Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 21, 2019

[The Mace was on a cushion below the table]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Clerk: Good afternoon.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated April 30, 2019, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, her party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

Her Honour: Please be seated.

Mr. Schweitzer (Provincial Secretary): Hon. members, I am commanded by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to inform you that she does not see fit to declare the causes of her summoning of the present Legislature of this province until a Speaker of the Assembly shall have been chosen according to law. She is therefore pleased to retire from the Assembly, to return at a subsequent hour on the next sitting day to declare the causes of her calling of this Legislature.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please.

Election of a Speaker

The Clerk: Hon. members, pursuant to the Lieutenant Governor's direction in section 16(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act nominations are invited for the Office of Speaker of this Assembly for the 30th Legislature. Pursuant to Standing Order 11(1) the Speaker shall be elected according to the procedure set out in schedule A of the standing orders. I therefore call for nominations.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. I rise today to nominate the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for the position of Speaker of this Legislative Assembly of Alberta. I've had the absolute privilege of working with Mr. Cooper as his deputy House leader for two years in opposition. I very quickly learned that he is indeed an absolute parliamentary and political nerd and that there is no one more suitable for the title of Mr. Speaker than the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I was impressed with his knowledge of and respect for the parliamentary traditions based on the respected Westminster parliamentary system. I was impressed with his respect for our democratic institutions and the decorum required to maintain respectful, productive debate and with his knowledge of protocol, which will be necessary as he represents this House to visiting dignitaries and while he's representing us in other jurisdictions.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is someone I am proud to call a friend and someone we can all be proud to call our Speaker.

Thank you.

The Clerk: Mr. Cooper, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Mr. Cooper: I do.

The Clerk: Are there further nominations?

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Clerk. Belated congratulations on your new role, and thank you, hon. members. It's an honour to once again speak in this Chamber as the elected representative for Edmonton-Mill Woods, and I'd like to congratulate and welcome everyone. I see we have a lot of first-time representatives with us today. I can still remember the strange mix of excitement and pressure that each of you is likely feeling at this moment.

The learning curve for new members is a steep one, and that's why I would encourage all of us to set aside partisanship at this moment and, instead, trust the incredible value that comes from experience as we make this very important choice for Speaker. There is no substitute for experience in a role. Knowing how things ought to work and how they do work allows an individual to excel in a particular role. That is why it is my honour to nominate the only member in this Chamber who already has the experience of presiding over this Assembly as its chair to be our next Speaker. I am proud to nominate Heather Sweet, the Member for Edmonton-Manning, who has served ably in the 29th Legislature as the Deputy Chair of Committees, to now take on the role as our Speaker.

Now, I know that Heather would bring to the role of Speaker a wealth of experience and a true desire to serve this Assembly impartially and with the considerable grace and wisdom that she has to offer. Ms Sweet has already shown that she can lead this Chamber through the fiercest of debates while keeping members of all parties in order and protecting the privileges that make our work as members of the Assembly possible.

We should also consider representation of the people of this great province, with the goal to have the Speaker's office contain members that represent north, south, and certainly representation from our capital city.

I hope Heather will accept this nomination, and I hope you will join with me in valuing experience as we choose who will preside as our Speaker. Your ability to fulfill your duties as a member of this place depends on us making a wise choice for this role, and I know that Heather Sweet would allow each of us to represent our constituents to our fullest.

Thank you.

The Clerk: Ms Sweet, do you accept the nomination?

Ms Sweet: I do. Thank you.

The Clerk: Are there further nominations?

I declare the nominations closed.

The nominees for the position of Speaker are Mr. Nathan Cooper and Ms Heather Sweet. Voting will commence after the list of nominees is posted at each voting booth.

Thank you.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Clerk: Voting will now begin. Members will vote by printing the first and last names of their preferred candidate on the ballot paper, then placing their completed ballot in the ballot box on the Sergeant-at-Arms' desk.

Thank you.

[Members voted from 1:50 p.m. to 1:57 p.m.]

The Clerk: Have all voted who wish to?

[Ballots were counted from 1:58 p.m. to 2:09 p.m.]

The Clerk: Number of ballots cast for the election of Speaker, 87; number of spoiled ballots, one; number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 44. The member having received the majority of votes cast is Mr. Nathan Cooper. [applause] Mr. Cooper is hereby declared the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 30th Legislature.

[The Speaker, with apparent reluctance, was escorted to the chair by Mr. Kenney and Ms Notley]

The Speaker: Members, before I begin, let me just take a moment to honour – I see former Speaker Ken Kowalski in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon. It's a pleasure to have you here. So nice of you to join us on this fantastic day. Thank you for joining us.

As this is my first opportunity to do so, I wish to send my greatest and deepest thank yous to the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for placing their trust back in me. I also wish to congratulate all members of the Assembly, whether it was your first election or your re-election. Congratulations on being here today, and thank you – thank you so very much – from the very bottom of my heart for placing your trust in me to serve as Speaker of the 30th Legislative Assembly.

Whether it's your first time as an MLA or you have faithfully served this institution like the Leader of the Official Opposition for 4,097 days or, in the case of the Member for Calgary-Hays or Cypress-Medicine Hat, for 2,585 days, I'm sure that all of them will tell you that coming to the Chamber for the very first time after an election is a very, very, very special time. This is a special place, where the weight of history meets our own unbridled hopes as we race towards the future. My hope is that in your debates we will be vigorous, thoughtful, and amicable. To date in this Chamber only 954 people have ever been elected to serve and represent Albertans. As we honour their legacy and service, let us be mindful that we now set the standard for those who come after us. May we not take this duty or calling lightly. Together we have an incredible opportunity and responsibility.

With that in mind, may I indulge you just for a brief moment to recognize a special guest in the Assembly today for the very first time, Louise Cooper. She is a remarkable woman in every single way, and she also happens to be my grandmother. I can tell you all that I would not be here today if it was not for her. Her courage and bravery in lockstep with her loving generosity have played such a pivotal role in my life. I've learned many, many lessons from her words and her examples. Not the least of this: in our haste to do good, we must never forget to be good for our families, our communities, and for our province. It is her example that I will endeavour to live up to in this new role.

It is with a servant's heart that I seek to serve this Assembly to ensure the rules and conventions and standing orders are applied equally and that all members of the Assembly have access to the resources you need to effectively represent your constituents. I will seek to uphold the high standard of those who have come before us. I intend to serve you to the best of my ability. You set the tone and orders of the Assembly and I am a servant for you, for it is in my view that the primary role of the Speaker is to first serve the House. It is the Speaker's responsibility to ensure that all members can exercise their rights and privileges in the Assembly. The Speaker's authority comes from you, its members, and that allows this parliament to function properly and fairly and in the manner expected by the people of Alberta who have sent us here today.

As Speaker Betty Boothroyd once famously said, "You've got to ensure that the holders of an opinion, however unpopular, are allowed to [get their points across]." It is with this in mind that I commit to you that as long as I have the privilege of serving as Speaker, your privileges and duties as elected members of this Assembly will be recognized and defended. I encourage and entrust all of you to remember that in our haste to do good for each other, we must never forget to be good for each other.

I have reviewed the calendar, and there are many busy days ahead, so let us proceed.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms placed the Mace on the table]

The Speaker: I'd invite you all to rise for the prayer.

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Father, on this day of new beginnings we ask for Your guidance in the responsibility we have undertaken and Your help in fulfilling our duties. As Members of the Legislative Assembly may we faithfully serve all Albertans and, in serving them, serve You. Amen.

Please be seated.

Election of a Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and to Standing Order 58(1)(a) nominations are invited for the Office of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees of this Assembly for the 30th Legislature. I therefore call for nominations.

The Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock, please.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It truly is a pleasure to rise in this House today and be the first to congratulate you on your new role as Speaker of this Assembly. I know that your extensive experience and your eagerness for the role will serve all members of this Assembly well.

Now moving on to the Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees. The role of the Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees is not just a figurehead position but, rather, a role that serves a vital function in this Assembly in keeping order, preserving tradition, and holding decorum. As with the Speaker of this House, the deputy position serves an essential purpose and is not to be taken lightly.

I believe the person who would be best suited to this role is one that is familiar with House proceedings, a member in good standing, and who I've witnessed first-hand to be fair to all. It is also important that they have a presence that can command the House. With that said, it is my honour to nominate the Member for Airdrie-East, Angela Pitt.

Following her role as deputy whip to our legacy caucus, Mrs. Pitt has served as our deputy House leader in the United Conservative caucus for almost two years. She has proven herself to be attentive to the role while being a leader to those around her. She is respected amongst all members of our caucus and has a deep admiration for our parliamentary process and the historic traditions of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I must reflect on my first opportunities in getting to know the Member for Airdrie-East. When we were first elected in this Legislature in 2015, Mrs. Pitt was my seatmate, just off to my right. One of the things that I got to know about Angela was her passion and commitment to the proceedings of this House. In fact, she was the first person I had ever met who took the time to actually watch question period regularly in her home. Now, to a farmer from Westlock that seemed rather absurd. Imagine spending an hour of what could be a productive afternoon watching politicians banter back and forth. What it did tell me, though, was Mrs. Pitt's passion and commitment to the proceedings in this House.

Mrs. Pitt is extremely committed to public service and has always sought the best for not only her constituents but for all Albertans. It is my sincere belief that, if elected, Mrs. Pitt would bring her hard-working nature to this role and serve all members of the House with dedication and fairness as we collectively strive to serve Albertans.

It is my hope that all members of this House will support and vote for Mrs. Pitt. I'm truly confident that, given her experience and dedication, she would fulfill the role of Chair of Committees and Deputy Speaker with dignity, with confidence, and respect for all members of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Mrs. Pitt, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be an honour to serve alongside you for all members of this Assembly. I graciously and humbly accept the nomination.

The Speaker: Are there any other nominations? The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by congratulating you on your election as Speaker and setting a tone of service to this Assembly.

I'd like to acknowledge and thank former Speaker Bob Wanner, who is in your gallery today, Mr. Speaker. The guidance and service you provided to the 29th Legislature will never be forgotten. Your actions changed this place for the better, and we thank you.

Mr. Speaker, the tradition of a nonpartisan chair and a nonpartisan Office of the Speaker is of critical importance for the functioning of this Legislature. It helps to achieve improved civility and decorum, objectives that, I understand, the new government caucus holds dear. To achieve those ends, Canada's federal House of Commons has frequently used the practice of choosing a Deputy Speaker from the opposition caucus. Not only does this contribute to the good functioning of the House but also ensures nonpartisan functioning of the Speaker's office.

When our new Premier served in the federal government's Executive Council, he and his colleagues did so with multiparty representation in Parliament's Speaker's office. So I invite us to adopt that same tradition here in our Legislature. It's my honour to nominate Heather Sweet for Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees of this House.

As I said in my earlier nomination, Heather Sweet would be a very capable Deputy Speaker of this Assembly, bringing a wealth of experience along with her demonstrated ability to work with all members. We have an important opportunity right now to set the tone for this 30th Legislature and to significantly improve decorum and civility in this House. So I ask all members to join me because together we can build a sweet House.

The Speaker: There are very few days in which you're allowed to use names in this Chamber. I appreciate what you've done there.

Ms Sweet, do you choose to accept the nomination?

Ms Sweet: I do, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other nominations for the position of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees?

Seeing none, I declare the nominations closed. The nominees for the position of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees are Angela Pitt and Heather Sweet. Voting will commence after the list of nominees is posted at each voting booth.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll use the same voting process for the Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees. Please file through the table officers to receive your ballot.

The voting will now begin.

[Members voted from 2:26 p.m. to 2:32 p.m.]

The Speaker: Members, have all voted that wished to do so?
Sergeant.

[Ballots were counted from 2:32 p.m. to 2:42 p.m.]

The Clerk: Number of ballots cast for the position of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees, 85; number of spoiled ballots, none; number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 43. The member having received the majority of the votes cast is Mrs. Angela Pitt. Mrs. Angela Pitt is hereby declared Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 30th Legislature.

The Speaker: Congratulations.

Before we proceed, I would be remiss – and I thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for recognizing the immediate former Speaker, Mr. Bob Wanner. I know that you served diligently and dutifully, and as the Official Opposition House Leader I appreciated your candour at times. I wish you and the former Mrs. Speaker nothing but the best and an incredible amount of hugs from those grandbabies.

Election of a Deputy Chair of Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and Standing Order 58(1)(b) nominations are invited for the office of Deputy Chair of Committees for the 30th Legislature. I therefore call for nominations.

The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations to our new Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees.

Mr. Speaker, in this nomination I would like to stress again the unique opportunity that members of this House have to make significant and genuine improvements to decorum and civility by ensuring that the Speaker's office has representation from the opposition caucus. This is the moment to set a new tone. This is the time to set a bold, new direction and begin an era of nonpartisan co-operation to ensure that the privileges of all members are protected. So it's my honour to nominate Heather Sweet for Deputy Chair of Committees.

We've now elected a Speaker and a Deputy Speaker, neither of whom has experience with the offices they are taking on. We would be remiss to leave that team with no link to the past, with no one who can offer how it was done before and to share the wisdom that comes from experience. Let us offer them Heather Sweet's guidance and tutelage, her experience as the only member of this Assembly to have presided over our proceedings. She has represented our province at Speakers' conferences on multiple occasions, she is familiar with the administrative functions of the Speaker's office, and she is also a representative of the Edmonton area, which brings an availability to participate in all the demanding activities of the Speaker's role.

Finally, we have a shortage of women in leadership positions in this House and in Executive Council. By electing Heather Sweet, we will be sending an important message to all Albertans and recognizing the value of having strong, experienced, and talented women in all-important roles.

I encourage all members to support Heather Sweet in the role of Deputy Chair of Committees.

The Speaker: Ms Sweet, do you accept the nomination?

Ms Sweet: I do.

The Speaker: Are there further nominations? The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise before you today, with deep gratitude, of course, to the people of Calgary-Fish Creek for this great privilege, and to extend my sincere congratulations after your hard-earned and well-deserved ascendancy to the Speaker's chair. I would also like to congratulate Angela Pitt, the hon. Member for Airdrie-East, on her election as Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees. We are very proud of you both and know that we shall all be well served by your shared commitment and that of your excellent staff to all members of the Legislature and indeed to all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply honoured to have the privilege today of nominating Nicholas Milliken, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees. While the hon. member was only recently elected to his first term as an esteemed member of this Assembly, I've gotten to know him over the past year while witnessing his sense of duty in his roles, first as a nominee and more recently through the campaign period as a hard-working, dedicated, and passionate Albertan, ready, willing, and more than able in serving his constituents. Yet he is always willing to lend a hand to his new colleagues and emerging political family, which I am hopeful he will be given the honour of including all of us in as we consider him for this humble role.

Nick's background includes volunteering and fund raising for charities in his community, many of them, in fact, while he also has a professional background in finance, law, and entrepreneurship, those skills that he can bring to this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, he is also a proud family man and honours and appreciates that balance in our lives also allows us to bring balance to this Chamber in the forms of compassion, honesty, fairness, generosity, humility, and kindness.

Mr. Speaker, my nomination of Nicholas Milliken on this auspicious day in the history of Alberta is without reservation. I encourage all members to support him in his quest to serve this great Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Mr. Milliken, do you accept the nomination?

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Needless to say, simply being part of this process is a humbling experience, and it is my honour to accept this nomination from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Speaker: Are there any further nominations?

I declare the nominations closed. The nominees for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees are Heather Sweet and Nicholas Milliken. Voting will commence after the list of nominees is posted in each voting booth.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Speaker: The voting will begin now.

[Members voted from 2:50 p.m. to 2:57 p.m.]

The Speaker: Members, have all voted who wished to do so? Has everybody voted that wanted to?

[Ballots were counted from 2:57 p.m. to 3:06 p.m.]

The Clerk: Number of ballots cast for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees, 84; number of spoiled ballots, none; number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 43. The member having received the majority of the votes cast is Mr. Nicholas Milliken. Mr. Nicholas Milliken is hereby the Deputy Chair of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 30th Legislature.

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Clerk, and congratulations to Mr. Milliken.

Members, the House stands adjourned until Wednesday, May 22, at 3 p.m.

3 p.m.

Wednesday, May 22, 2019

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Almighty God, author of wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask your blessing on all here present. We ask your guidance in order that the truth and justice may prevail in all our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite you to join Cara McLeod, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, leading us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join us in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, welcome. It's so nice to see all of you. Holy cannoli. Hon. members, the RCA Band will now play a brief musical interlude. The piece to be performed is entitled Canzon Septimi Toni No. 2. It is the sprightliest of Giovanni Gabrieli's larger works.

The RCA Band is Canada's oldest regular army band. It was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax and was reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997. It has been in service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders.

Please enjoy the performance by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band brass choir.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, and Honorary Colonel Douglas Mitchell, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

The Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly has elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfill the important duties thus assigned to me. If in the performance of those duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me and not to the Assembly, whose servant I am and who through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and province, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Honour's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Honour the most favourable construction.

Mr. Schweitzer (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to declare to you that she freely confides in the duty and attachment of this Assembly to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper, and prudence, she grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow their constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Assembly shall have ready access to Her Honour upon all seasonable occasions and that their proceedings as well as your words and actions will constantly receive from her the most favourable construction.

Her Honour: Please, all, be seated.

Speech from the Throne

Her Honour: Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly, fellow Albertans:

I speak to you as the province of Alberta's vice-regal representative of Her Majesty Elizabeth II, Queen of Canada.

This province honours its enduring ties to the Royal Family and our democratic tradition of constitutional monarchy. One hundred and fifty years ago this year the Hudson's Bay Company sold Rupert's Land, including much of the territory that became the province of Alberta, to the Dominion of Canada, bringing all of these lands under the Canadian Crown. The same Crown enjoined us in treaties with First Nations to respect the rights, privileges, and traditions of indigenous communities, a duty which we are bound to honour. Last year we renewed our ties to the Crown when we were honoured by the visit of Anne, the Princess Royal. I had the privilege of joining with her to announce Edmonton's Commonwealth walkway.

As Her Majesty's representative it is my honour and duty to open the First Session of the 30th Legislature with the presentation of the legislative program of Her Majesty's government.

Spring is the season of renewal. For all the people blessed to call Alberta home, from the First Peoples who have built vital communities on these lands for millennia to recent newcomers from across Canada and around the world, spring arrives with an explosion of nature's irrepressible energy. Every spring we experience the breathtaking vitality of nature's rush to renewal and are invigorated by it. So it is with our democracy. Once again, this spring Albertans participated in the great democratic ritual of a free election bequeathed to us by the Westminster parliamentary tradition, and they voted decisively for democratic and economic renewal through a change in government.

Recognizing that our province is beset by severe external political and economic constraints and consequently saddled with serious internal fiscal challenges requiring urgent action, my government will bring in a legislative program focused on three main priorities. First, a relentless focus on policies designed to create jobs, growth, and economic diversification: Alberta must show the world that we are open for business to restore investor confidence while carefully restoring balance to our province's finances. Second, standing up for our province's right to control and develop our natural resources and compete freely and fairly in the national and international economies: this requires securing pipeline access for Alberta oil and gas to world markets. And third, making life better for all Albertans by ensuring the quality and effectiveness of our public services, especially in health care and education, and by supporting the most vulnerable in our society.

Bill 1, as promised, will be the Carbon Tax Repeal Act. In providing $1.4 billion in tax relief, it will make everything more affordable for Albertans. If needed, my ministers will take legal action to protect Albertans from a federal carbon tax and to support other provinces doing the same.

Bill 2 will be the Open for Business Act. It will strengthen the rights of Alberta workers within unions, promote job creation for young Albertans, and retain recent advancements in compassionate leave. This will be followed in the autumn by further labour reforms to protect workers and help employers create more jobs.

This spring my government will also introduce Bill 3, the Job Creation Tax Cut Act. It will lower the tax burden on employers by one-third, from 12 per cent to 8 per cent. This will give Alberta businesses the lowest tax rate in Canada and among the lowest rates in North America, renewing Alberta as a magnet for job-creating investment. Economists estimate that this reduction will generate 55,000 new full-time jobs and increase the size of our economy by $12.7 billion.

My government will bring forward Bill 4, the Red Tape Reduction Act. This will provide the means to lower the regulatory burden on Alberta's economy by one-third, reducing costs, speeding up approvals, and freeing job creators to get more Albertans back to work.

Estimates for the interim supply of public services will be presented in an Appropriation Act, to be followed by a full budget this fall. That budget will be informed by the report of the fiscal review panel chaired by former Saskatchewan Finance minister Janice MacKinnon, which will make recommendations on how to restore balance to our province's finances so that we stop encumbering future generations with debt. My government will also engage in widespread public consultations on how best to end deficit spending while protecting front-line public services.

My government will also present a Tax Statutes Amendment Act.

My government will propose amendments to the Municipal Government Act. These will enable municipalities to use property tax incentives to attract investment and create jobs.

My government will table a Royalties Guarantee Act. Part of a plan to restore the competitiveness of the Alberta energy sector and win back the confidence of investors, this legislation will provide certainty that the royalty structure in place when a well is drilled remains in place for the life of the well.

My government will introduce the Fair Access to Regulated Professions and Trades Act. This legislation will renew and reinforce Alberta's historic role as a place of economic opportunity by making it easier and fairer for newcomers to be credentialed in their professions, work at their skill level, and contribute to our shared prosperity.

Her Majesty's government, on the very day it was sworn in, proclaimed the Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. It will be used as necessary to ensure the value of Alberta's energy products is maximized.

Also, in the spring session my government will present amendments to the Education Act. These will include implementing the will of the Legislature as expressed in legislation passed in 2012 so that these well-considered reforms are in place for the start of the new school year in September of this year. They will also include a commitment to curriculum reform based on proven pedagogy that teaches essential knowledge needed to achieve foundational competences and to prepare young Albertans to succeed in the future.

My ministers will also undertake important nonlegislative actions this spring. These include standing up for Alberta's interests within the Canadian federation by seeking the Legislature's support for a motion calling for the complete rejection of federal Bill C-48, which seeks to block access for Alberta's bitumen resources to British Columbia's northwest coast. A motion will also be proposed rejecting in its current form federal Bill C-69, the proposed Impact Assessment Act, which threatens Alberta's exclusive jurisdiction over nonrenewable natural resources and is damaging investor confidence. In bringing forward these and other initiatives, we will seek unity amongst Alberta's political parties, wherever possible, to speak with one voice.

In a world where the demand for energy will continue to rise, Alberta can, should, and will be one of the largest suppliers. That is why my government will create an agency mandated to proactively tell the truth about how we produce energy with the highest environmental, labour, and human rights standards on earth. My government will also challenge those who have for too long misrepresented these facts. In part this will be done by launching a public inquiry into the foreign sources of funds responsible for the campaign to land-lock Alberta's energy.

This year Her Majesty's government will also create the indigenous opportunities corporation. Alberta's First Peoples have played a crucial role in the development of this province, symbolized by Siksika Chief Crowfoot, who as leader of the Blackfoot peoples 150 years ago led his people into peaceful co-operation with the Crown, including the signing of Treaty 7. But while Alberta's natural resource wealth has been greatly developed since then, indigenous peoples have not fully participated in that prosperity. The indigenous opportunities corporation will support First Nations' and other indigenous groups' financial participation in natural resource development and infrastructure projects here and in other parts of Canada. We have a moral obligation to empower First Nations to be full partners in the development of the resources that lie below the lands which their ancestors first inhabited and to become partners in prosperity.

In the fall session my government will bring forward several other important bills. These include the Farm Freedom and Safety Act, which will reduce the tax and regulatory burden on farmers, strengthen their property rights and competitiveness, and restore balance, fairness, and common sense to regulation of Alberta's agricultural sector.

My government will further improve Alberta's education system by presenting the Choice in Education Act. It will renew the Alberta advantage in education by restoring and expanding the choices available to parents and children.

My government will take action to address climate change by introducing legislation to replace the carbon competitiveness incentive regulation with a technology innovation and emissions reduction fund. This will be a balanced, environmentally responsible, and economically efficient approach to reducing greenhouse gas emissions in Alberta through regulation at the primary source, large industrial emitters. Further, it will ensure investment in new emissions-reducing technologies which can be exported around the world.

To help protect vulnerable Albertans, my government will introduce the Saving the Girl Next Door Act and table legislation to give effect to Clare's law. The former will introduce protections for victims of human trafficking, and the latter will expand protections for victims of domestic violence. My government will implement a strategy to combat the wave of crime that has victimized too many Albertans, in part by hiring more Crown prosecutors and providing additional resources to police to respond to such terrible crimes as the exploitation of children.

And in order to improve decorum in this Assembly and civility in our politics, my government will propose amendments to the standing orders.

Members of the Legislative Assembly, this summarizes my government's legislative program for the spring and fall sessions. Further legislation anticipated for 2020 will address matters related to democratic reform, economic growth and environmental protection, public infrastructure, charitable giving, municipal governance, the economic rights of artists, conservation and outdoor recreation, and family law.

Renewal is the animating theme of my government's immediate legislative priorities. It is the appropriate and necessary response to the fiscal and economic setbacks Albertans have experienced in recent years, and it is only fitting to look to our history, the magnificent endowment of our natural resources and environment, and above all the values and character of our people to inspire and achieve this renewal.

The scale and pace of social and economic progress in Alberta over the last 114 years exceeds that of virtually any other polity on earth. We should always be grateful for those who have gone before us, who have been stewards of a great tradition of ordered liberty. Albertans have consistently applied the principles of free enterprise, free markets, equality of opportunity, and prudent stewardship to optimize our God-given gifts. No economic hardship has ever ruined us. No political enmity has ever defeated us. No natural disaster has ever stopped us. Our success, our resiliency, and our yet-untapped potential is a powerful magnet that continues to attract ambitious and talented newcomers from across Canada and the world.

The political forces standing in the way of this inevitable destiny today are external and temporary. Her Majesty's government has a strong mandate to stand up for Alberta against those forces, powered by the unstoppable will, energy, and talent of Albertans. Few places on earth provide such freedom of opportunity to achieve so much upward social and economic mobility. This in turn fuels our economic growth and generates wealth that spills far beyond our borders and secures the prosperity and welfare of Confederation. It is our duty and our destiny to renew Alberta's role as an economic and political leader within Canada.

Members of the Legislative Assembly, if you would indulge my passion for Alberta history, I will leave you with the closing words of our province's very first Speech from the Throne, on March 15, 1906, delivered by His Honour Lieutenant Governor George Hedley Vicars Bulgea:

To the several matters herein referred to and to all others that may be brought before you, I invite your careful attention, with the fullest confidence that the result of your deliberations will be beneficial to the Province and to the Dominion as a whole.

May the blessings of Almighty God rest upon your counsels as you work to renew an Alberta that is, in the words of our province's official motto, strong and free.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite you to join Cara McLeod, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, leading us in the singing of God Save the Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save the Queen!
Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Well, ladies and gentlemen, former Premiers, Members, family, friends, MPs, thank you all for joining us today so, so very much on this very exciting occasion for all of us here today and, in fact, all of us in this province. On April 16, 2019, over 1.894 million votes were cast in 87 constituencies throughout the province of Alberta. As a result, 46 new members have joined a very select group of individuals to serve in this storied Chamber. Since 1905 a grand total of only 954 members have been elected to serve in this venerable Chamber here at the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

It's important that we let Albertans know just a little bit more about the 61 men and the 26 women who are serving here as MLAs. In addition to the 46 new members, 35 members are serving their second term in office, four members are serving their third term, and two members are serving their fourth term in office. I think they call that long suffering. Based on the information available to us, the average age at the time of the general election was approximately 46 years, which is unchanged from the 29th Legislature. As of April 16, 2019, there were four members in their 20s; 18 members in their 30s, a very esteemed group of individuals; 24 members in their 40s; 25 members in their 50s; and eight members – they happen to be my favourite – in their 60s.

Alberta is a dynamic province that welcomes people from other cultures and countries. The majority of members were born here in Alberta. However, there are members who were born in other Canadian provinces as well as Brazil, Chile, China, Hong Kong, Fiji, India, Nigeria, and Pakistan. In addition to English, members also communicate in the languages of French, Arabic, Cantonese, Mandarin, Cree, German, Greek, Hindi, Italian, Japanese, Punjabi, Spanish, and, with apologies to the Filipinos, Tagalog.

Diversity is also reflected in members' previous work experience. The occupational backgrounds of members vary from musicians to economists, engineers to hairstylists, investment bankers to hydrologists. To be more specific, there are 35 entrepreneurs or businesspeople; 11 lawyers – that's probably enough – 11 teachers and postsecondary instructors; eight ranchers and farmers; and six social workers. One member was formerly a Member of Parliament. Seven members previously held positions in local government as councillors or school board trustees.

From an educational standpoint members collectively hold 66 bachelor's degrees, 25 master's, one doctorate, and 57 other diplomas or certificates and professional designations.

Members of the 30th Legislature notably have some interesting family ties. There are, for the first time in history, in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta two brothers serving at the same time, one of them slightly taller than the other. In fact, we're currently doing some research to determine whether or not we are the tallest Legislative Assembly of all time. There are two members whose fathers have previously served in this Assembly. One member's great-grandfather served in the 1930s. There are three members whose great-uncles or great-uncles-in-law served in our Assembly. Finally, we have three members who have cousins who have also served as MLAs.

To conclude, the members of the 30th Legislature are a diverse and capable group whose knowledge and experience will assist us in carrying out our responsibilities as parliamentarians and elected representatives in the service of this great province of Alberta.

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

Tablings

The Speaker: I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Bill 1 An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Congratulations on your election. I request leave to introduce Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax.

Mr. Speaker, our government is taking action to deliver on the commitment that we made to Albertans to repeal this tax grab, which is all economic pain and no environmental gain. This measure, if adopted, will lift a burden of $1.4 billion off the Alberta economy, will save families as much as $1,150 per year, will save small businesses on average $4,500 per year, and will, according to economists, lead to the creation of at least 6,000 new full-time jobs.

Mr. Speaker, a recent study indicates that Albertans have been paying the second-highest carbon tax in Canada, far more than our fellow Canadians, and this has not secured for us so-called social licence or market access for our world-class energy. We therefore propose in this measure to provide important tax relief to Albertans. Albertans have been waiting for this relief, which is why consistently two-thirds of Albertans have expressed opposition to the tax that will be repealed by Bill 1. Promise made, promise kept.

This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

With that, I move first reading of Bill 1.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Certificates of Election

The Clerk: Mr. Speaker, I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta pursuant to the Election Act a report containing the results of the general election conducted on the 16th day of April, 2019, which states that an election was conducted in the following electoral divisions, and the said report further shows that the following members were duly elected.

[The Clerk read the election returns]

Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the speech of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration the week of May 27.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly stand adjourned until Thursday, May 23, at 9 a.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:46 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, May 23, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning, members. This morning we will open the House in the same way that the Mother of Parliaments has opened their House for the last number of hundreds of years.

Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideals but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibilities to seek to improve the condition of all so Your kingdom may come and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 39(1) in order to proceed immediately to debate on Government Motion 8.

Government Motions

Federal Bills C-48 and C-69

8. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly call upon the Senate of Canada to reject Bill C-48, which unjustly discriminates against Alberta and prevents the export of its energy through the north coast of British Columbia, and to reject Bill C-69 as originally drafted unless it is comprehensively amended to ensure respect for Alberta's exclusive provincial jurisdiction over its nonrenewable natural resources and to ensure greater certainty for investors in major resource development projects.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that we will receive the support of all members of the Assembly.

Mrs. Savage: Good morning. This is my first opportunity to speak in the Legislative Assembly as the representative of Calgary-North West, and I couldn't be more pleased that this first opportunity to speak is on Bill C-69 and Bill C-48, two federal bills that would severely impact the oil and gas workers in not only Calgary-North West but across the entire province.

One of my first duties as minister was to join our Premier in addressing the Senate Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill C-48. Two days later I had the privilege of joining the Premier again to address the Senate Standing Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, which was tasked with reviewing Bill C-69.

The cumulative impact of these two bills is devastating on Alberta. These bills are so problematic that it is difficult to know where to even start. But let's start with Bill C-48. Antagonistic, discriminatory, divisive, illogical, contributing towards civil instability between provinces, threatening the fabric of the Confederation: this is how Bill C-48 has been described. Like Bill

C-69, the proposed legislation threatens our prosperity and, more alarmingly, our national unity.

Bill C-48 was first introduced by the federal government in 2017 with the purpose of imposing an indefinite ban on tankers and to fill an ill-conceived election campaign platform of the federal Liberals. It was introduced to impose an immediate ban on tankers from stopping, loading, and unloading off B.C.'s north coast. The bill would ban 14 substances, including crude oil, partially upgraded bitumen, diluted bitumen, marine diesel, bunker fuel, and synthetic crude, among others. At the same time, the bill excludes other products more typically from other provinces, including liquefied natural gas, gasoline, jet fuel, and propane. The Senate standing committee, thankfully, voted last week not to proceed with the bill. This defeat remains great news for Alberta and Canada and, as the Premier said, represented a victory for common sense and economic growth. But our fight does not end here. Our battle has not yet been won. We are asking the Senate to adopt the committee report and not proceed with the bill. Bill C-48 must be killed.

Taken as a whole, Bill C-48 adversely affects Alberta's future. When combined with other proposed federal legislation, including Bill C-69, Bill C-48 would severely impact Canada's global competitiveness. For years the U.S. has been Canada's number one oil customer but has become less dependent on us because it has unlocked massive resources of its own. This means that our biggest customer has also become our biggest competitor. The growth markets today are mostly in Asia, which is where our products would fetch their fair market value, but Bill C-48 shuts the door to Alberta's most viable path to those markets as we need access to ports in northwestern B.C. to reach Asia. There is no question that this bill is specifically aimed at land-locking Alberta resources. This becomes clear when considering that there are no similar bans along any other Canadian coastline with equally if not more sensitive marine ecological systems. In a stunning display of hypocrisy oil tankers on Canada's east coast are welcome through the St. Lawrence, the Laurentian Channel, and the environmentally and culturally sensitive Bay of Fundy. Bill C-48 won't apply to those places.

This bill is not an oil tanker ban; it is a ban on Alberta oil. At our appearance before the Senate committee the Premier and I raised a number of concerns with this bill. Chief among them is how this bill is the result of a foreign-funded campaign led by special-interest groups to land-lock Canadian energy. This campaign has brutalized Alberta's economy and harmed Albertans. We will not tolerate this anymore. We will target those campaigns and the groups that spread lies. We told the Senate committee that the bill must be defeated, and if it is not, the government of Alberta will challenge it as being unconstitutional.

Like Bill C-48, the proposed Bill C-69 threatens our prosperity and, more alarmingly, our national unity. It is so problematic that the Senate committee approved 187 amendments to the bill in an attempt to fix the most fundamental flaws. This bill will now be reported back to the Senate for review of the committee's amendments and for third reading before being sent back to the House of Commons. But there is no certainty that the Senate as a whole will accept those amendments, and there's no certainty whatsoever that the Liberal majority in the House of Commons would either.

In its original form Bill C-69 is an obvious and flagrant violation of our constitutional right to regulate and develop our natural resources. Bill C-69, the no more pipelines bill, will do lasting harm to Canada's reputation as a place to do business. The proposed legislation moves the current system of environmental assessment to impact assessment based on sustainability. This means a broadened scope of review to consider types of impact previously not considered, including a project's contribution to the federal government's commitments on climate change. Changes in assessment requirements and processes will significantly impact Alberta, both as a proponent of large infrastructure projects and as a regulator of development happening in our province.

Along with the broadened scope, the proposed new process will have significantly longer timelines for approvals. While timelines will depend on the size and nature of a project, for the biggest types of projects, including interprovincial pipelines, we estimate project review timelines will be longer than five years. This is unacceptable as it puts Canada at a competitive disadvantage and well below the average approval times among competing jurisdictions.

Bill C-69 also expands the breadth of reviews to consider social and health impacts as well as gender-based analysis. It's a political process; it's not a quasi-judicial independent process.

But most egregiously Bill C-69 exceeds federal jurisdiction by granting federal powers to regulate provincial projects, including in situ oil sands developments that are entirely within provincial borders and are already subject to stringent provincial regulation. This overreach is also contrary to the Constitution Act and the 1992 Supreme Court of Canada ruling. Bill C-69 ignores exclusive provincial authority over the development of our natural resources under section 92A of the Constitution, a provision in the Constitution that was hard fought for by Premier Lougheed and was a condition of Alberta's signature on the repatriation of the Constitution in 1982.

The federal government has attempted to tie the exclusion of oil sands facilities to having a cap on emissions. No other type of project on the project list is tied to a climate change requirement or a cap. This is arbitrary, and it's a requirement that is absolutely discriminatory towards Alberta. While Alberta is clearly targeted and treated unfairly in this draft project list, some other jurisdictions are actually getting relief. For example, provinces with large mining sectors will now face fewer federal reviews of their projects as thresholds to capture these projects for federal review are significantly increased. This is completely unacceptable to Albertans.

It's obvious that this bill needs more than a couple of minor amendments to be fixed. It needs a massive overhaul. If not, it needs to be put completely out of its misery. To ensure that this message has been broadcast loud and clear, on May 2 the Premier and I presented to the Senate committee to reiterate the need for major changes to this bill, and our efforts are ongoing. If significant changes addressing Alberta's concerns are not reflected in the final version of Bill C-69, an immediate constitutional challenge will be undertaken.

In conclusion, passing this motion is an important step in telling Ottawa that Bill C-48 and Bill C-69 in its present form are not acceptable. We absolutely have to stand up for Alberta's energy sector, for Alberta's economy, but most of all for its people. That's what we are doing, and that's why we are urging unanimous adoption of this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West is rising.

Ms Phillips: That's right. There's a country song that says: the west is the best if you know where to go. So now you'll remember, Mr. Speaker.

Okay. I'm going to leave comments on C-48 to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and focus my conversation on the Bill C-69 pieces because that is the file with which I am most intimately familiar.

Now, clearly, there is national jurisdiction over large projects, federal jurisdiction over large projects. As a little bit of a story around environmental assessment – I know that everyone is at the edge of their seats – environmental assessment is a shared jurisdiction in Canadian environmental law. There's clear national jurisdiction over large projects. This actually came out of the Oldman River case in the late 1980s. A bunch of people didn't like the provincial government's approach to damming the Oldman River even though it was a necessary project for the growth of irrigation districts in the region, and there was a lot of back-and-forth. It ended up at the Supreme Court in the early 1990s, and the court found that large projects were, in fact, subject to environmental assessment by the federal government, including the navigable waters test. That's in part how we got here.

And in part how we got here was that over time, environmental assessment captured more and more different kinds of projects, to the point where projects that found themselves on – the list of federal assessment was very long, hundreds of projects long, at any given time period. That was probably too much.

In 2012 the federal government brought in what has come to be known as CEAA 2012, Canadian Environmental Assessment Act, 2012. They omnibused it in with the budget. In part, this was a good thing. It shortened the list of projects that were subject to environmental assessment, but it contributed to an overall sort of zeitgeist of the time, which was an overpoliticization of regulatory processes because the issues at the time didn't have anywhere else to go. So people, citizens used the regulatory process to jam in what didn't really belong there: questions of climate change, of regional sort of land-based effects, which are just very clearly under provincial jurisdictions, the latter anyway. And because there wasn't an overall federal climate plan and not a provincial climate plan, people went through those routes to have their questions answered.

That was unfortunate because it meant that a country that is built on large projects, that is a resource-based country where the responsibility of governments is to get big projects built, in a place where we understand that the rule of law has to mean something, it then came to be that investors couldn't count on that sort of certainty, and that was hugely problematic. So it came to be that many companies didn't like CEAA 2012 either and they did want to see change in the Canadian Environmental Assessment Act. I do recall being in a meeting with the Conservative caucus of Senators, with the chair of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce at the time, who was also a representative of Suncor, and I remember her saying very clearly to them and to any other Senators who would listen: "No. We don't want this bill scrapped. It cannot pass in its current form – there's no question about that – but CEAA 2012 does require a number of significant improvements that must happen for the good of not just the Alberta oil and gas sector but across the country."

Over the course of time in the Bill C-69 debate it became very, very clear that, yes, while this was of crucial importance to Alberta's economic development, Alberta's ability to have market access to ensure that we are continuing to contribute to Canadian growth over all, which, of course, pipelines and other major projects that get built here are also, Mr. Speaker, involved hydro projects, offshore projects. So it wasn't just about Alberta. Just as the climate change conversation is not just about Alberta or not just about the oil sands, so too was Bill C-69. Certainly, resource-based provinces and even not so resource-based provinces such as the province of Quebec, with hydro projects, began to raise eyebrows about the implications of Bill C-69.

Of course, there needed to be changes to Canadian environmental assessment, but – as always in politics: but, but, but – certainly the federal government did not get it right. Through a series of consultations and papers and so on – the former Minister of Energy and I expressed concerns about, participated in those processes – they did not get it right. The hon. member opposite the Minister of Energy has clearly laid out the concerns with respect to timelines, infringement on jurisdiction. There are a few others that certainly we took issue with, things like a standing test, those sorts of things. Again, going back to my previous point of how we got here, the words “standing test” raised the hackles of many participants in environmental assessment processes, most certainly among indigenous people but others as well.

Having said that, you cannot have a situation like we saw with Northern Gateway, with a sort of mob-the-mic approach. There needs to be a reasonable balance there. We weren't sure that C-69 at all achieved that balance, and that was just another one of the pieces that, certainly, we wanted to see an amendment to. We worked with the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, CEPA, and others to achieve those amendments.

Now, social and economic impact analysis has always been part of environmental assessment. It is incumbent upon a proponent to prove that their project, because it will have significant environmental effect – there's no question that a dam, a hydroelectric project, a mine, these sorts of things, yes, do involve environmental disturbance. There's no question about that. The question for a regulator is around trade-offs and around national interest. There's always been a need for proponents to prepare a social and economic impact assessment of some kind demonstrating the number of jobs, the number of opportunities for local procurement, training. All of this sort of thing has always been involved, and many proponents will include some kind of gender impact analysis. Really, there's no huge issue with that other than engaging in a little bit of light Facebook wedge politics, red meat for the base.

But the issue of taking into account social and economic impact can allow way too much latitude to the minister for making decisions, in our view. That was one of the other issues that we brought to the Senate committee and to the federal government at the time.

On the issue of the in situ overreach, there's no question that in situ, the development of those resources is firmly within provincial jurisdiction, firmly within the AER's sort of purview of review. The issue with in situ is that it also emits greenhouse gas emissions; we also know that that's shared jurisdiction. Certainly, what we need is a recognition that in situ is governed by an appropriate climate plan in Alberta. This is not only sort of smart investment politics as setting that clear set of rules for companies wanting to responsibly develop our resources is key for them to go out into international markets to make sure that our barrels are competitive in a carbon-constrained future. It's not only smart on that side; it's also smart in terms of it keeps the feds out, which was always a goal of mine when I sat on the other side. It also ensures that the responsible development of it remains within provincial jurisdiction. We need recognition of that.

But we also need a climate plan to go along with that to ensure that producers have that answer to the question from investment banks, from funds and so on, institutional investors, who want to be able to answer those questions when they go back to New York or wherever. They need to be able to say: no; Alberta has got this covered. In a world that is taking action on climate change, where you're seeing financial disclosure, where you're seeing climate risk being taken into account by the central banks around the world, this is not a question that's going away, so we need an environmental assessment act that actually responds adequately to those questions.

And, yeah, what it does in the complicated world of environmental decision-making and shared jurisdiction is that it keeps the federal government out.

Now, off we went to make Alberta's case ... [An electronic device sounded] What is that? All right. We're good.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I can just remind everyone to silence or not bring your phones into the Chamber. I sure would appreciate that. I know the hon. member is apologetic.

Ms Phillips: It's the first day, but at the same time – all right.

We made the case, we worked with industry, we worked with a number of folks to make sure that our amendments were thoughtful, that they were substantive, that they answered the basic questions that investors, that producers had here in Alberta. We made sure that they were reasonable and that they reflected the desires of not just Albertans but, more broadly, large industry across Canada.

I should say that there was an entire consensus among industry on Bill C-69, mostly. But the Canadian Mining Association sort of hedged a little bit, and they did want changes, more than, I think, other organizations, to Bill C-69. So we had to engage with them, too, and they engaged through the Canadian chamber as well. Certainly, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers was very proactive and helpful in helping us synthesize all of these various amendments because I'm sure, as everyone in this House can appreciate as I saw many eyes glazing over, talking about Canadian environmental assessment, it's not that exciting and it is extremely complicated. We needed to make sure that all of the amendments jibed with one another because they were coming from various different industry groups. So we did that.

When we went and spoke to the Independent Senators Group, something really interesting happened, which was that as soon as we brought up the question of jurisdiction and exclusive jurisdiction over natural resource development, because there is some language that certainly does walk that line within the original draft of C-69, which was what raised all of our red flags, the Quebec Senator stepped right up, which keys us into – you know, there's much more as Canadians that often brings us together than divides us. They were keenly interested in that.

Certainly, when the indigenous Senators had a number of questions, we were able to answer them. When Alberta takes substantive steps towards reconciliation, towards investment in indigenous communities via reinvestment of the climate leadership funds, via reducing our greenhouse gas emissions, via ensuring that we've got co-management of parks, just all of these basic things that are sometimes felt like baby steps in the steps to reconciliation, they actually did matter in terms of the answers given to the Independent Senators Group.

When we did that and when we went through sort of methodically which amendments we wanted to see, something quite extraordinary happened, which is that across sort of various party lines and reasons for being there – you know, in the Senate you've got everything from these, like, washed up old Conservative bagmen to other various political appointees who are just living out their political days, because these are not elected people, right? Some of them aren't really interested in public policy, and that's just the way it is. The Senate is not exactly a place where we've seen the most upstanding examples of service to the public at all. We've seen, in fact, many scandals. But even despite that, you've got some really good people and some people that have been in the news. They all agreed, and they agreed with Alberta's position because we took the position that we needed to do something on this bill. I don't make any apologies for talking about people who expense the taxpayer for all manner of stuff.

Anyway, that meeting went well, and what it allowed the thoughtful Senators who really wanted to dig into files to do was that it allowed them to make a country-building argument. It actually allowed them to exercise what the Senate should be and, I think, really allowed, in Canadian politics anyway, us to turn the page on some of that more unsavoury chapter of Senate history, because they actually did what they were supposed to do, which is to look through a bill, discuss it with the stakeholders, make reasonable amendments, actually, you know, read stuff and not just file expense claims. They did what they needed to do. They were the sober second thought in this case, and I think that's a real bright spot for democracy. I don't know if having independence mattered.

The Speaker: Members, questions and comments under 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, the hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I would like to stand today and speak in favour of Government Motion 8, which seeks to call upon the Senate of Canada to reject Bill C-48, which unjustly discriminates against Alberta and prevents the export of its energy through the north coast of British Columbia ...

And it also seeks to ask the Senate

... to reject Bill C-69 as originally drafted unless it is comprehensively amended to ensure respect for Alberta's exclusive provincial jurisdiction over its nonrenewable natural resources and to ensure greater certainty for investors in major resource [developments].

Mr. Speaker, I think that's something we need to remember. We need to have certainty in our markets here in Alberta if we expect to have the investment that we need to create jobs.

Now, recently the Senate committee voted to defeat Bill C-48, what we call the tanker ban, but, of course, this vote still has to go to the Senate. It's too bad that we weren't able to stop this in the House of Commons before it got to the Senate, but here we are at this point right now. This is despite the fact that we've had decades of safe shipping of oil in the B.C. waters.

What's also interesting is that they have exempted certain products to be shipped, like LNG tankers to be operating on that same coast, so this is definitely a discriminatory piece of legislation that discriminates against Alberta's oil. Of course, we know the importance of Alberta oil not only to Alberta and to jobs in Alberta but of course all of Canada. This is all about stopping the oil from Alberta, and it's about land-locking our oil. Of course, this land-locking operation is something that's supported by anti-oil activists. These activists are not our friends. They're not people that are here to support Albertans, to support Alberta, or to support Canada. They have an ideology that precludes them from wanting to see us have success in our own province here.

Even within Canada we seem to see a bit of a double standard here, where we have oil moving into Canada on our east coast, and there seems to be no problem with that. This oil is coming from other countries with nowhere near the environmental and safety regulations that we have here in Alberta, so it's unfortunate that we have this situation where we have a government of Canada wanting to restrict the flow of our oil out in an export market to other jurisdictions so that we can benefit here in Canada and here in Alberta, but we seem to be welcoming oil coming from other parts of the world to our east coast.

Now, of course, we also know that Alaska still ships oil along the west coast, still moving oil up and down the coast, but of course there's no problem with that. Nobody's protesting that. Nobody's trying to stop that. But here we have our own government here in Canada wanting to restrict that flow of oil from leaving our country and benefiting us right here.

We know that there's a world oil demand. We know that that isn't going away soon, and the best thing that we can do is have our socially responsible oil that's produced right here in Alberta be taken around the world. We have the highest safety standards, the highest environmental standards, the highest human rights records here in Alberta and in Canada, so the best thing we can do for oil and for the world on all these issues is to produce as much oil as we can right here in Alberta and get it to those world markets and displace that oil that's produced in jurisdictions that are nowhere near as safe, environmentally friendly, or have the human rights records that we have.

Again, this isn't about protecting our environment. If it was about protecting our environment, we would be trying to get these projects done, but, of course, we have a government that seems to think that its job is to obstruct rather than facilitate this process, and that's where we have a huge problem. We seem to have a government that seems to want to cater to special-interest groups. Those interest groups don't have our interests in mind. They have their own ideology, their own plans, and whatever that is. Apparently, they want to land-lock our resources, and that's not in our best interests. It's not in the best interests of Albertans. We need to stand up and fight against these things like this – Bill C-48, Bill C-69 – that are here to obstruct our opportunities here in Alberta and of course all of Canada because when Alberta succeeds, so does all of Canada.

Now, we talk about Bill C-69 here. Some people say that it was maybe well intentioned, but if it was so well intentioned, I just don't know why there were so many mistakes with it. We're sitting here now. I think the Senate has about 70 amendments they want to put forward on this bill. Obviously, it's deeply flawed, and it needs a lot of work. Again, we're sitting at this point here, you know, where it seems like we're working from behind on this issue. But we've got to work with the Senate, and we need to be able to either get this massive number of amendments done or get this bill pulled. It's either one or the other because it's unacceptable the way it is.

Now, of course, it seeks to overhaul the National Energy Board and the Canadian Environmental Assessment Agency and change how major projects are reviewed and approved in Canada. According to the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association they said that, quote, it is difficult to imagine that a new major pipeline could be built in Canada under the impact assessment act. This is what's being proposed here. Obviously, an organization like that, they have opinions on these things because this is what they do for a living. This is their industry, and they know what they need to do to operate, and, of course, this bill here was going to restrict those opportunities. I know we identified this, and the UCP identified this as a massive problem the day it came out, which was February 8, 2018. By contrast the NDP Alberta government at the time didn't speak out until after C-69 passed the House of Commons. That's why we're in this situation here where we're trying to get things stopped in the Senate, where we hopefully could've had something done while it was in the House of Commons. That's why we need to be fighting. We should've been united in Alberta fighting this right from the start, right from February 2018.

Now what this does, what Bill C-69 does, is that it makes a complicated system even more complicated. We've seen what happened with the Trans Mountain pipeline. Over five years of work, over a billion dollars, and now we had the federal government buy it out for – what? – four and a half billion dollars? And we're sitting here a year later, and we still have not one bit of progress on that pipeline. It's absolutely astounding to think that with the system we have now and the problems that we've had in trying to get a pipeline built, now we want to have Bill C-69 come along and make that system even more complicated. It's obviously unacceptable. We can't have situations go on like this.

Obviously, if we want to attract investment to Alberta, if we want to attract investment to Canada, if we want to have projects like this continue – and let's be clear, these projects, these aren't government projects, these are private industries that want to come and spend their money to help create jobs here in Alberta and help develop our resources. This isn't government money, this isn't taxpayer money; these are private investors who want to come here, and they want to help us out. Of course, they want to make a return on their investment, and that's why we can't have them sitting for years and years and years with billions of dollars tied up with no chance and no sight on the horizon as far as an opportunity to get some sort of return on their investment.

Now, again I'll mention that the Senate has come up with about 70 amendments. Obviously, this bill is deeply flawed. I guess it would be humorous if it wasn't so serious, the situation, an acronym called a BANANA law, and that stands for build absolutely nothing anywhere near anything. That's the situation we have here, where we have a bill that wants to slow down and stop any kind of production here in Alberta and Canada. It definitely violates our Constitution. This is provincial jurisdiction. We have the right to regulate and develop our resources. There's some discussion back and forth on the size of projects and that sort of thing, but obviously this is something we need to stand up and we need to fight for. We need to stop these two bills. We need to put up a fight because it's important. It's not only important for Alberta and for Albertans and for jobs for Albertans, but it's also important for the Canadian economy.

Again, this creates uncertainty for industry. If we talk about wanting to refine our resources here and everything, and any time we have a company or people from outside the country that want to come in here and invest, if they wanted to do a big project here and they see what's happening here in this situation with something like Bill C-69 and what happened with Trans Mountain, they are so less likely to want to invest in Alberta because of these things. I think what we need to do – it's really simple. Government should be here to facilitate these things and not obstruct these things.

So with that, I just want to say I support this Government Motion 8. We need to pass this, and we need to keep the pressure on the federal government and on the Senate to do what's right with these two bills. Thank you.

The Speaker: Questions and comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and let me begin, of course, by taking this opportunity, where this is my first opportunity to speak on the record, to congratulate you on your new position.

I rise today, of course, to speak to this motion regarding the federal bills C-69 and C-48. Like previous speakers, I want to begin by of course suggesting that I am in favour of passing that motion because, quite clearly, when it comes to these two federal bills, the people of this province have been very loud and clear, and they have been loud and clear for some time. Bill C-48, the so-called tanker ban, is a vague and discriminatory piece of legislation that, quite frankly, just needs to be done away with completely. It is beyond fixing, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-69, the so-called no more pipelines law: well, that too needs a very significant rewrite, and it is as simple as that.

Of course, I want to begin by saying that I'm pleased that the hon. Premier has moved from his position of simply suggesting we need to eliminate Bill C-69 to accepting the suite of amendments that we put in to the Senate when we were in government and essentially endorsing that path forward. I'll talk a little bit more about that in a moment.

These bills are significantly difficult bills. They're troubling to the people of Alberta, and they represent a significant risk to Alberta jobs and to the Alberta economy overall. More than that, they represent a significant risk to jobs across this country, and they represent a significant risk to the Canadian economy, so that was why when we were in government we did a tremendous amount of work to try to have these bills either rejected or significantly amended. My colleague, the Member for Lethbridge-West, from whom you just heard, in her time when she served as the minister of environment, and also the former Minister of Energy, our former MLA for the riding of Central Peace-Notley – I guess I can say her name now, Marg McCuaig-Boyd – did a tremendous amount of work over some time advocating to the federal government and then subsequently to the Senate about the problems with respect to these pieces of legislation, as did many people in our public service – I also want to offer my thanks to them for their support and their advocacy with respect to this issue – as of course did many, many other leaders in Alberta's civil society fight very hard against these bills and continue to, whether it be industry leaders, whether it be municipal leaders, whether it be leaders from indigenous communities. They all came together to outline the significant concerns with respect to these bills.

We assembled numerous position papers, Mr. Speaker. We made assertions for clarity, and we presented, as I said, a suite of comprehensive amendments to the Senate. In short, what we all did was that we came together to speak often and always in favour of the future of Alberta's energy industry, to protect it, in essence, from the consequences of these two horribly misguided and broken bills. I was pleased myself to be able to go to Ottawa to speak to the Senate on Bill C-69, and I was also pleased because initially, you may recall, when the Senate was going to consider Bill C-48, the original plan was that they would were not going to come to Alberta. I don't know if many of you remember that. The plan was that they were going to pop by B.C., interestingly, but they didn't think it would make that much sense to pop by Alberta. We quickly raised the alarm on that and outlined the fairly obvious reasons for why maybe they might want to pop by Alberta and talk to the people who were directly affected and impacted by the rather discriminatory nature of Bill C-48. So they did, and I think that that actually helped quite a bit.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I have heard from Senators who would not necessarily have considered the consequences of C-48 had they heard not only from people in Alberta's energy industry but other community leaders from Alberta who talked about why the people of Alberta were so offended by what C-48 represented. I was very pleased that that was able to happen, and as well, of course, like many in this Assembly, I was pleased when we saw that some of our advocacy has had at least an interim success as it relates to the results of the two committees that were considering those bills and their recommendations to the rest of the Senate.

We saw, of course, as you know, the Senate committee that was considering C-48 do an outright recommendation that it not go any further, essentially demonstrating what I would suggest is the soberest second thought we have seen out of the Senate for some time. As well, we saw the transportation committee review and adopt a series of very comprehensive amendments to C-69, and they will be sending that back to the Senate.

I want to say that this is because we all came together with a very simple message, and it's basically this: if Alberta is going to continue to do what it does for the rest of Canada, if Alberta is going to continue to drive economic growth throughout this country, if we are going to continue to contribute to the schools and the hospitals and the roads, which actually you see throughout the country of Canada, if we are going to be able to continue to do that and to keep Canadians across this country employed in many ways, then we are going to have to have a federal government that works with us and that understands the import of the Alberta economy and we need a federal government that works for Alberta.

That has been, of course, the position that we have taken in this caucus, whether we were in government or in the role that we serve now, and it will continue to be that we basically need the federal government to work with us on pipelines, that we need the federal government to work with us on energy policy, and that we need the federal government to work with us on the environment because as Canadians, as I've said, we all share in the prosperity that these resources bring.

When I went and presented on Bill C-48, I actually had an opportunity to bring people with us to actually enhance that case, so I invited two workers, Angela and Roger, who came with me when I spoke to the Senate in Calgary. They talked a little bit about their history as people who worked within the energy industry. While they were both from Calgary, they both actually had come from other parts of the country, and they'd lived, in fact, all over the country, working in the energy sector, so they provided a tremendous picture to members of the Senate of what Canadians from coast to coast to coast who depend on our energy sector look like and what they think and what that bill meant to them.

I was pleased that we were able to make some of those points, and we were able to make as well the point that if we as Albertans are faced with a series of legislative actions, whether it be in other provinces or whether it be federal, that we will not just take it lying down, that we will come together in order to not only protect our interests as Albertans but to protect our interests as Canadians. So that's what we did.

We didn't approach it by ranting and raving, Madam Speaker. What we did instead was we rolled up our sleeves, and we went in, did our homework, we talked to industry, we talked to all these folks, we talked about what the most pragmatic and meaningful and evidence-based amendments would look like and what kind of work had to be done. We developed consensus, and we worked collaboratively because that's what you do when you work as a province which is part of a nation like ours. We looked for Alberta solutions, and that is what we presented because it's also our view that we cannot simply have Bill C-69 disappear and have it replaced with the broken system that we had in the past.

It is important, as we have seen with the wrangling over the last four years, that we have public trust from indigenous communities, from communities that are also rightly – rightly – concerned about environmental issues. We cannot, Madam Speaker, fall back 10 years to a time where we demonized people for the very act of raising legitimate concerns about the safety of our air and our land and our water.

What we have to do is understand that we are faced with two competing challenges. One challenge is to position our energy industry such that we can expand our markets, expand the demand for our product, be smarter about how we market our product, get it there faster and cheaper. That's one challenge. On the other hand, we must also face the challenge which is presented to us by climate change, which is impacting people across the world as a result, and also the challenge that we face here in Alberta as a result of climate change and the consequences of climate change, and also other environmental issues that arise from the work that we do in our energy sector.

These are things that governments are elected to do. Governments aren't elected to do the easy thing. It's not black and white being in government. It's not like, "Oh, hey; we're going to turn this dial and make everyone rich" or "We're going to walk away and make everyone poor." Those are not the decisions that we make, Madam Speaker. We are elected to find a balance and to forge through difficult challenges. That's what the new members over there are going to have to work on. That's what we were working on, and that is the message that we've been taking to all Canadians for the last four years.

It's fundamentally important, then, that all of this be taken into consideration. Bill C-69 is the flawed product of an attempt to go too far the other way, but we cannot fall back into this search for easy solutions where we then flip back the other way. What we need to do is fix C-69, and that's why I'm pleased that so many of the amendments that were the product of much consultation, much research, much scientific study were the amendments that actually found their way to being approved by the Senate committee. Hopefully, we will see that move forward.

Let me just talk a little bit about what we were looking for with respect to Bill C-69. I won't go through all of them because it was rather lengthy, and I was trying to find a way to reduce my submissions to something that could be talked about in a relatively short time. In essence, we said that, first of all, what we need are clear exemptions for in situ, for interprovincial pipelines, for all generating units using natural gas, renewables, and petrochemicals. We said to the Senate and we have said to the federal government that we already have a system for oversight of these projects within our borders. We probably have the most developed system of oversight for these kinds of projects within our borders here in Alberta in relation to anywhere else in the rest of the country as well as very possibly anywhere else on the continent, so we don't need other people getting involved in that. We don't need a back-seat regulator, is what we said.

We also said, as many other people have already commented, that we have to get rid of all the vague language. We need certainty. That's very clear. We told Ottawa: listen, we've already spent over a decade in court over multiple efforts to build energy and major, major national infrastructure projects. We don't want to – you know, the only people that are going to make money off of C-69 the way it's currently written are lawyers because we could easily generate another 20 years of court cases trying to figure out what the heck half of the language that exists in the first version of C-69 means. We said: don't do that. I mean, I'm a fan of lawyers. As you know, I am one. But at the end of the day, I really think that we can find other ways to make our own living, and in the meantime we need to provide clarity and certainty to investors and definition for what their rights are, and that is what needed to be changed in C-69 so that we didn't enhance and exacerbate the problem that already existed.

The third thing that was pretty critical that we talked about was strict timelines. We needed to fix the issue of timelines so that there weren't a whole bunch of loopholes that could trigger and retrigger the process around project reviews. With the way C-69 works in its current form, there were way too many opportunities for game playing with respect to timeline loopholes.

Finally, we also said that the federal government and the Senate needed to recognize the work that we had done under Alberta's climate leadership plan and that the work done under Alberta's climate leadership plan should be seen as sufficient for the federal government to keep its nose out of our environmental business because, in fact, we were already leading the country with respect to comprehensive work to address climate change issues as they are related to the work within our energy industry.

Contrary to what many members over there may believe, there was much more to our climate leadership plan than a price on carbon. We had a plan to phase out coal-fired production. We had a robust strategy for reducing methane, which, of course, is a far more problematic substance to the matter of climate change than even carbon. And we had, as you know, put on the 100-megatonne cap on oil sands emissions, therefore delinking the matter of climate change from the conversation around energy infrastructure, construction, and investment. So those also were the points that we made.

Now, although we know that the members opposite are very keen to get rid of the plan to price carbon, I certainly hope that they do not also remove these other elements of our plan – the methane reduction, the emissions cap, and the plan to roll back and phase out coal-fired pollution – because these are the kinds of things that, quite frankly, give comfort to Canadians from coast to coast to coast that, in fact, Alberta is a jurisdiction that they can count on to do what is necessary to find that fine balance, that relationship between a robust, sustainable energy industry and, on the other hand, the need to think beyond the six-month or the 12-month or even the four-year election cycle and instead think about the future of our climate and our air and our land and our water. So I would suggest that these are the ways that we were able to focus on Bill C-69 and make the kinds of changes that were necessary.

Now, with respect to Bill C-48 I've already heard some of the comments that folks opposite have made, and I think they've really touched on the critical elements of C-48 that were problematic. It is in effect a ban on Alberta energy products – no question about it – and it was irritating as heck to see something like that be put forward by the federal government with so little consideration for the consequences and implications for Canada's energy industry. It was a ban that overreached – far overreached – and there was not a scientific, research-, evidence-based linkage between the ban and the issues that the legislation was theoretically designed to address.

It was also and continues to be a bill that is, I would suggest, both hypocritical and inconsistent. You know, we can't have double-, triple-hull tankers that contain partially upgraded bitumen, but we can have LNG tankers, and we can also have whatever the U.S. decides to put in a boat in Alaska and ship right down through the same shipping corridor. That makes no sense.

What was even more offensive to me, quite honestly, which I have heard mentioned by other members here, was the east-coast versus west-coast dynamic. Here we are in Alberta unable to get our products to Ontario, to Quebec, to Atlantic Canada, and we see Quebec and Atlantic Canada importing petrochemical products from other jurisdictions, putting the very kinds of products into tankers that would potentially be banned on the west coast, but it's okely-dokely for them to sail up the east coast and down the St. Lawrence because they happen to need those energy products.

It is utterly hypocritical, and more than that, separate and apart from how frustrated that makes Albertans – it's not a small amount of frustration, we all know – it's just bad nation building. It's bad governance. You know, as much as we think of ourselves as being sort of the centre of the world sometimes, the reality is that Canada is a very small country in a very big world. As a nation we need to act strategically when it comes to selling our products and exploiting the potential of our resources, and we are acting the opposite of strategically right now. We are buying products from other jurisdictions and saying no to our products and limiting our ability to expand to other markets. When you pull it all together, it really is – and this was a phrase that I used when I was speaking to the Senate committee – a stampede of stupid. It truly is, and it needs to not go forward.

I will say that we should therefore make sure that we do not move forward with Bill C-48, that we have to essentially keep our options open. You know, we have three pipelines right now that are in various stages of approval and, well, hopefully, someday construction. Two of them we have no agency over; we just have to rely on the good graces of the United States. The third one: we all know the story with that one. The idea that we would then close off any other opportunities, to me, is very short-sighted.

As well, the final thing I would say about C-48 is that I do believe it was profoundly disrespectful to Canada's indigenous people and that it simply didn't reflect the level of consultation that those indigenous communities who have an interest in our oil and gas resources deserve to have had before their ability to take advantage of that was shut off. That is what C-48 proposes to do, and that's why we also believe that that was another reason for it to be rejected.

In closing, let me just say that while we are cautiously optimistic about the progress with C-69 and the progress with C-48 and while we hope that C-69 will be amended in alignment with the proposals that we put forward and while we hope that C-48 is completely iced – those are all good things – let me say that for the members on this side of the House, we believe that Canadians are going to expect that we must also take seriously our responsibility to the environment. We will also have to take seriously our responsibility as it relates to doing actual things to fight climate change. I was quite distressed a couple of days ago to hear the new environment minister suggest that climate change is not really a crisis, it's not an emergency, and that we're just going to talk about it for a while. I would suggest that that's what we were doing 20 years ago. Now is not the time to go back to that.

I would also suggest that we are, in fact, part of a bigger country and that we need to be conscious of what people are thinking about these issues outside of our borders. If we are going to nation build as opposed to nation divide for the sake of politics, then what we must do is we have to hear Canadians on these issues as well. Those Canadians that we have to hear would include the thousands of young people that were marching just a couple of weeks ago, even in Alberta, to talk about how concerned they are about the matters of climate change.

Once again, I would urge the members opposite, even as we will be talking about their Bill 1 – if you want to go ahead and stop carbon pricing, well, have at 'er. I mean, there are numerous conservatives not only in Canada but around the world who actually believe that carbon pricing is the most effective way to combat climate change. Yeah, do your thing. But to stop all work on combating climate change is profoundly irresponsible, and it will be a legacy about which none of your grandchildren will be very proud. We, frankly, have an obligation to all Canadians to keep working on this world-wide problem. I would suggest that if we are going to have Canadians come with us on the matters of C-69 and C-48, which I think they should, then we must also hear them on these other issues. We must also hear our kids on these other issues, and we absolutely must not demonize or attack any Albertan or any Canadian who wants to raise their concerns on these other issues.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to end my comments and again offer my support for this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, questions and comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a) are available.

Seeing none, the Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me again be one of the ones to congratulate you on your election as well as your two colleagues. It certainly was a remarkable day yesterday and certainly has been a remarkable past month, of course, with the election and the people of Alberta speaking very loud and clear as to what they would like going into the future. I'd also like to take a moment here to thank the new Minister of Energy for her words in speaking in regard to this motion that is being brought forward against Bill C-48 and Bill C-69. Certainly, her expertise in that particular role, I think, in my opinion, is second to none and something that will be valued in this Legislature and outside of this Chamber.

The motion, which talks about, of course, rejecting Bill C-48 and Bill C-69, I think is something that is very important not only to the people in this Chamber. It's nice to see the opposition supporting this motion, at least based upon many of the comments that I've heard. I think that is a good sign, we'll say, going forward.

I also want to touch a little bit on what the Minister of Energy talked about when she mentioned C-48 and talked about antagonistic, discriminatory, and, in fact, a bill that is considered illogical. I'm not going to talk from the perspective of somebody who's going to pretend to be an expert on the oil and gas industry. I'm not. I'm a citizen like everybody else in this room, a police officer by trade. Others in here are butchers and farmers and social workers. But I think we need to talk from a perspective of the people, the people whom we represent.

I think everybody here, at least everybody here on the government side, can talk about recent door-knocking, talking to people in the community, talking to constituents of mine in Calgary-West, talking to constituents outside of Calgary-West when I assisted others in door-knocking. The disappointments and – I think I'm very kind by saying that – I would almost argue the anger of people in Calgary against Bill C-48, against Bill C-69 is something that really can almost not be measured. This is really something that is about – and I know our Premier has talked about this before – national unity. We're a generous people, as the Premier has stated, but, you know, we're not going to continue to be kicked around like a football, and we're going to be in a position where we are going to let Ottawa know that these bills are unacceptable for our oil and gas industry.

Now, the Leader of the Opposition talked about ranting and raving. I haven't seen ranting and raving. What I have seen is people that want somebody to defend them, somebody they want to stand up and say that they're going to defend their oil and gas industry, and they're going to defend their jobs. That's not ranting and raving. That's just letting the people in Ottawa know that they're not going to be taken advantage of anymore, because that's what it sort of feels like.

We Albertans, you know, we're generous people. We supply the federal government with these transfer payments, and all we've ever asked for is fairness. Fairness. That's not too much to ask from Ottawa or anybody else in Canada. So when we feel like we're not being treated fairly, it's not about ranting and raving; it's about defending, defending our province, defending the people who we represent, and that – that – is not something that is unreasonable.

When we talk about those who are opposed to our oil and gas industry here in Alberta, my experience is that sometimes you just can't negotiate with people who refuse to negotiate. That's a challenge. That's a challenge that many people that are in forms of negotiation face.

Now, I come from a very unique position where myself, along with our Minister of Transportation and, in fact, our new minister, our Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions, was also part of a previous government. I remember being in caucus when the Premier at the time, God rest his soul, Premier Jim Prentice walked in, and he said, "Ladies and gentlemen, we're in trouble." Eyes light up. "What do you mean, sir?" "We have now become the largest supplier of oil and gas to the United States, and people are mad. People are very mad." Saudi Arabians were mad. Other oil suppliers were mad. We had just done what we always do in Alberta. We put our heads down. We work hard. We don't ask for handouts. All we do is go to work, and that work created an industry that, in my opinion and I think the opinion of everybody else for sure on the government side, was second to none. Technologies used everywhere around the world, experience, personnel: again, second to none.

So when the Premier at the time said that we were in trouble, that is what really got my attention as just a normal Albertan as to the concerted effort amongst those who oppose our oil and gas industry, on how they collaborated to really drive down the price of oil. Remember, we don't have control. We in Canada don't have control over OPEC. I mean, this is a group of individuals who really decide, you know, what the price of oil is going to be, and that's not something that we in Alberta have any control of. And we saw that. We saw the oil price purposely coming down. Why was that? Well, it's because for us in Alberta, it probably – I'm no expert on this, but I'm going to hazard a guess that it's probably in the realm of $30, give or take, to extract a barrel of oil out of the ground. For other countries, not so much. For other countries, I've heard $8, $9 a barrel to extract the oil out of the ground. Well, that's a big difference.

How can we hurt the industry here in Alberta? Well, if we drive down the price of oil, it makes it challenging for these companies to operate. Then we saw what happened. We saw what happened. We saw our oil industry be devastated over the last four years, and then there was a doubling down of issues, a doubling down of regulations, bills such as these, C-48, C-69, coined as the antipipeline bill. It's not coined as the pro-industry bill. It's coined as the antipipeline bill. That should be telling everybody something right now as we sit here in this Chamber.

I, of course, support this motion, support the motion to reject C-48, to reject C-69. Let those in Ottawa, let those in that government know that we are not going to take this anymore. It's not about ranting and raving, but it is about defending the people whom we represent, and I cannot stress that enough. It was made perfectly clear during the last election that they, meaning the people of Alberta, wanted a government to represent them and defend them in Ottawa, not agree with everything that the Prime Minister says. Certainly, we will try to reason, we will try to do our best to talk, but it's very clear, when you see bills like this, C-48 and C-69, this is not something that requires some sort of amendment, as was previously tried by others. As our Premier has stated, this is something that requires if not the complete, absolute rejection of the bills then, at minimum, absolute reconstructive surgery of these bills. I cannot stress the importance of the national unity component, of making sure that we are together on this motion, that we let everyone in Ottawa know that we are unified in rejecting Bill C-48, rejecting Bill C-69.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to add one more thing if I do have any time left. I want to talk about the responsible oil that was developed here in Alberta to the highest standards – highest standards – in the world, technology that, I would say, is second to none. We have human rights standards which, I believe, are second to none. When you have companies like some of the major companies that have left Alberta to go to places like Qatar, Venezuela, other countries that have less human rights standards, less standards for employees, less standards when it comes to environmental records – we were not the embarrassing cousin. We were the leaders. We were the leaders in this industry, and we were a threat, and that is why there was a co-ordinated effort to go after Alberta. I'm proud to say that I am part of a group of individuals that are going to stand up on behalf of the people of Alberta, on behalf of the constituents that I've asked to elect me for a third time in this Legislature to say no to Bill C-48, to say no to Bill C-69, to say no to anything that is going to hinder our oil and gas industry from, really, becoming once again the leaders in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to close by saying thank you. Thank you for the opportunity to speak on this issue. Thank you to my colleagues for all being here today, for letting people in Canada know, for letting the world know that Bill C-48, Bill C-69 need to be rejected by those who are in positions of authority at the moment, which is in front of the Senate. We need to let Ottawa know, under the current government, that we are not going to take this anymore. We are not going to accept these types of bills in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments.

Seeing none, the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations on your election.

It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to this motion regarding federal bills C-48 and C-69. The content of these bills is critical to the livelihoods of hundreds of thousands of Albertans and, in fact, Canadians across this country. It is particularly important for those in Calgary, who were hit the hardest when commodity prices fell in 2015.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There is no question where Calgarians or Albertans stand on these bills. We have a vested interest in having a strong economy that includes everyone, that offers opportunities for everyone, an economy where prosperity is shared fairly and more equitably, an economy that can support a cutting-edge school system for our youth, an economy that can support publicly funded and publicly delivered universal health care, and an economy that creates conditions for the full inclusion of those who are differently abled.

We also have a vested interest in protecting the environment for ourselves, for our children, and for our future generations. That is why, Madam Speaker, our leader has been very clear from day one that environment and economy can and must go hand in hand. She has been very clear that the respect for indigenous rights and the economy can and must go hand in hand.

We know that we have taken steps to address climate issues, we have taken steps to address indigenous rights issues, and we know that Albertans will not stand by while Ottawa tries to kneecap Alberta's energy industry. Albertans won't stand for it, and neither will we. In fact, when we were in government, we fought hard against this, against these bills. The Senate committee's rejection of Bill C-48, the tanker ban, is a direct result of the hard work of our leader, the former Premier. This was an important step in the right direction, but we are not out of the woods yet. We still need the full Senate and the House of Commons to reject Bill C-48 and make substantial improvements to Bill C-69 as laid out by our leader and our former environment minister, the MLA for Lethbridge-West. When she was Premier, the hon. Leader of the Opposition fought diligently against the federal government's punishing tanker ban, a ban we all know is targeted at Alberta's resources.

On that note, I would also like to thank our newly elected government for joining us in the fight to get our resources to market and to stop the federal government's attempt to ban Alberta's oil. I think it's safe to say that we agree that the so-called tanker ban is not about marine traffic. It's not even about tankers. If it were, B.C. LNG tankers wouldn't be allowed to travel freely off the west coast. It's as clear as a prairie sky that this is about banning Alberta oil from reaching new markets. We have known for a long time now that we can no longer count on simply selling our resources to one market, the American market. They were our biggest customers; now they are our biggest competitors. But for some reason successive federal Conservative governments have failed to build a pipeline to move Alberta's resources. Our new Premier was a federal cabinet minister and failed, when he was in Ottawa, to get a pipeline to tidewater. In fact, in this House he said – and I paraphrase – that he was not responsible for the pipelines.

Our current federal government promised to fix their broken system and, instead, put forward these two bills designed to increase the land lock on Alberta resources. Now more than ever we need to access new markets to support good-paying jobs and investments in Alberta. That is why our government and our leader made the critical decision to get our oil moving by rail, 120,000 barrels' worth a day. Our rail deal would have helped keep folks working until Ottawa gets the pipeline mess sorted out, but it was never and should not be considered a long-term solution. There is only one solution, pipelines, but pipelines won't make a difference if we can't move them past the coast.

Albertans elected this government in the hopes that they would be able to finally get a pipeline and, with it, jobs. It is in everyone's interest that they succeed in this pursuit, and I truly hope they do. I hope that by repealing our climate leadership plan, they don't put the pipeline in jeopardy. I hope that by turning back the clock on environmental protections, on the emission cap, on the emission reductions, they don't lose the support of Canadians, that our government fought so hard to earn. Above all, this fight, the one we are all joined in here, is for the people of Alberta. There aren't many Albertans who were not affected by the historic economic downturn. The drop in the global price of oil took a big toll on working people and had ripple effects throughout our province and our country.

Here in Alberta we are blessed with an extremely valuable natural resource, a resource in demand across the world right now and for years to come, a resource that helped build this country and has improved the well-being of every Albertan and every Canadian. That resource is pulled from the ground by women and men who make good, family-supporting wages. Those wages support strong communities where working people can build good, secure lives, where all Albertans flourish. That resource funds strong public services like public health care, education, and services for vulnerable Albertans. These are things that connect us and give us hope for the future.

Over the last four years, that resource was pulled from the ground in conjunction with North America's most ambitious and comprehensive climate plan, a plan that made Alberta a world leader and one of the world's most responsible energy producers, a plan that secured the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project and put Alberta in a strong position to protect our constitutional rights to regulate our own resources against attacks like Bill C-48 and Bill C-69, a plan that won over the hearts and minds of Canadians and increased national support for a new pipeline to tidewater, a plan that generated strong enough national support for a new pipeline that we were able to compel Ottawa to buy Trans Mountain when investors pulled out, a plan that gave our industry the competitive edge that it needed to sell our product in an increasingly lower carbon global economy. Our government proved that you can protect the environment, take leading action on climate change, and grow our economy at the same time.

We cannot afford to go backwards. There is too much at stake and too much to lose. We need to defend the things that make Alberta one of the best places on Earth to live, work, and raise a family and to fight for an Alberta and Canada that works for everyone.

With that, I will be supporting this motion. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 29(2)(a), are there any comments or questions?

Seeing none, the hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you so much, Madam Deputy Speaker. Let me begin by congratulating you on your election to the chair.

Let me also begin, as these are my first words in the 30th Legislature, with an expression of deep gratitude for my Calgary-Lougheed constituents for having given me the honour of representing them in this place for the second time. Let me congratulate all members from both sides of the House on their election, and let me reinforce my hope that we can work together, wherever possible finding common ground. I not only acknowledge but applaud the opposition for having to discharge its constitutional obligation to hold the government to account and to oppose, I hope more often constructively. But on this it is, I think, felicitous that we are beginning the history of this, the 30th Assembly, on a point of common accord, of shared defence of Alberta's vital economic interests.

As Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor said in the Speech from the Throne yesterday, our province has gone through a time of adversity, and it is essential for us to work together to reignite Alberta's economy and to defend our vital interests. That is why we have proposed this motion to begin this session of the Legislature.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly call upon the Senate of Canada to reject Bill C-48, which unjustly discriminates against Alberta and prevents the export of its energy through the north coast of British Columbia, and to reject Bill C-69 as originally drafted unless it is comprehensively amended to ensure respect for Alberta's exclusive provincial jurisdiction over its nonrenewable natural resources and to ensure greater certainty for investors in major resource development projects.

I understand that the Official Opposition intends to support this motion, for which I would like to thank them. More specifically, I would like to thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition and former Premier for having cosigned a letter from the leaders of Alberta's four main political parties on May 17, last week, which was sent to every member of the Canadian Senate. This was also cosigned by the leader of the Alberta Party and the Alberta Liberal Party, so four parties which collectively won the votes of some 98 per cent of Albertans in an election where there were more voters than any in our history. So, Madam Speaker, this is a powerful expression of consensus. We may have – I don't know – perhaps some small, nuanced differences on aspects of these bills, but fundamentally we are united speaking for Albertans as Team Alberta, sending a clear message to Ottawa: stop these attacks on this province, on its economic future, on our vital economic interests, on jobs, on our way of life; stop undermining national unity; stop damaging the province that has done so much to create wealth and opportunity for people from coast to coast.

Madam Speaker, we Albertans should be enormously proud of what we have achieved. As Her Honour said in the throne speech, there are very few societies on the face of the Earth that have seen greater economic and social progress than has Alberta in the past century, and much of that progress was thanks to our ability to develop responsibly the endowment nature of our natural resources. We as Albertans are blessed beyond compare to have inherited the third-largest recoverable oil reserves on Earth, the fourth-largest recoverable natural gas reserves on Earth. We are the fourth-largest exporter of crude oil in the world. And if we were unleashed, if we could knock down the constraints and the barriers that have been erected around us, we could be perhaps the second-largest exporter of energy on the face of the Earth.

Madam Speaker, those resources represent an incalculable value. In fact, if one were to commodify our oil resources alone at current global prices, they would have a value of greater than $16 trillion. Now, it's hard to conceptualize the meaning of $16 trillion, but let me put it in these terms. If we could develop even a reasonable fraction of those resources at a time in world history where there is a growing global demand for oil and gas – according to the International Energy Agency there will be at least a 10 per cent increase in demand and consumption of oil and gas in the next 20 years, from now through 2040. If we were to commodify the value of that resource in that period, it means that we as Albertans and as Canadians would be able to manage the over $1 trillion in combined public debts and liabilities that encumber Canadian governments. According to fiscal studies, if one adds up all of the tax-supported provincial and federal debt, other forms of liabilities, and the unfunded liabilities of public pension plans, we have a total public indebtedness in this country of over $1 trillion.

Now, handling that debt, in the context of an aging population with a shrinking birth rate, is an enormous demographic challenge. If you want to understand how deep that challenge is, we need look no further than the countries of southern Europe – for example, Greece and Spain – that are 15 or 20 years ahead of the demographic curve of aging, governments that have been skirting insolvency in recent years. That is the fiscal implication of the demographic trends which we are beginning to experience here, with a shrinking tax base and an expanding population of people who require social support. And if we want to be able to provide that high-quality social support, that health care, those pensions, and a bright future for the next generation through high-quality public education and the infrastructure to support an increasingly diversified economy, if we want those things – and we do – then we must have a way of paying for them.

These resources constitute that way not just for Albertans, Madam Speaker, but for all Canadians. We have played a massive, oversized role as the key engine of Canadian economic prosperity and of generosity in the federation. In fact, according to research by University of Calgary professor emeritus Dr. Robert Mansell, Albertans have contributed a net $611 billion to the rest of the federation since 1957. That's an average per person contribution of $14,000 per year. That is to say that roads in Cape Breton and hospitals in Newfoundland and Labrador and public services in Quebec and all across the country are indirectly funded in part by the wealth generated by the enormous resources of this province.

So when we propose this bill, this does not constitute special pleading for the province of Alberta although clearly we are defending our interests. This represents the national interest, and this is the message – we will have hon. members of the Senate joining us, I believe, in the gallery later this morning to observe the vote on this motion. I will be joining them. They have accepted my invitation to meet over lunch later today, as has the hon. Leader of the Opposition. I want them to carry back to Ottawa this message, that what we Albertans are conveying in our opposition to policies incorporated in bills C-48 and C-69, what we are doing is seeking to strengthen the federation, to strengthen and defend the Canadian national interest, not some parochial provincial interest.

Now, Madam Speaker, we Albertans have been enormously generous in contributing those resources, and, by the way, it's not just the net fiscal transfers. Think about how this province has been an elevator for social progress in this country. Think about how since the late 1980s our population has doubled, in large measure thanks to migration from other parts of Canada as well as growing levels of immigration from abroad. Those folks, who joined us from Newfoundland to British Columbia to become Albertans, arrived here to pursue opportunity, and so many of them left behind the despondency created by dependency, by unemployment, and sometimes by even poverty. People left behind their inability to care for their families themselves and their communities.

The great east coast folk artist Stan Rogers had a great song about this called The Idiot, about a working man from Newfoundland who said: maybe I'm an idiot, but I'm going to go out to the oil refineries in Alberta and work hard in a dirty job to take care of myself and my family. This has become part of who we are as Canadians. Alberta has been an accelerator of national unity because of this role that we have played in relieving economic anxiety amongst our fellow Canadians. In so many ways we have made this huge contribution, and we are proud to have done so.

I grant that there's always been a tiny minority of Albertans who resent any net contribution that we make to the rest of the federation. I say that they are wrong. I say that we are proud, through equalization and other transfers, through this role we have played in our economy, to have contributed to the rest of Canada, and we do not begrudge that, Madam Speaker.

In fact, tomorrow I will be in Toronto. I'll be delivering this message on Bay Street to the C.D. Howe Institute, to Canadian business leaders, and in a meeting with the mayor of Canada's largest city, who I know supports this province and the critical role that we play in the federation. My message to those people on Bay Street tomorrow and in Quebec in two weeks, when I'll be meeting with Premier Legault and speaking in Montreal, is the same message I carried to Ottawa with the hon. Minister of Energy two weeks ago, when we appeared before the Senate energy committee on Bill C-69, and here in Edmonton before the Senate transport committee on Bill C-48.

Here is the message. We as Albertans want to continue to be the source of that great generosity and wealth in the federation. We want to help to guarantee our fiscal future and that of our public services from coast to coast. But, Madam Speaker, we need the ability to develop those resources and to get a fair global price for them, and what we can no longer as Albertans tolerate are governments or interests in other parts of the federation seeking to benefit from our resources and the hard work and innovation of Albertans while seeking to block in and lock down this province. No longer will we tolerate that. We as Albertans are now together, united, standing up and demanding fairness in the Canadian federation, and that is why we begin this Legislature with this motion.

As I say, its basic sentiments were expressed in our May 17 letter from all four major party leaders, from which I will quote. This was to every member of the federal Senate.

As you know, the Senate Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications voted on Wednesday, May 15, to recommend against proceeding with Bill C-48, the so-called Tanker Ban Bill. Albertans are deeply concerned about this legislation, which we see as a direct and discriminatory attack on one of Alberta's principal natural resources, the bitumen produced in Alberta's oilsands. The ... Tanker Ban Bill would not prevent tankers from transiting British Columbia's coastal [waters] (and in fact could not under international [marine] law). Nor does it prevent tankers from loading other products, such as liquefied natural gas, from B.C. ports. It would only prevent a narrow category of products, almost exclusively produced in Alberta, from being loaded into tankers to be able to reach international markets. We urge you, and the entire Senate of Canada, to respect the decision of the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications and not proceed with Bill C-48 and let this unjust and discriminatory legislation die on the Order Paper.

The letter continues:

Similarly, we understand that the Senate Standing Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, meeting at clause-by-clause stage, has adopted substantial amendments to Bill C-69, the Impact Assessment Act, which are aligned with the recommended amendments of the Government of Alberta and significant stakeholder groups such as the Canadian Energy Pipelines Association and the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. While we remain concerned about the overall spirit of Bill C-69, we believe that with the inclusion of all of these amendments, that the bill would be acceptable to the interests of Albertans. Therefore we call upon the entire Senate to likewise respect the deliberations of the Standing Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources and vote in favour of the entirety of this amendment package. Otherwise, we would urge all Senators to reject this bill, which in its unamended form would seriously threaten Alberta's exclusive provincial jurisdiction over the regulation of the production of non-renewable natural resources and present insurmountable roadblocks for the proponents of major resource development projects, further jeopardizing jobs and investor confidence.

Madam Deputy Speaker, my colleague the Government House Leader will table this letter later today.

Let me, then, move to some of the details in these two bills that together constitute a full-frontal attack on both the economic prosperity and constitutional jurisdiction of Alberta. First of all, Bill C-48 can only be described as a ridiculous political sham. There is no scientific or economic or legal rationale for this bill, which, I believe, is a view that was expressed by the hon. Senators who voted to effectively delete the bill at the Senate transport committee last week. The rationale for this bill is only political, a partisan political ploy.

As my colleague the Minister of Energy can confirm, a member of the Trudeau cabinet a decade ago brought forward in the House of Commons a private member's bill to impose a so-called tanker moratorium but, effectively, a ban on exporting Alberta's largest export product. Why? Simply to respond to irrational political pressure of some voter groups for her political party in Vancouver. As others have pointed out, if this made any sense, then why would the federal government continue to allow Alaskan crude oil tankers to pass through Canadian waters, including the Salish Sea, en route to refineries in the state of Washington? Why would we allow tankers to export British Columbia based liquefied natural gas from the northern B.C. coast? Why would we allow oil tankers to enter the Bay of Fundy, an ecologically sensitive UNESCO site on the east coast of Canada? Why would we allow oil tankers to enter and often bring OPEC dictator oil into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, a heavily populated area, which is also ecologically sensitive? Why would we allow those things?

This bill does nothing but prejudicially identify and seek to ban the export of one product that is produced effectively in one province, this province. I therefore submit, Madam Deputy Speaker, a prima facie violation of the Constitution in the economic union section in seeking prejudicially to ban one province from exporting a product that it alone produces. That is why, should the full Senate restore the original Bill C-48, prior to committee amendments, and should it then ultimately be proclaimed into law, I have advised the Senate and Prime Minister Trudeau that the government of Alberta would launch an immediate constitutional challenge of Bill C-48, seeking a court order to suspend the application of that bill.

Now, Madam Speaker, let me then address Bill C-69, what I have long called the no more pipelines act. This, the so-called new Impact Assessment Act, is a devastating blow to investor confidence. I don't need to review here the sad history of our seeming inability as a country to build pipelines to coastal markets. It's true that there has been progress in building pipelines within North America, including four pipelines in the past decade that were commissioned, doubling our take-away capacity by increasing it by 1.72 million barrels per day. But it's also true that we have suffered from a highly co-ordinated, foreign-funded campaign to defame our energy production and to land-lock Alberta oil.

By now I hope Albertans are familiar with this tar sands campaign, which began in a very co-ordinated fashion at the Rockefeller Brothers Fund office in New York City in 2008 at a meeting of a consortium of special-interest groups, which have collectively received tens, if not hundreds, of millions of dollars from primarily U.S. but, we think, other foreign sources to land-lock specifically Alberta crude oil. We must confess that these groups have been successful beyond probably their wildest expectations in so doing. Madam Deputy Speaker, one of their allies, Tom Steyer, a hedge fund billionaire in San Francisco whose fortune was generated in part by trading natural gas and coal – talk about hypocrisy. He spent over $200 million U.S. on a political campaign to persuade President Obama to veto the Keystone XL pipeline.

It is not a coincidence, Madam Speaker, that 48 hours after our current Prime Minister took office, he received a call from Barack Obama, who'd been ragging the puck on this for six years, finally announcing a presidential veto. President Obama dared not do that, I submit, under the administration of Prime Minister Harper. He knew there would have been a diplomatic fight with Canada. But he also knew that the government of Canada and, at the time, the government of Alberta would effectively surrender in the face of the veto of Keystone XL. So we lost that. We lost several years on that project.

Then the same Prime Minister immediately announced an arbitrary veto of the Northern Gateway pipeline, that had been approved by the National Energy Board with conditions and by the federal cabinet after years of review. It's true that the court had ordered supplementary aboriginal consultations almost identical to the ones we've undertaken currently on Trans Mountain, but that was another political veto of another pipeline that had been opposed by both the Trudeau government and the previous Alberta government and had been the target of the foreign-funded campaign.

Then Energy East was killed when TransCanada PipeLines Limited – sadly, they dropped “Canada” from their name because of the loss of investor confidence and the ability of this country to respect the rule of law. They gave up a $1 billion investment and six years of work on that critical pipeline that represented the hope of energy independence for Canada. It represented the thousands of jobs and the opportunity to displace foreign dictator oil imports to eastern Canada. It was killed – and they said this explicitly – because of the uncertainty created by new federal mandates expressed by the National Energy Board, which created regulatory uncertainty, mandates which are now reflected in Bill C-69, and Bill C-48 is the legislative enshrinement of the cancellation of Northern Gateway. Both of those pipeline disasters, political and legal disasters: we now have the federal government seeking to enshrine those policies in these two bills. Madam Speaker, the energy industry and the financial industry have been clear that if Bill C-69 is passed in anything remotely like the form in which it was introduced in the Senate, it will represent a massive chill on investor confidence in this country.

In addition to that, Madam Speaker – and this is a point where I'm not sure the opposition agrees with us – Bill C-69 represents a gross prima facie violation of the exclusive constitutional jurisdiction of the people and province of Alberta. This is the point which I emphasized most strongly in my appearance before the Senate committee recently. Madam Speaker, the bill purports to give the national government the regulatory authority to assess and potentially veto projects related to the upstream production of oil and gas within this province, but that is in clear violation of section 92(a) of the Canadian Constitution, which was a critical historic victory by one of Alberta's great Premiers, the late Hon. Peter Lougheed. During the disaster of the first Trudeau government's national energy policy in the early 1980s we had the concurrent effort to patriate the Canadian Constitution. As we know, that led to two years of extensive negotiations. We can recall that the government of Quebec under René Lévesque's leadership refused to sign its consent to the patriation of the Charter and to this day remains, in that sense, outside of the Constitution Act.

Madam Speaker, Peter Lougheed made it patently clear that he would not sign that patriation on behalf of the people of Alberta unless it included a constitutional guarantee of this Assembly's exclusive authority – exclusive is the word in the Constitution – to govern and regulate the production of natural resources, and it includes explicitly oil and gas. This is not a section of the Constitution with any ambiguity in it. There is no court that could find that there is a shared jurisdiction over the regulation of upstream oil and gas. We find it peculiar that the previous government refused to object to C-69 on these grounds or indeed to the National Energy Board's presumption that it could force a consideration of carbon emissions related to upstream oil and gas production, which was effectively presaging the powers proposed in this bill.

So let me be absolutely clear to this Assembly, Madam Speaker, as I was to the Senate energy committee two weeks ago and to Prime Minister Trudeau. If Bill C-69 reverts to its original form, if it includes any purported authority of the federal government to regulate the production of upstream oil and gas, and if that is proclaimed into law, this government will launch an immediate constitutional challenge of the no more pipelines law. We will not let it stand. The message I conveyed to hon. Senators was this. After the enormous role that Alberta has played as an agent of national unity, as an accelerator of shared prosperity in this country, after all of that, we have seen the current government in Ottawa and certain provincial governments aligned effectively with the foreign-funded tar sands campaign through decision after decision: through the vetoing of Keystone XL, the vetoing of Northern Gateway, the killing of Energy East, the campaign of obstruction that has led to endless delays on the Trans Mountain expansion. Through these and other decisions they have attacked the vital economic interests of this province and have helped to deepen and prolong years of economic stagnation and decline in this province, and we will not tolerate this any longer. These two bills seek to enshrine that attack on this province as a great champion of unity and prosperity, and that is why these two bills must not stand.

[Mr. Speaker in the chair]

A recent poll by the Angus Reid group estimated that 50 per cent of Albertans could foresee this province seceding from the federation. Madam Speaker, I am and will be every day of my life a proud and unqualified federalist and a champion of a united Canada. But these bills represent a threat to national unity, so I call on all members of the Canadian Senate to respect their moral obligation to be champions and defenders of national unity. Through this Assembly we ask them to support the recommendations of the Senators who spent thousands of hours studying these bills, to listen to the voices of the four political parties representing 98 per cent of Albertans, and to do the right thing and ensure that we kill bills C-48 and C-69 in the Senate of Canada before this federal election.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments.

Seeing none, are there any others who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations on being elected as our Speaker.

It's my absolute pleasure to rise today for the first time as part of the 30th Legislature to speak to this very important motion. I am pleased to see this come forward as this is clearly a matter of urgent and acute importance for all Albertans and, in fact, all Canadians. This is a topic that Albertans at dinner tables in Edmonton-Castle Downs and across this province are talking about because it concerns our livelihoods, the livelihoods of our families, friends, and communities, and the heart of our province's industry.

It is a topic that our leader, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, focused on with great determination as Premier. For many years she has been a strong and uncompromising advocate for our province, workers, economic interests, and industries. She has been a champion who has travelled the country to fight for our province, lobbied federal leaders, and changed hearts and minds with her determination. She has been a fierce negotiator, one who never backs down from a fight. So before I continue, I want to start by recognizing her because without her work I don't think we would be having this conversation today.

Both bills C-48 and C-69 have attracted national attention, debate, and concern as these bills move through the House of Commons and now Senate, and for good reason. In the case of C-48, as our leader suggested earlier this year when she addressed the Senate, this is a bill that never should have seen the light of day. This bill attacks the core interests of Alberta and our right to get our resources to market. The bill's tanker ban sets a double standard, one in which big tankers full of LNG are fine but product from Alberta is not. This is a bill that mirrors no other restrictions in Canada, and if it is passed, there will be grave impacts for our community and our country, especially during a time of economic downturn and recession.

Right now many families are hurting, and it is the job of political leaders and governments to ensure that we can get these hard-working families back to work. Unfortunately, this bill will have the opposite effect. It kills jobs and kills opportunities for our province. This bill is so entirely backwards that there are few fixes that can be made, and there is no way to improve something so broken. It is for that reason that we are pleased to see the Senate committee on transportation and communications vote this bill down and recommend this bill be scrapped in its entirety. As a government we stood against this bill without reservations, and we continue to stand against it today.

But we also must know that we are not yet out of the woods. This bill must return to the House of Commons, and when this does return to the House, we call on Members of Parliament to do the right thing for our economy, for our country, and for all Canadians. We call on all members to act in the interests of families across our country and put an end to the internal fighting.

We need to heed the long-standing advice of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and retire this bill for good. When she visited the Senate earlier this year, she was steadfast and strong in her message: Bill C-48 does not work for Alberta, and it won't work for Canada. We are pleased to see the members opposite in this House join with us in our message in opposition to this outrageous bill. We must be united in our belief that this bill is an attack on Alberta, on our livelihoods, and on our communities.

I am pleased that we stand together in our concerns about Bill C-69 as well. This bill cannot move forward in its current form. While the federal government has argued that this bill allows for greater certainty in the assessment process, in fact it does quite the opposite. It creates uncertainty and allows projects to flounder in the face of an unclear, difficult, and clunky assessment process. It is only through the 200-plus amendments through the Senate standing committee on energy that we have seen common-sense, practical improvements to this legislation.

One of the amendments, advocated for strongly by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, is set timelines to ensure project approvals do not bleed out over the course of many years, leaving projects vulnerable. We are pleased to see amendments limiting political interference in project approvals and ensuring that there are processes and standards in place before projects are subjected to federal reviews. We also welcome amendments to clarify processes around court challenges, the scope of the assessment, and public participation.

Through the steely determination and hard work of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona the federal government purchased the pipeline, provided certainty, and moved the project forward. We must make sure that this pipeline is built and that the processes we've made cannot be undone. We will continue advocating for the working people and families of this province, and I hope the members opposite support us in this commitment.

With that, I would like to conclude my comments on bills C-48 and C-69. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if you would, I would like to move – and I suspect we may have unanimous consent on it given that benches are full – to one-minute bells. I'll leave it up to the House. But if you could seek that motion, I would appreciate it.

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers who wish to speak to Motion 8?

The hon. Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I'm good.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 8 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:07 a.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Members, before the division is called, I just wanted to highlight for you. Returning members will certainly have noticed a significant change in the decibel level with the bells inside the Chamber, as in I'm not sure you heard them, but the system is currently being upgraded, and hopefully by next week we will have the bells at a reasonable level here in the Chamber for us to all hear so we can prepare for our division votes.

[Government Motion 8 carried unanimously]

The Speaker: Members, I wish to draw your attention to the Speaker's gallery. I noticed a couple of Senators have joined us for this morning's debate. I see Senator Scott Tannas and Senator Doug Black. On behalf of the Chamber thank you so much for your service to our province and to our nation. You are doing an incredible job representing the people of Alberta.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a great morning. I think we had lots of progress and a very conciliatory tone in the House today, a united front standing up for Albertans, which is great. As such, I suggest that we see the clock as 12 and will move to adjourn until 1:30 today.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 23, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly a former MLA and minister, a long-time friend visiting the Assembly today who is seated in your gallery, Wayne Drysdale. Most members here will know Wayne, who spent 10 years in this building as the MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, from 2008 to 2019. He held the portfolios of Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation. Wayne has also spent 15 years as a councillor for the MD of Greenview. Following his career as an elected official he is now the new senior vice-president of Nauticol Energy in Grande Prairie. I would ask Wayne to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul, please.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the House the MP for Lakeland, MP Shannon Stubbs, and her husband, former MLA Shayne Saskiw. I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, please.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to introduce to you and through you to all the members the deputy mayor of Vegreville, the hard-working Tina Warawa. Tina is the front-line worker for politics. Thank you, Tina. Would you rise?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Associate Minister for Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members from the Sun Country Christian School. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Sterling Reimer. They also have some chaperones with them. We've got Dave, Wanda, Dave, Helena, John, Geoff, and Bethany. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the students of Lacombe Christian School from the heartland of industry, innovation, and fertile agricultural land. The teachers with them are JennaRae Sauvé and David Allers, and a number of chaperones: Amy Keller; Adèle Brouwer, I think it says; Janis Butcher; Keith Vaandrager; and Jacki Talsma. I'd ask that they all please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you and to all members of this Assembly

Destiny Christian School. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Glenn Mullem. They have three chaperones here today: Brendon Gerber, Rosanne Fraser, and Emma Kunaka. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Schow: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise here and introduce to you and through you the students of Calvin Christian School. The students are accompanied today by their teachers, Fred Neels and Alana Schipper, and also their chaperones: Wilma VanderVeen, Henk VanderVeen, Edith Beyer, Cora Maljaars, John Bill van Garderen, and Annemarie van Garderen. I'd like to ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-McClung, please.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly an energetic and bright young student currently enrolled at NAIT, Joseph Backewich. I ask you to please rise. I was proud to spend an afternoon with Mr. Backewich discussing leadership, volunteerism, the duty of elected officials to stand up for the rights of everyday Albertans, as part of a job-shadowing project. I ask that all members join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly, whether that be by traditional desk thumping or the less-endearing practice of hand clapping recently imported from Ottawa.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, please.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House two very exceptional people that are working hard to ensure that our youth are receiving the best education. Education is the foundation of our prosperity, and it is my honour to introduce a couple of these people that are on the front lines, helping to shape Alberta's future. Will you please stand when I call your name. First, Cathy Hogg, the president of the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta, a trustee with the Prairie Rose school division, and also a rancher in Cypress Hills. Secondly, Brian Callaghan, executive director of the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta and past superintendent of schools for Canadian Rockies public schools located in Bow Valley and Northland school division in Peace River. Thank you both for your service to the people and kids of Alberta, and please accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other introductions? The Member for Edmonton-Glenora, please.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two. The first is Karen Becker, who's with the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta as well. She is the association's vice-president, a trustee for Wetaskiwin regional public schools, and she is also a champion dog breeder. I'd ask that she rise and we all give her the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

My second. It's a pleasure to introduce several former colleagues of mine, whom I will ask to stand as I say their names: Tonya Malo, Laura Ehrkamp, Courtney Morrison, Courtney Malo, and Dr. Andrea Hasenbank. These women worked tirelessly in this building on behalf of Albertans, and I look forward to them having that opportunity again one day. I ask that all members join me in extending the traditional warm welcome to these phenomenal women.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a true VIP in my life, my son, Justin Gotfried. Justin is a third-year international business student at Mount Royal University, has had the opportunity to do an internship in Ottawa with the Conservative Party of Canada, and continues to be active in political life. I'd like him to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed to Members' Statements, I would like to outline the rotation that will apply for Oral Question Period and Members' Statements. As noted in the very fine procedural memo that my office sent out to all members yesterday, the Speaker's office received a document on May 16, 2019, signed by House leaders confirming their agreement on the rotation of Oral Question Period and Members' Statements.

With respect to Oral Question Period the agreement is based upon 18 questions each day and allows a four-day rotation. The Official Opposition is entitled to ask the first four main questions as well as the sixth, seventh, ninth, 10th, 12th, 13th, 16th, and 17th question each day. Private members of the government caucus are entitled to ask the fifth, eighth, 11th, 14th, 15th, and 18th question each day. Today will be day 1 of the four-day rotation.

I would like to remind members that questions and responses should be no longer than 35 seconds in length and that preambles to supplementary questions are only allowed for the first four rounds of questioning each day, as indicated in the House leaders' agreement.

With respect to Members' Statements the rotation is based upon a three-week schedule. According to Standing Order 7(4) each day up to six private members may make a statement of no more than two minutes in duration. Private members of the government caucus are entitled to four statements each day of the three-week schedule except for Tuesday, when they are entitled to three statements. The Official Opposition is entitled to two statements each day of the three-week schedule except for Tuesday, when they are entitled to three statements. This week is week 1.

I will also table a copy of the House leaders' agreement at an appropriate time in the daily Routine later today.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-North.

Ramadan

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, my congratulations and best wishes to you on your election as Speaker of this House.

Mr. Speaker, it is my honour as a member of the House and an MLA of Islamic faith to rise today to mark the holy month of Ramadan. As we fast from dawn to sunset during this holiest and most solemn month of the year, we deepen our faith and seek spiritual renewal and reflect on ourselves, our actions and our values. Let this be a time for all Albertans, regardless of their cultural or religious backgrounds, to join those marking Ramadan by remembering the less fortunate and celebrating acts of kindness and charity.

For everyone here in Alberta, across Canada, and around the world I wish a blessed and peaceful Ramadan. May you experience renewal during this time of sacrifice and prayer. [Remarks in Arabic]

The Speaker: The Member for St. Albert.

Provincial Tax Revenue and Government Spending

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is impossible to blow a $1.4 billion hole in our province's revenues, call it tax relief, and then expect to deliver services we need without cutting. Our new Premier wants Albertans to believe that a massive tax cut to corporations will result in the trickle-down of jobs, investment, infrastructure, and that's just a fairy tale.

Let's look at one ministry and see what's at stake: Community and Social Services. If this government freezes and/or cuts vital supports in any way, real people will be impacted immediately. They may call it finding efficiencies or transformation, but the result will be the same. There are approximately 60,000 Albertans that rely on AISH. It isn't possible to fund new people who require AISH and qualify for it by cutting. Will they cut the extras that people on AISH need such as funding for special diets, people who use G tubes, or the $50 that's available every month to fund the maintenance costs of service dogs? How about PDD supports?

Will this government ask families and support organizations to continue to do more with less so they can dilute services to pay for the massive tax cuts? Will there be a cap on funding for sexual assault services, making it harder for people to leave dangerous situations? Will this government follow the Premier's close ally Ford here, too, pretend to address wait-lists for kids with autism by introducing cruel caps and means tests that do nothing to wait-lists but slash and burn existing services? Will this government halt the progress we've begun around addressing the overwhelming need for service dogs in Alberta?

It is impossible to address grinding poverty, unemployment, and homelessness by cutting. The Premier wants to take us backwards and call it progress. We're smarter than that. Albertans know we can create a prosperous future without cutting. Each one of us was elected to serve all Albertans – all of them – those without deep pockets, access, and influence. It's important to remember that.

Thank you.

Brooks Bandits Junior A Hockey Championship

Ms Glasgo: The city of Brooks was proud to host the national junior A hockey championships at the Centennial Regional Arena from May 11 to 19. Brooks welcomed fans and teams from across Canada. Hotels were full, and the streets were lively. The energy was electric. For a city that has been through some tough times, this tournament was the excitement and positive energy that we all needed.

It was a true honour to host our Premier in Brooks and participate in the puck drop at the final game. The community welcomed the Premier and myself with open arms and thunderous applause. Never did I think that a group of hockey fans would be excited to see politicians at a game.

Our local heroes, the Brooks Bandits, went into the final game with a perfect record in the tournament and defeated the Prince George Spruce Kings 4 to 3 in the final, making them the national champs.

I would like to take this time to thank Hockey Canada for choosing Brooks, the many volunteers who dedicated their time and talent, the fans for making this tournament possible, and the city of Brooks for creating an incredible atmosphere for this event. Congratulations to the Brooks Bandits players and coaches on an amazing season.

The Speaker: The Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Energy Industries in Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations on your recent election.

It's an honour to rise today for the first time and thank the great people of Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland for electing me and letting me serve in this place. Like in so many other parts of our province many of our constituents in Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland work in the oil and gas sector, coal-fired generation plants, and agriculture, obviously. Too many of them have suffered for the past number of years as oil prices plummeted and jobs have disappeared. On top of that, many seniors and others on fixed incomes suffered under the carbon tax, trying to make ends meet.

However, Mr. Speaker, hope is on the horizon. In Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's throne speech yesterday our government outlined its plan to bring back jobs, investment, and hope to the people of Alberta. We will get our pipelines built, our natural resources to market, and we will get our fiscal house in order. In just these past two days we've repealed the carbon tax and sent a strong message to Ottawa on bills C-69 and C-48. We'll ensure that Albertans have the services they need and our education and health care systems are the envy of all those in the world. We will ensure that Alberta once again is the best place to live, work, and raise a family.

To the great people of Lac Ste. Anne and indeed all Albertans that are counting on us: I have every confidence that this new government is up to the task.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-McCall.

Oil Transportation by Rail

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We must move our resources to market. We need action, not political gains. There is no doubt that pipelines are the long-term answer, but we are still awaiting decisions on the Trans Mountain pipeline. Despite much bluster this new UCP government has also not offered us any positive news on the Keystone XL pipeline or on line 3 either. Meanwhile our oil stays in the ground, and Albertans suffer as a result.

Our leader saw this issue and took immediate action to address it. She signed a multiyear deal to move 120,000 barrels of oil per day by rail, starting this summer. These contracts were worth $3.7 billion and were anticipated to generate about $6 billion in economic return. This means multiple billions in profit for the people of Alberta.

The new Premier plans to be the champion of jobs, yet he's openly threatening to kill these contracts and the countless jobs they would create. He will hurt companies doing business in this province as well. CN Rail has warned that they have already made significant capital investments, and there will be costs to Albertans. Not only does moving oil by rail help clear backlog, reduce the differential, save jobs, and make a considerable profit; it sends the right signal to international investors.

The election is over, and it is time for the Premier to set aside his rhetoric and make the right decision for Albertans. If we are going to pay for the capacity, we should use that capacity. We need to get our oil to markets, whatever it takes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Provincial Election 2019

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today as the MLA for Cypress-Medicine Hat. I want to thank my constituents for putting their trust in me. They have given me the opportunity to serve them three times: twice with the Wildrose Party and now, the third time, with the United Conservative Party.

I would not be standing here today if it wasn't for the hundreds of volunteers who donated their time, money, and ideas while knocking on thousands of doors over the course of the campaign. The efforts of future leaders like 17-year-old Ben Lloyd and 16-year-old Kieran Straub, who recruited countless volunteers, spent many hours working hard for Alberta and many hours working hard for our fiscally conservative movement. It was up to us to show the people of Cypress-Medicine Hat that they had an option, that they could vote for a positive vision under the United Conservatives at a time of economic hardship.

The last election, Mr. Speaker, was one of the most difficult for me. It was heart wrenching hearing the stories of women and men who were unemployed or underemployed; stories of workers and families moving to Oklahoma, Texas, North Dakota, Argentina, and even Iraq because they could not find a way to put food on the table; stories of seniors who could no longer afford their rent, utilities or even gas for their car. Many mentioned how expensive food had become.

This should not be happening in southeastern Alberta, a leader in the oil and gas sector and a leader in agriculture. This should not be happening in a community that has helped build both Alberta and Canada, a community that has contributed and continues to contribute greatly to our prosperity.

I stand here today because of the people of Cypress-Medicine Hat and because they have put their trust in the United Conservatives. It is time to bring back jobs, build pipelines, restore Alberta's tax competitiveness, and eliminate unnecessary and costly regulation.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to take the opportunity through you to congratulate the Premier on his election victory. In fact, in the days before that election it was confirmed that the RCMP were investigating serious allegations of fraud related to the 2017 UCP leadership race. It is unprecedented that you have an active police investigation into something that touches on the interests of both the Premier and the Solicitor General, who were both candidates in that race. In the interests of protecting the integrity of our justice system in Alberta, why has the Premier refused to hire a special project . . .

Speaker's Ruling Questions on Internal Party Matters

The Speaker: I would caution members when asking questions that may be about party-related business and not the business of government, but I turn to . . . [interjections] Members, I would ask you not to interject when I've provided direction about a question. I did not say that the question was out of order. I offered a caution about asking questions related to party matters and not government business. If the Leader of the Opposition wants to make this about government business, I'll be happy to continue to hear all sorts of questions on the matter.

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation (continued)

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by congratulating you on your election and all members of this place on the privilege of serving Albertans, in particular the hon. Leader of the Opposition and to thank her for her service as Premier. I look forward to working together in this Chamber.

In response to her question, Mr. Speaker, obviously police services are completely independent in the decisions they make and the operations that they have. We fully respect that independence.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that even the Premier's own caucus is not convinced of RCMP or police independence. After his business was raided by the RCMP during the election, the member for Calgary-East suggested that our government had orchestrated the raid. Now, that's ridiculous. The fact is that the Premier and the Attorney General have authority over the Crown prosecutors and the police they employ. To preserve public trust in our justice system, the Premier must appoint a special prosecutor. Why won't he?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the police and the Crown prosecutor service operate independent of any kind of political direction from government, be it this government or the former government, and we respect that independence. We will always preserve and protect it.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition on your third supplemental.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that there are clear policies in other provinces that dictate that a special prosecutor should be called in when the matter being investigated involves members of Executive Council. Indeed, in Alberta there has been a clear practice and a clear precedent. Again, why is the Premier ducking this important decision? What are you afraid of?

Mr. Kenney: Absolutely nothing, Mr. Speaker. Once again, police and the Crown prosecutor service are completely independent from any form of political direction or interference from government. We fully respect that convention, that legal principle, as have previous governments in Alberta.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition on your second set of questions, please.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm not surprised that the Premier has been having some trouble dealing with this matter. In fact, when asked by media about the police raid on the Member for Calgary-East's business, the Premier said that the member had not been contacted by the police. But it turned out that the member's own lawyer then told the media that he had been contacted to execute a search warrant in furtherance of the investigation. To the Premier: were you misinformed at the time? And now that you are informed, why have you not taken action and ejected this member from your caucus?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it's sad to see on the first day of this new session the leader smearing a member of this place, who was duly elected, who is not facing allegations against him, who's not under charge. Would the Leader of the Opposition like to identify which members of her caucus were under charges of serious sexual misconduct? I'm not asking that they be removed from the NDP caucus. In this country there's a presumption of innocence under our legal system and in this Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I can say is that not one member of this caucus is now or has been under investigation by the RCMP, but the member opposite cannot say the same.

Now, it's possible that the Premier was misinformed about what was going on with the Member for Calgary-East, but let me ask him a simple question that I think he must know the answer to. Will the Premier please inform this House: has the Premier himself ever been contacted by the RCMP about this matter?

Mr. Kenney: No.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much. The fact is, Mr. Speaker – and I'm glad to hear that, but we still know there's an investigation under way – that we don't know what next thing is going to come up in the UCP leadership corruption investigation. Albertans are concerned, and frankly I'm concerned. I'm concerned, as I've said, about the integrity of our justice system and our democracy. Albertans deserve the truth. So this is my question: will the Premier commit to informing this House if and when he is ever contacted by the RCMP about this matter, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition very clearly again referred to a specific party matter, the leadership race. I encourage you to make your questions about government business or policy.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I see the member is now launching on a desperate fishing expedition. Instead of talking about jobs, the economy, or pipelines, it's a continuation of the fear-and-smear campaign we saw in the last election, that was so resoundingly repudiated by Albertans. Obviously, I and my office and, I would expect, any member of this Legislature would co-operate with the police on any matters, and I will continue to be fully transparent on this and all related issues.

The Speaker: On your third set of questions, the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Budget 2019

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, everyone in this House will remember when the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul told his constituents last year that the United Conservative budget was going to hurt. End quote. But then the Premier said, before he was Premier, on February 20, before the election, and I quote: there will not be any cuts. To the Premier: who exactly was telling the truth before the election?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the recent election campaign I signed the United Conservative public health care guarantee that a UCP government will maintain or increase funding for a publicly insured and universally accessible health care system. The members of the families represented by all of these MLAs and our constituents depend on that publicly insured, universally accessible system, and that is why we have guaranteed stable or growing funding for public health care.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much for that answer to a different question.

Nonetheless, during the campaign the Premier accused us of, quote, making stuff up when we warned of his plans to cut, but then the Premier said yesterday that there will be some tough decisions ahead. To the Premier: will you acknowledge that what you told Albertans before the election is very different than what you are telling them now?

Mr. Kenney: No, I won't, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, bringing fiscal discipline back to Alberta will not be without challenges. Unfortunately, our government has inherited a huge fiscal mess left behind by the NDP, which recklessly increased Alberta's public debt from $13 billion to $56 billion. They had us on track to a hundred billion dollars in debt. They underwent five credit downgrades. They drove our interest costs up to billions of dollars, and we will have to make some difficult decisions to bring balance back to our finances.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's going to hurt; Albertans will be affected; tough decisions a the truth of what the UCP is planning to inflict on Albertans is becoming clearer and clearer every day. Yesterday the Premier's defence was that, "Oh, the usual groups," he said disparagingly, "were going to complain about the budget plans." To the Premier: do these so-called usual groups, who you're already dismissing, include the students stuck trying to learn in overcrowded classrooms or perhaps the patients waiting longer in emergency, or was it both that you're planning to dismiss?

Mr. Kenney: Neither, Mr. Speaker. I, of course, was referring to the NDP-affiliated government union bosses who campaigned for the NDP, and Albertans rejected the campaign of fear and smear from those NDP-affiliated special interests. The opposition leader talks about inflicting things. I'll tell you what. They inflicted a $60 billion debt on Albertans, and it now falls to this government to clean up the huge fiscal mess left to us by the NDP.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition, for your final set of questions.

Climate Change Strategy

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? Climate change is a serious issue. World-renowned climate scientist Katharine Hayhoe has said, "The longer [we] ignore climate change, the more difficult and expensive it's going to be to fix – and the more suffering there will be." But the Premier and his caucus just don't seem to grasp the scope of the issue. Asked about climate change this week, the minister of environment dismissed it as not being a crisis despite mounting evidence to the contrary. Why won't the Premier stop ignoring the problem, stop denying the science, and put forward a real plan to stop climate change?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I have never denied the science of climate change, and I have always acknowledged the important challenge of reducing greenhouse gas emissions. That is why our government, as underscored in yesterday's throne speech, will bring forward legislation to have a more intelligent approach to a levy on major industrial emissions, that will address over 60 per cent of the emissions in our economy, and to support technology through research and development to reduce carbon intensity. But what we will not do is punish Albertans for heating their homes and driving to work.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's not just scientists who are warning about climate change. The Bank of Canada says, "Climate change continues to pose risks to both the economy and the financial system." They go on to say that "economic activity and the environment are intertwined." By next year estimates show that the cost of climate change will be $5 billion annually and will rise to more than $20 billion in the years to come. So why won't the Premier concede that without a real plan, as opposed to what he's just referred to, to address climate change he is in fact putting our economic future at risk?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, as I say, we will address the major industrial emissions, but what we will not do is take the NDP's approach of punishing people for living ordinary lives by heating their homes, filling up their gas tanks to drive to work. Not even the opposition leader could identify by how much her carbon tax cash grab was purportedly reducing emissions, when asked a few months ago, because the answer was negligible, no measurable effect on carbon emissions. It wasn't about the environment; it was just an NDP cash grab.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca . . . [interjections] It's my first day.

For your final supplemental.

Ms Notley: Yeah. Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, seven megatonnes, the equivalent of the amount of greenhouse gas emissions produced by the whole province of Manitoba: that is what we have reduced emissions by since we brought in the climate leadership plan. And you, Mr. Premier, are going to undo that work, and you are going to let down future generations, and you're going to jeopardize our economy if you do not come up with a substantial plan to address this problem. Canadians need Alberta to lead. Stop pushing Alberta to the back of the line once again.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, if there was a reduction in emissions under the NDP, that was at least in large part because the economy shrank under the NDP. Fewer people were working. Fewer people were driving to work. Less industry was producing things. You know, you could have the NDP in government for much longer, and they'd continue to reduce emissions by killing jobs and economic growth in Alberta. What this plan is about is getting back to turning Alberta into an engine of job creation, and we're going to do that, yes, with Bill 1, the carbon tax repeal act.

The Speaker: Take 2. The Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Highway 813 Athabasca River Bridge

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The bridge crossing the Athabasca River on highway 813 at the town of Athabasca is an essential part of the transportation infrastructure within my constituency. This bridge is in desperate need of replacement not only for the efficient and safe movement of people but for the continued success of industries within this region of our province. The Alberta Transportation 2018 construction program lists this bridge in the design stage. To the Minister of Transportation: has the design of the replacement bridge been completed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct in pointing out that our government is committed to ensuring the safe passage of people and goods on Alberta highways and to adequately maintaining and renewing Alberta's road infrastructure. Now, on the bridge on highway 813 that the member references, interestingly enough, the design at one point was complete, but it's no longer complete. There's been a recent slide in the area, which requires a little bit more design work. The design revisions are progressing and expected to be completed by the end of September.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the replacement of this bridge is crucial for individuals in the Athabasca region and given that this bridge is critical for the safe and reliable transportation of energy, agriculture, and forestry products coming out of the region north of Athabasca, to the minister: when can the people of Athabasca expect a new bridge to be completed?

An Hon. Member: Hooray.

Mr. McIver: I appreciate that.

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, I would love to give him an exact date, but alas I cannot today. As I pointed out in my first answer, the design work is not done, and of course you can't put a price on a bridge until after the design work for that bridge is done, and once you put a price on the design work, then of course you have to fit it into the budget. As much as I know it's an important question, I will tell the hon. member that we will get that answer as we progress with the design.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, rural Alberta transportation infrastructure is necessary for our wealth creation industries to succeed. Without the timely replacement of crucial transportation infrastructure these industries begin to lose hope that their needs are being heard. To the minister: can you confirm that the replacement of the Athabasca River Bridge will continue to be a priority for this government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The bridge that the hon. member refers to obviously has to be a priority. My understanding is that with the absence of the bridge the alternate route is an additional 80-kilometre trip each way. Consequently it's a big issue, and there are areas north of the bridge which are hard to access without this particular piece of infrastructure. I would tell the hon. member it's a priority, and I will keep him informed as we move along.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Minimum Wage

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 1, 2018, Alberta became the first province to ensure that all working people made at least $15 an hour. Now this Premier and his UCP government are beginning to cut away at that $15 per hour minimum wage despite promising he wouldn't. His first victim? Youth workers. After that, he's going to launch a panel to study whether restaurant servers should earn less. Young people work hard, and so do those in the restaurant industry. Why does this Premier feel that their work isn't worth as much?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for the question. Our focus, and what we ran on, is getting Albertans back to work, all Albertans, youth and adults. We were elected with a mandate to bring investment back to Alberta, grow and diversify the economy, and we need jobs for the youth. Under the previous government youth unemployment increased, and we want to bring them back to work and provide them with the experience and the skills to actually get their jobs in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this UCP government's plan to target hard-working people in the restaurant industry is an attack on women and given that the vast majority of restaurant servers are women and given that this move is hardly surprising coming from that party, I will ask this. To the Premier: why, when we're already combatting the second-largest wage gap between men and women in the country, do you want to make it worse?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we were elected with a mandate to get Albertans back to work. That is our focus, to get more jobs in the restaurant industry, in particular, so we can have people who can build skills and experience for the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in February this Premier went before a group of restaurant owners and, frankly, donors and said that his proposal to lower the minimum wage applied to only, and I quote directly, people with a modest level of human capital, will the Premier or perhaps the minister on his behalf apologize for this awful comment, or does he actually consider young Albertans and Alberta women to be worth less?

Mr. Kenney: I will not apologize for using a term that the NDP government used on its own websites to describe, for example, people who have never worked before, who had less chance to work because of job-killing NDP policies. But the member is correct. I did speak to restaurant owners, hard-working entrepreneurs who employ hundreds of thousands of Albertans, at a meeting that was boycotted by that member, who smeared restaurant owners. Mr. Speaker, many of them are women and men who work 18 hours a day, put their life savings on the line to create jobs for Alberta, and we want to help them do exactly that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs? Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: It's okay, Mr. Speaker. We look the same.

The Speaker: Fair point.

United Conservative Party Fundraising

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, Albertans expect and Albertans deserve ethical government. The UCP has already shown that this isn't a priority for them with their kamikaze leadership scandal and an MLA who is currently under RCMP investigation, but the Premier's campaign to lower the bar continues. A fundraising letter was sent out and is signed by the Premier, using the Premier's title. To the Premier: do you think it's acceptable for the UCP to use the position of Premier to raise money for the UCP?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it's very disappointing to see that the opposition has chosen to take this tack early in this Legislature. They're the same tactics they used that caused them, quite frankly, to now sit in opposition. To be clear on this issue, we're confident that we've done nothing wrong, that everything was within the rules. Having said that, the Premier and our cabinet and our caucus have indicated to the party that we would prefer in the future not to use our titles that we have in this place. We haven't done that because we think we've done anything wrong. We just think it's something that we should do going forward. Again, I encourage the members to try to raise the bar in this place.

Ms Sweet: Given that this isn't even the first time this month that the UCP has tried to use the Office of the Premier to raise money for their party – an e-mail sent under the name of the environment minister repeatedly invokes the title of Premier to cash in for the UCP – and also given that in 2012 the Ethics Commissioner investigated a former PC MLA for using a government title to raise money for his own campaign, to the minister of environment. As a former Wildrose member you took to PC-style corruption with ease. Are you surprised how fast that happened?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, you see it here: Team Angry from the NDP. This is their new approach. There's nothing but anger and fear and smear. It's shocking to see what has happened to the Official Opposition in this place. I often warned those on the other side, when they sat on this side of the House, that if they continued these tactics, they would sit on that side of the House. I hope they continue it because you know what's going to happen? They'll end up sitting on that side of the House for a very long time. Let me be clear. We did nothing wrong. We have no concerns with how we've acted on this. We're confident with that, but we think in the future we won't use our titles inside our party e-mails.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I would hope all members of this House can agree that ethics are important and that these Redford-style attempts to use government to line party coffers is wrong, to the Premier: will you commit right here and right now to return every single cent from this unethical fundraising campaign, and if not, why not?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on April 16 an enormous number of Albertans voted to reject these exact tactics. The opposition has not realized that their tactics of fear and smear and not focusing on Albertans are what's caused them to sit on that side of the House. You know what's going to happen going forward? This side of the House is going to focus on Albertans. We're going to focus on jobs, the economy, pipelines, and getting Alberta back to work, and if the opposition wants to focus on spending their time filibustering and banging their desks and doing those things, they can have at it. We're focused on Albertans.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday and Wednesday I was honoured and humbled to be here. Now I'm a little embarrassed. Alberta's fiscal trajectory is not just unsustainable; it is dangerous and puts at risk our ability to fund essential services in the future. Lack of long-term financial planning and politically motivated short-term spending have decimated our once debt-free province. A blue-ribbon panel was formed to find the best path forward in this regard. Can the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance please update this House as to their progress thus far?

The Speaker: The Minister of Treasury Board and Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question, Member for Calgary-South East. Cleaning up Alberta's debt problem starts with expert advice and a credible plan. Our independent, nonpartisan panel of leading experts has been tasked with recommending a path to a balanced budget and proposing a realistic plan to start paying down the debt situation the previous government has put our province in. The panel received their mandate on May 7 and are currently reviewing our finances to determine how we will restore the Alberta advantage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. During the election campaign we were working with financial information that I believed understated the severity of Alberta's financial crisis. With the additional information that you have available to you now, can the minister comment on whether or not Alberta's true financial situation is shaping up to be materially different or worse than what we were led to believe?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're now just looking into some of the big challenges left to us by the previous government and digging into some of the details of questionable spending. There are certainly also some headwinds facing us on the revenue side. GDP has slowed recently, and resource revenues remain volatile. We'll be taking these changing factors into account as we go forward in the development of our forthcoming budget plans.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again, Minister. Given the information available at present, can the minister still see a path to balancing the budget by 2022-2023?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we are deeply dedicated to bringing Alberta's finances back to balance. This was a key piece in our platform, and I believe Albertans expect us to be responsible financial stewards of their hard-earned tax dollars. While we are seeing additional economic headwinds, we're committed to bringing this province's finances to balance. To download our current spending habits on future generations is irresponsible, and Albertans expect more from this government.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Indigenous Treaty Rights

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I begin, I'd like to acknowledge that we are on Treaty 6 territory, home of the Cree, Nakota Sioux, Dene, Métis, and other indigenous peoples. Recently an article in the Star pointed out that the current government has been pointedly refusing to engage in treaty land acknowledgements. This has been noticed by indigenous people, who say that it displays an underlying lack of intent to honour our path to reconciliation. If the government refuses to make land acknowledgements, will they at least stand and assure the House that they recognize that Alberta is on treaty land largely covered by treaties 6, 7, and 8?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government commits itself to the path of reconciliation and shared prosperity in the spirit of the treaties, and we will continue to honour the First People, who built these communities on this land. A key part of reconciliation is ensuring that the barriers to ownership of resource projects by indigenous Albertans are removed. That is why our government is proposing the indigenous opportunity corporation, which will provide indigenous communities access to capital and remove a barrier to their ownership of important resource projects.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully, I'll get an answer to this question. Does this government acknowledge the calls to action of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the articles of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous people, which outline the right of indigenous people to free, prior, and informed consent with matters regarding their treaty rights outlined in treaties 6, 7, and 8?

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thanks. Like I said, our government is committed to empowering indigenous Albertans to take charge of their own destiny. That's an important issue, and I'm still looking into that. Thank you for the question. I'll get back to you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Federal Court of Appeal overturned the approval of the Northern Gateway pipeline as a result of the failure of the Harper government, of which our new member was a senior minister, to adequately address the free, prior, and informed consent of indigenous people, can the Premier and this minister commit that he does in fact acknowledge treaty rights and his duty to consult with indigenous people and that he will not put Alberta's economy and good jobs for working people at risk by repeating the Premier's past failures on existing energy projects like the Trans Mountain project?

Mr. Kenney: Of course, we respect the Crown's duty to consult, Mr. Speaker, but you know something? The NDP opposed the Northern Gateway pipeline and encouraged their ally Justin Trudeau to veto it, thereby betraying First Nations who want to be partners in prosperity in developing those resources. The NDP did nothing to support the Eagle Spirit consortium or the other First Nations who were opposed to the Trudeau veto of Northern Gateway. This government, however, is going to take the historic measure of creating a Crown corporation to facilitate aboriginal co-ownership of major projects.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora, please.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to congratulate the Minister of Education on her appointment as well as the arrival of her new grandchild.

Many Alberta families are having children. In fact, it's expected that 15,000 new students will be walking into Alberta schools this fall. School boards are worried that the UCP won't give a single dollar to these new students. The Education minister went before hundreds of teachers this past weekend and didn't offer any hope. Zip. Zilch. Nada. Will she tell this House, tell school boards, staff, parents, and students: will there be any new funding for the new students this fall?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I look forward to answering it in the supplemental. I was, however, saddened to learn of the traffic accident involving a school bus in Edmonton this morning, with 11 students and their bus driver having been taken to hospital with some minor injuries. We are hoping for their quick recovery. We send our hearts out to the students and to those families.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: I think I'm quoting the now Speaker when he used to say, "Well, it isn't called answer period," and that sure is true, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the Calgary board of education is painting a particularly grim picture, projecting a $40 million deficit for the coming fall, and given that the deficit could lead to the firing of hundreds of teachers, can the minister explain to the more than 100,000 students in Calgary public schools and their parents why she intends to rob them of the skilled teachers needed to support their success?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Let me be clear. Our United Conservative government has committed to maintaining or increasing education funding, but we do respect the autonomy of local boards to make decisions on their spending. They're in the best position to address those questions and their budgets.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. The first two questions were: will the minister agree to fund growing enrolment? Given that the Edmonton public schools alone are anticipating more than 4,000 new students this fall and given that the Premier regularly says that government budgets need to run the same way as household budgets, does the minister think that it's responsible for parents to buy the same amount of food, clothes, and live in the same house if they have 4,000 more children in their house next year?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Minister of Education I am focused on strengthening our education system and delivering on our campaign platform commitments. We will maintain or increase education funding. We will proclaim the Education Act. We are committed to preserving and protecting educational choice and supporting safe schools that protect students against discrimination and bullying. We have a clear mandate from over a million of our voters, and we will continue to work with that. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Support for Business and Job Creation

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last government created an environment that drove business out of the province. What is the government doing to bring business back to Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance, please.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for that question. Our government has a robust plan to, again, attract investment into this province, create jobs and opportunity for all Albertans. We've been clear in our platform that, of course, Bill 1 was the repeal of the carbon tax, which will create 6,000 additional jobs and more opportunity for businesses. We also will be rolling out a job-creation tax cut and other measures to reduce red tape and regulatory burden to attract investment and jobs into this province.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. What is the expected impact of the corporate tax rate?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we announced publicly last week, we will be reducing our corporate tax rate in this province from 12 per cent down to 8 per cent over approximately three and a half years. That will leave us with the most competitive business tax rate in the country and one of the most competitive rates within North America. We're confident that that move, amongst others, will, again, attract investment, create job opportunities and opportunities for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How many jobs will this bring to Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In terms of the job-creation tax cut, we've had some of the best economists in this province inform us that when fully implemented, this job-creation tax cut will create $13 billion of economic activity and create 55,000 new jobs for Albertans.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-City Centre has a question.

Edmonton Medical Lab Hub Construction Stoppage

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, this government was elected on a platform of jobs, pipeline, economy, yet one of its first actions was to throw hundreds of Edmonton construction workers out of work as the Premier halted construction on the long-needed new Edmonton laboratory clinical hub. Now, I've heard directly from my constituents in Edmonton-City Centre how our investment in much-needed infrastructure kept them, their suppliers, and their contractors working during a tough economic time. To the Premier: why have you ended good, mortgage-paying jobs building a much-needed new health facility simply because of your own ideological agenda?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to reiterate a campaign commitment that our government had during the campaign, that commitment was to maintain or increase spending in health care, and that includes maintaining or increasing our investment in health care infrastructure, including infrastructure for laboratory services. I'd also like to point out – and thank you to the hon. member for his question – that those plans were actually to remove jobs from his riding, Edmonton-City Centre, to another location.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The facilities available in Edmonton-City Centre have been highly inadequate for some time. Land here is expensive. It made sense to move that site.

Now, given that this Premier seems to have a rather low opinion of the work done by lab service technicians, having said to reporters, when talking about privatizing health services in Alberta, that crucial tests that help doctors save lives through accurate diagnosis and targeted treatment don't actually touch patients or heal people, and given that this demonstrates an astounding ignorance of how essential lab service workers are to providing critical care, how many can expect to lose their jobs as a result?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While we're talking about ideology, I mean, I'd just point out to all Albertans the decisions that were made by the previous government when it came to laboratory services and the decisions regarding infrastructure, including that lab hub. Our decisions as a government going forward are going to be focused on patients. It is going to be focused on listening to experts. It's not going to be taking a report from the Health Quality Council of Alberta from 2016 and ignoring it. It's not going to be taking Dr. Ballem's report from 2017 and ignoring it. It's not going to be taking pathologists out of hospitals and moving them into a location away from hospitals. Our government is going to listen to experts and listen to patients.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health Quality Council of Alberta recommended this option, and indeed we recognize that 70 per cent of major health decisions are based on lab results. Given that a new, modernized central lab hub will give Albertans faster, more efficient access to the newest, most accurate testing while providing good, mortgage-paying jobs and indeed diversifying our economy by allowing for translational research, why are those jobs not going to lab technicians here in Alberta instead of in Ontario? Can this Premier just simply admit that he's got it wrong and allow this essential, life-saving, job-creating project to continue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to point out to Albertans that those two reports from the Health Quality Council of Alberta did not recommend this at all.

While we're taking lessons from the other side, I just would like to focus a little bit on their record for the last four years when it came to health care spending. Open-heart surgery wait times increased by nearly 50 per cent. Cataract surgery wait times increased 30 per cent. Hip replacement wait times increased 30 per cent. Knee replacement wait times increased 23 per cent. The percentage of the patients admitted through emergency within eight hours dropped from 46 per cent to 43 per cent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

High Level Wildfire

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the past days we have seen wildfires force evacuations in the town of High Level, surrounding areas, and the Dene Tha' First Nation communities of Bushe River and Meander River. Brave first responders and front-line staff have stepped up to fight the flames, and thankfully, sir, residents have been able to evacuate safely. Despite this, the fires continue to rage. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is the current intensity of the flames, and how close to homes, property, and businesses are the fires at this moment?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for that particular question. I can confirm to you that one of the decisions that we took when this fire came up was to move quickly and make sure that we evacuate our citizens in High Level, and I can assure you that, as we speak, they are safe and being taken care of in Slave Lake, in Grande Prairie, and in Peace River and other centres within this particular province.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the intensity and location of the fires, I understand the evacuation order of 72 hours has been extended. Can the same minister please update the House on the supports that are being offered to displaced residents, and when can we expect they will be able to return safely to their homes?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, once again for that particular question. At this point in time we are reviewing all of our options to make sure that by the time citizens get back to High Level and Mackenzie county, they are going to be safe. I can also assure you that we have worked closely with all of our municipal partners to make sure that our evacuees are getting all of the help and support that they need.

The Speaker: The member for his second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you. Given that communities in northern Alberta are eagerly welcoming evacuees from the High Level fire but are having to pay up front for costs and then getting reimbursed later by the province, will the government commit funding to communities hosting evacuees that they can access right away to pay for costs to support people fleeing from nearby natural disasters?

Mr. Madu: Thank you once again for that particular question. I can assure this particular House that our government is looking at all of our options. Our guarantee is to make sure that all of the support and the care that they need they will get from this government.

The Speaker: The Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Congratulations to you on becoming Speaker of the House.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this month Albertans paused to remember the Fort McMurray wildfire, which ravaged northern Alberta and caused the evacuation of tens of thousands of Albertans. Now another massive wildfire in northern Alberta has led to the evacuation of approximately 5,000 people from the High Level area to communities like my home of Slave Lake. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: was this evacuation a success, and are all those affected safe?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for that particular question. In times like this Albertans have always answered the call. This evacuation has been successful thanks to communities like Slave Lake, Grande Prairie, Peace River, and others. More than 3,200 have been processed at our evacuation centres and are in safe conditions. Others have found lodging with friends or relatives. This would not have been possible without the tremendous efforts of our first responders, emergency staff, and municipal officials, who are working so hard to keep our communities safe.

The Speaker: The Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Slave Lake we understand the power of these wildfires, and we'll be there for the evacuees until the very end, but given that over 1,000 evacuees are being hosted in Slave Lake and they're eager to return home and to their normal lives, does the minister know when this evacuation order might be lifted?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, once again, and thank you to the member for that particular question. Government has no greater duty than keeping our people and communities safe. Right now firefighters from Alberta and across Canada, emergency staff, nonprofit workers, and municipal officials are working hard to fight this fire and manage the evacuation. We are hopeful that residents will be able to return home soon, but for safety reasons the evacuation order will remain in place for at least a few more days.

The Speaker: The member.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I have heard concerns about the financial pressures of being away from home for several days, particularly when it comes to day-to-day expenditures, can the minister say whether there will be financial assistance provided to evacuees, especially considering that many of these folks cannot work right now?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government will be there for all those affected. I will escalate our relief effort if the situation gets worse. We are currently working with our municipal partners to understand the needs of those affected. Last Tuesday I met with the mayor and council of Slave Lake and had a very productive conversation about this. While we review our options for assistance, we are asking evacuees to check on their insurance coverage and to keep all of their receipts.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie.

Rural Crime

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The House of Commons Public Safety and National Security Committee released a report about the growing concern rural Canadians have about rising crime rates in rural communities. In the last four years communities in rural Alberta have seen dramatic spikes in break-ins, thefts, assaults, violence against women, and long waits for the police to show up. The committee's report says that the provinces should assist with police resources. What measures will the government take to ensure that rural Albertans feel safe, secure, and protected in their communities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and answer my first question here in question period.

Nothing is more important than providing safety to Albertans here and our law-abiding citizens. Under the NDP and the last government Maclean's reported that 7 out of 10 cities that have had the worst increases in crime in Canada were here in Alberta. Our government is going to make sure that we focus on providing a fairer, faster, and more responsive justice system. We're going to be investing in things like ALERT to provide $50 million in funding to make sure that we respond to this crisis in our rural communities.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. Increasing funding to policing is only part of the problem. We are facing a shortage in courthouses, judges, and Crown prosecutors. Our criminal justice system is underfunded across the board, and rural Albertans are bearing the brunt. Some rural communities have seen a rise of 250 per cent since 2011. Rural Albertans need a justice system that inspires public confidence. What is the government doing to give rural Albertans a justice system that inspires public confidence?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you. We are in a crisis right now, and we are going to be investing to hire 50 new prosecutors here in the province of Alberta to deal with the backlog of cases that we have so that cases aren't dumped, to make sure that we actually are prosecuting these cases. This government is going to be focusing on making sure that we provide services here for our prosecutors and our police to make sure that they can get their jobs done. We're not going to be prioritizing free light bulbs, Mr. Speaker. We're going to be prioritizing providing police and prosecutors with the tools that they need to get the job done.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. Among all provinces Alberta has the third-highest rate of sexual assault. In rural Alberta we have a lack of specialized professionals to support victims, investigate assaults, and collect evidence. Will the government increase support for some of the most vulnerable Albertans?

The Speaker: The minister of status of women, amongst other things.

Mrs. Aheer: The longest title. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations on your election, too, and to the Member for Grande Prairie for her very first question in the House.

We're very, very proud of the fact that we spoke about intimate partner domestic violence as part of the platform pieces that we're going to be bringing forward, also the $5 million that we'll be bringing forward, especially with regard to rural domestic violence, to make sure that rape and sexual assault kits are available – it's very important at such a horrible time – and that we have access to these incredible nurses that are able to do the work to help people at a very vulnerable time.

Students' Political Participation LGBTQ Student Supports

Member Irwin: Earlier this month thousands of young people took part in a student-led protest against this government's plan to roll back protection for LGBTQ students. I stood with students at Victoria school of the arts and heard from them how important these protections are. The Premier said that students should be in class instead of doing politics outside of school during school hours. Does the Premier or perhaps the Education minister stand by the Premier's assertion that students should not engage in political activity during school hours?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education is rising.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Minister of Education my most important job is to listen. I will have an open line of communication with everyone who has a role in our province's education system. I'm committed to ensuring that our schools are welcoming, caring, safe, and respectful and are respectful of diverse views, as we've heard from all students.

Thank you.

Member Irwin: Given that two weeks later busloads of students escorted by school staff travelled long distances to protest a woman's right to choose during school hours and given that the Member for Peace River was in attendance taking selfies with students and given that the Education minister referred to this political activism as a social justice activity, will the Premier or the minister admit that students' rights to political participation and free speech depend on whether or not they agree with the UCP government's views?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As minister I remain committed to hearing from all students from across the province with diverse viewpoints and perspectives, and I do respect the autonomy of local boards to make those decisions.

Thank you.

Member Irwin: Given that the Premier has a record of failing to apologize for past actions that have rightly upset the LGBTQ community, whether it be when multiple members' homophobic views were exposed or for not listening to them when it comes to legal protection from being outed, will the Premier take this opportunity, for once, to apologize to Alberta's LGBTQ students and their allies?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Our government has been very clear. We oppose mandatory parental notification of any student. Our United Conservative government supports safe schools that are free from bullying and prejudice, and we believe in the safety of all students as being paramount.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to provide oral notice of the following two motions. Government Motion 9:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly recognize the rights of members to vote freely on all matters of conscience.

Government Motion 10:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly express its opposition to the practice of members changing their caucus affiliations unless that member is to sit as an independent or has resigned and has been returned to the Assembly after a re-election in a by-election under the new affiliation.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) that at the appropriate time I will rise to discuss the breach of privilege that occurred with the announcing of the repeal of the carbon tax to take place before May 30, one week from today. I have the appropriate number of copies of the letter that was provided to your office this morning.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Premier to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter he referred to that was signed by himself, the Leader of the Opposition, as well as the other leaders of the political parties in the province in his speech this morning.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings? The Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of an excellent column by Keith Gerein, As Alberta Burns, UCP Begins its Mandate with a Retreat on Climate Change, in which he notes that if this "government doesn't get its act together on climate change soon, the only destiny awaiting us is to join Nero on the wrong side of history."

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings with the requisite copies. The first is a copy of my letter to the Ethics Commissioner in regard to the fundraising letter.

The second copy that I have is actually an article from 2011 where our now-Premier apologizes for using government funds in fundraising letters when he was an MP.

I have another one of an article, Mar in Red Ink and Hot Water; Fundraiser to Pay Off Leadership Campaign, when Mr. Mar had to do that.

The fundraising letter from the minister of environment asking for money in regard to two event announcements in Grande Prairie.

Also, the fundraising letters from the now Premier to the United Conservative membership asking for funds.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings?

I have two tablings today. First, under the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, five copies of the report of late filing of nomination contestant returns, received in my office on April 23.

Second, I have five copies of the House leaders' agreement for the Oral Question Period rotation and Members' Statements rotation for the First Session of the 30th Legislature.

The Opposition House Leader on a point of privilege.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise pursuant to Standing Order 15 to raise a point of privilege due to the actions of the government. They have offended the dignity and authority of the Assembly and run roughshod over the democratic process by violating the ability of members to do their jobs. This is a very serious and grave matter.

By announcing that the carbon tax would be repealed by May 30, it presupposes when this House will finish its deliberations and pass Bill 1. Now, Mr. Speaker, as you know, Standing Order 15(1) indicates that a question of privilege is "a breach of the rights of the Assembly or of the parliamentary rights of any Member."

As well, to qualify for Standing Order 15, the issue has to be raised at the earliest opportunity. Now, the press conference where the Premier announced that there'd be no more carbon tax in Alberta effective May 30 occurred on May 13. The House was not in session at that time, and this is the first daily Routine since May 13. As such, I believe it's the first opportunity I've had to raise this point of privilege and, therefore, it is in order according to Standing Order 15(2). I provided your office, Mr. Speaker, with a letter this morning where I advised of my intent to raise this point of privilege under Standing Order 15.

Now, Mr. Speaker, during a press conference on May 13 the Premier stated that Bill 1, quote, will be passed with an effective elimination by the 30th of May; by May 30 there will no longer be an Alberta carbon tax. End quote. That comment is in breach of parliamentary privilege of all of the other 86 members of this House. It presupposes a decision not yet made by the Assembly. These comments demonstrate a complete and utter disregard for the rights and privileges of the members of this House.

Presupposing a decision of this Assembly has been ruled on in this place on a number of occasions. One of the reasons why previous Speakers have ruled that this type of behaviour from government is inappropriate and presupposes a decision of the Assembly is when such comments don't include any type of caveat with respect to the crucial role that this House plays in consideration and adoption of legislation. An example of that would be: subject to parliamentary approval. We wouldn't be here in this place at this time discussing this issue if the Premier had in any way acknowledged respect for the parliamentary process, an approval that has yet to take place. Albertans rely on members of this Assembly to be able to debate pieces of legislation free from the presumption of the government, a presumption, Mr. Speaker, that was communicated through the media to every Albertan.

Now, you can correct me if I'm wrong, Mr. Speaker, but at the moment Bill 1 is in its second reading. There has not yet been an opportunity for amendments to be proposed, never mind an opportunity for deliberation and debate by members of this Assembly. In fact, my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was only briefed on this legislation yesterday, and our caucus is currently considering the vast implications of this proposed legislation. Yet the Premier has been speaking with the media presupposing our deliberations would be concluded within a week.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, Erskine May, 24th edition, says about privilege on page 251:

Generally speaking, any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House or Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge in his [or her] duty . . . directly or indirectly, to produce such results, may be treated as a contempt, even [if] there is no precedent of the offence.

In Beauchesne, sixth edition, on page 25 it has this to say about privilege. "It is generally accepted that any threat, or attempt to influence the vote of, or actions of a Member, is breach of privilege."

Mr. Speaker, in 2013 Speaker Zwodzesky ruled on a matter that parallels this issue: brochures paid for by government that presupposed a decision of this Assembly.

Speaker Wanner also had occasion to rule on a matter of privilege on this province's approach to climate leadership on June 6, 2016. In fact, I believe that our current Speaker introduced it in his capacity as the Official Opposition House Leader at the time.

Speaker Wanner also noted that the following passage from the Ontario ruling of January 22, 1997, whereat page 1420 of Hansard Speaker Stockwell stated the following when considering a ministerial pamphlet discussing the government of Ontario's program for reforming municipal government in metropolitan Toronto.

In my opinion, [the claims of the brochure] convey the impression that the passage of the requisite legislation was not necessary or was a foregone conclusion, or that the assembly and the Legislature had a pro forma, tangential, even inferior role in the legislative and lawmaking process, and in doing so, they appear to diminish the respect that is due to this House. I would not have come to this view had these claims or proposals – and that is all they are – been qualified by a statement that they would only become law if and when the Legislature gave its stamp of approval to them . . . It is not enough for yet another Speaker to issue yet another warning or caution in circumstances where the wording and circulation of the pamphlet appear on their face to cross the line. I say in all candour that a reader of that document could be left with an incorrect impression about how parliamentary democracy works in Ontario, an impression that undermines respect for our parliamentary institutions.

In both cases, Mr. Speaker, a prima facie case of breach of privilege was found.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier's comments mean that Albertans could be left with an incorrect impression about how parliamentary democracy works in this great province, an impression that undermines the respect for parliamentary institutions. Clearly, the Premier's remarks are an attempt to influence the vote or actions of a member, specifically to rush deliberations in order to meet an arbitrary and, if I may say, reckless deadline set by the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that his actions were an affront to the Westminster system, the centuries old traditions and decorum of this House. One of the foundational pillars of representative democracy is that all 87 members are elected to represent the over 4 million Albertans we all serve. No one member, including the Premier, has the authority or the ability to dictate the outcome of the proceedings of this House. If that's the case, then we are no longer living in a democratic province.

The Speaker: As the Opposition House Leader will know, there is a tradition of allowing the government to respond should they choose to respond today or providing some time for them to bring their arguments together.

Mr. Jason Nixon: We'll respond today, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader is rising to respond.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm a little . . .

The Speaker: Pardon me, Government House Leader. To provide some clarity, this will be your only opportunity to respond.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Understood. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that clarity. It's good to be back, and also my first chance to congratulate you on your election to the chair.

I'm a little bit surprised at the Official Opposition House Leader that he would choose this issue to be his maiden point of privilege in this Legislature. Points of privilege ought to be a rare occurrence. They ought to be for genuine matters of contempt of privilege, as you know. I've heard you argue many times when you were an Opposition House Leader yourself. [interjection] Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. deputy Leader of the Opposition, there also is a tradition in this place of not heckling while we're dealing with points of order and points of privilege, so she could probably try to adjust that. I know she's having trouble adjusting to her new spot in the Chamber, but that's the appropriate behaviour.

This ought to be for genuine matters if you're going to move a point of privilege. After listening to the remarks by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I fail to see how this is a point of privilege, and frankly, Mr. Speaker, I fail to see how I can even take it seriously. The facts as I am aware with regard to communication of information about Bill 1 are as follows. The Premier made the point several times in opposition, as you know, also on the campaign trail and in government that Bill 1 of a United Conservative government would be to repeal the carbon tax. Promise made, promise kept. No announcements made about Bill 1 infringe on the rights of members to be the first to see the final form of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, as it's important that you know, no notice on the Order Paper is required for Bill 1. I think that you probably already do know that. I can assure you that no final copies of Bill 1 were distributed in advance of its introduction yesterday. In fact, I would like to share with you, Mr. Speaker, remarks made by one of your predecessors, Speaker Zwodzesky, on May 29, 2012, while ruling on a question of privilege that referred to a press conference held by the Premier and the Government House Leader [of the day] . . . in which both the Speech from the Throne and Bill 1, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012, were discussed.

The speaker at the time stated:

In response the hon. Government House Leader [of the day] noted that during the press conference Bill 1 was discussed but only in general terms, and that no specific wording was provided to those in attendance. The Government House Leader acknowledged the importance of ensuring that members are the first to see proposed legislation in its final form before a bill is disclosed to outside parties.

We can accept the premise that no breach of privilege occurred from sharing information about the government's plan for Bill 1, not government legislation but the government's plan for Bill 1. That leaves the argument, as I understand it, from the hon. Opposition House Leader, that he and his colleagues were feeling undue pressure based on remarks by the Premier that the carbon tax would be repealed as of May 30. First of all, I would note that the Premier was merely reflecting what the provision of Bill 1 states, not when legislation is passed.

Coming into force and repeal

The exact quote from the Premier – and this is important, Mr. Speaker – is: well, first of all, Bill 1 in the new Legislature, which will be introduced on Tuesday of next week, will be the carbon tax repeal act, and it will be passed with an effective elimination by the 30th of May, so by the 30th there will no longer be an Alberta carbon tax.” I don’t interpret from what the Premier is saying that Bill 1 will be passed by May 30. That’s not what he said. In fact, the previous government loved – and the hon. Opposition House Leader knows it probably happened with several of the bills he brought to this place – to pass legislation with retroactive coming-into-force provisions. Bill 1, 2015, for example, was deemed to come into force on the same day it was introduced. Bill 2 that same session came into force on January 1, 2015, six months before it was introduced in this Chamber. So again I’m having difficulty seeing that this is a legitimate question of privilege.

Lets further walk down memory lane if we can, Mr. Speaker, and recall that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was a member of a government who introduced Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta, on December 4, 2017. This bill, apart from being ridiculously titled, Mr. Speaker – in fact, I recall, I think, that you wanted to change the title – stated quite clearly on page 104, “144(1) Subject to subsection (2), this Act, except sections 1, 114 and this section, come into force on January 1, 2018.” There we have the previous government, which the hon. Opposition House Leader was a part of, introducing legislation and expecting it to come into force within less than a month.

Let’s also add to that, Mr. Speaker, that the sessional calendar for that year, 2017, also showed that we were expected to conclude the business for the year by December 7, 2017, three days after Bill 32 was introduced. If that wasn’t ruled as contempt of the Assembly, then I’m not sure how members of the Official Opposition can claim with a straight face that any remarks by the Premier are putting them under pressure to pass Bill 1 by May 30, 2019.

Mr. Speaker, this opposition’s line of thinking: you would take it to the absurd conclusion that any date given on a coming-into-force provision provides pressure on the Assembly to have a bill passed before any date listed in the bill. That is ridiculous. In fact, if the opposition is feeling pressured on the need to pass Bill 1, I’m entirely sympathetic. After all, I had to wait three years for the opportunity to vote to repeal the carbon tax. Albertans have had to wait long and painful months for a government that was willing to listen to their concerns about the harmful impacts the carbon tax had on their monthly budgets, and on April 16 over a million Albertans voted to repeal the carbon tax. If that doesn’t provide pressure on this Assembly to do what is right and vote in a timely manner to do what they ask us to do, I don’t know what will.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the Assembly’s attention and, in particular, the Official Opposition House Leader’s attention to page 88 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, which advises members that “they should not raise trivial matters as matters of privilege or contempt” and further advises that “the House should exercise its powers with regard to privilege and contempt sparingly.”

