It's extra baffling to me because, you know, we've heard from the Member for Calgary-Bow a number of times. We've also heard from the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain about the desire of the members opposite to raise the status and esteem of the skilled trades. Absolutely that's a goal that we share, Madam Chair, but we have to recognize that a lot of people who are engaged in the skilled trades work are also working on a seasonal basis. They're going from project to project. They can't rely on having work every day of the working week every week of the year. There are often extended times when they're waiting for the next project to start up or the next contract to kick in, and they have to provide for themselves and their families with the savings and the time that they've banked from the last project. At least when we had the ability to bank overtime at the overtime rate, that provided, like I said, those workers with that cushion to look for the next job without being afraid of how they were going to provide for themselves and their families.

If we want more people to go into the skilled trades, which is the express goal that the members opposite have stated, then we should create the working conditions that would allow people to look into the trades and say: "You know what? I can see a future for myself and my potential family in the skilled trades because I know that I will be able to go from job to job, save up the time and the money to carry me through those days when I'm not working, and able to still live comfortably."

I can tell you from my own personal experience, Madam Chair, that when I was Minister of Advanced Education, I talked to a lot of students who were looking at what their future careers would be, and that was one of the things that they raised. It was often people like me, who were raised by parents who were working in the skilled trades, who saw their parents having to sit at home because they were waiting for the next project and the next contract to come along, and they saw the anxiety on their parents' faces because they weren't sure how they were going to make ends meet while they were waiting for the next job to come along. Lots of students told me, you know: "I don't want to live that way. I want to be able to have the kind of job security that I and my family can rely on and not have to endure that anxiety, that stress of not knowing when the next paycheque was going to come in and how I'm going to provide for myself and my family and make ends meet."

I would encourage the members opposite to seriously consider the impacts that taking away banked overtime at the overtime rates will have on the considerations that students right now are making about what careers they want to go into once they leave school. Certainly, if they want to attract people . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to spend a bit of time talking again about Bill 2, a bill to pick your pockets and take money away from average Albertans, particularly those working in the trades and those working precarious labour. I know that we spent the night here in the House taking away rights from public service employees, so I'm not surprised that we're now attacking private employees in our work. Very discouraging for all of us here in the House who would like to see the conditions that both public and private employees work under be the best they possibly can be and not create undue stress for them.

I've had a chance to speak to a couple of these issues in the past and bring up concerns. I know I spoke last time a little bit about my concern about the nature of the banked overtime and the fact that in the trades that work is often precarious, as the previous speaker has mentioned, and that having banked overtime is a tool that is available to workers to be able to be responsible and take care of their future needs, like you do when you save money for a pension or you put money aside for a family vacation or put money aside for those emergencies like the washing machine breaking down or your car needing repairs. One of the tools that workers have been using is the ability to bank some overtime so that when the inevitable occurs and the work that they have dries up, especially in difficult economic times as we've experienced in the province of Alberta for the last few years, they're able to use this technique to kind of stretch out the comfort zone that they have for responding to the vagaries of life.

Having taken an opportunity to speak to that a little bit in the past, I'd like to move on and talk a little bit about another part of the legislation, that allows a lower rate for students who are under the age of 18 to be paid, who are in school, dropping the minimum wage from $15 an hour to $13 an hour. Again, I'm very concerned about how this causes a disruption in the predictability of work and really interferes with the ability of students to be thoughtful and thinking of the future. Just as the banked overtime was like putting some money aside for life that was approaching, the same thing for the minimum wage. It's often used by students to prepare themselves for the next step in life.

3:50

I know that I had many opportunities to work as a student. I think my first job, my first paid job outside of the home, was actually when I was eight years old, working delivering flyers in our community with my older brother. Subsequently, of course, I went on to spend some time delivering newspapers, as many people, I'm sure, have done here in this House. I happened to pick up jobs in junior high, both at the local drugstore and at the local Red Rooster store, which I'm not sure continues to exist anymore in the province of Alberta.

Ms Hoffman: I think there's one in Sherwood Park.

Mr. Feehan: There's one in Sherwood Park still. Okay. We don't see them too often. But all of those jobs, I admit, when I was a young man did not require me to put a roof over my head or food in my mouth, so I used them in order to prepare in advance for the future. I used them to make decisions about places that I could go and do things that were important to me. Having put that money aside, it also allowed me to make choices around the type of work I did. I think that's really important because one of the things that I did in high school was make a decision that I was going to be working in the field of human services for my summer jobs, part-time jobs. I understood that that meant I would be paid less than many of my peers who were working in other more lucrative areas of employment and were able to get more than $15 an hour.

In fact, I just want to point out to the House that in the 1970s, when my two older brothers were lifeguards for the city of Edmonton, they were earning more than $15 an hour at that time. On the other hand, I was earning initially around $2.50 an hour for the work that I was engaged in, but it meant that I also, because I was able to take that money and save that money, was able to make some choices.

One of the choices that I made was, in the summer after grade 11 – after grade 10 first, I guess, 10, 11, and then after first-year university; that's right – I made the choice to work at Camp He Ho Ha, Camp Health, Hope & Happiness, a camp designated for people with disabilities to come and enjoy the summer, but in a place where the particular needs that they had with regard to the accessibility of their wheelchair or canes or crutches or attendants to medical issues such as diabetes or cerebral palsy or other kinds of issues that may have come up for them allowed them to enjoy the same things that so many of us enjoy in the summer: getting out into the fresh air, getting out onto the water, learning some crafts, learning some activities such as riflery, which I taught, and archery, which I taught, and those kinds of activities. But the reality was that when you worked at Camp He Ho Ha, you knew that you were actually not going to be earning a lot of money.

At the time I was able to survive because I happened to have parents that were more than prepared to make sure that I had a roof over my head and food in my mouth. The money that I earned at places like the drugstore and at the Red Rooster I was able to put aside, and then when I worked over the summer at Camp He Ho Ha, I was able to say, "Okay; I'm not earning as much as I could be earning by going somewhere else," as some of my peers did, to some of the major corporations to get summer jobs. As a result, I could make a choice that was beneficial not only for myself, because it was an incredibly fantastic experience and really helped me to grow up and to learn some good things about the universe, but it also meant I was able to contribute and work in a place where people who are most vulnerable were able to enjoy all those things that make Alberta a wonderful place to live.

The thing that concerns me now is that if you reduce the wages for people who are under the age of 18, as I was for all of these times that I have mentioned, then you will be putting them in a place where they cannot make those kinds of choices. Because they're earning less money, they cannot put money aside. Therefore, when it comes time to find a new job, the only choice they have available to them is to try to find work that will pay them the maximum amount. Because they haven't been able to put anything away, they can't go to a place like Camp He Ho Ha and say, "Look, I'm prepared to work for less; I'm prepared to go with the summer camp hours," the 24 hours a day that you got paid for.

Back then, I just want to note, I actually only got paid $400 for the whole summer, for two months, at Camp He Ho Ha the very first time. It was only because of my work throughout the year that I was able to make that kind of choice. This is what we're taking away from students when we do that. Somehow we always assume that student money is not important, yet it was very important to me. It allowed me to make a contribution to society. I was able to put some money away.

Now, I think it's really important that we talk a little bit about what some of the benefits and values are in having a significant minimum wage. We know that minimum wages as they rise do in fact put more dollars in the hands of lower income people. The evidence is very clear that people who are in the lower income brackets, the lowest quintile or the lowest two quintiles, often do indeed have more expendable cash when the minimum wage rises. That's a good thing in and of itself. We have a benefit, then, of people who can take some mastery over their own lives and can make decisions because they have now some money to spend. Unfortunately, that often doesn't give them much choice. It just might mean a better quality of instant noodles than they happened to pick the last week. But it is a very important difference for many people.

We know that as the minimum wage rises, it actually also increases some positive effects in the work site, a good thing for employers. For example, the evidence indicates that job satisfaction increases with the increase of the minimum wage, and one of the things that comes along with job satisfaction is that there is reduced employee turnover. Your minimum wage is enough to allow you to make choices. There's nothing more frustrating than going to a job, feeling like you're contributing, feeling like you're working, feeling like you're putting in your time, and then getting your paycheque and realizing that it just doesn't feel like it was worth while because it doesn't allow you to pay the bills that you need to pay or to make the choices like I did, for example, to work at a summer camp or other choices that you might make as a student, particularly those students who don't live in the fortunate circumstance that I was raised in, where my parents were paying, you know, room and board for me and, of course, providing many other wonderful things for me.

Many of my peers didn't have that option. They couldn't go home to their families and expect their families to be able to contribute to their well-being. So every dime they earned was important in terms of whether or not they had new clothes at the beginning of the school year, whether or not they were able to go out and join in any activities with their peers when they said: hey, let's go see a movie. If they spent money on a movie, they didn't have money to contribute to the family, who might need that money for groceries or something else of that nature.

We know that the minimum wage has some really positive effects both for the person who receives the dollars and for the companies that provide a higher minimum wage: keeping employees, keeping their job satisfaction up.

There's another really important implication to the minimum wage that we cannot forget, and that is that minimum wage money tends to be spent almost a hundred per cent in the local economy. People who are on minimum wage, whether they're students or not, are spending their money often within blocks of their home. It is very unlikely that they would be spending money in another province or another land. As a result, we know that money comes back into our economy and recirculates, increasing the GDP in the local economy, which I think is a positive thing.

Now, one of the things that the government side of the House is often heard to say: talking about giving some support to the job creators. I think that's a very interesting phrase. It's one that we have to dissect a little bit here. When they refer to it, they refer to job creators as people who own businesses and who hire other people. I accept that. I think that that's a fine way to recognize the efforts of people who own businesses. One of the many contributions that they make is that they create opportunities for others, and I appreciate that. I think we need to find ways to support that.

But the reality is that to call employers job creators, while it's true, is only a part of the truth of a very complex interweaving of dynamics in an economy, and that is that employers, in fact, don't really create jobs; consumers do. The reason why I say that is because no employer creates a job that doesn't have somebody wanting or needing to buy the product that they're producing. Without the consumer, no job gets created. Now, I guess that could also be said to be true about the employer. If there were no employers, there would be no jobs other than the ones that people create for themselves, which, of course, many people do.

I think it's important to remember that it's a very important, complex question here about how jobs get created, and to simply take one side of the equation and say, "We need to do everything for people who own a business for them to create jobs" without also saying, "We need to increase the money available to consumers so that they can create the jobs that the employers will be fulfilling in order to satisfy the needs of the consumers," then we're missing half the equation here.

I think this is particularly important because we are contrasting what this government has chosen to do. They have chosen to give very significant dollar value to the richest corporations in the world to reduce their taxes when we know that a significant part, often more than 70 per cent, of the dollars given to a major corporation is not spent in the local economy. It goes away. If you have a headquarters in another province, if you have headquarters in another country, those dollars are gone. We get little to no benefit from that here in the province of Alberta. Those same numbers of dollars given to the most vulnerable people at the lowest wage, the minimum wage, tend to be spent close to a hundred per cent.

You're talking a very significant increase in local spending when you provide that money to the people at the lower end of the income level, and that's a choice that the government has made. They have chosen not to increase jobs by increasing the amount of consumer spending that is possible here in this province. Instead, they're doing a very good job creating service jobs in foreign lands where rich corporation executives go to spend their holidays and go to employ people who will work in their business but work for less money. Very often the decision is made by corporations to leave Alberta because they can find a cheap labour force in a country where poverty is rampant. It's quite problematic that we're allowing all that money to be taken out of the province of Alberta and spent on creating employment for people at terrible wages.

I think it's important that we reconsider and take this amendment quite seriously and reconsider what it is we're doing here. It is inconsistent with the desire to create jobs here in the province of Alberta and to increase our local spending, the local GDP, therefore increasing demand, thereby creating employment. I know it's a big difference between us and the government side because they believe in supply-side economics and we believe in demand-side economics.

We have stood up in this House repeatedly bringing in reports from across North America and the world demonstrating that supply-side economics does not work. We tried to bring in evidence from universities. We tried to bring in evidence from associations which we felt they would like and support, like, for example, the evidence I brought in from the Congressional Budget Office in the United States. We don't want them to dismiss the information because they don't like the source.

We sought out information from highly respected economic units around North America that cannot be considered left wing by any stretch of the imagination. That evidence indicated that supply-side economics does not have the support of people who do research, of the business associations that actually sit down and calculate numbers and make decisions.

This is why we are perplexed on this side of the House. We know so far that evidence, even the best evidence available in the world, is not going to change the government's opinion. We know that the lived experience of people here in the province of Alberta who are low income and who depend on those dollars – we share their stories – is not going to change the government's decision here.

It befuddles us that these kinds of bases for making decisions are not being used by this government, so it leaves us with one simple fact, and that is that the government is deriving a benefit from these decisions that has nothing to do with either evidence or the lived experience of vulnerable people, and that is that somehow there is some benefit to the government, that the government will be receiving something in the form of political contributions.

The Chair: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to offer some reflections during committee in regard to Bill 2. You know, I've been thinking about this bill both in a general sort of way in regard to sending a message or a certain tone towards Alberta's working population and then about some specific changes that are being made and some of the implications that could come from those changes as well.

In regard to the general, I guess, tone or message that Bill 2 sends to Alberta's working population, it has a general message that we are taking things back from what workers have earned and what workers have achieved both in terms of wages here in the province of Alberta and in terms of working conditions as well. You know, we've had a lot of discussion around the banked overtime position, and I certainly will get back to that in my comments because I have been speaking to others around this and reflecting on the rollback for banked overtime and what the government is proposing here in Bill 2.

But I just want to touch, perhaps, on a couple of other issues that were less discussed here in the House, particularly, I think, some things that we need to think about a little more carefully. This whole idea around holiday pay and curtailing an individual's accessing of holiday pay is, I think, a serious issue that, you know, doesn't cost a great deal, necessarily, for employers but sends a message around working conditions and sends a message around looking after workers and their families.

You know, the simple issue, I guess, if we could focus on a single holiday, is around Christmas, right? It's generally a holiday that is recognized in labour law across this country and indeed in many countries around the world. For us to be somehow leaving holiday pay for Christmas Day to the discretion of an employer is a shift that involves money, but it's also a shift that involves power. What it is: it's taking the right of an individual to access holiday pay for Christmas, for example, and leaving it to the discretion of employers. I think that not only is this taking money from the pockets of workers, usually low-income workers, but it also, I would suggest, is just sending a very negative message.

4:10

You know, when you look at a bill like Bill 2, it sets certain parameters around taking away some holiday pay rights for workers and the minimum wage for young people as well, banked overtime for workers in that situation, but it also sends a message of direction, that the government is going to squeeze the noose on these things, that we're looking for more, that we're looking for more places by which we can do so.

When we're trying to get Albertans back to work, when we're trying to build a framework by which, as the government's slogan suggests, we're open for business and so forth, well, you know, none of these things say that at all. They say a message that is quite the opposite, that we will curtail the working conditions and the pay of workers here in the province of Alberta. And you know what? Watch out, because who knows what's coming next?

When we look at holiday pay, for example, and leaving that to the discretion of an employer, then there are lots of other holidays and lots of other, I guess, leave provisions that are in the labour code that people are worried about: compassionate leave for an individual whose loved ones might be ill, maternity leave for those that are starting families and having young children, all sorts of others.

Ms Hoffman: Domestic violence.

Mr. Eggen: Domestic violence. Exactly. That's another one that is finally being recognized as something that should be protected for an individual to be working and dealing with issues around domestic violence.

I would suggest, Madam Chair, that it's not just the words that are printed on this particular bill, but it helps to define a direction that I think workers and working families in the province of Alberta would find troubling and disturbing as well. It's a question of respect, to respect workers and their place in our society and the essential way by which they actually help to make our society function. It is measured by wages, of course, because we need to feed our families and house them and clothe them, but also by having that confidence that those measures of protection through law are respected for the future so that you don't have to be looking over your shoulder for further cuts to wages or working conditions and so that you can have that sense of security to build your family, to get that mortgage, to have those kids, and to move forward with confidence on all matters that could support those things.

So here we are with Bill 2, which makes, I think, quite draconian cuts to overtime, banked overtime and so forth, and to the minimum wage for young people. I think the message has been brought forward loud and clear that any worker engaged in any employment should be paid equally for their labour and their time regardless of what their age is, right?

I mean, I was shocked to think about a simple fact for the grade 12 graduating class, which we were celebrating. There are commencements tonight at Queen Elizabeth high school, I believe, and probably in dozens of schools around the province in the next few days; many commencements already have taken place. That graduating class, which we are so proud of, if they had the misfortune of perhaps being born in one month or another, would be eligible for a 13 per cent differential in their wages as they move forward, whether they are not 17 until later in the year or if they are already 18 and so forth.

You know, that's a very simple analogy that I think all members in this Legislature should think about and realize that they're sending forward a message of discrimination, of arbitrary discrimination based on age. That sends a message to a young person's pocketbook, but as I say, it sends a message of disrespect as well.

You know, I learned from being a teacher for 20 years that when you are managing a class and encouraging them to learn, the first precondition to success in learning is the confidence that a student knows and internalizes that they will be treated fairly. So when this legislative body – if we could use that analogy of the Alberta classroom writ large of the hundreds of thousands of young people that are in the situation of having their pay changed and cut by this government, then we are in the same way undermining the confidence of those young people to know that we have and will produce laws and regulations that will protect them. It undermines that confidence because here we are debating a law that removes protections, equality, justice, and fairness for young people.

That same analogy or that same principle can be applied directly to this notion of banked overtime, being able to bank and count on that overtime as it should be and being paid as the overtime that the person worked for in the first place. We know that Alberta has a very large project-based workforce, a very large seasonal workforce. You go hard when you are working, let's say, in a project in Fort McMurray, and then you are away and back to your family. Let's say that you might have been working in a camp, working very hard, very long hours and building a budget that was predicated on the total payment, including overtime, including banked overtime, so that you can space that out over the year and have a reliable budget that you can count on for yourself and your family to pay the bills that you need to pay. Again, taking money out of the pockets of individuals, picking that money, literally, of banked overtime that someone earned fairly by working hard in overtime but also, again, undermining the confidence and the security of knowing – is this legislative body building laws and regulations that will protect the rights of a worker and their family, or is it constraining those laws and regulations so that, again, you have to work hard and also look over your shoulder to see what the Legislative Assembly is going to take from you in these coming months and weeks and years?

As I say, it's not fair, and it's bad governance, quite frankly, Madam Chair. You know, when you do execute those things over a period of time, you lose the confidence of the people that put people into this Legislative Assembly in the first place. I mean, during the honeymoon period of a new government and all that kind of thing people are feeling good and talking about their mandate, feeling great about that. Well, that's fine and well. But you know what? You're judged only on the next thing that you do in this Legislature. You can rest on all your laurels a little bit, but really you're only as good as the next thing that you do.

I would suggest that the next thing that we should do in order to send a positive message to try to mitigate some of the damage, I think, that has happened in this legislative body over the last couple of weeks – right? – in regard to a number of, I think, punitive bills that have been brought forward here in this Assembly: take a long, hard second look at Bill 2 and try to temper it and say that, you know, there is a spirit of compromise that can reside in this Chamber, a spirit of compromise and collaboration that moves past the earplug stunts and the yelling and the ranting and the raving and going on about giant mandates and how you can just do anything you want with those things, undemocratic discussions, I would suggest, suggesting that democratic debate here is somehow not welcome in such a place as this. We can mitigate that. We can start to walk back from that precipice – right? – and look for a reasonable way by which we can, I guess, pull back on this Bill 2.

The first place I would suggest, Madam Chair, quite frankly, is simple. It's elegant, and it definitely will push back against this idea that we are making punitive laws against young people here in this Chamber. That would be to just abandon this minimum wage differential between young people and adult workers here in the province of Alberta.

4:20

Many employers are already speaking out very loudly and clearly that they don't think it's fair and that they will not abide by it. You know, the hon. President of Treasury Board said: "Well, yeah, that's the way it should work. Then you have people making decisions." But there's a difference between a choice an employer can make and making sure that it's backstopped by regulation and law, knowing that there is a fair minimum that they must abide by, right? We can't just depend on the good graces and the magnanimous world view of employers to make sure that they pay a minimum wage. By definition a minimum wage is the legal line that we draw in the metaphorical sand of wages. You don't just say: okay; we'll have a minimum wage, and we'll have different minimum wages for different people in different circumstances. I know that this government has talked about a different minimum wage for people that serve alcohol – right? – or that work in nightclubs. The list goes on and on.

Once you start down that path of compromising the integrity of a minimum wage, then all bets are off, you know. Don't think that people that work in the entertainment industry aren't watching over their shoulder very, very carefully to see what further punitive constraints will be put on their income for themselves and their families based on the fact that this government has the audacity to differentiate between someone who happened to be born in June and somebody who was born in July, who is 17 or 18 years old, and have a 13.3 per cent differential in their wages just based on that happenstance of when they happen to be born.

Yeah. That would be my modest proposal, very reasonable, that you back off something like that. I mean, it would fit into this whole notion that this government ran on in terms of reducing red tape, you know. I think that it's a great idea to always make sure that regulations are coherent and sensible and logical and have some elegance in their simplicity to execute those regulations. Just imagine trying to chase down kids that are working part-time and then according to this – I think this bill said: well, maybe if they're not in school, then they can get the $15 or if there are extenuating circumstances or something like that, right? I mean, that's pure unadulterated, Byzantine, reductive, not logical regulation for the sake of red tape.

I'll do the job for the new associate minister to reduce red tape and get rid of this minimum wage differential. There you go. You can steal the best ideas – I often do that as well – but credit it as well. Make sure that you mention: the Member for Edmonton-North West gave me this idea, and I thank him for it. You know, get rid of all this red tape. I don't know if you can have, like, truant officers wandering the streets of Calgary looking for students: "Are you going to school and working at Tim Hortons? Well, I'm afraid I'm going to cut your wages then." I mean, the whole thing has a level of absurdity that would be funny if it wasn't real, based on the laws and the proposals that are here in this bill.

When you present legislation, always try to make sure that it fits the matrix of being logical – right? – that it gives people the head nod, that regular working people say, "Yeah; that sounds good to me, sounds reasonable," and make sure that it's enforceable and that it's straightforward and simple. Bill 2 does not meet any of those criteria at all. Walk Bill 2 out right now down by the fountain there – it's not raining at the moment – and ask a few people about the differential in the minimum wage for young people, ask about the banked overtime and clawing that back. You know, I think that two years from now, if I'm doing my math correctly, Christmas is going to fall on a Saturday.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but according to Standing Order 4(3) we will now rise and report progress on Bill 2.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Guthrie: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. Carried.

Mrs. Savage: I would ask that the House be adjourned.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:26 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 1st Session (2019)

Activity to Thursday, June 20, 2019

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

Bill 1 — An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax ($) (Kenney)

First Reading — 8 (May 22, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 44 (May 23, 2019 aft.), 79-92 (May 27, 2019 eve.), 95-107 (May 28, 2019 morn.), 121-43 (May 28, 2019 aft.), 166-70 (May 28, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 215-24 (May 29, 2019 aft.), 239-41 (May 29, 2019 eve.), (May 30, 2019 morn., passed)

Third Reading — 246-51 (May 30, 2019 morn.), 327-339 (Jun. 3, 2019 eve., passed)

Royal Assent — (Jun. 4, 2019 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on various dates; SA 2019 c1 ]

Bill 2 — An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business (Copping)

First Reading — 58 (May 27, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 145-52 (May 28, 2019 eve.), 189-90 (May 29, 2019 morn.), 236-39 (May 29, 2019 eve.), 375-79 (Jun. 4, 2019 aft.), 416-17 (Jun. 4, 2019 eve.), 448 (Jun. 5, 2019 aft.), (Jun. 5, 2019 eve.), (Jun. 5, 2019 eve., passed on division)

Committee of the Whole — 986-1002 (Jun. 19, 2019 aft.), 1090-99 (Jun. 20, 2019 aft., adjourned, amendment introduced)

Bill 3 — Job Creation Tax Cut (Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment) Act (Toews)

First Reading — 111 (May 28, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 236 (May 29, 2019 eve.), 341-53 (Jun. 4, 2019 morn.), 408-16 (Jun. 4, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — (Jun. 5, 2019 eve.), (Jun. 11, 2019 morn.), 685-700 (Jun. 11, 2019 aft.), 738-45 (Jun. 12, 2019 morn., passed)

Third Reading — (Jun. 12, 2019 aft., passed)

Bill 4 — Red Tape Reduction Act (Hunter)

First Reading — 202 (May 29, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 277-78 (May 30, 2019 aft.), 365-75 (Jun. 4, 2019 aft.), 432-48 (Jun. 5, 2019 aft., passed on division)

Committee of the Whole — 633-44 (Jun. 10, 2019 eve., passed)

Third Reading — 644-46 (Jun. 10, 2019 eve., passed)

Bill 5 — Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019 ($) (Toews)

First Reading — 779 (Jun. 12, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 986 (Jun. 19, 2019 aft., passed)

Bill 6 — Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019 ($) (Toews)

First Reading — 931 (Jun. 18, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 984-86 (Jun. 19, 2019 aft., passed)

Bill 7 — Municipal Government (Property Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019 (Madu)

First Reading — 356-57 (Jun. 4, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 625-31 (Jun. 10, 2019 aft.), 653-60 (Jun. 11, 2019 morn.), 701-07 (Jun. 11, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 811-13 (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., passed)

Bill 8 — Education Amendment Act, 2019 (LaGrange)

First Reading — 421 (Jun. 5, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 648-49 (Jun. 10, 2019 eve.), 707-25 (Jun. 11, 2019 eve.), 781-95 (Jun. 12, 2019 eve.), 848-74 (Jun. 17, 2019 eve., adjourned)

Bill 9 — Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act (Toews)

First Reading — (Jun. 13, 2019, passed on division)

Second Reading — 874-84 (Jun. 17, 2019 eve.), (Jun. 17, 2019 eve.), 933-71 (Jun. 18, 2019 eve., passed on division)

Committee of the Whole — 971 (Jun. 18, 2019 eve.), 1004-76 (Jun. 19, 2019 eve., passed on division)

Third Reading — (Jun. 19, 2019 eve., passed on division)

Bill 10 — Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2019 (Toews)

First Reading — (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 847-48 (Jun. 17, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 971 (Jun. 18, 2019 eve., passed)

Bill 11 — Fair Registration Practices Act (Copping)

First Reading — 975 (Jun. 19, 2019 aft., passed)

Bill 12 — Royalty Guarantee Act (Savage)

First Reading — 1088 (Jun. 20, 2019 aft., passed)

Bill 201 — Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act (Armstrong-Homeniuk)

First Reading — 277 (May 30, 2019 aft., passed; referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills), (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., reported to Assembly)

Second Reading — 825-38 (Jun. 17, 2019 aft., passed)

Bill 202 — Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019 (Ellis)

First Reading — 277 (May 30, 2019 aft., passed; referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills), (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., reported to Assembly)

Second Reading — 838-40 (Jun. 17, 2019 aft., adjourned)

Bill 203 — An Act to Protect Public Health Care (Feehan)

First Reading — (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., passed; referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills)

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1077
Introduction of Guests .....	1077
Ministerial Statements
National Indigenous Peoples Day .....	1077
Members' Statements
World Refugee Day .....	1078
Climate Change .....	1078
National Indigenous Peoples Day .....	1078
Vikings in the Streets Festival .....	1078
Education Funding and Bill 8 .....	1079
Gay-straight Alliances in Schools .....	1079
Oral Question Period
Parliamentary Debate and Public Discourse .....	1079
Bill 9 Debate .....	1080
Postsecondary Worker Contract Negotiations .....	1080
Edmonton Medical Laboratory Infrastructure .....	1081
Film Industry Tax Credit .....	1081
Climate Change Strategy .....	1082
Gay-straight Alliances in Schools .....	1083
Tourism Industry .....	1083
Educational Curriculum Review .....	1084
Education Funding .....	1084
Nurse Practitioners .....	1085
United Conservative Party Fundraising .....	1085
Regulation Reduction .....	1086
Investment in Alberta and Job Creation .....	1086
Highway 28 Capital Plan .....	1087
Trade with Asia .....	1087
Introduction of Bills
Bill 12   Royalty Guarantee Act .....	1088
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1088
Orders of the Day .....	1090
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole
Bill 2    An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business .....	1090

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Monday afternoon, June 24, 2019

Day 18

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henday (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreeschen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretary

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, June 24, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by R.J. Chambers. I invite you all to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: A stirring rendition. Well done, everyone.
Good afternoon. You may be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of visitors joining us today. In the Speaker's gallery I see the former member for the constituency of Calgary-Buffalo, Harvey Cenaiko, and his son Justin Cenaiko is also here. Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Also, members, joining us today are two groups of hard-working public servants, one from the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General and another from the Legislative Assembly Office. We'd all like to say thank you for all the work you do. Please feel free to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Also joining us are family members of one of our team in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, Kaitlynn Church: her partner, Mike Kaczmarek, and his parents, Brenda and Richard Kaczmarek.

Also joining us today: a guest of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, Desiree Clarke; and a guest of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, Bob Cocking. I'd invite you to all rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

La Francophonie Albertaine

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to wish all French Canadians a joyful celebration of their historic national day of la fête de la Saint-Jean-Baptiste. I have a statement I'm going to give primarily in French, and I understand that English translations are being circulated.

Je tiens à souhaiter également une bonne Fête nationale à tous les Québécois. Le Canada a été fondé en français. C'est donc à dire que les canadiens célèbrent la Saint-Jean-Baptiste depuis 360 ans. L'Alberta aussi a été fondée en français. Cette langue a été la première langue européenne parlée dans ce territoire. De nombreux franco-albertains peuvent retracer leurs racines dans notre province depuis plus de deux siècles.

La plupart des premiers commerçants de fourrures, des coureurs des bois, des premiers missionnaires, et de nombreux fermiers étaient francophones. La carte du nord de l'Alberta reflète particulièrement ce patrimoine, pensant aux villes de St. Albert, Beaumont, Lac Ste. Anne, Lac La Biche, et Bonnyville, pour nommer que celles-là.

De nos jours les personnes d'origine française qui vivent en Alberta y sont venues par hasard ou par choix. Elles sont nées ici ou au Québec mais aussi d'ailleurs au Canada, en Europe, en Afrique, en Amérique latine, dans les Caraïbes, et en Asie. La communauté francophone de notre province est l'une des celles dont la croissance est la plus rapide au pays. Plus d'un quart de million d'Albertains parlent couramment le français, et près d'un élève sur trois suivent un programme d'études en français.

Mars est le Mois de la Francophonie en Alberta, et le drapeau franco-albertain et un symbole officiel de distinction en vertu de la loi sur les emblèmes de l'Alberta. Le patrimoine francophone de l'Alberta et sa communauté florissante attire des francophones du monde entier. Ses gens savent qu'ils seront les bienvenues chez nous, qu'ils rencontreront de nombreux francophones, qu'ils pourront obtenir des services en français, qu'ils y trouveront des institutions francophones, et que leurs enfants auront l'occasion de fréquenter des écoles francophones. Et, bien sûr, comme tous les nouveaux arrivants en Alberta, peu importe leur origine ethnique ou leur langue, ils auront de nombreuses possibilités d'emplois, pourront créer leurs propres entreprises, élever une famille, et profiter de tout ce que l'Alberta a à offrir.

M. le Président, notre communauté franco-albertaine forte renforce notre province en nous lions à d'autres communautés francophones du Canada, dont celles de l'Ontario, du Nouveau-Brunswick, et bien sûr de la belle province du Québec. Et une communauté franco-albertaine forte nous aide aussi à nous rapprocher de la Francophonie partout dans le monde.

Une étude récente du Conference Board du Canada a révélé des retombées économiques positives découlant du fait français au Canada. Ces retombées se reflètent dans la diversification du commerce, dans les exportations et les importations, de même que dans les emplois et la croissance économique.

Our government recognizes all these economic, social, and cultural contributions of French-speaking Albertans.

C'est pourquoi nous appuyons pleinement la politique et le plan d'action du gouvernement de l'Alberta en matière de la Francophonie, y compris l'accès accru à des programmes et des services en français.

Let me pause to commend the former government for its action and its plans in this regard, which this government is proud to renew and commit ourselves to.

Nous nous engageons à réaliser ces initiatives en utilisant des moyens tangibles et durables qui renforceront nos communautés et feront croître notre économie.

M. le Président, je suis également ravi d'annoncer la nomination de la Députée de Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche au poste de secrétaire parlementaire responsable de la Francophonie en Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to announce as well the appointment of the Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche as parliamentary secretary for la Francophonie in Alberta.

Maintenant les franco-albertains auront une défenseur dévouée qui travaillera avec notre cabinet pour faire avancer la politique et le plan d'action en matière de la Francophonie, une défenseur qui, soit dit en passant, parle couramment le français et qui représente une région du nord de l'Alberta peuplée de nombreux francophones et qui possède une riche histoire et culture francophone.

1:40

In her new role the parliamentary secretary will work closely with the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women, who will continue to be the minister responsible for the Francophone Secretariat, and have access to the resources of that department.

Cette nomination nous permet de reconnaître et d'honorer la richesse du passé, du présent, et de l'avenir de la Francophonie albertaine, et elle vient à point en ce jour où nous célébrons la fête de la Saint-Jean-Baptiste au Canada. Happy Saint-Jean-Baptiste to all of our francophone Alberta friends. Bonne fête de la Saint-Jean-Baptiste.

[Translation] Mr. Speaker, I rise today to wish all Franco-Albertans a bonne fête for Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day, a day of celebration for francophones across Canada for four centuries. Let me also wish our friends in Quebec une bonne fête nationale.

Canada was founded in French, so for more than 360 years Canadians have been celebrating the feast day of Saint-Jean-Baptiste. Alberta was founded in French, too. It was the first European language spoken in our province.

Many Franco-Albertans can trace their roots in our province back more than two centuries. The early fur traders, the coureurs de bois, the first missionaries, and many farmers were largely French. The map of northern Alberta especially reflects that heritage, with towns and cities like St. Albert, Beaumont, Lac Ste. Anne, Lac La Biche, Bonnyville, and so many more.

Today people of French heritage are Albertans by chance and by choice, born here and coming here from Quebec, other parts of Canada, from Europe, and from Africa, Latin America, the Caribbean, and Asia. The francophone community in our province is among the fastest growing in the country. More than a quarter-million Albertans are fluent in French, and nearly 1 in 3 students are in a French-language education program.

March is Francophonie Month in Alberta, and the Franco-Albertan flag is an official symbol of distinction under the Emblems of Alberta Act.

Alberta's francophone heritage and thriving community attracts French-speaking peoples from around the globe. They know they will be welcomed here, that they will find many other francophones here as well as services and institutions in French, and that their children will have opportunities to attend francophone schools. And, of course, like all newcomers to Alberta, regardless of their ethnicity or language, they will find many opportunities for jobs, for creating businesses, raising families, and enjoying all the wonderful things Alberta has to offer.

Mr. Speaker, a strong Franco-Albertan community strengthens our province by helping connect us to other francophone communities across Canada, including Ontario, New Brunswick, and, of course, la belle province, Quebec. And a strong Franco-Albertan community also helps connect us to the Francophonie around the world.

A recent study by the Conference Board of Canada found positive economic impacts arising from the French fact in Canada, reflected in the diversification of trade, exports and imports, and jobs and economic growth. Our new government recognizes all these economic, social, and cultural contributions of French-speaking Albertans. That's why we fully support the government of Alberta French policy and action plan, including the provision of increased access to programs and services in French, and we are committed to building on these initiatives in tangible and sustainable ways that will help strengthen our communities and grow our economy.

Mr. Speaker, I am also delighted to announce the appointment of the Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche as parliamentary secretary responsible for the Alberta Francophonie. Now Franco-Albertans will have a dedicated advocate who will work with our cabinet to move the French policy and action plan forward, an advocate who is fluent in French, by the way, and who represents a region in northern Alberta with a large francophone population and a rich francophone history and culture.

In her new role the parliamentary secretary will work closely with the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and the Status of Women, who will continue to be the minister responsible for the Francophone Secretariat, and have access to the resources of her department. This appointment recognizes and honours Alberta's rich francophone past, present, and future and is a fitting way to mark Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day in Canada. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert to respond.

Ms Renaud: Merci, M. le Président. Je me lève aujourd'hui pour célébrer la Saint-Jean-Baptiste. Aussi, le 24 juin c'est la Fête nationale du Québec. Je m'excuse à tout le monde; je n'ai pas eu le temps de traduire. Je vais lire en anglais.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in honour of Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day, an important celebration for thousands of French-speaking Albertans in our province. On this day we honour and recognize the proud history of francophones in Alberta and the contributions they have made to the economic, social, cultural, and political fabric of Alberta. The French-speaking population of Alberta can trace its roots back almost 200 years. Today more than 268,000 Albertans speak French, 1 in 3 students are enrolled in a French-language program, and our French-speaking population is projected to lead the country, increasing between 25 and 50 per cent by 2036.

In 1982 the Franco-Albertan flag was created, and in June 2017 our government adopted it as its first symbol of distinction under the Emblems of Alberta Act. As a government we are strongly committed to upholding the language rights of Franco-Albertans and working closely with French-speaking Albertans to support greater opportunity and recognition. We were proud to create the first-ever French language policy to support the vitality and development of francophones in Alberta. We released a three-year action plan to enhance French-language services, support francophone organizations, and promote French language and culture. We increased funding for the Francophone Secretariat to enhance access to services in French for Albertans in health, employment services, and early childhood supports. In March 2018 we officially proclaimed March as the annual Mois de la Francophonie albertaine. As a French-speaking Albertan myself I am honoured to have been part of this important work. Now as the francophone critic I am honoured to hold this government to account and advocate on behalf of the thousands of Franco-Albertans.

During a time of celebration it is disturbing to see troubling attacks on French-speaking communities, including the cancellation of the francophone university and the French-language services commissioner under the Ford government in Ontario. I urge this government to condemn these actions and resist the paths taken by their allies in Ontario. We must remember that our diversity is what makes our province strong and such a great place to live. I urge all members of this House to get to know the francophone communities in their constituencies and participate in celebrations happening across our province in support of the wonderful contributions of Franco-Albertans.

Merci, M. le Président, et joyeuse fête de la Saint-Jean-Baptiste.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just as a way of clarity for everyone, when members are speaking French inside the Chamber, they are welcome to do so without translation. However, should they choose to provide a translation for the benefit of the non-French speakers, that, of course, is always appreciated by us but certainly not a requirement as it is a significant tradition now in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to allow those who speak French to do so freely.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

National Day of Remembrance for Victims of Terrorism

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-four years ago yesterday 329 innocent people, many of them Canadians, died in the murderous bombing of Air India flight 182 over the Atlantic Ocean. This heartbreaking incident is why I rise here today to pay tribute and to honour every Canadian whose life has been cut short or forever changed by an act of terrorism. In the decades since, tragically, many Canadians have been lost in other terrorist atrocities at home and abroad. As we reflect on the lives lost from Air India to 9/11 to the murders of Corporal Nathan Cirillo and Warrant Officer Patrice Vincent in 2014 and countless others, we pay tribute to those around the world who have lost their lives to acts of terrorism, and we stand firm in the values we hold dear: freedom, democracy, and the rule of law.

As Albertans we condemn all forms of terrorism. We stand in solidarity with our allies who fight terrorism at home and abroad, and we thank the men and women who risk their lives every day to stand up against these radical acts. Terrorists believe that through violent and cowardly acts they can make us doubt not only our safety but the very institutions that keep us safe. They are wrong. We are a society that believes in compassion, justice, inclusion, and equality, and these acts of terror only strengthen our resolve for unity. We must always strive to eradicate the evil of terrorism both here in Canada and around the world.

Our government remains unwavering in our commitment to the safety and security of Albertans, and on this sombre anniversary we stand in solidarity with the families and friends of all those who have been affected by terrorist attacks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Government Members' Actions during Bill 9 Debate

Mr. Dang: Last week the Premier, a man who occupies the most honourable office in our province, handed out earplugs to silence the opposition during critical debate on Bill 9. As he handed them out, he giggled and said: this is so that you don't have to listen to him and the others over there. He was clearly tired of hearing about how his illegal bill would hurt 180,000 workers, including nurses, teachers, and social workers.

But Albertans have shown that they aren't having it. They're outraged and angry at the stunning show of disrespect. Here are some of the comments that they've sent to the MLAs and to the Premier.

I was appalled to learn that the Premier of our province was displaying such behaviour as it demonstrates a total disregard for the democratic process . . .

. . . You are teaching supporters that a person holding an opinion that is different from yours can be mocked publicly and blatantly ignored. This kind of intolerance is closed-minded, disrespectful and dangerous.

Also:

The arrogance and blatant disrespect by the UCP to the principles of democracy, the official opposition and to the 180,000 Albertans who this bill will directly impact is unacceptable.

And:

Ignoring anyone who opposes your own views is a dangerous road to travel and a threat to a fair, democratic process, to which all Albertans are entitled. To read and see the elected Premier of Alberta laughing and telling his party members to ignore the opposition and to watch his party members join in on the fun clearly conveyed his and his party's feelings toward public-sector workers like myself, my wife, my sister, my sister-in-law, my brothers-in-law . . .

and so forth.

And:

I am frankly livid that the government has decided to put in earplugs while the opposition was fighting for my spouse's and family's income. The member that was supplying the earplugs should resign immediately.

Now, unfortunately, the Premier once again has put in his earplugs and is refusing to listen. Instead of taking responsibility and apologizing, he has chosen to mislead Albertans and cover up the true story. First he said that it didn't happen. Then he said that it was to boost morale. Now he says that he was helping a member with tinnitus. Mr. Speaker, Albertans aren't buying these preposterous excuses. Our caucus stands with Albertans in condemning this outrageous behaviour and will continue to fight for working people in our province, whether the government listens or not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche.

La Francophonie Albertaine

Ms Goodridge: Merci, M. le Président. Je me lève aujourd'hui, le jour de la Saint-Jean-Baptiste, pour souligner la vitalité de la Francophonie canadienne et le dynamisme de la langue et de la culture françaises en Alberta. De Plamondon à Grande Prairie, de Fort McMurray à Lethbridge, des communautés à travers l'Alberta ont souligné cette fête importante cette fin de semaine.

Le français était la première langue européenne parlée en Alberta, et elle demeure la langue la plus parlée après l'anglais. Bien qu'historiquement, une bonne partie de la population francophone albertaine pouvait retracer ses origines au Québec et à la France, mais aujourd'hui les francophones en Alberta proviennent de partout au pays et de partout au monde.

En effet, la population francophone de l'Alberta a doublé depuis 1996, et c'est la population francophone du Canada à l'extérieur du Québec qui croît le plus rapidement. De plus, il y a plus de 200 000 étudiants albertaines qui font le choix de suivre des programmes de langue française, soit près d'un étudiant sur trois.

La vitalité de cette population d'expression française est un atout pour l'Alberta.

Finalement, je profite de cette occasion pour remercier le premier ministre de m'avoir nommée secrétaire parlementaire pour la Francophonie albertaine.

1:50

Je suis ravie de pouvoir appuyer la ministre de la Culture, du Multiculturalisme et de la Condition féminine et ministre responsable du Secrétariat francophone dans la mise en oeuvre continue de la politique en matière de francophonie, visant à améliorer les services gouvernementaux en français selon les ressources disponibles.

Merci à tous les membres de l'Assemblée pour leur appui, joyeuse fête de la Saint-Jean Baptiste, et merci, M. le Président.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Government Members' Actions during Bill 9 Debate

Ms Notley: Here we go. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week this Premier lowered the bar once again in his display of disrespect for the people of Alberta. First they introduced legislation to gut the constitutional rights of 180,000 Albertans, then they literally plugged their ears when opposition members raised the concerns of these 180,000 Albertans, and then they changed their story about it repeatedly. To the Premier: will he rise and apologize for both this display of disrespect as well as the series of contradictory statements by him and his House leader?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the only apology in this place should be coming from the NDP for their constant vicious harassment of ministers verbally, their bullying tactics, their name calling, and their disrespectful comportment in this place. But the Leader of the Opposition instead – she's too busy taking credit for Justin Trudeau's carbon tax. Today in an interview in the National Post the Leader of the Opposition was proudly taking credit for the federal government's carbon tax and so-called climate leadership plan action. They might take credit for it; we're glad to be fighting it.

