proven to be a valued asset to the Medicine Hat team. Brian previously worked as an educator and musician. His wife, Shauna, is a guitar instructor and piano teacher. His son and daughter are both pursuing degrees at universities within Alberta. He is seated in your gallery – he’s already risen – and I’d ask that he be given the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

2:50

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Jabbour: Second, it’s my great pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Michelle Huley and Barb Wendt. Michelle and Barb manage my two offices in the Peace River constituency and succeed in co-ordinating communication across the largest constituency in the province, which is a real challenge given that I’m always on the road and they never see me in person. Michelle Huley is a long-time resident of Peace River, a former journalist, and a dog show junkie. Barb Wendt is a former chief of Beaver First Nation. She’s a community advocate and a devoted mom and grandma. They’ve risen. Would you please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Jabbour: I also would like to introduce to you and through you a very important group of individuals in the galleries today who play a key role in the democratic process in the province of Alberta. Our constituency assistants are often the first point of contact for the people in the communities that we serve. Their jobs can be very rewarding, but they’re also demanding and difficult. We’d like to take a moment to thank them for their dedication to all Albertans. They are here today participating in the winter constituency employee learning and development seminar, which is developed each year with their unique roles and requirements in mind. The seminar provides an opportunity to network with each other and obtain an overview of the numerous programs and services available through the Legislative Assembly Office. Each year the service and contributions of these individuals are celebrated with an employee recognition dinner, which you, Mr. Speaker, will be holding later this evening. Today over 83 constituency office employees are with us from all corners of the province. I would ask that they all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: A special welcome to all of you, I think, collectively on behalf of all of the members. This place would have challenges without people like yourselves.

Any other introductions? The Minister of Children’s Services.

Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know there was a collective introduction, but throughout all of my time in the Legislature I’ve not had the opportunity to introduce my two incredible constituency assistants, Merry-Lee Newcombe and Cathy Wilcox, helping me out with an office both in Slave Lake and in High Prairie. You know, it’s kind of isolated sometimes in the north, and they work really hard to continue to stay connected with constituency assistants across the province. They do an incredible job serving my offices in both Slave Lake and High Prairie. Thank you for the opportunity to recognize them. I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature my constituency office staff. I have two ladies working for me in the Barrhead office, my office manager, Audrey Neuman – she has been working in the constituency office for the better part of 30 years and has never had the opportunity to be introduced here – and also her assistant, Julie Tomm. They do incredible work for me in my constituency office. I’d like them to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Calgary-MacKay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my constituency staff that are here today from Calgary-MacKay-Nose Hill. Carol-Lynn Darch and Bronson Ha have both recently started in my office, and I have the utmost appreciation for them, keeping me on track and also serving the people of Calgary-MacKay-Nose Hill. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I had this sense that this might happen this afternoon in spite of my pleadings to make a group introduction, but who am I to control the emotions of the House?

The Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I did kind of seek the permission of our caucus so that I could make this introduction. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my senior CA, Arie deValois. He is compassionate, organized, patient, and an absolute political junkie. I thank you, Arie, from the bottom of my heart for all that you do to support me. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to introduce my calendar angel, as I like to refer to her, Vicki Welsh. If you could please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you my assistant in my office, my office manager. You know, anybody that can keep me going from appointment to appointment and figure out where I need to be and who I need to be talking to is a much better person than I am. I would like to introduce to you Mrs. Wendy Snow. If she would rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, for the second time today I would like to collectively introduce to all members our constituency assistants here today and ask that you give them the warm welcome of the House collectively.

The Speaker: Well, that was unusual.

Hon. members, we will in 15 seconds move to Members’ Statements.

I may not get the opportunity personally to express for my family an appreciation of the festive season. I think all of you deserve a break, and I hope you have a very peaceful and relaxing new year.

Members’ Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Human Rights

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The United Nations General Assembly adopted the universal declaration of human rights 70 years ago. Every year since, on December 10 we observe Human Rights Day. The declaration is critically important in establishing the equal dignity and worth of every human being, regardless of their race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth, or other status.

Eleanor Roosevelt famously said of the declaration: "Where . . . do universal human rights begin? In small places, close to home . . . Unless these rights have meaning there, they have little meaning anywhere." Those words are still very true today, Mr. Speaker.

Hate groups with a goal of attacking the rights of others are establishing themselves across our province, groups like the Soldiers of Odin or the Worldwide Coalition against Islam, who felt comfortable promoting their hateful message on the steps of Calgary city hall. It is deeply concerning that Alberta has seen an upsurge of extremist views. So many Albertans are vulnerable when hate groups are emboldened.