So I fail to see that this rises to the threshold of a prima facie breach of privilege, and I hope to see better from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in the future.

The Speaker: Thank you to both House leaders.

I’d just remind the Government House Leader that you’re bringing things to the Speaker’s attention and not the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview’s attention.

Both House leaders and all members of the Assembly will know that points of privilege are serious in nature, should not be entered into lightly. As such, a decision on a point of privilege should not be entered into lightly, so I will take my time, take a good opportunity to review the facts of the matter, and I look forward to reporting back to the House sometime next week with my findings with respect to this Standing Order 15(2).

Orders of the Day

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a point of clarification for myself. It’s my first day on this side of the House. When we go through all of these, do you read them out word for word?

The Speaker: Government House Leader, it would be appropriate for you to read all names of all committees into the record for the purposes of Hansard, and I would prefer that you didn’t just refer to the Order Paper. Thank you, and good luck to you.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Madam Speaker, welcome. This going to be great.

Government Motions

2. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that

A. Select standing committees for the present Legislature be appointed for the following purposes:

- (1) Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing,
- (2) Public Accounts,
- (3) Private Bills,
- (4) Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund, and
- (5) Legislative Offices and, in addition thereto, there be appointed for the present Legislature a Special Standing Committee on Members’ Services;

B. Legislative policy committees for the present Legislature be appointed for the following purposes:

- (1) Standing Committee on Families and Communities,
- (2) Standing Committee on Alberta’s Economic Future, and
- (3) Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 18(1)(h) this motion is up for debate. Are there any members wishing to speak to the motion?

Okay. Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Jason Nixon: No.

[Government Motion 2 carried]

Committee Membership Appointments

3. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the following members be appointed to the Assembly's five select standing committees, one special standing committee, and three legislative policy committees:

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: I'm sorry, Government House Leader. Just a point of clarification for you. The Standing Committee on Families and Communities: I heard you call Mr. Nixon. Is that Mr. Nixon from Calgary-Klein or Mr. Nixon from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is in fact my little brother from Calgary-Klein. Yes.

The Speaker: Thank you for the clarification.

Government Motion 3 is a debatable motion. Are there any questions, comments, or debate on the motion?

Seeing none, the Government House Leader has moved – oh. Would he like to close debate?

Mr. Jason Nixon: I'm good.

[Government Motion 3 carried]

4. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Any questions, comments, or debate?

[Government Motion 4 carried]

5. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

[Government Motion 5 carried]

Evening Sitzings

7. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) commencing May 27, 2019, the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the First Session of the 30th Legislature 2019 spring sitting unless the Government House Leader notifies the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motions in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

The Speaker: Government Motion 7 is a nondebatable motion.

My apologies. We'll just double-check with the table. I may have called the wrong question. We are moving to Motion 7 now? We are moving to Motion 6. Do you want me to re-call the question on 6 as I called it 7? Or will we call it 6 when it was 7?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, I read Motion 7, Mr. Speaker. That's the problem. He introduced that.

The Speaker: Well, let that be a lesson to us all, Government House Leader.

Just a moment, Mr. Clerk. How would the table like to proceed?

Thank you, members. Apologies. We are going to – I called the wrong question on Motion 6; it was actually Motion 7 which the Government House Leader moved. For clarity's sake, this is the motion that deals with times of sitting and notice that may need to be given, so I'm going to re-call the question so that we are very clear on Motion 7.

All those in favour of Government Motion 7, please say aye.

Mr. Bilous: Question of clarity, Mr. Speaker. If we've jumped over Government Motion 6 and we've done Motion 7, they're now out of order. Do we not need to deal with 6 ahead of 7?

The Speaker: Thank you to the Official Opposition House Leader for your clarity. There's no requirement in numbers that we deal with them. We could be dealing with Motion 15 and then come back to Motion 3, so there's no requirement with respect to the number of the actual government motions. The motions will remain in order, and we'll proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Question of clarification, Mr. Speaker. Motion 6 is debatable. Should the Assembly choose to debate this motion until the end of today, then we would not have gotten to Motion 7 ahead of Monday, May 27. Would that have impacted the possible evening sitting on that day?

The Speaker: Motion 6 is debatable, which we're about to move to now. If Motion 6 affects Motion 7, which it doesn't or won't, not because that's a decision of the Assembly but because Motion 6 deals with the business of private members – this is only sitting times and when they're required to provide notice. So the motions will remain in order. The process for this afternoon was always and has been to debate Motion 7 before Motion 6, so we remain in order, and we will continue to do so. For further clarity, the table is one hundred per cent certain that we are in order, and they are well equipped to provide us the guidance that is necessary, so we'll proceed.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

6. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:
Be it resolved that, notwithstanding Standing Order 8(1), the Assembly shall meet in the afternoon on Monday, May 27, 2019, for consideration of government business.

The Speaker: Government Motion 6 – and I appreciate your patience this afternoon – is a debatable motion. I see that the Member for Edmonton-City Centre is rising on debate.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to take a moment this afternoon to speak to this motion being brought forward by this government on our first day here of session. Indeed, we are probably in many senses beginning to set the tone for how this session might proceed and for how we might move forward over the next few years as we have the opportunities to work here as private members and those who have that good fortune as members of cabinet and government.

Perhaps, that being in mind, I should also take my opportunity to congratulate you, sir, on ascending to the seat of the Speaker and taking on that role. You are someone that I know is going to handle that with great aplomb. You have great knowledge in that area, and I look forward to the opportunities that are going to come with that.

Now, in regard to this particular motion it should be clear that this motion is coming forward by decision of the government. They had the opportunity to put together an early Order Paper to properly address and ensure that private members' business would be able to proceed on the first Monday afternoon of this session. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that there is a good deal of work that has to be done, and I recognize that for members on that side there is a large majority who have not previously sat in government. There is a learning curve involved, and I can understand that it would take some time to learn things.

We were in a similar position when we came into government in 2015, but we managed in that first month, that first session that we had here in the Legislature, to put together that early Order Paper to allow private member business to proceed on Bill 201 the first Monday of that session. We had that respect for members of the opposition, indeed for private members in this Assembly. Of course, as you're aware, Mr. Speaker, and as I hope all are aware – I know there are many here who are new – we recognize that all members in this House who are not members of cabinet are private members, so private members' business is for all members of the Assembly who are not part of cabinet.

Indeed, private members' business is something that I believe should approach the sacrosanct. It is something that should be treated with the utmost respect and dignity. To infringe on private members' business should be something of a last resort by the unanimous agreement of this Assembly, not something where the government decides that it wants to take over that space when it is already allotted the majority of legislative time in this House every week.

That said, Mr. Speaker, this sets a troubling tone from this government that the first place we would begin, this first opportunity for private members to exercise their voice, their privileges, their rights in this Assembly, that one of their first steps would be to take that opportunity away with no discussion. Well, I suppose we're having that discussion now. We're having that debate now, so perhaps I'll take that back.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, when you sat pretty close to this specific seat, you were one of the most eloquent in this House in speaking about the importance and the respect for private members, for members' privileges, for the proper functioning of the systems of this House. You, sir, were quick to decry when you felt that our government was infringing on those privileges and opportunities. You stood up strong in this House for the opportunity for all of your colleagues to be able to go forward with private members' business and do that work to represent their constituents, again, on the one afternoon that is given each week for private members to be able to proceed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Premier has spoken often about how he wants to bring back a new level of decorum and respect in this House. He's spoken on that often. He's bringing in a few changes to see this operate more in the manner that he thinks it should. Fair enough. Indeed, I personally feel that there should be a certain level of decorum and respect. There is always going to be a certain amount of theatre that takes place in this Chamber, and I enjoy partaking in that theatre: the parry, the thrust, the back and forth. There are negotiations. There are games that will be played. That is part and parcel of the opportunity we have here in making use of the systems and the privileges and the other things that are afforded to us to do our work as members of this House.

Indeed, the Premier today, I noticed, spent a good deal of time, when he could have been answering questions – instead, he chose to take time out to decry what he called “fear-and-smear” tactics as members worked to hold government to account and asked questions about government policy and past statements. Even the Member for Calgary-South East today stood in this place and before he began his question, he bemoaned the quality of debates. He stated that he felt less proud to be here, I guess feeling not happy with the quality of debate, just before, I note, lobbing a puffball across the aisle so soft that I think it barely reached the minister.

That said, we recognize that we're all starting out here, and we're all getting used to how things work and the different opportunities we have. But the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that if we want to have decorum, if we want to have quality of debate, then we have to have that respect between both sides of this House, and to begin this session with a motion taking away the opportunity for private members to exercise their privileges, to speak on behalf of their constituents, that limited time that is afforded to members to do so, that to me does not connote respect. That does not connote decorum. That connotes to me that though there may be a smile on their face, the government intends to use their power to throw their weight around at times if they feel it suits their agenda.

I would note again, Mr. Speaker, that when we had the opportunity to serve as government, every single session we managed to move forward private members' business. In 2015 it proceeded immediately on the Monday following the throne speech. In 2016 it proceeded immediately on the Monday following the throne speech. In 2017 we had an emergency debate that was brought forward by our former MLA for Calgary-Mountain View, Dr. David Swann. It was previously anticipated that we would have government business, but the Order Paper indicates that it was likely by unanimous consent that we moved forward and had that emergency debate that day instead and then the next Monday proceeded with private members' business. In 2018 we had a government motion on the Trans Mountain pipeline, which was, again, passed, likely by unanimous consent. We had the opportunity for that debate and proceeded the next week with private members' business. In 2019 at the beginning of the session it was not applicable as the writ for the election was dropped the day after the Speech from the Throne.

All we are asking today, Mr. Speaker, is that this government show the same respect that we did when we were in their position and allow us to have the opportunity to move forward with private members' business next Monday afternoon.

Now, indeed, I recognize that this Premier hasn't always been a fan of well-ordered democracy. He was part of a federal Conservative government that was known for being incredibly disrespectful at times toward private members and the ministers and many systems that were placed to support them in their work in the federal House of Commons, particularly on committees. I think back to 2007, when the press were able to get hold of a secret Tory handbook – and here I'm quoting from an article from CTV News – “a secret Tory handbook on obstructing and manipulating Commons committees.” It was a 200-page handbook, Mr. Speaker, that was distributed to the chairs of the committees under that Conservative government. It was a minority government at the time. I would note that the government at the time was so embarrassed by that leak that according to one source they ordered all of their committee chairs to return copies of that handbook because they wanted to try to find out who broke confidence and embarrass them so badly and revealed their lack of respect towards the systems of democracy that they were all participating in.

That handbook, Mr. Speaker, provided advice to those chairs on how to promote the government's agenda, how to select witnesses friendly to the Conservative Party, how to coax them to give favourable testimony when they appeared before the committee. It instructed them on how to filibuster and otherwise disrupt committee proceedings and, if all else fails, how to shut committees down entirely. Of course, I note with some irony that I am going on at length about this to make the point that all members need to be given the opportunities that should be there. And private members' business, again, is something that should be trifled with as a last resort.

I can appreciate that new members of this Assembly are excited for the opportunity to make their maiden speech. I remember that when I first sat in this Assembly, I looked forward to that opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to be able to stand in this House and talk about the incredible constituency of Edmonton-Centre, as it was at that time, now Edmonton-City Centre, to be able to talk about the many priorities of my constituency, the work that I was looking forward to doing, the opportunities that I looked forward to having, and indeed the opportunities to exercise my privileges as a private member. But there will be ample opportunity for that debate.

Again, it is a sign of profound disrespect from this government that they feel that those maiden speeches, which can be made at any time – this government has the opportunity to negotiate the debate of bills. They have the opportunity to work with our House leader, indeed, and find opportunities for that, and the opposition previously, when we were in government and you were in opposition, were so kind as to negotiate with them. I remember we had many excellent maiden speeches in response to Her Honour's Speech from the Throne. But at no time did our government feel the need to step over, to indeed step on, to cancel the opportunity for private members to exercise their business in this House simply to give room for our MLAs to speak at greater length.

You know, to the government MLAs who are here, to the private members who have the honour of sitting in the government in caucus, I would say to them: be aware of how we set out and how we begin in this place. I have personally endeavoured to take the opportunity to speak with as many of you as I can personally, to wish you well because I look forward to the opportunity to working with all of you. The privilege of sitting in government is a great one. You have many levers, systems at your disposal, and you can choose to use them if you wish to simply run roughshod over opposition.

Indeed, you yourselves are private members, and I believe it is a member of your caucus, Mr. Speaker, a member of their caucus – all of my remarks, of course, should be through yourself to members of the governing caucus. It is their members that have the first private members' business. It is their opportunity that is being squashed, that is being set aside unnecessarily because this government chose not to take the opportunity to prepare that early Order Paper.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Jason Nixon: Under 23(h), (i), and (j). I'm enjoying the hon. member's remarks, but he's going to cause disorder in the House by saying that we could put something on the early Order Paper that you cannot put on the early Order Paper. That will cause disorder in the House, so he should stop saying that. You cannot put it on the early Order Paper.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader. I appreciate your comments.

I'm convinced that there's no point of order. This is a matter of debate.

Debate Continued

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will note is that this is a choice of the government. This is not something that could not be avoided. This is not something that happened by accident. I dare say that I would highly doubt that this even happened by neglect. This sounds to me like intention. If that is indeed the case, again, it sets a poor tone for how we begin in this House.

I recognize that, as I said, some members in this House were not enamoured with some of the questions that were brought forward during question period today, the tone or the substance. I would encourage them to have a look at the record of question period on the first day that we sat in this Legislature in 2015, when there were attacks on the character of the Member for Lethbridge-West.

Indeed, even after the parties were merged and we had the United Conservative Party in this House, the kinds of questions that were brought forward about pictures of who she met with when she was in Vancouver and who she talked with and who were activists and that sort of thing, that is part of the tone that was brought forward in this House during previous question periods.

That all comes back again, Mr. Speaker, to the question that we have before us today, this government motion to indeed take away the opportunity, the privilege – well, privileges have a very specific definition, so I'll take that word back – but indeed the opportunities that are afforded to us as private members, the rights of private members to bring forward business, that limited time frame, that one afternoon a week when we have the chance to have that debate. It is all part and parcel of the tone and the approach and the attitude with which we are going to begin our work together in this House. It is my hope that perhaps the Government House Leader would reconsider this motion or that perhaps, you know, enough government members would recognize the imposition that this is and want to set an amiable and collegial tone with the beginning of this session by choosing to vote this motion down.

I look forward, Mr. Speaker, to hearing their maiden speeches. I look forward to hearing about the many wonderful constituencies across this province, of the experience and the background, the hopes, the aspirations of those colleagues in this House, both in our caucus and in the government caucus, and there will be ample time for that debate. But I am strongly against removing the opportunity for private members in this House to take advantage of the limited time afforded to them for their business in order for those maiden speeches to take place.

I think it's probably fair to say that I've explored every possible corner of that argument and had some fairly fulsome discussion, so with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll let my remarks rest. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

As a reminder to all members of the Assembly, if we make significant reference to certain documents or information in our remarks, it is customary that at the earliest opportunity you would then table those documents or items that have been referred to in your remarks. So I would expect that sometime in the first part of next week the hon. member will be happy to table the article he referred to.

Are there any others wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the members for this opportunity to rise and speak to this important matter. Having served one term prior but not as a private member, as a government member, I want to say how much I really treasured the opportunity to debate private members' business in this Chamber. Private members, each of us, were elected duly in our own ridings, and each of us owe it to our constituents to bring forward positive ideas for the Assembly to consider. However, there is a draw, and only a few select members usually get an opportunity to have their ideas debated as private members.

I know that when I was a staff member for the NDP caucus, we had one bill reach the Order Paper, but it didn't actually get debated, in the almost five years I worked there. So it is not a common practice for private members to regularly have opportunities to have their bills or motions debated, and the reason why is because there is only one-half day per week set aside. But there is a half day per week set aside for all of us, whether you be opposition members or whether you be not in the cabinet, to have your ideas, your proposals, and your recommendations brought forward.

I know that many members in this House are aware of the fact that in northern Alberta there is one cabinet minister, in southern Alberta there is one cabinet minister – south of Calgary and north of Edmonton, that is – so there isn't a lot of opportunity for good ideas from those members who are elected south of Calgary or north of Edmonton, who aren't in cabinet, other than those two individuals, to bring their ideas forward. I think that we owe it to one another to make sure that good ideas that are coming from those regions of the province are heard.

I also want to note that there are not a ton of women in cabinet. There are some but not a ton. When I looked at who Bill 201 belongs to, it's the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, north of Edmonton, a woman. These voices aren't super dominant around the cabinet table right now.

I have to say that I think the idea of postponing debate on what I imagine is a bill that's of importance to that member and that member's constituents is a difficult precedent for me to agree to because there is only half a day per week set aside for us as private members, all of us as private members, to have our voices, our opinions, and our positive ideas for how to build our province brought forward.

I know that we're all taking time to figure out our new roles and responsibilities. Even for those of us who were on the other side of the House, we have new roles and responsibilities, whether we were private members or cabinet ministers before. I do want to say that protecting the opportunity to have that half day per week – it's not a lot of time; it really isn't, but I think it's important time for regional voices, voices that are underrepresented around the cabinet table, to have their ideas, their opinions, and their bills brought forward – is something that I care deeply about.

It's troubling to me that with the first opportunity we have to hear from a private member of the government caucus, there is a motion from the Government House Leader to stop that. I think that's a difficult precedent for me to smile and agree to, and I hope that you are thinking about what precedent that sets for you as private members as well.

I think private members have an obligation to their constituents, and our Chamber has an obligation to all Albertans to hear those good ideas. The opportunities that are on the Order Paper are limited, so for us to begin our first day of regular business by taking away that opportunity I think is detrimental to the processes that we've set up in this place to ensure that all of our constituents have an opportunity to be heard. I think it's also important that we fulfill our duties to our constituents, as I've mentioned, by taking the time. It's not a lot of time.

I get it. I loved being able to deliver my maiden speech, and I did it at a time that worked with the calendar. But we definitely didn't trump private members' business because private members' business is something that's sacred and cherished.

So I think those are the main points that I wanted to raise. There are not a lot of voices north of Edmonton sitting around the cabinet table, setting the government agenda; there aren't a lot of voices south of Calgary sitting around the cabinet table, setting the agenda, but we do have a voice in this place. I ask that you consider how we honour that voice instead of continuing to ruin it and continuing to put more power in the hands of fewer members. All 87 of us are here because we owe it to our constituents to fight for them and the things they believe in, and one of the very special ways we can do that is as private members bringing forward motions or bills or resolutions.

Those are the main points I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, to you and through you to all of my colleagues in this place. Thank you for hearing me during this time, and I look forward to having an opportunity to make a decision about this matter of important precedence setting.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available to members for questions and comments. I see the Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for an opportunity to rise on questions and comments on this important issue. I'd like to actually seek the member's comments on a couple of things. She appears to be misinformed on a couple of process issues. The very first thing is that you can't put private members' business on early Order Papers. You can't do it. So the reality is that this upcoming Monday we have two choices. We can either come back with government business and go to maiden speeches, which is what we have proposed to the opposition, to give members an opportunity for that three-hour space to be able to give maiden speeches. If not, what will have to happen is that the House will have to adjourn until after the supper hour and come back for the night sitting.

Mr. Speaker, the reality is this. The opposition is now attempting to filibuster in an attempt to not be able to come back and do some work for three hours in the afternoon. In our view, on this side of the House, that's a waste of important legislative time. That's their strategy. They're welcome to do that. But the reality is that there will be no private members' business on that afternoon, and we're attempting to fill that spot with some productive time for private members on all sides of the aisle as they work through their maiden speeches.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, I have – and I will table this. I heard your instructions on that loud and clear, and I will table this tomorrow. I have in my possession an e-mail that was sent during the last session. I think this is relevant because the Government House Leader and both members who've already spoken on the government – sorry; the opposition side. It's hard to get out of that habit, isn't it? They have referred to how things worked in the last Legislative Assembly.

Now, my predecessor as the Government House Leader, Mr. Brian Mason, who was the dean of this place and I would argue was a pretty decent and very good House Leader. I enjoyed working with him. At a time back then he had his staff, Blake Evans, send an e-mail to – interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, I was not the Opposition House Leader yet. You were at the time, so you were on this e-mail. I'm sure you'll be fascinated when you get an opportunity to be able to read it and take a look at what took place there. The then Government House Leader, the members' across the way from me right now House Leader while they were in government, proposed the exact same solution in this e-mail to the exact same problem. The exact same problem.

The choice that we have before the House right now is that you can pass this motion. We could get this motion to a vote, and then we would be able to use the three hours' time on Monday to do productive work on behalf of Albertans. What we have proposed is that we would work on private members' new introductions to the House, their very first response to the throne speech, their maiden speeches, which we all agree are good. That was one of my favourite parts of the start of the last, 29th, Legislature. I remember the former Minister of Health's maiden speech. It was a great speech. So that's an opportunity that we could use that three hours for. If not, we can't do anything in those three hours, and we'll have to return after the supper hour as planned for the evening sitting.

I'm not quite done, hon. member. I know you're excited to get up and respond to what I have to say. Sorry, Mr. Speaker; I'm out of the habit. We've been away for a little while for an election. I was referring directly to the hon. deputy Leader of the Opposition instead of through you to her.

The reality of this, though, is this: you're watching the opposition stand up in the House over and over and try to filibuster so they don't have to do work on Monday afternoon. That's what's taking place. That doesn't surprise me, Mr. Speaker, through you to all of the hon. members of this Chamber, when you know that their leader has already indicated to the media that their main focus in this upcoming legislative session will be to filibuster standing orders to maintain their right to be able to smack their desks. Clearly, the opposition's priorities are in the wrong spot. Private members' business is very important inside this Chamber. We will continue to work to strengthen it with private members to make sure that they can participate in the process. It's a valuable time. As you pointed out, it's our members who will be the first people up on the first bill, but the reality is that this is not stopping something from taking place on Monday because it can't take place on Monday because we can't put it on the early Order Paper.

In addition to that, besides all the drama, Mr. Speaker, this opposition, when they were in government, proposed and did the exact same thing. The only difference at that time was that it looks like you as the Opposition House Leader was a little bit more co-operative and wanted to be able to use that time to be able to benefit the private members of this Chamber.

When members spend their time – look, Mr. Speaker. I know. I used to sit over on that side of the aisle. I understand how hard it is to be an Opposition House Leader. Both you and I have been an Opposition House Leader. I get it. I understand how frustrating that can be. But you have an important job to do, which is not to filibuster so you can't come to work on Monday afternoon. That is not the role of the Official Opposition, to come to this Chamber and filibuster.

The Speaker: I see the Opposition House Leader is rising to debate.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise. I need to provide some clarity to the House. I mean, I find it interesting that the Government House Leader accused us of filibustering yet used the full five minutes of 29(2)(a) to do just that, to filibuster. That's the first point that I'll make.

The second point that I'll make is that, you know, it's interesting that both in 2015 and 2016 our government ensured that the first Monday was private members' business. We respect the important work that private members do, and as the Member for Edmonton-City Centre so eloquently pointed out, private members are also government members, noncabinet, so the majority of their members are actually private members. The reason that this House a long time ago set aside Mondays for private members' business is because it would be all too easy for a government to trample the rights of private members and to ensure that they have time to bring forward bills and motions, which are critical. They also have great ideas. Although, you know, we may think that cabinet has the best ideas, I can tell you that the best ideas come from everywhere.

What's interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government House Leader is pointing out the fact that, well, they couldn't put private members' business on the early Order Paper. I would argue that the government and the Premier intentionally put the Speech from the Throne on a Wednesday to ensure that on the first Monday there would not be time for private members. So to accuse us of not wanting to work on Monday – I’m sorry, but the government chose the date for the Speech from the Throne. The government knew that that would ensure that on the Monday private members don’t have an opportunity to get going on their business. You know, to say that we’re choosing to try to not do work on Monday is laughable. I mean, it is offensive, on the one hand, but laughable that the Government House Leader would even think of that. We are trying to preserve the rights of all private members in this House and, in fact, ensure that on as many Mondays as possible private members have due time to bring forward their ideas and debate.

I can tell you that I remember being an opposition member back in 2012, when we had to fight to preserve those days. I can tell you that it is absolutely critical that the government does everything that it can to ensure that these days are protected. Again, you know, to speak directly to the Government House Leader, through you, Mr. Speaker, of course, it was, in fact, the government’s actions that have put the Assembly’s back into the corner. To say, “Either we’re going to do what we want to impose on this Assembly or we’re going to adjourn” I don’t think is the only solution. In fact, we could have had an opportunity on the Monday for private members to get going on their business.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I know that a number of my colleagues also want to speak on this. I can tell you with certainty that if the shoe was on the other foot, the Government House Leader would be the first person jumping up and down and calling it the government bullying the private members, pushing through their agenda, railroading democracy of private members. I think you get the picture.

So it is our job, and I am proud to stand up not only for the private members of this side of the House, but you know what, Mr. Speaker? I’ll stand up for the private members of the other side of the House if the government won’t. That is our job, to hold the government to account. I mean, again, that’s the job of the private members on the other side of the House as well. Otherwise, I’m not sure why they have questions in question period. It is our job to hold them to account and present ideas.

I think there was a very simple solution, to ensure that every Monday is protected for private members, and the government and the Premier chose not to do that. We’ll leave that up to Albertans. Or maybe one day we’ll find out in question period if that was done intentionally in order to hijack the first Monday, that should have been for private members’ business.

Regardless, Mr. Speaker, I will proudly do my job to hold this government to account, to speak on behalf of Albertans, especially those that are underrepresented, to ensure that they have a voice in this House.

Now, if I can just push pause on this and back up, what I didn’t do when I first stood up to talk about the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, was, of course, congratulate you on your new appointment to this House. I also do want to give a sincere welcome to all new members, on both sides, in this House. It is an incredible honour that we all share in this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I appreciate your comments and congratulations. I would just advise the House that the Speaker is a little bit sensitive when people make an accusation that it is an appointment. Very clearly it was an election, and I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for her efforts in that election.

I saw that the hon. Minister of Transportation was rising under 29(2)(a).

Mr. McIver: Not under 29(2)(a). For debate.

The Speaker: Are there any members who would like to rise under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I want to reinforce the fact that you were duly elected to the position of Speaker, but I do want to remind all of the members of the House that even countries like North Korea have elections, and the outcomes of those are often determined before the votes are actually cast. I’m not saying that you bear any resemblance in character or appearance to the leader of the North Korean people, but I would suggest that there are some similarities to the elections that were conducted both there and here in this House for the position of Speaker.*

I heard with great interest the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview clarify for the people here in this Assembly that the government did in fact choose to hold the throne speech on Wednesday, which made it impossible, then, for private members to conduct their business on the following Monday afternoon. If I may, Mr. Speaker, offer a few comments on that.

I have watched, of course, Conservative politics very closely. One can’t help but do so when living in Alberta for an entire lifetime, as I have. Certainly, one of the themes in Conservative politics, at least before they’re elected to government, is the willingness or the eagerness to give their private members a voice in the Legislature and a voice in the House of Commons. I remember Preston Manning, of course, when he was leader of the Reform Party, stating that, you know, those private members would be able to have free votes on all issues.

In fact, I think various iterations of various Conservative parties here in Alberta have campaigned on those very same issues in multiple elections here in this province, and of course every time that the election is over and the ballots are cast and those Conservatives actually wind up in government in the House of Commons or in the Legislature, those promises fly out the window, and that’s one of the first promises that flies out the window. It’s interesting, and I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview pointing out to us the fact that the members opposite have repeated a time-honoured Conservative tradition, Mr. Speaker, of promising to give their private members a voice in this Legislature and then shredding that promise – what is it now? – three days since the Legislature opened.

An Hon. Member: Grassroots guarantee.

Mr. Schmidt: Yeah. It went the way of their party bosses’ grassroots guarantee, quickly into the shredder, Mr. Speaker.

You know, I urge all of the private members, who may have been under the idea that their party bosses and the members on the treasury benches actually believed in giving their private members a free voice and a free vote in the Legislature, to stand up and demand it now. You’ve only got one whip in the House, so I would encourage private members to take this opportunity to stand up to the members of the treasury benches and assert the rights that I’m sure that they believed in. I can’t imagine how disappointed they are now, only three days after the opening of this Legislature, to have those free votes and free voices taken away from them so quickly, Mr. Speaker.

You know, if there are any old Reform or Social Credit members in this new UCP caucus who still believe in what turns out to be a fairy tale of free votes and free voices for their private members, stand up and demand it here and show the people of Alberta that you actually believe in the principles that you ran on and were elected on.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the people of Alberta would expect nothing less from their elected representatives than to explain to them why they're okay now, three days after the Legislature has opened, for their voices to be taken away by the members of the treasury benches and why they are cowering in the face of their whips and not standing up for their constituents, not standing up to bring forward the ideas that they ran on and were elected on and probably thought that they would get the chance to debate and possibly see passed here in this Legislature.

The Speaker: I see the Minister of Transportation is rising on debate.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me also take this opportunity to congratulate you on your election to the position at the front of this room, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, for the 30th session: well earned, well deserved. I'm sure you'll do a great and unbiased job for all of us, on all sides of the House. Thank you.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was fascinated by some of the debate that I've heard from the other side of the House. I can assure the hon. member that just spoke that the disappointment in this House is on his side of the aisle. I'm sure of that. I would take his words, that we all just heard, as a cautionary tale for members on our side of the House on what not to do. They should probably study those words as a lesson on how not to succeed in this House.

I was also interested in several of the comments from my hon. colleagues across the way, which are even more amazing when they know that there's a document from the hon. Government House Leader that is going to be tabled where the NDP House leader from the last session essentially did the necessary procedural amendment that we're doing today through this Motion 6. Yet when that happened four short years ago, it seemed to be quite normal. I remember the opposition side accepted it as the reality of a schedule and didn't go to great pains to get three hours off work on the first Monday that they could get three hours off work but, rather, said, "Okay; let's do what we can do; let's do a throne speech, and let's get on with the business of the House," in direct contrast to what we hear from the Official Opposition today.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we heard speakers over there talking about the tone. Well, indeed, the tone works on both sides of the aisle. It seems to be starting out today to be the tone of the Official Opposition to be accusatory and say things that they know are not accurate in this way and to be inconsistent with what their behaviour was when they were in government not so long ago. It seems that their memory is short.

I'm not sure what the reason is that they're so much against the May long weekend, because, of course, that was one of the reasons why the House couldn't start on Monday. I don't know. For me, I think that celebrating Her Majesty's birthday is something that I would have thought we could all agree on in this House, Mr. Speaker, since we all swore allegiance to her ever so recently. I, for one, am in favour of celebrating Victoria Day every single year for as long as I'm blessed enough to be alive. It's something that I hope to continue doing. I hope the members across will agree with that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the members across are even more inconsistent. I'll take them on a little walk down memory lane, which is pertinent to some of the debate that we heard in the House today. I agree with some of the things, in fairness, that members opposite said, that you can go through this House on a four-year term and maybe get no members' statements or no private members' bills. In the last four years I had zero private members' bills. That was just the luck of the draw. Some people were more lucky than I, and some people were equally lucky, which is not lucky at all. Indeed, I did actually get a draw for one member's motion, and I'll remind the members opposite what they did with that when I brought a motion on choice in education, something that we believe in very strongly on this side of the House. I brought forward that motion, and the NDP government used their bully pulpit and their majority to actually amend that motion to say exactly the opposite of what I had intended.

Now, the tradition here, Mr. Speaker, is that private members can bring these things forward. There's no guarantee that they'll pass – and that's fair game – but the private members should get their day, their opportunity to express what they are saying on behalf of their constituents. Members on all sides can debate for it, debate against it, but the government actually chose – and I'm reminding you of this because they're actually trying to act like they've been completely supportive of private members' business when it comes up. They actually used their majority to put forward an amendment to make my motion mean exactly the opposite of what it did in order to take away the only motion that I would have had in the four years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for those that don't remember, it was quite a memorable day because there was a procedural problem where I ended up getting removed from the House. I will say to my NDP colleagues that I suppose in some way they helped me get into the history books that day. But what was even more remarkable was the fact that probably it was the first time in history that someone got to come back into the House without an apology. It wasn't me that made the procedural mistake and got caught red-handed; it was the members opposite, after which time they were so embarrassed at, first, being so disrespectful of private members' business, so embarrassed at being caught red-handed with a procedural – I'm trying to think of a parliamentary word – misbehaviour, procedural misbehaviour, that they ended up having to retract their amendment and vote unanimously for the motion despite the fact that they tried to not even let that piece of private members' business come to a vote, which is the most respectful thing you can do.

So it's very, very insincere, Mr. Speaker, to hear members opposite talking about these high ideals about supporting private members' business. The only thing I'll agree with them on: those are high ideals, letting private members bring their business forward. But these people across the aisle, save for the ones that were elected for the first time, actually did exactly the opposite in the last session of what they just said that they would do.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans shouldn't believe this opposition on this item. They've proven by their actions and words that they don't believe what they said. Indeed, in response to some of what was said earlier, that's the tone they're setting today. On this side of the House I'm sure we won't be perfect, but this to me is a cautionary tale that we need to do better than what we've heard from the other side this afternoon.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, for the benefit of all members, the Minister of Transportation has moved that we adjourn debate. We will not vote on the actual motion at this time. We are only voting on the hon. Minister of Transportation's desire to adjourn debate at this time on this particular motion.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 1
An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, on behalf of the hon. Premier.

When the Premier introduced this legislation on the first day of session, he followed through on our government's number one promise to Albertans to repeal the carbon tax. I'm very proud that An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax is our government's very first piece of legislation. Repealing the carbon tax will require a number of legislative changes to several pieces of legislation: the Climate Leadership Act, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, and some other smaller pieces of legislation.

I'll briefly outline those changes. The first change will be to repeal the Climate Leadership Act. If passed, the Climate Leadership Act will be repealed effective 12:01 a.m. on May 30, 2019. That will bring an end to the provincial carbon tax once and for all. As part of the repeal we're proposing transitional provisions so fuel resellers are not paying out of pocket and people in businesses have clarity. Most notably, fuel sellers such as gas stations can apply for a refund of the carbon tax they paid on the inventory they hold at the time of repeal. That's because fuel resellers prepay the carbon tax when they buy their inventory from refineries and wholesalers.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Other transitional provisions will remove the existing spending restrictions on the remaining carbon levy revenue and ensure the levy is not charged on sales that occur following the repeal of the act. Finally, the amendments will shorten the timelines that individuals and businesses have to apply for carbon tax refunds and rebates. These timelines will be shortened from four to two years. This will encourage fuel users and resellers to avoid delays in applying for rebates and refunds. It will also give them more certainty around carbon tax revenues and, finally, an end to the carbon tax regime.

If the bill is passed, the second significant change will be to amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. The Alberta Personal Income Tax Act will be amended to end the Alberta climate leadership adjustment rebate. These consumer rebates are paid quarterly and are funded from carbon tax revenue. Given that this revenue stream will be ending, we'll need to cancel the rebate program to stop the next scheduled payment, due to be issued in July. I want to make it clear. Albertans who have received carbon tax rebates will not be asked to refund the portion of the rebate they received for May 30 through to June 29.

Finally, a number of small amendments will need to be made to other acts to remove references to the Climate Leadership Act. This includes the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act and the Fuel Tax Act.

Madam Speaker, I would like to close by repeating that repealing the carbon tax was our government's key campaign promise. This April Albertans resoundingly supported our plan to repeal. We're making good on this promise so our government can get started creating jobs and allowing more money to stay in the pockets of families, businesses, and nonprofits. I look forward to debate on Bill 1, and I hope all members of this House will lend this bill the support that Albertans have been so vocal about.

Thank you, and with that, I would like to move to adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Government House Leader, actually, Madam Speaker. It's great to see you here today in the seat.

I think it's been a great day. We had some unanimous motions passed today defending our province, which is very exciting, and I'm ecstatic – I don't know about the rest of the House – to see second reading on the floor on the carbon tax. But with that said, I recognize it's Thursday, and I would like to move that we see the clock as 4:30 and we adjourn the House to return Monday at – let me just look at the table officers to make sure I got this right – 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:09 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 1st Session (2019)

Activity to Thursday, May 23, 2019

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

1:30 p.m.

Monday, May 27, 2019

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please remain standing, as you are able. Hon. members, as is the custom, we pay tribute to members who have passed away since last we met. With our admiration and respect, there is gratitude to members of the families who share the burden of public office and public service. Today we'd like to welcome members of the Zwozdesky, Ratzlaff, Ludwig, Dowling, and Anderson families who are present in the gallery.

Mr. Gene Zwozdesky
July 24, 1948, to January 6, 2019

The Speaker: Gene Zwozdesky was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on June 15, 1993, as the Liberal Member for Edmonton-Avonmore. He was re-elected to the newly created constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek in 1997. Over the summer of 1998 he became a Progressive Conservative member and was re-elected four additional times in the same constituency. During his tenure he served in many roles, including minister of community development, Minister of Education, minister of aboriginal relations, minister of health and wellness.

Originally a teacher by profession, he led a group of students to Nova Scotia to showcase Alberta multiculturalism in 1979, which turned out to be a turning point for him. He ended up developing teaching resources to promote Alberta's multicultural identity.

Mr. Zwozdesky's general love and respect for all people has been recognized by many organizations and associations, including but not limited to the Ukrainian Canadian Congress, the Lebanese cultural association, the Sikh Federation of Edmonton, the Council of India Societies, the Congress of Black Women of Canada, and the Pakistan Canada Association.

His long-term association with the Shumka dancers, first serving as a dancer and then becoming the musical director, combined his love of music and culture. He was a dedicated supporter of the recording industry as well as music of all types.

After being elected the 12th Speaker in Alberta's history in 2012, Mr. Zwozdesky hosted thousands of Albertans on the grounds of the Legislature celebrating its centennial, taking the opportunity to bring awareness to the democratic process of our province.

Mr. Zwozdesky passed away January 6, 2019, at the age of 70.

Mr. Raymond S. Ratzlaff
April 10, 1931, to February 1, 2019

The Speaker: Raymond Samuel Ratzlaff served as the Social Credit Member for Three Hills from 1967 to 1971. Mr. Ratzlaff served on a number of legislative committees during his tenure. From '69 to '71 he served as the minister of industry and tourism. In 1972 he completed his master's of education degree in educational administration at the University of Alberta, where he resumed his career in education.

Mr. Ratzlaff passed away on February 1 at the age of 87.

Mr. Albert W. Ludwig
November 14, 1919, to February 16, 2019

The Speaker: A veteran of the Second World War, Albert William Ludwig first served as the Social Credit Member for Calgary-North East in 1959. He was subsequently elected three additional times for the constituencies of Calgary-East, twice, and Calgary-Mountain View, serving until 1975. Mr. Ludwig served as the minister of public works from 1969 to '71. He had a distinguished law career, which culminated with his service as a Provincial Court judge from 1980 until his retirement in 1989.

Mr. Ludwig passed away on February 16 at the age of 99.

Mr. Robert Wagner Dowling
September 28, 1924, to March 4, 2019

The Speaker: Robert Wagner Dowling was first elected as a Progressive Conservative Member for Edson in a by-election in 1969. He was re-elected in 1971 and again in '75. He was appointed the minister without portfolio responsible for tourism in 1971 before he was appointed as Alberta's first minister of consumer affairs in 1973. From 1975 to 1979 he served as the minister of business development and tourism. Mr. Dowling was a veteran of the Second World War and a well-established pharmacist in Jasper. Subsequent to his retirement he was the commissioner of Alberta's 75th Anniversary Commission and Alberta's commissioner for Expo 86.

Mr. Dowling passed away on March 4 at the age of 94.

Mr. Dennis Lester Anderson
August 16, 1949, to March 20, 2019

The Speaker: Dennis Lester Anderson served for four terms as the Progressive Conservative Member for Calgary-Currie, from '79 to '93. Mr. Anderson served as the minister of culture, minister of culture and multiculturalism, Minister of Municipal Affairs, and minister of consumer and corporate affairs. In addition, Mr. Anderson chaired the Select Special Committee on Upper House Reform in the 20th Legislature, that introduced the concept of triple-E Senate. After leaving office, Mr. Anderson became an advocate for mental health, receiving many honours for his work in that field, including the sovereign's medal for volunteers in 2017.

Mr. Anderson passed away on March 20 at the age of 69.

In a moment of silent prayer and reflection I ask you to remember Mr. Zwozdesky, Mr. Ratzlaff, Mr. Ludwig, Mr. Dowling, and Mr. Anderson, each as you may have all known them. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, I'd like you to now join in the singing of our national anthem by R.J. Chambers. I'd invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

I might just add, in the light of recent sporting events out there, that I think it could be said that we are the north.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with admiration and respect it is with gratitude to members of the families who share the burdens of public office service today that I'd like to welcome by name the Ratzlaff family, who are present in the gallery, as well as the Zwozdeskys and Andersons and Dowlings. From the Zwozdesky family: Christine Zwozdesky, the former Speaker's wife; Ariana Whitlow, daughter; son and daughter-in-law Myron and Krystal Zwozdesky; grandchildren Joshua, Natalie, and Charlie; sister Iris; brother-in-law Steve; and nephew and niece Michael and Brittany. From the Anderson family: Barb Anderson, Mr. Anderson's wife; brother Brent Anderson and his wife, Mary Jane Tallon; and close friends Melanie and Brian Jobson. From the Ratzlaff family: daughter Jennifer Hauck and family friend Dr. Marguerite Wieler.

I'd invite all members to extend the warm welcome of the Assembly to these visitors.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the grade 6 class of Tomahawk elementary school and their teacher, Robin Beil, and chaperone Holly Chodak. Tomahawk was a newly added part to my constituency here after this election, but I know that in the past many of these students have come into Drayton Valley and that I've taught many of their parents. As a matter of fact, I'm going to be meeting with them a little later today, and it's going to be interesting to see if I have taught any of their parents and whether or not some of my former colleagues and even some of my former students who now teach in Tomahawk are still there. Could the grade 6 class of Tomahawk please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: I'm not sure if there's anyone in that constituency which you haven't taught, hon. member.

The Minister of Indigenous Relations, please.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the following staff members from the Indigenous Relations stewardship and policy integration branch. This team makes sure that indigenous perspectives are heard in Crown-led engagements and that consultations about land management, policy development, and regional planning are effective. Could you just stand as I say your names, please: Michael Lundquist, Leah Sheffield, Lance Wilson, Kristin Raworth, Sumita Sharma. From my own riding, Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin: Glinis Buffalo, Kim Yarmuch, Alyssa Metro, Dawna Harden, Kimberly Beaudin, Kailey Imes, Alicia Bradsen, Leslie Treseder, Judy-Lynn Downey, and Peter Kugba-Nyande. I ask that we give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Members, there are a number of guests today as well as a ministerial statement prior to question period, so I'd like to keep our comments as brief and as pointed as possible. I know that that sometimes presents a challenge for politicians like you guys, not like me but like you.

The Minister of Finance, please.

Mr. Toews: Good afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you guests joining us today from the Grande Prairie & District Chamber of Commerce executive council. I'm pleased to welcome Mr. Dan Wong, chair of the board; and board members Mr. Larry Gibson, Mr. Tertius Genis, and Mrs. Cris Seppola-Podsada. Please join me in welcoming these guests to the Chamber.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased, to you and through you – in advance of the government using its majority to end a century-long practice of allowing Albertans to see their visit and their names recorded in Hansard through the words of their MLAs – to introduce Bridget Stirling, who is the vice-chair of the Edmonton public school board. She represents ward G, my area of the city. She believes in properly funded public schools. I ask her to rise so she can receive the warm welcome of all members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some of my department staff who have joined us today: Kelley Beitel, Lindsay Singh, Sean Graham, Anna Klepaczek, Sara Hansen, and Sarah Pinto. The success of any government and their ability to implement their agenda is dependent on a close working relationship with Alberta's professional public service. Together with these highly skilled and hard-working individuals I'm confident that we will build a better future for all Albertans. I would now like to ask the honoured guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: As mentioned, I'd encourage members to keep their comments as brief and on topic as possible.

Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today for my first and perhaps my last introduction and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mimi Williams. Mimi is a mother, writer, researcher, and long-time community activist who works tirelessly to help make the lives of folks living in disadvantage in our communities, particularly women and children, just a little bit better. From playing a key role in securing the initial funding from Premier Klein back in the '90s to launch the Edmonton school lunch program to her work in the labour and women's movements, Mimi has spent decades trying to make the world a better place for her neighbours. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I rise, just noting the time, to request unanimous consent to complete the ministerial statement on the High Level fire prior to question period.

The Speaker: Members, the Government House Leader is requesting unanimous consent to go past 1:50 to complete introductions, followed by the ministerial statement.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand in this Chamber and introduce a guest of mine, a close friend of mine, Mary Thygesen. Mary Thygesen and I have known each other for a number of years. She's a long-time community activist, and she's particularly happy with the record of the previous government. One of the things which was important to her was capping tuition because she has a daughter who's attending the University of Alberta, and she, like me, believes that higher education should be universally affordable and accessible to everybody in Alberta. I ask that Mary Thygesen please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members in this Chamber my constituent and husband, Neal Gray. The love and support that we get from our spouses and family are critical, and I'm really grateful to have the opportunity to stand here and say, through you, thank you to the most important person in my life. Later this summer we will be celebrating our 15th wedding anniversary, and I had intended to introduce him closer to that, but given that we may not have the chance, I'm so glad he could be here today. I'd like to ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Congratulations on your 15th anniversary. It's a pleasure to have you today.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and Minister of Agriculture and Forestry is rising on a ministerial statement.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As my first opportunity, I'd like to congratulate you on your election, and I would like to say that we missed you at our caucus meeting today.

Northern Alberta Wildfire Update

Mr. Dreeshen: As Minister of Agriculture and Forestry I would like to inform the members of this House on the current wildfire situation in northern Alberta. Alberta's forest fire season typically is early in the spring. May is always an active fire month: spring melt followed by hot, dry conditions coupled with deciduous trees, like our aspens and poplars, that have not leafed out. Ground vegetation has also not greened up, and with the last few weeks of little to no precipitation the northern half of our beautiful province is like a tinderbox.

Since March 1 there have been 478 recorded forest fires. That compares to 530 over the five-year average. The total area that has burned is about 190,000 hectares. Most of these fires are extinguished within 48 hours by the brave men and women at Alberta Wildfire. Alberta Wildfire has been doing a great job, co-ordinating with officials from Municipal Affairs, local municipal officials as well as local fire departments.

While in High Level, it was amazing to see over 30 different municipal fire departments from across the province assisting the High Level fire department, three of which are from my riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake: from Red Deer county, Penhold, and Sylvan Lake. Two, actually, are from your riding, Mr. Speaker. I'd encourage all members to reach out directly and to thank their local fire departments that are helping out.

Mr. Speaker, as of today there are four designated out-of-control fires burning in Alberta. They are near Maria Lake, at 300 hectares burned so far; Manning, over 22,000 hectares; Slave Lake, over 40,000 hectares; and High Level, over 127,000 hectares. The High Level fire, due to the proximity of the town, has made it our highest priority fire. The fire is holding at three kilometres southwest of High Level; however, it has resulted in the evacuation of over 5,000 residents.

Over the last two weeks the government Member for Peace River, the Premier, and I were on the ground in High Level to meet and offer support to the teams battling the fire. Yesterday the government members from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and West Yellowhead and I surveyed the High Level fire and engaged directly with Alberta wildland firefighters, local municipal leaders, and first responders from across Alberta.

I would also like to update this House on the incredible determination showed by the municipal leaders in High Level: Mayor Crystal McAteer, Reeve Josh Knelsen, and Dene Tha' Chief Ahnassay. Their leadership, calm, and decisive actions were right, and their co-ordination with the unified command team will serve as a model for best practices going forward.

I also want to offer my heartfelt thanks to B.J. Hinson. He's a farmer south of High Level who has offered his farmyard as a base of operations for the mobile incident command centre. B.J. and so many Albertans who volunteer and sacrifice for their neighbours and friends demonstrate the best in Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the High Level evacuation, evacuation centres are set up across the north, and approximately 4,284 Albertans have checked in. In High Level there are 573 wildland firefighters, 194 structural firefighters and staff, 46 pieces of heavy equipment, 29 helicopters, and three water bombers available. I'm humbled by the resilience, the courage, and determination from our Alberta wildland firefighters to protect Alberta families' homes, farms, and businesses in northern Alberta.

But, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, Mother Nature is not on our side. The weather forecast for much of northern Alberta over the next few weeks is hot, dry, and windy. A number of northern communities are and will experience heavy smoke from these fires. Smoke will be an ongoing concern, and Albertans should keep informed of health advisories.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government announced last Friday financial support for evacuees. Evacuated residents will receive a one-time payment of $1,250 per adult and $500 per child. Online applications opened yesterday at noon. However, debit cards are now available at reception centres for those who would prefer their payments in person.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all the wildland firefighters, first responders, and structural firefighters for their efforts on the ground and in the air, and I encourage all members of this House to use their offices to inform their constituents about fire bans, evacuation notices, and smoke advisories. Regular updates can be found at alberta.ca/emergency and wildfire.alberta.ca.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to address this House on this important matter.

The Speaker: Members, for the benefit of all, typically speaking, when the government makes a ministerial statement, the opposition has three minutes to respond to that ministerial statement. For that, this afternoon I look to the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of our entire caucus in support of the residents of the town of High Level, Mackenzie county, Dene Tha' First Nation, and Paddle Prairie Métis settlement. I also want to recognize those impacted by the recent Trout Lake evacuations. Our hearts go out to every resident and family that has been impacted by these terrible fires. We know this is a time of great stress, anxiety, and fear for many people. Over 5,000 residents have had to evacuate without knowing when they'll be able to return home. Thousands of people are stuck in evacuation centres. Many communities are under boil-water advisories and impacted by poor air quality. And as all of this happens, the fires continue to spread to over 100,000 hectares, with reports that wind, moisture, and temperature conditions will make the fires worse in the coming days.

As I said, this is a scary and stressful situation for many people in our province, and that is why we want all of those who are affected to know that our caucus is here for you and that we stand with you, as do all members of this House and all Albertans. You will remain in our thoughts and our prayers. We'll advocate to make sure you get the support and services you need for your family. We will work with the government and the Premier to monitor the situation and ensure that every needed assistance and resource is being invested to fight the flames and protect your homes, families, property, and businesses.

We are relieved that there has been a very orderly and calm evacuation of communities and that no homes or businesses have been damaged. We offer our sincere thanks and appreciation to the very brave and dedicated front-line emergency responders, firefighters, essential service providers, government staff, and volunteers who have helped to make this happen. I also want to recognize paramedics during National Paramedic Services Week for their service and support during this emergency. All of these amazing front-line and support staff, in collaboration with impacted residents, who have been so calm and strong throughout the evacuations, are deserving of our recognition and our thanks.

Now, just as we have seen during the devastating fires in Fort McMurray and Slave Lake, through this crisis we have seen the true spirit and character of Albertans demonstrated. We have seen Albertans watch out for each other and have each other's backs. We have seen great strength, generosity, and compassion, and I know this will continue in the hours, days, and weeks ahead because Albertans don't sit on the sidelines; we stand up to help each other out. We are passionate doers and givers, and now more than ever we need to stand together, put aside politics, and help our neighbours in this time of need.

Thank you again to all of the firefighters, emergency personnel, and Albertans who are battling the flames and helping to ensure that our friends and family in High Level, Mackenzie county, Dene Tha' First Nation, Paddle Prairie Métis settlement, and Trout Lake get the help they need. We are hopeful that the flames will subside shortly, allowing residents . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Member.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week our Education critic asked the Education minister three times for a simple answer to the question of whether the additional students going to school in September would be funded. The minister refused to answer and at one point displayed a profound lack of knowledge on the subject, suggesting that funding decisions are up to school boards. To the Premier: will the roughly 15,000 additional Alberta kids attending school in September be funded?

Mr. Kenney: I thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition for the question, the important question, Mr. Speaker. It allows me to reiterate the commitment of this government to high-quality public education, which is why in our platform we committed to maintaining or increasing funding for education in Alberta. Now, we haven't yet even been in office for three weeks, so both the Minister of Education and Minister of Finance are still being briefed on the interim supply measures and will be providing information to school boards and other funding partners in the nearest possible future.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, sometimes you've just got to deal with the hand you're dealt, and that means you have to make decisions sooner than you would otherwise like.

Generally school boards are expected to pass their budget and submit them to the province by the end of May, this week. Now, meanwhile what I'm seeing is that boards are bracing for the worst, making plans that will significantly undermine the quality of education received by Alberta's kids, all because the Premier and the minister aren't giving them an answer. To the Premier. As we speak, front-line education is being hurt. Will you or won't you fund enrolment?

Mr. Kenney: Again I thank the hon. leader for an important question, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we can assure all school boards that, at the very least, current funding levels will continue. As to the specific amounts for transfers, that will be subject to advice that we receive. You know, part of the problem here is that the NDP left behind a huge fiscal mess. They were running the largest per capita deficit in the country. They were headed to $100 billion in debt. So here's the challenge: we need to deal with that fiscal mess left behind by the NDP while still investing in education.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. You know, there are 15,000 more students coming to our schools this fall. They will need teachers. They will need textbooks. They will need educational assistants for special-needs kids. If they don't get them, it means all students – all students – will be getting less. To the Premier: can you explain to the nearly 700,000 students learning in Alberta schools why they should be getting less while you hand over billions of dollars in tax breaks to wealthy corporations?

Mr. Kenney: I reject the premise of the question, Mr. Speaker. First of all, Albertans elected this government to create jobs and economic growth and, with that growth, to be able to afford the best-quality public services. One thing I can assure the hon. Leader of the Opposition is that this government will continue to be one of the biggest funders of public education in Canada on a per capita and a per-student basis.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, we heard this weekend that principals in Calgary are talking about cutting funding in K to 3 schools by over 5 per cent this year alone. The things these kids don't learn in the early years will cost our province in real dollars for decades to come. Once again, why is the Premier so committed to letting 5-year-olds, 6-year-olds, 7-year-olds be the collateral damage to his ideological, multibillion-dollar tax gift to Alberta's biggest corporations?

Mr. Kenney: Well, it didn't take very long to turn back into the anger machine over there in the opposition, Mr. Speaker.

The reality is this. Albertans rejected the NDP's total economic and fiscal failure. Albertans elected a government to restore balance to our province's finances so that we can ensure the long-term future of important front-line services like health care and education. Albertans elected a government to demonstrate that Alberta is open for business and jobs again and to restore economic growth, hope, and opportunity. That's exactly what we're doing.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, they go into ideological talking points, and kids learn less. You know, the government is also planning to ram through the decade-old Education Act, rolling back the rights of students, and adding further budget pressures. CBE says that increasing the age of access to 21 could add 1,700 students in that board alone. This number will be replicated across the province. These students, like others, are going to need – wait for it – teachers, educational assistants, and resources. To the Premier: can you tell us whether you're planning to pay for that, for the new imposition of the old Education Act?

Mr. Kenney: I'm surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition is confused about the Education Act. It is actually a modernization of Alberta education law. It replaces a statute that's been in place for over 80 years with one that was adopted by this place just a few years ago. The Minister of Education will come forward with details on the implementation of that legislation in the very near future. I can assure the member that we're taking into consideration those concerns raised by school boards about additional funding costs implied by the Education Act.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition. Your second supplemental.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that maybe the Premier should learn a little bit more about the Education Act he wants to bring in. I realize that the Premier is a bit of a back to the future kind of guy, but given that the consultation of the new/old Education Act took place a decade ago, what, if any, consultation does the Premier plan to do with parents, with students, with trustees, and with – I know; it's hard for you – educators before ramming through this outdated Education Act?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP came to office four years ago with the intention of proclaiming into law the new Education Act, but they didn't do it. Why? I'll tell you why: because it placed too much emphasis on parental choice, on school choice, on diversity and pluralism in the system. This government is a champion of school choice, of diversity and pluralism in the education system. To answer the member's question, the hon. Minister of Education has been listening to school boards, to students, to teachers, and to her officials on this matter.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition for your third set of questions.

Ms Notley: Interestingly, the new choice parents are going to be offered is a classrooms of 40 students or 50 students, Mr. Speaker.

Worker Overtime Pay

Ms Notley: The Premier has been on the record saying he plans to cut the overtime pay received by working Albertans. This plan will be most painfully felt by the same folks who've been hit the hardest by the downturn in oil prices: energy and construction workers. The Premier ran on creating new jobs, not on picking the pockets of folks still working in existing jobs. Will he commit today that he will not go after the hard-earned banked overtime of Alberta's energy and construction workers?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the premise of that question is completely ridiculous. This was part of the NDP's fear and smear campaign in the recent election, and Albertans didn't buy it. They rejected the fear and smear. Albertans want to be able to negotiate with their employers to have more flexible shift time, and that is why we were elected with a commitment to restore the rules that existed for three years under the previous NDP government.

Ms Notley: We know that 27 per cent of oil and gas workers earn overtime every week. The Premier's proposed plan to gut banked overtime could cost the average oil and gas worker roughly $2,700 over every 12-week period. At the same time he's taking billions of dollars from our education and health care to finance his lovely corporate tax cut. Why is his so-called plan to open Alberta for business being financed out of the back pockets of regular working people at the same time he's padding the bottom lines of business owners?

Mr. Kenney: Again, the premise of the question is completely false, Mr. Speaker. When workers are asked to do overtime by their employers, they will continue to be paid at time and a half, as they always have been, but they would only be able to go into a banked time agreement with an employer at their request and with their approval. This is about empowering workers.

Ms Notley: Yeah; that's not the way it's going to work. The employers are going to make it banked overtime, and they're not going to get the money. You know, there's not one province in the rest of the country that grabs the hard-earned overtime pay of working people from their pockets the way this government has proposed to go back to. Should the Premier render Alberta's working people the least protected in Canada, what's next? Will he be seeking advice from labour ministers in Alabama, maybe Wisconsin? Exactly how low is too low, or is there such a thing?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what we'll be doing with the open for business act is actually restoring workplace democracy in this province, that was attacked by the NDP. We're going to give workers the ability to have a secret ballot vote on whether their workplace is certified. The NDP, of course, legislated a workaround which allows workers to be intimidated and bullied, which is what happened to some new Canadians in the construction industry in Calgary. Shameful that they were made so vulnerable by that NDP change. We're going to bring back workplace democracy.

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation

Ms Notley: Well, you know, the Premier definitely needs a bit of a workshop on labour law, but let's move on instead to the justice system because I think he needs that there. He refuses to appoint a special prosecutor to oversee the investigations into his UCP leadership election and the Member for Calgary-East's. Now, he won't listen to me, but perhaps he'll listen to his Ottawa buddies. During the federal sponsorship scandal former Prime Minister Stephen Harper brought in an independent prosecutor to, quote, decide every aspect of that investigation and the laying of eventual charges, end quote. Stephen Harper acted to protect the integrity of our justice system. Why does the Premier think the same rules don't apply to him?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, as I said last week, obviously the police operate independent from government, as does the Crown prosecutor service. We certainly respect their independence, and I hope the opposition does as well.

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, Stephen Harper apparently doesn't work. How about the current federal Conservative leader, Andrew Scheer? Earlier this year that leader said it was unbelievable that the federal Liberals would be investigating themselves when it came to the SNC-Lavalin scandal. The hypocrisy between the Conservative position when it comes to Liberals and the Conservative position when it comes to Conservatives further underlines the need for independent oversight, Mr. Speaker. Why won't the Premier put the needs of Alberta's justice system ahead of his own political interests?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, as was the case with her questions on overtime, the Leader of the Opposition is playing rhetorical shell games here. The quote from the federal opposition leader dealt with a political inquiry led by Anne McLellan, nothing to do with police or prosecutors. We respect the independence of the Crown prosecutor service and our very professional police. I wish the opposition would demonstrate the same level of respect.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. You know, in the last few days more fines have been imposed on the Premier's colleagues by the Election Commissioner. Some of those investigations are linked to the RCMP investigation, so it's clear that the issue is not going anywhere any time soon. Meanwhile, the Premier appears quite unaware of the relationship between Crown prosecutors and criminal investigations as well as the many precedents across the country for doing the right thing in situations just like this one. Given all of this, will the Premier commit to agreeing with our motion for an emergency debate on this matter in this House this afternoon?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what we hear here is just a continuation of the NDP's failed campaign of fear and smear. Albertans rejected it. They instead gave the largest democratic mandate in Alberta electoral history to this government to focus on creating jobs, on growing the economy, on getting pipelines built, and on standing up for Alberta. We'll allow the police to do their work independently while we as a government will focus on getting the job done for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour to share with the Chamber a project called Days for Girls that my Camrose Daybreak Rotary Club co-ordinates regularly. Around the world girls and women resort to using rags, mattress stuffing, banana leaves, feathers, and even cow dung to manage their menstruation.

The Speaker: Hon. member, are you asking a question or making a member's statement presently?

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Legislature Grounds

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It will be my honour to ask the first puffball question of the afternoon. As government and opposition members take the walk from our offices in the Edmonton Federal Building to the Legislative Assembly, we can't help but notice pink spray paint on the crumbling concrete. Members are also noticing that three fountains are not working as well. To the Minister of Infrastructure: we'd like to know what is going on with the Legislature Grounds.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, first, this is my first opportunity to thank my constituents who elected me here, and this is also my opportunity to congratulate every member of this House on their election. Also, I would like to thank all Albertans who elected this government to grow their economy, create jobs and fight for pipelines. Coming to this question about the grounds, I will check into that and get back to the Member for Calgary-West.

The Speaker: I think in light of the mix-up of questions today – and I'll keep in mind that it's everyone's third day on the job – we'll offer one supplemental to the Member for Calgary-West, and then we'll proceed to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the character of the Legislature Grounds is very, very important to the people of Alberta. Maintaining the structure of the Legislature Grounds, of course, is paramount to the people of Alberta. I'd like to ask the Infrastructure minister: are there any plans that are currently in place to ensure that the protection of our Legislature goes on into the future?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, yes. The answer is yes, and we'll conduct the necessary repairs not only to the grounds but also to this building, the temple of democracy. I will update you as well because we have to do some repairs to this building. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Buffalo, please.

Municipal Funding

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government brought in an important piece of legislation, the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act, which, among other things, gave certainty to Alberta's two largest cities about provincial revenue-sharing going forward. The intent always was that that work would shift to the rest of Alberta's municipalities to lock in similar agreements before the current MSI funding deal expires in 2021. My question is this. To the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance: what action has this government taken so far to reach funding deals with these municipalities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity. To the hon. member. The other municipalities, directly and through their agencies, the AUMA and the RMA, have been told that the government will be working with them to put an equitable funding arrangement in place. That has not yet been completed. I think it's a good question the hon. member asks, but we haven't come to a conclusion on that question to date.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you again. To the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board. The rural municipalities that I'm hearing from are extremely concerned that they have not yet heard or seen any forward movement on this file. Will the minister commit today to reopening discussions on these funding agreements with municipalities immediately?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to working with municipalities to ensure that there's predictable funding going forward so they can serve their residents in a very focused and predictable way. My question to the members opposite would be: why did their government not get this done in four years?

Member Ceci: You know, focus and predictability is a great thing, but given that some of these municipalities are being told that they're going to have to wait until this Premier's blue-ribbon panel reports back before discussions will continue and given that municipalities can't do long-range planning without some sort of information from this government, will this minister admit today that he really has no plan to support our cities and towns and no timeline to lock in funding agreements with Alberta's municipalities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As my colleague just pointed out, the previous government had four years to get this agreement done and didn't do so, so it's a little interesting that on the third day with the House sitting they are looking for all the answers that they were unable to accomplish in four years. I can assure the hon. member and all members from the different municipalities across Alberta that we know that this is important. We have to get through the financial mess left by the previous government, and as we do, we will certainly work hand in glove with them to let them know what their funding levels will be.

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-West.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, puffball questions aren't supposed to be fumbled by ministers, but the Finance minister did exactly that last week when his colleague asked him if he would keep a key campaign promise to balance the budget by 2022. The minister bumbled and mumbled something about economic headwinds but did not commit to 2022. To the Finance minister: was your befuddled answer on Thursday actually a glimmer of clarity that you're actually going to break that key campaign promise?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we were clear with Albertans during the campaign period that bringing this province's finances to balance is a key priority, and we will be working to that end. We have inherited a fiscal mess from the previous government, yet we're committed to deliver high-quality services and get this province to balance in our first term.

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has surely been briefed on the numbers by now and given that one can't balance a budget by blowing a 4 and a half billion dollar hole via tax gifts to the wealthy in said budget, can the minister share with Albertans if it's health care, education, child care, or seniors' care he is targeting for cuts first? Be specific.

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been briefed on the mess that we're in today. Again, we're committed to going forward, respecting the hard-earned tax dollars of Albertans. We're committed to going forward to ensure that we're delivering high-quality services to Albertans and bringing this province to balance. We will be delivering a budget this fall to that end.

Ms Phillips: Well, given, Mr. Speaker, that the Finance minister campaigned on a balanced budget by 2022, not '23, without service cuts, will the Finance minister commit to his own constituents in Grande Prairie and my constituents in Lethbridge that he won't cut any health services, any education services, or any municipal funding for mid-sized cities as a result of a reckless tax gift of more than $4 billion to the already wealthy?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are absolutely committed to delivering on fiscal balance in this province, and we're also committed to maintaining education and health care spending. We are also committed to working with municipalities to ensure that they have predictable funding so that they can deliver to their constituents.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Addiction and Mental Health Services in St. Paul

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The St. Therese health centre in St. Paul is the designated psychiatric hub for the northeastern region. For the last four years I've been asking for assistance to improve patient care and safety for staff. Over that time we have only managed to have a couple more of the available beds reopened – that's what I've been told – but our ER is often still utilized as a holding area while waiting for a bed to open up. To the Minister of Health: will you commit to a thorough assessment of the unit to ensure that we are providing the best care possible?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for raising such an important question. One in 5 Canadians and 1 in 5 Albertans suffer from mental illness. This government has committed very strongly that we're going to put in a $100 million comprehensive mental health and recovery strategy. We're going to focus on a continuum of care with wraparound services. In addition, we've committed another $40 million for detox beds. We'll be looking forward to working with you to work on this important issue.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much for the answer, Minister. Given that many patients from other communities are brought into our facility, often by the RCMP, but upon discharge have no means of returning to their home community, sometimes without ID or money, and given that the previous minister's response to local mayors was that that is a municipality problem, Minister, will you work with the mayor and council from St. Paul to come up with a more realistic response to this issue?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is: absolutely right. I'm looking forward to working with the mayor and the council members because they know first-hand the issues in their community.

Thank you for that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of the patients brought in are suffering from addictions and substance abuse and after treatment are simply turned out onto the street with nowhere to turn and often re-enter the system – a facility like this: the patients and community would benefit greatly from some form of wraparound services so patients can get some extra help after being discharged rather than being readmitted within days, putting extra strain on our already stressed system. Are there any programs available that the community could access to help alleviate this situation in the short term?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member raises a very important question. Yes, it is complex when you look at the different choices for people seeking recovery and treatment, but our government has committed that we're going to look into a comprehensive wraparound strategy. We'll be putting extra dollars into this, and we will make our system accessible for Albertans. Every Albertan who suffers from addiction deserves an opportunity to get well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Conversion Therapy Use in Alberta

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Conversion therapy is a damaging, hurtful practice that has no place in Alberta. That's why I was proud that our government established a working group to figure out the best way to ban this practice altogether in a way that could withstand legal challenges. We had only just begun our important work when the election was called. Can the minister tell this House whether he and his government agree that the practice of conversion therapy causes real harm to members of the LGBTQ community? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to just point out to all Albertans that the focus for our government is that we as a government do not condone this practice in any form. No Albertan should be coerced in any way, especially vulnerable children. Vulnerable children deserve to grow up in a loving environment. But when it comes to this committee, I've actually been reached out to by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I've agreed to sit down with her to be able to hear from her what any recommendations might have happened with this committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've heard from people who went through the horrible, horrible practice of conversion therapy and given that Alberta Health Services has received 250 complaints related to conversion therapy since October 2015, to the minister: will you admit that you were wrong when you said that conversion therapy is not a problem in Alberta, will you commit to supporting the ongoing work of this expert committee, and will you commit to the House that you will implement their recommendations?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, just to quote the previous minister, for four years this government was asked this question, for four years this government was asked about conversion therapy, for four years this government was asked if they're going to do anything about it, for four years they said that conversion therapy does not happen in Alberta . . .

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Shandro: . . . for four years they said that there is no conversion therapy, and it wasn't until the eve of the election in February 2019 that this government set up this ad hoc committee to provide advice to the previous minister.

The Speaker: The point of order is noted at 2:26.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that your press secretary, Steve Buick, issued a statement saying that the working group was disbanded and given that you took to Twitter to discredit a reporter for reporting on that statement, can the members of this House and the people of Alberta trust anything that comes out of your office?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the question was whether the ad hoc group that was set up in February 2019 to provide advice to the previous minister was disbanded by us, our government, or by me. I corrected that and said that it was not disbanded by me, that it was not disbanded by our government. This is a group that was struck in February 2019. They met twice – they met twice – and their last meeting was scheduled to be in April. That was cancelled because of the election that was called by the previous government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Inclusion

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We use a lot of words in this Chamber, and it's easy for us to forget how important it is to speak plainly so that all Albertans can understand what we say so that they can properly evaluate what we're doing, and are we doing what we said we would do? Based on that premise, I would like to ask our new Premier a straightforward question so that we have a baseline. I and many Albertans would like to know what the Premier means when he uses the word "inclusion."

Mr. Kenney: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I mean an approach to accepting and celebrating the diversity of today's Alberta, including people of all backgrounds and walks of life.

The Speaker: The Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Premier is clearly still working on that definition, I'd like to ask the Minister of Community and Social Services how she defines "inclusion."

Mrs. Sawhney: I would just like to reiterate what our Premier said, that inclusion embodies Albertans of all backgrounds, all faiths, and all different socioeconomic backgrounds.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. Since the Premier and the minister are still struggling with their respective definitions of inclusion as it relates to their portfolios and their work, I'd like to ask the Minister of Education what she means when she uses the word "inclusion."

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I agree with the Premier and with the hon. minister of social services. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright, please.

Rural Crime

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the UCP legacy parties took the scourge of rural crime seriously by forming the Alberta crime task force back in March of 2017. The UCP followed this up with a detailed action plan, A Safer Alberta, in July of 2018. Further, our election platform contained a plethora of detailed initiatives to combat rising rural crime. My constituents have become increasingly concerned with the rising rates of rural crime in Alberta. Can the Minister of Justice tell us what the government's plan for combatting rural crime is?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I can inform this Assembly that our government is committed to a fairer, faster, and more responsive justice system. In certain rural communities between 2017 and 2018 crime was up over 100 per cent. Our government is going to be making sure we invest in front-line policing by providing $50 million to ALERT and also hiring 50 new prosecutors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Lloydminster, a city in my constituency, sits on the border between Alberta and Saskatchewan, many of my constituents are worried about criminals moving from province to province. Can the Minister of Justice inform this Legislature what the government's plan for working with our provincial neighbours to combat the rise of rural crime is?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, early on, when I was sworn in as Minister of Justice, I reached out and talked with the applicable ministers in Saskatchewan. I've also talked to the senior leadership of the RCMP to make sure we reduce barriers, to make sure we, you know, combat this crisis of rural crime across Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of the difficulties in addressing the crisis of rural crime arise from understaffing and poor response rates of police and first responders in rural areas of our province, what does our government plan on doing to improve police response times and presence in rural communities?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we're going to be advocating for changes to the Criminal Code to make sure that they're more reflective of the realities of rural Alberta. In addition to that, we're going to make sure we update the Crown policy manual to make sure that it reflects the realities, again, of people in our rural communities so they feel safe in their homes. Again, as I mentioned earlier on, we're also going to be investing $50 million in ALERT to make sure that we can respond on the ground, making sure we give people the resources that they need to combat crime.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just now we are hearing of reports in the media that the RCMP have actually contacted and spoken with the Solicitor General as part of their investigation into the UCP leadership race and allegations that those working on behalf of the Premier may have engaged in fraud. To the Solicitor General: do you not believe that in order to preserve the system of justice or to preserve your job, you must appoint a special prosecutor?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, as this matter is currently before the RCMP for investigation, it would be inappropriate for me to comment at this time on their investigation. We respect the independence of the RCMP to conduct the investigations as they see fit.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the adage that it is inappropriate for a member of Executive Council to speak about a matter which is before the courts or before the police arises from the very notion that they cannot be involved in something and exercise any influence over it. It is that very excuse you are relying on, which is why you must either appoint a special prosecutor or step aside.

The Speaker: I might just remind the Leader of the Official Opposition that after Question 4 the use of preambles would not be an acceptable practice here in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I can advise this Assembly that making sure we preserve the integrity and independence of our police and our prosecution is paramount to the justice system. I take that very, very seriously. Again, I would refer the member, if she is looking for a response, to the RCMP for commentary on their ongoing investigation.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that when I asked the Premier about this matter last week he, interestingly, failed to disclose to the House that his Solicitor General had been in conversations with the RCMP around this matter and given that every other jurisdiction and anyone with any knowledge about parliamentary procedure understands that independence must not only happen but it must be seen to happen, why will the Premier not appoint a special prosecutor?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I can advise this Assembly that I learned from the RCMP that they wanted to talk to me on Saturday and that I met with them on Sunday for a brief 30-minute discussion, answered their questions fully, and they had no further, other questions for me.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, continuing on with the fact that we've just learned that the Minister of Justice has been speaking to the RCMP, just for a point of clarity, acknowledging your last statement around speaking to them on Saturday, can you please clarify for us, then, why you wouldn't then seek an independent prosecutor as you are now actually involved in the RCMP investigation?

Mr. Schweitzer: Again, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier on in my commentary, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on an ongoing investigation by the RCMP. I'd refer the hon. member to the RCMP if they're looking for further questions about this matter.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Minister of Justice repeatedly keeps saying that it is inappropriate for him to comment on the matter of the RCMP investigation, can he please explain to this House why it is not inappropriate for him to not appoint an independent prosecutor?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the RCMP's investigation. It seems to me that the hon. member has lots of questions about this leadership race, a leadership race, I'd like to remind this Assembly, that our Premier won a resounding mandate in, a resounding mandate to get Albertans back to work. He then went on to win a resounding mandate from all Albertans, with 55 per cent of the vote. Over a million Albertans are looking for us to restore confidence again in jobs and our Alberta economy.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the comment again from the Minister of Justice, are you saying now that because you've won the election, you are actually above the law? Should we not be having emergency debate and an independent prosecutor?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, again, we respect the justice system. The police and prosecution are independent. We respect the independent process, and we will rely on them. I'd again refer the hon. member to the RCMP if you have further questions on this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Chuckegg Creek Wildfire Evacuee Supports

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'm honoured to rise for the first time in this House on a nonpartisan question. As you know, the communities of High Level, Meander, Bushe, Chateh, and Paddle Prairie and parts of Mackenzie county have been under mandatory evacuation because of the Chuckegg Creek wildfire. Will the Minister of Community and Social Services please update this House on what the government is doing for these evacuees?

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Peace River for that question. I know part of this has been covered by Minister Dreesen, but as we're all aware, evacuation centres have been established in Slave Lake, High Prairie, Peace River, La Crête, Grande Prairie, Fort Vermilion, and the K'atl'odeeche First Nation east of Hay River. I'd like to thank the local volunteers who have helped evacuees find food and other essentials at the evacuation centres, and further to this, my colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs announced last Friday that our government would be providing emergency payments to evacuees to help cover the cost of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. minister. For the benefit of all members of the Assembly it's inappropriate to refer to a member's name or a minister's name, as you did. I know that the minister of agriculture did a fine job in his statement today, but we might refer to him as such.

The Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the answer, hon. minister. As far as everyone knows, evacuating your home can be a very difficult and burdensome situation for individuals and for families. Can the minister please provide updates on how these evacuees can access these financial supports the government is providing?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, as of yesterday those forced to leave their homes due to the mandatory evacuation order can apply for a one-time payment of $1,250 per adult and $500 per child. These funds may be deposited by an e-transfer or by obtaining a prepaid debit card at an evacuation centre, and it's our hope that this financial assistance will provide some peace of mind for residents during this very stressful time.

The Speaker: The Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister also provide the House with an update on how many residents have been evacuated and how many have received the different supports that we're offering from the government?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I can report that as of 7 a.m. today 4,386 people had registered with the evacuation centres. Additionally, as of last night 2,228 people have accessed the emergency payment systems through the e-transfer system. I'd also like to offer a heartfelt thank you to the CSS staff for all their hard work and long hours this past week.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Sherwood Park has a question.

School Class Sizes

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Education. Under the previous New Democratic government class sizes in Alberta increased while math and reading scores declined. Parents in my riding of Sherwood Park are concerned about the impact that these increased class sizes are having on their children. Our government was elected on a mandate to address this issue. Can the minister please explain to the House what our government is doing to address increases to class sizes? [interjection]

The Speaker: The Minister of Education has the floor.

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. In our platform we committed to an audit of class sizes. My department is already undertaking this important work. Our government is committed to strengthening education by working with our students, our parents, our teachers, our principals, trustees, and other education stakeholders, and as Minister of Education I am focused on strengthening our education system and delivering on our platform commitments.

Thank you for the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the minister: given that in 2017-2018 the NDP invested $293 million into the small class size initiative, a program designed to help reduce class sizes – however, as we all know, class sizes continue to increase – can the minister please tell us what steps the government is taking to ensure that funding used for class size reduction is having positive outcomes?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. The office of the Auditor General reviewed and reported on the administration of the class size initiative in 2018 and recommended monitoring and reporting processes be improved. As such, my department is auditing and will determine how previous funding was dedicated to class size reduction, and I will look forward to having more to say. As those results become available, I'll look forward to sharing them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for confirming that the government is looking into how this funding was used. It's very important.

Mr. Speaker, given that in our platform we committed to working with parents, teachers, principals, and trustees to improve educational outcomes for our students, can the minister please explain how she is engaging our education sector to advance this very important objective?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question. Alberta is home to some of the brightest minds in the country, from educators to trustees and from students to their parents. It is important to me as Minister of Education to maintain an open line of communication with everyone who has a role in our province's system. Additionally, I've also met with the Minister's Youth Council, and I'm looking forward to hearing their perspective as I meet with them in the near future on this issue and on other issues.

Thank you for the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Environmental Programs in Indigenous Communities

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many indigenous communities live at the forefront of climate change, and many are taking leadership in combatting it. Under the indigenous climate leadership initiatives of our government we funded nearly $85 million in investment in things like renewable energies, energy efficiency, and climate leadership capacity building. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: can you reassure indigenous communities that these investments and these jobs will remain under your government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to empowering indigenous Albertans to take charge of their own destiny. As part of this commitment to Alberta our government will work towards partnering with indigenous communities to share in the economic prosperity of our resource wealth and to strengthen social conditions. That's why our government is proposing the indigenous opportunities corporation. It'll provide indigenous communities access to capital, thereby removing an important barrier to ownership of resource projects.

Mr. Feehan: It looks like they just lost $85 million.

Anyways, given that remote indigenous communities like Fort Chipewyan are not connected to Alberta's electricity grid and rely on burning diesel fuel for heat and power and given that in an effort to reduce diesel use in the northern communities, the nations formed the Three Nations Energy committee with a $3.3 million grant from the Alberta climate leadership plan so that the community itself could own and operate the largest off-grid solar and storage project in Canada, to the same minister: will you honour this investment and commit to maintaining these kinds of investments as well?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, again, our government is committed to a path to reconciliation and shared prosperity with indigenous peoples by advancing economic opportunities and promoting environmental stewardships through a stronger economy. Indigenous communities should have the chance to benefit from the economic opportunities generated from resource projects, and project ownership creates wealth that in turn creates opportunities for indigenous people to reinvest in their communities.

Mr. Feehan: Oh, Fort Chip just got colder.

Given that these grants will help the communities reduce greenhouse gas emissions, make energy bills more affordable, and support local jobs and given that for this community alone the solar panels are expected to generate 73.4 megawatt hours yearly and prevent almost 980 tonnes of greenhouse gases from entering the atmosphere – I'd love to have a climate leadership response to this one, by the way – can the minister please explain how his government plans to support indigenous communities who may lose these jobs and see the utility bills increase in the absence of the climate leadership plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is time to give a real voice to those First Nations who want to be partners in the environmental response resource development so they can move their people from poverty to prosperity. This government is committed to helping the indigenous peoples.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is rising with a question.

Daycare and Children's Services

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government took action to protect children and support Alberta families. We introduced measures to improve the child intervention system. We introduced $25-a-day daycare, a project that we intended to expand and make universal over time. In last week's throne speech there was not a single mention of the Children's Services ministry in that speech. To the minister: what are you actually working on, and were you disappointed to be left out of the throne speech?

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In April Albertans gave us a strong mandate: to get people back to work and to strengthen our economy. We know that jobs allow people to provide for their families, and a strong economy provides supports for those vulnerable Albertans who need it the most. We spent the last year listening to Albertans, and what we heard is that quality and accessibility in child care are important, but so too are choice and options for parents and families.

The Speaker: Members, we heard the question; we will hear the answer.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that when asked by the media about giving each minister a mandate letter the Premier said their mandate was set out in the UCP platform and given that there is not a single mention of children or the work of Children's Services in that platform, again to the minister: is it that you have no mandate, or is it that your work is just not important to the Premier?

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much for the question. As I said before, we are very much committed to supporting those most vulnerable and ensuring that children and youth get a good start in life, whichever that may be. Part of that is ensuring that families have the supports they need to raise their children and ensure that they get a good start.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you don't seem to have a clear mandate but given that we continue to hear a great deal of support for the $25-a-day daycare program as a way of ensuring that Alberta families have access to affordable and high-quality child care, to the minister: are you prepared to assure Alberta families, children, and child care centres that this $25-a-day daycare program will continue and that you will commit to further expansion of this program in the fall provincial budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a working parent I understand the challenges of finding the right fit for child care for working families. We were very clear during the campaign. We understand we're in the middle of a pilot project for early learning and child care centres, and we will continue that pilot through. However, what works for one family may not work for another. Over the last year we heard that Alberta families are looking for choice in child care as well.

The Speaker: In 30 seconds or less we will proceed to Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Alberta's Industrial Heartland

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When Alberta's energy industry thrives, so does the great province of Alberta. My constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has benefited tremendously from Alberta's energy products, as does the rest of the world. I'm immensely proud to represent the hard-working Albertans that have built our Industrial Heartland into Canada's largest hydrocarbon processing region. I'm proud to live in a region that produces so much for our community, our province, and our country.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Tragically, there are people out there who do not see all the good that our energy industry does. Whether it be Hollywood celebrities flying their private jets to our province to boycott oil and gas or foreign-funded groups misrepresenting the great people of Alberta to the world, we are just not being treated fairly. Our province and our economy are under siege.

I'm proud of all the good my constituents do for Alberta, Canada, and the world. I'm proud of our Premier standing up for and stating the truth about our great province. He has been fighting back against the economic damage caused by our Prime Minister, the carbon tax, Bill C-69, Bill C-48, and the never-ending assaults on Alberta.

Thankfully, we have an ally on the federal level that has Alberta's back. She is my constituent and local Member of Parliament, Shannon Stubbs. She has been a stalwart advocate for the world-class resource development in my constituency and in our province, and I am honoured to be in such good company.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to advise the Assembly that pursuant to Standing Order 7(8) that the daily Routine may continue beyond 3 o'clock p.m.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Voting in the Legislative Assembly

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The UCP has proposed to allow MLAs to abstain from using their democratic responsibility when it comes to voting on legislation. Democracy is about participation. Our responsibility as citizens is to be engaged, to debate, and recognize, no matter the political affiliation, our role in the democratic process. We must always be engaged and vigilant to the issues that impact our neighbours, Albertans, and Canadians.

Now is the time to acknowledge our Constitution and the right that allows all of us here in this Chamber and for all Albertans, for it grants all of us the freedom to be a successful and caring society. We cannot abstain from these debates to allow others to tell us the views that we should hold. To restrain ourselves from doing the right thing, for being the voice for the most vulnerable exploited in the name of the economy: this fails the people of this province and this country. We are the leaders of this province. We were elected to be the voice of the people no matter the lines of partisanship because it's our duty.

Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms: the freedom of consciousness and religion; freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression – including the freedom of the press – the freedom of peaceful assembly; and, of course, the freedom of association. As we move forward into this 30th Legislature, let us remember the rights as we debate them. For although the majority will decide the outcome, our responsibility in this House is to protect the voice of the minority. All of us in this Chamber must hear them and ensure their rights are protected because we are the lawmakers of Alberta. Let us own this responsibility and participate through respectful debate and vote with the voices our constituents elected us to use.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Energy Industry in Spruce Grove-Stony Plain

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise in this House for the first time on behalf of the people of Spruce Grove and Stony Plain. The riding I have the privilege to represent is young and diverse with strong connections to our agricultural and natural resource sectors. A major job creator in my riding has always been the natural resources that provide thousands of jobs in our area. The organizations that run our nearby power plants are not just corporations that a handful of workers rely on to pay their bills; they are involved in helping build our community. As an example, we have the TransAlta Tri Leisure Centre, which receives well over a million visitors a year.

However, as a result of the actions of the previous government these job creators are struggling, and as a result, the families in my riding are struggling to get by while policies like the accelerated coal phase-out and the carbon tax make it harder for families to pay their bills. But for those families the throne speech presented by the Lieutenant Governor represented hope on the horizon. While coal was not specifically mentioned, the Speech from the Throne made clear that this government's priority is fighting for our energy sector, creating jobs, and making life more affordable for families through the carbon tax repeal act. To the people of Spruce Grove and Stony Plain, this government is fighting for you.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose, please.

Days for Girls International

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You can tell by my eagerness that I'm very excited about giving my very first member's statement.

It gives me great honour to share with the Chamber a project called Days for Girls that my Camrose Daybreak Rotary Club coordinates regularly. Around the world girls and women resort to using rags, mattress stuffing, banana leaves, feathers, and even cow dung to manage their menstruation. Days for Girls provides a safe, beautiful, washable, and long-lasting alternative along with vital health education.

Days for Girls International is a grassroots not-for-profit creating a more dignified, humane, sustainable world for girls through advocacy, reproductive health awareness, education, and sustainable feminine hygiene because no girl should go without. Our vision is that every girl and woman in the world will have ready access to quality, sustainable hygiene by 2022. My local Rotary Club, working through a network of nearly 900 chapters and teams, has reached over 640,000 girls and women in over 100 countries.

In the past two months I personally have purchased over 1,000 pairs of briefs to assist with the project. Every washable feminine hygiene kit gives back six months of living in just three years of use, which equates to 180 days of education, health, safety, and dignity. Items we collect regularly are hotel-sized bars of soap, colourful washcloths, and large zip-lock freezer bags. The Camrose Daybreak Rotary Club has made 2,792 kits over the past four years. Please help me congratulate them on their worthy project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Indigenous Relations

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years under Conservative governments the First Nations people of Alberta were simultaneously mistreated and ignored. The consequence of 100 years of oppression has been the devastation of once healthy communities. Where once there were multigenerational families living together with positive societal structures that enhanced well-being, they were replaced with multigenerational trauma from the results of residential schools, the '60s scoop, and the Indian Act.

One pernicious tool in this destruction of healthy people was the institutionalized neglect of the Alberta government from the use of jurisdictional divide arguments. Rather than respect First Nations as Albertans, indigenous people were repeatedly told that they were, quote: not part of the problem for the Alberta government; go talk to the feds. End quote. When schools were inadequate: go talk to the feds. When houses were inadequate: go talk to the feds. When alcohol and drugs began to devastate the communities: go talk to the feds.

And here we are again in 2019. A fire rages in the territory of the Dene Tha' and the Beaver people, and this is the post of Chief Trevor Mercredi. Quote: "The First Nations are not a priority when it comes to the governments. Where is all the support for First Nations communities? We are carrying a lot of weight and receive no support. Where are the sprinklers, fire departments, water for protection? Where is the funding for heavy equipment when we need fire guards? Where is the support to help our displaced people that are caught up? Nobody is going to protect us. Red Cross should be here. Canada should be here. The province should be here."

It is time that Conservatives stop their systematic neglect of First Nations. It's time that Conservatives recognize First Nations people as Albertans and treat them as such.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Agricultural Education in Drumheller-Stettler

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin, I'd like to congratulate you on your recent election. I'm confident you will excel in the role. You've been very helpful to us rookie MLAs, and your respect and love of this House and its traditions are contagious, so thank you.

Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak in this House for the first time, it would only be right to thank the wonderful people who sent me here. I'd like to thank the people of Drumheller-Stettler for putting their trust in me. I'd like to thank the many volunteers, donors, and friends, new and old, who made this election part of their life for a time. It was extremely humbling, and I'll be forever grateful.

Mr. Speaker, in a riding like Drumheller-Stettler, with a bigger footprint than Belgium, we have our fair share of issues and struggles, but I wanted my first statement in this House to highlight a positive local story. A small school in Altario, not far from the Saskatchewan border, is doing a great job of bringing agriculture into the classroom. The Altario school has actively embraced its agricultural roots, and over the past years has moved towards including an educational component in the school that focuses on agriculture. This year that included four days on ag education, a large community garden, and the raising of two beef cows.

This past week Altario school received their own barn as an agricultural learning centre. The vision for this centre is for students to work with the different farm animals so they understand what's on your plate. Further to this, the school is creating a residency for students throughout the Prairie Land regional school division and eventually the entire province to come to Altario for a period of days to camp in the hills surrounding their town, to tour agricultural facilities, and to work in the ag learning centre with the different animals. As ‘advocates’, Altario school believes it has an awesome opportunity to grow an appreciation for agriculture and education throughout our province.

We need to do a better job educating the world about our agricultural sector, Mr. Speaker, and it starts with our own kids.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning and the deputy House leader is rising on a notice of motion.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to provide notice that at the appropriate time I’ll be moving the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 30.

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to discuss the critical need for a special prosecutor to oversee all aspects of all outstanding investigations into alleged voter fraud and irregular financial contributions in order to ensure investigations proceed with the utmost transparency, integrity, and free from the perception of bias.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Bill 2

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business.

This bill introduces changes to workplace rules that will restore prosperity, get people back to work, and let the world know that Alberta is open for business again. We are reducing burdens on job creators by returning to the previous general holiday pay and banked overtime rules. We will restore democracy in the workplace by returning to mandatory secret ballots for union certification and providing support and assistance to employees seeking information on their rights as a union member. We are also strengthening rules that co-ordinate workplace complaints when these complaints involve multiple bodies such as the Human Rights Commission and the Labour Relations Board. With these proposed changes we will restore fairness and balance to the workplace, stimulate job creation, and get Albertans back to work.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Edmonton-City Centre, please.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just in response to your request from my debate last Thursday on Government Motion 6 I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of two articles: first, Tories Blasted for Handbook on Paralyzing Parliament, from the Canadian Press; and the second being a similar article on their obstruction handbook that was published in the Star.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, I have a tabling today. It is a letter from the office of the Ethics Commissioner dated May 24, 2019, to myself.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Pon, Minister of Seniors and Housing, pursuant to the Government Organization Act the office of the Alberta Seniors Advocate annual report 2017-18.

The Speaker: Points of order. The honourable – check that. The Official Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Bilous: I see that you want to restore me to my old position, Mr. Speaker.

I’m rising to speak on the point of order at 2:26. Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 23(i) and (j). During question period the Minister of Health accused our party or, when we were in government, our government of saying that conversion therapy wasn’t being practised in Alberta and that it didn’t exist. There couldn’t be something further from the truth. The reason why I’m rising is because not only is that statement patently false; we in this Chamber need to ensure that something that was either misspoken or incorrect factually stands corrected immediately because we know that Albertans do pay attention to not only question period but to what is said in this place.

What I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that what we have said about conversion therapy – and it was actually the former Minister of Health, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who said, and I quote: conversion therapy is a damaging, hateful practice that has no place in our province; Albertans deserve to trust that any measures to end this practice are as strong as possible, that they will withstand legal challenges and have the support of those who need them most. Now, I will table what I’ve just read from, which was a group that was struck to explore banning conversion therapy.

But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the current Minister of Health in his response in question period today tried to indicate that we have said in the past that it doesn’t exist or isn’t practised. That couldn’t be further from the truth. We know that to be untrue, so to resolve this point of order, we simply ask that the Minister of Health withdraw his comment and apologize.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you. While we’re talking about quotes on this point of order, I will refer you to a quote from the former Health minister, who the current Health minister was referring to in question period. I think that’s not in question. I quote: the colleges are not aware of any regulated members performing reparative therapy; these professional colleges have accountability mechanisms in place to discipline members if they were to learn otherwise. On September 29, 2017, in a letter from the then Minister of Health’s office she says to tell us that they were assured that these colleges are not aware of any of their regulated members performing conversion therapy and have accountability mechanisms in place to discipline members if they were to learn otherwise.

Further to that, in the Legislature, in Hansard, on December 13, 2017 – I was there when this conversation happened – the former Minister of Health said, “There is no billable service related to conversion therapy.” Further to that, in the Legislature, also present for this one, Mr. Speaker, as I’m sure you were, on December 13 the Minister of Health said, “Alberta Health in no way covers this practice.” Going on with that, now let’s just throw one more former minister's quote in for the heck of it. The former Education minister said to the CBC on September 11, 2018, that they are not aware of any Alberta schools that prescribe conversion therapy. On and on and on, there are quotes.

But with that said, Mr. Speaker, that probably isn't that relevant. I just wanted to answer the quotes with quotes. What is relevant is this, that this is clearly a matter of debate and is not a point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you to the Opposition House Leader for what I can only imagine would be very intriguing further interjections. However, I am prepared to rule on this point of order at present unless there's anyone else who has new information other than yourself.

To be clear, Member for Edmonton-Glenora, I'm not looking for your opinion on this particular issue. What I'm looking for is new information that would give an indication that the language used is likely to create disorder. We are not debating the issue of what you may have said or what he may have said but language he used likely to create disorder. Here's your big chance.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, I'm happy to speak in that regard. What the member said – and I don't have the Blues in front of me, but the member said “and I quote,” and then he went on to say a bunch of stuff that I absolutely did not say. The member was accurate in saying that I talked about health professionals being part of colleges that govern their practice and that there was no billable accountability. But when the hon. Minister of Health said “and I quote” and then said a bunch of things referring to it not being an issue when I had over 250 letters to my office, letters that are absolutely available through ARTS, that the hon. minister absolutely has every right to access as they're part of the institutional memory – I in no way ever said that. Saying “and I quote” and then going on to say a bunch of things that fly in the face of reality and fact is absolutely intended to enrage outrage in this House and cause disorder.

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. member for your interjections.

I think what is clear here is that this is a matter of debate. While we may not agree with the opinions stated by members from the opposite side or perhaps from time to time on our own side of the House, what we can agree on is that it's quite possible that there will be times in this Chamber when there are two sets of facts around the same issue. I would suggest to all members of the Assembly that that is exactly what we have here today. It is a disagreement on the facts. As such, there is no point of order.

Let us proceed . . . [interjections] Members, I think you'll find that I have ruled on the previous point of order. The interjections from Edmonton-McClung are not appreciated.

Let us proceed as I am prepared to rule on the point of privilege from last week. Following that ruling we will proceed to the SO 30. I see the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is very excited about providing her comments with respect to that.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've had the opportunity to consider the arguments made with respect to the question of privilege raised by the Official Opposition House Leader on Thursday, May 23, 2019. You may find these comments – and I'm sure you've all reviewed them – on page 34 to 36 of Alberta Hansard for that date. Since we're at the beginning of a new Legislature and a number of you have not had the opportunity to see questions of privilege raised and argued in this Assembly, I would like to make a few initial comments in this respect. As I noted Thursday, questions of privilege are serious, serious matters, and therefore they should not be taken lightly.

Questions of privilege are dealt with under Standing Order 15. The Official Opposition House Leader met the procedural requirements of that standing order to provide notice of the question at least two hours prior to the commencement of the afternoon sitting by notifying my office at 11:11 on May 23, 2019. I can also confirm that May 23 was the first opportunity available to the Official Opposition House Leader to raise this matter before the Assembly as the press conference which he referred to in his arguments took place on May 13 and last Thursday was the first regular sitting day following the news conference.

In addition to reviewing the arguments of the House leaders, I have reviewed the video broadcast of the press conference and have conducted some additional research, and therefore I am prepared to rule on this matter. The facts of the matter are contained within the press conference held by the hon. Premier and the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance on May 13, 2019. At the news conference the Premier mentioned bills that would be forthcoming during the First Session of the 30th Legislature, including Bill 1, the carbon tax repeal act. The Premier made specific reference to Bill 1 at approximately the 13-minute mark of the news conference, wherein he stated in response to a question, quote: first of all, Bill 1 of the new Legislature will be introduced on Tuesday next week and will be called the carbon tax repeal act, and it will be passed with an effective elimination by May 30th, so by May 30th there will be no longer an Alberta carbon tax. End quote.

The Government House Leader confirmed this statement in his remarks made to the Assembly on Thursday. Likewise, the Official Opposition House Leader paraphrased his remarks in his argument. Therefore, the basic facts of the matter are not in question with respect to the Premier's comments.

The Official Opposition House Leader contends that in speaking with the media about the ultimate disposition of Bill 1, the Premier presupposed a decision of the Assembly in that that decision would occur by May 30, 2019. The Official Opposition House Leader also made representations that the Premier's statements constitute an affront on the institute of parliament. He's essentially arguing that in presupposing a decision of the Assembly, the work of members debating Bill 1 has been prejudged and, therefore, impeded.

Hon. members, it should be pointed out that the matter before the Assembly is technically a purported contempt of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. I note for all members, as indicated on page 81 of House of Commons Procedures and Practice, third edition:

There are . . . affronts against the dignity and authority of Parliament which may not fall within one of the [specified] defined privileges. Thus, the House also claims the right to punish, as a contempt, any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege: tends to instruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions; obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties; or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House . . . In that sense, all breaches of privilege are contempts of the House, but not all contempts are necessarily breaches of privilege.

This is not the first time in the recent past that this type of purported contempt has been raised in the Assembly. Most recently a question of contempt was ruled on on November 1, 2016. In addition, a question of contempt was dealt with in the 28th Legislature on December 2, 2013. The House leader of the Official Opposition argued that the matter before the Assembly now is similar to both of these matters in that in all three the government of the day committed a prima facie case of contempt by presupposing a decision of the Legislative Assembly.

In November 2016 Speaker Wanner found a question of contempt when the government aired radio advertisements and published a website advertising the details of its climate action plan in spite of the fact that the enabling legislation had not yet been passed by the Assembly.

In 2013 Speaker Zwozdesky ruled that the government advertising brochures, The Building Alberta Plan, constituted a prima facie contempt because the advertising presupposed a decision of the Assembly.

I'm not convinced that the matter before the Assembly today is substantially similar to either of these prior matters. In both previous questions of contempt significant details of government programs were communicated to the public through advertising campaigns, leaving the impression that the proposed legislation enabling programs was already law. This, of course, was not the case. In the current matter, the Premier's statement on Bill 1 was contained within a response to a question put to him. It was the equivalent of two sentences within the overall context of a 35-minute news conference.

Moreover, at the outset of the press conference, at approximately the three-minute mark, the Premier stated, discussing Bill 3, the Job Creation Tax Cut (Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment) Act: the job-creation tax cut will be Bill 3 of the Legislature that will convene next week, subject to the approval of the Legislature; I'm pleased to announce today that on July 1 we will drop the general business tax rate from 12 to 11 per cent, and then it will go from 11 to 10 per cent on January 1 next year.

Through saying "subject to the approval of the Legislature," the Premier rightly acknowledges, albeit in the context of Bill 3, that it is the Legislature, not the Premier or Executive Council, that determines whether or not bills come into legislation.

I can understand that the new government is eager to commence its legislative program and to announce and work towards implementing programs and policies. It is right for the government to announce and inform the people that they serve on their policies. As former Speaker Gene Zwozdesky noted in the ruling of contempt on November 7, 2013:

We all know that governments across the greater Commonwealth will make announcements . . . policy statements . . . [and] funding announcements . . . and they are well within their right to do that. That's what governments are elected to do. They can do it any time they wish provided that some of our conventions, rules, and authorities are observed.

You can find these remarks on page 2845 of Alberta Hansard for that day.

While I recognize that one sentence referenced from the press conference might, when taken on its own, assume Bill 1's passage, it cannot be taken out of the overall context, it is evidence that the Premier was not attempting to presuppose a decision of the Assembly in answering the question at the press conference. I find, therefore, that there is no prima facie case with this question of privilege.

However, as we embark on a new Legislature with a new government and many new members, I do wish to impress upon the members of Executive Council and all members that we must take care to uphold the dignity and institution of parliament by respecting its traditions and its constitutional authorities. One of the key principles is the concept of responsible government, in which the executive branch is responsible to the legislative branch of government. As Speaker Kowalski remarked on May 1, 1997, on page 319 of Alberta Hansard for the day:

The principle of the executive being responsible to the Assembly is the cornerstone of responsible government in this country.

In his text Constitutional Law of Canada, third edition, by . . . Peter Hogg, Mr. Hogg goes so far as to say: "Responsible government is probably the most important non-federal characteristic of the Canadian Constitution."

In the matter before us, responsible government is realized by government introducing proposed legislation and the Assembly, not the government, deciding on the bill's ultimate fate.

Hon. members, let us all be mindful of these vital parliamentary principles and play our part in being guardians of them. The matter is now closed.

Now on to Standing Order 30.

Request for Emergency Debate

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As noted earlier, I rise to propose a motion under Standing Order 30. I should note before I begin that written notice was provided to the Speaker in accordance with Standing Order 30(1) and has met the conditions of 30(7). Pursuant to Standing Order 30 the motion reads as follows:

Be it resolved the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to discuss the critical need for a special prosecutor to oversee all aspects of all outstanding investigations into alleged voter fraud and irregular financial contributions in order to ensure investigations proceed with the utmost transparency, integrity, and free from [any] perception of bias.

Mr. Speaker, this issue meets the conditions of Standing Order 30(7).

(7) A motion under this Standing Order is subject to the following conditions:

(a) the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.

Mr. Speaker, just this week the Election Commissioner issued another $22,000 in fines related to the UCP leadership scandal. It was also revealed today that the Solicitor General himself was questioned by the RCMP with respect to this matter. Ultimately, these $22,000 in fines mean that a total of $67,500 in fines has been levied since February of this year. Given that these latest penalties are the largest amount of fines ever issued in a single day by the commissioner, given that there are ongoing RCMP investigations into this matter, and given that the members of Executive Council have dual roles in this investigation as members of the public co-operating in an ongoing investigation as well as ministers of the Crown responsible for the administration of the law under schedule 9 of the Government Organization Act, time is of the essence when it comes to ensuring the independence of the oversight of this process. Every day that we further delay risks the integrity of the investigative process.

Mr. Speaker, I don't question for a moment that the RCMP is independent of government – I'm well aware of that – but in these complex investigations it's quite normal for the RCMP to regularly consult with Crown prosecutors for legal advice, particularly in cases where the individual officers may not have seen a case of this type before. The Premier and the Minister of Justice can request to be briefed on any information within the ministry, which includes the Crown prosecutors, on the status of the matter. No other witness or defendant in the province would have such an opportunity. The equality of all Albertans under the law must be preserved.

Continuing under section 30(7), Mr. Speaker, I believe the conditions in (b) through (e) are met. I will not list them now unless you would like me to. Okay. Subsection (f): the discussion under the motion must not raise questions that, according to the standing orders, can only be debated on a notice of motion. As you know, this issue is not before the House in the form of any bill debate. Beauchesne's, on page 113, says as follows:

The Standing Order is clear that the question be specific and must require urgent consideration. It must deal with a matter within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

I would call that a three-part-test. This matter is well within the administrative competence of government, the Attorney General obviously having the ability to appoint such a special prosecutor.

Mr. Speaker, as indicated, during any complex case, especially cases where similar ones have not come before the investigator before, officers are likely to engage in precharge consultation with the Crown prosecution service. Now, obviously, I'm aware that we're not a precharge screening jurisdiction, but still there's a considerable amount of consultation, and best practice in this case would dictate that the investigating officers should be in regular contact with the Crown. This is entirely appropriate and within the bounds of justice. It does, however, mean that even at this moment consultations may be occurring and may occur under the oversight of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make it clear that I'm not suggesting that there is no independence in the RCMP or the Crown prosecutors; quite the contrary. There are many ways, in situations similar to this, to preserve the independence of the Crown prosecution service, and an independent prosecutor is one of those ways. That's exactly what we're calling for.

I'll quote now House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and this is referring to the fact that this has been ongoing for a while. It says:

In one exceptional circumstance, an application was approved for an emergency debate on "the sudden and unexpected revelation of events which [had] taken place in the past, in that they might precipitate a course of conduct which, if allowed to continue unchecked, would certainly classify itself as an emergency and a matter of urgent consideration.

Mr. Speaker, should these investigations unfold such that the Premier, the Minister of Justice, or indeed any member of Executive Council or their advisers had direct knowledge of breaches of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act – and, to be clear, I'm not implying that any member has such knowledge – should that ultimately be the finding of the investigation, it will be too late at that time to appoint an independent special prosecutor.

Mr. Speaker, let me be clear. This topic has come up in question period. However, I would suggest that a 35-second question and answer, especially given the complexities of the legal and ethical duties of the Solicitor General in this particular case, is not the best time to discuss such a matter, and I think that ultimately such an important matter as ensuring that all people regardless of their role in the system, especially the Minister of Justice, are viewed to be equal before the law is something that would certainly raise concerns amongst the public. Our leader and our caucus have been calling for a special prosecutor to be appointed since this government was sworn in. The fact that both the Premier and the Minister of Justice were participants in the leadership election from which the scandal which is alleged before the RCMP was perpetrated reinforces the need for a special prosecutor.

We know that this case has been referred to the RCMP for investigation by the commissioner, we know that several of the individuals involved in the scandal face potential jail time or even large fines for their involvement – just today we've learned that the Solicitor General himself has been questioned by the RCMP on this matter – and we know that the UCP has terminated employees or fired candidates for their involvement. Albertans expect their justice system to be impartial, fair, and unbiased. This issue remains an emergent issue as demonstrated by the issuance of the additional $22,000 in fines and the fact that the investigation is clearly ongoing since the Solicitor General himself admits that he was just questioned on Sunday.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, obviously, this is a complex matter. The role of the Attorney General is itself complex. I would just like to quote, maybe not at length but briefly, from the code of conduct for prosecutors. On page 4, for instance, it says:

Having independence and discretion does not mean that the Attorney General is not accountable. In fact, accountability might be considered a further fundamental concept.

As the "chief law enforcement officer," the Attorney General is accountable to the Legislature and society for the process through which justice is administered . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, as you know – and perhaps you're concluding your remarks now; I'm not a hundred per cent sure – under Standing Order 30 it is your role here to briefly identify why this is an emergency, not the substance of a significant debate. I think I've been fairly lenient. Are you close to wrapping your remarks up?

Ms Ganley: I am very close to wrapping my remarks up, Mr. Speaker.

I would just say, to end this point, that it isn't just the case that justice must be done; it must be seen to be done. And particularly in the case of the Solicitor General, it's critical that he be at arm's length to an investigation, particularly an investigation in which he made some of the allegations that are of substance.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would call on all members of the House to allow for an opportunity to debate the relative merits of a special prosecutor in this particular case. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the Government House Leader rising on this same point, Standing Order 30.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. First of all, it's disappointing to see that the Official Opposition would rather continue with fear and smear than debate Motion 501 on making adoption more efficient, but that's where we're at.

Mr. Speaker, I will draw your attention to Beauchesne, sixth edition, on page 113, point 387, which says:

The Standing Order is clear that the question be specific and must require urgent consideration. It must deal with a matter within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

I highlight the last portion for you, Mr. Speaker, because clearly the NDP has forgotten that the Leader of the Official Opposition had time to debate this today and, in fact, debated this very matter with the Premier on Thursday, May 23, where there were six questions about this very issue and several more today.

Also, for your reference again, Mr. Speaker, page 113 of Beauchesne's states:

390 "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

On page 26 of Hansard the Leader of the Official Opposition – sorry, Mr. Speaker; I should be clear that that was on Thursday – said:

To preserve public trust in our... system, the Premier must appoint a special prosecutor. Why won't he?

The Premier then, in turn, responded:

Mr. Speaker, obviously, the police and the Crown prosecutor service operate independent of any kind of political direction from government, be it this government or the former government, and we respect that independence. We will always preserve and protect it.

And indeed we will.

Now, perhaps the NDP doesn't see how those questions connect to the request for emergency debate. Well, let's read again from the letter provided to the Speaker's office by them. It says:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to discuss the critical need for a special prosecutor to oversee all aspects of all outstanding investigations into alleged voter fraud and irregular financial contributions.

That sounds like exactly what the Leader of the Official Opposition asked in question period on Thursday and again today. Clearly, this isn't a new or emergency issue, and the Official Opposition has had the opportunity to raise the matter. In fact, I wouldn't be surprised that the NDP already know full well that this does not fit with emergency debate and just want to grandstand and attempt to distract Albertans. I hope that's not the case, Mr. Speaker.

I will close with this. Page 695 in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, states:

As one Speaker noted, an emergency debate should be on a topic "that is immediately relevant and of attention and concern throughout the nation."

It goes on to state:

Topics considered highly partisan in nature are not as readily approved.

In fact, considering that all this opposition is interested in is an internal party matter and not a matter of government policy, I would further fail to see how this topic is supposed to be considered in order with Standing Order 30.

The Speaker: Thank you, members. With respect to Standing Order 30, Standing Order 30(2) provides that the Member may briefly, with some leniency of the chair,

state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he or she considers relevant to the question of urgency.

And it's the role of the chair to rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.

Hon. members, your chair is prepared to rule on whether the request for leave for the motion should proceed under Standing Order 30(2). The Member for Edmonton-Manning has met the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office by providing the required notice at 11:19 this morning. The motion reads as follows:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to discuss the critical need for a special prosecutor to oversee all aspects of all outstanding investigations into alleged voter fraud and irregular financial contributions in order to ensure investigations proceed with the utmost transparency, integrity, and free from the perception of bias.

As has been mentioned, the relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject are pages 695 to 704 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, and Beauchesne's, paragraphs 387 to 390.

Members, let me begin by pointing out that the question of urgency under Standing Order 30 deals with whether there is urgency of debate, not whether the issue itself is important or urgent. I, for one, have difficulty finding in this case that other business of the Assembly should be set aside, particularly as this issue is not particularly new or urgent. In fact, as some members have said, this issue was before the House last week. It was before the House again today. Although I disagree with the member's position that question period is not the place for it to be debated, the assertion that it is not available to be debated would not be correct, and as such there are many other avenues or ways in which this issue, albeit important to members of the Assembly, can be brought up before the Assembly.

I would also refer to page 699 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, which states that the subject matter being proposed in this type of motion "should not involve the administration of a government department." In this case this particular issue is ongoing and will remain ongoing. As such, what is determined to be an emergency today may or may not be determined an emergency tomorrow. This issue will likely proceed over a number of days. Accordingly, the chair does not find the request for leave in order, and the question will not be put to the Assembly.

Before I conclude, and for the benefit of all new members, I would like to note the types of matters that have been considered urgent in the past, which have included: matters of imminent health risk and safety of the public as found in the ruling of Speaker Kowalski on October 25, 2010, which is available on page 918 of Hansard for that day; emergencies or matters that cannot be brought before the Assembly within a reasonable timeline such as the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal to overturn the National Energy Board's approval on Trans Mountain pipeline, a discussion of which you can find in Hansard on October 29, 2018, page 1622; and matters in which there is a general wish of the Assembly to have an emergency debate such as the ongoing oil price differential, which was ruled urgent by Speaker Wanner on November 21, 2018. While this list is certainly not exhaustive, I hope it provides all members some clarity with respect to how Standing Order 30 has traditionally been treated.

With that said, this concludes the matter.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rising on a statement.

Member's Apology

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday I made some remarks, and I just want you to know, Mr. Speaker, that I apologize if you were offended. Of course, I want you to know that my position on the election of Speakers has evolved significantly since Thursday, so I unreservedly apologize to you and withdraw those remarks.*

The Speaker: Accepted and withdrawn.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask for unanimous consent in order to immediately proceed to private member's Motion 501.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Adoption Processes

501. Mr. Turton moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take all necessary measures to make the process for all forms of adoption more efficient and timely for families.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, thank you for allowing me to rise and speak about the importance of increasing the efficiency and timeliness of the adoption process here in Alberta. It is my privilege today to rise and speak on this issue, one that I believe is immensely important and has a deeply personal connection to me and my family.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell this Chamber about the challenges that my family has had with the adoption process and the reasons why I believe this process must be improved. After our first child was born, our desire was to have another child and make our family complete. However, due to medical issues, we were unable to have another child of our own, so we turned to the adoption program so that we could complete our family and give another child a home.

Mr. Speaker, for years as my wife and I tried to navigate through the adoption process, we experienced what so many Albertans have gone through, with endless streams of red tape, paperwork, excessive costs, and constant delays. As the process dragged on and on, we had to deal with having to answer tough questions as parents to our six-year-old son every night as we tucked him in, when he would ask us why he couldn't have a brother or sister like everyone else he knew. After the initial application with the social worker, we then started a two-and-a-half-year waiting period. This is when our family had to meet with a social worker every six months for an update and fill out a long refresher form, at a cost of over $1,000 each time for a 20-minute visit, to simply state that nothing had changed from the previous visit.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

One of those home inspection visits stands out in my mind, when our family was told that if we did not remove a bird bath from our backyard, we would no longer be eligible to adopt a child as this posed a clear and present danger as a drowning hazard for the prospective child. I would have had a hard time getting my hand wet in the bird bath as it was so small, but it showed that the goal of helping a child find a home was becoming secondary to justifying endless levels of paperwork and red tape. We had to wait for months to have our paperwork processed at the Children's Services offices. During this time I remember having their number on speed-dial as we kept calling almost weekly for updates to see when our paperwork would be looked at by the agency and could be processed so that we could be placed at another step in the queue.

However, Madam Speaker, after experiencing three years of waiting and starting to lose hope, my wife and I were finally told by the agency that a young birth mother had picked our family and that a baby boy was available. Within days of that phone call we finally boarded a plane to meet with the newest addition to our family. I remember very clearly that when we were going to pick up our new son from the hospital, we woke our oldest son up in the hotel room and he jumped out of bed and said: "This is the best day of my life because I'm finally going to be a big brother. What's his name again?"

I am pleased to say, Madam Speaker, that my family is blessed with a positive ending to this story. We have an amazing little boy who will experience all the love in the world. However, as I have told this story over the years, I have met with many parents who continue to wait and wait and cannot afford to participate in a prohibitively expensive and time-consuming journey.

Madam Speaker, the reason I want to give my personal story is because all over this province, in every riding, there are families just like mine that simply want the ability to have a family. There are countless moms and dads that simply want the ability to provide a forever home for a child. I know that there are countless parents that I have talked to and shared my personal story with that know the pain of explaining to their kids why they don't have a sibling yet. That is why I'm putting my motion forward today.

The reality, fellow members, is that the demand for adoption services in Alberta is continuing to go up. It has been rising steadily since the early 2000s. Wait-lists full of parents seeking to adopt have nearly doubled, and the wait time for domestic adoption placements has risen significantly. In the last data we have, the wait time has gone from 18 months, on average, in 2008 to three years in 2016. International adoptions take even longer and provide a huge toll on parents wanting to explore this route.

Despite the steady growth of demand for adoption, the number of adoptions actually taking place in Alberta has fallen by 25 per cent over the last 11 years. This is harmful to all parties. It's harmful to the child, whose lack of a permanent support is damaging, despite the best efforts of social workers and foster homes. It's hard on the adoptive parents, who are brought through a cycle which is expensive, time consuming, and exhaustive. It's hard on foster parents, who sacrifice years of their lives doing everything they can to make a child feel at home while promoting them for adoption and are put through long processes with an inefficient adoption service in need of rework. Social workers need to be considered as well, who spend long hours working closely with children and families looking for a child and have to justify to prospective parents why they must continue to wait and wait and wait.

Madam Speaker, the system must become better. The fatigue of watching both children and families spending years going through a long and extremely complicated process, hoping that one small thing, one small administrative point or a bird bath, doesn't throw it off, would be too much for many people. I have personally met with countless prospective parents who simply tossed in the towel and deemed that the emotional toll from a process made endlessly complex was not worth it. It's important for everyone here to remember that every time this happens, a child is denied a home.

Over the years a lot has changed in adoption policy around the world. Where it used to be a very secret process, with some adopted children never hearing anything about their birth parents or even knowing that they were adopted, today the birth family is welcomed into the process. In most cases birth families even get a say in who gets the opportunity to adopt the child.

I've had the privilege of meeting both the biological mom and biological dad of our son. Twice a year we write a letter to them giving them updates about how our six-year-old son is doing here in Alberta, and we plan on doing this till he is an adult. To this day I'm thankful that our son's biological parents made the courageous decision to find a forever home for their child. As we met with the biological mother, I will never forget her looking down at her one-week-old baby boy and letting him know that he was going to have a better life with his new adoptive family and that she would never forget him as she said goodbye for the very last time.

Madam Speaker, I'm sad to think that our inefficient processes deny children to have a better life with forever homes. It is time for the government to continue updating and modernizing the adoption process here in the province. While we place no blame at anyone's feet for the problems plaguing our system, I do believe that something as critical as adoption can and must do better for the families and children in the system.

Madam Speaker, we all recognize that the best possible result for children is for them to end up with a loving and caring family they can call their own, whether they were born into it or not. This motion calls on the government to do everything they can to see that adoption becomes a reality in the best and most efficient manner possible.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As this is my first time rising formally in the Assembly other than in question period, I'd like to say thank you to everybody for their warm welcome to all the new members. It's a great privilege to be here.

It's also a privilege to speak to this motion brought by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain. I'd like to thank him for bringing this motion forward as well as for sharing his very personal story. I'd like to congratulate your family on your child and on your growing family. I appreciate you sharing this personal story with us today.

I'd like to rise in favour of supporting this motion. I do believe it's very important that we do take all steps and measures we can, Madam Speaker, to improve the adoption processes, because we all know that this is really about the best interests of children. The children who are seeking adoption are, of course, children who are in need of a loving and permanent, stable home, and we should encourage all things possible to place those children in loving families who are opening their arms to do that. I have been very privileged to know many people in my personal life who have chosen and have taken the courageous and often arduous journey to adopt a child, whether it be through private adoption or international adoption. I know how gracious those parents are, how hard working they are, and how hard they work to create their family and to open their family. I think it's a really admirable thing that they've done, and I support that.

As we know, in Alberta there are three different ways of adopting children. There are three different processes to go through in this province. There is, of course, the adoption of children in care, and those are children who are in permanent government care. We need to be aware, of course, that those children often have many special needs. They come from a background that if they are in permanent government care, they are often in situations where there is drug abuse. There may be neglect. There may be special needs, either, you know, behavioural, physical, mental, developmental. So we need to be sure that those children are being placed in appropriate homes. We need to make sure that those adoptive families are prepared for the specific needs of the children that they're bringing in.

I appreciate that that process can be sometimes quite long, but it is important, of course, to make sure that both the family and the child are supported as much as possible. We know that that work to place those children in government care in homes is often done by Children's Services staff – right? – front-line staff who are doing the assessments, that are doing the trainings, that are going through the application processes, that are conducting orientations with prospective adoptive families. For those workers, if we do want to speed up our processes, if we do want to ensure that more children are placed in loving homes as quickly as possible, we need to make sure that those employees are supported and that we continue to support front-line workers both in resources, in training and not to cut their funding so that they can actually process more applications, support more families, and encourage more placements of children in homes.

We also know, of course, that in Alberta we have private adoption. Those private adoption agencies are regulated by Children's Services or licensed adoption agencies. Of course, they have their own processes and costs that are associated with that. Sometimes we deal with private adoptions when it is family members that are taking in maybe a stepchild or adopting a stepchild or a family member's child into their family. Those are the private adoptions.

As well, we also know that there are international adoptions. Two of my dear friends have adopted internationally, and I know they waited upwards of three years to adopt, and that did cost them quite a bit of money. I believe, according to the Children's Services website, estimates for international adoption are somewhere between $15,000 and $40,000, and that is a lot to ask of these families. But, of course, there are challenges on the Alberta government's ability to govern or change international adoption processes. You're often dealing with some countries that have signed onto the Hague protocol, some that have not. They've got their own processes, their own screening times. There are immigration concerns to deal with with the federal government. International adoption is a lengthy process. There's no doubt about that. I do have a bit of a concern about how much the Alberta government can influence that because of the fact that so much is done with the federal government and with agencies outside of the country.

I think that when we're looking at this, we do need to be conscious that the overall objective is to place more children in loving homes. That is always the number one objective. That's the best interest of the child, and we need to make sure that that happens. I'm not surprised, but I'm disheartened to hear that there are loving adoptive homes who want to adopt a child who are discouraged and maybe do throw in the towel because it just takes too long. I imagine the emotional toll it takes on them is quite extensive. If there are families that are willing to open their homes to an adopted child and to take that child in as one of their own, we should be doing everything we can to encourage that.

So I do support this motion. I do believe it's important that we take all those measures, but I do think we need to be cautious because at the end of the day we're talking about children, and these are sometimes the most vulnerable children. We need to make sure that there are the appropriate safeguards in place, that we are making sure that they're going into homes that are both prepared and supported to provide these children with the supports that they need so that it can be a successful story for everybody all around.

Yes, let's speed up processes where we can, and I would encourage the member who has introduced this motion as well as the Minister of Children's Services that we can work together to find efficiencies and to find ways that we can cut unnecessary steps that discourage families while also making sure that we're taking appropriate steps to protect the safety of those children and to support those families to make sure it is a successful match. Ultimately, I think this is a great motion. Thank you to the member for introducing it. I do think we all benefit when more children are in safe and loving homes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour today to rise to express my support for Motion 501, which urges the government to "take all necessary measures to make the process for all forms of adoption more efficient and timely for families."

I would like to make it perfectly clear, Madam Speaker, that the United Conservatives do not blame our incredible front-line workers for the issues within our system. The incredible social workers who work day and night to unite families and children are not the problem, but there is a problem. We all know that adoption is by far the best situation for a child born into difficult circumstances to have a chance at success, yet the majority of children who grew up in foster care or group care will age out of the system with no permanent family or safety net. This affects children for the rest of their lives, placing them in economic insecurity and often preventing them from pursuing further education. We all see this as a problem and one that especially hurts young women.

Thousands of Alberta children have been saved from these issues by generous parents who are willing to open their homes to children and youth who do not enjoy the same privileges and stable family situation that many of us take for granted. When there are three couples, on average, seeking to adopt a child who is placed and 7.7 for each infant, there is no excuse for our adoption system taking north of three years for an adoption to take place, but unfortunately the story told by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain is not an uncommon one.

There are families willing to open up their homes and merely waiting on a broken system. There are also families who have already opened up their homes to foster and for whom excessive regulation and red tape is preventing a child who is already a part of their family not reap the rewards of full adoption because of regulations put in place even about their siblings.

As the member presenting the motion has mentioned, the system has to be better for all parties. While the wait is excruciating for both children and families, the cost of watching the disappointment and frustration of both parties must weigh heavily on the workers tasked with this difficult work. We aren't just fighting for families and children with this motion but for every participant in the system.

More initiatives must be sought out in order to improve the access to adoption services in Alberta. This should be done in two main ways. The first is by benchmarking our system and then importing best practices from other jurisdictions. The second is by reducing the red tape burden on families and workers, who are merely doing their best to unite children and loving families.

Our United Conservative caucus has already worked to make the adoption system work better in the 21st century. The current Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women in 2017 as an opposition member in the 29th sitting of the Legislature passed a private member's bill that allowed families to post their profiles online. This gave mothers considering adoption easier access to view the prospective families in which your child might have a greater chance for a better future. We believe that legislation like this, which opens up our adoption system, is incredibly important.

One of the main issues we run into when attempting to do work on this file is the complete lack of benchmarking in our system. The last time any statistics were put out about adoption in Alberta was a report from 2016-2017. Before that, there was a 10-year gap. It is critical that this system can be examined to see where we can implement best practices from around the globe. The motion urges the government to continue in this vein and further reduce the red tape and bureaucratic nightmares that too many Albertan families face when considering adoption. When a bird bath in a backyard can prevent a child from going to a loving family, the red tape has gone too far. The priority has slipped from helping children to protecting a bureaucratic regime.

Far too few children are adopted in Alberta. In fiscal year 2016 there were only 298 adoptions in Alberta while wait-lists have grown. In a province of over 4 million people the system is clearly broken. This is not an attack on adoption agencies, who do great work, or many fine social workers and civil servants who administer the system, but instead it's an admonishment of the antiquated legislation and red tape that hinder children from reaching loving adoptive families. With no comprehensive changes to Alberta's system of adoption since 1984, there is work to be done here.

The previous government was always intent on bringing up divisive issues relating to the private moral convictions of Albertans. Our caucus wants to address the very real and glaring social problems Albertans face and actually get government working to address issues within the child welfare system. It's disappointing that no government in decades has undertaken substantive reforms to ensure that Alberta's children are being taken care of. We have a chance as Albertans to adopt best practices from other provinces and from around the world. We have a chance to bring stability to thousands of children and joy to thousands of families who would like nothing more than to have a child. Child welfare is one of the most difficult areas tasked to us as provincial legislators. I believe it is also one of the most important.

I urge all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of Motion 501 and begin pushing for a plan to modernize our antiquated adoption system.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today for my first time as well, and I would like to congratulate you on your election as the Deputy Speaker as well as the Speaker and everyone else in the House.

I'm very excited and honoured to be able to join in on this conversation today. I would like to thank the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain for bringing Motion 501 forward. I appreciate his connection to the issue as well, and I appreciate that he brought his personal story to the House. I think it is an important issue considering that there were around 7,329 children in care in Alberta in 2018 according to the Alberta human services website.

Now, whether we're talking about adopting a child in government care or a private adoption, which has been brought up in the debate so far, it is incredibly important that we do work to make these programs as efficient as possible, but I think, more importantly, it's incredibly important that we do our best to create a transition that works in a positive manner for both the children and the families going through this experience.

I would also like to thank the current Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women, who has already been thanked, but I would like to thank her in her role as a member in the 29th Legislature for her work on Bill 206. Of course, Bill 206 sought to amend adoption laws to allow families looking to adopt to post their profiles online, making it easier for the birth mothers to choose the family that would eventually care for their child. During the debate I think that overall our caucus supported that motion. I think we moved to put some preamble in it, just recognizing that we need to protect the privacy and safety of both sides. So we were able to work together to pass that bill unanimously.

I would like to reiterate now what was said back then. It is of incredibly high importance that the safety and privacy of both families come before finding efficiencies in the process. I do have grave concerns that finding efficiencies to this government means something quite different than what it means to me. I think that we can all agree that adoption is not something that should be rushed. It's an incredibly sensitive topic, and whether a family decides to adopt a child in care or go through a private adoption, we need to ensure that safeguards are in place to protect all parties and ensure that everyone is as satisfied as possible with the adoption process. Further to that, I think there is a larger discussion that needs to be had that goes beyond making the process go faster and more efficiently.

I want to bring up a news article that was done by the CBC in 2015, which I will of course table tomorrow, which describes an Alberta family who adopted two children in care. This may be a unique circumstance, or it may not be, but within two weeks of meeting the children, the couple moved in with them and became their foster parents. The couple noticed behavioural issues early on but thought that the children just maybe needed some time to settle in and that maybe once the situation was more permanent, things would work themselves out. About a year into the adoption of the children they found out through medical assessment that the children had FASD. From the beginning of the process the couple made it clear that they would not be able to care for a child with FASD. These children required 24/7 supports, which this family was unable to provide.

Of course, this is just one story, and they don't always go that same way. This family went on to put one of the children into a group home, I believe. That was after. Through the fostering process they tried to give the children back. Of course, that is not an easy decision either, but they from the very beginning said that they did not have the ability to support two children with FASD.

Once again, this is just one story, but it highlights the need to have strong communication from the very beginning between families and the caseworkers or adoption agencies through the entire process. Finding positive matches and families that are able to properly provide for these children on a case-by-case basis should be more important than finding efficiencies in the process.

When we talk about making a process like adoption more efficient, I have concerns that this means cutting corners. I have concerns that this means adding more files to our already overburdened front-line workers. If you want to make the process more efficient, cutting red tape, which we've already heard several times in this debate, isn't the answer. Adding more caseworkers is the answer. Taking the time to properly evaluate children and their potential adopters is the answer. I don't think that this motion necessarily addresses either of those issues. If we really want to help those parents, the adoptive parents, and the children through this process, we need to ensure that when cases like the one I described arise, we are saying, "Yes, we will support your family in raising these children; yes, there are supports for this child with FASD," that we're not closing the file and saying, "This is your problem now." That is essentially what happened. When the evaluation came through after the children had been adopted already, there were no supports for these children because they weren't originally diagnosed with this FASD.

Now, I do understand that it's much easier to say that you want to make the process more efficient without recognizing the fact that there needs to be a major overhaul, which was mentioned, and I would be happy to chat more about that. I think it's important that we find real, concrete solutions to this. Of course, you can only put so much in emotion, but finding efficiencies is very high level, and I think that we should dig deeper into this issue.

I think that we need to do some major overhauls in how we assess and support these children with disabilities and children in care. The fact is that there is a statistic that 30 per cent of children in care have FASD. How this motion is going to help them: I would love for somebody to address that question. Until we look at properly funding these children and until we find better tools to assess and support these children, really, to me, it's all lip service.

I understand that the member that brought this forward maybe was looking at a different instance than I am. I'm looking at children in care with complex disabilities, maybe not the same instances as he was talking about, but it is a question that I have.

Now, I think that if you want to make the adoption process more efficient for families and you want to reduce the number of children in care, which is a big concern for me, then it's important to properly fund these families. Programs like the Alberta child benefit, $25-a-day child care, school nutrition programs, higher minimum wages even for parents who happen to be under 18 years old, and better supports for children with or without disabilities will support that vision.

To be clear, I do plan to support this motion, but I am very interested in hearing some concrete steps about ideas that the member or other members have in making this process more efficient. An instance was brought up where there is a bird bath in the home in the backyard, which sounds like a silly hurdle for a family looking to adopt, but I would like to know how that policy was implemented in the first place. Was there an instance or many instances where this actually became an issue, where a child was hurt because of a bird bath in the backyard?

Those are questions I have, and that's really my biggest concern with some of the conversations that are being brought forward by the members of the government when we talk about cutting red tape. Many of these policies got there for a reason, and until you can prove that they're redundant or they're not helping, then I'm not going to sit here and support saying that we need to find efficiencies in every department, saying that we need to cut red tape in every department. In many instances it's the regulations that move these processes forward quicker, maybe not specifically in this instance, but it becomes an even longer and bigger task when there aren't processes in place. We need to look at that.

Overall I support the idea of finding efficiencies in ministries, but like I said, I don't think it means the same thing to me as it means to the members on the other side of the House. With that being said, I do appreciate the member bringing Motion 501 forward. I do plan to support it. I would love to hear more about his or any member's ideas about how we can strengthen this process for adoption.

Thank you very much for the time to speak, and I appreciate everyone's ears today. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I also would like to congratulate you on your election, and the Speaker himself as well despite being absent right now. I'm also very pleased to rise to speak on this point, the second time a nonpartisan point with co-operation. I'm sure the members opposite are hoping that there is wherewithal for this co-operation, just as I am, all the way to the end of this session.

I do appreciate the comments made by the members opposite on the need for regulation and process and also by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud about having appropriate safeguards in place. I think that in no way would this motion be in opposition to that. Really, what we're looking for is a true evaluation of where those safeguards are appropriate, where the regulations are truly needed. We have to remember today that we're talking about the livelihoods of children, children who, we all know, by almost every single metric we can evaluate are better off in homes with loving parents and a stable home. So the sooner we can move these children into those stable homes, the better it is for those children.

Those children have an interest, but so do we in this House. As the representatives in government, as the state we have an interest in healthy families, an interest in healthy children continuing to go on, so if there are burdens in the way when it comes to red tape, when it comes to problems with adoption, we have an obligation here to look very seriously at those and see where they're needed.

Before we get into the particulars that were mentioned by my hon. colleague moving the motion, I want to speak about a dinner that I had a few months ago with a couple in La Crête who went through the adoption process. They did not have a very good time with it. They tried to make an adoption process application here in Alberta; there are not opportunities to adopt easily between provinces within Canada. This is one of the first hurdles they ran into. Here in Alberta they were told that they were looking at seven years' wait time before they could be parents. Now, anybody who is an expecting parent, anybody who is a parent, a mother or father, for the first time is ecstatic and overjoyed about that situation. Instead, this opportunity brought them anxiety. Instead, they were wondering for year upon year: have we been chosen yet and were just not made aware after the child was born? The concern of not knowing puts a huge emotional weight on these families. Perhaps they were chosen, or maybe they were never going to be over these seven years and were waiting in vain.

The cost itself is burdensome. We're looking at tens of thousands of dollars, as the member before me already mentioned. These are not burdens that average families can maintain easily, and their desire, with this high cost of tens of thousands of dollars, is simply to love children, to bring children into this world with a safe home, one where they can continue to grow and be constructive citizens of our society after they leave that home. That is what they've chosen to pay this cost for.

If there are ways in which we can try and limit those burdens, we need to make sure we do that, first and foremost. As much as I recognize those concerns from the members opposite – and I want to work with those members, and I appreciate their constructive concern – we have to take very seriously any red tape or any burdens that are not needed that only make it more difficult.

Now, one thing I really want to focus on today is the problem that we're having particularly with domestic adoptions here. If we're looking at domestic options in Canada, they're far, far lower as a percentage rate than they are in the United States. In the United States we're looking at somewhere in the neighbourhood of 85 per cent of adoptions being domestic. Now, we're also looking here in Canada at domestic adoptions being around 54 per cent of adoptions.

It's also true that the first adoption laws were brought in in the United States in the 1850s. By comparison, the first laws in the books that I'm aware of – and I stand to be corrected – were in the early 1920s here in Canada. So it's fine for us to look to our neighbours to the south to see ways that they have found innovations within their jurisdictions to make sure that these children with that highly urgent need do get the homes that they desire and that I think we have an obligation to provide for them.

We're going to do our best here. I'm going to do my best to make the case that we need to look to other jurisdictions for innovations within our system, not just the United States but across the world where they have a high standard of regulation and supports, to make sure that those children have their needs met but also that are not burdensome to the point where a bird bath, perhaps, as the member before me stated, could potentially be a reason to not have these children in a loving home.

We can look at lots of the work done previously. If we look at what the United Conservative caucus did in 2017, listening to advocates when we pushed for Alberta to end our ban on posting adoption profiles online, the last of its kind in Canada. These are concrete steps that we can take, and that, for example, again, passed with multi-party support, unanimous support within this House. I am genuinely hoping sincerely that we can find co-operation on this point and others so we can continue to find efficiencies, yes, and co-operation where these children are more quickly and readily placed in that stable, loving home.

Where America has had the most success is necessarily on those domestic adoptions. It's not necessarily more than any other country. Many other countries have also made many advances as well when it comes to reducing the regulations around it.

We also have to look, as mentioned by the members opposite, at the foster to adopt your child to care program that we have here in Alberta. These are people who reach out and provide a stable home for these children. As the Member for Edmonton-West Henday mentioned, many of these children have fetal alcohol syndrome and other behavioural issues through no fault of their own that make adoption a lot more difficult. We have to make sure that there are supports there. Contrary to what folks might believe, it is still not in the best interests of those children with those particular challenges to end up remaining in those foster care homes until they, quote, age out. This is the worst-case scenario for many of these children. What we do need to do as best as we can is make sure we find ways to move those children into those loving, secure, and stable homes with the supports that they need.

I would encourage members to take a look at this motion seriously as a moral imperative that we have in this House to support it. Every time that we have a child aging out in foster care or we have a child that ends up going into foster care because they were not readily adopted initially or a couple who are looking to adopt and end up going international at a huge personal expense of their own, we are doing a disservice to those children, those who are most vulnerable in our society.

It's for this reason that I support the member's motion, Motion 501, and I implore everyone in this Assembly to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. government deputy whip.

Mr. Schow: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise in this House for the first time in my early tenure as the MLA for Cardston-Siksika, and I'd like to take a moment to congratulate you on your election as Deputy Speaker.

Last month the United Conservative Party was elected with a strong mandate to protect families, and a large part of that is the children that are a part of those families. I think I speak for everyone in this House when I say that I believe every child deserves to grow up in a loving and caring home. There aren't many more daunting or important files tasked to us as provincial legislators than that of adoption. That is why it is such an honour to have an opportunity to address you in favour of this Motion 501.

I'd also like to thank the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain for sharing his personal experiences with adoption. It was certainly a heartfelt story and was not lost on this member.

I'd like to take a look for a moment at the costs associated with adopting a child. The process itself can take north of six months while a wait for a healthy infant in Alberta can take between two and seven years. While this is shorter for children with health issues or other children who may be up for adoption later in life as a result of family situations, typically involving the government in actually separating a child from their family, the process is, in any case, quite long. In addition to time, which includes filling out long applications, going through a long and invasive home study, and often hearings, the prospective family must pay thousands of dollars for the home study and even $250 simply to file the documents, and often you have associated legal fees. By no means is this easy for any family. It is significant, it is difficult, and it's an emotional investment.

That is why, Madam Speaker, I believe it is so important that we look at what can be improved within this file. It is not serving people the way we would like it to or could hope for. This motion makes it very clear where the priorities should be. We need to promote our prospective families and make this an easier decision to step into. The daunting nature of the process is discouraging for many families, who are opening their homes to children and fulfilling this invaluable role in society.

We can do this by reducing the red tape burden on families who are seeking to adopt. At the end of the day, there should be very little that can prevent children from joining a loving family who genuinely wants what's best for them. After all, the impact of missing out on family is far worse than that of a child growing up in a family where the basic dangers of childhood would be.

Families who are opening up their homes to adopt should not be prevented from doing so by having items that surround their house that would not be given a second thought by biological parents. We do not ask families to remove bird baths, which has been referenced several times in this discussion, when a child is born to them, so why would that stop people who are looking to adopt?

Madam Speaker, there are children who are currently being kept from loving and supporting families because of excessive regulation. This is unacceptable. We know that sometimes government needs to just get out of the way, so I urge my fellow members of this Chamber to vote in favour of this motion for the sake of children and parents stuck in this system.

Much of my own life has been dedicated to service. Behind the crusty facade of a former athlete with bad knees, I spent a lot of time overseas, and part of that was spent living in the former Soviet Union, Russia, between the years 2004 and 2006. My time there was spent serving and helping people to quit addictions, teaching English classes, and helping people better their lives, but some of the most rewarding time that I spent was in the service working with children and trying to provide a better life for them, creating sports environments and addiction programs. But I also spent time in maternity wards cleaning up, where many babies were born every day, some of which would go directly into orphanages and others to loving parents. Those that were lucky enough to go to loving parents would leave, and those that were not would go to orphanages, where sometimes conditions were substandard at best.

I encountered what I believe to be a product of this system one day when I was coming home from teaching an English class. After getting off the bus, going back to my apartment, I encountered a young boy. He couldn't have been any older than nine years of age. He was dirty, and he was asking for money. Madam Speaker, it broke my heart because this boy did not ask for this plight. He did not ask for this circumstance in life. I sat down with him, and rather than just give him money, I wanted to hear his story. I said, "Where's your mother?" He didn't know. I said, "Where's your father?" He didn't know. "Do you have any brothers or sisters?" "Yes, but I don't know where they are either." The best I could do was sit down and listen and offer him a can of Coke and a chocolate bar. He looked to me like a kid who hadn't had one in a while.

This, I believe, is where kids could end up if not put into a loving, caring, safe home. This is where children can end up if not given the opportunity that many others are, like we are fortunate enough to have ourselves, growing up in this wonderful country or places abroad with loving family. I would do anything to help, and I urge this House to help find ways to reduce regulation, the barriers to those looking to find a child.

I speak in favour of this Motion 501 because I have seen the other side. I have seen the conditions that some live in in orphanages overseas, and I hope that we can reduce the burden on their systems by adopting more children here in our country. There are many other stories like the one I just told you, and if we intervene and find ways to make adoption more feasible for families here in Alberta, I'm certain that we can benefit the lives of many children, and our own society will see the benefit of their contribution later in life.

I'd like to thank the member opposite, Edmonton-Whitemud, for mentioning overseas adoption and the need to improve that system as well.

As a father of two, with another child on the way, I love my role as a father. I love it. There's no greater calling than being a parent, and I would feel remiss if I stood in the way or if this House stood in the way of someone else who had that same desire but couldn't do that on their own. So I ask members of this Chamber to vote in favour of Motion 501.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Mr. Loewen: Is there somebody else?

The Deputy Speaker: Nobody is standing right now. I will recognize the Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yeah, I would like to take a moment to talk about Motion 501, the motion to "urge the government to take all necessary measures to make the process for all forms of adoption more efficient and timely for families." It was interesting listening to the member that proposed this motion and to his personal experience with adoption and how we can make this process better and more efficient and, I guess, a better experience for all the people involved, including the children.

While I was sitting here, I just opened up the Alberta adoption web page, looking at the profiles of some of the children here that are available for adoption right now. I have to say that it's somewhat heartbreaking to think of these children that don't have a home right now and are looking for that opportunity to have loving parents and to think that there are loving parents out there right now that are going through this process and are somewhat burdened by the process they have to go through to be able to adopt a child.

I think it's important to remember that the number one thing is the safety of the children. We need to make sure that this process provides these children with an opportunity to go to a safe home and a loving home and that they have that opportunity to live, I guess, a life similar to what other children have that have parents in their lives right now, to have that opportunity to live like that.

I think what happens a lot of times in government is that things progress over time and that regulations and rules and paperwork get developed, and there are probably situations that maybe lead to the increase of those documents and those forms and the things that are asked and the things that become rules and regulations. But, unfortunately, far too often we find in government that nobody actually reviews the process and the paperwork at some point and decides: "Okay. Is this still relevant? Are we accomplishing what we need to accomplish with this process?" I think that's what this motion does. It gives us an opportunity to reflect and review this process that's the adoption process here in Alberta, to have a chance to review it and make sure that it's fulfilling what it needs to do. I think we owe that to not only the children, but we owe that to the potential parents that want to take advantage of the adoption process.

Now, I know several family members and some good friends that have been through the adoption process, and a lot of times adoption, of course, is one of the most rewarding and beautiful experiences that a married couple or a couple can go through. That's great. That's perfect. That's what it's supposed to be. It's supposed to be a beautiful and rewarding experience for both the parents and the child, but it can also be upsetting and depressing. I know different parents that have been through the adoption process and who have sat on the waiting list and answered all these questions and really had to open up their hearts and their lives and everything to go through this process and then to be sitting and waiting and not knowing year after year, waiting for a child to be chosen for them.

I think that, as much as we can, we need to make sure that this process is more like the first instance, where it's this beautiful and rewarding experience. I think we need to aim towards that, and I think that by removing some of the barriers and some of these things that maybe just don't make sense today as much as when they were first implemented in the process as far as forms and regulations and that sort of thing – we need to make sure that we can look at these and have that opportunity to review.

When I think of parents that are willing to go through the adoption process, these parents are obviously people that are willing to open up their lives, open up their home, open up their hearts for children that they didn't conceive and bear themselves. You know, it takes a great amount of love and a great amount of openness to be able to make that decision and get into that place in their lives where they're doing this. We just owe it to these people to have this so that it's a streamlined process that protects the child but also makes the experience for the potential parents as positive as possible.

Again, you know, for anybody that has a chance, just jump on the government website and look at these children here that are looking for homes and are looking for placement. I mean, just look at the pictures, and look at these children. It's kind of heartbreaking to think that these children are in this situation in their lives where they really are looking for a home, and they really need to have that opportunity to be in a home with loving parents.

Again, I want to thank the member for proposing this motion. I think it's an important motion. I think it's something that we need to support and pass in this Legislature and, like I say, make this process better for all involved.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I'll ask the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain to close debate.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been an honour and a privilege to listen to everyone here today and to take in the important viewpoints offered by many of the hon. members. Specifically, I'd like to reference the comments from the members for Edmonton-Whitemud and Edmonton-West Henday.

I truly believe that this is a nonpartisan issue. You know, adoption is a powerful force for incredible good, and I don't think anyone in this House would argue that it isn't important to make that as accessible as possible while protecting and ensuring the safety of the children.

As this debate draws to a close, I would like to urge all of my hon. colleagues to support this motion. Frankly, it's too important for us not to because at this end of this motion there are children waiting for a forever home. While I'm sure that there are still many matters of difference between us and even in how this ought to be carried out, I hope we can all come together in a firm affirmation that adoption should be as timely and as efficient as possible.

Thank you very much.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 8(1) to allow us to move to Government Bills and Orders so that we may begin maiden speeches.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Glasgo moved, seconded by Ms Rosin, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Sorry.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As you can see, I'm very excited, and it's a tremendous honour to move the acceptance of the throne speech presented by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta. I would like to thank Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor for setting forth this vision for the Legislature. I would also like to thank the hon. Premier for the opportunity to move this Speech from the Throne.

The Speech from the Throne outlined our government's detailed and ambitious plan to get Albertans back to work. It outlined our commitments to making life better for Albertans, to get Alberta's fiscal house in order, and to stand up to those who would have Alberta treated as a doormat for Ottawa rather than an equal and co-operative partner in Confederation. It also outlined our commitment to honour the dignity of this institution that we all fought to be able to sit in. As members we have an opportunity to participate in democracy and represent the voices of our constituents thoughtfully and with reverence. Overall, one could suggest that the Speech from the Throne demonstrated a marked shift towards optimism, a focus on the things that matter to Alberta families, the people who built this province, and the next generation that will carry our vision into the future.

I am humbled to stand here today as the newly elected Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat. I have the privilege of representing over 50,000 people from Hilda to Bassano, Scandia to Medicine Hat, from Redcliff to Brooks, just to name a few. On April 16 I was elected with 65 per cent of the vote and earned the trust of over 13,000 Albertans who are inspired by our government's positive vision for renewal and prosperity. I could not be more grateful to those who have supported me and continue to offer their kind words of encouragement and guidance. Whether you believed in me in the nomination, knocked on doors, made phone calls, delivered lunches, scrutineered, entered data, or offered your prayers, know that your support means everything to me, and this is just as much your seat as it is mine.

I come from a very tight-knit and supportive family who has taught me from a young age very important lessons that I will take with me into my career in public service. The first lesson is the importance of standing up for what you believe in. This was impressed upon me very early on in my life, and if you ask my mom, speaking up has always come perhaps a little too naturally to me. The second is to never book anything in November because that's rifle hunting season, and as a family that time is sacred, and we can't miss any opportunity to put meat in the freezer. But the third of these lessons, and perhaps the most important, is to always leave things better than when you found them. I truly believe that within the Speech from the Throne this message is expressly articulated.

Renewal is exactly what is needed for the constituents of Brooks-Medicine Hat. Over the past few years – and it was very obvious while I was door-knocking – people seemed to have lost that hope. Whether I was in Medicine Hat talking with young families about the erosion of choice in education or in Bassano talking with seniors about the need for predictable funding for health care, in Scandia talking with farmers about the need for protection of their property rights, or in Brooks speaking with some of the many oil and gas workers who are unemployed or underemployed, the takeaway was the same. The people of Brooks-Medicine Hat, by and large, felt as though our common-sense rural values had been betrayed by a coalition of governments who seemed more concerned with appeasing the ivory towers of so-called green, foreign-funded activists than meaningfully consulting everyday Albertans. They felt as though their governments were working against them, and they ultimately felt like their representatives had forgotten who put them there in the first place.

Brooks-Medicine Hat is a brand new constituency made up of the county of Newell, Cypress county, the city of Brooks, the city of Medicine Hat, the town of Bassano, and many charming places in between such as Hilda, Schuler, Duchess, Rosemary, Scandia, Millicent, Patricia, Rolling Hills, Tilley, CFB Suffield, Ralston, and Redcliff, just to name a few. Although the boundaries themselves are new, the history is as deep as the coulees and as humble as the First Peoples who were the original stewards of this land. The constituency has a rich history of agriculture, farming, and ranching – the ultimate act of environmental stewardship – as well as many greenhouses that serve as job creators to our local economies. Further, Brooks-Medicine Hat has a robust tradition of being a leader in the oil and gas industry, with many companies, both large and small, having roots in the area.

I had the pleasure of growing up in southern Alberta. I was born in Medicine Hat and went down the road to university in Lethbridge. I decided to run in Brooks-Medicine Hat because I believe in the common-sense work ethic and generous nature of the people that call this place home alongside me. I firmly believe in the good of everyday Albertans, who know how best to care for their families, communities, farms, and businesses without the ever-encroaching hand of government. In southern Alberta we are the kind of people for whom, if you look someone in the eye and shake their hand, well, that might as well be a contract, and you treat that handshake like a bond. We do not expect much of government, but we do expect that governments and politicians will be accountable to the people that they represent and follow through on their election promises.

I am proud to be a member of this United Conservative government's caucus, that is already demonstrating to Albertans near and far that we are willing to do what is right and follow through on the election platform that received a resounding majority from Albertans just last month. It is a great privilege and responsibility that has been bestowed upon myself and all of my colleagues to sit in this Chamber. This privilege has been given to fewer than 1,000 people in our province's history, and I am proud to be the very first member of the Legislature for Brooks-Medicine Hat and grateful to have had the opportunity to move Her Honour's Speech from the Throne today.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is truly a privilege to rise in the House today for my first time to second the motion to accept the Speech from the Throne. It is also my absolute pleasure to offer my comments and consideration to the Speech from the Throne.

Perhaps I am biased, but I am of the belief that the riding of Banff-Kananaskis is without a doubt the most beautiful place in Alberta and possibly all of Canada. In the north we begin with Lake Louise, whose bright turquoise waters are a phenomenon known world-wide. In fact, a quick Google image search of "Canada" will bring up numerous photos of this stunning location, further proving the notion that Lake Louise is a destination known to those all across the world as the face of our country.

Travel 60 kilometres south to Banff national park and you will find yourself in yet another internationally recognized Canadian town. In the summer the town is abuzz with tourists scurrying on the sidewalks and hiking, biking, and climbing up or down the towering peaks above. In the winter the tourists put on their woolies and head to the slopes as the sun glistens off the snow and turns the mountains into beautiful, snow-swept marvels.

A short 20-minute drive away and you hit Canmore, a town so famously known for its smaller town feel and the Three Sisters, which might be the most famous set of mountains of all time.

Heading further south, you will drive through Dead Man's Flats, Lac des Arcs, Exshaw, and the stunning Kananaskis Country, created and protected for us by the late Peter Lougheed.

But our riding isn't all mountains. Just past Kananaskis Country is the place that feels most like home to the Saskatchewan-born girl in me. Our riding is blessed to not only encompass the mountains but also to encompass the bald, beautiful prairies, where the skies come alive. We'll continue our riding tour through Springbank, the ideal place for those who want a downtown job but a country lifestyle full of dogs and big backyards, not to mention with Calaway Park in the backyard.

A few kilometres down and past the roundabout is Redwood Meadows, a tight-knit community situated on Tsuut'ina land, where the trees and their many tree worms are as hardy as the people who live there.

A little further up the road is Bragg Creek, known for their western culture and their trails and campsites. People, including, I'm sure, many who are listening right now, travel from all over Alberta to get a taste of camping in the wide open with the mountains in the distance.

Further up the road we have Millarville and Priddis, communities known for their fruitful farmers' markets and their thundering horse races in the summer.

Our riding also includes two First Nations communities. The first is the Stoney Nation, comprised of the Bearspaw, Wesley, and Chiniki bands, where the wild horses gallop freely along the TransCanada highway. The other is the Tsuut'ina Nation, who has long been a champion of economic prosperity and independent social services such as their women's empowerment centre, which they are currently in the process of building.

What this virtual tour is to say is that Banff-Kananaskis is a riding much more diverse than its name would imply. It is diverse in landscape but also in economy. Both halves of the riding have entirely different economic drivers than the other, each with their own advantages and challenges.

One half is essentially solely reliant on tourism. In fact, tourism constitutes 93 per cent of Banff's GDP every year. Combined, the towns of Canmore and Banff welcome more tourists each day than they have permanent residents. This influx can at times make the local infrastructure burden difficult to bear on those who reside within. These areas are also situated in environmentally sensitive areas that are covered with dense coniferous forests, oftentimes prone to wildfire, and home to critters of all shapes and sizes. The tightrope between preserving natural beauty and ensuring our great outdoors can be enjoyed and support a thriving tourist industry is one that must be carefully walked to ensure the sustainability of the industry.

On the other side of the riding are nestled some of Alberta's most breathtaking cattle ranches. Situated on the flat prairie with the Rocky Mountains distant in the rear view, we live in what has recently become a scary time for those working in agriculture as forces from both government and private industry spread fear and misinformation to further the agenda of what they may consider newer, more hip industries. Ensuring that the positive stories and the factual truths behind our farmers, ranchers, and agriculture industry are heard is something that must not be taken lightly.

This side of the riding is also home to many hard-working Albertans whose livelihood has been provided for either by employment in or related to entrepreneurship in or innovation in our world-class energy industry. It is no hidden secret that this industry has suffered insurmountable blows over the last few years, from a lack of pipeline capacity, uncertain regulatory environments, increase in targeted taxes, and a global campaign to land-lock the oil. This industry, too, has sure seen its hardships.

Another industry that is quite unique to our riding is the film industry. Walt Disney, Pixar, Universal Studios, and Warner Bros. are all companies that frequent the lands of our riding. Productions such as Inception, The Revenant, Interstellar, War for the Planet of the Apes, Brokeback Mountain, The Bourne Legacy, and Superman were all filmed right in the heart of Kananaskis Country. Notable TV shows include both Heartland and Game of Thrones.

But times have been tough lately. Many businesses in the mountains have seen their visitor numbers up but their sales dollars down as Albertans have lost consumer confidence in their province and have lost the ability to spend their money as lucratively as they once could. Many ranchers have seen their property rights threatened. Many an oil executive or experienced engineer in Springbank have found themselves suddenly without work and no prospect of future employment on the horizon, and many a film production has moved to other jurisdictions, where the incentives to produce far exceed those we have here in Alberta.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Deputy Chair of Committees, I am pleased today to support the throne speech, which so eloquently and clearly outlined our government's priorities to get Alberta back on track and to help the people of Banff-Kananaskis. I am proud to support our plans to restore and grow our energy industry in an environmentally friendly way through a royalty guarantee, a commitment to investing in new innovations and technology, and a mandate for heavy industrial emitters to focus on emissions reduction. I am proud to support our plans to bring back investment and to diversify our economy through the job-creation tax cut, which will see our corporate business tax rate cut to the lowest in Canada and most of North America. I am proud to support our plans to ease the burdens on small-business owners and empower them to continue creating jobs for others by enacting our open for business act, which will in the coming days bring in labour reforms that will both protect our employees and also grow the accessible job market for them.