Ms Notley: Thursday morning the Premier's office put out a statement around the earplug use that said, quote: this is a harmless and light-hearted attempt to boost caucus morale. Thursday afternoon the House leader told the House that "nobody from the government plugged their ears during debate." Friday afternoon the Premier described a member with a hearing problem and said, quote: I gave him earplugs to reduce the volume. Thirty-six hours, three statements, three different stories. Albertans don't deserve pivots. They deserve honesty. Why won't you give it to them? Why won't you apologize?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was proud to be here for 18 hours listening to that debate and members of this caucus for three straight nights listening to that debate. I can't say that for all the leaders in this place.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Kenney: It's interesting to lead a filibuster not in this place. But, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you this much. We are getting the job done for Albertans. We committed to manage the province's finances responsibly. That requires a bit of time to get advice from the MacKinnon panel, expert advice on how to bring Alberta back to balance. That's exactly what we're going to do.

Ms Notley: Here's the real story, Mr. Speaker. The Premier displayed bad judgment that disrespected 180,000 Albertans when he encouraged his caucus to put in earplugs not to hear debate. The answer to this mistake is to honestly acknowledge it, apologize to Albertans, and move on. Instead, he's got a new story every time he opens his mouth. Why won't he just learn from, oh, Ralph Klein, admit his mistake, apologize for it, and instead not make Albertans endure days of ducking and diving and running away?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it tells you all you need to know about today's NDP that they think this is the most important issue in the province. I'll tell you what. You know, we'll apologize for that the moment that members of the opposition apologize for using earbuds in this place. But you know what they really need to apologize for? They need to apologize to 4.3 million Albertans for foisting a job-killing carbon tax that they didn't talk about in the last election campaign. They need to apologize to nearly 200,000 unemployed Albertans, so many of whom were driven out of work by the high-tax, high red tape policies of the NDP. We're proud to be undoing the damaging economic policies of the NDP.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order was noted at 1:54. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bill 9

Ms Notley: The real issue is 180,000 Alberta public servants who are having their constitutional rights trampled by this Premier, Mr. Speaker. Today we're hearing, not surprisingly, that we'll be all headed to court as these workers seek to defend their most basic rights from attack by this Premier. We know this legislation is illegal. The government knows it's illegal. Why does the Premier believe that the rule of law applies to everyone but to him?

Mr. Kenney: Of course, we believe in the rule of law, which is why this Assembly adopted, after 24, 25 hours of debate, a law to allow for a temporary deferral in wage-reopener arbitration so that the government is fully informed in sitting down and negotiating those in good faith, Mr. Speaker. The real question is: why did the NDP take a $13 billion debt, drive it to a $60 billion debt, run the largest per capita deficit in Canada, oversee five credit downgrades, and have us headed towards $100 billion in debt? That's a record that we're going to clean up.

Ms Notley: I believe what the Premier tried to claim there is that his bad-faith bargaining bill does not roll over the rights of working people. But given the earplug fiasco and the associated multiple different versions of the facts offered up by the Premier and his House leader just so comfortably, Albertans can be forgiven if they don't believe him. Will the Premier table all of the legal opinions received by the Premier that suggest his legislation is not a violation of the Constitution or the Charter?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition knows full well as a former Premier that legal advice from officials to the government is cabinet confidence. I can assure the leader of the NDP that we proceeded on this matter on the advice of the senior public service, who indicated that this is fully constitutionally compliant. Of course, it is. What the NDP is really up about is this: they're just angry with Albertans for firing them. They wish that they were still in power and driving us towards a $100 billion debt. Thank goodness Alberta voters stopped them.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Premier fights to steal the hard-won, fundamental, constitutional and Charter rights of nurses, of teachers, of paramedics, of firefighters, of many, many other dedicated public servants, he appears only to be making progress on his one unheralded and myopic job-creation plan for lawyers. Can the Premier once again please tell this House exactly how much money this attack on working people is going to cost the Minister of Justice?

Mr. Kenney: Isn't it interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP wouldn't sue Ottawa to protect our taxpayers from their carbon tax. They wouldn't sue Ottawa for intruding in our jurisdiction through these outrageous bills C-48 and C-69, but they will support a lawsuit against Alberta taxpayers. That tells you all you need to know about the NDP: always and only defending the bosses who have formal affiliate membership in the NDP. We're talking about people who actually help to run the NDP. We're here to defend all Alberta taxpayers.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I got an earful about the bad-faith bargaining bill from teachers and support staff in Lethbridge on the weekend. Almost a month ago the chair of the Lethbridge public school division warned the Minister of Finance that the bill would result in harm to future bargaining. I will table that letter. To the minister: given that Lethbridge already negotiated zero per cent increases for support staff in the fall school year, won't the minister just admit that this is actually about a massive rollback for teachers and support staff?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the intent of Bill 9 is clear. We've been clear with Albertans and all stakeholders. It is simply procedural delay so that we can make informed, responsible decisions on behalf of Albertans. We don't have an outcome in mind. The goal and the outcome we have in mind is to be fully informed and responsible to all Albertans.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, here we hear the same talking points, but in fact the letter calls attention to the fact that there has been a lack of transparency on purpose, Minister. The trustee chair of the Lethbridge public school board wrote, "There does not appear to be a genuine openness to 'discussing' the direction or exploring potential alternatives." To the minister: is this really a level of consultation that you think will hold up in the courts?

2:00

Mr. Toews: Again, Mr. Speaker, this government is taking the responsible tack forward. We're a government who believes in being fully informed. We're a government who believes in being responsible to Albertans. Albertans elected this government to bring this province to balance and ensure that we can deliver high-quality services for Albertans for this generation and the next. We intend to do that.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, this letter lays bare that Bill 9 interfered with bargaining in good faith, that it actually did achieve a zero per cent increase for support staff this fall in Lethbridge. In other words, Bill 9 is about rollbacks. It's not about a wage freeze. Was the minister briefed on the contents of this letter and the very clear interference in good-faith bargaining by his deputy minister, or did he have his earplugs in?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say this. This government has been listening intently to Albertans and to Albertans' concerns to ensure that we can balance the budget and deliver high-quality services. The members opposite, when they were in government, had us on a track to $100 billion in accumulated debt. With that kind of debt, we would not be able to provide, first, front-line services to Albertans in the long term and to the next generation. We're about being a responsible government.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Numbers and this Minister of Education just don't jibe. She has tried to tell the parents of the more than 120,000 students attending Calgary public schools that her government will support classrooms, but we know that CBE expects 1,800 more students this fall and that they're cutting $22 million from their school budgets. More students, less funding equals crowded classrooms, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: is this the type of math that you plan on teaching our kids, that you can cut and you can cram kids into classrooms and it's not going to make a difference? I call tell you that that math doesn't pass grade 1.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education is rising.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I had the pleasure of meeting with the board chair and the superintendent of CBE last week. They assured me that they are maintaining the current staffing levels. We have been perfectly clear on our commitment to fund education, and we will be continuing to fund it. We are funding enrolment growth, and we are going to build schools.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: If you actually looked at their budget or if you actually listened to any of their board meetings, you'd know that there are $22 million being cut from schools. Twenty-two million dollars is 220 teachers, Mr. Speaker. The math is pretty simple. This minister keeps denying the reality that $22 million is going to mean that there are less supports for schools, on average, the CBE has said, three fewer high school teachers in every single high school. Isn't the minister embarrassed? Enough with the talking points. Why won't you fund education properly?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I trust our local school boards to make those decisions. I have been assured by CBE that they will be maintaining their current staffing levels.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, it is totally unreasonable for the Minister of Education to stand in this place, when she knows there are $22 million being cut from Calgary schools, and to continue to espouse talking points instead of admitting the facts. The facts are that there will be less supports in our schools this fall because of this minister's dithering. The facts are that the government isn't planning on bringing a budget forward until the fall, which means that we could be waiting until Christmas to find out if there are going to be enough teachers when kids are showing up in September. Why won't this minister admit that she's in over her head? Enough is enough. This is an embarrassment.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Our government and I are very committed to keeping teachers in front of students. We have already stated that we are funding enrolment growth – we've accounted for it – and we also will be building schools. It's time for the opposition to stop speculating on this topic. Enrolment growth, as I said, will be funded. I can actually give you a quote from a Lloydminster Catholic school division trustee, Chris Carnell, who recently said that he's extremely confident in our government – and I quote – that we will protect parental choice in education and fair student funding, and he feels that, quote, Alberta students are . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

St. Mary's University

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. St. Mary's University in Calgary-Fish Creek has been one of Alberta's fastest growing postsecondaries over the past five years. With over a thousand students in their parkside campus and a graduate placement rate of over 85 per cent of their education faculty, the people of my constituency are proud to have them as a valuable and history-laden member of the community. To the Minister of Advanced Education: could you please share with us the important role that independent academic institutions like St. Mary's play in ensuring choice and value for Alberta's postsecondary students?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and of course thank you to the hon. member for the very important question. The member is bang on. Independent academic institutions like St. Mary's play a vital role in providing our students with a wide variety of learning opportunities, which allows them to choose the institution that will best prepare them for success in their future endeavours. St. Mary's plays a key part in driving the economic engine of this province but also, more importantly, of south Calgary. The member is incredibly honoured, I believe, to have St. Mary's as part of his riding.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that St. Mary's University receives no infrastructure or capital funding from the province for its campus facilities and given this government's commitment to barrier-free living and learning for all Albertans, again to the minister: will you elaborate on your department's strategy around deploying targeted funding to assist in providing greater accessibility at accredited postsecondary institutions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are indeed, of course, committed to fiscal responsibility and ensuring that we get the best value for our taxpayer dollars. Postsecondary education, as the member knows and recognizes, is critical to Alberta's future economy, and managing our resources responsibly is also equally important. By continuing to support our postsecondary system and institutions like St. Mary's, we are delivering on our mandate to ensure that Alberta students can choose from a wide variety of high-quality educational programs to build rewarding careers and find good jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that independent academic institutions are a vital part of postsecondary offerings in this province and given the challenges and regional inconsistencies in funding, noting that St. Mary's is among the lowest funded postsecondary institutions in Alberta by full-load equivalent, again to the Minister of Advanced Education: will you assure the students and faculty at south Calgary's only postsecondary campus that you will engage with them to discuss sustainability and their commitment to being an accessible and affordable institution, open to all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, yes. The answer to the member's question, quite clearly and directly, is yes. I'm committed to meeting with all of our postsecondary stakeholder groups to build collegial and collaborative relationships that are important to helping us move forward and renew and strengthen the postsecondary education system. I've recently had an opportunity to meet with all of the board chairs, all of the presidents, and student organizations, including the Council of Alberta University Students. Just later on this afternoon I'll be meeting with more students so that we can build a stronger postsecondary system together.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has a question.

Education Funding

(continued)

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday I revealed that because of this government's refusal to be up front about their cuts, three schools in my riding of Edmonton-Manning will be losing mental health therapists, that the parents and students have come to rely on. Students deserve every resource to ensure that they can learn, grow, and thrive while in school. This government has made a commitment to mental health supports, but talk is cheap. To the Minister of Education: will you immediately commit funding to restore the mental health therapists and any others that have been let go due to your mishandling of this Education file?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education is rising.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We will restore order to Alberta's economy and return our province to balance, all while ensuring that students and their families receive the supports they need. To the hon. member opposite: we have provided for our schools, and I know that they will be able to continue on.

Ms Sweet: Well, given that this government made a commitment to mental health and addictions – this would be related to mental health – and given that I received a letter from a concerned parent that said that all of our children are important. They need to feel that they are safe mentally, physically and emotionally while they attend classes. This particular cut to the budget will remove two of those three [needed areas] from our children and our community, and given the loss of mental health therapist positions and given that many of these ministers continue to stall on giving school boards the funding that they need, to the minister: will you commit to reaching out to every school board and offering to provide . . .

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question. I've been in contact with many school boards, and they know that as a standard procedure funding information will be communicated to the boards following approval by the Legislature. There will be funding for enrolment growth. Again, we respect the autonomy of boards to make the decisions that are best for their boards and their divisions.

Ms Sweet: Well, given that the Education minister's preference is to pass the buck to school boards rather than to stand up for our teachers, our students, and our parents and given that the minister's press secretary actually accused me of, quote, creating fear because I stood with a brave group of parents last Friday about the impact that will come from the loss of their mental health therapists and given that it is the minister and her office who have been creating fear by failing to give students the resources they need to take care of our children, again to the minister: will you take out your earbuds and listen to the parents concerned about your cuts and commit to mental health funding for our school system?

Member LaGrange: As a rehabilitative practitioner working with the mentally, physically challenged, a former trustee for 11-plus years, a mother of seven, a grandmother of four, I totally understand the supports that are needed in schools, and we will communicate the information as soon as possible. We respect school boards' autonomy to make those decisions that are best for their boards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Oil Transportation by Rail

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oil-by-rail contracts would have seen 120,000 barrels of oil a day moving at the end of this week and generating $2.2 billion in revenue. That's the advice we received from our public service. This government is disputing that, disrespecting the public service and making fun of their advice. Instead, we were told they will create capacity in the private sector. To the minister again: how many barrels of capacity have you secured so far? How many barrels?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, thank you for that question because it allows us to highlight once again how bad these contracts were that the previous government negotiated. This contract, had it been fulfilled, would have resulted in a $1.5 billion loss to Alberta taxpayers. We are taking our time to get this right and find a private-sector solution.

Mr. Sabir: That was a pretty simple question, Minister. You are embarrassing yourself.

Given that Albertans deserve to know clearly what you are doing to move oil to markets and given that all we have heard from you and the Premier is heated rhetoric and given that our oil remains in the ground and that Albertans continue to lose their jobs in the sector, again to the minister: can you please come clean on how many barrels per day, and where is the legislation on this matter that the Premier promised?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, every single barrel of oil that would have been moved by the NDP's crude-by-rail contract would have been run at a loss to Alberta taxpayers, a loss of a total of $1.5 billion. We are doing everything we can to stand up for Alberta, to get pipelines built, to find a private-sector solution to crude by rail, but every single barrel that would have been moved in their contracts would cost Alberta taxpayers.

Mr. Sabir: The question actually is: how many barrels have you moved, have you secured in the private sector, and will you just admit that you have not moved any barrels and certainly not 120,000 barrels?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, the members opposite, the former NDP government, were moving our province towards a $100 billion deficit. That crude-by-rail contract would move that another $1.5 billion. It would be irresponsible to Alberta taxpayers to continue running up a debt for the NDP mismanagement of the oil and gas sector over four years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Transportation Infrastructure in Leduc

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton International Airport is an economic driver for both the constituency of Leduc-Beaumont and the entire capital region, with $3.2 billion in economic output, moving more cargo and over 8 million passengers annually, attracting over $750 million in private-sector investment in the last seven years, and creating over 13,000 jobs over the last three years. To the Minister of Transportation: what are you doing to ensure that the Edmonton International Airport has the infrastructure needed to accommodate such growth?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. The winning of highway 19 is under way. Between highway 2 and range road 253: substantially complete and should be done this summer. The land acquisition and utility relocation for the west portion is under way, and we continue to work with the Edmonton International Airport on planning for the middle portion of highway 19. I thank the hon. member. It's an important issue.

The Speaker: The Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that having three major transportation networks – the Edmonton International Airport, highway 2, and the Canadian Pacific Railway – right beside Leduc has made the city a transportation hub for central and northern Alberta and given that Leduc continues to be one of the fastest growing communities in the country, with one of the youngest populations, how does the Minister of Transportation intend on providing Leduc with the infrastructure investment it so desperately needs to meet the needs of a growing population and growing economic activity?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is moving ahead with improvements to highway 19. We've recently completed major improvements on the QE II between Edmonton and highway 19, including a new southbound lane, and we continue to work with the county of Leduc and the international airport on other improvements in the area. Our government will focus on infrastructure investments that support the economy and support Leduc and support the Edmonton International Airport.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents have been advocating alongside the airport for the 65th Avenue interchange for nearly a decade and given that this interchange is seen as a way to boost economic development in both Leduc and at the airport while greatly reducing traffic congestion and connecting to a larger trade corridor and given that the former government, the city of Leduc, and the airport have contributed $1.2 million to engineering designs and given that the estimated private-sector investment in the airport alone will be over $600 million when the interchange is completed, can the Minister of Transportation please update my constituents on the status . . .

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, our government and its partners are supporting the planning for the interchange between the QE II and 65th Avenue. That project would include a new bridge over the QE

II, on- and off-ramps connecting 65th Avenue, and other improvements at 65th Avenue and 50th Street in Leduc. The project would help reduce congestion on the QE II, provide a new connection to commercial development in Leduc in the area of the airport, and will be given serious consideration as we move towards a new budget and capital plan. Thank you to the hon. member. This issue matters.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has a question.

Family Support for Children with Disabilities

Ms Renaud: Merci, M. le Président. Last year it came to our attention that parents of children with disabilities who access the family support for children with disabilities program, or FSCD, were being directed to training for themselves rather than to supports for kids from professionals. Our government was working with those families to make sure that they were no longer being asked to be parent, therapist, coach, and aid to their children. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: will you commit on behalf of your government that children and families in the FSCD program will be spared any cuts you have planned for disability programs?

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member for that question. Mr. Speaker, we are working within our department to review every single program, not just the FSCD program, to ensure that every taxpayer dollar is stretched to the maximum so that vulnerable Albertans get the supports that they need.

Ms Renaud: Given that all parents work around the clock to provide the best for their children and given that parents of children with disabilities must work even harder to care for and provide the resources that their kids need and given that children with disabilities who are provided proper supports are so much more likely to lead happy, fulfilled lives as adults, to the minister: have you met with parents of children with disabilities yet, and if not, will you commit to meeting with them before you implement cuts to their programs or stretching their dollars?

Thank you.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I have been very diligent about meeting with a variety of stakeholders, including parents of children with disabilities, to understand exactly what their needs are. I've received tremendous feedback, and we are going to do the best for these families to make sure that we get them the supports that they need.

2:20

Ms Renaud: Given that the FSCD program supports around 10,000 families in Alberta and given that in Doug Ford's Ontario funding for supports for children with disabilities has been decimated and given that we know that this Premier and Premier Ford like to, quote, finish each other's sentences, to the same minister: what does the end of that sentence look like for children with disabilities in Alberta?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, actually, there are more than 10,000 children who are being supported by this program. Certainly, I will reiterate the message that we are working very, very hard to make sure that all of our taxpayer dollars reach those children who need those supports, and we will do it efficiently, effectively, and with compassion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Minimum Wage for Youth

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A minister of labour and Member for Calgary-Varsity stood in this House and clearly stated that youth wage differentials are a bad idea for a number of reasons. Now, that wasn't today's minister of labour and Member for Calgary-Varsity, mind you, but, rather, the minister from 1998. He knew that youth wage differentials hurt young workers saving for their education, so he ended that bad policy. To the current minister of labour. We know this policy won't create more jobs. Why can't you and the Premier come up with a better idea than paying young people less than they're worth?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The student job-creation wage is about creating jobs for Alberta's youth. We have a job crisis in Alberta right now. According to Stats Canada, in the first quarter of 2019, for youth under 18 the unemployment rate was 21.5 per cent. That is three times the regular unemployment rate. We committed – we committed in our platform, and we committed to Albertans – that we would get Albertans working. We need to get our Alberta youth working, and we will do that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, given that in 1998 the then minister of labour and Member for Calgary-Varsity stated that most students are also working and contributing towards their postsecondary education and that they should be paid the same rate as workers with comparable skills and given that young people still work to save for postsecondary education and that everyone deserves equal pay for equal work regardless of the year they were born, to today's minister of labour and Member for Calgary-Varsity: why don't you agree with your predecessor and the principles of equal pay for equal work?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated previously, we have a youth job crisis in this province right now. We need to get our youth working. This is as a result of the policies of the previous government, which raised the minimum wage by nearly 50 per cent in four short years in the face of one of Alberta's greatest economic downturns. We need to address that. We need to get our youth working, and $13 an hour is far better than zero dollars an hour if they don't have a job.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, given that in 1998 the then minister of labour and Member for Calgary-Varsity stated, "We had evidence where that training wage was being abused by employers, abused to the point where it had to be eliminated," to today's minister of labour and Member for Calgary-Varsity: since you're ignoring Albertans in 2019, will you at least take out your earplugs, listen to your Conservative predecessor from '98, who already told this Chamber that a youth wage differential is a deeply flawed policy prone to abuse?

Mr. Copping: Again, Mr. Speaker, the student job-creation wage is about creating jobs for Alberta's youth who don't have them. When the minimum wage was increased by the previous government, employers were forced to lay off workers, and unfortunately it was the most inexperienced workers, the youth, who lost opportunities. By reducing costs to employers, we can help students get their first job, develop skills, and gain the experience that they need for the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Dementia Strategy

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As of 2016 over 42,000 Albertans have been diagnosed and are living with dementia. Dementia is a category of neurological disease that causes long-term gradual loss of ability to think or remember in those that it affects. It is not only an immense stress to those who have it but also to their families and their caregivers. Will the Minister of Health please highlight Alberta's own plan to tackle this devastating condition and improve the quality of life for those who are afflicted by it?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dementia is devastating for patients and their families, and it's a major burden on the health system. More than 42,000 Albertans are living with dementia today, and our action plan is focused on raising awareness, diagnosing dementia early, improving quality of life, supporting families and their caregivers, and promoting research, but we do need to do more. As our population ages, we need a health system which is optimized in every way to deal with faster demand growth than we've ever seen before.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that dementia is having a growing and significant national impact and given that there are more than 419,000 Canadians aged 65 and older diagnosed with dementia and given that there are Canadians living with dementia in both rural and urban communities, will the Minister of Health please advise how the new dementia strategy will be incorporated into our own provincial strategy to make our communities more dementia inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new national strategy is a good contribution to the discussion around dementia. We're reviewing it, and we'll continue to work with the federal government. Services are, of course, a provincial responsibility. The national strategy supports our services by promoting awareness, reducing stigma, supporting evaluation, guidelines, and best practices. The key point is the same as our provincial action plan. We can't cure dementia, but we can do more to identify it early, help people adjust, and improve quality of life.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental is once again to the Minister of Health. Given that the number of 419,000 Canadians diagnosed with dementia does not include those under the age of 65 and given that the number does not include the number of people who remain undiagnosed, possibly due, like you mentioned, to the stigma or other barriers, will the Minister of Health elaborate on what is being done to reduce the stigma of the disease and work towards early diagnosis to maximize quality of life for those with dementia?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, dementia is terrifying to seniors and their families. There's no cure, so people feel helpless, and it's a word they don't want to hear. The result is that people live with undiagnosed dementia, and they don't get the support that would help them and reduce the burden on their families. It's important for us to end the stigma around dementia because, once again, once there's a diagnosis, there's actually a great deal that the health care providers can do to improve the quality of life and reduce the burden on the families.

Flood Mitigation on the Bow River

Member Loyola: This spring our leader announced a bold and forward-looking commitment of $1 billion towards upstream flood mitigation for the Bow River. It took this UCP government the better part of a year to determine whether they would support upstream mitigation on the Elbow River despite years of study and validation. I know that Calgarians hope that they will show much better leadership when it comes to the Bow River. To the minister: have you and your caucus sorted out whether or not you plan to protect families and businesses along the Bow River?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation is rising.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A platform promise that we made was to put flood mitigation in place for the city of Calgary, and we have every intention of fulfilling that commitment. The last government left questions unanswered, about 700, that we gave answers to last week, 8,000 pages' worth of work left undone by the previous government that we put in place already. We've done more in four weeks than they did over the four years, and we're not finished yet.

Member Loyola: Given that the city of Calgary is working hard to reinforce the river banks of the Bow and given that these efforts are important but don't address upstream mitigation, which will require funding and leadership from this government, and given that the Bow River working group has made a series of recommendations to government in partnership with the city of Calgary, to the minister: have you reviewed the recommendations made by the working group, and when will you conduct the necessary feasibility studies and consultations to proceed with Bow River flood mitigation?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have every intention of talking to this group as well as to the city of Calgary, Rocky View, the Tsuut'ina Nation, the Stoney Nation. It's an ongoing process. We're committed to keeping the communication up. Let me say that we can't build anything until we get through the approval process. We hired an expert to help us with that on our third day on the job, and we are committed to not being the delay. We can't force the approval to be faster, but we are determined to not let it go any slower as a result of our efforts.

2:30

Member Loyola: Given that our changing climate means that Albertans will continue to endure more frequent and more severe extreme weather events and given that funding for future flood mitigation projects along the Bow River was to come from our government's climate leadership plan and given that finding a billion dollars isn't easy, especially when you're handing out $4.5 billion over to wealthy corporations, will you consider holding back at least $1 billion of the $4.5 billion you plan on giving away and saving it for rainy days, or are the earplugs in way too tight?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the previous government was big on making promises, but after four years they did next to nothing, so I guess they didn't actually spend any money. We are not going to do it that way. We have already started. We already hired an expert. We've already put out 8,000 pages' worth of research on it. We're going to commit to actually making sure that the consultation is done right. They had four years; they sat on their hands. This government will not do that.

Freedom of Expression on Postsecondary Campuses

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that this government just doesn't like consulting, and this Advanced Education minister's plan to force deeply troubling speech rules on our postsecondary institutions is causing lots of concern. The University of Alberta Students' Union said last week that they're in the dark and worried about the minister's plan to push these policies in time for September. To the minister: will you pull out the earplugs and actually start listening to student unions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education is rising.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely am listening to student organizations and to student leaders. As I mentioned, I think about a week ago I had a meeting with the Council of Alberta University Students to discuss their concerns. The other day as well I had an interview with the Gateway, which, if memory serves me correctly, is actually the student newspaper for the University of Alberta. I was able to provide them more information about our plans to adopt the Chicago principles of free expression to make sure that our academic institutions remain bastions of critical thinking and academic dialogue.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Muslim Students' Association at the University of Calgary said that they worry that these policies, the Chicago principles, will simply embolden racists and given that the minister has done nothing to reach out to this group or many others and given that he alone has decided that September will be the implementation date, to the minister: are you deliberately trying to allow racism to flourish in our campuses, or are you in over your head and unaware of the harm that the Chicago principles cause?

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, the assertion is quite ridiculous. The Criminal Code of Canada and the Canadian Human Rights Act have very strong provisions in place to ensure that hate speech is not permitted. As well, as it relates to the Chicago principles, they are also very clear in ensuring that hateful language is not permitted on campus. I haven't heard from the Muslim Students' Association, but I am very happy to meet with them and discuss their concerns. As I said, I have met already with the Council of Alberta University Students, and this afternoon I will be meeting with many more student leaders.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that Glynnis Lieb, the executive director for the Institute for Sexual Minority Studies and Services at the University of Alberta, said that she's already observed some with negative and hateful views feeling emboldened by the UCP's assertion of the Chicago principles and given that she was among the hundreds who came here to the Legislature last week to protest this government's hateful attack on gay-straight alliances, to the minister: will you actually listen to your stakeholders and shelve your plans, please, and get rid of this dangerous speech policy on campuses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we do in fact listen to our stakeholders. In fact, on Friday, when I was meeting with the board of governors of all of our institutions, they all expressed their commitment to adopting the Chicago principles. So we're looking forward to implementing the principles. Let me be quite clear as well. When it comes to hate speech, that will not be tolerated in any way, shape, or form. There are already strong protections in the Criminal Code and in the Human Rights Act that protect against hate speech. The NDP is clearly so out of touch.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Chuckegg Creek Wildfire Update

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this House is aware, fire season is fraught with anxiety for residents of my constituency of Peace River. After the emotional roller coaster of alerts, evacuations, and returns, last Monday Mackenzie county was evacuated in the middle of the night, including my own home, due to a resurgent Chuckegg Creek wildfire. Happily, today we are allowed re-entry as of 2 p.m. Can the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry please provide an update on the recent wildfire behaviour?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Dreshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Peace River, who has done an incredible job in his constituency, talking to all the volunteers and firefighters, and has just done an amazing, exemplary job. As the Member for Peace River mentioned, as of 36 minutes ago the mandatory evacuation order has been lifted, so residents from Mackenzie county may return home. But this is still a high-risk area, and it is an active wildfire that is in and around the area. The favourable weather over the weekend allowed for resources from across the province to add support to this fire, and we're doing everything we can to fight it.

Mr. Williams: Thank you to the minister.

To the Minister of Community and Social Services: given that many of these individuals have been evacuated twice and given that thousands have been unable to work at the mill, stores, and other businesses that animate our local economy and support our families, can the minister please advise this House if these recently returned evacuees, who have not yet received one-time financial support, will be eligible for the $1,250 one-time payment?

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member for that question. Mr. Speaker, our government is working hard to support all Albertans who have been impacted by the wildfires. I want to assure the Member for Peace River, his constituents, and all Albertans who have been evacuated due to the wildfires that they are all eligible for the one-time payment of $1,250 per adult and $500 per child. Those who are eligible but have yet to receive a payment can do so online. I encourage those with questions or those who may need further support to call 310.4455.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. My constituents greatly appreciate the answer.

Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that this emergency is ongoing and given that it continues to threaten so many of my constituents' homes and their places of work and given that an evacuation alert remains in effect for the residents of Mackenzie county, including my own home, and given that many are travelling back from long distances to return, will the Minister of Municipal Affairs please inform this House if another mandatory evacuation is possible or likely for these communities surrounding the Chuckegg Creek wildfire?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Peace River for that question. Last night I received a briefing about the Chuckegg Creek fire from emergency management experts at the Provincial Operations Centre. I am happy to say that conditions are improving for our first responders up north, and more than 8,000 Albertans from La Crête and Mackenzie county are returning home this afternoon. As always, we remind Albertans in at-risk areas to remain vigilant and ready to evacuate and get further updates at emergencyalert.alberta.ca.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein has a question.

Foreign Qualification and Credential Recognition

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Foreign professionals are a valuable part of Alberta's economy, and our province has a history of unnecessarily delaying the recognition of professional and university credentials. As a result, many immigrants to our province have been denied proper access to the positions they were trained for. Can the minister please assure my constituents that this government will make the professional needs of Albertan newcomers a priority?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Klein for the question. Earlier this week I was pleased to introduce Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act. We've heard from many newcomers who are underemployed and unable to contribute to our economy at their skill level. It is a travesty that we have so many skilled newcomers in our province who are not reaching their full personal, professional, and economic potential. All too often this is because they are waiting for months or even years for their credentials to be recognized. This delay impacts newcomers to our province, and we will correct this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that a lot of new Canadians in my riding are going to be happy to hear that. Thank you to the minister as well for the response.

Given that Alberta newcomers who encounter issues in verifying their credentials are forced to work in positions far below their skill level and given that many families who immigrated to our province are still struggling to break through the red tape between them and the positions they were trained for, can the minister elaborate about the ways that this government plans to accelerate the verification of foreign credentials?

2:40

Mr. Copping: Thank you again to the member for the question. Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act, enables the government to work collaboratively with regulatory bodies to ensure that best practices are followed and that organizations fulfill requirements as laid out in the act. The act will remove unfair barriers while maintaining the high professional standards all Albertans have come to know and expect. One of the ways we aim to accelerate the verification process is by ensuring that regulatory bodies will deliver an interim decision to newcomers within six months. This gives the applicants a road map forward so they can quickly get their credentials recognized.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that according to the Conference Board of Canada, Canadians would earn up to $17 billion more annually if their learning credentials were fully recognized and given the sharp increase in over 300,000 additional Canadians that are facing challenges in having their credentials recognized since 2001, can the minister provide my constituents with a time frame for regulatory changes regarding the verification of foreign credentials?

Mr. Copping: Thank you again for the question. We recognize that lengthy delays in having foreign credentials recognized lead to underemployment and to a loss of critical skill sets for newcomers and Canadian citizens who are trained abroad. The legislation will come into effect upon proclamation, and we intend to work collaboratively with our professional regulatory organizations to develop reasonable timelines without jeopardizing high-quality standards. Bill 11 will speed up the process where possible, maintain high professional standards, and increase fairness and transparency.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will return to Members' Statements. I would remind all members, if you're leaving the Chamber for other meetings, to do so as quickly as possible.

Members' Statements

(continued)

Lemonade Day

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, this past Saturday, across northern Alberta, Lemonade Day took place. Lemonade Day is a free, fun program that teaches youth how to start, own, and operate their own business. The main objective of Lemonade Day is to empower youth to take ownership of their lives and become productive members of society: the business leaders, social advocates, volunteers, and forward-thinking citizens of tomorrow. The program provides all the youth who register with a workbook that teaches them essential business lessons like creating budgets, setting profit-making goals, serving customers, repaying investors, and giving back to the community. Through their learning they acquire goal-setting and problem-solving skills and gain self-esteem, which is essential for future success.

I was fortunate enough on Saturday to visit lemonade stands in my constituency in the towns of Hinton and Whitecourt and was encouraged to see that the future of entrepreneurial spirit is alive and well in our province. My most memorable stop of the day was at the stand of Isaac Richards. At just five years old he has been planning for months, with help from the program and his parents, to launch a successful business. All of Isaac's research, time, sacrifice, and strategy paid great dividends as he set up his stand and sold his lemonade with great success.

As inspiring as it was to see all of the youth pour their hearts and souls into this very special business venture and learn extremely valuable life lessons that will undoubtedly serve them well moving forward, I couldn't help but think of some of the conversations which have taken place in this Chamber in the last few weeks. That made me realize just how amazing it is that five-year-old Isaac already has such a great understanding and respect for the effort and sacrifice it takes to run a business, and I'm hoping he is willing to come here and teach what it takes to run a business to the entire Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

School Nutrition Programs

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the most shocking and disturbing elements of the UCP's season of repeal is the threat to Alberta's school nutrition programs. Today more than 37,000 children receive a healthy snack or meal as well as important lessons about making healthy food choices. The program's strength is in its simplicity. Schools must teach about healthy eating habits and follow the health and safety code. Other than that, school boards are free to make choices to suit the local needs.

For example, in one program in a town a local supermarket supplies healthy food to a school and then features these same healthy food choices in a display in their store. In another school district the local high school foods program prepares meals, and they're sent down the road to feed more than 300 students at the elementary school. Some schools are even growing some of the food that they serve.

There is ample evidence, Mr. Speaker, that school nutrition programs increase attendance, contribute to physical and mental well-being, and improve academic performance. Teachers report that the school nutrition program helps to promote good behaviour in the classroom as well since students will have more positive relationships when they sit down and share a meal or a snack with their peers. School nutrition programs are an important tool to help children and their families to thrive.

In these last four years, during difficult economic times, I'm very proud to say that under our government child poverty rates were cut in half. Part of the strategy that we employed to achieve this goal was the school nutrition program. It is unconscionable to cut school nutrition programs to pay for a big corporate tax cut. For the sake of our children, let's take the school nutrition program off the UCP chopping block.

Opioid Use Prevention and Treatment

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, you don't have to spend much time in my riding of Calgary-Currie to get a glimpse into opioid addiction challenges. Once you start seeing used and discarded needles throughout the community, you can't stop finding more. You will find them in shopping mall parking lots. You'll find them in alleys behind buildings. You'll even find them in the parks where I take my two-year-old child to play.

While communities have rallied together to try to clean up these used and dangerous needles, it is vital to address the reason why they are littered throughout my constituency. While this crisis hits so close to many who are in Calgary-Currie, I know that we are not the only area facing this challenge. Across the province Albertans are battling the effects of this epidemic.

People who are suffering from addiction need to be treated with compassion, respect, and free from judgment. This disease is just that; it is a disease. Its victims cross socioeconomic lines and touch every aspect of Albertan communities.

Today I am proud to be a member of the United Conservative Party, with a real plan to combat this crisis. The appointment of the first-ever Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions marks a big step to giving this crisis the attention it deserves.

Also, this government was elected on a mandate to invest $140 million over four years to expand support for mental health and addiction treatment, promote recovery, reduce wait times, and increase access to treatment, including more detox beds and more mobile detox programs. We need to ensure that those who are asking for help get the help they need. Addiction and mental health challenges can be life-or-death issues, and I am proud to be a member of a government that is fighting for these vulnerable Albertans.

Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it's an honour to table the annual report covering the committee's activities for 2018. This report fulfills the requirements of Standing Order 55 and section 6(4)(c) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act. This report will also be made available through the Assembly website.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to provide oral notice of Bill 13, the Alberta Senate Election Act, sponsored by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) that at the appropriate time I'll rise to discuss the breach of privilege that occurred on June 20 in the House. I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter that was provided to your office this morning.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've two tablings today, both a very similar letter in support of Bill 201. Asher is a 12-year-old boy who lives in Airdrie. A good friend of his family is writing a letter in support as well as the mother of Asher.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek had risen.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 16(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act and as chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to table copies of the 2018-2019 annual report of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. A copy of this report will be provided to all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any others that wish to rise? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate copies of a letter that was received from an individual. He was very disturbed about the whole earplug incident and said, you know, that this is disrespectful and an insult to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a letter to the Deputy Minister of Finance from Lethbridge school division No. 51 outlining how Bill 9 undid settled bargained contracts that were executed in good faith for the '19-20 year.

Mr. Speaker, I also have five copies of a letter from a constituent who's a probation officer in Lethbridge, who has grave concerns about losing bargaining rights under Bill 9.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with two tablings. The first is from a constituent who is a teacher. It's an e-mail titled UCP Behaviours in Alberta. They express concern "about the atrocious behaviour [of the Premier] with the ear plugs." They also express concern about budget cuts and the impact on education.

The second one is an e-mail from a constituent expressing concern about Bill 9 and their displeasure about "the disrespectful and undemocratic actions of the Premier and his party members."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Morinville-St. Albert.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table A Celebration of Life for Raymond Johnston. You might remember him as Nicky Fordinski. He was the face of City Ford throughout the '80s and part of the '90s. He was a supporter, a friend, and, most importantly, a good man. I will table the requisite five copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite number of copies of a letter, a very well-written letter, from an outraged constituent about a couple of things: one, the infringement of the Charter-protected rights to participate in collective bargaining and, as well, the frustration that the constituent has with the arrogance of handing out and using earplugs during debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you. I have the requisite number of copies of several e-mails my office has received around Earpluggate, one that even copied your office, too, Mr. Speaker, demanding apologies, very disgusted with the behaviour as well as even calling for a public apology or asking the member to resign.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Copping, Minister of Labour and Immigration, pursuant to the Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act the Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists of Alberta annual report 2018.

The Speaker: Points of order. The Official Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of a Member

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j). At approximately 1:54 this afternoon during question period the Premier – now, again, I will endeavour to quote him as closely as possible; I don't have the Blues in front of me, which likely you will – talked about how he was in the House for 18 hours and then made a reference that not all leaders were in the House.

Mr. Speaker, this is referencing a member's absence, which, of course, is in House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 619:

Allusions to the presence or absence of a Member or Minister in the Chamber are unacceptable. Speakers have upheld this prohibition on the ground that "there are many places that Members have to be in order to carry out all of the obligations that go with their office."

Now, Mr. Speaker, as well, it's very interesting. Some members definitely are living in glass houses. This was a comment coming from the Premier, who missed almost two weeks in a row in this House. A little rich.

The Speaker: I'll address my comments to the Official Opposition House Leader after I hear the interjections from the Government House Leader.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, a backdoor attempt to do the exact same thing that the hon. Opposition House Leader is complaining about.

With that said, I would agree that the Premier did refer to the Leader of the Opposition's absence from this place and the fact that she did not participate in debate on Bill 9, that she was travelling and did not participate at all. I would recognize that that's unparliamentary and would withdraw it on behalf of the Premier.

The Speaker: I appreciate you withdrawing the remarks. I would have much preferred you doing so without potentially creating another point of order by referring, perhaps, to the presence or the absence of a member. And I might just remind the Official Opposition House Leader of the same, that we can't do indirectly what we can't do directly, which would be to refer to the absence or the presence of a member. As such, I consider this point of order concluded.

Points of privilege. I believe that the Official Opposition House Leader would like to rise on a point of privilege.

Privilege

Misleading the House

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to a point of privilege. To open my remarks, I'd like to quote the hon. Government House Leader from when he was in opposition.

As you know, points of privilege should not be taken or entered into lightly. Points of privilege are a serious matter, and it's unfortunate that we have to address this issue today in this Chamber. But it needs to be addressed, as do many other serious matters that we address inside this Chamber on a daily basis.

I don't take this lightly, Mr. Speaker. I don't do so frivolously, nor will I without a full disclosure of the facts on this matter, and those facts, including a statement made by the Premier on June 21, are what have led to the belief that during Oral Question Period on June 20, 2019, the Minister of Environment and Parks and Government House Leader misled the House and made misleading remarks.

As you well know, regarding privilege and the issues of contempt, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, 2017, speaks to breaches of privilege and issues of contempt in chapter 3. On page 82 it clearly states that one of these breaches is “deliberately attempting to mislead the House or a committee (by way of statement, evidence, or petition).” Mr. Speaker, I bring this to you today because, again, “the House also claims the right to punish, as a contempt, any action which . . . tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions . . . or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House.” In Erskine May, Parliamentary Practice, 24th edition, page 254, section 15, under misconduct of officers we find that “the Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt.”

Now, Mr. Speaker, I’ve provided the appropriate notice, and, as promised, I will provide you with a fulsome explanation for what I believe to be a breach of privilege undertaken by the Minister of Environment and Parks and esteemed Government House Leader during Oral Question Period on June 20, this being the first possible opportunity for me to do so. On that day the Government House Leader, answering on behalf of the Premier, when asked to apologize to the House by the deputy Leader of the Opposition on the disrespect shown to the House during debate of Bill 9 the previous evening in regard to the Premier handing out earplugs to members of government caucus, responded, “Mr. Speaker, this is a ridiculous question from the deputy Leader of the Opposition.”

Later, in response to a further question from the deputy House leader, the Government House Leader replied, “Mr. Speaker, nobody from the government plugged their ears during debate.” In that, the Government House Leader clearly denied the presence of earplugs, which would be used to reduce sound and input into the ears of the members of the House in the House during debate of Bill 9.

3:00

Now, we have in this House the benefit of multiple forms of recording. I admit that I was hamstrung a bit by the lack of a full Hansard for the debate on Bill 9, that the government insisted take place into the wee hours of June 20. I appreciate the work that Hansard does for us. Believe me, they are amazing. But, Mr. Speaker, you’ll be happy to know that I persisted. While Hansard doesn’t know the movement of members through the House, Assembly Online does, so please indulge me for a moment.

On June 20, during Oral Question Period the Government House Leader denied that there were earplugs distributed the evening of June 19 during the debate on Bill 9. However, that same day a statement was released from the Premier’s office stating, quote: this was a harmless and lighthearted attempt to boost government caucus morale after being forced to listen to the NDP’s insults, lies, and over-the-top rhetoric for hours on end. End quote. We have a dilemma here.

This is further confused by the statement our Premier made on Power & Politics on June 21, and I quote: yeah, we had a member with tinnitus who was sitting next to an opposition member who was shouting repeatedly, clocked at nearly 100 decibels, so, yeah, I gave him a pair of earplugs to reduce the volume that was coming from – and, you know, when we face that kind of out-of-control shouting in the Legislature, I don’t begrudge our MLAs trying to reduce, turn down the volume a notch. End quote. It would appear that the Premier is in fact admitting that at least one member of his caucus was wearing earplugs supplied by the Premier himself.

I could belabour the many issues I have with this, like the fact that recording devices are not allowed in the Chamber, so I wonder how they were able to determine the decibel level of a member of the opposition’s speaking voice, which may or may not have been given at any time, or the fact that the member he’s referring to wasn’t speaking at the time that the earplugs in question were handed out. I had some free time this weekend, not much, Mr. Speaker, but in that time – and I can tell you that he stopped speaking at 10:45 at night – I isolated the video from the evening. At approximately 11:23:43 we can actually see the Premier walking behind the member for Leduc-Beaumont with what appears to be a package of earplugs on the government side of the House. But I digress.

Back to my point of privilege. I would again, in regard to this matter, continue to quote the Government House Leader, while he was a member of the opposition, in regard to a point of privilege.

As Erskine May’s Treatise on the Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, 24th edition, page 254, states with respect to the United Kingdom, “The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt.” It is a three-part test for that to happen. First, as articulated by the former Clerk of the New Zealand House of the Assembly, David McGee – for those following along at home, it can be found in the third edition of this book, Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, on pages 653 to 654. The three parts of the test are as follows: one, it must be proven that the statement was misleading; two, it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time that the statement was incorrect; and three, that in making the statement the member intended to mislead the House.

Let us put this to a test, Mr. Speaker. For the first test, that it must be proven that the statement was misleading: clearly, given that on June 21 the Premier admitted on Power & Politics that earplugs were distributed and used in the House, for the Government House Leader to state, on June 20, that nobody from the government plugged their ears during debate on June 19 was misleading. To the second point: given that the Premier’s office admitted – twice, I might add – to the distribution of the earplugs and given that the House leader was present the evening of June 19, the Government House Leader knew his statement was misleading. And to the third point: given that the Government House Leader knew of the existence and the distribution of said earplugs, the Government House Leader therefore intentionally misled the House.