On this side of the House we've got the backs of newcomers, of cultural communities, and of LGBTQ and gender-diverse Albertans. We're fighting for what matters by making real, concrete changes that are making life better for all Albertans. I am proud to be part of a government that has been active in addressing systemic racism and bigotry and protecting the rights of LGBTQ youth, something that previous Conservative governments didn't prioritize.

As leaders and legislators we must be firm and united in our condemnation of anyone or anything that threatens the human rights of our citizens. Eleanor Roosevelt also said, "Without concerted citizen action to uphold [human rights] close to home, we shall look in vain for progress in the larger world." On this side of the House on Human Rights Day and every day we proudly stand in action.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

'Twas the night before Christmas, and all through the house

Not a light was turned on, and the furnace was out.
The stockings weren't hung. The chimney was bare.
You see, the NDP taxman would soon show up there.

The children were covered by quilts on their beds.
Their stockings were wrapped round their shivering heads.

Mama in her kerchief and I in my cap
Tossed and turned; it was too cold to nap.

Then out on the lawn, there arose such a clatter
I jumped out of bed to see what was the matter.
I hoped and I prayed, but it was not to be.
The NDP taxman had finally found me.

With a line item there and a fuel tax here,
I checked on my bank account totals with fear.
More rapid than eagles those taxes they came
The NDP penance for climate-guilt shame

No carbon, no fuel, no coal, and no gas,
No driving, no heating, no hockey, no class.

To the top of the tax hikes, to the top of them all,
Now tax away, tax away, tax away all.

3:00

As the taxman laughed before my empty account,
The costs of living, they began to mount.
Up to the top the expenses they grew,
And before we knew it, the neighbour's broke, too.

You see, the Christmas season is especially hard
For families that are struggling to pay a credit card.
And for those folks it doesn't seem funny
When it's the carbon taxman taking all of their money.

No presents for kids, no treats for the dogs,
No tax breaks for gas; we can't afford logs.
The carbon sales tax is making life heavy.
When I told the NDP, all they said: "It's a levy."

It's going to be hard with kids to explain
The government is causing this Christmastime pain.
But hope is near. This I do know.
A new government in waiting when the snow will go.

The UCP will come one day soon
And chase away that taxman and horrible gloom.
They will make life better and keep taxes low.
The UCP will give that tax a heave-ho.

So a leader and team are here to explain:
This is the last year of carbon tax pain.
Sorry if I bored you with this carbon tax fight.
Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good night.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Alberta Party and Official Opposition Policies

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. With increasing frequency the Leader of the Official Opposition has taken credit for Alberta Party initiatives. Last spring the Alberta Party introduced a sunset clause amendment to Bill 12. Imagine our surprise when we heard the hon. member claim on national television that it was his idea.

Fast-forward to this fall. An Act to Protect Patients bill hit the floor with a mere five-year requirement before doctors could reapply for their licence. I worked really hard on that amendment for a lifetime ban, and I introduced it as soon as the bill entered Committee of the Whole. I did it because no health professional should ever get their licence back after assaulting a patient. Again, on social media what I found was the Leader of the Official Opposition claiming responsibility for the exact same amendment.

On November 17 my colleague from Calgary-Elbow asked the government about curtailment, and weeks later the UCP took credit for the idea after abandoning their potentially illegal voluntary curtailment suggestion.

Even today, in the year-end presser, the Member for Calgary-Elbow asked that the NDP release the third-quarter results before calling an election, and lo and behold, we heard exactly that same request in question 10 today.

Now, if you're wondering what the UCP will be talking about later today or in two weeks, listen to what the Alberta Party has to say.

Christmas Reflections

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, Santa is putting the finishing touches on his naughty and nice list, and he has asked me to share an exclusive copy of it with the hon. members here today.

First on his naughty list is the Minister of Labour, who, having passed card check legislation, turned Santa's workshop into a closed shop, unionizing it without even allowing the elves a chance to vote.

On the nice list is Canada Post. Going on its yearly strike at Christmastime has undercut his biggest competitor, grandma and grandpa.

On the naughty list is Prime Minister Trudeau. Having attacked the North Pole for its culture of toxic masculinity, the new gender-based analysis on the effects of Christmas on Mrs. Claus has ended in the banning of one of Santa's favourites, Baby, It's Cold Outside.

On the nice list is the Minister of Finance's AGL Ceci, whose open market on cannabis sales ensures that the milk and cookies will taste better than ever this year.

On the very naughty list is the Soldiers of Odin for their overly literal understanding of the words to White Christmas.

Santa has also assured me that I will be on the nice list this year for not shooting any more of his reindeer.