I'm proud to support our plans to help families and seniors living on fixed incomes to have more discretionary income at the end of each month, to save, shop locally with, or travel with by repealing the carbon tax, a move that will put $1.4 billion back in the pockets of Albertans. I'm proud of our plan to double our tourism industry by 2030 while ensuring environmental protections stay in place, and I am proud to support our film industry by converting our quarterly accessible grant to a continuously accessible tax credit. I am proud to support and be a part of the mandate of this government.

My political roots began back in Saskatchewan. I grew up in the lovely city of Regina, a city named after Queen Victoria Regina. Ironically, the city was granted its name by Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, also more commonly known as Louise Caroline Alberta, who our great province was named after.

Still in Regina, my father was and is the hardest working small-business owner I've ever met. Throughout my life he instilled in me the importance of meticulousness, integrity, thankless hard work, and the value of personal relationships. By the time I was in grade 2, he'd already helped me create my own first set of business cards and helped to mentor my best friend and I in starting our own small café out of my own kitchen, with a completed foldable food menu, at which we sold creative but not so tasty food selections to my parents and family for 10 cents apiece. From a young age my dad believed that I could be whoever and whatever I wanted to be as long as I gave it my all.

My mother, on the other hand, exudes a love for life wherever she goes. She's a bouncy, goofy ray of sunshine who loves arts, crafts, laughter, and playing her tuba. She taught me that life is meant for loving and that if you don't take joy in the little things, you're missing out on the full experience.

My grandma, now 89, taught me that there is no problem in life which a good heart-to-heart, a healthy laugh, a detoxing dose of Dr.

Phil, or a delicious serving of meat loaf can't fix. And my grandpa, who stays atop the latest technological trends better than I do and who also began building his own airplane from scratch in his ripe mid-70s, taught me that it is always the right time to be curious and learn something new.

Collectively and most importantly, my entire family taught me that living a life of gratitude and faith in God above would help me navigate through life's hardest times. Ephesians 1:11, quote: for he works out all things to fit his plan and purpose. Despite being an unlikely candidate, now an MLA by the young age of 24, I have come to fully understand the gravity of these words.

Between all the things I learned from my family, I grew up with an unrelenting desire to better the world around me. I previously worked for Coca-Cola, a company which I've always thought does an incredible job of marketing the positivity and the goodness in life and inspiring all of us to think a little differently. It was a company that truly aligned with the purpose I wanted in life, yet as time passed, I could see that Alberta needed more help than just a feel-good message. No amount of brown sugar water and positivity could sugar-coat the fact that people around me were struggling to make ends meet, pulling their children out of sports to keep food on the table, closing the doors of the businesses they had dedicated their life's work to and, in some instances, even declaring bankruptcy. It was in this realization that I knew the run for politics was where I belonged.

To sit in this chair, walk on these carpets, and breathe in this legislative air is a privilege unexplainable by word. To be able to serve where so few have served before and to dedicate my life's work to helping better the lives of those around me is nothing short of a lifelong dream come true. Getting here was not easy, as I'm sure my colleagues and fellow members can attest, but the hard work is only beginning.

Just as April showers bring May flowers, so too has an April election brought May reflection. You can feel it all around you: Albertans looking back at the last four years of their lives and breathing a sigh of relief. There is a distinguishable feeling of refreshment and renewal that has swept across our province since the election. Albertans everywhere can finally feel comfortable knowing that the province they love and call home will soon be reinvigorated with the regular buzz of economic stimulation, consumer confidence, and good old Albertan patriotism.

The task ahead of us is huge. I sincerely hope that both sides of this House can find a way to put aside partisan politics and collaborate with each other to do what is best for Albertans. It is truly sad that we have come to a place across all parliamentary democracies where members speaking in the House cannot even be heard for being drowned out by accusations and insults from members across the aisle. We were elected to represent our constituents and be their voice, but partisanship has divided us in a place where we should be listening to the thoughts and ideas of others to better the world around us. I've always been of the belief that fostering dialogue, no matter how controversial the subject, is always better than turning backs and demonizing the other.

There are 4.2 million Albertans counting on us to cultivate an environment that allows them to thrive and be their best selves. We simply cannot afford to squander our precious time here in office pursuing any other mission than that. Based on a standard four-year election cycle, we have precisely 2,102,400 minutes to represent our constituents, and I encourage every member of this House to make the best of every single one.

In conclusion, it is my absolute honour to be granted the privilege to represent the constituents of Banff-Kananaskis for the next four years of government. Above the Chamber doors in the Saskatchewan Legislature, which is located in my hometown of Regina, Brad Wall had engraved the words: did you leave things better than the way you found them? My only aspiration is that after my four years in this House I will confidently be able to say that myself and all of those sitting around me left Alberta better than the way we found it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you to the hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you. I'd like to start by saying that it's truly an honour to be the elected representative for Highwood and have the opportunity to address this Chamber in my maiden speech. I'd like to start by congratulating you on your appointment. I've no doubt that you'll represent in the fair, impartial manner that is a tradition of the position.

I also respectfully acknowledge that we are situated on Treaty 6 territory, traditional lands of First Nations and Métis people.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a born-and-raised proud Albertan, son of a nurse and paramedic, Ann and Richard. My mother served for years in the health care industry at the Foothills hospital, committing her life to the care of others for decades. My father was a graduate of the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology's first-ever paramedicine class. He was one of the principle owners of STARS ambulance system, which was eventually sold to the city of Calgary in 1971 and became the Calgary city EMS service. He founded the Alberta paramedics professional association and worked for years to have paramedics legislated into the Health Disciplines Act of Alberta. Their examples showed me on a daily basis the dedication and honour of our province's health care workers and the importance of an effective health care system.

I was raised on a farm north of Cochrane, spending the early years of my life raising horses and cattle and farming. After high school I went to work on a conventional drilling rig in northern Alberta drilling exploratory wells in what is now the proven fields of Alberta's oil sands. I went back to school, to SAIT, to earn my red seal in a mechanical trade and worked through the ranks from journeyman to supervisor. The oil and gas industry gave me my start, and I know first-hand the value of the trades and the importance of the continued commitment to supporting young Albertans in apprenticeships and the skilled trades. I continued my education and eventually became a project manager, design consultant, then eventually became a shareholder and a business owner. I know what it means to build a company and the pride of being an employer. I also know the pain of having to lay people off.

I'm a proud father of three boys – Caden, Ty, and Trystan – and husband to my beautiful wife, Leanne. We chose Highwood to raise our children because of its strong sense of community, our family roots there, and the level of benevolence and charity that is ingrained in this community. Leanne and I are the custodians of the values our parents instilled in us, values we now strive daily to pass on to our children, small-town values such as respect, honour, and a strong work ethic. Together we are teaching them how these values build strong communities, and we hope to instill in them the morals that build character and lead to a fulfilled life.

As a parent I believe our focus should be on building a better future for our children. We need to provide for them a strong education, an education that will prepare them for the future. All Alberta children deserve a life of unlimited possibilities.

Madam Speaker, the constituency of Highwood, due to the recent boundary review, has greatly changed since the Assembly last sat. Highwood now stretches east to the county of Vulcan, west to Kananaskis, and from the south edge of the city of Calgary, with the Bow River and highway 22X as its northern border, to just south of Okotoks, following 434 Avenue.

Highwood is very diverse, which I believe is truly representative of the qualities that make this province such a special place to live. It is an extraordinary region, a collection of wonderful communities, a great mix of urban, suburban, acreage, and rural, warm and welcoming.

Within the constituency we have four municipalities, which include Foothills county; the town of Black Diamond, which derived its name from the rich coal mines that were abundant there in the early 1900s; Turner Valley, named after Rob and John Turner, who settled it in 1886; and Okotoks. Its name is derived from the Blackfoot word “okatok,” meaning rock. The Blackfoot referred to this area as okatok because of the big rock, which they used as a reference marker in their journeys. The importance of the area to the First Nations was that this area was a safe river crossing across the Sheep River, which dissects Okotoks. This big rock they referred to may be what Highwood is most known for. This famous glacial erratic, notably the largest in the world, was transported by a continental glacier during the last ice age from Mount Edith Cavell and now rests in a flat plains area right in between Okotoks and Black Diamond-Turner Valley.

Madam Speaker, the first door I knocked on in my campaign was that of a retired elderly lady in her 80s. Her husband had recently passed. She expressed to me how in the past her husband was the one that showed the most interest in discussing and debating politics, but she now felt that she could no longer sit idly by. She and her husband spent their entire lives shaping this province, with the knowledge that the prosperity they worked towards would be passed on to future generations, but she saw the future they had worked for so hard eroding away. It should always be the inherent responsibility of every generation to pass on something better to the next generation, a future unhindered by regular deficits and a growing, unmanageable debt. We need to re-establish our strong and free society so that our children have the same opportunities to thrive that we did when we were growing up. This responsibility now lies with us right here, right now.

As the campaign progressed, we knocked on thousands of doors and attended hundreds of events, and the needs of the residents of Highwood became even more clear, the need for jobs, accountability for taxpayers' dollars, and a fair deal for Alberta. Too many nights I returned home with a heavy heart, full of stories of families who had lost their jobs, with no hope of new employment, families that had exhausted their life savings and were wondering how they were going to make their next mortgage payment.

The residents of Highwood have entrusted me to bring their voice to this government, and I'm truly honoured to be elected the MLA for Highwood and share a list of names that includes the hon. George Groeneveld, Don Tannas, and George Wolstenholme.

In my mind, there can be no doubt that the most important feature of the constituency is its people. Highwood has a sense of charity and community that embodies the true nature of Alberta's spirit. I have been proud to play a small part in a few of these such as the fundraiser for Lukah, an infant diagnosed with a large tumour and in need of a blood transfusion. This is a community that bands together in times of difficulty.

Madam Speaker, I believe above all else that the most valuable resource we have here in Alberta is the hard-working, caring residents that have chosen to live here, and that is why I am pleased to support a throne speech that has a strong plan to restore jobs and renew our economy, a plan based on proven strategies and policies, a plan to restore low taxes to create jobs, growth, encourage economic activity, and increase revenues for the province, a plan that will once again make Alberta a safe place to start a business, invest, and raise a family, a throne speech that lays out a plan to end the punishing carbon tax so that life can once again be affordable for families, especially our seniors and those on fixed or low incomes.

It is a throne speech that advocates for a fair deal for our energy sector, which is vital to Alberta. This key industry had its beginning in the Highwood community. On May 14, 1914, near Turner Valley oil and gas first flowed from the Dingman No. 1 discovery well. The oil and gas industry for Alberta began on that day. This gas plant site is now an Alberta historic resource site, and though it's no longer active, the oil and gas sector continues to be important to Highwood as an employer of people and as a generator of wealth for this province. It is essential that we work to positively advocate for our ethically and environmentally produced oil. It's time we dispel the lies and tell the world the truth about our energy sector.

In addition to oil, Highwood is an economically diverse constituency, home to rich agriculture, cattle ranches, horses, farming, hobby farms, oil, gas, movie and filming sets, tourism, music, and art and culture. The natural beauty of Highwood has brought many filmmakers to the area to shoot their movies, starting with the film Northwest Stamped in 1947 to Silver Streak, Superman II and Superman III, and, most recently, the Netflix original Hell on Wheels. Our fertile lands produce top quality beef, chicken, pork, honey, and grain commodities. The area is a hub for horse breeders for racing, rodeo, jumping, polo, dressage, and day-to-day farming uses. It is not a surprise that our constituency is home to the Millarville racetrack and ag society, Hebson Arena, and Calgary Polo Club, among others.

However, Madam Speaker, even with all of our abundances Highwood faces some serious challenges. In addition to the need for a strong economy, job creation, support for our natural resources and agriculture, and improvements to our health care and education, Highwood faces a critical water shortage and continued high levels of rural crime. Highwood faces a similar crisis to that of all of Alberta, the need for a pipeline, in this case a water pipeline. Due to the substantial growth of our communities the access to additional water licences has now become crucial to the sustainability of our area, not just to allow for the future residential growth but to supply our commercial and business sector so that we can continue to expand our small-town economies. This is crucial to keeping the tax costs down for our residents.

Madam Speaker, I believe that one of the most important duties of every government is to provide safety for its residents. I'm proud of our strategy to address rural crime so that residents will once again feel safe in their homes. I look forward to working diligently to gain the confidence of my constituents to show that this government has a plan that will make life safer for all of our rural areas.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to be here, and I look forward to representing the people of Highwood.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any comments or questions?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak? The Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you. It is my honour to rise today for the first time and address this Assembly. Congratulations to you on your election as Deputy Speaker, and thank you as well, Deputy Speaker, for the opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne.

I would like to begin by thanking and honouring the constituents of Lethbridge-East for entrusting me to represent them and be their voice here in the Legislature. Lethbridge has a population of just over 100,000 people and is often recognized as being Alberta's fourth-largest city but serves a much larger community as a central hub for a larger area all around southern Alberta, whose number then soars to approximately 350,000 people. We have strong roots in our land as people from the First Nations of the Kainai and Piikani as well as the Métis live all around us. Farmers for generations have given us a strong heritage in agriculture and food processing.

Lethbridge is diverse in the sense of welcoming significant numbers of new Canadians to our city and our province. Many cultures, including Sudanese, Bhutanese, and Nepalese families, have come to Lethbridge and made this their home over the past few years. This is not new for Lethbridge as we have families from all over the world. In a community of 100,000 these cultures make for a rich, varied, and, by necessity, inclusive environment. One of our most historical and treasured sites is the Nikka Yuko Japanese garden, which commemorates how beautiful things can sometimes grow and help in the healing after adversity and conflict.

We see diversity and inclusion again in our city by having both the Lethbridge College and the University of Lethbridge. I am proud to say that I am a red seal journeyman carpenter, having graduated from the Lethbridge College in 2000, and had the opportunity to use these skills on many occasions at both institutions. These schools draw approximately 15,000 students annually to Lethbridge as well as faculty and staff, creating a vibrant community of learning, research and having a strong impact on our economy.

The Speech from the Throne highlights how important it is for our government to focus on our students, who are our future, and seek the highest quality of education possible where the results of their learning prepares them for success, no matter which avenue they take. Whether matching our universities to the competitive global market or developing the recognition of our skilled trades as vital in our workforce and economy, Lethbridge can play a key role in achieving many of these goals as we have the marketplace with stable jobs to employ our graduates. We are fortunate to have one of the most stable economies in the province, one that balances public service and private enterprise, research and development, agriculture, food production, and construction and technology, to name but a few.

Another strength in our diversity is our seniors, a large and vibrant part of our community. We are a southern hub for retirement. We see many farmers pass on the lifeline of our agricultural commerce, the family farm, to the next generation and then move to the city. They and many others come to Lethbridge for the stable real estate market, access to medical and health facilities and services, municipal parks and pathways, public transportation, arts and culture, and numerous other amenities and benefits, which is why our government is so focused on jobs and the economy, to make sure that the people who work so very hard their entire lives raising families, paying taxes, building our province and our country have the opportunity, availability, and affordable access to the services they need and deserve.

In recognizing our diversity, I also want to recognize the often forgotten middle class in Lethbridge, the people who go to work every day as nurses and doctors, carpenters, electricians, teachers and counsellors, police officers, golf course maintenance workers, first responders, professionals, mechanics, secretaries, and countless other trades, professional volunteers, parents, and advocates who give of themselves to make our city a better place to live. I know these people. I have worked with them, been served by them, been treated by them, and admire them. Many will never hear a thank you for their service or be recognized by an award, so every single one of them who feels like they haven't been heard or seen or remembered, this is for them. Thank you. Thank you for all that you do.

I am very proud to have had the chance to host our current Premier on a number of occasions in our city. Most recently the Premier attended the men's world curling championships, and last summer he also walked in our Whoop-Up Days parade. Both of these events celebrate and highlight our civic pride and collaborative nature. Thank you to the Premier.

It is our responsibility and the high calling of this office to serve all of these individuals with excellence, for that is the standard they should expect. Nothing less will do. It is to be seen in our actions, heard in our words, and displayed in our very character to first hear them and then represent them. This high calling will always find itself at the intersection of today and tomorrow, caught between the demands of the now and the needs of the future. This is why it is so crucial to build our economy, develop our resources and markets, strengthen our trade relationships, and balance our spending. In doing this, we can once again take our place as a global leader in ethics, the economy, and the environment.

I'm very proud to represent Lethbridge in this Legislature. I am proud of the history, the heritage, and the diversity that it embodies. I believe it can be an example to all of Alberta in how it blends its fantastic mosaic of people, culture, and ethnicity into innovative solutions, collaborative partnerships, and economic stability. Lethbridge truly embodies the spirit of our beautiful province of Alberta, and I'm so incredibly proud to stand here today representing the constituency of Lethbridge-East. To all of my constituents: thank you from the bottom of my heart for the honour and privilege of standing here today. I pledge that together we can once again make Alberta strong and free.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), are there any comments or questions?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak?

Ms Lovely: Madam Speaker, I am deeply sensible of the great honour that has been bestowed upon me and the constituency called Camrose, which I proudly represent, by the hon. leader of the government upon this occasion.

First, I would like to congratulate you as our newly elected Deputy Speaker. Given your tenure in this House I have confidence you will provide beneficial guidance and keen insight into the ways of our Assembly. Also, I would like to thank the Lieutenant Governor for her reading of the Speech from the Throne. It is my privilege to deliver my maiden speech at the First Session of the 30th Legislature.

I'm honoured that the constituents of Camrose granted me one of the greatest privileges and chose me to be their representative to bring issues and problems they face to the Legislature. I would like to thank my constituents for their support in giving me this honour to serve them. During my nomination period and once the writ had been dropped, it was an opportunity for me to visit every town in the entire constituency, going door to door introducing myself to the residents. I visited farmers and colonies. As I was intending to educate them about our party and why they should support me, as the case should be, I ended up learning more about them and what they required to be effectively supported. The needs are great in our area, and many have faced hardships in the loss of jobs and economic uncertainty. Many have worked in the oil industry, which has been extremely hard hit over the past several years. The residents are hopeful our government will have success in working with our federal government to get the pipelines built and help restore prosperity to our province.

Madam Speaker, the Camrose constituency is a newly formed boundary. Previously our boundary included Wetaskiwin; however, highway 21 between Camrose and Wetaskiwin now separates us. The boundary goes north, following the Beaver county boundary line, north of Tofield and Viking, then runs down to Hardisty, Alliance, and Bashaw.

In 1909 Mr. Smith from this Chamber mentioned: the past year was one of plenty and abounding prosperity for agriculture. The total yield of grain within the province at that time was expected to exceed 34 million bushels. Today farmers in our area are busy seeding, and we have experienced some good weather over the past many days. There is some uncertainty as to what should be planted as our agriculture industry is currently stumbling given inflictions by our federal government. I wish our farming community well and pray for some rain over the next couple of weeks once our seeding season has completed.

Madam Speaker, there have been so many kind people who have assisted me with my effort, given me good advice, and who are filled with pure wisdom. I would like to pay tribute to a few of those kind individuals by including them in my maiden speech. D'Arcy, one of our prominent farmers, had this to say: agriculture is a key part of our province's economy. Oil and gas are our number one revenue source, but agriculture has been number two. Therefore, a thriving agriculture sector is so important to the province and our rural communities. The Camrose constituency has a history of consistent grain, oil, seed, and pulse production. Tied with good access to transportation and infrastructure, it has led to numerous inland terminals, elevators, with more in construction. As well, the Cargill crush plant is an important part in value-added production in our region.

We are an exporting province and nation. We produce more than we can use domestically, so the ability to move our products to market is key. The struggles we've seen in the last few years emphasize the importance of trade agreements and good relationships with those markets. As farmers it's frustrating when you see exports diminish not due to market reasons but political ones: pulses into India, wheat into Italy, barley into Saudi Arabia, and now canola into China. As farmers we tend to be eternally optimistic, but we do need strong leadership locally, provincially, and federally to work better those relationships and, importantly, push for trade agreements that remove some of the unpredictability. The beef sector has also had similar access challenges.

During my time travelling through the constituency, I had the pleasure of meeting many people who live at our 10 Hutterite colonies. These colonies include Wavy Lake, Donalda, Viking, Alliance, Rosalind, Loughheed, Camrose, Holden, Bruce, and Tofield. These good-hearted people contribute to our agriculture industry but also furnish people with their garden vegetables and baking, which they sell at farmers' markets. Many people are not aware of the large contribution our colonies make to the local food bank, helping to provide aid to those residents in our community who require an extra bit of temporary assistance. Their kindness and quality are appreciated, and I'm glad to acknowledge them in my maiden speech.

Madam Speaker, in Mr. Smith's maiden speech he talked about the mining industry, with coal production for 1909 at over 2 million tonnes, mentioning a dispute between operators and their employees during the early part of the year which had a negative effect on most of the large mines. Today it is our past government that has had the negative effect on our mining industry. The town of Forestburg in particular has been hit hardest by this recent change in philosophy. Many in this area face losing their lucrative careers, which they depended upon to provide for themselves and their families. If they must relocate, the question is: who will buy their house? Will they be able to sell it at all?

Greg, one of Forestburg's prominent businesspeople, had this to contribute to my maiden speech. He says: you would be hard pressed to find a better example of the pioneer spirit than the settlers from the Forestburg area that began an industry by digging gopher-hole coal mines in the banks of Battle a hundred years ago. The development of this valuable industry paved the way for coal-fired power generation that filled Alberta's energy needs for decades. These two industries set up Forestburg and area as a place a person could raise a family, get a decent job, and make a good living. That all ended when narrow-minded people decided to destroy what took generations to develop because they didn't want to work to improve what was already there. It seemed easier to them to just shut down the industry and displace the families. The Forestburg area still has the same spirit today that town founders had and works tirelessly to reinvent itself.

The government needs to look at rural Alberta as the unique area it is and apply rules that make sense for rural Alberta. The community is reeling, and the pain is great. I will work hard alongside our ministers to ensure that the town is able to continue and thrive. We may not be able to undo what has already been set in motion, but, rest assured, this government will do all that it can to preserve your way of life and ensure a future for you and your families.

Madam Speaker, I've mentioned Mr. Smith in my maiden speech, and there have been many MLAs who have represented our area. I am blessed to be part of this Legislature and proud to say that I am the first female MLA from the area. There have been many famous women who have acted in government. These halls have seen many great men and women who have preceded us. Among these people of note are Alexander Rutherford, Alberta's first Premier. Additionally, there are the Famous Five women who asked the bold question: "Does the word 'person' in Section 24 of the BNA Act include [women]?" Their efforts proved that women were indeed persons and did have the right to vote. When I look around, we have come a long way in this Chamber since the question was first asked.

My constituents can count on me to ask uncomfortable questions when they need to seek answers and to work diligently to improve our economy, ensuring a bright future for themselves and our next generation. I was born in Saskatchewan and moved to Alberta in 1989. During that time the expression was: last one out turns out the lights. I'm afraid that is what's happening in Alberta now. Many have left our province seeking job opportunities elsewhere. Our young people in particular are having difficulty seeking employment. This is the reason why I decided that I must run as a candidate. A great many people in our area share my concern.

Given that many of my family members still lived in Saskatchewan, I would drive with my family taking the route through Camrose back and forth for many, many years. I knew when my children were young that once they had grown up and moved out on their own, I would one day live in Camrose. My son is an engineer, and my daughter is a nurse. Now that they have left, I have moved to Camrose where I have fallen deeply in love with the city and the residents who fill it. I count many friends who share all kinds of interests with me. I'm a proud member of the Camrose & District Chamber of Commerce, a Rotarian, and an active member in my church. It is my humble pleasure to serve our community and its residents in a number of capacities.

I asked one of our prominent Camrose businessmen, Phil, what he liked most about Camrose. Phil told me that it was the friendly people, the pretty layout of the ravines, the streams, Mirror Lake, the trumpeter swans, the community spirit, hockey, and well-respected, long-standing mayors. Business is tough in our community right now, and we talked about how each month there seems to be a new business shutting its doors. Our constituency along with the rest of rural Alberta faces the challenge of population decline. There are many, many businesses for sale in our area and a lack of buyers.

My hope is that with our newly formed government, investors will feel encouraged and seek opportunity in our rural towns, which are filled with kind, encouraging people anxious to meet and welcome investors. The people in my community are generous. They love to help others, and they like to spend time with one another.

Gail of the Camrose Swans and Roses Lions Club contributed that we have 150 Camrose Lions members with two clubs. There are clubs in Bawlf, Killam, Sedgewick, Loughheed, Viking, and Tofield. Gail shared that the Lions Club motto is We Serve. We are in communities to provide service. We raise funds through volunteer efforts to donate to local organizations and individuals in need. Several of our fundraisers include the concession at Lindstrand Auctions, the Christmas tree sales lot, the July 1 community pancake breakfast. Recent beneficiaries of our funds include Neighbourhood Aid, which is the Camrose food bank; the women's shelter; the Service Options for Seniors Society; the Special Olympics; Meals on Wheels; and the Family Violence Action Society. We organize, we serve, and we work for a brighter future for our community members. Thank you to Gail for her contribution.

Education is a pillar in my community. There has been an evolution, so to speak. Dean Allen Burger had this to contribute. The Augustana campus of the University of Alberta is located in Camrose. Part of the University of Alberta since 2004, Augustana now plays a unique role, defined as for the public good in the U of A strategic plan, as a living laboratory for teaching and learning innovation to the benefit of the entire university.

Augustana, which enrolls approximately 1,050 undergraduate students, including 6 per cent indigenous and 15 per cent international, offers bachelor of arts, bachelor of science, bachelor of music, and bachelor of management degrees. It is a provincial and national leader in community service learning, international study opportunities for students, and undergraduate research. Inspired by the university's strategic plan, Augustana has implemented a unique academic calendar and a first-year seminar program. Its faculty council recently approved new interdisciplinary concentrations in law, crime, and justice studies; ethics and global studies; and creativity and culture along with revisions to its core program that include a scaffolded approach to work-integrated learning.

As the only campus of the U of A outside of Edmonton Augustana is also home to the Alberta Centre for Sustainable Rural Communities and the Chester Ronning Centre for the Study of Religion and Public Life. Through a relationship with Alberta Parks the campus also maintains a research station at Miquelon Lake provincial park and will soon be adding an astronomical observatory there, taking advantage of the park's status as a dark sky preserve.

Currently both the U of A Nursing and Rehabilitation Medicine faculties offer programs at Augustana, recognizing that health science students trained in and among rural communities are more likely to build their careers in such settings. More broadly, Augustana and several health science faculties have aspirations to develop the campus as a centre of excellence for rural health and wellness.

Hardisty is another major town, at the far end of our constituency, filled with kind, hard-working people. It is best known as a pivotal petroleum industry hub where western Canadian select blend crude oil is produced and traded. My personal goal is to arrange a trip where our ministers of Transportation, Infrastructure, and Energy and Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction could assist a committed group of business people to successfully develop their community to provide jobs and have a positive impact on our community. Blake, one of the community organizers, advises that the opportunity is waiting.

I look forward to serving the needs of my constituency and all Albertans in this House. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to respond to the Speech from the Throne and to deliver my own maiden speech. The first time I entered this room, I was in grade 6 on a field trip to the Legislature. The second time I entered this room, I was the Member-elect for Calgary South-East, touring this Chamber during MLA orientation week. It took me 21 years to get from up there to down here, and I intend to use my time in this Chamber wisely.

Like many Albertans, I wasn't born here. I was born in Sparwood, B.C., home to what used to be the world's largest dump truck. My father worked in the coal industry and followed his career to Alberta, to the company's Calgary headquarters when I was about seven years old. Here he built a life for me and my five siblings, all of which still live in Alberta today. My father believed in three things: integrity, work, and education. He taught us to do what we said we were going to do and to treat others how we wanted to be treated. Pretty good advice for an MLA, I think.

On work, I'll never forget the day I turned 14, when he turned to me and said: it's time for you to get a job. I can't remember how I responded, but I think it was something along the lines of: I don't want to. But I'll never forget what he said. He said: you have to stop looking at work as if it's optional. It's an interesting statement if you think about it in the context of what has happened to Alberta. How many people have we all met with that don't just want to work, they need to work? It's not optional for most people to provide for their families, for their children, or for themselves. It's a necessity. And so at 14, in grade 8, I began working full-time in addition to going to school.

In addition to funding my future university education and providing me with financial independence at a young age, it also gave me work experience, an expanded social network, and it developed my interpersonal communication skills. These are the foundations on which my career was built and why, like our government, I am passionate about enabling our youth to work.

After I finished school in Calgary, I married my wife, Tarena, graduated from the University of Calgary, worked for nine years as an investment banker, completed the chartered financial analyst program, and became the father of four children: Caleb, Kieran, Logan, and Isla. Each of these events was a step on my journey to becoming a member of this Assembly.

Throughout my career as an investment banker I had the pleasure of working directly with the entrepreneurs and businesses that drive Alberta's economy. I helped them to attract investment and execute transformative financial transactions. During the first five years of my career everybody I approached on behalf of these businesses wanted a piece of Alberta. It was amazing, and it actually made my job pretty easy. I would receive calls and e-mails daily from investors and businesses asking me if I had anything in Alberta, or northern Texas, as some would call it, for them to consider. When selling an Alberta-based business, it was not uncommon to have multiple international groups at the table in addition to suitors from other areas of Canada, but then something changed.

Over the next four years my phone stopped ringing, and the e-mails stopped coming. I went from sourcing growth capital and identifying acquisition targets for profitable Alberta-based businesses to seeking distress debt or identifying solutions to impending bankruptcy or trying to sell a company for which there was no interest. I witnessed record unemployment, record business closures, record vacancy in downtown Calgary, and friends and family members lose their jobs. I reached out to the companies and investors that used to contact me daily for Alberta-based opportunities, and this is what I was told: Alberta is a political and regulatory nightmare. This is not a commodity price issue – commodity prices are low everywhere – and we are in the oil and gas sector for the long term. But when prices are low, we must be careful with how we deploy our capital, and it's not going to be in high-tax jurisdictions with anti-energy governments and mounting uncertainty. It turns out that government matters.

My assessment at the time and the assessment of my family, friends, neighbours, and businesses that I worked with was that government had exacerbated a bad situation and that we needed more qualified, experienced, and educated people to step up and provide better management of Alberta, particularly in the areas of business and finance. Given my background in both, I decided to put my career on hold, and I started to door-knock. Over the next year I went to virtually every residence in the communities of Auburn Bay, Cranston, Mahogany, and Seton, that make up Calgary-South East. I got to know people who had lost or were losing their jobs, the people who could no longer pay their mortgages, families where a spouse lived in another province or country to make ends meet, entrepreneurs who had lost everything, couples deferring to have children, people who had lost hope. I also met people with severe health issues and parents frustrated with the lack of schools and overcrowded classrooms in my constituency. I was reminded daily how blessed I was to have a job and to have healthy children. Door-knocking was eye opening and humbling, and I became even more concerned about what state the province would be in for my own children 10 years from now.

On April 16 the people of Calgary-South East and the rest of Albertans had their chance to speak, and they delivered a clear mandate to our government. They want jobs, a strong economy, fiscal responsibility, pipelines, a government that will stand up for Alberta, and quality health care and education. And why should they settle for anything less in a province so abundant in talent and natural resources? Standing before you today, I believe we have the right people in this room to accomplish what we committed to do. And, like many of my constituents and Albertans across the province, I am now excited and optimistic about Alberta's future.

I would like to thank the constituents of Calgary-South East again for entrusting me to represent them in this Assembly and the over 150 people that volunteered to get me here. I would also like to thank the other members of this Assembly for their work and sacrifice to serve their own constituencies, and I look forward to working with you to make Alberta better.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to say what a pleasure it's been listening to so many of these incredible speeches. Having door-knocked as much as I had as well, it makes me feel incredibly honoured to hear your story and hear the stories of many of the members in this House, how you got here, and about the things that really, really were impressed upon you throughout the process of how you came through to be here in the first place.

You were mentioning at the beginning of your speech about working full-time when you were 14 to pursue your dreams. I also did that. The east side of Chestermere knew me very well. I babysat the entire east side of Chestermere and picked rocks out in the farming fields because it was one of the few jobs that I was very good at. Would you mind speaking a little bit more to the work that you did as a young person, what inspired you, and sort of the process that you went through? I think it's a very inspiring story to many of our youth, especially coming forward, now that so much of our mandate is about getting people back to work.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East to respond.

Mr. Jones: Yeah. Thank you for the question. Well, I wasn't inspired to work. Remember that I was told to work. It was not an option.

When I turned 14, my father suggested strongly that I get a job, so I applied at a Dairy Queen. I was hired, and I worked there for two years. I became the youngest supervisor there, and I worked about six hours a day every day after school in grades 8 and 9 on weekdays and then as much as I could on weekends, which was upwards of 16-plus hours. As I mentioned, I believe this was the best thing that happened to me.

There's a Dairy Queen in my constituency, and I had the pleasure of running into the owner of the Dairy Queen. Of course, I said, "I used to work at one." We had this conversation. I said, "Do you still hire 14-year-olds?" She said: "No. Why would we hire 14-year-olds, who can't open and close the store, who can't deal with the money, who can't deal with complex customer complaints, when we can hire someone at the same rate who's in their mid-30s?" That is why the youth wage is an important piece of legislation that we're going to be bringing forward. That's a real-life example.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any more comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Speaker, I think we've made some good progress today. I've enjoyed listening to the new members' maiden speeches. As such, I would move that we see the clock as 6 o'clock and adjourn until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:32 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, May 27, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

[Adjourned debate May 23: Mr. Toews]

The Speaker: I see the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is rising on debate for Bill 1.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am quite pleased to rise to speak to Bill 1, which should properly be entitled the Implementation of the Trudeau Carbon Tax Act, because that is, in fact, what the government is proposing to do with this bill. I do have to tip my hat to the Member for Calgary-Lougheed as well as the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for being able to, on their first act as government, disappoint every single Albertan in this province with one piece of legislation. There is nobody in this province who can realistically look at this piece of legislation and be happy with what the government is bringing forward, nor can they honestly say that this is what they expected when they voted for the members on the treasury benches.

First of all, there is a significant number of people in Alberta who are looking for meaningful action on climate change. At this time I want to offer my thoughts and prayers to the people of High Level and northern Alberta who are dealing with the wildfire emergency situation there, and I am so glad that we have excellent emergency management staff helping them out in their time of need. Mr. Speaker, thoughts and prayers are not a climate change plan. In fact, we know that the wildfires in northern Alberta, that continue to plague northern Alberta, are linked to climate change, and it's well beyond time that Alberta acts to prevent these kinds of things from happening. That's why our government took meaningful action on climate change, because we know that the risks to the people of Alberta are too great to be ignored.

Mr. Speaker, not only will we continue to have more fires, but we'll have larger fires that will put more and more people at risk every single year. We'll continue to have floods, floods like the 2013 Calgary flood, floods in other parts of the province where we usually wouldn't expect to see floods, and the flip side of that is that we will also have increased periods of drought. According to climate science modelling, the prairies will continue to dry out, and, in fact, the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton are both very concerned about the future of water security for those cities. The city of Calgary, of course, was in the news last week saying that beyond the year 2050 they don't expect to have sufficient water to be able to continue the sustained growth of that city.

There was a similar news article in the Edmonton Journal, I believe, that referred to concerns that the city of Edmonton and everyone in the North Saskatchewan watershed have about the continuing decline in the levels of the North Saskatchewan River, something that would not only be helped by meaningful action on climate change, but something that also would help, that is meaningful action on protecting the Bighorn, something that the Member for Rimbe- Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is resolute in his refusal to do.

Mr. Speaker, it's no secret that not only are our major cities at risk of running out of water in the very near future, but our major industries are also at risk of running out of water. Both agriculture and the oil and gas industry rely on significant amounts of water. They need a predictable supply of water in order to be able to undertake their economic activities. If we don't take meaningful action on climate change, farmers will no longer be able to irrigate their crops in southern Alberta, dryland farmers won't be able to continue those kinds of operations, we won't be able to water the livestock, and, of course, we won't be able to conduct the enhanced oil recovery, the natural gas fracking that's going on, or oil sands recovery, in fact. All of those activities rely on reliable, predictable sources of water, and all of those things are being placed at risk because the members on the treasury benches are refusing to act on climate change.

Mr. Speaker, it's not just the economic imperative that we need to protect water supplies; there's a significant quality-of-life aspect to protecting Alberta's water supplies. I expect that many of the members here in this House are avid hunters. They're probably bird hunters, and, of course, wetlands are precious fowl habitat that are highly sought after by hunters from all over the world, and those things are at risk as well.

As a young man, Mr. Speaker, I had the experience of working on a Ducks Unlimited wetland restoration project near Hanna. Ducks Unlimited, of course, is an excellent organization for wetland preservation and restoration, and they have a big job cut out for them because these 28 members here sitting across from me are sitting on their hands and refusing to do anything about climate change.

Recreational properties are also at risk, Mr. Speaker. I know that the levels of Buffalo Lake have receded significantly. Levels at lakes all across the province are receding significantly, Mr. Speaker. I certainly experienced those calls first-hand from recreational property owners when I worked at Alberta Environment, people very concerned about the levels of water in their lakes, and, of course, concerned about the value of their property and their ability to take a decent holiday with their family, that they worked so hard to earn. Those are also being put at risk.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the other risks that comes with climate change, of course, is warmer winters. Now I know that the member for, I believe, Calgary-Glenmore was on the record as saying, "Well, maybe warmer winters aren't necessarily such a bad thing," but, in fact, nothing could be further from the truth. Most of the northern part of the province relies on cold winters for shipping in their supplies for the year on winter ice roads. Much of the industry that happens in the north relies on frozen ground to be able to access their work locations, and, in fact, fighting the mountain pine beetle and protecting our forestry industry relies on cold weather as well. All of those things will be gone if we don't take meaningful action on climate change.

Not to mention the significant health risks that climate change and continuing to use our current methods of generating electricity have. Now, Mr. Speaker, it's beyond a shadow of a doubt. The facts are quite clear that phasing out coal-fired power plants will have a significant improvement on the health of our children. Rates of asthma and other breathing disorders will go down significantly with the elimination of coal-fired power plants. That's why it was very deeply concerning to me when there were reports from the UCP convention on the night of the election that as they were listening to our leader give a speech, she mentioned that the lungs of the children of Alberta will be healthier because of the action that we took through the climate leadership plan – what did the members in attendance at the UCP party do? – they booed that very statement. I think that the members who did that should be ashamed of themselves because there's nothing more important that we can do as members of this Legislature than to act to preserve the health of the future generations.

It's clear, Mr. Speaker, that all Albertans have a stake in tackling climate change. That's why, when we were in government, we consulted extensively with the people of Alberta to make sure that we had a made-in-Alberta climate leadership plan that worked for the people of Alberta. I need to remind everybody, I think, what came out of that consultation process. We developed energy efficiency programs that helped residential homeowners, commercial owners, and nonprofit members to significantly increase their energy efficiency. We developed programs to enhance renewable energy and energy efficiency initiatives in municipalities.

We developed solar programs for schools. There's a school that is right down the street from where I live, Mr. Speaker, that took advantage of that program, and it reduced their overall annual energy bills significantly, which is very important given that we expect that the members opposite will be cutting the budgets for municipalities and school boards significantly this fall. They need all of the help that they can get to reduce their overall electricity and energy consumption costs. It's a shame that the first act that these people are taking is to cut the very program that will allow those municipalities and school boards to reduce their operational costs.

Not to mention that indigenous communities will be affected. My colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford has spoken at length in question period about those kinds of programs. Of course, the minister of indigenous affairs, the Member for Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin confirmed that those things would be on the chopping block just this afternoon in question period, which is going to be significantly disappointing to many indigenous nations all across this province.

Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I believe that I have to speak out passionately in favour of the energy efficiency programs that we developed through Energy Efficiency Alberta. Of course, as you know, not only is Edmonton-Gold Bar the most humble constituency in all of Alberta, it's also a constituency that is in desperate need of these kinds of programs. Most of the housing that was built in my riding was built in the period between 1945 and the mid-1960s, at a time when energy efficiency wasn't top of mind in the construction of residential homes, so we have a significant number of people who are living in homes that are 50 to 80 years old, that are in desperate need of renovation. They need new windows, they need new doors, they need to insulate their basements. While they're at it, they can add insulation to the walls, insulation in the roofs, and they can also, up until last week at least, take advantage of renewable energy rebates to install solar panels.

Mr. Speaker, I don't need to tell you that those programs were incredibly popular in my riding because those are exactly the kinds of houses that we need to renovate in order to reduce our carbon footprint here in this province. I have many, many constituents who are angry that those programs are on the chopping block. Of course, they will have to fight with the increased power bills and the drafty homes that they thought they were going to be able to renovate under the program that we introduced.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I also want to mention that there is a significant amount of work that these programs generated. In its most recent annual report, rolling up all of the efforts of the climate leadership plan, the government of Alberta estimated that there were approximately 5,000 jobs that have already been created through the investment that we made through these programs. Of course, with increased investment with these programs, the number of jobs will go up from there.

Now, of course, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed continues to tell the people of Alberta that cutting the carbon tax will create 6,000 jobs. He provides no evidence for this, which is ironic because I was in this Legislature for the entire debate around the climate leadership plan, and I believe that every single member of those parties at the time got up to speak and demand that we release an economic impact assessment of the climate leadership plan and what that was going to do. But now that the shoe is on the other foot, I guess economic impact assessments don't really matter, and we can just make up numbers as we see fit and hope that nobody notices, Mr. Speaker. It won't be true. People will notice.

There are a number of people in my riding who will lose their jobs on Thursday when this tax cut is expected to end, and they can't wait for these fairy-tale jobs to appear in order to put them back to work. They have bills that are coming due at the end of the month, and they need to be able to pay those bills, so promises of some magical jobs at some point in the future just won't cut it, Mr. Speaker. I think it's incumbent upon the members opposite to think about those people that they're throwing out of work at a time when unemployment is very high and to come up with some kind of plan to transition them into other kinds of employment.

Of course, you know, the other piece that affects my constituency: right now the city of Edmonton is in the process of completing the southeast line of the LRT, funding that was provided in part through the climate leadership program, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the government has offered no plans to replace that funding, so we're not sure if the much-needed public transportation that the citizens of my constituency will rely on to get to work and get to all of their activities with their children will actually be in place. I hope that somebody from across the way will tell us so that I can go back to my constituents and tell them why they're losing their jobs on Thursday, why the much-needed and much-anticipated LRT expansion may not be going ahead or may be going ahead. We don't know. We don't have any answers from the members opposite.

Mr. Speaker, I've covered the significant number of Albertans who believe that climate change is real, believe that Alberta needs to do more to combat this increasingly urgent crisis, and the people who are relying on this kind of investment to make their lives better and pay their bills. But those aren't the only people who are going to be disappointed with this legislation. There's a second group of Albertans who are also going to be very disappointed once the Trudeau carbon tax is implemented, and I want to paint you a picture of the kind of person that I expect will be disappointed and that I expect voted for many of the members who are seated here this evening.

You've probably seen them driving down the highway. They have stickers across the backs of their windows. One probably has a picture of Calvin from Calvin and Hobbes peeing on the letters "NDP." Another one has a slogan that I can't repeat in this House because the language is inappropriate, but it suggests that the drivers of those vehicles would like to have conjugal relations with Prime Minister Trudeau. These are the kinds of people, like the Member for Edmonton-South West, who are avid fans of Rebel media and think that by voting for the UCP, they were getting rid of the carbon tax entirely.

Of course, nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. We know that as soon as this carbon tax is repealed, the federal carbon tax will be put in its place almost immediately. Of course, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed goes on about how they're going to fight in the courts and they're going to fight them on the beaches and they'll fight them in the alleys. He's trying to do his best Churchill imitation, but we know that that plan is destined to lose. Of course, Saskatchewan and Ontario lost their appeals to the Federal Court of Appeal. There's no hope, really, that an appeal to the Supreme Court will yield any different result. You know, I expect that when the Member for Calgary-Lougheed talks about 6,000 jobs, most of those jobs will be for high-priced lawyers to fight a losing battle in the Supreme Court, which is not what the people of Alberta elected us to do. I have not heard from a single constituent who wishes that the government would spend more money on high-priced lawyers fighting losing lawsuits in the courts.

You know, there are a number of coal workers who thought that by voting for the members opposite, they would bring their jobs back, not, of course, recognizing that it was, in fact, Stephen Harper and his crew who phased out coal-fired power plants in the first place and that it was our government who actually used carbon tax money to put a transition fund in place for those coal communities.

I hope that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler and the member for Wabamun can go to their communities and tell the coal workers there, who are going to lose their jobs regardless because the market for coal is not favourable for continued expansion of that work – I hope that those members are looking forward to going into their communities and saying: we're sorry, coal workers, but the money that the other guys had set aside to transition you into new careers and a hopeful future is gone, but please send me $5 to help us continue the fight against the carbon tax in the courts. I look forward to those members reporting back to us what they hear from their constituents when they tell those coal workers that the money for that transition is out the window and their jobs aren't coming back anyway.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of people who voted to scrap the carbon tax who expect the price of gasoline to go down. I noticed that today in my riding, at least, gas was $1.19 a litre. If anybody is under the assumption that on May 30, if this carbon tax is repealed, the price of gas is going to go down to $1.13 a litre, they have another think coming because – here's the thing – gas prices are significantly subject to the wills of the oil companies.

The Speaker: I'm not sure if the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre is rising on the hope of having 29(2)(a), but 29(2)(a) is not available until subsequent speakers.

But perhaps you might like to add to the debate after a brief reminder to all members of the Assembly, particularly new or returning members, that when we are not in Committee of the Whole, it's important – of course, it's the will of the Assembly – that all members be in their seats. Should you like to have conversation with someone other than your seatmate, please feel free to use the government or opposition lounges to continue conversations. Having said that, for the benefit of new members, when we are in Committee of the Whole, of course you're more than welcome to move about the Chamber as you desire.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a pleasure to have the opportunity to stand and speak tonight to Bill 1. I think back to 2015, when I was first elected as a member of this House, and I remember that first session we had the opportunity to attend there, at the end of June. I remember the excitement I felt. I remember the nerves that I had. I remember the first opportunity I had to stand and debate a piece of legislation. For me, it was Bill 2. That was when we brought a reasonable progressive tax rate back to the province of Alberta after years of an ideological flat tax.

But I think back to what our Bill 1 was, and Bill 1 for our government was ending corporate and union donations to political parties in the province of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I had great pride in being able to vote for that as our first piece of legislation, the first indication of who we as a government were going to be, about removing undue influence from our politics, about trying to return democracy a little bit closer to the people of Alberta, trying to rebalance the scales after years of undue influence from those who had more money, from corporate interests, from others. Indeed, we know that previous Conservative governments – there was much abuse of that opportunity. I was proud to vote for that piece of legislation, and I believe it showed who we were going to be as a government.

The bill we have in front of us today: I'm not sure this is a bill to be proud of. I suppose it depends on what perspective one has. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, in my view, this bill is not brought forward here today out of integrity. This bill is not brought forward today out of reason and rationality. This bill is being brought forward today because of political opportunism. This bill is being brought forward today after a sustained campaign of misinformation, of theatrics, drama, histrionics by conservatives in this province for the last few years. Indeed, it dates back quite a ways further.

This is not a new fight for the Premier. This started long ago, back when he was in Ottawa. He still gives a sense that's where he would very much long to be. When he was there, that was a favourite talking point at the time of Conservatives in Prime Minister Harper's government. The job-killing carbon tax, that was a favourite point of attack for them. They liked to talk a lot about their intentions. Indeed, they themselves talked about putting a price on pollution. They talked about introducing some form of a carbon levy. Now, of course, they weren't a fan, they said, of the carbon tax. They were going to bring in regulation. They were going to bring in restrictions. They were going to go after large emitters. They made all kinds of commitments repeatedly, over and over again, and followed through on next to none. But that talking point of the job-killing carbon tax was one that they loved to pull out and continue to beat their opponents over the head with. That's what we saw over the last few years.

When our government stepped forward and we fulfilled our campaign promise, much as this government is doing here today, to take real action on the very real and pressing issue of climate change, of global warming, after we struck the panel that sat down and went through and came up with the advice and the prescription that they brought to us in their report, the advice that we took and brought forward, a piece of that being to introduce a carbon levy which would apply to all burning of fuel within the province of Alberta, from the first day we brought that forward, we saw the disingenuous nature of the arguments coming from conservatives in this province. You know, we saw all kinds of, as I said, misinformation and indeed, I say, histrionics.

Let's recall some of the great moments in the arguments against the carbon levy, when the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction, the members for Lacombe-Ponoka, Drayton Valley-Devon, Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul, and Cypress-Medicine Hat published a scintillating editorial comparing the carbon levy to the Ukrainian Holodomor. That was the kind of quality, reasoned debate we received from conservatives in this province, comparing a price on pollution to a famine caused by the Soviet government's policies in the Ukraine during the 1930s, that killed millions of people. This was the level of debate.

Frankly, I recognize that there probably are some members in this government – indeed, there were when they sat in opposition, either as members of the Wildrose Party of Alberta or the United Conservative Party of Alberta – that genuinely do not believe that climate change is a serious and pressing issue to be dealt with. Indeed, we recall the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo retweeting a link with the heading: Greenpeace cofounders warn of global climate change scam, global warming hoax. We recall the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon financing a climate change denying film, attending an event as a head table guest of the Friends of Science. With friends like that, Mr. Speaker, this province and indeed our environment need no enemies. Of course, he himself had signed on to that wonderful editorial I referenced earlier. We saw MLAs like the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek attacking academics on Twitter and accusing them of perhaps receiving some sort of surreptitious remuneration for supporting the climate leadership plan.

This was the kind of reaction that we had in trying to address a very real and pressing issue in this province, and that is why I say, Mr. Speaker, that we are not here tonight debating this piece of legislation because of some kind of honest disagreement in views. We are here because of political expediency, because of irrationality, because members of the conservative parties of this province saw this as their ticket to try and get themselves a seat in this place and indeed a seat in government.

Mr. Speaker, in fact, I had forgotten to mention even one of the best examples, which happened most recently, of course, the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, who was kind enough to tweet: “Unbelievable. Today at church we learned that the Carbon Tax is going to cost our church $50,000 this year alone. That’s the cost of one less pastor for the sick and suffering & less help for those who need it most in our community.” Indeed, that proved to be unbelievable. It was 10 times the actual amount.

See, Mr. Speaker, even the members themselves, even these people who at that time were running as candidates, had inflated the hysteria, the irrationality around the discussion of climate change policy in this province to the point that they themselves were willing to believe figures that were inflated by 10 times. And that’s being charitable, assuming they genuinely believed that.

It’s unfortunate, Mr. Speaker – it’s unfortunate – that, as my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar noted, the Member for Edmonton-South West felt that this was such an important message that he was willing to stand alongside messaging from the undeniably racist and Islamophobic Rebel media, despite the fact that I know that member is neither of those things. That is the fever pitch to which Conservatives in this province were intent on pushing things in regard to a simple policy for their own political gain.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Edmonton-City Centre it is incumbent on me to stand and speak against this bill. I recognize that I’ve heard from some that we should simply let this bill pass, that this was clearly part of the UCP platform, that a majority of the people of Alberta cast votes in support of that, and that we should therefore simply allow this legislation to pass. Well, to be clear, 66 per cent of my constituents who cast a vote did not vote for this bill.

The majority of my constituents with whom I have spoken have told me that they want to see real and concrete action to address the very real issue of climate change. They have told me that they want to see government investing in and supporting green energy, transitioning coal workers into new fields of work even as they were already facing the closure of the majority of those plants by the former government of Prime Minister Harper, of which the Premier was a member. To the best of my knowledge he voted in favour of that moving forward while providing no support or assistance for those workers, indeed recognizing, as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar noted tonight, that the coal industry, in and of itself, is dying.

Mr. Speaker, it is incumbent on me, if I am truly going to represent my constituents, to stand in this House and speak against the narrow-minded and short-sighted focus of this bill. One of the realities is that we need to find a way to reduce our emissions. That much is true. I would hope that there is nobody in this House that disagrees with that, that disagrees with the pressing reality of man-made climate change and global warming and recognizes that is something we must actually take action to deal with. I’m hoping there’s no member in this House that would disagree with that fact. So the question is: how do we move forward, then, in addressing those emissions?

The reality, Mr. Speaker, as I’ve previously said in this House when we had debate on a motion regarding rejecting the Paris accords, is that there is no addressing the reality of emissions, there is no reduction of emissions without cost. It is cheaper for us to pollute. For us to stop doing that, to begin to change our behaviour, to find a better way to do things, is going to require investment. It’s going to require some kind of cost to mitigate the very real costs that we are already paying.

The people who live in and around High Level are paying some of that cost this week. The folks in Fort McMurray paid some of that cost. The folks who went through the flooding in Calgary paid some of that cost. The people who are living with very real health effects are paying some of that cost. Insurance companies are beginning to write in and account for those costs. Our energy companies are beginning to factor in and figure out how they are going to account for those costs. Anybody who has any knowledge and is working to predict the way things are going to operate in the future is planning for how they’re going to adapt to that cost. So the question is: how do we address that cost?

The carbon levy that we brought forward was focused on addressing that cost wherever it occurred. Rather than putting it all on a single entity or a single industry, it spread it out so that everybody paid a small piece for what contribution they themselves made. Now, there’s good reason for this, Mr. Speaker. Think about it this way. If we say, as the government currently is of the opinion, that only large emitters, only the worst of the worst, only those who create the largest amount, should be the ones to bear that burden and pay that cost, if that is the argument here within the province of Alberta, what happens when we expand that out to Canada?

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the largest creator of emissions within Canada. So if we apply that same logic, then we are saying that Alberta should bear the largest burden out of all provinces in Canada rather than each bearing its own share according to the emissions that it creates, recognizing that there is a sizable amount that is created by things other than simply oil and gas, those other things.

I recognize my time is coming up, but I know this will not be my last time speaking to this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South rising under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think my hon. colleague from Edmonton-City Centre was raising some very interesting points, and it would really be my privilege and I think for all of the rest of the members in this House to continue to hear some of these important things that his constituents care about, I know my constituents care about, and I’m sure constituents all across this province in many of the governing members' ridings would care about as well. So I'd give it back to the hon. member here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-South giving me the opportunity just to wrap up a few of my thoughts. Ultimately, as I said, I will have more to say about the overall mechanics and the overall ideas and the things that were all involved in this process, but what I will return to is where I began.

I suppose it is up to members of the government if, when this bill passes this Assembly and we move forward, they choose to feel pride in that moment. I know there are some in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, who fully recognize that this bill is about politics. They are well aware that they will be casting a vote for a bill that is not about making things better, that is not about truly addressing climate change, that is not, in fact, going to create all of the jobs and all of the savings that the Premier likes to claim it will, despite having been corrected multiple times by economists here in this province. They are well aware that this is a bill about political expedience.

I suppose it will be up to them to determine how they feel about that. But that, Mr. Speaker, will be the first bill they cast in this Assembly. That will be the first decision that they have the opportunity to put their names to. I'm pretty sure it will likely be a recorded vote, so it will be the first opportunity for them to have their names written in the book of Hansard, the record of this province, as to what they stood for.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I will be standing and voting against this bill because that is the direction I have received from my constituents here in Edmonton-City Centre and because that indeed is where my own value and ethics lie on this particular matter. I endeavour as much as possible in my work in this Assembly to speak honestly, truthfully. Indeed, as I think we all do in this House, I indulge at times in a bit of hyperbole. Shots are taken, and politics are sometimes about how we frame each other. But I can tell you the potential for the damage that moving forward with this path will cause for our province, indeed for our country, indeed on the global scale, though I recognize, again, that Alberta is not the leading source of emissions in the world, not by a long shot. But we certainly had the opportunity to show some leadership in how we were going to work to address it and work with others to try to get them to continue to work and do the same.

This is the first bill that the government has brought forward, and they have said that this is going to be their agenda. Perhaps they will demonstrate at some point that they have some sort of a plan that will actually have an impact. Maybe they will demonstrate to us that this is not simply a disingenuous sideshow, that this was not simply their political Wiffle bat to beat the opposition, to ascend to the seats of government. I guess a Wiffle bat doesn't hurt that much. I don't know why that came to mind, but it did. It's comical, at least. It's entertaining.

The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a very specific decision on the part of this government to set the tone on which they are going to move forward, by which they are going to communicate with the people of Alberta. Indeed, I guess they demonstrated that well before this election, and we will see how the people of Alberta come to feel about that as their decisions begin to mount, as the impacts become clearer. I guess on this one they get a little bit of an advantage in that, you know, the real repercussions of some of the decisions that they are making when this piece of legislation passes probably many of them will never really have to live to see.

I look forward, Mr. Speaker, to the opportunity to continue in this debate. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others who would like to speak to Bill 1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the first opportunity I have to speak in the 30th Legislature here in the province of Alberta, and it's great. It's great to be back. Congratulations on your victory as well and to all members for their campaigns, too, that got them to this place here this evening.

I'm very interested in speaking on a number of issues around Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax. You know, I think that it's important for Albertans to understand both the local context in which our carbon levy and climate action plan was built, some of the history around that both provincially and nationally and internationally as well.

We know that throughout the world climate change is becoming a more apparent problem, a more apparent threat to the economies of countries around the world, to the health of not just human beings but all living things and, indeed, is a point that can cause great disruption in those same things, in the economy, in human health, but I would say also the potential for social disorder as well. So taking action on climate change, I think, is the responsibility of all people and particularly of elected governments.

We saw just this last week that the Bank of Canada has made it a mitigation risk to the health of our economy nationally, that climate change can undermine the health of Canada's economy. We see insurance companies, again, looking for ways by which to look at reducing carbon dioxide emissions as a way to mitigate risk for underwriting insurance claims. We see countries around the world trying to face up to this head-on, and many businesses are doing the very same thing, right? I saw that Canadian Utilities, a subsidiary of ATCO, has just liquidated their fossil fuel assets, realizing that they need to move to other means of generating power and so forth.

We know as an energy leader here in the province of Alberta that we are and will continue to be an energy leader only if we stay on the edge of what's coming next and what our responsibilities are around being energy leaders. We know that we are very blessed to have a strong nonrenewable energy resource in oil and natural gas and so forth, and we will continue to utilize that as a backbone of our economy. But, Mr. Speaker, if we don't use that nonrenewable energy resource to start to invest in a more renewable, sustainable future, then we are compromising the best chance that we have to stay as an energy leader, to be a responsible steward of our tremendous energy resources, and to make investments for a more sustainable energy future.

Our climate action plan that our government put into place a number of years ago was a start in that direction. Was it the end of what we could do to help to mitigate this challenge? No. But it was an honest, sincere attempt to a very strong beginning. We see our climate leadership plan being studied and utilized in other jurisdictions around the world because it was a good balance of making investments in individuals, making investments in the energy industry, making savings, and helping to educate the population about how we are transitioning to a more sustainable energy future.

I find it a bit disturbing that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre – Edmonton-City Centre I guess it's called now – made a very good point about what a government chooses as their flagship Bill 1 to set the tone for what sort of governance and so forth we could expect in the future. If you look past a lot of the rhetoric and hyperbole and so forth, if we look at the bare bones of what this bill actually is in terms of repeal, in terms of going backwards, in terms of simply applying a negative action, a reaction to a proactive attempt to help to transition and to build a more sustainable energy future, that's not the best way, Mr. Speaker, to set a tone for not just this bill but for governance in general and the direction of this government over the next number of years. It's a repeal. It's stepping back, and it fails to recognize fundamentally that it's incumbent and important for us to do something around this file. We can't just sit on our hands. We can't pretend that we're living in the past. We need to be proactive, and that's what responsible governments do.

I know that we've heard from this new government that they would talk about impacting large emitters, for example. Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, you don't get nothing for nothing – right? – in this world. If you choose to tax large emitters or put the onus and responsibility on them, then they're going to pass the cost down to consumers anyway. I mean, this is what happens, right? If you are controlling energy, as some of these large emitters do, then they're not just going to do it out of the goodness of their hearts; they're going to take increases on mitigation and taxation on their industries and pass that down to consumers.

So it's not as though you can just pass this along and presume that you're not going to pay. At least the climate action plan that we had in place and were continuing to build – and it was an evolutionary process – was making sure that we were passing on the benefits of making transition to individuals, to businesses, to public institutions, and so forth so that they could actually save money.

One file that I know quite well, for example, was how by helping schools and other public buildings to make investments in energy efficiency in windows, in insulation, in solar panels, and so forth, you could save money, literally hundreds of thousands of dollars, by making an investment in high efficiency heating, in LED lights, in solar panels on the roof and more modern windows. Simple as that. It's an investment. You save money on your utility bills, and you save money, in the case of a school, on the public purse as well, heating and lighting those schools.

You know, you make those investments, and it's not like a negative tax. It's not like you're taking something out of the economy. Quite the opposite. You are actually creating opportunities for a more diverse economy and jobs associated with that. We know that, for example, through our climate action plan here in the province of Alberta we've become a national leader in renewable energy. When we did those auctions for electricity, for solar and wind and so forth, we had tremendous success, unprecedented success, in helping to drive, I think, Alberta as a renewable energy leader in North America. We're putting all of those things in jeopardy by bills such as this, sending a message that we're going back, sending a message that we're not innovating, and we're sending a message that we're being irresponsible.

I know that this whole idea of putting a price on carbon is nothing new. We hear it from jurisdictions across Canada. We hear it from different political sources, from conservative politicians, from progressive politicians, and we know that putting a price on carbon can have a very positive organic effect not just on reducing carbon but a positive effect on an economy as well.

We know that, as I said before, you can create a more diverse economy, thus creating different kinds of jobs, right? We know that, for example, in regard to coal plants – I mean, it's a very unfortunate situation, but it's something that we see replicated in many jurisdictions around the world. As you transition from coal, if you don't have a plan in place for those places, for those towns and for those workers, then you're leaving them high and dry. At least with having a carbon pricing system and having diversity in the generation of electricity, you do at least create an opportunity for jobs and for transitioning to other jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I know that this Bill 1 is a reflection, as we've heard other speakers say, of the election that we have just gone through. I know that elections can sometimes, you know, create some hyperbolic reactions – right? – where people are fighting and looking for that vote in the last moment. But now here we are on the other side, and we have an opportunity to be creative, to reach across, to look for ways by which we can salvage some of the tremendous progress that we've made in regard to the climate action plan. We have an opportunity, I believe, to take a long, second close look at where we can move forward together and not just use carbon and carbon pricing and this bill as a way to further polarize people and polarize the economy that we all depend on here and now. When I think about all of the things that we can do in this Legislature, perhaps the biggest and most important responsibility we have is to make sure that we are always being honest and sincere and being honest and sincere for now and for the future as well.

We know that climate change is real. We know that it is an increasing negative force on all of the things that I have just talked about, and we know that it is increasing in uncertainty and complexity in an exponential sort of way. It's like when you see the ice melting in the spring, you know? You think in January, February that the winter is never going to end, and then suddenly the snow and the ice all melts in a week, right? That's the kind of exponential sort of change that you can see with climate change here now at unprecedented carbon atmospheric levels right across the world. So things aren't going to just say: oh, well; we can just sweep it under the rug and wait till later. We can see exponential change happening very, very quickly right now. We have the examples here in Alberta, but we can see in other examples in other parts of the world as well.

Another one of the arguments that I hear that I find very disturbing – and it has sort of a cognitive dissonance built into it, like, in other words, it doesn't make any sense, right? It's saying: "Oh, well. Other people in the world aren't doing anything about this, so who cares if Alberta has an carbon action, climate action plan of some sort?" Well, you know, if people have that attitude around the world, we would never get anything done, right? We are leaders. We are an energy leader, and we set a tone.

We can be an example that helps export best practices around the world, and – you know what, Mr. Speaker? – you can make money off that. When we did our auction for renewables, we were amazed to see what revenue is there and what is possible. You know, as the world moves into dealing with climate change in a more categorical sort of way, there will be a lot of competition – right? – for producing renewables, help mitigation strategies and so forth, and it's incumbent upon us to make sure that we remain in the lead as an energy leader in the province of Alberta for not just ourselves but for the rest of the world as well.

So for those and many other reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would urge everyone to, you know, consider looking to not support Bill 1 as it's written. We will try to look for constructive ways by which we can perhaps help to come to some resolution. I look forward to both the debates and the conversations that we will have in the days and weeks ahead.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), are there any members who wish to make any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really my privilege always to hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West speak. The Member for Edmonton-North West is the reason, singlehandedly, I think, I got into politics. He picked me up off the steps of the Legislature here one summer afternoon.

He mentioned something in his speech today that gave me some pause. It was that though Alberta is not necessarily the single largest emitter in the world, though Alberta maybe does not have the impetus to suddenly reduce 20 per cent of the world's emissions, we still need to be a leader, and that means that we still can't just pollute because it's so small.

The thought that came to my mind was that when I'm driving down the street back to my riding, which for me feels like it takes hours and hours and hours because I want to be in my riding so badly – but when I'm driving back to my riding, I don't go ahead and throw my bag of McDonald's out the window. I don't throw the bag of chips out the window and just let it sit on the street. There's a really good reason for that, Mr. Speaker. The reason for that is that even though it's just one bag of chips, even though it's just one piece of garbage, that all adds up – that all adds up – and that's why we have large landfills and you can see mountains and mountains of landfills of garbage when you start to add that all up.

I think that's something we really have to drive home here. It's something that's really important because when we talk about the cumulative effects of climate change, when we talk about the things that my hon. colleague was talking about and how it suddenly reaches this exponential point of change and this exponential point of no return, we're talking about issues that add up over time. And, Mr. Speaker, just like that bag of chips that I wouldn't throw out my window, I think that Albertans and we in this Chamber are doing a disservice if we don't recognize that every single time we don't meaningfully act on climate change, we are doing the exact same thing as throwing a bag of chips out the window.

Now, I know, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague from Edmonton-North West was a teacher for many years, and he spent a lot of time educating young people about things they need to know for their futures. I think this is one thing that when we talk about our futures and we talk about the issues that matter to us in our futures, it's really important to remember that these are issues that are generational. They're issues that are generational because somebody who is my age, maybe not the same age as some people across the aisle but somebody who is my age, will be seeing the effects of climate change for years and years and years to come.

Some of the things that my hon. colleague talked about are how important it is that we invest today, how important it is that we invest today in things like the renewable programs that are bidding at some of the lowest prices in all of North America, Mr. Speaker. I think that's something we should be commending and we should encourage because it allows for things like more stable, reliable rates of electricity for consumers while also meaning meaningful transitions for employees right here in Alberta, for workers right here in Alberta. I think that that's something that all members of this Assembly should be able to get behind and something that we should all be able to encourage. I know that it's something that I think is really important to my constituents. I know that it's something that is really important to the Member for Edmonton-North West's constituents. I know that it's something that all members should be able to encourage, new jobs that are going to be replacing the types of jobs that we have no control over in this Chamber.

Honestly – and I think the Member for Edmonton-North West and myself both know this – us standing here and talking about jobs

all day in this Chamber isn't going to create new jobs. What's going to create new jobs is targeted investment and making sure that we create the opportunities to have things like the very, very low prices that were bid in for wind electricity in southern Alberta. I think those are things that all Albertans should be excited about and that especially members in the government should be excited about. Those are large infrastructure projects that are going to be built right in their ridings because of the investment we made in renewables. We should continue to do those investments because I think it's something that these members are going to want to continue to see: good, new jobs right in their towns, right in their counties, right across this entire province, Mr. Speaker.

I think it's something that we should be ashamed if we don't encourage, because it's something that we can see very clearly is the future for Alberta, a clean energy province, where we lead the world, not just Canada but the world, in developing renewable resources. We can lead in these things. We have the resources, we have the innovation, we have the knowledge, and we have the skills, Mr. Speaker. I'm so excited to be able to push for those types of initiatives but only if we are allowed to continue.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to this bill? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been interesting to listen to the speeches from the opposition this evening, and I congratulate them. They seem to be settling into their new roles very, very well. I do think, though, that it's worth having a look at some of the mistakes that I've heard this evening, from my perspective. I think that the opposition members continue to miss the entire point of this bill.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I want to first of all thank my colleague the hon. Finance minister for bringing forward this piece of legislation. I think I speak for all of this side of the House and our friends that are with us on that side of the House on how excited we are to finally have this piece of legislation here. I know I can speak on behalf of my colleagues that were here in this place with me in opposition. We have been waiting a very, very long time for this piece of legislation to be on this floor, and I am ecstatic that it is here.

The reality is that we have talked about this issue, about carbon tax, in this place probably more than any other issue in the last four years. I see the opposition is agreeing with me on that, so we've found some agreement. We're already on a roll tonight: day 1 of night sittings, and we have agreement. We have talked about this a lot. Now, the opposition used to call it – Mr. Speaker, as you would recall, I remember that when we were benchmates, we would laugh about this a little bit – a levy; we would call it a tax. This was back when we still heckled in here. I know you guys one day may join us in not heckling. We would heckle back and forth: “levy” and “tax.”

At the end of the day, that's what this bill is about. It's about taking away the job-killing carbon tax, a tax, by the way – some of my new colleagues who were not around then may not know this – that this opposition party, when they were running to be government in this place in 2015, never bothered to mention or tell Albertans that they were going to bring in, that they hid from Albertans. They then came into this House and brought in the largest tax increase in the history of this province after not telling Albertans about it. That was the core of the argument in the beginning.

My friend the hon. Finance minister is now bringing forward a bill that will bring in the largest tax decrease in the history of this province. I thank him very much for that. I see that members continue to not want to talk about that very important issue and the consequences of the decision that their policy, their tax policy, had on the people of Alberta; the consequences on food banks, which we heard from, who had to overcome significant issues; on homeless shelters; on our schools . . .

Mr. McIver: The seniors' home in Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Jason Nixon: The seniors' home in Sundre, actually, hon. member, though the seniors' home in Rocky Mountain House was impacted as well. That's a great example.

What my friend from Calgary-Hays is referring to is a seniors' centre inside Sundre, my hometown, that the then Leader of the Opposition and now the Premier of Alberta and I visited together, that was in danger of being shut down because of the carbon tax, because of the NDP's carbon tax.

An Hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. Jason Nixon: We tabled it many times. Happy to table it again.

They were in danger of being shut down because of the carbon tax. Now, this is not a seniors' home, as you'd recall. It's actually a seniors' centre in our community of Sundre. It's called the Sundre West Country Centre. Seniors in our community come there to recreate. It's a really cool place. Sometimes I drop by to have a visit. It is basically completely self-funded by the seniors in our community. They pay a minimal membership every year, they maintain the facility, and it provides a place to recreate inside the community of Sundre for our seniors.

They're in a position where they're about to have to shut their doors because of the NDP carbon tax, and when they'd bring it up – and we'd bring it up on their behalf as their representatives – do you know what the opposition members across the way from me who were then members of Her Majesty's Executive Council on this side of the House said to the people in my community about that carbon tax? They told them to go and have a fundraiser to pay for their carbon tax. They told seniors in my community to have a fundraiser to pay for their carbon tax.

The examples of that go on and on. There was a swimming pool in Sundre – now that we're on Sundre, we'll talk about Sundre for a little bit; I'm always happy to talk about Sundre, aren't I, hon. member? – that was in danger of shutting down because their carbon tax went up drastically. I don't have the number in front of me; it's been so long. But we were going to lose the swimming pool inside our community. That's what their carbon tax did. But why it was even made worse was – I see the hon. Opposition House Leader wants to pipe up. I'm sure he's probably ashamed that at the time he was part of a government that told seniors to fund raise for their carbon tax. I would be ashamed of that. He should be ashamed of that.

But the reality of it is that the now Leader of the Opposition, when she was Premier, did an interview and acknowledged that she did not even know how much emissions went down as a result of that tax increase. All pain, no gain: that's what the carbon tax did. It doesn't improve the environment. It hurt the social safety net of our communities. It hurt our municipalities. It cost our school boards more money to get kids to school. It cost significantly more money for each household as they had to pay their bills. It cost more money for our agriculture communities. They had to dry things like grain and participate in that. All of that because they said that we'd have an impact on the environment, and then they admitted that they had no positive impact on the environment.

Shockingly, they continue to still stand inside this House and try to defend that, try to defend the fact that they didn't tell Albertans about the largest tax increase in Alberta – they hid it from them when they brought it forward – try to defend the fact that they continued down that path, forcing that carbon tax on Albertans even though it wasn't impacting the environment. They continue to want to defend that. Well, I will tell you, Mr. Speaker – and I know that your constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, who I get to talk to quite a bit, think this as well – that we are excited about the opportunity to finally be able to get rid of the job-killing carbon tax and the consequences that have happened to Albertans as a result of that tax.

The opposition should recognize that they have found themselves on that side of the House, on the opposition benches, because of many other issues but largely because of the carbon tax. Albertans rejected it on April 16. The idea that you will continue to stand in this House and attempt to try to block this legislation from making it out is disappointing and shows, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition still has not learned their lesson. It's time for them to accept that their carbon tax did not work. It was all pain and no gain.

Now, if they don't want to do that, I can tell you this, Mr. Speaker. This side of the House, the government, is going to keep our commitment to Albertans – keep our commitment to Albertans – follow through on the promise that we made to them during the campaign and before that, and follow through on the instructions that they gave us April 16 with the largest vote count of any government in the history of this province. We're going to stand with the Minister of Finance, and when you finally stop trying to block a reasonable bill, we're going to get this bill through the House, and the carbon tax is finally going to be gone in this province.

The Speaker: Any members under 29(2)(a), questions and comments?

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I see, is rising in debate.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't help myself. I wanted to give some of my colleagues or some of the newly elected government members the opportunity to speak. As for yourself, I already congratulated you on your election, not your appointment, as you so aptly pointed out.

You know, it's my duty to rise and speak to this bill. Now, I'm not going to contest the fact that when we introduced the carbon levy, it did place a financial burden on some Albertans. I will say some, because two-thirds did receive a rebate for the carbon levy, so it did not impact everyone equally. But I will speak to the various reasons why we introduced our climate leadership plan, a robust climate leadership plan, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, and about my concerns with the fact that this government wants to repeal it.

Now, they can talk about wanting to save Albertans some money, but what needs to be understood, Mr. Speaker, is that every single penny that was collected from the price on carbon was reinvested in the economy, whether that was through two-thirds of Albertans getting a rebate, whether that was through businesses, not-for-profits, seniors' centres having the opportunity to apply for rebates to install solar panels, higher energy efficiency windows, doors, furnaces. You know, what I think the opposition, or the government – it's going to take a little getting used to being over here, or being back over here – fails to grasp is that investments that you make, whether in solar or wind, in energy efficiency, give you savings every month for the lifetime of the asset. Yes, there may be an upfront cost to it, but that upfront cost is paid off over subsequent years, and then there is a significant saving to be achieved.

You know, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the government wanting to punish large industrial emitters by only making them pay is something that I'm sure industry will have something to say about in the coming weeks.

What I can tell you is that through our climate leadership plan we created a $1.4 billion innovation fund. At some point I'm sure one of the government members is going to talk about their new idea to have some kind of fund to help with innovation. Well, you know, you're about four years too late. That fund existed. Actually, to be fair, it existed long before we were government. It existed long before several governments through entities like Alberta Innovates, that has funding available for industry to find innovative solutions to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions, to reduce their environmental footprint, and, you know, from an industry point of view, maybe most importantly, also to reduce their costs, meaning that they are making better profits. So, really, this was a win-win. We sat down with industry to design this innovation fund, which has had a significant impact, quite frankly, on the province, Mr. Speaker.

There are a number of different projects that have been announced in the oil and gas sector in the past two years that are using innovative technologies, some that were codeveloped with Alberta Innovates. You know, it's quite exciting to see different projects in either the reduction of water usage or their use of cost savings through innovation.

Now, the other point I want to mention, Mr. Speaker, is that, really, my biggest frustration is that the Premier and this government are once again not only inviting Ottawa into Alberta; they are trying to ram Ottawa down Alberta's throat. When I say that, I mean that in a number of senses. One, we're about to have a debate tomorrow on standing orders. In this place there's been a history of desk thumping to show solidarity, to show appreciation, to support our members. In fact, those that have sat in this House for the past few years or longer know that both sides of the House will show their support for speakers when they're talking about challenging issues or impacts to them, their lives, their constituents. It's really a show of support. I think, on the one hand, the Premier has missed the boat on this. But the other is that by repealing Alberta's, you know, price on carbon and really gutting our climate leadership plan, this government is paving the way for the Prime Minister to ram a federally imposed carbon tax down the throat of every Albertan.

Now, the Premier can puff out his chest and talk about how he's going to fight this along with the other Premiers who are failing in their fight against Ottawa, spending millions of taxpayer dollars. The very same people that are arguing that they're saving money are actually spending money in a futile attempt to try to stop – quite frankly, you know, if the federal government decides to impose this on the provinces, the provinces will have to pay. We preferred a made-in-Alberta solution; the Premier prefers a made-in-Ottawa solution. I think it's interesting. I think his left foot is just itching to get back there, Mr. Speaker.

What I can tell you also is that the repeal of our price on carbon is going to have a significant impact on the investment that was coming to Alberta in renewables. Let's talk about numbers and investments, okay? We can talk about the one argument as far as Alberta doing its part and showing the world that we are seriously taking action. I get that a lot of members will say, "Well, let's look at China; let's look at some of these other countries and how much more they pollute" although I will challenge any member that says that or thinks that. Go do your homework. China is investing billions, tens of billions of dollars, in renewables, in innovation and technologies, and in reducing their footprint. If you think for a second, "Let's wait until China catches up to us," they are going to leave us standing in the dust because when that country decides to move, the whole country moves, and they have the power behind them.

You know, I guess what I was happy to see was that Alberta was the number one destination for renewables investment in Canada. Thank you, Premier Ford, for ensuring that investment fled Ontario and came to Alberta. Now investment is scratching its head, not knowing where to go. It's interesting. The government may talk about stability, but actually when you go out and talk to investors, this creates instability. They liked the fact. They want something that's predictable, that's long term. It's similar down in the United States, where the U.S. President has said, you know, back to the Wild West with coal-fired electricity, with removing some of their federal initiatives on climate. Investors don't say yee-haw. They say: "Great. Now we have uncertainty for at least a period of two years, maybe another six years, but future governments will take this seriously and take meaningful action. Just show us stability."

For us, I mean, we saw the amount of investment that was coming into the province. We actually had a number of different req auctions for wind-powered electricity, which were lower than what we had thought they would commit at. In fact, I think they broke records as far as how cheap the energy was to create. Again, you know, this government is saying: "Okay. We're not going to phase out coal-fired electricity." I really wonder if the Premier struggles with himself every night when he tries to sleep because it was him under Prime Minister Harper that shut the doors and turned their backs on communities, on communities in Alberta, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker. Twelve of 18 coal-fired electricity plants were closed down because of Prime Minister Harper's regulations, and the Premier was a senior cabinet minister. I'm sure you're dying to know: what supports did they have for these communities, for these workers, the very people that they claimed to protect? Guess what? Not a single support. Not a dollar of support for transition. No retraining. No bridge to retirement for those that did lose their jobs. There was nothing. It was silence. Crickets.

When we brought in regulations to phase out six of the 18 coal-fired plants, we – well, I – toured the province talking to communities and workers. We listened and asked them: what do you need to help you transition? So we introduced a coal community transition fund to help the municipalities and communities look at ways to diversify their economy. We brought in, I think, $30 million or $40 million for the worker transition fund. That included funds to help bridge retiring workers or those that are only a couple of years from retirement. A lot of them said to us: "You know, I'm 58. I'm 61. I'm only a couple of years from retirement. Who's going to hire me? I don't want to go back and retrain." Fair enough. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that we had supports for them; there was a plan. I can tell you that, again, there is no plan for these current communities under this current government.

We haven't spoken a lot at length about the indigenous communities around the province that are hungry to participate in the renewables market and came not only with ideas and dollars but were very interested in participating and had been and were excited at the fact that previous governments for decades talked the talk but didn't walk the walk when it came to true engagement. Now, of course, the government is going to talk about this corporation that they're creating, but what are they saying to the indigenous communities who were ready to move forward on these significant investments, that are now at a standstill, and who are completely at a loss for words?

Mr. Speaker, I think it's not only disrespectful but disingenuous to talk about a price on carbon as something that is killing jobs. I think that, if anything, again, the government needs to take a look at the fact that we had a historic collapse in the price of oil in this province, from which the province is still reeling. But where we had a plan to work with industry, to work with the private sector to create jobs – I mean, we'll have ample opportunity to talk about I believe it's Bill 3 when it comes. But I can tell you from talking with a number of industry players – and we have examples especially just south of us, down in the United States – that simply reducing the corporate tax rate does not immediately lead to an increase in jobs nor investment.

You know, I've spoken with a number of companies already, and I asked them: "Hey, what are you going to do with the extra dollars that you're going to have when the corporate tax rate decreases? Are you going to reinvest it? Are you going to hire more people? Are you going to invest in training, buy new machinery and equipment?" They said: "No. We're going to do none of that. We're going to pocket it. It's extra profits." So it's not actually going to help do what, I believe, the government thinks it's going to do.

You know, Mr. Speaker, again recognizing that there were Albertans that weren't happy about paying this carbon levy, I think that part of the challenge, quite frankly, was that a lot of Albertans weren't aware of the number of programs that were available to make their homes, their businesses more energy efficient, that this really was showing the world that you can take meaningful action on climate and on the environment while at the same time supporting industry. I mean, I think that if we went back five years and we were to say, "You know what; the Premier of Alberta is going to stand on the stage with a number of some of the largest oil sands company CEOs, alongside indigenous leaders, beside environmental NGO leaders, and they're all going to say that this is the right thing to do," I don't think people would have believed it. But that's what happened. That was a historic day when we brought together different players to say that we can take meaningful action while at the same time supporting our economy.

I mean, maybe unbeknownst to some government members, ExxonMobil, you know, this really tiny company that dabbles in oil, has a fund that they are going around lobbying U.S. governments to keep a carbon tax. They want to keep a price on carbon. You know why, Mr. Speaker? Because they're investing hundreds of millions of dollars to reduce their GHGs, to reduce their environmental footprint. They're saying: "If you go around and remove this, do you know what you're doing? Do you know who you're rewarding? You're rewarding the biggest laggards, the biggest polluters in the world, and you're saying, 'don't do anything; don't bother upgrading your technologies, and don't bother trying to find innovative solutions.'" So they're of the mindset: we want to be a world leader. Go talk to Shell. Go talk to Exxon. Go talk to Husky, to a number of companies that are making significant investments. They will actually say: "You know what? With this government's plan, they've got it wrong; they've got it backwards." They'll say that we should be doing something about this, that we should be taking the money that's collected and reinvesting it.

You know, I'd love to ask – I'm trying to look around for a number of members that were former Wildrosers who were here talking about . . . [Mr. Bilous's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: I see the Member for Edmonton-Decore rising under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah, it's a pleasure. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for sharing his thoughts. I was hoping I might have the opportunity to tap into his experience as the former minister of economic development and trade. He mentioned several times the investments within the province through the carbon levy. I know that specifically in Edmonton-Decore, which is known as the shopping district, we had a major company, Simons, make an investment over at Londonderry Mall. For those that don't know about Simons: a very, very successful company throughout history. As a matter of fact, it has a history dating back I believe it's 180 years now. You don't hang around that long without making smart investment decisions. One of the decisions they made was around a solar array program through there. I was hoping that the member might be able to talk a little bit about how investments might be affected should the carbon levy be removed and how they may not make decisions about making investments in our communities.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the Member for Edmonton-Decore for his question. Where I was going with this – and I see that there are a number of members that were around a few years back. I know that over and over again the question and – I don't want to say accusation; that's quite a harsh word. There were claims that the carbon levy would be some kind of slush fund. Again, we answered and laid out exactly where every single dollar went. I find it very ironic that what the government is proposing is that funds that were being collected under the Climate Leadership Act are now just going to get funnelled into general revenues. You know, just put it over here; don't worry about reinvesting it back into creating jobs, back into supporting the economy, back into ensuring that Albertans who couldn't afford the increase in the cost of living would get a rebate. I mean, that's the other thing, Mr. Speaker: two-thirds of Albertans did not have to pay the carbon levy. They got a rebate. For me, I can only shake my head at the fact that what we were accused of is the very thing that the government is doing or proposing to do by creating this fund.

Now, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore's question, undoubtedly, when supports for an industry that is getting up and going – we're seeing the costs come down every year, whether it's for the components for solar or for wind. When this government repeals the carbon levy and takes us backwards, it will have an effect on investors. In fact, it already has had on investors and investments in Canada. We're not being world leaders. We are not being Albertans, innovators and entrepreneurs. We are putting our head in the sand and in the ground and hoping that the rest of the world will come up with a solution. Well, you know what I say, Mr. Speaker? We're missing out on opportunities because Albertans are world leaders, but at times we need the government to introduce the right policies to help spur that along.

Quite frankly, what we are seeing is regression. This government can say that they are helping the province. For those that are paying it, that have had their margins squeezed a little bit through this price on carbon: yes, that will bring about a little bit of reprieve for them temporarily, until the federal government imposes the carbon tax on them and then decides what to do with that money that they collect. Again, Mr. Speaker, I think that it sends the wrong message to investors around this globe as far as Alberta taking meaningful action, being climate leaders, being leaders in this country, being leaders internationally. I know that my colleague the Member for Lethbridge-West can talk about the number of calls and invitations that she gets on a regular basis to talk about what was done here in Alberta and how excited legislators around the world were to hear what we did and how we did it. Again, the majority of Albertans did not pay that. They got a rebate, and the rest of it was reinvested.

The Speaker: Are there other members wishing to speak to Bill 1? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. “Nature is declining globally at rates unprecedented in human history – and the rate of species extinctions is accelerating, with grave impacts on people around the world now likely.” Such is the warning from a landmark new report from the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services released in early May.

Here are some quotes from one of the lead authors from that report. From the chair: “The health of ecosystems on which we and all other species depend is deteriorating more rapidly than ever. We are eroding the very foundations of our economies, livelihoods, food security, health and quality of life worldwide.” “‘Transformative changes’ [are] needed to restore and protect nature,” says the report. This is the “most comprehensive [natural world] assessment of its kind.” We have “1,000,000 species threatened with extinction” world-wide.

There were 145 expert authors from 50 countries over the past three years, with inputs from another 310 contributing scientific authors. The report assesses changes over the past five decades. That’s in biodiversity alone.

On climate change Canada’s climate is warming rapidly and faster than the global average. We are warming at twice the rate of the rest of the world. Northern Canada is warming even more quickly, nearly three times the global rate. Three of the past five years have been the warmest on record.

One of my friends is the president of the Inuit Tapiriit Kanatami, the political voice for Canada’s Inuit. His name is Natan Obed. Every time he goes home, he notices the changes to way of life, to food, to availability of berries, for hunting, gathering, and species. Everything is changing as the permafrost melts and as life changes in Canada’s north.

The 2019 Saskatchewan Court of Appeal decision: the Conservatives were really happy about the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal reference until the decision came down a couple of weeks ago, which upheld the constitutionality of the federal carbon pricing act in both its parts. Its economy-wide price and its output-based allocation system, both parts 1 and 2, were found wholly constitutional, Mr. Speaker.

That decision that Premiers Ford and Moe and our own Premier were very excited about before the decision came: here are some quotes from that decision. They quote from the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, which is the global authority on climate change established by the United Nations environment program and the world meteorological association. Here are some quotes.

Climate change will amplify existing risks and create new risks for natural and human systems. Risks are unevenly distributed and are generally greater for disadvantaged people and communities in countries at all levels of development.

In other words, failure to act, Mr. Speaker: disproportionately, that burden is felt by disadvantaged people around the world and in this country among indigenous people, like I just described.

Without additional mitigation efforts beyond those in place today, wrote the IPCC, and even with adaptation, warming by the end of the 21st century will lead to high to very high risk of severe, widespread and irreversible impacts globally.

They state this with “high confidence.”

It’s important to note that in section 16 of the Saskatchewan court’s decision they say, “None of these conclusions were challenged or put in issue by the participants in this Reference.” The UCP participated in that reference, Mr. Speaker. None of these facts, including that the risks of climate change will be disproportionately felt by the disadvantaged among us, was put in question by the UCP’s own high-priced lawyers.

So we know that Canada must do its part. Canada is in fact a signatory to a number of international conventions on this matter, Mr. Speaker – the Kyoto protocol, then the Copenhagen accord, and then, of course, the Paris agreement – that commit us to varying levels of greenhouse gas emissions reductions.

Well, what does this have to do with carbon pricing? Once again, Mr. Speaker, I commend to you page 42 of the Saskatchewan court reference, in which the court looks at the broad starting point concerns of whether this matter is something of national importance and the idea of minimum national standards of price stringency for GHG emissions and finds that “there is widespread international consensus that carbon pricing is[, in fact, that] necessary measure” that will bring minimum national standards of price stringency for GHG emissions. They are not a sufficient measure, writes the court, to achieve the global reductions in GHG emissions but “a well-designed carbon price is an indispensable part of a strategy for reducing emissions in an efficient way.” That, from the foreign-funded radicals at the High-Level Commission on Carbon Prices report prepared by the World Bank.

As the court writes, “There is a widespread trend in favour of carbon pricing . . . Overall, 67 jurisdictions . . . are putting a price on carbon.” And then, affirmed by Nicholas Rivers, who is an economist that the Wildrose used to quote before he told them to stop, “The existing literature is highly convergent in finding that carbon prices that have been implemented around the world have been successful in reducing greenhouse gas emissions.” It is also of note, Mr. Speaker, that none of these concerns were contested by the intervenors in the Saskatchewan court case, including the UCP’s own lawyer. If the UCP is going to spend all kinds of money on lawyers to agree with those facts, it defies logic why they would stand in this House right now and disagree with them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the world has questions, too, and I have spoken at length about this with reference to my previous role, both on the record in the media and in this House in terms of what oil companies and others were asking us to do to make Alberta resilient in a carbon-constrained future. As I just enumerated, we are on the verge of dramatic – dramatic – change in our climate, in climate change, climate variability, and severity of extreme weather events. That is for sure. Yes, it is real. Yes, it is happening, and it’s us. Yes, it is bad. But the good news is there is something we can do about it. That was the message that companies like Suncor and CN Rail and Cenovus brought to us in 2015, and we acted.

My former deputy minister recounts a story of having hotshot investors, as he calls them, come to meet with him a couple of years ago indicating that they were being swamped, quote: more than 10,000 e-mails, letters, and phone calls with demands from their own shareholders that the company stop investing in the Alberta oil sands. For their companies to continue investing, they needed answers. These hotshot investors’ questions, according to my deputy, were tough, detailed, and demanding. So our officials, competent as they are, went about the case of enumerating exactly what Alberta was doing in terms of its climate leadership plan: its approach to conservation, its approach to reinvestment, to energy efficiency, to clean technology, the $1.4 billion that my hon. colleague spoke of earlier, and to meaningful action on renewables and diversification.

It is also true that companies are disclosing their climate action. Individually, many of them are already doing this. Suncor and others have been doing this for some years, Mr. Speaker. It is also true that the Bank of Canada has now joined a financial reporting and climate transparency initiative, an initiative first pioneered by the Bank of England and former Governor Mark Carney, who have done a number of different reports and guidance documents to other central banks around the world around the disclosure of climate risk, transparency, reporting and so on.

It is distressing, to say the least, that our Premier has dismissed those actions on the part of the central banks around the world as the flavour of the month. This is deeply concerning to investor confidence in this province, that now we have a Premier that would thumb his nose at the international financial community, at the central banks, as if he knows better. I know that I would rather carefully review the advice coming from the governor of the Bank of England, from the Bloomberg group, and all of their work that they are doing on financial transparency and reporting and risk. I would rather look carefully at what the Bank of Canada is signalling with respect to its role in maintaining monetary and fiscal policy. Mr. Speaker, that is deeply concerning. It's deeply concerning to the future of this province, and that is one of the reasons why I do not support Bill 1.

Another one of the reasons I do not is because this bill takes away all of the fences around the use of the funds. Mr. Speaker, part 2 in the Climate Leadership Act – maybe it was part 3; I think it was part 3 – enumerates the permitted uses for the funds. The funds collected were either to go to tax cuts or rebates, which is why 65 per cent of Albertans got a cheque, which is why we cut the small-business rate by a third. After that, a permitted use was in climate change mitigation, in reducing greenhouse gas emissions that cause climate change, climate variability, and severe weather that are in fact imperilling the future of humanity. So we did that. The third piece is around climate adaptation. This was also a permitted use.

I notice that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod is in this Chamber. I have met with many of his constituents – ranchers, fourth- and fifth-generation Albertans in this province – who have made a spirited case for carbon offsets from soil carbon sequestration, for ensuring that we keep our native grasslands and our foothills intact, which not only sustains their way of life as ranchers, their historic way of life, but also sustains the environment and also allows us to sequester carbon and ensure that there is something to pass on to future generations.

The hon. member's constituents are very concerned about this, Mr. Speaker, and now there won't be any funds for those climate adaptation initiatives. Why? Because this government turned those funds into a slush fund. Because this government turned around and gave any hope and any possibility of those kinds of conservation initiatives, that are deeply Albertan, that are written into our DNA, saving the family farm and ranches – for what? – to turn around and try to paper over a hole in the deficit that you blew from a $4 and a half billion tax cut. That is another reason why I do not support Bill 1.

Now, I also don't support Bill 1 because some of those programs that we invested in, with their winding down, are going to put insulators, electricians, boilermakers, power engineers, and others out of work. We invested significantly in industrial energy efficiency programs, Mr. Speaker. This was a key priority. It is not just about residences, and it is not just about large emitters. We have a lot of light manufacturing and light commercial activity that goes on in this province, and we made sure we had a good, solid suite of programs that were available to them for that. Those programs will all disappear, and every single one of those people is going to be thrown out of work.

Every postal code in this province had accessed energy efficiency programs in some way. Every First Nation in this province had accessed those programs in some way. You know, I worry about the people of Fort Chipewyan, who have made their future plans in terms of making their community resilient, in terms of redirecting funds that they spent on diesel generation into being the largest off-grid solar project in Canada. That is what this climate leadership plan built: three First Nations co-owning it, technical expertise coming from ATCO. That project may collapse. I worry about those programs, Mr. Speaker, and I worry about others, too. I worry about indigenous people who wanted to move forward with the indigenous equity participation in future renewable energy rounds, and with some of the equity participation funds that are no longer available to them, they may not be able to do that.

Finally, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), are there any members who wish to have any questions or comments? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I just heard was fascinating. I just heard the hon. member the former environment minister stand up and talk as if she was the champion of investment right after her government chased $80 billion out of Alberta that may never come back unless there's a better government with better policies that is more business friendly. Eighty billion dollars. Yet the hon. member would stand here in this House on the record and claim to be a champion of investment. That is the most incredible, amazing thing that I've ever heard. I guess I'm not speechless because I'm talking, but the fact is that I can't imagine a more ridiculous statement that was read into the record in this House than the one that just finished right before I spoke.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, there are people whose jobs, whose businesses were going to close, if the election went the other way, because of the policies of the previous government that were taking those businesses and the jobs out, not just the carbon tax but the combination of the carbon tax and the minimum wage, that was killing small businesses and restaurants and reducing jobs and reducing jobs for young people. We are at record levels of unemployment in Alberta for young people, yet the former minister would stand up like a champion of investment. I can't imagine anything more ridiculous than what we just heard.

Mr. Speaker, even on the other end we all should care about the environment, and I believe we all do. In that way, we should all care about what that does, but – you know what? – we learned during the last four years, through mechanisms and through experts, that through carbon leakage the carbon tax is probably a net environmental negative, not a positive but a negative.

Yes, indeed, the former government got some company from Ontario to come out and put in light bulbs. In fact, Mr. Speaker, they made two trips to each home to put in light bulbs, one to count them and then to come back and put the other ones in. To make sure they were environmentally friendly, they took out the light bulbs that were working and took them with them because you don't want to fully use the working light bulbs; you want to take them with you when you leave. Yet they couldn't find somebody from Alberta, a company from Alberta to make two trips to every home and change light bulbs.

This is really fascinating. Mr. Speaker, talk about stability, when we had – I don't know – a massive number of major energy companies leave Alberta in the last four years for, I guess, more stable investment environments like Nigeria and many other countries and Iran. The fact is that to hear this attempted revision of history is fascinating to me, and it's courageous. You know what?

If somebody, you know, got caught doing something and then came there the next day or the next minute and said, "I didn't do that," everybody would say, "Well, everybody saw you." "No, I didn't do it." That's what we just heard, an absolute denial of the track record of the previous government over the last four years, that leaves us with 183,000 or so Albertans out of work, that leaves us with record high unemployment for young people, that leaves us with a deficit of $6 billion to $8 billion to $10 billion per year, heading for $100 billion, not by our numbers but by the previous government's own numbers. That's what they would admit to. Who knows how bad it would be if they were given another four years to unleash these policies on Albertans and Alberta jobs and Alberta families. It is scary.

Fortunately, Albertans saw through that, Mr. Speaker. Fortunately, Albertans saw no social licence. Fortunately, Albertans saw the disconnect between people, like the former speaker, writing books against the oil sands or writing the forewords for books against the energy industry and then claiming to stand up the next day and be a champion. Albertans saw the hypocrisy. Albertans saw the inconsistency. Albertans made their choice, and they made their choice with their eyes wide open.

The number one thing in our platform that Albertans voted for in droves – and by "droves" I mean the biggest number of voters in the history of an Alberta election. They voted against the carbon tax, which is why I support this bill, that removes the carbon tax.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak in debate on Bill 1? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just looking through a few articles, and there was one that caught my attention. It's an American article, I believe, from Vox, October 2018, and the title of the article is Why Conservatives Keep Gaslighting the Nation about Climate Change. The article begins, "In recent years, leaders of the Republican Party have become aware that denying the existence of global warming makes them look like idiots." Well, you know, we seem to follow suit with the United States. I'm hopeful, but I just listened to the member go on and on about light bulbs ...

The Speaker: Thank you. I just might provide some caution. I recognize that you're quoting from an article.

Ms Renaud: I was.

The Speaker: It's okay. I'm speaking. Thank you.

I recognize that you're quoting from an article. We need to be careful that we don't do indirectly what we can't do directly. I would just advise some caution, with respect, and I also expect that we'll see the article tabled tomorrow.

Ms Renaud: Absolutely. I will table the article.

I listened to the previous speaker talk about light bulbs. That's fine. We heard them talking about it for months and months and months and months because that's what they latched on to, that and their little slogan about axing the tax or whatever that was, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you'll remember.

But what it's about is our future and our children's future. When it comes right down to it, all of the things that we do and that we talk about in this House will be remembered not just because it's in Hansard but because we actually create laws and regulation and we set the tone, we set the stage for our future. What you're doing by scrapping this work that we brought in is that you're making a statement that the science that we know to be true is not important enough for you to pay attention and to do the things that we need to do to ensure that our children and their children have the same future that we enjoy now, because they won't.

Ninety-seven per cent of the world's scientists – and you can laugh if you like; it's not funny. These are peer-reviewed scientists that are telling us that this is happening. They've been telling us for decades, but we have not been listening. But it is happening. We know that a million species are at risk of extinction. I can't even comprehend what that means for us. It's beyond even understanding what losing a million – what does that mean for us and our future, for our children? We've been told by scientist that we have 12 years to act until it's too late. That is not the world that I want for my children and their children, not at all.

My son is a scientist, and his fiancée is a scientist as well, and that's probably the closest I ever got to science because I am not a scientist by any stretch. We talk a lot, obviously, about climate change, and when I talk about some of the things that I hear in this place, do you know what their response is? They actually laugh. They laugh at the denial that goes on. They laugh at the fact that politicians, whatever your background, can sit in places like this and create laws, vote for laws, or speak against laws, legislation, bills that actually are based in science and fact. They give me examples that in meetings, their scientific meetings, whether it's their department or when they got to conferences, it's virtually impossible for that many of them to ever agree on anything, but what they do agree on is this science, that man-made climate change is going to cause problems that we will soon be unable to fix or mitigate. Yet we're sitting here, and we're discussing getting rid of a strategy in a larger plan that looked at taking us to a place where we could start to make a difference.

It's not just our scientists that study climate change that are telling us this. Here's an older article, that I also found, from the Canadian Medical Association.

Climate change is increasingly recognized as a significant threat facing society and has the potential to be one of the greatest threats to human health in the 21st Century.

I don't think they wrote this lightly.

Possible impacts could include ...

and I'm going to read some of them for you because they need to be on the record and you need to listen to this stuff. You need to think about this when you vote.

- Increased mortality, disease and injuries from heat waves and other extreme weather events ...

Add to this the people that are marginalized, that are even more impacted by these things, whether it's our seniors, whether it's people with disabilities, whether it's people that live in poverty. They don't have the ability to get out of the way of these massive events.

- Continued change in the range of some infectious disease vectors ...
- Effects on food yields – increased malnutrition;
- Increased flooding in some areas and increased droughts in others ...

as already mentioned,

- ... along with other impacts on freshwater supply;
- Increases in foodborne and waterborne illnesses;
- Warming and rising sea levels adding to displacement and also impacting water supply through salination;
- Impaired functioning of ecosystems;
- Negative effects on air quality associated with ground level ozone, including increases in cardio-respiratory morbidity and mortality, asthma, and allergens;

- Displacement of vulnerable populations . . .

We know this. Just look at what's happening around us. Any disaster that happens, whether it's a flood, whether it's a fire – certainly, our first responders are incredible and get people out of the way and to safety, but it's the people that are at risk that are most in harm's way.

You know, I think it was last week I heard one of the UCP – well, I don't want to call them talking heads – radio supporters, I suppose, making fun of the student movement. I don't know. I think that having over a million students in 125 countries all around the globe saying the same thing, that you need to pay attention – this is serious. This isn't about politics. This isn't about a bumper sticker. This isn't about you getting re-elected. This is about our future. This is about our children, and it's about their children. They're turning up every single Friday, and they're saying the same thing: politicians, decision-makers, pay attention, pay attention to the science, pay attention to what's happening to our planet. Is it really worth it, a little, tiny short-term gain, your platform promise so that people are saving $100 a month, maybe, on the carbon tax, so you can say, "Yay, look what we did; we lived up to our promise"?

In the meantime, what is happening? We're being warned. We have 12 years to act until it's too late. A million species are at risk. It's happening. Look at the fires in northern Alberta. I'm not saying that we haven't had forest fires, but our scientists have been telling us again and again and again for decades that they will get worse, they will happen earlier, they'll be more intense. The same with flooding, the same with drought and all of the things that are impacted: you understand it when we lose a species. I'm sure you've all heard the science around our bees.

It's all interconnected, so by ignoring this, ignoring the warnings that our scientists have been giving us for decades, you are putting our planet at risk, our country, our province, our cities, but most importantly you're putting our children's future at risk, their future, their children's future. Is that something that you can be proud of? In a few years from now, when all certainty is gone and there is nothing else that you can possibly cling to and you hide your bumper stickers because you're embarrassed, can you say, "I did everything I could"?

I'd like to close debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just might remind the member to address your comments through the chair, if you might, in the future. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Glasgow moved, seconded by Ms Rosin, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate May 27: Mr. Jason Nixon]

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane is rising on debate of the throne speech.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you. I rise today, Mr. Speaker, as the proud MLA for Airdrie-Cochrane, the son of Winston and Barbara, the brother of Jeff and Glenda, the husband to Tracy, and the father of Mitchell and Camryn. This is a new electoral district northwest of Calgary encompassing the southwest of Airdrie, Bearspaw, a portion of Rocky View, and Cochrane. It's a unique region, on Treaty 7 land, that combines urban communities with that of acreage living and rural farmlands.

There's a long history of cattle ranching in the area, with family establishments like those of the Hansons west of Airdrie and the Harvie family, who in conjunction with the Alberta government in 2006 created Glenbow Ranch provincial park. I must admit that I look forward to the bull and cattle sales that take place at Soderglen ranch each year. In fact, every February Stan and Jane Grad, the owners of Soderglen, host a large bull sale that attracts buyers from across this province and beyond. I'm no longer in the cattle business, but I must say that the steak sandwich they provide is pretty, pretty okay and the conversation even better. Farmers and ranchers always have great stories to tell, and I'm always interested to hear about those.

Although not in our constituency but a positive influence, I'd like to mention the Stoney Nakoda Nation to our west and the Tsuut'ina Nation to the south as we share many of the same values, resources, and infrastructure. I look forward to learning more about the First Nations' traditions and developing a long-standing relationship with them.

In 1992 I obtained a chemical engineering degree from the University of Alberta. My first field of work comprised eight years in sales and marketing in the pulp and paper industry, travelling throughout Alberta, western Canada, the U.S., and abroad, including three memorable trips to India.

But sometimes life doesn't always go as planned. In 1998 my brother-in-law Arlen Dumaresq was 25 years old and was destined to take over the family ranch in Consort, Alberta. The Dumaresqs are known for their hard work and work ethic, and Arlen fit that definition perfectly. He was not a man of many words, but he had a wit about him that was very enjoyable. In May of that year he was involved in a tragic farming accident. This accident left him paralyzed, and in December of 1998 he passed away.

After the birth of our son, Mitchell, a few months later my wife, a school teacher, and I set aside our careers, and in the spring of 2000 we moved to Consort in order to help on the family's ranch. Now, for a townie this was an eye-opening and humbling experience, managing and working in a 3,000-head feedlot with 450 cows to boot. However, over time I gained invaluable life and business experiences, including some wonderful times calving in the spring, but also turbulent ones, having to deal with both drought and BSE. The two-year time horizon we gave ourselves turned into 10 and saw the birth of our daughter, Camryn.

Along our travels on family trips away from Consort, we made many stops for ice cream at MacKay's in Cochrane's historic downtown. We fell in love with the community, so when we purchased our small business in Calgary, we made Cochrane our home. I've been a Cochrane resident for 10 years, with eight of those as a small-business owner in Calgary. My wife, Tracy, and I owned and operated a successful franchise business. In 2015, with changes to the political landscape both provincially and federally resulting in taxation and policy changes that we felt were detrimental to small businesses and to the vast majority of Albertans, we decided to make a change in our lives, so in 2017 we sold our business and entered the political realm. I felt that I had a background that, although it did not include politics, was one that was well representative of Alberta and especially the constituency of Airdrie-Cochrane.

Our electoral district has over 51,000 residents, and as Airdrie and Cochrane are two of the fastest growing communities in Canada, this area is bound to continue growing at a strong pace. This region is a corridor for transporting goods, and due to its picturesque views overlooking the Rocky Mountains, it is desirable for both tourism and for those wishing to escape life in the big city.

Naturally, this growth comes with its challenges, from health care and urgent care demands to senior living and palliative care concerns. Transportation infrastructure is at its limit. Cochrane, for instance, has no major interchange in a town approaching 30,000 people, so with the Bow River separating the town from north and south, with single-lane traffic on both highways 1A and 22, it creates high traffic congestion and is a safety risk for all travellers on these roadways. The small town western motif that residents take pride in can sometimes be lost waiting in long lines. A solution to these traffic woes is desperately needed.

It should be no surprise that when I first began my door-knocking campaign, I started with visits to the small-business community. I found some pretty interesting and unique establishments. For instance, from Cochrane we have Krang Spirits, a distillery serving up some pretty tasty vodka, I might say, and Half Hitch Brewing Company: great food and I'd recommend trying the Fire N' Fury. That's my favourite ale that they have on tap. From Airdrie we have Sorso lounge and espresso bar, very popular, serving up some great eats. I should also note that our constituency hosts two vibrant weekend farmers' markets every summer, with one in Cochrane on Saturdays and one in Bears paw on Sundays.

Our electoral district also has attracted business from the high-tech sector as a home base for Garmin, which has its Canadian headquarters in Cochrane, and 4iiii Innovations, supplying various technology-based products with a focus on athletics.

The largest private employer and contributor to our community is Spray Lake Sawmills. This upcoming year they will be celebrating 76 years of operations in Alberta. Chester Mjolsness founded this company in 1943, and it is still a family-run business, owned and operated now by his son Barry. The mill operates on a 200-year forest management plan and utilizes every part of the tree, including shavings and bark. In fact, they created a thriving business called Top Spray from this product once considered waste. Spray Lake understands that having a healthy forest is the centrepiece of maintaining a viable, prolific business. This is why they take great pride in conservation efforts for this renewable resource.

Over 40,000 Albertans make their living from forestry, approximately $7 billion in annual economic activity for this province. Alberta is recognized as a world leader in forest stewardship, and by managing our forest sustainably, we can have a healthy industry and help control the effects of fires and pest infestations.

I hear a lot about diversifying the economy in this province, but it is impossible to have your core sectors such as agriculture, forestry, and energy suffer and think that other industries will want to invest here. Economic diversification does not occur because a government decides it should occur. Diversification happens off the strengths of your core industries, and the government has to put those conditions into place for both core industries and diversification to prevail.

Many of the companies I spoke with identified several issues as barriers to doing business in Alberta. Those included high taxation, a stifling regulatory regime as well as increasing costs of goods and labour. I believe that many of these hurdles have been addressed in the Speech from the Throne, including, first, the carbon tax repeal act, which will make life more affordable for all Albertans. Next, the job creation tax cut, which will provide Alberta companies with the lowest taxes in Canada. Next, the open for business act: this will play a key role in creating jobs and alleviating recent cost burdens placed on employers. And the Red Tape Reduction Act will allow business and government the ability to focus outside of a suffocating regulatory jurisdiction that has been created in this province. All of these initiatives are being done with the main goal of creating good-paying jobs for Albertans.

In order to do that, we must create an environment that is positive for investment. By increasing revenue and developing a strong economic base, we can as government look forward to reducing our deficits and putting us on a path to a balanced budget. The challenges that lie ahead over the next four years are great, but I believe we have a terrific team with a new philosophy that will rise to the occasion.

Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to be here in Alberta's Legislature representing the new riding of Airdrie-Cochrane. I will do my utmost to serve its constituents, respect this House, and assist my colleagues in achieving our goals.

Thank you to the Assembly, and thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move to adjourn debate on the Speech from the Throne.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at . . .

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll help you with that. I will move to adjourn the House till tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:42 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, May 28, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning, everyone.

Let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideals but lay aside all private interests and prejudices, keeping in mind the responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. So may Your kingdom come and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

Please be seated.

Bill 1

An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

[Adjourned debate May 27: Ms Renaud]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax. This bill deals with one of the most important and urgent issues of our time, our society, and our economy: environment and climate change. On this side of the House we believe that climate change is a problem. This issue has been settled quite conclusively, and we as a society, we as owners of these resources, land, and environment have an obligation to hand all this to our future generations in a developed state and without destroying it. We know that Albertans want a plan – a real plan – to address climate issues, and the choice we have as government, as society is that we can either ignore the signs of a changing climate and be dragged along or we can show leadership and make our own choices for the security of our kids, for our environment, for our economy, and for our future generations.

That is why when we were in government, we took action for the future of our province, making sure that we have a cleaner environment for our kids, that we have jobs in renewable energy, and that we were investing in clean technology, green infrastructure, and in innovation in our economy, in oil sands, and in our energy industry. We believe – and that was said many times by our leader – that the economy and our environment can and must go hand in hand. That was the reason we brought forward the climate leadership plan. Essentially, this bill is trying to do exactly the opposite of that, the opposite of taking any action on the environment, and proposes to repeal the changes, to repeal the progress that we made under that climate leadership plan.

Under the Climate Leadership Act we worked with stakeholders, we worked with our industry, and we established a carbon levy on transportation and heating fuels in Alberta. We provided exemptions where needed and necessary, we set out the requirements for exemption certificates and licences, and we set out to set carbon levy rates on different fuels. All this was done with a view to making sure that our economy is up to pace with today's realities, our industry is competitive, and we are getting the value for our resources.

There is enough evidence that clearly demonstrates the urgency of climate issues, and it requires us to take action. Even the Nobel prize for economics in 2018 was given to two fellows for their research and leadership in this field back in the 1990s. Professors William D. Nordhaus and Paul M. Romer were awarded the Nobel prize for their work in this regard. I think that if we talk about economics, the basic premise of this subject is that it deals with the management of scarce resources, and what it does is that it deals with the constraints on economies that are dictated by nature. Our knowledge and our response deal with those constraints.

One of these professors talked about technological changes – Professor Romer, who demonstrated that that's how our knowledge can function as a driver for economic innovation and change – while Professor William Nordhaus talked about an integrated assessment model, which takes into account the constraint the environment puts on our economy. For both of them the fundamental argument is that while nature dictates the constraints on our economy, we cannot sit on the sidelines. We have to address that, and when we manage our resources, we have to account for those constraints. Both of them argue that climate change is one of the biggest constraints on our economy, and in their research, whether that's the integrated assessment model or endogenous growth theory, they both argue that we should use our research, we should use our knowledge to innovate in a way that helps us address the constraints put forth by the climate on our economy.

We also know that our industry is capital intensive and we get to compete in markets outside Alberta to get the capital to make investments in our market, and when we compete in global markets, markets outside Alberta, we also have to be mindful that the constraints put forth by the environment on economies around the globe are taken very seriously. More and more economies are moving towards addressing this issue, moving towards renewables, moving towards cleaner economies. Another thing is that when we compete to sell our product in global markets, there are also things like the carbon intensity of our oil barrel. That also is a measure that's looked at, and not having any plan to deal with the climate issues leaves the Alberta economy, Alberta industry at a huge disadvantage.

Despite all this evidence, what this UCP bill does is that it proposes to repeal the Climate Leadership Act, eliminating the carbon tax, and it also ends the rebates that two-thirds of Albertans were getting due to that plan. It also takes away the incentive that industry had to innovate, and it also takes the revenues that were collected by the carbon levy, that will no longer be used for the environmental-, climate-related projects or programs. To say the least, all these actions that are proposed in this piece of legislation run afoul of all the evidence available and are completely irresponsible.

A price on carbon exists in 40 different countries and 27 subnational jurisdictions, including California, New York, Washington state, and Mexico. When we brought this climate leadership plan in, we consulted widely with industry, we consulted widely with environmental groups, and there was a step in the right direction. Later on, when the pan-Canadian framework came, the federal government also brought forward legislation that will apply when provinces will not have their own plan to address climate change issues.

This piece of legislation will leave Alberta without a plan to deal with emissions, thus paving the way for the federal legislation to apply. Somehow, we were told, their bill will magically provide a $1.4 billion tax break to Albertans, notwithstanding the fact that it is taking away the rebate money, almost 600-plus million dollars, from two-thirds of Albertans. We were told that it will create 6,000 jobs across the province. However, under the climate leadership plan there were already 7,300 jobs, so it's taking more jobs away from Albertans than it's creating. By ignoring this problem, we are walking our economy into a dead end for our environment and for our future, and we're simply paving the way for Ottawa to come in and use their backstop legislation, the federal carbon tax, which will also risk the approval of our pipeline and our access to markets.

Instead of focusing on what a global trend requires us to do, instead of focusing on more renewable energy and natural gas, this government's plan is to just bring back the same old policies that were responsible for the issues that we are facing today in terms of market access. Instead of funding critical projects like the Calgary green line – being a Calgary MLA, it's an important project for Calgary – and instead of helping Albertans to renovate their homes with energy efficiency programs, we are wasting money on high-priced lawyers for the lawsuits that we know will not lead to the outcome that we were told to believe by this government.

In recent legal developments, Madam Speaker, there was a constitutional question brought forward by the government of Saskatchewan, which asked the court to opine on one question: whether the Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act, the federal act which was introduced in Parliament, was constitutional in whole or in part. That was the sole issue before the court in this constitutional reference. The Premier has said that they will also challenge the constitutionality of the same federal act, the Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act, and they will file a reference to the Court of Appeal.

In that constitutional challenge what we noticed is that Saskatchewan challenged the federal government's authority to enact such legislation based on section 53 of the Constitution, that it's not within the constitutional authority of the federal government to do so. But the Court of Appeal decided against Saskatchewan, and they also decided that under the constitutional powers, the federal government does have authority to implement such changes with respect to the environment. When they are dealing with any undertakings which are within their jurisdiction, anything they are fully entitled to, it's permissible for them under the Constitution to regulate all matters that fall within that undertaking, and they said that it was well within the scope of POGG authority under the Constitution. If this government was to ask all courts to decide on the same question, we are likely to get the same answer, meaning that what we were told before, that they will repeal this tax and bring a constitutional challenge, that's not open for us. Although a little late, more recently even the editorial board for the Edmonton Journal came up with an editorial saying that maybe leaving carbon climate leadership in place is a good idea because if we remove or repeal this, it will be replaced by the federal government's climate leadership act.

Madam Speaker, in closing, what this bill does is that it opts for a federal climate plan instead of a made-in-Alberta plan that was well considered, well thought out, and developed . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any comments or questions? The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I was very intrigued by what my fellow colleague was having to say. I would like to ask him specifically about how members in his own constituency were reacting to the idea that the carbon levy would be repealed.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think this bill is certainly a significant and important step but in a completely wrong direction and backwards. It will take away many worthy projects all across the province from my riding. Many of those projects will be in government members' ridings as well. If we look at some of those projects, for instance in Calgary, the green line was funded under revenues from this climate leadership plan. That's one of the most important infrastructure developments in Calgary.

Certainly, this action will put projects like those – and there was another Springbank project that was in Calgary. At a constituency level there were many constituents who have benefited from energy efficiency programs. Not only that, it was helping constituents, helping all Albertans to look after their environment, and this plan was on track to cut more than 50 megatonnes of emissions over the next 10 years. That amounts to taking almost 10.6 million cars off the road. All my constituents, like other Albertans, do have a vested interest in having a clean environment, in having clean water, in having an economy that is more diversified, that creates opportunities for them.

Certainly, this will also take jobs away from my constituents and other Albertans. There were 7,300 jobs that came with that plan, and there were further jobs that were coming along with this plan. We were told that 6,000 jobs were created, but we lost 7,300 jobs.

Our plan was also responsible for a one-third tax break for small business. That was also funded through revenues from this climate plan. We have major investments, as I said, in transit infrastructures.

Also, over two-thirds of Albertans were getting rebates. Certainly, my constituents were also benefiting from those rebates. Now that $700 million that was given back to Albertans, that was given back to my constituents has been taken away by this Bill 1.

There were many things that came along with the climate leadership plan, and repealing that will take those benefits away from my constituents and away from Albertans, benefits such as upgrades for schools, universities, and hospitals.

Along with that, there were energy efficiency programs. It was the first time in the province's history that we developed those energy efficiency plans. Certainly, many Albertans were benefiting from those plans. In Calgary and the neighbourhoods of Calgary there are many indigenous communities. They were benefiting from our climate leadership plan. Across the province there were 65 indigenous communities who benefited from initiatives from the climate leadership plan.

In reality this bill just delivers a huge tax break for wealthy and high-income Albertans and eliminates the revenue stream that supports renewable energy and rebate programs, and it threatens the funding of infrastructure projects like the green line, Springbank, and projects in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton. Essentially, it leaves Alberta at a disadvantage by not having a plan to address the climate issue, that is the most serious existential issue of our time.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there's been a request to revert to introductions. I will ask one question. It requires unanimous consent. Do you consent to revert to introductions? All those against, say no.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Calvin Strauss, who hails from Camrose. He's a prominent businessman, and I'm honoured that he's able to take some time to be here among us. Calvin, please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Welcome.

Any members wishing to speak? Edmonton-Glenora.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax (continued)

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm adjusting to the new practice of not doing introductions. I thought I'd introduce my guests in the midst of my speech, which I'm fine with. Yeah, that's fine. Thank you very much for that.

I want to begin my remarks in response to Bill 1 by recognizing that we're on the traditional land of Treaty 6 First Nations as well as the Métis people of Alberta, who share a very deep connection with this land.

I had the honour prior to being an MLA of having served on the Edmonton public school board. In my time on the school board I grew accustomed to visiting students, particularly grade 6 classes. I am regularly invited to speak to grade 6 classes when they're engaging in democracy. I'm very grateful to have a grade 6 student here today. She's from Westglen elementary school in the riding of Edmonton-Glenora, and her name is Sadie Cor. I want to thank her for being here and for bringing her mom. Sadie is like the students I talk to regularly. When I meet with them, I say: "No matter what age you are, you are my boss. You live in Edmonton-Glenora, and it's my job to represent you and to fight for the things that matter to you and for all of your classmates and for all Albertans." I'm really grateful that Sadie contacted me shortly after the election and wrote: "I am worried about global warming. How can I help so I don't die young?" It's a pretty simple statement from a grade 6 student.

Like many young people they are aware of the impacts that this generation and prior generations have made on our planet, and they are stepping up to make sure that they are being responsible for this generation and future generations. I want to start with step 1, acknowledging that climate change is real. Scientific consensus has been reached on this matter, I would say, as definitive as scientific consensus can ever become. Climate change is real.

Two, it is man-made climate change. It is caused by human action and human activity. There's a recent Bill Maher video that went viral. I won't repeat it because the language isn't very parliamentary, but the thrust of his message is: "I've been talking about this my entire life. Enough is enough. I gave you guys patience and time. When you were kids, I said feel free to question the science – I get it – but we're past the point of being able to question the science." Climate change is real, it's man-made, and it's very damaging. It is leading to significant impacts around the world.

I know that we used to say global warming – and some people still do – but it's so much more complex than the temperature of the earth rising. It is about changing weather patterns. It is about uncontrollable forest fires. It's about rising water levels that are leading to mass flooding. It's about tsunamis. It's about significant climate change that is resulting in devastating impacts for people around the world. I need to say the fact that biodiversity reports that the collapse of nature here specifically in Canada is warming at twice the global rate. Global warming or climate change is real. There's scientific consensus around it. It's caused by man, and it's really, really damaging, damaging particularly to folks who have lower incomes. But the good news is that there's something we can do about it, and there's something we must do about it while at the same time protecting our major industries.

Of course, when we developed the climate leadership plan back in 2015, it was very clear to us that industry wanted to do its part. Industry wanted to work with us to make sure that they had strong international reputations, that they were able to support good economic diversification and good jobs in their industry and in aligned industries, and that they were willing to do their part as long as other folks were doing their parts, too. That's one of the reasons why when we announced the climate leadership plan in 2015, we had support from industries as well as individuals that weren't typically seen to be standing up at NDP press conferences.

For example, the chair of CNRL:

The announcement is a significant step forward for Alberta. We appreciate the strong leadership demonstrated by Premier Notley and her government. The framework announced will allow ongoing innovation and technology investment in the oil and natural gas sector. In this way, we will do our part to address climate change while protecting jobs and industry competitiveness in Alberta.

Again, CNRL is not typically a validator at environmental announcements, but because this was clearly an announcement about the future of the industry, the future of our province while protecting the environment, CNRL was there in support of this initiative.

Another example. This one was specifically responding to the phase-out of coal, coal being one of the air contaminants, of course, but also a contributor to CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, said by the then president of the Alberta Medical Association, I believe now national vice-president for the Canadian Medical Association, Dr. Carl Nohr:

Physicians know very well the negative health effects of air pollution, including from coal power generation. In the fall [of 2015], the AMA's governing body passed a motion calling on the association to advocate for a phase out of coal power in this province as soon as possible. We are very pleased to learn of the government's plan to expedite this process and seek other solutions that will be healthier for all Albertans.

These were just two of the voices in the very early days speaking to the importance of having a made-in-Alberta climate leadership plan that worked with industry to make sure we addressed the real and very damaging impacts of man-made climate change.

Let's fast forward a year or so because I know that not all members have had a chance to maybe meet with some of their local officials, but here's the mayor of the town of Canmore, Mr. Borrowman, in 2016:

I am pleased to add my support [to the then minister] and the Government of Alberta in implementing the Climate Leadership Plan, which recognizes that all Albertans must take responsibility for protecting our environment. The plan resonates well with the Town of Canmore in our goal of being municipal leaders through our Environmental Sustainability Action Plan, first approved in 2010."

Significant leadership in 2010 from the municipality of Canmore.

I am proud to see Alberta taking on this environmental ... role nationally and internationally.

Again, a local municipal leader expressing their support of this plan.

One more I want to mention, and then I'll get back to some of my thoughts around climate change, the president and CEO for AltaLink in 2016, Scott Thon:

As we move to a lower carbon future, Alberta's transmission grid is ready to enable Alberta's Climate Leadership Plan. Our transmission system in southern Alberta is already capable of accepting thousands of megawatts of . . . renewable energy.

What I want to say here in response to this quote is that the CEO and president for AltaLink talks about: as we move towards a lower carbon future. That is the reality. No matter what riding or what piece of the world we might happen to reside in, the truth is that the world needs to move to a lower carbon future.

The other reality is that in Alberta in the 1970s under the leadership of Premier Lougheed we saw the potential that was the oil sands, but we didn't have the innovation to get the oil out of the sand. Through thoughtful government leadership a plan was developed to invest in technology so that we could get the oil out of the sand. Colleagues, what I'm here to say is that through leadership we can get the carbon out of the barrel.

What industry said to us in 2015, 2016, 2017, and forward was: "We're willing to be partners in this work. It's not easy. It's not something that we woke up and all of a sudden decided that we were going to invest billions of dollars in, but we absolutely can do it. But we're not going to do it on our own. We're not going to do it without knowing that the government's got our backs and that the government is going to be pushing our partners in this industry to do the same work as well."

Why is it so important? Well, number one, because there is scientific consensus that global warming or climate change is real and it is very damaging and it is, I would argue, very near, if not past, the point of no return. It is paramount that we address this and that we do so seriously.

Number two is because we deserve to be known as energy leaders around the world. I think that we have had that reputation for a long time, and I want to continue to have that reputation. Again, as the CEO for AltaLink says, "As we move toward a lower carbon future" – and that's the reality. The world is moving toward a lower carbon future. They'll either do it with us, with Alberta, or they will do it without us, but that's the reality.

I'm not here to relitigate the outcome of the election. I want everyone to know that I accept that there was a very clear proposal to eliminate the climate leadership plan and that it received a majority endorsement from the people of Alberta. But I am here to say that climate change is real, that we need to combat it and we need to do so seriously. If the plan isn't a made-in-Alberta climate leadership plan, so be it, but please do not take four years to decide what the plan will be because it will be too late. Kids like Sadie deserve to grow up in a province that is taking action to ensure their future. All of our kids deserve to grow up in a province that is taking action on our future and making sure that we have clean air, water, and safe land for ourselves and for future generations.

I started by recognizing that we're on Treaty 6 land. It was an elder who once said to me: "You know, in western society a lot of people live their lives hoping to be remembered. We live our lives knowing that we will be forgotten." He also said: "We live our lives knowing that we're not just inheriting what we have from the past. We're borrowing it from the future." So, please, today I ask that all of us reflect on the fact that we're borrowing our time on this planet from the future, from the next generation, and that we owe it to them to make sure that when they say, "Why didn't you act on climate change?" we can say that we did.

Again, I understand that Bill 1 will move forward. It got a significant endorsement from the people of Alberta. I respect that. But stopping something is one part of the solution that I imagine you're proposing. The other part, though, is that we need to act on climate change. We need to act in a responsible way. We already in the last four years have been able to reduce the megatonne emissions from Alberta by the equivalent to what Manitoba typically emits in a year. That is a significant step moving forward, but we still need to do more because we know that we are past the point of no return, that we can't continue to pretend that the science is still pending and that it hasn't been decided. It has. As my friend Bill Nye – my friend, I wish. As Bill Nye said: we are past the point of no return, and patience is wearing thin by the global community.

I understand that there will be an elimination of the price on carbon. So be it, but my call is: what are you going to do to make sure that we act to protect this planet, that we are borrowing from the next generation, so that it's there for the long term? We are really beyond the crossroads, I'd say. If it's not going to be a price on carbon, which many, many economists, especially conservative economists, say is the most transparent and results-driven way, then what are the other points of consideration going to be? We really can't pretend that this isn't a reality.

I guess those are the main things I want to say at this point. All of the doom and gloom that I said at the beginning is true, but so is the fact that there's something we can do about it. The important part is that I don't believe this bill does anything to address it. I don't think that anyone is pretending that it does. I think that in the press conference it was very clear that this is about repealing something. This isn't about replacing. This isn't about proposing a new way to do things in terms of addressing both the protection of our major industries as well as our planet. That, to me, would be the call to action, I guess, for all members in this Chamber.

Repealing something is step one. It must be replaced though. It must be replaced by something that actually looks forward and acts with confidence and that protects our reputation and protects our environment because, honestly, we all deserve to live on a planet that – we all deserve to live. Full stop. I think that Sadie's message around not wanting to die young hits the nail on the head. This is something that is very serious for young people. There have been many young people stepping up and playing leadership roles in this around the world, and I think it's important for us in this Chamber to hear their advice, act as though we are their employees, which we are, employees of the young and the old, and make sure that we reflect their values and the values that are necessary for the sustainability of life on this planet. Mother Nature always wins, right? Some people say that Mother Nature finds a way. Maybe, maybe not. But Mother Nature always wins. So we can pretend that this isn't happening, but at the end of the day the planet will find a way, with or without us, to continue to win.

I guess those are the thoughts I wanted to share at this point with regard to Bill 1. Thank you for indulging me with your time. I don't make a habit of crying in this House but certainly do when a message is as powerful as that.

Thank you for your presence, Sadie, and to your mom as well for being here. You are important to be heard. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: It's wonderful to see our youth involved in such issues that are important to all of us. It's great to see you here today, Sadie, and your mom for probably taking you out of school, which is okay because I think you're learning lots here today and you have a great, passionate MLA to speak on your behalf. So please feel welcome here in this Assembly.

Are there any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you. I really appreciated your introduction of Sadie, the grade 6 student. As a former teacher, a social studies teacher, in fact, it sure makes me happy to see young people taking action. You know, as someone who, as I said, taught social studies, you're not only sharing your thoughts, learning about climate change; you're also engaged in a very important part of the social studies curriculum, which is learning about government. So thank you for being here.

We're seeing a movement led by young people who are fearful about their future and are not willing to sit back and let the climate crisis worsen. The hon. member talked a lot about the importance of having so many stakeholders on board and the widespread support of our climate leadership plan not just from industry but from people of all ages and backgrounds. I know that she's heard from many people about just how important that is.

In my own riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood we do have some of the highest rates of poverty. I heard from so many people while out at the doors just how life-changing, in fact, the rebate is. And some of you might scoff at that, but those rebates made a big difference in people's lives. I heard from seniors, for instance, and I could share countless stories about how much just that small rebate made a difference.

I was just wondering if the member could talk a little bit more about some of the stories that she's heard and just why it is so important that we hear and heed those voices.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, and thank you to my colleague for the question. I definitely heard many stories while door-knocking, in particular, or meeting with groups around my riding. I'd say that some of the ones that resonated with me particularly were from families who said, you know, that they'd been hoping that we'd take some kind of action on addressing the climate and making sure that we acted in a way that kept that revenue in Alberta. That was one of the other pieces that I heard regularly.

So if we don't act on this, it will be imposed by another order of government. We may spend a significant amount of money fighting that all the way to the Supreme Court, I understand, but that money, again, will probably leave the province, and then at the end of the day, should we lose those challenges, not only have we lost the time of being climate leaders and innovators in our own province, investing in renewables and investing in other energies that show that we are continuing to be energy leaders, but that money would indeed leave the province.

I heard a lot of people say, you know: I feel like we send a lot of money to Ottawa and let Ottawa make decisions about how to spend that money, and we would much rather have that money stay in Alberta, come back to many families, about two-thirds of Alberta families, through rebate forms. Or if not rebates, I heard from one teacher who said that she engaged in Energy Efficiency Alberta, one of the last jurisdictions in Canada to bring in an energy efficiency program. I know that at the time that we brought it in, the now Premier – you know, I'm a massive Seinfeld fan – put out the video of Kramer with the shampoo not washing out of his hair because the water pressure was so bad from that shower head that was put into his washroom. I had a good chuckle, and then I remembered that that episode aired 20 years ago. Twenty years ago New York was taking action on energy efficiency. Twenty years ago we were laughing at low-flow shower heads, and it took us that long to catch up in Alberta.

I know that with many families there is concern that some of those initiatives will go away. I talked to somebody who was in the process of purchasing solar modules to put on their roof because they were in a position where they'd saved for the last three years and they had a substantial portion. They didn't want to have to borrow everything up front. Now they're nervous about what the future is going to be of that program and if all the saving that they did to prepare and to not have to borrow so that they could have solar on their roof would be for naught. So they're looking at a few different options, but certainly those rebates were a significant piece, as were the opportunities for investing back in our own province and finding ways to take that money.

Let's remember that we exempted marked fuel for agricultural industry. I know that that was incredibly important, having grown up in northern rural Alberta, that those industries be protected. Of course, when we're talking about economic diversification, you need to protect your major industries in addition to oil and gas, which includes agriculture, forestry, and other sectors as well.

So I know that there are some questions about what will happen to these important initiatives that were funded through the climate leadership plan, like Energy Efficiency Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to rise today to speak to Bill 1 because it's a follow-up to my member's statement yesterday, where I talked about Conservative neglect of indigenous peoples. Here we are again. The very first thing that the Conservative government chooses to do upon entering this House is to take another slap at the indigenous community and hit them hard, neglect them through failure to consult with them, as would be normally expected under the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples clauses regarding free, prior, and informed consent, and they are now withdrawing a major program that has had a significantly positive effect in the indigenous community without any consultation, without any mandate from the indigenous community to do this.

I'm disappointed that I'm here talking about this, but I think it's very important that we spend a few minutes in this House addressing why the climate leadership program was particularly important to the indigenous community. The indigenous people, of course, in this province have a very particular and special relationship to the land. It sustained their communities in this province, or what we now call this province, for some 15,000 or 16,000 years. It has helped them to develop healthy, positive communities, societies that were well known for their generosity, for their trade all across North America over vast distances, for their respect for children, and their desire to pass on a positive world to the children that they brought in, whom they received as gifts from God.

If you do receive a gift from God, you have some responsibility in the indigenous community to make sure that you honour that gift. One of the things that you want to honour is you pass on a world that that child can live in in a sustainable and healthy way. For the Conservatives to come in now and to take a shot at that world and to say that it doesn't really matter if we destroy the world, doesn't really matter if we pollute the Earth, doesn't really matter if we create a climate in which forest fires begin to ravage the land and begin to destroy the forests and kill the animals – it was noted just yesterday by the minister of agriculture that the number of forest fires in Alberta this year is substantially, almost 50 per cent, higher than the number of forest fires that is expected normally in this period of time, but that doesn't seem to matter. It's just indigenous people: that seems to be the attitude.

I want to tell you a little bit about some of the things that the indigenous community has done with the dollars that were set aside for them. Over the last two years approximately $85 million was set aside in the indigenous climate leadership program. That allowed somewhere in the neighbourhood of about 250 different projects to be implemented in indigenous communities in the province of Alberta.

I can tell you right now that there are 48 First Nations in this province, and I am proud to be the only minister ever to have visited all 48 of them. I can tell you that over 30 of those nations have put up solar panels in the last two years, or have begun the process of putting up solar panels. I can also tell you that all 48, every single First Nation in the ridings of the members sitting across from me now, have benefited from the climate leadership program in some way or another, whether that be through renewable energy projects, through energy efficiency projects, or climate leadership capacity building projects. Every single person who has a First Nations or a Métis settlement or a friendship centre in their community across the floor has just told those people that we are going to take those dollars away from you and we are going to go in and we are going to simply make a change without any consultation and without any care. Back to Conservative neglect again after so many years.

I just want to tell you a little bit about some of the projects that have been developed as a result of the climate leadership plan across this province because I want to tell you about the significance of those plans. Of course, we are concerned about the greenhouse gases. We know that the greenhouse gases have been dramatically reduced through the use of the solar panels and the energy efficiency programs that all of these indigenous communities have put together. But there are other benefits as well, and that's why I want to speak a little bit to some of the particular projects that have happened in this province.

One of the communities that was very much ahead of the game with regard to solar panels was the Montana band down in the Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin riding that is represented by the Minister of Indigenous Relations. They were one of the very first nations to put solar panels up on top of their community building. They told me at the time, when they put those solar panels up, that they saved approximately $2,000 a month on electrical costs in their public building. This was their very first project. They have added more subsequently. That means that there's now about $24,000 a year that they can now use not to pay off some utility bill but to actually develop things in their community.

I can tell you one of things that they did develop in their community. They developed a program called the Green Arrow energy program, where they trained individuals from the Montana band in working in the renewable energy sector. They had a very successful program. In fact, at one point they admitted 12 people to their program and graduated 14 because they slipped two in along the way and graduated more people than they originally had been paid for just because they were trying to be as efficient as possible with the dollars. What's happened now is that not only have they reduced their utility costs and therefore have more money for things like schooling and public housing and so on, but they've also generated income in the community through having green employment and creating a company that now moves around the province of Alberta providing green energy projects for the rest of the province. All of the support for those kind of initiatives are gone.

Just to mention the other three bands at Maskwacis. For example, Louis Bull was one of the very first to put up solar panels in their communities as well, putting them up on the daycare, putting them up on the public buildings, again reducing their utility costs.

Ermineskin did a solar array behind their mall that's free standing and has built one-third of what is possible in that area, with the plans that they were going to add the next two pieces coming along, but that was dependent on the climate leadership plan, so a knife just went in the back of the Ermineskin band.

Samson band has already received a contract for a one megawatt solar field, and have plans with Ermineskin to build a 50-megawatt solar field. All of these are the kinds of things that I think are very important for us to understand. These are community development projects that provide them with some financial security, reduce their utility bills, and help them to build their community in a positive way that's consistent with their value system with regard to the Earth and to their children.

I want to go on and tell you about a few other communities because I think there are a few other points that need to be made. Fort Chip has been mentioned in this House as having developed a brand new company that will seek to build a solar field that will allow them to move off diesel. This is very important. Fort Chip is a fly-in community except for in the winter when you can get there by ice road, but it's very precarious.

One of the problems that they have in Fort Chip is that all of that diesel fuel has to be transported in. It's an extreme waste of energy because you physically have to move all of that energy up there and then use some of the worst form of carbon pollution in diesel fuel to provide some basic heat and lights for the community. They know that that's an inappropriate way to take care of their community, so they have decided that they themselves are going to build a utility so that they can have some kind of energy independence, and that's what's being taken away from them. That's what you're taking when you take away the climate leadership plan.

The other thing that they did in Fort Chip. They have a serious problem with food security in the northern communities, and the cost of food in places like Fort Chip is exorbitant. For example, a four-litre jug of milk often costs $25. How many of you would go into a store in the neighbourhood that you're in and buy a four-litre jug of milk and pay $25 for it? I can tell you that most of you would turn around and walk right out of that store. It's a major problem. People need to eat. People need their food.

What they did is they made a decision to build their own grocery store and bring in food so that they could make sure that any profits that came out of the grocery store were returned to the community and that they weren't being overcharged for the food that came in. They then came to our climate leadership plan and said: in order to do this, we would really like to be able to buy the most efficient coolers so that when food is brought in, it can be sustained for a longer period of time and that we're not wasting energy on utilities. Our climate leadership plan was able to provide them with the dollars to build those coolers and to put solar panels on the roof of that grocery store.

We're now not only talking about the Earth and we're now not only talking about children; we're talking about food security. That's what you're taking away when you take away the climate leadership plan. You are punching in the food security in northern communities. You are forcing them to remain on diesel, which, by the way, is problematic in terms of our agreements with other provinces and the national government in this country, where we have agreed already as a province to help reduce diesel use in northern communities. As well as harming the indigenous communities, you're also slapping the face of other governments across this country who we have agreed to work with to reduce diesel.

I think it's really important that we pay attention not only to the fact that the climate leadership plan is consistent in the indigenous community with their values and ethics but provides them with a stronger financial place from which they can build their communities. It provides them a place in which they can have food security for their families, and, very importantly, it provides them a place in which they can train their members and employ their members to ensure that they have good jobs to sustain their families for many years to come.

One of the other aspects of the climate leadership plan that I think is very important is that monies from that climate leadership plan were being used to help reduce our coal usage in this province. One of those coal plants, of course, that many of you would know about is in Wabamun, which is the location of Paul band. Paul band tells me that they had approximately 87 members who were employees of the coal-burning plant and the electricity generation and that they were dependent on that. So the fact that money was taken from the climate leadership plan to help them transition to a new economy and to retrain those people was extremely important. Paul band is a small band. Eighty-seven people losing their jobs because you're taking away the money from the climate leadership plan is absolutely devastating to that community, and they need those dollars to transition from working in the coal industry to working in other kinds of industries.

Now, we know that those coal plants were going anyways. We know that when the Premier was in Ottawa along with Prime Minister Harper, they were shutting down all those coal plants without any money being given to the communities. Zero dollars were assigned to those communities to help them transition. It was the typical Conservative, "Your business failed. Go find a new job. Too bad. It's not government's responsibility." We came along and said, "Look, we understand. We're doing this for the benefit of all people in this province, so we're going to help you make a transition." We stepped up when we knew that people were going to have a hard time losing those coal plants, and now you have stepped in and said to them, "You no longer will have dollars to help make that transition." It's not just happening in Wabamun; it's happening in Hanna. It's happening in other places in this province, and you have taken money away from all of them.

The story of Conservative neglect of what happens on the ground in the communities in which we live every day is one which I fear is going to be the story of this government. This government is going to spend the next four years simply getting on with its ideological implementation of 1950s policies and thoughts and is going to totally ignore what that means to the people who are living in that community right now.

Let me tell you a little bit more about some of the other communities that have benefited from the climate leadership plan. [Mr. Feehan's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and a huge thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for sharing with us the many stories from the communities about the projects that had impacted them based on our climate leadership plan. I know that he spent so much time working with the indigenous community and time across all 48 nations in this beautiful province, and I would like it if he could tell me a little bit more about some of the people and their stories and why this is important to them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Feehan: Rutherford, but that's okay.

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies. Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Great. Thank you. Thank you very much for the question. I think it's really important that we focus on the people who are going to be impacted by this kind of decision. We have a responsibility as government of course to direct policy, to make changes in this province that will help us to build this province up. We do have a responsibility to build it up economically, financially, but we also have a responsibility to ensure the well-being of people in this province, that we don't built a sports car engine and then put it into a VW bug. It doesn't work that way. It falls apart, and a lot of people get hurt when you do that.

So we need to ensure that when we make our policy decisions, if we are focused on finances and economic outcomes in this province – as we rightfully should be – that it benefits all people, that it's built to fit the vehicle in which all of us are travelling. As soon as we forget that, then we end up in this dangerous place, where the engine becomes the danger to the people in the car. That's exactly what's happening here under this conservative government. They're forgetting the people on the ground. They're forgetting the people who are most vulnerable.

I can tell you that given the history of oppression of indigenous people in this province, indigenous people are amongst the most vulnerable people in this province. I can tell you that when I go to these communities and I see them devoted to taking care of the Earth and ensuring that they can pass it on to their children, I can see that they are people who deserve and need our support in ensuring that their values and their respect for the Earth and for their children are preserved and that we actually incorporate those values in our way of ruling in this province.

I was up at Little Red River Cree not that long ago, where they put up solar panels all across their public buildings, on their chief and council chambers and on some of their administration buildings. I can tell you a little bit about Little Red River Cree. It has three different sites: John D'Or Prairie, where the council chambers are; Fox Lake, which requires that you drive, first of all, of course, the 75 kilometres on the gravel road to get to John D'Or Prairie, then you take a small road along the river, Peace River, that's basically just hacked through the bush – it's not a road at all; it's some ruts where the trees have been cleared – for maybe half an hour or so until you get to a small place, where a little two-car ferry will take you across the Peace River to the Fox Lake reserve, where many people live and many people live traditional lifestyles, a community that's still rooted in the earth, that still largely survives by hunting, fishing, and trapping. Yet that community decided to take the time to explore climate leadership and made the decision that their dollars were well spent on solar panels, and only through our help were they able to make that final decision to put those up. I go to a community like that, where I see the families gathering every summer at their festival, where they celebrate together and bring the children in and have games and fairs all day long, and everybody camps in these tents around the big field in Fox Lake. I know that on average the incomes in that community are probably less than $20,000 a year, yet they understood that they need to take care of the Earth that they're going to pass on to their children, and they made the investment in solar panels in their communities.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Through you to all the members of the House, I just want to wish you all a very good morning and also take this opportunity to wish a very happy Ramadan Mubarak to each and every one of you.

I see that Sadie is on her way out. I just wanted to thank Sadie for coming here today because, like the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, whenever I have the opportunity to meet with children in my constituency, I always remind them that regardless of their age, they are equally as important as any other constituent and deserve to be represented. And I always encourage them to reach out to their elected representatives, whether that be at the municipal, provincial, or federal level, or their school board trustee, and to talk to them, to get engaged in the political process, and that if they have an idea on how to make their community a better place, they talk to their elected representative and make sure that their voice is heard.

I want to take a step back because I want to remind us all about the history that we've lived here in this province, reminding us that we had a Conservative government for 44 years prior to the last New Democratic Party government.

I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for reminding us of the incredible neglect when it came to indigenous peoples here in the province and how important it is that we continue to acknowledge that we are on treaty lands and that we live in this space, this area, this beautiful place, Mother Earth, and we share that with indigenous people.

At the end of the day, I think that a good majority of Albertans really care about the environment and where we're headed. I think it's undisputed that climate change is real. There are a few people that are just holding on to this climate change denial idea, but the vast majority of Albertans really do care about the environment and climate change. It's sad because we see other jurisdictions not only in North America but all across the world who are far ahead of us when it comes to actually addressing what is happening with climate change here on this Earth.

I just want to remind us. I remember when I was younger than I am now – I'm getting there. I'm getting there. You know, I'm 45, so getting up there. I remember being in my 20s when the city of Edmonton actually implemented the recycling program, the blue box recycling program. And I remember that there were a few people who were, like: "Oh, my goodness; now we're going to have to have this blue box, and we're going to have to put it at the curb along with our garbage. Oh, what a fiasco. This is horrible. Why do we have to do this?"

But the reality is that at that time the municipal government made a decision that was going to impact the lives of all Edmontonians with this policy, and not only did it do that, but it actually encouraged this brand new culture of caring more for our Earth through recycling – recycling – it started just with recycling. Now it's expanded to the four Rs – and I may need some help with this one – reduce, reuse, recycle . . .

An Hon. Member: Recover.

Member Loyola: . . . and recover. Thank you very much.

What I'm getting at with this – and people may be, like: well, what's he talking about? Don't worry; that often happens when I get up to speak. You know, the members across the way start thinking about: what's this guys talking about, to begin with? But the reason why I bring this up is because government policy helps drive us towards a new culture, a new way of behaviour that helps us to build the better world that we're seeking to build for everybody. That's why, like the blue box recycling program implemented by the city of Edmonton more than 20, 25 years ago now, that is what the climate leadership plan was designed to do as well, to help us get further down the road with building a better world for all Albertans so that we can address this reality of climate change that we're all experiencing.

I wanted to take an opportunity to talk a little bit about the climate leadership plan and really stress one thing that's so important. This was a plan that was designed in Alberta for Albertans. By passing Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, essentially what we're doing is that we're taking this Alberta-made plan where, as has already been expressed by other colleagues on this side of the House, revenue would stay in this province to help us with so many different programs, and now we're going to end up giving it all to the federal government. You know, that to me just seems so odd because the members across the way – I mean, it's no secret – have no love for our Prime Minister, but here they are with their very first bill, taking an Alberta-made plan where revenue would have stayed here in the province of Alberta, and they're just handing it off to the federal government. Congratulations. How ironic. This made-in-Alberta plan was helping so many Albertans.

But before I go on with that, I want to just talk a little bit about the four main policies that the climate leadership plan had all to do with. It was implementing a new price on greenhouse gas emissions, also known as carbon pricing, and it was going to phase out pollution from coal-generated electricity by 2030 and generate 30 per cent of electricity from renewable resources by 2030.

I just want to take this opportunity to quote Noah Farber, who was the acting president and CEO at the time of the Asthma Society of Canada, where he stated: "There is a direct link between the burning of coal and asthma exacerbation, hospital admissions, and untimely deaths not associated with climate change. The Alberta government has responded to protect the health of all Albertans, particularly those who suffer from respiratory diseases such as asthma. We are extremely pleased with the unwavering commitment the province has made today to ensure that the air we breathe is clean." Is clean.

This is what's so maddening about this bill: we don't know what this United Conservative government is going to do over the next four years to actually address climate change. Instead of proposing, they're just taking away something that the previous government had put in place.

I'm just kind of overwhelmed with sadness, to be quite honest, sadness for children like Sadie, my own children – I have two of my own – and all the children of Alberta who actually care. In schools today, you go to any school – and I'm sure that the members across the way go to the schools in their community as well, and they see young people who actually care about what's happening with the environment. You go to any school, any classroom, and there's some kind of environmental program that those children in those classrooms are talking about. They're doing their piece to address climate change in the classroom, most important being actually taking that information home and sharing it with their parents and their siblings.

I remind the members of this House that government policy is designed to complement and to help us move forward as a people, as a culture, to help us change our behaviour.

The climate leadership plan also was to cap oil sands emissions at 100 megatonnes per year, reduce methane emissions from upstream oil and gas production by 45 per cent from 2014 levels by the year 2025. Alberta was on track to cut more than 50 megatonnes of emissions over the next 10 years. That's the same as taking over 10.6 million cars off the road or nearly half the passenger vehicles in all of Canada, and this is like eliminating the emissions of the Vancouver metro area three times over.

We were doing our piece. Yeah, it may have been small, but we were doing our part to address climate change. So when you repeal the carbon levy and the climate leadership program, this is essentially what you are taking away. To all the members across the way: what are you going to replace it with? What do you propose?

Let me tell you something. When our government came in – and I want to remind the members across the way that for 44 years we had an antagonistic relationship with all the different types of stakeholders that existed within our society: the environmentalists, the corporations, indigenous people. Everybody was out kind of competing for their own interests, and there was an antagonistic relationship. We brought everybody to the table, and we sat everybody down and said: let's work this out. That's the way that we truly move forward. As long as an antagonistic relationship exists, we're never going to be able to move forward, because we're all going to be fighting with each other.

Mr. Speaker, I want to remind us all that we need to bring everybody to the table and keep talking about real solutions to address climate change. Again I want to ask the members across the way: what do you propose so that we can continue to move forward with making our environment more clean, more safe, better so that along with our children we're leaving them a world to look forward to, where we're taking care of the environment?

I also want to address the issue of the climate leadership plan and how it was supporting more than 7,300 jobs in just the first two years and how it was designed to have thousands of jobs and projects come in. I want to remind the members across the way that through the climate leadership plan and the money that was being collected here, the revenue would have stayed here in the province of Alberta. That was not going to general revenue; it was actually going to specific programs to help us diversify the economy.

I want to say that, you know, it is so important – it's so important – that we continue to diversify the economy. I'm sure that the members across the way have ideas of their own on how we can continue to do that. It's very important.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), are there any members with questions or comments? I believe I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Chair of Committees. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for his comments. I shared a lot of them.

I do want to confirm that I believe the fourth R is "recover": reduce, reuse, recycle, recover. I believe there's some thinking that it should be "reform" as well, and I think that probably those go hand in hand.

I, too, recall the days in the city of Edmonton when the blue box recycling program came out and everybody complained about how much extra work it would be to sort the recycling from the garbage. Now we just realize that it's part of what we do. It's just habit to us now, because we know it's important. We know we're getting greater use out of our materials by recycling, and we just get used to doing it, right? It's part of what we do. In fact, there are many municipalities across this country and even within Alberta who do a lot of other things such as compost collection and such. You know, there are ways that things that seem difficult at first can then become something we're used to, and we all become more conscious of how to use our resources more responsibly and appropriately.

Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I'm wondering if you could share a little bit. I'm interested in knowing a little bit more about maybe some of the feedback you received when you were on the doors, not just on the doors during the campaign but in the last few years, when the climate leadership plan was introduced. If you could tell us a little about the comments you were hearing from your constituents and perhaps the impact of eliminating the climate leadership plan and the carbon levy and what sort of impact that could potentially have on your constituents.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Resoundingly, when I was out on the doorsteps of Edmonton-Ellerslie, I can't tell you the number of people that were really excited about solar and the potential for introducing more solar. There were already constituents in my riding, even before we were government, that had solar panels upon their roofs. People were excited about the possibility of doing this on their own home as well.

I want to get back to diversifying the economy because a big part of that was solar. I mean, if this bill goes through, I don't know if we can count on that anymore. I just want to remind us all about that. Just since the climate leadership plan was initiated, the solar industry has grown by 500 per cent. Installed solar capacity has increased from six megawatts in 2015 to 35 megawatts in 2018, about 3,100 solar installations have been completed, and more than 300 certified companies have installed solar projects across the province. Alberta has conserved enough energy to power a city the size of Leduc.

I just wanted to quote from John Gorman, president and CEO of the Canadian Solar Industries Association. In 2015 he said that Premier Notley's made-in-Alberta – stress "made-in-Alberta" – climate plan opens the door for billions of dollars in renewable investment. For too long, discussions about climate change have focused on what we can't do, but Alberta has tremendous renewable energy resources, technology. Costs keep falling, and it's time to focus on what we can do. Solar energy is ready to be a big contributor to a strong and clean Alberta economy.

You know, I want to take this opportunity to also even mention that I remember a couple years ago I was visiting with members of the Palestinian community here in the city of Edmonton, and one of the members from the community had come to me and said: okay; well, we've started our own small business where our plan is to help Albertans actually make these solar installations and put them on their homes. Of course, there are a number of things that had to be worked out between municipalities and the province, and those were on their way. I hope that this government will continue to work towards that because there are business interests, small-business interests out there that are very much interested in moving this forward because everybody sees how important it is as their way of dealing with climate change.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak on this matter? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand and to speak on Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax. I have a few concerns and a few thoughts around this, especially when it comes to looking at the economic impact. I know this government has been very clear. When they campaigned, they campaigned on the economy, and they campaigned on jobs, and they campaigned on pipelines, which is all great when you want to just focus on the oil and gas industry, but the reality of it is that we have to diversify in this province. Part of diversifying is looking at green energy, and it is looking at how in Alberta, with the plan that was created, we were able to start looking at the green energy diversification options. We were looking at wind and solar and hydro and other aspects of the energy industry outside of the oil and gas industry.

Yes, oil and gas is very, very important. I mean, it's one of my biggest drivers for my riding. I have the heartland, that I am partnered up to, so of course I recognize how important diversification even in that area is around, like, the petrochemical diversification projects, that we were also looking at when we were government.

But the key part of this, from an economic analysis, is the fact that we had a whole bunch of great start-ups that were happening in the province. We had a whole bunch of people that were working in the different trades that, due to the economy, were laid off or were not able to find the jobs in the oil and gas industry that they had normally had, so they were looking at diversifying, and they were looking at going back and getting education around how to look at green energy. A lot of that was paid through the Alberta carbon tax.

So my question to this government would be: when you get rid of the Alberta carbon tax and you replace it with the federal carbon tax and you take revenue streams that are being created by Albertans to pay for resources within Alberta and that money goes federally, how does that help drive the economy in Alberta? What is the economic impact around all of those green energy jobs, around all the different diversification and the different options that we were looking at when we were government? Where do they go? What happens to those people? What happens to those jobs? Are those people just supposed to magically have a new job? Has this government looked at the other options around how you're going to transition the people you have now taken this resource from, and have you offered them or discussed with them or consulted with them around what kind of training they're going to need or what other options there are going to be?

You can't just decide that you're going to remove something and not have a plan to replace it. I haven't heard what that plan is. All I've heard is that this is going to be great for – it's a $1.5 billion tax cut. It will remove the rebates for low-income families or middle-income families, which will also impact those families and those working people of Alberta. We've heard that the money that was being used from the Alberta carbon tax to pay for LRTs, to pay for retraining in green energy, for energy diversification projects will no longer be provided to those programs and will actually go into general revenue, which maybe makes your bottom line look really good, but it sure doesn't help the working people of this province. So I'm very concerned about the economic impact. I'm very concerned about how this is actually going to impact working Albertans.

Because of that, I would like to introduce a referral amendment and move that the motion for second reading of Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

I have the appropriate number of copies. I'll just wait until you have the original, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: This will be referred to as amendment REF1.