Mr. Speaker, what is most concerning about this incident is that the deputy Leader of the Opposition was just asking for an apology, an apology for an action that – let’s be clear here – was in poor taste. Instead of taking the high road, the Government House Leader intentionally misled the House. He intentionally misled Albertans. In fact, given that we have two different versions of events from the Premier and his office, it could be argued that recently there have been multiple instances where government members of this Assembly have been intentionally misleading.

We, the members of the Assembly, and the Albertans we represent have been given three scenarios: that it didn’t occur, that it was a joke, or that it was necessary to protect the hearing of a government member from the voice of a member who wasn’t even speaking at the time. All three can’t be true, Mr. Speaker. Someone was being misleading.

Mr. Speaker, I’ll close with this, again quoting the Government House Leader from his time as Opposition House Leader.

It’s very clear to me and I hope it is clear to you that the minister of environment, a minister of the Crown, misled this Assembly while attempting to deflect a question in question period. By misleading this Assembly, [he] has misled Albertans. As such, it is my hope that you, too, will find the same, that a prima facie breach of privilege has occurred.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

As a point of privilege is a serious question, it is traditional that the Speaker would give the government or whoever is responding to the point of privilege 24 hours. I see the hon. Government House Leader. He can provide some direction, or he can respond immediately.

Mr. Jason Nixon: We're good to argue today. First of all, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I find it, again, disappointing that the Opposition House Leader, instead of focusing his attention on ways we can work together to get Albertans back to work, restore the economy, and help the oil and gas industry build pipelines, is arguing once again on a frivolous point of privilege in this place. I do appreciate that he spent so much time reading about me in Hansard. It is quite flattering.

Where to start, Mr. Speaker? Well, first of all, I will note that the letter from the Official Opposition House Leader was intentionally vague about the nature of the remarks – sorry; his so-called fulsome remarks – he was going to be making. While I'm prepared to speak on this matter today, I don't see how the opposition can expect any kind of response from the government when they intentionally withhold the nature of their point of privilege.

I will state right at the outset that this does not rise to the level of a point of privilege, and in fact I believe the Opposition House Leader knows this full well. I think he's achieved his strategic objective by abusing the ability of members to call a point of privilege so that he can redebate an issue from last week; namely, that the Official Opposition does not approve of Bill 9. Mr. Speaker, I certainly got that from listening to close to 25 hours of debate from the member opposite. I would note for the record that all members of the Official Opposition spoke on that debate except for the Leader of the Official Opposition. It sounds like her priorities could be found out east. The Premier even made himself available to participate in that debate. But I digress.

My understanding from the opposition is that they are concerned about my usage of the term “nobody” in the quote “nobody from the government plugged their ears during debate,” from Thursday, June 20. That can be found on page 1080 of Hansard. The Premier, speaking on television, confirmed that a private member with a medical issue may have felt the need to wear an earplug due to the rising wall of noise that was coming from the opposition.

Mr. Speaker, both statements are factual and not contradictory or misleading at all. Members of the opposition should be aware of the distinction between members of Executive Council, also known as cabinet ministers, who may also be referred to as the government, and private members who may choose to sit in the government caucus in support of the government. In fact, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, states on page 35, “Functionally, the House is divided into three groups: the Ministry and its Parliamentary Secretaries, Members who support the government, and Members who oppose the government.” Note that those who support the government are a distinct entity from a parliamentary standpoint. While I'm not surprised that the NDP doesn't appreciate that because, quite frankly, I haven't seen them show a lot of respect or understanding for the institution of parliament or parliamentary democracy during my time in this Chamber, that is, in fact, the reality.

The question you will see, Mr. Speaker, when you refer to Hansard is a clear question from the deputy Leader of the Opposition at the time stating nothing to do with earplugs but stating that this government was not listening during debate to the hon. members' arguments. Nothing, in fact, could be further from the truth. The government participated in over 25 hours of debate, 18 hours of it alone for the Premier. The Minister of Finance was up quite often in debate, as were I and other members of the government. I made sure it was clear that was ludicrous.

Now, let's also turn to the fact that my statement on June 20 doesn't refer at all to earplugs. The question I was asked by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was: “We'll plug our ears, literally, and we'll fail to listen.” The link between my remarks and the Premier's remarks is drawn entirely at the opposition's conclusion, and while they are certainly permitted to draw whatever conclusion they want, it doesn't raise the conclusion to the level of a point of privilege.

My final point, Mr. Speaker, is that on the issue of points of privilege about misleading the Assembly, time and time again we turn to the advice given by David McGee in his book Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, second edition, where the Clerk of the New Zealand House of Representatives states, at page 491, that there are two ingredients to be established when it is alleged that a member is in contempt on this ground: the statement must, in fact, have been misleading; and it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time that the statement was made that it was incorrect and that, in making it, the member intended to mislead the House.

I think we provided evidence from the government that we do not see this as being a misleading statement. I think that once again the Opposition House Leader might have to do his homework and a little more, and while he's at that, I will refer him once again to Beauchesne's 494, where it says:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted . . . On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

Accordingly, I hope that you'll find that this does not rise to being a prima facie case of a question of privilege.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the opposition, having the privilege of being able to go back home to our home county this weekend, that I really stress that it's time for them to get focused back on what Albertans want them focused on because it's pretty clear when we're back home that nobody is listening to what the opposition is doing, and they're very disappointed in their behaviour in this Assembly.

3:10

The Speaker: Well, thank you to both House leaders for your interventions this afternoon. While I'm inclined to rule today on whether or not this is, in fact, a breach of privilege, I think I will allow caution to prevail and rule tomorrow. My sense is that the ruling will be around whether or not the member intentionally intended to mislead the House. I'll spend some time in quiet reflection on that particular matter. As such, I consider this matter concluded until I rule.

Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

Bill 202

Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019

[Debate adjourned June 17: Ms Sweet speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has one more minute.

Are there any other members? We have the hon. Member for Airdrie-East standing to speak.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 202, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019. I would like to start off by thanking my hon. colleague the MLA for Calgary-West for bringing this bill forward for essentially the second time in our two terms now in this Legislature.

This is an extremely important bill. One should take note that, as I've already mentioned, this is the second time this piece of legislation has ended up in this House, but that's for a very important reason. Mr. Speaker, in 2015, when the terrible report of Serenity was tabled in this House and what had happened to her and the government's complete negligence at the time, the government of the day, their complete negligence in taking any action on the recommendations from the Child and Youth Advocate was one that the public took pause and notice of because what had happened to Serenity was such a terrible act. The fact that the government of the day at that time took no action – so a private member, a member of the opposition of that time, the MLA for Calgary-West, came forward with his first private member's bill in an effort to protect children, to put some parameters around reporting of child abuse in our society.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 is very simple. It ensures and makes it very clear that if anyone is aware of a child being abused, they must, they will be compelled to report it to the authorities, the authorities being simply: pick up the phone, you call 911, and you will report this act to a police officer, and if you do not, you will face a hefty fine and, not only that, a very, very guilty conscience. This is a good piece of legislation. Why is this a good piece of legislation? Because it protects those who are most vulnerable. It does what it can very simply to ensure and to compel those who suspect one of abusing a child to be reporting it, and I hope that no one takes that lightly.

I want to share with my colleagues an article that came out in the CBC in 2017. I'll table it later. It pointed out that the existing part of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act dealing with the failure to report a child in need of intervention was added in 2003 and that the president of the Alberta College of Social Workers, Richard Gregory, said that it is a great piece of legislation and that the downside of it is that people don't know about it. Well, Mr. Speaker, my constituents are going to know about this piece of legislation. I hope that members in this House will all agree that this is a good piece of legislation, that we will all vote in favour of it, and this will be the law of the land.

There's also a great quote by former NHL player Sheldon Kennedy, who said that the reality is that other people a lot of times have gut feelings that something is not right, but they don't do anything about it. Somehow we need to enforce an act or empower people with the confidence and knowledge to make them act, those who have gut feelings. If hockey coaches, parents who supervise the lunchroom, teachers who supervise the playground have a gut feeling – and these are people who have generally had multiple interactions with children; these are good gut feelings – they have to report this to the authorities. This Bill 202 will compel them, and there will be penalties if they choose to ignore that gut feeling.

If a child shows up with bruising, if a child's behaviour starts to change, they will be compelled to alert the authorities, and an investigation will take place. The fact of the matter is that it is shocking that this doesn't currently exist. Prior to this legislation being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-West, it was confusing even for the previous government to understand who to report to. How is that even a possibility in this day and age, that it's confusing to figure out who to pick up the phone and call if you suspect that a child is being abused? This bill needs to be passed as quickly as possible and come into force in just the same way. By increasing the consequences of not reporting, this bill sends a very clear message to all adults about the gravity of our shared responsibility for vulnerable children, and ignoring even once a child who may be a victim of abuse, Mr. Speaker, is one time too many. Our hope is that through this bill all adults will be compelled, will be driven to act, driven to report this matter.

Bill 202 addresses the gaps in the existing legislation. I've already identified who to report to. How serious is this? Well, it's going to be $10,000 serious for negligent adults. It increases the clarity and the consequences. That is good legislation that I know all members of this House can agree with. As MLAs we have a responsibility to support legislation that protects the most vulnerable, especially children. We have a responsibility to leave a positive and profound legacy for the children of our province, and Bill 202 does just that.

3:20

We as MLAs will be judged by our actions in this House and the legislation that we support and the legislation that we don't. We do not want our legacy to be one of failure, especially failure to protect vulnerable children and, especially because it appears to be complicated or ambiguous legislation, the failure to report child abuse. I urge all members of this House to not repeat the mistakes of the past, to create clarity around child abuse and reporting, implement hefty fines, create good-news headlines, create awareness around the duty to report child abuse so that we can make a difference for those kids who are currently suffering and all those gut feelings out there that no one is taking action on. Let it be known, Mr. Speaker, that there's a $10,000 fine for those who fail vulnerable children in our province.

I urge all members of this House to vote in favour of Bill 202. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Other hon. members? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud standing.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak today to Bill 202. I would like to begin by thanking the Member for Calgary-West for bringing this private member's bill forward. I think we are all in agreement in this House about the need to address any situation where a child, particularly a vulnerable child, is at risk and about increasing the opportunities for individuals who are aware of situations where a child may be at risk, bringing those reports forward. We know it's very critical to these kids' safety. I don't think there's anybody in this House that would disagree with the idea that we need to increase those opportunities for people to come forward, to make sure that people understand their obligation as members of this society to speak up and to come forward, particularly for vulnerable children.

We have seen a number of instances, of course, very tragically, where adults have not come forward and children have been injured or lost their lives as a result. Any steps forward that we can take to prevent that from happening are very critical for us to do.

I support this bill; however, I do want to note a couple of cautions. I first of all want to speak a little bit to the record of the previous government, the NDP government, on child intervention, primarily because it speaks to the complexity of the issues around child intervention. It's not a matter that we can address with a quick change. We know that this is a very complicated issue that brings up issues of poverty, of trust of the police, of government, and of the complicated reasons why children end up in care in this province. Those situations require a complex assessment. They require clear communication channels with those who are affected – stakeholders, indigenous communities, experts in the field – to come up with solutions, and there's not going to be one solution. Of course, if there was one easy solution, then governments would have done it decades ago.

We know this is a complicated problem, and this is why I want to highlight a little bit of the track record of the previous government, the NDP government, in this area. In particular, under the NDP the government increased funding for child intervention by $57.8 million to ensure stable front-line services and meet caseload growth. This included funding for foster and kinship caregivers and those with supports for permanency agreements by $1.9 million so that caregivers have the resources to support the children in care.

Under the NDP government there was also an increase in funding for early intervention services of $5.1 million, for a total of $107.6 million to support front-line programming for culturally appropriate, community-based services. That includes parent link centres, parenting programs, and those are necessary to prevent the need for intervention at a later date. It also included $1 million to develop an indigenous youth society plan.

Under the NDP government there was also the Alberta child benefit that was created, and it invested $175 million in 2018 alone to put money right in the pockets of families who most need it, helping parents buy winter clothes for their kids and enrol them in extracurriculars for the first time.

Under the NDP government 59 additional child intervention staff were hired to manage caseloads and ensure children and youth get the care they need. Of course, I've spoken a few times already to the all-party Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, that was established under the NDP government, which was an unprecedented process that brought in stakeholders. It had transparent engagement with the communities that needed it most. As part of that process the NDP government passed Bill 18, the Child Protection and Accountability Act, which has really changed the way that the office of the Child and Youth Advocate operated. It provided a stronger, more effective office of the Child and Youth Advocate, it enhanced accountability and transparency, it improved the timeline in death reviews, it increased cultural competence, and it increased clarity and information sharing across the system.

Following phase 2 of that ministerial panel, the NDP government worked very closely with indigenous families and communities as well as stakeholders and community partners to co-create a public action plan that puts all the panel's recommendations in place. I've spoken about that a little bit. The action plan, which was A Stronger, Safer Tomorrow, created 39 recommendations and actions that the government should take to improve services for indigenous families, increase supports for children, youth, and all caregivers, and address the funding gap on-reserve.

That action plan contained 39 specific actions that were both short-term, intermediate, and long-term actions. Under the NDP government we've seen that a lot of the immediate actions have already taken place, in particular to address some of the most urgent needs. Under that panel the action plan they implemented is a first-of-its-kind agreement to fully implement Jordan's principle, which is to ensure that indigenous families don't have to go through red tape and bureaucracy to determine who should be providing services. But the services are provided first to the children, and then the federal and provincial governments can negotiate and discuss who should be responsible for paying for that.

Under the action plan an indigenous cultural understanding framework was developed and a provincial action plan for youth suicide prevention. There were specific measures in place for each element of this action plan, and progress on these actions has been shared to date. I am confident that the government and the Minister of Children's Services will continue to update us on the implementation of that action plan.

I do also want to highlight that as part of the work that was done under that action plan, the NDP government brought forward An Act for Strong Families Building Stronger Communities, which was passed by this Legislature in December 2018. It was intended to improve supports for children inside and outside of care. The UCP, as the opposition at that time, voted against that bill. I only want to bring all of this up because it is a complicated issue. Developing strategies to reduce the number of children in care but also to ensure that those children who are in care or any child is safe and protected requires a comprehensive approach.

I appreciate, obviously, that the intention of this bill is one that we can all get behind. However, I do want to highlight that there were some concerns that were raised by the opposition caucus during the consideration of this bill at the private members' bills committee. In particular, we felt that because of the potential impact of this bill on both Children's Services staff as well as on the police, there was some value that stakeholders should be consulted. We needed to hear from them as to how the implementation of the changes that were being put forward in the bill would affect their workload, how it would affect what they, as the experts who deal with these situations all the time, believed would best address the needs of kids who were in vulnerable situations.

You know, we believed it was important to get a technical briefing from the ministry on this issue because, again, as it currently stands under the Child, Youth, and Family Enhancement Act, it is an employee, the director of the association or of Children's Services, who is notified if there is a child in need of intervention. They would have the best information in terms of what kinds of calls they were getting: should they be going to the police first, or would that help? How would that affect the transfer of information to effect the most immediate way to address the concerns?

Again, this is only about: let's speak to the people who implement the changes, who would be responsible for the changes, to find out their feedback. Simply put, when we are developing laws, it's really important to speak to the people who are most directly affected and have the most knowledge about it. We felt it was important that that stakeholder consultation and ministry technical briefing was done at that stage. It would not have delayed consideration of this bill in this House. It simply would have provided a more fulsome understanding of the implications of the proposed legislation. We felt it would have helped the discussion in the House. It's something we could have talked about: what was the feedback from various police organizations, from the front-line workers who receive these calls? It only would have added to the quality of the debate as well as our understanding of the implications of the bill. As I mentioned, again, it was never intended to be any kind of delay on it, because we all agree with the intention of this bill.

3:30

I do want to highlight as well that it is our understanding from previous work that there have been very few charges laid under the current Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which currently puts a duty to report to a director of Children's Services. There have been very few charges or offences laid under this provision. It's not clear whether changing the ability to report to a police officer would actually increase the number of offences or penalties that are given out. That simply is not clear. I understand that that is one of the intentions, to send a clear message to the communities, to parents, to everybody to say that we all have a personal obligation when a child is in need to report that.

I'm just concerned that actually changing the penalty provisions doesn't actually achieve that outcome. It doesn't actually increase the number of people who will report. I don't know the answer to that. Again, that's one of the things where I think it would have been valuable to hear from our stakeholders and hear from the experts in the area to see how they think that would affect that.

The Acting Speaker: Other members looking to speak to second reading of Bill 202? I believe I see the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to point out to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud – and I know that she's new here and wasn't present when the panel was struck – that the NDP only acted and set up that panel after demands from all parties on the opposition side. It took a long time for them to finally, after embarrassment in the public eye, set up the child intervention panel. The results of that were quite disappointing, to say the least, but I digress.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to rise today and speak in favour of this Bill 202, Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019. I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-West again for proposing this bill and for his service as a police officer on the front lines, where he protected Albertans both young and old.

The hon. member and I care deeply for our constituents, but there's a special place for the children and others who are prone to being victimized. Our children are the future, and protecting them is protecting our future. I'm glad to see this bill tabled after it was unsuccessful in the previous Legislature. This bill strengthens our ability to protect children in Alberta. It increases the penalties for failing to protect our little ones. It provides common-sense clarification to Albertans as to who they can contact when they observe a child in abusive situations. These are simple changes that can have an enormous impact on the lives of children, up to and including saving their lives.

We have seen cases in recent years of horrible abuse of children in this province. We have all been shocked to our core by each one: children starved, beaten, bruised, and broken; children suffering terrible physical or sexual abuse; children murdered; children taking their own lives because they are unable to cope with the toll. We can only feel extreme disgust and repulsion at these cases when they become public. As a member of the opposition in the previous government I attended on numerous occasions the child intervention panel as a stand-in. Some of the stories that we heard from people that have been through the child intervention system were shocking and very dismaying.

Unfortunately, all too often there were adults that were aware of the horrible conditions being endured by these children and did nothing, said nothing, apparently not disgusted or repulsed enough to pick up the phone and call someone to intervene. I think we can all agree that this is completely unacceptable. Increasing the penalties for wilfully turning a blind eye to this kind of evil is a common-sense response. If people cannot be motivated by the moral imperative to protect the vulnerable, especially children, perhaps greater legal consequences can provide some more incentive.

It's sad to think that some people might need any persuasion to protect children at all, but clearly some do. For those that still won't, hopefully the penalty forces them to reconsider what they will tolerate when some behaviour is so far outside the bounds of decent society. It's a tragedy that those who victimize children are often related to them. With that being the case, abuse of children can be harder to spot. We should be willing to look a little bit closer, shouldn't we? We should be looking for kids that are in trouble.

It can be overwhelming being a child. Everything is a new experience, and in many cases a child does not know any better when they are being taken advantage of. Children learn what is right and wrong as they grow up. In tragic circumstances, their abuse can be seen as the normal course of life. That's why children need others to stand up for them when they're being taken advantage of.

Mr. Speaker, adding police officers to the list of authorities that may be contacted to report children who are at risk, in danger, or in need of intervention is a common-sense change that provides clarity to all Albertans. Many who will report would probably turn to our police officers first anyway, so this codifies what Albertans would do anyway because it is the common-sense thing to do. If you see a criminal activity taking place, you call the police. Why would that be different when seeing a child being abused or starved or gravely mistreated? That's what is expected and makes sense to most Albertans.

If a case needs child intervention authorities but not police intervention, Albertans can trust that the matter will be handed over and dealt with appropriately. They don't need to know the bureaucratic details of the intervention. All they care about is that if they see a child in need, they can report it and that child will be protected.

I understand that our neighbours in Saskatchewan require the reporting of information to an officer or peace officer, and the Prince Edward Island Child Protection Act states that a person must report "to the Director, or to a peace officer who shall report the information to the Director." This makes sense. The increased penalty proposed by this bill for failing to report a child in need is also already the penalty elsewhere. In British Columbia the penalty is a fine of up to $10,000 or imprisonment for up to six months or both.

If we pass this bill, Mr. Speaker, Alberta won't be alone in having provisions like this. There's nothing inherently problematic about being the first province to pass a piece of legislation, but I do think that knowing policies are already in place elsewhere can provide some comfort to legislators who are committed to doing their due diligence.

For all these reasons I have shared, I encourage all members of this Assembly to vote in support of this bill. We all care deeply about this province and its future, and our children are, without question, that future. Protecting them with common-sense improvements to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act should be something that we can all agree on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein standing to speak.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak in support of Bill 202, brought forward by my colleague the Member for Calgary-West.

Last week the Member for Edmonton-Manning made the point that issues facing at-risk children are not black and white. I, like her, have an intimate understanding that there are a variety of issues facing young people and their families. However, I do not feel that this is a very good reason to advise caution on this bill. Frankly speaking, I believe that that completely misses the point. When I think through the many stories I've heard from the youth who recount their personal stories to me, it is hard to think of examples where there were not adults in their lives that could have spoken up for them, as has been stated a few times today in reference to child advocate Sheldon Kennedy.

I also can appreciate that people currently do call the police and acknowledge the many examples of responsible citizens doing just that, which is a good thing. However, there are some people that don't, and that is why we are here. The Member for Edmonton-Manning said it herself that if it is urgent, automatically police and Children's Services are deployed, which speaks to the importance of this bill.

The Member for Edmonton-Manning also cited her concern that people are scared to report. I will argue that this is not a sufficient reason, and there should be consequences, as highlighted by the initial intent of this law. To clarify, this change is about closing a loophole. This bill is not necessarily designed to prevent but to add some teeth to an already existing law. This law was put in initially to protect children and to provide a consequence for people who would turn a blind eye to children in crisis.

Bill 202, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019, proposes straightforward and meaningful changes to the existing act. There are several key changes that I will discuss in detail throughout this speech, but before I begin, I want to contextualize Bill 202 for us and highlight why it matters to the people of Alberta and, consequently, to the members of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, as my colleague from Calgary-West has already emphasized, the impetus behind this bill was the heartbreaking story of little Serenity. In September 2014 Serenity was admitted into hospital with an injury to the head. At just over four years old she reportedly weighed a mere 18 pounds. Now, to put that into perspective, the typical weight for a four-year-old girl can be anywhere between 28 and 45 pounds. This means that Serenity was well below the normal weight of a child her age. In addition to being extremely underweight, doctors found significant bruising, and she was actually hypothermic. Ultimately, little Serenity passed away on September 27, 2014. Serenity's story was a call to action for all members of this Assembly.

3:40

This bill proposes to make three key changes to the existing legislation currently under the act. Individuals who suspect that a child needs intervention must immediately make a report to "a director." Now, I would suggest that members of this Assembly who are well versed with government legislation cannot immediately think of who in their local community would qualify as a director under this act, and I imagine this inability to immediately identify a director is shared by many other concerned members of the public. Bill 202 directly addresses this critical gap by including the option of reporting to a police officer. To state the obvious, Mr. Speaker, everybody knows where and how to contact a police officer.

This seemingly simple change will have a profound impact on the children of this province. In fact, a recent case from 2017 shows the decisive role it can play in suspected situations of abuse. A woman who was babysitting five children in Edmonton noticed that three of the children appeared malnourished. Going down to the basement, she found two other children who were being kept in furniture boxes. This babysitter contacted emergency services. Though the trauma of their experience will certainly take time to heal, their lives were saved because of her decisive action. This is exactly the kind of responsible action that Albertans should be expected to take, and it is what this bill will help facilitate. The obligation to notify a police officer sets a very clear and unambiguous expectation.

The second element of this bill is that once a police officer has been notified, they must immediately report the matter to a director. Immediately. We know that our men and women in uniform have the knowledge and resources necessary to reach out to a director as specified by this legislation. This bill allows police officers to act as the bridge between citizens and the relevant officials within child services, all in the best interests of our children.

The third element of Bill 202 that I want to highlight is how it increases the consequences of failing to report. Under the existing legislation an individual who does not report an instance of suspected abuse can be fined up to $2,000. Keeping in mind the grave nature of these abuses facing vulnerable children, I'm sure all members of this Assembly will agree that this punishment is far too lenient. To address this, Bill 202 will increase the possible penalty for not reporting to $10,000. It will also include the option of sentencing someone to a maximum of six months' imprisonment. This bill further proposes that individuals who fail to report can be subject to both the fine and the prison sentence. Tragically, the incident involving Serenity has not been the only one of its kind in our province. Some of us may recall the tragic death of John Clark, who was just over a year old and whose death was partially caused by malnutrition. There were adults in his life who may have suspected he was not receiving the appropriate level of care, yet they did not act. Ryan Lovett died in 2013 at the tender age of seven due to various health issues, including pneumonia and multiple organ failure. Again, there were reports of individuals who knew about his deteriorating health and did not act.

I bring up these stories, Mr. Speaker, to draw attention to the real faces, the individual human beings whose lives have been tragically affected by abuse and neglect. These are not abstract stories. They are not hypotheticals. They are reality, a deeply unjust and sad reality. Given this reality I urge us all to take action.

I want to reiterate the three key changes that Bill 202 makes. The first is that it will allow individuals to contact either a director or, critically, a police officer if they suspect a child is in need of intervention. The second is that if they do report to a police officer, the officer would then be required to report the case to a director. And the third and final point is that individuals who decide not to report would face tougher penalties than they do under the present legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I truly believe that Bill 202 will allow us to live up to our obligation to be a voice for the vulnerable and will ensure that every member of this province takes their responsibility to our children seriously. I hope that every member of this Assembly votes in favour of Bill 202 and that our action will allow Serenity's legacy to be one of hope for the vulnerable children of our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe I saw the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford rising.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to talk about this bill, and I'd like to start by thanking the Member for Calgary-West for bringing it forward. I know that he has done incredibly good work for the Calgary Police Service and therefore has some personal experience in this area and is bringing a bill to the House that reflects some of the knowledge that he brought into the Legislature. I always appreciate it when people do that. As for all the members on the opposition side we would like to start by saying that we will support this bill. I would also like to use it as an opportunity to talk about some of the issues that I think are very important.

While I do support the bill because perhaps it will provide some clarity to people that they can and should speak to a police officer in the event that they know something about child abuse or neglect, I just want to point out that in many ways this actually does not change the reality. I graduated with my first social work degree in 1982 and worked as a child welfare worker for the province of Alberta, here in the city of Edmonton, for three years subsequently. I can tell you that both in my training from the University of Calgary's Faculty of Social Work and in my training from the department of child welfare here in the province we learned that it was indeed a requirement for people who were aware of child abuse and neglect to report to the director of Children's Services. That could be done, of course, through any number of vehicles – individuals such as a front-line child welfare worker or even through the hospital system or the police system – but if the clarity is necessary, why would I object to it?

I'm happy to speak to that. I subsequently, of course, worked as a social worker in the area of child sexual abuse for many years. I ran a private practice in the city of Edmonton where I was a counsellor for children who had been sexually abused. I have seen, unfortunately, I hate to say, over 1,200 children that had been sexually abused over the period of time that I worked in that area, so I had a very close relationship with the police force, who worked very well with us to ensure that we appropriately investigated situations of child sexual abuse and responded to them. Again, I want to commend that relationship. They're a very important structural piece that's put in place right now with the CARRT team, for example, the child abuse response team, in the city of Edmonton and other relationships that ensure that we do the right things.

I do want to address some concerns I have about the legislation being proposed here, though, not because I oppose where we're going, but I want to express a caution. The caution is that the problem is big and clearly needs to be addressed, and I think that everyone agrees with that, but the emphasis of how you respond to the problem is one that can be problematic. Because of the limited scope of a private member's bill, in this case, the choice perhaps has led to an emphasis on punishment in the event that someone does not report. I have some very serious concerns about that because that's not my experience, in my reading of the literature around it, that punishment is typically a really effective way of getting people to buy into something. Now, of course, many people here might say: well, I don't want to lose $10,000, so I'm going to make the report. But that isn't the determining thought for many people in the community.

I particularly want to speak about many of the vulnerable people that I've had an opportunity to work with over the years as a social worker and how their experience is that working with authorities such as social workers, myself and my colleagues, or police officers is a scary proposition that they're experiencing. For example, in the First Nations and Métis communities, the indigenous peoples of this province, when they do engage with those authorities, they feel that they often lose control over the situation and that the consequences come down on them rather than on the incidents that they're concerned about. That is, if you're concerned that perhaps someone in your community is not properly caring for their child and you report that child to the authorities, too often in the past what happened is that child was simply removed and taken away from the community, and the child was lost to the First Nations community or to the Métis community, so the punishment was to the community. I think that that's an issue that we have to address.

We know that when fines are levied against people, it's very often vulnerable people who end up paying those fines more often than nonvulnerable people, that it's not just your average person who ends up with the fines, but people from indigenous communities somehow always end up with more fines more often than nonindigenous people. They've expressed that concern to me a number of times.

3:50

I guess I want to make a few suggestions about things that could be done to make this bill more fulsome and to address the issue of nonreporting in a more complex way. I, first of all, want to acknowledge that there's some incredibly important work that's been done by Dr. Cindy Blackstock, who is the executive director of the First Nations Child and Family Caring Society, which has been in the press quite a bit over the last few years because of their challenging of the child welfare response to indigenous communities across this country for the last number of years. In fact, she's gone to the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal and has received three judgments from them that child welfare systems across the country and those paid for by the federal government have been consistently, dramatically underfunding services to people on First Nations reserves and communities across this province.

As long as we don't tend to those kind of structural problems, as long as they don't have the resources to pay for social workers and other support people to go in and to deal with these issues as they arise in a supportive, healing, change-oriented manner, then we're going to end up with a system that goes back to punishment when somebody doesn't report rather than a resolution of the underlying problems to prevent the abuse from happening in the first place or deal with it at its early stages. It's that emphasis, that difference between waiting for the bad thing to happen and then punishing people or actually responding early on and preventing the abuse from happening in the first place that I think is the difference here between what we would like to see on this side of the House and what is being proffered here on the government side of the House.

I think that we should take caution here not because I'm against the desire to make sure that people are aware of the requirement to report but – as I said, that's always, actually, been a requirement. If we need clarity to make sure that involves police officers as well, great. I mean, I'm happy to support that, but we can not do simply one small piece and expect that the work has been done when there are so many much larger, more significant pieces that are undone. As the Human Rights Commission has reported, you simply cannot continue to act in the way you've always acted and expect to have a different result. So you cannot underfund child welfare services on-reserve and expect there not to be a problem.

They have a number of suggestions that I think are really important, and I think we should speak a little bit about those kinds of suggestions. They talk about, first of all, bringing the funding level up on-reserve so it's equal to the funding off-reserve. It's a pretty simple request. That could've been added into this bill.

They talk about making sure that you recognize First Nations' jurisdiction over children on-reserve. That could have been included in this bill, and I would have liked to have seen it.

They talk about other issues that are associated with it, about the lack of housing, the high levels of poverty, dealing with the underlying structural reasons why people find themselves in a vulnerable place and become disenfranchised from larger society and therefore may not wish to engage in the programs such as reporting to police and social services because they're so disenfranchised through everything else that they also don't feel like they can enter into the system when it comes to child abuse and neglect, fear that they themselves may get into trouble, fear that their community may be angry at them because they're about to lose another child to the system, fear that the people who they may be related to or who they clearly know if they live in the same community will be very upset with them.

There are lots of underlying issues. I would love to see some of those underlying issues addressed here in this bill, where we work on issues like housing, as the previous Minister for Seniors and Housing did with her First Nations housing authority money, $110 million I believe it was, and we work on issues like poverty such as we had done in our government, where we reduced child poverty by 50 per cent, thereby increasing the likelihood that we don't need police intervention.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members? I see the hon. Minister of Children's Services standing to speak.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise to speak to Bill 202, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019, put forward by my colleague the Member for Calgary-West.

This is a piece of legislation for which I am pleased to show my support. I want to sincerely thank the Member for Calgary-West for his continued work and advocacy on this bill. It's very clear that this is something he has been incredibly passionate about, and I am enormously grateful to have so many colleagues like the Member for Calgary-West who care so deeply about vulnerable children in our province and want to continually strive to do better and be better for our kids. The impetus for this legislation comes from the tragic story of a young girl named Serenity, whose horrific abuse was the catalyst for the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention.

I, first, want to thank members from both sides of the House for taking part in this important work. Hearing from researchers, First Nations and Métis communities, and people with lived experience identified many important changes to the child intervention practices and supports for families that needed to take place. As the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud noted, this is a complex issue.

Many of the reforms that came out of the work done by the panel have already been implemented or are actively being worked on. Our government is committed to continuing this work alongside our stakeholders. The advice received during the panel consultations is now also informing front-line practice in care of vulnerable children. The death of this little girl was tragic, but her legacy lives on in the work that this government continues to undertake and through the tireless efforts of many of my colleagues and by members on both sides of this Assembly, and it certainly lives on in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 is a common-sense piece of legislation, and common-sense legislation is part of what our government ran on. We need to find practical responses to real-world problems, and this bill does exactly that. This bill will amend the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, also known as CYFEA, to the following. In section 4(1): "Any person who has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a child is in need of intervention shall forthwith report the matter to (a) a director, or (b) a police officer." This may seem like a small change, but it is a common-sense change that will provide important clarity for Albertans on where they can turn should they have concerns about the safety of a child. The current legislation stipulates that an Albertan who believes that a child may be in danger can report the matter to a director.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Children's Services, in one of my first briefings, one of the questions that I asked was: who is the director? Director of what, exactly? Now I am fortunate to have access to experts in the public service who are very familiar with CYFEA and could answer my question about the act. The current definition of a director under CYFEA is a person designated by the Minister as a director for the purposes of this Act and the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act and without limiting the generality of the foregoing includes a person designated as a director in accordance with an agreement under section 122(2) of this Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is complex, and when we are talking about a matter as important as the safety of children and how to report, we'd like to be crystal clear.

Mr. Speaker, many Albertans do report when they see a child in danger, and our amazing police officers are already working with Children's Services to assess risk and keep kids safe, but this is a best practice that is not enshrined in legislation currently, and I'm told that it becomes problematic when trying to address those people who choose not to report a child in danger.

I understand that, as it stands right now, in practice there has never been a charge or prosecution under CYFEA for failing to report. I'm also told that it is extremely difficult to convict someone for failing to report because of the need to establish that the individual had knowledge giving rise to that duty and that there are people who, when faced with jail times and fines, could have a plausible defence that they did not know how to contact a director. Our current legislation lacks the clarity and could allow people to walk away unpunished for turning their backs on vulnerable children in need. There have been several high-profile cases, many of which we've heard about today, of child abuse and neglect in our province, where it was discovered in the aftermath that there were adults who either had concerns for the safety of a child but didn't report or who purposefully turned a blind eye.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, that breaks my heart. As a mom and as the Minister of Children's Services, these cases break my heart. This bill reminds us that being complicit is not okay. Being a complicit bystander is not okay. We hope that it sends a message that this government, our province, and the people of Alberta will not tolerate abuse or apathy when it comes to our children. It reminds the public, Mr. Speaker, that each of us has a responsibility to report concerns of abuse or neglect to the appropriate law enforcement officials. This bill will also increase penalties for those who do not report.

4:00

Currently our legislation stipulates:

4(6) Any person who fails to comply with subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $2000 and in default of payment to imprisonment for a term of not more than 6 months.

This bill will amend this subsection to read:

4(6) Any person who fails to comply with subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $10 000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 6 months, or to both a fine and imprisonment.

As has been raised by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul, these changes will bring Alberta in line with several other jurisdictions in Canada and are a common-sense way to communicate to all Albertans that they, too, can and, in fact, must play a role in keeping children safe. Mr. Speaker, again, while it seems like a small change, if it saves one child, this bill will absolutely be worth it. Every child deserves to be cared for and raised in a safe, supportive home. Our government will continue to work to provide the supports that parents and caregivers sometimes need to build strong families in strong communities.

If I can send a message to Albertans across the province today, it is this. Each of us has an obligation to report a child in need or a child at risk of danger or harm. Please do not sit back and hope that you are wrong. When in doubt, speak up and reach out. Contact a Children's Services office, a delegated First Nation authority, or the child abuse hotline at 1-800-387-KIDS. Call law enforcement. Call 911.

I am happy to put my support behind Bill 202, and I would encourage all members of this House to do the same. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to this matter?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-West to close debate.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister and all those in the Chamber who supported and had very kind words to say about this bill. You know, as I sat in this Chamber before and I spoke about Bill 205, which pertained to the opioid crisis that we are still facing but faced a few years ago, Bill 205 was never meant to be a solution to the opioid crisis, as Bill 202 is not meant to be a solution to fix everything within the child welfare system. This is, quite simply, a loophole that has been discovered, and we're trying to fix this loophole to let everybody in Alberta know that you cannot turn a blind eye to a child in need of intervention. It's just not acceptable.

It's not acceptable as it still stands under the act. As the minister pointed out, there have never been any charges laid in regard to this current piece of legislation. It is very challenging, as I've stated in this House already, to lay a charge as it pertains to simply reporting to a director. I won't belabour it. It's certainly been explained a number of times already here.

This is not about anyone else, Mr. Speaker, other than the children, the children of Alberta. I could not agree more with the minister. If this can save the life of one child, just one child, then I think every one of us has done our job as legislators to do our part for the children of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as previously stated by my colleague and friend from Calgary-Klein, who mentioned Mr. Sheldon Kennedy, who is a children's advocate who brought to light sex crimes by former junior hockey coach Graham James: "There are usually people who know what is happening and don't report it. If the law is there, it should be used." The reality is that other people a lot of the times have gut feelings that something is not right but don't do anything about it. Somehow we need to enforce an act or empower people with the confidence and knowledge to make them act.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a common-sense bill. It is very straightforward. This is about the children of Alberta. This is something I've been advocating for a long time. I have done my homework on this. I have talked to stakeholders, and this is something that, although it is a very small change, would have enormous – enormous – benefits for the children of Alberta, especially those who are currently suffering as we speak.

With that, I will conclude my remarks. I thank everyone for supporting this bill, and I will yield the floor. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:07 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Aheer	Hunter	Rutherford
Allard	Loewen	Sabir
Armstrong-Homeniuk	Lovely	Savage
Ceci	Loyola	Sawhney
Dreeshen	Luan	Schmidt
Eggen	Madu	Schow
Ellis	McIver	Schulz

Feehan	Milliken	Sigurdson, L.
Fir	Neudorf	Sigurdson, R.J.
Ganley	Nielsen	Singh
Glasgo	Orr	Smith
Glubish	Pancholi	Stephan
Gray	Pitt	Sweet
Guthrie	Rehn	Walker
Hanson	Rosin	Wilson
Hoffman	Rowswell	Yao
Horner

Totals:	For – 49	Against – 0
---------	----------	-------------

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 202 read a second time]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 201

Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? I see the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat standing.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to actually propose an amendment to Bill 201. I have the copies here. Would you like me to wait until they're passed out to the House?

The Deputy Chair: Sure.

Hon. member, if you would be so kind as to read it into the record.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. There are three parts, and they read as follows. Section 1(f) is struck out. Section 2(2) is amended by striking out clause (d) and substituting the following:

- (d) a requirement that the board ensures that
  - (i) a risk reduction plan that meets the requirements set out in section 3 is in place in each school,
  - (ii) upon enrollment, parents and students are asked to supply information on life-threatening allergies, if any, and
  - (iii) each school operated by the board maintains a file for every student who has an anaphylactic allergy including any current treatments, copies of any prescriptions, any instructions from health professionals and a current emergency contact list.

Section 3 is struck out and the following is substituted:

Risk reduction plan

- 3 A risk reduction plan for a school shall include
  - (a) information about each student who has an anaphylactic allergy,
  - (b) information for employees and others who on a regular basis are in direct contact with a student who has an anaphylactic allergy regarding the type of allergy, monitoring and avoidance strategies and appropriate treatments,
  - (c) a readily accessible emergency procedure for each student, including emergency contact information, and
  - (d) provisions for and information regarding storage of epinephrine auto-injectors, where necessary.

Mr. Chair, this amendment was proposed as a result of consultation with stakeholders. I know that the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has worked tirelessly on this file and that it is a deeply held belief of hers that we see this go forward. I know that I stand a hundred per cent in support of the bill. I just do believe that these small changes don't actually change the intent of the bill or anything of that nature, but they actually enhance the bill, creating it more in line with what she heard from stakeholders.

The amendment will change the name of the individual anaphylaxis plan to a risk reduction plan while retaining all the same elements of the individual plan. I know that last week, when we went over this bill, we seemed to see a lot of kickback and push-back. I mean, I was even a guest on the committee, substituting, when we heard the need for a lot more consultation on this bill. I think this amendment and the reaction from the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville proves that consultation was done, and this is a really good reaction to that, making sure that we have the adequate wording going forward to reflect that adequate consultation.

The intent of the amendment is to make section 2 more consistent by shifting responsibility for the development of risk reduction plans from the principal or designate to the board level. We know that many boards have these in place already, and this is just a backstop, ensuring that all boards would have these going forward. This makes sense as section 2 is all about board responsibility. If the amendment passes, all of section 2 will be focused on the responsibilities of the board, taking that away from individual schools, where we know there was a little bit of confusion. This will also be more consistent with actual practices, Mr. Chair. Most boards have similar policies in place already for children with life-threatening allergies, but like I said, these are developed at the board level and not at the school level.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to this amendment. We didn't have notice of it – we're seeing it for the first time – but from what I can determine, looking at this amendment, it actually is, I would say, an improvement. I think, again, that the bill was very good. As you may recall, the last time we discussed this bill, there were a lot of questions, I think, that came forward from the opposition about how exactly this would be implemented and on whom the liability would rest. Those concerns were because, you know, you don't want to place a liability on an individual person that they can't themselves necessarily fulfill. It's usually better to have sort of an overarching entity.

4:30

In this case I think this amendment does exactly that. It sounds like it was in response to stakeholder feedback, probably, that it was better to have a board respond at a board level to have those policies in place so it would be uniform throughout that board than it would be to have each individual principal. It's also, I think, difficult for the principal because there will be a lot of analysis that needs to go into these policies: legal, medical, other sorts of analyses, risk-mitigation, that sort of thing. I think that placing the onus on the board is probably, in my view, an improvement.

I would say, yeah, again, I think that on the whole this is a good bill. I'm glad that some consultation with stakeholders has occurred. I hope that that consultation continues to be ongoing, because as is almost always the case with these things, even when something is a good idea, the devil is usually in the details in terms of the implementation. So I'm glad to hear that that consultation continues to be ongoing.

I think that, on balance, having just seen it, as sort of an initial reaction to this, I would urge members to vote in favour of this amendment. I think it probably does improve the bill and creates sort of a more coherent – not coherent; cohesive maybe. It will create the same thing at all schools throughout the same board, and I think that's good. So if you have, say, two kids that are in different schools, the policies will be the same. That's straightforward for parents. They can learn it and know what it is.

It also means that all that sort of additional administrative work that will need to go into developing these policies can be done at a board level instead of being repeated at each individual school level. I think there are probably some efficiencies there as well.

Saying that, I would thank the hon. member for bringing forward the amendment. It's well taken, and I would urge members to vote in favour of it.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thanks to the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat for the amendment. I appreciate all the hard work that has been done by schools, administrators, and teachers. The bill was developed to ensure minimum standards across the province. Many boards have policies in place to manage students with life-threatening allergies. This is a credit to the boards that have the policies and will provide a plan for those that do not.

I'm in full support of this amendment, and I ask that my colleagues support it also. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford standing to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to use a moment just to ask some questions back and forth with the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville around the amendment, just literally for my understanding since we're seeing it for the very first time.

I would note that under section B of the amendment you're striking out clause (d) of section 2(2) of the bill and substituting – the list here is quite long, so I won't read through it all. In the substitution I noticed two pieces that were eliminated, and I just want to understand the reasoning or the direction that it may be going in here. One of the sections that is eliminated is a communication plan for the dissemination to parents, students, and employees. In the old section it said under 2(2)(b): "a communication plan for the dissemination of information on life-threatening allergies to parents, students and employees." Will there no longer be a requirement for any kind of information to the rest of the members of the school community? I'm just wondering.

Again, the next one is section 2(2)(c), where it required "mandatory regular training on dealing with life-threatening allergies for all employees." It also seems to be eliminated. I'm just wondering if there's a decision to stop training and to stop the dissemination of information. Just a simple question, really.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 201? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate your recognizing me. It's my first time getting the chance to speak to Bill 201 here in the House. I'm happy to rise in support of this bill.

I first want to start by thanking the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing this forward and for the hard work she has done on this. As we all know, it can sometimes be difficult for private members to be able to do, I guess, the same level of consultation that, for instance, the government is able to undertake. I'm glad to see her put in the kind of work that the member was able to do around this.