Collectively on the naughty list are the NDP, Tories, and Alberta Party for imposing supply management on toy production when we all know the answer is more sleighs. Speaking of sleighs, also on the naughty list is the hon. Premier, whose $30 a tonne carbon tax has grounded Santa's sleigh.

But naughty or nice, agree or disagree, I believe that every hon. member here today is honourable and trying to do what they think is right. As we all head home this afternoon to our families, I want to thank each and every one of you for a rigorous debate, Standing Order 49 closure notwithstanding, and I want to wish each and every one of you a very Merry Christmas.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Calgary-Greenway.

Retrospective by the Member for Calgary-Greenway

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier calls an election early or the spring session is short, then this might be the last time ever I speak in this beautiful Assembly, so please be patient with me today.

As I consider my career, I think about how my two children will look upon it in later years. I've been here less time than most other members, and I take a moment to think about my friend Manmeet Bhullar, whose untimely death is the reason why I'm here. Manmeet was Sikh, just like me, and he provided the example that led me into politics. As I possibly leave politics, I wanted to speak out about service and what is important.

As a Sikh I thank God for all his blessings on me and my family, and my faith has led my effort to treat everyone equally in the world and in this Chamber. My faith has also driven my approach to politics. Sikhs reject the notion that any faith, even our own, has a monopoly on all spiritual truth. Likewise, I have approached politics in a gentle way, always seeking to hear others and understand their point of view. I've been well served in politics by listening and not thinking that I have all the answers or the only truth. That's a lesson that leaders should follow. My faith also leads me to service since looking after the less fortunate and serving others is extremely important, as is conducting oneself in an honourable fashion. Where I come from, if you seek someone's help and support, you keep your promises to them.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could tell you that everyone in politics is honourable and they do not lust for power or hide their truths from the world, but that is not so. But I can say this. Those who pursue power for its own sake are doomed to failure. Those who live righteous lives, who practice honour, try to serve others, and create community and fellowship: those people will be loved.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my mother, my wife, my two beautiful children, my community, my supporters, and all of you guys for giving me courage to serve. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a cold day in Montreal on December 6, 1989, but it became bone chilling for the engineering students attending an evening class. The males in the class were ordered to leave by a man, Marc Lépine, who entered the room. The learning stopped. The piercing sound of bullets rang through the air. Fourteen women dead, 14 others injured, and countless more family, friends, and community members traumatized by the evening's horror.

Why did it happen? In the days that followed, we learned that he had a long list of women's names in his pocket that evening, women he considered to be feminists. His victims were targeted. Before the perpetrator fired, he was heard to say: I hate feminists. Monique Simard, who was on that list, said that for a long time December 6 made women afraid to admit that they were feminists. But today it's not shameful to be a feminist, and even if it was, Mr. Speaker, I proudly call myself a feminist.

The National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women is held every year on this date in commemoration of those 14 women murdered at l'école Polytechnique in Montreal. We must remember this horrific event. It has become the basis to recognize and support action against widespread violence committed against women in our society.

Why does violence continue to prevail? I believe that until societal attitudes change, until all people are valued and respected in society, until we think about the words we use and how we use them, until we all treat others as we wish to be treated, it will not change. I commit to treating others as I wish to be treated, as I have always done. Will you?

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to present a petition today. The petition is on options for human burials. The petition prayer states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation to amend the Cemeteries Act to explicitly allow for alkaline hydrolysis and other emerging green technologies as approved methods for the disposition of human remains.

Earlier I introduced the person who spearheaded this petition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Bill 214

Traffic Safety (Safe Distances for Passing Bicycles) Amendment Act, 2018

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I nearly wore my cycling jersey today, but I just wore earrings in commemoration of this important bill that I'm asking leave from you to introduce. I'm asking you leave to introduce Bill 214, Traffic Safety (Safe Distances for Passing Bicycles) Amendment Act, 2018.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve to be safe on our roadways no matter how they choose to get around even in winter, once these cyclists are on the roads, even commuting to the Legislative Assembly. As a frequent cyclist I have frequently felt unsafe when passed by motorists. Bill 214, Traffic Safety (Safe Distances for Passing Bicycles) Amendment Act, 2018, will ensure that cyclists on Alberta provincial roadways are safe and free to travel by mandating a minimum passing distance for motor vehicles overtaking a bicycle on a provincial road.