Please proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, just to clarify for all the new members in the House, because this is a referral amendment, it will now, if passed, be referred to the committee for economic futures. The reason behind that is, again, that this new government has been very clear that they want to hear from Albertans, that they're open to listening, that they're open to consultation. Because of that, I think it's extremely important that this bill get referred to committee so that we can hear from our green energy sector, so that we can hear from our indigenous brothers and sisters around how this is going to impact them, so that we can hear from working Albertans, our low-income to middle-income Albertans who will no longer get the rebate, so that we can actually see from an economic analysis what the impact of getting rid of this carbon tax will actually be on the working people of Alberta.

The government has been great about talking about how it means that, you know, it will help Albertans not have to pay taxes, but the reality of it is that the federal tax is going to come in. I understand that this government has plans around that as well, but right now there are some very important infrastructure projects that are currently being paid by the Alberta carbon tax.

It is paying for critical transit. It's paying for infrastructure projects. That includes the Springbank project, which I believe is very important to people in Calgary. There's also a $400 million promise to the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton for transit projects beginning in 2027. So my questions would be: are all of those projects going to be eliminated? Are you going to cancel construction? Are you going to put all of those people out of work? We've already seen projects and contracts that have been put on hold by this government, which has also contributed to significant economic impacts for many of the people living in Alberta, specifically the superlab.

I would encourage every single member in this Chamber to really consider that if you're going to be an open and transparent and listening government, you refer this to committee, similar to some of the information we've been hearing around standing orders with private members' bills. If you're so open to doing that in committee, why wouldn't you be open to having further dialogue here on this bill at Economic Future?

In saying that, I will sit down and allow other members to respond. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and speak to the amendment because, of course, as I was expressing in my own response to the bill, I'm very concerned. I'm very, very, very concerned because, of course, we have not heard from this government what they propose to do in order to actually address climate change and the effects that it's having on Albertans. I mean, it's wonderful that they've come in and they want to do this, but without actually proposing what they're going to replace it with, this just seems maddening to me. I'm really hoping that we can pass this amendment because I think it's absolutely essential.

I can't tell you the number of times that I personally was in this House over the last four years – you know, I see the Minister of Transportation looking over here with a bright smile, like he always does, and even from his own lips he was saying how important it was that we refer this important matter to committee, that we get more feedback, and that we hear from Albertans. Now, that's not a direct quote, of course, but more or less.

Madam Speaker, through you to all the members of this House, this is just not ready to move forward. I understand the Premier is really excited about getting this bill here passed. I get it – I get it – but we're just not ready. Albertans aren't ready. Future Albertans aren't ready. Indigenous communities are not ready. It's imperative that this here government takes this opportunity to actually hear from all communities, not just the few stakeholders that they choose to represent.

Now, I see some faces on the other side, and I'm sure that they know people in their own constituencies that actually agree with the climate leadership plan. You can't deny me that – you can't deny me that – the same way I can't deny that people in my own constituency weren't very happy about the climate leadership plan. But it's fair that we hear from all Albertans, all of our constituents. More importantly, if you're going to repeal the climate leadership plan, then have something to replace it with. It's our duty, our responsibility to actually propose, to build a better future, not just repeal what the previous government has done.

Members of this House, I ask you to please support this amendment. Let's send it to committee. Let's keep working on what we're going to do to address climate change here in the province of Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for his comments and to the mover of this referral amendment for proposing it. You know, I hadn't actually thought about referring to committee, but upon reflection on this, I think it makes good sense. I think we – I'm going to guess about a hundred times, maybe more – heard arguments for referring to committee because members then in the opposition had great ideas on how we could engage and consult with Albertans on a variety of issues, and I imagine that this would be an excellent opportunity for them to be able to do that.

So my question to the hon. member or, actually, I guess, to other speakers on the other side after we're done with this exchange on 29(2)(a) would be: what other types of consultation might be possible through this engagement around coming with a replacement model? Given the feedback that we heard over the last several years, the hon. member and myself, with regard to referral to committee and the importance of community engagement, what does he expect that government and committee members could engage in should this referral motion be accepted? What would that potential engagement look like, hon. member? Through you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, you know, having had the experience of being on standing committees here for the last four years, this would be at the design of the committee, which I think is quite appropriate, democratically speaking. Rather than one group of people deciding on how we are going to do this, it would go to committee, where the committee would decide who they would like to engage, who they would like to invite to actually speak to the committee, to take the opportunity to come and get more research and understanding, of course, and then if they so choose, they could then decide on what kind of consultation process they would like to engage in in order to actually hear from Albertans.

Maybe they would do visits to a number of communities throughout the province. I would suggest that they even visit with indigenous communities. As we heard from my colleague here from Edmonton-Rutherford, they are desperate for their voice to be heard by this government, you know. Then at that opportunity we would be able to actually hear from Albertans, really, not only on just, "Okay; well, we are going to change the climate leadership plan," but then, "What are we going to replace it with?" Then the government would have a better footing to actually come into this House and propose something new.

At the end of the day, as I remind the members and as I said in a previous statement, this is about working together. If this government is going to sit here in front of us and just return to the old ways of those 44 years of Progressive Conservative government here in this province, where people, stakeholders, and communities had antagonistic relationships, then we're in for a very poor future. I want to beg the members across the way: if anything, please, please, don't do that. Let us not return to those antagonistic relationships, where we're all just fighting with one another.

Bring people to the table, and there could be no better way to do that than by sending this bill to committee. You could then invite stakeholders from all across the province if you wanted to, people from all different kinds of communities, hear from them all. I can't tell you the number of times we heard this from members across the way. This is your opportunity now to do what you wanted so desperately to do with so many of the bills that we introduced.

So what's going to happen, Members? Are you going to follow through with the things that you used to say, or are you going to shut this down?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on this amendment. The opposition is unfortunately out of gas already, fairly early in this term. It's kind of sad to see. The words that we heard from across the aisle just now about bringing people to the table actually resonated with me. We just had an election where the largest number of Albertans in the history of our province came to the table, and they elected a government whose main promise was to get rid of the carbon tax. Albertans in every riding, in every municipality across this province heard that message and gave a huge mandate to this government to get rid of the carbon tax. Now, that was a pretty big consultation. That was two years. Almost no one was unaware of what we are going to do.

Let's just for comparison contrast that to what happened four years ago when the previous government told the biggest political lie in the history of Alberta by bringing in the carbon tax without mentioning a word about it before they did. So, yes, we are different than what they were doing. We actually told the truth. We put it in black and white. We put it out there for the whole world to see. We talked about it. I'm sure the folks across the aisle were tired of us talking about it. I'm pretty sure that I heard them say in this room how tired they were of us talking about getting rid of the carbon tax.

Albertans have rendered their decision. They disagree with the carbon tax. They want it gone. It was an overwhelming decision by the people of Alberta. Yes, we brought people to the table all right, and they came out in droves. Again, the largest turnout in the history of Alberta for an election. What was the main promise that they came out for? To scrap the carbon tax.

It was exactly the opposite of what happened four years ago. You know what? That's probably the reason why the first one-and-done government in the history of Alberta just finished, because they brought in the biggest political lie in the history of Alberta and made it a centrepiece of their government. They called it the climate leadership plan, that does nothing for the climate.

There are 183,000 Albertans out of work right now, the highest unemployment amongst young people, an abysmal record of governing this province. The folks there talk about what happened before they arrived. Frankly, over the average of the 40-odd years, I'll tell you that what we had in Alberta was prosperity. I'll tell you that what we've had in the last four years is unemployment, people leaving the province instead of coming, businesses closing, $80 billion worth of investment going out the door.

Madam Speaker, the folks there are trying to revise history, but the problem is that the history is so recent, everybody still remembers. People couldn't wait to get a new government in this time. In fact, I would dare say that they started shopping for a new government about two, three years ago because they could see the direction that the previous gang was taking us, and it wasn't a good direction. It was a direction where 183,000 people are now out of work.

Now, I don't know. Probably in some cases there's more than one in a family, but that's over a hundred thousand families without a paycheque and up to 180,000 families missing a paycheque. In some cases it was the only paycheque, in some cases it was one of two or three, but either way it hurt the family. It made it harder for them to support themselves. It made it harder for them to send their kids to university. It made it harder for them to buy the groceries, and if that didn't add insult to injury, the carbon tax made those groceries more expensive because the grocery store got taxed on keeping the cold things cold and the warm things warm. The grocery store paid more for the cold things and the warm things because most of them arrived on the back of a truck, which is more expensive because of the carbon tax.

And when the people weren't at the grocery store paying more for their goods because of the carbon tax, they were at home paying more to keep warm in the winter for the carbon tax. The carbon tax treated Albertans like staying warm in the winter was a luxury rather than a necessity. They treated Albertans like driving to work was a luxury rather than a necessity. I remember the leader of that party telling Albertans: walk or take the bus. I'm sure that went over really well in rural Alberta. I'll tell you what: it didn't go over very well in urban Alberta, where I live, and there are some buses there. But I can tell you that in rural Alberta there is no choice.

Yet the government treated Albertans with disdain, with the lead of that attitude being the carbon tax. They told Albertans that they were the embarrassing cousins in Canada, and that's why they had to be punished with a carbon tax. They told Albertans that they weren't as good as other energy-producing jurisdictions and ignored the fact that Alberta has the highest environmental standards, the highest human rights standards, the highest quality of living amongst energy-producing jurisdictions in the world. Yes, we did consult. We brought people to the table, and, Madam Speaker, they came to the table, and what they said is: we choose the political party that promises to get rid of the carbon tax.

Now they want to relitigate the last election, that they just got thumped in, frankly. They lost it with prejudice. They were, after one term in office, for the first time in Alberta, thrown out, and they think that they want to relitigate that election with this amendment. Madam Speaker, they should be ashamed. Now, I appreciate that they have to hold on to some shred of dignity, because they put all their hopes and dreams for their political futures in a program that Albertans rejected severely. So I understand them voting against the repeal of the carbon tax, because they have to have some pride. They have to be able to go home and tell people: I believe some of what I said in the last four years. I get that. But to try to delay this after Albertans, in such a resounding way, have endorsed it with their vote at the ballot box? They should be ashamed. I mean, they've been doing this – they were in government for the last four years. They should be able to come up with something a little more creative than this.

I agree with the hon. member. There are times when you're in opposition when things should go to committee. You know what things should go to committee? Mostly here it's when the government doesn't tell Albertans about it before they do it. Greatest example: the carbon tax, that that government brought in without telling anyone about it. Here's another good example: Bill 6, that they dropped on Albertans without warning last time. Yeah, that stuff we talked about going to committee, and it sure should have gone to committee because Albertans weren't warned about it. They were frankly taken by surprise. They didn't like it. We had thousands of people in front of this building when they brought in Bill 6. Yeah, that would have been a great example to send to committee, but they didn't do it.

Madam Speaker, the comparisons that the good folks across the aisle just tried to make are in no way legitimate. This was the subject of the last election. There were many subjects, but this was a top-line message from the United Conservative Party in the last election. Albertans said: yes, please become government; please get rid of the carbon tax. That was a promise we made, and we're going to keep it.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much. I'd just like to thank the hon. Transportation minister for his comments. Certainly, I along with him and, I'm sure, all of my colleagues do not agree with this notice of amendment, sending it to committee. I think it was pretty perfectly clear in the last election that the people of Alberta, through consultation that we, of course, have had, rejected this carbon tax, rejected the penalties that were being imposed upon working families, rejected the extra cost to heat homes, to drive kids to hockey practice, the extra cost to live your lives in winter, that we do have here in Alberta.

You know, I think I'd like the hon. Transportation minister to maybe expand a little bit upon the challenges that many families have: having to pay extra to heat their homes, having to pay extra at the grocery store, having to pay extra for, really, the cost to live their lives. What we had found is that people that were on fixed incomes had less in their pocket. They had to make challenging choices because the carbon tax was affecting them in a way that was unprecedented. It was the largest tax grab in Alberta's history. If this group in the opposition cannot see that, then they're going to certainly be in that position for a long time to come. I'd like the hon. minister here to maybe touch a little bit on the struggles that families have been facing in his constituency, the stories that he has heard on the struggles about this carbon tax, and how it has affected those constituents.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What the hon. member is asking about really points to the fact that this has made life more difficult, more expensive for Albertans, not only directly through everything they buy being more expensive but through the government services they get. After imposing the carbon tax, the biggest tax increase in history, the government has actually run $6 billion, $8 billion, $10 billion a year deficits. Frankly, the biggest threat to the ongoing delivery of public services to Albertans is the added burden of paying the interest on that debt besides the cost of providing those services.

The government, after putting in place the biggest tax grab in the history of Alberta, still spent all of that and another $6 billion or $8 billion or $10 billion, depending upon the year, on top of that, which now burdens Albertans with in the neighbourhood of $2 billion a year. Certainly, if they would have got re-elected, it would have become $4 billion a year in interest payments, and that's without paying any of the principal. That's before you hire your first teacher, your first nurse, your first doctor, before you provide your first social service for Albertans, all services which they deserve and demand and need. This previous government has put all of that at risk with the reckless financial track record that they've had.

Yet now they want to delay getting rid of some of the damage that they've done by getting rid of the carbon tax. You know, they're asking us to delay what Albertans have asked for. They're asking for us to delay what Albertans have said quite clearly that they want. They had a clear choice. I will give the opposition credit for one thing. In the last election they gave Albertans a clear choice: work on the jobs, the environment, the economy, and have a responsible environmental plan, instead of one that doesn't do anything and makes everything more expensive, or let's get back to common sense, starting with scrapping the carbon tax.

Albertans asked for it. The folks across the aisle, in this clear, clear question in the last election, had their chance. Albertans chose differently. Now today, amazingly, they come in here, frankly disrespecting that choice that Albertans made. Again, if they want to vote against scrapping the carbon tax, well, then that would just confirm in most Albertans' minds that Albertans made the right decision at the ballot box, because it would be really disrespecting not a close decision but a very wide decision in the last election on a very clear question, and a key part of that clear question was to keep or get rid of the carbon tax. Albertans chose to get rid of it.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any more members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise on this, and I'd like to pick up on some of the comments from some of my colleagues. I think they spoke very eloquently and very well to some of the issues that were raised here, particularly on this issue of going back to the committee. I'd like to actually echo the comments from my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who said that we are actually not here to relitigate the issue of the carbon tax. I agree that, you know, that was clearly an election issue. It was probably the most clear policy platform position that the members on the other side took. There was a lot of other stuff that was very unclear, but that one was very clear.

But I think the question that has not been put to Albertans yet is the question of: what is the plan to replace it? You know what? We can talk all we want about: oh, yes, the election decision was very clear, and Albertans want to revoke the carbon tax. You know what? I can't disagree that that was the outcome although I do want to highlight that that was not the outcome for the constituents in my riding or for the constituents in the ridings of my colleagues here. In fact, the constituents in my riding very much understood that we have a responsibility to take some action. While nobody likes to have to pay more in a tax, they understood that we are part of a collective, we're part of a society. We have obligations to do things looking to our future.

My constituents actually did not vote against the carbon tax, so I do have a responsibility when I am standing in this Assembly to represent their interests as well. To say that just because the members on the other side's constituents voted to scrap the carbon tax – I have an obligation as the representative for the constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud to stand up and represent their views, which were actually to not scrap the carbon tax but to move forward with the climate leadership plan. So I am going to take my opportunity and my responsibility when I am in the Assembly very seriously, and I'm going to advocate for my constituents. I want to say that.

But I do want to talk about, again going back to the point that perhaps – we're probably going to be voted down on this. We're pretty sure. It's pretty clear that, you know, the carbon tax will be repealed if you ask the Premier. He seemed to already know that a couple of weeks ago. He even seemed to know when we were going to make that decision, which is quite remarkable. That's probably going to happen.

The question that lingers and, if the members on the other side had been listening to the eloquent comments from my colleagues, the question that keeps coming up and the one that I'm going to keep talking about is: what is the plan? If we are talking about repealing a carbon tax, that's one element – that's one element – of the climate leadership plan. That was a tax, absolutely. Albertans did have to pay for it, and a lot of low-income and middle-income Albertans received a rebate because of it. But it was part of a plan.

It was part of an investment in our future, in our future generations, and in our children. It was part of a decision to say: if we want to make renewable resources available, an option for Albertans to use, we're going to have to invest in them. Investing in them, as the members from the other side will know, takes money. How do you do that? Well, you have to invest in green energy, green resources, and green renewable sources, and we have to do that by spending some money. You know what? That has to come from a commitment by all Albertans as a whole, as a collective, that we are going to make a decision about planning for our future.

When we're talking about referring to a committee, I think it is very important to refer that question to the committee: "Okay. Let's hear from Albertans. If we're going to scrap the carbon tax, what are we replacing it with? What is our commitment to the future? What is our plan for the future with respect to climate change?"

I want to go back to the fundamentals. It seems to me sometimes a little bit disappointing that we still have to talk about the fundamentals of climate change. I actually don't subscribe to the theory that people who object to the carbon tax are climate change deniers. I don't think that's the case. But I think that there's an unwillingness, which we all tend to have, to not want to do the difficult things we have to do to invest in our future. Hey, I have a hard time getting up every day and committing to working out. I don't do it every day. It's not the most fun thing I have to do, but I know it's important for the future of my health. This is something that we have to do. It's a pain that we have to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the House is now adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 28, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Good. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a school group from Landing Trail intermediate school of Athabasca. They are accompanied by their teachers: Shauna Bredo, Heather Gulka, and Dallas Fuchs. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you and welcome. Had the chance of saying a brief hello. Mr. Fuchs' parents are constituents of the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. It's a pleasure to have you.

The hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple of constituents from my riding of Taber-Warner. I'd like to have them please rise as I say their names. I would like to introduce Melody Garner-Skiba, the Alberta Sugar Beet Growers; Caitlin Sparrow, with Kate Andrews high school; Janae Smyth with Kate Andrews high school as well; and Colleen Gensorek, with Kate Andrews high school as well. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, Member. It's my hope that the sugar beet growers can make you just a little bit sweeter, sir.

Edmonton-Whitemud, please.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two guests in the gallery today. Kathy Rickett is the director of Edmonton northwest early learning and child centre, located in the fantastic riding of Edmonton-Glenora. Deborah Fehr is the pedagogical partner for the centre, who coaches the centre in implementing Flight, Alberta's early learning and child care framework, and, I understand, also a constituent of the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. The centre is one of 100 across the province that is part of the $25-per-day daycare pilot program implemented by the previous government. The centre offers exceptional quality and affordable child care to working families. I would like to ask Kathy and Deborah to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to stand before you and introduce my aunt and uncle Chuck and Cindy Harper. They've come all the way from Vernon, British Columbia; they used to live in Calgary, Alberta. Although they are not blood relatives to me, they essentially have been like a second mother and father to myself and the minister of environment and worked alongside my parents in helping to build the Mustard Seed down in Calgary and have dedicated their lives to the service of the poor in our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This being National Paramedic Services Week, it is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you Genevieve Marshall, an Edmonton metro EMS paramedic who worked for four years in rural Alberta before coming to serve here in Edmonton since 2008. She is the co-chair of the Edmonton metro section of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta. This being perhaps my last opportunity to make an introduction in this House, it's an honour to recognize her service and that of all her colleagues during this week. I'd ask that all give her the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mark Jones, the CEO of the Central Alberta Child Advocacy Centre. Mark is not only the advocacy centre's CEO but also a long-time family friend. The work that he does, which is the sister organization to Sheldon Kennedy's organization in Calgary, supports the recovery of youth and the families associated with them who have suffered abuse, helping promise them the possibility of a healthy future. Mark, I ask that you rise and receive the traditional and warm welcome from this House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

High School Graduation 2019

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the Assembly today and congratulate the graduating class of 2019. High school commencement ceremonies have been held over successive weekends in Grande Prairie at Peace Wapiti academy, Grande Prairie composite high school, Charles Spencer high school, l'école Nouvelle Frontière, and St. Joseph Catholic high school.

It was a tremendously proud moment for me and my husband, Serge, along with our family to celebrate this past weekend the commencement of our son Alexander from Charles Spencer high school. I would like to take this opportunity to thank his teachers for their investment in the children and their excellent instruction. I know our children have been challenged and supported to grow in their logic and reasoning skills as well as their extracurricular pursuits, including athletics and music. Thank you to each member of the faculty and staff for your personal investment in our youth. We are blessed to live in such a vibrant community and grateful to celebrate another graduation in our family personally.

I would like to commend all graduates from the city of Grande Prairie as well as across the province of Alberta on this achievement and wish them every success in their future endeavours. I wish to remind all graduates and their escorts to be safe and responsible in this season of celebration and to refrain from drinking and driving.

May is a very busy month in Grande Prairie. In addition to the high school commencement ceremonies, Grande Prairie is once again hosting Stompede. Yes, I said Stompede, not stampede. That was not an accident. Stompede is our annual rodeo from May 29 to June 2. Held at Evergreen Park, Stompede events include rodeo and chuckwagon events as well as a midway. Recent years have seen as many as 50,000 people attending over the five days of Stompede. This event was first held in Grande Prairie in 1977, and we celebrated our millionth visitor in 2014. The chuckwagon races at Stompede serve as the opening event of the World Professional Chuckwagon Association's season. I'm excited to attend this weekend as the new Member for Grande Prairie, and I would like to wish everyone a successful run in their competitions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is rising.

Affordable Child Care

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to have Kathy Rickett and Deborah Fehr of the Edmonton northwest early learning and child care centre in the Chamber today. Just recently I met with them about our government's $25-per-day daycare program and heard incredible stories about the difference affordable child care has made for families across Alberta.

Because of our investments, 100 $25-per-day child care centres like theirs have helped almost 6,000 children, and 1,200 more parents are able to enter the workforce. Albertans don't need to choose between diapers and paying their child care bills. Families don't have to make a second mortgage payment every month just for child care costs. Women, like myself, who want to return to work or have to return to work have the opportunity to do so.

But for far too long this hasn't been possible. Working parents in Alberta have been left behind by previous Conservative governments that believe investing in affordable and high-quality child care is a waste. The Premier himself has openly criticized affordable child care and has said that he prefers, quote, a parent at home. End quote. We all know what that means. It means the mother should stay home. While for some families having a parent stay at home is the right choice, the point is that there should be a choice. It should not be imposed on Alberta families or specifically women because of the lack of affordable and accessible child care.

There was no mention of child care in the throne speech or in the UCP platform. This government has clearly shown that they don't want to make life more affordable for families. They are more committed to tax cuts for corporations than they are to the care of our children. This government says that they care about jobs, but they're ignoring that one of the largest barriers to women participating fully in the workplace is affordable child care. It seems that only some workers are worthy of this government's attention, and it isn't women.

I will continue to advocate for accessible child care so that all Alberta families have the freedom to make the choice that is right for them.

Provincial Election 2019

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, in the recent election I personally knocked on almost every door in Calgary-Klein, and I almost completed that feat twice. At the doors I talked with hundreds of people who were either facing unemployment or whose small businesses were struggling. If not personally impacted by the downturn, they knew someone who was going through tough times. I heard of students graduating university looking at moving out of the province because there was no employment for them here or parents forced into early retirement with insufficient savings.

My constituents elected me because of our plan to restore business confidence in Alberta and to get Alberta back to work. That's why I'm happy to say that our government has wasted no time in pulling the levers that will allow for prosperity and growth to return to Alberta. The acts proposed – Bill 1, repealing the carbon tax act; Bill 2, make Alberta open for business; Bill 3, the job-creation tax cut act; and Bill 4, red tape reduction act – are a solid start to fulfilling our duties of restoring investor confidence and helping Alberta grow. Promise made, promise kept.

I made an additional promise at the doors. Contrary to the rhetoric that they were hearing from our opponents, my constituents did not have to choose between a strong economy and excellence in government services nor supports for the vulnerable. In fact, we cannot have one without the other. A strong economy allows the opportunity for us to help build up our community. That is why I'm so proud of what I have dubbed our compassion platform and the eagerness of this government to immediately start to invest in supports for mental health and addiction recovery. I look forward to fulfilling my promise to my community and always being a strong voice for the vulnerable.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Affordable Housing

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since this is the first time that I've spoken in the 30th Legislature, I just want to congratulate all the members on their election; and secondly, my heartfelt thanks to the citizens of Edmonton-Riverview for supporting me for a second term.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have a lot to be proud of. We are a province of hard-working citizens. We support our families and serve our communities. However, at times, despite our best efforts, we may need assistance. I know this first-hand. As a young single mom returning to school, I was fortunate to live in subsidized housing while completing my social work education. Subsidized housing meant my children and I lived in secure and appropriate housing while I laid the groundwork for a better future for our family. I would say that that investment on my behalf was well worth it. It was worth it for my three sons and the clients I served as a social worker and the constituents I now serve as an MLA.

Our NDP government took bold action while in office, investing $1.2 billion in affordable housing. We created our province's very first affordable housing strategy. As the Minister of Seniors and Housing at that time, I was extremely proud to oversee this work. We know that having a place to call home is fundamental to a bright future.

Sadly, too many Albertans do not have the access to affordable housing that I had many years ago. Successive Conservative governments did not make affordable housing a priority, significantly neglecting the sector. Recently I was very disappointed to hear that the current Conservative government is intent on leaving many Albertans behind. Rather, they are rushing to give huge tax giveaways to corporations.

I call on this government to not repeat the past but, rather, ensure that Albertans have the affordable housing they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche.

High Level Area Wildfire Response

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the fires in northern Alberta rage on, we have heard countless stories of generosity of Albertans who are helping friends, neighbours, and strangers as they leave their homes. Alberta's generous spirit continues to be shown during the hard times across Alberta, and I am pleased to rise and celebrate this great Alberta trait.

As I watch these people help others by finding them places to stay, donating to not-for-profit organizations that support the evacuees, and volunteering at centres to make people comfortable, it is easy for me to think of the outpouring of support Albertans gave to my very own community of Fort McMurray just three short years ago. I am proud to share that several of my community members are now returning the favour, packing trailers with supplies and delivering them to evacuees across northern Alberta, including all the way up to Fort Vermilion.

To the towns who have taken in these evacuees and have made them feel safe and provided for, you are doing a great service by making them temporarily part of your community. I am confident that they are extremely grateful for all you are doing.

To the organizations, big and small, that work to ensure evacuees have access to daily necessities while away from home, we are so incredibly grateful. Organizations such as the Red Cross and the High Level food bank have been accepting donations from across the province to ensure that these displaced families have everything they need to support their families.

Thank you to our front-line staff, including the firefighters who have come from across our country to assist as we fight these fires. I know that you will experience the heartfelt gratitude of Albertans and their generous spirit. You are, without a doubt, heroes.

Thank you.

Labour Legislation

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, I believe that every worker deserves basic workplace rights to ensure that they go home safely at the end of the day, including workers who put food on our tables. I was dismayed when I heard that this government planned to roll back farm workers' rights with their third bill of this legislative session. I am glad to see that they are now looking at fall legislation. I would ask that they would reconsider these rollbacks altogether.

I'm very concerned about the plan to repeal Bill 6 and replace it with the proposed farm freedom and safety act. Despite indicating that they would launch comprehensive consultations for this act, they've already predetermined two crucial pieces of the legislation that will impact farm workers: farmers would be able to choose not to join the WCB system and instead purchase private insurance; small farms would be exempt from most employment legislation. Mr. Speaker, I'm confused. How can you have meaningful and comprehensive consultations if you have already determined the outcome?

Small farms, as we know, are the backbone of Alberta's agricultural industry. Exempting small farms from employment legislation would deny many farm workers basic protections. Do the people who help put food on our table not deserve workplace rights to be protected by WCB? This plan puts both farmers and farm workers at risk. Private insurance is designed for profit, not for the worker. These companies will favour farms with low claim rates, creating a culture of not reporting injuries, transferring the burden on to the worker. In addition, employers or paid farm workers will not be protected as they are under WCB from the liability of lawsuits resulting from workplace injuries or fatalities. One lawsuit can kill a family farm.

These rollbacks ignore the advice of the AgCoalition and the 28 agricultural produce groups it represents. Mr. Speaker, the previous government undertook extensive consultation with the AgCoalition and Albertans to create rules that make sense and that balance the need for flexibility for farmers and ranchers regarding safety with the need for a safe workplace for workers. Farm workers in other provinces have had workplace safety laws for decades. Alberta farm workers deserve to keep the rights they've only just gained. They are not second-class Canadians.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: Thank you. I see the hon. Minister of Finance, President of Treasury Board rising on introduction of a bill.

Bill 3

Job Creation Tax Cut (Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment) Act

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 3, the Job Creation Tax Cut (Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment) Act.

Alberta has seen investment in capital leave our province for the last few years. Our province can no longer boast of the most competitive business environment in the country. We intend to improve this situation by taking bold action to renew the Alberta advantage and help create jobs in our province. The proposed amendments are a central part of our plan to get Alberta working again. We are proposing to reduce Alberta's corporate tax rate by a third over the next four years. This measure will help to attract investment to Alberta and stimulate economic activity at a time when it is sorely needed. Reducing Alberta's corporate tax rate was one of our government's central commitments, and I am proud to bring this bill forward and take the next step in getting Albertans back to work.

I hereby move first reading of Bill 3, the job creation tax cut, and I look forward to providing more details shortly. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

1:50

Oral Question Period

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On October 26, 2017, the now Solicitor General warned of potential voter fraud in the UCP leadership race. On March 28, 2019, Albertans learned the RCMP is investigating allegations of voter fraud in the UCP leadership race. On May 26, 2019, the Solicitor General was interviewed about voter fraud in the UCP leadership race by the very police he directs, and today the Solicitor General likely attended a cabinet meeting with the Premier, his boss, who directs him. Is the Premier still claiming Albertans should not be worried about this conflict of interest?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing to continue to see the Leader of the Opposition and the opposition continue with the same tactic that failed for them during the election, fear and smear and Team Angry and that approach. Albertans aren't falling for them. Again, we respect the independence of the RCMP. The RCMP are doing their work. This government, Alberta's government, is focused on Albertans. I suggest the opposition start focusing on Albertans.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the member opposite does find it a bit embarrassing to have as many people in his caucus under RCMP investigation, but those are the facts, and he's just going to have to deal with them. Now, we did only find out that the Solicitor General was interviewed as a witness by the RCMP through the media yesterday. Will the Solicitor General please advise this House whether he has discussed the substance of the interview between him and the RCMP, either directly or indirectly, with the Premier since the interview?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we respect the independence of the RCMP. The foundation of our justice system is to have that independent process. As I've advised this Assembly yesterday, and as I've said publicly, the RCMP reached out to me. I met with them in my personal capacity. I am not under investigation. I was happy to assist them with their investigation. I answered their questions fully.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, he didn't answer the question, but I'll wait for another time to ask it again.

Now, the SG was pleased to breach his "this is with the police, so it would be inappropriate for me to comment" rule yesterday when he told the media that he is not a suspect in the investigation, so can the Solicitor General now inform this House if either his boss, the Premier, or anyone working on the campaign of his boss, the Premier, are suspects in the RCMP investigation into campaign fraud during the UCP leadership race?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again we have the opposition focused on fear and smear, not focused on government policy, asking about internal party matters in this place. It's all that the opposition has, and it's why they ended up on that side of the House. It's disappointing. I encourage the opposition to get to work on behalf of Albertans. We respect the independence of the RCMP. We respect their role. We'll let them do their work. We're going to focus on our work, which is focusing on Albertans. I suggest they do the same.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition for the second set of questions.

Corporate Taxation and Job Creation

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This UCP government is planning to ram through a tax cut for wealthy corporations that will leave a gaping $4.5 billion hole in the budget, a hole this government will expect Alberta's kids, seniors, families, and patients to fill almost immediately. To the Premier: will you at least agree to put on the record that your own platform acknowledges that no new revenue will be generated by this reckless action for at least two years?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we will not be lectured by this opposition, and we won't take, quite frankly, advice from them on this issue. They brought in the largest deficits in the history of this province. They completely messed up our finances. This government is focused on our platform. We made commitments to Albertans. We're going to be focused on getting our fiscal house in order, standing up for Alberta, getting them back to work. It's ridiculous for this opposition to even try to provide any advice given what a mess they've left our finances in.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To be fair to the Government House Leader, if my platform was as wrong-headed as his, I'd be tempted to fudge the answer just like he did, too.

But let's look at the dismal record of corporate tax cuts elsewhere. In the U.S. telecom giant AT&T promised President Trump that it would hire 7,000 new employees in exchange for a $1 billion tax cut. Instead, they cut 23,000 jobs. So is that the kind of business the Premier wants to be open for, and why should Albertans believe we won't be taken to the cleaners in exactly the same way?

The Speaker: I just might provide a cautionary note to the Leader of the Official Opposition. When making accusations like fudging, the language could move in the direction of unparliamentary.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, we won't be lectured by the opposition, who oversaw the largest job loss probably in the history of this province. Hundreds of thousands of people lost their jobs under this government. This government, the new government, the Alberta government, has a plan with our tax cuts to bring in 55,000 jobs. We made a promise to Albertans that we will focus on getting them back to work. We will make things easier for job creators in this province. We're going to honour that promise. I understand that the opposition doesn't like that. It's too bad. We're not going in their direction, which is people out of work. We're going in our direction, which is getting people back to work. That's where we're focused.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have lots of examples right here in Canada of how these things that they're planning don't work. The Premier's Conservative pals in Ottawa cut corporate taxes by 7 per cent over four years. Did it create jobs? Nope. But what it did do is that it left a $500 billion stockpile of corporate cash that former Bank of Canada governor Mark Carney described as, quote, dead money. To the Premier: it didn't work for you in Ottawa, so why are you punishing Albertans with your outdated, ideological plans designed only to help your friends, your insiders, and your donors?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP was in government, they raised tax rates, and – guess what? – revenue went down. Do you know why that is? They punished employers. They made job loss all across the province. Employers and investment fled Alberta, moved away from here under their policies. We're going to bring forward the policies that we promised Albertans. We're going to bring forward job-creating tax cuts, we're focused on the economy, and we're going to get my constituents, your constituents, and their constituents back to work because we're not going to focus on their ridiculous policies.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of platforms, the Premier ran for years on a premise to balance the budget a year earlier than our government had planned to, 2022 to be precise. Now, I always thought that that was a bad idea for many reasons, but the Premier told Albertans repeatedly that that's what he was going to do. And now it's not. To the Premier: will he now admit that his timeline to balance the budget is exactly the same as our government's was, that he likely knew that all along but he told Alberta voters something else in order to get elected?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've committed all along that we intend to bring this province back to balance by '22-23, which will be the last year of our first term. We have found the finances to be in difficult order as a result of the previous government's undoing of the finances of this province, but we will be committed to deliver high-quality services and bring this province back to balance.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's the old "the previous government left the books in a mess" play. Never seen that before. You know what leaves the books in a mess? Going out and buying a $4.5 billion tax cut for your friends, insiders, and donors. That's what leaves the books in a mess. To the Premier: if they've suddenly discovered that their big corporate tax gift is going to make it harder to balance the budget and they've already admitted it won't create jobs or revenue for at least two years, why won't the Premier delay a tax cut until they determine whether they can afford it?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, our tax cut will create 55,000 jobs. It'll bring investment back to Alberta. It's a promise that we made Albertans, and it's a promise that will be kept because the Alberta government is now focused on keeping promises for Albertans, unlike this opposition when they were in government, who ended up bringing in policies they never even campaigned on and then oversaw the largest devastation when it came to job loss inside this province. We're going in a totally different direction. That's where we're headed. I know that your constituents are happy about it, and I certainly know mine are as well.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. You know, the Finance minister has said that we're facing economic headwinds, which is true, and he's admitting and has admitted that the election promise to balance by 2022 has changed a little bit, which is true. The Finance minister can't answer basic questions about funding education, funding municipalities, or public service negotiations, so why won't he admit that it is premature and irresponsible to move forward with a $4.5 billion tax cut for his wealthy friends and PAC donors?

2:00

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we were very clear with Albertans during the campaign that our government would be about job creation, about attracting investment back into this province, providing opportunity for all Albertans. We're committed to going in that direction, and this job-creation tax cut is about attracting investment again, investment that fled under the previous government. It's about attracting investment, creating those jobs, and leading to long-term revenue stability for this province.

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, your last leader's question.

Worker Overtime Pay and Minimum Wage

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. Yesterday I asked the Premier why he is cutting the overtime of energy and construction workers hurt the most during the oil price crash. After accusing me of mudslinging, he then claimed his changes only reduce banked overtime to straight time at the request of the employee. The Premier is dead wrong. Bill 2 clearly permits employers to force employees to accept banked overtime with no premium. Will the Premier apologize to this House for misleading us and commit to amending Bill 2 so that employers cannot force their employees to hand over their overtime premium?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The objective of this change is to provide flexibility for workers and employers. The old policy led to many construction and seasonal employees having their overtime hours limited as a result of this policy. That meant they didn't earn the time at time and a half or have the ability to bank the time. By returning to a 1 to 1 banking ratio, this will provide greater flexibility for both the employer and the employees, and a written agreement is still required to take advantage of this provision.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, yes, you're giving them more flexibility to get paid less. Way to go. Way to go.

Yesterday we heard from 16-year-old Karissa, a restaurant worker who will see her pay drop to $13 per hour, a 13 per cent drop. Today the Premier is introducing legislation that will give that young girl's employer tax relief to the tune of a 33 per cent bump.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Notley: To the Premier: isn't it enough that your tax gift to her boss is going to make Karissa's classroom more crowded and her university education more expensive? Do you need to cut her pay by 13 per cent, too? What do you have against young people?

The Speaker: I would just note that a point of order was called at 2:02.

The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The student job-creation wage is about creating jobs for Alberta's youth. When the minimum wage increased, many employers were forced to lay off workers, and unfortunately it was most often the inexperienced workers, the younger workers, that were impacted. By reducing costs on employers, we can help students get their first job to develop the skills and gain the experience that they need for the future.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, what's more concerning is that if Karissa dropped out of school or lied to her boss about whether she was in school, she would still be entitled to the $15-an-hour minimum wage. Now, Karissa works hard at school, and she told reporters yesterday that she wasn't comfortable lying. She shouldn't be. Why is this Premier pitching a bogus policy that encourages young people to give up on their education or lie to their bosses about whether they're in school?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration, please.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, this policy is about creating jobs for students. Under the previous government we actually had a reduction in jobs for young people, and currently we have a 4 per cent higher unemployment rate. By putting in this new student job-creation wage, we can actually create wages for employment. I'd actually like to point out that this program that we've based the Alberta program on has been in place in Ontario for approximately 20 years, and employees and employers have been able to work that out amongst themselves.

Thank you.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, in the recent election our party and our now UCP MLAs made commitments to the people of Alberta to get our fiscal house in order. Specifically, we made the commitment to bring our provincial finances to balance by 2022. Can the Minister of Finance confirm that we are on track to deliver on this promise to Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the member for this important question. We are committed to our promise and will balance the budget by 2022-23. We formed the MacKinnon panel of experts to objectively assess our fiscal reality and will be making smart budgetary decisions based on their recommendations.

Our government has also taken swift action to introduce the carbon tax repeal act and will very soon take further actions with the job-creation tax cut – in fact, we’ve done that already – and the Red Tape Reduction Act. Albertans can be sure we will deliver.

Mr. Loewen: Given that for the last four years under the NDP the principles of fiscal prudence and responsibility were not made a priority and given that this NDP mismanagement resulted in provincial debt approaching $60 billion, can the Minister of Finance confirm that responsible fiscal management is and will remain a top priority for our government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even though we are committed to balancing the budget this term, it’s true that balancing will not be easy with the NDP out-of-control spending that we’ve inherited. Under the NDP Alberta was spending $1,200 per person higher than the Canadian provincial average. We spent $2,700 more per person than our neighbours in B.C. We are bringing back discipline, structure, and rigour to Alberta’s budget.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the government has appointed the MacKinnon panel to review our provincial finances and government spending and given that you have said that this work will be reflected in our next provincial budget, can you confirm that drawing up the path to balance without raising taxes is a key priority of the MacKinnon panel?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, unlike the previous government, who imposed the largest tax increase in Alberta’s history and still managed to drive us into crippling debt, we will not enforce a tax on our path to balancing the budget. We’re focused on renewing Alberta’s advantage and bringing business back to our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Minimum Wage for Youth

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the campaign and including on election night this Premier told an emotional story about a 17-year-old young worker from Hardisty that he had met. This youth had told him that his father had lost his job and he was now working to help support the family. To the Premier: why are you proposing to cut the wages of hard-working young Albertans when you know from powerful, first-hand conversations that many youth, like this young man from Hardisty, are working to support their family?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, our Premier travelled all across this province for several years and has heard terrible stories like the hon. member is referring to. What he did learn during that time, I have no doubt, is how sad it is that under the NDP so many people have lost jobs, including young people at a disproportional rate. Our Premier brought forward a platform plan to help young people get back to work. We’ve campaigned on it, and a record number of Albertans voted for it. That’s a promise made and a promise that will soon, hopefully, be kept by this Legislature.

Ms Gray: Given that the young woman we met yesterday named Karissa found herself in a very similar situation to that of the Hardisty youth as her father at one point was laid off from his job, can the Premier please explain directly to Karissa and other young workers who may need to help cover the family’s bills why he thinks it’s a good idea to cut their wages?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the student job-creation wage is about creating opportunities for Alberta’s youth. By reducing costs on employers, we can help students get their first job to develop the skills and gain the experience that they need for the future. That’s what this change is about, that’s what we committed to in our platform, and that’s what we’re going to do.

Thank you.

Ms Gray: Given that cutting youth wages will not create new jobs and given that cutting student wages creates unequal pay for equal work and given that the student wage rate could actually incentivize vulnerable young Albertans to drop out of high school to get a $2-per-hour raise, will the minister commit to sitting down with me so I can walk him through how devastating this pick-your-pockets bill is going to be for working Albertans? If not, may I join the minimum wage panel?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, our focus is on creating opportunities for youth. Under the previous government there was actually a reduction. In the hospitality industry, for example, which largely employs the youth segment, there was a reduction of over 10,000 jobs. This change will create opportunities for youth. As to the member opposite, I would be happy to sit down with her and hear her concerns.

Premier’s Travel to Ontario

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, it’s been more than a full week since 5,000 residents of High Level were forced from their homes due to a wildfire burning in close proximity to the town. Now, I want to give credit to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry for taking action to get these folks emergency funding on Friday. But I am concerned, frankly, that our Premier headed to Ontario again this past weekend while a major evacuation order remained in place. To the Premier: why did you not postpone the trip and stay here to monitor this emergency?

Mr. Madu: Thank you for that question. I can confirm to this particular House that the evacuation process has gone very well. It has actually been successful regardless of whether or not our Premier is here. [interjections] The government has experienced ministers like myself and the other member, and I can confirm to the House that this evacuation has gone extremely well. [interjections]

The Speaker: Members, we heard the question; we’ll hear the answer.

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, given that I can appreciate the Premier’s need to speak to the business community but given that the speech he gave was on Friday, I must ask the Premier why he decided to stay in Ontario until Sunday so that he could campaign for the Conservative Party of Canada and why he feels that the people of Brampton are more important than the people of Beaver Lake?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of our ministers, our Premier, and the hard work that they're doing on this file. Again, we won't be lectured to by a party whose leader sat in this very spot right here the last time that there was a big fire going on and said to the then Leader of the Opposition, Brian Jean, that he was fearmongering while his house was burning down. I will take our government's approach any day. They should be ashamed for even raising this issue in this way. The Premier and the ministers are working very, very hard on this. It's a very important issue. The opposition should not be using it for partisan purposes.

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, given that there is really no excuse for partisan campaigning on a taxpayer-funded trip to Ontario on the same day that nearly 500 residents of a second community, Paddle Prairie, were forced from their homes, will the Premier apologize to those Albertans who expect him to be here managing an emergency rather than campaigning for his federal buddies?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, I'm proud of our Premier, and I'm proud of our ministers who responded to this very, very quickly. We're very concerned about the people of northern Alberta. We are monitoring this very closely. We're standing with them and putting in a policy that will help them as they go through this process.

Again, Mr. Speaker, as you know – you sat here – this party while in power told the former Leader of the Opposition while his house was burning down that he was fearmongering by asking a question in this place about the fire. They should be ashamed for even raising this in this way inside this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Driver's Licence Road Tests

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The online driver's test-booking program was radically altered by the NDP. Now the test-booking system is utterly dysfunctional. A registry manager said, and I quote: it is absolute garbage. It is not user friendly. Exam dates are not released into the system; it just says: no bookings available. People cannot get appointments for months in advance, if at all. Consequently, examinations are down 27 per cent over last year in Lacombe alone. Minister, what are you going to do to fix this NDP mess?

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: I would note the point of order at 2:14, please.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. He's right to point out that the previous government messed this file up on March 1 last year. Before March 1 there were 154 driver examiners on staff. After they made their changes, a few days later we were down to 73. That was in March, at the beginning of the busiest part of the year for drivers' examinations, that they had it cut in half. The hon. member is right. As a result, we are behind, but our government is working hard to catch up. We are about 90 per cent up to strength today.

Mr. Orr: Given that in Lacombe an examiner was sent to do an advanced test, and he admitted that he was not certified to do so, and the registry manager tried to advise the department and was told to mind her own business and given that last Tuesday an examiner showed up, but there were no appointments scheduled in the booking system, so he sat all day and did nothing, and on another day three examiners showed up to do one exam, to the minister. The NDP have left drivers' examiners disorganized and some untrained. What is this minister's plan for the future of the instructor program?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I will reiterate to the hon. member that we are committed to cleaning up this NDP mess. By the end of next month we will be up to 155 driver examiners. We are working through the booking system and the changes there to make it work better. We will stay in touch with the hon. member, and I would be happy to hear from him, the registry agent, the driver examiners, anybody, because frankly these changes were made without any planning. We are putting the pieces back together now that the previous government left messed up.

Mr. Orr: Given that a Lacombe entrepreneur over the years created and ran the driver test booking software and contributed to the economy and jobs in Alberta but the NDP unilaterally cancelled his contract, did not allow him to bid on the new system, and awarded the new, dysfunctional contract to an American company, exporting jobs, to the minister: in support of Alberta tech and jobs, will you review that contract and launch a proper contract bid process?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for doing research on this. For the record an open request for a proposal was administered by the government in 2016. The successful proponent was a software company actually based out of Medicine Hat, which has since been sold to a U.S. company. What it comes down to is that we will keep working with that company. Tech support is still provided out of Medicine Hat, and I thank the hon. member for his concern about jobs based in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has a question.

Oil Transportation by Rail

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are still awaiting decisions on Trans Mountain, and there have been delays with construction of Keystone XL and the line 3 expansion. Now we are reading reports that the Premier intends to legislate away the oil-by-rail deals we signed earlier this year. Those deals are due to generate nearly $6 billion in economic return for this province. Why is it that this Premier continues to put his ideology and election rhetoric over the economic well-being of Albertans?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what a ridiculous question. This Premier has been more focused on this issue than this government ever has been. On his first day in office he got on a plane and flew to Ottawa and fought for us on this issue, which is where the fight is, whereas when this opposition was in power, they spent their time trying to shore up Justin Trudeau. This government will continue to be focused on getting this pipeline built. We're focused on getting people back to work. We're focused on jobs. We're focused on pipelines. It is ridiculous to hear this question inside this Assembly.

The Speaker: Might I just remind the Government House Leader to pass your comments through the chair.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that thousands and thousands of jobs depend on this question, this contract, and it's not ridiculous at all.

Given that this Premier ran on a campaign of jobs, the economy, and pipelines and given that now he wants to cross his fingers and hope the private sector will ship our oil when they were not willing and able to do that in the past, can the Premier explain how his plan to rip up these contracts will help jobs, the economy, and our efforts to build pipelines?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, our government has been clear from the beginning: these contracts should not have been signed by the government of the day. They were rushed in by a desperate NDP government at the time on the eve of an election. There was no reason why private companies couldn't have stepped up to carry more oil by rail. Again, if these contracts cannot be transferred to the private sector on acceptable terms, our government will do what is necessary to protect Alberta taxpayers. As you know, that is the great difference between that party and this party. Our focus is on standing up for Albertans and Alberta taxpayers; their focus is on their ideological agenda.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. Given that the Premier is literally putting the brakes on moving oil by rail, can you tell this House just one thing that you will do to move our products to market while we wait for pipelines? Just one thing.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the biggest thing we've done to help our oil and gas industry and our energy industry and all industries, for that matter, in Alberta was to get the NDP government voted out of office and to replace them with an Alberta government that is focused on Albertans, that is focused on jobs, that is focused on the economy, that is focused on pipelines, fighting for our energy industry and for the hard-working Albertans of this province. Instead of a former government who was focused on ideology and standing up for their ally Justin Trudeau, this new government is focused on standing up for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

2:20 Springbank Reservoir Flood Mitigation Project

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every day during the campaign we heard a different story from the UCP about flood mitigation. Some days they'd support the Springbank dam, some days they'd oppose it, and some days they'd do both in one day. Their flip-flop would be funny if it wasn't such a critical issue for Alberta's largest city and for the lives of so many Calgarians. To the Minister of Transportation. Enough is enough. Will you offer unqualified, one hundred per cent support for the Springbank dam?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question is rich from a government that did nothing on this file for four years. However, this early in the process I can tell the hon. member that we are working hard to get the answers to the questions left unanswered by their government to the federal environmental authorities and the provincial environmental authorities. We expect to have them there. The fact is that nothing can be built till we get permission from the environmental authorities, and we've already hired an expert to help us with that. We're already taking actions on what they failed to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you. Given, Mr. Speaker, that multiple studies have shown that the Springbank is the best, fastest, and most cost-effective way to protect Calgary from another flood and given the large amount of work that the previous government put into this file and given that Calgarians still remember the cost, both financial and emotional, of the floods and given that Calgary deserves a commitment from this government, will the minister stop dithering and start acting?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, dithering is the definition of what the previous government did on this file for four years.

We were only sworn in for three days when we appointed an independent expert to look at where we are on this file to make sure it moves ahead after no action was going on by the previous government. Mr. Speaker, this is a high priority. We know, as they ought to know, that nothing can be done till we get those environmental approvals, and we are on the job.

Ms Ganley: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the MLA for Banff-Kananaskis is actively lobbying against the Springbank dam and given that during the campaign she told Albertans that the UCP was the only party not committed to the Springbank dam and given that the minister of culture has refused to endorse the project and that the Premier himself has said, quote, I'm not committed to any one proposal, what do you have to say to Calgarians worried about the future of their city?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would say that there's going to be some action where there was none in the past; second of all, I would say that our Member for Banff-Kananaskis is representing what she believes the views of her constituents are; and third, our government is committed to getting the approval done at the earliest stage. We've already hired an expert. We will get the answers to the questions the NDP did not answer in to the environmental assessment agencies. We will work to get this approved with the minimum possible delay, and we are already busy doing just that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Transportation Infrastructure in Airdrie

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost 70,000 people live in my constituency and hometown of Airdrie. In fact, we're one of the fastest growing cities in all of Canada and have been for quite some time. The constituency of Airdrie-East is no longer the place you drive through to get to Calgary. Unfortunately, though, Airdrie and area have seen very little investment from the provincial government for years, and transportation infrastructure has not been able to keep up with growth. Minister, my constituents in Airdrie-East want to know where transportation projects fall on the priority list.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is advocating for her constituency, as she ought to be. I can tell the hon. member that we are going through the budget approval process and the capital planning process, which is no easier with the $60-billion-in-debt mess left behind by the previous government. But, that being said, I acknowledge that the transportation issues around Airdrie are important. We've been working with a number of municipalities in the area to review the infrastructure needs for the area, and we will not delay in coming to a conclusion on this.

The Speaker: The Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. That's the most attention that Airdrie has had for transportation needs in the past four years.

Given that Airdrie only has two exits and entrances in or out of the city and given that our large and growing population numbers are putting significant stress on these overpasses and given that the 40th Avenue and QE II overpass has been identified as number 2 on the Calgary and north region prioritized capital funding list, Minister, could you please let my constituents know if this project is as much a priority for our government as it is for those struggling to get around the city?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government understands that, unlike the previous government, announcements aren't where it needs to end. We need to actually do our homework and put a plan in place. We actually need to have a financial ... [interjections]

The Speaker: I might just caution members, particularly in the third row of the Assembly, from having such boisterous remarks.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, he should know.

The Speaker: I might just caution members, particularly the one from Edmonton-Gold Bar. He might be cautioned with his remarks.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, despite the mess that we were in with no plan going forward, we will make a plan. I acknowledge that the hon. member is anxious to get this project done. I will let her know that the city is undertaking detailed design on the particular project, but it still needs to fit into the budget plan and the capital plan before anything else can happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The constituency of Airdrie-East contributes a significant amount of wealth to this province, and given that large employers like Amazon and Walmart rely upon the QE II 566 overpass and are just part of the large and growing commerce of the entire area – I would be remiss not to mention the many families that regularly visit the CrossIron Mills mall and the Century Downs race track – Minister, families and businesses that I represent want to know where the upgrading of this particular overpass falls on the priority list.

The Speaker: I might remind members of the cautionary tale of preambles.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, while I admire the hon. member's enthusiasm and I know that this is an important project, it's an important project in a sea of important projects. I want the hon. member to know that the mayor of Airdrie has been all over me as well about this project. It's important for us, the hon. member and I and our government, to continue working with municipal partners to identify their priorities by region, and the more information that we get from you and the mayor will be helpful. I can assure you that we will be considering this in our budget and planning process as we go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Free Speech on Postsecondary Campuses

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been revealed that this UCP government is planning to introduce changes to Alberta's postsecondary. These changes would, and I quote: require Alberta postsecondary institutions to adopt controversial free speech policies based on U.S. principles that allow speakers, no matter how unwelcome, disagreeable, or even deeply offensive, to say what they like on our campuses. To the Minister of Advanced Education I have a very simple question. How does your government differentiate between free speech and hate speech?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and let me say congratulations on your election given that it's my first time to rise and speak in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, free speech is at the heart of the academic experience. It's critical to the free flow and exchange of ideas and important to exist within all of our academic institutions, and we're going to make sure that that happens.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I mean, given that our campuses already have free speech guaranteed by the human rights code and considering that postsecondary institutions are much more likely to be concerned about the likes of the Soldiers of Odin rather than, say, Bill Nye, the Science Guy making presentations on campus, to the same minister: why does your government seem compelled to roll out the red carpet to hate groups?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very important, of course, that hate speech is not permitted on campus, and it's good to know, of course, that there are already strong protections in the Criminal Code of Canada, the human rights acts of Canada and of Alberta, that protect against hate speech. We want to encourage the free flow of ideas and to debate ideas on campuses, which, again, is critical to the academic experience, and we're going to make sure that that happens.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister said that this move at Alberta universities would make them more competitive with the United States, for example, to the same minister: don't you think that providing adequate funding to our universities and colleges is a better way to strengthen them rather than attracting hate groups to speak out on our campuses?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, our government is focused on encouraging more individuals to enter the trades and helping to connect them with education that is going to see them land good, high-paying jobs. That's the priority of our government, helping to connect education to jobs, and we're going to continue to do that.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Affordable Housing

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our NDP government invested an unprecedented $1.2 billion in affordable housing, which previous Conservative governments neglected for decades. We supported thousands of Albertans to live in dignity. Today the current Conservative government is blowing a $4.5 billion hole in the budget by cutting corporate taxes and thus pandering to their elite friends while neglecting single moms and their children. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: how much are you cutting from affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for your questions, hon. member. Our government always is focused on a mixture. We have affordable housing and take care of our seniors, especially the low income. We will continue to research all of the seniors' housing and care and do consultations and make sure that we do contribute all the funding that they need and want and build the homes that they need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll hold her to account that all the money will be given.

Given that in the past the government continues to take care of all their friends while forgetting about the rest of Albertans and given that, while the minister may not want to hear this, there is no way to deal with Alberta's affordable housing issues while at the same time giving a multibillion-dollar tax break to wealthy corporations, has the minister asked for an analysis of how many Albertans will fall into homelessness or live in unsafe or inappropriate dwellings due to your government's...

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the NDP did nothing to reduce the red tape that's slowing down new projects, placing a barrier on builders and increasing the regulatory cost of new housing, we will work to reduce the burden of red tape, and Albertans will benefit from new funding and program models from our new government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I certainly would be very pleased if the hon. minister does actually do as much as we did on affordable housing. We significantly invested.

Given that an important measure of a province's greatness is how it treats its most vulnerable and given that access to affordable housing is foundational to the well-being of Albertans, how can this minister not support all people who need affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government's focus is on creating jobs, having jobs, and creating funding, getting affordable housing. We will build more affordable housing and serve our seniors' needs and wants, and that was an NDP government that failed to do that.

Seniors' Housing in Rural Alberta

Mr. Loewen: A year ago the Berwyn Autumn Lodge was closed down by North Peace Housing. This left the small rural community reeling as the related jobs and economic benefit to the community were lost. The seniors were traumatized by this experience. Keeping facilities like this open helped keep small rural communities like Berwyn alive, not to mention that it allowed seniors to age as close to their friends and families as possible. The building is shuttered now but still there. We know that there is a continued need for seniors' facilities. Minister, will you consider reopening Berwyn Autumn Lodge in some capacity or build another facility in Berwyn?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, as I mentioned before, our government is a responsible government. We will create jobs, build the pipeline, grow the economy, get the funding and build all the affordable housing for the seniors that they are looking for, and serve Albertans as they need and they deserve.

The Speaker: I just might remind the Minister of Seniors and Housing to direct your comments through the chair.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the previous government approved up to $24 million for 52 supportive living and 40 new renovated lodge spaces in Spirit River and given that a needs assessment by the five municipalities in the region concluded that more lodge spaces were required in the region and given that presently the Pleasant View Lodge, a 40-unit, 60-year-old facility in Spirit River, is the main facility in the region and that Grande Spirit Foundation, the local housing authority, deemed the building of this new supportive living project to be its highest priority, will the minister commit to continuing on with this project that will allow the seniors in Spirit River to age in their community?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will be reaching out to those organizations like Grande Spirit Foundation, who received a letter, to discuss the project and to make sure that Alberta taxpayers are getting the most value out of their hard-earned money. This government will build more community care facilities for fewer dollars, saving Alberta of money in the long run. Our government's plan will grow Alberta's economy, create jobs, and also for all Albertans will strengthen the social programs that we all value.

Mr. Loewen: Given the importance of seniors aging in their own communities near their friends and families and given the importance of keeping small rural communities thriving, will the minister tell us what she is doing to keep seniors' facilities in small-town rural Alberta, and will she commit to doing everything in her power to ensure that seniors can age as close to their friends and families as possible?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government will work closely with the stakeholders to make certain that seniors' concerns are heard and that they are supported in aging safely and independently in their own communities. This government will also support civil society organizations that provide services to seniors. Our government will work tirelessly to make sure our seniors, the foundation of our province, will be able to stay close to their friends and family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Opioid Use Prevention

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the 1990s doctor-approved prescriptions of opioid substances have greatly contributed to the rise of addiction. Given the steady increase in deaths due to opioid abuse in our province, to the Minister of Health:

what is being done to discourage doctors from overprescribing their patients?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To its credit the College of Physicians & Surgeons has acknowledged that overprescribing did contribute to the rise in opioid addiction. The college has led a concerted effort by the profession to do better, not to stop prescribing opioids but to prescribe them better. The key result is that the overall volume prescribed is down more than 20 per cent in the last two years, and that's real change. But I emphasize that the college has made it clear that the goal is appropriate prescribing; that is, whatever is in the best interest of the patient. The interest of the patient always comes first.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the supply of illicit opioids and, in particular, fentanyl has increased exponentially over the past few years and given that these drugs are now being sold illegally on the street, to the minister once again: what initiatives are under way to combat the illegal sale of opioid substances to individuals?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to report to this Assembly that after years of underfunding this government is committed to making sure that drug treatment courts have the funding that they need to provide critical service to addicts across this province. It's an important part – for me, it's actually a passionate thing. I used to be on the board of the Calgary drug treatment court. This program changes lives. After years of underfunding we're going to make sure that they have the resources they need in a compassionate way to deal with addictions here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in a report done in early 2018 by the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta, it was shown that Canada is the second-highest prescriber of opioids in the world, with Alberta leading the way, and given that the most recent report states that as many as 746 people have died from apparent accidental opioid poisoning and given that despite the introduction of a provincial opioid commission, deaths continue to rise yearly, to the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions: what is being done to address this crisis?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for raising this very important question. Our government is committed to the creation of a mental health and addiction and recovery strategy. We're focusing on getting people well. We have committed $100 million for the creation of the mental health and addiction strategy. An additional $40 million is aimed at additional detox beds. Our government will be examining ways to create a recovery-oriented system that removes gaps and helps people recover.

2:40      Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is a series of letters from a constituent, exchanges with driver exam standards, with difficulty in the fact that there are no bookings online within 100 kilometres of Lacombe, searching for hours and hours. I'll just table the letters.

The second one is from another constituent, basically the same thing: no exam site within 100 kilometres of Red Deer. That includes most of central Alberta. That's not acceptable.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, I have a series of exchanges here with regard to the registry and the driver system, detailing a driver examiner who was uncertified for an advanced test but was sent and was expected to do an advanced test even though he was uncertified.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Members, I might just give 15 seconds or so for those who wish to move to the lounges to do so.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies of three articles I referenced last night: the first one, from Vox, Why Conservatives Keep Gaslighting the Nation about Climate Change; the second, from the Guardian, We Have 12 years to Limit Climate Change Catastrophe, Warns UN; and the third one, from National Geographic, One Million Species at Risk of Extinction, UN Report Warns.

The Speaker: Does the Member for Edmonton-West Henday have a tabling?

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite five copies of a CBC article I referenced when speaking to Motion 501 yesterday, titled Alberta Couple Blindsided after Adopted Girls Turn Out to Have Fetal Alcohol Disorder, from June 2015.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader rising on a tabling?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of an article called The Inheritance of Shame: A Memoir, in which the Health minister is quoted as saying that conversion therapy is not taking place in our province, in regard to a point of order, that you asked me to table yesterday.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Ms Hoffman: I noticed, but you're still wrong.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora will hold her comments to herself while the Speaker is rising.

I have one tabling this afternoon. I have five copies of a letter from the Chief Electoral Officer. In accordance with section 146 of the Election Act – my office received the letter on the 21st of May – it is a letter from the Chief Electoral Officer confirming the results of the judicial recount for Calgary-Falconridge.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Wilson, Minister of Indigenous Relations, pursuant to the Metis Settlements Act the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal annual report 2018.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Shandro, Minister of Health, the Hospital Privileges Appeal Board 2017 annual report and 2018 annual report; pursuant to the Public Health Act the Public Health Appeal Board 2018 annual report; pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Medical Diagnostic and Therapeutic Technologists 2018 annual report, the Alberta College of Paramedics 2018 annual report, the Alberta College of Social Workers annual report 2018, the Alberta College of Speech-Language Pathologists and Audiologists annual report 2018, the College of Alberta Denturists 2017 annual report, the College of Naturopathic Doctors of Alberta annual report 2018.

The Speaker: Sounds like some intriguing reading for all members. I'm sure you've been waiting with bated breath.

The Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on Standing Order 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member." Around 2 p.m. today the Leader of the Opposition asked a question – and I must apologize; I do not have the benefit of the Blues. It was along the lines of: "I asked the Premier why he is cutting the overtime of energy and construction workers . . . will the Premier apologize . . . for misleading us" and amend Bill 2 so that employers cannot enforce employees on banked overtime.

There are many examples, Mr. Speaker, as you do know, of Speakers' rulings which state that it is unparliamentary for a member to accuse another member of misleading. I would draw your attention to a Speaker's ruling on March 4, 2014, when a Deputy Speaker asked a member to withdraw their use of the word "misleading." I also draw your attention to page 146 of Beauchesne, sixth edition, which lists "mislead" and "misleading the public" as examples of expressions ruled unparliamentary since 1958. The hon. member certainly knows that, and I think the Leader of the Opposition should withdraw her remark and apologize to the House and to the hon. Premier.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pertaining to this, first of all, I want to say that the Premier was in fact wrong and gave incorrect information. That's what the Leader of the Official Opposition was referring to, and, you know, what she was trying to get to, really, was to call out that if the Premier did misspeak, he did clarify or would clarify in this House because what he had said out to the media versus what the Government House Leader is saying today are two different points.

What I will say on this, Mr. Speaker, is that we will apologize for the use of the word "misleading" and withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: Thank you. Opposition House Leader, I consider this matter concluded.

The second point of order from the Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Language Creating Disorder

Gestures

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j) in regard again to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who, I think, at this point probably has the record of every member of this Chamber for having to apologize in this place. I know he just had to do it again yesterday, I believe, for comments he made to you. During question period today he heckled and said something to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs basically along the lines of "use your mouth to speak," implying and making fun of the hon. member's accent, certainly from our perspective completely inappropriate, and then went on to make a gesture that certainly looked inappropriate to us. I think you probably had a better angle. You may or may not have seen that. I'll leave that with you.

Again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar should stop trying to go for the record of being the most vulgar person inside this place and instead act within parliamentary procedure in this place and treat people with respect, and he should rise and apologize and withdraw his comments in regard to the hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, the characterization that the Government House Leader just made of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is incorrect. He did not make fun of the way the Minister of Municipal Affairs was speaking. In fact, his comment was – he does heckle often. I will agree with that. But to rise and try to make allegations against another member claiming that he said something which he did not, something that is offensive and even – you know, first of all, this is not a point of order. Second of all, it's an offensive point of order to allege that a member made a comment that the Government House Leader interpreted as either offensive or making fun of the way the Minister of Municipal Affairs speaks. It's completely and patently false. It is incorrect. We will not apologize for something that was not said. I think also that this needs to be clarified, the mischaracterizing the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. members.

I see the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul is rising. I can only imagine that he's intending to provide new comments to this particular point of order, specifically with respect to language that might create disorder, as that's what we've heard from the Government House Leader. I hope not to dispute the facts, but I'm happy to hear new information.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Having the ability to sit a little bit closer and actually hear what came out of the member's mouth this afternoon, I clearly heard him also refer to the minister's "stupid comment." You know what? I was going to call a point of order on him at that point, but seeing as the point of order had already been called, I'd just like to add to that. Indeed, the member has used language in this House previously and does hold the record for the most apologies in the last four years, and I think he should stand up and apologize to all members of the House for his behaviour.

The Speaker: I thank you for your interjections. I am prepared to rule on this point of order. I see that the Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche is rising. I will ask her to take her seat.

With no disrespect to the member, what this isn't going to turn into is a significant debate about what the member did or did not say. I'm not convinced that it is conducive to the productive use of the Chamber for us to use these points of order to continue to create more disorder.

Having said that, during debate at approximately 2:14 I did receive a number of notes from members inside the House about what may or may not have been said. I, however, did not hear what was said, but I do have some concern. Also, at that time the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka was on his feet asking his question. At that time I did see the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar make some hand gesture that may have been inappropriate. I, unfortunately, did not see exactly what that would be.

What I would say is that we are embarking on a six-week marathon here inside this Chamber. I would encourage all members to behave in a manner that is becoming of the Chamber. I would also like to remind members of the procedural memo dated May 22, which I am sure you have all read. As a reminder, there are additional microphones inside the Chamber other than the ones that are on each desk. As such, should the Speaker choose to, it is possible to be able to hear some of the banter that I may not be able to hear from the dais.

I think, given the fact that I did not hear the accusations of the words that have been used in the Chamber, I would encourage the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, if in fact he did use those words, to withdraw and apologize. I will take him at his word and the words of others that that wasn't the case, but certainly I would strongly caution the use of gestures across the aisles, which I did see, that may in fact create disorder.

With that said, I consider this matter concluded.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1

An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

Ms Sweet moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment May 28: Ms Pancholi speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has the call.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to continue my remarks regarding Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax. I'd like to begin, actually, with a treaty acknowledgement and acknowledge that we are on the traditional territory of Treaty 6 and the Métis, who have a deep connection to this land. We don't know how much longer this will be used regularly in government business. [interjections]

The Speaker: Members, I might just encourage you to take any discussions that you might have to the lounges or the members' lounge behind us as we are respectful to the member who has the call.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To continue my comments, I just wanted to make that treaty acknowledgement while we still have the opportunity to do so. We will continue to do so on this side of the floor because we believe very much in acknowledging our indigenous peoples.

On that note, I would like to comment on my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who earlier this morning in his comments on Bill 1 gave an excellent overview of the potential impact and the very significant and real impact that repealing the carbon tax will have on the indigenous communities in this province. I want to thank him for his insight. He's probably the most knowledgeable person in this Chamber on these issues, and it comes from a place of deep passion and heartfelt commitment. I think we should heed his words wisely, particularly as we know that this province has not had a great history in terms of protecting, listening to, and respecting its indigenous people. A lot of great headway has been made over the last four years, and I would hope that we don't lose any of that. So I'd like to thank my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford for those comments.

I'd like to begin as well by talking again about a comment I made earlier, which is that it's a little bit unfortunate that we still have to talk about climate change and reiterate what we already know, what we all already know, which is the very real crisis that climate change is and the potential impact that it will have on us, on our children, on our grandchildren and why we need to take it seriously now as we haven't for many, many years.

I want to actually make some comments and quote from the United Nations environment program of the World Meteorological Organization. These are comments from the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. It was actually quoted, Madam Speaker, in the decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal, who recently ruled on the constitutionality of the federal carbon-pricing program, as you will know. We'll get back to this legal challenge in a moment. As you may know, the court upheld the federal carbon tax, but in its decision the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal quoted some information from the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. I think it's really important to talk about this because they really pulled out some key quotes that are important to remember about climate change. Some of the information in that report included that "climate change will amplify existing risks and create new risks for natural and human systems. Risks are unevenly distributed and are generally greater for disadvantaged people and communities in countries at all levels of development."

The report also stated that we need to be wary of the impacts of climate change on our globe but also highlighted that climate change impacts affecting Canada and Canadians are widespread. Actually, the report indicates that "predictions show that Canada's temperature, particularly in the Arctic, will warm at a faster rate than that of the world as a whole." This is important to note because when we talk about climate change, we often hear the criticism of: why should we take the lead in Alberta when we know that there are other countries in the world that are contributors to climate change and perhaps don't do their part? We often hear references to countries such as China and India, but we need to stop thinking about climate change as something that we cannot control or impact. This is something that we have a very real ability to influence within Alberta, and we also have to know that there are very real impacts here in Canada.

We can't keep thinking of this as something that's going to happen in the future. It's happening now. We've seen a number of significant natural disasters in this province alone but also across the country over the last few years. We know that is a result of the shift in climate in this country.

It is a very real issue, as I mentioned in my earlier comments this morning. I don't really think that there is an issue about climate change. There shouldn't be an issue about climate change denial anymore. Anybody who is doing that is really just clinging to missed facts. They're clinging to denial. I don't really think that that's the problem. I think the issue really is that people don't want to make the changes that are necessary. There's a hesitation to do that, which may be difficult to do, but as we've talked about in this Chamber before, there are a lot of things that we do that are important to do because they have a long-term impact on our future even if they are a little bit difficult to do.

My colleague the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie earlier this morning gave an example of the recycling program, the blue box program, and how when that first rolled out in the city of Edmonton, there was a huge resistance to it because it was going to cost money, it was going to be a hardship, and it was going to be difficult for people to sort through their garbage. But we now do it as a matter of practice and fact. We have to normalize and incorporate the steps that are necessary to take to protect from climate change, and we need to do that now.

I actually don't really want to harp for too long on the realities of climate change because, frankly, we should have moved past that. I remember as a 13-year-old, which was now almost 30 years ago, having a protest at my junior high school, caring a lot about the issues about environmental impacts, and talking about, as it was called then, global warming and greenhouse emissions. Here we are 30 years later, and we're still not making incredible progress like we should be to deal with those issues. If you had told my 13-year-old self that we would still be talking about the basics, I don't think I would have believed it. I always believed that adults and politicians knew better and were wiser and would make the right decisions. I guess that's why I'm here running for office and why I'm here in a political, elected role because I think, yeah, maybe now it is time for people like me to step forward and say: enough of talking; we need to start doing something. That's what this NDP government did over the last four years.

We've heard lots of talk from members on the other side about how maybe in 2015 they alleged that voters were not aware that there was a carbon tax that was going to be brought in, but actually what happened after the election of the NDP government in 2015 was that they did what governments should do, which is that they gave thoughtful and very careful consideration and researched consideration to the issues that it was responsible for and that it needed to take action on. That's how the climate leadership plan was developed.

I stand here before you as somebody who was not part of this government for the past four years. Although most of my colleagues here have a great deal of experience as ministers and have been here for four years or longer, I actually for the last four years was watching, like many other people in this province. I was an average Albertan who was just watching and seeing what my provincial government was doing. What I saw when they were doing the climate leadership plan was a very thoughtful and researched approach to governance, which was that there was a pressing issue that needed to be dealt with. This government decided to gather the experts in that area, which were environmental researchers but also oil and gas companies, to talk about: how do we develop a way forward for our province? That is how the climate leadership plan was developed. It actually had a very thoughtful approach.

As you know, the Climate Leadership Act didn't just deal with the carbon levy; it was about reducing emissions as well. But the Climate Leadership Act did this. It established a carbon levy on transportation and heating fuels in Alberta. It provided exemptions from application of the levy. It set out the requirements for rebates and exemption certificates, and it provided those consumer rebates and biomethane credits mostly to low-income Albertans. It set out the rules for remittance and recovery of the carbon levy, most importantly saying that the money that was gathered through the carbon levy would only be used for certain projects, that it was not to go into the general revenue fund. And it set what those carbon levy rates were at.

I actually was very impressed with the process that this government underwent, as an average Albertan watching what was happening, because they actually were the first government – I've lived here almost all my life, and I've worked, actually, within government. I worked under Progressive Conservative governments for eight years, and I had not seen a government who was willing to take on a challenging but pressing issue like this in a way that, quite frankly, would mean that people would have to do some uncomfortable things. You know, it would be challenging to accept it, but it was important to do. That's what governance is about. You have to make decisions that are important for the future of the province, for the constituents of this province, and for our future, not just about the people who live here but about what kind of an economic future we want as well in this province.

It was a very thoughtful way of bringing together all of those people and talking about: "What should we be doing? What do we need to be doing?" Carbon pricing, as many of my colleagues have spoken about already, was very well thought out, researched, and supported, particularly by conservatives, as a way to deal with carbon emissions but also move forward to be able to invest in environmentally friendly and green energy sources.

I'm just going to take a moment to cite some of the support that the climate leadership plan had. I was very heartened to see that for several of the members across, their constituents actually were supporters of the climate leadership plan, in particular the Member for Banff-Kananaskis. The mayor of the town of Banff, Karen Sorensen, in 2016 was quoted as saying:

The Town of Banff is a national park community, and the protection of a healthy environment is of paramount importance to us. We applaud the direction toward climate leadership taken by the Province, which will help us sustain our tourism economy and provide a better future for all Albertans.

Similarly, another constituent of the Member for Banff-Kananaskis, from the town of Canmore, John Borrowman, the mayor, said:

I am pleased to add my support for Minister Phillips and the Government of Alberta in implementing the Climate Leadership Plan, which recognizes that all Albertans must take responsibility for protecting our environment. The plan resonates well with the Town of Canmore in our goal of being municipal leaders through our Environmental Sustainability Action Plan.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I was so riveted by the enlightening quotes that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was sharing with us, and I wondered if she had any more that she would like to share with the Chamber.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Yeah, as I was saying, there was a lot of great support for the climate leadership plan from rural and municipal leaders, from oil and gas leaders.

But what I really want to talk about is my constituents because – you know what? – when I was at the doors in Edmonton-Whitemud, I had a lot of great conversations with my constituents about the carbon tax. Of course, people don't like to have to pay a little bit more, and there was some resistance to that. But what I found was two things. One was that there seemed to be a great deal of misinformation out there about the carbon tax. Honestly, we saw that quite a bit during the campaign from members from the other side. They seemed to perpetuate statements that were misinforming intentionally, it seemed, at some points, their constituents about how the carbon tax worked and what it was actually being used for. For example, you know, it's really important to note that the carbon tax wasn't a general revenue fund. It was actually dedicated specifically for green projects. When I talked to my constituents at the door, what they were really impressed with knowing is that there were direct impacts and benefits to them right in their riding from the carbon tax.

In particular, I would highlight that in Edmonton-Whitemud residents of that riding have been advocating for a long time for improvements to the Terwillegar expressway, to Terwillegar Drive. It's been a congested route for some time, and the city recently announced that they will be building a new Terwillegar expressway. A quarter of that budget is coming from the province, and it was actually because that Terwillegar expressway is going to increase public transit by allowing for more bus routes down that route. Because of that, it met the mandate of increasing green transportation options for residents of Edmonton-Whitemud, so it got support from the carbon tax levy fund. That's really important. I like to highlight to the residents of Edmonton-Whitemud that we saw benefits from that right there.

Most importantly, Madam Speaker and to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, what my constituents wanted to know is: if the carbon tax is going to be repealed, as we know the members from the other side intend to do, what is the plan going forward? What they appreciated was that there was a plan to move forward that the NDP government was making. That was part of looking to our future. Most importantly, it was about saying that we know that we take climate change seriously and we're going to take action on it and we're in this together. We are a province. We are a community. We all need to take steps forward.

Even if it does mean that there was a little bit of hurt, they understood that the bigger picture was that we were going to make green, sustainable energy sources. We were going to make that more of an option and more accessible to Albertans, and therefore we could move away and reduce our carbon emissions. They saw the bigger picture. That's why I believe that the residents of Edmonton-Whitemud chose to support me and to re-elect the NDP in their riding, because they believed in the bigger picture and the bigger benefits of that carbon tax.

That being said, with it being removed, again, what is the plan? I think that is what most Albertans are going to want to know. If the carbon tax is repealed, what is the plan going forward? To date we have heard nothing from the members on the other side about what they're going to do. They've talked about continuing to look into the issue. Well, that is what's been going on for decades in this province. It is time for us to move forward, so if the carbon tax is going to be repealed, my plea to the members on the other side is to take this issue seriously. What is your plan? This is not a partisan issue. This is an issue for all Albertans, for all of our children, and for our grandchildren. What are we going to do to move forward to ensure that we can offer a safe, clean environment for our children and for our grandchildren? That's what I want to hear from the other side.

Of course, we all knew this was sort of coming down the pipeline, so to speak, in terms of: this was going to be repealed. But I was hopeful that there'd be a little bit more thought put in than what we saw in the throne speech and what we saw in the UCP platform about what was coming next. What we got was nothing. What we got was a small, little bill that's just going to repeal what was there, with no vision for the future of this province, no vision for climate change, no vision to deal with the environment. That's my great disappointment, I have to say, and that will be the disappointment of many residents in my riding as well. They want to know: what is the plan for this government going forward? We can't just score cheap political points by repealing this act without talking about what's coming next.

My hope, Madam Speaker, is that the government will take the time. We should send this back to committee because we need the time to talk about what's next. This needs to go to committee so there can be a plan, not just repealing. What are they proposing? What is going forward? What are the measures that are going to be taken so that we can provide assurances to our residents, to all Albertans that we are going to be leaders on climate change, that we are going to take this seriously, and that we are looking to the future? I don't think any of us wants to just move back to the — as the Leader of the Official Opposition said, back to the future seems to be the theme of this government, but I encourage you to think beyond that. I think that not just repealing something . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm thrilled to rise and speak to this referral. I think that it's incredibly important that we send this bill to committee and have a conversation. Again, like my colleagues have said before me, I don't think we're in a position to relitigate the issue of the repeal of the act, but I think the outstanding question that continues to plague us is: what do we intend to do in its place? I think it's critical that we address this particular issue.

One of the big conversations that I had during the election campaign with a number of different people all over the place was, you know, that I think it's accepted now that climate change is real, that it's human caused, and that we ought to do something about it. I would like to believe that every member in this Chamber accepts those three basic premises. I think that if we don't accept those three basic premises and if we aren't willing to do those three things, it's our children that are ultimately going to have to pay those consequences at the end of the day. Many of us, I think, in this room, Madam Speaker, have children who are going to pay those consequences, and if we don't, I think we probably have friends or relations or others who have such children. I think we should all be concerned about what the future of this planet is going to hold.

There are some things, at the end of the day, that can be paid back and some things that cannot be paid back. This was another conversation that I had many times during the election. It is the case that if you borrow money, whether you're a government or whether you're an individual borrowing to, say, have a mortgage on your house, you can pay that back. On the other hand, if you refuse to invest in services and if you refuse to invest in infrastructure, those children who enter school who may need assistance learning to read and who don't get it: they'll never get that back. Those people who enter hospitals: they'll never get that chance at a better life back. It's the same thing with climate change. If we don't begin to make progress now, we can't go back. It's not something that can be paid back, and that's why it's an issue that's so urgent and that must be addressed immediately.

The question that's at issue and the reason that this ought to go to committee is: what do you plan to replace it with? I mean, it's pretty easy to criticize, right? It's pretty easy to look at something and say, "Well, that's imperfect," for whatever reason you feel that's imperfect. I think in this instance this was actually a very good and well-thought-out piece of policy. I won't reiterate the comments of my colleague who spoke before me, but I think it's well supported. It's well supported by a number of people from all different ends of the political spectrum. So you've criticized, you say that you want to deconstruct, but then what do you plan to do in the alternative? Again I'll return to those three basic premises: climate change is real, it's human caused, and we ought to do something about it. If we accept all those basic premises, then what is it that we're going to do about it?

You know, there are a lot of cases in which individuals criticize something, but they don't know what they want to put in its place, and it usually leads to a big mess. I mean, we need only look to the United Kingdom, to England, to the Brexit situation. You know, folks resoundingly said that they wanted to leave, but they didn't say on what terms, and that has created an enormous amount of consternation for the government and for the entire country. I think what we're wanting to do here is to discuss: well, what replaces it? You know, that's fine. I think we don't need to relitigate the issue of whether we ought to move forward, but move forward to what?

I think that, you know, there are basically two options. One option is to replace it with a policy that will take in the same amount of funds. One of the things that has been discussed is essentially getting those funds from large emitters only, not from individuals, who are the end-users. Now, I don't think that that's the way to proceed forward, and the reason I don't think that's the way to proceed forward is because ultimately in a market system if you're not working on the demand side, you're never going to make any headway. Working only on the supply side isn't going to make any headway, and I actually believe that in economic terms it's more punishing to the economy here in Alberta than it is to act on the demand side.

I think the other thing is that, you know, we heard from members across the way over and over and over again: well, businesses are getting charged, and they're going to pass it on to their consumers. Well, if we charge only the large emitters, do we believe that they aren't going to pass it on to their consumers? Ultimately, if what we're doing is that we're having the same take, so we're taking in the same amount of money that we would have taken in under the Climate Leadership Act, by only extracting that money from the large emitters, the large emitters are just going to pass that on. So the tax continues to exist, it continues to be on the same things, but it's just that now it's hidden. People don't know they're paying it, so they don't have the opportunity to modify their behaviour in the same sort of way. In essence, everyone pays the same, but we don't have any of the beneficial effects.

The other alternative is that you intend to take in less money, and if that's the case, then I think that the people of Alberta are owed an explanation as to which projects are going to be cut. Now, there are a number of incredibly important projects, and a number of people have spoken at length about those. The projects, I think, that I'm going to speak about that are incredibly important are the green line because it's incredibly important to the citizens of Calgary. The Springbank dry dam I think is incredibly important, also part of the climate leadership. Finally, a project that's incredibly important to the folks in my riding is that we had committed to one of three upstream mitigation options on the Bow to ensure that we don't see a repeat of the devastating floods.

Again, what we're hoping to do is refer this to committee so that a longer conversation can occur about what's going to replace it and what that replacement is going to do. Is it option A, which is to say that we continue to take in the same amount of money – it's just hidden – or is it option B, which is to say that we aren't going to take in the same amount of money, which means that we're going to cut some of those projects that were going to be funded out of the carbon levy?

I think, you know, that the people of Alberta are owed an explanation. The stories that I still heard, even in the campaign occurring in 2019, about the floods: people's lives were impacted, their businesses were impacted, their homes were impacted. A lot of them still have a lot of fear that they're carrying with them as a result of that. It's very challenging. You have to take your family and your pets and your kids and move out of the house on very short notice. You don't know what you're coming back to or what the situation is going to be. I think there's nothing more fundamental to us as individuals as having a safe place for our family to reside and to call home. The constituents in my riding and in many ridings throughout Calgary who are worried about exactly that I think are owed an explanation.

Another project that I think was incredibly important that was going to be funded out of the carbon levy was the green line. You know, I think the people of Calgary have waited a long time to see the sort of transit that is necessary to become a thriving metropolis.

The members across the way laugh at the idea that anyone might prefer to ride a bicycle or might prefer to take transit, but those people exist. Honestly, I fall into that category. Obviously, I spend a lot of time commuting between Calgary and Edmonton, but prior to the birth of my daughter, I did it primarily on the bus because that was my preference. I think that that's a legitimate preference and a preference that ought to be supported.

I think that for many people in Calgary, especially those who work in the downtown core – the rates of parking in the downtown core of Calgary are exorbitant. People have a really hard time being able to pay that cost, and many of those people would like to make a different choice. We're not saying that everyone has to make that choice. We're just saying that if you want to make the choice, if you'd like to make the choice to take transit, that option ought to be available to you and that your government ought to invest in that option. I think that's a very reasonable request on the part of those individuals: to ensure that those projects that are so important to them are continuing to move forward.

I think individuals would like to know. You know, for all of these projects individually at some point some commitment was made to say: oh, we will find another source of revenue. Well, that's fine, but what is that source of revenue given that it's the case that there's also been a commitment to blow a $4.5 billion hole in the budget by giving away taxes to incredibly profitable corporations, keeping in mind that the corporations that we're talking about are posting profits in excess of half a million dollars a year in order to fall into this category? We're giving them a $4.5 billion giveaway, and we're saying to people starting out their careers who are unable to afford a parking spot in downtown Calgary: well, maybe the funding for your green line won't be there, or we're going to find it somewhere else though we won't say where. We're blowing a huge hole in the budget and, you know, we may or may not have a climate plan that may or may not be able to pay for it. I think that that's a real problem, and I think that that's a problem that ought to be addressed. I think people continue to have real questions about that. You know, the economic benefits are clear. I think the benefits in terms of infrastructure are clear.

I think some of the questions that remain are action on climate change itself. You know, there was a report released very recently that talks about Canada, that talks about the fact that we're warming at twice the rate of most of the globe. I think that that should be a huge concern. It isn't just about warming; it's about changes in the frequency of adverse weather events. When we talk about ensuring that flood mitigation is in place in Calgary, we're not just talking about having the funds to invest in the infrastructure; we're talking about the fact that as climate change becomes more pronounced, we're likely to see more frequent weather events, which is one of the reasons that we need to continue making progress on this issue.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, at the end of the day, I think that this is an issue that may have an impact on not just the lives but the health of our children, and I think we should all care about that. I think we all do care about that, so I think it's reasonable to say: given that it's an issue that will have an impact on every one of us, given that it's an issue that will touch our children, given that it's an issue that's going to get worse as we go along, what is the action we plan to take?

I think that for each and every one of us who stands in this place, who acts as a leader for our communities, you know, history is going to call on us to be able to say: what did you do? When the time for action was clear, when it was clear that we had to take steps to move forward, what was it that you did? I think members in this House are asking that we be in a position to answer that question, and I think Albertans are asking that we be in a position to answer that question. You know, at the end of the day, history will judge us, and I hope that it judges us well. I hope that it judges us as proper stewards of the environment, of the economy, and of the lives of everyone in this province.

Of course, we're speaking to a referral amendment. To return to the substance of the issue, the substance of the issue is that we want to have a conversation about what's going to take its place. You know, this bill, in particular, certainly does the repeal. There are some transitional provisions, but it doesn't breathe a word of what's going to happen in the alternative. I think that what's going to happen in the alternative is the big, open question. I believe that when Albertans voted in this new government, they believed the promise that was given to them that we're going to get rid of the carbon tax but that we're going to bring in something else in the alternative. I think that they believed that, and therefore I think that they are owed that.

One other thing that I think is worth noting on this issue. You know, the world is moving on, whether we would like it to or not. It is. People in Alberta accept those three basic premises that climate change is real, that it's human caused, and that we ought to do something about it. So do people the world over. Despite the incredible work of our energy industry here, sometimes that message doesn't penetrate to the country. In the last four years we've made incredible progress on that. We went from the majority of Canadians being opposed to pipelines to the majority of Canadians being in favour of pipelines, and that happened because they trust that we're taking steps. They trust that we understand that balance.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for – come on; I study the whole time you guys are talking – Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned the fear that her constituents experienced. She shared some of the stories she heard as a result of the floods and, you know, other stories related to climate change and support for the climate leadership plan. Her riding is far different from mine in the socioeconomic sense. Many folks in my riding struggle and benefited greatly from the rebates from the carbon tax. Despite the differences, we both heard stories about the support in our ridings for the climate leadership plan of the previous government, and I would just like the member to talk a little bit more about some of the individual stories that she's heard and just why it's so important to listen to these voices and act upon them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. As you may well be aware and as the member may be aware, the riding of Calgary-Mountain View is on the north side of the Bow River, so the community of Sunnyside, in particular, was very much impacted by the flooding in 2013. We actually have, as you're probably aware, a commemoration of that. We call it Neighbour Day. It's occurring this year on June 15. Communities throughout the city sort of get together to celebrate the resiliency of Calgary and people coming together.

Despite the fact that all those people come together, I think there's still a lot of concern and a lot of fear. You know, people are worried. I've had many, many conversations about the Springbank dam and many, many conversations about upstream mitigation on the Bow as well. People are still concerned about those projects going forward. Every time that spring comes, when the rest of us celebrate, they're worried. They're worried about their homes. They're worried about their children. They're worried about their pets. They're worried about their jobs, their future. I think that that's a legitimate concern that those individuals are experiencing, and I think that we have to commit to moving forward.

You know, certainly, I had the opportunity to ask a question on this today. It's true that there's an enormous amount of regulation around building these sorts of projects. That's why we moved so quickly after we came into government: to ensure that we were advancing and to ensure that we were pushing things through the regulatory process. You know, we're most of the way down the field. We've started to make deals with most of those landowners. We're most of the way there. All we need in terms of Springbank is the commitment.

With respect to the Bow, obviously, it's a bit more complicated. There are three possible projects that are under consideration, and those studies are still under way. You know, certainly, we had committed to moving forward on one of those, and I think they're necessary. They're necessary in order to protect the people of Calgary and in order to give them that security. Madam Speaker, I don't know if you can imagine anything worse than spending the entire spring coming home every day worried about whether or not you're still going to be able to get into your house and whether or not there's going to be a flood in your basement. That's really, really hard for individuals, and it's still top of mind for them. So I hope that we're able to continue forward with these projects.

At the end of the day, you know, we can speak to our values all we like, but the truth is that our values are where we put money. Our values are signalled by how we use the funds entrusted to us by the taxpayers. If we truly do value this, we have to do more than just say it. We have to be willing to do it.

Those are some of the conversations that I've had the opportunity to have. I sincerely hope that this new government is willing to continue the good work that we've been doing for years to move this forward. I genuinely believe that this is not a partisan issue, but I do have concerns that arise from some of the statements that some of the members on the government side have made about those projects, and I do have concerns about where ultimately the funding is going to come from.

With that, I think I will thank you and close my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there any more speakers to the referral amendment? I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's really my pleasure today to get up and speak to this referral amendment because I think it's really important. This is something that I know members of the now government have spoken to many times in the past. It's really important that we get this bill right. I think it's something that's very important for all Albertans, that we understand the implications of the bill. It's important that all members of this Assembly should understand the implications of this bill. That's why we need to take the time to go out and recognize and study it in committee, where we can talk to Albertans and we can talk amongst ourselves about what the Trudeau carbon tax implementation act really means for this Assembly and really means for this province.

Madam Speaker, I want to tell the Assembly through you a little bit of a story. It's a story about a young man who's trying to decide what to do with his life. He knows that the roller coaster of our resource economy is not for him. He knows that he wants a job that is going to be stable, is going to be long term, and is going to be able to provide for his family for years and years to come. That's why he sees a great program at NAIT here in Edmonton. It's the solar install program, and you can learn to do this new, fascinating field of solar technology. So he goes out and does that.

Now, Madam Speaker, what this government has just done is put his job prospects at risk. That is what this government is doing with this bill. That's why we need to be able to take a look, really, and say: "Is this the right bill right now? Are we willing to put thousands of people who have been studying, transitioning into great, new, clean, renewable jobs out of work? Is that what we want to do today?"

Madam Speaker, I think it's something that we really need to think carefully about because these are the types of projects that are going on all across the province. These are the types of projects that people across the province have been studying for, have been training in, have been learning, and have been moving forward and investing significant amounts of time and money in, and I think that when we look at the Trudeau carbon tax implementation act, it is very clear to me that the government has not put the thought into what that means for so many Albertans.

I want to also talk about a few other things, Madam Speaker. I want to talk about some of the benefits that we have from what happened with the climate leadership plan. One of the very earliest memories I have as a child is being woken up in the middle of the night. My parents would wake me up I think it was every four hours in the middle of the night when I was maybe three or four years old. What we would do is that I would go over to this big, rumbling machine. They'd pull it out of the washroom, and they'd put some vapours in it, and I wasn't quite sure what was going on. They strapped this mask to my face, and I breathed in and out really heavily for, like, 20 minutes or something. I would go back to sleep, and we'd do it again in a few hours. What happened was that I was having asthma attacks, and that was something that we needed to do to help manage those attacks.

Now, Madam Speaker, you'll note that Edmonton, the city I grew up in and have lived in my whole life, is just downwind of a coal plant, and we know that one of the things that is the highest indicator for whether there will be a disproportionate number of people with asthma is being downwind of a coal plant. One of the things that the climate leadership plan did was that it meant that we would have better health for Albertans, maybe not like me – I've missed the boat on that one – but the ones who come after me.

We wanted to invest in a province that was going to have cleaner air for all, and that's why in 2015, when the climate leadership plan was introduced, Noah Farber, the acting president and CEO at the time of the Asthma Society of Canada, said, and I quote: there is a direct link between the burning of coal and asthma exacerbations, hospital admissions, and untimely deaths, not to mention climate change; the then Alberta government has responded to protect the health of all Albertans, particularly those who suffer from respiratory diseases such as asthma; we are extremely pleased with the unwavering commitment the province has made today to ensure the air we breathe is clean. End quote.

Madam Speaker, the work that we have put in as this Assembly, as the government, the work that has been put in to make sure we have safe, clean air for all Albertans, is at risk because of this. This implementation plan, this Trudeau carbon tax implementation plan, puts what we have accomplished at risk, and I think that we should spend the time to make sure we get it right. We should go to committee, we should study it, we should review it, and we should talk about what is important for Albertans. What are the types of projects, what are the types of health risks that Albertans want to see us mitigate? I think that's something that all members of this Assembly will agree on. They'll agree that we should be able to talk about these issues in a fulsome debate in committee.

Madam Speaker, I want to talk a bit about some of the other things that the climate leadership plan funded. I know members opposite have spoken at length about how they want to protect jobs and the economy and small businesses. Well, as a matter of fact, when the NDP government was in power, they introduced a small-business tax cut, and they reduced small-business taxes by a full third. That was funded entirely through the climate leadership plan. Now, I guess the question for me here now is that that's hundreds of millions of dollars that was used directly from the climate leadership plan to help support small businesses. Are members of the government, of the Conservative government, willing to put that at risk? Are they willing to take that money away from small businesses right now? That's what we're talking about unless we find a meaningful transition solution, and I think that's really important for us to consider as well.

I think that members of the Conservative government here and Conservative backbenchers know that they don't want to punish small businesses. They know that they don't want to put that tax break at risk for them, but unless we go and talk about what the implications of the bill will be, unless we go into committee and actually discuss these impacts and look at what the climate leadership plan funded, look at what the climate leadership plan was intended to do, we won't be able to have that fulsome debate. We won't be able to have those types of discussions and determine where there may be unintended consequences of implementing Ottawa's carbon tax instead of an Alberta-made one.

When we implement what Ottawa wants – and I know that the Premier is very fond of Ottawa, Madam Speaker. I know that the Premier spent a lot of time in Ottawa. But I truly believe that if we have to pay for this, we should control what we do with the money. We shouldn't let the Prime Minister, we shouldn't let people in Ontario tell us what to do.

Madam Speaker, I know that the Premier often spends much time, as frequently as the day after he was elected, in Ottawa, but I think that's not the right move today. I think that today we should focus on Albertans. We should focus on what Albertans elected us to do, and that's to make sure that we have plans that work for Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I can talk at length about some of the projects as well. I know that my hon. colleague spoke about transit. Now, $1.47 billion was earmarked for the valley line here in Edmonton as well as other LRT improvements, $1.54 billion was earmarked for the green line in Calgary, and $967 million was for GreenTRIP for projects throughout the rest of the province. Those projects, I think, are essential, not just in the major cities through the LRT projects but GreenTRIP as well, to connect our hubs across the province.

When we talk about these projects, when we talk about these transit opportunities, they are projects that I don't think the people in Ottawa – and I know that the Premier knows the people in Ottawa better than I do, but I don't think the people in Ottawa understand the needs of Albertans as well as we do here in this Chamber, Madam Speaker. I think that we should take the time in a committee to talk about which of these transit projects the Premier is willing to cut, which of these transit projects the Premier doesn't want anymore, which bus isn't as important, which route doesn't matter as much. I think that's really important for Albertans, who elected us.

I think that we need control of the projects we decide to fund. I don't want to leave that up to the Prime Minister. I don't want to leave that up to people in Ottawa. I think that we have a duty here in this House to do that work. We have a duty here to go and say that we know there are really important projects in the climate leadership plan. We know that it funds really important projects in all of our constituencies, Madam Speaker, and that's why we want to debate the projects fully. I'd encourage us to look at this in committee and say that, well, we can really dig into the numbers. We can really dig into exactly how many GreenTRIP projects will be cancelled because we cancelled the climate leadership plan. We can dig into exactly how many LRT projects will have to be cancelled.

I mean, when we look at the impact that the climate leadership plan had on infrastructure here in Alberta, it really is unparalleled to any other program, Madam Speaker. It speaks to infrastructure projects across this province. It touches nearly every single community. I know that just a few weeks ago a number of media outlets, Postmedia, put out an article that had lists of which projects were in which ridings, and I encourage every single member to look at that, because overwhelmingly the climate leadership plan funded projects in rural ridings. In the majority of ridings it was projects that were important, things like making upgrades for community halls, things that would help the lives of individuals and individual Albertans like you and me in our communities.

That's why I really want to make sure we get this right. That's why I supported the bill the first time. I mean, I think we debated it for 16 hours or so last time. That's why I want to make sure that we get this right. We talk about those projects. In, let's say, Devon they applied for municipal funding for solar upgrades for their municipal buildings. When we talked about those solar programs, it was so important to be able to help them reduce their electricity costs and to have that funding through the climate leadership plan. We can look at the climate leadership plan and see not just in the two major cities, but we can see all across the province, in all municipalities, that they were able to apply for and in many cases receive significant amounts of funding for significant infrastructure that was really important for their community. It was projects that made a difference for their constituents.

Madam Speaker, the climate leadership plan was a plan that got our two pipelines approved. It was a plan that secured our energy future and allowed us to begin a transition to a new future with value-add for Albertans. It was something that we needed at the time to move forward. Now, today we are debating whether we should continue to study that before we throw it out the door, and I think the answer is really clear. Let's make sure we review this fulsomely. Let's make sure we actually do the work.

I know I was elected here by my constituents because they believed in a vision in which we committed to building important infrastructure in our communities. I know they understood that we needed to make sure that we had clean air. They understood that we needed to believe in the science of climate change. I know that when they ask us to do that, they say that they don't want us, like the Premier, to ignore the problem and walk away from all the progress that we've made.

Now, Madam Speaker, I'll be the first to admit that maybe it wasn't a perfect solution in every single aspect, but that's the reality of legislation sometimes. The reality is that we don't get it right a hundred per cent of the time, every time, but what you do is that you do the absolute best you can. I think that if we want to do the absolute best we can today in this Chamber as legislators, what we should do is that we should commit to studying the issue. We should commit to sending it to a committee so that we can look at it and review what worked and what didn't work.

Maybe there were projects that members opposite didn't like. Maybe we can review which projects work. Maybe the GreenTRIP projects need to stay on the table. Maybe connecting communities is something that's still important to them and their communities; maybe it's important to their constituents. Madam Speaker, I think that's something that every single member in this Chamber should think about and should say: "Would my constituents care if suddenly the GreenTRIP funding was cancelled? Would they care if suddenly the solar panels were pulled off my community hall by debt collectors next week? Would they care if we weren't able to put in the new insulation in the buildings as well?"

Madam Speaker, these are some really important things. I think there are important things all across the province. I talked about some of that infrastructure investment. Really, it was over $40 million that was invested in schools, universities, hospitals, and colleges all across the province, and it helped those large institutions do things like cut emissions and save operating costs and reduce their load on some of our grids and whatnot. I think these were very important projects that we needed to fund, and we talked about all this.

For the members that are new here – they weren't maybe around when some of these programs were being implemented – the types of projects that were funded were community spaces. They were projects that were designed to help families. Madam Speaker, I don't know about some of the other members, but I know that when I talk to families in my communities, they want to see a government that cares about them. They want to see a government that is committed to investing in projects like community halls, like hospitals, like schools in their community. They want to make sure that the schools in their communities are able to operate as efficiently as possible. That's what the climate leadership plan was able to do.

Really, I hope that we'll be able to as an Assembly send this to committee so that we can review the issues in wholeness and say: are there benefits to some parts of the climate leadership plan? Really, Madam Speaker, I think there are. For some, if not the majority, the climate leadership plan is essential for us here in Alberta because of the types of things that it enabled us to do as a government and as Alberta, as Albertans. The types of projects that the climate leadership plan enabled us to do are really something that were at the forefront of our country. I don't want Ottawa and maybe the Premier's friends in Ottawa to tell us what to do with that instead of ourselves.

Thank you very much. I really encourage members to vote for this referral.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-South and, by extension, his colleagues. As you know, the majority of Albertans support the elimination of the carbon tax. You are also aware that the elimination of this tax will return or, rather, not take further hard-earned money from Albertans that desperately need it. I'm just wondering: are you opposing the repeal of the carbon tax because you have no regard for the will of the majority of Albertans or because you still think that Albertans can't be trusted with their own money?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that's a really interesting talking point that the hon. member has brought up. What I think is that Albertans should trust Albertans with their money. I think that Albertans shouldn't trust the bigwigs in Ottawa with their money. I think that Albertans shouldn't trust the Prime Minister or the federal government to tell us how they should use our carbon money. We know that this is the Trudeau carbon tax implementation plan. This is the plan that brings in the Liberal's plan federally for carbon pricing because they have already said that they will implement it, and the Premier has no tools to fight it. We've seen the court case fail in Saskatchewan, and we know it's going to continue to fail elsewhere.

Madam Speaker, what this is is that member and members across the aisle in the government saying that they're okay with Ottawa controlling our money, and I think that's not okay. I think what we should be doing is that we should be committing to saying that Albertans deserve a plan that works for them. They deserve a made-in-Alberta plan. I think that's what, if we went to a committee, we'd be able to talk about, we'd be able to fight for, and we'd be able to work out the nuances of.

Now, unfortunately, it looks like members of the government are okay with Ottawa controlling our finances here in Alberta. It looks like members of the government are not only okay with it; they won't even speak to it, Madam Speaker. They'll refuse and deflect, and they won't even mention that, really, this brings in the Trudeau carbon tax. This is the Trudeau carbon tax implementation act, and members of the government ought to know that. If they had read the bill, they would very clearly have been able to see that this brings in a federal carbon tax. If they had read the news, they would be able to see that this brings in a federal carbon tax. Now, we can really clearly see that members of the government are okay with that. In fact, the Premier actually said that he was okay with a federal carbon tax himself.

Madam Speaker, I am actually quite concerned with that. My thought being, of course, that Albertans should be able to control their own futures, and Albertans should be able to control their own carbon monies and where we direct those projects. That's why I spoke at length about transit opportunities across this province. That's why I spoke at length about community projects and things like solar panels and investing in education for transition jobs right here in Alberta, because what that member opposite just said and what Conservatives across the aisle have been saying for the last few days here is that they're okay with Ottawa taking that money, putting it in their general revenue, and not sending a cent of it back here to Alberta. That's what they're okay with when they vote against this referral.

They are saying that they don't trust Alberta's own government to run the carbon levy. They trust Ottawa more, and I don't think that's the right way to go. Madam Speaker, I think very clearly that the Premier trusts his friends in Ottawa, the Premier trusts the Trudeau carbon tax. We here in the opposition don't. We think very clearly that we want to invest in Alberta-made plans, and we want an Alberta-made plan that keeps jobs, keeps investment, and keeps a project right here in Alberta. We want to make sure we can commit to those projects right here in Alberta, and we know that we won't be able to do that if the Premier is allowed to implement Trudeau's carbon tax.

We know that these projects are essential to our communities, and I know that some of those projects are probably in the hon. member's community as well. When we look at those projects, we can see very clearly that I don't trust, and I don't think any of my hon. colleagues here should trust either, that the federal government would know the nuances of those as well as anybody in this Chamber because the members in this Chamber are elected from their communities. We hear from our community members every single day, so we know to come back here and ask and say: why is our carbon plan not being invested in our communities?

But when it goes to Ottawa, Madam Speaker, when the Premier and the Conservatives are allowed to implement Trudeau's carbon tax, we will have no say. We will have no say on where that money goes, and I'm not okay with that. I don't think Conservatives should be okay with that, but if they're not willing to stand up and speak to that, Madam Speaker, it's very simple, that they are okay with that. They are okay with the Trudeau carbon tax implementation plan. That's not what we here in the opposition believe is right for Alberta. That's not what I think Albertans believe is right for Alberta, and that's not what I believe voters believe is right for Alberta. I think we should make sure we have a plan that works and is made right here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on this amendment to refer this bill to the Economic Future Committee that was so thoughtfully brought forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Manning.

First of all, I'd like to preface my statement by saying that, you know, it feels strange for me to be standing up and recommending that we send bills to committee when I spent most of the time in the 29th Legislature arguing why we shouldn't be sending bills to committee.

I think there's an important difference to be made in that when the members opposite continually referred all of our bills related to the climate leadership plan to committee, that was an obvious stalling tactic, and then they just made up the reasons for referring it to committee on the spot. In this case when I'm arguing to refer this to committee, it's because we actually need to go through the process of consulting with the people of Alberta about what the impacts of implementing the Trudeau carbon tax will be on the people of Alberta. Make no mistake, Bill 1 is the Trudeau carbon tax implementation act, because as soon as Alberta repeals our carbon tax, the very next day Ottawa will impose their carbon tax on us, Madam Speaker.

How much consultation did the federal government do with stakeholders in Alberta about their federal carbon tax? Zero, Madam Speaker. The federal government didn't do any consultations with the people of Alberta about their federal carbon tax because they thought it wasn't going to apply here. They deemed that the carbon tax programs that we had implemented, the economy-wide price on carbon as well as the carbon competitiveness and investment regulation, were compliant with the intent of the federal carbon price and didn't need to be refined or consulted on in any way.

Now that this gang here across the way has decided to throw out the carbon tax plan and replace it with who knows what, we're going to be saddled with the Trudeau carbon tax, that will be imposed upon us without, actually, any consultation with the people of Alberta. I think, you know, the members opposite owe it to the people of Alberta to consult with them to make sure that everybody understands what the implications of imposing the Trudeau carbon tax on the people of Alberta will be, and the way to do that is to refer this bill to committee so that we can undertake that work, so that when the Member for Calgary-South East goes door-knocking the next time in his constituency, and his constituents ask him why he voted to implement the Trudeau carbon tax, he can tell them why, Madam Speaker, he voted to implement the Trudeau carbon tax. You know, I really hope that he records those conversations and posts them to social media because I'm looking forward to hearing what his constituents have to say to him when he goes to tell them that he voted to implement the Trudeau carbon tax without any consultation whatsoever.

Now, Madam Speaker, you know, I want to thank the members from Edmonton-Whitemud, Calgary-Mountain View, Edmonton-South for their thoughtful interjections on this matter, and I think they raised some important points that weren't considered when the members of the treasury benches rushed headlong to scrap the carbon tax without any thought for any of the implications.

There are three things here that I think we need to talk about, though, that haven't been mentioned. One of them is what the effect on the actual price of gas will be. Now, all of us remember those pictures of the former Member for Strathmore-Brooks, Derek Fildebrandt. He was grimly standing next to his truck, filling it up with gas on December 31, 2016, before the carbon tax was implemented. Lord knows where he was going. He probably just came from a hit and run and was on his way to poach something somewhere. Regardless of what he was doing at the time, he filled his truck up with gas, and then, you know, the joke was on him because actually the price of gas went down on January 1, 2017, even though the carbon tax had come into place.

We also remember the Premier of Ontario, Doug Ford; the Leader of the Conservative Party of Canada, Andrew Scheer, all grimly filling up their vehicles with gas before the Trudeau carbon tax comes in. I'm very thankful, Madam Speaker, that Mr. Scheer and Mr. Ford weren't actually at the same gas station doing that at the same time because I'm afraid that they probably would have gotten into a fatal gas fight, much like the one that the people in Zoolander did if you recall that movie.

The point is that everybody is concerned. The members opposite have told the people of Alberta that once the carbon tax is scrapped, our gas prices will go down, and I'm here to tell everybody and the people of Alberta that nothing could be further from the truth. Madam Speaker, you may be thinking: how could he possibly come to this conclusion? If you reduce the tax on gas by 6.6 cents a litre, obviously the price of gas is going to go down.

Well, actually, Madam Speaker, we have an instructive case study. That case study happened in the city of Lloydminster. When we implemented the price on carbon here in the province of Alberta, we debated among us cabinet ministers at length about what to do with the gas stations in the city of Lloydminster because gas stations on the Alberta side would have to raise their taxes on gas by 4.4 cents a litre at the time, but the gas stations on the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster wouldn't have to do a similar tax increase. So the question was: how can we compensate the gas station owners on the Alberta side, who will probably have to charge a higher price for their gas, that will make them uncompetitive with their neighbours on the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster? Now, we of course came up with a rebate program quite unnecessarily, because what actually happened was that the gas stations on the Saskatchewan side of the border took advantage of the higher price in Alberta to raise their own prices and put the difference in their own pockets.

That's exactly what is going to happen here in the province of Alberta the day after this carbon tax is scrapped. The people of Alberta are already used to paying $1.13 a litre – this morning in my riding – so if we reduce the price of gas, if we reduce the taxes on gas by 6.6 cents, which is the carbon tax amount, what gas station owner is going to lower the price of gas by 6.6 cents when their customers are already used to paying $1.13 a litre? Not one. There isn't a single business owner who would see the opportunity to charge 6.6 cents more in profit and not put it in their own pockets rather than giving it back to the consumers.

I am looking forward to the members opposite going out on June 1 or whenever this carbon tax is scrapped and explaining to the people of Alberta why their gas prices haven't actually gone down, Madam Speaker. I think that that's why it's important to refer this to committee. You know, we need to understand the impacts of shifting the difference in prices of gas and taxes on the actual price of consumer goods in this province, and I'm looking forward to the members opposite explaining to that committee why it is they favour lining the pockets of big oil companies by letting them inflate their gas prices rather than keeping the money for the people of Alberta to invest in the useful carbon reduction initiatives that our government brought in over the past two years.

Now, the second point that I'd like to make that hasn't yet been raised by my colleagues is one that actually should be near and dear to the hearts of Conservatives because they are nothing if not enamoured with finances and free markets. Every major financial institution and large industries are ringing the alarm bells, saying that we need to do something immediately to act on climate change because the economy is at risk. The Bank of Canada last week announced that they view climate change as a major risk. The Bank of England has said this for a number of years now, and, in fact, insurance companies have been raising the issue of the effects on the insurance companies.

I'd just like to bring up a quote from Kathy Bardswick, who was president and CEO of The Co-operators. She said in 2016, prior to the introduction of our carbon price, that as an insurance company, we understand the risks associated with climate change and are supportive of carbon pricing as an important step in transitioning to a low-carbon economy. We have identified climate change as one of three focus areas for our impact investments, and hope to invest alongside the government of Alberta to help reduce greenhouse gas emissions as we work toward our ambitious impact investing target.

What is the impact on the insurance industry going to be in Alberta when we implement the Trudeau carbon tax? We don't know because nobody from the federal government has actually consulted with the Alberta insurance industry to determine what the impact is going to be. Like I said, Madam Speaker, the federal government assumed that our carbon tax system would stay in place and didn't do any work to understand the effects.

I also want to know. It's not just the impacts on the insurance industry, Madam Speaker. Not too many of my constituents are very fond of the insurance companies that they have to deal with, but they understand that that's a reality of the system that we live in. But they don't want their insurance premiums on their houses to go up; that's for sure. Certainly, with the increased risks of flood and fire that we're subjecting Alberta to by not acting on climate change, what are the impacts going to be on the insurance premiums of the constituents in my riding who need to have home insurance? We don't know. We don't know because we're just rushing headlong into implementing the Trudeau carbon tax without any consultation, so we're leaving the homeowners in my constituency uncertain about what's going to happen with their insurance premiums on their homes, the largest investment that many of them will make in their lives.

I think we owe it to the people in my riding as well as in everybody's ridings here in this Chamber to fully understand what the impacts on insurance are going to be by implementing the Trudeau carbon tax or any other proposed measure that this government wants to take on climate change.

There are other significant risks to the economy that are potentially going to occur. Robert Walker, vice-president of ESG services and ethical funds, NEI Investments, said in 2016:

We believe that a robust and credible climate change policy will be critical to the success of Alberta-based companies, including the energy sector, by reducing investor uncertainty. And implementing a broad-based price on carbon is one of the most important near-term actions governments can take towards a credible policy. Investors are particularly interested in the opportunities that can spring from an effective carbon pricing regime and we believe Alberta is well-positioned to take advantage of the growing investor appetite for these low-carbon opportunities.

Many of the constituents in my riding rely on the energy sector for their well-being and their livelihood, and here we have a prominent investor saying that action on climate change is needed to improve investor certainty in the energy sector, Madam Speaker. So we need to refer this to committee so that I can go back to my constituents and tell them what impact the members opposite's failure to deal with climate change will have on the future of their jobs.

Now, my third point is one that hasn't yet been raised, and that's on the issue of migration, Madam Speaker. I've read a number of articles over the last few days as climate change has become more and more of a focal point around the world. There are a number of interesting studies that are under way, computer modelling done on the impact that climate change will have on world-wide migration. We already know, from the experience in Syria and the millions of migrants who have left that country for other countries around the world, how destabilizing politically mass migrations like that can be. With climate change we can expect multiple Syrias occurring all at the same time, and we need to know what economic impact that will have on the province of Alberta as people from around the world leave their homes because they've become unlivable due to inaction on climate change.

I know that many of the members opposite share a number of concerns around migration, shall we say. Of course, during the election it came to light that the UCP candidate, at the time, for Calgary-Mountain View was very afraid of whites being displaced from their homeland, and we know that the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat and the Member for Calgary-Acadia supported her in those views. You know, we have a number of concerning statements about migration of Muslim people here to the province of Alberta. The Member for Livingstone-Macleod, of course, is on the record as sharing those concerns. And, of course, we have a number of people who seem to believe that there's a conspiracy . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Wonderful. Thank you. I do appreciate the member's comments. I think they're important questions, especially when it comes to migration and how the people on the other side of this House respect those people who are being displaced by climate change.

But I want to move to a separate point. I know that over the last four years you had the honour of being the Minister of Advanced Education. I'm just hoping to find out if you had conversations with postsecondary institutions around the steps that they wanted to take towards addressing climate change and the work that you were able to do in conjunction with them and how repealing such an important piece of legislation will affect those decisions for those institutions.

Thank you.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you. I really appreciate the question from my colleague from Edmonton-West Henday. I'm pleased to speak about some of the actions that we took to deal with the issue of climate change in the postsecondary sector.

Now, in my time as Advanced Education minister we approved a number of loans to the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, in particular, to undertake a number of initiatives to improve energy efficiency and to develop renewable energy capacity on those campuses. These are long-term programs, and the actions that both universities have taken have increased the sustainability of the activities of those institutions significantly as well as saved significant numbers of operational dollars, that can be better used for supporting students in classrooms and not being spent on things like electricity and heat. Saving that money on electricity and heat is particularly important given the fact that we've got members opposite who are keen to take a giant axe to the budgets of postsecondary education institutions, so they'll need every dollar that they can get to support students in classrooms. I'm very pleased that we've been able to support them in reducing their energy costs over the last three years.

In addition to that, Madam Speaker, of course, the Member for Edmonton-West Henday would be interested in knowing that we supported the development of a number of renewable energy programs at institutions all across the province. I think of the alternative energy program at the institution of NAIT. I've toured that facility a number of times. Students there learn about solar power, wind power in particular and about other forms of renewable energy.

I was down at Lethbridge College a year or so ago, and I got to talk to students who were in the windmill technician program, Madam Speaker. It was interesting because a number of those students in the windmill technician program were people who had lost their jobs in the oil and gas sector and were looking to the wind sector for employment. Up until April 16 it looked like employment in the wind sector was going to be a burgeoning sector, a promising sector, but of course now the Member for Lethbridge-East has to go back to those students at Lethbridge College and tell them that he's intent on throwing them out of work. I certainly don't envy him the task although he was quite open about wanting to throw those people out of work. My thoughts are with those students who thought that they were going into an area that was going to provide them a good job that would be able to support them and their families. I'm sorry that the Member for Lethbridge-East is so intent on throwing them back on the unemployment line after our government had thrown them a line of help.

Madam Speaker, certainly there were others. I just went to Red Deer College a couple of weeks ago. We had lent Red Deer College millions of dollars to build their new student residence. The interesting thing about that student residence is that it's net zero ready. It's covered with thousands of solar panels that will provide a continuous supply of renewable energy. Red Deer College is probably the most advanced postsecondary institution in this province in terms of supporting renewable energy development on its campus. When I talked to the president of Red Deer College just a couple of weeks ago, he was saying that their investment in renewable energy will provide millions of dollars a year in savings. In fact, they were able to pay off their investments in renewable energy in just three years, which is a remarkable payoff time for renewable energy. It was very good that Red Deer College was able to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there any more speakers on the referral amendment? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise to be able to speak to why it is that this bill should be referred to committee in order for us to ensure that it is the subject of considerable levels of second thought. It is primarily because this bill does the wrong thing. It represents the wrong decision, and it is the crystallization of a path backwards for the people of Alberta.

I do appreciate that the path forward is not an easy one, that it's not paved with gold. It's not paved with asphalt. It is a path that is challenging, but sometimes that's what you get. Leadership is defined by whether you continue to forge forward or whether you just pack everything up and you put your hands over your ears and you close your eyes and you just sort of start stamping your feet and you say: "I don't want to go down any path anymore. I just want to go back the way I came." If you do that, Madam Speaker, that's not leadership. That is a profound failure of leadership. Unfortunately, that is exactly what this bill represents.

Now, as you know, it was a significant element of the record of our government that we committed time, effort, and, frankly, political capital, quite a good deal of political capital – arguably too much political capital, but what are you going to do? – to the matter of standing up for Alberta's future, standing up for Alberta's youth, standing up for the health of all Albertans, standing up for the ability of our economy to innovate and adjust to a new reality, standing up for our energy industry and supporting their work to be able to transition to a more sustainable production model that would ensure that markets for their product remained robust for decades to come. Sometimes that kind of work isn't easy. Sometimes just sort of fiddling and hoping that the status quo delivers what you need is not enough, and sometimes you have to dig in. That's exactly what our government did. Many speakers have spoken already about the fact that our climate leadership plan was the product of extensive research by experts and also extensive consultation with a range of stakeholders who came to the table with high levels of knowledge and competing interests in order to establish the best path forward.

Right from the very outset, Madam Speaker, I certainly took the position and I believe most other members of our then government took the position that if we continue to address this debate as though every effort taken to protect the environment is somehow an attack on another person's job or, conversely, if we approach it where we assume that every effort to create a job is somehow an attack on the environment, then what we will do is continue to do the things that we have been doing in the past, which amount to failure, which amount to getting to that place in the road where we can't go forward with the same vehicles that brought us to this point in the road. We would fail on creating jobs. We would fail on protecting current jobs. We would fail on laying out a path for new jobs that would last decades and decades to come, and we would also fail on protecting our forests, protecting our air, protecting our water, and protecting, quite frankly, the future of our world.

So what we set about to do was to begin to lay out the first steps in a path to try to bring these two interests together, to say: we are going to stand up and protect the environment, and we are going to do so in a pragmatic way that allows us to also ensure that we continue to promote economic growth and that we continue to promote the kind of innovation and forward-thinking that actually lays a foundational path for generations to come so that our children and our children's children and our great-great-grandchildren could look back to what we were doing and say: "Right there – right there – was where the right decisions were made. We turned the corner, and we started on the right path, and we stopped being a bunch of climate-denying people who were making the problem worse."

So that's what we were trying to do, and I delivered that message across the country. I delivered that message to environmentalists. I delivered that message to members of my own political party. I delivered that message not just in, you know, rural Saskatchewan, but I also delivered that message on Bay Street. I delivered that message in Montreal. I delivered that message in Quebec City. I delivered that message in Vancouver. I delivered that message to everyone because the fact of the matter is that as a nation we need to be more strategic not only in terms of supporting our energy, our oil and gas resources in order to get the most value for these incredible resources that we have in our province and in our country but also to be strategic about how we reposition our economy to be ready for the inevitable pressures that are going to come to bear upon all of us if we fail to act to combat climate change. That is what underlines our efforts with respect to putting in place the climate leadership plan.

Now, we were not alone in the efforts that we put into this. We were joined by forward-looking energy executives and industry players. We were joined – heaven forbid – by scientists, multiple scientists who had done a lot of research on this. We were joined by First Nations people. We were joined by community members who were concerned about the future of their community. We were also joined, interestingly, by fairly forward-thinking members of the Conservative Party who also understood that pricing carbon in the long run was the path forward for any government to make significant progress on fighting climate change.

Now, members opposite like to say things like, "Oh, well, it never had any effect at all" and "The Premier didn't know what the impact was of her plan." In fact, that is not true. What we know, to roughly this point, is that just over the last two and a half years we've been able to reduce greenhouse gas emissions in the province of Alberta by about seven megatonnes, which is about the same as the overall emissions of the whole province of Manitoba. We've had at least a couple of studies which have talked about how our air quality has improved considerably in and around Edmonton and in other parts of the province because of the accelerated reduction in the burning of coal. So, in fact, in a very short time what we've actually seen is progress.

Let me just say, Madam Speaker, that on the matters of accelerating the coal phase-out, even though some of the members opposite, probably not a lot of them – they don't even necessarily agree because it's really quite an interesting collection of disparate humans over there – will look to the federal Conservative efforts to reduce coal emissions, when they did that, they didn't give a second thought to the people whose jobs would be displaced as a result of that coal reduction. We, however, did, so one of the things that our climate leadership plan paid for was a just transition program for people employed in the coal industry to make sure that they had a just transition to other forms of work. That was not something that the federal Conservatives ever gave the slightest little second thought to.

One of the other things that we were also very proud to be able to do with the funds from the climate leadership program goes to the matter of jobs. Members opposite suggest that this bill will create 6,000 jobs. Well, that's just great. The climate leadership plan has already created over 7,000 and actually planned to create tens of thousands more than that, so that looks to me like a net loss. If you're keeping track on your old jobs-pipeline-economy chart there, you might want to just go: "Oops, I guess we're starting by going back a couple of thousand. But, hey, who's counting?" We are, just to be clear.

Nonetheless, our plan was creating jobs. One of the places we were creating jobs was in the renewable energy sector. Here we are in Alberta, one of the sunniest places in the world. Unfortunately, for the people around Lethbridge it's also one of the windiest places in the world. Yet for decades we were way behind the rest of the world, way behind the rest of the continent in terms of investing in renewable energy. It was just ridiculous. You know, renewable energy: this is a great sector. Why do people have to feel threatened? It's, like: oh, well, if we invest in renewable energy, then somehow our friends in oil and gas are going to not do as well. Well, no. Everybody does well if you diversify your energy economy. Certainly, our climate does well if you diversify your energy economy, particularly to bring along more renewables. Certainly, people who are breathing our air do well, and ultimately renewable energy will be less expensive in the long term.

But it won't be if you do nothing – if you do nothing – if you do everything you can to stop it from growing, which was the principle and the primary policy directive of the previous government. But we didn't do that. We put in place an innovative plan to incent renewable energy. So when we introduced the auctions for renewable energy, we found that in the province of Alberta we were able to buy renewable energy at absolutely the lowest price anywhere in Canada and in one case the lowest price anywhere in North America and in another case the second-lowest price anywhere in North America. It was an incredible success.

While we were doing this, do you know what else was happening, Madam Speaker? Here's the thing. We were creating jobs. We were creating jobs, and we were attracting investors in high tech, attracting investors in innovative renewable energy technologies right here to the province of Alberta. Most Albertans will tell you that they want to see job creation, but they also want to see economic diversification. They want to see forward-looking plans that will actually ensure that their kids are working 20 years from now as well, and that's what our plan did.

Our plan also, of course, invested in public transit, something that, again, the previous government was quite hostile or at the very least resistant to investing in, and it was a significant investment in public transit. That's all up in the air now. We don't know what's going to happen with that.

We also invested in rebates for two-thirds of Albertans. Two-thirds of Alberta households received rebates from the climate leadership plan. Low-income households received the most.

Indeed, low-income households probably received more than they paid, and that's not unreasonable because those are the folks who were struggling the most with the increased costs.

That was a good thing because the folks who actually burned the most emissions, not in terms of business or industry but in terms of regular folks, are folks with more money. You know, you buy that third truck to pull the camper, and then you've got the boat, and you've got the this and you've got the that, and you've got the 4,000-square-foot house. Yeah, you are paying more in carbon tax. So be it. If that's the choice you made, well, then, pay your carbon tax, and we'll use that money to reduce emissions elsewhere. If you don't want to pay the carbon tax, then reduce your footprint. For people who couldn't afford to make those kinds of adjustments, who couldn't afford to make those kinds of choices, we were providing a rebate so that they weren't actually losing. That's, of course, all gone as well. We're losing the ability to act to protect us from the consequences of climate change or to reduce climate change.

Before I finish, I want to talk a little bit about the consequences of climate change. Another big piece of what our climate leadership plan was dedicated to addressing was the matter of adaptation, something that is incredibly underconsidered in public policy in all provinces and also nationally. The costs of adaptation are growing every day. Of course, we can all look at what's happening in northern Alberta right now and know that this is a problem that's not going away any time soon.

Fire is not the only hazard. Flooding is also a hazard. Melting is a hazard. Rising sea levels are a hazard. Whatever pests and things which are attacking our forests are a hazard. All these things happen because of climate change. So if we fail to act to reduce our emissions, which, it is pretty clear, we're already on track to – if we do manage to reduce our emissions enough, we're not going to do it fast enough to completely mitigate the effects of climate change, so we're already in a position where we need to start planning for funding the cost of adaptation.

How are we going to do that? Are we just going to do like the Premier apparently did? I don't know – I stand to be corrected if I'm incorrect – but I had a person in the street tell me the other day that he made some comment about: well, if you're living up around High Level, it's on the frontier; you need to expect fires to some degree. Now, maybe that's not correct – and I apologize if it is not – but it was out there in the world of people talking to each other. Either way, the reality is that where there are forests, there are fires, and where there are communities that are surrounded by forests, there is risk, and where there is risk, there is cost. There is cost to the economy.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar: I walked in to hear him talking about insurance costs. We know that insurance costs are out of control. I'll tell you something, Mr. Speaker. That kills jobs. If the cost of insuring activity becomes prohibitive, so too does investment in things that create jobs. So that's another thing that we are no longer dealing with here in Alberta.

We were leading the country in terms of taking action. We were setting a framework for how we could preserve and protect jobs while beginning the good work of protecting Albertans from the impact of climate change and also combatting the forces that actually cause climate change. We were balancing that with our work to get access to tidewater and to build national support for access to tidewater. We have to understand that we are Canadians, and lots of Canadians care about climate change. We can stomp our feet and say, "Oh, you shouldn't care about climate change because that's inconvenient for us," but – you know what? – we're not going to win that argument.

The way we're going to get a national consensus on the future of our energy industry and the need for national infrastructure is by listening to other Canadians and finding forward-looking solutions, and this bill represents the opposite of that. This bill represents pandering to folks over a series of costs which, quite frankly, will pale in comparison to the actual costs which are about to hit many Albertans through a whole range of plans that these guys have in their back pocket. That's a whole other thing.

Of course, one of the other things that we did with the climate leadership plan was that it allowed us to pay the cost of dropping the small-business tax by a third, further supporting their efforts as we move forward.

At the end of the day, we can go forward, or we can either try to balance or not balance. In fact, I reject this idea of balancing. What we have to do is align. We have to align environmental, responsible, thoughtful, evidence-based, pragmatic, well-consulted-on action to protect our environment with ongoing work to develop a sustainable, job-creating economy for the future, not only in the nonrenewable energy sector but in the renewable energy sector and in many, many, many other sectors. That is what this plan was designed to do. Now we are going back on the future, going back by a decade.

As members opposite have already heard, I'm sure, from folks in our caucus, what we are doing is that we are walking back a made-in-Alberta plan that was created through months and months and months of consultation, actually years, because many elements of it came into effect even after we introduced the climate leadership plan, and then we went off to work with different sectors who were impacted by it. So our plan was developed through at least three and a half years of consultation with Albertans to find a plan that was made in Alberta and that worked for Albertans, that worked with Alberta's trade-exposed industries, that worked with Albertan communities that were inappropriately or disproportionately negatively impacted by the plan. That's what it was, and it's now going to be replaced by a made-in-Ottawa plan.

You know, it's all great. As I've said before, the members opposite are all interested in creating new jobs for lawyers. As you've all heard, one particular new job that they ought to be creating is that for a special prosecutor and people to work with that special prosecutor to save the justice system from the imminent demise that it is facing under the current leadership. But separate and apart from that, I'm not really keen to create jobs for lawyers, which is all the whole, you know: I'm going to tilt at this judicial windmill, I'm going to tilt at that judicial windmill, and I'm going to rant and I'm going to rave and I'm going to rage about all that is unfair. That's what the plan is, but what we know is that the courts have said that by replacing a made-in-Alberta plan, it is very likely that Albertans will be faced with a made-in-Ottawa plan.

Now, maybe the Premier is super pumped and actually happy about that because I feel that he probably thinks he has a great deal of agency in Ottawa. It's kind of his home away from home or his home away from where he visits over here in Alberta. I don't know. But most Albertans are quite keen . . .

Mr. Schmidt: Does his mom have a basement in Ottawa, too?

Ms Notley: I don't know. There may be additional basements in Ottawa. Perhaps it feels very comfortable there.

The reality is that Albertans would like a plan that was developed in Alberta so that they had access to the decision-makers in order to engage and to do the appropriate back and forth and responsive policy-making that happens when you have an engaged government that actually cares about the province and lives in the province and actually works with people in the province.

That's a better way to develop a climate leadership plan than to say to the federal government: here; you do it, and then that will give us a convenient political target for us to rage against because, at the end of the day, for us it's not really about good public policy, it's not really about protecting the province and the people of this province from the consequences of climate change, it's not really about diversifying and innovating our economy for now and for the future; it's just about politics and game playing and clickbait and all the things that happen these days in the new political world.

The problem is that we are then left with the collateral damage of that approach, and that collateral damage: we're seeing it in northern Alberta right now. We're seeing it in the thousands of Alberta students who expressed their concern about the jaw-dropping levels of frustration that they feel because people keep saying things that are disconnected from science and facts and real news and, you know, just come up with empty contradictory talking points to justify doing nothing to protect their future, doing nothing to protect our climate, and doing nothing to prepare our economy for the consequences of climate change. We have folks like that who are very, very concerned, and they're not hearing their voice represented at all by the members opposite.

I appreciate that, again, these folks aren't voters, and if your only job is to get re-elected or get elected here in Alberta so that you can fund your campaign to run for office in Ottawa and use taxpayers' dollars to do that, well, then, why worry about the facts? Why worry about the science? Why worry about the public policy consequences of this profoundly irresponsible decision that you're making?

At the end of the day, you know, we've talked about the 4 and a half billion dollar hole that's being built into the budget through the corporate tax cuts, but, in fact, this also is creating a hole in the provincial budget. Many of the important infrastructure projects which were funded through the climate leadership plan – the members opposite suggest that they may still fund some of them, probably not all of them but some of them.

But the funding of those projects: that's transfers to municipalities to get those projects funded, which means it's not even part of your capital budget, my friends; it's coming out of your operating budget each and every year. Now you've just shut off another revenue stream that would have been dedicated to supporting the cost of building the green line, the cost of building the Edmonton west LRT – all those kinds of things – the cost, actually, of the Springbank protection because, of course, that too was an adaptation measure. All those things now are going to be coming out of that budget, which apparently – anyway, math is a thing that, though hard, people should really dig into, and it's not working for you right now. Bill 1 is going to be another challenge to your math.

Ultimately, I believe that all Canadians do want to see us take the responsible path towards being a leading country, internationally, on combating climate change. This whole, "Oh, these other guys over there are burning more carbon than us, so why should I do anything?", honest to God, sounds like a conversation between three-year-olds on a playground. The fact of the matter is that the consequences of climate change are profound to humans all across this globe. We are public policy-makers. We are leaders. We are decision-makers, and the matter of environmental stewardship is squarely within our set of responsibilities.

So in making your first decision, a decision to take that responsibility, wrap it up in, you know, a garbage bag and hide it in the bottom of grandma's closet somewhere and hope nobody ever remembers to ask you about it: that, my friends, is the opposite of leadership. It is the kind of act that you will actually have as part of your legacy. You will. I'm sure right now as you're sort of running your polling and you're thinking: "Oh, yay, look at us. We got 55 per cent in the election. Aren't we the smartest people in the world?" Let me just say that 20 years from now I hope each and every one of you will feel super good about talking to your grandkids about your legacy: a legacy of walking away from your responsibility to protect our environment, to reposition our energy industry, to invest in innovation, to improve and enhance renewable energy, to build public transit, and to protect our air and our land and our water. All of these things that you are doing now are not that.

Then on top of it all – I mean, I know Bill 1 doesn't speak to the emissions cap, but of course that is a critical part of our climate leadership plan. Should this government proceed with a plan to remove the emissions cap and pretty much start campaigning against our pipeline in jurisdictions where we really need to continue to build support, well, then I think that that, too, would be a betrayal to the very people you spoke to in the last election: the people of Alberta who need jobs, who need a strong energy industry, who are looking for leadership on getting market access secured. So I will say that if you don't keep that emissions cap, you are effectively beginning the campaign against the pipeline.

I will also say that this idea of a war room where you choose to rather than adopting the approach that I was talking about earlier of aligning environmental action with economic growth and instead demonizing anybody who speaks about the real science and the real concerns about climate change, that too will be seen as the kind of action that will polarize people in Canada and push them away from supporting our efforts to get our products to tidewater. That's what Canada is built on. Polarizing for political gain, again: lovely short-term wins for folks, but that also represents some profound long-term losses.

I look forward to having conversations with folks about how we can amend Bill 1 to minimize and mitigate the worst of what it contains. I certainly look forward to hearing from members opposite if they have any actual plans to combat climate change. I get that they talked about cancelling our plan to carbon price. I get that the people of Alberta voted for that. It is what it is. But I don't believe that the people of Alberta ever voted for the government to walk away from their responsibility, and so far I have heard absolutely nothing from this government other than a commitment to going back roughly 10 years and essentially walking away from their responsibilities. That, Mr. Speaker, is a very disappointing thing to many, many Albertans.

That is why of course I think that this referral should succeed. Time should be taken to think about how it is that the many, many elements of our climate leadership plan can be preserved, if not through carbon pricing then through other mechanisms, or whether we're simply throwing those away along with the carbon-pricing mechanism which we, as I've said before, know many, many people, Nobel prize winning economists – I know, they're just a bunch of eggheads, those guys. But you know what? They are Nobel prize winning economists – and then a bunch of folks who are actually Conservatives, too, who all see carbon pricing as something valuable in and of itself, as a means of reducing emissions separate and apart from the other initiatives that I've just spoken about that we in Alberta need support for because we are a province that has had tremendous wealth and tremendous prosperity as a result of our nonrenewable energy sector.

But if we are going to maintain that wealth and maintain that prosperity, we are going to have to pull together through the resources that one would have otherwise had through the climate leadership plan to support that transition to other, more innovative ways of doing things, including support of the nonrenewable sector itself to finding more innovative ways of doing things. In failing to do that, what we likely are doing is just setting up a whole bunch of different sectors' failures, and that is unfortunate for the people in this province.

So I hope that folks will vote in favour of this motion for referral. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rising on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. I certainly listened very intently to what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had to say. Of course, it should be no surprise that I hang on her every word. I only wish that we could amend the standing orders to allow her to speak for longer on all of these bills that come forward. Perhaps I will bring forward some kind of amendment to allow her to do just that when the government motions come up for debate.

The Speaker: Just to add as a point of clarification, the member did have an additional 60 minutes remaining in her time to speak.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, of course, she was asked to keep her remarks brief. In her defence, this is probably the least amount of time she has spoken in one go. So I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for keeping things as succinct as she did.

But, you know, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona ended her remarks with some comments that she made about Conservative thought leaders and their stance on climate change and carbon pricing. It's interesting to me. I wonder if the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has some comments to make as well because she has been a long-time observer of Conservative politics and politicians here in Alberta, and if she ever thought she would live to see the day where Conservative politicians in this province are out of line with people like Margaret Thatcher, who spoke at length in 1989 at the United Nations about the dangers that global warming posed to the world.

Of course, Margaret Thatcher was even better than Stephen Harper at throwing coal workers out of work although that was more of an ideological assault on unions than any concern for climate change at the time. In fact, the British Conservative Party has been very successful at transitioning Great Britain off coal-fired power. Just last week, Mr. Speaker, the country of Great Britain went for eight days without generating a single kilowatt hour of electricity from coal, which is remarkable given that the entire country of Great Britain is essentially one giant lump of coal floating in the North Sea.

The members opposite are out of step with their Conservative brethren in the U.K., both past and current. They're certainly out of step with their forefather Preston Manning, who of course has been a long-time proponent of carbon pricing here in Canada. They are certainly out of line even with Republican lawmakers like Arnold Schwarzenegger, who implemented very proactive renewable energy efficiency policies in the state of California, things that have been continued by his successors. Of course, Arnold Schwarzenegger has taken President Trump, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake's favourite President, to task for his inaction on climate change.

I'd like the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's thoughts on why this group of Conservatives is so far out of line with what conservatives in the United States and world-wide have been saying on carbon pricing and the need to take action on climate change.

Ms Notley: Well, that was entertaining. You know, to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I think it really comes down to this. It comes down to the degree to which one is going to abandon hard-evidence-based, good-for-folks public policy-making because that's what government does in order to pursue very short-term, crass, uninformed political objectives. There's no question that these folks here decided that running against the carbon tax was going to be the best way to get themselves back here so that they could then fund their leader's inevitable attempt to run a campaign in Ottawa, whether for himself or for his colleagues. What we do know is that it will probably be using taxpayers' dollars through the energy war room.

That being said, all I would say is that I would urge the members opposite to learn as much about . . . [Ms Notley's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: I see the hon. Government House Leader rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to rise on this referral motion. First off, I enjoyed the comments – well, I don't know if "enjoyed" is the right word, but I listened with interest to the comments from the Leader of the Official Opposition. Just on her closing remarks in her question in regard to campaigning with our federal colleagues in Ottawa, let me be very clear to the House. This side of the House, this government, will not be like the NDP when they were in power, spending their time trying to shore up Justin Trudeau, who has spent his time actively attacking our province. Instead, we will stand with Albertans, and we will work very hard to get Andrew Scheer elected the next Prime Minister of this country. We will not be ashamed of that at any time.

Now, what was interesting to me as we listened to the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition's comments in this place – I respect the leader of that party. She shares an office that both you and I held at one time, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure she's excited that our pictures will hang together on the wall. I think that probably is maybe not something that excites her, but I think it's an interesting fact.

I'd like to recap some other facts maybe for the benefit of my little brother, the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein, and some of our other colleagues who have joined us here that weren't here in the 29th Legislature and did not get to experience the long and sad story of the Alberta carbon tax that was brought in under the NDP and the history of what the NDP did with the carbon tax, which takes us to the decision that Albertans made on April 16, quite frankly, and what this government is now doing on their behalf as per their instructions. Your constituents and my constituents' instructions, without a doubt, Mr. Speaker, were to bring forward this bill and make sure that we defeat the carbon tax.

Now, what happened . . . [interjection] I see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has lots of stuff to say. He likes to heckle in the House, Mr. Speaker, and that's where he goes.

What he doesn't like to talk about is the fact that he belonged to a government that campaigned in 2015 and never once mentioned the carbon tax and then came to this place and sat on this side of the House and then brought in the largest tax increase in the history of this province without even telling Albertans. This side of the House, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to this bill that is before this House, without a doubt, was very clear with Albertans what our intention was, and they overwhelmingly voted in support of removing that carbon tax. That's a big difference. That's just one fact. I've got a few more I want to talk about. But that's a big difference between us and the NDP. We said that we were going to bring it . . . [interjection] I know the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar loves to do this. You see him heckling away, Mr. Speaker, through you to him. He should probably start to re-examine the fact that his party was absolutely decimated as a result of some decisions that he was a part of, which include the carbon tax.

This side of the House made a commitment; we're going to follow through on that commitment.

You know, when you look at the carbon tax as a whole which was brought in by the NDP government and we listen to the Leader of the Opposition talk about all the things that she thinks will go wrong as a result of the carbon tax being repealed, it's disappointing for her to even make that argument when she herself as Premier of Alberta has said – and she said it on TV and said it elsewhere – that she has no evidence that the carbon tax was even working. That's what she said. She could not bring forward any facts. You can watch. It was a New Year's or a Christmas interview, either just before Christmas or for year-enders, in which she makes clear that she could not back up that the carbon tax had any positive impact.

Well, what I can tell you, though, is that the carbon tax had a significant negative impact, which that party across from us ignored when they sat on these benches. My colleagues and myself, when we sat in opposition, continued to raise those negative concerns that were happening to our constituents, and they ignored it. They ignored the fact that our homeless shelters were struggling under their carbon tax. They ignored the fact that our food banks were struggling. They ignored the fact that our K to 12 education system was struggling as a result of it. They ignored the fact that our municipalities were struggling, that our nonprofit sector, which is the social safety net of our communities, was struggling.

They hate it when I bring this up, Mr. Speaker, but it's so appalling what they did. They told seniors in Sundre to go have a fundraiser to pay for the carbon tax. That's what their focus is on. The opposition wants us to forget about that. Well, Albertans didn't forget about that on April 16. They didn't forget about that.

What's interesting to me is that when the hon. Leader of the Opposition rises on this referral amendment and goes on her version of the history of the carbon tax and how great it is for this province, she just glosses over the fact that Albertans were hurt by her decision to bring in this carbon tax. Albertans were hurt by that opposition's decision when they were in power to bring a carbon tax that caused significant trouble for your constituents, my constituents, and their constituents, and they passed judgment on April 16. My colleagues that were here in the 29th Legislature will recall that we often said that to the government. We warned the then government of the day that if they continued down this track with the carbon tax, when Albertans finally made the decision, when the boss finally made a decision, they were going to cast a judgment that was not going to be very good for the NDP because they ignored what the people of Alberta wanted.

Further to that, they made it worse for them at the very time, Mr. Speaker, that we were in a recession. We were bleeding jobs all over under the NDP at the very time that we would go home to our constituents and have to sit in our offices with people that were losing their homes, unable to pay their bills as a result of other economic decisions that the NDP were making. They would come to this place and sit in these very benches that we have the privilege of sitting in now and completely ignore that and sometimes even belittle it. They called Albertans Chicken Little for bringing up their concerns with the carbon tax and other names, including sewers rats, which is another story for a different day. That's the history that they just want to gloss over. They don't want to talk about the history of what the carbon tax did to our constituents, and that's an important thing to talk about.

What's maybe even worse, though, is that the NDP decided that that was the direction that they wanted to go. No different from us: we've decided we want to go in a different direction as per the instructions we received from the majority of Albertans. But when they went for it – that was their plan – they told Albertans that they would gain social licence, that we would get our pipelines built, other provinces would stop blocking our energy products from getting to market, and we'd be able to overcome one of the biggest hurdles that we have in this province right now, getting our energy products to tidewater. They made a promise to Albertans that they would do that. They celebrated just outside these doors, promising that two pipelines would be built, that have not been built now.

My point is this. At the very least, if they were going to force this carbon tax on the people of Alberta and the consequences of that carbon tax on the people of Alberta, they should have been able to follow through on their commitment that we would have got the social licence, that we would have got pipelines built. I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the fact that that did not happen shows the failure of this policy. For the Leader of the Opposition and the opposition to continue to stand up and say that the carbon tax is about the environment but, at the same time, can't show how it has even helped the environment, that's a ridiculous argument. The NDP carbon tax was all about taxing Albertans, causing trouble for fixed-income seniors, causing trouble for the less fortunate in our community, the most vulnerable people inside our province. That's all the carbon tax did. The Leader of the Opposition should recognize that.

She should also recognize that it's time for her party to apologize for their behaviour. It's time for their party to apologize for not campaigning on a carbon tax, keeping it hidden from the people of Alberta and then coming here and going through with a tax that was widely unpopular. It's time for them to apologize that they did not get those pipelines built and that they did not get us social licence as a result of that even though we paid the ridiculous carbon tax for years. They should apologize to the nonprofits and the fixed-income seniors and the swimming pools that struggled under that. They should apologize for that, but they won't. Instead they'll try to stand up and double down on a policy that was overwhelmingly rejected by the majority of Albertans.

What I can tell you, though, Mr. Speaker, is that that's the difference between them and us. We campaigned for several years on the promise that we would get rid of the job-killing carbon tax. We campaigned on the promise that that carbon tax would be gone if we were given the privilege of forming government in this House. We made it very, very clear. We made it very, very clear what we would do here. Unlike the last government, who hid it from Albertans, we told Albertans what we wanted to do, and we gave them a chance to cast judgment. They cast judgment on April 16, and this opposition now trying to bring referral amendments to block the will of the majority of Albertans is ridiculous.

The majority of Albertans weighed in on April 16. I know that your constituents, Mr. Speaker, voted in the same volume as the great constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I think it was about 60 votes behind the people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I don't know, but it was close. They made it very, very clear, just as the constituents of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre made it clear, that we were to come here and we were to follow through on our promise and repeal the carbon tax. That is what's going to happen here despite what the opposition wants to do. They can continue to try to filibuster and send things to committee and play procedural games to try to block this bill.

But the reality is that Alberta now has a government that will keep their promises, that will stand up for what they said they would do. I suspect that once they finally give up, we'll be able to finally repeal the NDP's carbon tax, and we'll be able to move this province forward. I, for one, can't wait to go back to Sundre and tell them that we did, and I suspect that you can't wait to go back to Olds and do the same.

The Speaker: Members, 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments. I see the Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I was really enjoying the comments from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I just want him to maybe further comment, if he has a chance here, about how many bills the NDP government actually sent to committees in their four years on this side of the House as government. I think that would be an interesting number to calculate because you wouldn't need very many fingers to do that. I don't know if it ever happened on a government bill, that it actually went to committee. I think the irony is astounding, and I would say the hypocrisy is astounding that the opposition, in fact the Leader of the Opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, would get up here and stand for a half-hour and talk about the importance of sending this bill to committee. When they had the chance to send bills to committee, they never did.

Now, of course, there's an importance to committee work and reviewing bills at times, but we have just had an election, an election that we on this side of the House campaigned on getting rid of the carbon tax. In this election we, of course, received 55 per cent of the votes, more votes than ever cast in Alberta's history, and clearly the number one thing on the ballot question was getting rid of the carbon tax. I would actually challenge the members opposite to try to find one piece of literature, one website, anything where it was not mentioned that we were committed to getting rid of the carbon tax. I'd challenge them to do that. If there's anything, there would be very little.

Now, it was also interesting to talk about the jobs. Of course, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona got talking about how many jobs the carbon tax created, and we talk about how many jobs were lost. Of course, this doesn't take into account the tens of billions of dollars of investment that left Alberta because of this government and their policies. We can't even calculate all those job losses that this government has caused. Now, the carbon tax was one of those things that led to that investment being lost, because when corporations have an opportunity to invest, they look at all the factors involved, and obviously taxes are one of those things that they look at.

Now, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona also talked about the investments that are taking place because of the carbon tax. It's like there was no investment happening before the carbon tax came along, so up until four years ago there was never any investment happening, according to how they're talking now. That's absolutely untrue. Investment will continue in Alberta as far as the tax money being invested on behalf of Albertans here in Alberta. That will continue. To suggest that the sky is going to fall because we don't have the carbon tax and that no investment will happen on any projects is absolutely crazy.

Again I just want to point out the hypocrisy of this government talking now about having this go to committee. Now, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, when he spoke yesterday, said that everyone in Alberta is unhappy with this, and he said that no one that voted for us expected us to do this. I mean, that's absolutely unbelievable, that those words could come out of his mouth.

Well, maybe it's not unbelievable knowing some of the other things he said, because he did say today, on the Ottawa carbon tax, that Ottawa did not consult with Albertans. Well, it just so happens that the NDP didn't consult with Albertans either, so to suggest that Ottawa is any different than the NDP is also bizarre. The previous government, the NDP opposition, did not campaign on the carbon tax. They did not tell Albertans what they were going to do until they rammed it down their throats. In fact, I think it was the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that said: Ottawa will ram the carbon tax down their throats. Well, we've seen that happen. The previous NDP government rammed the carbon tax down Albertans' throats, so we have this situation . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the Member for Edmonton-West Henday rising to speak to the referral motion.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to the motion for referral of Bill 1. I have to say that I'm gravely concerned. That we're having this discussion in terms of talking about repealing the price on carbon or moving towards the Trudeau carbon tax implementation is really a big concern for us. You know, we say: we're going to fight them in the courts. I don't think that's the right decision, but of course we're on this side of the House and not on that side.

I do believe at this point that the best-case scenario for this piece of legislation and, frankly, the future of our province is to move this to committee. I think it would serve us all well to have further discussions on this bill. I, of course, understand that the government has been given a mandate by the people to get rid of the price on carbon, I suppose, but I don't think that by any means the people of Alberta have given you a mandate to stop caring about climate change altogether. I think that's really my biggest concern here, that you're throwing the baby away with the bathwater, for lack of a better saying.

Further to that, I think that another big concern for me is not only throwing away the climate policy that comes with the leadership plan but also the energy efficiency policy, that I have seen used extensively through my community. Though I haven't had somebody come out to my property, I know that many people in my community have, so I think that it's a program that we should continue with. Not only is it creating jobs within our community; I think there's even further opportunity for manufacturing of these products, whether it be solar panels or perhaps light bulbs, Mr. Speaker.

I do want to point out that I do have concerns with the lack of debate that is happening here. Of course, the government wants to push this through as fast as they can, and with that, we have the opposition members speaking to why this legislation or the climate leadership plan is important, and then in turn the government stands up and says: we won by this many votes; like, we had the greatest mandate of any government ever. It sounds quite like the fellow down south. I think it would do us all well if we could take a moment and actually discuss the legislation in front of us and not how big a mandate you have, because I'm not interested in comparing.

Of course, there's also a tradition in this House where government takes the opportunity to answer questions that the members of the opposition have, and I haven't really heard much rebuttal from the government on the questions that we do have. I think, once again, the most important question that I have is: if you're going to throw away all of this progress over the last four years, progress from economists, scientists, industry leaders, CEOs of oil and gas companies and solar companies, and all renewable energy, what are you giving us in return to show that you actually care at all? I mean, this isn't just about the future of the renewable industry; this is about the future of the oil and gas industry as well. You know, just because you have an I Love Oil & Gas sticker wrapped around your vehicle doesn't mean you actually understand that the future of the oil and gas sector is dependent on the strength of renewables as well, and we have to work together to co-ordinate both of those industries for the future of the province.

Not only is this government signalling that they don't take climate change seriously – and I would be happy to hear any of you stand up and actually agree that climate change is real and that humans are accelerating it and that it is human caused. I would love to hear some of you do that. I have some doubts about some of the members and some of the comments that I've seen before, but please prove me wrong.

Of course, this industry, the renewable industry, under the climate leadership plan was poised to bring in tens of billions to our economy over the next 10 years, and we've already seen that money moving forward. The solar industry, for instance, has grown by 500 per cent in the last four years alone. But without strong public policy and without a government that is willing to incentivize these industries, much like we do with most of our other industries, the oil and gas industry included, investment in renewables will be stunted, and with that, thousands of good-paying jobs will move elsewhere.

We've seen it and have had the discussion already about the job loss in Ontario. I believe that close to 700 if not more projects were cancelled under the Doug Ford government. Of course, we know that our new Premier and he finish each other's sentences, so we can only imagine that that same thing is going to happen in our solar industry here. An even bigger concern is what it means for social policies and what it means for people with disabilities and people that are often falling through the cracks, seniors. I mean, we had questions answered today by a seniors minister that were just not acceptable at all in terms of where we're going to see that funding.

Of course, there was actually an article, which I will be happy to table tomorrow. I don't think it's been tabled yet. It was put forward by the Edmonton Journal. I'm sorry. Let me just pull it up. It's a long article, from March 7, 2019 – and I think it has been discussed in the House already – about where the funding for these projects has gone. I would like to point out – and it has been mentioned – that rural communities are getting a large portion of this funding, communities that need it most right now, like Hinton. Their pulp mill received $3.7 million to continue or strengthen their bioenergy generation. The Mercer international pulp mill in Peace River received $3.7 million also to continue with bioenergy programs. Whitecourt Power biomass facility: $3.7 million. Boyle also had a bioenergy producer program. This is a tiny portion of that funding that went out.

So, members of this House who are almost entirely represented by the government, you're saying that you don't see an issue with that funding being taken away from your communities. It's very concerning to me. I mean, those are your constituents that you're going to have to go back to. Mine know where I stand. I support climate leadership. I understand the implications of climate change, and I understand that we need to do something about it.

Now, in my own community of Edmonton-West Henday the biggest concern when we talk about repealing the climate leadership plan is what it means for public transit, what it means for the LRT, which our government committed to. I believe that April last year was the final announcement: $1.03 billion was committed to the valley line LRT. Of course, the government of the day now is saying that they are going to keep that commitment to the city of Edmonton, but talk is cheap. If somebody wants to stand up and say where that money is going to come from now, because that $1.03 billion was being funded entirely through the climate leadership plan, if somebody could tell me or, well, more importantly, tell the city of Edmonton or the city of Calgary, with their green line, where that money is going to come from now, that would be greatly appreciated because it's not an answer that we can afford to get even a month from now. The cities need to find out where their funding is coming from, and you need to tell them.

Just further on that point, it's been brought up that, first, you're going to blow a $4 billion hole, I believe . . .

An Hon. Member: Four point five.

Mr. Carson: . . . a $4.5 billion hole in the budget for a corporate tax handout. You're going to further cut your revenue stream with the repeal of the climate leadership plan. I mean, we're looking at, you know, $5 billion to $7 billion that you're going to pull out of government revenue and say: we'll figure it out. You'll figure it out on the backs of seniors, on the backs of people with disabilities, on the backs of people with mental health . . .

An Hon. Member: Minimum wage earners.