My comments will be somewhat brief, and I guess they revolve a little bit more around the private members' bills committee. I really would have loved the opportunity to consult a couple of stakeholders. As you're probably aware, Mr. Chair, the committee has a very, very tight time mandate, in terms of when private members' business is handed to it, to get a chance to review it and then to make recommendations to the House. With those very, very tight timelines, of course, it would have been a little bit difficult to reach out to some people to get responses on this, but I think it would have been sort of helpful for us moving forward on that.

Again, I am happy to support this as a father who had a child that carried around an EpiPen for two and a half years or so. It would be a good safety net in terms of making sure that maybe kids who don't necessarily have, I guess, the same means that I did in protecting my child for that uncertain period that she did have. It would have been rather nice to know some of the smaller details around the implementation, maybe around even the potential funding. As we know, all private members' bills can't be money bills, but with our fantastic nonprofit organizations out there it's good to know that there are some that are already lined up, possibly, to step up to this. Having served on, for instance, the Children's Heart Society, having those things necessarily downloaded to us on top of everything else that we're doing isn't always the best thing. Hopefully, in the future, as we move this forward, maybe the government might consider something around funding this so that our fantastic nonprofits would be able to continue the work that they're doing.

Like I said, it's unfortunate that we didn't get a chance to chat with a few people, but I am very happy to stand in support of this. I would certainly urge all other members to support this. Again I thank the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for all her work on this.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 201?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 201, Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 201 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Any opposed? Carried.

The committee shall now rise and report.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 201. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed, say no. So ordered.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

4:40

Mr. Ellis: Yes. Mr. Speaker, we've made some great progress, and I would like to continue that progress. I would ask for unanimous consent to go to third reading of Bill 201.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 201

Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm excited to see the progress on Bill 201. As the bill goes through its various stages, I've been overwhelmed by the support from those affected with life-threatening allergies. I've been touched by the stories not just of members in the House but of Albertans as well as people across Canada and the United States. The stories from those who have reached out are heartbreaking. One woman, who runs a charity in the United States, lost her daughter due to a peanut allergy. In her situation the reaction was so severe that she could not survive even though she received medical attention. As a concerned mother, like myself, she continued to advocate for children with life-threatening allergies.

I had a chance to review the discussion from second reading last week, and I've been really moved by stories told here in the Assembly. I'm quite happy to hear that this bill appears to have unanimous support from members of the government caucus and the opposition caucus. There seems to be consensus that this issue is something that does not divide us but unites us.

The MLA for Brooks-Medicine Hat, like myself, has a life-threatening allergy. I truly appreciate what she went through growing up with the stigma involved with an allergy. Our society has come a long way in understanding and embracing those with life-threatening allergies. I was heartened to hear about the progress made by a family member of the Member for St. Albert, and there's been a lot of good progress treating dairy allergies. Those who suffer from nut allergies are hopeful for a similar breakthrough.

I understand some of the arguments made by the members hoping this bill would be broader in scope. I did try to not lose sight through the development of this bill of what the limitations are of a private member's bill versus a government bill.

I want to be clear that I appreciate all the hard work of school administrators and teachers. The bill was developed with ensuring a minimum standard across the province. My goal was to make a step forward on an issue I deeply care about. Most boards do have policy in place to manage students with life-threatening allergies. It is a credit to the boards that have policies for students with other types of medical conditions. There are a variety of conditions that students have to manage such as asthma and diabetes, which is why boards have developed policies for the medically fragile.

A few members of this Assembly inquired about the support of Food Allergy Canada and the Canadian Society of Allergy & Clinical Immunology. They're widely regarded as leading food allergy associations for parents, patients, and medical providers respectively. I'm happy to have tabled their letter of support for Bill 201 last week. We've been working with Food Allergy Canada as we develop this bill, and I can't say enough how grateful I am for their support. A special thank you to Beatrice and Joni for their support. Food Allergy Canada was also kind enough to let their supporters in Alberta know that this bill is currently debated in the Assembly. I know I've received letters of support from many parents cheering us on so we can pass this bill, and I know other members have received similar correspondence.

There were a few questions raised about liability last week. The most important point I will make is that this bill clearly states that employees that help a student in good faith are protected from liability. I had the opportunity to review some school policies. The policies of Westwind school division, in particular, clearly address that employees are further protected by their liability insurance coverage. I've also had the opportunity to consult with our stakeholders in Ontario about liability. Since Sabrina's law passed in Ontario, to their knowledge there have been no liability issues. Employees have been protected in the very situations we've been discussing.

I do have some experience in the insurance industry, and after reviewing last week's debate, the questions of liability triggered the insurance experience I've had. From my experience in the industry any steps taken to make sure something does not happen often results in a lower premium, and from an insurance perspective this makes sense. If you take steps to reduce a likelihood of something bad happening, it would be less likely to occur, and your premiums would be lower. I started to wonder: what if schools that put these policies in place and have epinephrine on hand would be recognized for risk management practices and pay lower premiums as a result? The cost savings may be small, but when talking about the cost of EpiPens, the costs are also small. My hope is that some really great practices will reduce the chances of an adverse event for a student and be cost neutral for boards.

There were implementation questions. Again, this is why I thought a date for the beginning of 2020 would allow the boards the proper amount of time to adjust. Given that the ASBA has voluntary policies and that most school boards have policies in place, I think the implementation of the bill would not be onerous. My colleague from Drayton Valley-Devon mentioned last week that a school board in his riding that he used to work for has been providing EpiPens for years. His school board will have no trouble implementing this bill and even could be a leader in the best practices for other boards.

I think Albertans are really excited about this bill. Our offices have been receiving letters of support, and I think it's a great start. There's been a lot of enthusiasm to go further now, whether it be regarding more medical conditions covered or other places students go on like buses. As someone with a life-threatening allergy and a mother with children with life-threatening allergies, I understand the emotional response for this bill. For many, they're finally feeling like they're recognized. But we have to start and get our feet grounded. Maybe in the future the government or other private members will seek to broaden the work started by this bill.

I don't want perfect to be the enemy of the good. I'm asking for the support of the Assembly in Committee of the Whole so that we can send this bill to third reading – now we're here – and make it the law of the land.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I just want to ensure that you moved third reading. Is that correct?

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Okay. I'm moving third reading.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other speakers wishing to speak to this matter? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore standing.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's a pleasure to rise so swiftly with the blessing of the House to third reading on Bill 201. Again, as I've stated before, my daughter carried around an EpiPen for about a year and a half. Luckily, we had the means with which to provide that, and I'm always thinking about, you know, who maybe doesn't necessarily have the means for that. I think Bill 201 will be able to provide, like, a safety net around that. Again, thanking the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for doing the work on this and bringing this forward, too. It's the type of bill that all legislators can get behind, and I think, as we've seen, an effort to move this swiftly kind of reminds me of the bill from the Member for Calgary-West, when we moved that around, the bill process, very, very swiftly.

My only other comment that I have around this was a little bit around when it was in the private members' bill committee, kind of a little bit like 202. Given the tight timelines that the committee has, it wouldn't have been too big of a delay to try to reach out to some stakeholders, get some brief comments about this because, I think, you know, when we're looking at 201, we want to see this move through very swiftly. We don't want to see it hit any speed bumps, which could slow it down or, at worse, we end up having stakeholders push back against it just because they don't necessarily understand it.

4:50

I'm hoping that moving forward, that committee will be a little bit more diligent at looking at these things, around getting some feedback just to ensure that there aren't any last-minute things that we might have missed. Of course, bringing that amendment forward earlier in Committee of the Whole managed to, I think, clean up some of the language in the bill to make sure that that gets streamlined and moved forward very, very briefly.

With that, I will end my comments. Again, I appreciate all the efforts. I'm happy to support this and would very much urge all members of this Assembly to support this as well through third reading.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to third reading?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to close debate.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank everybody for their time, and I hope to have the support of all of my colleagues. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've made some remarkable progress. I'm certainly proud of my colleague from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

I notice that we're still close to 5 o'clock. Before we begin with the motions, I would ask unanimous consent of the House to continue with the progress of private members' business, which will help accelerate progress for all private members' business throughout the course of this spring session. If we could have unanimous consent of the House to go to Committee of the Whole for Bill 202.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole
(continued)

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 202

Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. We are certainly doing some business very, very swiftly here this afternoon. Great to see. Of course, I fear that we might be a little bit short on time around this, but I will endeavour to try and make some comments around this.

Bill 202, of course, brings forward a little bit of a change in the language around who we can contact. Again, I find myself, as we saw just briefly discussing Bill 201, referring back to the private member's...

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt. I see the time is now 4:55. Pursuant to Standing Order 8(6) the committee shall now rise and report progress on Bill 202 in order that the Assembly can proceed to Motions Other than Government Motions at 5 p.m. The committee shall now rise and report.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill: Bill 202. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 202.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report? All those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Those opposed, say no. So ordered.

Motions Other than Government Motions
Mountain Pine Beetle

505. Mr. Long moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to partner with Alberta's forest industry and the federal government to aggressively combat the mountain pine beetle infestation in Alberta and to encourage the government to implement its funding commitment of $5 million to address the problem as expeditiously as possible.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to speak to Motion 505 today. Motion 505 calls for the government to work with the forest industry and the government of Canada to tackle to mountain pine beetle catastrophe head-on as soon as possible. It also asks the government to implement its $5 million funding increase promised during the last election as soon as practically possible.

The mountain pine beetle is incredibly damaging. It is the most destructive pest for pine trees. While originally thought to only threaten lodgepole pine, it is now known to be a threat to all species of pine, including Jack pine, which is a major species of the boreal forest. It is a menace to our forests and is quickly spreading from British Columbia into Alberta. In its wake are dead forests and economic ruin. Due to a lack of progress and due to a lack of consistent resource action against the beetle, British Columbia between 1995 and 2015 lost more than half its saleable pine timber. That equates to the loss of tens of billions of dollars to the provincial economy and countless jobs over the coming decades. Mitigation of the mountain pine beetle costs Canadians tens of millions of dollars per year, and the loss of economic activity is even higher. Our forest industry contributes $6 billion to our economy every year.

Our government recognizes the grave threat posed by the mountain pine beetle. That's why when our party announced standing up for Alberta's forestry workers, one of its key promises was to increase the annual funding to push back against this critical threat to our forests. Our government also promised to be a champion for our forest industry in recognition that our companies and workers are world leaders in forestry practices. Without active forest management the risk of infestation or wildfire increases. The forest industry contributes to a healthy forest and safer communities by harvesting mature trees before they become a risk to the area.

I know first-hand how incredible our foresters are. I've spent the last nine years with my sleeves rolled up working in the forest industry. It's been an honour to work in one of Alberta's largest and most advanced sectors. Forestry is highly technical and can be quite dangerous. Logging and forestry are considered some of the most dangerous professions that someone can work in.

The forest industry is critical to Alberta's economy. It directly employs 16,000 people, and it's indirectly employing over 20,000 people. The number of people employed in the industry doesn't do any justice to its importance in small northern Alberta towns. A mill in a town of a few thousand can employ 10 per cent of the town's population. The jobs that our foresters have are not only highly technical, but they can pay quite well. These jobs are the lifeblood of our small towns and flow through to the broader economy. Good jobs make for good communities. When the mills are doing well, our charities and nonprofits do well. They provide a helping hand to those in need.

5:00

I can't emphasize enough how important the forestry industry is to my riding of West Yellowhead. Drive through any of the great towns in my riding, and you can't help but see the forest industry around you. It doesn't matter if you're on your way to Jasper through Hinton or Edson, or heading north through Grande Cache, or on highway 43 going past Blue Ridge and Whitecourt on your way to Grande Prairie. The forest industry is right out your window.

When you're driving through my riding and you notice red trees, those trees are the wake of the pine beetle's destruction. Those red trees are actually dead trees already. The pine beetle has moved on to other, healthy trees.

I've talked about the threat of the mountain pine beetle and how deeply valued the forestry sector is in the riding I represent and other small towns in Alberta. As the devastation of the mountain pine beetle mounts, so does the frustration of my constituents and our foresters. They're frustrated that governments don't feel the same sense of urgency that they feel. The pine beetle is killing trees, and it renders them useless. As it spreads, it means that forestry companies have fewer opportunities to harvest trees, which throttles their production.

This throttling not only leads to environmental destruction but economic devastation and the potential for catastrophic events. Mountain pine beetle killed forests are more susceptible to fire. They'll burn at two and a half times the rate of a regular forest fire and burn much more severely. Imagine how my constituents have felt as they not only watched their forest die and communities suffer but as they are being left vulnerable to an increased risk of catastrophe and they're left helpless by what they see as government's inaction making the situation worse.

As this menace, this pine beetle, has grown and spread, timber access has been restricted, the industry has been overregulated, and the government seemed unable or unwilling to grapple with the problem. Millions of acres have become inaccessible at the expense of our industry and communities. The decisions made by the previous government seemed to many in forestry to be based on ideology and not based on a good balance between the environment and industry. The reality is that good environmental policy actually goes hand in hand with the world-leading forest management and stewardship that Alberta is known for.

Properly managed forests are essential for air and water quality, soil stability, and for wildlife habitat. In the past 20 years our forest industry has planted over 2 billion trees; 83 million of those were last year alone. Knowing that young healthy forests capture more carbon than old forests makes a strong forestry sector vital in our fight against climate change. However, it seemed to my constituents that the previous government didn't want a forest industry at all, that we would just shut down the mills and stop the forestry sector in its tracks.

It's understandable why my constituents and foresters would feel that way. The previous government, with almost no consultation, went about shutting the forestry sector down by creating parks and breaking leases. We saw this with the Castle and with Bighorn. We saw the same with the A La Pêche and Little Smoky ranges. The previous government didn't see the benefits to communities, the benefits to, quite frankly, the health of our forests. Not taking care of our forests, not allowing industry to help maintain the health of our forests has led to an increasing number of disasters in Alberta and the potential for even more.

We also need a change in the direction of the federal government. It seems like the current government in Ottawa is not paying attention to Alberta's forests. We know that they don't seem to care about our energy sector or our agriculture sector. Maybe they're working their way down the list of our biggest industries.

When I look at how Ottawa is tackling the spruce budworm issue on the east coast, plenty of resources are being deployed to tackle the issue. Yet when I stand in Jasper, where mountain pine beetle infected only 122 hectares in 2013 and, due to no management being taken, by 2017 over 93,000 hectares were destroyed – and now many communities in my riding are left vulnerable and are feeling powerless and helpless, yet the federal government is still unwilling to help. I'm grateful to be part of a government that truly understands the gravity of this situation.

We are dealing with a serious threat to our environment, our economy, and our communities. We needed a change in government so that Alberta could tackle this situation head-on. I ask for the Assembly's support on this motion so that we can take immediate action to combat this catastrophe.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to Motion 505, which I believe is very similar to the motion that I put in the Legislature last session as Motion 506, so I will stand in support of the motion.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, life in many parts of our beautiful province revolves around forests. Many industries depend on our forests, from tourism and recreation to the forest product industry. The mountain pine beetle is a serious threat to our forests, affecting a quarter of Alberta's pine forest, with the most severe concentration being in the west-central pine belt. The scourge of the mountain pine beetle is threatening our economy and our environment.

If left unmanaged, mountain pine beetle populations could kill large amounts of Alberta pine resources, up to 6 million hectares of pine valued at more than $8 billion. This would have a large impact on the forestry industry. Of the 25 major forest companies operating in Alberta, 14 rely on pine to continue operations. The importance of addressing this issue has become even more clear in the last weeks, with curtailment and the closing of sawmills in the interior of British Columbia. Many of these producers have cited the loss of fibre due to infestations of the pine beetle and the increase in wildfires.

This issue was identified by the industry decades ago, with little to no action, and, Mr. Speaker, we are headed down the same path. Without a plan to address the spread of the pine beetle in the federal parks and the surrounding areas, we too will have a significant decrease in access to pine fibre, potentially jeopardizing the 25 major employers in this area. Infestation also threatens watershed health and fish and wildlife habitats.

Since 2006 the province has controlled the mountain pine beetle spread by cutting down and burning more than 1.5 million infested trees. The mountain pine beetle infestation is also controlled through a number of best practices such as timber harvesting planning and prescribed fire. We know that without aggressive control, an estimated additional 564 million trees would be infested and/or killed.

I urge this government and the current minister to recommit to minimizing the spread of the beetle north and south and preventing them from spreading farther east. Removing infested trees is the most effective tool to control the spread. Another strategy is to have the forestry industry harvest susceptible pine stands in order to decrease the spread in the long term. In 2017-2018 alone the former Minister of Agriculture and Forestry allocated more than $25 million to manage the infestation and impact of the beetle. I see that currently the member is only asking for $5 million, which is less than what the previous government committed to this issue.

A main area of concern is the Hinton and Edson area, where the mountain pine beetle from Jasper national park is moving to Alberta's forest in great numbers. Of the approximately 950,000 infested trees being controlled this past winter, more than half were in the Hinton area. The Jasper park area has also created an increased safety concern not only for the residents of Jasper but also those who visit the park. Due to the damage caused by the mountain pine beetle, many of the trees in the national park have died and are now standing matchsticks. We have seen over the past few years the devastation and safety risks that are associated with forest fires, and Jasper national park is the epicenter of the most potential wildfire.

The previous NDP government had provided significant funding for the mountain pine beetle related to research and to the impact on these municipalities, with $500,000 for mountain pine beetle related research in 2017 and 2018. In April 2018 our NDP government announced it would be investing another $600,000 to communities around the eastern slope to combat mountain pine beetle. The NDP government also created an agreement with Saskatchewan to help protect the spread to other parts of Canada. Alberta is the main front in preventing the spread eastward.

The huge problem of the mountain pine beetle can only be combated by working together and working co-operatively, hand in hand. I have personally heard from groups like the Alberta Forest Products Association and the mountain pine beetle advisory group in the Hinton area that more work is needed to contain the spread in our national parks. We need to know more about how the spread can be slowed down. We need a thorough assessment as to how much damage has already been done, and the federal government must look closely at their management of the mountain pine beetle, especially in our provincial national parks, not only to ensure that the park can continue to be accessed for generations to come but so that it can also address the safety concerns of the residents that live and visit these areas.

I know that Alberta mayors from affected areas and provincial ministers have sent letters to the federal government in support of our government's ask for assistance. I know that the Hinton chamber of commerce developed a new policy resolution on the mountain pine beetle that has since been adopted by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. One of the key pieces of this policy is a request for the federal government to reinstate the federal mountain pine beetle program with funds equivalent in scale to over $200 million.

5:10

Such a program would support provinces like Alberta that are already infested with the mountain pine beetle and provide resources for community and economic diversification and resiliency to communities affected by the mountain pine beetle. The policy highlights that federal involvement is needed to support national mitigation plans, community safety initiatives due to a higher risk of wildfires, and continued research and education initiatives. Simply put, Alberta needs assistance from the federal government to support the good work we're already doing.

Since 2004 Alberta has invested nearly half a billion dollars in order to control this pest, and I know, for example, that the town of Hinton has dedicated efforts to this fight as well. Early in 2018 the province provided Yellowhead county and Hinton with funding to control, suppress, and eradicate the mountain pine beetle on municipal and private lands. The funds were part of the mountain pine beetle municipal grant program, which helps Alberta communities minimize the spread of the mountain pine beetle infestation in this area. I would encourage this minister to again continue this program.

Clearly, Alberta has done its part for quite some time. We need collaboration from our federal counterparts to effectively combat the spread of the mountain pine beetle and the devastation it causes. Co-operation is essential if we are to create an effective strategy towards the mountain pine beetle. Together is the only way we will win this battle.

I encourage all members of this Legislature to support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane is standing to speak.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to and support Motion 505. The spread of the mountain pine beetle across western forests in Canada has been devastating since it was detected 20 years ago in Tweedsmuir, B.C. The beetle's main target is old forest lodgepole pine, but it will attack other species of pine as well. This pest will destroy trees by implanting itself into the trunk and transmitting a blue stain fungus that cuts off water and nutrient flow and starves the tree.

This process doesn't take long. The pine beetle has killed more than half of the pine in British Columbia, and lack of efforts to control the movement of this infestation led to it quickly spreading to Alberta's forests in 2006. That advancement continues: north, east towards Saskatchewan, and now coming upon the southern forests of Alberta. The spread is occurring so fast that Jasper national park went from detection of the pine beetle in 2013 to an 80 per cent infestation as of last year. The speed and destructive nature of the pine beetle is utterly amazing. The trees of Jasper have turned into a sea of red from dead and dying trees. The lack of action, changes to forest management practices, and reduced funding to battle the mountain pine beetle infestation are to blame.

Now, learning from the mistakes of British Columbia's pine beetle disaster, the former Conservative government developed and implemented an effective plan to manage the mountain pine beetle's advance. The three-point plan included level 1, which would be single-tree removal in infected areas; level 2, the harvest of large infested stands by industry; and level 3 – and this is an important one – the removal of susceptible stands in areas ahead of the advancing movement of the pest.

There are other causes for the spread of the mountain pine beetle and the subsequent increased risk of forest fires. Alberta's boreal forest has a maximum life expectancy of about 150 years. The forest has reached full maturity at 80 to 100 years and can begin dying off after about the 80-year point. At maturity the risks of forest fires and infestations increase dramatically. Now, the mountain pine beetle thrives on old forest, and due to changes in forest management practices in Alberta's forests, we've gone from 40-year to 60-year and now over 80-year averages for these stands.

Our forests are not like others in other parts of the country or the world, for that matter, as forest lifespans can be relatively low as far as old forest goes. With the advanced age of Alberta's mature stands, we now have forests that are dying due to age and infestations. This has created increased risks of forest fires in the province and created fires that spread quickly, are larger and growing in intensity. For best results our forests should have a mix of varying ages of forest for best practice in pine beetle control, fire containment as well as ecological management.

The devastation of the pine beetle has so many implications, including, one, public safety risks from increased threat of forest fires. The communities within these areas damaged by the mountain pine beetle will be living in a virtual tinderbox, increasing the probability of damages to their homes along with an elevated safety risk to their families.

Next, risks to potable water: contamination from heavy metals, soil erosion, and ash after a fire are also concerns. The city of Calgary has identified forest fires as one of the largest risks to the city's water supply.

CO<sub>2</sub> emissions from forest fires released two to three times the amount of this GHG and other gases as compared to emissions from burning fossil fuels from all provincial industrial sectors combined, and the impacts extend further as the trees killed by fires or pine beetle will decompose over years and decades and release more

CO<sub>2</sub> into the atmosphere. Additionally, those trees that were destroyed will no longer be removing carbon dioxide from the atmosphere as living trees do.

Next, there's a risk of job losses due to the destruction of fibre required for mills to produce lumber, pulp, and paper within their processes. This will also be a result of this pest.

Finally, tourism will definitely be affected as the beauty of the forest has been compromised.

You see, the previous NDP government cut funding to pine beetle control as well as wildfire budgets over the course of their four-year run. Expecting a cold winter to kill pine beetles is not sound policy. Weather may slow down beetle populations, but it will not stop their advance. That same NDP government also refused to use the pine beetle strategies developed by the previous PC governments, which made matters worse and allowed for the further spread of the issue. Additionally, the previous government ignored forest management agreements and quotas held by industry and fought against the sector at every turn. This interfered with harvest cycles, which increased the spread of mountain pine beetle, increased the risk of forest fires, and hurt Alberta businesses in the process.

Forestry companies employ over 40,000 people, either directly through the forest industry or in jobs supported by the industry. The forest sector contributes $7 billion in annual economic activity to the province, and these companies understand that having a healthy forest is the centerpiece of maintaining a viable, long-lasting, prolific business. Conservation efforts in Alberta for this renewable resource are second to none. This industry operates on 200-year forest management plans focused on wood harvest, wildlife habitats, soil quality, water quality, community engagement, and reforestation. Alberta is recognized as a world leader in forest stewardship, and by managing our forests sustainably, we can have a healthy industry and help control the effects of fires and pest infestations.

The problem is that due to maturing forests, pine beetle infestations, and general changes to government policy our forests have been left vulnerable. Jasper is a prime example of what can happen when not managed correctly. We need to work with industry to look for solutions. We should develop new strategies and reinstate the previous three-point plan to reduce the advancement of pine beetles in Alberta's forest.

I encourage all members to support this motion as it keeps up with the UCP's commitment to provide support to the people of this province by improving safety for residents as well as helping to save Alberta's forests and jobs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other hon. members? I see the hon. Member for Peace River standing to speak to this matter.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise happily today to speak in favour of this motion, and I thank the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing it forward. I begin with a little survey of the importance of the forestry industry not just in my constituency but in the province. We'll start in the northwest. A list of towns: Peace River, Fort Vermilion, Manning, La Crête, High Level. These aren't just the biggest communities in my constituency; they're also completely dependent on the health of the forestry industry for their survival as communities in the northwest. We live in one of the farthest, disparately spread-out parts of the province, and to be able to survive there, we need industry, we need access to these resources, and we need those resources to remain in a healthy condition.

5:20

On that, I'm going to cite a few numbers. In Alberta, working forests are about a $6.5 billion industry annually. Harvesting operations, lumber sales, pulp, newsprint, wood panels, engineered wood products, bioenergy, and ecosystem services add up to provide the third-largest sector of our economy, coming only behind oil and gas. Now it employs more than 16,000 Albertans directly and 23,000 indirectly, with $1.5 billion in salaries and wages. This has a direct impact on my constituency.

This industry is the lifeblood of the northwest and, I say, a mainstay of Alberta's economy, being the third largest. It might not always be quite as sexy as the panache of oil and gas, but I believe it to have a little more wherewithal than some of the other commodities. So I stand behind supporting this industry, the forestry industry, and that's why we're going to turn our attention now to the effect of the mountain pine beetle on this industry and the future of our province in this side of forestry.

With that, I will say not just how important it is to my constituents and the billions of dollars of economic industry that it has as a result. When we think of the problems of the forestry sector and what it faces, we can think often of forest fires that have hit recently, as we saw in my constituency – the Battle Complex, Chuckegg Creek – and neighbouring constituencies like the Member for Lesser Slave Lake's, with the McMillan Complex. We have huge issues there. We could also think, perhaps, of the softwood lumber disagreements that we have internationally with agreements with the United States. Alternatively, we could think of a lot of other issues. That might bring us to problems that the industry faces. But, first and foremost, for many of the members of this House, they can tell you that it's the mountain pine beetle that is the most direct threat to the prosperity or the future of the forestry industry going on.

Perhaps it's less publicized, but the ecological impacts are undeniable. It's clear to anyone who has driven along the highways in Alberta and B.C. over the last 15 years just how devastating an effect the mountain pine beetle has had on western Canadian forests, regardless of what side of the border you're on. From a car's window one can see large swaths of forest now painted in red, as the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane told us. I remember just this last May being blown away, when I was travelling Alberta's Rocky Mountains, to see how much of it has been affected. It's incredible to think that an insect less than a quarter-inch in size could cause such devastation every summer and spread further, destroying every tree in its path.

The first reference I found on the mountain pine beetle in Hansard was from June 1992. The then Member for Banff-Cochrane, predecessor to the speaker speaking previously, was describing to the House the way that the beetle was eating its way through Jasper national park. In the nearly 27 years since that first reference in this place the mountain pine beetle has continued to destroy millions of acres of forest and the economic future of the industry in Alberta, with many negative impacts, ecological and economic. In a speech in 2011 in this Chamber the former Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti Mr. Wayne Drysdale likened the mountain pine beetle to the Norwegian rat, unwelcome in Alberta. It is my hope that under this government Mr. Drysdale's hope that Alberta can be both rat and pine beetle free is realized.

Mr. Speaker, let's look at a few numbers. In British Columbia 16 million hectares of forest have already been killed by the mountain pine beetle. For context, the devastating Fort McMurray fire some years ago destroyed a little less than 600,000 hectares. By comparison, in Alberta more than 1.2 million hectares of forest have sustained some degree of damage from the mountain pine beetle.

There's a 6 million-hectare forest that is at risk of infestation today in our province. The economic impact has been tens of billions of dollars and the future impact untold, an incredible loss to many hard-working Albertans and particularly those in my constituency.

Let's talk about how much money the government has spent trying to deal with this problem. That figure is in the hundreds of millions of dollars, yet the pine beetle seems to persist, in its unfriendly way being a pain to the taxpayers and those invested in the industry. The money that we are committing: we ask it be done aggressively, as the motion is asking, to partner with industry and the federal government so that we might be able to defend our industry and spend those dollars smartly on behalf of taxpayers and the future of this economy in forestry.

The United Conservative Party has only one forest-related policy in its book, a book that I reference often. I suggest that all who are listening find the United Conservative policy book as it is filled with all sorts of interesting policies that we are in the process of enacting. The NDP platform reads that the government of Alberta should permit only one ecologically and economically sustainable forest management method. Our election platform more specifically restated that a United Conservative government would reverse four years of NDP reductions in the fight against the mountain pine beetle epidemic by raising funds from $5 million to $25 million. I'd like to point out that many detailed platform commitments can still be found online.

This motion calls for our government to stay true to its election platform and specifically address the mountain pine beetle issue. I am very pleased that my colleague the Member for West Yellowhead has taken up this cause. His riding has felt the economic consequences of the mountain pine beetle, but really each constituency member that represents an area with forests has been impacted by this insect.

In February of this year hon. members might remember how persistently cold the temperatures were in our province, particularly in the north. Many hoped that this would slow the spread of the mountain pine beetle. Let's all pray that that's true. However, even if it spreads slowly this year, the mountain pine beetle and its economic and ecological impact will still be felt by Albertans.

I commend the new Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. He's done a great job in his new role, already having dealt with huge wildfires, shipments of canola that are unable to go to market, and of course beginning the process of actually engaging farmers to get to work on Bill 6. There's no need to add more on his plate, but indeed it's incumbent upon this government to take this issue of the mountain pine beetle seriously and work towards eradicating it in our province.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not an expert on forestry management, but I know that many professionals who work in our forestry and environment departments have been dealing with this issue for many years. They know how they can address the issue of the mountain pine beetle and slow and stop its spread. Our government is committed to giving the public service the tools and resources they need to do their jobs well. Committing this extra funding to the eradication of the mountain pine beetle is important for the many dedicated civil servants to preserve our province's natural habitat and economic and ecological future.

In closing, I'd like to thank all those who have worked on this file: the public servants in our forestry department, the minister, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, and many others. It's my hope that our government will commit this funding to the problem and endeavour to address this issue. I implore all to vote in favour of the motion.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to this motion. I do want to – well, obviously, I'm going to make a bunch of comments about this motion. First and foremost, I do support this motion. I applaud the member for bringing it forward. It looks strikingly similar to a motion that the Member for Edmonton-Manning brought forward to this Assembly a year ago, two years ago, interestingly. I find that fascinating. I am pleased that the member is bringing this forward.

I want to clarify some comments that government members have made as far as our caucus when we were government and what funds we allocated to fight the pine beetle. At the onset, I can tell you that in 2017-18 alone we allocated $25 million. So the members need to correct their speaking notes or get their facts straight that we did put forward money. Now, I will say that this is – you know, the former Member for Grande Prairie Wayne Drysdale, whom I hold in high regard, did sound the alarm about the pine beetle for many years, in fact, when he was a former cabinet minister as well, to the former PC government and then through our term, recognizing – and I will echo the member's comments – that the forestry sector is absolutely critical to the Alberta economy.

5:30

I can tell you that as minister of economic development and trade I worked very, very closely with the Alberta Forest Products Association, Paul Whittaker and his team, as well as with a number of the companies individually who, coincidentally, accompanied me on a number of trade missions. We tried to increase the amount of timber that we were exporting to countries like Japan, not only to educate as far as the uses of timber – of course, Japan is only interested in J-grade wood – but to push them to increase the number of storeys in a building to use wood in order to increase their consumption.

You know, on the pine beetle, we see the devastating effects of it here in the province. We know they've been ravaging through British Columbia. Really, my point in this is that I appreciate that the member is calling on the government to commit $5 million, but $5 million is grossly inadequate to deal with this. You see the effects, especially of the pine beetle, in the last couple of years around Jasper. The number of trees that are completely destroyed is having an impact not just on the forestry sector, albeit a very critical industry for us, but also on the tourism sector. Tourists from all over the world, including Canada, want to come to our parks and don't want to see the red or blackened trees that are damaged by the pine beetle. I wish the hon. member who brought forward this motion would have significantly increased the amount from $5 million because this is a considerable problem that the government does need to take seriously.

Again, you know, we allocated $25 million. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if that was enough. This is definitely an ongoing issue. I do want to recognize the men and women that work in the departments, that work on the front lines to tackle this, even as the researchers are trying to do much-needed research on how we can eliminate this problem.

You know, I appreciate and hope that this provincial government will continue to put pressure on the federal government. They also have a responsibility to fund, and significantly fund, this ever-increasing, growing problem.

We know the impact that this is having, not just, again, as I have mentioned, on the timber supply in this province – although we have our forestry companies that are very, very concerned – but also with the communities, whether it's communities like the town of Jasper and others that are significantly impacted by the pine beetle.

You know, I hope that the government will listen to their member and allocate dollars. Again, I'd like to see more substantive dollars than $5 million going toward this very critical problem. Again, I say to the government members: if forestry is as important an industry as you're saying it is for your government, then dollars will follow and meaningful action will follow to address this issue.

I mean, we know right now that northern Alberta is struggling due to significant fires. We also know that the frequency and intensity of forest fires are growing and really, in part, significantly because the climate is changing, and we need to take meaningful action on that.

You know, our natural resources are extremely important. I mean, there are hundreds of thousands of men and women that rely on jobs in our natural resources sector. Again, Albertans are very, very blessed with the abundance of resources that we have, but we need to step up our efforts in order to ensure that we're protecting these areas and protecting the jobs of many men and women around the province.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat, but I will support this motion. I'm pleased that the Member for West Yellowhead has brought this forward. He sees the effects every day that he travels from home to this place, I'm sure. I hope that the government will listen and will recognize, quite frankly, that $5 million isn't adequate in order to continue the fight that our government started. I would argue that the government before ours had been fighting the pine beetle. This isn't something new, but it is growing in intensity, so we need to redouble our efforts and ensure that we are protecting our province's fibre, the jobs that come with it, and, of course, the beautiful natural landscapes that we have.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, any other hon. members wishing to speak? I do believe I see the hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley standing.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak on Motion 505 also. The forest industry, of course, is our third-largest industry in the province, and it employs tens of thousands of Albertans. Forestry is such an essential part of our economy. In whole, it contributes about $6 billion across our province, and there are over 70 communities that rely on, at least in part, the forestry industry. We need to protect our forests for the continued economic development of our province, especially rural Alberta.

Now, presently Alberta has over 38 million hectares of forest. These are trees which are indigenous to Alberta's boreal forests, and they reach maturity at the age of about 80 to a hundred years. These forests, of course, need proper forestry management. They need sensible, pragmatic environmental policies in place. These older forests will inevitably succumb to insect infestations and the forest fires that we see today if we don't protect them properly. When our forests are properly managed by Albertans, who love our environment, we are provided with numerous environmental benefits, which are vital for our exceptional air and water quality, soil stability, and for our wildlife habitats. Young, healthy forests capture more carbon than old forests.

I'm happy to say that our great province of Alberta is a world leader in forestry management and stewardship. Every single time one tree is harvested in our province, another two trees are planted. In 2018 alone the Alberta Forest Products Association managed to plant 83 million trees. Not only that, but over the span of the last 20 years, since 1999, there have been over 2 billion trees planted. These are numbers we like to hear.

Many Alberta communities and thousands of families across our great province are dependent on the continued success of the forestry industry. Unfortunately, the past few years have created uncertainty and unease for Alberta's forestry companies because of the ideologically driven agendas and closed-door meetings that the previous government has had. Under the last government, input from industry stakeholders fell on deaf ears. The forest industry faces uncertainty due to inaction on a destructive and devastating threat not only to the industry but to the very forests we all care about.

What, of course, we're talking about here today is the mountain pine beetle. The mountain pine beetle, while only half a centimetre in size, has had a devastating effect on millions of hectares of forest in North America. It starts when a beetle lays its eggs under the bark of a tree. From there the beetle introduces a fungus into the sapwood which prevents the tree from repelling and killing the beetle. In addition, this fungus prevents the transportation of water and nutrients within the tree, which contributes to the tree being in a weakened state. The tree succumbs to the beetles in only a few short weeks from the initial contact of the beetle planting its larva and introducing the fungus.

British Columbia has already been devastated by the mountain pine beetle. The Canadian Council of Forest Ministers reported that between 1995 and 2015 British Columbia lost more than half of its saleable pine lumber, resulting in the loss of tens of billions of dollars to the provincial economy and countless jobs over the coming decades. The impact from the mountain pine beetle cannot be measured in simple financial loss either. This goes beyond economic indicators or financial forecasting. There are additional research and studies indicating that areas that had mountain pine beetle that are faced with forest fires not only burn at a faster rate but burn more severely.

Now Alberta is facing an unfortunate and similar a fate as British Columbia. The mountain pine beetle has crossed into Alberta, and to the dismay of communities in their path, hands have been tied by regulations and partisan politics. For four years people begged the previous NDP government to consider changes to existing policy, but nobody would listen. These same stakeholders have done the same with the federal Trudeau Liberal government, and nobody would listen. The same so-called progressive parties, who are concerned about the environment, can't see the forest for the trees. Five years of inaction has caused damage by the mountain pine beetle in Jasper national park to grow from 122 hectares to almost 100,000 hectares of forest.

5:40

To put that in perspective, Jasper national park's total hectares of land come to almost 1.1 million hectares. Eight and a half per cent of the total surface area of Jasper national park has a mountain pine beetle problem, and it puts its nearby communities at risk. Without more action from all levels of government on this problem, it will only get worse, and the end result will have devastating and long-term impacts on communities and businesses.

This is not a problem that is limited to my constituency, to Alberta, or even to western Canada. This is a national problem. Lodgepole pine as a tree species is most impacted by mountain pine beetle, but it also affects Jack pine and many other species of pine. It's a common sight through our nation's great boreal forests, as are other species of pine. These trees are seen from the borders of the Yukon all the way to Halifax, and if action is not taken to control and eradicate this threat, it will continue to spread unabated into other regions of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, without proper forest management and without sensible and pragmatic environmental policies in place, older forests will inevitably succumb to insect infestations and forest fires, which we see today. We know that the mountain pine beetle prefers these mature trees. We know that the solutions for this are not easy solutions. We know, of course, for instance, that the caribou rely on the mature forests also. So we have conflicting issues here, with caribou requiring these forests and, of course, pine beetles feeding on these forests and causing problems there. The mountain pine beetle is a large threat to our wildlife and habitat also.

Now, British Columbia, of course, has already suffered huge losses, and of course in Alberta we're suffering big losses, too. We know that cold weather can help slow down the pine beetle spread. We had some cold weather this past winter, but of course the pine beetle, because of its nature, I guess, can create somewhat of an antifreeze or something to protect itself against cold weather. But really cold weather at the right times of the year can affect the pine beetle even more, so we could always hope for the weather to help us out in this regard. That would be the best help we could get, but of course we need to do something to help in the meantime. We know that fire also will help reduce the pine beetles, but of course these fires are usually coming after the pine beetles have already gone through and killed all the trees.

We know that money doesn't always solve all problems, but we know that we need to put something into this effort. We know that the additional $5 million that this motion proposes is a good start. Again, it's about spending money wisely and doing things properly. A lot of times we find government just throwing money at things and expecting the problem to go away, but we know that if we take this money and we spend it wisely, if we do the research that we need, and if we work with forestry companies to help alleviate some of these concerns and some of these issues, we will be able to move forward and protect our environment here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has risen to speak.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak in support of this Motion 505, and I want to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing it forward to the Legislature for consideration. I want to thank all of the members who've spoken so far, who've underlined the importance of the forestry industry to the province of Alberta. Certainly, as a child I benefited directly from the importance of the economic contributions of the forestry industry in Alberta. My dad was a welder who worked on the construction of the pulp mills in Hinton and Peace River. Certainly, during the '80s the forestry industry was what was keeping lots of folks like my dad employed because, as we all recall, the oil industry was on some pretty hard times at that time. So I'm grateful for everything that the forestry industry provided to me in my childhood, and I am certainly eager to protect the forestry industry to provide for the future prosperity of all Albertans.

I do have to express one concern. You know, after hearing the Member for West Yellowhead and the Member for Peace River and the Member for Central Peace-Notley talking about, you know, the mountain pine beetle and the threat that it poses to the forestry industry here in Alberta and, as a result, the prosperity of the people of Alberta, I am waiting for any one of them to mention that the underlying cause of the spread of the mountain pine beetle is, of course, climate change.

We've gotten dangerously close to admitting that climate change is the underlying cause for the spread of mountain pine beetle when the Member for Peace River and the Member for Central Peace-Notley admitted that, in fact, cold winter months will prevent the spread of mountain pine beetle, but the fact is that we don't have the cold winter months that we used to anymore. In fact, global temperatures have been above average for every month of every year since 1984, so to rely on the Member for Peace River and the Member for Central Peace-Notley's strategy to just wait for cold weather to come back won't work, Mr. Speaker.

That's why I'm pleased to support, of course, the kinds of forest management strategies and government policies and actions to control the spread of mountain pine beetle, but I just wish that we could admit that climate change is one of the contributing factors here and that spending money to halt the advance of the mountain pine beetle is a climate change mitigation strategy that we all have to pay for. You know, we've talked about the significant costs. All of the members who have spoken have thrown around numbers that are significant. I will take issue with some of the accusations that the members opposite have made about our government's spending on mountain pine beetle mitigation. I would remind all members that if they want the government to spend money on this kind of work, we need to have the money in place to do it.

Now, our government had a plan to collect money for climate change mitigation and spend it on those kinds of things that would not only help prevent further carbon dioxide emissions but also mitigate the effects of climate change that we're already locked into. That was the carbon tax, and we would collect that carbon tax and spend that money on climate change adaptation and mitigation measures, Mr. Speaker. Now, there's nobody in this House who disagrees with the premise that government, through its tax dollars, has a responsibility to work to mitigate the spread of the mountain pine beetle, so if you follow the logic to its natural end, we all have a responsibility to contribute, through our tax dollars, to government action to halt the spread of the mountain pine beetle. It just doesn't make sense to me why they would do away with a carbon tax that levies a tax on people who are emitting carbon dioxide so that they can take that money and reduce the impacts that are one of the causes of the spread of mountain pine beetle.

We had a plan in place. I understand that the members opposite take issue with some of the programs that we developed on how those dollars were spent, but they could have left it in place, could have left the carbon levy in place, taken all of that money and spent it on mountain pine beetle mitigation if they wanted to. That would have been 1 and a half billion dollars worth of mountain pine beetle mitigation every year if they had just left that carbon tax in place and used it to mitigate one of the effects of climate change, which is the mountain pine beetle. Now, Mr. Speaker – all right – we don't want to have the carbon tax in place. Well, where else is the money going to come from for climate change mitigation for things like the mountain pine beetle?

We also recognize, through this resolution, that industry has a responsibility to mitigate the spread of mountain pine beetle, but we've just given every industry, every profitable corporation in the province a 4 and a half billion dollar tax giveaway. That money could have been collected, Mr. Speaker, and the $5 million in additional funding commitments that the member is seeking easily found. We could have easily found that within the 4 and a half billion dollars that was given away to corporations in their Bill 3, but that money is no longer there.

I appreciate everyone's sincere desire to mitigate the impacts of the mountain pine beetle. It's just incredibly frustrating to me, Mr. Speaker, that we want to take action on it – and I have no doubt that all of the members here are sincere – but we're tying our hands behind our backs when it comes to actually giving ourselves the tools to deal with it. The primary tool that everybody in this Chamber has identified this afternoon in this debate is money used to mitigate the spread. You know, if we had kept the carbon tax in place or if we had kept the corporate tax rate the same way it was, that would have been $6 billion in next year's budget that this government could have had from which they could have found an appropriate amount of money to spend on mountain pine beetle mitigation.

5:50

I am, you know, more than happy to support this motion, Mr. Speaker. I just wish that all of the members would admit that this mountain pine beetle infestation is an effect of climate change, that it's our responsibility to do something about climate change to protect the health and the economic well-being of Albertans, that we had a plan in place to deal with it that they've just thrown out the window and haven't replaced with something else suitable, that we need the money to be able to tackle the problem effectively, and that they've reduced our capacity to tackle this problem and all of the other problems that Alberta is facing by throwing 4 and a half billion dollars in corporate taxes out the window.