I wanted to thank all those cyclists who have asked me and worked with me on making this bill possible.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 214 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of letters, a letter from the Minister of Finance to the chair of Public Accounts Committee and a letter from the office of the Auditor General to the Minister of Finance. I want to do this in order to clarify comments made yesterday by the Minister of Finance, and these letters will help set the record straight on the government's decision to improve its year-end reporting. While the decision was not based on a recommendation made by or advice given by the Auditor General, the letter states that the OAG has reviewed the proposed changes and agreed that key financial information is being retained.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have one tabling this afternoon. I rise to table five copies of the 2017 Legislative Assembly Office annual report.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I have five copies that I'd like to table of an earlier comment that I made in my question regarding the donations that were made to the NDP party earlier.

The Speaker: Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the five requisite copies of a letter to the Premier from the Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta concerned about the sale of Crown land and the UCP's plan to sell that land.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I believe we are now at points of order. First of all, I'm advised by the Member for Airdrie that she has withdrawn the second point of order.

The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to be brief. I don't know if the opposition will accommodate me on that or not.

At some point during the question the hon. member from the other side made a statement about how the Leader of the Official Opposition had refused to meet with the chiefs that were here today. Under 23(i): "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." You know what? I'm sure that the hon. member that said that may have some example where the chiefs have tried to get a meeting with the Leader of the Official Opposition and haven't been able to do so yet, and if they wanted to raise that issue in some attempt to embarrass the Leader of the Official Opposition, I suppose that's fair game. But to claim that the Leader of the Official Opposition is refusing to meet the chiefs is beyond what's fact, and that's what imputes false or unavowed motives. You know, The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was looking forward to meeting with the chiefs at some point in the future. On that basis, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that you would hold that it's a point of order because it's an unavowed motive applied to a member of the House under 23(i).

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the Blues, but I do believe that the minister of environment indicated that the Leader of the Official Opposition had refused to meet with the chiefs in question. While I don't think that it's a matter of a point of order – it's a matter of debate – I do think that the minister misspoke. I've had a chance to discuss this with her. Her understanding is that the Leader of the Opposition had indicated he would not be able to meet with the chiefs today. I think that that was somewhat misinterpreted as a refusal to meet. The minister understands that and wishes to apologize to the Leader of the Official Opposition, and I'm happy to do so on her behalf.

Mr. McIver: Thanks to the minister.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. McIver: Do tell. What are the orders of the day?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. We've got some great new legislation for you, but that will come later, Mr. Speaker.

I'd like to start by thanking you, Mr. Speaker. This may or may not be the last day of sitting of this term. I suspect we will be back in the spring, but I don't know that, so I want to take the opportunity to thank you, in particular, for your work and your patience in this place and making sure that the place runs as well as a place like this can run. So thank you.

I'd also like to acknowledge all of the hard-working LAO and Chamber staff for their work in making sure that this place runs in a more or less orderly fashion and that the decisions of the elected representatives are translated into the legislation and the decisions that we've made. So I want to thank them very much.

I want to thank the pages for their hard work. I think they move faster than just about anything I've ever seen. I've worried that they're going to trip sometimes. But they are very, very helpful to us and make sure that this place runs well and that we can communicate with each other.

The Speaker: The new pages who are here, hon. minister, have been told about an experience that one of them had in 2015.

Mr. Mason: I'm sure they have, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The application of health and safety.

3:20

Mr. Mason: But, you know, they make sure that this place runs well and that nobody drinks coffee without a lid.

I'd like to thank security as well.

I'd like to thank the MLAs, from all parties, for their contributions. I think we've had a very, very successful session and a number of sessions before that, and I'd like to thank them for their thoughtful contributions. In particular, I want to thank those of them who've indicated they will not be running again. It's been an honour to serve with them.

And, Mr. Speaker, if I may say, it's been a wonderful 18 years for me in this place. [Standing ovation] Thank you very much, members. For all of the conflict, I think we've developed constructive relationships. With all of the very strange and arcane rules by which this place runs, I love this place, and I'm going to miss it very much and all of you.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to formally advise the House that pursuant to Government Motion 31 the business for the sitting is concluded.

Merry Christmas.

The Speaker: Thank you, Government House Leader. I think, as is evidenced by the applause that you received, that there is no division upon the contribution that you have made to this Assembly, and I personally would like to thank you on all of their behalf. I am a little uneasy, though, about who will add that humour to this sometimes too in-depth discussion. I do hope that someone else steps up to the plate.

I'd also like to echo the comments of the House with respect to our staff of this place and all the public servants. This building does not exist if they are not there.

So, hon. members, pursuant to Government Motion 31, agreed to on October 30, 2018, the House stands adjourned until February 2019.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:23 p.m. pursuant to Government Motion 31]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 4th Session (2018-2019)

Activity to Tuesday, December 11, 2018

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.