Mr. Carson: . . . minimum wage earners, which we'll even have a chance to get into much further later today, I think, so I look forward to that.

Once again, the problem is that when it comes to having these discussions with the municipalities, we went through this process. We had big-city charter deals move forward at the end of our term, and we made a commitment to the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary about where their funding was going to come from, so I wait with anticipation to see where your money is going to come from.

Mr. Schmidt: So do 2 million people in those cities.

Mr. Carson: That's right. Two million people are waiting for that answer.

Now, the quote has been used already, but Canada is warming up at twice the rate of the rest of the world, and the effects are irreversible, Mr. Speaker. Irreversible. I'm hoping that alarms someone in this House on the opposite side. We know that our side is alarmed by that; I don't know about the other side.

The fact is that the people that are voting today in this Legislature to dismantle Alberta's only viable plan to reduce emissions are the members that represent the communities that are going to be hit hardest by the changing climate. Floods and droughts, as has been mentioned, will continue to slam our farmers and only get worse and, in turn, will bring massive costs to the government and increased food costs for our own communities. Further, experts are telling us that there will soon come a time when insurance companies will not even be willing to insure our crops. They will not insure our property as drought continues for our farmers and ranchers, as floods continue in our municipalities and in the province as a whole. What are we going to tell the people of Alberta when we can no longer insure them, and what costs will that have on our communities? You want to sell that problem down the road for $300 a year for people in our communities. The cost is going to probably be 10 times that if we do nothing.

Now, I do know that I'm standing in an Assembly full of people who have already made up their minds on this issue – that is quite clear – but I want to take a moment to speak to the people outside of this Assembly who will inhabit our planet when all of us are gone, even me. I'm kind of young still, but even me. I just want to say that I'm sorry. I'm sorry that today your leaders did not have the will to work in your best interests, I'm sorry that tomorrow you will be left with the implications of doing nothing and with no tools to do more, and I'm sorry that campaign slogans do more to get politicians elected than real public policy.

Mr. Speaker, once again, I think that the least that we can do is send this bill to committee. I think that there's a much larger discussion that we need to have beyond what we've seen so far in this House, a one-sided conversation. I think that there are important conversations to have about the real emissions reductions that we've seen – I think that they've been brought up a few times here – and also the economic impact that these policies have had on our communities, whether good or bad. We need to sit down and talk about the real implications that these policies have had and what it is going to cost if your government decides to go back on the valley line LRT, not only in job losses but the cost of emissions increasing.

Once again, if somebody is willing to promise me today that you will find a way to fund the valley line LRT without this funding while also not touching the MSI funding or the agreement that has been made through the big-city charter deals, then please do.

I do want to once again highlight a couple of quotes, this one coming not from a social justice warrior, an extreme radical environmentalist, but from the CEO of Suncor, which may surprise you. "We think climate change is happening. We believe a broad-based carbon price is the right answer and we're pleased to see the Alberta government is taking steps to implement the climate leadership framework." I'd be interested to hear what the members of this House think of that quote, why they don't believe the CEOs of these major oil and gas companies when they're talking about the implications of climate change, when they're talking about the opportunities that we have working together hand in hand between the oil and gas industry, between the renewable energy industry, because often in many situations it is the oil and gas companies that are moving into renewables. Of course, not entirely. But they're working because they understand that the investment community is looking to green up their funds often.

I do have other questions about how repealing the price on carbon is going to affect other legislation: for instance, we brought forward a piece giving opportunities to homeowners to put solar panels on their rooftops and in some instances get incentives; also, just the policy about being able to defer that cost to your property tax. I know that the opposition at the time had concerns with it, about something in California not working with that legislation – I think it was mostly made up – that they heard on the street, like many of the things that they legislate on. But I would like to know how that policy is going to change. Is this just simply getting rid of the price on carbon? Are you going to start putting all of the expert work that's been studied over the last four years through the shredder? I think we saw that under the Stephen Harper government, shutting down scientists, shredding that information. That is of massive concern to me. If somebody could reassure us of that, that would be wonderful.

Mr. Speaker, I think that at this point that is all I have to say to the referral amendment, but I really do hope that the Assembly will consider this.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, for your comments.

I know it's slightly unconventional, but I'd just like to briefly ask if the House wouldn't mind, prior to their departure, a very brief return to introductions. I'll be asking for unanimous consent to return to introductions.

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd just like to bring to your attention, albeit very briefly as we're in the middle of a very important debate, the presence of a number of ladies who have joined us in the gallery today. I understand that they are a group of individuals who have joined us from British Columbia today. They are from the Vancouver Art Gallery, and they are here touring the Legislature, observing the wonderful pieces of art that hang around our building, including the ones here in the Chamber. I invite all members to welcome them here to our Chamber.

Just a brief reminder to the Member for Calgary-Klein that when the Speaker is on his feet, it would be reasonable for you to pause and wait for him to take his sedentary position. It's okay; you don't need to apologize.

5:20 Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

The Speaker: I saw the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore rising on Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very intrigued by the statements that the Member for Edmonton-West Henday had. I've heard a lot of discussion this afternoon around the economic implications of removing the carbon levy and about taking climate very, very seriously. I can certainly tell you that I do take climate change very, very seriously.

One of the things about Edmonton-Decore that I'm so very proud of, especially now with the boundaries that have been redrawn, is that I'm now up to 26 schools in my area, which creates quite a challenge to visit them on a regular basis. Three of the high schools, all of them in north Edmonton, reside now in Edmonton-Decore. The chance to interact with the students on a regular basis is something that I enjoy very, very much, and they do provide a lot of insight into things, including things like climate change.

When we talk about our students, our young emerging leaders, these are the individuals that are going to be taking over after we have all moved on to other things. I know that the Member for Edmonton-West Henday has attended several new school openings on top of maybe the schools that he's had at this time. As we start to consider moving this bill to committee and the referral that is before us, I think it's very, very incumbent upon us to ensure that those voices of those future emerging leaders are included in that conversation. I know the students that are at Queen Elizabeth high school put in a lot of work in terms of their own climate plan when our government first formed in 2015 such that they intended to show that in Paris. Unfortunately, due to circumstances there that trip was cancelled, and luckily our leader, then Premier, took that paper there on their behalf.

As our students move forward and should be included this, I'm wondering if the member might have any thoughts around some of the things that his students have around climate, around carbon pricing and if he might be willing to share some of those thoughts with the House because I think it's very, very important. It's incumbent upon us to have all of the information so that we can make informed decisions as legislators. I don't want us to be, hopefully, dismissing that because, well, you know, it's just the youth. Hopefully, the Member for Edmonton-West Henday might provide some insight for us as legislators to be able to move forward on this referral motion.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much to the member for the question. I have indeed had the opportunity to go to several of my schools, and early on when I was elected in 2015, I also had the opportunity to go to a climate change presentation, I believe, for grade 6ers. That program is definitely going to be eliminated. That's social engineering to this government. I think it's very important to have discussions about climate change, about ways to mitigate the effects of climate change, whether it be through energy efficiency or a price on carbon. Any time that kids of any age are having that conversation, I think it's important. In that instance, it was as simple as having a conversation about the cost not only in physical dollars but to the environment of leaving a tap on when you brush your teeth. This is a conversation that has happened through the young years of my life as well, I believe, but now it's getting a bit more serious as we are able to better understand the impact of the price on carbon.

There are also opportunities, that have been discussed at length, from the previous Minister of Education in schools for children to learn about solar systems, solar arrays because at that time we were investing and putting those on certain new builds if they were interested in getting involved. There not only are you getting the opportunity to reduce energy consumption or reduce the cost of energy consumption but also to involve the students in learning about solar arrays, wind power, and such other things. So I think it's very important that we involve students of all ages in this conversation. It's going to be their planet that they have to take over from us, and frankly we haven't done a very good job.

The Speaker: Are there others? I see the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood rising to debate.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. You know, I want to talk about the fact that Albertans are rightly proud of our world-class oil and gas industry. My own father actually worked in oil and gas for nearly 40 years, and even he, out in rural Alberta, acknowledges that climate change is a real crisis, and so do I. This is why Albertans and many leaders across the province told us that we needed to take action on climate change, and we did.

We've talked a lot about the fact that this plan that we brought in, the climate leadership plan, was supported by countless stakeholders, and we've talked as well about what we did with the revenue from the carbon levy. I want to focus on some of those things today and talk about some personal examples as well. We know revenues from the carbon levy helped our province invest in new infrastructure, diversify our economy, support everyday families who built this province. I was just so proud to see this introduced. As I said, I heard a lot of stories from constituents in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood about the impact that it made on their lives, the positive impact, and this is why I feel we need to move this to committee for further discussion.

Some of those investments that were paid by the carbon tax include the carbon rebates, equalling more than $533 million per year. As I said, you know, my riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has some of the highest rates of poverty in the province and, in fact, in Canada. I heard day in and day out – I knocked on every door in that riding – from folks that they were so happy to be getting that rebate. It made a tangible impact on their lives: seniors, young people, people with disabilities.

Building new transit. Again, I've got in my riding a few of the LRT stops, Coliseum and Stadium. We know how important a strong public transit system is in our community, and it's so good to be able to invest the revenue there.

Energy efficiency. We had the Member for Edmonton-West Henday talk a little bit about this, and I want to talk about it as well. You know, again, growing up in rural Alberta, seeing folks that I grew up with looking at energy efficiency in their own homes: huge. In every corner of Alberta – right? – folks being able to sort of reap the benefits of that carbon levy and the climate leadership plan.

But what I want to talk about is solar in particular. We were able to diversify our economy so strongly under the climate leadership plan, create so many jobs in solar and wind. I had the opportunity actually to learn a lot about solar. I was invited to participate in a panel on solar energy during the election, and I got to talk to a lot of folks, a lot of stakeholders about just how sort of, you know, monumental the changes were that we were able to help bring in under the climate leadership plan.

The numbers tell the story. I mean, I want to talk a lot about personal stories, but we've also got numbers. We've got facts and figures to support just how much success we had in the area of solar. Alberta's solar capacity has increased from six megawatts in 2015 to 500 megawatts in 2018. As someone else said earlier, that's a 500 per cent increase. That's huge. That's huge. And 3,100 solar installations: again, in every corner of this province we see solar installations happening. Just the enormous reduction in greenhouse gases: new solar reducing more than 36,000 tonnes of greenhouse gas, which is the equivalent to removing 7,000 cars from our roads.

And the jobs. I mean, we've had people ask: what's going to happen, you know, to the 7,000 jobs that have been created and that are being created right now because of some of those investments? One fellow I spoke with in my riding has invested a lot of his own personal money in solar. He talked to me at the doors about just how happy he was that we've started to move in that direction – I heard that a lot – and I'm afraid I'm going to have to be meeting with him here soon and talking. But I don't know what the next steps are. I don't know what's going to be happening. He's fearful, right? He's raising a family. He's fearful for his own livelihood, and of course he's fearful about the future of this province.

The Leader of the Official Opposition spoke earlier about the price that we were able to secure, and this is something that is absolutely huge. We became the first province in Canada to buy 50 per cent of the government's own electricity from solar, the result of which was the lowest cost solar photovoltaic contract ever in Canada, 4.9 cents per kilowatt hour. When I talked to an expert as I was preparing, you know, for the solar forum that I attended earlier in the year, he just said that this was a game changer, that this was an absolute game changer in the area of solar energy, lower than the average price of electricity for the last 10 years, in fact.

You know, we committed in our platform that we would continue to meet the renewable energy act and ensure that 30 per cent of all electricity would continue to be coming from renewable sources, including solar. So I worry, right? I worry about the future, not just of the constituents that I spoke with who've invested so much in moving forward in the area of solar. Again, a number of members have talked about this already today. We're talking about the future not just of the province but of – we've seen other jurisdictions moving forward.

I want to talk a little bit about – the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford shared a number of indigenous examples, and I know, as someone else said earlier today, he knows a lot about this. But I also talked with a number of indigenous folks who have benefited directly from some of those programs, and these are huge. So let me just share a few of those details.

As I said, we made it clear that indigenous communities must be a part of our plans for renewable energy. They must be partners – it can't be the government of the time dictating – working together. We know that the Maskwacis First Nations shared in the media earlier in the year that they're quite concerned about a possible UCP government and what would happen to their projects because those projects, again, have been life changing to those First Nations. Maskwacis Mall, for instance, has a solar power system, reducing emissions, saving money, saving $8,000 a year – and those numbers are rising – in utility costs.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Louis Bull tribe, another nation on Maskwacis, directly west of Ermineskin, if you don't know where it is, have invested heavily in solar energy as well with the help of the grants that we've provided under the climate leadership plan. Almost every building of the Louis Bull tribe is retrofitted with solar panels. That's huge. Almost every building. This system is generating 188 kilowatt hours, which enables the First Nation to save up to $18,000 a year on energy costs.

So I'd be curious – I know he's not here today – if the Member for Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin has heard about these programs and has heard those concerns because I know they were sharing their concerns in the media earlier. Again, it's changing. It's not just bringing jobs to the communities. It's bringing the communities together, and in a really exciting way, to move forward.

I know the Member for Edmonton-West Henday also talked about some of the rural examples, and I was really proud to hear about my hometown of Barrhead having a hundred thousand dollars in solar panels on their new aquatic centre. You know, I think that if the Conservative bastion of my hometown of Barrhead can get onboard and benefit from the carbon levy, we all can, for sure.

I mean, we know that by scrapping the carbon tax, by scrapping the climate leadership plan, the future of these monumental programs is certainly in jeopardy. Not only that, I mean, we heard the Member for Edmonton-Decore talk about the schools as well. You know, I shared this morning that I was a teacher, a social studies teacher, and I was so proud to see students banding together across this province to acknowledge that the climate crisis is real and that we need to take action.

This morning the Member for Edmonton-Glenora introduced a grade 6 student, and I have to say that the former teacher in me was so happy to see this young person up there. She had written the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, sharing her own concerns about climate change and about the lack of action taken on climate change. You know, as I said earlier, it's not only good to see her engaging in active citizenship; she's also a model for other students.

I also visited a school, Victoria school of the arts, and they asked about that as well in their grade 6 class. So it's on kids' minds, and it's not going away, whether we want to accept that or not. We're seeing a movement led by young people who are fearful about the future, and they're not willing to sit back and let the climate crisis worsen.

You know, we talked a lot about the importance of having so many stakeholders onboard, the widespread support that the previous government had for the climate leadership plan, not just from industry but also from folks of all ages and backgrounds. As I said, I've heard in my own riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood just how important it is that we not only address the climate crisis but that we protect our most vulnerable citizens, and having rebates and having folks having a way to access funds so that they can adjust their lifestyle is just a really critical thing that we need to consider as we move forward.

I think these examples that I outlined show just how important it is that we move this to committee and that we do take another look at it and apply some, you know, critical thinking, as we'd say in my social studies classroom.

I know we heard the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar as well talk a lot about some of the economic risks, talk about the large number of, you know, Conservative politicians who know that carbon pricing is good economic policy, and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona echoed some of that. So I think we need to think about this a little bit. If the moral imperative and the environmental impacts aren't enough for some folks across the aisle to give them pause, well, perhaps the economic ones will be.

I think that's about all I'll say today on this, but again I urge the members opposite to think about moving this to committee.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate some of the comments from the member opposite for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, but there were a couple of things I wanted to address from her remarks specifically. I appreciate that she had mentioned that she's been out knocking on doors. That's obviously our job during the campaign. She's consulting constituents, like everyone else in this House has done, hopefully.

She mentioned specifically about the youth getting rebates. Now, I take specific issue about this because getting rebates is effectively paying constituents with their own money or, worse, with someone else's money. Now, when I was in high school, I used to go visit my brother, who was in university. I'd earn some money, and I'd bring that up there. He would somehow convince me to order some pizza, and we'd hang out. He would make me feel grateful that I even got a couple of slices of the pizza that I bought. Now, we get along great, of course, and I'm much bigger than he is now, so that wouldn't happen. But this idea that we're supposed to feel grateful that the government is paying us with our own money is, frankly, absurd.

I talk to constituents in my constituency. I've knocked on thousands of doors, as, again, I hope many of you have over your political term, not just recently. I tell you that what I'm hearing from the parents, what I'm hearing from the students is that they're worried about getting jobs, they're worried about keeping their jobs, and they're worried about the financial stability of their own bank accounts. The carbon tax has hit everybody.

Now, I'm happy to say that I believe that climate change is real – I do – and I want to make sure that we leave a planet that is much better for our children than we have now. There's also no question there. But there are other ways to do it, and I tell you, the carbon tax is not the way.

Referring it to committee is a poor idea for one very simple reason: it's already been there. It's already been in committee, in a historic election that happened about a month ago. [interjection] The members opposite clearly have a short memory of this. I hope that their place in this House will remind them on a daily basis of the decision that electors made not that long ago. That is the only committee that we need. We campaigned very clearly on that principle of repealing the job-killing carbon tax. It's not a levy; it's a tax.

Madam Speaker, by repealing this carbon tax, the members opposite have also insinuated that we somehow support the Liberal carbon tax, which is also false. We don't support the carbon tax at all because it appears to us to be simply paying constituents with their own money.

Now, I have had countless conversations with constituents, not just with the wonderful constituents in Cardston-Siksika but across this province. You know, when you're being a proactive candidate and MLA and you're asking the questions, people will tell you things that they would never tell you of their own volition. Oftentimes people will contact an MLA office when circumstances are dire, when it's more reactive. But when you'd go to the people and ask them the very basic questions, "How can I help you, and how can I support you as your representative?" in Cardston-Siksika the resounding answer was: "Please repeal the job-killing carbon tax. Please get our economy back on track. Please help us make sure that our kids have a stable future."

This government is planning to do just that, to balance the books and to get the province back to work, because that's what responsible governments do. They don't just think about themselves; they think about the province as whole, what's best for everyone. As Conservatives we believe in an equal playing field, equality of opportunity, not some contrived equality of outcome. Our job in this House isn't to pick winners or losers. It's to do what's best for the province. That's what we campaigned on: a robust policy document over 100 pages long, line by line, pieces of legislation that we plan on implementing for the benefit of the entire province.

I'll tell you, Madam Speaker, that I am proud to stand on this side of the House. I am proud to be here and support the hon. Premier.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'll recognize the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the referral amendment today. Before I get going, I just wanted to say a couple of things. Just to clarify, a committee is not the same as an election. They are two very different things, just so we're clear about that. I know it's your first week, but you'll find out soon enough. I'm sure you'll be assigned to a committee. They are two very different things.

So let's move on to carbon pricing. For those of you that might not know, I'm just going to give you some information.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, could you speak through the chair, please.

Ms Renaud: I will speak through the chair.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Renaud: A price on carbon exists currently in 40 countries and 20 subnational jurisdictions, including California and New York, Washington State, and Mexico. Why? Because it works. I try to explain it to constituents that maybe have questions about it. Yes, they do call our office, Madam Speaker, as you would know because you've been doing the job for about four years, like a lot of us here. Sometimes they're not really clear on what it is, so I explain it to them. It is essentially a tax on pollution.

Being a parent, I understand that sometimes you have to establish some structures to teach our kids. This is how I explain it. I taught my kids, and they changed their behaviours based on consequences. So if you choose to do A, this will happen. If you choose to do B, this will happen. It's very simple. This is the premise of a price on carbon. It's a tax on pollution, that's how it's simply put.

Certainly, the opposition will argue that taxing large emitters is the way to go. You know what? I think the fellow who won a Nobel prize for this theory, this carbon pricing, has got something here – I really do – because it works.

I want to tell you a little bit about what has happened in St. Albert. Of course, my computer died, which I always knew would happen, so let me just go from memory here. Over the last few years we've seen quite a bit of investment in St. Albert, and I think the Member for Morinville-St. Albert probably knows about this. If not, I'm happy to share information about that. There's been quite a bit of investment, specifically in St. Albert.

For people watching – I'm sure there are people watching at home – there is a way for you to search what the investment has been on the climate leadership plan revenues, climate leadership plan spending based on your postal code. There is a place you can actually go to on Energy Efficiency Alberta, and it will tell you what the total spending has been in that particular postal code.

In St. Albert we actually were one of the top five areas for uptake of the Energy Efficiency Alberta programs in the province. Our postal code is T8N, and our total was over $3 million since January 2017 alone. Those are huge investments. One of those was the Dez Liggett Transit Facility. It was a solar project, and it was valued at $125,000. It was one of 20 projects in nine municipalities funded through the Alberta municipal solar program.

Now, I haven't heard the details of the plans from the opposition, but I'm sure we will soon, when we see their budget and what exactly they're going to slash and burn so they can give the corporate tax giveaways to whomever they see fit.

These are some of the things that might not seem like a lot of money and might not be on a line, but these are the things that change people's lives. These are the things that form the foundation of healthy communities. These are some of those things. I can tell you that the total GHG reduction is 206 tonnes per year. Sure, it's not a megatonne. It is not the kind of megatonne reduction that our leader talked about earlier today, but it is something, and it's about St. Albert, the community that I represent, doing their part.

Another project – and this was through GreenTRIP – predates the climate leadership plan, from 2008. In 2017-18 the climate leadership plan helped fund – hang on a second. Okay. Those were just some notes that I have about some of the vague language, the difference between GreenTRIP and climate leadership.

But we fast-forward a little bit. We have a project in St. Albert. It's called the Campbell Road park-and-ride project. It actually was a project worth $20 million. The city of St. Albert estimated that the reduction as a result of this project would be 23,000 tonnes per year of greenhouse gases due to the increased transit ridership.

Basically, what it is is a new park-and-ride for the city of St. Albert. It moved it from the congested area where it was in the Tudor Glen area to a site on Campbell Road that sort of faces onto St. Albert Trail. I'm sure that if you've been through that area, you'll know where it is. This facility includes a transit transfer station and parking for 800 vehicles. We were hoping that it would be a future terminal for the Edmonton metro line, but again, as my colleague from Edmonton-West Henday said, we're not sure, because we had some agreements in place with the big cities. There were funding commitments announced and made about transit, but now we just don't know, so we're waiting to find out what will happen.

Actually, St. Albert was the first municipality in I think it was western Canada to operate electric buses year-round. We had three electric buses that operated year-round. I think we're in our second year now, and I'm happy to report that other municipalities have come out and had a look and will also look at expanding. Our fund contributed two-thirds of the cost of the purchase of those three electric buses in 2016, for a total cost of $2.1 million. In 2018 the province contributed one-third of the total $3.75 million cost to purchase four more electric buses, for an estimated total contribution of just over $3.35 million. The electric buses cost approximately $0.09 per kilometre for fuel. Diesel buses cost approximately $0.45 per kilometre. Why is that important? Because it's just one little piece. It's a reduction in carbon emissions in one place, and it's also a reduction of costs for the city of St. Albert, for the municipality. So you can see that all of these little pieces add up.

We hear this all the time from the government when we say something about doing our part, our part for responsible leadership in this area. We hear: "Yeah. Well, China. What are we going to do about China? I mean, they're way worse than us. They're building coal plants." Well, they're actually closing coal-fired electricity plants, and they're actually investing heavily – here's one example – in electric buses. I think I read somewhere that their fleet was over, like, 4,000 electric buses already, and I'm sure that will continue to grow.

All of these things are little pieces, but it's about doing your part.

We also have a smart fare system, which is worth about $28 million. It was also through the GreenTRIP fund to implement the smart fare project. So the total GreenTRIP funding spent – I'm not going to get into that, but I am going to go back to another piece.

I think I'll never be able to speak to the importance of carbon pricing the way that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona did, because she has been working on this for a very, very long time. You know, in my opinion, she is the expert because she has walked this walk with people from all different walks of life. As she told you, she met with industry leaders, with indigenous leaders, with municipal leaders, with people from nonprofit organizations, people from rural communities, people from urban communities, and she listened because that's what she does. She found a path forward to do this, and it wasn't easy. If you think that it was easy sitting in this place and talking about this and doing this – it took a lot of courage to do what she did, just like it's taking a lot of courage for people all over this world to stand up and say that this is a crisis.

You can talk all you like. We can have people talking about: "Well, you know, we're not sure about the science" and "It's not really a crisis" and "Maybe we can find another way of doing it." But it is a crisis, and people all over the world understand this.

I don't know why there are members in this place that don't get it, unless they are scientists and unless they have researched this area and have proof and can demonstrate that this is not a crisis and that we don't have the timeline that we've been given by scientists all around the world that have told us that we have 12 years. You can disagree with me all you like. That's fine. You can disagree with me all you like, but you cannot disagree with leading scientists from around the world who have spent their adult lives studying this.

Again, I know that I embarrass the heck out of my son when I talk about him. My son is one of those scientists. He's a paleontologist, actually. You might not think that it has much to do with climate change in that particular science, but it does because he studies things that are millions and millions and millions of years old. I don't understand half of what he says when he talks about the science that he does, but he is an expert. Now, I think he's at – what? – 14 years of university. He's a fellow at the university right now, and he has spent his adult life dedicated to the very fine point of the science that he chose to pursue.

That's what these scientists have done. They have told us that our world is warming too quickly and that the results will continue to be catastrophic. So you can sit there and you can shake your head and say, "Well, a job-killing carbon tax: we can't do that." But the reality is that it is a climate crisis, and this was a strategy to start moving us forward, to start addressing this crisis in a way that could actually fund a transition, an energy transition that could also support people that are low income that cannot afford the rising cost of energy. This was a way to start to move this forward.

We have now come to a screeching halt because of a platform, because of political opportunism. I don't know what the answer is. But when we have leaders from oil and gas, Madam Speaker, telling us that this is what they want, this is what they wanted. This was one of the things that they wanted, stability to understand what the cost was going forward. I don't really understand why people that don't have that background in science, that don't have that background even in leadership in that particular industry think they know better. Because they're politicians and they know how to win elections? I'm not entirely sure.

I want to go back to the place where I found it very sad. And I get it. You know, we're opposition, and it's our job to talk about this, to bring up all of the things that we need to think about, that we need the government to think about before they rush headlong into making decisions that will have huge implications for us, for our children, and for their children.

I want the members to stop and think about it. I get it. You're part of a caucus or a government that has essentially told you what you need to do: this is our goal; here is our plan; this is how we go forward. In fact, I think the minister for the environment had a little video about – I think it was related to floor crossing – that when you're elected, you kind of belong to this party. Well, no, you do not. The bottom line is that you were elected by the people in your constituency to represent them, all of them: the children, the adults, the seniors, the people with disabilities, the people that have no money, the people that have a lot of money. You represent all of them. You don't represent a political party.

I would hope that there are members there on the other side that perhaps have the courage, maybe not in this place but when you are in a debate or in a discussion with your caucus, to ask the hard questions. "Okay. I get it. You know, we campaigned on axing the tax or whatever the heck our bumper sticker said, but do we have a plan? What is our plan? Do we recognize that we have a climate change crisis? It is a crisis."

I think that when the United Nations are telling us that we have 12 years before we can – actually, we have 12 years to start to mitigate before it's too late. I look at my kids and their kids. Well, they don't have kids yet, but I imagine that one day they'll have kids, and I think about 12 years. That's not so long in the distant future.

It was really sad, actually. The Member for Edmonton-West Henday wanted to be on the record saying to the future generations that he's sorry that at this point today in this place, in this province, in this country we didn't recognize that this was a crisis, that we had a chance to make a difference, to change things, to introduce public policy, not just for a bumper sticker or a re-election campaign but to make real change.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. I was very intrigued by the statements by the Member for St. Albert. I know that she was probably trying to wrap up some thoughts. If we don't have those thoughts wrapped up, we as legislators are not going to be able to make an informed decision about why it is so important to move this bill into committee. I was hoping that the Member for St. Albert might finish off those thoughts so we can ensure that we have all the information at our fingertips.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to just say a few more things about the referral amendment. You know, I think I've heard it multiple times today, but it bears repeating, probably about a thousand more times, that Canada is warming twice as fast as the rest of the world. Twice. That's a crisis. That's alarming. That is a crisis. It's a grim picture for our future, and I wish that it wasn't. I wish that I could say: "This is all good. This is really just a bottom-line issue about money. It's about carbon tax versus tax on large emitters." But it's not. It's about our future. It's grim for Canada's future, and if we don't do something, we are part of the problem.

We can expect deadly heatwaves, heavy rainstorms. These will be common occurrences. You know what? When the day comes when we say or scientists say or other people say, "I told you so," that will be the worst day ever because we should have listened before it was too late. We should have taken action and developed public policy together to change this, because it is possible. That's what we were sent here to do, not to represent our leaders or our political parties or to get great bumper stickers or, you know, a little splice to put on Facebook. It was to be in this place to make good policy, to make good decisions for our children and their children.

Again, I hope that when you are sitting in committees, which are different from elections, and with your caucus, you take a sober second thought and think. Ask those hard questions that might not make you very popular. Ask those hard questions: "What are we doing? What are we doing to address the climate crisis? What are we doing? What are we really doing?" These are hard questions, and that's what people sent us here to do, to ask those hard questions and get those answers, move us forward, develop policy that is right for all Albertans, not just some, not just people on one side, not just people on this side.

I want to say one more thing. Global temperatures have increased 0.8 degrees Celsius since 1948.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but the House will stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business.

This bill amends our labour legislation to restore prosperity, get people back to work, and let the world know that Alberta is open for business again. This bill will also help to restore balance in the relationship between employers and employees and further support worker rights. This legislation will amend the Employment Standards Code and the Labour Relations Code, and this proposed legislation is part of our bold plan to restore jobs and grow the economy.

These are hard times for job creators, workers, and families in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Businesses are struggling to keep their doors open and see Alberta as a high-cost, high-regulation place. Albertans are struggling to find jobs. We need to get them back to work, and the proposed changes in Bill 2 will restore fairness and balance to the workplace and help bring back the Alberta advantage.

I will begin with the proposed changes to general holiday pay under the Employment Standards Code. These changes will get Albertans back to work by reducing costs for job creators. Currently employees are eligible for general holiday pay as soon as they are hired by their employers and are paid regardless of whether they are scheduled to work on the holiday. Proposed amendments would return to an eligibility period where an employee must work 30 days in the 12 months before a general holiday to qualify for general holiday pay.

Another proposed change is to reinstate the regular and irregular workday distinction for general holiday pay. This change means that only employees who actually work or regularly work on the day of the general holiday will be entitled to receive general holiday pay. This would mean that if the general holiday is on a regular workday and the employee works, they earn their average daily wage plus 1.5 times the hourly rate of pay for all hours worked that day. If the holiday is on an irregular workday and the employee does not work, they would not be paid any general holiday pay.

Approving this proposed change will directly reduce labour costs for businesses as employers will no longer have to pay employees when the holiday falls on an irregular workday and the employee is not scheduled to work. For example, if the holiday were to fall on a Monday and the business is never open on a Monday, such as we find with many restaurants, no general holiday pay would be owing since no employees are scheduled to work that day.

If passed, these changes would take effect on September 1, 2019. I'd like to note that any general holiday pay employees earn before September 1, 2019, must be paid according to the current rules or according to the rules in an existing collective agreement. Beginning on September 1 employees will earn general holiday pay according to the proposed rules if the legislation passes or according to the rules in an existing collective agreement.

Next I will discuss proposed changes to banked overtime. Changes to the Employment Standards Code in 2018 removed the option for employers and employees to develop straight time banked arrangements for overtime. Straight time banked arrangements reduce labour costs for businesses. They also allow employers to offer overtime hours more often and to develop more flexible schedules to accommodate employee requests. It's a win for both employees and employers. That's why we are proposing to reverse the change made in 2018 and once more allow for straight time banked arrangements for overtime.

When there is an overtime agreement, this change will provide time off with pay at straight time, or 1 to 1, instead of overtime pay. There is no change to the rate when overtime is paid out, and any paid overtime will continue to be paid at one and a half times the hourly rate. The proposed change does not affect overtime pay as the change is only for situations where there is an agreement in place to bank and use overtime in the future. Again, to be clear, this change will not result in a reduction of pay for workers.

Another aspect that will not change is that the overtime can continue to be banked for up to six months from the date it was earned when a written agreement between an employer and employee is in place. This allows for more flexibility for both employers and workers. As there is no change to the six-month time limit for banking overtime with an agreement, this is not included in Bill 2. If passed, the banked overtime changes would take effect September 1, 2019. Any overtime that employees earn up until September 1 must be banked or paid out according to the existing rules or according to the rules in an existing collective agreement. Overtime earned and banked once the new rules take effect on September 1 can be taken off with straight-time pay according to the new rules.

The proposed new rules for banking overtime mean that flexible averaging agreements will no longer be needed because employees will be able to develop straight time banked arrangements for overtime. Flexible averaging agreements were developed to allow employees and employers to agree to short-term straight overtime banking schedules. We are proposing to repeal the section on flexible averaging agreements from the employment standards regulation once the legislation is passed. This is a consequential amendment, and if passed, the changes to flexible averaging agreements would also take effect on September 1, 2019. Parties can agree to end their flexible averaging agreements as early as two weeks from the proclamation date. For a unionized employee the terms of their collective agreements will continue to apply.

Next I will discuss our proposed amendments to labour relations legislation. First, in a spirit of restoring democracy to the workplace, I am proposing changes to the Labour Relations Code that would return to a mandatory secret ballot for all union certification votes. This will allow employees to make a choice without fear of repercussion from either the union or the employer. Currently a union can be certified without a secret ballot vote if a union can demonstrate that more than 65 per cent of the employees support certification. Proposed changes would make sure employees always have the opportunity to vote on whether to join a union. With these proposed changes, a secret ballot vote will occur when 40 per cent of employees show support for union certification. A majority vote is then required for an employee group to be certified as a union. This is the same threshold of support for decertifying a union, creating fairness and consistency in the certification and decertification processes.

Other proposed changes to the Labour Relations Code would return to a time period of 90 days for unions to provide evidence of employee support for union certification. Currently card certifications require 65 per cent support and need more time to provide evidence of that support. The proposed changes only require 40 per cent support so that less time is needed prior to proceeding with the secret ballot. The reversion to the balanced rules that were in place prior to 2017 is not only a return to the approach Albertans are most familiar with; it is also the most common approach to union certification in Canada. If passed, these changes will take effect when Bill 2 receives royal assent. Employee groups who had applied for automatic union certification before the first reading of Bill 2 will be able to continue with their applications. Any applications for union certification that were submitted after the first reading of this bill will need to have a secret ballot vote.

Bill 2 also includes proposed changes that will allow the establishment of a program that provides support and assistance to employees covered by the Labour Relations Code and other labour legislation. This support would give current union members and employees who could become union members the option of seeking information or supports to better understand and exercise their labour rights. This will be particularly beneficial to employees if appearing unrepresented before the Labour Relations Board. These supports will be available on October 1, 2019.

Other proposed changes would strengthen marshalling provisions currently available under the Labour Relations Code. Marshalling can help reduce duplication of employment-related matters in multiple forums. For example, a single workplace issue could involve the Labour Relations Board, Workers' Compensation Board, and the Alberta Human Rights Commission. Current marshalling provisions allow the Labour Relations Board to recommend these complaints be heard by a single forum. This allows complaints to be handled more efficiently and effectively than if multiple bodies carried out separate responses to the same claim. Proposed amendments will allow marshalling orders made by the Labour Relations Board to include any related investigations or inquiries. As well, a provision is being added so that newly established bodies can be included in marshalling efforts. The proposed effective date for the marshalling changes is upon royal assent.

Together, all of these proposed changes will bring balance back to our labour laws. If passed, they will reduce burdens on our job creators and restore democracy to the workplace. Bill 2 is an important part of our efforts to make Alberta the best place in North America to live, work, start a business, and raise a family. It demonstrates our government's commitment to make Alberta open for business.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods is rising on debate.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to this Chamber. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to second reading of Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, an act that I would suggest does not make Alberta any more open for business than before it was introduced. I'm very pleased to start talking about the changes inside this bill.

Let me begin by talking a little bit about the history of employment standards and the Labour Relations Code here in this province. For nearly 30 years the Employment Standards Code in this province had not been updated. It had been left to wither. It had put us completely out of step with the rest of Canada and in a situation where many Albertans suffered dire consequences because we didn't have up-to-date legislation. I think often about Amanda Jensen, a young mother, single mom. One of her three children received a cancer diagnosis. Because Alberta didn't have up-to-date leaves, she was actually fired when she went to take a compassionate care leave.

I do want to recognize that Bill 2 is making some very specific changes to our Employment Standards Code after a lot of work and a lot of consultation was put in through our government's Bill 17. That consultation, as we prepared to make the first changes in 30 years to employment standards, was very wide reaching. We spoke with academics, community service providers, employers, employees, groups of employees, groups of employers, disability groups, a number of people. Through that very in-depth consultation, which included everything from round-table discussions to myself going specifically to sit with groups of labour lawyers in their offices to talk about the potential changes, I learned a lot about what does and doesn't work in our province and some of the challenges that we have.

Let me get started by talking about the first piece, which is overtime pay. Mr. Speaker, when we started reviewing our work to update employment standards, overtime pay was just one of the many places where Alberta was completely out of step with the rest of the country. Alberta workers were the only workers in all of Canada that when they were doing overtime work, overtime work which we by nature recognize as more valuable because somebody has already worked their normal shift and is staying late – perhaps it's someone in oil and gas who is putting in that extra time during the busy season. Being able to bank that time and use it in the future is critically important to those workers, yet Alberta was the only place that was doing that banking at straight time.

Now, it's really important to note that employment standards are the minimum standards that Alberta workers have to protect them. Oftentimes in a unionized work environment you will find labour standards that are better than the minimum. Lots of employers – we have great employers in this province – provide better than that minimum standard. But where that minimum standard is is where those basic protections are, particularly for vulnerable workers. In Alberta for overtime, which is worked by 400,000 workers in a year, a lot of them – Mr. Speaker rightfully acknowledges that we are working overtime right now although I would note that our overtime provisions do not apply to MLAs. Please do not call employment standards. They will not help you other than to offer sympathy. The 400,000 Albertans who do work overtime in many of our various industries are doing so to earn money for their families and are taking time away from those families to do that.

Now this change to going back to straight time is picking their pockets, which is the alternative title that I have given to Bill 2, that our caucus has given to Bill 2, because it doesn't make Alberta open for business, but it does pick the pockets of working people. Making sure that workers are valued for their time and are not being shortchanged when they put in the extra work, roll up their sleeves, and get down to business is incredibly important to our province's workers. I heard that through the vast consultations that I took part in during our Bill 17 consultation process. I would suggest that that is something that this bill has lacked, which is a consultation process.

I realize that the government benches will say that they had an election. Yes, there absolutely was an election, and a lot of people made their choice clear in the government. But I can also tell you that when I talked to people about overtime, there was outrage. There was surprise. People said that that must be an NDP smear. Well, no, it's not. In this case the UCP government is coming for your banked overtime. You will get less money, you will get less time with your family if this change passes.

I've heard the Premier talk about how this is a voluntary agreement between employees and employers. Well, if you consulted with the people of Alberta, you would hear that a lot of employees felt pressured, were told they needed to sign these averaging agreements, and it put them in very difficult positions.

I would also note that when implementing Bill 17, we gave employers and employees the mechanism through which to have a straight-time agreement. Flexible averaging agreements, which the minister just referenced as a consequential amendment, were used for short-term straight overtime banking agreements. The mechanism was there. Making sure that Alberta workers are getting the overtime banking that they deserve is important, and I speak against Bill 2 because it does a disservice to our workers.

Let's talk about holiday pay. Again, employment standards is the minimum standard. A lot of employers provide much better. In fact, a lot of Albertans, probably many of the people in this Chamber, would have been very surprised to learn that Alberta was the only province to not pay all workers holiday pay, completely out of step. When we were implementing our changes to employment standards, looking at what the Canadian standard is was really important to us. Most people didn't even realize, but do you know who did know, Mr. Speaker? Vulnerable workers, people who are working in jobs where their employers are governed by the minimum standard. Every other province makes sure that people are able to enjoy the benefit of a stat holiday, whether that little bit of extra pay or that little bit of extra time with the family.

To take that away is mean spirited, Grinchlike, and I bring up the Grinch because specifically what will happen in a couple of years from now is that Christmas is going to fall on a Saturday and New Year's Day is going to fall on a Sunday. That is a Christmas holiday that for many families – they will go to work on the Friday, they will go back to work on the Monday, and they will go to work on the next Friday, back to work on the Monday. It's like the holiday didn't even happen. I know this, Mr. Speaker, because I've worked for employers who gave the bare minimum, and it didn't include holidays in Alberta if they fell on a nonregular working day. If a holiday falls on a Saturday, if Christmas falls on a Saturday, for employers who give the minimum, it's like Christmas didn't even happen. They don't have to pay any extra or give somebody another day off.

It happens in this province, and the people in this Chamber who may not have worked a job where they were a vulnerable worker maybe weren't even aware. But I think it's really important that you open your eyes and pay attention to the fact that these are workers who need the money. These are workers supporting families, and they deserve to have Christmas as well. Please explain to me why Alberta workers deserve less than every other worker in Canada. Please explain to me why statutory holidays are not as important in this province as in every other province in Canada.

Overtime pay and holiday pay changes are picking the pockets of workers, and the minister has said that this is about labour costs for employers. Well, Mr. Speaker, not paying holiday pay to your employees, not letting employees bank the overtime that they earned is mean spirited. It is un-Albertan, un-Canadian. We believe in statutory holidays. Bring forward a bill to cancel stat holidays, and see how well that goes over. That's what this is, but it's clothed in an irregular, nonregular way, where most Albertans are getting these holidays – they think they're important – and they don't realize that their fellow Albertans are not. Making sure that we continue to consult with Albertans, I think, is very important.

Around the next section of the Picking Your Pockets Bill, the Labour Relations Code changes that change the certification process, Mr. Speaker, during the consultation on Bill 17 I worked with and met with both employer side's and labour side's lawyers, stakeholders. There are different ways to approach certification, and what this bill does is return us back to the previous way that Alberta was certified. I believe that card check certification is simpler. I know from my consultations and talking to people within this space that very often when employees try to exercise their constitutionally protected right to collectively bargain, employers will resist, sometimes actively oppose and sometimes oppose to the extent that it's actually considered an unfair labour practice. By allowing, for example, a workplace where 100 per cent of the workers have agreed that they would like to be able to collectively bargain – to allow that to happen through a card check process, I think, makes sense because we know that employer interference with certification drives has happened, can be damaging.

We also heard, through my consultations, criticisms of certification votes versus a card check process. But at this point we know that there are different ways for certifications to happen. The most important thing is to make sure that it's free from undue influence by any parties, whether it be unions or employers. We need to make sure that our legislation is protecting that constitutionally granted right to collectively bargain. It's an important part of our labour relations system, and making sure that that happens is very important.

The minister also spoke to a new program to provide support and assistance to workers. As you will know, having read all the bills, Mr. Speaker, at this point it just gives him the permission to do that. There isn't a lot of detail. But anything that provides more support to workers has the opportunity to be very positive, and I hope that the implementation of that piece is a positive addition to our labour relations system.

On the marshalling of proceedings, being able to make sure that there's clear marshalling does make sense. Through Committee of the Whole I will have some questions around the implementation as well as maybe – I don't think the right word is "jurisdiction" – just when it's touching and giving powers to the Labour Relations Board that might be in conflict with the human rights commissioner. I would love to have a little bit more discussion about that, but as we are only at second reading, I will keep my remarks very high level at this point.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, at the announcement for Bill 2 the minister, the Premier, a number of lobbyists also announced a change to a new youth wage, a $13-per-hour discriminatory age-based wage. I believe very strongly in equal pay for equal work, no matter your gender, no matter your age. Creating a second class of employee by discriminating against young people in this province is wrong-headed. In this case, we may have unintended consequences – and those are words that I've heard in this Chamber more than once, Mr. Speaker: unintended consequences – in having students quit high school because they can get a $2-per-hour wage bump or quitting university or trade school; $2 per hour is a significant difference.

Now, the minister mentioned and has mentioned that this is modelled after Ontario. In Ontario the difference between a youth wage and a regular minimum wage is about 6 per cent. Here we're looking at a 15 per cent difference. So during our Committee of the Whole I'll be very curious to hear if there's been any economic impact assessment about the difference, with us having nearly double of what Ontario has done.

If we're going to point to Ontario as an example of how this has to work, let's talk about that, because there are also studies in other areas, other regions that have a youth minimum wage that show that what ends up happening is that youth are employed until they hit the age where a full wage needs to be paid, and then they are let go.

They have a name for it in Australia: learn and churn. So employers will deliberately hire and train young workers, and older workers are left unemployed for longer. Are we bringing a learn-and-churn system to Alberta under the guise of job creation? I'm worried about that. I'm worried about the exploitation of young workers.

We've also seen studies showing a lack of job creation with this. The idea that this is going to be a job-creation measure: I've seen evidence and research to say that it does not. I also note that in touting this measure, the new youth minimum wage, the minister, the Premier, the supporters have pointed to the high unemployment for youth in our province. That is a thing we all rightfully need to be concerned with. Our government took it very seriously by introducing programs like STEP, which was an old program brought back again, and targeting supports to youth. But I would suggest that the cause of high youth unemployment was never the increase in the minimum wage. Our economy has gone through very tough times, and one of those impacts has been the higher youth unemployment. If we look next door, Mr. Speaker, in Saskatchewan, Saskatchewan's youth unemployment is actually higher than ours, and they haven't raised their minimum wage. Their minimum wage has been fairly stagnant, I believe, small cost-of-living changes.

Now, I have to suggest that the government also cherry-picked their data a little bit because they went out, in their news release, using the March 2019 unemployment numbers when the April 2019 unemployment numbers were already available. They're not quite as nice round numbers. The difference between March and April is that in March it shows a youth unemployment difference of 4 per cent; in April, 3. The minimum wage must have gone up or down to create that impact. It didn't. Instead, I think that the government went, looked at their labour force statistics, and picked a month where they preferred the numbers. If you look at Saskatchewan, their youth unemployment right now is 10.8 per cent. Both Saskatchewan and Alberta need to look at evidence-driven policy that will really reach those workers.

The other thing I would note is that all of this data is based on Stats Canada, which works in a range between 15- and 24-year-olds. Well, I can tell you that this policy impacts four years of that range and doesn't necessarily impact in a positive way six years of that range. Implementing this policy hoping to shift that Stats Canada number when it includes 15-year-olds through to 24-year-olds is not evidence-based policy-making.

Mr. Speaker, I just saw a story in the news about the Stampede. The Stampede is now trying to decide if they are going to cut $2 per hour from the 500 workers they already have contracts with, direct evidence that it's not creating new jobs in that case. It just means those students aren't going to have as much money at their summer job to help pay for university, to help support their families.

We can't forget the story of that young kid from Hardisty that the Premier told over and over and over on the campaign trail, a 17-year-old helping to support his family. The lesson that the Premier took from that was that we should cut that person's wage by $2. This does not help Alberta become open for business.

My leader and our caucus have been fighting for hard-working Albertans from the beginning. We made sure that Alberta had modern workplace laws that respected working people, set modern standards, looked across the country to make sure that Albertans were getting similar benefits to other workers in our country. After decades of inaction we finally were making good progress and advancement. Now Bill 2 wants to pick their pockets by taking overtime pay and holiday pay and is looking to make it more complicated to certify and collectively bargain and is implementing a new youth minimum wage that will have the unintended consequences of giving young people less money and making it harder for older workers to get employed.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I do not support Bill 2, and I look forward to debating it further in Committee of the Whole.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her comments. I can't help but think about the youth workers who are with us in this Chamber right now and the fact that some of them are over 18, some of them are under 18, but I think that I would argue that our caucus believes that equal work deserves equal pay.

I wonder, if we cut the pay of some legislative pages, if there would be a desire to hire more legislative pages. I doubt it. I imagine we have the number of pages that it requires to do the work in this Assembly. But I can't help but think about the fact that we are sitting in this place being well served by the kind of people we are exactly talking about – young workers, people over 18, people under 18 – and I can't help but think about the direct impacts on youth in this workplace but also in other workplaces.

During the little break I ran a few errands. I stopped at an establishment that had, I think, one person probably over the age of 18, about five under the age of 18, and I wonder, too, what kind of impacts these changes might have. Would that person over 18 get fewer hours because they cost more? Would the people under 18 get the same number of hours, or would they get more or fewer hours, or would the owner take the opportunity to consider putting an extra $2 an hour in their own pockets? I've seen trickle-down economics. It seems like the people who get soaked are the people on the bottom and not in a good way.

I am wondering if the hon. member can elaborate a little bit on her thoughts about youth employment in places, just 29(2)(a) – no? No questions or comments?

An Hon. Member: You're responding?

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. I'm responding.

The Speaker: Sounds delightful.

Ms Hoffman: So my response is that it seems concerning to me that we would be here debating something as close to home, literally, as being in this House, in this Chamber, and being surrounded by equally talented people under the age of 18 and over the age of 18 and saying that one deserves to get paid more than the other. I find that deeply troubling.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Just for clarity's sake, perhaps I didn't provide enough instruction that 29(2)(a) isn't available until the third speaker, which you were, so 29(2)(a) would be available at this time.

Ms Hoffman: For me?

The Speaker: For you.

Having said that, given the fact that I didn't provide the instruction and you still had about nine minutes left to respond, this is your only opportunity to speak to the bill at second reading. If you choose to use those additional nine minutes, I would allow you to – correction: 12 minutes. If you choose to use those 12 minutes, I'm happy to provide you the call again. If not, I'm happy to take 29(2)(a).

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. Probably it's somewhere between nine and 12 minutes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I won't commit to the full 12 minutes, but I do want to say to you thank you very much for that clarity and to the speaker just prior to me: I'm giving you a chance to reflect on some of the implications specifically as they relate to youth workers. Certainly, I have to say that I have been tremendously impressed by the dedication and calibre of youth workers.

I remember when I got my first job. It was at the curling rink. I was a concession girl. I think I made $4.90, and it certainly wasn't something that I could use to substantially save for my future. But I'll tell you that over the years that I worked and lived at home and saved for university, my parents were really excited when I hit $11 an hour at one of my places of employment because it meant that they were going to have to pay less out of pocket when I did go away to university down the road.

Whether we're talking about youth using their income today to support their families or whether we're talking about youth helping to alleviate some of the burdens for themselves and their families down the road – I was very fortunate to have parents who were both teachers. They would have made sure that I had the additional supports. But growing up in the riding of Lesser Slave Lake, in the village of Kinuso, in a village of 300, the opportunity to stay at home and go to university wasn't a realistic option for our family, so not only did they have to worry about tuition, which was increasing every year, they also had to worry about the cost of living when their daughter was moving to the city.

Fortunately, I was very lucky. Not many of my classmates had a vehicle and were able to drive the 50 kilometres down the highway to Slave Lake. Not many of my classmates were fortunate enough to have the opportunity to have parents who drove them for years to go to the swimming pool and get trained to become a lifeguard. I was one of the lucky ones who had that tremendous social capital that my parents, because they were fortunate to be part of the school system and had some flexibility in the evenings, were able to invest in me. I was able to earn $11 an hour to help save for my future and reduce some of the burden that my parents would have exercised in helping me to relocate. That was lucky.

Many of our kids, particularly in rural Alberta, aren't so lucky. Many of our kids will work minimum wage jobs long beyond the time they're kids. I know many people in Kinuso who proudly work minimum wage jobs for most of their lives. They, I think, deserve to have the opportunity to take home a reasonable paycheque, pay their bills, and put food on their tables. Same with the riding I represent of Edmonton-Glenora. I know there are many people who, for a variety of reasons, end up working minimum wage jobs for a very long time, sometimes their entire lives, and they deserve to not have the nervousness of: what's going to happen to my income if there are further changes down the road?

I think the fact that the proposed changes come into effect right before Labour Day, taking away Labour Day pay from workers, is embarrassing. I think that taking away that pay for a statutory holiday about labour, about front-line workers, and implementing it on the first day prior to that holiday is something that I hope was maybe an oversight, or I hope is maybe something that will be considered. The implementation date, maybe the timing around that, could have been better.

I also think that for somebody to expect to have holiday pay because it's Christmas isn't totally unreasonable. I think a lot of people receive holiday pay on Christmas. Whether you were scheduled to work on that day or not, I don't think it's something that is unreasonable. We definitely looked at interjurisdictional comparisons and found that lots of other jurisdictions ensure that employers pay their employees for days like Christmas. I think that that is not unreasonable.

I think that there are a number of changes that we're considering in this legislation that don't reflect, probably, what most folks would say are their values when they sit down at night and talk about why they got into this work. I know that for many of you, and for sure for everyone in our caucus, when I say, "Why did you choose to take this time in your life to do this?" it's because they feel a sense of calling to service, calling to serve your community. Whether it was literally me harassing the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud to run or you feeling encouraged by your friends or family, I think that call to service and seeing a time to respond to it – we feel called to service because we want to find ways to make life better for the people that we represent in our communities. I think workers are a big part of that, and I think the youth worker piece, as my hon. colleague has highlighted so eloquently, is also an important piece for consideration.

I guess the few takeaways I want to leave are: really, we're going to make these changes right before Labour Day to take Labour Day pay away from workers? That's sort of one. Really, we don't want people to get paid on Christmas? Point number two. And do we really believe that somebody who is just under 18 is worth 15 per cent less than somebody who's just over 18? That, to me, is not a great message to be sending. I think that this could be a very good time for labour lawyers. I think that there will probably be a lot of work – actually, maybe that's the job creation strategy – for labour lawyers, constitutional lawyers, human rights lawyers because I can certainly see a lot of challenges, based on what the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and I have talked about, employment-based discrimination. The highlights that the member mentioned about Australia, I think, are worth noting.

I also happen to be related to somebody who lives in Ireland who just this year for the first time, at the age of 21, actually makes the real minimum wage working in a service industry where there are no tips. That, to me, is shocking. He's been living on his own for years and doing his best to save up for university, too. Is that really something that we aspire to get to? I sure hope not. I hope that we aspire to live in a society where everyone who puts in a full day's work can receive full pay, full benefits, and an opportunity to succeed in this province. I think many people in this room would say that fairness is something that they aspire to, and I would argue that these changes, a number of them that I've highlighted already, are particularly unfair.

Those are probably the main comments that I wanted to leave with us tonight. Definitely I believe that Bill 2 is an act to pick your pocket. I think it's an act to come after the little guy. I think it's an act to squeeze everyday Albertans, particularly young Albertans, to put more weight on the other side of the equation. I am concerned about that. Those are the questions and concerns I wanted to leave at this point. Happy to engage.

How was I on timing? Nine minutes-ish? Okay. Thank you very much, hon. members, and thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul . . .

Mr. Hanson: Under 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: . . . is rising on 29(2)(a), which is available because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora was the third speaker after the introduction.

Mr. Hanson: That was very good. Thank you very much. I know you're new to the job, so we'll give you some latitude.

Anyway, it's fairly early yet. We've been in here less than an hour, and I've heard a number of buzzwords. I think we can probably expect to hear quite a few of these same words: unexpected consequences, economic impact studies, and the like. I would suggest that possibly the unexpected consequences of the 2015 election were an NDP government. That's funny.

Ms Hoffman: Zing.

Mr. Hanson: Zing.

Ms Hoffman: I got you.

Mr. Hanson: Awesome.

I'd also like to point out that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods asked us if we had done an economic impact study when we talked about reducing the minimum wage from $15 down to $13 for students under 17. I would suggest that many times when we were debating her bills, we had asked if they had done an economic impact study to see what was going to happen by increasing the minimum wage to $15. We got silence and crickets from the government on that, so I think it's a little rich that they're asking us now to do an economic impact study for this. That's something that we've campaigned on for the last year and a half.

Also under 29(2)(a) I've got a question for the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, not knowing the full context of this young 17-year-old that they like to keep marching out. Apparently, the young lady is working a job to help support her family because her father got laid off, presumably under the NDP government. My question is: wouldn't we rather get her father back to work and have parents working a good-paying job rather than relying on their students so that their students can focus more on their studies?

Thank you.

The Speaker: I might just remind the member to direct your comments through the chair.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the 17-year-old that got trotted out was by your then leader, now Premier, on election night and on the campaign trail. The 16-year-old who spoke yesterday – or was it the day before? – at an event that we had is somebody who absolutely wants her parents to have full employment. She also deserves to be fairly compensated for the work that she does.

I don't think it is A or B. I don't think that my working in high school to save for my future was something that I did because my parents took a 5 per cent pay cut. They did because teachers were under the axe at that time, for sure, but it was something that I did because I had a work ethic and because I wanted to save for my future. Not every kid is as lucky to have that opportunity, but I think that anyone who works deserves to be paid fairly. That's the message that that 16-year-old, who very bravely stood up and talked about her experiences, was trying to say. If she were two years older doing the same job – why would there be grounds for her to be discriminated against based on the age she was or the fact that she was going to school instead of the fact that if she would have, under the proposed legislation, dropped out and worked rather than going to school, she'd be worth automatically $2 more an hour? This kind of discrimination based on situation or on age is discrimination.

You know, we certainly encourage anyone who wants to work to be able to have that choice and to be paid fairly for the work that they provide. Those are my values, and I'm happy to elaborate on those further, but anyone who feels like magically this person might not work if the other family situations changed, I think, is making a lot of assumptions. Maybe that is the case, but I think the fact that government is making assumptions about whether or not she is worth the same rate as one of her colleagues who may drop out or one of her colleagues who may be two years early is ill conceived.

I think that you would struggle to find somebody who'd put their hand up to say: pay me less money. I think it would probably be pretty hard to find those kinds of validators or somebody who said: "Yeah. I'm fine with being discriminated against based on my circumstances in my life."

I want to say again that I'm speaking from a place of privilege, not just the place of privilege I have today but the privilege that I had when I was a 17-year-old. Because of the situation that my family was in, I definitely had a lot more opportunities than some of my classmates even growing up in the same community with the same perceived sets of opportunities. There probably weren't a lot of my classmates – I can't think of many – whose parents would have been able to drive them to the swimming pool almost every single day because of their work or because of their income.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I see the Member for Edmonton-Decore rising [interjections]. Oh, Edmonton-McClung. I care very deeply about the riding of Edmonton-McClung, so my apologies to you. You have the call.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nellie accepts that apology as well.

I rise today to speak to Bill 2. I believe I'm in order to do so, and I hope to make a few points that people remember on this day, when we get together in the evening to speak about legislation that the government wants to put through very quickly but that we would like to have some sober second thought about here this evening.

Now, I know, Mr. Speaker, that when you made one of your opening statements after becoming elected as Speaker, you noted to the House the various different age groups that were represented. In the decade of the 60s there were, I think, eight members in this House who were 60 years of age or older, and I will admit – I may not look like it – that I am one of those individuals who is just barely into their 60s.

As such, sir, I've seen a few things, maybe a few more things than some of the other younger members in this House may have seen. One of the things I've seen is successive Conservative governments. For most of my life, until we had a breath of fresh air and intellectual freedom for the four years while we were governing, there were many governments that I felt stifled by, and the labour legislation that we lived under, that I worked under for those many decades was stifling as well.

I'm old enough to have actually had a conversation, a telephone conversation, with former Social Credit Premier Ernest Manning, when I did a telephone interview after discovering he was still receiving calls in the 1980s asking him about the plebiscite and debate on rural electrification that I was doing a paper on in university. I managed to speak to him for about 45 minutes on the phone. I'm old enough to remember that type of situation.

I'm old enough to remember Mr. Yurko, who was then the environment minister. I did a radio debate with Mr. Yurko on the eastern slopes of the Rockies, the debate between industrial development versus recreational use and the then in its infancy science of land reclamation. So I've seen a few things in my day.

One of the things that we've seen in terms of legislation from successive Conservative governments has been really a nonchange in its view towards labour and working people. Successive Conservative governments have shown that they don't care – they really don't care – about working people. That's not their agenda. They care about an economic system and the maintenance of that system and the people that are involved in that system. The working people in that system simply are an economic input to them.

They see no harm in cheating people out of their hard-earned income, and this is really what this bill is all about. It's cheating people – it's picking their pockets – out of their hard-earned income. I've been a victim of this over the years, and you can probably name if you've been a person in this province working for five or six decades, if you go through the successive jobs that you've had, how in many circumstances you've been cheated out of income that you have rightly earned.

Mr. McIver: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. Have a seat.

We'll hear the point of order from the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Point of Order Imputing Motives Language Creating Disorder

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) the hon. member is trying to avow a false motive to the government by saying that we want to cheat people out of money and furthermore is using language that is highly likely to cause disorder in the House.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that the comments by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung are entirely appropriate. He's discussing a bill around the wages for workers and is looking at different scenarios that come from changes that Bill 2 brings forward. The idea of (h), (i), and (j) around disorder certainly does not impinge on an individual's right to engage in debate on the subject matter, of which the Member for Edmonton-McClung is right on the money.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you for your interjections. I just might add that the use of the word "cheating" is in fact unparliamentary, or certainly has been deemed unparliamentary in certain circumstances in the past. As you know, the list of unparliamentary language mildly ebbs and flows, and no more language is being added to that list here in the province of Alberta. I would certainly caution members inside the Chamber with respect to using words like "cheating," "cheater," "cheated" as we go forward. At this point in time I'll send it out to the member as a cautionary tale and encourage you to refrain from using the word "cheated" for the rest of the evening.

Perhaps I may make some further comments with respect to this exact word in the future.

Debate Continued

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly take that advice and put it into use. I did feel that way. I felt exploited. If that's a word that might be accepted as parliamentary, let's use that word for now and say that I felt exploited by successive Conservative governments in their application of labour law that applied to me. For example, I worked at the old Marshall Wells warehouse, which was situated on land where the old bus depot used to be, which is now part of the Ice District, so successive redevelopments took place there. At the time when I worked at the Marshall Wells warehouse, one of my first jobs – I think that was in the summer of grade 11 – I made $2.25 an hour.

Now, that was a wage differential job. I was 16 years old at the time, and that was about 50 cents less than what workers over 18 years of age made at the time. I'll tell you what. I worked side by side with those individuals who were 18 years of age and older. Nobody who was under 16 worked any less than those people who were over 18. We felt exploited. I still feel that that was exploitative, but it had the sanction of the government.

Further on, later on, in my working life in another example of how I felt exploited by government legislation in this province, I worked as a DATS driver while going to university. The contract changed from one contractor to another, and overnight our wages went from 13 bucks an hour to nine bucks an hour. That was legal in this province. They got away with it.

I'll tell you what. I know how people felt just recently when they were told that their wages were going to go down from 15 bucks an hour to 13 bucks an hour because I've experienced that type of a rug being pulled out from underneath one's feet. That is not a good feeling. You feel exploited. You feel devalued. You feel dehumanized. You feel that the government cares nothing about you. That's how everybody in this province who is working at 15 bucks an hour, making minimum wage, is feeling about this government right now, and believe me, those people are going to be 18 years of age one of these days soon, and guess who they're going to vote for.

Mr. Speaker, other times I've felt exploited by government legislation. You know, jobs that I've had were in the oil field. I've spun my fair share of wrenches in the oil patch on service rigs. Back in the '80s jobs were plentiful in the oil patch, but the labour legislation surrounding those people who were working that patch really gave them no protection whatsoever. We were making seven bucks an hour straight time, working 17 hours a day on an oil rig right until almost dark and getting up and being on the rig again at 7 o'clock in the morning.

Seven bucks an hour straight time – I tried to explain to my co-workers – was exploitative. They were losing thousands of dollars, but they felt they had no choice. In fact, with no support from government legislation they didn't have any choice. If they wanted the job, they took the seven bucks an hour straight time without the benefit of the overtime that they were really, really rightfully entitled to. The government then, successive Conservative governments then, as now, were no ally to workers in this province of Alberta. As I said, Conservative governments do not care about people. They care about an economic system and maintaining that system.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, a $15 minimum wage is a minimum wage is a minimum wage. That's the threshold. That's the basic wage that – it takes even more than that, actually, in Edmonton and Calgary to survive. It's not a living wage in Edmonton and Calgary. It's closer to 17, 18 bucks an hour. But 15 bucks an hour is what we set as a threshold in this province as a minimum wage, never mind what your age was.

If a person, if an employer – and I've been an employer. I've never paid anybody less than minimum wage. It's shameful to think that people would want to employ somebody at a minimum wage just because they can. I think if people want to pay somebody more experienced more, they certainly can go ahead and do so, but they should start everybody at any age at the minimum wage, and that's $15 an hour, is what we set it at. That $15 minimum wage is regardless of what a person's age is, is what the threshold entry level should be, and if you want to go ahead and pay more, knock your socks off. Pay more. Pay more to an experienced worker, absolutely. But everybody is worth the minimum threshold wage.

Now, I don't pretend to try to give advice to this government, and far be it from me to tell them what to do. But I really don't think that Albertans are going to swallow for very long this unseen hand of Adam Smith and laissez-faire economics that they're attempting to regurgitate once again and spread over our province. That unseen hand just gave a smack across the face to every worker in this province who's under 18 years of age. It was a punch in the gut – a punch in the gut – by that unseen hand, that laissez-faire economic agenda that this government is so dogmatically married to, that's going to come up and slap them with the other fist four years from now. Mark my words.

I'm not telling you what to do. I'm saying, maybe: keep it up. Just keep it up. I'm sure that you'll keep talking about how you maybe had a million people vote for you. Well, guess what? We had over 600,000 people vote for us, and many more are going to do it over the next four years. So keep it up. I'd be happy to hear more of your laissez-faire Adam Smith dogma throughout the next four years because more and more people are going to realize that it doesn't hold water.

That's what I have to say for the moment. I could talk a bit more. I could maybe go ahead and talk about some of the things that – well, even back further. I mean, people wonder about the roots of people in this Legislature and will say: hey, you just elected a bunch of urbanites from Edmonton, and there's nobody to represent rural Alberta here. Well, tell you what. We've got roots in this province on this side of the House in rural Alberta in many ways. I'm one of those MLAs with rural roots as well.

My great-grandfather was a cattleman, a horseman, a farmer. He also was a school trustee and a county reeve. He passed those things on to my grandmother, and she ended up becoming the deputy mayor of her village in Thorhild. I know that she rode, in about 1916, her one-eyed pony in the Northlands – it wouldn't be Northlands at that point, but it would have been the Edmonton Exhibition. I'm not sure which. I've got a picture of that pony, actually. I've got a picture of her with a ribbon. She won a blue ribbon riding her one-eyed pony. That was 60 miles. It took them two days to get in from Thorhild to Edmonton on that one-eyed pony, and she won a second-place ribbon. She was really ticked that she didn't get first prize. But I've got pictures of her in her jodhpurs with a quirt in her hand. She loved that one-eyed pony. We heard that story many, many times over. You know, that talks to me about the roots that I've got.

I spent many, many summers in Thorhild – they were the postmasters there, my grandparents – and I've never missed a Thorhild Stampede from 1958 to 1978, for 20 years. Used to take the riggings off the animals after they were in the arena, take the bit shanks off and the saddles. That was my volunteer job. So I've done a few things in terms of my agricultural roots, and I know a little bit about working in small towns and how they operate and getting paid to work for other people or farmers who might need an afternoon's work done. I never felt exploited by them. I felt fairly paid. They looked at what an individual did, and they made sure that a person was properly compensated for it, whether it was for the county or whether it was for just a farmer on an afternoon job or for my grandfather, for that sake. They owned a few houses in town, and in his retirement he had me work for him in the summertime. We did lots of odd jobs for him. Tell you what: I never was paid a minimum wage or anything near a minimum wage by him.

It's not something that one would want to crow about, I think, if I were the government, paying somebody less or taking a shot at somebody's income. Like, you do the calculation. I did the math in my head today. Like, you're talking 2 bucks an hour. In a 40-hour week, that's 80 bucks, 320 bucks a month. How much is that a month? It's going to be, like, times 12, about 3,600, 4,000 bucks a year. That's a lot of dough for somebody who is, you know, 17, 18 years old. That's a differential that just might cause you to quit school and try to keep that job or lie about the fact that you are a student so you'd get the $15 an hour wage.

You take a deep, hard look at what those kinds of dollars mean to somebody of that age. It's not small potatoes. And this government just nonchalantly goes ahead and says: "You know what? We think that we're right in doing this. It's going to create jobs." I fail to catch that argument. I really, really don't understand and accept that argument in any way, shape, or form. To say that cutting somebody's wage by 2 bucks an hour is going to allow an employer the leeway to hire other people as a result, using those savings, is a false argument. It's not something that's borne out by the evidence, and the only people that I've had argue it in my office in my constituency are those that come and say that it's going to be harder for them to buy their fourth McDonald's franchise if the minimum wage goes up.

So it's disingenuous to argue that, and most people, I don't think, really get the drift that making a $2 cut to the minimum wage is going to have this trickle-down effect, this trickle-down Reaganomic effect. It's been totally discredited, yet this government is relying time and time again on Reaganomics, on trickle-down economics, to explain the benefits of their so-called economic changeover to opening up Alberta for business. Well, I'll tell you what. They're closing it down for workers. It may be open for business. It's open season on workers is what it is. That's what I would call it: Open Season on Workers legislation. That's the act. That's another name we can call it. You know, the Pick Your Pockets Act is a pretty good one. I think Open Season on Workers is a pretty good one myself. I think we might coin that one.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, and I see the Member for Edmonton-North West rising on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Eggen: Well, I just want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung for his breadth of analysis and coining an awesome new name for this bill. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Any other members?

Are there other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd actually just rise and request consent to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

Amendments to Standing Orders

11. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective December 4, 2018, be amended as follows:

1. . . . Standing Order 3 is amended

- (a) in suborder (1) by striking out "Subject to suborder (1.1)" and substituting "Subject to suborder (1.1) and (1.2),";
- (b) by adding the following after suborder (1.1):
(1.2) The Assembly shall not meet in the morning from 10 a.m. to noon on Tuesday, or

- 9:00 a.m. to noon on Wednesday or Thursday, if the Government House Leader, or a member of the Executive Council acting on the Government House Leader's behalf, notifies the Assembly that there shall be no morning sitting, notice having been given no later than the time of adjournment on the sitting day preceding the day on which the morning sitting will be cancelled.
- (c) by adding the following after suborder (5):
    - (5.1) In the period prior to, or following the commencement of, the first session of a Legislature, the Government House Leader may file a revised calendar with the Clerk, notwithstanding the deadline in suborder (5), following consultation with the Opposition House Leaders.
  - (d) in suborder (6) by adding "or (5.1)" after "unless varied by the calendar provided for under suborder (5)";
  - (e) by striking out suborder (7) and substituting the following:
    - (7) As soon as possible after January 15 each year, and following receipt of a calendar submitted under suborder (5.1), the Clerk shall publish the calendar provided for under suborder (5) or (5.1).
2. Standing Order 7 is amended
- (a) in suborder (1) by striking out "Introduction of Guests" and substituting "Introduction of School Groups";
  - (b) by striking out suborder (3) and substituting the following:
    - (3) When Introduction of School Groups is called, brief introductions may be made by the Speaker of groups of schoolchildren in the galleries.
  - (c) by adding the following after suborder (5):
    - (5.1) If any Member other than the mover rises to speak to a debatable motion to concur in a report of a committee on a Bill under Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees, debate on that motion shall be called under Orders of the Day
      - (a) when the Government thinks fit, in the case of a report on a Government Bill,
      - (b) on the next sitting day other than a Monday, in the case of a report on a private Bill, or
      - (c) on Monday afternoon under Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills other than Government Bills, in the case of a report on a public Bill other than a Government Bill.
3. Standing Order 8 is amended
- (a) by striking out suborder (1) and substituting the following:
    - 8(1) On Monday afternoon, after the daily routine, the order of business for consideration of the Assembly shall be as follows:

Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills Other than Government Bills
- Written Questions
 Motions for Return
 Public Bills and Orders other than Government Bills and Orders
 At 5 p.m.: Motions other than Government Motions
- (1.1) Notwithstanding suborder (1), if on a Monday afternoon prior to 5 p.m. no items of business other than Motions other than Government Motions remain on the Order Paper for consideration by the Assembly, Motions other than Government Motions shall be called and after the Assembly has decided all questions necessary to conclude debate on the motion, the Assembly shall proceed to consideration of any items of Government business provided for in suborder (2) unless unanimous consent is given to proceed to an additional Motion other than a Government Motion.
- (b) by adding the following after suborder (7)(a):
    - (a.1) Debate on a motion to concur in a report of a committee on a public Bill other than a Government Bill will conclude after 55 minutes of debate on the motion and 5 minutes for the mover to close debate, unless the motion is voted on sooner.
4. Standing Order 13 is amended by adding the following after suborder (5):
- (5.1) No Member shall disrupt the orderly conduct of the proceedings of the Assembly by loudly or repeatedly banging on a desk.
5. Standing Order 19(1) is amended
- (a) in clause (a) and (b) by striking out "at 5:15 p.m., the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings" and substituting "the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings 15 minutes prior to the time of adjournment for the afternoon sitting", and
  - (b) in clause (c) by striking out "at 5:15 p.m., unless the debate is previously concluded, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the motion" and substituting "unless the debate is previously concluded, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings 15 minutes prior to the time of adjournment for the afternoon sitting and immediately put every question necessary to dispose of the motion".
6. Standing Order 29(3) is amended by striking out "and motions for returns" and substituting "motions for returns and motions for concurrence in committee reports on public Bills other than Government Bills".
7. The following is added after Standing Order 31:
- Confidence of the Assembly in the Government
- 31.1 The confidence of the Assembly in the Government may be raised by means of a vote on
- (a) a motion explicitly worded to declare that the Assembly has, or has not, confidence in the Government,
  - (b) a motion by the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, "That the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the Government",

- (c) a motion for the passage of an Appropriation Bill as defined in Standing Order 64,
  - (d) a motion for an address in reply to the Lieutenant Governor's speech, or
  - (e) any other motion that the Government has expressly declared a question of confidence.
8. Standing Order 32 is struck out and the following is substituted:

Division

32(1) A division may be called for by 3 Members rising.

  - (2) When a division is called, the division bells shall be sounded at the beginning and for the last minute of a 15-minute interval.
  - (3) After the first division is called during any meeting of the Committee of the Whole or Committee of Supply, the interval between division bells on all subsequent divisions during that meeting shall be reduced to one minute, except in the case of the first division called during an evening sitting that commences in Committee of the Whole or Committee of Supply pursuant to Standing Order 4(4).
  - (4) When Members have been called in for a division, there shall be no further debate.
  - (5) Members are not compelled to vote and those who wish to abstain should remain in their seats when asked to rise and record their vote.
  - (6) The Clerk shall record the ayes and the noes and announce to the Speaker the number of votes cast for and against the motion.
  - (7) The ayes and noes shall be entered in the Votes and Proceedings.
  - (8) Abstentions shall not be entered in the Votes and Proceedings.
9. Standing Order 37 is amended
  - (a) by striking out suborders (1) and (2) and substituting the following:
    - (1) Five copies, and any additional copies required by suborder (2), must be tabled of a document presented by a Member to the Assembly for
    - (a) placement of one copy in the records of the Assembly, and
    - (b) distribution of
      - (i) 2 copies to the Legislature Library,
      - (ii) one copy to Hansard,
      - (iii) one copy to the Government, in the case of a document tabled by the Speaker, the Official Opposition, any other party or group in opposition or an independent Member, and
      - (iv) one copy to the Official Opposition, in the case of a document tabled by the Speaker, a Member of the Government caucus, any other party or group in opposition or an independent Member.
  - (2) In addition to the copies required under suborder (1), one additional copy must be tabled of
    - (a) responses to written questions and returns ordered by the Assembly for distribution to the Member who asked the question or moved the motion for return, and
    - (b) any document presented by a Member who is neither a Member of the Government caucus nor the Official Opposition, to allow for distribution to both the Government and the Official Opposition under suborder (1).
  - (b) by striking out suborder (3).
10. The following is added after Standing Order 46:

Debate interrupted by adjournment of the Assembly

46.1 When a motion to adjourn the Assembly is carried or the Assembly is adjourned for want of quorum, the matter under consideration prior to the adjournment shall be deemed to be adjourned to a future sitting day.
11. Standing Order 52(1)(c) is struck out and the following is substituted:
  - (c) Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills, consisting of 11 Members,
12. Standing Order 52.01(1) is amended by striking out clauses (a), (b) and (c) and substituting the following:
  - (a) Standing Committee on Families and Communities – mandate related to the areas of Children's Services, Community and Social Services, Education, Health, Justice and Solicitor General, Seniors and Housing and Service Alberta;
  - (b) Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future – mandate related to the areas of Advanced Education, Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women, Economic Development, Trade and Tourism, Labour and Immigration and Infrastructure;
  - (c) Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship – mandate related to the areas of Agriculture and Forestry, Energy, Environment and Parks, Indigenous Relations, Municipal Affairs, Transportation and Treasury Board and Finance.
13. The following is added after Standing Order 52.01:

Subcommittees

52.011(1) Unless otherwise ordered, a standing or special committee shall have the power to appoint one or more subcommittees, which shall report from time to time to the committee.

  - (2) Every subcommittee shall be appointed by motion of the committee specifying the terms of reference and the membership of the subcommittee.
  - (3) At its first meeting of a new Legislature, every Legislative Policy Committee and the Standing Committee on Public Accounts shall appoint a Subcommittee on Committee Business to meet from time to time at the call of the Chair and to report to the committee on the business of the committee.

14. Standing Order 52.04 is amended by renumbering Standing Order 52.04 as Standing Order 52.04(1) and by adding the following after suborder (1):
    - (2) Subject to Standing Order 59.01(11), suborder (1) does not prevent a Legislative Policy Committee from undertaking a hearing or inquiry during the same period of time that a matter stands referred to the committee by the Assembly if the hearing or inquiry does not interfere with the work of the committee on the matter referred to it.
  15. Standing Order 59.01 is amended by adding the following after suborder (11):
    - (12) Suborder (11) does not apply to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills.
  16. Standing Order 59.02(3) is struck out and the following is substituted:
    - (3) During consideration of interim, supplementary or main estimates, the following individuals may be seated at a committee or in the Assembly:
      - (a) officials of the Government, to assist the Minister whose estimates are under consideration;
      - (b) staff of the opposition, to assist Members who are participating in estimates consideration.
    - (4) During main estimates consideration, officials of the Government may respond to questions from a committee at the request of the Minister.
  17. Standing Order 64(1)(a) is amended by striking out subclause (ii).
  18. Standing Order 74.1 is amended
    - (a) by striking out the heading and substituting "Referral of Government Bill to a committee after first reading", and
    - (b) by striking out suborder (1)(b).
  19. The following is added after Standing Order 74.1:
Referral of public Bill other than Government Bill after first reading
 74.11(1) After a public Bill other than a Government Bill has been read a first time, the Bill stands referred to the Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills Committee.
 (2) The Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills Committee shall report back to the Assembly within 8 sitting days of the day on which the Bill was referred to the Committee.
  20. Standing Order 74.2(2) is struck out and the following is substituted:
    - (2) Upon the concurrence of a committee report that a Bill be proceeded with, the Bill shall be placed on the Order Paper for second reading and, in the case of a public Bill other than a Government Bill, the Bill shall, subject to the precedence assigned to Bills standing on the Order Paper, be taken up on the next available Monday following the day on which the Assembly concurred in the report.
  21. Standing Order 89 is amended by striking out "Standing Order 3" and substituting "Standing Order 3(5)".
  22. The following Standing Orders are amended by striking out "Private Bills Committee" and substituting "Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills Committee" wherever it occurs:
    - Standing Order 91(4)
    - Standing Order 96(2)
    - Standing Order 98(1) and (3)
    - Standing Order 100(1)
    - Standing Order 101
    - Standing Order 102
    - Standing Order 103
    - Standing Order 104
    - Standing Order 105(1)
    - Standing Order 106
  23. The headings preceding Standing Orders 98, 100 and 105 are amended by striking out "Private Bills Committee" and substituting "Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills Committee".
- B. And be it further resolved that upon passage of this motion any public bills other than government bills that stand on the Order Paper for second reading are deemed referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills in accordance with Standing Order 74.11(1) and notwithstanding Standing Order 74.11(2) the committee shall report back to the Assembly on these bills within 12 sitting days of the day this motion is passed.
- C. And be it further resolved that the amendments in this motion shall come into force on passage.
- The Speaker: I will call the Government House Leader in just a brief moment. I would like to provide a little bit of context to the debate which I expect that we're about to have. For the benefit of all members Government Motion 11 is available for you in the Order Paper. That Order Paper has been circulated widely, and the entirety of Government Motion 11 is located on the Order Paper. In an effort to have a smooth debate this evening and to not require the Government House Leader to read the motion into the record, I will allow him this evening and this evening only to refer to the motion as printed in the Order Paper.
- The hon. Government House Leader.
- Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the kindness of not having to read what is a very long motion. I think that's just probably because you didn't want to listen to me read it. I don't know if that's because you attempted to be kind or that's where it was, but I will take it as an act of kindness.
- Mr. Speaker, we have before us right now the motion. If I'm not reading it, a point of clarification maybe for the table officers. Do I still need to say something to make it . . .
- The Speaker: If I could make a recommendation that you move Government Motion 11 as printed in the Order Paper, I think that would suffice for the table.
- Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You've been extremely helpful today. As such, I will move Government Motion 11. Can I speak to it now? Thank you. Thank you very much. We move Government Motion 11. I do hope that all members of the Legislature will support it. It includes several standing order changes, which I know we're going to hear a lot about in the next little bit, but the biggest issues around that are to, one, restore some decorum. An increase of decorum inside the Legislature is something that we have attempted to do. This party now has the privilege of serving in government, but we attempted to do that while we were in opposition to try to raise the level of decorum in this place. We continue to call on the opposition to match us with that and to be able to focus on civil debate and work from there.

But there's some other stuff in here, including making sure that we respect the rights of members to have free votes and their right to be able to vote on behalf of their constituents freely. We'll be able to establish what is and what is not a confidence motion.

Further than that, Mr. Speaker, one that I'm very excited about is to have a private members' bills committee be able to work on private members' business, something that, when we were in opposition, we asked for for a very long time, to be able to make sure that we could work on legislation as private members and in the Assembly private members could work on that legislation to be able to help us get more stuff passed during private members' days.

There's lots of content within these standing orders. All of them will make the process of what we have to do in this House easier. I certainly hope that we have the support of all members of the House and that we can get these passed as soon possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning is rising on debate.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just before I proceed with the debate, I would like unanimous consent of the House to proceed to one-minute bells in regard to this Government Motion 11.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a request has been asked to revert to one-minute bells for the duration of the evening. Or on Government Motion 11?

Ms Sweet: Government Motion 11.

The Speaker: On Government Motion 11.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Sorry. Point of clarification, Mr. Speaker. Are we moving to one-minute bells on one motion or . . .

The Speaker: Just a minute. I'm just clarifying the question.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Then we will ensure that the appropriate question is asked.

For clarity's sake, hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, would you please describe for me what you're asking unanimous consent for?

Ms Sweet: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. I'm requesting unanimous consent for one-minute bells for the duration of debate on Government Motion 11.

8:40

The Speaker: To be clear, for clarification, you're asking for unanimous consent for one-minute bells, Government Motion 11, this evening only, and all divisions that may occur on Government Motion 11.

Ms Sweet: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has the call.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members of the House for granting unanimous consent.

I would like to now request that we divide the vote on part A, sections 2, 4, 8, and 10, and then vote on the remaining part of the motion as we continue with debate this evening. Would you like me to give my rationale? I'm requesting division of the vote on part A, sections 2, 4, 8, and 10, specifically in part 2, in response to both your comments, Mr. Speaker, as well as the hon. Government House Leader and the fact that this is such a huge Government Motion 11, so big, in fact, that we didn't read it into the record because it would take so long. Because of that, I would like to be able to divide the sections up for a more clear and robust debate.

I am requesting that we look at dividing the different sections up also just because there are so many new members in this House as well. I think, in fairness to all the private members that are in this Chamber, that they should have a good understanding of what standing orders we're actually discussing, what those standing orders mean, how it will impact them as private members, and that this is an opportunity for us to break it down and to use it actually as a teaching moment for all of us in this House to be able to learn the different operating components of the standing orders. I would request that we please divide part A, sections 2, 4, 8, and 10.

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. member for your comments.

What I would like to do is provide some remarks with respect to whether or not this request is a reasonable request. For the record, for the benefit of all members, this isn't a decision of the Assembly; this is a decision that the Speaker would make. As well, this is not a debatable motion as the member is making a request of the chair.

Having said that, if the Government House Leader would like to provide a little bit of comments on this, I'm happy to hear them, but at the end of the day, this will be a ruling of the chair, and we will proceed from there. If you would like to provide comment, I'm happy to hear it. If not, I'm prepared to rule.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it is the decision of the chair, and I respect that. I would submit to you, though, Mr. Speaker, that this will delay the process. Lots of these standing orders are connected, and I do not see the need to separate them. They are a package deal that we brought towards the House, and we would like to talk about them all together if we could.

The Speaker: Thank you to the Government House Leader for your interjections.

For clarity's sake, I'm happy to rule on this particular request. Let me be clear. No matter what my ruling is – and I'm prepared to make it – we will debate the government motion in its entirety, and each member will have the opportunity to speak to the motion. At that time members could speak to the motion in its entirety, not sections 2, 4, 8, and 10 individually, even though it's possible that we may in fact vote individually should we arrive at a vote this evening or any other time during debate.

It is past practice of the Assembly that members from time to time would make a request of the chair, particularly in the case of a motion that is complex or deals with a wide variety of issues in a particular motion. I would refer all members of the Assembly to a decision that Speaker Kowalski made on November 21, 2001, which can be found, as you know, on page 1193 of Hansard for that date. In that decision Speaker Kowalski reviewed the relevant parliamentary authorities and permitted requests to that vote on the lengthy government motion that also proposed amendments to a government motion that was proposed to the standing order. On that day it proceeded in three groups.

Accordingly, I will permit the vote on Government Motion 11 to be divided. For clarity for all members we will again continue to debate Government Motion 11 in its entirety together. There will be no additional opportunity to speak specifically and individually to the clauses 2, 4, 8, and 10, but I will allow a vote to take place on each clause, as requested by the deputy House leader from the Official Opposition.

With that said, there are 17 minutes and 46 seconds remaining in debate for the deputy House leader's comments should she wish to continue on Government Motion 11.

Are there others who wish to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm getting faster at jumping up. I'm going to begin by moving an amendment, and I'd be happy to give the requisite number of copies to the pages and then read it while it's being circulated. Member Hoffman to move that Government Motion 11 be amended as follows. Part A is amended by striking out:

that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective December 4, 2018, be amended as follows:

and substituting:

that the following proposed amendments to the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing for review and that the Committee submit its report to the Assembly...

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you could just briefly perhaps take a pause as we distribute the copies. As well, I would love to see a copy of the amendment prior to you continuing debate, so if you just give us about 15 seconds. Grab your seat.

Thank you for your patience, hon. member. Edmonton-Glenora, you have the call.

Ms Hoffman: Did you want me to start reading the amendment from the beginning?

The Speaker: No, just proceed.

Ms Hoffman: That's what I thought.

The last words are:

... on or before December 1, 2019

And then parts B and C are struck out.

The rationale here is that I think this is the exact purpose of this committee, that members were just named to last week, I believe, to all committees, including the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing. The committee in its title itself is in charge of reviewing the standing orders. So rather than taking that responsibility away from the committee members, many of whom are government caucus members – of course, I'm confident that it's a majority – and referring it here to this Assembly tonight, I think it's totally fitting that the committee that has this as its actual job description actually have an opportunity to do this job.

I'm reasonable, I would say, in saying that the date I gave was December 1 or earlier if the committee finishes its work early. I'm not trying to stop the standing orders from ever being updated. I think that that would be unreasonable. It wouldn't behoove this House to have that be the outcome. It's important that the committee have an opportunity to do this work, that private members have an opportunity to engage with it, and that we all have an opportunity to consider its impact.

One example. I love getting to know members of this Chamber. I loved getting to know them when I was outside of this House as well. I think one of the best ways that we can get a little glimpse into who each of us are is at the beginning of the Routine, when we have the time, where we do introductions. I remember when the Government House Leader introduced his wife and twins. They sat right about where our guests are sitting tonight. I remember when other members have had opportunities. For example, this week some of the people who have done introductions include the Member for Calgary-Klein, who earlier today introduced long-time family friends. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat introduced school trustee Cathy Hogg, who's also the president of the Public School Boards' Association. It's nice to have an opportunity to bring in some folks and to be able to draw on that connection and help us get to know each other and some of the reasons why we're here doing this job.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon, last week I think it was, introduced a school group – or maybe it was Monday – something that will now be the responsibility of the Speaker rather than individual MLAs. And as you heard me say this morning, when I talk to students, I say: "You're my boss, my boss specifically. I work for you. I'm your employee." And having that opportunity to show the students who are here visiting from your ridings that you're working for them I think is something that is useful for private members and government members alike to be able to do.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

I feel that I would like to hear an introduction – I mentioned the Government House Leader's twins. I understand that the Member for West Yellowhead has 16-week-old twins. I'd like to have the chance for his family to be presented in this House and for him to be able to introduce them on the record. I think that that would be something nice for us to enjoy and to help frame some of the debate, potentially, for that day. Or the Member for Grande Prairie this morning in her member's statement had the opportunity to talk about her child just graduating from high school. I think that it's not unreasonable. I think we can set realistic time limits on how long they should be.

When I was Minister of Health, I brought in health stakeholders regularly so I could have 20 seconds to talk about the work that they'd done in the community, whether it was a paramedic who rose to the scene to save a life or whether it was a researcher at the university who was engaged in academic research to help push a cure for a specific type of cancer forward. I think it's very reasonable that this committee have an opportunity to consider some of these changes and what some of the impacts might be, and I think it's fair. I think that the members for Sherwood Park, Red Deer-South, Camrose, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain, Drumheller-Stettler, Lethbridge-East, Leduc-Beaumont, Brooks-Medicine Hat – and I could go on – should have an opportunity to introduce some of the people that are important to them in this House. I'd love to get to know the hon. member whose parents said, you know: leave the campsite better than the way you found it. My parents did that, too. I think it'd be nice for you to have an opportunity to be able to introduce your family in this place.

I don't think it's a big question to ask. I think having an opportunity to debate this at the committee whose mandate is to review the standing orders is reasonable. Again, by putting in the date on or before December 1, 2019: I think it's a reasonable timeline. It doesn't mean it needs to take the whole time before now and December 1, but I think it says to the committee: "This is part of your job. You have an opportunity to engage in this work and update the standing orders so that you reflect the desires of all members of this Assembly."

I feel that when some members have had an opportunity to practice the existing standing orders – and the majority, or quite close to the majority on the government side anyway, haven't had an opportunity to practice them. It's not totally a fair opportunity to engage with what rules work and what rules don't work when you haven't actually had an opportunity to practice the existing rules but you're being asked to change them on day 4 of using that set rule book.

I think it's very reasonable to update the rules. I think it's very reasonable to do it through a transparent process in the Assembly, ideally in the committee. I think it would benefit all of us to have an opportunity to actually discuss it at the committee whose mandate it is to do that work, and I also think it would be beneficial for us to have a few more weeks to use the existing rules and see how best they meet or don't meet our needs of our Assembly. Again, this is our rule book that we are setting, and to have this decision imposed on many people just four days into the formal sitting of the Legislature I think doesn't set them up for success, necessarily.

Honestly, that little piece of having an opportunity to introduce people in this House is an Alberta tradition that we have had for over a hundred years. And I get that it's not a tradition in all Legislative Assemblies. I get that it's not a tradition in all parliamentary Chambers, but it is an Alberta tradition, and we've had it for over a hundred years. If it's the committee's will after having an opportunity to reflect on it to throw that tradition out, so be it.

But I think that asking members to make that decision today, asking members to make that decision when they've been using this rule book for less than a week, when many members are first-time MLAs: I don't think it gives them the time to make the decision that they feel is in the best interest for them and their constituents, specifically the school groups one. I have great respect for the Speaker and the role of the Speaker, but the local MLA is the employee of those students, and I think it's important for them to have an opportunity.

Make a rule. Say 20 seconds. Say 10 seconds. I don't care. I think it's important for the local MLA to stand up and introduce the local school groups. And I think every member of this House who's had an opportunity to engage in that has probably really enjoyed that opportunity and probably sees some of those students and their parents in the local community when they go home and they say: "You know what? You introduced my kid in the Leg. That was really nice." That won't be something that gets to be done anymore if we pass this.

If we make the decision that we want to pass it, so be it. But let's have the opportunity to sit down with all members who are on the committee – I had the committee membership a minute ago. Thank you so much, hon. colleague from Buffalo. I think it's important for the members of that committee.

Again, the membership is a majority of government members, and that's fine. The chair is – oh. It's all first names, so I can't say those anyway. The chair is the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. I think it's very reasonable that we have an opportunity for the committee to do its work, and this is the exact mandate of the committee, to do this type of thing. So I think it's fair and reasonable. Again, I'm trying to be fair and reasonable by saying: on or before December 1. I get that we don't want to drag this out, but I don't think that we need to rush it either.

That's my argument for bringing forward this motion to refer – and I hope that all members will have an opportunity to give it due consideration – and to hear a little bit with those introductions, potentially, a little bit about what inspires them to serve and the people that they serve. That, to me, is something that is an important tradition. It's something that's been in place in Alberta for over a hundred years, and I'd hate for us to make a rush decision to throw it out without taking a little bit of time to give due consideration to: can we tweak it to make it more effective, can we tweak it to make it more efficient, or do we actually need to throw out the more than hundred years of tradition we have in this place?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: All right. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, I've been informed by counsel, so are there any questions for the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for bringing forward the amendment. I'll talk briefly about her concerns in regard to Introduction of Guests in a moment. But specifically to this amendment, what this amendment would do is it would delay the process until December 1, 2019. It would push it off. The reality is that we have things within this standing order package that we have promised Albertans that we would bring to this Chamber if we were elected, the platform commitments. I know that they're standing orders, so it's not like it's legislation. I understand that there's a difference. But the reality is that we've made a commitment, and that's one thing about this government: we're going to honour this commitment. My colleagues, I hope, will agree with me. As such, I can't support this amendment.

Now specifically for the concerns that the hon. member raised in regard to Introduction of Guests, I would agree. I have enjoyed introducing guests in this place from time to time. But the reality is that the process was starting to be abused, I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, probably by both sides. The reality was that it was being dragged on, upwards of 20 minutes or longer a day, sometimes where we were having to extend the Routine of this place, a place whose time is valuable and expensive, quite frankly, to run our Legislature, to make sure that we're able to do that. The Premier did the math for me while I was listening to your speech, hon. member, and at 16 weeks of sitting on four days a week and 20 minutes of intros, that's 1,300 minutes, which is 2,100 hours.

Mr. Kenney: Twenty-one hours.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Twenty-one hours, yeah. Not 2,100 hours. That would be a lot of introductions.

That is 650 members' statements at two minutes. I think that all hon. members in this place could agree on how valuable a member's statement is for a private member of the Legislature to be able to give on behalf of their constituents. You would be able to still utilize members' statements to introduce a guest. So in the case, to use an example, of me introducing my wife and twins, who I was very happy to introduce inside this Chamber, you would still be able to do that with a member's statement. This will free up more members' statements. We'll be able to add members' statements to our time, and we'll be able to still introduce guests through the Speaker. [interjection] Yes, we will. That's what the standing order will do. The Speaker will handle the Introduction of Guests. We'll be able to add more members' statements and be able to have more private members' time. That's your specific concern that you used as your example, hon. member.

But, again, to your amendment, it's not satisfactory. It would delay this process until almost Christmas. The reality is that when we make a promise, we keep a promise. And that's just not acceptable for us. I see you shaking your head again. The Speaker will be allowed to introduce guests.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: I just want to reclarify. The amendment actually says: on or before December 1. So saying that this would delay this until at least December 1 is a completely inaccurate reading of what the actual amendment says. What I am proposing is that it go no longer than December 1. This committee could potentially have an opportunity to debate and discuss the standing orders. Maybe it would take them a month. Maybe it would take them two months. Maybe they'd be done in three weeks. But asking members, the majority of whom are new members in government caucus, to make this decision on day 4 I don't think sets us up for success.

What it says is "on or before December 1." So if the committee itself decided that the committee wanted to refer this back to the Chamber with their recommendations before the end of this sitting, so be it. If they chose to do it on the first day of the fall sitting, so be it. If they chose to do it any time between the time they get the referral to please look at this and have their mandate to actually review this in committee, have the Member for Drayton Valley chair this, which has already been determined by this Assembly – this is part of their mandate. Give them that opportunity.

To say that this would delay it until at least December 1 isn't a reflection of what the actual referral says. Please, I just wanted to clarify that it is to say no longer than December 1. This is so that they have an opportunity to do their work that we're putting in a term limit of December 1. They could do it faster if they so chose. I think it's important that private members have an opportunity to engage with the standing orders as they stand to consider the amendments that are being proposed as a committee with more than four days, actually following the current rule book. Particularly for new members, whether they're private or government members – I don't think it matters – I think that this is the mandate of the committee and that they deserve to have some time to look at this.

I was trying to be considerate of what was being proposed. The few pieces that are in the amendment: certainly, the majority of these weren't proposed in the election platform, that's for sure, but there are some that were. I think it's fair that they have some time at this committee to review and make a decision, having actually lived with the standing orders as they are for a few days.

If the recommendation is "Let's keep introductions to 10 minutes, and let's make sure that no individual introduction is more than 30 seconds," that might be a reasonable way to find a good compromise so that people can actually have an opportunity to introduce their constituents, their stakeholders, and people who are important to this Assembly. We are borrowing this Assembly from the people we represent. They have an opportunity to be recognized in this Chamber and in Hansard in my opinion, and I'd like to have this committee consider that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: I recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: In response under 29(2)(a) to the hon. member: I appreciate the question. I will actually acknowledge, after rereading it, that it is correct that a committee could send it back earlier.

I would still submit to the House that, again, the core big things within this standing order package are platform commitments. To send it to committee to in any way delay the process is not acceptable to us. We've made commitments, particularly around raising the decorum inside this Assembly as well as standing up for free votes for private members, and I'm looking forward to be able to get that through as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wishing to speak to amendment A1? I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: I was seeking to speak under 29(2)(a) if there is time remaining on the matter.

The Acting Speaker: There is time left. Okay. Under 29(2)(a). Sorry.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you. I just wanted to seek clarification from the hon. Government House Leader. He indicated that by reducing the number of introductions of guests, the number of members' statements would be increased. However, I don't see in Motion 11 any provision to change Standing Order 7(4), which currently places a limit of up to six members' statements. So I'm looking to seek clarification as to whether or not the Government House Leader is actually proposing an amendment to Standing Order 7(4) to actually increase the number of members' statements.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I don't know how much time I actually have on the clock to respond to that. We have already reached out to your House leader for that conversation. If we are changing introductions, our intention is to do that, and we would do that in negotiation with your House leader on how many those should be. So our intention is to do that, but, no, it doesn't happen instantaneously.

Ms Hoffman: Do it today.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Or bring an amendment today if you like. We've already reached out.

Ms Hoffman: Or deal with it in the committee that I'm referring it to.

The Acting Speaker: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah.

The Acting Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)? There are 55 seconds left.

Ms Hoffman: Sure.

The Acting Speaker: I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. What I was saying without my microphone on, and maybe it was hard for Hansard to pick up, is that we certainly have the opportunity to pass the referral and consider that in the actual committee whose job it is to determine what the standing orders are. So that sounds like a win-win. Certainly, both parties are represented on the committee itself, and that would be a way for them to have their voices heard.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: I'll recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member has brought her first amendment to the House today in her second time in the Legislature, which is exciting. I would encourage her, if she's interested in amending these standing orders, to continue through the process we have. We have the greatest committee with everybody available to be able to vote on it right now. So feel free to bring forward an amendment. I've made that offer for weeks, and I look forward to seeing some reasonable amendments from the opposition. We will pass them if they're reasonable.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora for bringing up this amendment. I think it is eminently reasonable and for a number of reasons that I will just outline here now, the first of which being that it's an interesting argument I heard from the Government House Leader around a number of these standing orders being part of their platform commitment. But not all of them are, right? Some of them are but not all of them. I think it's incumbent, again, as a teaching moment for all of the members in the House – there are many changes in here that had no mention at all in the UCP election platform. I think as a long-serving member of this Chamber that these are standing orders that have both utility and usefulness and excellent outreach opportunities and educative opportunities not just for the members here in the House but for people in the general population of the province.

The introduction section was very well outlined by my colleague here today, but there are lots of other changes in here that just kind of appear like a gopher popping out in the spring on the prairie – right? – with no indication that they were going to be there any time before.

I've asked. I've talked to a number of MLAs, and they were surprised or not understanding or having knowledge about the breadth of these standing order changes. I am the first one to get up and say, you know, that we need to make sure that the standing orders are an organic document, that we don't just have them sitting static for all time. It's good to make changes, and I think that it's good to make efficiencies, utilizing the time that we have here to debate important business of the day.

You know, I always look to make sure that there's a sense of unity in any motions or bills that we bring forward and that one part makes sense and emphasizes and supports the other parts of any given motion or bill. In this case I notice in one section of this motion that there is a movement to take private bills and move them to committees in an expeditious sort of way. The hon. member's amendment that she's put forward here this evening does that, too. So in keeping with the idea that you move private members' bills to a committee and have substantive discussion using a committee with private members, apply that same logic to this amendment that we have right here now. By golly, it's the same thing. It really is. We already have a committee, we already have a chair of the committee, and I'm sure they're all raring to go to ensure that the structure of our standing orders is best serving the needs of the House.

I'm always suspicious, as you all should be sometimes, too, in a constructively critical way, when any government brings forward motions or bills that have lots of bits and pieces that go in every which direction, and that's exactly what I see in this motion, where it's trying to cover off all sorts of things that may or may not allow for the smooth functioning of this Chamber. They're all bulked together in a sort of way that makes it very difficult to disentangle them.

So I speak in favour of this amendment. I think it's a very, very good amendment, right? I found it quite inspirational. As I say, it stimulated my thoughts around ensuring the unity of logic and purpose for this Motion 11 to make sure that we are using common sense every step of the way.

So I will support this amendment, and I will encourage all members to do so as well.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the thoughts from the Member for Edmonton-North West as he was discussing the amendment that's in front of us. In particular, I appreciated what he noted, that the Government House Leader had made the claim several times that this should be done quickly, that we should move forward with this, that we should not delay this because this was part of the UCP platform. But as the Member for Edmonton-North West noted and as I am looking at that document now, I see only one portion of all of these multiple changes to the standing orders that was indeed included in that document, that being to "amend the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly to raise the bar of civility and decorum, banning 'desk thumping' in the Legislative Assembly." That is the sum and total that I can find within that document of the commitment of this party on taking government to make changes to the standing orders.

Now, I bring that up, Mr. Speaker, because that seems to be a point of great importance to members on that side of the House and indeed to the government leader and indeed to many members who were previously in this Legislature in opposition. They feel that to try to move something when you are government that you had not indicated to the people of Alberta you were going to do is to practise deceit, is to not tell the truth to Albertans, is to hide something from Albertans. Indeed, if this was their intent before the election, according to their own logic and indeed their own repeated insistence, this is something that they should have brought forward at that time. They should have been much clearer in their intent. If they did not do so and now intend to try to move these forward, they in fact have practised deceit with Albertans. They have not told them the truth. They have misrepresented their intentions in doing this.

Now, that said, I don't personally subscribe to that narrow a definition. I recognize that government members have entertained it many times and like to use it as a club to beat their opponents, but the fact is that I don't personally agree with that. That said, I think it's perfectly reasonable if they wish to make such extensive changes to the way that we operate in this House and indeed to the opportunities for private members to practise their work in this House. I think the Member for Edmonton-Glenora said it quite well in noting that members who are new in this place, with only four days of experience, most of them never having had the opportunity to make an introduction in this House themselves, many of them not even, I'm sure, understanding or being aware of the majority of what is contained in those standing orders, are being asked to simply vote for this package. Now, perhaps they've been given some sort of briefing as a caucus. I would hope that would be the case. I think that would be the least courtesy that a government would offer to its caucus members to ensure that they were well informed and fully understanding the decisions that they were being asked to make.

That said, given all of what I've mentioned, I think this is a reasonable amendment, and I appreciate the points that the Member for Edmonton-North West has brought forward in that regard. I'm looking forward, I think, to having the opportunity to maybe discuss a bit more fully some of these specific items that are within this as we move forward. But for the time being what I would say is that this sort of an omnibus motion, as the Member for Edmonton-North West also noted, is where we are pulling bits and pieces from all over the place, again, none of which had been previously mentioned by the government as changes that they wished to make but now are all of a sudden appearing and coming up at the last minute without the opportunity for the majority of members – of course, the majority of members in this place are new this session – to have had the chance to learn about and to understand and to know what's happening. To package all of them together in a way that is somewhat unclear and indeed to not even have had really that fulsome a discussion of this in the press briefings or other things that the government has offered, focusing instead on just one or two things, talking a little bit about the desk thumping and the introductions but not going into the meat of a lot of these other details, it will have a significant impact on the opportunities members have in this House.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.

Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and discuss this. I want to fully back this amendment presented by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. Of course, it's really imperative in our democracy that we make informed decisions. I agree with the Member for Edmonton-City Centre. I at least hope that this government has provided some kind of briefing to the private members on the government side. You know, I don't see any confirmation. I don't see any heads nodding over there. Okay. I see one. Okay. There was a briefing. Okay. Thank goodness. Thank goodness. Thank goodness.

I do want to stress, you know, that I've been in this House for four years so far, and I've got another four, and hopefully God will grant me another four after that. But I can tell you that up to this moment I don't know all the standing orders of this Legislative Assembly. I don't know them all yet. So asking members who've only been here for four days to make these large, sweeping changes to the standing orders in one swoop through this omnibus type of bill to me just seems completely out of step with any kind of genuine, authentic approach to our democracy. I'm really going to ask and beg the members on the other side, especially the private members on the other side, to really give this a second thought. Please consider this amendment. Give us the opportunity to take this to committee.

I happened to be named to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing. It's a committee that I've sat on for four years, actually. I'm glad that I'm continuing on this committee. For those of you who may not know, this committee rarely meets, right? I'm glad that we're going to have an opportunity to actually meet and discuss something, something as important as the standing orders of this Legislature, because that's exactly what this committee is supposed to do.

Members, I think that it's imperative that we take this opportunity to really delve into this more deeply. Although the members on the other side, private members on the other side, may have received a briefing from their government, we have not received such a briefing. So I would really ask, especially the private members on the other side, to give us this opportunity. Let's keep working here on addressing some of these issues.

You know, this whole thing with the banning of floor crossing: I think that's something that needs to be delved into a little bit more deeply. As people grow, people change. People are allowed to change their mind. I mean, isn't that what our democracy should be all about?

Ms Hoffman: Don't get any ideas. He's not going anywhere.

Member Loyola: Yeah. I'm not going anywhere. I enjoy being a New Democratic Party member.

But it is important that people have freedom, and I use this word specifically because the members on the other side like to use this word "freedom" a lot: you can't take my freedom. From my own observation, I would say that, you know, we understand that the United Conservative Party, the keyword being "united," is made up entirely of members who were under a different party banner at one time – right? – and I think it's a bit ironic that this specific standing order would be introduced.

It feels like the Premier may be worried about some of the members in his own party breaking ranks, but – but – shouldn't they have the freedom to do so if they so desire? Shouldn't they? It's the freedom of every individual to decide which party banner they want to represent, right? I mean, it's just a small observation and may have some truth to it; it may not. I don't know. I'm just throwing it out there, right?

I will say, though, like the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, that we've got 24 members on this side of the House who truly do stand united. Indeed, I am not going anywhere. But, with that, I think it's very important that members in this House, especially those that have only been here for four days – I know that you were MLAs-elect for a while. I don't assume that during your time as an MLA-elect you took the standing orders home and read them from cover to cover, because I know I didn't do that. We've only been here for a short time. I even consider the time I've been here, four years, a short time compared to some of the other members in this House.

I think we owe it to ourselves to send this to committee, send it specifically to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing because that is their purpose for being. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to stand and speak a little further to these proposals that have been brought forward here by the governing party. Now, the Premier, the leader of the United Conservative Party, has certainly over the years not been shy about his love of our colonial history. He knows it well. He demonstrates it on many occasions. He is a big fan of Canada's colonial history, colonial government, the monarchy. So it should be perhaps no surprise that on arriving back here in Alberta, his first step is to try, in his view, to civilize the natives, that he feels he needs to come in and bring in changes to how things have been done culturally – now, when I say that, I do refer, of course, to native people of many backgrounds who've experienced that in colonial history in many situations – that he feels the need to come in and immediately change the rules, to rearrange the furniture to suit his own liking.

Fair enough. To some extent, I suppose, that's his prerogative, at least to bring it forward, but it's our opportunity to take the chance to stand and debate this here in this place and talk about the sorts of changes he is proposing to make. Now, I can understand, you know, the Premier's discomfort or dislike of the practice of desk thumping. I think we'll have some robust discussion about the history of that and where it comes from and that sort of thing. Certainly, it is a practice that I personally find some enjoyment in. I prefer it over hand clapping. I'm all about the bass, about that bass, no treble. Hey, I recognize that that's a simple and small change: we clap; we desk thump. That really, ultimately, does not change much about my opportunity as a private member in this place to express myself, to exercise, to represent my constituents. Changes, however, like taking away introductions: that's a much more significant piece.

Now, as the Government House Leader noted earlier, absolutely there was some abuse of that practice, and to be clear, there was abuse on both sides. There were opportunities. For those of you who were not present during the 29th Legislature, Mr. Speaker, to those individuals, through you, of course: the Official Opposition, some of whom, including yourself, of course, now sit on the government side, made extensive use of introductions, flooded the gallery with people to make a political point.

We as government at the time accepted that and recognized that that was one of the opportunities for private members in this House to make their voices heard, to represent their constituents, to bring those individuals in here to their Legislature, to be part of this process, to be recognized in this House, to have their names recorded on the eternal record of this province. I took the opportunity to introduce my own parents, to bring them here and introduce them in this place as a sign of my respect for them and appreciation for all that they'd given me that allowed me to be where I am today.

Again, I recognize that there was abuse at times, but, you know, Mr. Speaker, to just simply remove that privilege, that opportunity, not only from the members in this place but from all Albertans: that's a pretty significant step. To take that with no discussion, with no prior indication – this was not something that was put forward before the public before they cast a ballot – to make that sweeping change, I don't think it's unreasonable to think that it should go to a committee and have the opportunity to discuss that first.

As one of the members who rose before me pointed out, it would be a simple thing to place some restrictions: to allot a specific amount of time for introductions; perhaps limit the number of introductions per member, per caucus; limit the time of an introduction. Those are all possibilities here. But, instead, what we have is a sweeping, omnibus motion that just simply erases that practice altogether along with many others and other changes that have seen no discussion, no debate beyond what we're able to have at this point in time here and, again, were not in any way presented to Albertans before they cast a vote. Again, I remind government members that they are the ones who have insisted that that is of great importance, that before you introduce any such significant change in this House, you should have presented that directly to Albertans to get their opinion on that first, not simply given a broad indication of the general area you are going to work in and then make decisions based on information later.

Some of the other steps here, things like giving members the opportunity to abstain from a vote: Mr. Speaker, is that not something that government members feel they should have discussed with their constituents?

An Hon. Member: Not in the platform.

Mr. Shepherd: It certainly was not in the UCP platform. Does that mean that that platform lied to Albertans, that the United Conservative Party of Alberta lied to Albertans about their intent when they arrived in this place? I would note that I am not attributing that to any particular member in this Assembly.

Mr. Ellis: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Point of order recognized.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Ellis: Yeah, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(h), (i), (j): "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." I mean, he indicated that the United Conservative Party may have lied. I think that is completely disrespectful. It is something that is completely false and, I think, unbecoming of this Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: Any response?

Mr. Shepherd: No problem. I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I will withdraw that comment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much. You have seven minutes remaining.

9:30

Debate Continued

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

But it is not something that these members put before their constituents. They did not provide the full truth in what their intentions were in regard to making changes to what they say is decorum in this place. Now, I fail to see, Mr. Speaker, what being accountable to your constituents and actually taking a stand on each issue that you are voted and indeed paid to be in this place on behalf of your constituents to make that decision, where that comes in with decorum. To be clear, the definition of decorum is "behaviour in keeping with good taste and propriety."

Mr. Speaker, I think it is in good taste for each of us to do the job that we were sent here to do. I think it is in good taste for us to have the guts to stand up and cast our vote when we are asked by our constituents. And I think it would certainly be in good taste, if members in this place feel that they should not be required to do so, that they have that discussion with their constituents before they attempt to give themselves that out.

Now, I recognize that some members in this place perhaps felt uncomfortable and perhaps heard quite a bit from their constituents when they chose not to be present for some particular votes in this Legislature. I can understand that that embarrassment, that uncomfortableness may therefore lead them to wanting to provide themselves with an out, but, again, that's not a discussion that was had with Albertans.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think such a significant change, at the very least, should have the opportunity to go before a committee so that Albertans would have the chance to consider this, perhaps reach out to their members, reach out to their MLAs, the folks that represent them, provide their thoughts and their opinions so that they could then go to the committee, and the committee could discuss if this was an appropriate measure.

The ban on floor crossing, Madam Speaker, indeed is another. You know, it being brought forward with the argument that – well, the actual amendment itself says that if a member should have a change of conscience and should they wish to leave the party under which they were elected, they should have to sit as an independent and go back and talk to their constituents and run again if they wish to join a different party. Yet there is no feeling that we should actually sit down and talk to our constituents to see how they feel before we make this change in the standing orders, to see if they feel that this is the restriction that they wish to have placed on their member, on their MLA, despite the fact that we are all elected not as party members; we are elected as individual private members of this Legislature.

We have a party affiliation, but I am not here to represent the Alberta NDP; I am here to represent the constituents of Edmonton-City Centre. Should I feel that I am unable to do so as a member of the Alberta NDP, then I think it is incumbent on me to take that step to address that, indeed in discussion with my constituents. But let me be clear. You know, 66 per cent of my constituents who cast a vote were very clear that they wished me to remain with this party on this side of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'll just remind you that we're speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Shepherd: Yes. Absolutely. These are my reasons, Madam Speaker, why I feel that it is important that this go to committee. Again, that is not something that was presented to Albertans in the UCP platform. That is not something that was indicated to anyone until we found ourselves here in this House, and then it was suddenly brought forward in this omnibus motion, which takes some time to sit down and sort through and decode and find out exactly what it is that members of government are proposing that we change. So I think it is reasonable that we would take this to committee.

Indeed, talking about banning floor crossing, that's something that members of government, when they were in opposition, twice brought forward in a private member's bill. Indeed, now one of the proposals within these changes to the standing orders is that private members' bills should all go to committee, yet this item, which was part of a private member's bill, is being brought forward in this motion. So it seems reasonable to me that something that was substantive enough to require a private member's bill should also receive discussion here when it's included amongst these motions and should be sent to committee.

I think it's only reasonable, Madam Speaker, that if these sorts of sweeping changes to the culture and the operation of this place, indeed if it is so necessary to change the rules of this game before the majority of players have even had the chance to see how they operate, I think it's reasonable that it should be taken and looked at by a committee. Then members of this House would have the opportunity to sit down and discuss this at a bit of greater length. Members would have the opportunity to consider the effects this will actually have on their opportunity to operate as private members, as independent members, in this House.

Indeed, one of the other changes to the standing orders is to give members more independence in their votes. Now, my best guess is that we're not going to see a lot of independence in government members' votes on these motions. So far I'm not seeing too many government members that are eager to rise and speak on these or bring forward their thoughts on this, in particular new members. Certainly, the Government House Leader has had quite a bit to say. But I suppose debate is still early, so there may be the opportunity yet where those members will be allowed the opportunity to speak and give their thoughts and bring forward how they feel on this, having been briefed and given the opportunity to understand the complexity and the enormity of these changes that are being made to the standing orders, to the rules of this Assembly, to the way in which we operate as a House.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the amendment? No?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: All right.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any speakers to the motion? I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I recognize that this will be my last opportunity to speak to the motion in general. I think I laid out a good part of my considerations speaking to the amendment, but I would like to take a moment to put down a few more words on this. [laughter] It's interesting to me and apparently amusing to others. It's good that we have some levity in this House. It isn't all serious business.

But, you know, these motions are. Again, these are proposing some significant shifts and changes in the culture and operation of this Legislature, and as I noted earlier, our new Premier is a great believer in tradition. Indeed, we've already seen a shift in some of the tenor and the way that we approach things in this place since the new government has come in, and that's as it should be. It's the opportunity of every incoming government to add its own taste and flavour to how they approach things, and it's up to Albertans, I suppose, to interpret how they feel about what's being represented.

We have seen a marked shift in the type of opening meditation we have each day when we come to this Chamber, more traditional, perhaps, in some senses but, you know, perhaps less inclusive so far. I'm hoping that we may see that change, but that will be up to, I suppose, yourself and the Speaker and others to consider. We've seen how resistant many conservatives were to changing some of the words in O Canada from "all our sons" to "in all of us."

Mr. McIver: All thy sons.

Mr. Shepherd: All thy sons. Thank you.

Mr. McIver: You're welcome.

Mr. Shepherd: It's been a while since I sang it that way.

Obviously, there is a great respect for tradition when it is comfortable and when it is, I guess, in favour of the folks that have control. Yet what we see here now is suddenly wanting to change things in ways to make things more comfortable, perhaps, for those who exercise control but less opportunity, less privilege, less power in the hands of private members in this place, both government and opposition.

Indeed, as one of my colleagues observed, I have to wonder what the Premier fears from his caucus in needing to make some of these changes. Who is he afraid that they would introduce in this place?

What is he afraid is going to happen if they have the opportunity to choose according to their conscience how they will represent their constituents? What concerns does he have about what will be revealed about his members if they don't have the opportunity to abstain from representing their constituents in casting a vote? I can't say that it speaks very well of what he thinks about some of his own members that he feels the need to exercise that level of control.

I think about the floor-crossing bit, you know. With that logic, that we are elected to represent a party and we should not be allowed to change that party, then essentially what the Premier seems to me to be saying about his members is that none of them were elected on their own merits. Each of them owes their place in this Assembly to the fact that they ran with him and his party. They're not here because of anything they did. Their party could have run anybody on that ballot, apparently, and they would have won. Their own thoughts, their own efforts, their own values, their own consciences: they mean nothing because the people were voting for the party, not the person, not the individual, not for someone that they felt represented their values, only a figurehead, a stand-in, a human cut-out for the party banner. That, to me, Madam Speaker, is a very low opinion of the members of his caucus, but that is what this change to the standing orders says to me.

I think that what we need to have in this House is more opportunities for individuals like the former MLA Mr. Rick Fraser, whose constituency I don't recall specifically off the top of my head...

An Hon. Member: Calgary-South East.

Mr. Shepherd: Calgary-South East.

... who felt that in representing his son who is a member of the LGBTQ community, he was unable to remain as a member of the United Conservative Party and chose therefore to sit as an independent and then chose to join the Alberta Party and continued to represent his constituents well. I respect a man of that conscience and that decision that he made. Then, indeed, when the election came, his voters had the opportunity to make their decision on that, and admittedly he did not return to this place. But needing to amend the standing orders to prevent an individual who is experiencing that kind of crisis of conscience from being able to express it in the way that they see fit, again, is a level of control that saddens me. Again, it makes me wonder what it is that the Premier is afraid of from the members of his caucus.

In considering these standing orders, I was reminded of a novel by one of my favourite writers, a man named John Steinbeck, a book called The Moon is Down. It's about an eastern European country during World War II that is under occupation. In that book it talks about the difficulties for individuals who are acting as soldiers, who are being asked to carry out duties that they themselves may find uncomfortable, and it also talks about how an occupied people will struggle and will push back. No matter how much control you try to exercise over them, an occupied people will always find a way to break free. You can try to take away the tools they have, you can try to take away the weapons, you can try to close them in and hem them in with a bunch of rules, but in the end a free man will always be free.

A quote from that book, one of the occupied people speaking to one of the soldiers:

You're not a man any more. You are a soldier. Your comfort is of no importance... your life isn't of much importance... Most of [your] orders will be unpleasant, but that's not your business... They should have trained you for this, and not for flower-strewn streets. They should have built your soul with truth, not led along with...

and then there is a word which is the opposite of truth and which is considered unparliamentary in this Assembly.

Another good quote from that book:

Free men cannot start a war, but once it is started, they can fight on in defeat. Herd men, followers of a leader, cannot do that, and so it is always the herd men who win battles and the free men who win wars.

I think that's as much as I need to say on this, Madam Speaker.

With that, I would like to move an amendment. I believe it's proper for me to keep a copy and send the original to Madam Speaker. I'll wait for you to receive that before I read the motion into the record.

May I proceed, Madam Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: This will be referred to as amendment A2.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that Government Motion 11 be amended in part A, in section 8, by striking out the proposed Standing Order 32(5) and (8), those being the portions referring to abstention from voting.

I believe I've said all I need to say on that particular point. I believe it's incumbent on us as members to stand in this place and cast our vote as expected by our constituents, to stand for the principles we believe in, the values that our constituents expect us to uphold. That has been the practice in this place. I see no need to change it; therefore, I bring forward this amendment, that we remove that section of these changes to the standing orders.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any speakers to the – speaking to the amendment?

Member Ceci: Standing Order 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, when I was listening to – a number of the references in the readings you were making I have not read myself, but I appreciate hearing them in this Chamber because I think they are directly related to what we are talking about in terms of decision-making and following orders and those sorts of things.

I was very interested in what you were saying with regard to, I guess, almost some internal motivation that you are supposing the Premier might have for the actions that he is, through the House leader, bringing forward here today with regard to the motion before us. Getting inside of that motivation, I'd just like to get some more views from you with regard to why that person might see it necessary to do these things that are before us today. Words like "fear" and "concern" and "level of control" were all things you talked about, and I'd appreciate you having the opportunity to explain more of that because I think it was quite incisive, quite interesting, and talked to motivation that perhaps some of us may not be considering as actions for this tonight.

Thank you.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for those thoughts in that question. Now, of course, I do want to be careful here. There are some very strict rules about imputing motives in this House, but I think there's much to think about in this in the general sense.

I will be honest with you, Madam Speaker. These are questions I have struggled with myself as a member in this Assembly. You know, people often ask me: "What is the job like? Is it hard to be an MLA?" One of the things I say to them is, "Well, you've got to wear a lot of hats," as I'm sure you can relate. I have my constituency office and my work that I do as the nonpartisan MLA for Edmonton-City Centre, but at the same time, representing my constituents in this House and debating legislation and representing their voices, I vote. I also sit here as a member of a caucus. I have been a member of a government caucus, and I now sit as a member of an opposition caucus.

Yes, Madam Speaker, at times I have struggled with which way I should go when I am being asked to make a particular decision by my caucus versus how I may feel about that issue myself personally versus how I may feel my constituents are wanting me to represent them. This isn't an easy job in that respect, and I recognize that within caucuses and within this structure there could be a lot of variations on how that happens.

Indeed, I can also recognize that when you are new in this place, as I was back in June of 2015, the feeling, the excitement of being elected as a government member carries a lot of weight. I was willing to give a lot of trust and faith to our leader, the then Premier, to the colleagues that I was sitting with. Thankfully, looking back and considering over the years with everything that I've learned and all the other decisions I've made and now having moved from one side of this House to the other, I can say that I do not regret the trust that I had placed at that time. I was not asked to make decisions that I would now feel compromised my own personal integrity or indeed the integrity of this place.

One of the challenges that I have always personally grappled with, Madam Speaker, is where to draw some of these lines in how I engage with folks on the other side from me – when I was in government, with yourself and the other members that were in opposition; and now that I sit in opposition, with members of government – because we recognize there are some . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other speakers to the amendment? I'll recognize a member from the government, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Yeah. To the amendment. Madam Speaker, I would just like to maybe lend some clarity to some of the understanding here with regard to this amendment, and I think some of the motivation for it is, maybe, clearly misunderstood. Some of the suggestions of why the Premier might want to suggest this, I think, need just a little bit of context and maybe some history. For those of us who came out of the Wildrose legacy party, many will remember that there was a real issue of what I'll call mass floor crossing, and I think it's only fair to say that the motivation for some of these amendments is really, more than anything else, about respecting voters and about not betraying voters. In our ridings after those floor crossings, voters . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you. We're on Government Motion 11. I believe you're referring to Government Motion 10 in regard to changing caucuses.

Mr. Orr: Well, I'm referring to the motivation for the amendment, but I'll take your . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I hesitate to interrupt, but I'd ask that you, under standing orders, explain that ruling. The government, or the opposition – sorry; old habits die hard, I'm sure, for you, too, Madam Speaker. They have spent the last two hours referring to motions such as the floor-crossing issue in their speeches.

The hon. member is specifically addressing the comments that were brought up in debate by the opposition in response to them in regard to their amendment that they have moved. That is a position that they presented to this Chamber in defence of their amendment asking for support, and the hon. member is responding to that. I would suggest to you, Madam Speaker – and, again, I will respect your ruling, of course – that it is the opposition's choice to make that as the parameters for their amendment, and he's responding to it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader. To be very clear, I was not giving a ruling, just simply some advice, you know, to remember the topic of conversation that we're on, for all members of this House as we proceed with this debate.

Hon. member, I would encourage you to continue with your conversation. Just try and be on topic.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I will be brief. I cannot support the amendment, specifically because of what I'm saying here. The reality is that there is an urgent need to respect the choice and the vote of voters in our province. When voters are betrayed, people are deeply, deeply offended. This isn't about saying that members can't exercise their conscience. In fact, members can exercise their conscience by sitting independently and going back to the voters and asking for a mandate.

[The Speaker in the chair]

But when the voters have given a mandate in a vote and then a member completely ignores that, turns away from it, tramples upon it, and disrespects the voters, then I think there is a serious issue of democracy, and for that very reason I cannot support the amendment being put forward. It's about respect for the voters and honouring the vote that they have given to a member.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Under 29(2)(a), any other members?

Seeing none, are there other members wishing to speak to A2, the amendment? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning rising.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Having heard the motion by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to adjourn debate on amendment A2, all those in favour of the motion, please say aye. [interjection] I stand corrected. It's my third day.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Good thing you've got a lawyer up there.

The Speaker: I bring him everywhere I go.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has moved adjournment of debate on Government Motion 11.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

Ms Sweet moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment May 28]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to get a chance to speak to the referral amendment for Bill 1. Yesterday I had an opportunity to speak to my concerns with regard to the First Nations communities losing the climate leadership plan because of the effect it would have on the environment, which they deeply depend upon, the world that they wish to pass on to their children. Of course, other concerns are about the loss of financial income in the communities, the ability to reduce utility bills, and the ability to provide safe and affordable food in their communities as well as provide jobs. So there are a variety of reasons why I've been very concerned about the introduction of Bill 1 on behalf of the indigenous communities in this province.

I'm very disappointed that the government side of the House has not found the concerns of the indigenous community to be worth taking into consideration, making the somewhat cynical comment that simply the fact that they had one election on this as part of their platform was good enough to then say: if you didn't vote for us, if you don't have the same concerns as us, then you don't really matter. It's something that I find very disturbing in a democracy.

As a result, this brings me to the referral amendment and the suggestion that rather than simply proceeding with this bill, we should actually take the time to have conversations with people who will be directly affected by this bill. In this particular case, although there are very many other people that will be affected by loss of the rebates, for example, the loss of opportunity to get support in doing renewables on their own homes such as furnaces and refrigerators and, of course, solar panels – all of those people will be affected by it.

I'm going to take this moment to speak particularly about the indigenous community. The reason why I would like to see a referral is the fact that the indigenous community has not been consulted on this. I'd like to take a moment to speak to members opposite in this House about the fact that there is a special and particular relationship with the indigenous people in this province, and that special relationship is often referred to as a nation-to-nation relationship.

It isn't about simply going out to the community and getting the vote of the majority. It's about honouring the system of discussion and relationship that is intrinsic to the indigenous community and telling the indigenous community that we honour them by honouring their way of decision-making and communication with those of us who are not part of the indigenous community. That's what we're asking for. In a nation-to-nation relationship it means that you don't simply go out and talk to a bunch of folks and get a sense of what's going on. You speak to the leadership that is duly authorized by the indigenous community, and you do that as the Crown, the lesser Crown in this case, directly to the leadership, the elected, representative leadership in the indigenous community. Failing to do that will be recognized in the indigenous community as a failure in upholding the dignity of their electoral and relational system.

Now, under the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples it is very clear that the indigenous community expects to have free, prior, informed consent on major issues that affect their treaty rights. In this case there has clearly been no consultation whatsoever: zero, none, nil. I don't know how members opposite can say that in any way they respect the indigenous community when they actually defy the very articles of the United Nations declaration, which was written largely here in the province of Alberta by individuals such as Treaty 6 Grand Chief Willie Littlechild, who said that it is ultimately important that things not happen to members of the indigenous community without their ability to speak to those issues and to have their input reflected in the outcome of those decisions, neither of which has occurred in this case. There has been no conversation. There has been no consultation.

Secondly, the outcome does not in any way reflect the needs of the indigenous community to protect the environment, to protect their children, to create economic development, to provide food security, and to provide jobs for their members. As such, I think it is extremely important that we take the time to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future so that a proper consultation can occur, so that we can together as a House sit with the members of the indigenous community and ask them: “How will this affect you? What kind of changes would make it better for you? How can we ensure that you are not more affected by this decision to withdraw goods and services from Albertans than other members of the province of Alberta?” These are the kinds of things that would demonstrate that we care what they are thinking, that we care what they have to say, and, more importantly, that we are willing to respond to the things that they tell us.

I'm very discouraged that the government is starting this term in office, first of all, by neglecting to acknowledge which treaty land they are on when they are making speeches and so on and, secondly, by neglecting the voice of indigenous people in making decisions which will obviously adversely affect them in extreme ways. Not a good way to start a relationship. It's two slaps. We've only been in the House for four days, and that's two slaps to the indigenous community already. I don't know how you enter into a relationship by pummeling the person you want to have a relationship with before you actually enter into that relationship. I'm very concerned. I'm inviting the members opposite to think seriously about what the outcome will be if they continue to proceed in this manner.

I would ask now that all the members opposite in the House seriously consider their duty, not only their duty as representatives of their constituencies but their duties to the First Peoples of this province, to make sure that they do not start the relationship off with them in this extremely negative and reprehensible manner. As a result, I'm asking that we refer this bill to the appropriate committee so that the conversations that need to happen, both in committee and between now and the time that the committee meets, can occur, and I would be happy to facilitate those kinds of conversations if that would help the government. As a result, we can have a better bill when it comes into the House again.

I think that we have seen already reaction from the indigenous community about the way they have been treated by this government, and we have only been in the House for four days. Just today in Alberta Native News there was an article from Grand Chief Willie Littlechild, the writer of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, indicating that the refusal to provide treaty land acknowledgments is an insult and is disrespectful to the indigenous community. Now I'll have to go back to him and say: Grand Chief, not only are they doing that, but they are going to take away from you the very program which your community has so deeply embraced over the last four years such that every single First Nation and every single Métis settlement has received benefit from that program, all of which will be lost.

Beyond the nations and the Métis settlements, the Métis Nation of Alberta and the Canadian friendship centre societies, that are scattered throughout this province, 21 of them now in the province of Alberta, have all been able to take advantage of this program and will not be able to do that. If you're the member for Hinton, for example, then you are acting against the friendship centre, which has taken the initiative to put solar panels up on their building. If you're from Athabasca, they also have put solar panels on their building. If you're from Slave Lake, they put solar panels on their building. If you're from Medicine Hat, they put solar panels on their building. All of the friendship centres in the urban areas, where more than 50 per cent of indigenous people live, have been able to take advantage of this program, and now it is gone.

So I must just summarize, with my discouragement, that this is the attitude that the government is taking toward the indigenous community, that their moves so far have been described by the indigenous community as disrespectful, and their intents are now in question in the indigenous community. I'm sorry that we've arrived at this point. Under the previous government we worked very hard to try to achieve a new relationship, a relationship of reconciliation, and I can no longer say that this government is in a place of reconciliation with the indigenous community, and it saddens me. I wish that the government would take seriously this referral motion at this time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Questions and comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? I see that the hon. Minister of Transportation has risen.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on the unfortunate remarks of my colleague across the way. You would think that the member, before he went on a rant such as he just did, would take a couple of minutes for personal reflection, but clearly the few days since he and his government have been sent away is not long enough for him to have any personal reflection. I'm particularly astounded by the fact that he's indicating that a piece of our platform, that was out in the public realm, is somehow an insult to our indigenous brothers and sisters. Nothing could be further from the truth.

In the realm of personal reflection I would ask the hon. member to consider four years ago when they – and, of course, we're talking about us removing the carbon tax which we campaigned on for months. Our indigenous brothers and sisters are well aware that we were elected on that platform. Surely, it was a topic of discussion for months. But four years ago the government he was part of brought in that carbon tax on just about everything that indigenous people as well as all other Albertans buy, without any warning whatsoever. They did not disclose it, did not tell anybody. Yet they rolled in on almost the first day of the Legislature and imposed those extra costs on the clothing people buy, on the food people buy, the expenses.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing that astounds me about what I just heard is that you would think, if you just believed everything the hon. member had said, that there is no disagreement amongst any of our indigenous brothers and sisters. Well, I can assure you that they are all freethinking and intelligent people. They don't always agree with the government of Alberta. They don't always agree with each other. They don't necessarily all agree with their next-door neighbour, just like the rest of us. But you would think the hon. member was speaking for every single one of them if you actually heard what he just said. He's speaking about a large number of Albertans as if they only had one voice and he was the mouth of that voice.

That was about as disrespectful as anything that I have ever heard in my life. That was about as disrespectful as anything, to assume that every single indigenous person in Alberta speaks through the mouth of that hon. member. That's the way that he just addressed this Legislature. I can't think of anything less respectful towards our indigenous brothers and sisters. I can assure the hon. member that this government will be treating them with respect and with dignity and will be talking to them and finding out what's important to them.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that we never ever come to the point of arrogance where someone from this side of the House thinks that they can individually speak for every single indigenous person in Alberta. Imagine – imagine – the arrogance. Imagine the unbelievable amount of chutzpah to believe that he can speak for a whole group of indigenous nations and Métis people and First Nations and every other part of the indigenous community as if he knew every single one of their minds. That's the way he just addressed this Legislative Assembly.

I would hope that before this day ends, the hon. member would apologize to them. I'm sure that there are some people in the indigenous community that might even agree with what the hon. member said, but his absolute arrogance to say that he was speaking on behalf of every single one of them is unbelievable, shameful, sad. I would hope for better from any member of this House, particularly one that was a minister in that portfolio, that ought to know better. I'm sure that he got around to talk to many members of the community during his time, as will the current Minister of Indigenous Relations. Indeed, if he did, I'm sure that he didn't hear the same thing every day from every single member of the community because they are individual people with their own opinions, but you would have never known it if you had listened to the speech that that hon. member just delivered in this Legislature.

The Speaker: I see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is rising on 29(2)(a), but unfortunately there is no time remaining.

Hon. members, with your indulgence, I would like to ask for unanimous consent of the House to revert very, very briefly to introductions.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I'd like to thank the House for that because in the public gallery this evening there is a very close personal friend of the Speaker who has travelled from Australia to visit Alberta and our fair land. He is a long-standing family friend. When I was just a young lad of 17, 18 years old, I resided in the home of this individual's parents, before he was a twinkle in their eye. It is a great pleasure of mine to be able to introduce to the Assembly Nathan McMaster. You may notice that we bear one thing in similarity, and that is, of course, our first name. Obviously, I would never refer to my first name because the use of names in the Chamber would be wildly inappropriate. I invite you to rise and receive the welcome of the Alberta Legislature.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

The Speaker: I see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung is rising on the referral motion debate.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do in fact rise to speak again this evening, this time on the referral amendment, a notice of an amendment to An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, and we're looking to refer this bill for consideration to Alberta's Economic Future Committee.

In that committee consideration can be made and strong questions should be asked, I believe, by all members of that committee, one of whom is me, to determine what the thinking is behind the government's decision to go ahead and buck the trend of pricing carbon globally. There's a movement globally towards the pricing of carbon, and it's a movement that is basically unstoppable. Why in this province we are bucking that trend and deciding that we're going to oppose the global movement towards pricing carbon is something that I think should be clearly discussed, and we can do so in the forum of Alberta's Economic Future, which is very well equipped with its members to get to the bottom of the government's thinking on this position of bucking the trend towards pricing carbon and towards their whole thinking about global warming.

Now, I know that the federal government, in the absence of the climate change program that we brought in, in the absence of a plan to price carbon in Alberta, will impose a federal carbon tax, and we will lose, of course, control over the revenues that are generated and control over the whole program. Given my critic portfolio of Agriculture and Forestry, I can think of no portfolio that is going to be more affected than this one, than the one I am the critic for, by climate change.

So it's very, very important to me that we get to the bottom of why this government is looking to move away from what is globally seen to be a necessity – that is, moving towards a transition away from fossil fuel over time but doing so with a plan in hand – rather than what seems to be the case with this government, of them simply just axing what we had in place, to transition away from fossil fuel by putting a price on carbon, which is the way the movement globally is happening, the result of which is unknown because the lack of a plan will lead to potential chaos.

We don't know for sure what the government's intentions are with respect to transitioning away from fossil fuels. This is the direction, the way of the world, and I really see that the way to deal with it is to refer this amendment to Alberta's Economic Future Committee so it can be properly dealt with.

Agriculture and forestry are going to be very, very affected by climate change. We see it already. We see good portions of Alberta on fire at the moment, right now, and we're like a tinderbox, as was described by the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry just a couple of days ago, saying that the whole province is ready to light up with the right conditions. That's not something that we faced regularly over the years. It's something we now are under a great threat of on an annual basis, and now we see an evacuation of 5,000 people that is still under way in this province.

Part of the reason for this increase in natural disasters such as forest fires, the cause that has been pointed to, is that it is caused by global warming. The average mean global temperature of the province has risen, and as a result we have weather patterns that have changed, which has caused forest fires to be more prevalent because of the dryness of the bush. This ends up being a dire consequence for the forestry industry and for the people living in communities surrounded by forest. Agriculture as well has seen some significant sways in moisture patterns, which have caused some pretty bad drought conditions in many areas across the prairies, this province not excluded.

I'm thinking that the transition away from fossil fuels is something that Alberta should show leadership in. It's something that we were showing leadership in through the climate leadership plan, where we priced carbon and followed the global movement.

In fact, we led the global movement in a way that used the climate leadership plan and the fund that was created by the pricing of carbon to transition away from fossil fuels in a measured and balanced way that cushioned the blow for those who were reliant upon fossil fuels and made sure that people were aware that if they were going to join in the leadership role that we showed as a province to transition away from fossil fuels, that they were going to be compensated for any damages that they suffered and that there were also opportunities to be taken advantage of in terms of employment if they were to participate in taking advantage of the fund that we offered through the climate leadership plan to subsidize the transition to more green energy, to put solar panels on community buildings, to reinsulate your home, to be more efficient with energy, all of these things subsidized by the climate leadership plan fund that we created by pricing carbon.

The major question of this generation globally, I think, is: how are we going to deal with the transition away from fossil fuels and do so in an orderly fashion, in a way that doesn't simply leave it to fate to determine what happens? Governments have to show leadership, and we have to make sure that the plan that we put in place is something that recognizes the reality of the global mean average temperature rising and the consequences that we're increasingly facing annually, whether it be by flood, whether it be by forest fire, or infestation of our forests. This transition away from fossil fuels is something that no government can deny. We have to actually show leadership and put a program in place to put a price on carbon, and this debate should be taken seriously. You shouldn't arbitrarily allow any government to go ahead and just simply stop a program to put a price on carbon.

I think the Alberta Economic Future Committee will be a very effective medium within which to have a clear debate to completely try to understand the government's thinking as to why they decided to buck the trend and simply go it alone. We basically go back in time to a shoot, shovel, and shut-up philosophy with respect to climate change. I think I've said what I needed to say on that.

I think we need to put in place measures where we're able to adapt to climate change, whether we be in agriculture, in forestry, or other industries. We do that by being able to pay for it through putting a price on carbon, which in fact does change people's behaviour. You know, I really am confounded by the economic geniuses on the other side of this House who will constantly tell us that putting a price on something – economics 101 – causes people to use less of it. I mean, if something costs more, they'll use less of it.

You know, they try to say this about the minimum wage bill. Minimum wage will go up; you're going to hire fewer people. Something costs more; you're going to use less of it. Well, tell you what. Use the same principle for carbon. Put a price on carbon because it does modify behaviour. If you want to apply your economics 101, go ahead. Do that. But let's find out, really, what your thinking is. Why does the theory of economics not apply to the pricing on carbon? I really would like to hear that explanation made in the committee on Alberta's Economic Future should we pass this amendment to refer the bill to that body, and I really encourage all members to do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Members, on Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any questions and comments? I see the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to 29(2)(a), I know that the former Minister of Indigenous Relations can't get up and address this thing, but I was really interested in all he had to say, and I thought it was quite unfair to hear some of the comments from the other side with regard to – and, you know, we don't take those to heart.

Mr. Speaker, I do have a few questions for the last person who was speaking with regard to 29(2)(a), and I was interested not only in your understanding of the issues around the economics around carbon pricing but, more particularly, you know, you had a breadth of understanding of all the different organizations . . .

The Speaker: If I might. Just for the benefit of Hansard, it makes it a little bit difficult for them if you're not speaking relatively close in the direction of the Speaker so that the microphones can pick up your voice and Hansard can do the very important work that they do.

Member Ceci: Thank you. I was reading Hansard earlier today, and they do great work and it is very clear. I want to facilitate that as well, Mr. Speaker.

What I would like the hon. member to talk about a little bit is – he was talking about all the different countries, the different media that is reporting that carbon pricing is the way to go. He was talking about recent media. I think in the Globe and Mail there was an editorial supporting carbon pricing and the Edmonton Journal supporting carbon pricing and saying that the actions of the government in not doing that, in essentially refusing to go with the flow of where this is going in the world is taking a step back. It will of course mean that we have less revenue coming in to the treasury for the very important programs that have been identified and are working, as the former Minister of Indigenous Relations talked about earlier, all across this province with regard to the – I can't remember the exact number of First Nations in Alberta.

Mr. Feehan: Forty-eight.

Member Ceci: Forty-eight. I know that Métis settlements are eight. Those groups, nations, and settlements have taken to carbon pricing using the proceeds of that pricing to ensure that they can do some long-awaited improvements to get off diesel and other kinds of things that cause great pollution.

I guess to the member back here who was talking: you know, can you just give me more of a sense of why you think the world is going in this direction and to not go in this direction, really, is taking Alberta back?

Mr. Dach: The Member for Edmonton-McClung back here who was just speaking has really listened to the global commentary. The word is out, and it's been a long time coming. If we don't take action on it, we're in big trouble, not just – I don't know – Alberta farmers or Alberta foresters, people in industries who create a huge number of jobs in this province, but the planet in general.

Now, it's the responsibility of government to show leadership where they are faced with emergent crises. I think it's fair to say that the global warming that we face as a people, as a society, as a species is something that we have to face and treat seriously. That means that we end up looking at what the cause of it is and agree that the tipping point for the average rise in the mean global temperature is caused by human activity. Where we are able to, we must do what we can to mitigate our contribution to that, and we have to do it wherever we happen to be. In our own jurisdiction here in Alberta we have an obligation to every one of our citizens, our future citizens, and our planet, our little blue planet – it's the only one we've got – to make sure that the global climate change work is done here today.

The Speaker: Are there others who wish to comment on referral amendment REF1?

[Motion on amendment REF1 lost]

The Speaker: Are there other members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 1? I see the Member for Edmonton-McClung rising. I'm just confirming with the table that you have yet to speak to the bill.

Please proceed.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to speak to second reading of Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, something which seems to me to be a pretty regressive piece of legislation right on the face of it. This government takes specific glee in turning back the clock. They seem to think that we were on the wrong track, but I think that in the fullness of time, which will probably be quicker than they happen to think, they'll find that they're on the wrong side of history in making this act a reality, repealing the carbon tax, inviting the federal government to replace it, as they have indicated they would, with their own carbon tax, and then, as has been projected by the Premier, engaging in what will almost certainly be a failed application to the Supreme Court to oppose the federal right to place a federal carbon tax in Alberta once we have repealed the one that we put in place ourselves as a government, when we formed the government four years ago.

I know that it was a centerpiece of our government's program to put a price on carbon. This price on carbon, as I have mentioned in previous comments, is a necessity in order to enable the population to determine that they will change certain behaviours. I mean, economics 101, as I have mentioned earlier, tells us that if you raise a price on a commodity or raise a price on a service, it will end up being used less because of the fact that its demand will go down.

There are certain rules in economics that you'll note that the members on the government side will cherry-pick and suggest that it's up to the free market to determine how indeed the public should behave, yet when it comes to pricing carbon, somehow those economic realities are out the window. Economics doesn't apply to the pricing of carbon. Behaviour won't be changed when the price of carbon is actually implemented.

We know that there is a price already on carbon. The pollution that we put into the atmosphere is causing global warming, and the tipping point is something that we're seeing now more and more in the province, whether it's in terms of forest fires that are inundating our communities, floods in our major centres, infestations in our forests. The effects of global warming are twice as prevalent in Canada as elsewhere in the world, as evidenced by our northern climate. I'm not sure if any of you have actually been to northern Canada, to the territories. I happen to have been up to Yellowknife and also into Nunavut myself, where I was at Iqaluit, and I know that the effects of global warming are being felt in northern Canada much more severely than we do see here in more southern regions of the country.

To actually know that the Dempster highway, which I've driven all the way to Inuvik, actually, now extended to Tuktoyaktuk, to the Beaufort Sea, to the Arctic Ocean – that highway, the extension portion which has recently been completed is under threat. It's falling apart because the permafrost is deteriorating and they're having trouble maintaining the roadbed that they just built. Now, in 1945, when the Alaska highway was built, the permafrost wasn't at threat and they used a similar construction technique to insulate the roadbed from the permafrost, and the road has stood in good stead in these more southern portions of that Dempster highway and the Alaska highway. But in the northern extension that permafrost is melting, and the road: they're having real trouble maintaining that piece of infrastructure in northern Canada.

So the evidence is pretty clear that we have to take seriously what's happening with climate change in Canada. And to go back and repeal the carbon tax, to not put a price on carbon is to totally stick our heads in the sand and abrogate our responsibility as leaders to make sure that our citizens are protected from the ravages of climate change and that we make sure that the province of Alberta, one of the largest energy producers in the world, shows leadership and also maintains our edge and our ability to talk to the rest of the country and the rest of the world, to say that while there is an opportunity to sell fossil fuels to the rest of the world, we do so only by selling the most responsibly produced fossil fuels that can be found on the planet. And we do that by implementing measures like putting a price on carbon, by putting a cap on emissions, by creating a fund that lowers energy uses.

It absolutely flies in the face of human history and the need for preserving this planet over time and the need to transition away from fossil fuels in an orderly fashion even while developing the fossil fuels we have here at a pace and in a manner that is consistent with lowering the carbon footprint that any producer of fossil fuels has, having the lowest carbon footprint possible in the world. Doing that is not something that is an option. Any government of Alberta has a responsibility to put a price on carbon.

It's absolutely shocking, it's sad, it's pathetic, and I think it's, well, totally wrong that this government has chosen to buck the trend towards a fossil-free future, a future that justifiably is probably three or four decades away. But the depth of the problem is so big that that kind of planning has to take place starting now. We can't wait for another generation to suffer the consequences that we're feeling right now because they'll be catastrophic. It wasn't too long ago that New York was underwater. Florida was, too. Vanuatu is disappearing. There are lots of island nations in the world that are under threat of disappearing and are actually looking for compensation from the United Nations to help them move because their land is disappearing.

This is not a fantasy that was dreamt up last week by people who were out to get people and jurisdictions that produce fossil fuels; this is actually a reality. We have to adjust to this reality that we face in the country and throughout the world and know that the production of fossil fuels and the market are something that will be granted to those jurisdictions that respect the fact that it is a transitional period that we're in and that global warming is real.

There are also opportunities to be had in this transitional phase, opportunities to look into other forms of green energy and to reward those people who transition into green energy, that lowers our carbon footprint. Mr. Speaker, we do that by doing things which we did do ourselves as a government over the last four years and which now the new government hopes to repeal simply for some short-term gain, by telling people that they'll have their taxes lowered. Well, the lowering of taxes is something that quite often will be a popular vote-getter, but the longer term future is what we need to have in mind when we're putting forward policy with respect to climate change.

This government has certainly shortened the time frame that they seem to be playing with when they're looking at carbon policy. The time frame they're looking at is probably less than four years. It's an election cycle. That is a dangerous way of thinking, Mr. Speaker, because the heat of this planet cares not for the election cycle.

We have a responsibility to make sure that we take action here that influences others, that influences our own citizens to behave in a way that lowers our carbon footprint and takes advantage of the transitional opportunities economically that are afforded to us by the fund that we create by putting a price on carbon. Over time we will see that the new technologies that we develop and incubate here by using the investments and the investment funds created by pricing carbon – those dollars will be rewarded with returns on those investments because the markets for the products that'll be created as a result are in high demand, and the demand is growing because the world is transitioning towards more green energy.

I really encourage members opposite to think twice about what they are getting into when they talk about starting Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, as their centrepiece. This will be your centrepiece. I tell you what, as I said before, far be it from me to stand and tell you: don't do this. I should rather say: keep it up. Just keep it up. Alberta is watching.

You know what? An election won on a promise of lowering taxes is a shallow victory. The greater victory is shown in leadership, which is a longer, longer vision. In fact, "vision" is not a word I attach to this government in any way, shape, or form. They have no concept of what, indeed, they wish to implement for the province's long-term future in terms of benefiting us as a society. They simply look at the machinery of the economy and see human beings as simply an input cost. That's reflected in their policies such as the repeal of the carbon tax. I expect to see more of it, but as I say: keep it up. Alberta is watching. We'll see who actually comes out on top four years from now.

Thank you.

10:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any members wishing to raise questions or comments?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question on second reading.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker. What a great day. How exciting it is to see the carbon tax repeal act out of second reading. As such, I think there's been lots of progress today. I thank all the hon. members of the House for their hard work today, and we'll move to adjourn the Assembly until tomorrow at 9 a.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:51 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Wednesday, May 29, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning, hon. members. It's a wonderful day outside, but we are going to be working hard for Albertans here indoors today.

As per the long-standing tradition of this House please let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideals but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keeping in mind the responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. May Your kingdom come and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Glasgo moved, seconded by Ms Rosin, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate May 27: Mr. Guthrie]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and congratulations on your recent election to the office. I know you'll do well and serve us well.

Madam Speaker, I once saw the government place a child with a cognitive disability into a homeless shelter. I witnessed a woman with mental illness bouncing from street to hospital to street, a homeless man battling grief and addiction make the decision to sobriety only to be turned away from the detox centre for lack of space. A good friend of mine died last year of a fentanyl overdose because he had relapsed and was unaware of what he was taking. Unfortunately, these are just a handful of the hundreds of stories I can tell you from my 15-year career working with the vulnerable people.

The issues we face as a province are real, and the policies that are decided here have a significant impact on the lives of Albertans. It is why I fought so hard to represent this community and to bring voice to these issues to the Legislature. I stand here deeply humbled and, I have to confess, with no little trepidation about the enormity about the task before us.

I wanted to use my first words in this House to acknowledge my parents because I believe it is in their example I chart my course forward. If you see any compassion, fiscal prudence, perseverance, or servant leadership in me, it is because it has been instilled in me by my mother and my father.

Most members here have heard the story of my father, Pat Nixon, a street kid making his way out of poverty, battling overwhelming obstacles to go on and build one of the most amazing community-driven organizations in Canada, the Mustard Seed. His example is a large part of what shaped me into who I am today and what drives me forward in imagining a future that is available for my children, my community, and this province.

His vision was a mobilization of community and church to serve their neighbours in need. His success was demonstrated not only in the thousands of people who were able to overcome addiction and poverty; it was also seen in the thousands of volunteers who discovered the impact of giving. What our family learned was that even though our beliefs may have been different, people with many different backgrounds and ideologies could work shoulder to shoulder because they shared the conviction and the hope that they could make a difference. When I was knocking on doors in Calgary-Klein, it was rare for me to make it past two houses without bumping into somebody who had been impacted by or who had given to the Mustard Seed.

It is, however, my mother, Lise Nixon, who I wanted to emphasize here today in regard to servant leadership. It is her example, her love, grace, quiet dedication to her children, her husband, and the ministry that they were building together that played a core part of shaping me and my brothers into the men you see today.

Vista Heights is the community I was born in – it's in Calgary-Klein – and as I was door-knocking in the election, a flood of memories came back of my mother's efforts to make our childhood amazing. We were not rich. A street pastor's salary did not provide a lot, but it was my mother's tight budgeting, strong fiscal stewardship that ensured that there was always food on the table, that the bills were paid, and then on some occasions there was something special for us boys. Mom was there alongside dad in his work. She volunteered her time, invested her heart, and always demonstrated empathy to those around her. It was often the small lessons she taught us day to day of how to care for our neighbours, through holding doors for elderly people or picking up garbage off the side of the street.

After dedicating over a decade to raising six boys, running several small businesses, and supporting a husband dedicated to ministry, my mother went on to graduate with a certified general accountant degree, achieving a 4.0 GPA. She did this with six teenage boys at home. She is now an auditor for the government of Canada and very good at what she does. She has demonstrated values that we should expect in our government and elected people: perseverance, strong fiscal stewardship, dedication to something bigger than ourselves, devotion to family and community, and, most importantly, compassion. I look forward to applying the principles that my parents taught me in this 30th Legislature and as a representative for the constituency of Calgary-Klein.

I ran for office because I wanted to bring a voice from the front line. I felt that there was a growing disconnect between elected people and the people serving in our communities. Since arriving in this building, I've quickly learned that the disconnect is not because the members in this House don't care. In fact, I've found my colleagues to be extremely concerned about issues of poverty, addiction, mental health, and helping vulnerable people. I'm excited to see the dedication of resources and the time immediately being directed to tackling these problems.

I'm also happy to see an acknowledgement that reaching out to the front lines needs to be a priority, that we are committed to creating a culture of openness that will lead to a bottom-up approach to problem solving. Compassion – compassion – is not a partisan issue. The challenges our communities face in regard to addiction, mental health, children struggling in care, homelessness, and the shortage of affordable housing are not new to this government, the last government, or the government before that. In fact, most governments around the world are tested by these issues, and that is why we in this House need to move beyond partisan rhetoric, work towards creating a dialogue and breaking down the social stigmas within our communities in order to find solutions.

I've always believed the solutions to Alberta's problems are found at Alberta doors. One of the most common things that I heard during the last election was a plea from my constituents to move beyond petty mudslinging and partisan rhetoric. They want us, expect us, and need us to restore healthy debate and open discussion. I believe that the people in this room want similar outcomes for Alberta: excellence in health care, quality education, care for our seniors, balanced budgets, and to create prosperity for Albertans in a sustainable way, a way that will not leverage our children's future. If we can agree on that fact, we will have a much better time getting down to discussing how we get there.

I have the distinct privilege of representing the constituency of Calgary-Klein. This inner-city constituency is home to 16 communities represented by 11 community associations. Many of the communities in Calgary-Klein were actually annexed by the city of Calgary as early as 1910, with the newest communities being established in 1963. As a result, the people who lived in these communities played a rich role in shaping our city into what it is today. My constituents come from all walks of life, some who live in the same home they built 60 years ago, some who have moved into the homes in the communities that their parents raised them in, and many who have come from across this province, this country, and around the world to make a life for themselves and their families here.