Perhaps they know something that I don't know. Perhaps the forest industry is going to take some of their share of the 4 and a half billion dollar tax giveaway that they've been given and put it into mountain pine beetle mitigation. I would be more than happy to see that as a result of their corporate tax giveaway, Mr. Speaker. I doubt that's the case. Perhaps the Member for West Yellowhead can act on behalf of his constituents and demand that that 4 and a half billion dollars, at least some of it, be targeted to climate change mitigation.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close debate on Motion 505.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you, thank you to everyone else for your input today. This motion today is one that will likely not garner a lot of attention in this Chamber. It isn't a motion that's going to create headlines or sensationalism. The reality is that it shouldn't.

This motion today is simply one small, common-sense step that we need to make in order to, as government, get back on the right track. This is about our government increasing the funding to combat the mountain pine beetle by $5 million from $25 million to $30 million, as we promised in our platform. This is about Alberta doing what Alberta has always done: lead the way.

We know that Alberta was left vulnerable by the inaction in British Columbia to combat the mountain pine beetle. We know that we were left vulnerable by the inaction to combat the pine beetle through the national parks. As I mentioned earlier, we now know that the pine beetle is attacking other species of pine, including the Jack pine, which is a major species of the boreal forest. What that means is that if we continue to turn our backs on the mountain pine beetle rather than tackling it head-on in Alberta, it has the potential to devastate the boreal forest from the Yukon all the way to Halifax.

It is essential that the Alberta government lead the way and work with our forestry sector as well as challenge the federal government to step up and help combat the mountain pine beetle. This will help ensure that we can have a strong, vibrant forestry sector from coast to coast that all Canadians can be proud of for generations to come.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

The Acting Speaker: I believe that, just to clarify, we are potentially on a motion to close debate.

Mr. Long: Sorry. I move to close debate.

The Acting Speaker: Prior to us going through that question, I just want to clarify that debate is closed and we are voting on the Motion Other than Government Motion 505 as proposed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 505 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has the call.

Mrs. Savage: I would like to move to adjourn the House until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1101
Introduction of Visitors .....	1101
Introduction of Guests .....	1101
Ministerial Statements
La Francophonie Albertaine .....	1101
Members' Statements
National Day of Remembrance or Victims of Terrorism.....	1103
Government Members' Actions during Bill 9 Debate .....	1103
La Francophonie Albertaine .....	1103
Lemonade Day .....	1111
School Nutrition Programs .....	1112
Opioid Use Prevention and Treatment.....	1112
Oral Question Period
Government Members' Actions during Bill 9 Debate .....	1104
Bill 9.....	1104
Education Funding.....	1105, 1106
St. Mary's University .....	1106
Oil Transportation by Rail .....	1107
Transportation Infrastructure in Leduc.....	1107
Family Support for Children with Disabilities.....	1108
Minimum Wage for Youth .....	1108
Dementia Strategy .....	1109
Flood Mitigation on the Bow River.....	1109
Freedom of Expression on Postsecondary Campuses .....	1110
Chuckegg Creek Wildfire Update.....	1110
Foreign Qualification and Credential Recognition .....	1111
Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees .....	1112
Notices of Motions .....	1112
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1112
Tablings to the Clerk .....	1113
Orders of the Day .....	1115
Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 202 Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019 .....	1115
Division .....	1122
Committee of the Whole.....	1122
Bill 201 Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act.....	1122
Bill 202 Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019 .....	1126
Third Reading.....	1124
Bill 201 Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act.....	1124
Motions Other than Government Motions
Mountain Pine Beetle .....	1126

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Monday evening, June 24, 2019

Day 18

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henday (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreeshen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretary

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, June 24, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening, everyone. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 5 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just have a few questions that, hopefully, I can get some answers to for clarity on this. To give you some sense here in terms of our supplementary supply estimates that we received, on page 50, to give you a chance to find it, a couple of questions there.

The amount of $24,324,200 is requested together with $825,000 made available from lower than budgeted expenses and other programs to provide these monies. I am happy to go back and forth if the Minister of Finance would like to do that, or I can also just lay out a few questions and then stand up again, whatever is convenient for you. I'm just trying to get clarity.

My first question, then, would be about the $18.5 million for the Lubicon land claim settlement. I'm just wanting to know if that signals the intention of the government to pay out the full land claim settlement in this term or if there's still some work that needs to be done before that land claim settlement will be completed. In other words, does this bring us to the final end of that land claim settlement, or are we just in a step process here? Would someone care to answer that now, or do you want me to ask a few questions first?

Mr. Jason Nixon: You do know it's supplementary supply.

Mr. Feehan: Yeah. This is supplementary, right? For Bill 5, yeah.

The Chair: Hon. members, through the chair, please.

Mr. Feehan: Okay. Sorry. I'm just not getting an answer whether they want to answer now or later, so I'll go on with some of my questions.

Specifically within that expense, again, still on page 50, there is $6,667,000 for consultation and land claims. My question. We had recently increased the amount of money provided to First Nations and Métis settlements in November of last year, 2018, an increase in monies available to them for consultation purposes. That was distributed on a six-level system across to the nations. Again, I'm asking something about the intent behind this money. Does this money reflect a continuation of the dollars that they were given in November 2018, and does this reflect an intention of the government to continue to extend those dollars to the nations over time or whether or not there's any plan to make changes on that?

I'll put out one third question now, and then I will sit down and see if I can get an answer, but I'm happy to rise again later to discuss any answers I might get. That is on page 51 of supplementary supply, under the financial transactions vote, line 7.1, First Nations housing. I see, if I read this correctly, that $33.3 million has been set aside for First Nations housing, and it appears that that is part of the 2013 Alberta flooding liability retirement. Perhaps we can just have some clarity. If I'm reading this correctly, the information I have is quite thin. I'm curious about the $33.3 million because this money for the Alberta flood recovery has been spent, well, since 2013.

We know that we previously retired the flood recovery monies for the Stoney Nation after having gone through some fairly significant changes in terms of responding to their needs and the decision to shift who was actually doing the build and so on in their community. I know, if my memory is correct, that that money was resolved and retired previously and that the only monies that were left were monies for Siksika First Nation. That money was originally intended to be resolved by the end of September, but at the request of Siksika, who had made the decision to be the general managers of their own build and who had gone through some dramatic difficulties in getting their build done – obviously, we're talking here six years later, and they're still working on the build.

They had some sit-ins and other things that prevented them from proceeding and some disagreements as to whether or not the houses will be built again on the flood plain or whether they will be built up on the hill in the new community that was being built on the townsite, so that did lead to some delays. However, last year we had come to an agreement that they would attempt to finish it by September. We realized that was impossible – just, you know, the physical build time would not allow it – so my understanding was that that money was merely extended to the end of the year, to the end of December 2018.

If I remember correctly, because I don't have access to the documents that I did in those days, that amount of money would have only been about $3 million, not $33 million. It seems to me that somehow in this process flood recovery monies have jumped $30 million over the last month, so I need to have some understanding and ask some questions about why the amount of money that's put into supplementary supply is so dramatically different than what was previously required by these communities.

Thank you.

The Chair: Just a reminder to all members that we are in supplementary supply. There's a 20-minute block for any member that wishes to speak, and it's not really that back and forth as we have seen in other stages.

Are there any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, I'd like to remind the member that these were amounts that the previous government spent, and this House has an obligation to approve the amounts in this appropriation bill. Again, the $18.5 million was related to Lubicon land claim settlements, that, in fact, the previous government had expensed, and the $6,667,000 was for additional consultation and land claims.

In terms of the question around the $33,300,000 related to the Siksika Nation, those, again, were funds that the previous government spent, and it was the full amount related to, you know, repairing and rebuilding flood-affected homes in the nation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I realize that this is money put in previously. But my questions are wondering partly about the intent of the government moving forward, and I just wanted to have some sense of that. With regard to the Siksika rebuild, which is the only build left, I just wanted to ask: do you have any sense whether or not that build has in fact been finished now or whether or not we're still in the process of completing that build? It's just so that I can get a sense of whether this is something that's finished and accomplished or something that we need to pay attention to as we move forward into future budgets from this government.

7:40

The Chair: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I expect the minister of indigenous affairs would be pleased to provide more information to the member with that specific question.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and continue debate on interim supply. We've had the opportunity to have a bit of discussion about some of the numbers that the government has brought forward, had some very fruitful discussion just the other week with the Minister of Infrastructure, and I thank him again for being quite forthcoming on a number of issues that were, I think, of assistance in our discussion. I've had the opportunity to talk some with the Minister of Health and may take that opportunity today to perhaps delve into a few other things that might be involved with some of the numbers that we're looking at there.

For Health, as I recall, we had an amount of just under $14 billion that's being set aside. Now, we've had the opportunity to get a bit of a clear idea of where this government may be headed in terms of, I guess, that there's the capital spend that's there as well, and the government has made it clear that they, in fact, have decided to cancel the consolidation of the superlab, the Edmonton clinical lab hub, that our government was in the process of building. We know that in the process of doing so, then, they are forgoing about $23 million that have been sunk into that construction so far. We are going to be looking at additional construction penalties and then costs to remediate the site. To either the Minister of Infrastructure or the Minister of Health: perhaps if they could let us know, then, that within the capital budget that's allotted currently for Health in interim supply, have they calculated any of those costs in as part of that amount?

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, this is not a budget. This is the cash flow for the government to continue until a budget can be determined in the fall. I suppose, first, we can say that with the $600 million, approximately, that was budgeted for the lab hub project, by that not going forward, those costs would have been budgeted within that amount unless I get any [inaudible]. I don't know if that helps the member with that question, but I'm happy to answer other questions that the member might have.

The Chair: Are there any other members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you to the Minister of Health for providing a bit of a comment on that. I appreciate that clarification. Recognizing that, as he noted, there was about $600 million that our government had committed towards that and that, then, a portion of that would have been included in the capital spending for this year. Is the minister saying, then, that there would be a surplus in the capital amount allotted? If they were basing it and working off the numbers that we had put in place, it would have included any amounts, then, for that construction this year. That amount is no longer intended to be spent by this government. Are we looking, then, at a surplus in the capital budget for Health?

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, I think I'll reiterate the fact that we've noted here, and that is that, again, interim supply is not a budget. It's simply the cash required to get us until budget time. We will be rolling out a fulsome budget in the fall. We'll look forward to full debate on that budget at that time.

Mr. Shepherd: I appreciate that answer from the minister, but I can say, Madam Chair, that I know that when we were on the other side of the aisle and some of the members that are now in the government were in the opposition, frankly, that was not an answer that they found acceptable. There were many times when I heard opposition members, who are now government members, rise in this House and point out that their constituents wanted to know how the government was spending their money, and to choose to simply put out a number and not provide any information or detail on that was, well, tantamount to a bit of an insult to those Albertans. I don't think the suggestion that government should be able to spend without scrutiny is one that these members would necessarily agree with.

Now, I recognize, again, that this is part of the process by which we go through and that part of the process is that these numbers are simply put forward, but the reason we're asking these questions, Madam Chair, is simply so that we can better understand some of the direction and intentions of the government, so I'll continue in hopes that we may be able to perhaps understand that a bit better.

One of this government's platform commitments, Madam Chair, was to undertake a full review of Alberta Health Services – we know that's been announced, that that is taking place – so the minister has announced that he intends to have that completed by the end of this year. I imagine that that would require some additional resources, some additional staff. I don't know if that's a third-party firm or someone else that's conducting that review, but it would be my assumption, then, that within this interim supply would be some dollars set aside for undertaking what should be a fairly substantial piece of work if they are in fact intending to do a full review of all aspects of AHS. To the minister: does this interim supply contain any dollars? Can you give us any sense of how that review is taking place?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Chair. Well, first, I would answer the hon. member's first question, about process. Quite frankly, this is not a process that our government decided. The fact that we are now requiring interim supply is a process that was determined by the previous government. The fact that we are not able to determine a budget until the fall: these were all decisions that were – in fact, the previous government was proceeding on warrants until... [interjection] Sorry. It sounds like somebody else would like to speak. Is somebody else wanting to come up and speak? There's always lots of discussion in the Chamber, and I always want to make sure that the hon. members have plenty of opportunity to speak.

Madam Chair, the second question was about the AHS review. The hon. member might have missed it, but we did have a press release that was on May 30 in which we started an RFP process. The process is fully transparent. The RFP is going to be closing June 30. The amounts in our campaign commitments on being able to do a review of AHS were fully costed and included in our campaign platform. Those amounts weren't necessarily included in the RFP. We're allowing the proponents who are going to be submitting to be able to provide us with what they think would be an appropriate budget. We are looking forward to the RFP closing on June 30 and being able to choose a proponent in July and, as the hon. member said, then proceeding with that RFP and that review of AHS and having it completed by the end of the year.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Minister. I appreciate that clarification and that information. The amounts, then, for this review are not currently included as part of interim supply. You're waiting for the RFP, and at that point you'll have the opportunity to determine what the cost of the review will be. I appreciate that.

Along similar lines, then, the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions has committed to doing a review of all of the current and proposed supervised consumption sites for the province of Alberta. Are we looking at a similar process, then? Has that been included as part of the interim supply, or is that something that is also out for RFP by a third party, and would we assume that the same process would take place?

The Chair: The hon. Health minister.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Madam Chair. The answer, unfortunately, is that this is not a budget. This is the cash flow for the government to be able to proceed until it can have a budget in the fall. Our commitments to Albertans on our spending when it comes to mental health and addictions are included in our campaign commitments, fully costed in our platform. This right now, interim supply, is not a budget. Instead, this is the cash flow for us to be able to proceed until we have a budget in the fall.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Minister. It's unfortunate. It appears he has been given some instruction now to return to the standard talking point which we've consistently been hearing. It's unfortunate. We did have some useful conversation there for a moment, but I will continue in hopes that perhaps we can regain some of that.

Just recognizing that this government is continuing, then, on its work and its plan, perhaps I'll return to the Minister of Infrastructure, who's been most helpful on a number of points of discussion that we've had. Within the realm of Health but certainly also within the realm of Infrastructure we have the child and youth mental health centre, which was committed to be built here in my constituency of Edmonton-City Centre.

7:50

I was very pleased recently to see the opening of the access 24/7 mental health clinic at the Royal Alex hospital. That's something that our government provided funding for to help with the renovations and indeed to allow AHS to hire up to 20 new staff to provide that 24-hour, one-door access for mental health coverage.

I did have a constituent that reached out to me recently, though, and sort of said: that's fantastic to have there, but we do need youth-specific services and services that are targeted to families. Indeed, we know that's part of what was planned for the child and youth mental health centre. We have dollars that were committed by the Stollery foundation. To the Minister of Infrastructure: within the interim supply, then, currently do we have the dollars to ensure that the initial planning stages for that child and youth mental health centre are able to continue?

The Chair: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise on interim supply in Committee of the Whole. It appears that there's still some confusion with the opposition on what stage we are at with this piece of legislation. It's an opportunity now in Committee of the Whole to talk about how we feel about this bill and questions, thoughts, and comments that we may have about this legislation.

I'd like to take a few moments just to express my excitement that we're now moving past supplementary supply, which was brought forward – basically, our government now had to finalize the money that the former NDP government of the day already spent – and instead bringing forward interim supply, that will take us through to the next budget, a budget, Madam Chair, that will see us follow through on the commitment that we made inside our platform to be able to get Alberta's fiscal house back in order, to be able to bring forward a path to balance. I'm excited to be able to debate that when the time comes. I think I'm looking forward to the hon. the Finance minister and President of Treasury Board's budget speech and, ultimately, the opportunity within estimates to be able to have a discussion about what that budget will look like.

I know that the hon. members, particularly the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre at the moment, seem to be excited to already talk about that. Of course, the budget process is not done, but I can tell you that we will maintain that commitment that we made to Albertans, and it will show a path to be able to get to balance. I can also tell you, Madam Chair, through you to him, that it will not have the ridiculous path that the former government had, which was, shockingly, to take this province on a path to $100 billion in debt and to mortgage my children's and grandchildren's future. That's not the direction that will be coming. I know the hon. member seems to be excited to hear about our budget. I'm glad that he shares that excitement, and I look forward to when that process happens. For the meantime we're here on interim supply, and that's the stage that we're at at the moment.

With that said, Madam Chair, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Chair, I move that we rise and report progress on bills 5 and 6.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 5 and Bill 6.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. Carried.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 10

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 10, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2019.

I want to thank the members of this Assembly for their thoughts on this technical bill. Alberta's tax laws are typically reviewed and amended annually to maintain the efficiency and integrity of our tax system. As I explained during previous readings, Alberta's income tax system is closely linked with federal legislation. The changes in this set of amendments will bring our legislation in line with federal changes that, for the most part, were implemented in 2018. The opportunity to make these changes did not present itself to the previous government, but they did ask the Canada Revenue Agency to administer the changes on 2018 tax returns and committed to making the necessary adjustments on our end at the next available opportunity.

I will recap the amendments within this bill briefly. These changes will ensure that taxpayers' entire income is included in the calculation of certain credits. The amendments also ensure that certain benefits for Canadian Forces members and veterans are eligible for the pension credit. And this bill will adjust the provincial dividend tax credit rate for dividends paid out of corporate income that was taxed at the small-business rate. Madam Speaker, these amendments will ensure that Alberta's tax system continues to function properly, and they are needed to support the Canada Revenue Agency's administration of our personal income tax system.

I encourage all members of the House to support these amendments. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, Minister, would you like to close debate? All right.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a third time]

Bill 7

Municipal Government (Property Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 7, the Municipal Government (Property Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019.

This legislation would help revitalize municipalities by empowering them to offer stronger property tax incentives to business and industry. I want to take this opportunity to thank the members of this House for sharing their opinions on this bill. I was happy to hear all of the different points of view on what I believe is a vital piece of legislation for our province. Municipalities want the ability to provide stronger tax incentives to attract business and investment. This legislation would give that to them. Municipalities know what's best for the people they serve. This legislation wouldn't tell them what to do; it would give them the power to make their own decisions.

During second reading debate I heard a number of arguments against the need for this bill. Some of my colleagues across the aisle said that the bill doesn't actually do anything. With respect, I strongly disagree. This bill provides clarity and expands on what is currently in the Municipal Government Act. Right now the act enables councils to cancel or refund all or a portion of a property tax or defer the collection of a tax in a specific year for the purposes of providing tax relief in instances of hardship.

If passed, Bill 7 will expand the existing authority in the Municipal Government Act to include broader economic development purposes. The provisions of the act, which my friends cited so often in their debate, are intended to be used for one year only. This is the opinion of the experienced policy and legal experts within my department, and it is the opinion of other municipal legal experts. If passed, this amendment would allow municipalities to provide property tax incentives for up to 15 years. This would give businesses the kind of certainty they need when considering major investment decisions.

8:00

One of the other matters the members of the opposition raised was the perceived lack of consultation on this bill. Again I must disagree. Our election platform clearly had this as one of our proposed legislative changes, and Albertans who voted for us as government expect this program to be put in place. Some of the criticisms I heard revolved around an idea that this legislation, if passed, may lead to increased competition between municipalities, Madam Speaker. I will reiterate what I said at second reading of this bill: increased competition is exactly what we are looking for. With that being said, there are many ways that municipalities must work together for the betterment of their overall regions. The Municipal Government Act requires municipalities with common boundaries to complete an intermunicipal collaborative framework by 2020.

In addition, there are metro regional boards in both Calgary and Edmonton and in Edmonton areas that give municipalities a chance to work together on a vision for each of those regions. We can have competition and collaboration at the same time, Madam Speaker. This government was elected on a platform of getting Albertans back to work and strengthening the competitive position of this province. We want to grow our economy, not just manage it. The Municipal Government (Property Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019, is a key part of achieving those goals by empowering municipalities to attract investment, create jobs, and realize their full economic potential.

I encourage all members of this House to support Bill 7. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to address this. I think I'll start out by agreeing with the hon. minister that there are powers in the MGA that allow municipalities to undertake the work that he is talking about now. He talks about expanding that so there's economic development focus in addition to the ones around hardship, the ones around being able to do these on a yearly basis. I can tell you, from experience, that municipalities already undertook property tax exemptions for businesses. They would do that regularly. They do do that regularly. With respect, I think this bill is not necessary. It's not needed. It is something that's already in the MGA, and it's already working. With respect, I don't think there's anything new here.

I can tell you that the work of this government in reaching out to municipalities is woefully inadequate. Again, the minister talks about: we put this in our election platform; it's there for all to see. It's true. It is there for all to see, but I would, with respect, say that many people are surprised by this. Frankly, I haven't found anyone in a municipal context who was involved in the discussions on this before it hit the Order Paper here in this House.

Madam Speaker, when this side, the NDP government, was in place, we of course worked closely with the AUMA and the RMA and other organizations. I can tell you that from the 2018 resolutions session of the AUMA they talk about their vision. The AUMA's vision is that all Alberta municipalities "have an enduring partnership with the Government of Alberta that recognizes the shared responsibility" of working together. I don't see the shared responsibility here. I see the government of Alberta and their ideology today bringing forward this bill because they believe it will assist municipalities.

As I said, Madam Speaker, it's already in the MGA, and municipalities, if they want to use it, can use it. They have used it, and they have attracted businesses. I don't see where this gives any more clarity for municipalities out there. In fact, I think there are many damaging things it does to municipalities as a result of this bill coming forward.

But I do want to emphasize that, overall, there is nothing to see here. This is a nothing bill that doesn't need to be taking up the time. In fact, I think it moves the relationship that municipalities have through their associations and individually and through their regional boards backwards, Madam Speaker. It moves it backwards because they weren't involved in the discussions. When we were government, we worked closely with municipalities. As I said, the response to that resolution by the ADM on behalf of government was: we are committed to the development of legislated funding frameworks and have engaged with municipal associations in discussions on this key component of the framework.

Madam Speaker, instead of allowing municipalities, as it was framed here, you know, to compete with one another, we sat down with their associations and we talked about how we can all grow the pie and how it can be shared in a predictable, rational, consistent manner so that everyone benefits. There clearly will be losers as a result of this bill coming forward. I'm not sure there will be the collaboration that has just been talked about by the minister. I see another future, and that future is predictable in the sense that businesses will talk to different municipalities, and instead of looking out for the needs of people, the kind of amenities that exist in municipalities, they'll be looking for the least amount of taxes they can pay. That will of course create that competition so that the metro regional boards, though they are collaborating at this time, may find themselves pulled and rent apart as a result of this bill coming forward. It's not just my opinion; it's the opinion of many, many people.

Now, I do know that the hon. minister had a press conference about this maybe about three weeks ago, four weeks ago. It occurred out in Strathcona county. He had the mayor and a business entity representative there, and he was there, and there were some other MLAs there. They were standing up and they talked about all the good things that might happen. But, Madam Speaker, that's one mayor. If you ask that hon. minister how many mayors have come forward with support and maybe tabled letters of support, I'd be interested in seeing those. I know that recently there was a southeast and southwest mayors and reeves conference down in southern Alberta, and there were dozens of people in attendance. Indeed, the hon. Member for Taber-Warner was there, and the feedback I got was that he was touting this as a really good thing. There wasn't a great uptake. There wasn't, you know: let's put him on our shoulders and walk around and talk about how great this is. People were questioning the whole thing. They were saying: "Where did this come from? Did you talk to us? What will it do to the relationships we have in southern Alberta as mayors and reeves?"

Maybe there are some municipalities that have a little more ability, a little more flexibility to give up tax money for potentially 15 years from a business, but, you know, it's going to make the less prosperous municipalities kind of lose further or get behind the game.

The mid-city mayors is another organization that probably has a great number of questions with regard to where all of this is going, and they meet in the very near future, Madam Speaker.

8:10

You know, the organizations that are out there, the RMA and the AUMA, talk about potential unintended consequences of going forward with this bill, Madam Speaker, and I think that's the kind of overall message I get when I talk to people. They're wondering why this is such an important item on the government's agenda when, in fact, they already have the ability and have used the ability.

The government likes to talk about, you know, consultation, but I would ask: has there been any consultation with regard to this bill, or was the consultation, again, the fact that it was in the platform paper, the platform of this government? Is that consultation? It's something that municipalities already use, Madam Speaker, through their own auspices. They work and negotiate with businesses, and businesses locate, if they're being attracted, knowing they can get exemptions from taxes. True, the municipalities do have to work at this on a regular basis so that those exemptions continue, but it has happened, and it will continue to happen even without this bill going forward. With mayors being shocked by the presence of this on the Order Paper and with mayors already feeling like what they really want to talk about is stable and predictable funds, that's what this government should be working on through reasserting discussions around MSI, and that's not what's happening here.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The other concern that gets talked about – and I want to stress that I don't think this bill is needed, because they can already do these kinds of things – is: who pays the bill, ultimately? You know, if you're a smaller municipality or a smaller county and a business has come and said, "The only way we'll really locate here is if you give us 15 years of tax relief" and the council is kind of feeling concerned that that business will potentially go down the road to another county if they don't fess up and give that tax relief, the concern that I think ratepayers can have on the residential side is that they're going to be picking up the bill for that business, who has kind of argued for getting tax exemptions. Mr. Speaker, that's not fair for residential taxpayers. Again, those are some of the concerns that are brought forward.

Mr. Speaker, we're also, of course, concerned that – and generally the word that gets talked about is the race to the bottom. I think the minister was going to go there in terms of talking about one of the unintended consequences of his bill. The race to the bottom means that, you know, everybody loses. Everybody loses because they're not collecting taxes from a business that should be paying their taxes. The different mayors and reeves out there and their councils should be justifiably concerned about this race to the bottom and what it'll mean for their residential taxpayers or ratepayers, who will potentially have to pay more as a result of this bill, and the businesses going to mayors and reeves and asking for these exemptions.

This is not the kind of predictable, stable funds they want, Mr. Speaker. They really want to get back to the table, through their associations, to talk about MSI. If this was such a good idea of a bill, why wasn't it talked about? Why wasn't it brought forward by the minister, through the associations, to say: "You know, this is what we want to do. What do you think about these things? Should we do them together?" Then they'd be able to stand with the associations and the organizations shoulder to shoulder to shoulder and say: this is what Alberta needs.

No, Mr. Speaker, I think what we're seeing here is more ideology, believing that if we give tax breaks to businesses, those businesses will somehow magically put municipalities on a more steady basis. I think that mayors and reeves, justifiably, have to be concerned that if they're getting less tax money as a result of this bill, they'll have smaller government, and smaller government will mean less services or it'll mean higher residential taxes for the people who will be paying the taxes.

In Calgary we were able to attract large businesses like the headquarters for CP many, many years ago, Mr. Speaker. As a result of having a good property tax base on the residential, though the nonres has taken some hits of late as a result of the downturn in the economy, we were able to build up available services and amenities in the city of Calgary – roads, sewers, and other things that businesses need – and we're able to attract businesses. Now, that's not the same for smaller counties, I understand, but we're going to make it hard for those smaller counties because there's going to be competition amongst them, and that competition will cause a race to the bottom.

Mr. Speaker, if it was such a good bill, why wasn't it talked about by this minister and by the Premier when they had an opportunity to speak with the associations? They've had opportunity. I know the Premier met with different associations prior to the election. I don't know if he talked about this in his platform, specifically around Bill 7, or what were municipal tax incentives. I think he didn't because, you know, it was a surprise. This whole municipal tax incentive program was a surprise for many, many, many people in elected office at the local level. They wouldn't put this at the top of their agenda of things to do.

As the Minister of Municipal Affairs you only get so many opportunities at the cabinet table to bring bills forward. Why would you bring something forward that no one's asking for in the municipalities and the local governments? I can appreciate that getting cabinet's time to talk about a bill like this might be, you know, exciting. It might be something you think is good, but I can tell you that this is a waste of cabinet's time in terms of asking them to go through this and to support this. It's not something that municipalities are clamouring for. I have yet to speak to anybody who really wanted this to go through, really wanted the government of Alberta to bring forward the municipal tax incentive bill that is before us today, because they already know that they have the opportunity to do these things if they want to do them.

The kind of work that they really need this government to do is around opening up the discussions about MSI because that ends in 2021, Mr. Speaker. They are concerned because they have to bring forward three- to five-year budgets, three years on the operating side and five years on the capital side. When you start to look at where 2021 is, it's right in that wheelhouse in terms of a high level of concern with the kinds of budgets that they have to make available to the government of Alberta and their ratepayers and taxpayers to get things in place to address the requirements in the MGA.

Mr. Speaker, again, Bill 7 is not something they asked for. Bill 7 is in the ideological framework of this government's competition approach. Competition will lead to a race to the bottom. If they want to give tax incentives, they can do that now with the MGA. If they want to attract businesses, they can do that now with the MGA. They don't need Bill 7 that's before them. They need co-operation and partnership, and that's not something that this minister has undertaken with regard to Bill 7.

8:20

When we were government, we worked with Edmonton and Calgary and set a framework in place for municipal funding. We were going to be working with the RMA. We were working with the RMA – it was called the AAMD and C then – and we were working with the AUMA and didn't get it over the goal line because of the election or the term being up, Mr. Speaker. But that would have been work that we would have gotten back to instead of Bill 7, which no one was asking for. No one was asking for it because they don't see the benefit of working that way. They see the benefit of stable, predictable funds and revenue sharing that would occur as a result of getting back to the table and having those discussions.

Of course, the Minister of Finance might say that we're not there yet. We have to wait until the budget is all prepared and ready in October, November before we can have those discussions. But with Bill 7 here I wonder if municipalities are going to be able to have that discussion at all or if the government will just lean on: we gave you something; why don't you go out and see if you can make it work? That's not what they want. It's not what they asked for. In the spirit of partnership, it's not what this government should be bringing forward.

Instead of saying, you know, that there was a platform that everybody could read at their leisure and it was buried in there with two lines or three lines, Mr. Speaker, what they should be saying to municipalities and counties around this province is: we want to hear what you think is necessary to make your lives and our lives together better for the people of Alberta. That's not how this was developed. It's a gross omission of the responsibility of government, I think, to present something as a fait accompli and say: "We'll work things out once we put this in place. You're going to be able to collaborate with each other, we promise, but we also want you to compete with each other. That's going to make things better."

Mr. Speaker, what I hear from leaders around the province is that they want the ability to sit down with this government and talk through the many important issues that are ongoing, particularly: where is stable, predictable funding for municipalities and revenue sharing in the future? That's what I believe should be done, not the bill that's before us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Would the hon. Government House Leader like to speak to the main bill?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: That is what is available to you.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I'm excited to speak to the main bill. I was interested to hear the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's comments. You know, Mr. Speaker, as I sat not too far away from where the hon. member sits now, over the last four years inside this place, and watched as he was the Finance minister of the then government and watched his then government proceed with their mandate here inside this place for four years, I often wondered to myself how they could be so bad at their job. I often wondered how that hon. member could have been so bad at being Finance minister that he saw us on the way to six credit downgrades, the largest debts in the history of our province, brought in a carbon tax and put it on the people of Alberta at the exact moment that they were in a recession.

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker – in fact, you and I used to be bench mates – I don't know. I wouldn't speak for you, of course, but I wonder that you must've thought the same thing sometimes over the years: how could the NDP be so bad at their job? Well, I finally heard the answer. It's because they have no idea what they're doing.

That hon. member used to be a city councillor of the largest city in this province. He used to be the Finance minister of this province. He's a two-term member of the Legislature, and he clearly, based on his presentation, has not even read the MGA. A multiple-term councillor of the largest city in this province and former Finance minister who has not even read the MGA, Mr. Speaker.

No wonder this is the only one-term government in the history of our province that's now sitting in opposition. No wonder they were so bad at their job when they were here. No wonder we ended up with the largest debts in our history. No wonder we saw all those credit downgrades under that hon. member when he was the Finance minister. He has no idea what he's doing.

Now, I would not have guessed that when I was on the other side of the House. I thought sometimes that it was just purely ideology that was causing the NDP to get into trouble. I think their ideological beliefs probably did cause a significant amount of trouble, Mr. Speaker, but clearly, based on that presentation, that hon. member has no idea. He just stood in this Assembly and said things were in the MGA that were not in the MGA, said that the ability to do this was in the MGA. It's not. It's not within the MGA.

Mr. Bilous: Yes, it is.

Mr. Jason Nixon: No, it's not. Mr. Speaker, again, a multiple-term councillor.

There's another former cabinet minister heckling over the way. They should take the time to read the MGA before they stand up inside this place and say such ridiculous comments, Mr. Speaker. They deserve better researchers. I don't know; maybe that's what's going on. Maybe they need some research help. Though I'd still have to say that a former multi-term councillor of the largest city in the province and the former Finance minister, you would think, would have taken the time to read the MGA before he got up and said those ridiculous comments.

In addition, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo had some other comments to say about consultation, and he spoke a lot about the fact that mayors would be upset about this. You know, I have not seen the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo often leave Calgary or Edmonton. I certainly have not seen him, when he was Finance minister, spending much of his time talking to communities like where I represent or where you represent.

Now, on the weekend I had the privilege of going home to the great riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Of course, you know it well; it's where all the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills come on vacation, where we have the eastern slopes; west-central Alberta, one of the most beautiful places in the world. I have the privilege of representing, as you know, lots of towns and counties. This weekend when I was home, I got to be in the great town of Sundre, my hometown. I also spent some time in Rocky Mountain House, Clearwater county, Mountain View county, and a little bit of time in your city, too, Mr. Speaker, in Olds. Made it all the way up to the north as well to the great communities of Bluffton, Rimbey, spent some time in Bentley, Ponoka county, Lacombe county, down in Eckville, and a little bit of time in Benalto, just for the heck of it because, you know, we were moving around pretty good on the weekend. It was rodeo weekend in many spots, Mr. Speaker.

I had the privilege of spending lots of time this weekend with many municipal leaders of all of those municipalities that I have the privilege of representing in this Chamber. That's just a fraction of the towns that I represent. As you know, just like yourself, I have close to 200 elected representatives in my constituency, municipal and school board representatives, that I have the privilege of representing in this Chamber. I can tell you that every one of them said: "Thank you. Thank you so much that your government is now in charge. Thank you so much. In the period of eight weeks we've seen more ministers come and help us with our communities than the entire time that that hon. member was the Finance minister of this province." Not one municipal leader approached me and said: "Well, we don't feel like we're being consulted."

Now, Mr. Speaker, of course they would not say that because, as you know because you represent a lot of small towns, the former government could not be bothered with rural Alberta. In fact, I only saw one or two cabinet ministers ever come to the constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre during their time in government, a handful of them, very rarely. Often when my communities had to come here for meetings with cabinet ministers, they would be cancelled. Sometimes even after they'd travelled all the way to the capital and spent a night in motels, all of a sudden the meetings were cancelled. Famously, we had a former environment minister, my predecessor, tell this Chamber that she'd met with municipal leaders when she had not met with municipal leaders. That happened inside this Chamber.

For that former Finance minister, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, now to even have the nerve to rise in this House and somehow say that he was in a better spot to consult with communities, over this side of the House, currently this government, is an absolutely ridiculous thing for him to say, Mr. Speaker. I know your communities would agree with my statement when it comes to that.

Now, the reality is, though, as the now hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs said in his excellent presentation as he moved third reading on Bill 7, there has been consultation on this bill. It's called an election, Mr. Speaker, something that this side of the House... [interjections] Now, the Premier often points out how angry the NDP are. I'm sure the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is just as angry as the rest of them because he's usually the one heckling almost the loudest over there. I know he's mad with Albertans. He makes it very, very clear. He was always part of the fear and the smear and the ideological beliefs of the NDP and that approach to politics that most Albertans just disdain. That was what he was always a part of.

What is new now, Mr. Speaker, is that he's also part of Team Angry. He's mad because Albertans cast judgment on him on April 16. He was the Finance minister of the government that they cast judgment on. He was the Finance minister of that government that Albertans cast a clear judgment on when they fired him. [interjection] I understand why he's so upset and yelling at me. I would probably be just as upset if I was the Finance minister of the only one-term government in the history of this province. That would probably hurt, but that's what he is.

Oh, sorry, Mr. Speaker. I didn't see that you'd stood up.

8:30

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I might just see if I could encourage the hon. House Leader to perhaps inform the House about some of the content of Bill 9 as opposed to what the former Finance minister did or didn't do as those sorts of comments often lead to a lack of decorum inside the Chamber.

Debate Continued

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that Bill 9 has passed the House, I'm assuming you want me to go to Bill 7. I just want it clarified.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, this is very important for Bill 7, particularly when you look at the presentation by the former Finance minister in this Chamber, who was debating Bill 7. These are the points that he raised, and we as a government and myself as a member of the government are responding to the concerns that he raised in regard to this legislation, but I'll go back to Bill 7.

My point is this, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the former government, the one-term government, the one-term NDP government that we have sitting on that side of the House, that that hon. member was the Finance minister of, this side of the House did consult with Albertans. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs articulated very well in his presentation to the House today how this fit into our election platform, and while the NDP may continue to want to spend their time being angry at Albertans for casting their judgment on them, this side of the House and the hon. Municipal Affairs minister ain't gonna waste our time on that. Instead, we're going to come here and we're going to continue to move the agenda forward inside this House. [interjection]

I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo still heckling away at me, Mr. Speaker, and that's my point. I understand that he's part of Team Angry now. I understand, Mr. Speaker, through you to him, that he's mad at Albertans because they made him be the Finance minister of the only one-term government in this province's history. I get it. What really matters is what the Minister of Municipal Affairs is trying to do.

This is what I reject, and this applies to Bill 7, Mr. Speaker, because of what it means for our communities. That hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo also said that there are no other communities that basically would need this. That shows, again, the core of why he's part of a government that was fired, because he's clearly never been to communities like Drayton Valley. He's clearly never been to communities like Hanna. He's clearly never been to communities like I represent and you represent, Mr. Speaker, who are hanging on, barely, because of the NDP's ideological policies and – we find out tonight – incompetence. They don't even know what the MGA says. He's clearly never been there. He's clearly never left his bubble.

If you watch, Mr. Speaker, the actions of the opposition, you could see that they basically suffer from what Ralph Klein would call dome disease, living within a bubble in their own echo chamber of people that keep telling them that they got it right.

Well, I was home again this weekend. I was happy to be there at one of my favourite events of the year, the Sundre parade. I just love it, Mr. Speaker, as you know. I know you've had the privilege of being in the Sundre parade. It's a great parade and a great rodeo. It's been a good rodeo weekend there, and to watch hundreds of people lining up all along the streets – you know what they were yelling at us? They were yelling: "Keep going. Stand up for us. Keep doing what you promised. Keep doing it. Keep going all the way." That's what they said.

They said: "Go and tell the Premier that we're with him one hundred per cent. Ignore the NDP." They actually said that in the middle of a parade on rodeo day, Mr. Speaker. You have people yelling out, "Keep going; don't stop; ignore the NDP," because they gave us clear instructions on April 16 to ignore the NDP, to get the job done. I'm with the Minister of Municipal Affairs. That's what we're going to do inside this House. It does not matter how much Team Angry yells. It does not matter how much Team Angry calls us names or tries to bully our members inside this Chamber. The United Conservative Party is going to get 'er done.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Seeing none, are there any others wishing to . . .

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I believe I was to my feet fast enough for 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is rising quickly to make a brief question or comment under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure. It's always interesting to listen to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Again, the term "interesting" I chose very, very carefully.

Now, it's interesting that, you know, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment and Parks talks about this side of the House as Team Angry, yet for the most part, for 10 minutes there, much vitriol came out of his mouth talking about the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I'd love to ask the member if he's read the MGA. As a former Minister of Municipal Affairs I doubt it. It's the second-largest piece of legislation that exists on the books in government. It is extremely comprehensive.

I think the point that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is trying to raise is that section 347, I believe, of the existing MGA gives municipalities the ability to lower property taxes, to create a business zone or an industrial park in order to attract business, so I'm not sure why exactly the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre felt like he had to berate the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that I think it's a little rich, especially when the Government House Leader talks about us throwing stones, yet he is grabbing them by the handful, saying that we're Team Angry. You know what? Our job is to hold the government to account and to ensure that whatever legislation they bring to this place has been given its due attention, that they've spoken with municipalities. I disagree that the government has carte blanche to do whatever it wants without any type of consultation. I also disagree that winning an election – an election is not consultation. They're two very different things. Does the government have a mandate? Yes. Did the majority of Albertans vote them in? Yes. Is that and does that replace consultation? No. That's really what our municipalities were reaching out to us saying: we had no idea the government was going to bring this in. They just wanted a little time, which is what I think was the Member for Calgary-Buffalo's point.

Again, I appreciate that many members in this place are brand new, but those that have been here for at least a term know that on almost every single bill that we brought forward, the former opposition wanted it sent to committee, talked about more time, more time, more time. In fact, if they had it their way, there wouldn't have been a single bill that passed in the four-year term. Now, we're not proposing the exact same thing, but time is needed to ensure that stakeholders are adequately consulted. You know what? I'll be the first to stand up and say that we accepted amendments from all parties in the House in our four-year term. I mean, some of them, no, but reasonable amendments we did accept. We accepted some from the Official Opposition because, again, as legislators, you know, we want to ensure that we are passing the best possible bills.

You know, I mean, really, I'm rising under 29(2)(a) to ask the Government House Leader: why is he so angry at the fact that the opposition is trying to do our job, asking legitimate questions? I'd love to hear the minister respond. In the previous version of the MGA section 347 does, in my opinion, what the minister is proposing to do in this bill. I'm happy to hear how this new bill changes the existing powers that municipalities had. I encourage the minister to do that in a way to answer the question because I think that it's a legitimate question. I'm not trying to score partisan points or jump up and down. It's a fair question to say: if you're bringing forward legislation that is going to give municipalities more tools – okay? – well, please outline them for me. Section 347 gives them the tools that I've read in this bill.

I've outlined my concern before, Mr. Speaker, which is, really, that the work that we did to encourage municipalities to collaborate, to work together to form agreements, whether it's intermunicipal collaboration agreements or others, again, looking to municipalities that have done an amazing job coming together to say, "How do we attract industry to our area . . ."

The Speaker: Others wishing to speak to Bill 7? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to this bill. I also listened to the Government House Leader's – I don't know – comments. They were not about the bill at all, and many opinions contained in it were presented as facts. As the saying goes, you're entitled to your opinions but not to your facts. I don't think that my colleague the MLA for Calgary-Buffero said anything that was not factually correct. Since I didn't have any earplugs or anything, I was listening to my colleague very carefully, and I think there were three themes that my colleague tried to elaborate on. One thing that's clear for this government is that municipalities are looking for a real plan, real leadership, and that's not what it is.

8:40

The Government House Leader was challenging whether the MLA for Calgary-Buffero has looked into the legislation. He was a five-term councillor. I think he certainly has. He has this Municipal Government Act that he has graciously given to me. I'm looking at the section because the Government House Leader was saying that there is no such power in the legislation. Section 347: I do want to read it one more time into the Hansard to just clarify, I guess, that this authority exists in the existing legislation. Section 347(1) reads:

If a council considers it equitable to do so, it may, generally or with respect to a particular taxable property or business or a class of taxable property or business, do one or more of the following [things], with or without conditions:

- (a) cancel or reduce tax arrears;
- (b) cancel or refund all or part of a tax;
- (c) defer the collection of a tax.

Subsection (2) of 347:

A council may phase in a tax increase or decrease resulting from the preparation of any new assessment.

That's right from the legislation. That's the law as it stands now. I think that's what my colleague from Calgary-Buffero was mentioning, that what the government is claiming is that somehow this piece of legislation is giving municipalities powers that already didn't exist. Based on this provision, based on my understanding of the Municipal Government Act – also, I do have a background in law – the way I read it, I think that authority exists and that the MLA for Calgary-Buffero is exactly right in saying that whatever Bill 7 is trying to do, that already exists in our legislation.

I think we can talk about what it's trying to do. If we listen to the mayors, listen to the leadership in municipalities – plus, I was at RMA – I think their number one issue was not Bill 7. For sure, their number one issue was MSI, their future funding, the predictability of funding for municipalities, and I do not believe that this bill addresses any of that that we heard from municipal leaders as a priority. Many of the concerns with this bill outlined by my colleague are the ones that are coming from the municipal leaders across this province.

For instance, Mayor Nenshi from Calgary said, and I can quote as well: I would be very interested to see if we can actually use these regulations to accomplish what we are trying to do, which is to give small businesses looking at huge tax increases a break; we want to make sure that this doesn't lead to a race to the bottom with different jurisdictions who are competing for businesses to start giving them tax breaks and tax breaks and tax breaks. End quote. That's a direct quote from the mayor of Calgary, who is also sharing the same concerns that are articulated by this side, that were articulated by the MLA for Calgary-Buffero, that it's not giving them new powers. There is a concern that it may just get them into competing with each other in a race to the bottom.

Similarly, the mayor of Edmonton has also shared similar concerns, and I quote: I think we have got to have a conversation in our region on how to use these tools to grow the regional economy because selective use by one of us to undermine the other could be one risk here.