What struck home with me was that people I talked to didn't expect nor want me to head to the Legislature with the goal of bringing back prosperity at all costs. I feel so proud to serve residents who are fiscally conservative but caring about social impact on their neighbours and their communities. I consider myself fortunate to be able to represent and partner with so many active community-minded volunteers and associations. These men and women are dedicated towards making their neighbourhoods a great place to live.

I had the distinct privilege of running against the only two other members that held the title for Member for Calgary-Klein, Kyle Fawcett and Craig Coolahan. Although I did not always agree with their policies, running in an election with them and witnessing them as representatives, I came to respect them, their effort to bring our community's voice forward, and their sacrifice in the name of democracy. The communities of Calgary-Klein have changed over the years, and different parts of our riding have had the privilege of being represented by many noteworthy members.

Speaking of moving beyond partisan rhetoric, Madam Speaker, I feel the need to mention Bob Hawkesworth, the ultimate community worker. First an alderman and then as a member of the Legislature he set the example of how to put aside partisan concerns and work with his constituents of all political stripes. Many of the communities in Calgary-Klein used to be in the riding of Gleichen – I imagine it looked a lot different back then – and were represented by two brothers: Ezra Riley, Liberal, in 1909, and the second, Harold Riley, Conservative, in 1911. They made history with the brothers' by-elections, and now I'm proud to be able to make history once again and stand alongside my brother in this House. It is in these members' footsteps that I hope to make my mark.

The Speech from the Throne highlighted several key focuses for our new government to get Alberta's economy back on the right track and for improving government services. Bill 2, the open for business act, will restore investor confidence so that corporations will want to do business here, ultimately growing our economy. On May 30 the carbon tax will be repealed so that families can keep their hard-earned money in their own pockets as they know what is best needed to support their families, not the government. With additional funds mental health and addiction facilities can grow their space to meet growing demands and overhaul our current programs.

In addition to once again becoming an attractive place to establish companies to create jobs, Bill 3, Job Creation Tax Cut (Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment) Act, will create new full-time jobs. A commitment to truthfulness and consultation with stakeholders, businesses, and citizens will be a common practice in this government. When given the opportunity, Albertans will take care of themselves, provide for their families, and find ways to contribute in their communities. Government's role is not to take over the job of meeting the needs of people but to create an economic and social environment to allow people, families, and communities to thrive.

I would be remiss if I did not mention the man whose name is engraved on my constituency, the man who grew up in the community where I have knocked on so many doors over the last several years, the hon. Premier Ralph Klein, or more affectionately known as King Ralph. Under his leadership he led Alberta through difficult times and moved us on a journey towards becoming a debt-free province. It was a noble vision and a heroic effort.

Member Murray Smith, MLA for Calgary-Varsity, which overlapped with the communities of Klein at the time, described the time in his 1993 maiden speech:

Alberta is similar to many governments in the western world today. Saddled with heavy debt, Alberta and other administrations recognize the high growth periods of the last 30 years. Now is the time to make that payment back to the people of Alberta. Alberta will be the province in Canada that takes the country's lead in attacking the deficit. Our economic situation requires innovative thinking and new approaches to developing our economy. This government is up to the challenge.

Sadly, we face similar circumstances. These are different times and they call for different solutions, but with perseverance, fiscal prudence, dedication, devotion, and compassion of Albertans and the members of this House I believe we will get there. I gave speeches at the United Way of Calgary to hundreds of offices in downtown Calgary full of people eagerly looking for an opportunity to contribute to making the lives of their neighbours in need better. Sadly, over the last four years I've seen many of those companies I spoke of disappear or struggle to the point where they could not give in the same way.

It brings me back to the disconnect I talked about earlier. Former Prime Minister Stephen Harper described one of Ralph's so-called radical ideas at a memorial celebrating Ralph's life: the best decisions are not made in government office towers; the governments and citizens should face problems head on. As King Ralph reminded us back then, Albertans are prepared to help, but they cannot do that if we do not create the space for them to succeed.

I am so honoured to be in this room with these hon. members and look forward to continuing this conversation. I have great faith in this team and the quality and calibre of the members assembled here.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Let me be the first to congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein on his maiden speech inside this House. I am proud to call the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein my brother but also proud to call him a friend, and I think the House saw why today. My mom did say that I had to be nice to him. She always said that, but it's my pleasure to be nice to him because he's a great man and a great brother. I shared a room with him for 16 years, interestingly enough. I can't tell you some of the stories of those days, the fun in growing up with five brothers.

I also served in front-line work with the homeless in this province and watched the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein's passion to be compassionate to the most vulnerable in our community. I was proud to do that with him. I'm proud to now be here in the 30th Legislature with him. He took the long road here, Madam Speaker, through three elections and finally was able to do it, but not from lack of hard work each time. I know that you know him well as well. He's one of the hardest working candidates I've ever worked with.

Interestingly enough, just for the House's interest, he was once endorsed by the hon. former Finance minister. I can't remember his riding at the moment. I suspect not this time around, but he once endorsed him in the past, which shows his ability probably to work across party lines.

I do have a question for him, though, on his maiden speech. I think he did a great job of talking about the need to be compassionate in our community. I know he believes the same as I do, that we will be judged as a society on how we treat the most vulnerable amongst us. He also expanded on that and why he is a Conservative, what he has seen in his career and in the work that he has done with the homeless and how that ends up with him being a Conservative politician, the reality of a Conservative with a heart, and the ability of parties like ours to be able to actually effect change in the communities that he and I care about.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Minister of the Environment for your question. You know, I'd like to echo what my brother just said about me. Knowing first-hand by working with him, starting up the Mountaineer Lodge program and seeing his compassion and dedication, and knowing his leadership role within this party and the many leaders in this party and their concern for the care of the poor and the vulnerable in our community, it warms my heart. I'm very excited about that.

You know, I'd mentioned it in my maiden speech: at the end of the day, if we don't have a strong economy, if Albertans aren't working and we're not creating that prosperity, we won't have the resources to be able to help people in our community. But more than that, I think it's an emphasis on helping people to rise up out of their situation. You know, the classic kind of handout versus hand-up phrase: maybe it's used too much, but it's truly what we want to accomplish here.

One of the things that my dad actually said about the addiction and mental health file is that it should be called recovery. We want to help people to be able to recover, rise up, and connect back into community and find meaningful ways to contribute and be involved in their communities. I think that's certainly the Conservative heart and something that I want to bring to the table here. I know that my colleagues do as well.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Hon. members, I'm very grateful to have the privilege of rising today to address this honourable Assembly. I would like to take this opportunity to thank my constituents and the many hard-working men and women of Calgary-Falconridge who have put their trust, hopes, and dreams in my hands and given me the great honour to be their voice inside this important Chamber. I'm deeply honoured by their confidence in me and humbled to take my seat in a place where so many great Albertans have been before. Most importantly, I would like to thank my family: my wife and my partner in life, Balmeet, and my two children, Abhi and Sahej, who have always stood beside me and supported me in all my political ambitions. They are truly the foundation of any success I have achieved.

When I rise today, I think of the journey that has brought me here. Many of us in this House have travelled long and winding roads. My journey may have begun further away than most. It started half a world away, where I was born and raised in northern India, the state of Punjab, at the foot of the mighty Himalayas.

My upbringing was not unusual for a boy in that area, walking to school up and down a mountainside every day and dreaming of a bright and successful future for myself and family. After graduating university in pharmacy in India, I began the long road that would bring me to the foothills of another majestic mountain range, the Rocky Mountains. Like many who have come to this land before me, I came to Alberta with a pioneering spirit and self-reliant attitude to build a new life in the land of boundless opportunity.

Many new Canadians have built successful communities and prospered through hard work, ingenuity, and unshakable determination. Like previous trailblazers, they had to brave immeasurable hardships but did not falter. They rose to the challenge and helped to create one of the best places in the world to live, work, and raise a family. Their story is like so many others. In my case, I was able to come to a new land and build a very successful business, and today I'm honoured and proud to say that our business employs my fellow Albertans across Alberta.

However, we are faced with many treks that must be conquered. We are fully engaged in the information age, which, in spite of its benefits, means Alberta must compete with the entire globe, from the protectionist forces of our friends to the south and in the Far East to new attacks on our personal liberty and privacy. We are indeed living in a brave new world. Domestically there are long-standing tensions creating regional misunderstandings and sometimes wilful ignorance of the many benefits and advantages that Albertans have provided to our provincial partners in Confederation. These are the difficulties that we must deal with in this Chamber.

Today our fellow Albertans are looking to us for leadership and a path through the wilderness of despair. My journey here is a testament, like so many other new Albertans, to our collective ability to find ways to defeat seemingly insurmountable obstacles and achieve success and prosperity. Under the leadership of our new Premier, his cabinet, and caucus I'm confident that we will harness the energy, spirit, and strength needed to help find the right path forward for all Albertans.

Our current problems are well known: the lack of accessible pipelines to tidewater, the constant attack on our natural resources from international self-interest groups, and the issue of rebalancing transfer payments to better reflect the new realities of our country. The lack of jobs and persistent lacklustre economic performance is another critical issue. These problems will require ingenuity, persistence, and perseverance to overcome.

I expect that new ideas will be brought to the floor of this Assembly. I'm dedicated to supporting ideas that are rooted in principles of fiscal responsibility. I believe firmly in the analogy that teaching a person how to fish will help feed them for life, instead of giving them a fish, which only feeds them for a day. Together we can imagine an Alberta full of promise and opportunity. Through a reduction in government regulations we can unleash the power of entrepreneurs to build and create new businesses and generate jobs for Albertans. By demonstrating fiscal restraint, we can unburden future generations of debt. That will allow them the ability to deal with many new challenges our province will inevitably face. By providing strong educational building blocks, we can enable our youth to be better prepared to compete against the new global realities.

We know the world has become much more complicated. Computers and electronics dominate our lives, yet few of us understand or are capable of writing the simplest code needed to direct this technology. I believe the time has come for bold thinking, to establish in the curriculum a program where every child is required to take a mandatory coding class from kindergarten until they complete high school. Kids should learn the principles of algorithms and be capable of building new software applications for companies like Apple, Google, and other new companies that haven't even been founded yet. If we institute a mandatory coding class for all students in the Alberta curriculum, we would be the first jurisdiction in North America to do so.

Since 2016 the United Kingdom has instituted mandatory coding classes for all students from kindergarten to grade 12 in order to prepare their youth to successfully compete in the global economy of the future. We could follow this example and be the first jurisdiction in North America to arm our children with the tools they need for success. This would also encourage entrepreneurs and technology companies to consider immediately establishing operations in Alberta, where we have not only an abundance of natural resources but also a highly educated workforce to help power the innovation and technology of the future.

In another area of great complexity we must be courageous and harness new technology and management practices to maintain and enhance the quality of our health care system. I believe we must be open to new ideas to innovate and find new approaches to delivering the medical care and pharmaceuticals our citizens require, all within the limits of our fiscal capacity. My constituents are proud of our health care system, but they're concerned about its future. We must continue to find ways to improve its delivery while ensuring long-term sustainability and not sacrificing the quality of health care at any cost.

The throne speech set out our legislative agenda. It gives us a signpost that will guide our way to a more robust and affluent future. It highlights the challenges that lay before us, but it is also a call for renewed faith for risk takers, and now is the time to unleash the energy and imagination that can help bring back the Alberta advantage.

My personal journey has brought me to this place at this time to use all my knowledge, skills, and experience to help in the effort of lighting a path for today and for future generations, to work tirelessly to create a climate where jobs will flourish and rewards for risk taking will be encouraged. I know, Madam Speaker and hon. members, that you are ready to join with me in taking on this tremendous task.

I quote a well-known poem written by Canadian John McCrae.

To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.

Each generation passes the torch to the next. Be ours to hold it high, be ours to safeguard our freedoms, our liberty, our rights, our principles, and most importantly, safeguard our fellow citizens. We have been passed a great trust from previous generations. In Alberta that is the tapestry of many cultures woven together by shared principles of free enterprise, personal responsibility, and mutual respect. We must continue the work of building a society of tolerance and understanding that is a beacon of opportunities across Canada and around the world.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

9:30

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Ms Issik: I rise today to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Falconridge for an amazing maiden speech. I very much appreciated hearing how he was educated as a pharmacist and then came here to Alberta to build a whole new life, a successful business, and now here he is contributing to public life in Alberta. I appreciated his comments, Madam Speaker, about our position here in Alberta within the information age, and I would appreciate hearing more from the member regarding innovation here in Alberta.

Mr. Toor: I came from a different world. There's a lot of competition there. Kids have to fight to get into the schools and have to compete. They find the innovative ideas right from when they go to kindergarten. When I said that we should have innovative ideas, we need to have strong competition within the schools. Like, every government from last time we heard that they want to diversify the economy; they want to do different things. Basically, we need to be innovative. We need to be a little bit creative in how we compete in the world. Before we copy and follow the same idea, I think we need to innovate.

As I said, the coding, teaching codes to students right when they go to kindergarten might be helpful. I was sad when I heard that in the last few years our kids were failing math skills, normally required to compete in the world. We need to teach those kids. You know, if they are competitive in the future, a lot of companies will be looking for them, and they'll come to Alberta for those innovative ideas. They need to have that coding, they need to have good math skills, they need to have good grades in science and every perspective of life so that they can be challenged throughout their lives.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any more comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm so delighted to see some of these colleagues of mine: the Member for Calgary-Falconridge; the Member for Calgary-Klein, who I worked with for almost nine years in Calgary on the legacy Wildrose side. Some of us had to run multiple times to get here. The Member for Calgary-Klein actually helped my campaign as my co-campaign manager. I use the analogy – I mean, our dean is actually the Member for Central Peace-Notley. He and I ran four times. Probably we both had the record, except for the former Premier from Edmonton-Strathcona, I guess, who was there four times.

I'm so delighted to see some of these colleagues here, particularly the Member for Calgary-Falconridge, a new Canadian, a very successful businessman. Finally he got here in his pursuit to serve the public, being in this caucus of a diverse group of people from different faiths, different backgrounds. Finally he's here. Being a small-business man, he mentioned how we can advance the agenda in this caucus with that background, so I just want to hear from him: what message is he giving to those ambitious young people who want to be businesspeople in the future, and if they want to serve the public, what advice does he have for them?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Actually, I'll start with my childhood. My parents always said that I'm going to be an all-rounder. Since I was born, I could play any sport. When I moved here, I used to play hockey, cricket, volleyball, anything. I learned to skate, and now I can play a little bit of ice hockey, too. So basically I'm kind of an all-rounder. When I was going to school, I thought I wanted to become an engineer. I didn't become an engineer; I became a pharmacist. It's not only me, just a new Canadian, but it's the story of every immigrant to this country: you're not going to find the profession where you belong. So when I moved here . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. We would certainly like to hear more of that, I'm sure, but we're out of time.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Congratulations on your election.

It is with great pride and excitement that I rise today in response to the Speech from the Throne by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor and give my maiden speech in this House. This is truly a humbling House for a newcomer. It feels as if the weight and expectation of Alberta looms over it. It's a strange feeling. It makes you feel incredibly small but part of something so very big.

I'd like to thank the constituents of Drumheller-Stettler for allowing me the privilege and honour to be their representative in Alberta's 30th Legislature. I'd like to thank them for taking a chance on an unlikely candidate, one without political experience. I love where I live, Madam Speaker, and I would not care to live anywhere else. It's big and open and can be harsh and unforgiving, but it's full of communities that act like families, that work and play together and rely on each other. I intend to repay the people of Drumheller-Stettler for their trust by working hard and working with them. We're all in this together.

I'd also like to thank my family and especially my wife, Jennifer, for allowing me this opportunity. It's a big ask when you have a young family and you're four hours from Edmonton. I promise to spend the rest of my days paying it back and to explain to our kids why I felt it was so important.

Madam Speaker, it's been mentioned many times what a rare opportunity this is, to be a representative in this Assembly. That fact is not lost on me. My area, going back to when the riding was simply called Chinook, has had only four representatives since 1975. In preparation for this speech, I read the maiden speeches of those who came before. Many or most of the struggles of today were the struggles of yesterday, too: isolation, declining or stagnant population, need for economic development, accessibility of health care, per-pupil education funding, centralization of services, and, of course, the need and desire for more water. My predecessors accomplished a great deal and did the best in their time. I hope to take up the torch and convey to you all how much untapped potential still exists in the Big Country, a potential that can benefit all of Alberta.

The riding of Drumheller-Stettler is big. If it were a country, it would rank 133 out of 196 in size. To give that some context, Madam Speaker, that's slightly smaller than the Netherlands or Switzerland and a little bigger than Taiwan or Belgium. And unlike our large northern ridings, Drumheller-Stettler has roads, people, and communities in every corner, maybe not many in every corner, but you catch my drift. This riding is municipally composed of three counties, two municipal districts, and the special areas. All told, it is over 8.7 million acres and has over 16,000 kilometres of open, maintained roads. Once more for context, that's over twice the distance of the main route of the Trans-Canada highway. The riding has 25 urban municipalities, almost a tenth of Alberta's total, including seven towns, 16 villages, and two summer villages.

I'd like to say, Madam Speaker, that before I entered the nomination race roughly 15 months ago, I thought I knew a fair number of people from all over the riding. You know, you grow up in an area; you do business there. I felt I'd made a lot of good connections and relationships over the course of my life. It is an extremely sobering and awesome experience to get in the truck, drive three hours from home, and start introducing yourself, start telling your story, and begin to learn the complexities and struggles and strengths of different regions and their people. You soon realize how small your circle was. That has been the most rewarding part of this adventure so far. As with most things in life, it's been about the journey.

I was confident that I could do this job, that I could learn and grow into the role. I know these roles require hard work, depth, and dedication. You do not have to be a lawyer to be a great member of this Assembly. To steal a line from the MLA for the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills: I believe we have 11 lawyers on this side; that ought to be enough. My point is that I believe much of this role can be learned through experiencing it. I'm reminded of the 4-H motto Learn to Do by Doing. So far I think that is the case. We're learning the procedures, the standing orders, the protocol, and for myself, even things as simple as dressing appropriately. I'm having a bit of a hard time with this one. When our whip spoke of the dress code, I could see the concern in his eyes. I think he was picturing me sitting beside him looking like Woody from Toy Story. For the hon. Member for Calgary-West, who, when he's here, is usually the best-dressed fella in here: I am trying.

Back to my point, Madam Speaker, the journey. What I know will help me succeed in this job, that I couldn't have learned here in Edmonton, even with all the support staff and assistance, is what the riding of Drumheller-Stettler needs, what is working well, what is critical, and what is long overdue, the relationships with the many councils and boards, and the late-night phone calls with the concerned folks we've met along the way. If you'll indulge me, I'd like to share a little of what I've learned.

We may as well start with the town of Drumheller. You don't find many towns like Drumheller. For one, it's roughly two kilometres wide by 28 kilometres long. The town itself includes the communities of Nacmine, Newcastle Mine, Rosedale, Wayne, and East Coulee. It was formerly a district of some kind, and years ago it all became the town of Drumheller. Drumheller itself is one of Alberta's major tourist destinations and the gateway to the badlands. Drumheller receives over half a million summer visitors in no small part due to the Tyrrell museum. The museum is world renowned and a cornerstone of Alberta's tourism infrastructure. It does pose some issues for the town and residents: slow falls and dead winters with absolutely full summers create some unique business and town infrastructure challenges; namely, the town needs oversized common areas, and the local taxpayers feel hard done by. The town's most real concern has always been about flood mitigation. The entire area is on a flood plain, and this is the most pressing concern to town leaders.

Starland county borders Drumheller. It's known for good farmland, has the villages of Delia, Morrin, and Munson, and the well-known hamlet of Rowley, a backdrop for many a movie. Starland's biggest concern currently is oil and gas companies closing their doors. Trident ceasing operations not long ago has hit the county with a 60 per cent shortfall to their industrial tax base. That, coupled with the loss of local jobs and a great many unpaid invoices to local mom-and-pop type service companies: this area has been hit hard. This county is responsible for 122 bridges, and with this hit they've begun to close roads because currently the cost of bridge maintenance or, heaven forbid, replacement is far out of reach.

North of Starland you'll find the county of Stettler. This area is known for great farmland, great cattle country, and oil and gas. The town of Stettler punches above its weight as an oil field manufacturing centre. It employs a lot of fabricators and sends products and packages all over North America and beyond. The Trident closure and others have hurt Stettler county as well. They are currently excited about a proposed grain loop terminal planned by G3 to be built south of Erskine.

East of here we run into the county of Paintearth, known for towns like Castor, Coronation, and the village of Halkirk. This is home to one of the two coal-fired power plants in the riding. The uncertainty of coal's future and the future of our electrical grid in general has caused a great deal of stress and hardship in this riding. Proposed wind projects have pitted neighbour against neighbour. Municipalities need the development, but the unregulated way that land agents acquire an area leaves the locals to fight with their councils in an effort to find a resolution.

East and north we enter the MD of Provost. I have to admit that this is the area I had the least amount of prior connection with, but it has been a great experience to get to know the people in this area. It's known for villages along highway 13, including Amisk, Hughenden, Czar, and the town of Provost itself. Provost is an oil town and is fiercely proud of being a complete town. They still deliver babies and have a funeral home. From start to finish, they have all the services one could require. They employ a great many from the Saskatchewan side, and could teach a lesson to other areas in not only acquiring doctors but retaining them. They go out of their way to make them part of their community. Drumheller and Stettler have been hit hard by rural crime, but no area in my riding has been hit worse than here; many businesses, multiple times. Some are giving up.

In the southeast corner is the MD of Acadia, known for its good soil. Farmers in this area are known to succeed without much rain. There are some big progressive farmers in this area that are moving up the chain, looking to find global partners for upgraded agrifood products. There's a proposed irrigation project in the assessment phase here that looks very promising and feasible. The irrigation potential on soil of this quality would be incredibly productive to the area and the province.

That leaves, in the middle, the special areas, all 5.1 million acres of it. Known for towns like Hanna and Oyen, villages like Consort, Empress, and Veteran, home of the Sheerness power plant, this area is known for hard grass and good cattle. It's notoriously dry. Its hybrid governance model dates back to 1938, when, for a train car to put your belongings in and a little food and travelling cash, settlers turned in their deeds to get the heck out. It's where I'm from. I'm biased, but it's full of great, hardy people. This area has always craved more water and has much more irrigation potential as well. I'm lucky to be an irrigator in this area and know what it can do to stabilize and better an operation and region.

Oil and gas has played a large role in building the area but is having a hard time currently, like most places. Companies are reclaiming entire fields, putting to bed many good wells with the bad in response to low gas prices and a broken liability formula used by the regulator.

The future of the Sheerness power plant and Westmoreland coal mine causes much concern for Hanna and area. Interestingly, the plant actually just sold to an American company on Monday. The town has been impacted greatly: houses can't be sold, an empty main street, and hurting businesses. The facilitator for Communities Against Abuse mentioned the other day that the reports of sexual violence and abuse in this area have seen a sixfold increase in reported cases in the last two years. The human impact of these events on this area is staggering.

I know the demographics of Alberta have changed a lot and will continue to. I know that our cities will deal with the issues associated with rapid growth, and ridings like mine will deal with the issues associated with clinging to the services we have, the services we need. I know the cities have the votes, the representatives, the power, but, more voices or not, myself and my country colleagues will be here to remind this House that decisions made here ripple out into every corner of the province and have real consequence.

I come from kind of a political family, Madam Speaker. Mr. Diefenbaker made my great-grandfather a Senator, and there have been quite a few since who served federally and here in Alberta. I should have known enough to stay away, but there's obviously a strong hereditary defect. I like to think it's because we care about people.

I think this can be a noble role, Madam Speaker: help people, try hard, and leave it better than you found it. I threw my hat in the ring because I was worried about my kids' future, my region's future, and Alberta's future. The Speech from the Throne, much like this platform and this caucus I'm so proud to be a part of, is a breath of fresh air and has finally given regions like mine some optimism and hope. I'm proud to be here with you all in this House today and pledge to be a hard-working, loyal, thoughtful member. To my constituents I pledge to do what I said I would and tell your story the best I can.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, this is my first opportunity to rise in this House to send my congratulations to you on being elected Deputy Speaker. Congratulations to the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler and his victory in the election this year. I followed your campaign over the last number of months. You are a hard-working, well-travelled man, and I commend you for the time and commitment to the people of your great riding and the space you cover.

You touched on rural crime, which is something those of us from rural ridings have heard lots of over the course of the last number of months and years. If you could take some time and talk a little bit about how it impacts those of us in rural ridings when we're dealing with this scourge of rural crime.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question from the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod. Yes. I guess rural crime is a hot topic and rightly so. We've seen such an increase locally, and it's been felt across the province, some places far worse than others. I think it is a symptom of the disease, which is a terrible economy, a growing drug epidemic. We're seeing desperate people taking matters into their own hands and going where it's easier, perhaps.

I know for myself as a rural person who's an hour from anything, it's a sincerely real feeling when you're in your house and you have a wife and a small family and you get a call from the sergeant an hour away saying: "Just giving you a heads up. You know, there are some sketchy people in your area. We think they're armed." I've had that experience personally more than once. If I can convey that feeling of knowing that you're the only person there to protect your family: it's a real feeling and needs to be understood.

Currently, I know that I'm working with my local detachment. They're doing some great things. I don't know if this is a problem that can ever be completely fixed, but we're doing some great things with communication. Right now a constable in Hanna has developed an app, and we're working with multiple rural crime watch groups. We're trying to get everyone communicating, sharing information in real time. The app will be able to use pictures and convey messages very quickly, and hopefully that will help catch some of these perpetrators and find some closure.

I'm proud of our platform. We've discussed adding prosecutors. I know the repeat offender thing is very real. I think that once they are caught, if we can keep them off the streets for a while and find them some help or some closure, it's going to be necessary. I don't think that we can ever overcome the distances. It will be impossible, so we're going to need to focus on communication and prevention and do the best we can.

The hon. member also asked about distances, and I just would like to share something with the House. I don't know if anyone else is experiencing this, being a member for the first time and sitting and learning all this during grad season. In my riding there are 21 graduations. I was fortunate that Provost couldn't use me this year. They'd already had theirs. We're trying to hit 19 of them. I think I have 12 left. I'm 375 kilometres from Edmonton, but when I left on Thursday, I'd put 1,400 kilometres on my truck by the time I got back. We drive a lot. That's our burden, but it's great.

It's truly a great riding. It's got its disadvantages but so many advantages, so many great communities. I know for myself I was well aware of all of these issues when I asked for this job, and I'm happy to do my best to get around and convey their messages in this House.

Yeah. That's probably all I have to say about that.

The Deputy Speaker: There are seven seconds remaining. The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. That's it.

That is a significant number of graduations, Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

I just want to remind all members of the House that we need to be very careful when pointing out where members may or may not be in this Assembly and also to direct all comments and questions through the chair.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As a new member in this House it is an honour to rise this morning and address the Assembly in response to the Speech from the Throne from Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor that she so graciously delivered on May 22.

I'd like to start off by expressing gratitude, gratitude to all of those who supported me in this endeavour and make it possible for me to rise in this House today, the hundreds of volunteers who worked tirelessly through thick and thin, in extreme temperatures, from those that resembled a pizza oven some days to bitter cold that would make a meat locker seem toasty, alongside me every step of the way, ensuring that every citizen heard the message of hope and renewal that our party would deliver; gratitude for my friends who encouraged me that this was indeed a journey worth pursuing because public policy affects real people in real ways every day; gratitude for my family, who not only encouraged me but whose lives have instructed me on the value of hard work, risk taking, and service to build a better community; and finally, gratitude to my colleagues and, in particular, the Premier for their dedication, passion, and commitment to public service.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

As I trudged through the winter on the streets of Calgary-Glenmore, leaving my footprints in the snow, I often thought of my great-grandmother and the footprints she left for me. I have a pair of her shoes that I display in my basement, a little pair of button-up boots. She raised eight boys, eight children, in large part as a single mom after my great-grandfather passed from scarlet fever. She provided for them with the wages of a ranch hand. Mr. Speaker, she was courageous, and she was tough, so when the going got tough, she got going. That is the essence of the Alberta spirit.

It was not so different for my husband, who arrived here in 1987 with a suitcase, $3,000 in his pocket, and the promise of a job. He, too, exemplified the Alberta spirit as he built a business and raised a family.

And so I make footprints here in my role in this Legislature. I will always be mindful of the Alberta spirit as I move forward because, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta spirit is something that we all share. Whether we are indigenous to this land, came here generations ago, or are newly arrived, we all share that can-do attitude, a unique mixture of optimism mixed with a drop or two of straight-up stubbornness to succeed.

I would also like to take this time, this opportunity to congratulate all members of this Assembly on achieving the opportunity to represent their constituencies. I would also like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your election to your new role.

Since this is my first opportunity to formally address this Assembly, in the tradition of maiden speeches I'm pleased to not only respond to the Speech from the Throne but also to speak about my home constituency of Calgary-Glenmore and the impact the citizens past and present have had on me and how they have inspired me to serve. Mr. Speaker, Her Honour spoke of renewal and the breathtaking vitality of nature in our great province. In Calgary-Glenmore we are home to the Glenmore reservoir, its clear waters and the natural spaces along its banks, including the Weasel head, and as we look west, we have an unparalleled view of the foothills and the Rockies. There are scarcely any more beautiful sights in the springtime than these.

Also to our west are our great neighbours the Tsuut'ina Nation, a nation of rich culture, tradition, with a proud history of community leadership, successful commerce, and entrepreneurial spirit. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Tsuut'ina hosted the 2019 indigenous resource council energy summit. I look forward to building stronger relationships with the nation and all indigenous people as we move forward with the indigenous opportunities corporation. As Her Honour mentioned in her speech, the indigenous opportunities corporation will support First Nations' and other indigenous groups' financial participation in natural resource development and infrastructure projects here and in other parts of Canada. I am committed to meet the moral obligation that we have to empower First Nations to be full partners in the development of the resources that lie below their lands, which their ancestors first inhabited, and to become full partners in prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, you will also find on the banks of the Calgary-Glenmore reservoir Heritage Park, Canada's largest living history museum. My neighbours and I regularly hear the whistle of the steam locomotive, and where else can you watch a sternwheeler paddle through the waters within the city limits of a modern city? We're so fortunate in Alberta to have cultural resources such as these that tell the story not only of who we were but, ultimately, who we are and who we will become.

Right next door to Heritage Park stands the Rockyview hospital, one of our outstanding health care facilities, home to institutes such as the Southern Alberta Institute of Urology, funded by Brett Wilson and Doc Seaman, and one of the sites of the Libin Cardiovascular Institute of Alberta, among others, showing how contributions from hard-working members of the private sector to our public health care system create leading-edge, world-class care.

10:00

Mr. Speaker, Calgary-Glenmore is also home to the incredible variety of excellent educational venues, including public, separate, private, and charter schools such as Henry Wise Wood high school, my alma mater; the Jewish Academy; Connect Charter School; the southwest science alternative program; and the South GATE program, among others. I will tell you that I am pleased with our government's commitment to choice in education.

But as blessed as we are with everything that I've spoken of, the greatest inspiration in Calgary-Glenmore is her people, Mr. Speaker, the wonderful people, young and old, past and present, those who have lived in the area for generations or who have come here recently from other parts of Canada and the world. I am grateful to have as my neighbours the architects and builders of our modern province, the community leaders, the professionals, the tradespeople, and the everyday heroes who exemplify the true Alberta spirit.

As Albertans, both now and in the past, we are proud of the province that we have built. We built a land of opportunity, where hard work and risk taking is rewarded, and I am proud of all that our government is proposing to ensure that Alberta will once again become just that: a land of opportunity, ensuring that our resources can get to market, creating the economic ecosystem that will attract the investment, the innovators, and the builders that will grow and diversify our economy. This is what the people of Calgary-Glenmore have asked for day in and day out. They simply want the opportunity to work hard, succeed, and prosper.

The people were very clear in April. The season of renewal is here, and it is now time to get down to work, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to have this opportunity to do just that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to address this Assembly and the people of Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much.

Under 29(2)(a) any members with questions or comments? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore for the beautiful and eloquent speech. I was moved when you were speaking about Heritage Park in your constituency and the deep connection that that constituency has to our provincial patrimony and the heritage that brings with it. You spoke of how that informs us today and where we go in the future.

Can you speak a bit more about your own heritage and how that informs you as a representative of those constituents of the province and how you hope that can help you in your goal of servant leadership as an MLA?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member for Peace River. I'm pleased to respond to that question. I'm a very proud Albertan. I was born in Calgary, as were many generations of my family. In fact, four generations of my family have lived within walking distance of the reservoir. We don't get around much. The fifth generation, the earliest generation, actually lived within what is now Calgary-Lougheed. My grandfather was actually baptized in the Red Deer Lake Presbyterian church, which is now the United Church. I live three blocks away, in fact, from where my grandfather's acreage once stood.

As a child, I was fortunate. We lived next door to the Tsuut'ina Nation, so like all neighbours do, you have your neighbours over. You visit your neighbours. It was not uncommon at my grandfather's home to visit with members of the Tsuut'ina Nation. It was just part of our background, our family. That informs me today because I think it created in me an understanding of how important it is to stay in constant touch with your neighbours. Too often we have spent in recent decades, I would say, not speaking with our neighbours necessarily. It's too easy to be on your phone, texting, watching television, jumping in your car and going somewhere. How often do we sit with our neighbours and just visit?

So we have certain traditions that are starting to come forward today like Neighbour Day in Calgary that is coming up soon. I would hope that all members in this Assembly will take the opportunity to really visit with your neighbours. I'm going to continue to visit with my neighbours on the Tsuut'ina Nation, and we're going to build better relationships because, like all neighbours, we've grown apart over the years and now it's time to grow together again.

I'm also informed by the history of my husband who came here in 1987. While I'm a multigenerational Calgarian, he's a new Canadian, so we have blended our traditions together to raise our family, and I know that we are not alone in that. That is a shared value amongst many families in this province and in this country. I think that informs all of us as we move forward to appreciate culture.

I was pleased last night to attend the iftar dinner, where we shared traditions. I think that's an important part of what we do, and that is to share culture, to share ideas, and through that create the understanding that will be necessary to really fight the intolerance that we are starting to see grow. It's only going to be defeated by growing understanding, and that's from sharing cultures and ideas.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations on your recent election. I've really enjoyed listening to the maiden speeches of some of my colleagues, and it's helped me gain a greater appreciation of both of them as individuals and the great areas in which they serve.

I'm thankful for the opportunity to share my maiden speech.

The Acting Speaker: To clarify, this is not going under 29(2)(a). This is a maiden speech.

Mr. Stephan: I'm grateful for the opportunity to share my maiden speech as a response to our throne speech. An overarching theme of our throne speech was a message of renewal and hope. With that message in mind and as a response to our throne speech, I will share my hope for our province, for my constituency, Red Deer-South, and last of all for the hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly.

First, my hope for Alberta. Mr. Speaker, we are living in interesting times. Governments are failing us. The out-of-control spending ways of our governments have done a great disservice to our children. The old ways are not sustainable ways. The old ways are this: ineffective, inefficient governments with uncompetitive taxes and unsustainable billion dollar debts and deficits. What has been the result?

In the past four years leading up to our election, Alberta's debt has increased by over $45 billion. Mr. Speaker, cumulative $45 billion deficits are easy for irresponsible governments to incur. These gigantic debts are much, much harder for Albertans to pay for or even comprehend.

To put $45 billion into perspective, the prior government's deficits are massive enough to buy every single home in Red Deer, Alberta's third-largest city, mortgage free, not once but twice. An undisciplined government did that in only four years. Mr. Speaker, these debts will be a burden for our children and the rising generation.

This truth cannot be ignored. Spending money you do not have is not the definition of successful government. Governments are supposed to be our allies in protecting our freedom and prosperity. They are not supposed to be impediments to freedom and prosperity. In these challenging times our governments need to be much, much better. Mr. Speaker, on April 16, Albertans took a big, positive step in the right direction to bring back Alberta's economic prosperity for ourselves and opportunities for our children by electing this new government.

10:10

This government's legislative program, as articulated in the throne speech, includes the following two priorities: renewing Alberta's economic prosperity and placing the public interest at the heart of sustainable government. Mr. Speaker, there is an interrelationship between these two priorities. Without a strong economy, there are no taxes from private-sector businesses and those who work in them. When there are no taxes from the private sector, there is no money to pay for government. The facts speak for themselves.

Alberta is better off with governments who live within their means, know how to compete and attract investment in the real world, and support economic growth and individual choices. That is how Alberta has competed and excelled. As set out in the throne speech, this Legislature will renew and restore Alberta as the most competitive and attractive jurisdiction in Canada to start and grow a business, and that is a very good start.

However, there is more for government to do. There is a required culture change in government. Our Premier has expressed Alberta's culture as follows: Alberta is a meritocracy, open to the talents of all, a place where we assess people not on the basis of where they were born, how they pray, or who they love but on how hard they work and how well they treat others. That is the culture of Alberta in the real world. That is not always the culture of Alberta in the government world. Often a government culture is not a meritocracy; sometimes it is mediocrity.

Mr. Speaker, why is there a disconnect between Alberta's real-world culture of meritocracy and government's common culture of mediocrity? The difference is accountability. Without accountability there can be no meritocracy. Some in government shun accountability but in the real world we are all accountable to our families, to our friends, to clients and customers, and our own personal morality, and all of these stewardships motivate us to work hard, to be honest and strive to do better. Striving to do better is our aim in the real world, and that is what we need in the government world. In these challenging times we can afford nothing less. We need a government culture which strives for excellence, sets a good example for our children, lives within its means, is accountable, and focuses on serving the public interest in an efficient and effective manner.

Mr. Speaker, government plays a vital role in our society, but there is a growing contempt and distrust of the rising generations in unsustainable, ineffective government institutions. A deep culture change to meritocracy and accountability in government is the antidote. Better days are ahead for Alberta.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to share my hope for Red Deer. Red Deer is a blessed place. It is a place of great potential. Red Deer is an attractive city. Its population is about a hundred thousand. It is not too big. It is not too small. It is centrally located between Calgary and Edmonton. We have a river. We have great parks and amenities and lakes and other recreational opportunities close by. We will have our own university. Red Deer is a home of great entrepreneurs, businesses, individuals, and families. Red Deer is the home of many great servant leaders who I have had the privilege to get to know better in this important capacity. I grew up here. I chose to start a business here, and my wife and I chose to raise our three children here.

Mr. Speaker, like all communities, Red Deer has unique strengths and needs. I have discussed some of its strengths, and I will now outline one of its needs. The Red Deer regional hospital serves Red Deer plus its surrounding rural communities, comprising up to hundreds of thousands of Albertans. The Red Deer regional hospital had development plans over the years and had been listed as a priority project prior to 2016, but in the fall of 2016 it was dropped off the infrastructure funding list by the prior government, with little or no explanation as to why.

This hospital has been undersupported by government, with a gross disparity in per capita funding over the past 10 years, which has left central Alberta with a deficit of up to 10 times the rest of the province for hospital infrastructure. As a specific example, Red Deer has no cardiac cath lab. This is a time-sensitive, life-or-death health service. As a result of no cath lab to treat heart attacks and related issues, central Albertans have a higher death and disability rate from these issues than people in other areas of the province.

Mr. Speaker, Red Deer does not need nor does it seek special treatment, though. Red Deer can succeed and prosper on its own merits, as it always has. However, similar to Alberta's requests from Canada, Red Deer only requests equitable treatment from a principled government. As set out in the throne speech, this new government will be principled. Better days are ahead for Red Deer.

Last of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to close by expressing my hope for this 30th Legislative Assembly. In these challenging times we need the best, most-qualified individuals possible in government, who are willing to sacrifice, serve, and do their best. To be successful, this government will need to make significant course corrections, and that is going to require individuals with the determination to do what is right.

Mr. Speaker, I was entrusted with the United Conservative Party nomination for Red Deer-South on March 16. Exactly one month later, on April 16, I was elected as MLA for Red Deer-South. It was very hard work, and it demanded personal sacrifice. However, the importance of this election deserved nothing less than our own very best efforts.

I am surrounded by colleagues who did nothing less, who worked hard and sacrificed and succeeded in the crucible of nomination events and elections with other excellent contestants and candidates. The overall calibre of this government caucus is likely the strongest that Alberta has ever seen. I respect all of the members who are here with me, including those on the opposite side. Each of them has strengths, and it takes courage and grit to run and succeed.

Mr. Speaker, last week I attended my first question period. I was disappointed to observe a few members consistently yelling and interrupting as ministers stood to answer questions. That was rude. All of the members of this Assembly are capable and talented adults and are better than that. My hope is that we can choose to act with more civility, to set a better example for our children and counter the growing contempt in government institutions. Notwithstanding our individual differences, all of us share a common desire for freedom to seek happiness as we individually see fit. With that common interest in mind, we can choose to strive to act respectfully and with civility with one another.

10:20

In closing, at the end of the day, what we take with us in this life is our character and our relationships. As a member of this Assembly my desire is to serve to the best of my ability all Albertans and every resident in Red Deer-South. This can be our shared hope with the limited time given to each of us, to give our best and contribute what we can for the public interest and make Alberta better for our children and the rising generations, and then having done so, to step back and allow others the same opportunity.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Under 29(2)(a), any members wishing to make any questions or comments? I see the hon. deputy House whip standing.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Red Deer-South for his remarks. Though I'm new to this job and to this Chamber, I've had the opportunity to speak with a lot of the members since the election and hear the excitement that they are experiencing to be here. It is the culmination of years of work for many of us, years of work to get here and to have the honour to serve our constituents. So I was hoping that I could ask the Member for Red Deer-South if he could share specifically some of the things that excite him the most and things that he looks forward to doing in this House and to accomplishing.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thanks for that great question. I'm, of course, excited about our platform. My background is in the private sector. Mr. Speaker, I am a lawyer, I'm a chartered accountant, and I have had a successful career practising law and working with many successful businesses and their owners. One thing that I have noticed in the real world as businesses seek to compete is that there is a culture of excellence that they strive to emulate in both their personal lives and in the lives of their businesses. What I am excited about – and, again, I am so excited about the wonderful colleagues that I have in this caucus – is working together to also be excellent in the way in which we carry out our stewardships, our sacred stewardships, of trust and opportunities to serve all Albertans. That really does excite me.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wishing to take advantage of the time remaining under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin by saying how honoured I am to have been returned to the Legislature. I have been in this place before, but I represent now the riding of Calgary-Mountain View. It has been an incredible campaign. I've spent a large part of the last year getting to know that riding, and I'm so honoured that the people in that riding have sent me back to this place to continue to represent their interests.

I think I would be remiss if I didn't mention my predecessor who retired before the last election, Dr. Swann. The former Member for Calgary-Mountain View has left an incredible legacy, a legacy that I hope that I can take up and continue to move forward. I can remember watching the former Member for Calgary-Mountain View in the Legislature, you know, a number of years ago, before I ever considered coming to this place, and he really did advance the interests of his constituents. He took an incredible interest in ensuring that he advanced the interests of those most vulnerable, those with housing challenges, with mental health challenges; ensuring that the health care system was properly funded, that the education system was properly funded, that even those in our prisons were taken care of.

I know that in my previous role I had an opportunity to have a number of conversations with him in that regard, and I hope that I can be the kind of advocate, for all people in Alberta from all walks of life, from all different backgrounds, that he was. In some ways the riding has changed its representation, but I hope that in other ways it has not. I hope that I am able to carry forward that legacy of speaking for those who may not have the ability to speak in a place like this for themselves.

I wanted to say a little bit again about why I got into politics. There are a number of things that drove me to take an interest in the first place and to continue on in this instance. Certainly, my background, as folks will know, is as a lawyer, but I think it's worth noting as well that I have degrees in psychology and philosophy. I think that in some ways one of the things that sent me into politics was a dislike of bad arguments or of ignoring the facts, if you will.

One of the things I think that drives me is the increase in income inequality that we see throughout not just our province but throughout the country and throughout North America. For me, that's a real concern, the idea now that, you know, at the same company one person may be making a salary and someone else at that same company is making 500 or a thousand times more, that someone at the head of a company can earn in the first six hours more than some of their average employees earn in the entire year. I don't think that that does positive things for society. Having those not just at the bottom but even in middle incomes struggling to be able to afford basics like food and shelter while at the same time we have some of the richest among us I think is a huge concern.

I also believe that trickle-down economics won't work. We have tried that in the past, and I don't actually think that there's any evidence to support its working at any time in history. There may have been covariances where economies happen to get better at the same moment that tax cuts were made, but there have also been covariances where economies have gotten better while taxes were increased. So I don't think that we can draw any conclusions from that, and I think that there has yet to be any consistent correlation or causation discovered between giving away more money to the richest and having everyone else have a better standard of living.

Public education I think is critical. You know, we talk about equality of opportunity, but absent that public education I don't think it can exist. I think that strong investments in ensuring that everyone has equal access to that education is critical.

Interestingly, one of the things – the members across the way may be surprised to hear this – that drove me was concern about government waste. Certainly, in the justice system we spend an enormous amount of money housing folks in prison who could have been housed for far less money in affordable housing. I think that that is a waste. It's a waste of the human potential of those individuals, but it's also a waste of government resources in a number of ways. I think that investments in mental health and investments in affordable housing can do a lot to turn that around. I'll note later, I think, some steps we've taken on that, but I don't think, by any means, that in four years that problem has been solved. I think we've made progress, but there is much more to do.

Public health care is another thing that, obviously, I'm incredibly passionate about, ensuring that everyone has access to that, ensuring that we're making progress on the issue of climate change, which is something we've been discussing a lot in this House.

I'm incredibly honoured to have served for the last four years and to continue to serve for the next four. One other thing that is important to note is that I do believe it's important in this place to have representation from all different backgrounds. Certainly, there's a lot of talk about women representing us in this place, but more than just women. You know, before the last four years, before the 29th Legislature, we had never seen a single MLA who had given birth in office, and we had three. I think that that's incredibly important because women of child-bearing age are part of the population, and they, therefore, deserve representation in this place. Now, I won't say for a second that that is an easy thing to do, particularly when you're having to split your family up and move between Calgary and Edmonton. I don't think that that's easy. I don't imagine that it's easy for anyone. But I think that it's important.

I think in my case the only reason I was able to be successful in that is because of the support and dedication of my colleagues. You know, the member across the way talked about this sort of crucible bringing forward the strongest amongst us. With respect, I'm going to have to disagree. I don't think that is necessarily how we get the strongest amongst us. I don't think it is by fighting those next to us and elbowing and trying to climb over them that we create the strongest team going forward. I think it's by supporting each other. You know, in order to allow representation by all different backgrounds, I think that working together and working from our mutual strengths is incredibly important.

Another thing that I think drives me is system design, and I think in this place and in government in general we ought to concern ourselves with what it is we're trying to achieve and how it's best achieved. One of the things that I think is important, when we discuss that, is considering where the obligations lie. Certainly, one of the things mentioned in the Speech from the Throne was about red tape reduction. I'm interested to see what that means.

You know, we talk a lot about that sort of thing and about finding efficiencies, but at the end of the day corporations have a legal duty. They have a legal duty in the Business Corporations Act, and absent of the regulations that duty is to maximize short-term profits for their shareholders. That is the duty that they have. So if we remove all other regulations on them, then the duty that they have is to continue to do that.

When we talk about the reduction of regulation, I think the concern that creates for me is that it leaves these corporations, who may very well want to do the right thing – most of them have people who work for them who do have a sense of their neighbours and of their communities and of caring about that – but when the only duty they have is a duty to maximize their profits and there's no regulation around the environment, there's no regulation around ensuring that their workers are properly treated and that they have occupational health and safety, I think that that's a concern and it does not necessarily create a stronger society.

When we turn to, say, the health care system, we talk about public health care, about whether or not we have public or private delivery. People say that private delivery will create efficiencies. Well, you know, we're talking about health care here. Sure, everything should run as efficiently as possible. There've been, you know, increases in technology and scheduling and sort of predictive algorithms that can help us to do a number of things more efficiently, but I think we need to bear in mind that we're talking about health care. Technically, by most definitions of efficiency, if we spend $1 million to save 92 sick people out of 100 rather than $5 million to save 98 sick people out of 100, technically that's more efficient, but I don't think that's the outcome that we want. So I think we need to think very carefully about what it is that we're talking about, because for those six people it's a really big deal.

You know, in health care when we talk about private delivery, often what we see is fewer staff with less training doing more work, and I don't think that's necessarily better, especially when we're talking about the care of our elders, who have built this society in which we live, who have sacrificed to give us what we have today.

A little note. I think one of the things I mentioned was trickle-down economics, and in particular here we're talking about the corporate tax cuts. I think we know it doesn't work. We've seen an article just this morning where economists criticize that and whether or not it is, in fact, going to create a whole bunch of jobs.

I think that what does work is putting more money into the hands of individuals below the median income. I think that that has a much greater effect because those people have been demonstrated to spend that money in the local economy, not sending it overseas, not putting it in the bank somewhere but they spend it to meet their needs, to meet the needs of their children, to meet the needs of their families. It creates not only a stronger, more vibrant economy but a stronger and more vibrant community. I think that that is the best way to proceed forward.

You know, they say that the definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over again and expecting a different result. Well, I think we've tried this, "Let's cut the corporate tax and the economy will diversify itself," and it hasn't worked. So I think the evidence is that it's not going to work, and we ought to look at strategic investments and look at ways we can do that a little bit better.

I think one of the main questions that drives me is: is government a force for good, or is it a force for evil? A lot of people talk about government, and they talk about how it is inefficient and it drags people down and it's not accountable. I don't think that that's true. I think that there are things that can be improved, as there are in any large system, but I think that at the end of the day government is a vessel for us to work together. I think that working together, we create a better health care system. Working together, we create a better society. Working together, we create a better education system.

Some things are best delivered by the private sector. I won't deny that for a minute. Many things, one might even say most things, are best delivered by the private sector. But when the question is life versus profit, when we're talking about something like health care, I'm not sure that the same argument can be made. I fear what exists to the south of us. It may be efficient – actually, you know, I don't think it is efficient. They spend like 800 per cent more on administrative things because they have to deal with all these different insurance companies, so actually I don't think it's efficient at all. It can be deadly in real ways.

I had the opportunity recently to watch Knock Down the House. It's an excellent documentary. I would recommend it to anyone. It deals with average women of more modest backgrounds trying to enter into politics in the States, where big money is a really big thing in politics. One of those candidates talks in that documentary about her reason for running, and it was because her 22-year-old daughter died because she was denied health care because she didn't have insurance. I don't want to see that happen to anyone up here.

I think I'd be remiss if I didn't take a moment to speak about the justice system. This is actually one of the things – I think it's important to say when we disagree and also when we agree – that I was thrilled to see in the throne speech.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any members wishing to make any comments or questions? I believe I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for her thoughtful remarks in response to the Speech from the Throne. You know, it's been my pleasure to have worked with the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for the last four years in various capacities. I can tell everybody in this House and all the people of Alberta that there isn't a more thoughtful and engaged member of this Legislature than the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

As a cabinet colleague I got to see her shepherd all of our government's legislation through the legislative committee and the cabinet committee, and I know that she spent many, many hours reviewing the legislation that was brought forward to our government for consideration and worked very hard to make sure that the legislation that we brought forward met the intent of the policy decisions that we made and was well-crafted legislation. So I want to thank her for all of the work, and I want all of the people of Alberta to know how hard she works and how dedicated to the well-being of the people of this province she is. I think she's unmatched in those capacities, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for her dedication to the people of Alberta.

I also want to highlight some of the work that she did as Justice minister. It was my privilege to serve as acting Justice minister while the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was away having her baby. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Justice minister is probably one of the least desirable jobs in the province of Alberta. In the three months that I was in that role, of course, we had hunger strikes in the remand centre, we had cases of people being released from remand and being murdered as soon as they walked out of the doors of that centre.

Not to mention, I had to take verbal assaults every day from the leader of the task force on rural crime, which drove me crazy in two ways. One, you know, when given the opportunity, the members opposite voted against the budget that was actually significantly successful in reducing rural crime, but also because the member who was asking me those questions turned out to be a rural criminal himself.

It's a challenging ministry, and I think she acquitted herself very well with honesty and integrity, that the current Justice minister I think would be wise to follow. In fact, when the Member for Calgary-Mountain View suggests that maybe we should appoint a special prosecutor to oversee the RCMP investigation into allegations of fraud in the UCP leadership race, the Justice minister, the Member for Calgary-Elbow, would be wise to follow her lead.

You know, we've heard a lot about compassion in this place this morning in various members' responses to the Speech from the Throne, and I want to just let everybody in Alberta know that when it comes to compassion, nobody has actually put that in action more than the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

One of her acts as Justice minister, which didn't go widely reported, Mr. Speaker, was to remove the jail sentences for people who couldn't pay fines. That means that if people were caught jaywalking or committing some other small infraction that they were fined for and for reasons that were beyond their control couldn't afford to pay the fine, in the past those people were sent to jail, and some of those people were killed in jail. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View put an end to that barbaric practice, so no longer in the province of Alberta can somebody be sent and possibly killed for crossing the street at the wrong location, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for that.

I also highlighted her work tackling rural crime. Of course, she invested a significant amount of money in hiring new prosecutors, developing courthouses in the city of Red Deer, investing in ALERT, of course a program that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed cut when he was a federal cabinet minister. You know, this was tremendously successful, so successful, in fact, that the current MP, Shannon Stubbs, actually congratulated the Justice minister on the excellent work that she did in tackling rural crime, so I want to thank her for doing that.

I also want to take the opportunity to extend to her thanks on the good work that she did in shepherding cannabis legalization through this House, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I think Alberta is a much better place because of the excellent work that she did on that file.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today and deliver my maiden speech, a response to the throne speech, but before I do, I'd like to congratulate Mr. Speaker on his election as Deputy Chair of Committees. I certainly watched with anticipation and excitement through your election, and I'm very grateful that you, sir, are here in this Chamber with us today.

I rise today in the spirit of gratitude to deliver this speech. I am grateful to the Hon. Lois Mitchell for her continued service to this province of Alberta as Her Majesty's representative, as Lieutenant Governor, and for the eloquent manner in which she delivered the throne speech.

I'm also very grateful to the people of Cardston-Siksika who, with an over 70 per cent mandate, trusted me with their vote to represent them in this Chamber and with that vote thrust upon me the yoke of public office and a mantle that I find myself unworthy to bear on my own but am willing and capable with the support of friends, family, and fellow members of caucus.

I'm grateful to the best campaign team a political candidate could ever ask for, always willing to rise to the occasion when called upon. My team, led by the amazing – I emphasize amazing – Stacey Atwood, demonstrated that love and commitment to community will always triumph over fear and division.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also grateful for the example set for me by those who honourably served my community within these very walls years before I ever stepped foot in this building. From Little Bow: David Schneider, Barry McFarland, and Ray Speaker. From further to the south: the hon. associate minister for red tape reduction and Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, Gary Bikman; Paul Hinman; Bryce Jacobs. And going further back, if you'll permit me: Jack Ady and John Thompson. Each individual laid their own bricks along the path I walk today. To them I say thank you.

Most importantly, I'd like to express love and gratitude to my family. To my wife, Nicole, for her unconditional support and patience as she elected to sit next to me in the front seat of this political roller coaster that we got on five years ago and who knows when we'll ever get off: love you, Babe; to my kids, Olive and Atlas, for their hugs and kisses; to my mom and to my dad, who taught me how to work and how to play; to my brothers David, Jonathan, Daniel, and Benjamin and my lone sister – but don't feel bad for her – who from a young age taught me patience, teamwork, and unconditional love.

I'm also grateful for the get-it-done attitude that built this province, and the men and women across Alberta who personify it each and every day. In particular, I want to tell you about one of these people, to some just a man but to me and many others an absolute hero. His name was Leonard Jack Harker. Jack was born under humble circumstances in southern Alberta in September 1922. Like many other young boys his age, Jack got to work early on a farm, thinning sugar beets in the dry Alberta heat. It was back-breaking labour, make no mistake, but nothing he couldn't handle. Jack eventually started a trucking company with his father, where he worked until the age of 18, at which point he enlisted in Her Majesty's Royal Canadian Air Force to fight Hitler's Germany in World War II.

Not many people expected much from this small-town southern Alberta boy, but his natural intelligence and charisma landed him in the pilot's seat of a Halifax bomber commanded by the 415 Squadron, commanding a crew of six flying missions in defence of our freedom. I'm grateful to him and to his crew. After victory was declared and the war was won, Jack returned home to southern Alberta to resume his place within the family business, but something was obviously missing. The front seat of a sugar beet truck could not compare to the cockpit of an airplane, so Jack left a career of running the family business for a life high in the big blue sky, where he felt most at home.

Though he faced many setbacks along his career as a pilot, Jack's determination and get-it-done attitude eventually led him to the pinnacle of his craft and his career when he became the director of flight training for the government of Canada. A will to succeed can take you as far as you want, and for Jack it took him miles above the Earth. Not bad for a small-town kid from Magrath, Alberta; not bad for my grandfather, Leonard Jack Harker.

Mr. Speaker, this is the story of Alberta. It is not unique to Jack. He died in 2008, but his example touched the lives of my entire family and countless others around him in the same way that members in this Chamber, I'm certain, have been influenced by their own families, their friends, or mentors. Alberta is replete with similar success stories, and they all sound the same: a person has a dream, sets out to accomplish it, overcomes impossible odds and insurmountable obstacles along the way. It's what makes me so proud to be an Albertan. But lately Alberta's potential has laid dormant. Recently over 180,000 men and women remained at home each day, unemployed and failing to magnify their potential, through no fault of their own. Truly a heart-breaking state of affairs.

In the highly underrated 1993 mob film A Bronx Tale local boss Sonny gives the young protagonist Calogero, a.k.a. C, a profound piece of advice when he simply states: the saddest thing in life is wasted potential. Well, Mr. Speaker, it's time we embraced the get-it-done attitude that built this province and unleashed the full potential of Albertans.

What is a province or even a constituency without the people? I would venture to say that Cardston-Siksika is one of the most culturally and economically diverse blocks in Alberta. To the south small towns like Glenwood, Hill Spring, Mountain View, Cardston, and Magrath are populated by members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and some others, predominantly members of that church, whose pioneer ancestors ventured north from Utah to southern Alberta generations ago in the face of extreme conditions in search of economic prosperity and religious freedom. Heaven knows, they didn't come for the weather.

Further to the centre Picture Butte, Iron Springs, Diamond City, and Nobleford were the landing places for Dutch immigrants who began settling in Alberta following the Second World War, a trend that I'm told was a big result of the fond memories of Canadian soldiers who liberated Holland from the Nazis. Since then thousands of new immigrants have joined their families on Canadian soil, including Johannes Van Maanen in 1977.

Further to the north agriculture towns like Lomond, Vauxhall, Vulcan, and Arrowwood are populated by some of the hardest working and diligent Albertans I have ever had the privilege of meeting throughout the course of the campaign and look forward to serving through my tenure in office.

My constituency of Cardston-Siksika is also home to two of the largest reserves in Canada. The Kainai Nation, also known as the Blood Tribe, is bordered by the Oldman, St. Mary, and Belly rivers. The Blood Tribe is home to over 13,000 people, with over 5,000 who live on-reserve. The Siksika Nation encompasses the mighty Bow River, that runs through the reserve. It is home to 7,800 people, with over 4,000 on-reserve.

Both the Blood Tribe and the Siksika Nation are proud members of the Blackfoot Confederacy, and both have overcome the diversity and colonization and generalization trauma as a result of residential schools. They value oral histories and have kept their Blackfoot traditions alive for hundreds of years, traditions I am genuinely excited to learn more about. Many of the Blackfoot people in both the Blood Tribe and Siksika continue to teach the importance of their way of life. They're also still active in traditional societies and Sundance celebrations, and the Blackfoot people understand the value of hard work in creating a healthier and prosperous future for their people. Both reserves boast an increasing percentage of postsecondary graduates entering the workforce. Many have found employment in Alberta's industry and continue to support the Alberta economy. From visits I have made to the reserves, I understand that family committees are the foundation of their culture. As Siksika reels from the devastating floods of 2013 and the Blood Tribe fights a courageous battle against the opioid crisis, I hope to do my best to represent these two strong nations as their MLA.

And what of industry? Cardston-Siksika does over $2 billion annually in farm gate sales, making it one of the largest agriculture-producing constituencies in the province. Each day men and women get up and produce food that feeds our province, feeds the country, and feeds the world. But it doesn't come easily. Farmers are looking to us to reduce the stress and the burden, and it starts with cutting the regulatory burden and working to improve trade negotiations that have left many producers, especially of canola, worried about the future of their operations.

Arthur C. Brooks wrote in his book The Conservative Heart that when Ronald Reagan made his case for the American people, he didn't spend a lot of time talking about what he was fighting against. He spent most of his speech talking about what he was fighting for. I am proud to be part of a government that's fighting for a better Alberta. I'm proud to be part of a government that takes the fiscal, social, and environmental future of this province seriously, with a measured approach to support our job creators and most vital sectors.

In the throne speech the Lieutenant Governor said:

No economic hardship has ever ruined us. No political enmity has ever defeated us. No natural disaster has ever stopped us. Our success, our resiliency, and our yet-untapped potential is a powerful magnet that continues to attract ambitious and talented newcomers from across Canada and [across] the world.

Mr. Speaker, Cardston-Siksika is a proud constituency and one that I am honoured to represent. I'm honoured to stand in this House among distinguished colleagues to take this province forward in what we believe to be the right direction.

Winston Churchill once said, "You have enemies? Good. That means you've stood up for something, sometime in your life." Certainly, over the course of my tenure in office I'm certain there will be those who will not like the things that we do, possibly the members across the aisle, but I understand that it's all of our duties to do what is best for Alberta.

On a clear day living in Cardston you can see off in the distance Old Chief Mountain. What was once a mountain often climbed by many is now difficult and precarious because of erosion. My grandfather, Paul Schow, spoke of it often and loved to climb it. Similar to Chief Mountain, for the past four years the economy in this province has begun to erode. The United Conservative government is committed to ensuring that we right the ship and get the province back to work so we can ensure that we have a province that is strong and free.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for the comments, hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika and deputy government whip.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any members? I see the hon. Member for Peace River standing for questions and comments.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika for a wonderful speech. I was particularly interested in how geography has shaped so much of your constituency's past, whether it be the First Nations in the Blackfoot or the first settlers in the church of Latter-day Saints or the Dutch farmers that came. The landscape has formed and continues to shape so many of those people. Could you speak to the House a little bit about how the landscape and the geography continues to shape the way that you hope to represent your constituents?

Mr. Schow: I'd like to thank the hon. member for his question. The landscape is, without question, unique. I remember that in the month of March I put about 6,000 kilometres on my truck as I drove around visiting with constituents from the north and southern parts and everywhere else within Cardston-Siksika. In that time I learned something very important about Cardston-Siksika: it's united. It is indeed united, and it is unity that I believe brought us here today. Unity is what I committed to years ago when I joined in support of the now Premier his endeavour to unite the two legacy Conservative parties in this province.

My grandfather, Jack Harker, didn't talk a lot about the war, but he did say a couple of things. One was very intriguing. When he would go out on bomber missions, these weren't solo flights; they'd go out in large groups, huge, sometimes hundreds of planes. The idea was that you stayed close together to avoid enemy fire. Though the ride inside the pack was rough and difficult and sometimes very turbulent, it was much safer there than for those who decided to venture out to smoother skies, who were more vulnerable to enemy fire from fighter planes.

Life isn't always difficult. We're going to disagree on quite a bit, but I'm committed, as I believe this government is committed, to focusing on what unites us. There will be turbulent skies ahead in this province, of that I am certain, but it is worth it because nothing worth having ever came easy. That's what I believe, that's what my grandfather Jack believed in, and that's what the history of this province is built upon. We can do hard things. We've proven it. We've gotten this far, and moving forward, we will show again that the Alberta way of life is worth fighting for.

11:00

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I see the hon. Member for Sherwood Park who would like to speak.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations to my colleague and the Member for Cardston-Siksika on his wonderful maiden speech.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour as the Member for Sherwood Park to respond to the Speech from the Throne presented by the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta. I would like to thank Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor for laying out the agenda for the 30th Legislature.

I also want to thank my constituents for bestowing upon me the honour to represent them in the Legislature. Sherwood Park is a thriving community, as is our municipality of Strathcona county. I am forever grateful to the people of Sherwood Park for the great honour they have conferred upon me in electing me as their MLA.

Mr. Speaker, I am excited about the Premier's vision for Alberta and his commitment to get Alberta back on track with thoughtful, common-sense policies. Alberta has traditionally been a leader in Canadian Confederation, an exceptional people and province. I am heartened to know that we have a Premier who understands our history and shares these sentiments proudly. We are fortunate to have a leader like him with his experience and strong leadership, who is committed to once more making Alberta the best it can be, a leader nationally and internationally, ensuring that our province once more becomes the ultimate platform for wealth creation, opportunity generation, and individual self-realization. Alberta: the ultimate land of opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne sets forth our new government's legislative agenda. The priorities are, namely, getting Albertans back to work, making life better for Albertans, and standing up for Alberta. With the aim of achieving these priorities, our new government's top five commitments are, in no particular order: our job-creation plan; repealing the carbon tax; as well, we will focus like a laser on getting our fiscal house in order and balancing the budget over the next four years; also, we are committed to standing up for Alberta against the Trudeau Liberals in Ottawa and other groups that are trying to land-lock our interests and undermine our prosperity; finally, we are committed to protecting quality health care and education.

Mr. Speaker, I am excited about our new government's legislative agenda, centred on improving Albertans' quality of life and focused on jobs, the economy, and pipelines. I am humbled and overjoyed that we received a historic mandate to implement this ambitious and much-needed agenda.

Now, Mr. Speaker, moving on, I would also like to extend my congratulations to you on your recent election to your honourable office. I have watched you from afar for a long time with great admiration and respect and have had the pleasure to get to know you personally over the last little while or so, and it has been very rewarding. I have the utmost confidence that you will carry out your duties with fairness, wisdom, and the most sound judgment.

Next, I would also like to extend my congratulations to the new cabinet. I have full confidence that you will perform excellently and honourably for Albertans as you implement our new government's vision for getting our province back on track. I wish you all the best, and your colleagues who sit as private members are ready and willing to assist you.

I would also like to extend my congratulations to all members of this Assembly on your successful elections. I look forward to working with you all for the betterment of Alberta.

I would also like to recognize and thank my direct predecessor, the hon. Annie McKittrick, for her years of service to Sherwood Park from 2015 to 2019 and for her efforts to make our community a better place to live. I salute and thank all other Sherwood Park MLAs who came before me since the Sherwood Park riding was created in 1986.

With that, I would like to comment proudly more about my community, constituency, and municipality, which are all intrinsically linked, Mr. Speaker. The Sherwood Park constituency comprises roughly two-thirds of the hamlet of Sherwood Park. The said hamlet was established around 1955, with the first family, the Gordon Walker family, no relation, residentially moving in in December 1955, followed a month later by Cliff Otto and the Jean Dawdy families, respectively. Since 1996 Sherwood Park is part of and governed by the specialized municipality of Strathcona county, one of Alberta's largest municipalities by population. Strathcona county includes both urban and rural components. Out of roughly 98,000 residents 71,300 live in the urban area, with the remaining 27,000 living in the rural components.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Madam Speaker, going back to the history of my riding and municipality of Strathcona county, I would go way back and point out that, legally speaking, the genesis point for Strathcona county was in 1893, when the area was established as fire and labour district No. 2 by the then government of the Northwest Territories. Over the next hundred years what would eventually become Strathcona county evolved in structure and name until 1996, when it was formally established.

The region that would become Strathcona county welcomed industrial development following the discovery of oil in our region after the Second World War. Sherwood Park was established as a community to provide living accommodations to refinery workers and their families. Since then Strathcona county has developed a strong economic base that has grown and diversified, with energy remaining the foundation of our dynamic local economy, which contributes greatly to Alberta's prosperity.

Madam Speaker, today the Sherwood Park constituency is home to two of three oil refineries in Strathcona county. Together the three refineries in the county produce 462,000 barrels per day of crude oil, or 62 per cent of all refining in western Canada. Furthermore, numerous other heavy industries and related manufacturing operations complement the county's peerless refining power. As well, through partnerships with other municipalities and industry the county has been able to attract investment domestically and internationally to grow its industrial base and expand its commercial operations.

Perhaps the best example of such co-operative partnerships is Alberta's Industrial Heartland, which is the largest industrial area in western Canada and is a development initiative between five municipalities in the region, including Strathcona county. Alberta's Industrial Heartland, established about 20 years ago, is Canada's energy engine, being our nation's largest hydrocarbon processing centre, producing 75 per cent of petrochemical refining in Canada, a driver of the local and provincial economies, prosperity, and quality of life. Over 30,000 Albertans are employed directly or indirectly in the Industrial Heartland, which is home to more than 40 petrochemical companies and $40 billion of existing investment.

Madam Speaker, Strathcona county is also an entrepreneurial hub. We have over 11,000 businesses and require no business tax or business licensure. Strathcona county is working, and due to our business-friendly climate we continue to attract investment, with more than $10 billion of investment announced, under construction, or recently completed.

Besides our many economic successes, Madam Speaker, Sherwood Park and Strathcona county are widely considered one of the best places to live in Alberta and Canada, quite frankly. Key quality of life indicators from infrastructure to the environment all point to a high quality of life in Strathcona county. In terms of quality-of-life infrastructure – get ready, everyone – we have 12 major recreational facilities, including the renowned Millennium Place, which is a megarecreation centre, along with a fine theatre in Festival Place, a gorgeous library, our own hospital, four art galleries, 200 sports fields, 229 kilometres of trails, over 3,000 hectares of natural areas, 147 playgrounds, nine golf courses, 17 tennis courts, 27 outdoor rinks, and I could go on and on.

Madam Speaker, it is enjoyable to talk about and promote my riding of Sherwood Park and my municipality of Strathcona county. I could go on happily all day, but I would like to also mention a bit about myself. Before becoming the MLA for Sherwood Park, I was a civil servant with the government of Alberta working in foreign qualification recognition and immigration as an officer. I enjoyed my time working with the government agencies of the international qualifications assessment service as well as the Alberta immigrant nominee program, IQAS and AINP respectively. The clientele we served were primarily new Albertans. It was an honour to assist mainly new Albertans through having their foreign credentials recognized and helping them achieve permanent residency. Given my professional background and passion for international relations I will always be a champion for new Albertans, and that is a great honour for me.

My passion for international relations, Madam Speaker, developed as a boy. The world has always fascinated me, thus both my postsecondary degrees focused on international relations. As the MLA for Sherwood Park I take this lifelong passion with me and firmly believe Alberta's economic destiny is a global one. I see the Asia Pacific as a critical region for Alberta to expand its presence in, in particular. I believe Alberta must build strong relations with Japan, for example, the world's third-largest economy and one of the most technologically advanced nations on earth and a fellow democracy.

Madam Speaker, there exists great economic, strategic, and cultural complementarity between Japan and Alberta. I have had a long and intimate connection with Japan. A long time ago I taught ESL there and fell in love with that country and a local, who is now my wife. I speak very basic Japanese, too, though it's fairly rusty as I've been pretty busy with some other pursuits, including, of course, elected office and getting Alberta back on track.

Madam Speaker, this year marks the 90th anniversary of diplomatic relations between Canada and Japan, and next year will mark the 50th anniversary of the opening of the government of Alberta's first international office, which was opened in Tokyo, Japan, in 1970. These are incredible milestone events that we should cherish, recognize, and build upon. Now is a great time to build strong relations with Japan, Alberta's third-largest trading partner, because the nation's politics have never been more stable, strong, and open to international partnerships. Under the national leadership of Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, Japan has become the most economically and politically stable democracy in the developed world. I will continue to be a strong advocate for Alberta-Japan relations as well as for Alberta to be deeply engaged in the world abroad for the benefit of Albertans here at home.

Madam Speaker, I got involved in politics because I am a patriotic Albertan who deeply loves my community and province. I fundamentally believe Alberta is an exceptional place not because of what is in the ground but fundamentally because of what is in the hearts and minds of the Alberta people, our free-enterprise culture and values passed down to us by our ancestors. It is that, our unique, freedom-loving culture, which has made us Canada's ultimate opportunity society. Thus, my love of province and passion to advocate for our traditional free-enterprise values led me to get involved in politics, and it's been an amazing journey, one which I'm deeply grateful for.

Penultimately, Madam Speaker, I want to state that I am especially proud to be part of a Conservative government committed to putting Albertans back to work, standing up for Alberta, and focusing on renewing the Alberta economy and defending our energy sector, which remains the foundation of our prosperity and will be so for decades, decades, and decades to come. Our new government has received a strong mandate from Albertans. They have put their faith in our government. It is a great honour to be conferred this responsibility by Albertans to manage their affairs. I pledge to my constituents and all Albertans my sacred honour and commit to do my very best in my capacity as MLA for Sherwood Park and a member of this new government.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I would again like to thank Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor for her thoughtful words, and I want to thank the Premier for his inspiring leadership and fierce commitment to Albertans.

Madam Speaker, it has been a great honour to rise today and speak. I will end my speech with the call to all members of this House and all Albertans to renew our sense of hope as we focus on the rejuvenation of Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you might be interested to know – and you probably already know – that the people of Japan will now be eating our wonderful Alberta beef.

Mr. Walker: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, or as I should say [Remarks in Japanese]. I was listening with interest. The hon. member is such a strong advocate for his community, but, Madam Speaker, I was wondering, through you to the hon. member, if I'd be able to ask the hon. member, with his experience in working in foreign credentials as an officer in immigration, with our campaign platform and commitments to welcoming newcomers, if he'd be able to tell us a little bit about his experience and how that might have informed those campaign commitments and his interest in seeing those commitments going forward.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Minister of Health for his great question and incredible Japanese. Sugoi. Amazing. Sugoi means great, for Hansard.

Yeah. My time as a foreign qualification recognition officer was a great honour, and I certainly learned a lot. It made me appreciate just how much Alberta is diversifying in terms of its population and how people, including new Albertans, continue to strive to come here because we remain the ultimate land of hope and opportunity.

You know, I'm very excited about our campaign platform. It is very dynamic, and we have a robust, ambitious, and much-needed foreign qualification recognition, fairness for new Albertans platform. I've thoroughly reviewed it. I one hundred per cent support it. I gave it two big thumbs up. As a professional and expert in that area I can tell you that stakeholders are so excited that this is getting so much attention because we have a unique situation where our Premier is actually a legitimate, real, top-level expert in foreign qualification recognition and immigration, and that shows in the platform. I'm just so excited. This FQR and immigration platform, Minister of Health, will strongly deliver for new Albertans, and I'll make sure that I'm at the table, too, to give my insights.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any more comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and I want to thank the Member for Sherwood Park for his comments. I listened with a great deal of interest, and I just wanted to provide a few comments in response to some of the things he mentioned. Of course, our ridings share a common boundary, and the people of Sherwood Park and Edmonton-Gold Bar travel back and forth to each other's constituencies. I have many residents of Sherwood Park who take advantage of the excellent schools in Edmonton-Gold Bar. Of course, Edmonton public is one of the best school boards in the entire province, and many people from Sherwood Park choose to bring their children into schools like Donnan, Vimy Ridge, the Suzuki School to make sure that their kids get an excellent education in small-sized classrooms.

I am deeply concerned, Madam Speaker, that the Member for Red Deer-North is going to take a giant axe to the public school budget, resulting in a number of closures of the schools that both my constituents and the Member for Sherwood Park's constituents currently enjoy. I was greatly concerned that on April 17, the day after the election was concluded, the Edmonton Catholic school board had already decided to close one of the schools. St. Gabriel school is set for closure. Of course, you know, they can see what's in the wind, and I think they're getting ahead of the curve and trying to make sure that the axe that's set to fall on them – they're dealing with it already.

I know that many students at St. Gabe's came from Sherwood Park, so I would plead with the Member for Sherwood Park to lean on his colleague the Member for Red Deer-North and his cabinet colleagues to not cut the budgets of our public schools because his residents will suffer as much as mine, if not more, Madam Speaker. I plead with the Member for Sherwood Park to actually act in the best interests of his constituents and mine and convince his cabinet colleagues to back off on their plans to devastate the budgets of the public school system here in Alberta.

I also plead with the Member for Sherwood Park because we have similar economic interests. He mentioned that the county of Sherwood Park is home to the Industrial Heartland. Many of the residents of Edmonton-Gold Bar rely on their jobs in the Industrial Heartland for their well-being.

11:20

The Deputy Speaker: I believe, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, that you were referring to the Minister of Education as opposed to the Member for Red Deer-North, correct?

Mr. Schmidt: They're both the same person.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and give my response to the Speech from the Throne. Of course, it was delivered on March 22 by the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, and I must say that I was most surprised by what the speech did not contain as opposed to what it did.

I guess the significant pieces that were missing for me were why I fundamentally became involved in politics, and it seemed like the Speech from the Throne was silent on many issues that I think are so important to the province of Alberta. Of course, I'm talking about fairness and justice. I'm talking about structural social services. Those matters were glanced at in the Speech from the Throne. It was disturbing to sit there and have those fundamental parts of a healthy society missing. I feel I want to take this time to address that and talk about the very fundamental importance of having structural social services in our province. Of course, I'm coming from the vantage point of 30 years as a social worker. I'm a trained social worker. I worked front-line social work for many, many years, so it is even more disturbing because of my educational background.

I think what's important, too, is just my experience as, you know, a human being in this province, growing up in this province. I grew up in a small town in the Peace Country, Valleyview. Really, my experience as a child motivated me to become a social worker and then, ultimately, a politician because social work had its limits. I couldn't do as much as I wanted to. I didn't have as much authority or power. I sort of unwillingly but eventually did decide to step forward and become a politician and a social worker. I'm still a registered social worker in this province and a very, very, very proud one.

I grew up in a very small town, 1,200 people when I lived there, and it was an oil town. I grew up in a town that, you know, had a lot of problems. It had high rates of addiction and violence. There still is and was at that time an Indian reserve right next to it, Sturgeon Lake band. There was a tremendous amount of violence on the reserve, lots of problems, lots of racism, anger between the two communities. I remember people saying, "Well, we have such a large RCMP detachment here because it's a great training place," because there was so much violence and so much difficulty.

There's also a whole bunch of sexism in my town. I remember sitting at my kitchen table with my mom and her friend. She worked for an oil company, and she was talking about how she got half the wages of a male doing exactly the same job. Granted – granted – you know, I'm almost 60 years old. This was a while ago, but that's where I grew up. That shaped my view as a young girl, shaped my view as a woman, and motivated me to do a lot of what I have done in my life.

Another thing that really motivated me, too, is that I remember in grade 6 – right now Sturgeon Lake does have their own school, and kids from the Sturgeon Lake band do go to school on-reserve. But when I was a kid, they came to town. They were bused in because there was no school on-reserve. I can remember that my best friend in grade 6 was Verline Gauthier. She was a great gal. We had lots of fun together. Then we were all going to grade 7 at Hillside high school, but, you know, Verline never came, and she wasn't alone. There were many indigenous children that never even made the transition to junior high.

Besides sexism, racism, violence, addiction issues rampant in the community that I grew up in – I just thought: "Oh, my goodness, there needs to be something better. Why isn't anybody fixing this?" I can remember as a young kid wondering: "What's going on? What's happening in this province?" This – I don't know – mythological Alberta advantage was never visited on me or my community, really. So when people talk about the Alberta advantage, I think: wow; you live in a completely different world than I ever lived in.

I'm going just to throw in a few social work words that I think other professions use, too. Hopefully, I don't lose anybody in that. I'm sort of talking about the larger societal context right now, the macro, right? Besides sort of these challenges in the community that I grew up in, there were also microchallenges or microsystems that happened. Then you're looking at the individual, you're looking at the family system.

I grew up in an intact family system. There were three kids, mom, and dad. Both of my parents had mental health issues. Consequently, because of that, specifically my father would self-medicate. He would drink excessively. He had addiction issues. Of course, that caused a lot of issues for the family that I grew up in. My dad is 90. He's an amazing man and I love him deeply, but he had tremendous problems. Because of that, he had difficulty earning an income, supporting our family. We had challenges in our family system. My mom was a school teacher, and she had a stable income. She was part of a union, so her earnings were protected, she had holidays, and she had all sorts of support. Our family was definitely a middle-class family, but we had many, many challenges.

I just always remember as a kid thinking: "Why isn't someone helping us? What's going on here?" I'm just sort of giving you the macro, and this is the micro sort of view of the way I grew up and what sort of formed me and motivated me to do what I've done. I really saw social work as the pathway to actually creating a better society, and all these years later I'm so proud of my profession and believe that it really fundamentally makes a difference in people's lives.

There are lots of barriers to social workers making changes in our system, and maybe I'll talk a little bit about that. I taught social policy for years at university, and one of the best ways for me to help my students understand sort of the things that we need to do and the fairness and justice, how we need to do it, is just by telling a little bit of a story, so I'm going to tell a little story. Let's just use the North Saskatchewan because here we are in Edmonton.

I'm walking down the North Saskatchewan River. The river is flowing by me, and it's a beautiful, sunny day, probably a day just like today. Today is a magnificent day. We're walking along, and I'm just looking at the sun, and I'm looking at the birds and enjoying my walk. Then all of a sudden I hear someone yell: "Help! Help! Help! I'm drowning! Help!" And I'm, like, "What?" And I look over, and sure enough, someone is flailing in the water. So I run over, and I'm able to catch them and pull them out and save them, and they're so grateful. They're so grateful to me. They're just, like: "Oh, you saved my life. I'm so lucky you walked by. Thank you so much for saving me." I just say: "Are you all right? Is everything okay?" Blah, blah, blah. They're fine, so they just walk on their way. I think: "Wow. I'm so glad I was there to help them." Then I just think: "Oh, what should I do? I'll just keep walking on my walk."

11:30

I'm walking along on my walk, and then, not very much longer, again there's someone in the same situation. Someone is drowning. They're yelling: "Help, help! I'm drowning!" So I go over, and once again I pull them out of the water. I save them again, and I'm like: "Are you all right? What happened?" Oh, they're fine. You know, they're just grateful, of course, that I'm there to help them again. I'm like: "Whoa. What are the chances of that?" That's so bizarre, you know? But I'm glad I was there and that I could help them. What should I do? So I'm going to go for another walk. I'm just going to keep going. Why not? It's a nice day, so I go again. And then again someone is yelling at me. They're saying: "Help, help! I'm drowning!" You know what I did this time? I don't go save them. I go run upstream and find out who's pushing them in.

That's the difference between doing a charity model of social programs, where you just give people things. You save them, or you actually change the fundamental roots of inequality and justice. Of course, that's not true. I happily will go save that person. Of course, if someone is hungry, absolutely you feed them. You do both. You don't do one or the other. In a healthy society, certainly Canada and Alberta with our tremendous riches, you absolutely change the fundamental structure to create equality. We know that societies that have equality, that don't have so much disparity in income are much, much healthier than societies with a big difference. That's why that's fundamental. Certainly, that really illustrates what, you know, we must do as politicians.

In my value system I believe people are equal, people deserve supports, like I talked about in my member's statement yesterday. When I was a young single mom, I had hardly any money, and I was going back to university to study. I had children. At that time – and this was, as I said, many, many years ago – there was support for me to be able to live in subsidized housing so I could better myself. You know, as I said then and I'll say again now, I mean, I've been a good investment. I've certainly paid taxes for many, many years. I've got a good income like the rest of you here, and I've been able to support my children also to grow into adults and be successful.

You know, the throne speech talks about charity. It doesn't talk about fundamental social justice. That really makes me concerned. Maybe I'll just talk a little bit more about the distinction between charity and justice. Charity provides direct services like food, clothing, shelter. Justice promotes social change in institutions or political structures. Charity is directed at the effects of injustice, its symptoms. Justice transforms systems by alleviating the root causes of injustice. As I said before when I was telling that story, we need both. We can't just leave people hungry or homeless. We need to do both. We need to do things to change our system.

I just want to quote a little bit from a paper I was reading that talks about the shortcomings of charity and why even though the throne speech talks about charity and sort of seems to suggest that that's the way to go, it's really not. It's not enough. It does provide some relief, but there needs to be so much more.

This article is by David Pfrimmer, and it's from Evidence Network: Charity is simply not enough. "Citizens for Public Justice [propose] an impressive six-point plan. [It] could nudge the government in several worthwhile directions, including indexing the child [tax] benefit." You know, that's something that when the NDP government was in, we created an Alberta child tax benefit. These are the core, root things that we need to do, provide more safe and affordable housing.

Well, as the former Minister of Seniors and Housing we invested $1.2 billion. That was, like, unprecedented in this province. That was four times more than the previous Conservative government inputted. We made homes for thousands of people so that they could live in dignity.

He also talks about "establishing a national pharmacare program, providing improved access to skills training and funding for indigenous education" – certainly, these are actions that we took – "and a national child care program." Well, everybody . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I appreciate very much the stories that you shared and your comments in particular about education and the importance of a strong public education system and your own experience growing up in Valleyview, where my mom went to school with you as well. I know you got to grow up together. As a former teacher and school administrator I get concerned when I hear some of this coded language around choice in education, and I worry what that means for supports and resources for our public schools. So I'd like to ask the Member for Edmonton-Riverview just to elaborate a little bit on her perspective regarding a strong public education system and what you've heard from your own constituents on that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Okay. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Certainly, I am a strong proponent of the public education system, and certainly in my riding of Edmonton-Riverview I hear that from many constituents. We want to make sure that, you know, again, just going back to the understanding between what social justice, what a justice model would look like, regardless of people's income levels, socioeconomic backgrounds, nationalities, ethnicities, they are all welcome at a public school and supported well in that.

I've got a few teachers in my family. My mom is a teacher; my brother is a teacher; I don't know, probably six or seven of my aunts are teachers; and my eldest son is a schoolteacher. Everybody thought that I was going to be a teacher, and I think that I kind of, you know, sort of tricked them by becoming a social worker. Then I did start teaching, but I was teaching at the university. So somehow that teaching bug was certainly in my family.

I know how important it is when we know, too – it's really the game changer when kids have a strong public education system regardless of their economic background. That really creates a pathway for them to have success. I know that throughout my, you know, going beyond just public education, like, from K to 12, my going back to school – I mean, I have a BA in political science from when I was 21, but I went back to school when I was a single mom when I was 30 and got my bachelor of social work and my master's of social work – I just know that that changed my life, going to school later on and having supports to do that. I had affordable housing.

I did also because I was seen – and, again, this is a very long time ago – as a population that the government at that time, and it was a Conservative government, wanted to support, disadvantaged populations like myself. Especially when I was doing my master's, I got some grants to support me and my family, which I've greatly appreciated.

Sadly, you know, it was in the early '90s when the government came in, and they slashed all those grants. It made a huge difference. I was in the middle of my master's program at that time. Of course, that was when public programs were cut by 50 per cent by the Conservative government. Really, since that time, it's just been a very lack of willingness to support public infrastructure. Certainly, as a front-line social worker, too, you know, it was – I mean, that's what really motivated me to get involved in politics. I was so disturbed by the limited resources we had to support extremely vulnerable people, who really had so much adversity. If they could have been given a bit of support, it could've made a big difference for themselves and their children. But the government was – I don't know – I just want to say cruel, not thinking about what a difference it makes and how much people are its best asset.

I just want to go back to how sad I was to see that the throne speech really missed a huge part of what I think is fundamental to a healthy society and certainly the province I love and how I want very much to make sure that that province is for everyone. That mythical Alberta advantage isn't for everyone. You know, maybe there is a group of people who do benefit, but I know a heck of a lot of people who don't, so we need to stop that and make it an inclusive province, make sure that everyone is – and what can we do to create steps for people to overcome barriers that they might have.

One of the things that I was super proud of when we were government, Madam Speaker, was that we had gender parity in cabinet.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. chief deputy whip.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've enjoyed the debate this morning on the throne speech, but I move to adjourn debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. You cannot move to adjourn debate because you have already spoken to this.

Is there anybody else wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 2

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

[Adjourned debate May 28: Ms Sweet]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 2? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business.

I think the intent of this bill, like Bill 1, is pretty much the same in what this bill is trying to do. It's also trying to reverse the progress and take Alberta backwards in many aspects like taking your overtime, cutting your holiday pay, and lowering your wages, and all that is done to give a huge tax break of $4 billion to the most wealthy in our province. It's simply an attack on the workers in this province, on their rights such as an eight-hour workday. If we talk about that, there's a long history of people across this country, across this continent who fought for this eight-hour workday and who fought for overtime pay. Those things are attacked by this piece of legislation, such as minimum wage. That was brought forward somewhere in 1918 in Canada, first in Manitoba and then in Saskatchewan and then British Columbia, to protect women and children, and essentially this legislation is attacking those rights as well.

We are told that our finances are not in good shape, that we are going through a rough time. We look at the history of the minimum wage, those changes like regulating overtime pay, for instance. In the United States those changes were done in 1938, during the recession times, with the Fair Labor Standards Act by President Roosevelt. Again, that brought in the minimum wage, ended child labour, and regulated overtime pay. And here we are. This legislation before the House is trying to reverse the progress that we made in the last four years under the leadership of our leader and the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

The changes we brought forward were done in a thoughtful manner, in consultation with all those who were concerned about it, and they were made to bring Alberta in line with the rest of Canada. At that point we knew that Alberta's labour laws had not been touched for two, three decades, and they were not in line with the rest of Canada. So the changes we brought forward were common-sense changes, were the rights that Canadians have enjoyed all across this country except for Alberta, because previous successive Conservative governments didn't pay attention to those things. For instance, these changes were in response to public fatality inquiries. One that comes to mind is the Wolski inquiry. Things recommended in that inquiry were also incorporated in the changes we made to the labour laws.

For instance, changes were made where it was mandated that workers have the right to know the risks related to their workplace, the right to be part of those safety procedures, those committees, and their right to refuse unsafe work. And there were instances where individual Albertans were fired for taking care of their kids who were sick, who were in hospitals. So those things were covered under the changes we made.

The changes we made were good for workers. They were good for women. They were good for children. We raised the minimum wage to $15. We know from evidence that two-thirds of those who are earning the minimum wage are women. That was the change that was directed to make sure that those who are earning the minimum wage have enough to put food on the table and have shelter.

Madam Speaker, I have worked minimum wage jobs – convenience stores, pizza delivery, all those kinds of jobs – and I know, from 10-plus years' experience, what it means to work at minimum wage and what it means when you get a 50-cent increase, a dollar increase in your minimum wage. Before becoming a lawyer in 2012, I had done that for, like, a long time, throughout my student life. Not all those who are earning the minimum wage – let me put it this way. Those who are earning the minimum wage: most of the time they do have responsibilities for their families. They are supporting their families. Lowering the wage for youth workers is like shutting opportunities for them. It's making it difficult for them to get shelter, to meet their needs. This change is taking Alberta backwards. It's an attack on the workers across this province.

With respect to overtime pay it will affect almost a quarter of a million Albertans across this province in the oil and gas industry, in construction. Like Canadians in other provinces, they were given this choice to bank their overtime, like any other Canadian, and had enjoyed that right. Those changes were made. Now what we are seeing is that this piece of legislation is taking us backwards and taking that right away as well.

I have worked in a homeless shelter in Calgary, and I was working 24 hours every week and working at minimum wage and supporting myself, supporting my family, going to school. When I would take time to get an additional shift on holidays, that was a huge support. I think that people, when they work overtime, work with a view to making sure their needs are met and that for those they support and have obligations to, their needs are met. But what this legislation, again, is doing is taking away those rights which Canadians in other provinces do enjoy today.

The youth wage: they are cutting it by $2. Again, we are asked to believe that somehow that will increase jobs, but the way we can create jobs is not by cutting their pay. The way we can create jobs is what we did in 2015. There used to be a program called the STEP program, the summer temporary employment program. By 2015 the previous government had discontinued it. When we became government, we started that program. This is how you create jobs for the youth. You invest in youth. You create opportunities for them. You work with employers. You work with students so they can get the jobs, so they can get the experience. But, being a student of economics, I've never heard of this, that by cutting the wages of youth, you will somehow magically create job opportunities for youth across this province. That's not how jobs are created.

This government certainly came with a promise of jobs, the economy, pipelines, and so far everything they have done has taken us away from jobs, taken jobs away from Albertans. For instance, in their first piece of legislation they are getting rid of the carbon tax, and they are saying that it's creating 6,000 jobs while there were already 7,300 jobs under that climate leadership plan. They are taking those jobs away from Albertans.

In terms of the economy, I think the priority for Albertans was that they will get their pipelines built, they will get access to markets, and so far, from what we have heard, we are doing everything that is taking us away from getting a pipeline. For instance, we are getting rid of the carbon tax, which in that climate leadership plan was one of the key considerations for the federal government when they approved the Kinder Morgan pipeline, when they approved line 3. What we are seeing here now is that that's being repealed.

Then we signed contracts to ship our oil by rail so that we can address the capacity shortages. We can ship or transport our products to market, but we are seeing that now this government is threatening to cancel those contracts. With that, I guess, our economy is also suffering. The jobs that would have come with those contracts: we are losing those jobs as well with these steps.

I think I do recognize and respect that the government got a mandate. I hope that they respect that mandate, too, that once they become government, they are the government for all Albertans. They need to leave the campaign rhetoric aside and work in the best interests of all Albertans. Cutting Albertans' overtime pay, cutting their holiday pay, and cutting their wages is not in the best interests of Albertans. I don't think that's what Albertans meant by that mandate. Albertans needed jobs, Albertans needed an economy that looks out for everyone, that creates opportunities for everyone, but here we are seeing that we are creating a two-tier wage system. If you are under 18 and going to school, you will be paid differently. After a certain time you will be paid differently. The fundamental thing here is that for an equal amount of work, for a similar kind of work, people should be paid equally and the same. Creating this kind of division in wages is not in the best interests of Albertans.

This bill also, from all those things – it's targeting overtime, it's targeting youth wages, and it's targeting the minimum wage – will have a disproportionate impact on Albertans with low incomes. It will have a disproportionate impact on women in this province, on youth in this province. At the same time, what we are seeing on the other hand is that they are also getting ready to give a $4 billion break for the most wealthy: cutting the corporate tax, which was already the lowest in Canada, and somehow, again, selling it to us that it will magically create jobs across this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, please.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate you allowing me to get up under 29(2)(a), and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-McCall for his comments on Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. I find myself getting a little bit hung up on the title here for a second, so I'll shortly ask my colleague for his thoughts on this: an act to "make" Alberta. I can't help but think back to my younger days, when I was playing the game I love, basketball. It was a while ago. What I found was that throughout my career there were times when players would find themselves getting caught up in the moment, and they would want to do what was lovingly referred to as forcing the play. They would just be so consumed with: I am going to get this section of our play done no matter what happens.

What usually ended up happening, Madam Speaker, was that they would throw the ball away to the opposing team, which was detrimental for the team's overall goal. When I look at the bill, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, I'm wondering if perhaps we're trying to force a play here in order to possibly make something happen based on what we're trying to accomplish.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it is lunchtime.

This House stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 29, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Member's 10th Anniversary of Election

The Speaker: Before we do introductions of visitors and guests today, I would like to acknowledge that we have the 10th anniversary of an elected member in this Assembly, so if I might take this time to welcome the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West to the dais. I have a small presentation.

While he comes here, feel free to take your seats if you would like.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West: today marks his 10th anniversary of serving as a member. While he had a small break in service during his tenure and service to the public of Alberta, today marks very close to his 10th anniversary.

I also understand you may have some family here with you today. We'd just like to express our sincerest thanks and appreciation to you for all of the efforts and sacrifices that you and the rest of the extended family have made in order to be able to provide the hon. member an opportunity to serve his constituents and the rest of Alberta.

On behalf of all members of the Assembly thank you and congratulations.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has a guest.

Mr. Yao: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Christina Gordon public school. These students are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Gavin Rutledge, Mrs. Erin Andrews, Mrs. Wendy Torranceville, and also chaperone Ms Kelly Anne Nash. I'd like them to rise now and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly students from the Landing Trail intermediate school. They are accompanied by their teachers, Jeff Semenchuk, Treana Michalski, and chaperone Shelly LaBoucane. If I could ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my wife, Somboon Eggen, and my eldest daughter, Genevieve Eggen. They're here of course to see me on the occasion of receiving my 10th anniversary pin. As you said before, I sort of had a gap in between, so really I first was elected in 2004. My family has put up with a lot for me to be doing this since 2004. I think when Gen was here the first time, she was 12 years old. Now she is a nurse at the neonatal intensive care unit at the University of Alberta. Somboon – I won't say how old she was when she was here first – works at the Royal Alex hospital in one of the units there. On behalf of my family thank you for the opportunity to be here.

Again, I think I would like to stress the importance of having these introductions as a way by which we can reach out and learn about each other – right? – learn about our families, learn about the understanding that comes from that, and it helps us to be, I believe, better legislators. On behalf of my family if you could please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to rise here today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two strong, Conservative women that I've come to know in this last little while, Mrs. Kara Barker and Ms Lily Le. They are both women that are dedicated to our province and certainly to their own communities. Would they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has an introduction.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you my mom, Anne Irwin, and her partner, Eugene Orr. They are both big supporters of mine.

I'd also like to introduce a proud constituent and friend in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, Jessica Aubé, who I'll be making a statement about shortly. They're seated in the public gallery, and I ask these three very important people in my life to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I introduce my guests, I just want to take moment to thank Dr. Glenn Feltham, who has resigned this morning as the president of NAIT here in Edmonton. He's been in that role since 2011, and I wish him all the best in his future endeavours.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through to all members of this Assembly Dr. Ian Brodie. Dr. Brodie is an associate professor in the department of political science at the University of Calgary. Dr. Brodie served as well as chief of staff to Prime Minister Stephen Harper. His recent book At the Centre of Government: The Prime Minister and the Limits on Political Power is an Amazon bestseller, and despite the fact that I've not yet had the opportunity to read it, I'm sure it won't disappoint. Lastly, and perhaps most importantly, Dr. Brodie is a constituent of Calgary-Bow. I do ask that he rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three guests seated in the public gallery today. I ask that they rise. There is Sinan Leylek, Rebecca Bock-Freeman, and Jean-Marc Prevost. They are awesome Albertans who care deeply about the public services that matter to all of us, and I'm really grateful to have them here today to see their Official Opposition fight for the things that matter to them. Thank you for being here.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former member of the EMS Foundation I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you four paramedics who represent that very best values of emergency responders in our health care system. Every day across this province emergency service providers are there for us. They have our back in some of life's most chaotic moments. Paramedics embody the trust that is the heart of our health care system. When you need it, they are there to help you.

Mr. Speaker, this week is National Paramedic Services Week, and across the province there are free events and demonstrations of their work, and I encourage all Albertans to attend one of these events to personally thank our paramedics. It's an honour and privilege to meet them today and welcome four of them here to the House. I will note as well that tomorrow there's a ceremony, a ceremony in which 33 members of the Edmonton zone will be awarded the exemplary service medal. It's a national medal, and two of our guests today will be receiving that medal tomorrow. Their names are Jeff Smith, Lisa Swanson, Carly Lehman, and Aaron Phillips. I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Well, I couldn't agree with the minister's introduction any more, in fact. They provide a very critical service to our province and are very deserving of their medal.

I might encourage members to use other avenues to recognize members in the gallery. Perhaps you could have someone do a member's statement as opposed to using introductions at such length.

1:40

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you three members of the Moen family: Lynette, Kris, and Taryn Moen. Kris is an oil and gas accountant in downtown Calgary and Lynette is a customer service representative with a Calgary grocery store. Their daughter, Taryn, is a grade 3 student at Citadel Park elementary school. Having grown up in southwest Edmonton, Kris is proudly showing this building to Taryn, and he's eager to witness the live demonstrations of the Westminster parliamentary traditions. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Chamber Mr. Mike Yuzwenko, a classmate of mine from Queen Elizabeth composite high school, who was then known to us only as Zeke, very affectionately. After 32 years as a social studies and music teacher Mr. Yuzwenko recently retired, and that was all spent at Riverbend school. I now ask Mr. Yuzwenko to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Jessica Aubé

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and offer my first member's statement. I want to talk today about my friend Jessica Aubé, who's up in the gallery. I met Jessica many months ago while I was out door-knocking in the McCauley neighbourhood of our Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood riding. She shouted at me from her car that I could put a sign on her lawn, and I knew right away that I liked her. I walked over to her and asked her what her name was. We talked a little while. We shot the breeze like old friends. I asked her then what she did for work and she said: early retirement. She then pulled off her hat and revealed her bald head, pointed to it, and said with a smile: terminal.

Jessica's not much older than me, but she's had an amazing life to date. A proud Métis woman, Jessica has worked all over Canada in indigenous relations. In her work she often observed workers being brought in from the south to do work in northern and remote communities. She wanted to change that, so Jessica set out to build relationships with indigenous communities in an effort to bring jobs and employment to these regions. But at age 31, in the midst of her work, Jessica was diagnosed with breast cancer.

When she returned to work after treatments, she wanted to make a difference. She was able to establish a joint venture with four indigenous land corporations in the Sahtu region. Together they successfully negotiated a sole-source contract for environmental work at Norman Wells. But now the cancer has returned, this time to her brain, bones, and lung. Jessica is hopeful she'll return to the north. She's made friends around the world. She just got back from volunteering at a camp in Hawaii for young people with cancer.

She reminds me of the things that motivated me to run: the importance of a strong public health care system, LGBTQ rights, our relationships with indigenous neighbours. Most importantly, she's reminded me what really matters: the time we spend with the people in our lives. Thank you for being here today, Jessica, and thank you for all you do and will continue to do.

The Speaker: The Member for Airdrie-East.

Tow Truck Operator Safety

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In early March an almost deadly car crash happened on highway 2 just outside of Carstairs. Farmer and volunteer firefighter Jason Dyck was nearly killed while on the scene responding to the crash. An oncoming SUV failed to slow down while approaching the accident scene, slamming into the back end of the fire truck. Five people were injured, and thankfully they only suffered minor injuries. Jason Dyck only had seconds to react, jumping out of the way while the vehicle hurtled towards him, yet he still managed to yell at his team to brace for impact.

While most emergency vehicles are equipped with white, blue, or red lights, the lights on tow trucks are amber, which is similar to a roadside construction crew. Now, studies have shown that blue as well as white lights are the most apparent in low-visibility conditions, which are often the poor conditions that roadside operators are responding in. If oncoming drivers can't see the amber lights of a tow truck, how can we expect them to slow down to the legal 60 kilometres per hour when passing a potentially dangerous scene?

Making a regulatory change in the Traffic Safety Act would allow tow truck drivers to be fitted with blue as well as amber lights. This slight change in regulation can be an important piece in saving the lives of roadside assistance crews across Alberta. During the election and continuing to follow after, I have received quite a bit of feedback on this matter, from tow truck operators to firefighters.

Prior to the election my former colleague and MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti Wayne Drysdale recognized this dangerous issue and put forth a private member's bill to prompt this change. Unfortunately, it died on the Order Paper, but I won't let this important matter fade away. It is my constituents' hope that Mr. Drysdale's work will be continued on this matter.

I know that all members in this Assembly would agree that we should do whatever we can to ensure that all workers return home safely to their families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has a statement.

Observance of Ramadan and Public Safety

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is on treaty lands largely covered by treaties 6, 7, and 8, and it's home to indigenous people, Métis people, and people of many different faiths and backgrounds. It is home to many Albertans of Muslim faith, who are observing and celebrating the holy month of Ramadan. Ramadan Mubarak.

Ramadan is a time for self-reflection and spiritual renewal through prayers and fasting. It is a time for strengthening bonds with the Creator, with family, and with the community through various activities such as daily iftar events. These events also offer an opportunity for all Albertans to learn more about the diversity of faith and traditions in our province and build understanding.

Now more than ever it is important that we build bridges with one another. We have seen a disturbing rise in hate crimes, racism, Islamophobia, and violence at prayer places. We have seen a proliferation of hate groups and white nationalist groups in our neighbourhoods, such as Soldiers of Odin, Edmonton Infidels, Rebel media, and the like. We must stand up against hate and intolerance because every Albertan deserves to feel welcome and safe in this province and in their communities.

Mr. Speaker, on June 4 and 5 Albertans of Muslim faith will be offering Eid prayers at many different places across this province. I have heard concerns respecting safety and security from many of my constituents and faith leaders, and this just isn't right in a modern, accepting, and inclusive Alberta. That is why I call on this government to take action during this very holy time and ensure the safety and security of all Albertans in places of prayer and worship, because no Albertan should ever have to fear for their safety while practising their faith.

With that, Ramadan Mubarak to all those celebrating and also Eid Mubarak in advance.

Paramedics Water Supply in Highwood

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, in honour of Paramedic Services Week I would like to start by acknowledging the service, dedication, and compassionate care that our paramedics provide every day. There is no higher form of public service than the commitment of front-line workers in maintaining public safety. My father was a paramedic for decades, and as I grew up, I could see the pride and compassion that was required for this work. As well, I also saw the difficulties and dangers and challenges of this extremely critical service. I'd like to commend this government's commitment to a heroes fund of $1.5 million dedicated to our front-line workers.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to address the most pressing issue Highwood currently faces. After meeting and talking to all of the four municipalities, it is obvious the primary concern of the area is water. I understand that this is a complex issue and that water is a resource that needs to be carefully protected. Having said that, Highwood has already championed many initiatives and is dedicated to the ongoing stewardship of this valuable resource.

Many initiatives, incentives, and innovative ideas have already been implemented. Residential dwellings are now built with hot water circulation pumps to reduce tap run times, most homes utilize rain barrels, and xeriscaping rebate programs have led Highwood to be one of the lowest in water consumption per capita in the country. Highwood has worked tirelessly to set a benchmark in water stewardship. The largest municipality in Highwood currently has a consumption rate that is 25 per cent lower than the national average, with 80 per cent of the water returning to the treatment plant. But even with these innovations, we have communities that have had to cap growth as their entire water licence has been allocated.

The need for water is key for the area of Highwood, and I look forward to working towards a solution that will allow Highwood to be a sustainable constituency now and in the future.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It has been four weeks since I first called on this Premier and this Attorney General to appoint a special prosecutor to oversee the investigation into UCP voter fraud. Now, as the appearance of a conflict of interest grows, so too do the number of people genuinely wondering why the Premier just won't do the obvious thing and appoint a special prosecutor. As long-time columnist Don Braid noted, special prosecutors have been appointed in Alberta for far less conflicted circumstances in the past. What exactly is the Premier trying to hide from?

Mr. Kenney: From absolutely nothing, Mr. Speaker. As we've pointed out in the past, police investigations of this nature engage in consultations with expert prosecutors in the specialized prosecutions branch, which is entirely independent of government. They make decisions on whether to recommend to go outside the Crown prosecution service. We respect their independent authority and their judgment.

Ms Notley: Well, as the Premier continues to deflect from this very serious matter, I am compelled to keep fighting for the integrity of our justice system.

Now, yesterday the Attorney General refused to answer when I asked him if he communicated with the Premier about the substance of his Sunday interview with the RCMP. So today I will ask the Premier. Your Attorney General was interviewed as a witness by the RCMP on Sunday. Has he communicated the substance of that interview to you either directly, indirectly, or through officials since that time?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I think that since that interview became a matter of public record, the minister spoke to my staff to advise them about it in the same way he has to this House. Once again we underscore that all prosecution decisions and police investigations are undertaken independently by the Crown prosecutor service, sometimes in reference to the specialized prosecutions branch and always in a completely independent fashion, which should be the case in our system.

Ms Notley: Well, okay. So they're talking about it, but if anything, that actually makes the problem much worse.

The Attorney General has flip-flopped on discussing this investigation publicly, speaking out when it comes to defending himself and his status as a suspect. Clearly, he can't be counted on to act without regard to his self-interest. Yesterday he wasn't even allowed to take a question, though, about who else in the government might be suspects. So we are literally watching the Premier and the Attorney General break the justice system as we speak. Why won't they do the obvious thing and appoint an independent prosecutor?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is now making outlandish claims. Once again, we respect, of course, the independence of the Crown prosecutor service, recognizing that in investigations of this nature they often consult with specialized prosecutors in the specialized prosecutors branch. They decide whether or not there's a need to go outside of that service. We respect their authority, their decision, and I wish the Leader of the Opposition would do the same thing.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Indigenous Treaty Rights

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First Nations leaders in Alberta are disheartened by this government's refusal to acknowledge treaties between First Nations and the Crown. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission makes it clear that all Canadians as treaty people share responsibility for establishing and maintaining mutually respectful relationships. Premier, are you committed to the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and the calls to action of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, and if so, why is your government refusing to acknowledge these treaties at public events?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I have to correct the hon. Leader of the Opposition. I, the ministers of this government, the government generally do acknowledge repeatedly the obligations of the Crown under the treaties. In fact, we did so at least twice in the throne speech that is now being debated in this Assembly. I'm pleased to announce that on June 10 we will hold, for the first time in nearly a decade, a daylong meeting between ministers of Executive Council and Alberta's elected treaty chiefs, something the NDP failed to do.

Ms Notley: Well, actually, that's not true.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, it's not a matter of randomly doing it when it's convenient in the occasional document; it's about whether you do it consistently as a matter of practice at all government of Alberta public events. Alberta is located on Treaty 6, Treaty 7, and Treaty 8 territory. Last year, when members of Treaty 8 spoke out against the Premier's commitment to sell public land in Mackenzie county, his response was: Crown land is not treaty land. Does the Premier still believe that Crown land is not treaty land, and is that why he doesn't feel the need to acknowledge treaties or consult with members of First Nation communities on . . .

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, almost every element of that question was incorrect. First of all, the public service will confirm that the NDP government discontinued the long-standing practice of having an annual meeting between cabinet and the elected treaty chiefs. We will restore that tradition, that had been created by previous Progressive Conservative governments. Secondly, of course, we recognize the Crown's duty to consult with First Nations on the disposition of their territorial lands, as we would do with respect to any potential auction of public lands, something that the minister of the environment in the previous government was not going to do.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier's government's current approach is disrespectful according to Grand Chief Willie Littlechild. Now, he served on the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and is an internationally recognized, global expert on indigenous issues, and he says that abandonment of treaty acknowledgements by your government is a serious mistake that sets back all the good-faith efforts to advance reconciliation. Premier, land acknowledgements are not a flavour of the month. They matter. Will you direct all members of your caucus to revert to the previous practice of land acknowledgements at all public events?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we'll do so when appropriate. More importantly, we will give real, practical expression to the spirit of the treaties. Now, the NDP likes to talk a good game about this, but the most important thing for our First Nations people is that they are able to participate in prosperity. That is why this government will be launching the single most important initiative in Alberta history for the economic inclusion of First Nations people, the indigenous opportunities corporation, so that they can have an ownership stake in the development of the resources that lie below the lands that their ancestors first inhabited.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition for her third set of questions.

Ms Notley: Call me crazy, Mr. Speaker, but I would suggest that it would be respectful to simply listen to what respected leaders in the indigenous communities are saying.

Corporate Taxation and Job Creation

Ms Notley: Anyway, yesterday the Finance minister rolled out his government's huge tax break to big business. Now, what we do know is that this tax cut will create a gaping 4 and a half billion dollar hole in the provincial budget, and we do know that it is not going to generate a dollar of economic return for two years at least. Yesterday we learned that what the Minister of Finance doesn't know is the period over which this risky plan will create their alleged 50,000 jobs. Maybe the Premier knows. To the Premier: in what year exactly will you hit your target of . . .

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, according to one of the most eminent economists in Canada, Professor Jack Mintz, former president of the C.D. Howe Institute, founding president of the University of Calgary School of Public Policy, a man of the highest integrity . . . [interjections] He's being heckled by the opposition. He projected that the job-creation tax cut will create at least 55,000 new full-time private-sector jobs by the time of its full implementation in 2022. Professor Dahlby, incidentally, separately projected that it will result in the creation of $12.7 billion of incremental GDP and increase Alberta's per capita GDP by over 6 per cent.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly, the member's Finance minister was not able to provide 2022.

Now, what I will say is that given that our government was able to create over 100,000 jobs in less time than that, does the member opposite think that maybe there might be a bit more work that they need to do to provide jobs for Albertans other than creating a hole in the deficit and telling them that it's their job to get less education, less health care, and less benefits from the government that they elected?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, you can tell they've been out of opposition for a while because that's called leading with your chin. The NDP left Alberta with a jobs crisis, with fewer people employed now than when they came to office, just over four years ago. In fact, our economy shrank by 4 per cent under NDP economic mismanagement. They left behind over 180,000 unemployed Albertans and tens of thousands who gave up looking for work and so many who left this province in despair. Albertans elected us to undo the damage of the NDP and turn Alberta into a job-creation engine again.

Ms Notley: Oh, Mr. Speaker. You know, sometimes the facts are so inconvenient for the member opposite. In fact, there were more people working in Alberta in April of 2019 than before the beginning of the oil price crash in early 2015, so at least get your facts straight.

However, we learned today that the Conference Board of Canada is actually predicting that Alberta is slipping back into a recession. Many leading economists argue that the government's corporate tax giveaway will only play around the edges in terms of attracting business. Why is the government committed to giving a big tax giveaway to profitable corporations at the same time he's lecturing Albertans . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier

Mr. Kenney: On the first point, it's true that the Alberta population grew, but if employment had kept up with population growth, we would have to see the creation of at least 65,000 additional jobs in order to see the same percentage of employment as when the NDP came to office, according to University of Calgary professor Trevor Tombe. Mr. Speaker, the NDP's jobs record is clear. It was a total disaster. That is why this government won the largest democratic mandate in Alberta electoral history, to get jobs going in Alberta once again.

The Speaker: I might just remind the Leader of the Official Opposition that questions are 35 seconds and answers are 35 seconds.

The Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a question.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents of students attending William Reid school in Calgary are being surveyed on how best to cut 6 per cent from their school's budget because of anticipated cuts from the UCP. School staff are so concerned that they're literally asking parents how to make this impossible decision. It's because the UCP government refuses to fund classrooms properly. Why won't the Minister of Education do the right thing, give these children the tools they need to succeed, so that parents and school staff don't have to sacrifice their futures by choosing between music or class sizes?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. We have continually reiterated that our government is going to maintain or increase funding for education. We've been very, very clear. I'm not sure what is unclear about that.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Let me give that clarity. Fifteen thousand new kids are showing up to school next year, and when we have asked this minister and this Premier over and over again, "Will there be any new money for these new kids?" we have heard silence.

Schools are rightfully acting with caution. That means that a nearly 6 per cent cut to this school, William Reid school, is taking class sizes in grade 4 from 22 to 28 students or completely cutting the music program. It's simple. More kids, same resources, inadequate funding, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: what do you think these parents should do? Should they allow class sizes to skyrocket, or should they cut music?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: We are committed to maintaining or increasing education funding. We are going to build schools. We will continue to provide first-class education in Alberta, and we will fund it to the best of our ability.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: If you were a parent and you had 15,000 more kids you were responsible for, having no new resources would be irresponsible. As a government having 15,000 more students showing up to school and giving school boards and teachers no new resources is completely irresponsible. This letter goes on to say that because of the cuts to the classroom improvement fund and because of the failure to plan for increased enrolment, Mr. Speaker, they are going to have to make one of two very bad decisions. The minister was a former trustee. The minister knows the harm of these kinds of cuts. Why won't she do the right thing, stand up in this House and say that she will fund CIF and . . .

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I absolutely respect the autonomy of school boards. I have consistently said that we are maintaining or increasing education funding, and we will continue to provide that messaging until we can provide further details.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika has a question.

Skilled Trades Competitions and Programs

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week students from across Canada are participating in the Skills Canada national competition in Halifax, Nova Scotia, including some of our very own Alberta students. Youth are the future of our province, and we must ensure that they have numerous opportunities available to them both before and after they finish their education. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Can the minister please explain to this House the role that competitions like Skills Canada play in encouraging and empowering our youth to become involved in skilled trades, and does the minister intend on expanding support for these?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The Skills Canada national competition, which began yesterday and continues into today, is the only national multitrade and technology competition for students and apprentices in the country. It brings together more than 500 students from across Canada to compete in over 40 skilled trade and technology-based competitions. These students have an incredible opportunity to demonstrate their knowledge and abilities in front of industry experts and will ensure that they go on to have fulfilling and rewarding careers in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this program is for students interested in the skilled trades and given that Alberta has seen a recent shortage of skilled trades workers, can the same minister please explain to this House exactly how he plans to encourage organizations like Skills Canada to continue the great work that they do?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the follow-up question. He is indeed correct. Our government will be proactive, and we will take action in the coming years to address the retirement of skilled workers in Alberta. The department of labour estimates that from now until 2025 3,000 skilled workers will retire each and every year. To achieve this and to ensure that we'll be proactive, we will provide new scholarships for high school students who show promise in the trades. As well, we'll continue to work with organizations like Skills Canada and Careers: the Next Generation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the importance of skilled trades to the economic prosperity of Alberta and given that the government in its election platform stated that they would be expanding apprenticeship and vocational programs, can the minister please explain how this government plans to support our postsecondary institutions in enrolling more trades students in the coming years?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Expanding apprenticeship opportunities is critical for our government, and we believe that a trades certificate should have as much value, weight, and worth as an academic degree. To help our institutions do this, we're going to do two things. First and foremost, we will work with our postsecondary institutions to reduce unnecessary red tape and bureaucratic rules and onerous reporting so that they can innovate and compete as they need to. As well, secondly, we'll work with our institutions to expand the apprenticeship model of education to other avenues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Minimum Wage for Youth

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's pick-your-pocket bill is unfairly targeting our youth, and there's no evidence to suggest that it's actually going to create jobs, quite the opposite, actually. The Calgary Stampede is now actively considering cutting the pay for about 500 youth workers before this year's exhibition begins, but the Stampede has given no indication that it intends to hire more workers as a result of this cut in pay. To the minister: can you please explain to me how retroactively cutting these workers' pay is supposed to help them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for the question. The student job-creation wage is about creating jobs for Alberta's youth. When the minimum wage was increased by the previous government by over 50 per cent in a few short years in the face of one of Alberta's worst economic downturns, employers were forced to lay off workers, and unfortunately it often was at the cost of our youth. By reducing costs on employers, we can help students get their first job to develop skills and gain the experience that they need for the future.

Thank you.

Ms Gray: Given that one parent interviewed about this wage cut said that her daughter was saving her Stampede paycheques so that she wouldn't have to work while in school and given that this student and hundreds of others were hired on at $15 per hour, not $13 per hour, will the minister commit to not allowing organizations or corporations to retroactively cut wages that were already agreed upon between employers and employees?

2:10

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, this policy change, the student job-creation wage, is about creating jobs for Alberta youth. Between 2014 and 2018 unemployment among 15- to 19-year-olds rose from 14 to 18 per cent, and this was as a direct result of the policy changes made by the previous government. Again, by reducing costs on employers, we can help students get their first job, create more jobs for a larger number of students so they can actually save for their future.

Thank you.

Ms Gray: Given that this minister intends to have his youth wage cut in place in less than a month's time but given that many organizations like the Stampede have made commitments to employees at the current minimum wage levels, will the minister commit to slowing down this attack on youth workers and engaging in further study of the consequences of this rash move?

Mr. Copping: Again, our focus is on creating jobs for students. We wanted to make this change this summer so that we can get more students working and they can actually gain the skills and experience that they need for the future.

Thank you.

Renewable Energy Programs

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, global investment in solar energy in 2018 exceeded $100 billion. In Alberta the solar industry grew by 500 per cent since our government took office in 2015, and it was about to attract $10 billion of additional investment. Now the UCP plans to cut those programs and threaten all of this work. To the minister: how many of the money-making solar energy programs is he going to eliminate?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, our party was clear while campaigning that we will not be proceeding with the carbon tax that the NDP brought in when they were in power, where they focused on using hard-working taxpayer dollars to pay for things like shower heads and solar panels on houses that were not working. Instead, we're going to focus on technology, focus on working with our largest emitters, and actually tackle the problem.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that industry estimates suggest that there could be up to $150 million worth of small-scale solar programs across the province that won't move forward under this government, can the minister please explain how cancelling these programs and rejecting billions of dollars in investment is good for the people of Alberta?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, this government has a focus of standing with Albertans. Albertans sent us here to get rid of the carbon tax. The NDP, when they were in power, focused on using taxpayer dollars on ridiculous subsidy programs, including solar in some cases. We will not be proceeding with those types of subsidy programs. Instead, we will be investing in technology, working with our partnerships within industry, actually tackling the problem. What this government did when they were in power was all economic pain and no environmental gain. We won't be doing that to Albertans. We will focus on working on the environment while at the same time not taxing Albertans.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, I'm not sure how creating jobs and reducing emissions has no environmental gain or positive impact.

Given that KCP Energy estimates that up to 1,500 jobs in Calgary will be eliminated as a result of rejecting these programs and given that companies stand to lose hundreds of thousands of dollars in work this summer alone due to this government's refusal to support Alberta's booming renewables industry, to the minister: will you include a report on all jobs lost due to your government's cancellation of renewable energy projects?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I won't be lectured by the opposition when it comes to job loss. This opposition, when they were in government, oversaw the largest job loss in the history of this province and then brought in a carbon tax, a punishing tax, on Albertans at the very time that they needed their government to help them. We have a different approach when it comes to climate change. We will not be taxing Albertans. We will be working on climate change, but we'll be focused on technology, we'll be focused on our largest emitters and working together with them to be able to overcome this problem. That is a big contrast to how the NDP used to approach this. They taxed fixed-income seniors. They taxed our social safety net. It's a ridiculous approach. We'll go a different way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South is rising with a question

Red Deer Regional Hospital

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the prior government citizens of central Alberta only received a fraction in health care infrastructure funding compared to other areas of the province. That was not fair. To the Minister of Health: what will he do to ensure that the Red Deer regional hospital is a top priority, to now move towards more equitable health care funding for all Albertans?

Mr. Shandro: Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand the frustration of the people in Red Deer, and I appreciate the member's question on their behalf. Our government is committed to expanding capacity at the Red Deer hospital to meet the growing needs of central Alberta. I understand that the hospital fell off the AHS priority list under the previous government and then was put back on. I can't answer for those past decisions, but what I can say is that our government will support planning for long-term capacity increases in Red Deer as part of our commitment to maintain and strengthen the publicly funded health care system for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta Health Services has recommended a cardiac cath lab for this hospital and given that every year central Albertans have heart attacks and related issues, the risks of which could have been mitigated by this lab and which the prior government failed to address, will the minister accept the Alberta Health Services recommendation and commit to expanding cardiac cath services for central Albertans as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government supports development of a cath lab in Red Deer as part of a long-term plan for Red Deer and for cardiac care in the province as well. The AHS needs assessment in 2018 sets out the priorities clearly. The top priority to save lives is prevention and to address the high rates of cardiac disease, especially in central Alberta. The next priority is to reach all Albertans in crisis within the recommended time with evidence-based care, either transport to a cath lab or clot-busting drugs. Our clinicians are leaders in Canada in this area. We'll plan to make decisions based on the advice of our clinicians.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the prior government's inequitable treatment of the Red Deer regional hospital was unfair to central Albertans, what will the minister do to ensure that, consistent with this government's platform, future health care funding decisions will focus on the public interest by putting patients at the heart of a sustainable health care system?

Mr. Shandro: Well, Mr. Speaker, we campaigned on maintaining and strengthening our publicly funded health care system. That's my mandate as Minister of Health. We're going to make decisions for Red Deer and for all Albertans based on what's best for patients, not on ideology, not on politics. That's the purpose of our review of AHS, the first since it was created 10 years ago. The review will look at the evidence and consider advice from experts. In the area of cardiac care those experts include some of the leading authorities in Canada. They have one priority, to ensure every Albertan gets care based on the best evidence and current standards. That's my priority for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As has been noted, this is Paramedic Services Week. For years Conservative governments left our emergency medical services underfunded, leaving paramedics in a tough spot as they were forced to stand idly for hours in emergency rooms waiting to transfer their patients instead of attending other emergency calls. Now, our government invested $29 million for new first responders in a pilot program with 16 hospital emergency liaisons to help receive patients from paramedics. To the Minister of Health: will you commit to providing the funding needed to allow that program to continue?

Mr. Shandro: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that starting this month, we are going to be initiating a review of AHS. It's going to be a review of all of Alberta Health and all of AHS. We are waiting for the results of that by the end of the year, in which case we will be able to understand and be able to make decisions like that.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that government members like the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry have expressed concerns about emergency room wait times in the Red Deer hospital and given that the hospital emergency liaison program was slated to expand to that hospital to help relieve that stress, to the same minister: will you commit to making this investment to support paramedics and residents in Red Deer and central Alberta?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, it's the same answer. We're going to be initiating a review. As we campaigned on during the campaign, it's our commitment to Albertans to be able to do a review of AHS and to be able to wait for those results and be able to understand what commitments we can be making in specific areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that last week the Minister of Finance said – and I quote – that there will be difficult decisions, that there will be sacrifice and given that when that minister was asked about public service wages, he pointed to private-sector workers who had seen pay cuts, to the Minister of Health: along with the cuts in the resources that they need to do their life-saving work or your current lack of commitment to provide those, should paramedics also be bracing for cuts in the salaries they rightfully earn for their life-saving work?

2:20

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, our commitment to Albertans during the campaign was that we would maintain or increase spending in the health care system. While we're taking lessons from the previous government and while we're looking at emergency services, I would like to note for all Albertans that the percentage of patients treated and discharged from emergency within four hours under that previous government dropped from 79 per cent to 76 per cent. We are going to start making decisions on funding based on the needs of patients. That's what we're going to be doing as a government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Water and Waste-water Infrastructure

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The need for municipal water and waste-water infrastructure projects is well documented here in the province. As government we put a priority on all of these projects, committing $131 million to them. To the Minister of Transportation: can you guarantee that every single one of these projects that we funded will be followed through on?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation is rising.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question, but he asked it in an interesting way. He said: every one which was funded. I can assure the members of this House that the previous government announced a lot more projects than they funded.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. McIver: I know it's a surprise.

Mr. Speaker, we're sorting through that. We're dealing with the $60 billion in debt. We are going through a capital approval process and a budgeting process, and we are well aware of the many projects that are important. I can assure the hon. member we will take those priorities seriously because they matter.

Member Loyola: Promising things and not following through with them was the UCP for 44 years.

Mr. Speaker, given that it is also well known that the investment in these projects would help sustain approximately 900 jobs throughout the province, can the minister guarantee Albertans that they can continue to rely on these jobs so that they can continue to put food on the tables for their families?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to see the other side has started to care about jobs. This is a good change. It's very positive.

Mr. Speaker, these projects are important. Municipalities listening need to know that we will listen to them. We understand that all of the water and waste-water projects that they have requested are important. We are within our budgeting and capital planning process. We'll approve what we can, and we will communicate that to the municipalities. We are open to other input that those municipalities give to us.

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, given that Albertans have been patiently waiting for many of these projects in their rural communities for decades and with many of the residents citing that it is vital for their continued health and welfare, will the minister work with the municipal councils and counties to complete these projects as quickly as possible, or are they going to have to wade through sewage before he listens to Albertans and gets the jobs done?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member probably won't even be offended when I disagree with him on this part as they're not patient at all. The municipalities are in a hurry to get these projects done, and I think he would even agree with me on that disagreement with him. The fact is, to answer his direct question directly, yes, we will listen to municipalities. We will take their advice, we will gather the evidence that they give to us, and we will prioritize their projects the best we can because we know that every single one of those requests is important. We take them all seriously, and we will do them in the order that we think is most important, and they will know why.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Neudorf: Mr. Speaker, given that municipalities across Alberta received almost $9.6 billion in support from the municipal sustainability initiative program, launched in 2007, and that this initiative is set to end in 2021 without a replacement, municipalities across Alberta are concerned about the reliability of investment to their communities. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will the government continue to bolster our municipalities through the administration of the municipal sustainability initiative?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Lethbridge-East. For four years the NDP ignored many municipalities. Our government won't do that. Within the first week of holding office, I met with the Rural Municipalities association and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. I heard how the NDP created uncertainty by failing to come up with a long-term funding program and how important it is to address this. That is why our government is committed to maintaining dollars promised to municipalities and ensuring they have predictable funding, whether it's from MSI or something else.

Mr. Neudorf: Mr. Speaker, given that municipalities across Alberta utilize this funding to facilitate the rehabilitation of transit systems, water processing plants, public transit facilities, and other local priorities, the continued investment to municipalities through this program is of immediate importance to our municipal communities. To the same minister: when will the government announce their plan to continue to strengthen our municipalities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to finding the right solutions for municipalities. We are also committed to doing something the NDP is not, and that is consulting. I am consulting with local leaders and groups like the Rural Municipalities association and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association to find out their needs and concerns. We have made no decisions about the future of the MSI program. However, we've only just begun this process. I can't say definitely when it would end, but it would be well in advance of the current deal expiring.

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that municipalities face unique and differing challenges from community to community, consultation and collaboration with municipal representatives must be a key component in implementing further funding opportunities. Empowering local governments and strengthening their decision-making capacities must be a key part of the implementation process. To the same minister: how will the government ensure that funding for municipalities is disbursed in a way that allows for support that is meaningful and responsive to each eligible community?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, it's really disappointing. Had the NDP made municipalities outside of the two big cities a priority, they could have provided them with the predictable funding that they need. Our government is going to do better. We are consulting with the rural and mid-sized municipalities, and we will provide them with the most important thing they need for their budget, and that is predictability.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a question.

Conversion Therapy Working Group

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. Two days ago the Minister of Health was unable to answer a simple question about whether or not he condemns the harmful and traumatizing practice of conversion therapy. The minister's press secretary said that the committee was cancelled. Then the minister tried to discredit the journalist that reported it. This morning the minister met with the co-chairs but failed to provide any clarity or support for their work, so I will ask again: does the minister commit to supporting this working group in implementing the recommendations so that we can put an end to this harmful practice in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First, let me right off the bat say to all Albertans, especially to those who are in the gender and sexual diversity community in Alberta, for them to all understand, that we oppose conversion therapy. Thank you, through you, to the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for meeting with me this morning with Dr. Lieb. My door is always open for anyone who wants to discuss this issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Hoffman: My question was about supporting the committee in implementing their recommendations.

Given that the working group was established with the support of a secretariat within the Department of Health to provide a meeting space, administrative support, modest compensation for committee members who may have to travel or take time away from their jobs in order to participate, will the minister commit to maintaining this government support for the working group through the Department of Health? If he refuses, will he just admit that he has in fact made a decision to disband the working group?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to rise again and get another opportunity to again just hammer home to every Albertan listening that we oppose conversion therapy. My door is always open. I had a fantastic conversation with Dr. Lieb and with the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I thank them for taking the time to meet with me, to be able to speak with me. My door, as I said, is always open not just to them but to all Albertans who want to discuss this issue.

Ms Hoffman: Given the anxiety and fear that the minister has created in the LGBTQ-plus community and given that St. Albert is moving their own motion to ban this practice in their local community because they can't count on the government to do it and given the Trans Equality Society of Alberta, a group that was established when a former Conservative government decided to save money by cutting funding for gender confirmation surgery, there is a lot of concern in the community, Minister. Will you commit to supporting this working group in implementing their recommendations? It sounds like a no. Just say it if it is.

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, after not acting on this issue for four years, the NDP formed a time-limited ad hoc group in the weeks before the election. This was an ad hoc group put together by the previous minister to meet a few times over five months. It was a time-limited ad hoc group. Let me be clear again, now that I have the chance to rise here again in this Assembly, and say that we as a government oppose conversion therapy. My door is open to anyone who wants to discuss this issue with me.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-South.

Hospital Construction

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, the NDP government announced the first hospital here in Edmonton since the Oilers won a Stanley Cup. Given that south Edmonton is one of the fastest growing areas in the province and given that Edmontonians need these essential public services, to the Minister of Infrastructure: will you commit to funding this life-saving facility as a public project on the original timeline?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure is rising.

Mr. Panda: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-South for the question, Mr. Speaker. Our government was elected to efficiently deliver public transport that's required to get Albertans back to work, and we are committed to maintaining the former government's capital plan. Currently, as the Minister of Transportation said, we are going through the budgeting process and capital project planning, and when it is done, the member will know.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-South, please.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, very clearly they've already thrown out health projects, and they're looking to do it again.

To that same minister: given that our government followed through on approving and funding the long-needed Calgary cancer centre after years of Conservative neglect and given that the centre will add 100 patient exam rooms, 160 in-patient beds, 100 chemotherapy chairs, and much more, will the minister commit here and now that the Calgary cancer centre will still open on time in 2023?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report through you that I actually toured that hospital and discussed with the staff and the contractor and asked for their current plan. It is on schedule. I mean, at least the Ministry of Infrastructure will finish the construction on time and turn it over to Health.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I'm wondering, then, given that your Premier is already waffling with his blue-ribbon panel and given that his chair of the panel approved blowing up hospitals all over Saskatchewan and given that our population continues to grow and our hospitals continue to age, to the same minister: will you commit to all of the hospital projects committed to by our government, and if not, why not?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, as the minister said previously, the previous government announced more projects than what they funded, so our government is going through every project carefully on the capital list, and we are doing our due diligence. All those projects will be funded based on the needs but not by the ideology.

The Speaker: The Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat would like to ask a question.

Greenhouse Industry Regulation and Support

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the constituency of Brooks-Medicine Hat agriculture is vitally important to our local economy. Greenhouses are a powerhouse for job creation and putting food in the mouths of Albertans and those around the world. Under the previous NDP government greenhouses were classified as industrial under employment standards codes, adding an abundance of costs for our greenhouse producers and local job creators. Can the minister of labour commit today that greenhouses will be classified as agricultural operations?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration has the call.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat for the question. My hon. colleague the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry will be engaging with farmers, ranchers, agricultural workers, greenhouses, and others on how best to reduce red tape and costs for the agricultural industry and balance the unique economic pressures for farming with the need for a common-sense, flexible farm safety regime. The goal of this engagement is to develop recommendations for the introduction of the farm freedom and safety act, which will be passed into law in 2019. We expect that groups like greenhouses will be engaged through their industry association, the Alberta Greenhouse Growers Association.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of labour: can you please provide a timeline for when this necessary change will take place?

The Speaker: The minister of labour.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government understands that agriculture is a part of the economic and cultural fabric of our province. Ministry staff are meeting with the Alberta Greenhouse Growers Association in early June to discuss their needs. The association has a special variance in place for greenhouse operators, for overtime hours, that expires in June 2020, and our ministry expects to work towards a more permanent solution prior to that date.

The Speaker: The member.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of labour: what support can these greenhouses expect from this UCP government after hard years under the last NDP government?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is taking a number of steps to help undo the hardship that Alberta's businesses have experienced due to the job-killing policies of the former government. Bills 1, 2, and 3 will help greenhouses by scrapping the carbon tax, bringing balance back to Alberta's labour laws, introducing a youth minimum wage, and cutting the corporate tax rate. We are willing to listen to the concerns of greenhouse owners and work with them to find common-sense solutions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is rising.

Home Construction Consumer Protection

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A young firefighter started working in Fort McMurray and purchased an apartment condo in the Penhorwood complex. Not even two years later he, alongside 167 other units, would be evacuated shortly before midnight on a wintry night in 2011 due to the discovery of faulty construction. Questions surrounding the quality and the assurances of building and construction code inspections prevail to this day while people are still paying these empty mortgages off eight years later. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what assurances does this government have to ensure that this will not happen again?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that question. This is a tragic situation for those involved, including this young man. As a result of the situation in Fort McMurray my department has implemented several new requirements under the New Home Buyer Protection Act to protect homebuyers from major construction defects. The act now ensures that warranty coverage is mandatory and that buildings are built to codes and standards established in collaboration with national code bodies and industry. Despite this, we will continue working to improve the system for homebuyers.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the litigation process was over six years long, and while the affected residents had to wait for any restitution, they watched the builder of Penhorwood continue to build in other communities in Alberta after he finished the Penhorwood complex. To the Minister of Justice: what is your ministry doing to ensure that these court cases which affect so many are more promptly addressed?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that this is a private matter that's being litigated between two parties. I'm unaware of the details of it. But I can advise this Assembly that we are working to make sure that we have a fairer, faster, and more responsive justice system. We are working to fill vacancies on our courts, and we're going to make sure that our justice system has the tools it needs to provide the services needed by Albertans.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, this young man then purchased a home in Hillview Park condos in 2012. In 2016 that burned down. It's been three years, and this complex still is not yet rebuilt as the condominium board chose a builder that even the province recognized was an unwise choice due to its financial and litigious history. Additional cash calls for unforeseen expenses eventually led our young friend, with two empty mortgages and the need for another home, to file for bankruptcy at the age of 28, with his new wife and newborn child. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what is your ministry doing to ensure that these concerns are addressed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for both the important question and his tireless support and advocacy for Fort McMurray. I appreciated having a meeting with the member on this subject just two weeks ago. I am very sympathetic to those who have been impacted by these circumstances, and our government understands the difficult situation they are in. While there's no easy or quick solution here, I am committed to working with both of the members from Fort McMurray to understand what went wrong so we can ensure that this situation does not happen again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows is rising.

Racism and Hate Crime Prevention

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this is my first opportunity rising in this House, I would like to congratulate you on your election.

Alberta is a diverse and welcoming province, yet our province sometimes hosts ugly displays of racism. These incidents have no place here, and there's clearly more work to be done. To the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women: could you please provide this House with an update on the progress of the important work you are leading to combat racism in Alberta?

The Speaker: The minister of multiculturalism.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much for the question, through you, Mr. Speaker. We've had the absolute pleasure of meeting with some of the folks from the council, and we are looking very forward to having more conversations. Thank you for the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the recent studies indicate a significant increase in reported hate crimes in Alberta and the growing concern from all Albertans about the impact of hate and extremism in Canada and given that the government must take immediate steps to show Albertans that our province will continue to stand against extremists and their hateful views, again to the minister: what steps are you taking to arrest the rise of hate crimes and extremism in Alberta? Please be specific.

2:40

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very, very honoured to actually answer this question. In our platform we are very specific around ideas for making sure that we are providing security for people who are practising their faith. As we know, there have been many situations around the world where people are having to look over their shoulders to practise their faith. It is one of the fundamental freedoms of this country. Again, we're looking very forward to working with so many people, especially our faith-based communities, to make sure that they're protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that earlier this year a group of community leaders representing every corner of this province formed Alberta's first Anti-racism Advisory Council, to the minister: are you going to continue to work with this council, and when is the next meeting to continue their important work?

Mrs. Aheer: As I had previously mentioned, we've had a meeting with a few of the folks. We're bringing over the original people, that were actually dedicated to Education, into the multicultural ministry. Again, as the days go forward, we're looking very forward to meeting with those people and having a deeper understanding. As you may know, there's also quite a bit of work that's actually already been done in Alberta. We have 122 different groups across Alberta that actually work on these exact things right across the province. We're very proud. Albertans are extremely inclusive people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Members, in 30 seconds or less we will continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Government Policies

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to thank the voters from the Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock constituency for entrusting me to be their voice in this Legislature. I will serve them to the best of my ability.

Mr. Speaker, our government is focused on what Albertans elected us to do. Albertans spoke loud and clear in this spring election. The reckless ideological policies of the previous NDP government, costing Albertans billions and saddling the next generation with massive debt and taxation, were soundly rejected by voters. Albertans voted in favour of our government's platform, a platform designed to stimulate investment, create jobs, and stand up for Alberta.

Our plan will be to implement strategies that will send signals to the marketplace that Alberta is open for business once again. The NDP raised taxes and chased investment away. Instead of raising taxes on employers, we will lower taxes on these job creators, and instead of increasing red tape and regulatory burden, as the NDP have done, our government has appointed an Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Speaker, our government recognizes the role we play in maintaining a globally competitive resource-based economy. Our legislation and policies will focus on enabling our agriculture, energy, forestry, and tourism industries to compete with all other jurisdictions. As well, our government will stand up for a fair deal within Canada and challenge those who have misrepresented the truth about our energy industry.

Mr. Speaker, the spring of renewal has begun. There is reason for hope in Alberta, and I along with all of my United Conservative colleagues will work tirelessly to renew an Alberta that is strong and free.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Coal Phase-out in Hanna

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing here wondering if there's a second town named Hanna in this province. Yesterday the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford stated that this government will be taking money away from communities hardest hit by the NDP's poorly-thought-out carbon tax. While the previous government spins anecdotes of Conservative neglect, NDP stewardship has cost the people of Hanna their jobs, savings, and livelihood.

According to the mayor of Hanna, Chris Warwick, the only funding the town of Hanna received from the government of Alberta directly as a coal-affected community was $455,000 for an initiative called the community action to create diversification, a program to assist local community action teams to move their projects and ideas forward. Two reasonable requests by local action teams to NDP ministers, $179,000 for a regional social needs assessment and $100,000 for a seniors' housing project, were both denied funding. This is yet another example of the previous government trying to throw money at a problem, with no regard for the outcome. The development of commissions to explore diversification potential, followed by denial of funding for their recommendations, accomplishes nothing in real terms aside from gathering stakeholders to share their grievances. Hanna is a community where roughly $100 million in carbon tax revenue was generated from the Sheerness power plant per year, yet the NDP government could only scrape together a paltry half-million dollars of diversification funding.

We are accused of leaving these communities that are most affected by climate policy in a state of neglect. I would like to offer the people of these communities a message of hope. Our government will not forget you nor neglect your needs. We hear that you are struggling, and we empathize. We will do better than our predecessors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 4

Red Tape Reduction Act

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to rise today to introduce Bill 4, the Red Tape Reduction Act, on behalf of the hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

This bill will enable government to achieve regulatory excellence through the development of strategies and initiatives to reduce red tape. We've heard from entrepreneurs, businesses, nonprofits, and the public sector that red tape is adding to the burden of doing business in Alberta. Unnecessary costs in the form of extra time, money, and resources are threatening jobs, and Albertans are paying the price. Through this bill we are taking action to reverse this trend and make life better for Albertans. While we won't change this landscape overnight, this bill will enable us to take deliberate steps to eliminate unnecessary regulations and processes while protecting the environment, upholding fiscal accountability, and ensuring the health and safety of Albertans.

An efficient regulatory environment will speed up approvals and boost Alberta's competitiveness. It will spur economic growth and innovation. It will bring investment back, and it will reduce the burden on job creators, freeing them up to get more Albertans back to work. We're taking bold action on red tape reduction to make Alberta one of the freest and fastest moving economies in the world.

I now move, Mr. Speaker, first reading of Bill 4. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table the requisite five copies of a document I referenced yesterday in the Bill 1 debate entitled Cracking Open the Carbon Tax: A Look at Where the Money Has Been Spent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Do any other members have tablings today? I see the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter that the mayor of the town of Hanna submitted to the former minister of economic development and trade, and I have the requisite number of copies.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Amendments to Standing Orders

11. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective December 4, 2018, be amended as follows:

1. Standing Order 3 is amended

- (a) in suborder (1) by striking out "Subject to suborder (1.1)" and substituting "Subject to suborder (1.1) and (1.2).";
- (b) by adding the following after suborder (1.1):
(1.2) The Assembly shall not meet in the morning from 10 a.m. to noon on Tuesday, or 9:00 a.m. to noon on Wednesday or Thursday, if the Government House Leader, or a member of the Executive Council acting on the Government House Leader's behalf, notifies the Assembly that there shall be no morning sitting, notice having been given no later than the time of adjournment on the sitting day preceding the day on which the morning sitting will be cancelled.
- (c) by adding the following after suborder (5):
(5.1) In the period prior to, or following the commencement of, the first session of a Legislature, the Government House Leader may file a revised calendar with the Clerk, notwithstanding the deadline in suborder (5), following consultation with the Opposition House Leaders.
- (d) in suborder (6) by adding "or (5.1)" after "unless varied by the calendar provided for under suborder (5)";
- (e) by striking out suborder (7) and substituting the

- following:
 (7) As soon as possible after January 15 each year, and following receipt of a calendar submitted under suborder (5.1), the Clerk shall publish the calendar provided for under suborder (5) or (5.1).
2. Standing Order 7 is amended
    - (a) in suborder (1) by striking out "Introduction of Guests" and substituting "Introduction of School Groups";
    - (b) by striking out suborder (3) and substituting the following:
 (3) When Introduction of School Groups is called, brief introductions may be made by the Speaker of groups of schoolchildren in the galleries.
    - (c) by adding the following after suborder (5):
 (5.1) If any Member other than the mover rises to speak to a debatable motion to concur in a report of a committee on a Bill under Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees, debate on that motion shall be called under Orders of the Day
      - (a) when the Government thinks fit, in the case of a report on a Government Bill,
      - (b) on the next sitting day other than a Monday, in the case of a report on a private Bill, or
      - (c) on Monday afternoon under Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills other than Government Bills, in the case of a report on a public Bill other than a Government Bill.
  3. Standing Order 8 is amended
    - (a) by striking out suborder (1) and substituting the following:
 8(1) On Monday afternoon, after the daily routine, the order of business for consideration of the Assembly shall be as follows:

 Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills Other than Government Bills
 Written Questions
 Motions for Return
 Public Bills and Orders other than Government Bills and Orders
 At 5 p.m.: Motions other than Government Motions

 (1.1) Notwithstanding suborder (1), if on a Monday afternoon prior to 5 p.m. no items of business other than Motions other than Government Motions remain on the Order Paper for consideration by the Assembly, Motions other than Government Motions shall be called and after the Assembly has decided all questions necessary to conclude debate on the motion, the Assembly shall proceed to consideration of any items of Government business provided for in suborder (2) unless unanimous consent is given to proceed to an additional Motion other than a Government Motion.
    - (b) by adding the following after suborder (7)(a):
 (a.1) Debate on a motion to concur in a report of a committee on a public Bill other than a Government Bill will conclude after 55 minutes of debate on the motion and 5 minutes for the mover to close debate, unless the motion is voted on sooner.
  4. Standing Order 13 is amended by adding the following after suborder (5):
 (5.1) No Member shall disrupt the orderly conduct of the proceedings of the Assembly by loudly or repeatedly banging on a desk.
  5. Standing Order 19(1) is amended
    - (a) in clause (a) and (b) by striking out "at 5:15 p.m., the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings" and substituting "the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings 15 minutes prior to the time of adjournment for the afternoon sitting", and
    - (b) in clause (c) by striking out "at 5:15 p.m., unless the debate is previously concluded, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the motion" and substituting "unless the debate is previously concluded, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings 15 minutes prior to the time of adjournment for the afternoon sitting and immediately put every question necessary to dispose of the motion".
  6. Standing Order 29(3) is amended by striking out "and motions for returns" and substituting ", motions for returns and motions for concurrence in committee reports on public Bills other than Government Bills".
  7. The following is added after Standing Order 31:
Confidence of the Assembly in the Government
 31.1 The confidence of the Assembly in the Government may be raised by means of a vote on
    - (a) a motion explicitly worded to declare that the Assembly has, or has not, confidence in the Government,
    - (b) a motion by the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, "That the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the Government",
    - (c) a motion for the passage of an Appropriation Bill as defined in Standing Order 64,
    - (d) a motion for an address in reply to the Lieutenant Governor's speech, or
    - (e) any other motion that the Government has expressly declared a question of confidence.
  8. Standing Order 32 is struck out and the following is substituted:
Division
 32(1) A division may be called for by 3 Members rising.
 (2) When a division is called, the division bells shall be sounded at the beginning and for the last minute of a 15-minute interval.
 (3) After the first division is called during any meeting of the Committee of the Whole or Committee of Supply, the interval between division bells on all subsequent divisions during that meeting shall be reduced to one minute, except in the case of the first division called during an evening sitting that

- commences in Committee of the Whole or Committee of Supply pursuant to Standing Order 4(4).
- (4) When Members have been called in for a division, there shall be no further debate.
- (5) Members are not compelled to vote and those who wish to abstain should remain in their seats when asked to rise and record their vote.
- (6) The Clerk shall record the ayes and the noes and announce to the Speaker the number of votes cast for and against the motion.
- (7) The ayes and noes shall be entered in the Votes and Proceedings.
- (8) Abstentions shall not be entered in the Votes and Proceedings.
9. Standing Order 37 is amended
- (a) by striking out suborders (1) and (2) and substituting the following:
- (1) Five copies, and any additional copies required by suborder (2), must be tabled of a document presented by a Member to the Assembly for
- (a) placement of one copy in the records of the Assembly, and
- (b) distribution of
- (i) 2 copies to the Legislature Library,
- (ii) one copy to Hansard,
- (iii) one copy to the Government, in the case of a document tabled by the Speaker, the Official Opposition, any other party or group in opposition or an independent Member, and
- (iv) one copy to the Official Opposition, in the case of a document tabled by the Speaker, a Member of the Government caucus, any other party or group in opposition or an independent Member.
- (2) In addition to the copies required under suborder (1), one additional copy must be tabled of
- (a) responses to written questions and returns ordered by the Assembly for distribution to the Member who asked the question or moved the motion for return, and
- (b) any document presented by a Member who is neither a Member of the Government caucus nor the Official Opposition, to allow for distribution to both the Government and the Official Opposition under suborder (1).
- (b) by striking out suborder (3).
10. The following is added after Standing Order 46:
- Debate interrupted by adjournment of the Assembly
- 46.1 When a motion to adjourn the Assembly is carried or the Assembly is adjourned for want of quorum, the matter under consideration prior to the adjournment shall be deemed to be adjourned to a future sitting day.
11. Standing Order 52(1)(c) is struck out and the following is substituted:
- (c) Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills, consisting of 11 Members,
12. Standing Order 52.01(1) is amended by striking out clauses (a), (b) and (c) and substituting the following:
- (a) Standing Committee on Families and Communities – mandate related to the areas of Children's Services, Community and Social Services, Education, Health, Justice and Solicitor General, Seniors and Housing and Service Alberta;
- (b) Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future – mandate related to the areas of Advanced Education, Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women, Economic Development, Trade and Tourism, Labour and Immigration and Infrastructure;
- (c) Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship – mandate related to the areas of Agriculture and Forestry, Energy, Environment and Parks, Indigenous Relations, Municipal Affairs, Transportation and Treasury Board and Finance.
13. The following is added after Standing Order 52.01:
- Subcommittees
- 52.01(1) Unless otherwise ordered, a standing or special committee shall have the power to appoint one or more subcommittees, which shall report from time to time to the committee.
- (2) Every subcommittee shall be appointed by motion of the committee specifying the terms of reference and the membership of the subcommittee.
- (3) At its first meeting of a new Legislature, every Legislative Policy Committee and the Standing Committee on Public Accounts shall appoint a Subcommittee on Committee Business to meet from time to time at the call of the Chair and to report to the committee on the business of the committee.
14. Standing Order 52.04 is amended by renumbering Standing Order 52.04 as Standing Order 52.04(1) and by adding the following after suborder (1):
- (2) Subject to Standing Order 59.01(11), suborder (1) does not prevent a Legislative Policy Committee from undertaking a hearing or inquiry during the same period of time that a matter stands referred to the committee by the Assembly if the hearing or inquiry does not interfere with the work of the committee on the matter referred to it.
15. Standing Order 59.01 is amended by adding the following after suborder (11):
- (12) Suborder (11) does not apply to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills.
16. Standing Order 59.02(3) is struck out and the following is substituted:
- (3) During consideration of interim, supplementary or main estimates, the following individuals may be seated at a committee or in the Assembly:
- (a) officials of the Government, to assist the Minister whose estimates are under consideration;
- (b) staff of the opposition, to assist Members who are participating in estimates consideration.
- (4) During main estimates consideration, officials of the Government may respond to questions from a committee at the request of the Minister.
17. Standing Order 64(1)(a) is amended by striking out

- subclause (ii).
18. Standing Order 74.1 is amended
    - (a) by striking out the heading and substituting “Referral of Government Bill to a committee after first reading”, and
    - (b) by striking out suborder (1)(b).
  19. The following is added after Standing Order 74.1:

Referral of public Bill other than Government Bill after first reading

74.11(1) After a public Bill other than a Government Bill has been read a first time, the Bill stands referred to the Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills Committee.

(2) The Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills Committee shall report back to the Assembly within 8 sitting days of the day on which the Bill was referred to the Committee.
  20. Standing Order 74.2(2) is struck out and the following is substituted:
    - (2) Upon the concurrence of a committee report that a Bill be proceeded with, the Bill shall be placed on the Order Paper for second reading and, in the case of a public Bill other than a Government Bill, the Bill shall, subject to the precedence assigned to Bills standing on the Order Paper, be taken up on the next available Monday following the day on which the Assembly concurred in the report.
  21. Standing Order 89 is amended by striking out “Standing Order 3” and substituting “Standing Order 3(5)”.
  22. The following Standing Orders are amended by striking out “Private Bills Committee” and substituting “Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills Committee” wherever it occurs:
    - Standing Order 91(4)
    - Standing Order 96(2)
    - Standing Order 98(1) and (3)
    - Standing Order 100(1)
    - Standing Order 101
    - Standing Order 102
    - Standing Order 103
    - Standing Order 104
    - Standing Order 105(1)
    - Standing Order 106
  23. The headings preceding Standing Orders 98, 100 and 105 are amended by striking out “Private Bills Committee” and substituting “Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills Committee”.
- B. And be it further resolved that upon passage of this motion any public bills other than government bills that stand on the Order Paper for second reading are deemed referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills in accordance with Standing Order 74.11(1) and notwithstanding Standing Order 74.11(2) the committee shall report back to the Assembly on these bills within 12 sitting days of the day this motion is passed.
- C. And be it further resolved that the amendments in this motion shall come into force on passage.
- A2. Mr. Shepherd moved that Government Motion 11 be amended in part A, in section 8, by striking out the proposed Standing Order 32(5) and (8).

[Adjourned debate on the amendment May 28: Ms Sweet]

The Speaker: Are there members who would like to speak to Government Motion 11? I see the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to this motion, which is not actually a pleasure to see in front of us. Unfortunately, it includes a number of elements which, I would suggest, significantly undermine the role of members in this House through a number of different strategies.

We just saw the Member for Edmonton-North West get his 10-year pin earlier today. I actually got mine about six or seven months ago; I think it was last fall. So I’ve been around for a while, and I’ve seen how these things work. I’ve seen the many ways in which, particularly under previous governments up to 2015, prior to our government, limited the opportunity for private members to participate in a meaningful way in this House.

If I recall, I can count on one hand the number of private members’ bills that were meaningful that actually passed. I can certainly count on one hand the number of private members’ bills that I as a member of the Official Opposition got to put forward, and I’ll tell you how many there were: zero. I know that there were a number of other strategies that were used that resulted in the voices of private members, outside of Executive Council, on both sides of the House being stymied quite significantly. There are a number of proposals within this motion which appear to seek to do just that.

I will say that when I first looked at them, my first thought was: wow, we’re really clamping down on the opposition’s ability to do their job there. Then when I looked at it a little bit more, I thought: “Hmm. No. You know, it’s actually not so much the opposition whose ability to do their job is getting clamped down on. It’s actually the free speech of the private members on the government side who did not get the nod to be in Executive Council.” In many ways what we’re seeing here are limits on those members who are not members of the Executive Council to speak and initiate issues in this House in any way, shape, or form. As members of the opposition we do have additional ways to do that, but certainly members of the government who are not members of the Executive Council have a much more restricted group of tools at their disposal, and thanks to this motion that group of tools will be even further restricted.

What it says to me is that, in fact, the folks putting forward this suite of amendments don’t have a whole lot of confidence in the caucus as a whole and are a little bit worried about people saying a few too many things that might be embarrassing. There be it. Nonetheless, notwithstanding their discomfort with their caucus as a whole, I would suggest that all members of the House should not be called upon to pay the price.

Let’s talk a little bit about some of the matters that concern me. Now, I think the Member for Edmonton-North West did in fact send a letter to all members of the House outlining in general the concerns that we had, but let me go through them in a bit more detail. He spoke today and in his letter about the issue of introductions. I can tell you that in the past the ability to introduce guests was an opportunity to raise very briefly an issue and, more importantly, to ensure that people who came to this Assembly who had concerns that were great enough to propel them to come to this Assembly and entertain themselves with the activities here – of course, I’m surprised that anybody could ever turn away from it because it is, in fact, so entertaining. That they would come here to listen to us speak, typically, was because they had deep feelings, deep concerns, a deep desire to express agency within their democracy in one form or another. So for them to come and then not be recognized by the members on this floor is, as a starting point, very, very disrespectful to the people of this province.

When you come to this House, there's a whole range of reasons that you may come. Civil society does not begin and end on the floor of this House. The floor of this House is a wonderful, beautiful representation of civil society, but in no way, shape, or form should any of us be so arrogant as to believe that it begins and ends right here. The people of this province who engage in the activities of being part of civil society see this as one part of that, and when they connect with this body, their connection should be reflected on the record of this body, which is Hansard. Of course, that is not a thing that we are going to see happening anymore. So the first group of people who are deeply disrespected by this particular element in the standing orders are, in fact, Albertans. There's item 1.

Now, the second group of people, of course, who are disrespected by the banning of introductions are, in fact, the members in this House because many people very much want to be able to introduce their constituents. They want to be able to introduce their family members. They want to be able to introduce stakeholders who they have been working with on behalf of all Albertans. They want to introduce staff. You know, it's a long list of people who, through the work that they have done and their relationship with the member, as I say, should be introduced in this House and whose names should be reflected in Hansard. It is part of the work that we do as MLAs to make what we do in this House relevant to our constituents and the people of this province. We reach out to those people, and we bring them in here.

It is incredibly disrespectful to each and every member of this House to suggest that the people of this province who come to listen to us debate on issues and who care about issues or who want to watch their MLA in action and, let's say, hold them accountable – hold them accountable – for what they do and say in the House, that those people not be reflected on the record of the proceedings of this House, something that has happened for years and years and years. The first thing that this new UCP government does is that they say: "No. The people of Alberta are inconvenient; they take up too much time. They don't need to be reflected on our record. And MLAs don't need to have this sort of systemic process that encourages them to bring people to the House and have their people introduced to other members of the House." Sometimes for a good MLA, the best thing an MLA can do – back in the day, when I was sitting way over there, I often joked that they were about to move my seat right into that little cupboard back there because they kept pushing it so far back. I would have members of my constituency come.

Mr. McIver: That was right across from us.

Ms Notley: Yeah. It was a great place over there.

The point is that I would have members of my constituency come, and the best job that I could do as an MLA, even an opposition MLA sitting over there, who was constantly threatened to go sit outside with the commissionaires, who are lovely people – I mean, it was that close sometimes – is that I can introduce them to the decision-makers in this House, and I can make sure that the decision-makers in this House know who my constituent is and what their concern is and that they've come all the way here to have their concern heard. So rather than having that person play, you know, phone tag or e-mail tag or whatever it is, to try to get an appointment with a decision-maker, as their MLA what I can do is introduce them to other members of the House. In theory isn't that the way things are supposed to work? I mean, I do have the occasional example of where as an opposition MLA I was able to connect constituents and stakeholders of mine with ministers, and I was able to accelerate a process where a good decision could be made and people could be helped. Isn't that really what we're all, in theory, here to do?

That's another element of the whole introductory process, but we've just arbitrarily decided that that work is not relevant and that the history of that work is not important and that the people of this province who will see their names wiped from the record of this Assembly from here on, going forward, are not important either. So I suppose it won't surprise you to hear me say, then, that we are very much opposed to this very sort of heavy-handed and, I would suggest, deeply arrogant, exclusive initiative on the part of this government that excludes both Albertans and members of this House.

The next things that trouble me are the series of proposals around what constitutes a vote of confidence and also the series of proposals around the ability to abstain from voting. Now, again, going back to what I was saying before, what is our job? What is our job here in this Assembly? It is to represent the people of this province, and it may well be that there will be times when, even though we've been elected as members of, say, the government, the actions of the government devolve to a point where members start to question whether they have confidence in that government any further.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Of course, you see examples of that in parliamentary democracies all over the world. Therefore, even members of the government caucus should be able to express where they are coming to a lack of confidence in their government. Yet what we have here is a set of proposals that will limit the matters on which members of this Assembly could articulate a lack of confidence in their government. So what are we doing? We are limiting the rights of members, yet another initiative on the part of this government to restrict the role and rights of members.

Again, having been here as long as I have and having sat through a transition from one, two, three, four Conservative Premiers in roughly six years, I know that things can get pretty crazy. I know that times will come where government members will very much question whether they have confidence in the government. What I see in this set of amendments is a plan to very much limit the ability of those government members to express that, should that belief reoccur, again not something that is respectful to members and their rights.

Now, the other thing, though, which I'm concerned about in this section is this whole idea of importing one of many Ottawa traditions to the Alberta Legislature. I've got to say, you know, just for a moment that this is some rich stuff here. For a party that ran in the last election primarily – I mean, if you were to sum up quite honestly the single most compelling element of their platform, it was: we hate Ottawa, and we know Albertans are suffering and upset because of the drop in the price of oil, so we are going to create a common enemy, and then we are going to campaign against Ottawa, and we are going to use this age-old strategy to get ourselves back into office. It appeared to be a reasonably successful strategy, but it is then deeply ironic that, first of all, of course, the Premier's first act is to rush back to Ottawa and to apparently weekend there – but anyway, that's a whole different issue – but to then try to inject into this House, which has been operating for over 100 years, parliamentary traditions that were developed in Ottawa at the expense of traditions which have worked just fine for the people of Alberta and the elected representatives of Alberta for over 100 years. That's strange.

In any event, in this particular case this whole idea of abstentions goes back to this first issue that I raised, which is simply that I think a lot of the elements in this particular standing order changes package are really actually focused on the government caucus members because the last thing they want to deal with is having to manage all the accountability for many of the votes that members in their caucus would take which are politically inconvenient for the Executive Council of government. We all know the classic example when the Member for Calgary-Hays was at one of their conventions – I guess it was the UCP convention – and begged the members not to vote to reject GSAs and reject protection from outing for LGBTQ kids. You know, he stood at the mic, and he said: please don't do this; it's going to be another lake of fire moment. Indeed, although they successfully managed to get themselves re-elected on their anti-Ottawa thing, I think it is fair to say that there have been more than a few days where it's been very awkward for members of the Executive Council to explain away some of the more extreme views of many of the members of the government caucus. Of course, it makes perfect sense, then, that the plan would be to allow them to abstain so that no one needs to have any of these questions debated in public and we can suppress the inherent division and suppress the inherent extremism that members of the Executive Council understand would be very unpopular with the majority of Albertans.

The challenge with that, though, is that, I would argue, it undermines the accountability that each and every one of us has to the people of this province. I'll tell you something. I've gotten up, and I have voted. I've been at one or two votes – actually, I can't even count the number of times I have been one or two votes in this House against something that the previous Conservative government was going for. Sometimes I did that, and it wasn't very popular, but you know what? I knew where I stood. My constituents knew where I stood. Albertans knew where I stood. They knew they could trust me. They knew that what I said, I did and that that was what I had talked to them about and that they didn't have to worry about me splitting hairs and playing a whole bunch of sneaky little games to avoid accountability for the beliefs that I have. I find that – just a word of advice for some of the new MLAs there – it's a really good way to embark on politics. Do what you believe. Say what you believe. Act on what you believe. It becomes a lot less complicated. There's a lot less ducking and diving and running around scrums when you're actually quite proud of what you believe in and what you're running on and what you're doing. This abstention thing is part of a package of ducking and diving. It's not honest. It doesn't appear honest. Albertans won't see it as honest. They will see it as a trick, an Ottawa-imported trick. That's why we are not in favour of that.

Now, another thing is more, I guess, pragmatic and organizational, but, again, it does go, I think, to the heart, a little bit, of maybe the difference that we have between our caucuses. This is this issue of – it seems simple on the surface – giving the House leader the opportunity to change his mind about whether we're going to have morning sittings in the evening the night before. I've got to tell you that that's really a mess. That's a big disaster. The guys are wheeling and dealing at 11:30 at night. Maybe a couple of them have had a few drinks, and they're all trying to figure out, "Oh, you know, maybe we'll have this guy talk and this one talk," and "Oh, hey, I'll tell you what; if you promise to not have that long-winded human that looks a lot like, for instance, the Leader of the Official Opposition, talk, then in return you guys don't have to come back tomorrow morning, and we'll only be here for seven or eight hours; maybe we'll only go an extra hour tomorrow night." There's all this kind of wheeling and dealing.

The problem with that is that over here we believe very strongly that we need to have more women involved in politics and that those women should actually, preferably, be under 50 and that in many cases they should have kids because by doing that, it would be great to have that voice here. Not every woman can afford a nanny on a 24-hour cycle to deal with an unpredictable schedule. That is why our government moved to morning sittings in the last Assembly, when we were in power. It's why we tried as much as possible to create a predictable, regular schedule, so that the people in this Assembly who had other obligations outside of this House could manage those obligations, so that you didn't have to be someone that was almost at retirement age, and you didn't have to be, you know, someone who was blessed with a spouse who could afford to stay home and be the primary child care giver regardless of when you were working or how you were working or all those things. It was all part of a family-friendly suite of amendments that we made.

This one undoes that. What this does is that we get back into the: "Who knows? Maybe we're there; maybe we're not. You know, maybe we'll stay late now, and then we won't go in the morning." Meanwhile, an MLA has just committed to their child care centre or to their child care provider that they are working that morning, but it turns out: "Oh, no. I guess we're not working that morning, but, oh, in return for that, you're going to actually have to work at night." So now you're paying more money. Jeez, suddenly we find it really hard to recruit women, primarily, to run for office. Then we end up in this ridiculous situation that we have in this House, where we have a significant minority of women in this Legislature, which is an utter failure on the part collectively of the Assembly, and it's not good for Albertans at all. That particular amendment may not have been designed to have that outcome, but from experience I will tell you that that is exactly the outcome that it will have and that we are moving away from setting up a situation where people who have significant obligations outside of the House can actually manage them in a predictable fashion.

Another concern that I have here is the issue of what this government proposes to do with private members' bills. Now, again, in theory, it might not be a bad idea, depending on what our schedules were normally like, to have private members' bills go to committee, but here's the thing. We often don't sit that many weeks, and if you are lucky enough to have your private member's bill come up in the last three or four weeks before the House is set to rise, what it means is that your private member's bill is likely not going to get debated back in this House. That undermines the rights of private members.

Now, again, having been in opposition from 2008 to 2015, I can tell you that I never once had a private member's bill get debated, not once. It's pretty darn exciting when you actually get the draw and you find that you're in the top 10: oh, my gosh; it's actually possible that my bill might make it onto the floor of this House, and people might actually have to vote on it.

Interestingly, one of the few examples of an opposition private member's bill that did that was, of course, the well-known bill around gay-straight alliances, which, as we know, turned the previous Conservative government inside out with the acrobatics that they did to try to deal with that bill. It's rare that the opposition will get an opportunity to get a bill up, but it's also rare just as a member of the House for private members to get a bill up. So if what happens is that it comes up and then it automatically gets delayed for three weeks, then we just significantly reduce the number of bills that get debated. Now, I suppose that if we don't have a throne speech every year, it might ultimately be a problem that gets fixed over two years or three years, but the start will be that private members' bills get debated less.

Moreover, it's not clear in here what happens if the committee is unable to meet and address the bill and come up with a plan within the three-week period. Will the committee get the opportunity to play around with it so that the bill never comes back and so that private members' bills, particularly the opposition private members' bills or embarrassing bills to the government by government members who are not part of Executive Council, get shifted off to committee? It's not clear to me what happens in the committee and what happens if the committee is unable to make a recommendation and fully debate that bill within the three-week time. I would suggest to you that it's unlikely that that will happen in many cases. It's a system that ultimately is going to once again take away the voice of private members on both sides of the House, basically everyone other than Executive Council. That's not a thing that we can agree to.

At this point, we would suggest that that piece get shipped away for more deliberation and not agreed to until we have a much stronger understanding of what happens in committee and what guarantees we have that that bill always comes back to the House for debate. In the absence of that, then you need to see this for exactly what it is, which is a plan to further take away the voice of private members on both sides of the House, who are not members of Executive Council.

The final thing that I will speak to is simply the issue that goes back to this whole matter of bringing Ottawa to Edmonton, because I know – I'm pretty sure – you guys have been talking about: "Oh, well, you know, Albertans voted for this, and they voted for that. Everything that we're doing is what Albertans voted for." I'm pretty sure there was no point in the election campaign where the now Premier got up and said: jeez, what we need is more Ottawa in Edmonton. I'm quite sure that was not a part of anybody's platform. Quite sure. In fact, I think there were a lot of memes to the opposite there. Yet what we're doing is bringing more Ottawa to Edmonton. I don't know if we're going to end up with finger bowls at some point on our desks as well. I don't know. I'm not a finger bowl girl personally, but I know some of the folks over there are quite comfortable using them.

Nonetheless, I don't know why it is that we would feel the need to bring Ottawa to Alberta. Clapping versus desk thumping has as much to do with the overall decorum in this House as whether the sun is out or whether it's raining. At the end of the day, there will be decorum if the debates are respectful, and there will not be decorum if things become more polarized. But desks versus clapping is simply a demonstration of control, and more to the point, it is in fact the imposition of Ottawa on over 100 years of Alberta tradition. So I don't see why. Now, at the end of the day, you know, it's not a hill to die on. It's just a sad departure from tradition that is disconnected from any kind of logical objective because, as I've said, it has absolutely nothing to do with decorum.

I would urge people to watch the House of Commons in the U.K., where they don't have desks to thump, they do clap, and I'll tell you that while far more entertaining than we are, decorum is not the first thing that comes to mind when you watch that. It's just a false argument. It's disingenuous, and that's not what it's about. Obviously, we're not in support of it, and I'm not entirely sure why folks over there are so committed to bringing more Ottawa to Edmonton, but so be it. I'm sure this won't be the first time.

Anyway, those are overall the reasons why we don't support this particular group of amendments. The overarching theme is this. We think that there are strong traditions in this House, which have served to give the citizens of this province a voice and to include them in the proceedings. They are traditions that have been in place, in many cases, for a long time, and while there are many things that we could do to promote the rights of private members, none of them are included in this particular package.

What I will say, too, is that many of you may recall the scandal around the so-called no-meet committee. That committee actually historically did meet once every four years. What it did was that that committee sat down and, over the course of several weeks, worked on a multiparty basis to work through the elements of the standing orders, and then that committee made recommendations to the House, and the House then voted on the standing orders and on any changes to the standing orders. That committee, of course, was completely bypassed here. Just speaking there again to the rights of private members, this whole process is starting by spurning and thwarting the rights of private members, so it is hardly surprising that the substance of it is also designed to undermine the rights of private members.

I know there are a lot of folks here that are new and aren't aware of how little opportunity they have to participate here, but it will become increasingly clear. In the meantime I'm pretty sure it goes against what many Albertans thought that the members opposite were running to bring into place.

Nonetheless, that is why we will not be voting in favour of these amendments. It is why we will be very clear in our conversations with our constituents and anybody else who wishes to speak with us that the first package of things brought in by this government very clearly worked to undermine access and representation of the people of Alberta within this institution and on the record as well as to undermine the ability of individually elected private members in this House, separate and apart from the members of Executive Council, who were selected to be in that role over those other members there, particularly on the government side.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would now move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Glasgow moved, seconded by Ms Rosin, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate May 29: Ms Goodridge]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak?

Sorry. Would the hon. Government House Leader like to close debate?

Mr. Jason Nixon: On the throne speech?

The Deputy Speaker: On the throne speech.

Mr. Jason Nixon: No. I'm talking on it.

The Deputy Speaker: You want to speak to the throne speech?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah. You bet.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's great to have an opportunity today to rise to discuss the throne speech today. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to it. I know that I'm looking forward to watching some other members give a maiden speech . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, I hesitate to interrupt you. Unfortunately, you've already spoken to that.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I thought that might happen, Madam Speaker, so I'm looking forward to hearing somebody else speak on the throne speech in the next few minutes.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to the Speech from the Throne, that was last week at the beginning of the session. In general, this speech sets out the priorities for the government, their work for the coming session, and all those things that matter to Albertans, matter to our constituents. It's an important document.

However, I think the start of the speech rests on three things: first, the relentless focus on policies that are designed to create jobs; the province's right to control their natural resources; and third, making life better for Albertans by supporting health and education for the most vulnerable in our society. But when we look at these three things in a week, I think their relentless focus has remained on policies that do exactly the opposite of creating jobs. Their focus has been relentless on policies that do exactly the opposite of promoting growth. Their focus has been relentless on policies that do exactly the opposite of economic diversification. Their focus has been relentless to destroy investor confidence.

Why do I say that? We can look at their bills. The carbon tax repeal act: they said that this bill somehow creates 6,000 jobs. In the last session of the 29th Legislature they would always come up with numbers about how many Albertans are unemployed. Depending on the day, they will use any number, but the number they would use was 180,000 Albertans unemployed. With that plan, the climate leadership plan, there were 7,300 jobs that have been put at risk, so somewhere 187,000 Albertans now are out of a job.

In terms of economic diversification, just take our energy industry. We focused on making sure that we get value for our products and that we find new markets, and by repealing that climate leadership plan, we are risking the approval, we are risking progress on the Trans Mountain pipeline, which will give us access to the west coast and other markets. They said that they will focus on diversification, but their actions so far are just taking us away from diversification.

The second priority. They said that they will stand for the province's right to control and develop natural resources freely. This requires accessing, securing pipeline. As I said, for a long time even before our government, Conservatives were here in this province, for 44 years. They were in federal government before this government for 10 years, and they were not able to secure a pipeline. The reason for that can be seen in court decisions with respect to Energy East and many other cases. Two themes will emerge. One is that their efforts have fallen short with respect to the environment. They never took concrete action on the environment that will lead to securing Alberta a pipeline. They also walked roughshod on indigenous rights. Their consultation always fell short. These are the two major things that were always in the way of us securing the pipeline.

Now, again, finally, when we had a climate leadership plan that was getting the job done, that was putting a cap on emissions, that involved working with industry, and that came up with a plan that will help us secure the pipeline, now we are seeing that they are reversing all that progress, and that will certainly not help them achieve the priorities that they said that their government will focus on. Their focus so far in a week has been completely in the opposite direction.

With respect to getting our resources to market, we signed a deal which involved having more railcars so that we can ship somewhere close to 125,000 barrels a day to market. Those agreements were worth billions of dollars in terms of economic return for Albertans, somewhere around $6 billion, and they're threatening to cancel those contracts. Again, by cancelling those contracts, what will happen? We will not have the takeaway capacity that our industry needs. We will not be able to access markets because in our pipeline system we do not have enough capacity.

Those were the things that were helping us get our resources freely and fairly to the national and international markets. They are taking all those steps that will keep us away from those markets. Again, it's disappointing that they said in the throne speech what they will do and that so far what they have done is completely the opposite of what has been stated there in the throne speech.

They said that they will make "life better for all Albertans by ensuring the quality and effectiveness of our public services, especially in health care and education, and by supporting the most vulnerable in our society." Let's unpack that one. One thing is for sure: whatever they have done so far, that's not making life better for all Albertans. Their legislation that's before the House that proposes to cut taxes from 12 per cent to 8 per cent, giving $4 billion plus in corporate tax breaks: that is not for all Albertans; it's just going to a few wealthy corporations, profitable corporations, profitable Albertans. There's nothing in that tax break for 90-plus per cent of Albertans living in this province.

They said that they will maintain quality public services, especially in health and education. We have seen on at least three different occasions that the opposition has asked the Minister of Education whether they will fund the 15,000 new students who are walking through our doors, and every time the answer we hear is, "We will either maintain or increase," whatever that means. But maintaining funding is effectively a cut because 15,000 new students are coming through our school doors and we are saying that we will not provide more dollars for their educational resources. I'm not sure how that's making life better for all Albertans. In fact, by these actions, by not funding education, we are not at all making life better for those who are entering our school system. For those parents, we are actually making them concerned about the future of their kids, about the education of their children, and that's not, by any stretch, making life better for these Albertans.

With respect to health care we heard the same thing, that either they will maintain or they will increase, but they don't know. For all these decisions – Albertans gave them a mandate, elected them – they put together a panel, so the panel will look at all these things and make decisions for them.

When we were in charge of Treasury, the member who was our Minister of Finance then, the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo, before every session would himself consult with Albertans across this province, and he would ask all the members of Executive Council then to reach out to their respective stakeholders and ask about their priorities, ask about their concerns, ask about their issues, ask them what they want to see in the budget. That's how we were setting budgets.

But to just have somebody – they got help from someone in Saskatchewan who has a very firm track record of blowing up hospitals across that province. They're waiting for that report. At that point they will tell the school system, the board of trustees, and all those parents whether they will be able to fund education or not.

With these three priorities, three pillars, from what they have done so far, from what they have indicated so far, they are doing exactly the opposite of what they said in the throne speech that they will do.

Then they also identified that they will bring in certain bills. They brought forward Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, as indicated in the throne speech. What that bill did: it will, if passed, reverse the progress that was made under the previous government. Somehow it says that it's providing $1.4 billion in tax relief and making everything more affordable for Albertans. But what it doesn't say here is that it will take away $600 million to $700 million, two-thirds of what everyday Albertans were getting in rebates, that was making their lives affordable. They are taking away those rebates from Albertans. It's taking away from many organizations who have invested in renewable energy projects. It's driving investment away that was coming to Alberta in renewables, that was coming to Alberta in green tech and all those projects. That bill: they promised it, they brought it, but this is the impact of that bill that Albertans have to live with.

Then it also says that it will take legal action to protect Albertans from the federal carbon tax. Madam Speaker, a week ago or so we heard from the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal, the province of Saskatchewan, exactly that, that they wanted to challenge the authority of the federal government on whether they can bring in the carbon tax and impose that carbon tax on provinces as backstop legislation. The way the federal legislation works, if some provinces have their own climate leadership plan that is somewhat equivalent to what the federal government wants to do, that will stand. Otherwise, federal legislation applies as a backstop.

So Saskatchewan did the same thing. They brought a reference to their Court of Appeal, the highest court within the province, and the court ruled that, yes, the federal government can do that. And if we were to ask the same question, because it's the same analysis, whether the federal government has power or not . . .

3:40

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-McCall for his thoughtful comments in response to Her Majesty's Speech from the Throne, and I want to congratulate the Member for Calgary-McCall on his re-election. Certainly, it was a tough re-election for many in our caucus, but he was one of the few who increased the percentage of the vote in his riding. I think that's a testament to the good work that he's done in representing the people of Calgary-McCall, and he should be commended for that. I want the people of Alberta to know what an excellent representative the people of Calgary-McCall have in this member.

I want to take this time to thank the former Minister of Community and Social Services for the work that he did to legislate increases in AISH and seniors' benefits and learners' benefits. Madam Speaker, perhaps you had this same experience, but certainly if I had to list the top two reasons that people in Edmonton-Gold Bar contacted my constituency at the very beginning of my term, the first was complaints about the WCB, and the second was complaints about AISH.

I'm proud of the record that our government had in addressing both of those complaints. By significantly revising the WCB system, the number of complaints to my office dropped to virtually zero by the end of that term. Certainly, by this member, when he was minister, introducing legislation to increase payments to AISH recipients and other benefit recipients and link those to the consumer price index, he's done a significant service for the most vulnerable people in the province of Alberta. They will continue to rely on annual increases in their benefits so that they won't fall behind, like they were left to do under the Conservative government prior to our election in 2015.

Madam Speaker, I can't really overstate how critically important that this work is done has been to the members of my constituency who receive AISH payments. You know, people on AISH have a hard time making ends meet. Certainly, they get trapped in the cycle of poverty. They fall into circumstances where they're severely handicapped through no fault of their own and need to rely on the support of the province to be able to look after themselves and their families. With the benefits that they received prior to us linking those to consumer price index increases, all of those people were left behind. They couldn't afford to make the rent. They couldn't afford to eat. If they had children, they couldn't afford to send them to school and certainly couldn't afford to provide their kids with a lot of the extras that their neighbours expected from schools, things like field trips, pizza lunches, those kinds of things that enhance the student experience. Parents on AISH weren't able to provide those things to students.

I just want to take this opportunity, Madam Speaker, to thank the Member for Calgary-McCall for making life better for the AISH recipients in my constituency, and I know that that single piece of legislation will have an impact on a generation of people in Alberta and make their lives better. So thank you for that. I also want to recognize that he increased the Alberta seniors' benefit and linked that to consumer price index increases as well.

Madam Speaker, Edmonton-Gold Bar has more seniors than any other urban riding in the entire province of Alberta, and many of those seniors rely on the Alberta seniors' benefit to make ends meet as well. Being able to rely on annual consumer price index increases will mean that seniors in my constituency will be able to afford a few nice things, the odd trip to the store. They'll be able to buy their grandkids and their great-grandchildren extra gifts at Christmastime and for birthdays when maybe they weren't able to do that. Certainly, they'll be better able to look after themselves. We know that the cost of prescription medications is skyrocketing out of control for many seniors. The cost of a number of medical services that they rely on that aren't covered by Alberta health insurance becomes hard for them to afford, so a lot of seniors will be able to use those annual increases for their own good.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the Speech from the Throne? The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you for recognizing me, Madam Speaker. You know, as I rise to speak in this Chamber with regard to the throne speech, I just want to say that one of the reasons, the main reason that got me into politics back in 1995 was a desire to help improve the quality of life of the constituents in the east end of Calgary. I ran. I was a social worker in the east end of Calgary, and I saw that their condition was worsening, not everyone, of course, but those who were vulnerable, those who were without means, who were relying on government supports. I saw that their condition was worsening as a result of the government of the day bringing in an austerity program, and that program cut somewhere between 5 and 10 per cent out of the provincial budget and affected many people who needed that support from the provincial government at that time in their lives.

That politicized me, Madam Speaker. I remember very well the first time that I took part in a protest, my first in my life, in 1993, '94, right out here on the steps of the Legislature, where I with about 5,000 people said: "That shouldn't happen. Our government should look to support people when they need those supports." When they do, of course, then they contribute back into the social fabric of this province with their tax dollars and their contributions in their social capacity.

But this throne speech: I preface my comments on the throne speech with that story because I found this throne speech to be small in stature and not broad enough to include all of the necessary, important actions government can make, should make to address the needs of their population, Albertans. I think there are things missing from this throne speech that weren't missing from the government that I was a part of in their throne speeches, particularly the needs of women, the needs of the vulnerable, the LGBTQ community, and indigenous persons.

I found that the single focus in this throne speech was around a job. While a job is terribly important, of course, for a person's mental and emotional and physical well-being, it's not the only thing in life. This throne speech seemed to reduce in a way, distill down: the only thing the government would be focused on is a person's employment. I can tell you that while employment is tremendous, it does not round out the whole of a person's existence.

What I want to take an opportunity to say is that, you know, I think this throne speech missed the opportunity to say what the government was going to do with respect to women in this province to support them, for instance, in this Chamber. The previous government that I was a part of had an equal number of women who were a part of the Executive Council with men in the Executive Council. I am tremendously proud in all of that. I think this throne speech misses entirely. As the former Premier was saying earlier, we don't have the breadth of policy development when we don't include younger women, when we don't include woman generally in that development, and this Chamber is devoid of enough women to make a difference in some respects.

I also know that when I was listening to the throne speech, I was wondering if it would really speak to Albertans beyond the information that's in here with regard to the economy. I think it fails in that regard as well.

I know that, you know, this has been a really difficult time in this province, since late 2014, when the economy took a nosedive in this province as a result of the precipitous drop of the world price of oil and the pain that that has caused Albertans and the corporations that keep Albertans employed. I know that as a government we were really focused on ensuring that Albertans had the supports, and we had their backs through that recession, that lasted far too long for any of us, I'm sure. We had Albertans' backs, and as a result of having their backs, the former Minister of Community and Social Services – it was called human services at one point, too, I think – came to me as the Minister of Finance in our Executive Council and said: look, I need a lot more resources because Albertans are coming off their EI and they're needing supports. We upped the budgets for Albertans in income support programs, AISH programs, and other programs a lot to address the need that was coming forward, that was being experienced by Albertans through that horrible recession.

You know, those kinds of things aren't talked about in this throne speech. Having Albertans' backs in that regard is not talked about in this throne speech. There are lots of things, of course, around repealing this and changing that and cutting corporate taxes, as was introduced the other day, but I just want the people in this Chamber to know that Alberta, at 12 per cent, had corporate taxes on par with most of the provinces in this country. We weren't out in front of provinces in this country. We had about a $12 billion tax advantage on the closest other province in terms of taxation in this country, and that Alberta tax advantage stayed strong through the entire course of the previous government that I was proud to be a part of.

Also, we of course wanted to make sure that the focus was on young people in this province, so we did important things, like recently we were able to address the minimum wage and bring that up for all Albertans to $15 an hour. Of course, the throne speech talks about repealing that as well, and I think that's in the wrong direction, Madam Speaker. I think, you know, I and others around here have said repeatedly that a minimum wage is a minimum wage is a minimum wage, and of course this throne speech undoes that as well. That advantage won't be for young people; it'll be for businesses.

The balance just seems to be wrong in this throne speech. Where the balance could have been pretty equal for citizens and others in this province, entities, corporations, it swings far too much, in my estimation and the estimation of many Albertans, away from the needs of citizens in this province. Be that as it may, we'll continue to raise that issue with Albertans whenever they ask and whenever I have the opportunity.

The other thing that I wanted to point out, Madam Speaker, is that, you know, it does talk about the indigenous opportunities corporation here, and we heard that again from the Premier today in terms of how he believes that that's groundbreaking. But I know that the former Indigenous Relations minister was also breaking ground in that regard in building, through his adherence to the truth and reconciliation principles, connections across this province with our First Nations communities and our Métis communities. I was just really impressed with the single-minded focus he had to reach out to First Nations, our indigenous citizens in this province. He told me once that at the end of his four-year term he had visited every First Nation community in this province – and there are 48 – and he had visited every Métis settlement in this province, and there are eight.

I was very impressed because, Madam Speaker, that kind of commitment to go directly, sit down with people in their communities, and listen to them around the issues they have and the needs that they wanted to bring forward to their minister – I don't think any Indigenous Relations minister in this province ever has outreached to the extent that the previous Indigenous Relations minister had. I want to commend him for his work in that regard.

I also started out with a little story about, you know, what brought me to politics. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that if there's an unwinding, as we're seeing on some of these bills that are identified in this throne speech, of the necessary supports Albertans are currently getting from their government, income supports and AISH, PDD supports, which I think would be very hard to do – but it's not impossible. Frankly, I'm concerned that the current government may see those monies as an unnecessary expenditure and reduce them. If that takes place, I think we'll be into the same sort of citizen protest that originally got me into politics back in 1993 and '94, when there was an austerity program of drastic cuts brought in by the PC government of the day. I think that's in the wrong direction.

Albertans can rightly be proud of the supports and services that are in this province today. They can be rightly proud of the increases to AISH and income support programs that were championed by the former Minister of Community and Social Services. Going in the wrong direction to bring in austerity to needed programs and services would be un-Albertan. It would be small-minded and churlish. We can get back to balance, Madam Speaker, but we should not do it on the backs of the vulnerable.

I know some of my colleagues across the floor, and I don't think they want to do those things, but they do have a single-minded focus to get to balance, as we did. My fear is that they'll try and get to balance by cutting programs and services that Albertans can rightly be proud of today but won't be if they start to see them be pulled back under their feet.

The work of the previous government was – you know, I've got to add up the number of bills that were brought in in the four years that the previous government was in place that I was proud to be a part of. The number 60-plus is in my mind. I really have to find out the exact number of bills that were brought before this House because across the floor there have been some folks who have said, for instance, in the area of fiscal framework agreements with municipalities – well, there is one that exists with Calgary and Edmonton at this time. The other approximately 340 . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member across the way for his discussion around this. I just wanted to bring up a few things. He mentioned a single-minded focus on what may or may not be happening on this side of the House. I will tell you that I do have a single-minded focus, and that's listening to Albertans.

One of the biggest privileges, especially in this last election cycle, was to have such a large mandate. That mandate was built on a very transparent piece of information that came across that was – actually, a good chunk of it came out prewrit, in fact, and had the opportunity to be put out at the doors day after day by thousands of volunteers and people who, I'm sure, like the opposition, spent countless hours at the doors talking to Albertans about their priorities.

I'm sorry. I'm sad in many aspects that my friend across the way would suggest that a single-minded notion of what is important to Albertans would be considered something that is not important to everybody in this province.

Mr. McIver: It's called focus.

Mrs. Aheer: It is. It is a direct, laser-minded focus on the priorities of Albertans.

The hon. member spoke about vulnerable Albertans. As a mother of a vulnerable Albertan I can honestly tell you that people came to this province for years. Coming originally from a party that joined eventually with the ruling party at that time, the PCs, one of the things that I have to say, in that time period having had a vulnerable child in this situation, is that Alberta was the gold star for any sort of services that were necessary for children, especially like my child, with a cognitive disability. We had people just flocking to this province for our services. The best people, the best services, the best ability to pull children out of autism – that's what we called it back in the day – looking at these cognitive disabilities and having the very, very best people in this province.

I find it – I'm searching for a word. It's very disappointing to me to hear a government that had the privilege of having this province for four years in any way speak disrespectfully of the people in service, public servants, or anybody else relative to the growth of the work that was done in this province on behalf of our most vulnerable, because I have to say, having been a mother who was so blessed to have those services, that my son now drives a vehicle, has a job, is a beautiful, amazing, contributing member of society. That is definitely related to the amount of incredible help that he had along the way as he was pulled out of this by speech pathologists, OT, PT, people who spent countless hours and days in my house, every day helping me to understand and to find the strategies to help create this beautiful human being who is my youngest son.

It is imperative that we look at these situations. There are always ways that we can improve. Absolutely. Again, I am not willing to mortgage the future of my children and my grandchildren. You want to call that a laser focus? You got it. That's exactly why I'm here. That laser focus has so many pieces to it, but I can honestly tell you, Madam Speaker, that we spoke about it with honesty and transparency every day at the doors. Every day. We didn't hide from that. We didn't make up some sort of grand plan about something that's not possible. We actually talked to Albertans about what their priorities were. I'm sure you have them memorized. We said them a gazillion times: jobs, economy, pipelines. Why? All of those things contribute to the things that the member was just talking about.

If you want to take care of our most vulnerable people, we have to have a healthy economy. We have to have the ability to take care of these incredible people, to be able to build the programs and to have the services, all of the things that all of us hold so dear in this province where we are so blessed and incredibly prosperous. We've had two governments in the last four years that have actively attacked our economy, our energy industry, and the people in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in response to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's throne speech. Like many of us, I am new to this place and this role. For those of you I have not had the pleasure to meet yet, my name is Roger Reid. Today I am humbled, proud, and grateful to stand in this Legislature as the newly elected Member for Livingstone-Macleod. This is a tremendous honour, and I will strive to represent my constituents in a way that is respectful and that honours them for the next four years. This is the opportunity of a lifetime, to represent my friends, my family, and my neighbours from a constituency that truly represents the hard-working prairie spirit that Albertans are known for.

Livingstone-Macleod is home to a vast, amazingly diverse geography, people, and industries. It has a fantastic array of geography, stretching from the heights of the Rocky Mountains to the grasslands of the prairies. My constituency is nestled in the very southwest corner of the province, bordering both our provincial neighbour, British Columbia, to the west and our international neighbour, the United States, to the south. It encompasses part of Alberta's foothills and the Porcupine Hills and, of course, Alberta's native grasslands.

I would certainly be remiss to not honour our First Nations people, so I would like to give special mention to both the Piikani people from the south of my riding and the Stoney Nakoda people in the north end. The First Nations people who live in what is now known as Livingstone-Macleod, because of their great contributions to the west, cannot be ignored because we have great sites like our UNESCO world heritage site, Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, where the history, culture, and stories of our First Nations are shared with visitors from across Alberta and around the world. Just as these nations have been an important part of our past, I'm excited to be part of a government that will also work to include them to be an important part of our future as we share in the prosperity of this great province with our First Nations people.

With the recent riding redistribution Livingstone-Macleod has gained Waterton, a town and pristine national park along the northern end of the American border, and the town of High River and the communities around it. To the people of Waterton and High River I'd like to say: welcome to Livingstone-Macleod. I hope that I will be able to represent you as well as your previous representatives have in the past.

Livingstone-Macleod is home to people just as amazing as its geography. My constituents are incredibly hard working and embody the entrepreneurial spirit that we as a society praise so greatly. Farming and ranching are classic Alberta industries, and they play an important role in my constituency's economy, but they are not the only crucial industries. My constituents are involved in commerce, tourism, resource development, forestry, and film. They all play crucial roles, providing well-paying jobs for thousands of hard-working constituents so they can provide for themselves and their families.

Like many in Livingstone-Macleod, my family has been living in this fantastic area of our province that we call home for over 110 years. My family has been living in the area, and I am now the fifth generation to be raised there. Much like all of our neighbours in the riding, we grew up as stewards of the land, hard-working farmers and ranchers, constantly looking for ways to improve the ways we care for our land, that has brought prosperity to our families for generations. The hard-working people of Livingstone-Macleod, like my parents and grandparents, are always looking for ways to improve our homes, our businesses, and our livelihoods to provide for our families, and it's that very innovative spirit that brings me great joy to call myself a resident of Livingstone-Macleod.

Of course, I can't ignore my own hometown, the beautiful town of Claresholm. I am not the first MLA from Claresholm, nor will I be the last. Of course, like every single person in this Legislature, I will strive to represent my constituents the best that I can. This may be a difficult task, though, considering the prestige of some of my predecessors who have hailed from the communities of Livingstone-Macleod, including William Moffatt, who was the first resident and mayor of Claresholm, who served in the Third Legislature. In 1917 he was defeated by another Claresholm resident, the Hon. Louise McKinney, a member of Canada's own Famous Five and, more importantly, the first woman elected to a Legislature in the British empire. They would all be succeeded by William Aberhart from High River, who was this province's seventh Premier, and just as impressively, from Little Bow Mr. Ray Speaker, who served in this very Chamber and federally for 34 years and never was defeated in an election. As a side note, I opted to share his desk with him. I have some big shoes to fill, but I can safely say that I'm extremely excited to get to work to grow into these shoes.

In the coming weeks we all face late nights, long hours, and more than a few last-minute House duty trades as we work to fulfill our constituents' wishes in this Legislature. With that in mind, I'd like to tell the House what my constituents are hoping to see me accomplish over the next four years. First of all, we must create a well-thought-out plan for the stewardship of our land. As Conservatives we are conservative by nature. The people of Livingstone-Macleod live where they live because of our backyard, which in this case is the beautiful countryside of our province. For us, this countryside acts as a source of recreation, sustenance, and prosperity. We need to ensure this access for future generations so that they can continue to explore and enjoy it the way previous generations have. We must become world leaders in this regard to preserve the landscape and access for all future generations.

However, we can't do that at the expense of the province's economy. As a small-business owner myself I know that we must ensure economic benefit and success for small businesses in the rural communities of my constituency for it to remain as prosperous as it has been. We must develop and grow the economy in order to provide opportunities for our youth, both today and tomorrow, so they can gain critical skills in that very important first job and so that they can later create more opportunities in the very communities where they've been raised.

Innovation and diversity in our agricultural industry and business are essential for this, and as we move further into the digital age, so is making sure that every rural community has access to high-speed Internet so that rural Albertans can continue to keep up with our urban neighbours.

Lastly, rural areas such as Livingstone-Macleod are wonderfully attractive for retiring Albertans. After all, who doesn't like the quiet, idyllic country life? In fact, it's been said that all the cars are in the city, but all the good parking is in the country. With this, though, we must also work to ensure that our seniors have access to the great health care that those in urban areas have access to, the same opportunities for long-term palliative and hospice care that our urban neighbours enjoy. The need to maintain and adapt our health care system is vital to ensuring that we can maintain our rural health care systems and adapt to changing times as it is crucial for helping our seniors as they enjoy their well-earned retirement.

Last but not least, the people of Livingstone-Macleod have some concerns related to some of our available infrastructure, and what we need is to upgrade and modernize in the coming years. Our schools must be modernized in order to equip rural students for the coming needs of the digital age and the hurdles they will face as they grow up in this new era. Just as importantly, we must follow through on the proposals to do things like twin highway 3 in order to improve both road safety and the economics in the area. I'm glad that the government is committed to working with all municipalities to create predictable and sustainable funding for these events to happen.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your time, just as I'd like to thank my constituents for their overwhelming support in this past election. Just as importantly, I would like to thank my wife, Darlene, and my children – Elisabeth, Allison, and Aaron – for their constant support and backing as I've taken on this difficult journey. I would not be here today without them, just as I would not be here without the trust and hard work of my neighbours in Livingstone-Macleod. There's no better place in this world than my constituency, and I will always be grateful to be from such a fantastic area of our beautiful province.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) I see the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah, I was touched by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod's maiden speech. I think he did an amazing job. As a rancher I'm kind of jealous of his constituency. I think it's some of the most beautiful ranchland in the entire province, and I thought you painted the picture well. From the Rockies to the grasslands to the prairies, that riding has a little bit of everything.

A real fond memory for me: we used to go to Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump as kids for many a year. I still have the arrowheads that we made there. We'd make and eat bannock and camp. It's a really wonderful site, one of the most special in Alberta. I think you did an amazing job painting that picture.

In response to the Speech from the Throne, I know we have a lot of great policies coming forward, and I was wondering if you, as a small-business owner, would just go a little deeper into some of the policies that you're most excited about.

Mr. Reid: I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. We're both country boys, so we tend to be a little informal, so you'll have to bear with us. Being a small-business owner was a huge motivation for me to run in this election and seek to serve the people of Livingstone-Macleod in this House. As somebody who spent his life generally working for other people, I never totally understood how the decisions by government would affect me every day. As someone who became a small-business owner and was all of a sudden responsible not just for my paycheque and my family but responsible for the 65 people that we employ, I began to take a much closer interest in what government decisions did to affect the lives of those who work for me, who are really like family because we spend so much time together, to take time to address poorly-thought-out policies or poorly executed policies that I believe probably had great intentions but in terms of the end result were not necessarily beneficial for working Albertans.

I'm excited that this government is focused on getting Albertans back to work. We've seen our own businesses shrink in terms of the employees that we hire simply because it has gotten very expensive with the labour changes that have happened under the previous government. We had compassion for our employees – like I said, they're like family – so we never laid anybody off because we knew their livelihood was dependent on it, but we also made sure that we were very cautious when we rehired and when we filled positions when people moved on to other opportunities, because at the end of the day we still needed to make a profit to keep the doors open and keep those people employed.

I'm excited that we have a focus on reducing red tape that makes it simpler for entrepreneurs and businesses to get up and running quicker and to be able to provide and create those jobs for Albertans who want to work. We heard that again and again at the doors from those who had lost their jobs. Albertans were not looking for handouts; they're looking for opportunity. They're looking for those opportunities to get out and work hard, support their neighbourhoods, support their families, pay their mortgages, and contribute to their communities.

I think it's very important that we have the focus that we have because, at the end of the day, when our economy thrives, we're able to support those things that are important to my constituents in our rural communities, things like great, world-class, affordable, publicly funded health care, absolutely essential in rural Alberta; funding our schools so that we modernize them; that we hire and attract the best teachers and assistants to work in the schools so that our rural communities have every advantage that our urban students have. Those things cannot happen without a robust economy, without a way to attract new people, new businesses, new workers into our rural communities. That focus of this government, I think, is an important part about how that's going to happen in the next four years.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members who would like to take this opportunity to speak? I see the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont standing.

Mr. Rutherford: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise today for the very first time as I address the Assembly. I am humbled by the support of the constituents of Leduc-Beaumont, and it's an honour to be here representing them today. It's not lost on me, the expectation of my constituents to see the economy grow, to see job opportunities increase, and to have more stability in every sector of our economy.

As I travelled across my constituency, I talked to many hard-working Albertans, and I was saddened to hear from so many who had lost their jobs, had sporadic employment, and had completely lost trust in the now previous government. These stories motivated me to work harder. It motivated me to ensure that a government was elected that would focus on the economy, oil and gas investment, jobs, and pipelines, a government that believed in creating opportunities and choice.

I will make sure that as a member of the governing caucus we remain focused on improving the lives of all Albertans, that we build an economy that works for all Albertans, and that we remain humble and stay true to the people we serve. With so many constituents tied directly or indirectly to the oil and gas industry, it is clear that the residents of Leduc-Beaumont were looking for a change. They were looking for an advocate for pipelines and prosperity. They were looking for a positive vision under the United Conservatives.

From my own background in policing I have seen first-hand the struggles that many Albertans are facing with tougher economic times and higher rates of criminal activity. When I joined the Edmonton Police Service, I had an image of what the job was and what a day would be like. I went out on ride-alongs. I talked to senior members. I believed I had a grasp of what a day in the life of an officer was like, and in the end I was only partially right.

We certainly fight crime, arrest bad guys, investigate criminal allegations, but the majority of the job was mediation, listening, understanding where people were coming from and what had brought us together. The number of calls involving domestic violence and family fights: it's staggering, Mr. Speaker. These calls for help come in all day, every day, so I'm proud to see a government that is acting on implementing Clare's law.

Mr. Speaker, Clare's law will provide additional protections for women in the form of information and allow those who choose to seek the information the ability to make a more informed decision on their relationships. This is an additional tool that can be used to help prevent and lower the incidents of domestic violence. The commitment to increased funding for electronic monitoring is a great step forward to help victims. Being comfortable in your own home and community should not be a luxury. This will also be a tool that will allow police to react faster to those who are breaching their release conditions. There are so many incidents where this technology would have prevented revictimization as so many victims of domestic violence are taunted by their abusers in an effort to further control them and end their bid for justice and a peaceful future.

Equally important will be the saving the girl next door act. That will provide additional protections for victims of human trafficking. Having investigated this type of crime, the stories of violence, abuse, manipulation, and fear are heart-wrenching. The extent that some people will go to to profit off another human being is deplorable, and that it still happens in our province and our country is tragic.

I will also advocate for a more responsive court system that will end needless delays and adjournments and a system that puts victims first and realizes the bravery of those who come to testify and face those they have accused of a crime. The commitment from the government to hire additional prosecutors will certainly help alleviate court delays and reduce the workload on prosecutors, allowing them to give more attention to their cases as they represent not only the victims but all of society in a court of law.

Another aspect of policing is the amount of time spent dealing with and trying to help those with mental health conditions. The stigma of having a mental health condition can still lead many to not seek help, and deteriorating mental health is a significant issue for those experiencing addiction, homelessness, suicidal thoughts, or else are struggling to find a place in daily society. This government has made commitments to support those with mental health conditions, including appointing an Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions, and has laid out a mental health and addictions strategy. Reducing the stigma and increasing the support for those suffering from mental health conditions must be a priority. All of us in this Assembly will know someone with a mental health condition, and this must be a nonpartisan issue that we work on together.

Mr. Speaker, as I went door to door in Leduc-Beaumont, it was clear that not only was the economy a significant issue but that crime was also a concern, and I'm proud to be part of a governing caucus that will take these issues seriously and put forward legislation to help prevent people from becoming victims, a government that will put victims first and implement a rural crime strategy to help those who find themselves too often the only thing that stands between their family, their property, and a criminal.

Mr. Speaker, there is no public opinion poll that performs better than being in the community and going door to door asking residents what they're concerned about. The economy was the number one issue in the riding of Leduc-Beaumont. I heard calls for pipelines, support for the oil and gas sector, increased investment in the province, more job opportunities, and a need for a government that listened to people, a government that would listen to the concerns of the constituents of Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that one of the biggest questions Albertans asked themselves when they voted was which leader, which party, which candidate, and which vision could get the economy booming again. The constituents of Leduc-Beaumont believed in me and the United Conservatives' positive vision, and I will fight for them every day. As we move forward on legislation to reignite our economy, know that we are doing what we can to show the people of Alberta that we serve them, that we will fight to restore investor confidence, and that we'll bring back prosperity.

The riding of Leduc-Beaumont has a long and rich history in agriculture and oil and gas, and although this election the riding has changed to one that is nearly all urban, the connection that many residents have to the farming community runs deep through personal and family ties. One only needs to stop at the A&W in Leduc and you can speak to many current and former farmers, retirees, and those still working hard in the community. We call them the senators, and they know exactly what is top of mind for the riding that day, and conveniently they also know exactly what to do about it, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that these groups meet across the province every day.

The communities in the riding are strong. Both the cities of Leduc and Beaumont have a small-town feel to them, and a deep sense of commitment to the community is amazing to see. The number of people who volunteer, fund raise for the community, and work to support one another is outstanding, and it inspires me. The constituency has achieved so much, yet there is potential for so much more. Collaboration and co-operation have increased in order to achieve common goals for mutual prosperity. I really do admire that the municipalities in and outside of the riding are partners, not adversaries, in attracting investment and meeting goals.

One example is the airport, which I was recently able to tour, that has achieved so much. The recent private-sector investment alone at the airport exceeds $700 million, and the EIA generates over $3 billion in economic activity every year from the movement of passengers, cargo, and local economic development. With a 24-hour airport, the QE II, rail lines, Nisku and Leduc industrial parks, and having a diversified and skilled workforce, this constituency is truly a part of the economic engine of Alberta, and when Leduc-Beaumont is doing well, Alberta is doing well.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I'll be proud to support Leduc, Beaumont, and Leduc county and be their representative in the Legislature to advocate for infrastructure projects, schools, investment, and to support legislation that will reignite our economy. I will unapologetically defend our resource development not only for the benefit of Leduc-Beaumont but for all Albertans.

In policing I have helped many people in a variety of ways, and I've never asked for thanks or acknowledgement of it. I just came in every day to work, I did my job, and I helped those who asked, many who called about a crime and many who called because they didn't know who else to turn to.

Ronald Reagan once said, "There is no limit to the amount of good you can do if you don't care who gets the credit." I'm not here for credit. I'm here to do a job to help the people of Alberta get to a more prosperous future by growing our economy, balancing the budget, growing job opportunities, supporting our oil and gas sector, and increasing the confidence of Albertans as a whole, Canadians, and those around the world who invest in our province. I'm here to serve the people of Alberta.

As I close, I'd like to thank the constituents of Leduc-Beaumont, for placing their trust in me, and the campaign volunteers, who worked so hard to make this a reality. I've always said that it may be my name on the ballot, but it'll be our win, and their support was amazing. Also, a big thanks to my entire family for their love and support throughout this whole process.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 1 An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It is my pleasure to rise and speak at Committee of the Whole to Bill 1, which we should refer to as the Implementation of the Trudeau Carbon Tax Act on the People of Alberta.

Madam Chair, during debate on second reading of this bill I, of course, raised the fact that there is not a single Albertan in this province who will be happy with the bill as it stands. The people who voted in favour of maintaining the climate leadership plan and moving forward on action on climate change, of course, will be significantly disappointed with the nature of this bill. It marks a significant step backwards in tackling climate change, which is the most urgent crisis that humanity faces today.

But not only that, Madam Chair, not only are the people who are looking to the provincial government to provide leadership on tackling climate change going to be disappointed with this bill; the people who thought that the carbon tax was going to be repealed are also going to be disappointed. Of course, as you know, once we repeal our made-in-Alberta carbon tax, the very next day Justin Trudeau and his government will impose their made-in-Ottawa carbon tax on the people of Alberta.

Not only is the fact that we're scrapping a made-in-Alberta plan concerning to a lot of the constituents that I represent in Edmonton-Gold Bar; it's concerning to people all across the province. They don't really know what the impact of the federal carbon tax is going to be on the province of Alberta because the government has done no consultation on that.

You know, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre like to boast about the election victory as consultation. Certainly, it was a referendum on the carbon tax, and I will agree with the members for Calgary-Lougheed and Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre that the people of Alberta have rejected the idea of a carbon tax.

But what they haven't rejected, Madam Chair, is action on climate change. In fact, all of the programs that we funded with revenue from the carbon tax were incredibly popular. The energy efficiency programs – and I know that the members opposite like to mock the idea of free light bulbs and free shower heads and free thermostats. However, hundreds of thousands of people in Alberta signed up for the program, and we had to close it on virtually the very first day that we rolled it out because it was so popular.

The other programs that Energy Efficiency Alberta has implemented since that program came to a close include energy efficiency upgrades in homes, rebates for solar panels, a number of initiatives to help commercial enterprises and not-for-profit enterprises improve their energy efficiency. All of those were fully subscribed to, basically, on the day that they were rolled out. We're also funding a number of programs, like I said, that help municipalities to improve their renewable energy generation capacity and energy efficiency.

We're helping farmers improve their energy efficiency and helping them shift to renewable energy. We're helping school boards move to sources of renewable energy. Every single one of those programs that we introduced as a result of our climate leadership plan was oversubscribed on, basically, the day that they were announced.

You know, I think it's fair to say that the people of Alberta have rejected the idea of a carbon tax, but they haven't rejected the idea of taking action on climate change. When offered programs to help them take meaningful action on climate change in their own homes, Albertans will jump at the chance. Madam Chair, now that we are repealing the carbon tax and implementing the federal carbon tax in its place, all of the funding for those programs that have been incredibly popular is up in the air.

We know a little bit about what the federal program is going to be. It means that 90 per cent of the carbon tax revenue that's collected in the province of Alberta will be returned to the people of Alberta in the form of rebates, which, you know, we didn't think was a good idea. It's not fair for millionaires and billionaires to get rebates on the carbon taxes that they pay at the same rate that, you know, people making the now lower minimum wage get. That's grossly unfair. Also, 90 per cent of the money that was collected will go to the people of Alberta in the form of rebates, meaning that there's only 10 per cent left to fund all of these other programs, Madam Chair, that have been wildly popular with Albertans.

What's the plan, then? How are we going to take meaningful action on climate change if all of the money that's been collected to take action on climate change is being returned to the people of Alberta in the form of rebates? The members opposite like to state that when we were elected, we didn't mention a carbon tax. While technically true, of course, in our platform in 2015 we did say that we were going to take meaningful action to tackle climate change. In fact, that was one of the first actions that we took as a government: we appointed a panel on looking at climate change. That panel was headed by Andrew Leach, a popular whipping boy of the members opposite. I have to say that Mr. Leach is a constituent of mine, and I think the people here in this Chamber who like to attack him on Twitter and other means of social media should be ashamed of themselves for the way they treat somebody who so selflessly gives of his work and his time to create better public policy for all of the people of Canada. I really hope that Mr. Leach can expect to have better treatment from the members in this Chamber than he has had in the past. But that's an aside, Madam Chair.

I just want to refer to a part of the climate leadership panel's recommendation report to the minister on engagement. The members opposite like to say that we introduced the carbon tax without engaging with Albertans. Nothing, of course, could be further from the truth. I quote from the document itself. It's available online; the government hasn't yet taken down those websites. I'm sure they won't be up for much longer, but while it's still there, the document is available to all of the people of Alberta. It says under Public Engagement:

An online survey encouraged thousands of Albertans to participate in the climate change discussion. Over 25,000 responses were collected.

In addition:

The Panel also received 535 online submissions, including submissions from members of the public, industry, non-governmental organizations and academics.

They conducted technical engagement sessions.

The Panel held 10 sessions with approximately 350 stakeholders representing diverse perspectives across multiple sectors of Alberta's economy . . .

The Panel held meetings with Aboriginal peoples in Calgary, Edmonton and Fort McMurray.

In summary, we had an extensive program of consultation with every representative group in the province of Alberta, and that's what informed the recommendations that the climate leadership panel made to government in 2015. Now, contrast that with the consultation that the federal government has had with the people of Alberta on their carbon tax. They've conducted no consultation. So the federal government has no idea what kinds of energy efficiency initiatives the people of Alberta are looking for. They have no idea whether or not the rebate structure that they're offering is fair. They have no idea whether the plan to deal with heavy emitters is even compliant with the federal government's expectations. There are a whole host of things missing in repealing this carbon tax.

In the spirit of helping the members opposite do their job better – because we're not sent here by the people of Alberta to just oppose things blindly. We are here, Madam Chair, to help the government do a better job. In that spirit, I offer this amendment, which I would like to table at this time. I have an appropriate number of copies here.

The Chair: This will be referred to as amendment A1.

Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please proceed.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is amendment A1. I move that Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, be amended by adding the following after section 1:

Consultation

- 1.1(1) On the coming into force of section 1, the Minister of Environment and Parks shall commence consultations with the public, industry and academic and scientific experts regarding the development of a comprehensive action plan for Alberta to address climate change.
- (2) Consultations under subsection (1) must be completed within nine months of the day on which they are commenced.

And then:

- (3) The minister shall make public a report summarizing the consultations conducted under this section within 120 days of the completion of consultations.

Madam Chair, I'd like to provide a little bit of reasoning as to why our caucus is putting forward this amendment. I alluded to it a little bit in my comments before I introduced the amendment. Essentially, the federal government has not consulted with the people of Alberta about their federal carbon tax, and I think it's fair to say that the government itself didn't really consult with the people of Alberta on whether or not they wanted the federal carbon tax. They promised them that they would repeal the carbon tax entirely. That's not what they're getting. What they're getting in its place is the federal carbon tax which is made for Alberta. I would appreciate it if any of the members here from the government caucus would actually, you know, have the courage and the convictions to actually admit that to the people of Alberta, that they're bringing in the federal carbon tax.

Regardless, the federal carbon tax as it's structured will have significant impacts on the health, the well-being, the lives, the economy, and the jobs of the people of Alberta, and I think we need to know what those impacts will be. We also need to know whether or not there is any flexibility within the federal program to adjust the structure of the federal carbon tax funds that will be returned to the province of Alberta. I think it's fair to say that, you know, given the popularity of the programs that I mentioned, we need to go back to the people of Alberta and determine whether or not they want to see these programs continue.

You know, it was very concerning to me in question period earlier this afternoon when I asked the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre about whether or not he would be continuing to fund solar energy programs for small-scale solar energy systems. I don't have the benefit of the Blues in front of me, but I think he said something along the lines of: solar energy is ridiculous. That is very concerning.

I received an e-mail just this afternoon, actually, from somebody named Ryan Peckover. Now, Ryan is a constituent of mine, and he says that he works in the fast growing solar industry in Alberta.

Alberta is a great energy producing province so please don't stall the growth of this promising industry by ending the Alberta Solar Rebate program.

We risk losing a lot of jobs to Saskatchewan . . .

And Lord knows they need the jobs because their conservative government there is doing everything they can to put people out of work. But, of course, we don't need Albertans to lose jobs as well, Madam Chair, just to benefit the Premier's friends in Saskatchewan.

Jobs such as electricians, electrical engineers, sales and marketing, project management and administration job are at risk here.

You know, I recall the Member for Calgary-Bow, who was asked about what he would do to support the development of the trades in this province. It seems to me that throwing electricians out of work is really closing the door on the opportunities for apprentice electricians to get valuable work experience and become journeyman electricians and work in an area that's set to grow exponentially over the next few years. You know, it's really in line with the government's own professed mandate to provide jobs. They certainly campaigned on jobs. I would think that they would be interested in consulting with the people of Alberta about how they can continue to support the job growth in renewable energy in this province.

The timelines that we're proposing are incredibly generous, Madam Chair. We're proposing that the timelines for this consultation be concluded in nine months and that three months after the consultations are concluded, a report be made public summarizing the results of the consultations, which is far more time than our original climate leadership panel had. They were struck sometime in May 2015 and reported their findings on November 20, 2015, so that's six months. We're giving the members opposite an additional three months to conduct their work because this work needs to be done, and it needs to be done thoroughly in order to adequately reflect the wishes of the people of Alberta.

Madam Chair, we're offering the government here a chance to demonstrate to the people of Alberta that they are actually going to take action on climate change. We've certainly heard mixed messages from the members opposite as to whether or not they even believe that climate change is real, that it's human caused, and that we have a responsibility to act. However, the indications that we have gotten are that they do intend to take some form of action. Of course, it's not top of their priority list. You know, we do absolutely have to give wealthy corporations a big tax cut first, and we do absolutely have to cut the wages of 17-year-olds by $2 an hour. Those are their top priorities. Then, after that, we have to get to desk thumping because that's been the scourge of the people of Alberta, holding them back from achieving economic prosperity, apparently. And then today, of course, we see that we're going to reduce red tape by creating a bunch of reports on how to reduce red tape.

The Chair: Hon. member, we're on an amendment, not government motions.

Mr. Schmidt: Yes. I'm speaking to the amendment, of course, Madam Chair. I'm just highlighting the opportunity to improve Bill 1.

If the government says that it's a priority to tackle climate change, here's an amendment that makes their very first act as government setting the priority of tackling climate change. So no longer will I have to go to my constituents and ask them why the government isn't prioritizing climate change when, in fact, if the government adopts this amendment, they can say, honestly and truly, that they are prioritizing action on climate change ahead of all of the other things that I was mentioning in my comments.

Madam Chair, I truly hope that the members opposite give this amendment consideration, that they begin to roll up their sleeves and get to work on consulting with the people of Alberta about what future action on climate change they expect their government to take, because the people of Alberta deserve that. They have expressed, of course, with their dollars and their actions over the past two or three years that they are eager to do everything they can to curb their own emissions, improve their own energy efficiency, improve their own capacity to generate renewable energy, and I think this government owes it to them to come up with a plan to continue to take those meaningful actions.

Madam Chair, I appreciate the debate that we are going to have on this incredibly well-thought-out amendment.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

4:50

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you so much. I'm certainly happy to stand in support of this amendment. It's fundamental to our province that we consult with our citizens, the stakeholders, those involved in this industry, and I just want to talk about the tremendous progress that we made during our NDP government's time in office. Significant changes were made.

You know, just in my own riding, just in one part of Alberta, I can just tell you resoundingly that Albertans want to have support to be able to do energy efficiency projects and that, of course, the climate leadership plan, that the current UCP government is wanting to repeal, paid for Energy Efficiency Alberta, which funded so many transformational programs for Albertans. As I said, I'm the representative for Edmonton-Riverview, and just here in my own riding there's I think pretty transformational, significant work that is being done by a very broad range of people and organizations; for example, Food4Good.

Food4Good is a community food centre that works to alleviate food insecurity in the west end of Edmonton. The neighbourhoods surrounding the food centre site experience higher than average levels of food insecurity and poverty. In this area household incomes are 2.5 times less than the city averages. Residents depend on food charity resources 3.5 times more than the city averages, and compared to other Edmonton neighbourhoods, this area has higher rates of chronic disease and mental health issues. The community food centre provides nutrition and food sustainability information and training for community members. Besides all of this, they are working to retrofit their current space. They're using technology that assures climate resistance such as solar panels, water recovery systems, and indoor garden units for regular food production when other systems fail.

Food4Good, this small nonprofit organization located in my riding, is taking advantage of this funding, and they endeavour to produce a facility that is actually energy neutral, that follows the standards required for LEED, leadership in energy and environmental design, certified buildings. Following these standards will mean that the building has minimal greenhouse gas outputs. That's just one example, one small nonprofit that's doing tremendous good in my community. What are we going to say to them now? That they can't go ahead with these initiatives? That the funding for that will no longer be provided by this government? It's disturbing to me because, you know, I'm really proud of the work of this particular group.

Here's another example, St. Paul's United church. They know that climate change is a critical issue that's becoming increasingly urgent, so the St. Paul's United church community got together. They're passionate about taking action to be more sustainable, in alignment with all levels of government. At the time when they were working on this initiative back in 2017, the federal government, the provincial government, and the municipal government all were working collaboratively. We know climate change is real – there's no question about that – and these advocates want to make a difference in their community.

This project that they worked on has grid-connected solar panels, and it will provide 100 per cent of the church's electricity demand. That's so great: 100 per cent. The energy produced in excess of church demand will supply renewable power to the broader community. This will reduce greenhouse gas emissions from fossil fuel electricity generation in Alberta and provide renewable energy into the grid at a highly visible installation on a large rooftop located on a high-traffic avenue. It's on 76th Avenue, if anybody knows Edmonton very well, sort of in the university area. If you drive by St. Paul's United church, you'll see that their whole roof is covered by solar panels to take advantage of the power of the sun.

They're very proud that it's going to promote awareness of alternative/renewable energy initiatives and their viability and, hopefully, inspire others to investigate if not pursue renewable energy possibilities. This project will reduce emissions by up to 18 tonnes of CO<sub>2</sub> per year. By installing on an existing steep-pitch, unobstructed, south-facing roof, this project will generate the maximum amount of energy, with no incremental land use and very minimal cost.

St. Paul's United church believes that the time is right to proceed with this project given the policy commitments of all levels of government. As I said, this was back in 2017, when all levels of government – federal, provincial, and municipal – knew that climate change was real and had initiatives to move forward on it. Now we're missing a very key player, the provincial government of Alberta. It's really shameful.

They said at that time that the time was right for their community because they had already undertaken many of the low-hanging fruit energy efficiency initiatives. This community really cares. They want to make a difference. They want to make sure that they're not using more energy than they need to. They had installed insulation and new windows. These projects have gone well, and they're ready to undertake a more significant and visible project that will have a larger impact and make a statement to our community and to environmental sustainability.

I'm just very grateful for these forward-thinking members of my constituency, St. Paul's United church. I've gone there many times. Really, they've sort of transformed the neighbourhood. Not only are they taking care of themselves, using very minimal energy, but they even have sometimes more that can go back to the grid, so they're supporting their community. Thank you so much, St. Paul's United church.

Also, I have 13 community leagues in my riding. Edmonton has a great community league system. For people outside of Edmonton, these are neighbourhoods that are sort of geographical areas where communities get together for soccer, social events, all sorts of different activities. One of them is Crestwood Community League, and they, too, of course, you know, are wanting to be responsible citizens and be leaders in their communities and make sure that they are responsible. Crestwood Community League is actually one of the oldest continuously operating community leagues in Edmonton, and they are focused very much on making sure that the community league is being responsible in terms of the environment.

They have sort of a two-part project. The first stage installs solar panels on the hall roof and provides half of the community league's electricity needs. The community league will generate half of its electrical energy from the sun, lessen the annual utility costs, reduce dependence on high-emission coal and gas fuels, and model a working solar system for Crestwood and the broader community.

The other major project objective is for the league to take a proactive leadership role in demonstrating to 1,000 homes within Crestwood, where much infill housing is taking place – it's an older neighbourhood; my riding has many mature neighbourhoods, so there's a lot of infill taking place now; it's a great opportunity for energy-efficient homes to be built – that solar power is an affordable, effective source of energy which must be broadly adopted for the sake of future collective health and well-being.

This community league, the leadership in this area: they know, too, that climate change is real. We must do something. We must step up, and we must be responsible. As the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said, you know, this is a crisis. This isn't something that we can forget about and not do anything about. We need to move on this. We know that Canada is warming two times faster than other countries, so it's a very serious issue. Again I just want to say that this is just in my own riding, so it's not an extensive look at all across this province, but it's so fundamental, just the leadership and things that people are doing across Alberta. I'm very proud of what is happening in my own community.

Many community members in Edmonton agree that immediate action is required to help curb global warming and reduce the human impact on the environment. However, for many citizens it seems like a daunting goal that should be left to professionals, scientists, and policy-makers.

Alberta GEN: that's at the University of Alberta, which is also in my riding. Many innovative projects are coming out of the university, of course, and this particular one, Alberta GEN, has developed Sun in a Box. It's a portable, off-grid solar power device integrated with a Raspberry Pi. These are some things that I don't even quite know what they mean, but it is an initiative that makes it easier for the average citizen to be able to be effective and do things to ensure that energy efficiency programs and using less energy are supported.

They have an education program that they take out to K to 12 schools. They educate kids, and of course we all know that the younger kids learn about things, the more they understand them, and then that generation can come and be responsible and know what's important to do. This Sun in a Box goes to K to 12 students and community members through educational engagement sessions across Edmonton in schools and community halls. The goal of this project is to bring the scale of the climate change challenge down to something that can really inspire, engage students and adults alike to see the magic of power generated by the sun. In addition, seeing the creation of presentations from university students helps exemplify the accessibility of solar and renewable power for all citizens.

It's just another important project that, you know, will likely be going away because this government is not taking climate change seriously. They're not stepping up, and in fact they're turning the clock back, and it's really too late for that. We need to move forward. You know, the United Nations says that we only have 12 more years if we don't do something now. Other levels of government know that it's very important for us to be moving on this, and the constituents of Edmonton-Riverview know that, too.

Another very important initiative – and that's why this consultation suggested in the amendment is so important – is Next Up, which is through the Parkland Institute, which is also at the University of Alberta. Next Up has climate programs that help to build a deeper and broader platform of support within Alberta for climate change action and policy so that Alberta can become an international leader in climate action. Specifically, this helps to build a stronger and more diverse network of climate leadership in the city of Edmonton and connect it to provincial climate action efforts. The Next Up leadership events include three-day climate leadership intensive training courses for newcomers; a four-day climate leadership intensive training for mothers with children who are in grade 6 or below; one weekend, a retreat series; a climate connections event that will bring together participants from each of the proceeding events along with other groups and people in Edmonton who are already working on climate change efforts to discuss this project and collaboration possibilities which will enhance and increase climate action in Edmonton.

All of the programming described in these projects targets people who are not necessarily current climate leaders. It helps develop that and helps people be focused on climate change through developing climate literacy, leadership skills among these participants. Next Up will build a more diverse climate leadership network that will bring conversations about action on climate change into their communities and organizations. Visible climate leadership from outside the environmental sector is needed to shift the perception that climate change is solely an environmental issue and highlight the ways relevant action can be taken across the province in multiple sectors.

This is just another example in my riding of how important it is to be connected to our communities and know what is happening and what kind of leadership is already under way. Certainly, the support of the NDP government, while in office, was significant, and this created an opportunity for many of these groups to move forward with their projects.

I'll just share one more of these projects in my small, you know, community here in Edmonton, and again it's a community league. It's Windsor Park Community League. Windsor Park is a community right next to the University of Alberta. In 2018 the Windsor Park Community League Sustainability Committee – this is a community league that has a committee that's about sustainability because they see this as a key issue in our province, indeed in our country and in the world – launched a series of monthly education seminars on environmental stewardship and sustainability. Hoping to lead by example, they have now installed a solar system on the community league building, and they've also installed an electric vehicle charging station so that people with electric vehicles can come to the community league and actually charge them. That's also very innovative.

They are also working with Yellowhead Tribal Development Foundation, that had their community building serve as a training centre for the solar design course run for indigenous youth. Using a design developed by students in the course, this project allowed for further development of students' skills in solar installation. Students will receive further training and understanding of this important work.

These few examples just really, I think, illustrate how important it is that we make sure we know what is happening in our communities and how much innovative thinking is already going on. I'm sure that each one of you could find many projects in your communities that, you know, if you go ahead with repealing this bill, you will actually be cutting the funding for, because Energy Efficiency Alberta funds that, and of course that's through the climate leadership plan.

I'd like to talk a little bit more about just when I was the Seniors and Housing minister in the previous government. As is already clear, our government took climate change seriously. We know that when homes are older, they may not have well-fitting windows, they have poor insulation, they have roofs where they lose a lot of the heat through them. Sadly, much of the public housing that is managed through the housing management body system in Alberta is older buildings, so they need to be retrofitted. There's a tremendous amount of work that needs to be done. Of course, forward thinking, our government was committed to making sure that the housing management bodies had the supports they needed to move forward with that. Energy Efficiency Alberta gave us the funding to do that through the climate leadership plan.

I just want to acknowledge that there are 103 – that number may change a little bit – housing management bodies across this province that do significant work to support vulnerable Albertans from every border of our province. I was so grateful to be the minister and work with them for the last four years and see the transformational work they did for families.

Of course, having facilities that are old, that are not energy efficient is costly. It costs a lot of money to heat them because, as I said earlier in my example of some of the issues, the heat is going out the roof, out the window, out the door.

The Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to the amendment before us, an amendment to change the nature of how we consider the repealing the carbon tax bill before us, an amendment which will force us to really think seriously about what the consequences are of the government's intention to repeal the carbon tax, because the cancelling of the carbon levy is simply not a solution without consequences.

The government seems to have rather simplistic solutions in mind when it comes to their approach to climate change, and in fact it doesn't appear as though they believe it's a serious problem. We believe it is, of course, on this side of the House and that it's an urgent issue for our society and the globe. With the government caucus, it seems as though the only thing they plan to replace the carbon tax with is a large-emitters levy. But what indeed that levy might generate in terms of revenue and what it might be used for is an open question that I think needs to be examined in great detail, and that will be allowed under the amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, by referring it to proper consultations and allowing the government the opportunity to develop, as the amendment states, "a comprehensive action plan for Alberta to address climate change."

Now, the Minister of Environments and Parks is the one who is anticipated, under this notice of amendment, under the amendment proposed, to commence consultations with the public, and I think that's most appropriate. He's been given nine months to enter into these contemplated consultations and then report within 120 days.

I think it's really, really important that on a day, today, as we are sitting on – what? – the 29th of May, a 31- or 32-degree day outside in Edmonton, when a large community in northern Alberta is under threat of fire, has been evacuated and others have followed and the bush in Alberta has been described by the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry as a tinderbox, on a day in springtime as dry and potentially dangerous as this, we take the whole concept of climate change much more seriously than this government appears to be taking it.

The two new pieces of art that we have in this Legislature, Sunrise and Sunset, created by our world-renowned artist and proud Albertan Mr. Alex Janvier, remind us of the importance that we give to every moment we have in this House when we consider the important debate that we're having on a daily basis on issues of any type of matter.

But right now we're talking about an issue that is of global importance, and it doesn't seem as though the government is taking it seriously. That's why this amendment is really, truly important, that the Minister of Environments and Parks be asked to "commence consultations with the public, industry and academic and scientific experts regarding the development of a comprehensive action plan for Alberta to address climate change." The solutions put forward to replace the climate leadership plan simply are not adequate, they're very much open to question as to what efficacy they might have, and the details are really short, to say the least.

On this side of the House we know that the Climate Leadership Act was a comprehensive piece of legislation. It is something that this former NDP government was rightfully proud of. It established a carbon levy on transportation and heating fuels in Alberta. It provided exemptions from application of the levy. It set out the requirements for exemption certificates and licences. It provided for consumer rebates and biomethane credits. It set out the rules for remittance and recovery of the carbon levy and assessment of the levy and enforcement. It set out carbon levy rates for fuels. It was a very comprehensive piece of legislation with regulations that went along with it as well, yet what we're looking at with this government is a very simplistic approach to the replacement of our Climate Leadership Act with simply a large emitters levy and, bada bing bada boom, that seems to be it.

An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax proposes to repeal the Climate Leadership Act, eliminating the Alberta carbon tax, effective 12:01 a.m. on Thursday, May 30, 2019; end the Alberta climate leadership adjustment rebate, the carbon levy rebates by amending the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act; allow fuel resellers, for example gas stations and bulk fuel dealers, 30 days to apply for a refund on the carbon levy they paid on the fuel they hold in inventory at the time the levy is eliminated; amend the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act and the Fuel Tax Act to remove references to the Climate Leadership Act and carbon levy; shorten the time period for applying for rebates and refunds from four to two years; ensure that the government has administrative mechanisms to enforce transitional values. All revenues collected by the carbon levy will no longer be required to be used for environmental climate-related projects or programs, which begs the question: what does the government intend to use these funds for? Will they be aimed at the purposes that they were first collected for, and that is to address climate change issues and help people redirect their efforts at reducing their carbon footprint?

The UCP claim their bill will produce a $1.4 billion tax cut for Albertans. They claim it'll cut taxes for 725,000 Alberta families. They claim it'll create 6,000 jobs across the province, and it'll save small businesses about $4,500 annually. However, those claims in reality fall far short from what will actually happen. We know this bill will deliver a huge tax cut for wealthy and high-income Albertans; eliminate the revenue stream to support renewable energy efficiency and rebate programs; threaten funding for critical transition and infrastructure projects, including Springbank, and $400 million which was promised to the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton for transit projects beginning in 2027; and also cancel construction and climate leadership plan jobs.

In short, Madam Chair, this proposal is something that we need to really drill down on to determine serious consequences that will result in simplistically going after the climate leadership plan, eliminating the carbon tax without knowing full well what in the heck we're going to replace it with. Will this large emitters levy that we hear proposed come anywhere near the amount of revenue that the climate leadership plan carbon levy had generated or anticipated it would have generated had it been maintained by this government, or is it simply going to be a large emitters levy that falls short of the revenue necessary to do the things contemplated under the climate leadership plan that would allow Alberta to become a leader in global terms to reduce the carbon footprint of our industrial society and be an example to the rest of the world as to how to advance ourselves towards a lower carbon footprint and a lower emissions world and economy that is the way of the world right now?

The global tendency, the trend, the gallop, actually, is towards a lower carbon footprint in the world. The opposition is concerned that this new government is being blind to the fact that the world is moving away from carbon. The transition is something that any government who aspires to be serious leaders of the population they were elected by must take seriously. They must actually take action to deal with the climate changes, and that means reducing our carbon footprint. Every jurisdiction has that responsibility.

Now, the new government is difficult to understand when they talk about climate change because they really don't seem to believe it's happening. The UCP's plan seems to be similar to what the former Progressive Conservative plan was with respect to animal health in the Klein era. That was to shoot, shovel, and shut up; in other words, simply forget it, pretend it's not happening, ignore the problem, and walk Alberta into a dead end for our environment, our economy, and our future. They're paving the way for Ottawa to bring in a federal carbon tax, and it seems to be a bit of a trend. It seems to me that the current Premier is a little bit Ottawa-centric in terms of how he wants to change some of the standing order rules of the House and adopt many of the things that Ottawa does practise in their Parliament to satisfy some of his pet peeves that he developed after visiting our Legislature and realizing that he thought we'd be better off if we adopted Ottawa-centric rules and played that way in the Legislature here in Alberta.

Well, Madam Chair, I think that we do better in Alberta when we play by rules that we make for our own House and our own backyard. Paving the way for Ottawa to bring in a federal carbon tax while risking the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion is simply bad politics. It's bad policy, and it's not something that Albertans in the long term will benefit by. I think that the UCP government is going to find that Albertans will soon start to question what their policies really will do in terms of advancing the ability of Alberta to become a world leader in energy production, which is looking towards lowering its carbon footprint.

Now, instead of focusing on our transition to more renewable energy and natural gas, their plan is to bring back coal pollution and hurt Alberta's health. Instead of providing low- and middle-income earners in Alberta with $536 million in rebates annually, they're going to proceed with another UCP-endorsed plan where only the rich benefit. That's another reason, Madam Chair, why this amendment to An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax to have the Minister of Environment and Parks commence consultations with public, industry, and academic and scientific experts to develop a comprehensive action plan for Alberta to address climate change is so important. Instead of funding critical projects like the Calgary green line or projects or programs that help Albertans renovate their homes, they're wasting money on high-priced lawyers for frivolous lawsuits. The Premier should do the right thing and have a real plan to lower emissions. I'm certainly not convinced that the large emitters levy on its own as a simplistic solution will do the job.

Now, in November 2015 the former government of Alberta under the NDP government introduced the climate leadership plan as a made-in-Alberta strategy to reduce carbon emissions while diversifying our economy, creating jobs, and protecting our health and environment. A made-in-Alberta plan is something that the provincial government currently in power seems to want to abrogate to the federal government and allow the federal government to come in and implement their own carbon price because we have gone ahead and eliminated our plan. The climate leadership plan involved four main policies: implementation of a new price on greenhouse gas emissions, also known as carbon pricing, which is the way of the world; phase out pollution from coal-generated electricity by 2030 and generate 30 per cent of electricity from renewable resources by 2030; cap oil sands emissions at 100 megatonnes per year, something that the current Premier realizes and has stated publicly would be a cap that wouldn't be reached for a long, long time into the future; reduce methane emissions from upstream oil and gas production by 45 per cent from 2014 levels by 2025.

Alberta was on track to cut more than 50 megatonnes of emissions over the next 10 years, the same as taking 10.6 million cars off the road or nearly half the passenger vehicles in all of Canada. It's like eliminating the emissions of the metro Vancouver area three times over.

Jobs. The climate leadership plan has supported more than 7,300 jobs in the first two years, and thousands of jobs were still to come with construction starting on CLP projects and innovation initiatives getting off the ground. These are the jobs that the UCP will put in danger. That was their whole political platform – jobs, jobs, jobs – yet the first act of this government with their repealing the carbon tax is an act that's going to axe thousands of jobs that would have happened as a result of it.

Small-business tax cut: $220 million to finance a 33 per cent small-business tax cut. That reduction would have saved business owners more than half a billion dollars over three years.

Transit. We'd have invested $3 billion over 10 years for light rail transit in Calgary and Edmonton from this climate leadership plan, including $1.53 billion for Calgary's green line and $1.47 billion to support Edmonton transit, including the west valley line. The budget also included $967 million over GreenTRIP and other commonly used transit investments.

Rebates. More than $700 million was rebated to a majority, two-thirds, of Albertans to make their lives more affordable and to offset carbon levy costs.

Infrastructure projects like the Springbank off-stream reservoir would have been funded out of the plan.

Upgrades at schools, universities, hospitals, and colleges: $40 million had been invested in schools, universities, and colleges for projects that cut emissions and save operating costs such as the U of A district energy heating project, which allows the university to own and operate its own thermal energy, cutting 60,000 tonnes of emissions.

Energy Efficiency Alberta programs launched in 2017 have yielded $510 million dollars in energy savings, Madam Chair; $710 million in economic growth; 4.2 million tonnes of greenhouse gas emission reductions, which is about the same as taking about 722,000 vehicles off the road for a year; $13.5 million in energy-efficient projects installed; 12 million cubic metres of water savings. For every $1 invested into EEA programs, $3.30 returned to Albertans' pockets. For the economic geniuses across the way, that's an ROI of 3.3, so that's a pretty good return on investment which will not be seen because of the repealing of the carbon tax.

I think we need to take a look at all of those things a little deeper by having the Minister of Environment and Parks commence consultations with the public and find expert opinions, academic opinions, get the experts of industry to come together and say: "Look, this is the consequence of your repeal. This is what's going to happen as a result of your act to repeal the carbon tax and not replace it with something that genuinely helps Alberta foster a strategy that gets us towards a lower carbon footprint over time and transitions to a lower carbon economy. That is the way of the world right now."

Indigenous climate leadership. Our former Minister of Indigenous Relations, now the critic for Indigenous Relations, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, went on at length to describe exactly how much the indigenous communities in Alberta will lose out, a total slap in the face, as a result of the repealing of the carbon tax, something that I think they would have a large interest in coming towards in consultation with the Minister of Environment and Parks to determine exactly what their compensation might be in the face of this government repeal. I'm sure they'll have a lot to say to the minister in consultation as a result of the loss of economic prosperity that they are going to feel because they've lost all the benefits of the climate leadership plan that this government has decided was not useful.

The indigenous climate leadership effort saw that more than 65 indigenous communities in Alberta benefited from 125 indigenous climate leadership initiative projects since 2017, a huge boost to their local economies and their way of life in keeping with their relationship with the land and their way of life and their ideologies and philosophies.

Solar power. There's a huge area of industrial growth in Alberta, thousands of jobs. This industry has grown by nearly 500 per cent. Installed solar capacity has increased from six megawatts in 2015 to 35 megawatts in 2018. About 3,100 solar installations have been completed. More than 300 certified companies have installed solar projects across the province. Albertans have conserved enough energy to power a city the size of Leduc.

Madam Chair, this government has talked all during the campaign about job creation . . .

5:30

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Gold Bar for bringing forward this very common-sense and practical amendment. What it's asking for is to consult with experts, academia, and all those who are concerned to address climate change. As was mentioned, we do recognize that the government was elected on this platform that they will repeal the carbon tax, but I don't think that with that Albertans provided carte blanche to walk roughshod over their environment. They still expect a solid plan to address climate change. I will be speaking in favour of this amendment, and I will provide reasons for that.

First and foremost, this amendment is asking ministers to consult with the public, with industry, with academia, and with experts. It's important that we all have a vested interest in protecting our environment, our water, our air for ourselves and for coming generations. It's important that all those who have the knowledge, who have the expertise, and who have a vested interest in having a comprehensive action plan to address climate change be consulted and that they be at the table. It will increase participation from the public and from industry in the process instead of just accepting the backstop legislation that Ottawa has prepared. I think this amendment will make sure that the work gets under way right away to bring forward a plan to address climate change that takes into account the realities of our province, the realities of our industry, and the realities of our people here.

The second thing is that I think repealing the carbon tax has many implications. The reason this amendment is important is that just repealing the carbon tax will have an impact on our access to markets, on our access to the west coast, and on our pipelines and the future of those pipelines. We know that when TMX or line 3 were approved, among other things, Alberta's climate leadership plan was one of the key contributing factors. In the absence of that plan, I think it's important that the Minister of Environment and Parks commence consultation and come forward with a plan that can ensure access for our industry and can ensure that our pipeline will still go ahead.

We know that previously, even before us, certainly, there were 44 years of Conservative regime here and 10 years of federal Conservative governments, and we didn't get any pipelines to tidewater. If we look through the case law around Energy East, one of the key reasons is that we always fell short on the environment and plans to address climate change. These consultations will make sure that we are prepared for dealing with climate change and that we are paving our way to get our products to market and paving our way to get pipelines approved.

Then, third, this amendment is important for economic reasons as well because repealing this carbon tax has a huge impact on our economy in many different ways. There is a solid economic argument that we should do as suggested by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, that we should consult with the public and industry and all those who are concerned to come up with a climate plan. We know from literature, we know from scientific evidence, and there is enough economic evidence that climate change is one of the key factors that we need to consider for any sustainable economic growth. That work was recognized last year when the Nobel prize for economic sciences was given to William Nordhaus and Paul Romer. Essentially, both of these professors worked on the interplay of economy and climate and certainly proved that, among other things, climate change is one of the key natural constraints that our economy is facing.

If we pass this amendment and do the consultation as proposed, I think that will be an opportunity for us to identify and tackle those climate constraints on our economy and prepare Alberta's economy for the future, prepare an economy that is sustainable, that can sustain an education system for our youth, that can sustain our health care system, that can sustain social services that Albertans rely on and deserve. It's important from an economic standpoint as well that we pass this very practical amendment and get the work under way right away to address climate change in a way that we can account for climate constraints on our economy as well and prepare Alberta's economy for the 21st century.

Then, another thing, during this debate and during the campaign as well we heard from the Premier about how Ottawa needs to stay out of our business and how we need to take more control of our resources. I think that if we are merely repealing the carbon tax act, then Ottawa does come in and their legislation does apply. This amendment is important for that reason as well, Madam Chair. If we want to keep Ottawa out of our business and if we want to take more control of our resources, of our economy, I think it's imperative that we pass this amendment and, again, consult with the public, industry, academia, and all those who are concerned.

I think we were told before that this amendment is more relevant now because facts have changed since the election. A couple of important developments. One was the constitutional challenge that was brought forward by the Saskatchewan government. Their Court of Appeal decided against what the Saskatchewan government wanted and in favour of the constitutionality of that tax imposed by the federal government. The government of Saskatchewan was asking whether it's constitutional for the federal government to impose an economy-wide carbon price in those provinces where they don't have their own plan, and the answer was a resounding yes, so that avenue is almost closed for us as well. So if we want to take control of our resources, if we want to take control of our economy, I think it's absolutely necessary that we commence this work, we commence this consultation, and we develop a plan that can address climate change.

Then, I think public opinion since the election has also shifted. There was an editorial in the Edmonton Journal which was essentially advising this government that maybe keeping the Alberta climate plan is not a bad idea. The reasoning for that was the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal decision, in that referenced case, upholding the government of Canada's right to impose a federal carbon tax. In light of those realities even the editorial board of the Edmonton Journal thinks that leaving this climate leadership plan is a good thing. While we are not asking in this amendment to do that, what this amendment is asking to do is that we need to replace it with something that works for Alberta. We need to replace it so that it addresses climate change, and we need to replace it with a plan that can help us promote our products, that can help us transport our products, that can help us get ready for an economy that is alive to the environmental constraints.

Then, lastly, I think that under the climate leadership plan there were many major projects. In Calgary there were infrastructure projects, transit projects, and then there were many small projects everywhere across this province, in First Nation communities. The impact of those projects is that, actually, there is data to show that we were able to reduce emissions, we were able to address climate change. In the plan that we brought forward, that was working. Again, we are not asking to keep that one here. All we are asking is that in order to take control of our economy, in order to take control of our resources, it's absolutely necessary that we all consider this amendment in all due seriousness because this amendment can set us on a path to developing a climate plan that will help us build a pipeline, that will help us build the economy.

Based on all of these reasons, I think it's important that all of us rise above and beyond party lines and consider this amendment in the best interests of the future of our province, in the best interests of our economy, in the best interests of our coming generations because one thing is for sure: we cannot ignore climate change. I think we can all agree that climate change is real. I don't think that the other side is denying it. But not doing anything about it, I think, does give rise to questions of whether they're serious about climate action or not.

The timelines set out in this amendment are also very reasonable timelines. This gives the minister almost one year to do that work. At least if this amendment is embedded in legislation, Albertans will have a clear signal. They will have a clear message that this government takes the environment seriously and that they do have a time frame that is set in the legislation and that soon after passing this bill there will be work under way, there will be consultations.

It will also send the right signal to industry as well, to the investors as well. We do know that in Alberta our industry is very capital intensive. We compete for dollars not just in Alberta but in capital markets across Canada and across North America. So they also need to hear that the government here in Alberta is serious about climate change and has a plan, at least some timelines, to address climate change.

Also, when we look at this amendment from the standpoint of industry, we do know that in an international market when we are competing for clients and competing to sell our products, among many other things, the thing that is considered is the carbon intensity of our barrel. Under our climate leadership plan there were a number of things that were put in place that helped us reduce emissions, that helped us reduce the carbon intensity of our barrel, and that put us in a position where we were able to compete in California and in North American markets.

Again, while it's unfortunate that they're repealing the climate leadership plan, at least this amendment is the right thing to do in that it will clarify their position. It will send a good, clear message. It will set out a clear timeline. I think it's important that we have that because climate change is real, and sooner or later we have to take action. I think the choice we have as a government, as a society is that we take action, show leadership, or we will just get dragged along and there will be, I guess, consequences that we can avoid by having a good, thoughtful plan through the consultations.

I urge all the members of this House, all my colleagues, to vote in favour of this very common-sense and practical amendment. Thank you so much.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you. I appreciate that. I won't speak for very long. I just wanted to take a few moments to take this opportunity to speak to this amendment and to urge my colleagues on the other side to seriously consider it.

I spoke to this bill a couple of days ago, and I really wanted to highlight that I agree that we have to accept the outcome that this issue of repealing the carbon tax was an election issue. The members on the opposite side had a clear mandate on that, to repeal the carbon tax. I want to reiterate that none of us will be surprised that that is what happens. That was an election campaign promise that you had made, and I believe Albertans generally, although not in every riding, did resoundingly make a decision on that.

However, I want to reiterate the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in introducing this amendment, which I think is very thoughtful, which is that, yes, while Albertans did perhaps vote in favour of repealing the carbon tax, they did not vote in favour of doing nothing on climate change. I can tell you from personal experience during the campaign, as I was out speaking to the voters in my riding, that even those who had, you know, concerns and even were in favour of repealing the carbon tax repeatedly said: "We do need to take action. We want to see something on climate change. We need to see a plan."

Tied up with that very closely is the issue of diversification. What the voters in my riding were repeatedly saying is that it is important that we diversify the economy. The climate leadership plan was one way in which the NDP government was doing that.

I urge you on the other side to take that bold step forward and say – of course, keep your election promise. You had an election promise. You've got resounding support, generally, from Albertans on that issue, but that doesn't mean you have to take no action on climate change. There is an opportunity here. This is a very reasonable amendment. It is not a partisan amendment. It's meant to actually continue the conversation on climate change. I think this is a great opportunity for the members on the other side to keep their election promise but to also take action and take leadership on climate change and to show Albertans that we are moving forward and that you do have a vision for this province that includes addressing climate change and being a leader on climate change.

I just wanted to speak to that and say please. I know we are in a divided House. We're coming off of an election, and it's easy to fall back into our partisanship ways. But I'd really like to encourage you to strongly consider this. This is a way for the members on the opposite side to really show some bold leadership, not just sticking to short-term goals but looking to a long-term vision for this province.

I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for bringing forward this amendment. I think it's very thoughtful, very reasonable. I think Albertans would very much appreciate that all members in this House deeply consider it and look at it as an opportunity to bridge some of the divide that happened over the election and to talk about keeping promises but also moving forward. So I really urge you to consider this amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members on amendment A1?

The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Chair. Seeing the time, I would like to move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

The hon. deputy government whip.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing as we are close to 6 p.m., I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:54 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 29, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Table Officer Janet Schwegel

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin with the regular business of this evening, I'd like to just take a moment to recognize Janet Schwegel, who is seated at the table for the very first time this evening. I ask that we would all extend a little bit of patience and grace to the table, not that we'll need it because Janet holds a master of linguistics from the University of Alberta. She is multilingual, a self-published author, an avid cyclist. Early in her career Janet owned and managed a graphic design business, and she also taught English and communications courses at a postsecondary level. Janet joined the Legislative Assembly Office in 2003 as an editor with Hansard. She became the managing editor of Hansard in 2013, and since 2016 she's also been the manager of venue services. Basically, she knows every word that has ever been said inside the Legislative Assembly, so consider yourself warned. Please join me in welcoming Janet to the table.

Government Motions

Amendments to Standing Orders

11. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective December 4, 2018, be amended as follows:

1. Standing Order 3 is amended

- (a) in suborder (1) by striking out "Subject to suborder (1.1)" and substituting "Subject to suborder (1.1) and (1.2).";
- (b) by adding the following after suborder (1.1):
(1.2) The Assembly shall not meet in the morning from 10 a.m. to noon on Tuesday, or 9:00 a.m. to noon on Wednesday or Thursday, if the Government House Leader, or a member of the Executive Council acting on the Government House Leader's behalf, notifies the Assembly that there shall be no morning sitting, notice having been given no later than the time of adjournment on the sitting day preceding the day on which the morning sitting will be cancelled.
- (c) by adding the following after suborder (5):
(5.1) In the period prior to, or following the commencement of, the first session of a Legislature, the Government House Leader may file a revised calendar with the Clerk, notwithstanding the deadline in suborder (5), following consultation with the Opposition House Leaders.
- (d) in suborder (6) by adding "or (5.1)" after "unless varied by the calendar provided for under suborder (5)";
- (e) by striking out suborder (7) and substituting the following:

(7) As soon as possible after January 15 each year, and following receipt of a calendar submitted under suborder (5.1), the Clerk shall publish the calendar provided for under suborder (5) or (5.1).

2. Standing Order 7 is amended

- (a) in suborder (1) by striking out "Introduction of Guests" and substituting "Introduction of School Groups";
- (b) by striking out suborder (3) and substituting the following:
(3) When Introduction of School Groups is called, brief introductions may be made by the Speaker of groups of schoolchildren in the galleries.
- (c) by adding the following after suborder (5):
(5.1) If any Member other than the mover rises to speak to a debatable motion to concur in a report of a committee on a Bill under Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees, debate on that motion shall be called under Orders of the Day
  - (a) when the Government thinks fit, in the case of a report on a Government Bill,
  - (b) on the next sitting day other than a Monday, in the case of a report on a private Bill, or
  - (c) on Monday afternoon under Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills other than Government Bills, in the case of a report on a public Bill other than a Government Bill.

3. Standing Order 8 is amended

- (a) by striking out suborder (1) and substituting the following:
8(1) On Monday afternoon, after the daily routine, the order of business for consideration of the Assembly shall be as follows:

Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills other than Government Bills
Written Questions
Motions for Return
Public Bills and Orders other than Government Bills and Orders
At 5 p.m.: Motions other than Government Motions

(1.1) Notwithstanding suborder (1), if on a Monday afternoon prior to 5 p.m. no items of business other than Motions other than Government Motions remain on the Order Paper for consideration by the Assembly, Motions other than Government Motions shall be called and after the Assembly has decided all questions necessary to conclude debate on the motion, the Assembly shall proceed to consideration of any items of Government business provided for in suborder (2) unless unanimous consent is given to proceed to an additional Motion other than a Government Motion.
- (b) by adding the following after suborder (7)(a):

- (a.1) Debate on a motion to concur in a report of a committee on a public Bill other than a Government Bill will conclude after 55 minutes of debate on the motion and 5 minutes for the mover to close debate, unless the motion is voted on sooner.
4. Standing Order 13 is amended by adding the following after suborder (5):
    - (5.1) No Member shall disrupt the orderly conduct of the proceedings of the Assembly by loudly or repeatedly banging on a desk.
  5. Standing Order 19(1) is amended
    - (a) in clause (a) and (b) by striking out “at 5:15 p.m., the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings” and substituting “the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings 15 minutes prior to the time of adjournment for the afternoon sitting”, and
    - (b) in clause (c) by striking out “at 5:15 p.m., unless the debate is previously concluded, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the motion” and substituting “unless the debate is previously concluded, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings 15 minutes prior to the time of adjournment for the afternoon sitting and immediately put every question necessary to dispose of the motion”.
  6. Standing Order 29(3) is amended by striking out “and motions for returns” and substituting “, motions for returns and motions for concurrence in committee reports on public Bills other than Government Bills”.
  7. The following is added after Standing Order 31:

Confidence of the Assembly in the Government

31.1 The confidence of the Assembly in the Government may be raised by means of a vote on

    - (a) a motion explicitly worded to declare that the Assembly has, or has not, confidence in the Government,
    - (b) a motion by the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, “That the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the Government”,
    - (c) a motion for the passage of an Appropriation Bill as defined in Standing Order 64,
    - (d) a motion for an address in reply to the Lieutenant Governor’s speech, or
    - (e) any other motion that the Government has expressly declared a question of confidence.
  8. Standing Order 32 is struck out and the following is substituted:

Division

32(1) A division may be called for by 3 Members rising.

    - (2) When a division is called, the division bells shall be sounded at the beginning and for the last minute of a 15-minute interval.
    - (3) After the first division is called during any meeting of the Committee of the Whole or Committee of Supply, the interval between division bells on all subsequent divisions during that meeting shall be reduced to one minute, except in the case of the first division called during an evening sitting that commences in Committee of the Whole or Committee of Supply pursuant to Standing Order 4(4).
  - (4) When Members have been called in for a division, there shall be no further debate.
  - (5) Members are not compelled to vote and those who wish to abstain should remain in their seats when asked to rise and record their vote.
  - (6) The Clerk shall record the ayes and the noes and announce to the Speaker the number of votes cast for and against the motion.
  - (7) The ayes and noes shall be entered in the Votes and Proceedings.
  - (8) Abstentions shall not be entered in the Votes and Proceedings.
9. Standing Order 37 is amended
    - (a) by striking out suborders (1) and (2) and substituting the following:
      - (1) Five copies, and any additional copies required by suborder (2), must be tabled of a document presented by a Member to the Assembly for
        - (a) placement of one copy in the records of the Assembly, and
        - (b) distribution of
          - (i) 2 copies to the Legislature Library,
          - (ii) one copy to Hansard,
          - (iii) one copy to the Government, in the case of a document tabled by the Speaker, the Official Opposition, any other party or group in opposition or an independent Member, and
          - (iv) one copy to the Official Opposition, in the case of a document tabled by the Speaker, a Member of the Government caucus, any other party or group in opposition or an independent Member.
      - (2) In addition to the copies required under suborder (1), one additional copy must be tabled of
        - (a) responses to written questions and returns ordered by the Assembly for distribution to the Member who asked the question or moved the motion for return, and
        - (b) any document presented by a Member who is neither a Member of the Government caucus nor the Official Opposition, to allow for distribution to both the Government and the Official Opposition under suborder (1).
    - (b) by striking out suborder (3).
  10. The following is added after Standing Order 46:

Debate interrupted by adjournment of the Assembly

46.1 When a motion to adjourn the Assembly is carried or the Assembly is adjourned for want of quorum, the matter under consideration prior to the adjournment shall be deemed to be adjourned to a future sitting day.
  11. Standing Order 52(1)(c) is struck out and the following is substituted:
    - (c) Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills, consisting of 11 Members,

12. Standing Order 52.01(1) is amended by striking out clauses (a), (b) and (c) and substituting the following:
  - (a) Standing Committee on Families and Communities – mandate related to the areas of Children’s Services, Community and Social Services, Education, Health, Justice and Solicitor General, Seniors and Housing and Service Alberta;
  - (b) Standing Committee on Alberta’s Economic Future – mandate related to the areas of Advanced Education, Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women, Economic Development, Trade and Tourism, Labour and Immigration and Infrastructure;
  - (c) Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship – mandate related to the areas of Agriculture and Forestry, Energy, Environment and Parks, Indigenous Relations, Municipal Affairs, Transportation and Treasury Board and Finance.
13. The following is added after Standing Order 52.01:

Subcommittees

52.011(1) Unless otherwise ordered, a standing or special committee shall have the power to appoint one or more subcommittees, which shall report from time to time to the committee.

(2) Every subcommittee shall be appointed by motion of the committee specifying the terms of reference and the membership of the subcommittee.

(3) At its first meeting of a new Legislature, every Legislative Policy Committee and the Standing Committee on Public Accounts shall appoint a Subcommittee on Committee Business to meet from time to time at the call of the Chair and to report to the committee on the business of the committee.
14. Standing Order 52.04 is amended by renumbering Standing Order 52.04 as Standing Order 52.04(1) and by adding the following after suborder (1):
  - (2) Subject to Standing Order 59.01(11), suborder (1) does not prevent a Legislative Policy Committee from undertaking a hearing or inquiry during the same period of time that a matter stands referred to the committee by the Assembly if the hearing or inquiry does not interfere with the work of the committee on the matter referred to it.
15. Standing Order 59.01 is amended by adding the following after suborder (11):
  - (12) Suborder (11) does not apply to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills.
16. Standing Order 59.02(3) is struck out and the following is substituted:
  - (3) During consideration of interim, supplementary or main estimates, the following individuals may be seated at a committee or in the Assembly:
    - (a) officials of the Government, to assist the Minister whose estimates are under consideration;
    - (b) staff of the opposition, to assist Members who are participating in estimates consideration.
  - (4) During main estimates consideration, officials of the Government may respond to questions from a committee at the request of the Minister.
17. Standing Order 64(1)(a) is amended by striking out subclause (ii).
18. Standing Order 74.1 is amended
  - (a) by striking out the heading and substituting “Referral of Government Bill to a committee after first reading”, and
  - (b) by striking out suborder (1)(b).
19. The following is added after Standing Order 74.1:

Referral of public Bill other than Government Bill after first reading

74.11(1) After a public Bill other than a Government Bill has been read a first time, the Bill stands referred to the Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills Committee.

(2) The Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills Committee shall report back to the Assembly within 8 sitting days of the day on which the Bill was referred to the Committee.
20. Standing Order 74.2(2) is struck out and the following is substituted:
  - (2) Upon the concurrence of a committee report that a Bill be proceeded with, the Bill shall be placed on the Order Paper for second reading and, in the case of a public Bill other than a Government Bill, the Bill shall, subject to the precedence assigned to Bills standing on the Order Paper, be taken up on the next available Monday following the day on which the Assembly concurred in the report.
21. Standing Order 89 is amended by striking out “Standing Order 3” and substituting “Standing Order 3(5)”.
22. The following Standing Orders are amended by striking out “Private Bills Committee” and substituting “Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills Committee” wherever it occurs:
  - Standing Order 91(4)
  - Standing Order 96(2)
  - Standing Order 98(1) and (3)
  - Standing Order 100(1)
  - Standing Order 101
  - Standing Order 102
  - Standing Order 103
  - Standing Order 104
  - Standing Order 105(1)
  - Standing Order 106
23. The headings preceding Standing Orders 98, 100 and 105 are amended by striking out “Private Bills Committee” and substituting “Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills Committee”.
- B. And be it further resolved that upon passage of this motion any public bills other than government bills that stand on the Order Paper for second reading are deemed referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills in accordance with Standing Order 74.11(1) and notwithstanding Standing Order 74.11(2) the committee shall report back to the Assembly on these bills within 12 sitting days of the day this motion is passed.
- C. And be it further resolved that the amendments in this motion shall come into force on passage.
- A2. Mr. Shepherd moved that Government Motion 11 be amended in part A, in section 8, by striking out the proposed Standing Order 32(5) and (8).

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Speaker: Are there any others wishing to speak to Government Motion 11? I see the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka rising on debate.

7:50

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate it. I rise to speak to Government Motion 11 with reference to the standing orders of the Legislature of Alberta for the next while here. It's definitely a long motion, and there's been considerable discussion with regard to the various points and where it will lead us.

In response to some of that discussion, I would like to propose an amendment. I move that Government Motion 11 be amended in part A in section 2, (a) by striking out clause (a), and (b) by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:

- (b) by striking out suborder (3) and substituting the following:
  - (3) When Introduction of Guests is called, brief introductions may be made by the Speaker of groups of schoolchildren and, at the discretion of the Speaker, of other visitors in the galleries.

I have the original copy and enough copies for the House, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the amendment will be referred to as A3.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has 13 minutes and 52 seconds remaining if he would like to provide any additional comments. If not – he would.

Mr. Orr: Well, just to keep it very brief, I think in the interests of a positive atmosphere in the House, we all have contributed to the discussion. I think it's a motion that I would encourage all members to support.

I'll leave it at that. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Hon. Members: We haven't gotten it yet.

The Speaker: I'm happy to wait until you have one.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I appreciate the sentiment and, you know, the willingness to adjust this, you saw today that we had the Member for Edmonton-North West send out an e-mail just talking about the importance of being able to introduce guests as a member.

Obviously, I'm a brand new member, but I've had the opportunity now twice to introduce guests. Particularly today it was a very important thing for me. I got to introduce my mother and her husband and a good friend of mine who is battling cancer. You know, it's such a special thing, and I know the first time I was introduced years ago with a group – I think we forget how much of a privilege it is to be in this House, to sit in this House. I know I'm still star-struck and reminded of it every day, but I think that probably as you've sat in the House longer, you kind of forget that.

Mr. Eggen: You don't forget.

Member Irwin: You don't. There you go. So for people who get to come into this Legislature and have that opportunity of being introduced, it's a big deal. You know, I talked about the person I introduced today, Jessica. I talked to her afterwards, gave her a hug, got a photo, and she's just so honoured to have been introduced by me, her MLA, and now to have been entered into Hansard as part of this institution.

So I would urge my fellow members across the way to think about that. I also recognize that there are number of my fellow colleagues who have not yet had a chance to introduce someone, and I think you probably want to be able to introduce your parents, your family, whatever it may be. Please, please think about that personal element.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available if you have questions or comments.

Any others wishing to speak to amendment A3? The Member for Edmonton-North West is rising.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I don't want to belabour the point, but as I had mentioned this afternoon, when I was very honoured to have my oldest daughter and my wife here on the occasion of my 10th anniversary in the House, it gives you a chance to see some of the humanity that people bring into the Legislature. By seeing those things and meaningfully interacting with those things, I believe that while we may not be, you know, creating lifelong friends and so forth, but it creates that sense of humanity and camaraderie that can help to make debates better in the House.

It's amazing to be introduced, and I'm sure that there are ways by which we can tighten it up – I know that I've seen over the last 10 years that people will sometimes use introductions and make great big long introductions and turn them into members' statements – if we made some practical rules around that. But the Speaker can do that – right? – from the chair, and we can keep it tight around what people say and keeping to a strict time limit. That's probably the best way to do it.

I really do appreciate this amendment, actually. I can say on a personal level that I can see some sign of movement, and I want to encourage that kind of thing because, of course, if we can create opportunities to have a discussion – I sent out word today for people to just think about this and other things. Lo and behold, people have been thinking about it, so I'm really quite pleased by that. But I just feel that this doesn't quite catch what the essence and the importance of an introduction is, so I still have my reservations about it.

Indeed, it does have sort of a veto power by the Speaker to not allow an introduction at all. If I'm reading this correctly – if I can just ask the member if he can just look at me and shake his head – it's the Speaker that's doing the introductions still, right? Yeah. Yeah. I mean, again, you bring people up from High Level or something, and they come all the way down here and their MLA introduces them and it's an important moment. I would like to stick to the spirit of that, the essence of that, and while I appreciate the government and the hon. member for moving on the introduction concept, I just feel like this doesn't quite cut it for me.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to speak to amendment A3? The Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For those of you that don't know, that are maybe new in this Chamber, one of the things that is actually quite special, particularly if you don't have a portfolio so you're in the backbench, is that you do get to speak and introduce people that are important to you or constituents, and you can actually get the introduction, the Hansard on a lovely scroll to send to people. It creates a memory for them to have been introduced by their MLA. It maybe doesn't sound like a big deal, but it actually is.

All due respect, Mr. Speaker, but I think that when I write something to introduce someone, whether it's a family member or a constituent, I'd like to use my own voice in this place to say the words that I write. I think it's important. I think that all too often in this place we don't get to say the things we want to say. We don't get to speak to the people that we want to speak to, and this is one small way for people that is fairly nonpartisan – I have seen some odd introductions, I'll be honest, some long ones – but I think that what it does is that it allows you as a representative of your community to stand up and to highlight, whether it's a group or a person or a family member, and it actually is special.

So I agree with my colleague that perhaps suggesting time limits would be good. I would certainly be okay with that. But I think it's important that we able to speak ourselves, to be heard ourselves, and to not have somebody speak the words that we write about people. I think it's incredibly personal to introduce someone and to talk a little bit about them, a little tiny bit about them. I think that is important. I think if this is about strengthening democracy, I would suggest that it's about having a voice and empowering people to have a voice in this place.

I would ask that you reconsider this. It is one small thing, but I think it's a fairly important thing. Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone that would like to ask questions or comments of the Member for St. Albert.

Seeing none, are there others that would like to speak to A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore is rising.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't make this very long. I have to agree with everything that has been said here thus far. The chance to introduce an individual in this House is a very, very special moment. I know that of all my colleagues here, with the exception of three, from the last Legislature – you know, I had a bit of a reputation: it was odd when I didn't have a guest to introduce. There were probably even a few members opposite from the last that would remember that as well.

You know, getting the opportunity to introduce someone who is 103 years old and has never visited the Legislature before: for her and her family, that was a memory, I heard from the family, that they will never ever forget. While I appreciate the amendment, I believe that there are other avenues that we can pursue, probably around timing of introductions. We did that much in the last Legislature, when Speaker Wanner really tried to get us to maybe keep our introductions to about 30 seconds. I would certainly hope that members in the House will give this some very serious consideration. Unfortunately, I cannot find myself supporting this at this time.

The Speaker: Any members under 29(2)(a) that have questions or comments?

I see finally the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who has been trying to rise and bring his remarks to this important debate.

Mr. Feehan: Always just waiting my turn, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I just wanted to take a few moments to speak to this amendment. I feel like this is an attempt by the government to recover from an error, and it really is an inadequate attempt. The underlying error, of course, needs to be addressed in order for us to be able to speak about this amendment, so I'll begin by speaking a little bit about the underlying error.

The issue here is that it's been a long tradition here in the House for us to have an opportunity to represent our constituents by bringing them to the House and introducing them to all the members here, giving them an opportunity to see their government at work, giving them an opportunity to meet the people who they have elected in order to represent their views in the House. This is a personal relationship, as we all know. Many of us have arrived here in the House because we have built strong relationships in the community, and those community members feel a very intimate tie to us here in the House. That's why they would take the time out of their day to arrive here to spend time listening to people debate, sometimes on topics that are not exactly stimulating, although sometimes the debate can be interesting and stimulating, and I hope to make it so in a few minutes. I think it's very important that we honour that relationship with our constituents by actually speaking to them.

I notice that in the replies to the Speech from the Throne, that have been going on for the last little while, a number of members have taken the opportunity to thank their constituents for electing them and putting them in this place where they can speak to these particular issues. I notice that many people also speak to their families, as I did when I did my maiden speech, thanking perhaps our grandparents but almost assuredly our parents and our spouses and our children for the incredible support that they have given to us to be here. It would be absurd for us to say: "Well, why doesn't the Speaker just thank all the families? Why doesn't the Speaker just thank all the constituents that got us elected? Then we can save all that time that's being used up in the replies to the Speech from the Throne." Nobody would think to do that, because what is it about? It's about an individual speaking to their personal relationship with the people that brought them here.

Again, the government has decided that the people of Alberta do not matter as individuals, that they do not matter as people with whom we have unique and specific relationships, and that, as such, we can turn it into an administrative function. I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, that you would introduce them well. You're a clever Speaker, you're humorous, but it would not be the same as we ourselves making that introduction from a human relationship point of view.

So here I am, finding myself again expressing my disappointment at the government's attempt to separate us here in the House from the people that we need to represent by denying the nature of the relationship between us and the people that we represent.

I have to ask myself a little bit about why this amendment and the underlying motion itself would even be brought into this House, and I am fearful. I'm fearful – and perhaps one would call me cynical – because I think that the decision by government to bring this into the House was in and of itself a cynical move. I think the attempt to kind of meet us halfway in this particular change to the motion is, again, a cynical attempt to try to look like they're doing the right thing when they're not. The reason why I think it's cynical is because there is a very particular phenomenon here in this House, and that is that in the election the vast majority of the Edmonton people were elected to one party, and the government is only represented by one member here in this House.

We know that people who come to the Legislature are more likely to be people who live close by, who are in proximity, who find it easy to arrive here, and that cynical part of myself, which I'm sure you've experienced on more than one occasion, sees this as a relitigation of the election, as simply a decision: "How do we take the voice away from the opposition? How do we prevent the opposition from having an advantage in the House by being able to have more introductions by virtue of people living closer by?" As a result, it's actually an attack on our democratic ability to represent our constituents in this House merely because we might be perceived to have a slight advantage in this one particular case. Not that opposition has advantages very often in the House, but every once in a while some small thing creeps in, and that's what's happened in this case.

They did not take a look at the question that they say they took a look at; that is: does it change the decorum in the House? It doesn't. The decorum is uplifted by the presence of the very people who elect us. In fact, the issue is not about decorum at all. It's about suppressing the voice of the opposition and suppressing their opportunity to have a chance to introduce people and to help people feel connected to the Legislature. As a result, I feel this amendment is inadequate because it does not address the underlying problem here, the underlying problem being that this is not about decorum. This is about suppressing the voice of people who disagree with the government.

When we get a chance to talk about some of the other aspects of these standing order changes, I will address how this has been duplicated in a number of other areas. Right now I think we need to reject this amendment, and underneath that, we need to reject the whole approach of the government because it is intrinsically antidemocratic.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there questions and comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there others who wish to speak to the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to speak to Government Motion 11? I see the Member for Edmonton-North West rising.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the spirit of amendments and perhaps consensus, I too have a modest proposal here in the form of an amendment that I would like to distribute. If I could have some assistance with that, please.

8:10

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you just give us about two minutes to get the table ready to roll, and then I'll ask you to proceed once we have that.

Hon. members, the amendment will now be referred to as A4.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West has the call.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you can see, the amendment reads that I would move that Government Motion 11 be amended in part A, in section 10, by striking out the part that says: "or the Assembly is adjourned for want of quorum." The reason that I had cast a light on this section of the motion is that it's talking about the House having quorum and the government providing quorum. I think that on a categorical level it's very important to have that as an aspect of governance in a Westminster parliamentary democracy. The idea of quorum, of course, is a reflection of the representative government that this House does symbolize and the representation to the entire population of the province.

By setting and establishing quorum, it ensures that we are adhering to the idea that this is a representative Assembly, and that authority vested in us to make laws is symbolized by quorum. We use that not just in a Westminster system, but you use that for meetings and different structures and rules – let's say, Robert's rules for meetings and so forth – for a reason, right? You have to have a critical mass of representatives in order to make a decision that reflects the authority of that place.

Motion 11, the part that talks about quorum and then losing things off the Order Paper if a quorum is not represented in the House: I think that is a mistake. Again, you know, we talked about it. We've heard from a number of members here over the last couple of days that standing orders are a way to ensure and enshrine the authority vested in private members through the parliamentary democracy system. The Member for St. Albert is here to represent that city, and we need to make sure that all of those other places are represented, too, in a symbolic, representative form. If you change the value of quorum, you're changing the value of what it means to make decisions in this representative Assembly.

My argument doesn't go very much past that, but I think it's a pretty darn strong argument. It really looks at you sitting in those chairs and that authority vested in you as a private member to represent those tens of thousands of people that you have. If quorum is not achieved, again, it's because if that person is not there or if some of the general people are not there, then you need to back off from that particular law or whatever you're debating and reassemble and start again, basically. It's as simple as that. I hope that everybody understands that argument clearly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), are there any members with questions or comments?

Seeing none, other members wishing to speak on Government Motion 11, amendment A4? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure a lot of you have been on boards before, whether as a volunteer or as a designated board member. I certainly have. I've worked with a board. I've been on more boards than I can probably count. Having quorum was very important. If we didn't achieve that core number, we didn't proceed with certain work. There was a reason for that. It was about representation. I think that the job that we have here is about representation. It's about being here, and it's having a critical mass of the number of people here.

You know, I would actually support this amendment, and I thank the member for introducing it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any members with questions or comments?

Any other members wishing to speak?

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Acting Speaker: Any members wishing to speak on Government Motion 11? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak a little bit more about Motion 11 on the standing orders. I want to spend a little bit more time talking about the underlying cynicism of all of these standing order changes because I think they're intrinsically antidemocratic. I know they'll pass – it's the nature of the House here – but I think it'll be important that we put on the record my concerns that the intentions here are not honourable in the way that I wish they were.

[The Speaker in the chair]

If we look at the number of motions that are here, I think the underlying theme between these motions is to suppress the voice of the House. Now, we were all elected here, into this Legislature, to represent people and to speak on their behalf in this House. When decisions are made in this Chamber, it is supposed to be a reflection of the House, not simply a reflection of decisions being made by a small group of government cabinet members, executive members, sitting alone and then implementing or executing their decisions. It is supposed to be an opportunity for all of the representatives, regardless of the party to which they were elected, to speak to the issues that are important to citizens in the province of Alberta.

As I look through some of the motions that are put forward, as I mentioned, for example the inability now to speak to and address the very citizens who have elected us to this House, I see nothing but a cynical attempt to suppress what might be perceived to be an advantage to an Edmonton-based party, who would have more people to address. That's very disconcerting.

I also find that same cynical attitude underlying a number of the other decisions that are being made in this list of standing order changes, and I'd like to spend a moment to address a few of them.

For example, if we look at the amendment of Standing Order 3, in which the government can merely make a decision the day before whether or not we are to sit the next morning, I see an attempt to provide a political advantage to the government side of the House over the opposition side of the House because, of course, the opposition can only wait and find out at the last minute that the House is cancelled the next day, therefore being completely unable to set appointments with constituency members, being unable to organize and prepare to do the business of this House, being unable to represent the very people that we want to in those functions that we engage in outside of this House. That is not something that needs to happen on the government side. They can be well aware of when they are going to cancel morning sittings. They can set appointments, they can meet with constituents because they know that is coming. Here again we have an antidemocratic motion that is just attempting to take power and voice away from people who did not elect this government. It's a punishment for people who do not agree with this government. It's an attempt to tell them that if they do not vote for this government, their voice will be suppressed and be removed from the House at every possible turn. I think that that is very disconcerting.

As I go through some of the other motions, I think I can find other examples of when these things become cynical. I think, for example, of the motion that directs us to refrain from pounding the table, or, as it's indicated here in section 4, "No Member shall disrupt the orderly conduct of the proceedings of the Assembly by loudly or repeatedly banging on a desk." This is again an attempt to stop something that right now is only happening by the opposition members because we respect, of course, the traditions of this House, as we do, for example, respect the person sitting in the chair, the Speaker. Now those traditions are up for question. No longer do we have to respect the traditions of this House if the government decides they do not want to respect the traditions of this House. That's a very dangerous step to take.

There are reasons why these traditions have been developed over a hundred years or more in the Westminster parliamentary system. One of the things that pounding the desk allows us to do is that it allows us to express our voice. Typically, when one is pounding the desk, you're expressing your voice in a positive, in a relational manner. Again, here I'm finding the government wanting to suppress our voice and to deny the nature of the relationship we have, in this case, with other members of the House, where we cannot congratulate them on their speaking, we cannot congratulate people who have come to visit us, we cannot be supportive of each other because they happen to have a different habit on the other side.

What we've learned from this one is that if you're on the government side, your every whim is now going to become rule and law. Any time your voice is different, you have a different thought, a different way of approaching a problem on the opposition side, they will seek ways to legislatively restrict your ability to act in the way that you'd like to act, the government trying to control our voices, our bodies, and our way of being, something I find very discouraging but also fairly consistent through their philosophy.

If I go through a little bit more in some of the other motions that are here, I'm very concerned to see that they are suggesting that you cannot change sides of the floor. If you're elected for one party and you are making a decision that in order to represent your constituents, you want to cross the floor – now, I think that this is again a very dangerous precedent. It's breaking the tradition of the Westminster parliamentary system on the mere whim of a government who just does not want to hear any other voice except their own. I think that that's a problem, and I think it's particularly hypocritical from a government that would not even exist had that rule been in place in the last Legislature. Every single member of the UCP in the last Legislature left their party, whether it be the Wildrose Party or the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta, and crossed the floor to join the UCP.

So what we have is not only a government that is trying to suppress our voice but is trying to actually take advantage of a rule, do it for themselves and then deny that possibility to anybody else. I think that's an incredibly dangerous road to run down, this idea that: we can do things, but as soon as we have taken advantage of them for our own purposes to unite this party so that we can win the next election, we're going to deny that possibility for any future opposition to be able to do that. That concerns me deeply, that this is the tone that the government is taking, that they are somehow above the rules because now they can take the ladder which they climbed up and haul it up so that nobody else can climb up behind them. I think that's completely unacceptable.

I want to remind the Speaker that some of the most noble members of parliamentary democracy have crossed the floor. Winston Churchill is quite famous not only for crossing the floor once, at which he was called a rat, but for crossing the floor back again later on. He quite rightly said that it is one thing to be a rat but another thing again to re-rat. When I think about that, I think about this motion here in the House. I can see that there is indeed a rat in these motions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, I just hesitate to interrupt, if only briefly, as you have another five minutes and 45 seconds. While I appreciate your comments and encourage you to make them, I might just remind you that we are presently speaking to Government Motion 11, and I believe it's Government Motion 10 that is more specific to the particular debate that you are referring to with respect to caucus affiliation. Having said that, if you can tie the two together, I'm more than happy for you to make this relevant to Government Motion 11.

Mr. Feehan: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that.

I'm merely trying to point out that there is an underlying theme to the changes that are being made in the House today. I think the underlying theme is one of suppression, is one of creating privilege and opportunity for the government and ensuring that the opposition does not share in any of those privileges and opportunities. I think, as someone who came into this House as a true believer in democracy, I am very concerned when I see democracy undermined and ridiculed by members of the opposition, as I see some of them doing across the floor right now.

I think I'll leave my comments on Motion 11 there at this point now, but I just wanted to make sure that Hansard recorded my concerns so that the people in my constituency know that I care about the democracy that brought me here and that I am prepared to stand and defend it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I will take questions and comments under 29(2)(a) in just one brief moment.

I would just like to also confirm with the member that, you know, I encourage you to make comments, whichever comments you might like to make at another time as well on Motion 10 if that's what you choose to do. I wasn't interjecting to try to prevent any such comments, only interjecting to remind the member that we were in fact not on the motion that was dealing with that particular clause.

Having said that, questions and comments under 29(2)(a)? I see the Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, you are correct. I look forward to providing some comments and context in reference to the comments provided by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I listened to his speech with great interest. I just want to acknowledge and address one comment in particular that the hon. member raised in regard to the 9 a.m. sitting concern. The fact is that the Opposition House Leader brought forward concerns to us when we asked about things that the opposition may want changed in standing orders as we proceed forward. This was one of the issues that was identified by the Opposition House Leader. Now, what the Opposition House Leader wanted to have happen was that the 9 a.m. sittings be completely eliminated.

8:30

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do know that you had the privilege of being the Opposition House Leader, in fact, actually, when the 9 a.m. sittings were brought in. You and the then Government House Leader had some fireworks, and if I recall, it did not end that well for you. You may disagree. I don't know. But that's my remembering of that history. The reality is that Albertans did not like the idea of opposition MLAs attempting to fight not to go to work at 9 o'clock in the morning and then to keep this place not open and to be able to use all of the legislative time made sense, though. With that said, the Opposition House Leader made a passionate argument that there are certain times where it would make sense for the Assembly not to be called. It could be certain things that are happening within the province where we needed some flexibility for ceremonial purposes, something along those lines but also more commonly, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, for standing committees.

If we were dealing with certain things at certain times of the year where we wanted a standing committee to be able to meet, it would make sense for the Legislature not to be sitting at 9 o'clock in the morning because hon. members are working elsewhere. That's particularly important for an opposition not the size of this. This is a pretty big opposition for the Alberta Legislature, though significantly smaller than the last one that sat on that side of the House, that I had the privilege of leading for a while, as did you. But it is a fairly big opposition for this House. In the history of this province often the opposition is small. I know the hon. former Education minister will agree with that because he sat in some smaller caucuses. When the Government House Leader had standing committees happening simultaneously, that could put them at a significant disadvantage, so we added this into Government Motion 10 or 11, whichever one we're on at the moment, Mr. Speaker – Motion 11; thank you very much – you know, directly to try to work with the opposition.

So if hon. members have concerns with the 9 a.m. portion of this, I suggest they take it up with their Opposition House Leader. I know that they would have rather we went further and just eliminated it altogether, but I'm sure the Speaker, who was the former House leader at the time, will articulate to you, when he's not in the chair, why that is probably not a very good idea for Albertans.

While I look forward to discussing the floor-crossing motion, which the hon. member referred to – and I take your advice seriously, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that it's not part of the motion that's before the House right now, so I won't spend too much time on it, but the hon. member did bring it up. I look forward to debating vigorously with him the merits of that motion and why we have brought that forward in this House. That's a promise that was made to Albertans. But what I will tell him is that we should make clear because he's brought it up in Hansard today – our motion makes clear that an hon. member has a responsibility to their constituents, if they've lost confidence in their party, to sit as an independent. It has not been designed in any such way that would not allow them to do that work on behalf of their constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. member. If he wishes to comment, there's a minute remaining in his time.

Having said that, are there any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just going back to my comments earlier, this is again for Government Motion 11. I think that this is supposed to strengthen democracy somehow. You know, that's kind of sad, actually. It seems like somebody is wanting to turn this particular place into something they're more familiar with, maybe something in Ottawa, but okay. Let's just move on.

Let's talk about some of the issues – and I'm standing up to speak to this. I know that this has been debated thoroughly and people have spoken at length about all these things, but I have not, and I would like to be on the record to demonstrate to my constituents that I stood up and I spoke to these things because I don't agree with them, and I have some serious concerns.

You know, it's kind of funny that I'm talking about traditions of this place. There are traditions of this place that maybe I'm not as comfortable with or I maybe disagree with. I find it funny that we're sort of picking and choosing which traditions we like and we're okay with and which ones we don't, and I'm referring to desk thumping. Now, I'll be honest. Probably like a lot of the new members, when I first got here and I heard the thumping, it was a little bit shocking because it was loud, not something that I was used to. I'd maybe seen it on television but I'd not been in the room, and I wasn't used to it. But I got used to it when we started sitting here. I saw what it was used for. It was actually to support the person speaking or to show your approval for something. It actually sort of grew on me. I get that there are some people that choose not to thump. You can choose to thump or not thump – that's up to you – but I think to say that you must use this hand and this hand and make them meet and those are the only things that are acceptable in this place, Mr. Speaker, is weird.

You know, one of the things that happened a few years ago that was really fantastic in this place is that we got together to agree that women have babies, and they can sometimes have those babies in this Chamber, and there were times that some of our new moms had their little ones in this Chamber. I think there was even a time that somebody was breastfeeding in this Chamber, and it was a beautiful thing because this is the people's House, and the babies are people. I think, Mr. Speaker, it would have been kind of tough for that mom to clap versus thump with one hand, so is there a process for that? Do we send a note to the Speaker and say: "I'm sorry. I have a baby. Can I thump today, or must I clap?"

I'm being facetious with this in a way. Why is it that the government feels the need to tell us what we can do with our appendages? Seriously. If you don't like thumping, don't thump; clap. But why is it that you need to control what we do? Is that how you strengthen democracy? I don't know. I see you're – I don't know if you're hot or something. Just don't thump. What I'm saying is that I think it's really important to recognize that this is less about thump or clap. Whatever. It doesn't really matter to me. I don't mind that you clap and choose not to thump. I thump. I don't clap. You know, I think it's a House. We have individual choice and freedom. Why is it that you want to control people's bodies? This is our body. I'm going to put that on the record that I'm not okay with this. I'm sort of drawing a line to say that I'm never okay with people telling me what I can do with my body, whether it's my arms, my hands, or other parts.

Maybe let's just call it preserving an old tradition, sort of like doing a traditional prayer at the beginning of session. I might not express my faith in the same way that you do or the same way that our Speaker does, but I respect the fact that it's a tradition, and that's what we're choosing to do here, so why not respect individual choice here? Why is it that you feel the need to control this? I really don't get it. I want to be on the record as saying this. It might sound silly to you, but I think it's important.

Another thing that I wanted to highlight for you – and for those of you at the back, perhaps, I've been there. I know what it feels like. You often don't feel like you have a voice, but you do have a voice. You have the ability, Mr. Speaker. The members at the back have an ability to have a voice and to have an opinion, so once again I encourage them to have that opinion.

Just going back to desk thumping for a quick second, the other thing is that this particular Chamber and actually this building, maybe, given the age of it, is not very accessible. It's National AccessAbility Week, by the way. This Chamber is not very wheelchair accessible, and I think that – I'm not blaming anybody. It's an old building, and we have some work to do. For example, someone in a wheelchair can't come up the front steps. They have to go around the back. So, you know, hopefully, at some point maybe we can address that. I think there's a lot of goodwill in this place that we can do something about that.

I'm looking forward to the day that we have multiple people with disabilities in this Chamber. That would be fantastic. I'm talking about visible disabilities. Perhaps they are wheelchair users or perhaps they are amputees or perhaps they have cerebral palsy. I'm not sure whatever the disability will be. But one day it will happen, that inclusion will happen, and we will have representatives that have visible disabilities, and it'll be fantastic. And you know what? You can laugh all you like, but I don't think it's funny. There are some people that are physically not able to go like that whereas banging something or kicking something or even elbowing something might be the only thing that they do, but you are deciding the way that people can express their pleasure or displeasure, and that's not fair. This is a place that is supposed to be as fair as possible, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you would agree that you have the ability to represent your people. I happen to represent a lot of people with disabilities, probably because I seek them out, maybe. That's my background. That's what I do.

I'm belabouring this point, Mr. Speaker, because it's an important one. The rules that the government is trying to set don't fit for everybody. They just don't. At some point we will have somebody here that will be unable to clap, but they should be allowed to express their pleasure about something. The reason I'm saying this is that this is not fair. You deciding how we use our bodies, how we express ourselves, is not fair. This isn't about strengthening democracy. This is about doing what your boss told you. Clearly, I am not supporting this. I am not in support of this whatsoever.

There are a number of other things that I have serious concerns about, but I'm going to focus on one more, and it's for the members that maybe aren't sitting towards the front, don't have a portfolio, perhaps don't get as many opportunities to speak. One of the great things in this place as a private member is that we get put into a lottery. There are 64 of us, and so sometimes we get lucky and we get a high number so we get to have a private member's bill. It doesn't happen very often. Some people are lucky enough to pull really low numbers, and it's fantastic. They get to consult their communities, and they get to develop a bill. They get to use a Monday to talk about it, to do first reading, to do second reading, and we get to push it through.

There have been some amazing bills, actually – I can't remember the member. I think it was inspired by his daughter. He had a private member's bill. It was fantastic. It was something about bullying online or inappropriate photographs online. I wish I could remember the details, Mr. Speaker. I apologize. But it was an amazing story. He listened to his daughter, who had talked to her school friends, and this was a problem. He got a high number, he brought the bill, and we got it done because we all agreed it was a fantastic idea. We did it. We did it right here. It didn't have to go to committee.

But this "strengthening democracy" is not strengthening democracy. It's slowing it down, and it's putting a thumb on it so that a committee can slow it down. We all know how committees work. They slow things down. There's a reason, Mr. Speaker, that the government is choosing not to send government bills to committee. They do not want it slowed down. But they're applying this rule to a private member's bill, and it rarely happens that you get a private member's bill. Rarely. Rarely. But they want to send it to committee. Ask yourselves why. Is this about strengthening democracy, or is this about silencing people? I'd say this isn't about strengthening democracy.

I am on the record. I'm thankful for that. I will share this with my constituents that expect me to stand up and represent them, and I am doing that, Mr. Speaker. I could go into some of the other strengthening democracy pieces, but I'm not going to. Those were the two that I wanted to focus on.

Clearly, I will not be supporting this. I'm hugely disappointed, and I would encourage the private members who also don't agree to do the same. Have the courage and do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to speak to Government Motion 11?

For a point of clarification, there's no 29(2)(a) as the motion was to adjourn debate. A debate, as we all know in the Assembly, cannot be adjourned on 29(2)(a), but because the hon. member moved to adjourn debate prior to concluding her remarks, there is no further opportunity for 29(2)(a).

Are there others wishing to speak to Government Motion 11? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure to rise to contribute to the debate on Government Motion 11. Although I've had the opportunity now to rise a couple of times on some quick questions and a quick comment on the last amendment, this is the first time I do get to rise in this Chamber on behalf of the residents of Edmonton-Decore and bring their voices here through debate.

As you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of concerns. I know it's surprising because I'm usually not an individual that gets concerned about things very often, but I have some here. As was probably mentioned a little bit earlier before, getting the chance to introduce people in this House is a very special moment. I won't belabour that, but I feel I should just add that quickly to my comments. Moving away from that, I think, will break a very long-standing tradition.

I think the Member for St. Albert was very clear on the desk thumping. I don't need to go any further into that.

One of the first things that concerns me about Motion 11 is the number of things that are contained within it all at once. I guess you could almost call it an omnibus motion. As one of the members who has served in the 29th Legislature – there are a few members here on the government side during that time. Maybe – I can't recall specifically – Mr. Speaker, you may have been one of those members at that time that were very, very concerned about the number of topics that showed up in a specific labour bill and wanted to split it up. It was interesting to watch that, yet here we are duplicating that. I've heard, of course, during the election and whatnot that a UCP government is going to do things differently.

But I hate to say it: with Government Motion 11 it seems a little bit like the second verse is the same as the first. I have a concern around that. I'm wondering: why that need to jumble all of this together?

I guess the second concern that I have is around the abstentions. Mr. Speaker, we are very clearly elected to this Chamber by our constituents to come here and do our job, and that job entails voting. I can remember a certain member that stayed in the House and very eloquently argued against a bill but also remained and voted, too, when, shall we say, some members decided to possibly conveniently take a bathroom break during that voting. Abstention, I believe, is an opportunity to do just that. It's just that now you've got somewhat a little bit of permission. Our constituents expect us to bring their views forward, and those views end up, at times, with a vote, either yes or no. We have to, to the best of our abilities, try to figure out if that is what we should be doing, voting yes or voting no. But simply to take our seat, cross our arms, and go, "Eh, I don't feel like getting up at this time and voting," I think, is unacceptable. We are here to do our jobs.

The other concern I have is around private members' bills automatically going to committee. I remember the Member for St. Albert drawing an example, and I would like to draw an example of a private member's bill. The Member for I believe it was Calgary-West in the 29th Legislature had a fantastic private member's bill around regulating pill presses. I even specifically remember personally reaching out to the member about some questions I had: could there be something different that we could do? I remember some of the government members from that time asking for permission to get through that private member's bill in one straight shot: first, second, committee, third, pass it. You know what, Mr. Speaker? It was important enough that we thought that we should do it. Had we had those rules in the last Legislature, that member's bill would have gone to committee, and we would not have gotten that important piece of legislation passed in a very timely manner.

It worries me that there could be private members, be it on the opposition side or, for sure, on the government side, that may have private members' business that we can all get behind – there is an urgent need to get it done – yet it is going to get kicked to committee and potentially slow that ability down, and we just don't know when that might happen. I mean, can you imagine the last few days where a private member's bill comes up and automatically goes to committee, and it's such a great bill, but maybe an election gets called, and we lose that private member's bill? I know the Government House Leader finds that very, very funny, but if you won't look out for your private members, then I will.

Mr. Speaker, I find myself unable to support Motion 11 based on these concerns. I would very highly recommend that the private members of the government side take this information and give it very serious consideration, especially around their ability to bring private members' motions forward, their ability to introduce their guests when they can make it. We can get all into the whole us versus them, but if they have a guest in this House and they introduce them, I will give them the traditional welcome that they so rightfully deserve.

With that, I will take my seat. I am sure there are probably some that are just itching to get up on 29(2)(a) and ask all kinds of questions, and I will allow them to fill their boots.

The Speaker: Questions and comments under 29(2)(a)? I see the Government House Leader is on his feet.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. I enjoyed listening to his comments. I don't agree with him, but I enjoyed it. I appreciate him taking the time to debate on this important motion that's before the House today. He brought forward a couple of things, though, I think, that are worth clarifying for Hansard.

The first is the comments in regard to a private member's bill going off to committee to somehow magically just die, the way that he described it. I know that the hon. member was part of a government just a few short weeks ago that used to do that. But for the benefit, again, of my little brother from Calgary-Klein and all the other new members that are in the Assembly, I will tell you how it used to work, and I'll then tell you how it will work after these standing orders, hopefully, pass in this Assembly.

What used to happen underneath the NDP government is that when they found a bill that they couldn't politically defeat inside this place, because there'd be some media trouble or some trouble with their base, but they didn't want to pass it, what they would do is that the Government House Leader would get up and send it off to the standing committee, which you guys now have the privilege of being members of. It would go off to that standing committee. They would say: ah, it went off to committee. Then – you know what would happen? – it would never come back, and what that meant was that the bill basically died. It would never get to the agenda in those standing committees, and then what would happen is that we would prorogue for a throne speech or something along those lines, and the bill would die on the Order Paper and never come back to this Assembly.

Now, what we have proposed and the hon. member doesn't want to talk about is that the rule would be that it goes, yes, automatically on first reading of a private member's bill, but it has to return to this place within eight sitting days, which is basically two weeks. It has to come back. That allows the good of committee to happen, which is a committee able to have a conversation to be able to deal with issues to actually be able to get legislation passed.

The hon. member talked about the hon. Member for Calgary-West's bill on pill presses, which happily got passed in this place, but I see he did not bother to talk about the hon. member's bill on Serenity, which was defeated inside this place and would never have been defeated if it was able to go to the private members' committee to overcome some of the obstacles that were facing that piece of legislation. It would come back to this Chamber within eight days, significantly different than the undemocratic practices that all those members across from me right now, through you, Mr. Speaker, to them, used to do just a few short weeks ago when they were in government. Instead, we made a promise, we spoke about it many times in this House, and we're going to make sure that private members get to be able to work hard on their legislation.

The only other thing I wanted to talk about while I was up here, Mr. Speaker – and I would appreciate some comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore – is his passionate fight to be able to keep desk thumping, which I find just outrageous, that he is spending so much time on that.

I'd like to go to a constituent of mine by the name of Cathy, who posted this on my Facebook when we announced these standing orders. She said:

I stopped planning my class legislature trip during session because of how immature the [NDP] MLAs acted. My students missed everything being talked about on the floor because of the immaturity of the [so-called] adults. They were appalled by the behaviour. I applaud the UCPs for this move.

I will go to another teacher, Jody Blackmore:

This is an issue that definitely needs to be dealt with. Our grade 6 students were able to observe about 30 minutes of Question Period yesterday and were shocked at how rude the NDP MLAs were. They have learned that it is completely impolite and disrespectful to talk while others are speaking. They noticed and later asked why the NDP were banging on their desks and constantly [talking] while others were speaking but the UCP didn't do any of that. It'll be nice to bring classes in the future and have them see a good example of how to behave in public rather than the extreme example of terrible behaviour [by the NDP].

Mr. Speaker, we have promised to bring decorum back to this House. I'm proud of our Premier, who has led the way, pioneered it inside this Legislature, which these members across from me seem to be appalled by. But I'm proud of him. He brought it to this Chamber. This Chamber has calmed down. It's been focused on the business of Albertans rather than calling names and fighting to bang on your desks. These members in the opposition have it wrong. They're wrong on this. This side of the House is going to stand up for teachers like Jody and Cathy and stand up for their students and make sure that they can come to the people's House and watch appropriate behaviour by adults, not whatever you guys are doing.

The Speaker: There are questions and comments available under 29(2)(a). Any others?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia and Minister of Health is rising on debate.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise because I was alarmed by the comments of the Member for St. Albert, and I wanted . . . [A cellphone rang] The floor could almost dance to that.

Speaker's Ruling Use of Electronic Devices in the Chamber

The Speaker: I just would remind all members that it is appropriate to either turn your phone's ringer off or not bring them to the Chamber. I would just like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford because I've been hoping for this opportunity. I know we had this opportunity in the very early days of the legislative session, but I might just suggest that the next time inside the Chamber that this happens, there will be a Speaker's fine, you might say, a $50 donation to a charity of your choice. Any additional offences, I think, will be a $100 fine to a charity of the Speaker's choice. So let this be a fair warning: any additional offences, the fines will be appropriately distributed.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia has the floor.

Debate Continued

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, I wanted to rise because of the alarming comments that were mentioned by the Member for St. Albert, that alarmed me, that I wanted to make sure that my colleagues were aware of. She said that this motion is going to regulate what we do with our bodies, what she's going to be able to do with her body.

Then I cracked open the Standing Orders, and I learned that there's a prohibition on the hon. Member for St. Albert being able right now to just walk between us as I'm recognized by you. There's a prohibition on any of us in this room being able to walk, after we've adjourned, before you've left the Chamber. There's a prohibition on – well, actually, we're all bound to attend the service of the Assembly. There's a forcing of the hon. member to stand when the Speaker and the Mace enter. I'm just shocked. There are a number of portions of the standing orders which tell us what to do with our bodies on quite – well, I suppose I can't say that.

Anyways, Mr. Speaker, not quite sure where the hon. member was going with what we can do with our bodies and why the motion can't – all right. I'm going to stop right there, Mr. House Leader, and now I'm supposed to . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Adjourn debate.

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate. Do I move to adjourn debate, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yeah, you've done it.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 3

Job Creation Tax Cut (Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment) Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise tonight to move second reading of Bill 3, Job Creation Tax Cut (Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment) Act.

Alberta's economic outlook has deteriorated, and this bill is a central part of our plan to get Alberta working again. Our government committed to reducing the tax burden on job creators, and these amendments will start that process.

This bill proposes three general sets of amendments: a cut to the corporate tax rate, consequential amendments to the small-business tax rate, and other technical amendments. First, the corporate tax rate. If passed, the first set of amendments to the Alberta Corporate Tax Act will reduce the corporate tax rate from 12 to 8 per cent over the next four years. We're proposing that the corporate tax rate be reduced as follows: on July 1, 2019, it would be reduced from its current rate of 12 per cent to 11 per cent; on January 1, 2020, the rate would decrease to 10 per cent; on January 1, 2021, the rate would be reduced to 9 per cent; finally, on January 1, 2022, Alberta's corporate income tax rate would decrease to 8 per cent.

We know that business decisions are not made spur of the moment, so to help encourage timely investment decisions, we're implementing the first two cuts within the next seven months. By reducing the corporate tax rate quickly, Alberta will become a more attractive place to do business. This will provide incentive to make new investments in Alberta. Our proposed amendments also include the final two rate reductions on January 1, 2021 and 2022, ensuring that the corporate tax rate is reduced to 8 per cent within four years. Legislating these rate changes in advance will allow businesses to make future investment decisions with confidence.

If passed, these amendments will make Alberta a much more attractive place to do business. In fact, after the first proposed decrease in July our province will again have the lowest corporate tax rate in Canada, and by 2022 Alberta will be one of the most tax competitive business jurisdictions in North America. The job creation tax cut will help reverse the flow of investment to once again see investment flow from south of the border back to Alberta. Mr. Speaker, we must take bold action to help support our job creators, and these amendments will go a long way in that regard.

The next set of amendments proposed in this bill concern the small-business tax rate. If passed, this bill will maintain the 2 per cent tax rate for small businesses. The calculation of this rate in the act relies on the general corporate tax rate, where a deduction from the corporate rate determines the small-business rate. Currently a deduction of 10 per cent is used to reduce the current 12 per cent corporate tax rate to a 2 per cent small-business tax. We're proposing consequential amendments that will maintain the small-business rate at 2 per cent.

As the corporate rate is reduced, these consequential amendments will ensure that the deduction used in the calculation of the small-business rate gradually falls from 10 to 6 per cent, in sync with corporate tax rate reductions. These adjustments will also occur on July 1, 2019; January 1, 2020; January 1, 2021; and finally, on January 1, 2022, in tandem with the corporate tax rate reductions. Small businesses are extremely valuable job creators in our province, and maintaining the competitive 2 per cent rate is important to our government.

The final set of amendments we are proposing consist of technical changes to the act to ensure the new small-business deduction sections are properly referenced in the act. All of the proposed changes will ensure that the tax rate reductions are implemented properly.

Mr. Speaker, to recap, this bill will reduce the corporate tax burden on many Alberta businesses, and it will maintain Alberta's small-business tax rate at 2 per cent. It will also make technical changes that provide more clarity and ensure that all adjustments within the bill are implemented properly.

I'm pleased with the changes we've brought forward with the job creation tax cut, and we look forward to watching Alberta's economy bounce back as a result of this and other government initiatives. If passed, these amendments will make a meaningful difference for Alberta by getting our economy rolling again and fostering job creation.

I look forward to debate on this bill and call on all members of this House to support these amendments.

I now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

[Debate adjourned May 29]

The Speaker: Are there any hon. members wishing to rise and speak to Bill 2? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West is rising.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to speak on Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has very astutely outlined, there are a number of serious issues around this bill that I think we all as members of this House should consider and consider the consequences over time. I can say on a personal level that the restructuring on overtime pay perhaps was one of the ones that jumped out, both at me and my constituents as well.

Of course, here in the province lots of people are accumulating overtime, and the idea is that there's an agreement that you are being paid appropriately for that deferred overtime. To make changes as are being proposed here in Bill 2 around that particular element of a worker's agreement really leaves a lot of people shortchanged. I know that we made some calculations and others have made calculations around overtime banked hours being paid out, and we see a differential. For example, an oil and gas worker earning $43 an hour working 10 hours of overtime every week on a 12-week project would bank about 100 to 120 hours of overtime. With the changes in Bill 2 around banked overtime, the difference in pay in that scenario – it's just one anecdotal scenario, but you could create any number of those – is $2,600.

When you start to make those sorts of changes arbitrarily – I know that the hon. minister was saying that this is an agreement that could be worked through, but when you change the balance of fairness on an agreement to the discretion of the employer, then you see that workers are often left short and out in the cold. I think that it won't take long for us to see a correlation with the minimum wage changes that are being proposed concurrently with youth workers – right? – a change of 15 per cent reduction in pay. I mean, some employers will make choices to the benevolence and the benefit of their employees, but many won't. You know, when you create a law, you create a standard, and when you create a standard, it should be reflective of a sense of fairness, justice, equality, and continuity.

By changing banked overtime payout and moving the balance of power and discretion of that to the employer, you put the workers and the vast majority of Albertans that are in that position at a disadvantage. You know, that's one of the elements of this bill that definitely jumped out at me.

Another element that I found was around the Employment Standards Code – right? – you know, around leave: compassionate care leave, job protection extended to 27 weeks from eight to better align with federal government employment insurance benefits, long-term illness and injury leave, personal family and responsibility leave. All of these are basic things that people look to as an element of trust in their job when an employee is in one of those situations – right? – someone being ill in their family, long-term illness, injury, compassionate care, and so forth. By changing those expectations, you make it difficult for people to have peace of mind and to have the financial security and certainty that would allow them to move ahead.

I just found the breadth of this bill in looking for ways by which to repeal labour reform – you know, a lot of these reforms simply were to put Alberta in line with the rest of the country. It's not like we were bringing out the lead and blazing new territory. You know, we're the eighth or the 10th province to finally have some of these reforms put into place. You know, it's not radical. It's not out of keeping with the rest of the country or even international standards; it just brings Alberta up to a standard of expectation of normalcy and responsibility.

To repeal so many of these things – you know, this whole idea of starting a new government with the general feeling of pulling back or somehow moving backwards as an opening theme for a government to start their new term: I find that a very curious way to choose to characterize your own new government, and lots of people suffer as a result, right? The people that were looking for reasonable labour reform were enjoying the expectation of, you know, proper maternity leave law, of bereavement and personal loss law, of overtime banked hours expectations, and suddenly all that gets lost in the tide of the summer of repeal, as it's characterized here with the new government. I find that categorically troubling and then specifically with some of these elements with Bill 2 that I just put forward.

You know, certainly, we will work with this new government to try to help them with this problem that they've created for themselves in regard to Bill 2. I know that we have some reasoned amendments that we can use to perhaps clarify the importance of protection of banked overtime, of leave protection, and so forth, and we're happy to do so. You know, you don't try to set a theme of the government at the peril and at the compromise of fairness of compensation, fairness for safety, and employment standards that Albertans expect and employment standards that are in keeping with the rest of Canada.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to more debate, and I look forward to working with the government to perhaps improve this bill.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments.

Member Irwin: Yeah. I'll just go on that one for a minute. I just wanted to thank the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the call.

Member Irwin: Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your patience. I'm new. How long can I say that for?

The Speaker: It's over now.

Member Irwin: I want to thank the member for his comments, in particular, just the comments around OT, overtime pay. You know, particularly, we've heard from a lot of folks working in oil and gas that that's going to hit them hard. My own father worked in oil and gas for nearly 40 years in northern Alberta, Swan Hills. He worked a lot of overtime, and he sacrificed a whole heck of a lot. I know a lot of other folks did the same. A lot of people that I worked with out in rural Alberta were dependent on that overtime. I know a fellow I dated, back when I was dating fellows, worked at the power plant out in Forestburg, and he put in a lot of overtime as well. Again, I hardly got to see him. But it was a sacrifice that he needed to make to start to make some investments in his future.

I just wanted to ask the Member for Edmonton-North West to just elaborate a little bit more on that because I know you've heard from some of your constituents as well about the impacts of the decrease to overtime pay.

The Speaker: The whip for the Official Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. I appreciate that. You know, what I saw and what I know from friends and family that work on project-based oil and gas is that you have a period of intensity where you're working on, let's say, a shutdown of a plant or building a project. It's project-based work. You have an intense period of earning lots of time and potentially the money that you will then defer over to the rest of the year when you don't have a job. That banked overtime is an essential part of the calculation for the basic budgeting for a family, right? It's not like you've just got great piles of money, and you get another pile. It's where you're working intensely and hard, often in remote locations, and then carefully building a budget around the hours that you worked but the banked overtime that you worked, too, to make sure you can make it through the rest of the year, when you don't necessarily have work, right? So to change that and to change that balance of decision-making to the employers I think is dangerous. We always have expectations for the best of intentions from human beings, but we always need to make regulation and backstop for when the best of intentions don't come forward.

Again, this is a direct correlation to the red tape reduction bill that I saw, that's coming forward here now, where you create this idea that regulation is bad. But, I mean, regulation protects people, too. You know, when you have a regulation that – so you're paying someone who's 17 and a half 15 per cent less than the person who's suddenly 18, right? Then you have to put in all these checks and balances to see if they're going to school or not or what their actual age is or if they're raising – I mean, that sounds like a whole lot of red tape to me. You have to create a whole new department to check and see, you know, carding people in restaurants to see if they're actually working so many hours. If that red tape reduction department wants somewhere to start, they'll probably have to start with this minimum wage thing because they're creating this Byzantine sort of set of rules and regulations and different prices and payments.

I heard people talking about a liquor server differential as well. You know, that doesn't sound like reducing red tape. It sounds like a whole lot more of the very same thing.

I mean, when you're talking about labour and employment standards, you want to keep it fair, you want to keep it equal, and you want to keep it sustainable, right? Any deviation from those simple principles creates red tape, creates unfairness, inequality, and it makes it harder for families to make ends meet. I think that's one of the expectations we have as MLAs, to fight against those things. So I think we need to make a couple of changes to Bill 2 to make it meet those standards.

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

I see no one.

On the bill, then. Any wishing to speak to the bill? I see the Member for St. Albert rising.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand up and speak to Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. I'm not going to comment on the title. I guess I'm going to focus on a couple of areas, one of which is actually the minimum wage and reducing the minimum wage for young people.

I guess when I first heard this, I mean, I wasn't hugely surprised, but I asked myself: why? Really, why would you do this? Then I thought back to: who are the people that have been lobbying for this? It's pretty clear. I think the Premier actually had a meeting or – I don't know – a rally of some kind before the election, if I'm not mistaken, with Restaurants Canada, and I'm pretty sure that this is something they were pushing for. But, you know, I'm sure all of the donation things will be sorted out in due course, and then we'll find out sort of how this came about, I suppose. I find it sort of interesting that the members opposite are telling us that this is about creating more jobs when there isn't a whole lot of proof to say that reducing young peoples' wages creates more work. It certainly creates more friends in certain industries, but I don't think it creates more work.

I was somewhat worried that other people with modest levels of human capital would get the axe or get a reduction. I'm hugely grateful that that is not the case. I know that when we were on that side, one of the things that we did was get rid of a regulation that had been put in place by the previous Conservative government, and that was to allow employers to apply for a minimum wage exemption for people with disabilities. That had been in place for quite some time, and that was possible for people to do.

Sadly, I do think that there were some companies or organizations that had somewhat taken advantage of that, where you would hear stories about people doing really rote, menial jobs, whether it was sort of assembly line things or, you know, getting donations and sorting them, and being paid, really, a pittance, like, just cents per hour to do the work. That was allowed because somewhere down the road somebody had viewed these folks as having moderate levels of human capital, I suppose, and it was okay to pay them less.

But I am very sad to see that young people in our province will now be paid less for doing the same job. Actually, I'm sure somebody else has already touched on this, but our pages, who work so hard, who work really long hours here in this Chamber, the ones that are under 18 years of age will now lose $2 an hour, and they'll likely work alongside people that are maybe a little bit older than them who will make more money simply because of their birthdate. I don't know. That doesn't seem fair to me.

I know that maybe some of you were in the same boat. I didn't come from a wealthy family at all. Actually, quite the opposite. One of the things that we had to do as kids, when we were, you know, young teenagers, is that we had to find jobs and we had to help. I'm not saying that we paid rent to our parents, but what we did do is we covered our own expenses. You know what that's like when you're a young person, whether that's paying for a field trip or buying clothes or a backpack or school supplies or just, you know, things that young people need.

As I got older as a teenager, one of the things that I started to do was to save for my education because I knew that my parents didn't have the ability. Well, they were struggling just to pay rent, you know, to make sure that we had food and all of the things that we needed to survive. But it was up to us if we wanted to go a little further. On a side note, my grandmother said that I could do anything, told me that I could be a bank teller one day. Anyway, a little story about that.

But we were told that that was what we had to do. So we worked. Every summer we worked, whether it was – you know, one year I remember going out and picking tomatoes while they were there, and then we got taken to a field to clear fields. I worked in an ice cream parlour. I worked at McDonald's. I worked in fast food. I've done all of those things that young people do to save money, and I worked just as hard as the person beside me who was older than me. I worked really hard all summer, and I saved that money so that I could afford the things that I needed, just like our young people now.