A couple of things, I think, are clear as concerns coming from the mayor of Edmonton. Here they are trying to collaborate with each other and make development plans in collaboration with the surrounding municipalities. Clearly, this bill has the potential to start a competition among various municipalities and jurisdictions. Again, it's that same thing: it's a race to the bottom. That's exactly what, I guess, this side of the House has outlined. These are legitimate concerns coming from municipalities, municipal leaders. Like, more than 50 per cent of the population of Alberta lives in just these two cities, and both mayors of these cities are warning you that these are unintended consequences, that these are the consequences that can follow from this piece of legislation.

The second thing is that every bill they come up with has the same kind of speaking notes, that it will somehow create jobs and that it will kick-start the economy. That was, I guess, their campaign platform, that they will create jobs, that they will build pipelines, that they will kick-start the economy. But there is nothing in this bill that gives us any indication that it will lead to the creation of jobs. In fact, so far what they have done is that they have reversed the carbon levy, and they have given almost $4.5 billion in a tax break, all in the name of: it will create jobs.

I represent Calgary, and we know that people in Calgary are still looking for jobs. Despite these policies that when in opposition they always described as killing jobs and that that was the reason the jobs were not coming to Calgary, we saw in the last couple of weeks Repsol laying off 30 per cent of the staff from Calgary in their regional Alberta offices. If those were the recipes for job creation, I think we would have seen otherwise. There should be some more investment. There should be some positive job numbers. But, no, their policies, whether it's Bill 7, whether it's their corporate tax break, whether it's their repeal of the carbon levy, are not the solution.

In fact, I have been asking about oil-by-rail contracts for the last few weeks now. When we were in government, we got credible advice. We got advice from the public service that it would create 120,000 barrels of capacity per day and that it would give the province 2 billion plus dollars in revenues. Now somehow they're saying: "No. It would have cost the province $1.5 billion in losses."

That's exactly the kind of project, that's exactly the kind of initiative where we worked with industry. They told us that we needed takeaway capacity, and that would have created takeaway capacity, but we don't hear anything about that, where we have a real chance of getting some jobs, getting some activity in the economy. We don't get any answers, and now we are, I guess, supposed to believe that somehow Bill 7 is kick-starting this economy and creating jobs. It's not.

The other thing, I guess, relates to when I was talking about the general themes, that my colleague talked about, with respect to consultation. If there was proper consultation with the municipalities, I think the number one issue, Minister, that you will hear will be the MSI. They're not looking for anything that's already in the legislation. They're not looking for further clarification of section 347 of the Municipal Government Act. They're asking for something completely different, and that's their future funding arrangement with the province. They're looking for something that we started with Edmonton and Calgary. They're looking to build a relationship, a sustainable relationship, with the province so that they can serve their communities. This in no way, shape, or manner helps our municipalities.

8:50

The third thing. Not only does this power exist in this legislation; there are numerous examples of when cities relied on this section and did exactly what that side, the government side, is describing that this bill will do, that they will be able to defer taxes for multiple years, that they will be able to give tax breaks. Sure, there are many examples. The most recent one, again, was from Calgary. There was huge concern with respect to taxation. Small-business owners were worried about it. There was some vacancy in the downtown. There was a rally as well around that. Council met with business leaders, and they agreed on a tax break of $130 million, I believe. That's exactly the kind of thing that we heard that this bill will do, but municipalities are already doing exactly the same kind of thing.

There are other examples. In 2015 Lethbridge did exactly the same thing. They established a TRIP, a targeted redevelopment incentive policy, to promote new construction or major renovation of medium- to large-scale commercial retail in mixed-use building projects that generate significant and ongoing expansion to the assessment base in the downtown core. Clearly, there is that ability, and clearly that section, that provision, is already working. Municipalities are relying on these powers and provisions to serve their constituents and to serve their municipalities.

Chestermere in 2019 relied on similar provisions and brought forward a cancellation for nonresidential commercial developments and seniors' housing and multifamily housing in the form of three- to four-storey apartment buildings. The city provided an example of a $10 million building that qualified for the amount. The developer used municipal taxes, and the taxes were waived so that they could receive a refund. Clearly, Chestermere has used that provision and has used the powers that are already in the Municipal Government Act to create those kinds of incentives. If businesses are struggling, if there is any need to reduce taxes or even refund taxes, they're already doing it.

Calgary has done it before as well, where they cancelled the taxes owed by the Royal Canadian Legion in Kensington in the amount of $94,000.

Not only do these powers exist in our Municipal Government Act, the current legislative framework, but these powers are used by municipalities for exactly the kinds of purposes that this government described that Bill 7 will achieve. So Bill 7 is clearly a redundant piece of legislation and a redundant authority because this authority already exists, and municipalities have been using it that way for a long time. I think that authority is working, and we never heard that any municipality was looking for that, as I mentioned previously.

When I met with municipal leaders, I think the number one issue coming from municipal leaders was that they want a sustainable, predictable funding relationship with the province so that they can set their priorities on their budget cycle and planning cycle, and they are clearly not getting that from this government. They are rightfully worried about that, too, because for everything we ask government about – funding schools, funding programs, even when we ask about numbers in interim supply . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much. I was listening to the Member for Calgary-McCall, and I just have a couple of things that I'd like him to expand on. The first is that I know he had some really difficult files when he was the minister of – was it human services?

Mr. Sabir: Community and Social Services.

Member Ceci: At the end it was Community and Social Services, but before that it was a more expanded ministry. He had a number of difficult files in that ministry and just couldn't move forward unilaterally. There were many stakeholders, interested groups, quite vocal, and he had to work with his ministry officials to design consultation approaches. So one question I would have is: what did real consultation look like to you as a minister? I know that the government keeps relying on the fact that they won the election. "The platform said that we would bring in municipal tax incentives. So there you go. Here it is."

The last thing I have to ask you about is that when you were a minister, when I was a minister, when the former minister of economic development and trade was a minister, you only get so much time around the cabinet table. You have to work closely with the policy co-ordination office to bring forward bills, and there are a number of committees you have to kind of work with that are subcommittees of cabinet to see what the economic implications are, to see what the social implications of your bill are, et cetera. It can be quite, you know, attractive to get in front of all of those different committees and to push your bill. The question I have is: did you ever find yourself in a position where you were pushing back on administration and saying, "No; this bill is not ready" or "It's not the right kind of thing we're bringing forward; we don't need to bring it forward at this time; let's revise it"?

I'd just like to know what your experience was.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you for the question. I think I can start off by saying that, yes, Community and Social Services, or human services, is one of the most important files in that pretty much on a monthly basis it deals with almost a quarter of a million people. Oftentimes these are Albertans who find themselves in circumstances where they need the government to step up and help them address issues facing them.

I can say one thing with absolute, I guess, confidence. My colleague the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo was the only Finance minister who I can say saw people behind those numbers. Those numbers on these budget documents were never just the numbers; he could see people behind those numbers. I was able to make progress on many different files; for instance, Bill 26, that ties the rate of income support, AISH, seniors' benefits to the consumer price index so that over time, with the rising costs, the value of the benefit doesn't erode. Certainly, I have a lot of respect for the member and the work that he did as Finance minister.

With respect to consultation, when I became minister, the first file that landed on my desk was with respect to safety standards that were brought forward by the previous government. Clearly, some good suggestions with respect to safety were in there, but they were brought forward without consultation with the stakeholders in the persons with developmental disabilities program. The first thing that they shared with me was the slogan Nothing about Us without Us. Even though in that regulation there may have been some things that were critical to their safety, the way those things were brought forward – they never weighed in on those things. They never were consulted on those things, and their viewpoint was that they're the ones who know their safety the best. That's why we went into consultation. For the first time in the history of this province more than 2,000 people from that program . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, would the minister like to close debate? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to close debate on Bill 7. Again, I have listened to some of the comments made by my colleagues on the other side. They talked about consultation, about no need for the bill. They talked about MSI. It really is rich coming from the members opposite. It strikes me that they don't understand what it would require to undo the damage that their four years did to this province. They talk about consultation. They brought in a multibillion-dollar carbon tax that they did not even mention to the people of this particular province, a carbon tax they had no mandate whatsoever to impose upon this province, that has devastated families and communities.

9:00

Madam Speaker, you know, debt and deficit were the order of the day in the last four years that the NDP presided over this province. They took a province that had a combined debt of $12.9 billion to nearly $60 billion, projected by their own fiscal quarter announcement sometime in March 2018. That particular debt is likely projected to be more than $100 billion. They presided over a province where there are more than 200,000 of our fellow citizens out of work across this province.

You know, again, it is rich that they don't understand that this is one part of our entire package to reinvigorate our economy, to get those 200,000 people back to work. Madam Speaker, they presided over an economy that saw businesses fleeing this province in record numbers. It used to be the case that investors saw Alberta as a destination of choice for investment. In the last four years that they have presided over Alberta, we saw a record flight of investors. They caused so much lack of investor confidence in our province that investors were so scared to invest in our province. This province used to attract workers from across this country and across the globe in pursuit of opportunity. In the last four years that the NDP presided over our province, we saw a record number of people leaving our province because they could no longer conclude that Alberta was that land of opportunity. That was the extent of the damage that the NDP did to our province and economy, and it is what we have inherited from them that we are now trying to undo to kick-start our economy.

The property tax incentives that we are proposing, Madam Speaker, would help in that effort. You know, MSI: what I've heard from them is a presumption that MSI is not on the table. We have been consulting with our municipal partners. When I was sworn in, my first task in the last one week was to reach out to reeves and mayors across this province. There are 352 of them, and I am still on that particular task. I don't want us to confuse MSI, which we are going to have to deal with, with what we are discussing here today.

Again, this is one part of what we need to do to rebuild our economy. I have had the opportunity to discuss Bill 7 with our municipal partners, Madam Speaker. In fact, I have travelled to many of the regional meetings of the AUMA to discuss this particular issue, and I can tell you that there's a lot of support for this particular bill, contrary to what the members opposite would like you to believe.

With that, Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to close debate on this particular bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 8 Education Amendment Act, 2019

[Adjourned debate June 17: Mr. Shandro]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate you recognizing me to further the debate here on Bill 8, which, as we all know, should be aptly named Bill Hate. I want to focus on that because I know I've got concerns around other parts of the bill, things like that, but this is the one that I have very, very serious concerns about. I keep hearing from the government benches about how: "We won the election. We have a mandate to move our agenda forward. Oh, my gosh, we even had . . ."

Member Ceci: You've never heard that.

Mr. Nielsen: Unfortunately, I have heard that. Yeah. You know, as early as this evening the hon. Government House Leader was talking about listening to cheers and telling him to move his agenda forward.

Well, the problem that I have, Madam Speaker, is that I don't believe that the Education minister consulted the one stakeholder that this directly affects, and that's the kids that are in the GSAs and QSAs. I don't believe that. If you did, prove it to me. I'm willing to stand here and eat humble pie, more than happy to do it. But I don't think you can because I've stood outside schools, and students are outraged. I stood outside on the steps of this Legislature, and people were outraged. If so much consultation went into that section, why are we seeing these protests? Why do we have students who couldn't vote in the last election, couldn't have their voices heard – I'm betting if they could've had their voices heard, they would not have been voting for this on this one simple point.

Words mean a lot, Madam Speaker, language. Maybe I would suggest that some of the hon. members might want to take a good, old-fashioned union course on simple language because when you look at the language around GSAs, it is not some of the most comprehensive. It is not some of the strongest in the country. What we have right now is, and that's why you're seeing all of these protests because even the kids can figure it out. They're the ones that this affects. I am happy to give the government benches a chance to re-examine this, a chance to go back, consult with the ones that this affects, the ones that couldn't vote in the last election.

With that, Madam Speaker, I have an amendment that I will pass to you and await instructions.

The Deputy Speaker: This will be known as REF1.

Hon. member, please proceed.

9:10

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to be able on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-North West to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 8, the Education Amendment Act, 2019, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 8, Education Amendment Act, 2019, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Here is your chance to consult with the single-largest stakeholder that this bill affects, the membership of the GSAs and QSAs. You are able, through the committee, which we have seen all of our private members’ bills sent through because it was so important to get that feedback – here is our opportunity now to send this to committee to be able to consult with the students that are affected by this, get their feedback. My bet is that once you hear that, all of the clauses that you see around this bill with regard to GSAs: there won’t be an amendment that can come fast enough to get rid of it.

We have seen so many protests across the province from our young emerging leaders that want a safe space to be themselves. They just want something to belong to, and the language in here currently as proposed will put that at risk. Rules requiring posting of details around the supports for GSAs. Policies won’t be able to use the word “gay.” I don’t understand what the problem with the word “gay” is, but for some reason we seem to have to address it. It’s like we have to somehow reinvent the bicycle wheel here.

So I cannot stand here in good conscience, Madam Speaker, allow this to go through as is. We need to send this to committee. We need to get proper consultation. I’ve heard about how so much work has been done in the first 25 days, 21 days. I know, hon. member, you think it’s kind of funny, but the kids certainly don’t. They don’t find it funny at all. If you’ve been able to move so fast to do so much in such a short period of time, it should take you no time to get this done, no time whatsoever. Go out; consult with the kids that are directly affected by this. I bet you’ll be surprised to find out what you hear. I don’t know how in good conscience we can vote this through knowing full well the risk that this will put our kids at. I’ve made mention of this before. I’ve seen tweets that have said: I would rather have a dead son than a gay son.

Mr. Nally: Table it.

Mr. Nielsen: I’d be happy to do that.

We’ve had discussions in here about that one is too many. Well, is that one too many? Is 10 too many, Madam Speaker? A hundred? A thousand? At what point do we have to stop and say, “It’s gone too far. There’s too much risk. We need to back up. We need to rethink our position”? So here’s our chance. Here’s our chance to pause the process, step on the brake, send this to committee, consult with the stakeholders that this affects directly, the kids. I would strongly urge all members of this House to support this amendment. Don’t put any of these kids at risk before you talk to them.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore for bringing forward this amendment. I think it’s an excellent idea that we send this bill to committee and consult with stakeholders because, clearly, the government hasn’t done this.

I’d like the member from Edmonton-Decore to give me some comments. I know that he received a bit of a rough ride from the members opposite. Of course, the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain was trying to shout him down as he was bringing forward this amendment. Obviously, he didn’t like the idea of consulting. Perhaps he’s, you know, not too concerned about the welfare of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered students in his riding, which is a real shame, Madam Speaker. I can tell that member that we are deeply concerned about those students, and that’s why we’re working so hard to protect them.

I saw the Member for Morinville-St. Albert encourage the Member for Edmonton-Decore to table a tweet in which the tweeter said that he would rather have a dead son than a gay son, as if the Member for Morinville-St. Albert doesn’t even believe that it’s possible in this day and age that parents would be outraged and horrified that their children came out as homosexual.

Madam Speaker, that’s the very problem with this bill as it is. Those members opposite will refuse to even acknowledge that this is a problem that needs to be solved. It’s my hope that by sending this bill to committee, we can actually hear from people who will be negatively affected by the very proposals that this government is putting forward so that those members for Morinville-St. Albert and Spruce Grove-Stony Plain can hear from people who will be affected by this and wipe the smirks off their faces.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair.

Mr. Schmidt: Yes. I appreciate that, Madam Speaker. It’s a little bit upsetting to me when the members opposite sit there, you know, grinning like little children who have just filled their pants at the thought of sending this bill to committee and the thought of parents actually kicking their children out of their houses because they’ve come out as gay.

I’d like the Member for Edmonton-Decore to tell us what he’s going to likely hear from his constituents when he tells them that the members for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain and Morinville-St. Albert sat here smugly denying the problem, that is very real and that many students in this province are struggling with.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. The member is quite correct. You know, we didn’t even have to see some of these displays this evening. I’ve already heard from students that were quite angry that this bill has been brought forward and without even allowing them a chance to have their say on it.

I recall speaking with one group, and this part is going to be very hard for me, Madam Speaker, because I get very emotional about it. The student looked at me straight in the eye and asked me: “Why is it that they hate me so much for being who I am?” I didn’t have an answer. I said, “I don’t know.” The student said: “I just want to be who I am. I just want to have friends like everybody else. I just want to be treated normal, but because I’m a little bit different looking, I have to potentially get subjected to stuff before I’m ready to tell people about it.” It was very, very difficult for me. Very, very difficult. I promised that person that I would not go quietly on this.

9:20

We need to consult with these kids. We need to hear the fear in their voices, because they are scared. Like I said, I’ve certainly seen examples where the parents have been absolutely accepting and loving and have promoted that. My gosh, I've seen a close friend of mine from high school whose daughter has become an incredible...

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in support of the amendment brought forward by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Decore, that amendment, of course, to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities for further consultation.

What I'd actually like to talk about today is something that I think has been remarkably absent from our conversations around Bill 8, and that's largely because I don't think much consideration or, frankly, thought has been given to this by the government that's brought forward this bill. I'd actually like to speak to the other pieces of the Education Act, the legislation that this government is seeking to proclaim, because I think it's important to remember that there are quite a few other provisions in the Education Act, although largely unsubstantive and not achieving the intent which the Minister of Education has suggested they will achieve, which I think will further go to show that this is really a smokescreen for bringing forward provisions to roll back protections for LGBTQ students and weaken GSAs.

However, I'd like to actually speak to some of the other pieces of the Education Act. I think my fellow colleagues – I've already spoken a fair bit about it, but I will continue to speak about it, and I know my colleagues will as well. But I have a bit of an advantage here, which is, as I've mentioned before in this House, in this Assembly, that I worked on the Education Act in my period of time while I was a civil servant in Alberta Education. In fact, between the periods of time of 2009 and 2013 that was some of the primary work that I did, work with three former ministers of Education under Progressive Conservative governments on the consultation, on the drafting, on the revisions around the Education Act. So I do have a great deal of experience and knowledge with this act.

It is actually a bit of a disappointment for me that a project that I'd worked on for many years, which I had sort of accepted was no longer current or appropriate legislation even despite the good work of the many people who worked on it – I'd long ago let go of that since it has been over seven years since this legislation was passed. But now to see it brought forward: the irony is that it's being brought forward, I believe, only to weaken GSAs. That's a little bit heartbreaking for me, I have to say, as somebody who worked so hard on those former pieces of legislation, but I will talk a little bit about it.

The first pieces I want to talk about. I mentioned in this House that the Education Act came as a result of a long consultation on overhauling the education system as a whole, and that consultation was called Inspiring Education. It was led by then minister David Hancock, and a great deal of resources and money, frankly, were spent on that consultation with Albertans to talk about how would we envision education for the future in this province. The Inspiring Education document, which is still available – you can do a Google search and find that – while it's a great piece of information and a great document outlining what was heard during the Inspiring Education consultation, what unfortunately did not come out of it was a great deal of detail in terms of how to revise one piece of education, which is legislation. Legislation is only one way that we influence and impact and develop our education system.

There wasn't a lot of detail that came out of Inspiring Education, but one piece that did come out was a conversation around the importance of allowing learners, students, in the future to be able to learn at their own pace and to have a more flexible understanding of the environments in which they'd learn and the pace at which they would learn. To support that in legislation, the Education Act made a number of changes to what was currently in the School Act, and those are changes around the age of access. With that, Madam Speaker, what I'm referring to is that under the current School Act and the School Act at the time there was – you know, children between a certain age have a right of access to education in this province. That means that if they approach any school board within that age, they are entitled to receive an education program, and their resident school board is required to provide them an education program that's consistent with the standards that are set out by the ministry. For the longest time that has been that by September 1 of any given year any child who is six years of age or older or younger than 19 years of age was entitled to receive an education program. That's what was in the School Act at the time. That is what's still in the School Act. What the Education Act did was propose a change to raise the maximum age of entitlement to an education program to age 21. That meant that any student who was 21 years of age as of September 1 was entitled to go to school and receive an education program by their resident school board.

That was important because what we heard was that here was a significant concern amongst the government at the time, the ministry at the time, about encouraging kids to complete high school. For a lot of kids having a longer time within which they were entitled to go to school would be key to them completing their education, particularly students who might have come to Canada at a later age. Maybe they were English language learners for the first time when they came to Canada. They needed a little bit more time to complete high school. The government at the time felt it was very important to encourage kids to do that because, of course, having a high school diploma is key to being able to access so many more jobs, skills training, postsecondary. It's a basic. It's a fundamental. I think we can all agree that we want to encourage kids to complete high school. Increasing the age to 21 was meant to do that.

Now, I do want to point out that at the time and even currently, now, the Alberta Education funding manual will fund students up to the age of 20, so this was actually only extending the age of access by one year. I mean, that was the intent. We've heard the Minister of Education rise in this House and say that the purpose of proclaiming the Education Act was to modernize the school system. That was one of the key ways that the government at the time when the Education Act was drafted meant to achieve that goal, to actually say: okay; if we're going to modernize, we're going to let kids attend school for a longer period of time. Unfortunately, though, that is one of the key pieces in Bill 8 that has been repealed. The government is not actually moving forward with that piece of transformation which was in the Education Act, which was to extend the age of access of education. They've rolled it back to what's currently in the School Act.

Now, I'm not going to, you know, dispute that the previous NDP government also did not adopt that. They still had the School Act. They were under no obligation to take that on, but they didn't extend the age of access either, and the reality is because it does cost money. To provide kids' education for a longer period of time means you've got older kids who are going to be going to school. They're going to be funded students. School boards would have to find spaces for them. That, realistically, does cost money, but the NDP government was at least honest about the fact that by not raising the age of access, they were doing so because they couldn't afford to at the time. I know that will shock some of the members across the aisle because they seem to believe that the NDP did not make any decisions based on fiscal responsibility, but – ha, ha, ha, guess what? – they did.

The other piece about this. Another piece that was brought forward as part of the Education Act was increasing the age of compulsory attendance at school. Again, the current School Act states that right now a student may drop out, essentially, from school at age 16, so beyond the age of 16 kids are not required to stay in school. Certainly, because of the age of access they can stay in school longer, but they're not required to beyond the age of 16. Again, the original intent behind the Education Act as was drafted in 2012 is that the government wanted to encourage kids to stay in school. They didn't want to make it easy for kids to drop out. Some kids could turn 16 before they even start grade 11, so some kids could, honestly, have dropped out of school in grade 10.

There was a thought: let's encourage kids by requiring them to stay in school until the age of 17. They had to stay in school. This is another piece that, yeah, I guess I'm not even really sure if it actually could cost more money. It could in theory because, you know, I don't think any government is banking on kids dropping out of school early as a way to save a buck. In theory, I guess, there are some kids who would stay in school longer. Again, I'm disappointed to see that this was a very actually common-sense thing to do, to encourage kids to stay in school, to actually require them to do so, but this government under Bill 8 has once again not gone forward with that change either, which I think is disappointing.

So what changes will the Education Act as proclaimed if Bill 8 passes by this minister – what changes will happen? Again, I don't think that much light has been given to any of these issues. I think they speak to the need to refer this matter to a committee because these are things that nobody is talking about in this House. We're not hearing about it, and I'm not even confident – I'll be quite honest – that the government members across the way even know about some of these changes.

9:30

One of them is that under the Education Act school boards will be permitted to operate alternative programs outside of their boundaries. During the time that I was in Alberta Education, there was certainly a plethora of private schools that sought to become alternative programs operated by public and separate school boards. There are a lot of reasons for that. School boards were willing to take these programs on as alternative programs because they would get funding for the students who are now enrolled in these alternative programs. For private schools, it also allowed for full funding. The operating body that operated the previous private school saw advantages to being part of the public system as well because, again, these kids would get full funding. Often transportation would be provided. So it was seen to be an advantage.

Now, there were many, many, many examples when I was with Alberta Education – and I can say this continued on well past that; I worked for another five years directly for school boards – where there were many former private schools that became alternative programs that still continued to operate as if they were private schools, with the giant exception of getting full funding, which is hugely problematic. For an alternative program, the school board should be responsible for operating those programs.

One of the things that we saw happen in the early 2000s, which the Education Act was looking at, was the fact that there were school jurisdictions that were operating as alternative programs, programs that were outside of their jurisdictions. Now, we can have philosophical discussions about whether or not we agree with that. The situations that arose that led to this piece of the Education Act were because there were some school boards that were operating alternative programs, like, across the province from where they were. This is not just in the neighbouring jurisdiction. It was far across the province, and it was largely because the private school that operated that former alternative program could not convince their local school board to take them on as an alternative program, so they shopped around until they found a school board that would.

In my view, this is a very problematic provision. The Education Act is now going to expressly allow for school boards to operate programs outside of their jurisdiction. That's a problem, in my view, because school boards are locally elected bodies. They are elected by the electors in their jurisdiction to represent their interests, just as we all are. They are locally elected to operate programs that serve their students in their jurisdictions and respond to the needs of their communities. When school boards are operating programs outside of their jurisdictions, they're actually acting outside their means. It would be the same as one of us trying to affect policy in another province. We were not elected to do that. We have our jurisdictions, we have our boundaries, and that's who we're meant to serve. We're not intended to serve residents or electors outside of our boundaries.

Frankly, I think it was very problematic, and it allowed for an undermining of the very foundation of what locally elected school boards are supposed to be about because they're now serving in a community where there's no elected representative in that jurisdiction on the school board. They're serving students that don't belong there. They're serving parents who can't vote for those trustees. I think that's problematic, but at the very least that's my view on it.

I think who'd have a very strong view on this are school board trustees. Again, we've mentioned in this House a few times that over 50 per cent of current sitting school board trustees were not around when this Education Act was passed in 2012. They haven't had the opportunity to express what they believe is an appropriate role of a school board trustee should they be operating programs outside of their jurisdiction. As I've indicated, I don't agree with it, but certainly I'm sure – and I worked with many, many school boards – some might; some might not. But that is a discussion that those school board trustees should have an opportunity to have. That's one of the reasons why I believe this referral to the committee is important.

Another amendment to the current School Act that the Education Act would bring in is a requirement that all school boards have audit committees. Specifically, it will set out that all school boards and charter schools will be required to appoint an auditor – they're already required to do that – but must also establish an audit committee consisting of public members. The audit committee will recommend the appointment of an auditor to the board, review the audited financial statements, and report to the board.

A comment I have on this one is just that, in fact, many school boards already do this. They already have an audit committee where public members get to review the audited financial statements of the jurisdiction of the school board and comment on it. This may be an unnecessary change. I certainly don't object to it. I think everybody should agree that public bodies such as school boards, who are almost primarily publicly funded, should have their books open and reviewable by the public. I don't think anybody would disagree with that. Again, I'm not even certain if that's the kind of revolutionary or transformational change that the minister is looking to achieve by bringing forward Bill 8. It's a nice administrative change – I certainly think many people might like it, might not like it – but you wouldn't even need to pass legislation to do that, really.

Honestly, the minister has significant authorities already under the School Act around audited financial statements. We've seen ministers do it. Previous Progressive Conservative ministers . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm just, as always, very impressed by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud's knowledge on this topic. I know she's got a great deal more that she can share, so I would ask her to please continue with her thoughts.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Audit committees. I will end on saying that I just think it's a fine change, but to require it by legislation could be characterized by some to be a little bit of red tape and just unnecessary, frankly. School boards should be held accountable, but I don't think it's necessary to do it in legislation.

Actually, another change that I think a lot of school board trustees would have a lot of things to say about is the establishment – not a requirement, but there is an establishment – by the Education Act that all school boards will be required to have a trustee code of conduct. Now, the NDP government already under the former Minister of Education did bring in changes to the School Act to require that school boards have trustee codes of conduct. In fact, most of them should have had that in place already by September 1, 2018. What's key about what's being proposed in the Education Act is that not only must each board have a trustee code of conduct and that trustee code of conduct must set out sanctions for breaches of their code of conduct, but the Education Act will allow for sanctions that lead up to and include disqualification of a trustee from a board. That means that a school board, if there is a dysfunctional member on their board, could in theory disqualify one of their own members.

Now, again, that's a good conversation to have, but some might argue that an elected official who is a school board trustee should not be able to be disqualified by its colleagues. I actually say this knowing that there are certainly some situations where I've worked with school boards that have had one or two very problematic and disruptive trustees, who can really hamper the functioning of the board. That can be very problematic, but I think that even more problematic is the idea of an elected official being disqualified by a majority vote of their colleagues. I think we would all as elected officials be very troubled by the idea that any of us could be disqualified by our colleagues.

There are already clear provisions in the School Act and in the Education Act where there is automatic disqualification for certain, you know, breaches of conflict of interest, breaches of the Criminal Code, and those are all very standard and should be necessary for all elected officials. But the idea that a board of trustees could disqualify one of its own: again, I can guarantee you that the 50 per cent of current school board trustees who were not around when this change was presented might have thoughts on that. They might have a lot of thoughts about the idea. We know that sometimes school boards can be fractious. Sometimes there can be factions. There can be all of that, as happens in elected bodies. I'm sure a lot of them would have some very strong views on that, which is yet another reason why it would be important to refer this to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities to talk to school board trustees about what they think about the idea that one of them could be disqualified by their colleagues.

These are just examples. I can tell you that I'm certain there are going to be plenty of opportunities for me to speak to the other changes in the School Act. I bring this forward because I think it's very important for the members on the other side to really know what it means to proclaim the Education Act. I'm not saying that all of these changes are good or bad. I have very strong views about the changes that weaken the protections for GSAs, but there is a lot of other content and material in this bill that we need to be cognizant of. It's not simply just rubber-stamping something. It was seven years ago. A lot has changed. Many of the members in this House have changed since then. Therefore, I think we need to give very real thought to the implications.

More importantly – I highlighted this the last time I spoke to this bill – there is a significant amount of detail that still governs the education system, that will continue to govern the education system under the new act, that the government is trying to proclaim, that is set out in regulation. We are sitting here at the end of June, and the government intends to proclaim this as of September 1.

School boards and charter schools and private schools and parents and home educators need to know the rules by which they are operating. Schools don't just begin operating on September 1. There is a great deal of planning that goes into that. Whether it be transportation or fees or financial accountability requirements or charter school operations, those are significant pieces of information that I think the school system requires to be able to function efficiently and smoothly. I know this government believes in efficient functioning of government bodies and public bodies – and I agree with you – but we need to give the system time to do that.

Thank you.

9:40

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other members to speak to the bill?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's always a privilege to rise in this House and speak to everyone. But before I do, I'm hoping that you'll grant me some leeway tonight. Someone very special to me is watching from her home right now. Through you to her, I just want to say: Adriana, I love you. A little bit unconventional, I know, but she's watching, so I just wanted to let her know.

Privilege. I wanted to specifically focus on why it's so important for this bill to go to committee. The reality is that we all have a certain level of privilege. Now, there are very few people in this House who can actually say that they've lived their lives from the experience of someone who identifies as LGBTQ-two-spirited. Very few people in this House. Number one, we have to check the fact that we live with the privilege of not having gone through the experiences that people who identify as LGBTQ-two-spirited have to live. We don't know the realities that they have to live.

Luckily, on this side of the House we have a member who's very vocal about her experience, and I've learned so much from her on the realities that she has had to live with here in the city; not only that but also coming from rural Alberta and what that experience was like, growing up in rural Alberta and going through the reality of having to first understand the reality that they were living and then also being able to identify as someone who's LGBTQ and sharing that with the rest of the world when she thought it was necessary to share that reality with the world, not when somebody who she thought she could trust could actually go out and out her to the rest of her community or her family.

Now, by no means am I saying that I know everything that there is to know just because I've spoken to one person. I would never claim that. But what I am saying is that I do have the privilege of not having to actually live that reality and the discrimination that comes along with being someone who has come out and has decided to share their sexual orientation with the rest of the world. I don't believe that many members of this House do. This is why it's so important.

I thank the Member for Edmonton-Decore for actually bringing forward this amendment to Bill 8 so that it can be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities specifically for this reason. Then we have the opportunity to actually hear from members of the LGBTQ-two-spirited community, that we can potentially invite to actually speak to the committee. Now, what better way to consult on the bill than to provide those people with a voice? Let me please remind all the members of this House that . . . [An electronic device sounded] Thank you for the musical accompaniment. I really appreciate it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, perhaps take it outside.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

As I was saying – as I was saying – not only do we have the privilege, but we also have the duty, because I'm pretty sure that every member in this House has constituents that identify as LGBTQ-two-spirited that actually live in their ridings, and it is our duty to represent everybody in our ridings, not just those that we are closest to or our family members or our close friends. It's our duty to actually reach out and speak to as many constituents as we can make possible throughout our role as representatives and MLAs, to actually get out there and speak to people and ask them about the realities that they are living, the issues and the concerns that they have.

I know that this is not new to the members in this House – I know – but it's very easy to have blinders on when you're always meeting with the same constituents and the same stakeholders and you're listening to similar issues and similar concerns on the regular, and you're not getting out there and speaking to people who perhaps don't share your same views. I've often said this to constituents of mine who don't necessarily agree with me ideologically: "Yes, I do have my own political ideology. It's mine. I grew up with it. I was educated in it. I learned as much as I possibly could about my own political ideology. But my role in this House is not only to represent that particular ideology; it's also to get out there on the doorsteps and meet with people, talk to them, and also listen to their perspective and, hopefully, be able to learn from that perspective as well."

Now, I've shared in the House before my cultural background, the fact that my family came to Canada fleeing violence from the September 11, 1973, military coup, and because of that, I had the honour and privilege, even though I came from that reality, that violence and was now here, of then learning and standing up for human rights and about the atrocities that were being committed all over Latin America at the time. I've spoken before of the discrimination that even my brother had to endure when we first came, because, of course, I came as a child – I only came as a two-year-old – and the fact is that I wasn't in school when my brother went. My older brother experienced discrimination at that point because we were the newest newcomers to Canada at the time, like many other newcomers have had the experience since.

Like I've mentioned before, the majority of Canadians and Albertans are very welcoming and very nice and always extend a hand, but it only takes one to create that doubt in one's mind if this is really home or not.

Now, I'm very happy that I've had the privilege to come from that reality, that refugee experience, and now stand here in this House and be able to come and share that refugee experience with the rest of Albertans as we continue to make legislation or, in this case, voice our concern with this particular legislation so that we can make sure that this bill actually goes to committee. That's what solidarity is about. When you have a certain perspective and you can see how your human rights have been trampled upon, when it comes to other people's human rights, it's not only sympathy that you have, but you actually empathize with that person because you've actually had to live an experience where you know – now, you're not living the same experience.

9:50

This is going back to the whole issue of privilege that I was talking about. We have the privilege of not having to live the experience of someone who identifies as LGBTQ-two-spirited. We have the privilege of not having to suffer the same discrimination while we are in public. But through other experiences we can gather that – and in my case it was racial discrimination. And because of that racial discrimination and the fact that I was a newcomer to Canada and my family all came as newcomers, having experienced that discrimination, I can only imagine the discrimination that people who identify as LGBTQ-two-spirited are going through, but at least I gather that they're going through it.

Therefore, it's a responsibility, when one has this privilege, to then make sure to extend through solidarity the fact that we need to make sure that all people that are suffering discrimination here in this province don't have to go through it. That's what this amendment is really about.

As I've explained before when getting up to speak to Bill 8, GSAs and QSAs are about creating safe spaces in our schools. Now, the school is a hub for the community, and many times what happens is that the school is a starting point from which information and education actually filter out into our communities. I see this all the time, and I'm sure that members on the other side of the House see it, too, when they go and visit the schools in their ridings. You have that opportunity to actually go into the schools and speak to the children, the students who are actually sitting in those schools, and learn what they're talking about.

I've had the opportunity to meet with so many students. You know, they're not students who actually identify as LGBTQ-two-spirited, but they get it. They get why GSAs and QSAs are necessary within our schools. I bet that if you go into any school right now, Madam Speaker, any school in this entire province right now, and you speak to students, they're going to share with you how aware they are about antibullying policies and how important it is to treat each other with respect and dignity, which is what GSAs and QSAs are all about, an opportunity for people who are questioning and are going through a process of coming out and identifying as LGBTQ-two-spirited to have that opportunity and have this safe space where they can have the support from their peers within their school so that they can share what they're going through and not have to fear being outed to their parents.

If someone is going through this process of questioning, the last thing that they're going to want to do is to share that with people who could potentially, as I said before, kick them out of the house, like the Member for Edmonton-Decore was sharing. He actually got a tweet from somebody, and I don't want to put words in his mouth, so I'm not even going to try to repeat what the tweet said because I can't remember. I just remember that it was horrendous. It was along the lines that a child would – oh. Now I remember. It was: I'd rather have a dead son than a gay son.

GSAs and QSAs would be weakened by Bill 8. Now, I know that the minister has stood in this House several times and has said the opposite. I respect the minister and the minister's opinion, where she's coming from, but in my humble opinion, I can't agree with that. In my very humble opinion, I cannot agree with it because I know that the legislation would actually weaken GSAs and QSAs. The fact that not all educational institutions across this province would actually have the responsibility of making sure that when students request a GSA or a QSA, they would actually have to implement it within their school. That's part of the problem here.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to rise in the Chamber today under 29(2)(a) and to respond to the member opposite, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, against this amendment. I must say that I am slightly disappointed when the member opposite asked for some leniency. I thought we were going to hear maybe another verse, another track from his poetry. My disappointment was furthered when the Member for Calgary-McCall started playing some music, and I thought we were going to hear a nice rendition of Jodeci or something. But I digress.

You know, we've talked a lot tonight about this amendment, and I need to speak out against it and speak in favour of Bill 8 because I do believe that Bill 8 is one that intends to protect students, keep them safe, and that is exactly what the Minister of Education has intended to do. It should not come as a surprise, Madam Speaker, with Bill 8, given that in our policy platform on two separate occasions, that I was able to come up with very quickly, one on page 48, it says:

- Education will be strengthened by working with parents, teachers, principals, and trustees to protect school choice, improve accountability, and deliver the best possible outcomes for our children.

And on page 60, in proclaiming the Education Act, 2012, to take effect on September 1, 2019:

- A UCP government will trust the hard work done by those who created the 2012 Education Act and proclaim that legislation, already passed by the Legislature.

There's been a lot of talk about the concern for bullying, and I wanted to maybe mention quickly the definition of bullying – I don't usually do this – and thought I'd read it out: the blustering, quarrelsome, overbearing person who habitually badgers and intimidates others. Oftentimes sitting in this House, listening to this debate, I find that we are getting just that from the members opposite. In particular, I remember hearing the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on June 12 say: I tune out sometimes because I don't agree. The purpose of this Chamber is to represent our constituents, not to bully each other or do as the member said. He said that he goes out and knocks on doors and listens to others' perspectives. Well, he has now contradicted himself.

Madam Speaker, I contend that the purpose of this bill is in fact to protect children, and we have also said that schools cannot disclose a student's membership in an inclusion group as there are student privacy considerations that trump other legislation. But the members opposite have been very creative with the things that they have said. If they spent as much time talking to constituents as they do in creating new names for the bills that we introduce in this Legislature – something like the pick-your-pockets bill, Bill Hate, or the bad-faith bargaining bill – they might actually listen to other constituents who actually don't agree with them, constituents like those in Cardston-Siksika; constituents who believe that parents, not legislators, know what's best for their kids; constituents that believe that our job as a government is also to pass legislation that keeps their kids safe. And kids need to feel safe in schools. That is paramount.

10:00

The legislation that we're debating today respects the hard work done by Albertans over the years of consultation, and I wanted to highlight that briefly, specifically the work that began in the mid-2000s to replace the outdated School Act, which has been in place since 1988. The '80s were great years, but it's time to replace the bill. The world and, you know, school officials and students along with the education system are changing, and we needed legislation that reflected that.

Though the Education Act never came into force after the 2015 election, it was our job to do just that, and we'll proclaim the Education Act of 2012 to ensure that kids are safe in schools, to ensure that they get the education that they deserve because, frankly, Madam Speaker, all kids deserve to go to school and get a world-class education in a safe environment.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment. I would very much like to see this bill be referred to committee for a number of reasons. I doubt, in my short 15 minutes, that I'll have a chance to elucidate all of them, but I will begin and see how far we get and try to add a bit more in our further discussions and further readings of the bill. I think there are a lot of complexities within this bill that have implications that are unrealized by the government side of the House. I'm very concerned about the unintended consequences of a bill of this nature.

I know that there has been a lot of focus on the GSAs – and I will get a chance to speak to that, hopefully tonight or, if not, the next time we get together to speak – but there's one part of the bill that I have previously asked some questions about and that I think it's very important that we get a chance to get an answer on, because I really haven't heard an answer at all to some of my concerns in this. It's because I haven't heard those answers that I really think we need to accept this amendment and refer it to committee, because we need to get the answers. To simply, you know, have serious concerns brought up by this side of the House and then just dismiss them and move on really is a betrayal of the concerns that our constituents bring forward. As a result, I'll take an opportunity to kind of address the issue again that I previously raised and talk about it a little bit further because I think it's a complex issue.

The last time I was up, I was speaking about the fact that there are a number of things happening at the same time in this bill, and it's the interaction of those things that becomes very problematic. Now, as had previously been mentioned by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who, as we all know, actually helped to write some of the education bills over the last number of years and has great, detailed information about the thinking that went into the construction of these bills, some of the things that she was concerned about hadn't been properly addressed, and some of the things that she's very concerned about continue to reside inside this bill.

One of them that I want to point out, the third point that she had mentioned, was that this bill in its present form will allow school boards to operate schools outside of their own jurisdictions. Now, she had a moment to speak to the fact that that's very problematic in the sense that it means that people who attend a particular school in a particular jurisdiction will not be able to vote for or vote out members of school boards, then, who have influence over their school, if that happens, which is truly an undermining of democracy. I mean, the right to representation is well known as the centre post of democracy, and the fact that we would cavalierly just throw that out without taking the time to recognize the implications of that is pretty dramatic, and I think we should be sitting down in sober second thought and having a conversation, you know, with people who are going to be influenced by this.

I want to address this in some particularity and talk about where I'm concerned about the potentiality for problems. I've had the very wonderful opportunity to speak very closely with First Nations across this province about some of their concerns around the school system and some of the things that they find problematic.

One of the things that has been addressed with me on a number of occasions is that if you live on-reserve, you are not able to vote in municipal elections because you're not considered part of the municipality. But we put our school board elections in the municipal elections. That means that not only are they not voting in the municipalities that they happen to live beside – that, as you know, is interesting because now we're saying that somebody can run a school board in a jurisdiction that's not theirs – but you can't vote for somebody who is outside of the jurisdiction. So you're doubling down on the problem that they've already articulated. It means that their kids are in schools that they have absolutely no input on in terms of the electoral process right now.

Now, you are doubling down on that in the sense that their kids will be in schools that may not even be run by the local municipality; that is, they had no vote so therefore no influence over the school from an electoral point of view. But they did have some influence by virtue of being part of the community and could talk to other members of the community and express their concerns and so on. Now if the school is being run by a jurisdiction far away, they don't even have that influence. They can't even talk to their neighbours. They can't actually address concerns they have either fundamentally through democracy or through relationship, and that means they're disenfranchised. What you're suggesting here is that people will be sending the kids to the school and not have any ability to control what happens in that school. This is a very serious problem for some.

Taking one particular example, when I was up in Beaver First Nation, I learned that the band office is on the south side of the major road, and on the north side of the major road is the school that all of the children go to. It's literally just across the street. They have serious problems as a result of that. One of the problems is that while a hundred per cent, and one should never say a hundred per cent, the vast majority of their students go to that school – in fact, they did tell me that the school population is over 80 per cent Beaver First Nation students – they are unable to vote for anybody on that school board. They have no control over what happens, and it's literally across the street, no farther than I am sitting across from the members of the government side of the House right now.

Now you're suggesting that a school board down in, let's say, Cardston-Siksika or somewhere else along the way can actually take on that school and turn that school into a charter school, which is one of the things that is being enhanced in this particular bill here, and make that charter school consistent with whatever belief system they have, whatever world view they have. In no way will these First Nation students have any ability to vote on any matters, to attend the school in any way and reflect their First Nation's concerns. It means that you could essentially have a school board in southern Alberta create a charter school in northern Alberta and functionally make the public schools around it become nonviable because the number of children that are in the charter school undermines the ability of the public schools nearby to stay open, because they don't have enough kids.

I know that's not a concern in a major urban area. There are always alternative schools maybe 15 or 20 minutes away or even an hour away. You can hop on a bus and get there. That's not a reality for Beaver First Nation. It's well over an hour's drive to the next major town or city, and if that school across the street, that's only a few, maybe a dozen yards away from their band council office, suddenly becomes a charter school, their children will then be attending a charter school because they have no other choice.