Yet you're saying that you're hanging up an open-for-business sign on the backs of young people by reducing their wage by $2 per hour. This isn't about job creation; this is about profit for companies. This isn't about our young people; this is about profit for companies. This is about: who were the companies that got the ear of the people making the decisions, and what were those deals, what were the agreements that were made? I'm left questioning: how is it that we got to this place where it's okay to reduce the wages of young people? I don't think it's acceptable to say that you are creating jobs on the backs of young people. It's pretty sad, actually.

Those same young people that are going to work so hard in the summer, work hard during the year to save for their education, now they're either going to have to work harder, whether that's during the year, work more hours, or they're going to have to take out bigger student loans. At the end of the day, who is benefiting? Is it the lending institutions? Is it these large organizations that are going to hire younger people so they can pay them less? Really, who is winning here? It's not our youth. Our youth are the future. This is our most valued, treasured – this is everything that we stand for. Our youth are the future, and for us to set them up with this kind of start is just really sad to me.

Another thing I wanted to touch on quickly was about things like holiday pay. If I understand this correctly, if let's say Christmas falls on a day that you normally don't work, you don't qualify for that. Let me just paint a little picture for you in one particular sector. People that support folks with disabilities tend to work really odd hours.

They don't typically do, like, a 9 to 5, Monday to Friday. They will often do shift work. Often they will do 24-hour shifts. They'll do multiple days for a lot of different reasons. It provides continuity and support to people that need it most. It allows for a routine. It allows for people to feel safe. These are very skilled workers, by the way, and these are not people that are paid a lot of money, but they give a lot. They're away from their families for hours on end. Some people do sleep shifts, so they might be there all day and then spend the night and be there the next day. These are long shifts, they're away from their families, they sacrifice a lot, and suddenly we're introducing these rules that are going to take little perks and little benefits like, say, Christmas away from these workers.

I'm asking through you to the other members: are these things that you talked about? Have you had these discussions? Have you considered what the impact is on real people in this province that are not wealthy people and that work really hard? These little things like Christmas, a holiday maybe that wasn't really your normal workday anyway but you happened to get it off: it is a benefit, but it's a benefit for people that need it. My question really is: have you given this thought? Is this what you want to lay your hat on? To say that this is how we're open for business, this is how we're going to promote more jobs, by cutting the wages of youth and taking away these small benefits: who is this benefiting? Who's profiting from this? Who is making money from this? Really, who is profiting? It's not our young people.

Ask yourself: is this who you want to be? Is this the government that you want to be? Is this what you want to be known for, to reduce the wages of young people so that you can say – what, exactly, I'm not sure – that you supported large business so they could make more profit? It's not enough to give them a massive corporate tax break; now we're going to reduce wages of young people.

Again, I'm sure you've heard this all. It's difficult sometimes to sit there and listen to this stuff again and again and again, but it's important for me and for the people that I represent, the young people and their families and the workers who don't make a lot of money, people with modest levels of human capital, like they're defined by the Premier, I guess.

I want to be on the record to say that I'm opposed to this, absolutely, one hundred per cent. I would not support this. I do not support this. I firmly believe that our young people who work as hard as people who might be a month older than them based on their birthday are worth as much as the people that are older than them, and they should be paid equally for their work. People who do equal work deserve to be paid equally. It's actually fairly simple. It shouldn't be about profit; it should be about individual people.

With that being said, given the hour I am going to move that we adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Jason Nixon: A point of clarification, Mr. Speaker. What's going on? We adjourned debate, correct?

The Acting Speaker: Debate is adjourned, yes.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I know it's new.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order. Ladies and gentlemen, please take into consideration the fact that this is my first time in the chair, so I am as much excited to learn about this process as, I'm sure, you all are who are new members.

Bill 1

An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Excuse me. Thank you, Mr. Chair. You look great in there. If you could just say that one more time. You said that we have an amendment under consideration now?

The Deputy Chair: We are currently on amendment A1. It's an amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Good. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this amendment in Committee of the Whole. Just to remind everybody what the amendment is:

- (1) On the coming into force of section 1, the Minister of Environment and Parks [will consult] with the public, industry and academic and scientific experts regarding the development of a comprehensive action plan . . . to address climate change.
- (2) Consultations under subsection (1) must be completed within 9 months . . .
- (3) The Minister [must] make public a report summarizing [these] consultations . . . within 120 days.

Certainly, I am in complete agreement with this amendment. Certainly, when you repeal something – you know, nature does not love a vacuum. By repealing the carbon levy and the climate action plan or parts of it, you need to make sure that you build something to give people the assurance that we are indeed moving forward in a positive way to address carbon emissions and to address all of the innovation and business opportunities that have already been created by the climate action plan that has been here in place for a number of years in Alberta.

During that time, Mr. Chair, we've created something of an industry phenomenon – right? – in terms of renewable energy. People are moving here from other jurisdictions because of the opportunities around wind and solar and geothermal energy, around creating energy efficiencies for existing structures, both public and private, and so forth. With just simply this act to repeal the carbon tax, you know, the job isn't done. You are making one action which, I would suggest, is not in the best interests of good governance, but you need to at least make sure you're compensating by having a plan and reassuring the public – industry and academic and scientific and the general public – that we're still moving ahead in a positive way, in keeping with the rest of the world, to reduce carbon emissions, to help to diversify the economy, and to help ensure that Alberta remains an energy leader throughout these times, because we are. We have technology, we have innovation, we have expertise, we have companies that are willing to make those innovations and to be nimble, and we need to provide reassurance from the very highest level, from this Chamber, that we are going to carry on and support those people every step of the way.

This amendment is reasonable, and I encourage all members to support it.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

9:40

Member Irwin: Thank you. Again, I'll speak a little bit more to this amendment as well. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-North West for setting the tone there. The part that I want to touch on here is just the piece around consultation, particularly with the public and industry and academic and scientific experts. We know that there is a huge scientific and academic community here in Alberta that are certainly concerned about the repealing of the carbon tax, and we know the importance of consultation. I mean, our government took that very seriously. I think this is an important step to ensure that, you know, in the absence of evidence-based decision-making, we are able to at least try to move forward in a somewhat science-based approach.

I know that one of the conversations earlier today was just around the loss of solar jobs. I talked a fair bit on the record yesterday about solar energy and my own interest in renewables, and I think consulting with industry on this piece will be critical, because they are asking. They're starting to ask questions already. What's going to happen to all of our solar projects? Whether it be the solar projects in Maskwacis – I talked about how almost every building in the Louis Bull Tribe is being retrofitted with solar panels. We're talking not only about jobs. We're also talking about community development and bringing communities together.

I think I want to just really urge the members opposite to consider this amendment so that, again, we can move forward by saying that we're grounded in science and in evidence.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who would like to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I really appreciate the opportunity to continue to speak and look for constructive criticism of Bill 1 and to help make it better for Albertans. In that spirit, I do have an amendment that I would like to bring forward that I would ask if each of you would consider.

The Deputy Chair: We are going to take a quick pause while the amendment is being distributed.

Hon. members, this amendment will be referred to as amendment A2.

I invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West to speak if he has any comments.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment is fairly straightforward, as you can see. It talks about section 2(5)(b), and then it strikes out "does not apply" and substitutes "applies." This is in reference to the revenues that have been collected with the carbon levy in various forms. The original plan for the act, Bill 1, was to take outstanding revenues and put them back into general revenues. What this amendment does is that it compels the funds that were collected with the intention of applying them to, you know, climate leadership projects and to make sure that it stays that way.

I've heard the government talking about keeping Energy Efficiency Alberta at least in some form going, for example. But it won't go at all, Mr. Chair, if it doesn't have any oxygen – right? – if it is devoid of funds. Then again, same with a lot of these solar projects and so forth and energy efficiency projects that are happening with public buildings, schools and so forth. I think it's reasonable and logical and ethical to take the monies that were collected, the remnants of the last bit of money that was collected through climate leadership and the carbon levy, and make sure that it's applied to these projects so that you have some symmetry from what the money was collected for and understanding and to make sure we are meeting the responsibilities that are outstanding around, let's say, Energy Efficiency Alberta or, you know, doing upgrades to make buildings more energy efficient and so forth.

Again, not to belabour this point, but I remember hearing unfair criticism of the carbon levy as somehow, you know, redirecting money inappropriately, right? But here we are looking at a government that's reducing taxes for the very wealthiest brackets of our society, reducing corporate taxes for even companies that are quite profitable – right? – which is a questionable economic choice. I've heard from so many quarters that by doing so you are making a distortion in the economy, and it has more negative effects than positive. Anyway, you are reducing those taxes on profitable corporations and high brackets of personal income tax, and at least some of that money – because money isn't money in the general revenues – would be coming from the carbon levy and the climate leadership program.

You know, one of the, I think, most compelling and fair parts of the climate leadership plan is the rebates that low-income people would receive from the carbon levy. So if they are paying in, they would be getting a cheque on the other side coming out. Well, again, that disappears through the exhaustion of funds, but you're taking the money that was intended for that and instead putting it in general revenues, and part of that money will go to pay for those tax cuts for the highest brackets of our society, right? I don't think that that is logical, I don't think it's fair, and it sort of smacks of a degree of hypocrisy as well.

I managed to fix it with this amendment, and, you know, everybody is going to like it. [interjection] Hopefully, I explained it in the clearest way possible, that the monies that were collected for the carbon levy – and I know that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods got it a hundred per cent – will be taken to put back and to spend on the initiatives for which it was intended.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I really appreciate that. I'm really pleased to be able to rise to speak to the amendment that my colleague the Member for Edmonton-North West has brought forward to Bill 1. In fact, this is my first opportunity to speak to Bill 1 in this Chamber. So I'm really pleased to be able to speak up and share some of my thoughts about this particular piece of legislation because this piece of legislation is really important: important for this Chamber, important for our province, important for my constituents in Mill Woods.

Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, is something that is very worthy of a lot of discussion and debate, and this amendment that my hon. colleague has brought forward I think does something really important because – and many times in my time in this Chamber I have heard the members opposite, when they were in opposition, refer to the money raised through the climate leadership plan, through the carbon tax as being a slush fund, as being a tax grab purely for government gain, over and over, in fact. Right now what we are seeing through this amendment is a rectifying of something that I think is really important, because without this amendment the money raised by the carbon tax would become a slush fund and would actually go into general revenue rather than being able to use it for important programs and services that helped reduce carbon emissions in our province.

Now, one of the things that I found very interesting is that during this transition in the lead-up to Bill 1 there hasn't been a lot of clarity for consumers. I think in part that's understandable because of the transition – new government, new priorities, Bill 1 is being introduced – but it's left a lot of Albertans in the lurch. I know I saw one particular story of a family who had been told that their application for solar panels was in the queue to be processed. They heard from their contractor, the solar panel installers that they had worked with, that they've been through this many, many times and they were good to go. They did the installation, and now that approval has never come. That family is waiting at about the six-week mark because they submitted for approval before the election, but the timing – Energy Efficiency Alberta chose to and has not approved that family's rebate, essentially.

By not moving these monies into general revenue, perhaps we can make sure that Alberta families are not out of pocket for thousands of dollars for doing things like installing solar panels on their roofs to make a real change in the amount of energy generated through the solar panels for their own home, because these are, of course, investments, investments in our province, because of all the jobs that were created. Today in question period we heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asking about all of the solar installation jobs, the new companies, the businesses that have started here in the province – we know there are a huge number of them – and there's a lot of uncertainty now because they're not sure what is going to happen, never mind in the long-term future but even just for work that's already been done.

This amendment gives us the opportunity of making sure that the monies collected under that carbon tax are used for the purposes that they were designed for, to continue to reduce emissions, because we were on track to cut more than 50 megatonnes of emissions over the next 10 years, the same as taking 10.6 million cars off the road, or nearly half the passenger vehicles in all of Canada. That's like eliminating the emissions of Metro Vancouver three times over.

We know that the jobs like those solar installers had are part of more than 7,300 jobs that were created in just the first two years. Making sure that we consider all the implications of Bill 1, as is appropriate in this place, is really important because climate change is an urgent issue for our society and our economy, and we know that Albertans want a very real plan to address it. Even with the change in government and changing priorities, being able to have a solution, being able to have a plan going forward is incredibly important.

I do think it's important to note that the implementation of a carbon tax was fundamentally a Conservative idea. Preston Manning has advocated for carbon taxes. It's widely known as the most efficient, most transparent, and most effective way to address changing climate. This was a market solution to a conquerable problem of climate change. Now we're just kicking that can down the road, without another solution ready to go. Once the impacts get stronger, it will require more government spending and intervention to be able to solve, so we're really stealing from our future at this point.

But I have spoken to the reasons why I think this amendment is important, making sure that the funds do not become a slush fund, which is what the members opposite spoke strongly against in the 29th Legislature, and that is why it has my support. I hope all members will support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wishing to speak on amendment A2? I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is going to speak.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to the notice of amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-North West, to talk about what the revenue would be supporting. I'd just like to talk a little bit about some of the things that we had set up to support out of the carbon levy.

Transit. In Edmonton-Castle Downs constituents have a difficult time accessing public transit, so what we did is we invested $3 billion over 10 years for light rail transit in both Calgary and Edmonton from the CLP, including $1.53 billion for Calgary's green line and $1.47 billion to support Edmonton Transit, including the west valley line. This budget also included $967 million over GreenTRIP and other community transit investments.

We talked about the rebates: $700 million rebated to a majority – that's two-thirds – of Albertans to make their lives more affordable and to offset the carbon levy costs. That would be gone.

We looked at upgrading things such as schools, universities, hospitals, and colleges, all very important. Forty million dollars has been invested in schools, universities, colleges, and hospitals for projects that cut emissions and save operating costs such as the University of Alberta district heating project, which allows the university to own and operate its own thermal energy, cutting 60,000 tonnes of emissions.

10:00

We talked about Energy Efficiency Alberta. Programs launched since 2017 have yielded $510 million in energy savings, $710 million in economic growth, 4.2 million tonnes of greenhouse gas emissions reductions – that's the same as taking about 722,000 vehicles off the road for a year – $13.5 million in energy efficiency products installed, and 12 million cubic metres of water savings. For every dollar invested into the EEA programs, $3.30 was returned to Albertans' pockets. That's a big deal, Mr. Chair.

I would ask that all members in this House support this amendment, and at this time I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Chair, I will move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock, please.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. That is carried and so ordered.

I see the hon. Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members for their hard work this evening. Good ground has been made. As such, I will move that we adjourn the House until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:04 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. O Lord and giver of good, we thank You for the opportunities that we have before us today. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 1

An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

The Deputy Chair: Currently we are dealing with amendment A2. Are there any comments or questions with regard to this? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to of course offer my comments on this amendment going forward, but first of all, I would like to invite all of my colleagues here in the Legislature, you know, if you're not paying attention to the debate here this morning, to take a walk out onto the balcony here outside the Chamber and breathe deeply. Tell me how pleasant that feels to inhale all of that smoke into your lungs, and then imagine that this becomes normal, every year, forever. Not only will it become the new normal for Alberta at this time of year, but we will have air quality like this from the end of February until the beginning of December if climate models are correct, and of course we know that they probably won't be correct because the history of climate models indicates that they always underestimate the impacts of climate change.

Of course, if some of you are a little bit tired this morning because it was really hot last night and you couldn't sleep in the heat, imagine that we are going to have at least two months every year here in Edmonton of days like that, more in Calgary and southern Alberta. So I hope that the members opposite really get used to, you know, sleeping at night at 31 degrees Celsius.

My heart goes out to the people of Wabasca and Bigstone, who had to evacuate their homes last night, and I wish them a speedy return. But like I've said many times in debate on this bill, Mr. Chair, it's not enough to just offer our thoughts and prayers to the people who are affected by climate change induced wildfires; it's incumbent upon us to actually take action to prevent these things from happening.

I hope, you know, the members who represent those areas – I'm thinking of the Member for Peace River, the Member for Lesser Slave Lake, the members from Fort McMurray – are willing to go back to their constituencies this weekend and look their constituents in the eye and say: "We had the opportunity to develop a meaningful plan of action to tackle climate change, to tackle the climate crisis, and we didn't take it. I'm sorry, people of those constituencies, but you'd better be on standing evacuation notice from now until forever because we refuse to take action on climate change."

Now, to get to the crux of this amendment, Mr. Chair, what this amendment proposes – and I'm sure that my colleague from Edmonton-North West got into this in great detail last night – is that the money that was already collected as part of the carbon levy should be spent on climate change initiatives.

Now, of course, we admit that the carbon tax is not an incredibly popular piece of policy. In fact, in my own constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar I heard some complaints as well about the carbon tax, but what they didn't complain about were the programs that the carbon tax revenue funded. Certainly, people were irritated at having to pay the carbon tax but were not irritated when Energy Efficiency Alberta showed up to replace their light bulbs and shower heads and thermostats. They certainly weren't irritated when they got generous rebates on energy-efficient appliances. They were quite happy when their homes were audited for energy efficiency and they were offered rebates to upgrade the insulations in their attics, walls, and basements. Mr. Chair, of course, in my constituency the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar are eagerly awaiting the completion of the construction of the southeast LRT line, money that comes from the carbon levy funds.

Of course, it's not just my constituency. I mean, Edmonton-Gold Bar is a pretty special place, but it's not unique in that all Albertans have been wildly in favour of all of these climate change initiatives. That's why they've been oversubscribed as soon as they've been rolled out.

We think that it's only fair that if the people of Alberta have been asked to pay the carbon tax, they actually get what they paid for and that we keep the money that was collected from the carbon tax to be used for the purposes it was intended. At least let those programs run their course. Of course, we know that the Member for Calgary-Acadia is a fan of letting things run out in due course. We think that the whole government should let the climate change programs that we initiated run their due course as well, with the remaining money that is left in the carbon tax fund.

Mr. Chair, I hope that all of my colleagues see fit to actually uphold the promise that they made to the people of Alberta that the carbon tax money would be spent on climate change initiatives and vote in favour of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

It looks like I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View looking to speak to amendment A2.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I think it's worth while taking a moment to note this amendment. What the change is attempting to do is to keep in place the brackets around the way in which funds coming in can be used. Those were put in place originally to ensure that while we were working on the demand side with respect to pollution, we were also ensuring that we were assisting individuals, those individuals who were low income and were not able to afford the transition as easily, that we were providing programs, that we were providing adaptation programs for folks who might have a harder time adapting.

As I think has been mentioned in this House, many First Nations unfortunately still run on diesel fuel for power generation, which is a very carbon-intensive manner of generating power. Some folks, simply due to their circumstances, require a little bit more in order to adapt. There are some schools, some in my riding, that are quite old and might need additional help in order to adapt.

The reason for those rules around how the funds could be spent is to ensure that Albertans could have confidence, confidence that the plan was, in fact, about ensuring that as we moved forward, we were adapting to a lower carbon future, not immediately but at some point in the future. You know, as we over here and, I'm sure, the members over there are rapidly discovering, large systems don't turn quickly or easily. Knowing what the future holds, I think it's incumbent upon us to begin to adapt as soon as we can. I think this amendment is designed to help to ensure that what funds are coming in – we know that as soon as Alberta's plan is repealed, we'll move to the plan from Ottawa. This would ensure that what money comes in still goes to those good works and goes to moving this province forward.

I think this is an excellent amendment. I'm certainly in favour of moving forward with it. I think, again, you know, as we stand in this place, future generations are watching us and will be looking to us to say: when you had the opportunity, what did you do? I think this is brought forward in a spirit of ensuring that even though we are going in the direction we're going, even though we're getting rid of the Alberta plan, even though we're moving to the federal plan, we're doing our best to ensure that we're still helping the people of Alberta as much as we can, and we're still doing our part to make progress.

With that, I will close.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday looking to speak.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't want to belabour this point too much. I just want to make sure that my name and voice are on the record in support of this amendment. I remember, not that long ago, when the members of the government were on this side, and they were saying: how are you going to promise us that this funding is going to go where it's supposed to go? Here we are today, and they're doing exactly what they argued that we shouldn't do. I think that they should consider supporting this amendment. I think that the money that has been funding these programs, money from our taxpayers, the people of this province, should go towards what they were promised it would go towards.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Like my fellow colleague from Edmonton-West Henday, I'd just like to also put my name and my voice on the record in support of this amendment, primarily because when I was speaking to the constituents in my riding of Edmonton-Whitemud, the issue that they cared about most when we were talking about the economy – we on this side also care very much about the economy – was diversification, because they wanted to see our province be able to move forward in a way that isn't completely reliant on one source, one industry, because we've become so vulnerable to its fluctuations.

Diversification was a big issue that we talked about, and they very much appreciated that at least one of the uses of the carbon levy, other than rebates, was to actually invest in new energy sources and new industries that would actually diversify our economy. Again I go back to the comments from my colleagues about how important it is that we use the money that was collected under the carbon tax to continue to invest in diversification and in new energy sources because we do need to look at the future and look at the long term for this province's economy and stop relying solely on one industry that's going to continue to be subject to international influences and things that are out of our control. We should take control of our destiny and our economic future, and that was part of the benefits of the climate leadership plan, the diversification of and the use of the carbon tax resources.

I stand in support of this amendment and encourage everybody to consider that we should continue to invest those in diversification of our economy, as intended. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview rising to speak.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. You know, I join my colleagues in support of this amendment. I mean, yesterday when I spoke, I talked extensively about many projects in my constituency that benefited from the energy efficiency monies. I think it'd be very tragic if these projects couldn't go ahead.

Actually, just yesterday I received a letter from one of my constituents in support of this, and I wanted to share that with the House. It says:

I support strong energy efficiency programs in Alberta. Your support to keep energy efficiency a priority in our province is an opportunity for Albertans to save money off every utility bill and find jobs in emerging sectors. All while reducing our province's emissions . . .

. . . Alberta has an energy efficiency program that has returned $3 to Albertans for every $1 invested. Continuing an energy efficiency program is an investment into our communities, businesses and province that makes sense.

More than 3,600 jobs have been created in the energy efficiency sector since 2017.

Of course, that was under our government's mandate, the NDP government.

Across the country, it is expected that this sector will continue to grow by 8.3%. Let's keep this momentum by supporting energy efficiency in Alberta.

Energy efficiency saves me money at home. And more significantly, retrofits can reduce energy bills upwards of 50% for Alberta's businesses and communities.

I want Alberta to have an innovative and strong energy efficiency program. Keep energy efficiency a priority for Alberta.

Sincerely,
raine turner

I received that yesterday from Raine Turner. They're a constituent of mine. I just am, really, here to represent my constituents. I've heard loud and clearly from them that it's very important for this to go ahead. So, again, I stand in support of the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, rise on behalf of constituents who are complaining loud and clearly to me that the monies generated by the carbon levy are not going to be used to benefit them and programs that they wish to apply for to save money and reinsulate their homes or upgrade their windows or change their furnace. Many programs existed under this carbon levy fund to benefit constituents, like those who are complaining to me that now this shell game is going to be moving that money into general revenue and therefore their benefits will be lost. My constituents are complaining loud and clear to me that this money should be staying in the fund and be used for the purposes for which it was raised.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm just rising briefly to urge the Assembly to accept this motion. I can tell you that at the lengthy debates when we introduced our climate leadership plan, including the price on carbon, the opposition, the then Wildrose opposition and the PC opposition, were greatly concerned that revenues from the price on carbon would go into general revenues. In fact, the former Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat talked about a slush fund over and over again despite the fact that we clarified that every dollar was getting reinvested back into the economy.

Now what we're seeing in this bill is that leftovers from the price on carbon are actually going into general revenues. They are actually going into a slush fund that the government can decide to use for whatever it wants as opposed to retrofits or investing in renewables or programs to support renewables. So I find it, you know, pretty interesting that now the shoe is on the other foot: "Well, no, that's not a slush fund. That's okay." But three years ago it wasn't when they were sitting on this side. Funny how quickly things change when a party gets into government.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will take my seat and urge all members to vote in favour of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members looking to speak to amendment A2?

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar standing.

9:20

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Of course, it's very interesting, as my colleague and friend from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview said, how quickly the members of the UCP caucus have gone from opposing a slush fund to voting in favour of it. Of course, my constituents will be very disappointed to learn that the carbon tax dollars that they begrudgingly paid are now going to fund corporate tax giveaways. So rather than getting solar panels, light bulbs, energy-efficient appliances, insulation, and an LRT, they're going to get CEO bonuses and stock buybacks and see absolutely no benefit from the carbon tax levy that they paid into.

That's fine. You know, Mr. Chair, I think what we've seen already in – what day is this? – day 6 of the Legislature is an incredible rush to disappoint the people of Alberta. Already, on day 6, the people of Alberta have been significantly let down by the members across the way. I can only expect that it will get worse from here.

However, saying that, I know that many of my colleagues here in this House believe in redemption, so I come forward with an amendment in the spirit of redemption, Mr. Chair, that the hon. members should feel free to take. I would like to table another amendment to this bill, and I have the appropriate number of copies.

The Deputy Chair: I'm just going to take a minute here to distribute the amendment. This amendment going forward will be A3.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you have comments with regard to your amendment A3?

Mr. Schmidt: Amendment A3? It's in order? All right. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

I move an amendment that Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, be amended as follows. Section 1 is amended by striking out "immediately at the beginning of the day on May 30, 2019" and substituting "immediately at the beginning of the day on which Alberta becomes a listed province as defined in section 3 of the Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act (Canada)." Section 2(3) is amended (a) by striking out "immediately at the beginning of the day on May 30, 2019" and substituting "immediately at the beginning of the day on which Alberta becomes a listed province as defined in section 3 of the Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act (Canada)", and (b) by striking out "on or before June 29, 2019" and substituting "on or before the date prescribed by the Minister." Section 3(2) is struck out and the following is substituted:

(2) Section 35.2 is repealed and the following is substituted:

Application of Division

35.2(1) This Division applies to payments deemed under section 35.3(3) to have been paid in a specified month in 2017 and subsequent years up to and including the year in which Alberta becomes a listed province as defined in section 3 of the Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act (Canada).

(2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations specifying months in which no payment shall be deemed under section 35.3(3) to have been paid, provided that those months occur following the month in which Alberta becomes a listed province as defined in section 3 of the Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act (Canada).

Section 6(1) is amended by striking out "on May 30, 2019" and substituting "on the day on which Alberta becomes a listed province as defined in section 3 of the Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act (Canada)."

Now, Mr. Chair, what this bill does is that it reduces the red tape that this government is subjecting everybody who has to pay the federal carbon tax to. It was with – how should I describe it? – perverse delight, I guess, that I read the contents of Bill 4, the so-called Red Tape Reduction Act, introduced yesterday, and of course if anybody took the time to read the contents of the act, all it did was generate more red tape for the government bureaucracy, which is interesting.

You know, we have a government that is using quite Orwellian language in its legislation and its press releases. It says that it's repealing the carbon tax; it's actually implementing the federal carbon tax. It says that it's opening Alberta for business; it's actually picking workers' pockets. It says that it's creating jobs by offering corporate tax cuts, and when asked, the minister can't actually say how many jobs it's going to create or when. Then we have a Red Tape Reduction Act that actually increases the amount of red tape that the government bureaucracy has to deal with. That's why I say that, you know, the people of Alberta are being vastly disappointed by the members opposite with the first four pieces of legislation that the members opposite have brought forward.

Now, Mr. Chair, what this amendment does is that it actually reduces red tape. We all know that the federal carbon tax is going to be imposed. That's the choice that the members opposite have made for the people of Alberta. We strongly disagree with that choice, but they seem intent on ramming the federal carbon tax down the throats of the people of Alberta. So all we're trying to do with this amendment is to make that transition easier, so rather than, you know, Albertans having to shift their systems twice, they only have to shift their systems once. I think it makes sense.

Everybody in this Chamber, at least, says that they want the economy to operate smoothly, that they want businesses to be able to conduct their work free from red tape and overregulation, so this just eases that transition that the government is choosing to force on our businesses here in this province, makes it easier, reduces the red tape. I challenge the members opposite: if they're genuinely interested, if they're genuinely committed to reducing red tape, then vote in favour of this amendment and actually take a significant measure to reduce the red tape that they say they want to lessen on the economy of Alberta.

I look forward to all of my colleagues voting in favour of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members looking to speak to amendment A3?

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Moving back to Bill 1, are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 1?

Seeing no one, are you ready for the question on Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax?

[The clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

9:30

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Chair, I move that we rise and report the bill.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed, say no. So ordered. Carried.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 1 An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and, through you, to colleagues for this opportunity to speak to third reading of An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax. Our party has been working since the day of its creation for this moment, this opportunity to remove this huge dead-weight cost that punishes hard-working people for living ordinary lives in this province.

But let me begin by tracing the history of this damaging tax imposed by the previous NDP government. First of all, Mr. Speaker, we can cast our minds back to the 2015 general election, in which the NDP published its platform, that did not utter a single word or even hint at a carbon tax or whatever euphemism they choose to use: a carbon price, a carbon levy. There was no allusion to it at all. In fact, in the annex of the NDP platform they delineated 12 tax policy changes, not a single one referring to the carbon tax. Without imputing any motive to members of the Assembly, of course, this was a huge act of political deception foisted on Alberta voters by a party that knew perfectly well its intention to impose a carbon tax but hid that intention from voters. Yet within weeks of becoming government, they appointed a commission which ultimately gave the NDP the recommendation it was looking for to impose a carbon tax on Albertans without democratic consent.

It is no wonder that since that day four years ago over two-thirds of Albertans, in every single public opinion poll taken on the issue, have demonstrated consistent opposition to the tax on living their normal lives imposed by the NDP by the carbon tax.

Mr. Speaker, at least what we are doing today is restoring a sense of respect for democracy in this province. Unlike the NDP, which foisted a carbon tax on Albertans without having been transparent with them in the last election, this was one of our central commitments. That is why it is Bill 1. This is not only part of our job-creation strategy to renew Alberta's economy; this is also, in part, a renewal of the spirit of democracy in Alberta politics here today.

Let me point out that the NDP callously imposed this tax on people for the crime of heating their homes and filling up their gas tanks to go to work in the midst of the worst economic downturn in this province since the Great Depression of the 1930s. Mr. Speaker, when people are losing their jobs, their businesses, their homes, when their incomes are declining, when in desperation many people left the province, how callous do you have to be to make that bad situation of economic adversity even worse?

You know, one of the things I find, frankly, so distasteful is the constant tendency of the NDP and their ideological fellow-travellers to refer to themselves as "progressives." Mr. Speaker, what is progressive about telling a widow on a fixed income that she has to pay more to heat her home? What is compassionate about the Leader of the Opposition, the then Premier, saying that if you don't like it, then perhaps you should take the bus or walk to work? What understanding is there in that comment of the challenges that ordinary people face? The NDP in its callousness is not understanding that for the vast majority of Albertans walking to work is not an option, that there is in many cases if not most really no bus to take.

What about the working people, that the NDP ridiculously claims historically to represent, the working people who need to take their pickup to work with their tools and their equipment? There's no bus that they can take. There's no change of life they can make in this real world to avoid paying a carbon tax. So all it does is punish those people for doing what they ought to do, which is to work hard and take care of their families, punishing moms and dads for driving their kids to hockey practice, punishing seniors for heating their homes. What this government said is that it would become more expensive to do what you've got to do simply to survive in this cold northern economy. Callous and regressive, not progressive, Mr. Speaker.

You know, let me, then, speak to the basic purported concept of so-called carbon pricing. Now, theoretically, for example, I'm sure that Professor Leach at the University of Alberta, who in part designed this carbon tax, which will be repealed today or very shortly, and others would say, and I'll try to be objective and fair in representing their general view, that a carbon tax is more efficient than regulation and that carbon taxes can be an efficient form of environmental policy to reduce CO<sub>2</sub> emissions if they are revenue neutral – that is to say, if they displace other taxes, if other taxes are reduced proportionate to the carbon tax increase – secondly, if they displace other regulations so that it's a substitute for regulations in the theoretical carbon tax model; thirdly, if they are progressive with very generous rebates; and fourthly, if they are of general application globally or at least amongst competing economies.

Let me walk through each of those four principles. Mr. Speaker, none of them apply to the NDP carbon tax. I say to those who are theoretical supporters of some conceptual, perfect, utopian carbon tax that that is not what we are debating in this House today. That is not what the NDP imposed on us four years ago. To the contrary, it was 100 per cent new revenue. It was, frankly, nothing but a tax grab, a political tax grab. There was not one cent in offsetting tax reductions. To the contrary. In the midst of an historic recession, while tens of thousands of people were losing their jobs, what did the NDP do? They raised taxes on everything, not just on heating homes and filling up gas tanks but also on job creators and on incomes and on property, on the provincial portion of property taxes, and they conspired with their ally, Mr. Trudeau, to raise payroll taxes on Albertans, making it even more expensive for job creators to hire people.

The theory is that you're supposed to reduce taxes to offset the revenue gain from a carbon tax. This socialist crowd did exactly the opposite, Mr. Speaker. They raised taxes while imposing the carbon tax cumulatively, all of this increasing the tax burden on the productive sector of our economy in a way that deepened and prolonged the longest recession since the Great Depression. On principle 1 of the carbon tax, this was a complete failure.

Principle 2, replacing offsetting regulations. Well, Mr. Speaker, did the government reduce a single regulation to effectively replace, quote, costly regs with a carbon tax? No. To the contrary. They increased regs week after week, month after month, specifically regs ostensibly to deal with greenhouse gas emissions. They supported similar new regulatory burdens imposed by their allies in the federal Liberal government. All they did was to add to the regulatory dead-weight burden on the Alberta economy with a tax that is notionally supposed to replace the regulatory burden. So on principle 2 of an ideal carbon tax, what we are debating today, the NDP's tax, was a complete failure.

Thirdly, these taxes are supposed to be notionally progressive, and the NDP will talk ad nauseam about rebates, but, Mr. Speaker, only 40 per cent of the revenues generated from the carbon tax went back in rebates, and those rebates only went to a select number of individuals in about 60 per cent of Alberta households. Now, while we oppose the federal carbon tax, by contrast, 90 per cent of the revenues generated by the federal carbon tax go back in rebates to 100 per cent of households and, based on today's announcement, to small businesses as well. There was no rebate, by the way, for the small businesses impacted by the NDP carbon tax, who will as a result of this bill save an estimated $4,500 per year on average. There was no rebate for the nonprofits and charities who had to struggle to pay the carbon tax bill, no rebates for the school boards that had to pay more simply to run their school buses.

Mr. Speaker, I'll give you a couple of concrete examples of that kind of regressivity. I visited the West Country seniors' centre in my friend the hon. Government House Leader's constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. It's a wonderful spot, Mr. Speaker. I recommend that members go and visit it to see, really, the volunteer spirit in Alberta generally, particularly rural Alberta. This is a wonderful little spot, run one hundred per cent by volunteer labour, where the community gathers to keep seniors active. They go and play cards and shuffleboard, and they have exercise activities. I think we were there for a darts tournament. It's just a wonderful spot.

Now, the West Country seniors' centre, Mr. Speaker – I met with the executive board. They operate that place – get this – on a budget of $18,000 for the entire year. For the entire year. Now, they bring in a few thousand dollars in offsetting revenues from hall rentals, but, you know, otherwise they're paying for it with a $20 membership fee and the odd little donation here and there.

The NDP comes along, slaps on the carbon tax that they hid from voters in the last election, and suddenly heating costs went up, and then they went up again. They were having to pay I think it was upwards of $2,000 in carbon tax to heat Sundre's seniors' centre. They called the Premier's office to say: "Is there any help for us to cover the burden which you've imposed? We may have to close the place down." I mean, my hon. colleague can verify that they looked at possibly having to close the seniors' centre down. They called the Premier's office, the now Leader of the Opposition, and the staff there said: we suggest you raise your membership fees. Seniors, Mr. Speaker, on fixed incomes being told that they had to pay more so that the NDP could scoop more revenue from them. Is that progressive? Is that compassionate?

What about the Calgary board of education? My colleague from Chestermere-Strathmore could correct me, but I believe that they were paying over a $1 million a year to pay carbon tax to operate their fleet of school buses, and they had to cut routes and reduce access to school busing for students. If I'm not mistaken, a lot of that happened in my colleague the Minister of Community and Social Services' constituency, and many parents are upset to this day as a result of the loss of bus service, and many of those are new Canadian families, and some of them are low-income new Canadian families, whose kids now struggle to get to alternative schools in part because of this carbon tax. How is that progressive, Mr. Speaker, to tell low-income new Canadian families, "Sorry; you can't get your kid to an alternative program so they can get a great start in life because we need to scoop that revenue because we believe in punishing people," for what is nothing more than empty virtue signalling? I'll get to that in a moment.

Oh, by the way, here's the whopper on progressivity. The NDP claimed that there would be these generous rebates, Mr. Speaker, but then in last year's budget the then Finance minister revealed, not transparently in the documents but only under questioning from the media – he was forced to tell the truth and to admit that as the carbon tax went up and up and up, there would be no increase in the so-called low-income rebates. Let me just paint the picture here. They started their carbon tax at 20 bucks a tonne, and then they raised it by 50 per cent the next year to $30 a tonne, and then their plan – and their entire fiscal plan was predicated on this – was to raise that to the next increment, $40 and then $50 a tonne.

Of course, they weren't going to stop there because as the then environment minister and the Premier both admitted, they would continue to, quote, increase the stringency of the climate leadership levy in co-ordination with the federal government. Now, Mr. Speaker, one rule of thumb I have in politics is that if you have to use an entire string of euphemisms to disguise what you're actually doing, it's probably because it's not good for Albertans.

Increase the stringency of the climate leadership levy: let me translate that into plain English, Mr. Speaker. That meant increasing the tax on Albertans. That was their plan, to go from $20 to $30 – they got us there – then to go to $50, and then to go higher and higher and higher. In fact, they wanted to tie themselves to their allies the Trudeau Liberals, whose environment ministry has admitted through documents obtained through access to information that they intend ultimately to raise the carbon tax to $300 a tonne.

That really shouldn't be a surprise, Mr. Speaker, because all of the hard-core carbon tax advocates admit that for it to have a sufficient impact on people's behaviour – let me translate that. For it to force people to turn the heat down enough in the winter and to give up driving to work, for it to force people to do that sufficiently, to significantly reduce CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, it requires a price – and I'm now paraphrasing Professor Leach, the principal author of this tax – of at least $200 a tonne. So that's where they're headed.

In fact, our colleagues opposite frequently cite the UN international panel on climate change, which published a paper last year, Mr. Speaker, which called for a carbon tax of between $500 a tonne and $5,000 a tonne. Five thousand dollars a tonne. As I've always said, this is all about the frog in the pot. It's always been an incremental tax grab. They benignly start at $20, and for most people it probably wasn't a huge irritant. Then they'd raise to $30. Then it was going to go to $50. Then the federal government says to $90, then eventually to $300, and then according to the UN experts it should go up to $5,000, making it effectively impossible to live normal lives in this northern, cold climate. That is where they were headed.

Mr. Speaker, here's the point. As the price was to go up from $30 to $50 and beyond $50, no increase in the rebates. Progressivity: what did this mean? This means that the poorest Albertans – the people living on AISH with no earned income, for example, people living on social assistance, seniors living on GIS – would have zero relief from the government as they had to pay more for the crime of heating their homes and nothing for the embedded increase in the cost of buying groceries. You know what the carbon tax does? It makes the cost of transporting things more expensive. When you go to the grocery store, everything has been transported, a lot of it from great distances, so the price of everything goes up as a result.

Let's be clear. The NDP, who call themselves progressives, if they vote against this bill, Mr. Speaker, what they are telling low-income Albertans is that they want to return to the NDP plan of taking money out of the scarce budgets of people on the very lowest levels of income, and I think that is shameful and one of the reasons that we need to pass the carbon tax repeal act.

On the fourth principle, then, Mr. Speaker, of the conceptual idea of a carbon tax. It has to be effective. It must be of general application. What does that mean? Well, what it means is that the challenge of reducing greenhouse gas emissions, which I acknowledge is important, is a global challenge. It is not a challenge that is limited to the borders of Alberta. In fact, we could shut down Alberta's economy tomorrow – heaven knows the NDP certainly tried – and that would reduce global greenhouse gas emissions by about two-tenths of a per cent, by .2 per cent. So 99.8 per cent of global emissions would continue and in most countries continue to rise. In fact, the incremental growth in CO<sub>2</sub> emissions from the People's Republic of China alone next year would completely consume the elimination of the Alberta economy in terms of its impact on global emissions. Why do I paint this kind of absurd example? It's in order for us to understand that it doesn't matter how much pain we impose on Albertans. If the rest of the world is not doing its part, it will not matter one whit.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have seen the flight of tens of billions of dollars of investment capital from Alberta, which is one of the reasons we've seen the loss of tens of thousands of jobs. Much of that capital has moved from Alberta's energy sector to the energy sector in other jurisdictions, very often to other jurisdictions with lower environmental standards, and in every instance that capital has moved from Alberta with the carbon tax to energy producers without a carbon tax. In fact, of the world's 10 largest oil and gas producers, Alberta is the only one to have imposed a carbon tax on itself.

The United States has doubled oil production in the past decade, much of it, I will add, under former President Obama's tenure, the same President who talked a lot about greenhouse gas emissions and blocked the Keystone XL pipeline. That President oversaw a doubling of oil production. No carbon tax.

Russia, the world's largest current contemporary producer of oil, with radically lower environmental standards than Canada: no carbon tax. Venezuela, with the largest recoverable reserves on earth, run by a brutal socialist dictatorship: no carbon tax. I guess they didn't get the memo from Socialist International that they're supposed to impose a carbon tax. Saudi Arabia, Mr. Speaker, I think has the second-largest reserves on earth: no carbon tax. Qatar, the Islamic Republic of Iran, et al.: no carbon taxes. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the industrialized world is going in the opposite direction for reasons I will explain in a few moments. The industrialized world is moving away, not towards but away, from carbon taxes.

Well, let's look at Canada, for example. In Ontario they had a facsimile of a carbon tax, called the cap and trade system, which was repudiated by Ontario voters in their election last year and has been repealed as a result. In New Brunswick they elected a government on the commitment to oppose the carbon tax. In Saskatchewan the government was re-elected on the commitment to oppose a carbon tax. In Manitoba the provincial government there had intended to co-operate with the federal government until they learned that it was Ottawa's way or the highway, that there was going to be no compromise, that Ottawa insisted on a $30 and then $50 and then $90 carbon tax. So Premier Pallister pulled out: no carbon tax.

Let's look down south, Washington State, which is arguably the most liberal, certainly one of the most liberal, states in the United States, has voted now not once but twice in the past three years in referenda to oppose the imposition of carbon taxes.

Our friends in Australia, which in many ways is perhaps the most similar liberal democracy to Canada: the sister party of the NDP there, the Labor Party of Australia – they are both members of Socialist International – seven years ago imposed a carbon tax. But then voters said, "This is ridiculous. This is hurting our livelihoods, our economy, and it's doing nothing for the environment," so voters elected a small "c" conservative, large "l" liberal government that immediately repealed the Aussie carbon tax. Now, here's a very interesting footnote. That Australian Conservative government was re-elected last week on its pledge to continue opposing job-killing policies of the Labor Party. In the same election the Labor Party, the sister party of the NDP in Australia, said it would never again impose a carbon tax on Australia. Even the sister parties in Socialist International are fleeing from the idea of carbon taxes because they know that it's all economic pain and no environmental gain, Mr. Speaker.

10:00

The only folks to not get the memo are in this House. They're the only ones, Mr. Speaker. In France they had intended to impose a carbon tax under a socialist government, another sister party in Socialist International. Guess what? The socialist government of former President François Hollande said at the last minute: no, we're not going to proceed with this.

The massive protests in the streets of France in the past several months threatening the stability of their government: do you know what the central issue motivating those protests is? It's the ridiculously high taxes on energy, that already exist in France, that are creating energy poverty for middle-class people. These are protests led, by and large, by middle-class, suburban people in France, who are saying: we can't afford to run our small businesses, to drive to work anymore. Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the industrialized world is moving in the opposite direction.

Here's the point. If at least peer jurisdictions with whom we compete economically are not imposing a tax like this on themselves, then what's the point? All we end up doing is creating what economists call carbon leakage, which really means capital leakage or jobs leakage. It means that if we make it more expensive to produce and consume energy and our competing jurisdictions don't, then that energy consumption will, according to the basic laws of economics, simply move to other jurisdictions, and that's exactly what has happened.

Just simply take a flight down to Houston and go to the west Permian and you will see the biggest boom in energy production in American history and in North American history. Drive across the Saskatchewan border to North Dakota and see what's happening in the Bakken reserve, and you will see this huge explosion.

When you look out and you see those drilling rigs and those service rigs, Mr. Speaker, if you look closely, you'll see that a lot of them are from Canada. A lot of them are from Alberta. This has been a massive shift of labour, of money, of equipment, and of jobs. If you don't believe me, just take a drive 20 minutes south of here. Go to Ritchie Bros. in Leduc, the constituency of my friend from Leduc-Beaumont, and you will see at any given time thousands of pieces of equipment being auctioned off. They have had to auction off billions of dollars worth of equipment in the past four years, much of it, if not most of it, being purchased by American companies at fire-sale prices. You know what? Very often that equipment initially belonged, before it went into receivership or bankruptcy, to small Alberta enterprises, gals and guys who rolled their life savings into starting that small oil field service company, that small drilling company.

I see the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. His community has been devastated by companies exactly like that, one after another after another, being bankrupted. I remember that I visited one in July of 2016. They had gone from 400 employees to 200 employees. I went back to visit them in July of 2018. The company didn't exist anymore. That's the story of Drayton Valley. That's the story of much of Alberta in the last four years.

Here's the point. All of that equipment that moved south, that's sitting at the Ritchie Bros. yard, it's moving to produce energy in jurisdictions that do not have a carbon tax. So what is the point? Mr. Speaker, if we really compel the NDP to be honest about this – oh, I guess I'll add a fifth obvious principle of a carbon tax. It's supposed to reduce emissions. It's supposed to reduce emissions. Well, Mr. Speaker, how's that working out? It's fascinating.

Last December CBC was doing a year-end interview with the then Premier, and they asked her: by how much are you reducing emissions with the carbon tax? And she said: I'm sorry; I'll have to get back to you; I wasn't briefed on that. I wasn't briefed on that? I wasn't briefed on that. On the centrepiece policy of the entire NDP government: didn't have an answer.

I'll tell you why she didn't have an answer. It's because the answer is that there is zero measurable reduction in Alberta greenhouse gas emissions as a result of the NDP's retail carbon tax.

In fact, a professor at Simon Fraser University, an economist – somebody can look this up for me. Mark Jaccard is his name. Professor Jaccard wrote an op-ed in the Globe and Mail last December. He is a strong advocate of carbon taxes, I think the pure and ideal form that I'm trying to describe. Professor Jaccard essentially said in this op-ed that at most – at most – the NDP carbon tax in Alberta would be responsible for 5 per cent of the total emissions reductions projected to happen in this province as a result of all the other measures like, primarily, shutting down coal plants.

Even their academic fans on carbon taxes have admitted that at most the carbon tax had a negligible effect, basically an immeasurable effect on greenhouse gas emissions. Yet these guys prance around claiming that this is going to save the global environment. It's going to save the world, Mr. Speaker, making widows pay more to heat their homes while the rest of the developed world is turning away from carbon pricing and the developing world is massively increasing emissions. It is a total charade.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me then turn my attention to the impact that this has had on Alberta. This is a quote from Professor Jaccard, December 14, 2018, Globe and Mail, headline: Divisive Carbon Taxes Are Much Ado about Nothing. He goes on to say:

Pollsters say Alberta Premier's... carbon tax contributes significantly to her dim re-election prospects.

Well, that turns out to have been prophetic.

Ironically, my research team finds the new tax [in Alberta] will cause only as much as 5 per cent of her climate plan's projected reductions. The heavy lifting is from... coal plant phaseout, methane regulations, a preexisting flex-reg on large industries and a cap on oil sands emissions. I'll bet she wishes an economist had told her she didn't need the tax, and that it does almost nothing anyway.

Now, just to be clear, this is not some supporter of my party. This is a fellow who is a carbon tax advocate, Mr. Speaker, who says – let me say that again – that the NDP carbon tax, which we are repealing today, “does almost nothing.” The NDP tax is increasingly regressive, not progressive, not revenue neutral but instead a tax grab, not a general application because the rest of the world is not doing it and, in fact, going in the opposite direction, and not reducing emissions. Again I ask: so what is the point? The best answer I can come up with is this. It makes them feel better about themselves. It makes them feel virtuous. It makes the NDP feel like they are somehow saving the planet by punishing people for living normal lives.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry, but the charade ends in this place today as we speak with clarity on behalf of the vast majority of Albertans who have said from day one that they oppose this punishing tax. Today we will liberate Albertans from that tax with the adoption of this bill, our central election commitment. Promise made, promise kept. The carbon tax repealed.

With this bill, Mr. Speaker, a family that has two cars will save up to $1,800 over the next four years alone, and that's not accounting for how high they would have raised it. Scrapping the carbon tax will reduce the tax burden on Albertans by $1.4 billion. As best we can tell, this represents the single largest tax cut in Alberta fiscal history, right here today, and 70 per cent of Alberta's middle-income families will be saving up to $1,150 as a result of repealing the carbon tax.

It is estimated by Stokes Economics, a highly regarded independent econometric firm, that the repeal of the carbon tax will result in the creation of at least 6,000 new, full-time, private-sector jobs. Let me give you some detail on that: 1,400 new jobs in manufacturing, 1,200 new jobs in the trades, nearly 1,000 new jobs in transportation and warehousing. Stokes Economics estimates that this repeal will increase our economy, our gross domestic product by $1.3 billion, that it will save the average small business $4,500, that it will help charities, some of whom estimate that they pay more than $35,000 per year in carbon taxes under the NDP, charities like the Calgary Food Bank, who will be able to hire a new employee as a result of the savings from this carbon tax. This will allow the Sundre seniors centre to keep their doors open. This will hopefully allow the Calgary board of education to bring back the bus services that it had to reduce. Mr. Speaker, I hope it'll allow my condo's strata board to decrease the condo fees they told me they raised in order to pay for the carbon tax. Maybe that's a conflict of interest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me add that another alleged rationale for the NDP carbon tax was that it was going to acquire for us something called social licence. Do you remember that one? Social licence. Basically, through the magic of punishing people for heating their homes, what it was going to do is turn David Suzuki and Elizabeth May and the B.C. New Democrats and everybody else from pipeline opponents to pipeline proponents, that somehow by showing them just how virtuous the NDP in Alberta was, we were going to get social licence and public support, political approval for the construction of pipelines to get a fair price for our energy products.

Well, how did that turn out, Mr. Speaker? I've challenged the NDP in this House in the past. Now, I'll extend this challenge yet once more. Please identify for me a single political actor, political party, municipal government, provincial government, environmental organization, First Nation leader, academic, prominent commentator, media commentator; please identify a single one that moved from opposition to pipelines in general and the Trans Mountain pipeline in particular to support for those pipelines as a result of the NDP carbon tax. I've been asking that question for three years, and I haven't been able to get an answer from any of the carbon tax advocates – and I'll tell you why – because not one single person, entity, government, party, or interest group moved from no to yes on pipelines as a result of the NDP carbon tax. On that criteria alone it was a complete and catastrophic failure.

Mr. Speaker, you know what? I know the NDP – they sure did this in the campaign. They love calling people all kinds of derogatory names. They love the politics of fear and smear. So when we say that we think the carbon tax is hurting our economy and not helping our environment, they stand up and they use phrases like “deniers.” You know historically where that phrase comes from. Let's face it. It's rhetoric designed to impose, frankly, moral opprobrium on those targeted by it. Outrageous language. I don't and this government does not deny climate science, that there is change in the global climate, that there are anthropogenic as well as natural causes, that we need to reduce carbon emissions. It's a moral and environmental imperative.

That is why we will bring forward this autumn our tier fund, which will be a levy on major emitters, continuing the tradition where Alberta was the first jurisdiction in North America, one of the first in the developed world to address major industrial emissions through such a fund. This fund will produce revenues that will be directed to funding research and scientific developments to help reduce carbon output, reduce greenhouse gas emissions, which technology and which innovations we can then share with the developing world, where they have this huge challenge.

Let me speak to that for a moment, Mr. Speaker. We Albertans, we Canadians sometimes become, I think, a bit complacent. We have a tendency, perhaps, sometimes to take for granted just how high our standard of living is, but there are billions of people around the world, roughly half the world's population, that still do not have access to reliable energy. Hundreds of millions of people who have to cook their dinner on a small propane stove or with wood fire. My friend the Minister of Municipal Affairs grew up in such a village in Nigeria, where people can't go and flick a switch and be sure that the power will be there, and knows what it means to live in energy poverty. My friend from Edmonton-South West understands the radical difference that abundant and affordable energy makes to realizing human potential and raising up the standards of living of people.

One of the great achievements of postwar history has been the massive increase in global living standards and the huge reductions in absolute levels of poverty. One of the primary reasons for that has been access to affordable energy, but there are still too many people around the world who do not have that which we take for granted. I understand why the governments of China and India and Nigeria and all through the developing world are seeking to offer affordable energy to their people: to help lift them out of poverty. Unfortunately, in many cases, that means energy production with high carbon intensity.

It is not morally correct for those of us in the northern countries, in the prosperous west to tell the developing world that they cannot offer energy to their people. To the contrary, it is incumbent upon us to help them find ways to produce that energy with a shrinking environmental and greenhouse gas emission footprint. That's in the real world, Mr. Speaker, not in some abstract utopian world. In the real world that is the challenge.

My friend the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions was born and raised in China, where they have been bringing on stream every year dozens of additional coal-fired power plants. They do it because of the massive growth in the population and the energy demands. They want to move away from coal production, and the single best way we could help them to do so, as Canadians, the single most practical thing we could do to reduce global greenhouse gas emissions would be, Mr. Speaker, to get our clean Alberta natural gas to China through LNG exports. That's what we need to focus on, not punishing widows for heating their homes when it's 30 below in Edmonton, but getting our liquefied natural gas to China, to India.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, the first time I met my friend the recently re-elected Prime Minister of India, Narendra Modi, was in 2008 in Ahmadabad, Gujarat, when he was the chief minister of that state. I'll never forget. Then Chief Minister Modi-ji said to me: “Minister, what can we in India do? In Gujarat what can we do to get access to your natural gas?” He said, “I'm spending billions on new LNG port facilities so we can off-load LNG from around the world.” Prime Minister Modi is a huge opponent of terrorism and extremism. He said to me: “Minister, I don't want to have to buy natural gas from the countries that are funding terrorism that is killing my citizens. I want to buy natural gas from the country that we admire most: Canada. Help us get that natural gas so we can move from coal to a radically lower emissions profile with liquefied natural gas.”

This was a plea to me from the now Prime Minister of India 11 years ago, Mr. Speaker, but we're not one inch closer to getting India or China that natural gas. These are the things on which – so yes, we do agree on one thing with the NDP: that there is an urgency. There is an imperative to take concrete action to reduce CO<sub>2</sub> and greenhouse gas emissions, but again, punishing people for driving their kids to soccer is not the way to do it.

Ultimately, the solutions for this huge challenge will be found through constant technological innovation, and that is why the centrepiece of our government's climate strategy, which will be released in the fall, is the tier levy on major emitters. It will affect about 60 per cent of the emissions from the Alberta economy, the emissions that come from heavy industry, that quite frankly is much better positioned to pay than ordinary Albertans.

Secondly, that revenue will go into funding pure and applied research that can help us to reduce emissions here and around the world. We estimate that that tier fund and that tier levy will reduce emissions by approximately 40 to 45 megatonnes. That's a significant contribution, Mr. Speaker. To the national target, to the Paris climate targets: it doesn't get us all the way there. We acknowledge that other measures will have to be taken, but we can take practical measures that do not punish ordinary people.

Mr. Speaker, let me then turn my attention to the threat of the imposition of a federal carbon tax because one of the specious claims of the NDP is that the passage of this bill will simply invite the federal government to impose a tax on us. No, we do not invite the federal government to impose a carbon tax on Alberta. Should they seek to do so, we will oppose it at every measure, immediately filing an application for a judicial reference on the constitutionality of that federal intrusion into our jurisdiction at the Alberta Court of Appeal. Simultaneously, I've instructed the hon. Minister of Justice to assist the government of Saskatchewan by seeking intervenor status in supporting their appeal of the recent Saskatchewan appeal court reference on the federal carbon tax to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I'm further proud to say that because the NDP government of Alberta would not defend our taxpayers, my party, the United Conservative Party, stepped up to the plate and we defended Alberta taxpayers by seeking and obtaining intervenor status at the appeal courts of Saskatchewan and Ontario on their respective judicial references on the constitutionality of the federal carbon tax. We'll monitor the forthcoming decision in Ontario, and we will continue to support our friends in the government of Manitoba. I'm pleased to note that my friend Premier Higgs in New Brunswick is indicating the likelihood that he, too, will be launching a legal challenge of the federal carbon tax.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to have worked over the past two years on a growing national coalition of provincial governments, of provinces, that are standing up for and defending Canadian taxpayers. While the NDP sold us down the river to their ally in Ottawa, we stood up for and with this bill continue to stand up for the economic interests of Albertans. We make no apology for that.

Now, let me say that while we will vigorously oppose the federal carbon tax every step of the way for all of the reasons I've already articulated, I want to point out that as bad as it is, the federal carbon tax is not as bad as the one we in this Legislature will repeal today. Why do I say that? Well, first of all, the federal carbon tax this year is at a $20 tax level whereas the NDP carbon tax that we're repealing is at a $30 level, so right away people will pay less should the federal government impose on us. Secondly, as I already pointed out, the federal rebates are much, much more generous than the provincial rebates. Only 40 per cent of the NDP carbon tax went back into rebates, and that only to people in 60 per cent of households whereas 90 per cent of the federal carbon tax revenues go back in rebates to 100 per cent of households. From just a pure cash perspective people will be, frankly, better off than they were under the NDP carbon tax.

At least the federal government is recognizing the imputed cost on small businesses, but by not nearly as much as they should. On this I heartily agree with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business's critique of the federal policy announced today on small business, but the NDP carbon tax had zero relief for small business or charities and nonprofits where the federal one does. Now, this is not an argument for the federal carbon tax, but I'm simply pointing out to my friends in the NDP that it is not really a replacement. It is less damaging. It's still damaging, but it's less damaging to Albertans' pocketbooks than the one imposed by the NDP.

Mr. Speaker, with all of that said, I want Albertans to know that we hope that – let me back up and say that whether this bill is adopted today or next week, I can assure Albertans that based on the announcement we have made, this bill will be effective tomorrow . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Today.

Mr. Kenney: . . . today, May 30. I should know that date. Today, May 30, 2019, is the end of the NDP carbon tax. In fact, I look forward this afternoon to visiting a gas station in southwest Edmonton to observe as they actually switch the price down, saving Edmontonians money when they fill up at the gas tank.

Mr. Speaker, we have barely been in office for a month, and we are already today delivering to Albertans the biggest tax break in our province's history. I say to my colleagues that they should be proud of that.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Albertans for their patience as we got to this day, and I can assure them that the fight for our economy, for jobs, and for common sense is not over; that this government will take serious action to address the real challenge of greenhouse gas emissions, working with our partners across Canada and, hopefully, with jurisdictions all around the world. But at the same time this government will not punish Albertans for living normal lives. For that reason, I urge all members to vote at third reading for Bill 1, the carbon tax repeal act.

Mr. Speaker, I'm absolutely pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier. I would also ask that you as well table a copy of the article that you referenced in your speech, at the appropriate time.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? I see the hon. government House whip.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to of course rise and adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

Amendments to Standing Orders

11. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective December 4, 2018, be amended as follows:

1. Standing Order 3 is amended

(a) in suborder (1) by striking out "Subject to suborder (1.1)" and substituting "Subject to suborder (1.1) and (1.2).";

(b) by adding the following after suborder (1.1):
(1.2) The Assembly shall not meet in the morning from 10 a.m. to noon on Tuesday, or 9:00 a.m. to noon on Wednesday or Thursday, if the Government House Leader, or a member of the Executive Council acting on the Government House Leader's behalf, notifies the Assembly that there shall be no morning sitting, notice having been given no later than the time of adjournment on the sitting day preceding the day on which the morning sitting will be cancelled.

(c) by adding the following after suborder (5):
(5.1) In the period prior to, or following the commencement of, the first session of a Legislature, the Government House Leader may file a revised calendar with the Clerk, notwithstanding the deadline in suborder (5), following consultation with the Opposition House Leaders.

- (d) in suborder (6) by adding “or (5.1)” after “unless varied by the calendar provided for under suborder (5)”;
  - (e) by striking out suborder (7) and substituting the following:
(7) As soon as possible after January 15 each year, and following receipt of a calendar submitted under suborder (5.1), the Clerk shall publish the calendar provided for under suborder (5) or (5.1).
2. Standing Order 7 is amended
- (a) in suborder (1) by striking out “Introduction of Guests” and substituting “Introduction of School Groups”;
  - (b) by striking out suborder (3) and substituting the following:
(3) When Introduction of School Groups is called, brief introductions may be made by the Speaker of groups of schoolchildren in the galleries.
  - (c) by adding the following after suborder (5):
(5.1) If any Member other than the mover rises to speak to a debatable motion to concur in a report of a committee on a Bill under Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees, debate on that motion shall be called under Orders of the Day
    - (a) when the Government thinks fit, in the case of a report on a Government Bill,
    - (b) on the next sitting day other than a Monday, in the case of a report on a private Bill, or
    - (c) on Monday afternoon under Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills other than Government Bills, in the case of a report on a public Bill other than a Government Bill.
3. Standing Order 8 is amended
- (a) by striking out suborder (1) and substituting the following:
8(1) On Monday afternoon, after the daily routine, the order of business for consideration of the Assembly shall be as follows:

Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills Other than Government Bills
Written Questions
Motions for Return
Public Bills and Orders other than Government Bills and Orders
At 5 p.m.: Motions other than Government Motions

(1.1) Notwithstanding suborder (1), if on a Monday afternoon prior to 5 p.m. no items of business other than Motions other than Government Motions remain on the Order Paper for consideration by the Assembly, Motions other than Government Motions shall be called and after the Assembly has decided all questions necessary to conclude debate on the motion, the Assembly shall proceed to consideration of any items of Government business provided for in suborder (2) unless unanimous consent is given to proceed to an additional Motion other than a Government Motion.
- (b) by adding the following after suborder (7)(a):
(a.1) Debate on a motion to concur in a report of a committee on a public Bill other than a Government Bill will conclude after 55 minutes of debate on the motion and 5 minutes for the mover to close debate, unless the motion is voted on sooner.
4. Standing Order 13 is amended by adding the following after suborder (5):
(5.1) No Member shall disrupt the orderly conduct of the proceedings of the Assembly by loudly or repeatedly banging on a desk.
5. Standing Order 19(1) is amended
- (a) in clause (a) and (b) by striking out “at 5:15 p.m., the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings” and substituting “the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings 15 minutes prior to the time of adjournment for the afternoon sitting”, and
  - (b) in clause (c) by striking out “at 5:15 p.m., unless the debate is previously concluded, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the motion” and substituting “unless the debate is previously concluded, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings 15 minutes prior to the time of adjournment for the afternoon sitting and immediately put every question necessary to dispose of the motion”.
6. Standing Order 29(3) is amended by striking out “and motions for returns” and substituting “; motions for returns and motions for concurrence in committee reports on public Bills other than Government Bills”.
7. The following is added after Standing Order 31:
Confidence of the Assembly in the Government
31.1 The confidence of the Assembly in the Government may be raised by means of a vote on
- (a) a motion explicitly worded to declare that the Assembly has, or has not, confidence in the Government,
  - (b) a motion by the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, “That the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the Government”,
  - (c) a motion for the passage of an Appropriation Bill as defined in Standing Order 64,
  - (d) a motion for an address in reply to the Lieutenant Governor’s speech, or
  - (e) any other motion that the Government has expressly declared a question of confidence.
8. Standing Order 32 is struck out and the following is substituted:
Division
32(1) A division may be called for by 3 Members rising.
(2) When a division is called, the division bells shall be sounded at the beginning and for the last minute of a 15-minute interval.
(3) After the first division is called during any meeting of the Committee of the Whole or Committee

- of Supply, the interval between division bells on all subsequent divisions during that meeting shall be reduced to one minute, except in the case of the first division called during an evening sitting that commences in Committee of the Whole or Committee of Supply pursuant to Standing Order 4(4).
- (4) When Members have been called in for a division, there shall be no further debate.
- (5) Members are not compelled to vote and those who wish to abstain should remain in their seats when asked to rise and record their vote.
- (6) The Clerk shall record the ayes and the noes and announce to the Speaker the number of votes cast for and against the motion.
- (7) The ayes and noes shall be entered in the Votes and Proceedings.
- (8) Abstentions shall not be entered in the Votes and Proceedings.
9. Standing Order 37 is amended
- (a) by striking out suborders (1) and (2) and substituting the following:
- (1) Five copies, and any additional copies required by suborder (2), must be tabled of a document presented by a Member to the Assembly for
- (a) placement of one copy in the records of the Assembly, and
- (b) distribution of
- (i) 2 copies to the Legislature Library,
- (ii) one copy to Hansard,
- (iii) one copy to the Government, in the case of a document tabled by the Speaker, the Official Opposition, any other party or group in opposition or an independent Member, and
- (iv) one copy to the Official Opposition, in the case of a document tabled by the Speaker, a Member of the Government caucus, any other party or group in opposition or an independent Member.
- (2) In addition to the copies required under suborder (1), one additional copy must be tabled of
- (a) responses to written questions and returns ordered by the Assembly for distribution to the Member who asked the question or moved the motion for return, and
- (b) any document presented by a Member who is neither a Member of the Government caucus nor the Official Opposition, to allow for distribution to both the Government and the Official Opposition under suborder (1).
- (b) by striking out suborder (3).
10. The following is added after Standing Order 46:
- Debate interrupted by adjournment of the Assembly
- 46.1 When a motion to adjourn the Assembly is carried or the Assembly is adjourned for want of quorum, the matter under consideration prior to the adjournment shall be deemed to be adjourned to a future sitting day.
11. Standing Order 52(1)(c) is struck out and the following is substituted:
- (c) Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills, consisting of 11 Members,
12. Standing Order 52.01(1) is amended by striking out clauses (a), (b) and (c) and substituting the following:
- (a) Standing Committee on Families and Communities – mandate related to the areas of Children's Services, Community and Social Services, Education, Health, Justice and Solicitor General, Seniors and Housing and Service Alberta;
- (b) Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future – mandate related to the areas of Advanced Education, Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women, Economic Development, Trade and Tourism, Labour and Immigration and Infrastructure;
- (c) Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship – mandate related to the areas of Agriculture and Forestry, Energy, Environment and Parks, Indigenous Relations, Municipal Affairs, Transportation and Treasury Board and Finance.
13. The following is added after Standing Order 52.01:
- Subcommittees
- 52.01(1) Unless otherwise ordered, a standing or special committee shall have the power to appoint one or more subcommittees, which shall report from time to time to the committee.
- (2) Every subcommittee shall be appointed by motion of the committee specifying the terms of reference and the membership of the subcommittee.
- (3) At its first meeting of a new Legislature, every Legislative Policy Committee and the Standing Committee on Public Accounts shall appoint a Subcommittee on Committee Business to meet from time to time at the call of the Chair and to report to the committee on the business of the committee.
14. Standing Order 52.04 is amended by renumbering Standing Order 52.04 as Standing Order 52.04(1) and by adding the following after suborder (1):
- (2) Subject to Standing Order 59.01(11), suborder (1) does not prevent a Legislative Policy Committee from undertaking a hearing or inquiry during the same period of time that a matter stands referred to the committee by the Assembly if the hearing or inquiry does not interfere with the work of the committee on the matter referred to it.
15. Standing Order 59.01 is amended by adding the following after suborder (11):
- (12) Suborder (11) does not apply to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills.
16. Standing Order 59.02(3) is struck out and the following is substituted:
- (3) During consideration of interim, supplementary or main estimates, the following individuals may be seated at a committee or in the Assembly:
- (a) officials of the Government, to assist the Minister whose estimates are under consideration;

- (b) staff of the opposition, to assist Members who are participating in estimates consideration.
  - (4) During main estimates consideration, officials of the Government may respond to questions from a committee at the request of the Minister.
- 17. Standing Order 64(1)(a) is amended by striking out subclause (ii).
- 18. Standing Order 74.1 is amended
  - (a) by striking out the heading and substituting "Referral of Government Bill to a committee after first reading", and
  - (b) by striking out suborder (1)(b).
- 19. The following is added after Standing Order 74.1:
Referral of public Bill other than Government Bill after first reading
 74.11(1) After a public Bill other than a Government Bill has been read a first time, the Bill stands referred to the Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills Committee.
 (2) The Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills Committee shall report back to the Assembly within 8 sitting days of the day on which the Bill was referred to the Committee.
- 20. Standing Order 74.2(2) is struck out and the following is substituted:
 (2) Upon the concurrence of a committee report that a Bill be proceeded with, the Bill shall be placed on the Order Paper for second reading and, in the case of a public Bill other than a Government Bill, the Bill shall, subject to the precedence assigned to Bills standing on the Order Paper, be taken up on the next available Monday following the day on which the Assembly concurred in the report.
- 21. Standing Order 89 is amended by striking out "Standing Order 3" and substituting "Standing Order 3(5)".
- 22. The following Standing Orders are amended by striking out "Private Bills Committee" and substituting "Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills Committee" wherever it occurs:
 Standing Order 91(4)
 Standing Order 96(2)
 Standing Order 98(1) and (3)
 Standing Order 100(1)
 Standing Order 101
 Standing Order 102
 Standing Order 103
 Standing Order 104
 Standing Order 105(1)
 Standing Order 106
- 23. The headings preceding Standing Orders 98, 100 and 105 are amended by striking out "Private Bills Committee" and substituting "Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills Committee".
- B. And be it further resolved that upon passage of this motion any public bills other than government bills that stand on the Order Paper for second reading are deemed referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills in accordance with Standing Order 74.11(1) and notwithstanding Standing Order 74.11(2) the committee shall report back to the Assembly on these bills within 12 sitting days of the day this motion is passed.

- C. And be it further resolved that the amendments in this motion shall come into force on passage.

[Adjourned debate May 29: Mr. Shandro]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Pancholi: Edmonton-Whitemud.

The Acting Speaker: Edmonton-Whitemud. I stand corrected.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I realize I'm a little short, sometimes hard to see. I do wear heels.

Thank you very much. I'm honoured to be here today to speak to Motion 11 put forward by the member opposite. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this primarily because as a private member – we are all private members, but particularly as a private member of the opposition – I think many of my colleagues on the other side should also be very interested in this. This is an opportunity for me to speak to changes that would directly affect my ability to represent my constituents, my ability to have my voice heard in this House. So the opportunity to speak is very much appreciated, particularly because, if I'll be honest, it seems like the intent of this is to really stifle the ability of private members to speak, so the opportunity to do so right now I will take.

To begin with, I guess, I want to comment on the fact that I'm a little surprised. You know, I'm a new MLA. I'm new to the processes. I just, like so many other members, saw the list of committees that came out and saw the titles of the committees and reviewed the documents describing what each committee is responsible for. All of us as MLAs, whether opposition or government, got assigned to particular committees.

You know, my background is that I'm a lawyer. I'm a bit of a geek. I like things like committees. I like things like opportunities to break things down. I even put forward that I was interested in being on a private members' committee because I like legislation. I like to look at that stuff and go through it. So I was excited. It's an opportunity to do what I've been elected to do, which is the business of our Assembly.

Then to find out that we do have a standing committee that's specifically tasked with dealing with standing orders, to me, when we're talking about, you know, changes to standing orders, well, again, going back to my legal training and my background, that seems like right within the mandate of that standing committee. So I'm surprised that that committee actually seems to be being completely useless right now. Now, I'm not on that committee, but I know that there are a number of members on both sides, particularly on the government side, who have now had, I guess, some of their work taken away.

Frankly, let's be honest. We know that in a government this size ministers get a lot of work, a lot to do, but private members don't get a lot to do. So committees are something that's pretty important, and to basically have one of your pieces of work essentially stripped away, I would be disappointed. I mean, I frankly like being busy. That's clearly why I ran for election. You know, we've all got full lives outside of this, but clearly, I like being busy. I wanted to do the work of being an MLA, and I think that includes sitting on committees. So I was pretty surprised that this is not going to the standing committee on standing orders. I would think that it should do that.

Needless to say, here we are. I would like to speak first to the proposed changes to the introductions of guests. I'll tell a little story. I've actually had the honour of being introduced in this House twice prior to becoming an MLA. Once I was a constituency assistant for an MLA many years ago, and one of my first days on the job she invited me to come as a new CA. I think I might have been 21 at the time. I was pretty excited. She introduced me as her new constituency assistant. I got some lovely notes from MLAs from all parties welcoming me. It was pretty amazing for me. I would say that that experience, certainly, was my first time, rather than school tours, of actually being in this House. It was pretty incredible to have my name spoken in this House, in this revered Assembly. To go back to Hansard, because part of my job as a constituency assistant was then going back to Hansard and clipping – back in that day, you know, you’d photocopy and you’d actually take a highlighter; there were no PDFs. To see my own name was pretty impressive.

The second opportunity I had to be introduced in the House was when I was part of a group of civil servants who worked very hard on some legislation that was brought forward by a previous Progressive Conservative government. We were very hard-working bureaucrats and public servants. We worked on that project for three years, in the development of legislation. The minister who finally was able to have that piece of legislation passed thanked us by name, the group of people who had worked on that project, introduced us in the House. Again, I can tell you that as a public servant, you don’t get a lot of opportunities to get recognized, and that was a pretty impressive recognition of our work. It was a small moment, but again to see my name listed with those of my colleagues, who had worked very hard for many years on a project that we thought was very important, to have us be recognized was pretty fantastic.

You know, these were small moments, but they were moments for me that engaged me with the work of this Assembly, and it engaged me in the political process. It got me excited about being here. We all know we just came through a campaign, all of us as private members. We all worked very hard to get where we are. We all had a lot of support from families, from friends, from supporters – there were a lot of interesting stakeholders we met – and we have small opportunities in this House to thank those people on the record for their work and to keep them engaged and to keep reminding them of the important work that we do in this Assembly.

I know that a lot of members on the other side and a lot of members on this side have families. We have kids. One of the moments that I was most looking forward to was introducing my children in the House. My kids are four and six years old. They were pretty involved in coming out on the campaign trail, well, in between naps. My son thought door-knocking was pretty fun because he got to ring doorbells, so he liked that. But, you know, during that process he didn’t really understand what my job was, what I was doing when I was saying that I was running to be an MLA.

They came for my swearing-in. It was, you know, a wonderful experience. There were a lot of people here. It was very crowded. There were a lot of people who were supporters and were happy to see our caucus get sworn in. But, you know, they kind of sat in the back row. They couldn’t really see very well. They’re short; they’re four and six. I was looking forward to the opportunity to have them in the front row, where they could stand up and they could wave to their mom, and their mom could thank them and have that moment.

I’m sure we all have family members and people who are important to us who we would like to introduce in this House. It’s a pretty special moment. There are not a lot of opportunities for those personalized special moments in this House, and I think it’s something we all value. You know, I think it’s a really important thing, and I appreciate the comments that came forward.

As I’ve mentioned, this is my first term. I know that there have probably been a lot of times where the introductions of guests have been used in different ways to perhaps stretch things out or spend time, maybe partisan statements. I understand it happens on both sides, and I think there are ways to deal with that without eliminating the personal touch of introducing guests in this House. I think we could put time limits. I think we could put limitations on how many guests are introduced. There are ways to do that without eliminating this very personal moment that is part of the important work that we do here, that really brings it home for the families, who don’t get to see us because we’re working late hours, you know, up early, home late. Those are the moments that are really important, and we can still recognize those moments and still keep to a timely fashion. There are ways to do that.

Now, the hon. Government House Leader made some comments when he introduced this motion that somehow the number of members’ statements would be increased; however, I still fail to see any proposed amendment by the members from government or from the House leader himself to actually increase the number of members’ statements. It specifically sets out in Standing Order 7(4) that there will only be six members’ statements. If there is an opportunity to increase that number of members’ statements to make up for the lack of introductions, that’s something to be considered, but I don’t see that on the record. All I’m hearing right now is eliminating the ability of individual members to make those personal connections and make those introductions in the House. So, you know, I think that there are opportunities here to really improve the process and to preserve our small moments that we have with our families, friends, supporters, and stakeholders.

The other thing I want to mention – and the Leader of the Official Opposition yesterday in her comments on the standing order changes I think said this very well – is that, you know, there is a proposed change here which is small. It talks about, basically, removing the regular morning sittings and making it more of a matter of giving notice of that.

She made a very good comment, which really resonated with me. She said that the reason why the standing orders are the way they are, where there are regular morning sittings and night sittings are optional and notice must be given, is that the intent of those changes, that were brought in by the former government, by the NDP, was to make it a family-friendly environment for MLAs and that we want to take all the steps that we can to encourage more predictability in the day-to-day work of our Assembly so that those MLAs with young children have more of an opportunity to arrange child care, to move that forward. I think that’s important. I think we do need to have some predictability, not only for those members who might currently need that, but also we want to attract more people like that. So, you know, I do appreciate her comments on that.

10:40

The last thing I want to speak to, because I know there are other members of my caucus who want to speak a little bit, is I’d like to talk about abstentions and the ability to abstain while sitting in your seat. As I’ve mentioned before in this House and I will continue to mention, especially as an opposition member, I was elected, as we all were, to represent my constituents, and that might mean that we’re sometimes going to be at odds. That’s part of the tension that exists in our representative democracy. Sometimes we have party platforms, sometimes we have directions from our leader, sometimes we have personally-held beliefs, and sometimes we have the things that our constituents want us to do. It is our job as elected representatives to balance those and sometimes do things that are difficult but to actually represent.

I think allowing members to abstain from voting is actually a neglect of our responsibility. We were elected to come in here and to vote on matters, to actually put on the record, state our views, and to vote. Sometimes that may mean we're going to vote in ways that either our constituents or maybe even our personal beliefs are at odds with, but that's our responsibility. I come back to, actually, again, my legal background a little bit. As a lawyer, you know, you're constantly balancing those challenges between clients' interests, preserving the rule of law, and having respect for the law. Sometimes that might be at odds with your personally-held beliefs, but again you have a responsibility to balance that. I take those responsibilities seriously, and I continue to take that seriously as an elected member of this Assembly.

I think we should all be held to account to vote and to do what we were elected to do. Sometimes that's going to be awkward and that's going to be difficult and we're going to receive push-back from constituents, the people in our lives who might hold the same views as us, from our party, from our leader. But nobody elected us because this job was easy. We all know that. We've worked pretty hard to get here. It's a tough job. We have an obligation to vote and to make our views heard. I don't think we were elected here to sit quietly and abstain.

Those are my thoughts on the changes. I'm all for, you know, efficiencies and for making the process smoother. I think there are ways to do that, however, without silencing our voices as private members. There are ways to do that to allow the personal touches of us being able to introduce guests that come to see us do our work in the House, and I think we should all fight very hard to protect the rights and privileges that we have under the standing orders. We're members of caucuses, we are members of political parties, but we are also individual MLAs.

We have obligations, and I believe we need to preserve those protections and those privileges and rights that we have. There are lots of opportunities where we will be swayed and held to – you know, we have whips for a reason. They will tell us which way to vote on things. We know that exists. But we have opportunities within our system where we as private members have the rights and authorities to speak our minds, to represent our constituents, and to have those personal moments with people in our lives and our stakeholders, and I don't want to see that taken away.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak. I do think that there are significant issues with this motion, and I believe there are plenty of opportunities for changes.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Under 29(2)(a), we have an opportunity for members for questions and comments.

Seeing none, would anybody else like to speak? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to take a few moments to address a couple of things that are in here. I know my colleagues have spoken at length about this, so I think I'm going to focus on a few of the pieces that are more important to me.

Certainly, one of the things that's in this set of standing order changes that I think is of concern to me is with respect to private members' bills going to a committee. The challenge, I think, is that it's not clear how much of a delay that's going to pose. As our leader said, if it really is the case that we're not going to do a throne speech with each iteration, that may solve some of those problems. But if it isn't the case, then a lot more of those private members' bills are not going to have a chance to get debated, and I think that's really sad.

I'm just going to refer to a couple of private members' bills that passed in the 29th Legislature that I think were really important.

The former Member for Calgary-Bow, for instance, brought forward a bill that helped women who were victims of domestic violence be able to break their leases. That was so they could leave their home so that the perpetrator wouldn't know where they were, or if they were in a financial situation where they were no longer able to pay that lease, they weren't locked into continuing to live with the perpetrator of domestic violence simply because of a lease. I think, you know, we've seen the benefit of that legislation already. It has had an impact on many lives. I think that private member's bill was very, very important.

A couple of other private members' bills went through. The Member for Calgary-West, actually, had a private member's bill in the 29th Legislature that went through, having to do with pill presses for fentanyl. I think that that was an important bill. You know, it was his opportunity to step forward and say: I care about this, and this is something I'm passionate about, and I'm going to do something about it. I think that that's very important.

The former Member for Calgary-North West also had a bill that came forward, a disabilities' advocate. That's a really important bill as well. That was a private member's bill also. That's three things already.

One of the ones that's really near and dear to my heart that came forward was actually from the former Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. He brought forward a bill. I remember because we had many discussions. He was at the time my critic, and we used to talk back and forth quite a lot, he and I. He had come forward with this bill. He brought it to me ahead of time to ask for support. The bill, he said, arose out of seeing his own children starting to use the Internet and starting to use social media and texting and that sort of thing, and he was really concerned. The thing that he was concerned about was essentially the use of intimate images, so he brought forward a bill to deal with that. I thought that that was a really important step for him to take. It was a really important way for him to show to his constituents and to the entire province, you know, what he was really made of. I think the 29th Legislature had the opportunity to support him in that.

Those are a few of the reasons that I think that allowing private members to be able to come forward with bills is important. Those bills can come from all different sides of the House, and they can do a lot of important things moving forward. That's why I think that's important.

With respect to the morning sittings I think it's been articulated at length, but I'll just deal with my particular circumstances. Obviously, I'm an MLA who represents Calgary. That means that when I come up here, my partner stays in Calgary. His job is there, so he works there. My daughter comes with me, which means that I need child care when I'm up here. My parents live in Calgary, my husband lives in Calgary, so it's just me and my daughter and our child care. That inability to predict schedules is very challenging for me because I have to give someone else notice of the hours that I'm going to be working. So I think it creates a difficulty for me, and it creates, in particular, a difficulty for women MLAs from other parts of the province, I guess.

The last thing I wanted to talk about was abstentions. This is probably the issue that I'm most passionate about because I think that we have a duty in this place as elected representatives, as people who've been sent here to have a view. I don't think that you get to be neutral as to other people's rights. When it comes to debating issues of women's reproductive rights, when it comes to debating issues of LGBTQ rights, I don't think you get to be neutral about that because being neutral is essentially to say – I mean, the point of rights is to protect a minority group, potentially, or a group that has historically had less power from a group that has more power, that is dominant, that is often the majority. To say, "Well, I'm not going to have an opinion on that," when it is, in fact, your job, when you have been sent here to have an opinion on that – I really think that that just flies in the face of our duty as elected representatives.

You know, it's hard. It's hard to balance different competing interests. It's hard to weigh all the different factors. I mean, the members over there are certainly aware of it right now. We certainly were when we were in government. It's difficult. Sometimes the choices – the balance is hard to get perfect, but we have to do it. In fact, failing to act is almost always itself an action.

You know, that's the problem with these amendments. They suggest that a failure to act is not doing something, but actually it is doing something. When someone comes forward and says, "My rights have been violated," if the courts were to say, "Well, we're not going to act because we don't really want to have an opinion because it's a sticky social issue," well, that would be absurd. But I feel it's equally absurd for us in this place to say: well, I don't want to have an opinion because it's a sticky social issue. Well, no. That's someone's right. They're coming forward to you and saying that they do or they feel they ought to have a right, and they feel it has been violated. I think that we have to have an opinion on that, whether it's difficult or not, whether it requires soul-searching or not, whether it requires difficult intellectual work or not. That is the reason that I am troubled, very much so, by these changes.

I hope that all members will consider that and will consider it not only as we vote on these standing orders but will consider it going forward if they choose to in fact sit in their place and not have an opinion on an issue. That itself is an action, it is a decision, and it does have consequences for the people of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Under 29(2)(a) any questions or comments?

Are there any other members wishing to speak on this matter?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to rise on Government Motion 11 and share my thoughts on it. Of course, much like my other colleagues here on the opposition side, we have some major concerns with this legislation, the first being the inability, if this legislation is passed, to introduce school groups. Now, I've had the opportunity over the last four years to introduce many of the schools in my community. It really is one of the highlights of my time spent here in the Assembly.

Of course, it's always very important to represent your constituents and talk about whether we support or don't support a bill that's before us and why that is. But when we have a school group and have the opportunity to first take a picture with them as they move through their tour of the Legislature and then be able to introduce them in this House, it's something that's very important to me. I think it's very important to the other members who have had the opportunity to do it so far. Even for the people who have had the opportunity in the 30th Legislature to do it so far: I'm sure that they've enjoyed that as well.

It's very frustrating for me to hear that we would even consider changing the process of that. I mean, with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, the students come here after having the opportunity to hear from me in their classroom. We're often invited as MLAs to talk about the democratic process, to talk about the provincial Legislature and what it is we do here. For them to come here and, instead of having the opportunity to hear their own MLA introduce them, to have it done by the Speaker does not mean nearly as much as it does coming from the members themselves. I think that that's a really important piece of why I'm not planning to support this government motion.

I think this has a lot more to do than what is being told to us. Over the last four years in the 29th Legislature, introducing school groups really did not interrupt the proceedings of the House, you know, with very few times where we had to actually go past the usual scheduling to introduce guests, introduce school groups. It's very frustrating for me.

You know, on top of the school groups piece: the willingness of this government to take away our ability to introduce stakeholders and introduce constituents. Just as important – well, I'm not going to say, "more important" – as introducing school groups is our ability to introduce stakeholders. We as MLAs have the opportunity to meet with people in our community that have concerns, whether it be with legislation before the House or they want to propose legislation or just want to talk about something else that's on their mind. Our ability to introduce them in this Legislature is part of our ability to advocate on their behalf. I've brought in constituents that were suffering from rare diseases, talking about the importance of Rare Disease Day.

I think taking five, 10 seconds to highlight that in an introduction of a guest, if we don't have the opportunity that day to provide a member's statement for that person, is something that we should be able to do. We as opposition members now have more opportunities for members' statements, a lot more than the government members will find that they have, so they are losing more than we are, really. It's something that the government members should consider.

Over the last four years I've had the opportunity to invite many special guests to the Legislature and provide them with introductions. Then you can clip it and give it to them, and it's very important to them. To say, "No; the Speaker is going to say your name into the record and probably, maybe not even mention what organization you're with or the important work that you've done in your community that brought you to the Legislature in the first place," is quite frustrating. Really, for me the ability to introduce guests is incredibly important, and I think it should be very important to the government members as well.

Now, of course, another topic that's come up a lot is the banning of desk thumping. You know, this really is just showing that we have a politician coming from Ottawa trying to impose ideas from Ottawa on us. This has been in place for a very long time in Alberta's history. It's been a tradition, so to come and say that all of a sudden it's a really big issue, that it's holding up the House or wrecking decorum here in the House is just simply untrue. I mean, whether we're banging on our desks or, as we've seen, the government is now clapping their hands, it really doesn't make a difference. The clapping is just as loud if not potentially louder than banging on desks.

Mr. Schmidt: It hurts my ears.

Mr. Carson: Yeah. It hurts my ears as well.

I don't know why we've come to this decision. We are going to show our appreciation in one way or another. Desk thumping or clapping is not used as a way to intimidate people often. I mean, when we were in government, there were often times where our members would be speaking about something that's important to them, about a situation in their life, or even about a guest that they'd invited, and they needed a moment to collect themselves. We've often used desk thumping as a way to give them that moment to collect their thoughts and be able to continue on.

I don't think this is as big an issue as the government is trying to make it. I don't think that it's something, really, that we should be spending a lot of time talking about in the Legislature because I don't think it needs to be changed. I'm not sure why it was so important for the government to bring this forward, but really it just shows that, you know, the new Premier thinks that Ottawa does it better than Alberta, and he wants to impose that on us.

Of course, overall the changes that are being implemented or that the government hopes to implement are really just taking away the ability of the members in this Legislature to advocate on their constituents' behalf, whether it's getting rid of the introduction of school groups, getting rid of the introduction of special guests.

You know, just as important is the ability of members to bring private members' legislation forward to this House. We've heard many examples of private members bringing forward legislation. The previous Member for Calgary-Bow had a very important piece of legislation where survivors of domestic violence of some sort were able to break their lease, recognizing that it's important to help somebody get out of that situation and then deal with the financial piece after. We need to be able to help people. That wasn't something that needed to go to committee to be studied for months, possibly die on the Order Paper; it was something that had to be passed immediately. The members of the Legislature recognized that, and we were able to do so.

When we talk about cutting red tape – you want to send more bills to committee to be studied. You want to have to bring the bureaucracy of this Assembly together, all very professional and important people, but why do that if we don't have to? Why not discuss it, as is our duty in this Legislature, and then pass it when it's such an easy bill to support and pass?

11:00

Of course, I had my own piece of legislation, which came and was discussed in the Legislature, and it was not supported by all members, so we did send it to committee. That opportunity to do that is still there. If the discussion in the Legislature and the members see fit that that is what we should do, then we can still do that. It didn't take a long time. I think we spent an afternoon deciding on that, and we sent it to committee. It's not like it's taking up a whole lot of time for House proceedings.

[The Speaker in the chair]

For those reasons, I will most definitely not be supporting this Government Motion 11. I think overall it's taking away the rights of not only opposition members but, just as importantly, government members. I think that you as government members will see that you're losing more than we are losing in terms of your ability to advocate on your members' behalf. We're going to have a lot of time over here to talk. You will find out, especially you private members in the back row there, that you are going to be sitting and listening to us a lot. You're going to learn a lot from us over here in the opposition.

Mr. Schmidt: For free.

Mr. Carson: That's right. Most of the members over here have experienced – well, maybe not most of them. I have experienced what it's like to be a private member in the government, and it's a wonderful experience – don't get me wrong – but you're not going to have a lot of time to talk in this Legislature.

Mr. Schmidt: It's a quiet experience.

Mr. Carson: It's a quiet experience. Lots of time to learn, so I really hope you enjoy that experience. It's always a pleasure and, of course, an honour to be in this Legislature, but don't sit here and give away your rights to represent your constituents, because you only have a set amount of time in here, and you are about to give up half, three-quarters of your ability to advocate on their behalf, so just don't do it. Do not support this motion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'd like to thank the hon. member for his comments. I might just be a little bit curious. Noting that the private members will have an opportunity to learn from the opposition over this term, I just might wonder how much you may have learned from the former Opposition House Leader during your time in government.

On Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any questions or comments for the member?

Are there any others wishing to speak to Government Motion 11? I'm interested to hear what the Member for Calgary-McCall has for us this morning.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to the standing order changes, but with respect to your comment about learning from the opposition, I have certainly enjoyed your comments here and there when you were in opposition. I think there are opportunities that government private members on that side will be able to learn because this is the first time in the history of Alberta that this opposition has a former Premier, 10 ministers, experienced people. They certainly are in a position to bring a lot of experience to the table.

With respect to rules, I guess, they exist to maintain orderly proceedings in this House. Over the last little while I think we heard frequently that we will bring civility to this place, we will bring decorum to this place, which clearly assumes that somehow there is some kind of incivility there, there's something that's not in proper order.

When I was looking at these changes, I was thinking about it from that lens, that somehow these changes are making this place more civil, bringing some kind of revolutionary changes to decorum. But when we look at it, the changes: from now on instead of desk thumping, we will be clapping. I was not able to find any kind of rationale for this change, that clapping is more civil than desk thumping. As far as I can tell, many parliaments across this country, across the Commonwealth, across this world: they do use desk thumping. I didn't see before in the procedures whether somewhere it was mentioned what members should do, whether they should clap or desk thump.

We were hearing from this government that they will reduce red tape. I think the first thing they did – they even tried to regulate how members should express their feelings within this House. They are bringing in more regulations, even how we should use our hands, whether we should clap or whether we should desk thump: so much red tape.

I think there is no rationale whatsoever, and desk thumping has been a long tradition in parliamentary democracies and Legislatures. This is just a preference of one person or group of individuals, who just prefer clapping over desk thumping, and that has been imposed on the entire Legislature, put into regulation, put into standing orders, and has created more red tape. I'm so not pleased with that, and certainly I will be opposing that as well.

The second thing which is really concerning is the procedure with respect to private members' bills. As many of my colleagues mentioned, with true private members' bills we have been able to make very important and significant changes in this province, changes that impact the lives of hundreds of thousands of Albertans. One example that comes to mind and I believe was mentioned by my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View is the creation of the office of the disability advocate, for such an advocate in this province. That idea came as a private member's bill from the then MLA for Calgary-North West. That office now has the ability to impact thousands and thousands of Albertans living with disabilities, their rights, their interests. They can be represented. They have a person. They have an office to go to if they have concerns with respect to any services they are getting from the government.

These private members' bills do play an important role, and the way it's now structured, they will go automatically to committee. That will certainly make it difficult for those bills to pass. We have seen even under the existing procedure, where one of my colleagues in the 29th Legislature, the MLA for Calgary-Currie, brought forward legislation essentially making discretionary and nondiscretionary trusts exempt for eligibility to the AISH program. That was an important bill that had the support of 3,500 Albertans, who signed a petition, and then he consulted with almost 500 Albertans here in Edmonton, in Calgary, in Lethbridge, and in many other places. Every MLA then heard from Albertans, but that bill died on the Order Paper, and later we adopted it as a government bill.

But the point I'm trying to make is that even under existing procedures it was difficult to get that private member's bill passed, and now it will pretty much make it close to impossible that any private member's bill will ever see the light of day or will ever pass through this Legislature. I think if we were to restore civility, I guess, we would create more opportunities for private members to bring forward good ideas, like creating a disability advocate, like exempting discretionary and nondiscretionary trusts, like creating safer spaces legislation that was created by a colleague in the last Legislature, the MLA for Calgary-Bow. But this is making it impossible to do. It's pretty much shutting doors on the private members, so I'm strongly opposed to these changes.

These changes, I think, will impact us on this side of the House, and they will also impact government private members because everybody sitting outside the executive are all private members. I can see many people who, when they were in opposition, were there in previous terms, like the MLA for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the MLA for Drayton Valley-Devon, experienced private members. They may have ideas. Sure, they didn't make it to Executive Council, but they can still use this opportunity to bring forward ideas that they may have based on their experience and make changes that will positively impact Albertans across this province. This change, I think, should not be supported by any private member across both sides of the aisles, and I think that as private members we should stand up for our rights so that we are able to represent our constituents and we are able to contribute to this province positively.

We will be opposing this change. We are very much opposed to this change, and I urge all private members to consider that and how it impacts your ability to do your job, how it impacts your ability to represent your constituents, how it impacts your ability to make lasting changes, like other private members made in the previous 29th Legislature.

Then there were changes made which give the House leader the ability to provide notices and change morning sittings, change the sitting schedule. I think we can all agree that this job requires managing of our schedules, managing of our time very carefully, and these rules that were there exist to provide us with that certainty so that we can manage our schedules accordingly. Now, if this regulation, these changes, were to pass, that creates a lot of uncertainty, that with a notice in the evening we will know whether we have the morning off or not. For all of us it's difficult to change a schedule on those short notices.

My colleagues have also mentioned how it impacts those MLAs who have young children and who have to arrange for babysitters and make all those arrangements, how it's impacting them. When we were in government, we had colleagues who have young kids, who gave birth as MLAs here. With a view to making our Legislature family friendly, with a view to making sure that all Albertans, women in particular, are able to participate in these processes, we brought in this morning sitting. We made changes with a view to making this Legislature, this workplace, a family-friendly workplace. Giving the Government House Leader that ability to change the schedules of all members like this, I think, is in no way a very civil thing to do, and I don't know how it restores decorum or brings civility to our Legislature. So we are very much opposed to this change as well.

Then, I think, a couple of other things. One was that these changes will also allow MLAs to abstain from voting. Many of my colleagues talked about this change and how important it is that when we come here, we be able to represent, we be able to weigh in on all issues that are brought before this House. We have seen this before, for instance, in the previous Legislature, when we brought in Bill 9. We saw the opposition walking out of the House nine times – 13 times, actually, just to correct the record. We believe that we live in a world where we represent constituencies where people have different views, varying views on different issues, but as their representative that's our job. That's what we signed up for. That's what we will do to the best of our abilities. We will represent you.

This one clearly just gives an option to MLAs such that if they don't want to weigh in on something, if they're not comfortable weighing in on something, instead of running out of the House, they can still sit here and exercise this rule, rely on this rule and not vote on issues that matter to Albertans. Certainly, it undermines the accountability of MLAs, the accountability of people representative to their electorate, that they can use this rule to say that they have this option. They have three options – yes, no, and abstain from voting – so they just exercise their, I guess, options available to them. As our leader said, this provides MLAs the opportunity to duck and dive on issues that they are not comfortable with. It removes accountability for MLAs, and this change should not be passed. Again I will ask all MLAs to consider that.

Lastly, I think I'll speak a little bit to introductions. I think introductions are important for many different reasons. This House, this Chamber, this Legislature belongs to Albertans, and on the face of it what this change says is that those who own this place, those who elect us and send us to this place, will not be allowed to be introduced or recognized who they are in this Chamber. It's absolutely disrespectful to Albertans, and it's ignoring those Albertans who sent us here. And especially the government, who talks about their mandate – I think it's disrespectful.

The Speaker: Questions and comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Government Motion 11. I know a lot of ground has been covered by my caucus colleagues on the motion already this morning; however, I wanted to add a few of my own remarks and speak in defence of traditions of this House that are being assailed by this Government Motion 11 and speak to what I believe is really the underlying motivation behind most if not all of these changes to our standing orders. All these unnecessary proposals stem from a need by the Premier to solve what he believes are his pet peeves by imposing an Ottawa-centric view of how he believes all Canadian Legislatures should work.

We on this side of the House believe that we should let the Parliament of Canada operate in its own way. Whether it's the carbon levy or the legislative standing orders, the ND Official Opposition in Alberta firmly believes that we should operate under Alberta rules that are traditional to our own House rather than importing them from Ottawa.

These measures, for example, that are designed to prevent floor crossings really are measures designed to protect the government caucus from themselves. The current makeup of the House, Mr. Speaker, leads me to say that it's very safe to project that every opposition member currently sitting would rather jump into a lake of fire than cross the floor to join the UCP, but given the history of fractionalization of the conservative movement in Canada, I can only say that it's probably motivated by a fear that the schism that continually plagues that movement and that party will return.

The UCP is made up largely of members who ran under a different banner, so it's a bit ironic. It feels like the Premier is worried that some of his members will break ranks and form their own party. Certainly, on this side of the House we have 24 members that stand together and will be doing so for the next four years and into the next election cycle.

Now, as far as the abstention issue, Mr. Speaker, it's pretty clear what's going on there. The UCP is really trying to hide their own members. They know there are members with hateful views amongst their ranks. There are very controversial positions . . .

Mr. Ellis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dach: . . . on gay rights and women's rights and who knows what else.

The Speaker: Hon. member, a point of order has been called. The government whip.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise, of course, under 23(h), (i), or (j). Pick one. I mean, obviously, what is being said by this particular member is completely insulting. It imputes false or unavowed motives to other members within this House. It is completely unparliamentary, and I ask that he withdraw those comments or, at the very minimum, apologize to this Chamber and to every member in this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Anyone wishing to comment?

Mr. Bilous: Sure. Mr. Speaker, this is not a point of order. This is a mere difference of opinion. We know that in the past former members of half of the party that is now the UCP did make significant comments that were very, very offensive, and frankly that's part of the reason why back in 2012 the Wildrose Party did not form government. They had quite a few members with some pretty abhorrent views. In regard to the comments that the Member for Edmonton-McClung made, in my opinion, it's a difference of opinion. This isn't a point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. While I would agree that the member is certainly sharing some very strong opinions and I would caution him that his language certainly could create disorder, I will at this point in time take a broad swath as to whether or not the exact language was in fact a point of order. But I would just caution the member to do just that: use caution when making allegations that may create disorder or language that in fact may create disorder. Having said that, I ask the member to proceed but to do so in a respectful tone that is likely to create order.

Debate Continued

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll continue briefly. I appreciate your sound advice.

I know that members opposite are sensitive to some of the accusations that are being made around their reasons for supporting Government Motion 11 to bring changes to this House which will affect the many traditional operations of the rules of this place, but it is still within my purview as a member, as a private member, to speak on behalf of my constituents as well as other MLAs in this House to defend the rights of private members to speak freely and express ourselves and not to silently accept the desire of this Government Motion 11 to place restrictions on my ability to operate as an MLA in defence of my constituents' directions.

The Speaker: Hon. member, just to provide some additional framework around my caution, it was not to say that you can't hold strong opinions. It was not to say that you can't defend your constituents. Having said that, when the Speaker provides some caution or, in fact, rules on a point of order, there are limits to what you are allowed to say. So I just want to be clear that you're not challenging the chair here in your remarks about what you are or are not allowed to do here in the Chamber. I'm an adamant defender of private members' ability to defend or speak on behalf of their constituents, but, to be clear, the Speaker can rule on language that is parliamentary or language that may create disorder, and that would fall under the purview of the Speaker.

Mr. Dach: Thank you for that clarification, Mr. Speaker. I simply wanted to say that I would encourage all members of this House to oppose Government Motion 11 and do so by voting against it, as I will and hope that all my other caucus colleagues and members of the Legislature do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there others who wish to speak to Government Motion 11? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'm very pleased to stand and speak against, really, an omnibus amendment to the standing orders that are presented here and that many of my colleagues have already spoken about. You know, certainly, our NDP caucus has a view on this, but other Albertans do also. A respected journalist for the Edmonton Journal actually called these standing order omnibus amendments: a solution for a problem that doesn't exist. There's no problem with this. This is fine the way it has run for many years. So I certainly concur with his views.

I guess I'd like to speak first on just the introduction of school groups. I'm going to go down memory lane a little bit. As a young grade 6 student in Harry Gray elementary in Valleyview, Alberta, my MLA for Smoky River was Marvin Moore. I don't know how many of you remember Marvin Moore, but he was my MLA for many, many mandates. Perhaps the MLA for Central Peace-Notley will know who he is. He introduced my class. We had a big class trip to come and to meet with our MLA. He was the minister of various things, too. I don't recall exactly now, but, I mean, I know that it was a significant opportunity for me to understand what this thing called provincial government is. It certainly stimulated my interest in it, and I know that it has stimulated many other students across the province.

I mean no disrespect to you, Mr. Speaker, but having your local MLA, who you know because they've been to your classroom, you know, you see them in the community, introduce you and having that relationship with them is far different than someone that they don't know. Certainly, your own constituents would know you. As the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview now I've been to many schools. Of course, we know that in grade 6 the curriculum talks about the Alberta government and helps students learn about that, stimulates their interest in it. I've had the honour to go to many schools in my riding and know that there's a keen interest and that when they get to come to the Legislature, sit in that gallery, and be introduced by their MLA, it's a significant event.

You know, of course, one of the things that disturbs me in our society, I guess, is just sort of the lack of interest in aspects of democracy, certainly in voting. We have low voter turnout. So, really, starting at a very young age, starting in grade 6, even younger, stimulates a student's interest in politics. I mean, it's so important for a healthy democracy to have high voter turnout, and, sadly, in Alberta it's in the 60s or it has been in the 50s or even the 40s. Taking away this can only erode that, and I certainly don't support it.

Besides my experience as a student myself, as a young girl in a small town in northern Alberta, when I came to Edmonton at 18 and went to university, got my bachelor of arts in political science and then graduated, I worked for Ray Martin. Ray Martin was the MLA for Edmonton-Norwood, of course, and I was honoured to be his constituency assistant. I, again, was introduced by him in the Assembly, and that was very important to me, and it was a way for him to thank me publicly. I think that, you know, having the Speaker introduce me wouldn't have had the same impact. Again, I just want to really say that there's a vast difference.

Certainly, as a social worker for 30 years – each year we have Social Work Week, and as a leader in my profession I would come with my colleagues, and many of us would be introduced to the Legislature. That meant a lot to us. Certainly, working as a social worker in Children's Services was another opportunity. Although it wasn't my local MLA, it was the minister, not the Speaker, and the minister was responsible and someone, of course, we worked more closely with. Again, it was that kind of acknowledgement that really made it worth while. Again, I'm bringing these examples up to you, Mr. Speaker, because these changes will take away that opportunity.

I guess, just to talk about this a bit more, my own children, my three sons, went to school here in Edmonton. When they were in grade 6, each of their classes came here, and they were introduced by their MLAs, and that was a proud moment for them. For many years, even, they would have pictures of their MLA and their class, that they had taken in the rotunda, on their bureaus, and they would talk about the time that they got to go to the Assembly and meet with their MLA. I remember MLA Kevin Taft introduced my two younger sons.

Again, it seems like a time-honoured tradition that's just being disregarded by this UCP government. As Keith Gerein said – I'll just say it again: a solution for a problem that doesn't exist. Actually, it really takes away some very important, I think, traditions of our House here.

I guess the next point I'd like to move on to is just the banning of desk thumping. Certainly, you know, the UCP government and the Official Opposition NDP have a different value system, I would say, a pretty clearly significant difference in world view. Certainly, that was illustrated this morning when we talked about Bill 1. We see things much differently compared to the other side of the House. That sort of contrast in values means that at times we're listening, both sides of the House, to things that we don't agree with. We don't see them as values we hold dear. When we do hear people speaking from our world view, our value system, then we do want to celebrate that.

Again, another time-honoured tradition in this House is that we do desk thumping, and that is something that has gone on in the Alberta Legislature for years and years and years. To just take that away, again, I don't see the point in that. There's no problem. It's looking for a solution to a problem that doesn't exist. So I just really challenge us moving forward on that.

The next one I'd like to talk about – and this, I feel, is really a very serious and substantial issue – is that the UCP government just wants to wipe away and not really have their members be accountable or have anybody in this House be accountable. They're wanting to allow members to abstain while seated in the Chamber with no record of them doing so. I mean, there are many, many key issues that we speak about here in the Assembly that – you know, our constituents don't have time to watch us on TV, to read Hansard, to know all that, so they may need to look back sometimes if they do wonder where we stood on an important issue. Then they can search it and find out what kind of a decision their local MLA made on a particular issue of interest to them, that's important to them, that they care about. Here we're just: "Oh, yeah. You don't have to even identify how you stand on particular issues."

I mean, we ran as candidates to be elected to represent our constituents to make a stand on issues, so I really question this. This seems to make no sense to me at all. Certainly, there are controversial issues, but we need to step up and be sure that we are representing our constituents and speaking to issues that are real. You don't get a free pass. It's really important that MLAs do take a stand and stand up. Again, it just sort of boggles the mind why that would be taken out of sort of a regular practice for MLAs.

The next piece of this omnibus amendment of the standing orders is about private members' bills being automatically referred to committee. Of course, this slows the process down, and we already know this is an issue in government. There are emergent issues that need to be dealt with in a timely manner. These private members' bills coming forward can significantly address key issues that are emergent, that are happening right now. This is always going to say: okay, they have got to go to committee, so how long is it going to take in committee? We can't respond in a timely fashion. I'm sure each of you has had constituents say to you: "It just takes so long. I don't have the patience for this." You know, as a legislator myself I know that I get frustrated, too, with how long things take. So why would we take more time?

And then I guess I'm just confused, too, because here, you know, Bill 4 was just introduced, the reduction in red tape. What's this doing? This is just creating another layer, a whole other committee structure for a private member's bill. Those two factors are incongruent. If indeed the UCP government wants to reduce red tape, then this is an example of a way to do that. I mean, it's not even red tape yet because it doesn't exist currently. I just really question that. I guess I believe the hon. members, leaders are logical thinkers, and it just doesn't follow logic. I really question why this is part of this omnibus amendment to the standing orders.

Some of my colleagues have suggested that it's just a way to control some of the backbenchers in the UCP government because they're concerned about some of the – I don't know – public ideas that have been showcased that may not be actually in line with what the party wants Albertans to know that they're about. But some of them have histories that are sharing something quite different, and that could be disturbing. I just question. Well, maybe it is kind of a darker reason for that. I mean, that's too bad because these are candidates that were vetted by the UCP party and should be representatives that they're proud to stand with, so I'm just questioning that. Is that the purpose that they're not being explicit about?

Anyway, certainly, using their own logic about the reduction in red tape, you know, it just absolutely doesn't make sense for them to be putting forward that private members' bills automatically – automatically – have to go to committee. I just want to reiterate that many issues are emergent and some things need to be dealt with in a very timely manner by private members. Again, as many of my colleagues have said, this does erode private members' any kind of sort of authority to have some leadership. Often when you're not in the Executive Council, it's harder to have your voice heard. This gives elected representatives some authority to do that, so it's very disturbing to me that this is being taken away.

These are some of the, you know, key issues that I have with this omnibus amendment to the standing orders, taking away some of the traditional parliamentary traditions that really add. I mean, I don't think anybody could question that having an opportunity to introduce stakeholders, family members, friends, supporters, student groups adds to our time here. It really has been a joy for me to be able to do that throughout my previous four years, and I just really see no point in that, additionally with the desk thumping. This is also a tradition that is time honoured. I think, as some people have said already, grade 6 students: when they see their MLAs thumping their desks, they enjoy that.

Thank you.

11:40

The Speaker: Questions or comments for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, anyone?

Seeing none, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to Government Motion 11. I want to start off my comments by, actually, congratulating the government on bringing forward one section of this government motion that I do in fact support.

Of course, you know, Mr. Speaker, that I'm probably one of the most agreeable and least partisan members of this House, so you wouldn't be surprised to hear me congratulate the government when they've done something right, and of course I'm looking forward to any piece of legislation that they'll do right. So far we're four bills in and they haven't done anything, but at least they've gotten something right with Government Motion 11, and that's particularly section 16, which says that Standing Order 59.02(3) is struck out and the following is substituted:

- (3) During consideration of interim, supplementary or main estimates, the following individuals may be seated at a committee or in the Assembly:
  - (a) officials of the Government, to assist the Minister whose estimates are under consideration;
  - (b) staff of the opposition, to assist Members who are participating in estimates consideration.
- (4) During main estimates consideration, officials of the Government may respond to questions from a committee at the request of the Minister.

I want to thank the government for bringing forward that section of this motion because as members here who have been in various previous Legislatures and have gone through the processes of interim and supplementary supply, we know that the ministers are presenting a very, I guess, high-level overviews of their budgets for their departments, especially in interim and supplementary supply, with few details. Having been in the position to defend the budget items that I was bringing forward in the interim and supplementary supply, I know that I was questioned by my critics and colleagues from the opposition as to what some of the details were. Even though I was very well prepared for those debates, I couldn't have all of the information at my fingertips, so it would have been useful in those situations to have government officials seated next to me here in the Chamber to talk about those things.

I think that by approving this part of the motion, we will substantially enhance the quality of debate around the finances of the province. So I'm looking forward to at least this portion of the motion being approved because, Mr. Speaker, everybody will be much more well informed as a result of the discussions that we're able to undertake with respect to interim, supplementary supply, and main estimates, both here in the Chamber as well as at committee.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it should come as no surprise to you that there's nothing else in this motion that I support, so even though the motion does contain that one section that I think is valuable and worth while, the rest of the motion should be rejected. In particular, I will, you know, underline the comments that my hon. friends here from this side have made about removing the introduction of guests from private members.

Certainly, I had the opportunity, of course, in the 29th Legislature to introduce a number of guests. One of the most memorable for me was the introduction of a very avid constituent, somebody that I consider a friend, somebody who writes to all of us here in this Legislature on a daily basis if not at a multiple times per day daily basis, and that was Brad Jones. Brad Jones, of course, takes the time out of his day to write to each and every one of us about the state of Alberta politics. He's not afraid to share his opinions on what the members of the Legislature should do on various matters that are confronting the province. It was a real privilege for me to be able to invite him as my constituent and introduce him to all of the members of the Legislature.

I got a chance to visit with Brad Jones during the election campaign. He came into my campaign office, and he wanted to thank me for being introduced to the Legislature. It was a very meaningful recognition of his interest and passion for Alberta politics. He shared that video of that introduction with all of his friends and family, as you can well imagine, and was very proud, as a person who's deeply engaged and deeply interested in the affairs of this province, that he was able to be introduced to all of the members of the Legislature.

I think it was valuable as well for all of the members of the Legislature to actually be able to meet face to face with somebody who has been so passionate and so vociferous about his opinions on the matters facing the province. To think that those opportunities are now going to be taken away from us is a real shame. It's a meaningful way to recognize people who have made significant contributions to the public life of this province who don't sit in this Chamber, and I think that taking away that opportunity to provide meaningful recognition to those people is a real loss to the public life of the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, what are we trying to save by reducing the time of introducing guests? We set aside a maximum of 20 minutes a day for Introduction of Guests. There have been a handful of days where we've gone over that time, and of course when we've gone over that time, we've unanimously agreed that we should extend the daily Routine so that we can introduce all of the guests that we've brought to the Legislature. It's surprising to me that members who have so eagerly agreed to and supported the introduction of guests in the past have now turned around and decided that that's no longer a function that this House should serve. I feel that that's really a shame, you know, given the small amount of time and the otherwise lack of accessibility or perceived lack of accessibility that the common person has to the proceedings here at the Legislature. I think it's a real shame to construct those kinds of barriers to public engagement in the province of Alberta.

I understand that it's a practice that's being imported from Ottawa. You know, the party chairman, of course, seems to think that the way Ottawa does things is the way that things should be done everywhere. Everybody here knows that, of course, in Ottawa it's not practical to be able to allow members to introduce guests because they have 300 and some MPs from all across the country. It would be impractical to allow all of those members to introduce guests throughout the day, but we only have 87 member here, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that I could provide you with some education. It really is no time at all given the considerable length of time that we spend here in this Chamber to take 20 minutes or so out of our day and introduce guests and provide that meaningful recognition.

Now on to the matter of desk thumping. You know, the party chairman and the Government House Leader, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre like to talk about decorum, which I find is incredibly ironic, especially given the propensity for the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, as you can well remember, Mr. Speaker, to make up points of order about me in particular. He did that a number of times in the 29th Legislature. He did that again earlier this week, obviously intending to smear my reputation and create disorder in this House. For him to turn around and say, "Oh, I'm a proponent of decorum," is a pill that is too big to swallow. What the desk thumping section of this motion is really intended to do is to shut down dissent.

11:50

Now, I know that the party chairman thinks that he's right and that he likes to run down people who disagree with him both here in the House as well as on social media and in the public. Of course, he also uses some rather clever tactics. He sends out his troll army on social media to smear people who disagree with him on his behalf. I think that there's nothing that has done more to lower the level of discourse in politics than for the party chairman currently here in Alberta to have come back from Ottawa and returned to the province of Alberta.

You know, for him to turn around and say that he is the champion of decorum is something that I don't believe and I don't think anybody in the province of Alberta believes either. It's really about shutting down dissent, shutting down the healthy functioning of democracy. We can't have a democracy if we're not allowed to show our dissent, express disagreement in a number of ways. In fact, sometimes the temperature in this House rises, Mr. Speaker, because some of the things that we're talking about are so disagreeable to some of the members that we can't help but show our vocal and passionate dissent on those issues. That's how a Westminster Parliament is designed to work, Mr. Speaker. You know this better than anyone. If this Assembly were designed to foster partisanship and create a unity of mind on issues, we wouldn't be sitting facing each other. We would all be sitting in rows and desks facing you, Mr. Speaker, which obviously I see is an exciting prospect for you, but it undermines the intent of the Westminster system.

This House is designed to create a clash of ideas and to foster discussion and debate. It only functions well when we can passionately disagree with one another and show that passionate disagreement in a variety of ways. You know, for the party chairman and the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to bring forward these kinds of motions that really undermine the functioning of a proper Westminster Parliament like this one is really shameful. I think all of the private members who, like yourself, Mr. Speaker, are passionate about defending the operation of a Westminster parliamentary system should vote against these kinds of measures.

Mr. Speaker, with the time that I have remaining, I just want to also move on to the section about sending all private members' bills to committee. Now, as has been mentioned by all of my colleagues here who have spoken to this issue, as private members you have limited opportunity to have a direct influence on the legislation in the province of Alberta. Private members' bills are really your only way to have your voice heard and have some kind of expression on what kind of legislation you personally and your constituents want to see made here in this Chamber.

It's ironic, I guess. You know we're debating Motion 11. On the Order Paper, of course, I'd draw everybody's attention to Motion 9, which, to be clear, is not under debate, but it recognizes the right of members to vote freely on all matters of conscience. So it's proposed that all private members will be able to vote freely on matters of conscience, but when it actually comes to writing down those matters of conscience in the form of legislation in a private members' bill, tough luck. We're going to send those things to committee, where they're going to die. We're really going to silence the private members' ability to bring forward and create a meaningful expression of those matters of conscience that they were elected on and that their constituents want them to represent in the Legislature.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, it's not for me. You know, like my colleagues have said, we don't have much to lose. It's the private members of the government caucus who have the most to lose by implementing this motion. As the Member for Edmonton-West Henday said: life as a government backbencher can be incredibly quiet. You will not have a lot of say or influence over the legislation that will be brought forward, and there will be times – and I'm sure that we are already in those times – when you're incredibly disappointed with the legislation that the government has brought forward. You know, perhaps you were expecting to repeal the carbon tax, and now you're asked to vote in favour of the legislation that actually imposes a federal carbon tax on the people of Alberta. Perhaps you thought that you were going to bring jobs back to Alberta, and now you're asked to vote for corporate tax cuts that don't create jobs – the Minister of Finance has actually confirmed that – and only serve to enrich the wealthy elite, that everybody in this House seems so eager to rail against. Perhaps you thought that you were voting against red tape. Of course, now we have legislation that creates more red tape.

So, private members, stand up for your right to have your voices heard with private members' bills.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, are there others wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo in the time we have remaining.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, will not be supporting what's before us in terms of changes to the Standing Orders. I want to focus on abstentions. I've been elected since 1995, 15 years with the city of Calgary. We voted on many things during the course of our deliberations over those 15 years, and none of those ballots had an abstention opportunity. It was either yes or no. Do you support it or not support it? Certainly, my constituents knew where I sat all the time. They knew what I said all the time because they could look up my record, and there were people who were doing that on a regular basis.

I look across, and I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross sitting in the Legislature here. His father sat in the Legislature for more than 20 years. His father never once had the opportunity to abstain from voting. It was yes or no, yea or nay. Now I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross will be able to duck and dive and weave and essentially not be counted if he chooses to not be counted. That's not why we are elected, Mr. Speaker. Our constituents put us in this Chamber to make a difference each and every vote that comes before us. It's not parliamentary, in my view, to duck and dive and to be unclear with your constituents.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that this should be a family-friendly place. The last government put family-friendly policies in place, and now those are being changed. It will make it more unfriendly for people who have responsibilities for children, people who need to schedule those things. It will make it more difficult to raise families. I can't think of anything we need less than to make things more difficult for women in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I know you're looking up at the clock, and I think it will probably gong pretty quickly.

I do think that these changes are not helpful. They should have gone to committee and let us as legislators decide what's in the best interests. This is heavy-handed. This is not needed. I'm disappointed at the government for bringing them forward. They shouldn't have . . .

The Speaker: Well, I hesitate to interrupt. The hon. member will have the additional time remaining, which is approximately 12 minutes, at a later time should he wish to use it.

According to Standing Order 4(2.1) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

1939 Royal Visit to Alberta

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we get to the introduction of visitors or guests, I would just like to take a brief moment, to take pause. This week marks the 80th year since the visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth to Alberta. This visit to Alberta was part of the first-ever visit to Canada by a reigning monarch.

Entering the province on May 26, 1939, the royal couple visited Medicine Hat, Bassano, and Calgary. An unscheduled stop at an encampment of the Blood, Blackfoot, Stoney, Peigan, and Tsuut'ina nations was enjoyed by the royal couple. A two-day break in Banff – I think that's something we can all agree to – provided a wonderful time for relaxation. Following a brief visit to Lake Louise on May 28, the King and Queen left for British Columbia. Returning on their eastbound return trip across Canada, their Majesties stopped in Jasper, Edmonton, and Wainwright.

On June 2 the royal couple arrived at the Legislature Building, where addresses by representatives of the province and the city of Edmonton were made on the front steps. The royal couple then entered this Chamber, where Members of the Legislative Assembly and other dignitaries were presented to the King and Queen.

In preparation for the visit a temporary fountain had been constructed in the rotunda of the Legislature. This fountain is the fountain that remains in place today.

Introduction of Guests

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you Fort Saskatchewan Christian school. These students are accompanied by their teachers, Natalie McIntyre and Carol Greeve, along with their chaperones: David Hiller, Pablo Papavero, Lisa Harris, and Jennifer Peters. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to rise in this House and introduce to you and through you students from Vauxhall elementary school, a school in my constituency. The students are accompanied by Principal Dale Cummings and a number of teachers, chaperones, and volunteers. I'd ask them now to rise where they are in the gallery and receive the warm welcome of this Chamber.

The Speaker: It won't be long now before one of those students has your job, good sir.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce students from Landing Trail intermediate school. This is the third day in a row that we've had students here from Landing Trail intermediate school. This group is part of the French immersion program there, and they are accompanied by their teacher, Jennifer Jones, and chaperones Janene Kargus and Heather Boucher. I would like them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce a special guest seated in your gallery, a constituent of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and someone many in this House know, Bill Smart. Bill is seated with his son Sheldon, his daughter-in-law Kirsten, and his grandkids Gavin and Isla. Bill, who was a member of the Legislative Assembly security services, is hanging up his blazer after 22 years of service.

But that is not his only service as a member of the LASS staff. Bill also served in the Legislature from 1980 to 1982 as part of his duties when he was a member of the Edmonton Police Service. In those days a constable was seconded to the Legislature on a full-time basis. So Bill served a total of 24 years here at the Legislature.

Bill's public service covers a much longer time span than that, however. Bill joined the Edmonton Police Service in 1971 and served with the service for 26 years. As a member of the Edmonton Police Service, Bill worked in a variety of positions, including response division, beats, traffic section, detention unit, warrant detail, communications, and a stint as an undercover operator for gambling operations.

Bill was not only a dedicated LASS member but also a true professional at all times. Bill had the ability to remember the name of everyone he came in contact with. This included everyone working at the Legislature. MLAs, custodians, GOA staff, pages, you name it: Bill knows everyone on a first-name basis. Bill was always the go-to guy for LASS members if they required advice on protocol or procedures in relation to the Legislative Assembly. What is very important to note is that during Bill's long service at the Legislature he always remained nonpartisan.

Bill will be greatly missed by all who had the pleasure of seeing him on a regular basis. Please give the traditional warm welcome to Bill and his family.

Thank you so much, Bill. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Heartfelt congratulations. It's a pleasure to see you here today.

Ms Fir: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise and introduce to the Legislative Assembly on your behalf someone very near and dear to your heart. This person knows you extremely well. In fact, they have even changed your diapers. I wouldn't say that she's your favourite for fear that other people like your youngest brother might be watching, but we all know the truth. It is my great pleasure and honour to be able to introduce to the Assembly a constituent of mine and your eldest – significantly eldest – sister, Naomi Pulliam. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly my guests sitting in the members' gallery. The next few days are important as Alberta marks Intergenerational Day on June 1, immediately followed by Seniors' Week, celebrated from June 2 to 8. I will have the opportunity to speak more about the importance of these two occasions in my ministerial statement. To help celebrate with us, I have invited representatives from civil society organizations into our Chamber today. The organizations here today are just a few examples of the key partners my ministry is working with to make life better for Albertans because when it comes to caring for elders, we all are caretakers.

I invite my guests to please stand when I call your name: Sheila Hallett, executive director of the Edmonton Seniors Coordinating Council; Donna Durand, executive director of the Alberta Council on Aging; Liz Tondou, executive director of Edmonton Meals on Wheels. [A cellphone rang] Last but not least is Nuel Han, an animator for the age of wisdom initiative within the Multicultural Health Brokers Co-op. I invite the Chamber to please join me in welcoming our guests with the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

Speaker's Ruling

Use of Electronic Devices in the Chamber

The Speaker: Members, as I mentioned last night – perhaps not all members were in the Chamber at the time – I'd remind all members that it's important that we turn our phones off or not bring them to the Chamber. I mentioned last night to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that on a go-forward basis if there was a similar sort of infraction, as we've just witnessed here – unfortunately, my eye did not catch the culprit – there will be a Speaker's fine that is implemented for the first offence, a $50 fine to the charity of your choice. Any additional infractions will be a $100 fine to a charity of the Speaker's choice. I encourage you to ensure that your mobile devices are off.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a very special guest – well, very special to me – my husband, Owen Young. He is a teacher, an assistant principal, a mentor of young leaders, an awe-inspiring parent, and the truest partner I could have ever imagined. I wanted to take this opportunity to introduce him personally as we know this privilege may soon be taken away from the members of this Assembly. I had hoped to introduce my two children in this Assembly one day this July when they weren't in school, but that opportunity may also be taken away from us. So I will take this chance now, so that their names get to appear in Hansard spoken by their mom, to say that Owen and I are parents to two compassionate, bright, and curious children, six-year-old Bodhi and four-year-old Leela. I'd like to ask my husband, Owen, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my dear friend Dani Lagemaat, who is seated in the gallery up over here. Dani and I studied political science together at the University of Lethbridge, and it is largely because of her and her excellent proofreading skills that I got through that. Dani, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has an introduction.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sadly, this is likely my last introduction in this House because of the government's plan to use its majority to stifle members' ability to introduce guests, a century-long Albertan practice. Nonetheless, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a friend and former colleague, Maria Fitzpatrick. Maria fought hard for the constituents of Lethbridge-East and was a strong advocate for economic diversification and renewable energy projects. I thank her for her service, and I ask that she rise to receive the warm welcome of the members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Riverview, please.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the constituency manager for Edmonton-Riverview, Ioana Spiridonica. One of the best decisions I made as an MLA was hiring Ioana. Her broad range of abilities means my constituency office runs smoothly. Additionally, her initiatives to ensure that I have all the information I need are greatly appreciated. As this is likely my last opportunity to make an introduction in this Chamber, I must add how sad and, frankly, disturbed I am that the UCP is ending this time-honoured tradition. I would ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-North has an introduction.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House my nephew Tayyab Parvez. Tayyab is visiting Edmonton from Grande Prairie, where he works as a city engineer in the oil and gas sector with a company called Seven Generations. I am very thankful to Tayyab for his volunteer work during my campaign whenever he visited Calgary. Tayyab lives in the riding of Grande Prairie, where he also helped the hon. member Tracy Allard during the campaign. May I ask Tayyab to please rise for the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: I might just remind all members that no matter what the circumstances might be, it would be inappropriate for us to use the name of another member as opposed to their riding name. The hon. Member for Grande Prairie would probably appreciate that as well.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Intergenerational Day Seniors' Week

Ms Pon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I stand to recognize two important milestones on our calendar. The first is national Intergenerational Day, which is celebrated June 1, and the second is Seniors' Week 2019, which runs from June 2 to 8.

Intergenerational Day is an opportunity to bridge the gap between generations. It is a day to celebrate intergenerational families. It is also a reminder that our communities are stronger when we learn from and work with one another.

In Alberta we set aside the first week of June to celebrate our most cherished citizens during Seniors' Week. Seniors have served their families, friends, and neighbours for a lifetime. They should always feel that they are valued members of their communities.

With the number of seniors on the rise, now more than 600,000 in Alberta, it is important that we take a moment to honour and highlight their contributions to our province. For instance, Alberta's seniors contribute 32 million volunteer hours in a single year. In economic terms, those volunteer hours are worth more than $680 million.

Intergenerational Day and Seniors' Week are also opportunities to raise awareness about the issues some seniors face such as social isolation and elder abuse. Our government believes in respecting and supporting Alberta seniors, their families, and caregivers by providing a variety of programs and services to help seniors continue living in their chosen communities. Today's seniors are actively engaged in their communities. They live longer, healthier lives while continuing to support their communities through volunteering.

Alberta seniors deserve our deep appreciation and thanks. They ignited our collective spirit of fearless optimism and innovation. Now we pick up the torch, while remembering and appreciating the pioneers who helped build Alberta into the great province it is today.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all Albertans to join me and the government in celebrating June 1 as Intergenerational Day and June 2 to 8 as Seniors' Week in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On June 1 we will be marking Intergenerational Day. Intergenerational Day is a wonderful opportunity to encourage sharing and mutual respect between generations. In addition, June 2 to 8 is Seniors' Week. This is an opportunity to honour and appreciate Alberta's seniors and to celebrate all the contributions seniors make to our province.

We all have seniors in our lives as parents and grandparents, mentors, friends, and colleagues. Seniors are important members of our families and communities. My parents have been blessed with longevity, and I'm so grateful. Dad is 90, and my mom is 82. According to recent statistics almost 20 per cent of Albertans over the age of 65 are active in the workforce, and nearly half of seniors age 65 to 74 volunteer in their communities. In fact, Alberta has the highest percentage of senior volunteers of any province in Canada.

Now, there are some who speak of the growing senior population in catastrophic terms like the grey tsunami. These are apocalyptic discourses, and they're wrong. Look around your community. Who are the leaders? Many seniors are in elected offices at all levels of government, serving their community with significant lived experience. Who is supporting the business community, nonprofits, and family members financially? Seniors. A personal example is my mom. She teaches English as a second language at 82 years of age. As a retired teacher herself she just can't stop. She loves it so much, and I'm so glad she gets to continue that. Yes, seniors are contributing to Albertans with their time, their creativity, and their funds.

All Albertans benefit when seniors are able to remain in their communities as they age. Research shows that more than 90 per cent of seniors live in their own homes. I'm proud of the work our NDP government did to support Albertans and to make sure that seniors age in dignity close to their loved ones. We passed legislation that protects seniors in the workplace by prohibiting discrimination based on age under the Alberta Human Rights Act. In Budget 2018 we protected the Alberta seniors' benefit so that thousands of seniors have support when they need it. Additionally, I'm so proud that we indexed the Alberta seniors' benefit so that those same benefits are not eroded by the cost of living. We also launched a home repair and adaptation program to help seniors age in their communities.

For more than 30 years Albertans have formally celebrated seniors. This week and every week I hope everyone takes a moment to spend time with a senior. Seniors built this province and continue to contribute to the vibrancy of our communities. Seniors' Week is an opportunity to recognize the seniors in our communities.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we revealed that this UCP government has caused such distress in our schools that principals are surveying parents for advice on where to cut funding. At William Reid school it's either cut music or commit to massive class size increases, and when asked for some glimmer of hope, this Education minister said that she will continue to provide the same messaging that she has to date. Seriously. To the Premier. The parents at William Reid do not need messaging; they need clear funding commitments from your government. Why won't you provide that?

Mr. Kenney: I thank the hon. the Leader of the Opposition for the question. Education is a priority for all members of this place and all Albertans. That is why we were clear in the recent campaign that this government will maintain or increase funding levels for education. The government has been in place for barely four weeks. I know the Minister of Education has been working with the Treasury Board and the Department of Finance to determine the reference levels for transfers to school boards in the upcoming year, and we'll make that information available as soon as final decisions have been made.

Ms Notley: Well, that sounds to me like maybe in due course. I'm not sure.

The fact is that school boards are generally supposed to be completing their budgets on this very day, May 30. Instead, parents are being asked to weigh in on a range of uncertain scenarios, and they say the minister should just get down to doing her job. To the Premier: if your Education minister won't do her job and make these decisions, maybe you could ask another member of your cabinet to step in and get it done.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the opposition leader that the hon. the Minister of Education is doing her job, a highly qualified minister, former chair of her school board, former president of the Catholic School Trustees' Association of Alberta, who is passionate about education, which is why she decided to run for this place. I can assure the hon. Leader of the Opposition that the Minister of Education is a strong voice for education around the cabinet table. Information will be forthcoming soon enough. We all know we need to work together to ensure quality education while bringing balance back to the province's finances after the massive NDP debt left to this government.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, school boards need direction on the level of funding that they will receive next September today. It's a simple issue. The minister has committed to providing them only with messaging and current funding maybe and maybe increasing funding and maybe funding SFF but maybe not and maybe funding enrolment, but we're not totally sure. She's failing profoundly, and she's creating chaos and uncertainty for Alberta kids. To the Premier: is that her fault or your fault?

Mr. Kenney: I completely reject the premise of the Leader of the Opposition's question, Mr. Speaker. If a crisis has been created, it was left by the NDP, which left this province with a fiscal train wreck, which took a $13 billion debt, turned it into a $56 billion debt, had us headed to a $100 billion debt, went through five credit downgrades, ran the largest per capita deficit in Canada, the worst fiscal record of any modern Alberta government. Now it falls to us on behalf of the Alberta people to bring balance back to our finances so we can afford education and health care in the future.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, when parents are told that their kids will have to compete with 30 others for their teacher's attention or that their music program is gone, they could not care less about stale election talking points like we just got. What they need is for this government to do its job: figure out whether they can afford to fund enrolment, whether they will fund enrolment, or whether they will make cuts. Do their job, give school boards certainty, stop the chaos: why won't they do that?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that the NDP does not understand the threat posed to education and other public services by uncontrolled government debt. As debt goes up, so does our obligation to pay interest to the bankers and the bondholders that the NDP locked us into. Every extra dollar going to bankers for interest payments is a dollar that cannot go to classrooms or to health care. So to ensure the long-term provision of those important public services, we need to work together with school boards to ensure fiscal discipline.

Ms Notley: Tax cut for wealthy corporations: right now. Certainty for our kids: in due course. That is what these guys care about, and just that.

You know what, let me maybe try the Education minister. Getting funding for our most vulnerable students, our special-needs students, is important. Now, I agree with that statement. But you know what? It's not my statement. It's the Minister of Education's statement in 2017. Yet her failure to make a decision right now is putting those very students at risk. Why won't she make a decision? Why will she not do her job and tell the school boards what funding they're going to get?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP increased spending by hundreds of millions of dollars in order, ostensibly, to reduce class sizes. But guess what happened? Class sizes went up under the NDP's watch. This is a party over there that apparently has learned nothing from their complete rejection by Alberta voters. Alberta voters want not just to focus on how much we're spending but on how much we're getting from that spending, which is why the Minister of Education will be launching an examination of where the money went and why it resulted in higher class sizes.

Ms Notley: Students need action now, not examination and political ploys two years down the road.

The current Education minister also had this to say in 2017, and I quote: it seems to be increasing – mental health, that is – and, unfortunately, the resources haven't kept pace, so that's something I feel strongly we need to advocate as a board for. But here's the thing. By failing to fund enrolment, student mental health programs will have to be cut. So has she changed her mind, or does she just not care anymore about protecting student mental health programs?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we reject the premise of the opposition leader's question. I'm pleased to announce to this House that the single largest additional spending commitment in our party's platform was for mental health. We've appointed an Associate Minister for Mental Health and Addictions, who will be working with all stakeholders, including those in the school system, to ensure that necessary supports are in place for Albertans, including students, so that they can get the help that they need if they're facing mental health challenges.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition for your third set of questions.

Conversion Therapy Working Group

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, on Monday the media reported that the Health minister had cancelled the conversion therapy working group established by our government. The minister then took to Twitter to discredit the reporter who wrote the story, only to be proven wrong by a statement provided by his own office. It's now Thursday, and the minister still isn't able to tell Albertans whether the working group is still standing. To the Premier a simple question: does the conversion therapy working group still exist, and will it still be able to carry on with its important work?

Mr. Kenney: First of all, it's important to underscore that this government opposes abusive or coercive practices such as conversion therapy. We understand that the NDP, after four years of doing nothing on this issue, decided in the eleventh hour, before an election, to appoint an ad hoc group, including two NDP members, with no ministerial order, no order in council, and as far as I understand, no actual budget. Mr. Speaker, the minister encountered this ad hoc task force, has decided to meet with its members to take onboard their input, and I'm glad he's doing so.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. Yesterday the minister met with two members of the working group, including the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. Later, when questioned about the meeting, the minister said that he would get back to members in, quote, due course. In fact, he rattled off the same one-sentence talking point at least nine times. The minister's behaviour was disrespectful to the victims of the psychological assault inherent in conversion therapy. So to the Premier: will you direct the minister to apologize to those victims and provide real answers on the future of the working group and the conversion therapy ban?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable to see the NDP reduced to trying to turn this difficult and sensitive issue into a political football. The reality is that the leader of the NDP told the public that her government would be coming forward with legislation on this issue in the fall of 2018. No legislation was forthcoming, none after four years. No real, formal task force or inquiry or Legislature committee was tasked with this issue. An eleventh hour ad hoc group with a couple of NDP MLAs was not a serious response.

2:00

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much. In fact, the working group was specifically tasked by our government to develop the most effective means of executing an outright and effective ban on conversion therapy for implementation this year. That was what we were planning. Now they've been left in limbo, and they're going to the media to find out what their mandate is. Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: will he commit to banning conversion therapy before the year is out even if it requires bringing in legislation this year?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, again, it's unfortunate that the opposition is trying to turn this into a point of partisan contention. The reality is that they were in office for four years, and the answer from them was no. The answer from the NDP was no to legislation. Four years and they did not bring forth such legislation. For the first three of those four years the former Health minister said that there was effectively no need for it because this was not a practice happening in Alberta. Now, perhaps the NDP could inform us as to why they decided not to bring forward such legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Motor Dealers' Association of Alberta

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last September the now Premier met with Alberta's Motor Dealers' Association. The MDA then reported it had promised to raise $1.1 million to assist the UCP third-party advertising campaign – think about that one for a moment – in exchange for the UCP pledging to roll back consumer and worker protections. Yesterday this government introduced legislation designed to roll back regulations. To the Premier: is his red tape reduction bill payback for a million dollars in PAC donations, or will he commit today that the consumer protection for Albertans purchasing vehicles will remain in place?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, our red tape reduction action plan and legislation is this government keeping our promise to Albertans to liberate our economy, to go from being the most overregulated economy in Canada to the freest and fastest moving. Why? So that we can liberate job creators to do what they do best, create employment, a critical part of our job-creation strategy. They left a jobs crisis behind. We're going to cut red tape in order to create good jobs in Alberta.

Ms Notley: So is he going to then be liberating Albertans from protection from car dealers who otherwise take advantage of them? Is that what we're liberating Albertans from?

Regardless, the president of the MDA wrote to potential funders that he had been promised he would get to meet with the UCP transition team to provide input. A month ago this same president registered as a lobbyist. To the Premier: have any members of your transition team or any staff in your office or you met with the president of the Motor Dealers' Association since the election?

Mr. Kenney: I shook Mr. Ducharme's hand with that of dozens of other people at the reception following the throne speech. Apart from that, I've not met with Mr. Ducharme, and I'm not aware of any members of my staff having done so.

Mr. Speaker, I respect the role that auto dealers and other businesses play in our communities to create jobs and opportunity. You know, all through rural Alberta the auto dealers are often the number one sponsors of local sports teams and charities, and the NDP runs them down, just like they run down the restaurant owners, just like they run down our oil companies, just like they run down business in general. We understand that we need to work with the private sector to create good jobs for Albertans.

Ms Notley: Well, last week we heard that job creation should be done on the back of workers, and apparently now we're going to do job creation on the back of Alberta's consumers.

You know what? The letters written by the MDA and the subsequent actions of the PAC they created have been referred to the Election Commissioner for investigation because they bragged openly about plans to use banned corporate donations from car dealers to work directly with the UCP in their campaign. Will the Premier commit today that neither he nor his members of government will have any more meetings with these guys until the Election Commissioner's investigation into breaching the act is complete?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that there is an investigation, and Albertans are free to speak to representatives in government, just like the NDP-affiliated union bosses spoke to them all the time, informing the NDP government's job-killing policies, the same union bosses who spent collectively millions of dollars in attack ads against this party. I'm pleased to say that the NDP union bosses failed. We ended up with the largest democratic mandate in Alberta history.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie.

Support for Persons with Disabilities

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Minister of Community and Social Services. This week is National AccessAbility Week, which is dedicated to promoting accessibility and inclusion for people with disabilities. This is an important issue to all Albertans, and I know that within my constituency of Grande Prairie residents would appreciate hearing from this government. Can the minister please update this House on the government's commitments to improve accessibility across Alberta?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to start by saying to the Member for Grande Prairie that our thoughts and prayers are with her and all other communities across the province who have been impacted by the wildfires.

It is National AccessAbility Week, a time to celebrate the invaluable contributions that the roughly 400,000 Albertans with disabilities, both visible and invisible, make to their communities and our province as a whole. I wish everyone in this House and across the province a happy National AccessAbility Week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the UCP campaigned on ensuring that every Albertan should have a life of dignity and equal opportunity and given that this government has committed to making life better for all Albertans, can the minister advise this House on what specific steps are being taken to benefit Albertans with disabilities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are taking meaningful action to improve the supports and services provided to persons with disabilities. These steps include improving the PDD program; restoring the wellness, resiliency, and partnerships program for those with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. In addition to establishing four new family-governed resource centres to serve St. Paul, Grande Prairie, Edmonton, and Medicine Hat, we will also invest in assisting Albertans with accessing a registered disability savings program and grants to help in saving to care for a loved one with a disability.

The Speaker: The member.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister: given that our government is committed to getting Albertans back to work and given that the constituency of Grande Prairie, my constituency, has certainly experienced job losses in recent years, can the minister please update the House on how the government will ensure that persons with disabilities are included in that plan?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, our government believes that all Albertans should have access to equal opportunities regardless of ability. In addition to our job creation plan, we will partner with community organizations and business leaders to increase employment opportunities for persons with disabilities like abilities at work and the Rotary employment partnerships, which we will support with $5 million per year in additional funding. In addition, we are committed to making the government of Alberta a leader in hiring persons with disabilities.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Consumer Protection for Motor Vehicle Owners Ethics in Government

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I was proud to play a role advocating for and delivering on changes to consumer protections during my time in the government caucus. Now that our leader has established that the Motor Dealers' Association donated large sums of money to this government's PAC in a shady deal to roll back consumer protections, to the Minister of Service Alberta: will you commit in this House today to keeping the consumer protections we introduced for vehicle purchasing and maintenance? Why, or why not?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta is rising.

Mr. Glubish: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to point out that third-party advertisers are strictly regulated by Alberta election law in their activities, fundraising efforts, and required disclosures. Furthermore, the member opposite knows full well that third-party advertisers in Alberta are independent from political parties.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Motor Dealers' Association appears to be lobbying directly for changes to vehicle standards and given that any changes to these rules would be highly suspect with a pending Election Commissioner's investigation into the relationship between the MDA and the government PACs, will the Minister of Transportation commit to making no changes being sought by the MDA until the commissioner's investigations have concluded?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking the government to not improve any rules. Please.

Of course, with the bill that he introduced in the last session of the Legislature, he should be embarrassed to be talking about this subject. His bill would have harmed the industry without protecting consumers. Perhaps he should go back and do his homework before the next time he picks up a microphone.

Mr. Carson: I don't get embarrassed by strengthening consumer protection, Mr. Speaker.

Given that this UCP government could use a crash course in democracy ethics and given that this UCP government has removed the position of minister responsible for democratic renewal, that was once held by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods under our government, to the minister of labour: can you advise this House on who is now responsible for democracy and ethics in your government, and what is being done to teach ministers about what is and is not appropriate?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader is rising. [interjections]

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to see the opposition so happy to see me this afternoon. It must be Thursday in this place.

The reality is, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP continue with this ridiculous tactic of trying to make fear and smear. You know, Team Angry over there. [interjections] It's disappointing . . .

The Speaker: Members, we heard your question. We will hear the minister's answer.

An Hon. Member: In due course.

The Speaker: No. Right now.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Again, Mr. Speaker, you can see the behaviour of the NDP. It's ridiculous. This is a game. We're not going to engage in that. We're focused on defending Albertans. They can continue with their game. It's not helping the people that I got sent here to represent. My colleagues and I are going to represent Albertans. [interjection]

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Buffalo will keep his comments to himself while the Speaker is on his feet.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Corporate Taxation and Job Creation

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, under the NDP government Albertans continued to pay the lowest taxes in Canada, with no PST, no health care premiums, and no payroll tax. Albertans pay $11 billion less in taxes than the second-lowest tax jurisdiction. Moshe Lander, a senior lecturer in economics at Concordia University in Montreal, does not believe that the risky corporate tax cut proposed by this government will result in job creation. In fact, Lander said, quote: it's a mistake to say that it's a job-creating decision. End quote. To the Finance minister: will you admit that you are making a $4.5 billion gamble with no guarantee that jobs will be created?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, the previous NDP government raised taxes by 20 per cent. This and other job-killing initiatives caused tens of billions of dollars of investment to leave the province and, with it, jobs for Albertans. The corporate tax reduction is a key piece of our plan to return investment to Alberta and get Albertans back to work.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that your arguments are based on an ideology peddled by economists in a race to the bottom and given that this idea has been tried in Kansas and other U.S. states and has failed to result in increased economic activity or significant job creation but has resulted in fewer public services, increased debt, and additional fees for government services, to the same minister: how many failed experiments does the Finance minister need before he realizes that most corporations will pocket the tax savings instead of creating new jobs?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, it's pretty rich for members opposite, who while in government presided over the largest loss of investment in recent history and, with it, massive job losses, to be lecturing us on economic policy. We are implementing the plan that we put before Albertans, a plan to attract investment and create good jobs for Albertans.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that most businesses look past tax rates and often look for access to talent, affordability, strong health care, and high-quality education in making their decisions on where to invest, will the Finance minister come clean to Albertans and admit that their corporate tax giveaway will result in larger class sizes, longer wait times, and a lower quality of life being a disincentive for companies to locate in Alberta?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, the previous government put us on a fiscal track that simply wasn't sustainable. We were headed to $100 billion of provincial debt, and as we went in that direction, we simply could not sustain high-quality services that Albertans expect. This government is going to change the course. We're implementing very clear policy initiatives such as the corporate tax reduction policy, that will attract investment, return wealth to this province, and create jobs for Albertans.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-East has a question.

Support for Seniors

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As of 2017 Canada's seniors population is now a larger population than that of children. Canada's seniors population is now over 14 per cent of the country's population, and in the next 10 years we'll exceed the number of facilities that are available for them. My constituents are eager to know what our government is doing to support our elders. Can the Minister of Seniors and Housing please inform this House what the government's plan is to support these crucial members of our communities?

The Speaker: The minister of seniors.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-East for your question. To set the stage for what our current status is and what the future looks like, our 605,000 seniors make up 13 per cent of Albertans. By 2035 it is estimated to double to more than 1 million and hold 19 per cent of Alberta's population. This government will work closely with the stakeholders to make sure that seniors' concerns are heard and also support aging safely independently.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many seniors' facilities are in desperate need of renovation, repairs, and upgrades in order to continue to serve one of our most vulnerable communities, many of my constituents are rightly concerned about the long-term care of their friends, families, and neighbours. Can the Minister of Seniors and Housing please inform this House what the government's plan is to help fund these necessary facilities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Affordable housing is a seniors' issue for Albertans. We are pursuing public-private partnership options to bring private-sector capital in to help build homes. The NDP government had four years to address this issue, yet there are more than 4,800 senior households on the wait-list to access the nearly 25,000 senior-focused housing units in Alberta. Our government is committed to do better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. What is the government's timeline on providing these services?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government's plan is to grow Alberta's economy, create prosperity, and strengthen the social programs that we all value. We are all working to make Alberta the best place in North America to live, work, start a business, and to retire. Work is already under way to evaluate and enhance the current supports in place for seniors. We will identify the key priorities for supporting seniors as they age and create an action plan as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Nurses' Contract Negotiations

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current contract between Alberta Health Services and United Nurses of Alberta says that wages for the upcoming year need to be bargained. One of the very first acts of this new government was to cancel the wage negotiations clearly laid out in that contract. Cancelling negotiations that were part of an agreed upon contract disrespects the rule of law. To the Premier: why were some of your very first actions of your government to potentially violate the rule of law?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, the previous government has left us in a serious fiscal mess, quite frankly. We're committed as a government to deliver high-quality services to Albertans and also bring this province to balance. We have the MacKinnon panel that's right now studying a fiscal path forward to balance, and we have delayed our budget deliberations until this fall. We simply requested a delay in arbitration so we can fully understand the best pathway forward.

Ms Gray: Given suspending contractually agreed upon wage negotiations so that the new government can examine expenditures is roughly the same as a homeowner refusing to pay their bills because they haven't gotten around to writing the family budget and given that Albertans expect their government to be able to walk and chew gum at the same time, to the Premier: why is your government refusing to participate in wage negotiations that they are contractually obligated to be part of?

Mr. Toews: Again, Mr. Speaker, we believe that it's in the best interest of Albertans that we move forward with a plan, with a competent plan. Right now we're consulting all stakeholders, including the unions, on just delaying arbitration so that we can ensure that we have the best plan forward for Albertans.

Ms Gray: Given that the labour minister was recently a member of Alberta's Labour Relations Board, he would know that the government's actions in this matter may very well qualify as bad faith negotiations and given that the Finance minister has confirmed repeatedly that the government directed Alberta Health Services to halt negotiations, will the Premier admit that his government has intentionally interfered with wage negotiations that they were contractually obligated to hold?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, again, we have simply requested a delay in arbitrations. We're consulting all parties and working with them in good faith to delay the arbitration, again, so that we can build the best path forward for Albertans. Albertans have put their trust in this government. We take that trust seriously, and we will not spend irresponsibly while we ensure high-quality services to Albertans.

Red Tape Reduction Strategy

Mr. Nielsen: This Premier says he's on a mission to cut red tape. He's planning to give his associate minister the ability to create regulations, amend regulations, and set up a series of panels to evaluate regulations. Sounds like the minister of red tape is creating a lot of red tape himself. Still, with very little detail in his red tape reduction plan, one really has to wonder where the Premier and his minister will start. Yesterday the Premier said a whopping 17 regulations had been cut. Can the associate minister list a couple of his favourites?

Mr. Hunter: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to congratulate you on your election, and I know that with your rapier wit and your extensive knowledge of House proceedings you will serve this Chamber very well.

Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the member that our party ran on a commitment to get Albertans back to work and to reignite our province's economy. This is one of the four major planks in our strategy to reignite the economy and free up our job creators to do what they do best, create jobs. Albertans can expect us to be laser focused over the next four years to accomplish just this.

Mr. Nielsen: I guess there was a little red tape in the answer.

Given that this government has a goal of cutting regulations by one-third and given that it has yet to define what they view as red tape and given that there are important regulations requiring sterilization of surgical equipment and inspections of restaurants for cleanliness – dirty scalpels and spoons aren't good for anyone, Mr. Speaker – and given that this new legislation has very little in the way of accountability, to the associate minister: can we ensure Albertans' concern about health and safety will be protected from your big scissors?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of our made-in-Alberta red tape reduction action is to have a strategy to get Albertans back to work. Over the past four years Albertans have struggled under some of the worst unemployment numbers in recent history. We've been hired to do a job, and we're not going to let Albertans down.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government and its Premier have a history of cutting shady backroom deals and given that Albertans have a right to know where this government's red tape cutting mission will go, to the associate minister: will you commit to this House to publicly disclose the regulations that you are considering chopping before you cut them, and if not, why not?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, on April 16 Albertans made a bold declaration that they want a government focused on jobs and the economy. Our mantra is that we are open for business. These aren't hollow words. We have a plan to get Albertans back to work, and the red tape reduction strategy will deliver great results by freeing up our innovators and job creators to do what they do best, create jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Highway 19 Safety

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 19 connecting the town of Devon with the QE II and highway 60 desperately needs to be twinned. On average in three out of every four years someone dies on this 12-kilometre stretch of road. The previous government dragged their heels on the twinning of highway 19, and my constituents are concerned that the highway will miss another construction season and remain dangerous for yet another year. Can the Minister of Transportation tell my constituents what appears to be the holdup? Is it land acquisition or some other issue?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the hon. member that highway 19 is on our radar. If he or anyone was to drive down the eastern portion between the QE II and range road 253, you would see that work is substantially complete, and we hope to wrap that part up this summer. Between range roads 253 and 261 planning and design work is under way, and from range road 261 to highway 60 land negotiation and the moving of utilities are under way.

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that highway 19 has been a major issue in my constituency for many, many years and given that the previous NDP government apparently dragged their heels on land acquisition, causing further delay in the twinning of highway 19, can the Minister of Transportation tell my constituents how the government will improve road safety on highway 19 until twinning is completed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, I want you to know that the department has recently completed major upgrades and widening on the QE II between 41st Avenue and highway 19, which should significantly improve safety. The part that is widened now should be safer. Outside of that, I'd just have to say that during construction we depend upon speed reductions, law enforcement, signs, and the good behaviour of drivers, and I would encourage all drivers to be cautious on that road.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I talked to one constituent the other day that has had to go into therapy as a result of witnessing a horrific crash just in front of her on highway 19 this past year and given that the safety of my constituents is directly linked to the twinning of the highway and given that the town council of Devon has worked hard to try and bring this issue to a successful completion over many years, will the Minister of Transportation commit that he is willing to sit down with the town of Devon and hear first-hand the concerns of my constituents?

Mr. McIver: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would be very happy to sit down with the town of Devon, and I would invite the hon. member to work with my office and schedule that meeting. Beyond that, collisions are serious, and I would encourage all members of this House to spread the word that Albertans need to drive safely. Despite the fact that the roads might be drier and bare during the summer, risks still exist, and I would encourage all Albertans to look after one another on the roads and look after our workers that are out there too, please.

Northern Alberta Wildfire Update

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday a public emergency order and a disaster order were declared as a result of wildfires burning in northern Alberta, 10 of which are considered out of control. I'd like to thank the folks at the Provincial Operations Centre and the staff at the Alberta Emergency Management Agency for their dedication and hard work. I'd also like to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry for their work. To the minister: can you provide this House with an update on the wildfire situation, which, as we know with the yellow skies outside, has been serious?

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much for that very important question. I would like to echo what the member opposite said, to thank all the wildland firefighters, the evacuation experts that have been doing an excellent job. Regarding this fire, it is at 150,000 hectares already, and it had a major growth last night and yesterday. It is a very active fire, and it is something that officials are constantly working on.

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, given four new wildfires in the last 24 hours and that many people in communities in northern Alberta, including the town of High Level and parts of Mackenzie county, Dene Tha' First Nation, the communities of Bushe River, Meander River, and Chateh, Paddle Prairie Métis settlement, Keg River, Carcajou, Wabasca, the Bigstone Cree Nation, and Chipewyan Lake, are all under emergency evacuation orders, to the minister: can you please update this House on what supports are available to folks who've been evacuated from these communities, and in particular can you comment and confirm that all of these supports are available equally to First Nations communities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs is rising.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I can inform this House that our department together with all of our emergency responders as well as our emergency workers have been working around the clock to make sure that all of our evacuees in all of those communities are safe. I can further report that they are getting all of the help that they need at this point in time, and we are keeping a close eye on all that is going on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dach: We'll be monitoring the situation.

Mr. Speaker, given that there are 29 wildfires currently burning in Alberta, first responders and wildfire crews are working around the clock to keep our communities safe. However, some communities face imminent risk of burning. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: can you please update this House on which communities are right now at risk of being inundated by fire?

Mr. Dreeshen: Again, thank you very much for the very important question. The town of High Level: there's been tremendous work, and it is actually protected very well by a berm. That happened a few days ago. The town of La Crête is probably the closest one to an active fire right now, and as was done in High Level, the town of La Crête is also having bulldozers going around the clock, making sure that that town and that area will remain safe.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a question.

Member for Calgary-East