10:10

One of the things that we hear from the government side of the House all the time is that they'd like to increase choice, but in this case they're forcing people to attend a charter school because there is no choice. Now, I know that wasn't the intention. I don't think that they want to force all First Nations into schools against their will. We've been through the residential schools. We know that the outcome of that is devastating and terrible. But I think they don't realize that if you increase the charter schools and you allow somebody from another jurisdiction to be able to have control over it, you have no local input then. You cannot vote in the election, and you cannot go to the school and say, "I don't like what you're doing," because the charter school is following the world view of the community on the other end of the province. It's coming into the jurisdiction because it's trying to create a charter school that reflects their value system, not because it is responding to the values of the local community.

I think this is very problematic. I think it undermines the very nature of what we have done well in western democracies, and that is that we have reflected the needs of the local community and created opportunities for the average person to have influence over the institutions that govern their lives, and in this case it's the school board.

I'm very concerned that we have set this situation up and that we are not responding to it at all. What happens if a charter school undermines the viability of local schools? I don't have an answer for that. Nobody has stood up and responded to my questions as I asked these questions a few weeks ago. So I'm asking again. Of course, I know I won't get an answer, so what I'm asking, then, instead is: can we refer it to committee so I can ask the question? Maybe you have a reasonable answer. Maybe there's something I don't understand in terms of how you would respond to that dynamic that I've just outlined. If you do, I'd love to hear it.

I am more than willing to listen, to open my ears and hear what it is that you have to say about how you would respond to this kind of dynamic so that I can go back to the chief of the Beaver First Nation and say: "Look, you don't have to worry. You're going to have some control over what happens here. You're going to be able to have your values as a First Nations person reflected in the school system." I'd love to be able to do that. I'd love to give him assurance, because I can assure you that Chief Mercredi is very concerned about this and has addressed it with me on a number of occasions.

So I would like an opportunity for Chief Mercredi to come and speak to the members of this House as well, to come and sit at this committee and to talk about what it's like to have all of your kids go into a system that you have absolutely no input into, even when that system is literally across the street from your band office and the community, of course, all around the band office, and have an opportunity for him to share about the needs that he has to have a school that reflects First Nations beliefs, values, and traditions.

That's what I'd like to see, and I would love to have the opportunity. I will do the work. I will phone the First Nations chiefs and other members and say: "I'm inviting you down to committee. Come on down and tell us a little bit about what it's like and talk to us about how we can create a circumstance for you to be able to have input into the school system that almost all of your children go to, the school system in which your children at present constitute about 80 per cent of the children involved. I'm offering that. I'm offering to work with you to sit down . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) we must now proceed to Committee of the Whole to vote on the appropriation bills.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order. Pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) I must now put the following question. Does the committee approve the following bills: Bill 5, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019, and Bill 6, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019?

[Motion carried]

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) the committee shall now immediately rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Jones: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 5, Bill 6.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So carried.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading Bill 8 Education Amendment Act, 2019 (continued)

[Debate adjourned June 24: Mr. Feehan speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to finish my time and to talk a little bit more about some of the other issues that I think are very important with regard to this particular bill and why we'd like to have the referral.

I think I've articulated my concern around the school boards and parental choice that is being eliminated by this act, at least for First Nations people or, I imagine, for other small community members. I think the potential is there for real problems in those kind of smaller communities. I think it can be fixed, by the way. I mean, the hope in making the referral to the committee is that we would be able to look at those kinds of dynamics and look at the situation that I described coming up and eliminate that problem by going to the committee. Of course, we'd be doing it in relationship with the people who are most greatly affected, in this case the individuals from the First Nations and Métis settlements that I'm talking to. But, again, I'd be more than happy to make some phone calls to some of the smaller communities and invite them in.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? Sorry; 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford could speak a little bit around, you know, from his experience as a former Minister of Indigenous Relations around how our peoples found consultation in the past around these kinds of subjects. Did they feel that they were always fully consulted, or did they feel that they never were consulted? I was hoping – his experience having been the first minister to travel around to every single nation in the province, and some of the things that he might have heard around this subject.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much for the question from the MLA for Edmonton-Decore.

The issue of consultation actually speaks to kind of a larger problem, I think, that is expressed by the indigenous community here, that their experience with the school system is that they have had little to no involvement throughout the years. That has been a pretty deep frustration for them because for them it's not simply a matter of, you know, having a chance to have a voice in things. It's also attached to a traumatic history. The history of residential schools in this country is one of deep pain and trauma for the indigenous community.

10:20

The experience of having people with a particular world view open up schools in their community – and, of course, in those days it was a situation where that world view was such that it told the students that they, first of all, must come to the school. They had no choice, or an RCMP officer would show up at their door and take those children away. In fact, many of them talk about the day that their children were taken away from their homes and brought into these residential schools, where they had no choice as parents to speak to any aspect of it, and talk about living in a small community and seeing the float plane come in in early September and land on the shore and them all being required to walk their children out to the end of the dock and say goodbye to their as young as five-year-olds and six-year-olds and put them on a float plane and tell them: I will not see you again until next summer. Literally, you have children as young as five being separated from their parents at that tender age, being absent from their family homes for 10 months of the year.

Of course, what was worse about the residential schools – not that it needs to be any worse than being separated from your own family – but in addition to that was the fact that in the residential schools there was a particular world view which was very antagonistic to the indigenous world view, and that world view required a number of things to happen.

One is that children were brought into the schools, and they were stripped of all of their clothing. Anything that identified them as First Nations was taken away. Their hair was cut off because that was part of the indigenous world view but not part of this school system's world view. They were severely punished for speaking the language that they were raised with in their communities, and the punishment was severe. We are talking very serious consequences such as the beatings and so on, and all of those implications were terrible.

Now, of course, the trauma for First Nations goes even yet again beyond that because it wasn't simply a difference of two world views that were in collision and that weren't talking to each other and so on, which is probably more likely to be the thing that they would object to today, but in those days the trauma was much deeper. The reason why I'm speaking to it now is because that trauma really influences their feelings about not having control over the schools that their children are in now because in those days not only was it the beatings for speaking languages like Blackfoot or Cree or Dene or Nakota Sioux or any of the other languages; it was also that the children often experienced serious trauma leading even to death. So the amount of physical abuse and sexual abuse that occurred in those residential schools was very high.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. We will now seek speakers to the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I want to thank all of my hon. colleagues for their thoughtful interventions on this matter. It's clear from listening to the speeches of all of my friends here on this side that not only do we know a lot about the pitfalls of the Education Act, but we're able to articulate quite clearly a number of the concerns that our constituents have brought forward with respect to the proclamation of the amendments to this bill.

I want to share some personal stories, I guess, if I may, about why we would want to send this bill to committee, Madam Speaker. It's truly my belief that if we consult adequately, we will be able to change the hearts and minds of the very members who are proposing this bill in the first place, particularly with respect to the amendments around removing the protections for gay-straight alliances in our schools.

I want to share a couple of stories with the members of the House through you, Madam Speaker. When our government brought forward Bill 24 to create the protections that currently exist for gay-straight alliances in our schools, I had a mother and her son – I believe he was about 10 years old – who was home-schooled, come in to talk to me about their concerns around the bill. This was part of his education around provincial government. He was studying the grade 6 curriculum at the time. He was being home-schooled, so his mom, who was also his teacher, thought that it would be a good idea to come in to my office and talk to me about my role as an MLA and what we were up to at the Legislature. Then he would be able to express some of the concerns about legislation that was before the House at the time.

Of course, he had some concerns about Bill 24. You know, he asked me a simple question. He asked me why I thought it wasn't the right of parents to know whether or not their kids are in a gay-straight alliance. I looked at that little boy, and I told him that I know that his mom loved him very much and that I'm sure that regardless of what he did or said, he could count on his mother loving him and taking good care of him for as long as she needed to do that because he was lucky enough to grow up in a home where he was supported for being the person that he was and that most of us are fortunate enough to grow up in those kinds of situations. I said: but just a few blocks west of my constituency office there is the Youth Empowerment & Support Services building. It used to be called the youth emergency shelter. They've changed their name, Madam Speaker. I told him and his mother that if they were to go to the youth emergency shelter that day and ask the kids there how they ended up there, more than half of them would say that they had been kicked out of the house because their parents found out that they were gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transsexual.

When that young home-schooler heard that story, his eyes got as big as saucers, and his jaw dropped, and so did his mother's because neither of them had any idea that coming out as gay or being outed as gay was the leading cause of teenage homelessness in this city.

They had no idea. It was completely out of their realm of experience. They didn't know anybody who had gone through that. They had certainly never heard the stories before. Just by sharing that information with them, I think I moved them along the line of changing their minds around whether or not these protections for GSAs that were in Bill 24 were necessary. I can't say for sure, Madam Speaker. They didn't tell me that they were going to support my vote for Bill 24, but I could see on their faces that they were genuinely shocked by the story.

Certainly, if you go to the youth emergency shelter in my riding – and I would extend the invitation to all members here to come with me on a tour of the youth emergency shelter in my riding – you will hear these stories from the young people who have been kicked out of their houses by their parents because their parents found out that they were gay. Like the Member for Edmonton-Decore said, there are a shocking number of parents out there who would rather have a dead son than a gay son.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So these poor souls are left on the streets to fend for themselves and occasionally pop in to the youth emergency shelter to get a night out of the cold or a night out of the rain and a free meal and sent along their way, and simply because they are gay and their parents found out about it, these kids are often forced into a life of poverty. It's an experience that is so traumatic that it leads them down the path to drug addiction, Mr. Speaker, because being rejected for who you are is such a painful experience that these kids will do anything to numb the pain, including using drugs to kill the pain if only for a little while.

10:30

Of course, these poor young people have difficulty finding a job. It's awfully hard to get a job without a high school education, Mr. Speaker. You know, certainly, we know that the Member for Calgary-Varsity is keen to make sure that even if you do get a job as a young person, you certainly can't make a living at it. You can't support yourself from it. I'm disappointed that not only are we looking at a government who is forcing young people into homelessness, but we are also taking away their ability to fend for themselves by lowering the minimum wage to which they are entitled. So maybe by engaging with some of these young folks who find themselves at the youth emergency shelter, not only could we get the members opposite to have a change of heart with respect to the portions of this bill that take away the gay-straight alliance protections, but maybe we could have them have a change of heart around their minimum wage reductions as well.

Hope springs eternal, Mr. Speaker, and I am nothing if not a hopeful person. I am certainly, as many here, a big believer in salvation. Maybe by listening to the stories of these young people who are negatively impacted by this government's proposed policies, the members opposite will have a change of heart and take back, because it's not right that any person should be thrown out of their home and onto the streets into a life of drug addiction, abuse, being prone to trafficking, including sexual trafficking, just to make ends meet simply because they're gay.

You know, I have also heard from students at Hardisty school in my riding, Mr. Speaker. It may be of interest to note for many of the members here that Hardisty has a Christian education program. Hardisty also provides their students with a gay-straight alliance. When I was at the Hardisty school a couple of years ago talking about the provisions of Bill 24, I had a young girl in grade 9 get up and talk about how the gay-straight alliance saved her life. She was at that age where she was realizing that she was gay and was surrounded by a lot of negative thoughts, objections to her orientation. She didn't think that she would be able to make it, but she found friends and support in the gay-straight alliance in her school, and she credited that gay-straight alliance with saving her from suicide. She also said that it was her choice as to whether or not she came out as gay to her friends and her family and didn't want that choice taken away from her by the government. That protection that was offered to her as a member of a gay-straight alliance in her school was the key ingredient to saving that young woman's life.

So it's my hope that by being able to hear these stories, these very powerful stories, about how important the protections that currently exist for gay-straight alliances are for our students, the significant, horrible consequences of being outed to friends and family before you're ready, it will change the hearts and minds of the people here in this Chamber who are proposing these hateful amendments right now.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, from personal experience that there is a significant electoral price that will be paid if the members opposite refuse to back down from these proposed amendments. I know that from personal experience, because the reason I'm sitting here is largely because of the failure of my predecessor, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, David Dorward, to stand up for gay and lesbian students in his riding.

Just to remind everybody, in April 2014 before this House was a motion that a Liberal MLA brought forward calling on the government to protect GSAs into law. That motion was voted down by a majority of PC members but not all PC members. There were some PC members in the Edmonton area who voted in favour of the motion. I believe Dave Hancock was one of them. I would have to check. But one of them who didn't, Mr. Speaker, was David Dorward, the MLA for Edmonton-Gold Bar at the time. I can tell you that he received an earful from his constituents because he was so far out of step with where the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar were on the GSA issue that they sent him letters, they phoned his office, and they protested in front of his office. They gave him a very rough ride and eventually voted him out in 2015, in large part because they realized, through his vote against this motion, how significantly out of step with their values he was.

Now, did that give him pause to reflect? No, Mr. Speaker, it did not, because when these issues were before the Legislature during our term in government – of course, we were talking about the protections for GSAs. We were also talking about guidelines for making schools safe spaces, which included some discussion around washrooms. Of course, there were a lot of ridiculous things said by many people around the issue of washrooms. The former Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, even though he had been kicked out of office largely because of his refusal to stand up for gay and lesbian students in his riding, didn't pause and reflect to see whether or not his views were out of step with his constituents and insisted on making up stories around transgender people and their use of washrooms to sexually attack young children in schools. He claimed on Facebook to have personally known people who masqueraded as transgender individuals for the sole purpose of victimizing young children in schools.

Now, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that at the public forum that was held in Edmonton-Gold Bar during the 2019 election, Mr. Dorward received a big earful about that as well, about his history of failing to stand up for lesbian and gay students and his willingness to make up stories to victimize transgender people in defence of some imagined conspiracy to make schools safe havens for pedophiles. Young people, old people, people from all walks of life were at that forum, and they all gave him an earful about this. On election day, of course, he faced defeat again at the hands of the people of Edmonton-Gold Bar because he was so far out of step with their values.

So I urge the members opposite to reconsider this if not only for the lesbian and gay students but for their own electoral fates.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has risen.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nothing ceases to amaze me anymore when it comes to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and his comments in this place. His ridiculous behaviour is well known. I mean, you have had to call him out on it many times before. But to try to call out former members inside the Legislature who can't defend themselves inside this place is, quite frankly, a new low for the hon. member.

But what is even worse is to listen to the hon. member continue to misrepresent what Bill 8 actually is. I had the privilege of being the executive director at the Mustard Seed street ministry inside Calgary for many years. My father, of course, was the founder, as you know, Mr. Speaker, of the Mustard Seed, and I had the privilege of growing up, as did the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein, with the very kids that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is speaking about. What he is correct about is that a tremendous amount of youth and adolescent homelessness comes as a result of kids that are in situations where, quite frankly, they have not been able to live at home anymore because they are LGBTQ, which is completely inappropriate.

10:40

I can remember standing at the door of the Mustard Seed in Calgary, right in the main Centre Street doors, in my younger days, when I still worked downtown in Calgary on the front lines of the streets, with young people who have been in that exact situation. Unfortunately, sometimes parents don't treat their kids right. Sometimes parents go way too far and hurt their children and put them in horrific situations where they end up living on the streets, having to resort to substances to try to deal with their pain, as the hon. member said.

What the people in those situations are not served by is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar continuing to misrepresent the facts when it comes to Bill 8. The reality, as we have said in this House many times, Mr. Speaker, is that Alberta will continue to have the strongest statutory requirements when it comes to GSAs in the entire country. That's not what the hon. member is speaking about. In fact, he is doing a disservice to people in those situations by continuing to tell them that they will not have GSAs or that GSAs will not be protected inside this province. It's disappointing, and it takes away from the important issue that should be discussed, obviously, in the context of reality. The situation that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has presented to this House as far as the past that has happened in this Chamber is also unfortunate. The former Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar voted for Bill 10, as did almost every member of both legacy caucuses that make up the current government, something that the hon. member either continues to forget or deliberately forgets. It's disappointing, and he does a disservice to the very people that he pretends to help.

The reality is that he's not here to help those people. Instead, he's here to use them as political props. He's here to play a political game. He's here to provide misinformation to them. It's shameful, Mr. Speaker. That hon. member should be ashamed of himself. He is absolutely acting shameful in this place over and over as he continues to be part of a caucus that is focused on Team Angry, that is focused on fear and smear. That member in particular, who is one of the biggest fear-and-smear members of that entire caucus, has had a record in this Chamber of having to apologize over and over for his behaviour. Why any Albertan would take what he says seriously would be beyond me because he continues to stand inside this House, misrepresent the facts, mislead people, LGBTQ adolescents, who do not need to be misled, who need to be helped and supported, not have a member of the Legislature continue to stand in this place and mislead and misrepresent facts inside this Chamber. That hon. member should be ashamed of himself. He does a disservice to the opposition.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Point of Order

Accusations against a Member

Mr. Bilous: Standing Order 23 (h), (i), and (j), Mr. Speaker. You've ruled on this a number of times. The Government House Leader keeps saying that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has misled and misleads the House. You've been very clear in your rulings that members may speak to the government or the opposition but not to individual members accusing them of misleading the House, so I call upon the Government House Leader to apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: I might just suggest that perhaps the hon. Opposition House Leader would wait for me to recognize him before he speaks, but either way, I'm happy to hear from the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: I was going to encourage you to do so.

Mr. Jason Nixon: The reality is that the hon. member belongs to an opposition caucus who continues to misrepresent the facts inside this Chamber, and he should be ashamed of that. He should be ashamed of participating in that, Mr. Speaker. He should be, quite frankly, ashamed. I know I would be ashamed if I was him.

The Speaker: I appreciate the Government House Leader's comments. I just might suggest that when members of the House directly speak to members, saying that he should be ashamed, that he should do that, that she should do this, that she is doing that, the likelihood that it's going to create disorder inside the Chamber increases, increases, increases after each accusation that is so close to the line of what's appropriate and what isn't appropriate inside the House that inevitably we end up here.

In the 30 seconds or so that the member has left, I encourage him to govern himself accordingly.

Debate Continued

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, it could create disorder, obviously. I respect that point. If you're the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you're great at creating disorder. I will close with my opening remarks, and that is that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar should be ashamed of his behaviour in this Assembly because it's unbecoming of the opposition.

The Speaker: Anyone else wishing to speak to the bill, Bill 8, on the amendment? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has risen.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to this amendment. It's funny. I said to myself the other day that the next time we debate Bill 8, or Bill Hate, I wasn't going to speak to the GSA aspect of it because there are so many other pieces that I could talk about given my background in education. I thought, you know, just because I'm the ML-gay in this House, that doesn't mean I need to speak to all the gay things. Then the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud spoke, and she did very well. I can't compete with that. Truly, my mind, I guess, my heart keeps going back to GSAs. It's a battle that we're fighting, and it's an important one despite some of the rhetoric that we're hearing. I'm going to return to GSAs. I'm going to speak to them a little bit.

I want to share more about sort of the personal side of things. We know that mental health, in particular, is a huge issue for many in the LGBTQ2S community, folks of all ages. I know this first-hand. I know what it's like to struggle. I know what it's like when you feel like you can't talk to anyone. I know what it's like when you feel like you have to pretend that you're someone else. I came out as an adult after I'd been a teacher in rural Alberta. I was in my late 20s, in fact. I came out late, and it was really, really hard. I can't – I can't – honestly imagine what it's like for some of these young people and the experiences that they're going through. We saw last week hundreds and hundreds of kids, parents, teachers, allies all out in the rain to stand in support of GSAs and the people that they care about.

GSAs, we know, offer a safe space for kids. They offer a place to talk about these things, to hear others' stories of struggle and of success as well, to talk about their worries if they do come out, you know, whether it be with their parents, their faith community, whatever it might be, and to talk about mental health and to talk about strategies to address any issues that any of them might be experiencing.

Just this month the Trevor Project, which is a suicide prevention and crisis intervention organization for LGBTQ youth, released a report addressing the mental health of queer young adults. These are American stats – I'll tell you that – but the results are pretty horrifying. Nearly 1 in 5 LGBTQ youth aged 13 to 24 and 1 in 3 transgender and nonbinary young people in the same age group attempted suicide in the past 12 months. Approximately 39 per cent of LGBTQ youth surveyed had seriously considered suicide in the past year. As Scott Fenwick pointed out in a recent article in the Edmonton Journal, "the truth is [quite] simple," and it's quite clear. "GSAs reduce teen suicide" for both LGBTQ folks and their straight counterparts.

A 2014 University of British Columbia study found that among Canadian high schools that had a GSA, the odds of suicidal thoughts among sexual minority students were cut by more than half. Further – and this is fascinating – straight boys in schools with GSAs were also half as likely to attempt suicide. Researchers believe that this is because homophobic bullying is used by boys to sort of perpetuate and reinforce masculine behaviour and status, so having GSAs combats that.

You know what? I saw this first-hand as a teacher in rural Alberta. I know I've shared this before. I've shared my own guilt and my own, you know, shame in not calling out what I saw were homophobic actions and behaviours. There was just such a culture of homophobia and of shaming it and of calling people names, and it was so entrenched at some of the schools that I taught at out in rural Alberta. Again, that just shows how critical GSAs can be in combating this.

10:50

Stats from the same project, the Trevor Project in the United States, show that two-thirds of LGBTQ youth reported that someone had attempted to convince them to change their sexual orientation or gender identity, and 71 per cent of respondents – again, this is very recent data – said that they had experienced discrimination because of their orientation or identity. They point out in this article that it is important to note that LGBTQ youth are not at higher risk of suicide just simply because they are LGBTQ. They are at a higher risk because they face harmful rejection and discrimination from friends, families, and communities, which can make them feel like their lives are worth less than their straight or cisgendered peers.

This is why, you know, we need to offer that space in schools, that free space, where students can access it without having to communicate it with their parents, where they can go to an administrator and won't have to worry about delay, delay, delay. As we know, any sort of delay could mean a young person's life when you're struggling that seriously. GSAs offer youth just that. They offer that idea that they know that they're not alone. So let us consider mental health as a paramount consideration as we tackle this issue. We keep hearing that these protections are the strongest and that we're going to continue to be a leader. But what are the motivations behind these changes, then? If things are fine as they are, if the protections were the strongest, then why bother changing? Why introduce this at all?

Last week I had asked the Education minister who she was consulting on this bill other than groups like Parents for Choice in Education, who have been known to have espoused anti-LGBTQ views. The script was then going after me, asking for me to retract my statement. Of course, I won't. You know, the minister herself hosted an event with this organization last year, and I haven't seen a shift in their attitudes or in their beliefs. So I ask: what is she hearing from groups like those?

We've heard things like this fear of the gay agenda. You know, I could tell you a little bit about my gay agenda. It's one I'm quite proud of. I get up in the morning. I drink some coffee. I go to work. I fight for the constituents of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I come home. Sometimes I mow my lawn, not often enough. Sometimes I clean my house, also not often enough. These are all parts of my grand gay agenda, and I am surrounded by friends in my neighbourhood, in my community, who are married, who are raising kids. They're doing all the same things that our straight friends are. If that's a gay agenda, then, yes, we are very much guilty of that.

You know, I've shared a lot of personal stories here, and I've got more. I've had a lot of young people reach out to me. In some cases they have allowed me to share their stories publicly. In other cases I won't share, but I'll hold those stories. I'll take them to heart, and I'll take them seriously because they keep me motivated to continue fighting here in this House and beyond. So I want to share a story that a young person shared with me just last week. I'm not going to share his name, but I do have permission to share it with you. He says the following:

So growing up I moved around a lot from town to town, during which time I was struggling to discover my identity. At the time (around age 14-15) I only knew that I wasn't completely into or attracted to what family, school, or community told me I should be, and there was no queer representation in my small town. It wasn't until I was in high school in [my town – I won't name it] that I discovered that I identified as homosexual. Unfortunately for me that school and town environment was highly homophobic and embedded in abusive conservative Christian values. I truly did not feel like I belonged and for a long while actually felt that there was something wrong with me, as homophobic slurs and insults were the norm with students, teachers, and parents. I remember waiting until I graduated and left for university here in Edmonton until I came out, to make sure I was safe first to do so.

He said:

It wasn't until university did I discover that GSAs and queer culture were a thing, and many of my ... peers told me stories about the work their GSAs did to support other queer folk and raise awareness. I remember feeling incredibly let down that I wasn't given the opportunity to feel safe and welcomed growing up in school. So instead, I spent 2-3 years in university to volunteer for LGBTQ+ support centers and groups to learn more and give back to those who were in similar situations as I was. Many stories I heard were either about how folks' GSAs were so supportive of their journeys or how, like me, a lack of GSA or any queer representation was truly oppressive and, in some cases, fatal. One thing was clear: the presence of queer representation created an environment of safety and belonging. If anything, stories told to me showed that GSAs are a huge part of representation.

He continues:

Fast forward to today, I am thankful and lucky that I was able to discover my own identity and am now in a place where I feel safe to belong. I run my own business which I make my mission to be as queer safe and inclusive as possible ... and I'm happy to be able to hold safe spaces for my queer friends who need a zone to exist. But at the same time, I'm aware of what's happening politically. Queer kids' lives are being put on the line by a government who calls us "whatevers." I've got homeless youth who come around talking about how their wages are being cut for working while being in school. And students, parents, queer communities, and allies are marching in opposition to the changes [that this government] are making that will put youth lives at risk. It's not right.

He says:

It's a scary time to be queer at this moment, and we are fighting hard to change that, but seeing leaders like yourself standing up for our queer kids and communities is inspiring and it shows that we haven't been forgotten about.

And he says:

Keep fighting that good fight ... [and you're giving us] hope that we have the right to be safe and feel like we belong.

You know, his story is the story of many. I can tell you that I'm not exaggerating when I say that I've had a lot – a lot – of folks reach out to me on Facebook, on Instagram, on Twitter, in person at events. I know I'm not alone. I know that my colleagues have heard from many people as well. The Member for Lethbridge-West was at Lethbridge pride this weekend, and she said that she had hundreds of people speak to her and express their concerns but also their support for the work that we are doing. I was in Red Deer this past weekend, and I had a number of people come up to me with their concerns as well. One woman from a rural community shared with me that as a queer woman she's worried for herself, for her community, and for her family.

I don't think that we can minimize these experiences. We're talking about a lot of young people. We're talking about a lot of kids, a lot of families, and a lot of folks who are worried and who are affected by the possible changes that this government might make.

Now, again, I've got a lot of stories, because I've shared mine a few times in this House already, and I think it's important that folks in this Chamber realize that while we're talking about a minority, we're talking about a pretty significant minority. As I've said, we've heard from a lot of youth, for sure, but I've also heard from a lot of teachers. As a teacher myself I take teachers' professional judgment seriously, and I take their concerns seriously when I hear from teachers who say things like that they're worried their administration will dither if asked to create a GSA.

Keep in mind that we've got a lot of schools who are doing incredible things across this province. We've got a lot of schools that have really strong GSAs, QSAs that have been in place for a long time. But we've got other schools. Like I said, I taught in parts of rural Alberta, where I know there's work to be done, where I know there are kids currently who don't feel safe. They don't feel safe at school, they don't feel safe at home, they may not feel safe in their broader community, and that's a worry for me.

What I would like to do is share the story of another young person. I actually spoke with this young person not too long ago as well, and he actually shared his story more publicly. He, Ben Angus, shared it in the Red Deer Advocate. I'm not going to read his whole story because I actually think some other folks in the House have already shared this. What I found interesting about his story is that he talks about his experience in a Catholic high school, and this is the concern that I've touched on a few times. He notes:

I approached my school's administration in hopes of starting a GSA. In response, I was told that if the school were to tell students "of that lifestyle" ("that lifestyle" meaning being queer) that it was OK to live the way they do, but they were not accepted at home and were to self-harm because of it, the burden would rest on my shoulders.

As he says:

This is an absurd burden to place on anyone, let alone a 17-year old who had only recently come to terms with his sexuality.

Now, I'm going to – I see that my time is going to run out.

11:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen under 29(2)(a) to make a brief question or comment.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for her words but, more importantly, her advocacy. It is at a level that's absolutely stunning and something that I certainly aspire to. I know that this amendment is very, very important, and I was hoping that she might be willing to continue to explain why it is we need to move this to committee.

Member Irwin: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Decore. I'll finish with just sharing this young person, Ben's, concern.

As I started to say there, it's an absolutely absurd burden to put on a young person, that he would be responsible for any reaction to a GSA being instilled in the school. Now, what he says on Bill 8 – he actually gives a really good summary of it.

This is done by not guaranteeing the usage of the words "gay" and "queer," and forcing vulnerable students to have to appeal to the school board . . .

Put simply, this is . . . extremely problematic.

He says that he tried to fight for a GSA and that it led him to being outed to the school's administrative team before he had the opportunity to tell his own family. As he points out:

This was all legal and perfectly acceptable before [Bill 24 had passed] . . .

Those protections are so important: students need to know they won't have to fight to protect their own privacy.

The point is that there's still very much that concerns. I know there have been conversations around the privacy legislation, FOIP and PIPA. Again, we've got examples of schools – and I know there were examples when the former Education minister spoke with schools – where students didn't feel safe with their administration, and they were very much concerned about being outed with some teachers as well. Again, this is not to smear. I was a teacher. I was an administrator. I get it fully, and I get that often you're put in compromising situations, but there need to be extremely clear guidelines in place. I've heard my colleagues speak to some of the intricacies around the privacy legislation and whatnot. It's complicated. It's complex. For any teacher or administrator working day to day, that's a lot for them to try to navigate. I worry that Bill 8 won't be clear enough to protect our young people.

To get back to the member's question about why we need to amend this and move this to committee, I think that will give an opportunity for us to delve more deeply into some of these really important conversations around privacy, around potential outing of students. I'm still concerned about the removal of the immediacy clause. As I said, I think that in some cases you may have school administrators who aren't dithering on purpose, they're not delaying on purpose, but they're trying to maybe, again, navigate the legislation and figure out how they can do this to still protect young people. Without that immediacy clause, we're talking about lives potentially being at risk here. That's not hyperbole at all.

I can tell you that I think it's really important that we take an evidence-based approach to this as well. We've brought in some of the stats. Myself and other members in this House have shared data that says that we're talking about significant issues with mental health. We know what happens, and we've got young people who have shared their stories in writing and have told me that we can share them publicly, that their lives are at risk here. I don't know what else we need to do. If it's not the countless stories of young people, I don't know what else we need to present to the folks opposite to convince them that this legislation needs to be further studied and needs to be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities so that we can investigate some of these things a little bit more closely.

I do and I want to believe and I know that people in this Chamber have good intentions and have good hearts. I think we just need to take a step back because, as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud talked about as well, there's a lot more to this than just the GSA piece. This is obviously something that is impactful for me, and it's something that makes me emotional, but I could go on ad nauseam on some of the other pieces around here, you know, whether it be the concerns for school boards about implementation because even if this bill . . . [Member Irwin's speaking time expired] I'll continue at another time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are back on the amendment. Anyone wishing to speak to the amendment? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has risen to join the debate.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise in support of this amendment referring the bill to the Committee on Families and Communities. Certainly, I know that we have heard from the minister herself, saying originally that Bill 8 had the best protections in Canada for LGBTQ kids. That has been revised as time has gone on. Now it's sort of among the strongest protections. But if this bill was referred to the committee, which I am highly recommending – I am on that committee along with many of my learned colleagues – we would be able to do some deep dive into it and be able to look at all of what is needed, indeed. It seems like the intent is that they do want to have the strongest protections, which, of course, we did have under our government, and we would like to, you know, help that process to continue, so I think that this referral makes a lot of sense.

Mr. Speaker, there are other aspects besides the significant focus on GSAs, which we all, certainly, on this side of the House believe are very important. Also, there has been a tremendous lack of consultation. School boards really haven't been part of this process in developing it, and really they should be a part of it. We know that with our Bill 24 we provided more than six months' notice before its coming into force and for some parts of it more than a year of lead time. You know, I find this quite ironic because that was something that was so important to the Official Opposition when we were government. Consultation was de rigueur. It was so important that that be done, and if we dared move without a very robust consultation process, that was reason for condemnation.

Unfortunately, now that they are in government, they don't seem to have the integrity of their previous words. I think that's a concern, and I think it is a concern for the community, too, because they are just ramming this bill through. Referring it to committee would give us additional time to actually look more deeply at it and to see, maybe, some of the issues that it does bring up and that are, you know, needing to be addressed because I think it does put specifically LGBTQ students in a precarious situation.

We know that, certainly, many of us in this Assembly are parents. I know that, myself, I have three sons, and I care deeply for them, as parents do. But sometimes there are parents who are misguided. I must say from a professional stance also – I have been a social worker for 30 years – that I have worked with families who have significant challenges. Those challenges prevent the parents from really making good choices on behalf of their children, and I don't feel that it's because they are cruel or malicious. I feel that sometimes they have their own very significant mental health or addiction issues. They could have had their own experience of abuse. It could be exacerbated by poverty. There are so many things that get in the way, so these are often multiproblem families. As the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said, children oftentimes who are homeless may identify as part of the LGBTQ community.

11:10

I guess I just wanted to be on record saying that these GSAs are really oftentimes very important safe havens for children who cannot safely be who they are in their family system, and that is such a tragedy. But when our government brought in Bill 24, that changed things significantly. I'm very concerned with how this new Bill 8 is actually now making it, you know, not support kids not as much, because if a student does ask for the creation of a GSA, there are really no timelines for implementation. You know, the principal doesn't have to – I mean, people have used the word “dither” – move forward on that. Having some time, a mechanism so that they have to respond in a timely manner, I think is very important because these kids need that support now. They probably needed it yesterday or the day before that. I'm very concerned that now it can kind of be put off for some time.

You know, when my middle son was in elementary, when he was probably in grade 4 or so, he was bullied. I didn't know that he was being bullied. He was sort of a shy, timid young fellow, and I didn't really find out about this until a couple of years later; therefore, I couldn't have been there to support him. I know how much that has affected him in his life, even to this day, and he's a 20-year-old young man. I can only imagine if he would have had to deal with his sexual identity being not part of sort of the dominant sexual identity, a heterosexual male, and how much that would have exacerbated things for him.

I'm speaking already of, you know, a young fellow who had been bullied, but for someone who is struggling to find their place in the world, who doesn't have these kinds of supports, it is, I think, just the wrong way to go. Therefore, referring this to committee would actually give us some opportunity to review it further and look at how we can make this stronger. It seems like that was the intent of the minister. She very clearly did proclaim wanting it to be the strongest in Canada. The committee could certainly do that work to support that.

My colleagues have spoken for some time about the efficacy of gay-straight alliances and referred to various research. I'm just going to refer to some further research that does talk about it and just the benefits for the whole school system. You know, it's really quite a tremendous shift that happens when gay-straight alliances have been established. Oftentimes it is a cumulative effect. When they first come in, people are getting used to it, but when they've been in for one, two, three years, the schools have found that the whole community becomes inclusive, much more acceptance for all.

I'm just going to refer to some research here from B.C. It says: we know that LGBTQ students are at a higher risk for suicide in part because they are more often targeted for bullying and discrimination, but heterosexual students can also be the target of homophobic bullying; when policies and supportive programs like GSAs are in place long enough to change the environment of the school, it's better for students' mental health no matter what their orientation. So it's beneficial for all. It just shows how important these are and how important it is to have them established over a period of time.

I just, again, would like to support acceptance of this amendment so that we can make sure that the legislation for GSAs in our province is the strongest in the country, like it is, actually, now and was brought in by our government.

I also want to talk a little bit about a young man that I know. He's in his mid-20s, maybe going towards his later 20s now. When he went to school, there were no gay-straight alliances in his high school or junior high. Now this young man has an undergraduate degree. He has a responsible job, he takes care of himself and pays all his own bills, and he has lots of great relationships with many people. But he's never come out to his parents. He's never told them that he is a gay man. He's still afraid despite, you know, the maturity of age. So I just would like the members to think about how students are in junior high and high school, how terrifying it would be for them. It isn't part of sort of straight culture. If you have parents, likely they're straight because, obviously, they have a heterosexual relationship if they're your biological parents. So even older adults are afraid to come out despite having many other successes and supports.

This is something that is just really sort of a humanitarian thing to do: to make sure that students are protected, that GSAs can be created quickly to support, and that the whole school, both gay and straight kids, can be included in that. All benefit because there's a much more broad acceptance of difference, and difference is okay. We don't all have to be the same. I think that this is, you know, a very important piece of legislation and something that we shouldn't be cavalier about. It is something that will protect children and will protect lives, and we've talked about that for such a long time.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I guess I'm just focusing on sort of two aspects of it. One of the aspects is something that I feel like the opposition lectured me on substantially when our government was in power. It's really incumbent on them to be responsible and to be consulting with the community, with school boards, with teachers, and with students themselves so that they're getting a good understanding of the decisions that they're making when they're creating this legislation, Bill 8.

We also know that, really, the last consultations on the Education Act were back in 2012, so half of the trustees currently elected were not elected then, were not part of that consultation, and don't know anything about it. So it's just good process. It's really supporting people, to be able to have their input and to make good decisions, you know, barring that we go back completely to the drawing board on this bill, that it be referred to the Families and Communities Committee so that we can look at making sure that it has those best protections, that we understand members on both sides of the House want in this bill. I'm just cautioning the government to be careful about moving forward too rapidly on something that is really a very serious matter and that makes a huge difference in children's lives. We want to make sure.

Even though we know that parents, you know, love their children, they sometimes make poor decisions regarding them. As I've said previously, as a social worker I know that first-hand. It doesn't mean that those parents are cruel. It often means that those parents aren't very healthy themselves and that they need assistance and support. Children live in environments that may be unhealthy. This haven of a GSA in a school, especially for a son or daughter, a child, who is struggling with their sexual identity, which is extremely confusing for them and hard for them to understand, would go a long way to supporting them.

11:20

I mean, many of the hon. members on this side have spoken about the very tragic situation of a student contemplating taking their own life or actually taking their life. We know that children who are part of GSAs, who have the support in their school environment even if they don't in their family system, do oftentimes make better choices in terms of their own mental health and caring for themselves and don't do extreme things because they feel so desperate that they don't know what to do. They feel strange. They don't fit in anywhere. That's what a GSA can provide to them, acceptance in those places.

So, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen to ask a brief question or comment under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member's comments. I hope to tap in a little bit to her profession as a social worker when we're talking about consulting fully with all our stakeholders, including our students. When we look at potentially bypassing that, not giving the largest stakeholders, the members, the kids, that partake in these GSAs, when we deny that, what kind of impact could that have on things like their mental health going forward? What kind of example is that setting for them, that as legislators we would be clearly failing at?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much. Certainly, when policy is created, you know, we as legislators come together, and as we've talked about previously, sometimes there's consultation; sometimes there's not. But what happens oftentimes when there's not is that there may be unintended consequences. Those unintended consequences aren't necessarily something that the legislators, obviously, because they're unintended, meant to create by putting forward the legislation, but indeed they're doing it anyway because they're not doing the full job of proper development of legislation. So it's not only the people who will benefit from GSAs, like the students themselves, but it also should be the teachers, the principals, the school boards, certainly families, parents, professionals in the area. It should be a robust consultation because then you get the best policy.

You know, earlier today, Mr. Speaker, we had the passage of a bill, a private member's bill. Certainly, I'm on the private members' committee with other members, and one of the things that our caucus wanted to do was to do some consultation on that bill. We wanted to make sure of some things that we might just innocently not know, because we're not necessarily experts in that area or we don't have the lived experience of people who will be impacted by this, and unfortunately we were sort of voted down in that committee, and there couldn't be any consultation.

Then there was an amendment today that actually was from some stakeholders that, you know, members on the other side did speak to, and then they decided to amend it themselves. So good for them. But it just kind of made me scratch my head because I thought: well, isn't that what we wanted? We do want to talk to those people who have that lived experience, who have to implement it, who are the professionals who are working in that area.

You know, it is just kind of part of a healthy process in development. Sometimes it's not just when it's created, but it should also be along the time of implementation because we may find out some things that nobody realized along the way. It's kind of like a living policy so that we want it to most effectively serve, you know, students, for example, in this case.

I think that point was made, was sort of proven earlier today, when the government did decide to accept some feedback from stakeholders. I think that when we start making assumptions about what's right or what's wrong or what we should do, we are doing a disservice. You know, we're not really doing the job of our position. If we think that just because we have an experience, just because we're elected officials, that transcends everyone's experience, I think that we're sadly mistaken. I feel like that can cause grave issues for people who are impacted most directly by that policy.

Certainly, those sitting at the table: are those people around that table who are giving feedback a diverse group of people, or do they all have the same backgrounds? We know that that makes a significant difference, Mr. Speaker, in terms of how good and how appropriate policy is. I know, you know, from my many years of living, that a lot of times I didn't get to be at the table and that people made decisions for me that often were not beneficial.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone else wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Government House Leader although I'm not sure that you haven't already spoken to the amendment.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I checked already with the Clerk, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Wonderful. That was very wise of you.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Just thought I'd get ahead of that for you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Always happy to help.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the amendment, which is a referral amendment, I believe, to send Bill 8 to committee. Mr. Speaker, it's interesting to listen to some of the comments that we've heard tonight. You know, the reality is that Bill 8 is a piece of legislation that does not refer to the issue that the hon. members of the opposition want to continue to spend their time talking about rather than the content of Bill 8.

I'd like to talk briefly, in my time on this referral amendment, about some of the comments that were made by the Official Opposition in regard to GSAs and also in regard to some of the comments that have been made about consultation and the need for this legislation to go to committee. There have been a lot of comments made, Mr. Speaker, by the opposition, today and other days during debate on Bill 8, in regard to the fact that somehow Alberta will no longer have protection for GSAs if this bill was to pass.

Now, the hon. the Education minister has done a great job presenting to this House why that, in fact, is not true, as have many other members of the government in question period and members of the government caucus who have spoken about this bill during debate. Now, for her trouble in expressing that, she's been continually bullied by the Official Opposition, which is disappointing. But that's the approach that they seem to want to take. The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that if they continue to do this, they continue to lose the trust of Albertans. What they're talking about, in fact, is just not reality when it comes to this legislation.

You're probably interested to know, Mr. Speaker, what steps will be taken in regard to GSAs if Bill 8 was to pass in this Assembly sometime in the near future, and I think it's important that we state this for the record.

Step 1: a student or students will ask a staff member at a school to start a GSA. That will still take place.

Step 2: the principal will permit the GSA. That will still take place.

Step 3: the principal designates a staff liaison to support the GSA.

Step 4: the students – this is very important because the hon. members in the opposition continue to either not understand or the opposition continues to misrepresent the facts on this very important issue – select a group name. Very different, Mr. Speaker, than what the opposition continues to say in this place.

Step 5: if the principal cannot find a staff liaison, the principal informs both the board and the minister, and then the minister appoints a responsible adult.

Step 6: as a student-led group the students, with support from the staff liaison, plan the next steps such as meeting dates, times, and activities.

Mr. Speaker, six steps, and then a GSA is formed, with no difference between how it is today and how it will be after Bill 8 is passed in this House if that is what this Assembly decides.

I understand if the members opposite – actually, Mr. Speaker, I don't understand anymore why the members opposite continue to have trouble understanding this. This has been discussed inside this House significantly. The Education Act is clear. The legislation guarantees that students are entitled to create groups, including GSAs and QSAs.

11:30

That is a direct contradiction of what the Official Opposition continues to present inside this place, Mr. Speaker. I find it quite appalling, the approach that the Official Opposition has chosen to take with this legislation, refusing to even discuss this important piece of legislation in this House, instead focusing on something that is not reality and implying to this Chamber and, worse yet, implying to LGBTQ kids and adolescents and children that are in schools that GSAs will not still, in fact, be in place after Bill 8 passes. That is not a reality, and it does an extreme disservice to students and to people that are counting on GSAs going forward. I find it quite disappointing, and I'm sure that students will, when they realize after Bill 8 is passed that nothing has changed, be quite disappointed in the Official Opposition's behaviour.

Now, in addition to that, there have been a lot of points brought up by the Official Opposition in regard to consultation and that somehow this was not spoken about. I have read the platform inside this Chamber during other portions of Bill 8 debate when it comes to that very fact, and as you know, Mr. Speaker, because I'm sure you had to campaign on it in your own constituency, our platform is very, very clear that we would be going forward with the Education Act. That is not a secret. That is a pretty broad form of consultation that ended up with the people of Alberta speaking in record numbers on April 16, giving a clear mandate to the United Conservative Party, who is now government, to go forward with their plan on Bill 8, which is exactly what the Education minister is doing.

Mr. Speaker, I know the Education minister. She's not going to blink just because the Official Opposition bullies her and comes to this place and misrepresents facts. That's not what's going to happen to the Education minister or anybody in this government. The people of Alberta spoke on April 16 and sent us here with clear instructions on how to proceed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do understand that the Official Opposition continues to not want to accept the judgment that Albertans cast on them on April 16, which was a clear – you know, clearly, they fired them, overwhelmingly. I know that in constituencies like yours and mine people lined up for hours just to be able to cast their votes on the very first day. In my constituency I had people as far away as the United States, who were working, drop their work just to come back in person to vote, travelling all that way because they wanted to make sure their ballots were counted on election night. They did not want to risk it being counted in advance polls or advance ballots. That's how much they wanted to fire this former government.

Now, granted, in my constituency 82 per cent of people voted for the Conservative Party, and only 18 per cent voted for other parties. Mr. Speaker, yours was similar. I think you may have been about 60 or so votes behind the great riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, but it was pretty clear in the places . . .

The Speaker: Who's counting?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah. Who's counting? Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

. . . that we represented that there was a clear mandate from Albertans to be able to proceed with this. That's not just in rural Alberta, where we come from; it was in rural central Alberta, I should say. It was in northern Alberta. It was in Calgary. It was in the greater Edmonton area, where there were clear instructions that the NDP had to go.

It was interesting. I talked a little bit earlier in my other speech tonight on Bill 8, Mr. Speaker, I mean under 29(2)(a), about the reaction to the Sundre parade this year. As you know, the Sundre parade is one of my favourite days of the year to be able to travel through the community of Sundre and enjoy the rodeo and our pancake breakfasts and see all my friends and neighbours. But it was pretty clear, even at the parade as the crowds kept telling us, me and the hon. minister of agriculture, who was travelling with me through the Sundre parade this weekend, to continue to implement the agenda that we promised, to continue to not let the NDP bully us. They made sure it was clear that they were with us a hundred per cent, as they were with us on April 16. That's the mandate that we'll bring through this Assembly despite the fact that the NDP continues to be Team Angry and angry at Albertans as a result of that or, more importantly, as the Premier has rightly pointed out, to have no humility, to continue to not understand the mistakes that they made.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview laughing, Mr. Speaker. That's exactly what I'm referring to, just no recognition of the fact that when they were in government, they made so many terrible mistakes that they went on their way to become the only one-term government in the history of this province. The only one-term government in the history of this province: I don't think that's something that I would be very, very proud of. I think, at its core, that comes down to the fact that they continue, because of the behaviour that you see now and even when they were in government, to completely ignore the people of Alberta, to come to this Chamber and misrepresent facts then as government, now as an opposition, and expect Albertans to fall for it. Well, they didn't fall for it on April 16, and they're not falling for it now. The Official Opposition should try to do a little better. I know they're struggling with it, but I wish them the very best as they go through that process, because the Official Opposition has an important job. It ain't this, though.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It's not to come to this place and misrepresent facts and to scare LGBTQ children and youth that they're not going to have their GSAs, which is all that this opposition has spent their time doing.

Madam Speaker, good to see you tonight.

As I said earlier, it's shameful, and unfortunately it's what it appears the Official Opposition has become inside this province. That's disappointing, but our government will head a different way.

With that said, Madam Speaker, I will move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The House stands adjourned – oh.

Mr. Jason Nixon: One more step to go, Madam Speaker. I appreciate your enthusiasm, though. With that, I will move to adjourn the Legislature until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:36 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

Bill 5    Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019 ..... 1135, 1153

Bill 6    Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019 ..... 1136, 1153

Third Reading

Bill 10   Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2019 ..... 1138

Bill 7    Municipal Government (Property Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019 ..... 1138

Second Reading

Bill 8    Education Amendment Act, 2019..... 1145, 1153

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday afternoon, June 25, 2019

Day 19

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henda (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreeschen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretaries

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, June 25, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead our province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon I would like to welcome back a very familiar and friendly face to the Chamber, the former Member for Calgary-Bow, Deborah Drever.

Hon. members, joining us today from the constituency of St. Albert, also in the Speaker's gallery are Olga Barceló and Henry Wearmouth.

Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, this afternoon we have, joining us from the constituency of Leduc-Beaumont, l'école Champs Vallée school. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

I would like to remind all hon. members that if they have guests joining us, it is a requirement for them to be in by 11:30; however, if you're the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon, perhaps a small extension will be allowed today. Joining him in the gallery are His Worship Michael Doerksen, Bart Guyon, Dan and Brenda Madlung, and Manny Deol. Please receive the warm welcome of this House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Camrose Purple Martin Festival

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend I had the pleasure of giving greetings on behalf of the Premier and the government of Alberta to the 10th annual Purple Martin Festival in Camrose. The festival is a yearly wildlife festival dedicated to learning about species of birds that live in our province, with a special focus on the purple martin. It's a type of swallow native to North and South America. Some of the highlights of this year's festival included advice on backyard birding and presentations on bird migration and the co-evolution of brood parasites and their hosts, which were respectively presented by Dr. Lu Carbyn, a retired researcher at the federal government's department of environment, and Dr. Dorothy Hill, an associate professor at Mount Royal University. The festival is a family-friendly affair, so there were some great activities for the kids: crafts, a search for aquatic invertebrates, and a presentation by the Beaverhill Bird Observatory.

Of course, who would be able to forget the main attraction, the purple martins themselves? Purple martins are a species of North American swallow, and they're on the larger end of the sparrow species, usually reaching up to 20 centimetres in length. Now, the biggest reason for the Purple Martin Festival stems from the fact that east of the Rocky Mountains they don't nest in nests that they build themselves or cavities made by other wildlife; they nearly exclusively build their nests in birdhouses made by humans. This has led to the people of Camrose organizing the festival in order to welcome the returning purple martins as they migrate back north to Alberta. Once a year they gather as a community to build, renovate, and repair homes for these birds.

Mr. Speaker, this is such a wonderful community event, focused on helping Alberta's diverse wildlife, and, just as importantly, an event that is truly unique to Camrose. I'm honoured to have been able to attend.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Government and Official Opposition Policies

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the weekend the NDP held its spring Provincial Council in Red Deer. This was an opportunity for members and delegates from across Alberta to gather together to talk about victory in 2023 and pass policy resolutions with a vision to lead this province forward. I was proud to stand with the hundreds of delegates to discuss important policy issues such as climate change, adaptation strategies, diversifying Alberta's energy sector, seniors' aging-in-place supports, and child care spaces in schools.

This is quite a contrast to what we've seen in this House from this government. During this session we've seen this government give tax giveaways to wealthy corporations while leaving school boards forced to cut millions from school budgets. We've seen this government ram through their bad-faith bargaining bill, giving themselves the power to rip up contracts of 180,000 public-sector workers. To add insult to injury, the Premier handed out earplugs during debate in a complete affront to teachers, nurses, paramedics, and more. We've seen an unprecedented attack on LGBTQ2S students with the dangerous Bill Hate, an act designed to destroy gay-straight alliances and roll back protections for students.

But there's more. The UCP's pick-your-pockets bill, Bill 2, allows employers to force workers to take banked overtime at straight time instead of time and a half, meaning that the average oil and gas worker could lose up to $320 a week while the average construction worker could lose up to $200 a week. What's worse is that this government limited debate on Bill 9, imposing antidemocratic restraints on this House. We now find ourselves with a government working for the few, not the many.

I am proud to stand on this side of the House as a member of the Alberta NDP, fighting in the strongest Official Opposition in the province's history. We will continue to fight for the things that matter most to Albertans: a diversified economy, high-quality health care, more and safer schools, and, without question, a steadfast respect for the rights of all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Vegreville Economic Development

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many are aware, the case processing centre in the town of Vegreville was closed down by the federal government. It's often hard for those that live in larger centres to understand the impact to a town the size of Vegreville, so I wish to comment on this.

The workers at the centre represented almost 10 per cent of the town's workforce – in perspective, losing 280 jobs in Vegreville is equivalent to losing 35,000 jobs in Edmonton – the loss of $15 million in GDP, $14.5 million in labour income, and $1.2 million in municipal revenues annually.

In addition to this, there have been a significant number of residential listings due to people looking to leave town for employment. This has caused a drop in the market values of homes by approximately 25 to 30 per cent, in addition to the previous 17 per cent decrease in market values from 2014 to 2017.

The town of Vegreville will not be held down. We are working on new opportunities. The town has come up with plans to put in an industrial and commercial park. This requires infrastructure such as waterlines, sewers, roads, telecoms, and other needed amenities to attract private investment in the area.

The town is already hearing from a hemp processing company that would like to build a facility in the town as well. Construction alone will create jobs and positions at the facility once it's built. Value-added companies that produce hemp products are likely to be attracted to the area due to the close access to the hemp facility and rail lines.

The Prime Minister and his Liberal government and the previous provincial government both failed my riding when they closed down the claims processing centre without the appropriate socioeconomic consultations and consideration.

The situation is urgent, and I look forward to working with my UCP government and colleagues on a solution that can help the town of Vegreville through this difficult economic time.

Thank you.

1:40

Alberta Prosperity

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I believe in Albertan exceptionalism. I believe that Alberta is the greatest province in Canada fundamentally because of our free-enterprise values. Albertans know from our history that excessive government is the enemy of excellence and empathy. They know that limited government is the ally of prosperity, achievement, and compassion. Alberta is exceptional because of the values that we hold dear. We believe that faith, family, and freedom must always be our guiding stars for they show us the way, and they give us hope.

Mr. Speaker, as we move forward, the former government's tenure will be viewed as an historical anomaly. The previous government's socialist philosophy of rule by an elite few over the many goes against Alberta's traditional principles of self-rule and representative government. In 2019 Albertans decided decisively to renew our commitment to the Albertan creed of free markets, free enterprise, and individual freedom.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta must rediscover that the key to greater economic growth, opportunity, and prosperity for all is to unbridle the energies of free enterprise. The Albertan miracle, which the rest of Canada and the world have long admired, has historically been a triumph of free people and their private institutions, not government. It has been individual workers, businesspeople, families, and religious and civil society organizations, not government, that have been primarily responsible for creating the greatest opportunity society in Canada: Alberta.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I declare the following: may we as Albertans never forget our proud origins, never fail to dream heroic dreams, and never lose our God-given optimism, always believing, as our ancestors did, that for Alberta there shall always be a bright new dawn ahead.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

EPCOR Gold Bar Waste-water Treatment Plant

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar who banded together and formed the Save Gold Bar Park Alliance. This group formed to fight back against EPCOR's plan to expand the parking lot at the Gold Bar waste-water treatment plant into Gold Bar park, degrading the quality of the park and damaging some of the multiuse trails that many people enjoy. The good news is that last Monday the good citizens of the Save Gold Bar Park Alliance were successful in achieving their original objective when EPCOR announced that they were abandoning their plan to expand the parking lot.

The bad news is that in their work fighting the expansion of the parking lot, the alliance uncovered EPCOR's plan to expand the volume of waste water that the treatment plant would process by rerouting a planned sewage trunk line from the capital waste-water treatment plant to the Gold Bar plant. Expanding the sewage treatment plant at Gold Bar would be a mistake. The site is too close to residences and has historically had problems with emissions, that would only get worse if the volume of sewage treated were to grow significantly. Moreover, the facility may have to expand its footprint to accommodate the extra waste, putting precious river valley parkland at risk.

Building the sewage trunk line to the capital waste-water treatment plant just makes sense. It's appropriately sited far away from residential zones, and there's enough room to expand the facility to accommodate the anticipated sewage volume growth that the city expects. As the environmental regulator responsible for the plant this government should listen to the citizens of Gold Bar's objections to expanding this site.

I'm proud of the citizens of the Save Gold Bar Park Alliance. I support their work, and on their behalf I urge the members of the government to commit to refusing to grant the provincial permits needed to expand the Gold Bar waste-water treatment plant.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Health Care System

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Alberta's health system has enjoyed one of its most uninterrupted periods of stability under the NDP's reign": the words of Keith Gerein, health reporter and columnist with the Edmonton Journal. He's right. Our government gave Alberta a welcome respite from years of constant chaos overseen by Conservatives.

They spent years tinkering with our health care system with no clear focus or intention other than increasing privatization. From Premier Klein's reckless cuts, firing thousands of workers, blowing up hospitals, and musing about a third way, to Minister Liepert dissolving nine health care regions in 24 hours to create Alberta Health Services, and risky experiments with private surgery bailed out on the public dime, over 10 years Health had six ministers, none lasting a full term. AHS had six CEOs, the first a symbol of Conservative arrogance as he shunned the press in favour of eating his cookie. The board, fired by Minister Horne for refusing an impossible order, was replaced by a single administrator.

Spending, Mr. Speaker. Health spending was a roller coaster. Oil is up? Well, spending, too: 4 per cent, 6 per cent, 7 per cent. Oil is down? Time for cuts. To quote columnist Don Braid, "Staffing and programs were flatlined, resuscitated and then put through the same survival cycle again. It was chaotic for doctors, nurses and too often for patients."

Mr. Speaker, our government restored balance. As Don Braid noted, we "calmed down the system, made significant improvements and provided stability for health planners, professionals and workers.” Stable, predictable funding, with annual growth capped at 3 per cent, increased community-focused funding for capital infrastructure, a new AHS board, and we negotiated new agreements with physicians for pay and contracts at no increased cost. Now this government seems intent on bringing chaos back: freezing spending as population grows, breaking contracts with front-line workers, cancelling needed infrastructure with no alternate plan, and promising to further privatize care.

Mr. Speaker, we’ve been down this road before. We know where it ends: higher costs, longer wait times, poorer care. Albertans deserve better, and that’s what we will fight for.

Introduction of Guests

(continued)

The Speaker: I beg your indulgence for just moments. I neglected to recognize a group of students, student leaders who were on my list – my apologies; it was my mistake – from all across this great province of ours who have come to Edmonton to chat with members of the government and the opposition. I invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Member Ceci: I’d like to table five copies of a letter addressed to my office and the Member for Calgary-Lougheed talking about their upsetness around the Earpluggate scandal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. One is a letter from one of my constituents, who refers to Earpluggate as appalling; the second one is concerned with the ramming through of Bill 9; and a third tabling is from the Edmonton Journal regarding Saturday’s letters. There are six letters in total that say that handing out earplugs was arrogant. I’m tabling those with the requisite number of copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two tablings: additional letters of support for private member’s Bill 201 from the father of 12-year-old Asher in Airdrie, who suffers from serious allergies, and from a family friend of 12-year-old Asher in support of Bill 201.

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-West has a tabling.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of correspondence from a constituent who is a health care worker with AHS. She finds Bill 9 shows a deep level of disrespect for health care workers.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table today the requisite copies of three different e-mails from constituents referring to the deplorable and disrespectful action of UCP MLAs, referring to the Premier’s actions to distribute earplugs as immature, and talking about how the actions of the Premier by handing out earplugs was an affront to democracy and the traditions of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to rise and table the requisite number of copies in relation to a letter from a constituent who’s quite concerned about this government’s display of contempt and arrogance related to Earpluggate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for St. Albert is rising.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of an article by Jeffrey Kluger, who is editor-at-large for Time magazine: Why We Keep Ignoring Even the Most Dire Climate Change Warnings.

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-West has an additional tabling?

Ms Phillips: Yes. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I have a copy of an e-mail from a constituent of Eckville, Alberta, who finds, on the actions in this House around distribution of earplugs, that it would be nice if elected officials would stop tripping over a bar that is very low.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently, while speaking in this Chamber, I referenced a cartoon storybook I read as a young child called Top Cat, which I was reminded of when the Premier handed out earplugs to his caucus so they wouldn’t suffer the indignity of listening to the duly elected Official Opposition and the thousands of constituents who expect their voices to be heard and respected. I do have five copies of portions of the book to table. I did actually create a sixth copy so that the children of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, including your own, might enjoy the wonderful world of Top Cat.

The Speaker: I appreciate the tabling, hon. member. I think we saw a number of your colleagues display a very succinct way to table similar information. I’d encourage you to do so in the future.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oil Transportation by Rail

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Northern Gateway: stopped in its tracks by Stephen Harper’s unwillingness to consult. Energy East: Harper’s appointees, again, botched that one. TMX: now finally approved but won’t reach tidewater for years. Those who believe Conservatives get pipelines built to tidewater need only look at the last 60 years to see that that’s not true. And now we have a Premier who’s refusing to move oil by rail for one simple reason, ideology. To the Premier: is it some sort of Conservative tradition to keep our oil away from market?

Mr. Kenney: Now, Mr. Speaker, I’ve got to admit that nothing makes me happier than having the socialists ask us about pipelines. That’s the leader of a party, half of whose caucus used to habitually attend antipipeline, anti oil and gas rallies saying: no more dirty Alberta oil. That’s the leader of a party that opposed Northern Gateway, that opposed Keystone XL, that surrendered to the Trudeau government’s killing of Energy East, surrendered to the Trudeau government’s vetoing of Northern Gateway, and did precisely nothing to protest the Obama administration’s veto of Keystone XL. This government, however, is standing up for pipelines.

Ms Notley: Well, that was highly predictable, Mr. Speaker.

But contrary to the Premier's desire to find efficiencies with the facts, our crude-by-rail plan would have given Albertans a $2 billion profit, more takeaway capacity, and more jobs, starting next week. We know line 3 and KXL are delayed, and even with TMX we risk extended curtailment and more jobs lost. To the Premier. This Monday our rail plan would have moved tens of thousands of barrels. Instead, we will move zero. Can you tell Albertans just how many jobs you sacrificed for politics?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, they haven't learned a thing. They signed a desperate last-minute deal, that sold Alberta taxpayers down the river, to do what? To buy a headline, to do something that the private sector was perfectly prepared to do itself at its expense. The NDP, because they've always opposed our energy industry – that's really been their raison d'être in modern Alberta political history, to oppose what they've always called the corrosive influence of, quote, big oil in Alberta politics. We, on the other hand, understand the integral role that industry plays in our province's economy and in our prosperity.

Ms Notley: Well, I'm not surprised that the Premier wants to continue to tell tales and, more importantly, to deflect, because he has no answer, Mr. Speaker. He's caught between his ridiculous campaign promise to rip up the oil-by-rail contract on the one hand and protecting jobs on the other. Now, perhaps a few tweets from his energy war room will create some jobs, but I doubt it. To the Premier: if you won't move oil by rail, how will you do it? Send it in airplanes? Drive it to the coast in your big blue truck? Albertans deserve more than talking points, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: They certainly do, Mr. Speaker, which is why Albertans gave this government the largest democratic mandate in history to undo the massive damage done to our jobs and prosperity by the high-tax, reckless policies of the NDP. Their surrender, their actual asking of the federal government to veto Northern Gateway, is part of what created this situation. I'll tell you. On crude by rail, we know and believe that more oil should be moved by rail at the risk and cost of the private sector, not by costing taxpayers billions of dollars we can't afford.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: Clearly, the Premier is more interested in political talking points than the facts or getting the job done when it comes to education.

Education Funding

Ms Notley: So let's turn to another file they're bungling, education. Now, it's been over two weeks since the Minister of Finance claimed that enrolment would be funded, but school boards that we spoke to as recently as this morning say that they've received nothing in writing. To the Premier: what's the problem here? Are your ministers of Finance and Education still fighting over who's in charge, or are they just unable to connect the printer, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, our commitment on education funding is absolutely clear. In the campaign we committed to maintaining or increasing funding levels for education. We have since confirmed that there will be an increase in funding for enrolment growth in the upcoming school year. Of course, the minister is communicating with stakeholders, including school boards. I'll tell you one thing: if we had allowed the NDP a chance to drive us to a $100 billion debt, that's really what would jeopardize the future of funding high-quality public education.

Ms Notley: Back to the topic at hand, Mr. Speaker, I have a document I've mentioned which I will table today. It's one example of the standard notice that is sent out to boards, typically in April. It includes helpful bits of information like the exact projected enrolment, specific base funding for early childhood, grades 1 to 9, and high school. It also includes specific grants for things like ESL, inclusive education, and school nutrition. To the Premier: to date no board has received this critical information. Why is his minister failing to do her job?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education is doing a fantastic job balancing the need to provide adequate support for what is one of the most expensive public education systems in Canada while also working with school boards and in the future ensuring that we can do all of this within the bounds of fiscal responsibility. In April there was an election. This government has had eight weeks to get on top of the fiscal mess left behind by the NDP. The minister is communicating with school boards, and there is certainty that they will receive enrolment growth funding for the upcoming year.

Ms Notley: Once again, Mr. Speaker, on the question of the minister's competence, the Premier is economizing on the facts. School boards should not have to rely on reading answers in question period to learn about next year's funding. This minister's incompetence means that positions are currently being cut, hiring is delayed, and kids' education is hurt, yet it persists. To the Premier: is the real problem here that the enrolment funding promise is as reliable as this Premier's word on legislating social issues, cutting overtime, ripping up contracts, or earplugs?

Mr. Kenney: The real problem here, Mr. Speaker, is an NDP that's angry with Alberta voters for repudiating them. You know, I see here an interview that the Leader of the Opposition did with the National Post a couple of days ago, in which she is queried about what mistakes the NDP may have made that led to their historic repudiation as the first and only ever one-term government in Alberta history. [interjection] You know what? The leader of the NDP, who is impolitely heckling me, could not identify a single mistake made by the NDP, proving that they still haven't learned their lesson. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. We will have order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Holiday Pay and the Minimum Wage for Youth

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, Charles Dickens wrote, "For it is good to be children sometimes, and never better than at Christmas." But then Dickens didn't live in the UCP's Alberta, where mom and dad could be made to work the holiday without any extra compensation or time off. And the children will be working, too, but for less money than the adults doing the exact same job. To the Premier. Your proposed reforms to Alberta's labour laws will only make life harder for Alberta families. Why are you being such a Scrooge?

Mr. Kenney: Well, it didn't take long, Mr. Speaker, for the NDP smear machine to accuse us of creating a Dickensian society here. You know what? If the NDP had a tiny patina of humility, they would stand up and acknowledge and apologize for the reckless economic policies that left nearly 200,000 Albertans jobless, that drove down average family incomes by 6 per cent, that shrunk our economy by 4 per cent over four years. They would apologize for the worst economic and fiscal record in Alberta history.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The UCP treat the first half of Dickens' novel A Christmas Carol like a how-to guide on labour policy. They're stripping Albertans of holiday pay and youth of fair wages. To the Premier: won't you acknowledge that stealing holidays and fair youth wages is just greedy and will do little to improve the economy? Do we really want to wait and see if Ebenezer's ghost comes knocking on your door?

Mr. Kenney: I will acknowledge that none of that is even remotely true, Mr. Speaker. I will acknowledge that this government was elected with a historic mandate to get Alberta back to work and to undo the deep damage caused by reckless NDP economic and tax policies. That's exactly what we're doing. The NDP was perfectly satisfied to drive tens of thousands of young people out of work, moving from the minimum wage to no wage. [interjections] We're more ambitious for our young people. We want them to find that first job that can help prepare them for a lifetime of success. That's why we're focused on job creation for Albertans, especially young Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will have order when the government is answering questions.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, A Christmas Carol was fiction, but this Premier's plans for causing working Albertans pain are very real. Today I was proud to stand with three of many businesses who've stood up for fair wages for our youth, and I know there are many businesses who will continue to actually provide holiday pay. To the Premier. This really is your last chance. Will you put a halt to gutting youth wages? Do you really want the damage caused by your picking the pockets of youth workers to be something that haunts you for a long, long time?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, you would think that after their repudiation by Alberta voters the NDP would be haunted – haunted – by the 30,000 young Albertans looking for work who cannot find jobs; haunted by the fact that the youth unemployment rate is twice as high as the general unemployment rate; haunted by the fact that they drove us to the highest level of unemployment in Canada for most of their mandate. But we're going to exercise the ghosts of bad economic policy by the NDP by getting Albertans back to work with our job-creation tax cut, our youth job-creation strategy, and our cutting red tape. We're going to get Alberta back on track.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has a question.

Medical Laboratory Services in Edmonton

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Repeatedly the Minister of Health has stood in this House and claimed that I was misrepresenting the Health Quality Council of Alberta in stating that they support a new consolidated clinical lab hub for Edmonton and northern Alberta. Well, last week Andrew Neuner, CEO of the HQCA, spoke with CBC and told them that the evidence supporting the need for a superlab in Edmonton still stands. To the minister:

there it is, straight from the HQCA. Will you now admit you've been getting it wrong, or will you simply put in your earplugs and double down on your short-sighted campaign promise?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, it's time for the NDP to start being honest with Albertans about what those two reports from the Health Quality Council actually say. There is in those reports information that says that we do need to invest in lab infrastructure here in Alberta, something they failed to do because they were waiting. They were ragging the puck so they could use that opportunity to try and nationalize private partners in health care. It's a shame that they tried to do that. It's a shame that they're not being honest with Albertans about what's said in those reports. They never said to have a megalab to try and replace private partners and, honestly, to remove jobs from the member's own riding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quotes from the CEO. Mr. Neuner went on to say that their recommendation to bring lab services under a single public-sector platform is still valid and that he respects the government's need to balance priorities and funding but that it doesn't change the evidence. He pointed to outdated equipment, inconsistent information systems, and reporting protocols and said that consolidating lab services would increase efficiency, allow for faster test results, and provide better control over public policy. To the minister. The need is clear; the solution is, too. Why do you insist that you know better than the HQCA?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, again we see the NDP failing to be honest with Albertans with what's in that report. Again we see the NDP misrepresenting facts to Albertans about the state of affairs here in health care in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, the two reports – there are two of them – of the HQCA never said to replace private partners in health care with this megalab. It never said to have it on that spot, on that site, with that size of laboratory infrastructure. It's time for the NDP to start being honest with Albertans with what's in that report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I am quoting the CEO of the HQCA.

Now, yesterday morning on Danielle Smith's radio show the minister stated that he doesn't know why the Health Sciences Association of Alberta disagrees with his decision to cancel the lab hub, that he believes they're not considering the best interest of patients. Now, I've had conversations, perhaps unlike the minister, with lab technicians and technologists who have repeatedly expressed concern that outdated equipment and facilities are jeopardizing patient care. To the minister: are you really trying to suggest that front-line health care workers don't care about patients? Why would you make such a ridiculous and disruptive claim?

Mr. Shandro: Again we see the NDP, actually, Mr. Speaker, admitting to Albertans that throughout their four years they did not invest in lab infrastructure in this province. They rag the puck to be able to try and use this as an opportunity to nationalize DynaLife. It's a shame. That's not what we're going to do. We're going to do what's in the best interests of patients.

The Speaker: The Member for Livingstone-Macleod is rising to ask a question.

Electricity Market Review

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Historically Alberta's competitive market for electricity has kept prices low and encouraged investment. However, the previous government has made costly changes to the system, costing taxpayers and consumers billions of dollars. For decades Alberta's competitive market for electricity encouraged investment. We need a system that will encourage investment but will still meet the best interests of Albertans. My constituents were deeply concerned to hear about all of the problems and particularly the costs associated with these contracts. Albertans expect better from their leaders. Can the minister tell us how much the Alberta . . .

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's ideological meddling with the electricity system cost our province, taxpayers, and consumers nearly $2 billion. The PPA contracts, the power purchase contracts, that were in place prior to 2015 had a clause that allowed electricity generators to get out of the contract if the government changed the rules to their detriment, which the NDP did, and that led to a multibillion-dollar mishandling of the electricity sector.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a sustainable solution is desperately needed and given that this solution comes in the form of a long-term viable market for all Albertans and given that our United Conservative government was elected on a strong mandate from Albertans to once again make Alberta open for business, to the minister: what further actions need to be taken to correct the mistakes of the previous government to ensure that Albertans are getting fair prices and not paying for these mistakes with their tax dollars?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's mishandling of the electricity system involved cancellation of contracts, court cases, bungling and mishandling of the return of the contracts, higher electricity costs, subsidies, resignation of the entire Balancing Pool. We have an election campaign platform commitment of a 90-day review of the capacity market, which we launched two weeks ago, and with that, we are going to ask Albertans the best way forward.

Mr. Reid: Given that the renewable energy program is now a series of costly subsidies that Albertans are now paying the price for and given that our United Conservative government campaigned on the promise to ensure that Alberta's electricity market is fair and affordable and given that our government will always do what is in the best interest of Albertans, to the minister: can you update my constituents on what steps you are taking to address the previous policies that may not be in the best interest of Albertans?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, our election platform was clear that we would end costly subsidies after the renewable energy program, round 3. Last week I sent a letter to the AESO informing them that we will not be proceeding with REP 4. We are in favour and we welcome market-driven solutions for renewables like wind, solar, and hydro, but they must be able to compete on a market basis.

2:10

Solar Energy Use

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, our NDP government was proud to provide incentives to bring investment to the renewable energy sector that didn't cost taxpayers any money at the industrial scale. Included among those was the residential and commercial solar programs, which offered rebates on installation costs for homes and business solar projects and led to our solar industry growing by an incredible 500 per cent. But now it seems that the sun is setting on solar in Alberta, with this government cancelling the program. To the minister: if you're so intent on bringing investment to this province, why are you cancelling the very program that does just that?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, subsidies that didn't cost the taxpayers any money? It just shows that the NDP continue to not understand what has gone wrong and why they are the only one-term government in the history of this province. They brought in the largest tax increase in the history of this province, the carbon tax, which I'm proud this government has now gotten rid of. They brought in nothing but economic pain and no environmental gain for the people of this province. Again, to the hon. members, it's time to examine what has gone wrong and what they did wrong and apologize to Albertans for it.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, our solar rebate program was so popular that even Andrew Scheer agrees with it.

Given that these jobs are now stalled, with the president of Great Canadian Solar telling CBC last week, quote: we can't look at hiring right now, whether it's engineering, installation, sales, support staff – what happens to those jobs? To the minister: what is happening to those jobs? Are you so intent on cancelling every initiative that our government started that you're willing to throw people out of work just to make a point?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, nobody in this government will be lectured to by that hon. member about jobs when he was part of a government that oversaw something like 200,000 people being out of work in this province.

In regard to Andrew Scheer, I'm happy to report that our colleagues federally in the CPC also have a climate change policy that does not include a carbon tax, Mr. Speaker, because they recognize that a carbon tax is all economic pain and no environmental gain. [interjections] I understand that the NDP, as they heckle me right now, are still struggling to understand why Albertans are so angry with them, but they fired them on April 16.

Mr. Schmidt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are embracing solar energy, Canadians like Andrew Scheer, with solar panels popping up on homes and businesses across the province and given that the town of Raymond has put solar panels on almost all municipally owned buildings and is the first town in Canada, possibly North America, to be electrically net zero, will the minister admit that the province of Alberta is behind the times when it comes to solar energy?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this government has no concerns with solar energy; in fact, we encourage people to look at solar options. What the difference is between this government and the previous NDP government is that we're not going to use taxpayers' dollars to subsidize the solar industry. [interjection]

I know I can hear the former Premier heckling right now because she's extraordinarily frustrated because Albertans fired her on April 16 largely because they brought in a carbon tax, which was all economic pain and no environmental gain and disproportionately punished people like fixed-income seniors and the vulnerable, homeless shelters, food banks, and on and on, Mr. Speaker. So very disappointing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Technology and Entrepreneurship Educational Curricula

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The world is changing, and we need to change with it to maintain our competitive advantage. Alberta is ranked third in the world for artificial intelligence and machine learning, and we have a vibrant and diverse tech sector. To attract investment, we need to make sure that Alberta is home to a highly skilled and technologically literate workforce. To the Minister of Education: how exactly does your needless delay on a new Alberta curriculum help prepare our students for these high-tech jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Oh, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very important that as we look to the future, it's a priority for us to ensure that we have a skilled and educated workforce that will help us meet the demands of a fast-paced and changing environment. We recognize this as a priority, and within the Ministry of Advanced Education we'll be looking to expand the apprenticeship model of education and have that applied to areas such as coding and green technologies, areas and industries that are in demand, so that we can ensure that we are ahead of the curve in ensuring that we have the labour force that we need.

Mr. Dang: That has nothing to do with IT. Zero.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think everyone can hear you in the middle of a question when the Speaker is on his feet.

I might just ask all members to keep their comments to themselves.

Mr. Bilous: Hopefully, everyone had their plugs in. That might have been clocked at 101 decibels, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the curriculum needs to include coding, entrepreneurship, and foundational skills so students will be able to compete for technology jobs and given that students need to start learning these skills now, not years from now, and given that Alberta's postsecondary institutions are at the leading edge of graduating students ready to make their mark in digital industries, to the Minister of Education: will the minister commit to ensuring that coding and entrepreneurship are added immediately to the curriculum, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education is rising.

Mr. Nicolaides: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, as I just mentioned, looking at applying the apprenticeship model, specifically in areas of coding, is something that our government is working towards. We're also working to ensure that we can get more students from the K to 12 curriculum to pursue vocational educational opportunities and help them to enter the skilled trades. That includes looking at building NAIT collegiate to foster a labour force that will help us address the labour demands not just of today but of tomorrow. Our government is being proactive, and we're taking steps to ensure that that'll be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll start off by saying that this is going to the Minister of Education. Given that some of Alberta's curriculum is over 30 years old and given that industry players do not need to wait for our classrooms to catch up to their workforce needs when they can simply move to other labour markets, to the Minister of Education: given that the Premier himself promised during the recent election that his education platform would create, quote, a workforce that's ready for the future – forgive me. This is to the Premier: does your workforce for the future involve Commodore 64s?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education has risen.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's incredibly important that we evaluate, of course, the labour market needs and impacts of degree programs and of educational opportunities. We recognize that that's important. We want to ensure that when our students are moving through K to 12 and entering into postsecondary, they have a good sense and a good understanding of what the labour market needs are and what the labour market impacts are of the programs that they're seeking to enter. We believe it's important to provide that information and clarity to our students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Driver's Licence Road Tests

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some time has passed now, giving our ministers time to settle into their new roles. The previous government made significant changes to the scheduling of road tests. Rural communities such as mine in the Camrose constituency are particularly negatively impacted as scheduled testers do not honour their scheduled appointments, leaving those who have scheduled their drivers' tests in a situation where they have taken time off work for the appointment. Many also drive long distances. Can the Minister of Transportation please give this House an update on the status of this inefficient system?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct. On March 1 of this year the NDP government blew up the driver examiner system at the start of the busiest time of the year. That's why we're working quickly to clean up the mess the NDP left in this file. We've hired extra examiners. There are more than 140 on the job now. By the end of this week there should be over 150, which puts us essentially at full strength. We're working hard. I encourage Albertans to keep calling to get their tests. We'll start catching up now that we have re-created the labour force to do this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you so much, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans are not able to take scheduled road tests, will the minister consider returning to the previous system whereby local testers are scheduled, returning to a more efficient privatized system whereby travel of testers does not cut into time which can be better used testing rather than driving to or from testing destinations?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

2:20

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We recognize that the previous government rushed the implementation of this system, causing months of delays during the peak season. To answer the question, we will not redisrupt the market in the middle of the main part of the season. We'll be speaking now with the driver examiners, registries, and other stakeholders to determine next steps. In the meantime, our focus is on clearing the NDP backlog and ensuring that Albertans have timely access to the current system, which the NDP messed up on March 1.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. My final question is to the same minister. Given that residents who live in my constituency of Camrose have expressed concern regarding the inefficiencies in our revised system, can you please explain to this House what Albertans can expect from this newly elected government as it pertains to scheduling road tests?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government will do our best to keep cleaning up the mess the NDP has caused on this file. We're working quickly to ensure that the applicants have timely and reliable access to drivers' exams. As I said, we've hired extra examiners and added weekends and Saturday bookings to help clear the backlog. By mid-July Albertans should be able to book a test as much as 90 days in advance and, equally important, they shouldn't have to wait as long to get the test if they're in a hurry. Every class of licence was in a mess. We're cleaning it up, and it's taking some time.

Minister of Finance

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, Albertans expect public policy to be developed in a manner that adheres to conflict-of-interest legislation, so why is the Minister of Finance listed as a director of a corporation that provides "oversight for the ministry" of the Peace River Bible Institute?"

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to answer that question, I resigned as a director earlier this year. I think what I really want to say is that I ensured that I resigned.

Albertans elected this government to clean the mess up that the previous government made. The previous government was taking this province on a track to $100 billion of debt. Albertans said no to that and yes to responsible government. That's what we're here to do, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Phillips: Given that if this is the case, the minister should have no problem tabling this evidence by the end of question period today and given that the Conflicts of Interest Act specifically cautions against the appearance of impropriety, why does it appear that the minister is breaking the conflict-of-interest laws in order to further a private interest as a director for a corporation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I have cleared everything with the Ethics Commissioner.

What the members opposite are struggling with is that on April 16 Albertans said: "We need a change. We need a government who will stand up for our interests. We need a government who will make responsible decisions to ensure that this generation and the next generation have a future." Mr. Speaker, that's what this government is about, and we will deliver to Albertans.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, given that the Conflicts of Interest Act specifically prohibits ministers from being part of decisions affecting organizations or avoiding the appearance of being part of decisions affecting organizations that they are directly associated with, is it government policy to appear to blatantly disregard the guidance of the conflict-of-interest legislation? Why the oversight?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. the Finance minister was clear on this. He's resigned from that position and, like all of us, has been through a process with the Ethics Commissioner to make sure he's completely in compliance with his role as the Finance minister of Alberta.

What is ridiculous is that member continuing with that line of attack even after it was confirmed by the Finance minister that he resigned from that position. It's shameful. Now, it doesn't surprise me, coming from that particular member, whose role when she was the environment minister was not to consult with Albertans, was to basically go out of her way to cause trouble inside of our communities, refused to meet with the very people that they did, and even went out of her way to lie about the RCMP.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:24.

Conversion Therapy Use in Alberta

Member Irwin: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from Lethbridge-West for raising some additional troubling information about this Minister of Finance. Sadly, there's more. This government has already refused to take conversion therapy seriously. The Minister of Health has disbanded the working group tasked with banning this harmful practice. Thankfully, my colleague from Edmonton-Castle Downs is carrying the work forward. To the Minister of Finance: are you familiar with the organization Journey Canada and its connections to conversion therapy?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it's so sad to see the NDP in opposition continue to go out of their way with fear and smear and to waste their constituents' time inside this place. [interjections] It is so disappointing. You can see right now the behaviour of the NDP, the former Premier of Alberta heckling away in a very childish way inside this place. Albertans find that unacceptable. I suspect that's why they fired them on April 16. While I recognize that the hon. leader of the NDP is frustrated that she was fired, that's the reality. Albertans cast that judgment. If they keep doing it this way, they'll cast it again, I'm sure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister is listed publicly as a member of the board that thrice published a newsletter featuring the minister that contained an ad for a Journey Canada event called the church and same-sex attraction and given that the description of this event is aimed at "equipping . . . friends and caregivers to walk with those who are experiencing unwanted same-sex attraction," to the minister: to what extent are your policy choices informed by antigay organizations that want to pray the gay away or much, much worse?

Mr. Jason Nixon: The behaviour by the Official Opposition in this place is appalling. This may be the worst Official Opposition in history by this point. It is unbelievable. You know, it's interesting, when I was back home in my constituency this weekend, how many people came and talked to me about the behaviour of the NDP. I can tell you that everyday Albertans are extremely frustrated with how their Official Opposition is acting in this place. They're shocked by it. You see it over and over. I know that you must be frustrated by it, Mr. Speaker. It's ridiculous. The fear and smear should stop. Certainly, Team Angry should stop, and they should accept the judgment of Albertans.

Member Irwin: Given that conversion therapy is dangerous and that it ruins lives, no matter what the ministers and this government say, and given that being gay doesn't make you a demon, not to my knowledge anyway – neither does yoga, for that matter – and given that the UCP ran another candidate in this past election that had direct ties to Journey Canada and its harmful conversion therapy practices, will the minister stand in this House and apologize for his past views, and if not, will he recuse himself from any discussion in this House or in cabinet relating to conversion therapy?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, who should apologize in this House is the Official Opposition. They should apologize for the way that they have approached their job. It's disappointing. It does a disservice to Albertans. It's ridiculous. It's completely inappropriate, what you've seen . . .

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: . . . taking place here, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] You see it right now, heckling away, language that would be inappropriate anywhere else. These are the things that Albertans are disappointed in. This is why the NDP is the only one-term government in the history of this province. They can do better. I encourage them to do better, but sadly it looks like they have no intention of doing that. Instead, they're going to attempt to bully people and go out of their way to act like this in this House. It's shameful.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order noted at 2:29.

Agricultural Education

Mr. Schow: Mr. Speaker, southern Alberta was one of the early hubs of agriculture in the province and has always been a leader in ag production, innovation, and education, especially in my constituency of Cardston-Siksika. Most recently Magrath high school developed a partnership with the Westwind school district and several local producers to create the sustainable agriculture education partnership in an effort to bring agriculture literacy to our students. To the minister: how do you intend to replicate programs that inspire students to think about their futures such as the one in Magrath?

Member LaGrange: I'm very glad to hear success stories like this, where a school district is taking advantage of the career and technology programs offered within our world-class education system. Programs like career and technology studies, dual credit, and off-campus learning encourage partnerships within the community and are wonderful learning opportunities for our students. These programs allow students to develop job-ready skills and address labour market needs within a local context. I'd like to congratulate Westwind school district, Magrath, and Cardston on their partnership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister, for the answer. Now, this program doesn't end there. Given that Wade Alston, the CAO of the town of Magrath, stated to the media that the enrolment in this program is strong and given that he foresees an expansion of this program to other regions, including partnerships with the University of Lethbridge and Lethbridge College, and given that these types of programs have proven effective in other countries around the world, how will the minister assist in the expansion of these kinds of programs, and how will the minister roll this program out?

2:30

Member LaGrange: Thank you for that question, hon. member. We encourage growth within all our career and technology programs. School authorities have the flexibility to identify opportunities for growth of these programs within their communities. I would also like to encourage schools to take advantage of the flexibility inherent in programs like career and technology studies and dual credit and to participate in the amazing opportunities available through Skills Alberta. We are always listening to our school authorities and industry partners, and we will always support opportunities that enrich the lives of our students, their families, and their communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's agriculture and agrifood industries are an underappreciated sector in our economy and given that the agriculture and agrifood industries are rapidly expanding while employment in the sector dissipates and given that youth in Alberta are taking on tens of thousands of dollars in debt each year, facing a nearly 10 per cent unemployment rate and minimal prospects of well-paying jobs after graduating, what will this minister do to empower partnerships that show students the career options available to them like the ones in Magrath?

The Speaker: The minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government was elected on the promise to improve access to career and technology programs for students across the province. In addition to funding programs through Skills Alberta and Careers: the Next Generation, I know that a number of school divisions, including Westwind school division, will be developing additional dual-credit opportunities this fall thanks to this government's commitment to education. Alberta's dual-credit program has been well received, and we will be looking at building on this program this fall.

Thank you.

Payday Loan Consumer Protection

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago I asked the Minister of Service Alberta if he was prepared to commit to protecting the consumer protection laws that our government brought in around the automotive industry. His response was less than encouraging. So let's try again and give this minister another chance to show Albertans that he's in it for them and not just for UCP donors. To the Minister of Service Alberta: do you support the payday loan legislation introduced by our government in the previous Legislature? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. Our government is monitoring the impact of this current legislation. We know that when Albertans are not working and are paying too much in taxes, the need for short-term credit increases. That's why our government is putting forward legislation that will help job creators to create jobs so that Albertans can get back to work. Alberta succeeds when individual Albertans succeed, and we are committed to doing what we can to ensure conditions for success are in place.

Mr. Carson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that our government acted on payday loans by bringing in the lowest borrowing rate in Canada and given that our government acted by lowering the annual interest rates and gave borrowers the right to pay back their loans in instalments over two months and given that affirming support for common-sense regulations like this should be the simplest thing for the minister to do, again to the Minister of Service Alberta: has the minister or any member of his staff had any meetings with any lobbyist representing the payday loan industry, seeking to roll back our legislation on payday loans?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, this is a clear case of the member opposite trying to create a problem where there isn't one. The Alberta Lobbyists Act requires that lobbying activities be registered and that that information is publicly available. We are committed to protecting and creating the conditions for Albertans to have success and to be protected and to balancing the needs of consumers and business and also to ensuring that we are creating jobs and attracting investment to this province. Albertans voted overwhelmingly for the vision that we put forward, and we are committed to following through on our commitments to Albertans.

Mr. Carson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that high-interest payday loans keep low-income Albertans in the cycle of poverty and given that it's an important responsibility of the government to protect Albertans from predatory businesses, to the Minister of Service Alberta: will you commit here and now to not taking any action that would allow predatory payday loan providers to regain ground in this province?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that licences for those providing payday loans or high-cost credit loans are obtained under the Consumer Protection Act, and it is important to note that my department conducts inspections and will investigate complaints that it receives. Albertans know that we have their best interests at heart when it comes to helping them earn a living and to keeping more money in their pockets. That's why they voted overwhelmingly for change in this last election, and I'll remind all Albertans that we are working hard to deliver on that change.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for St. Albert.

PDD Program Applications

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the persons with developmental disabilities program received over 2,000 applications for support to enable Albertans who meet the criteria to live and work in their communities. Requests for new services are sometimes due to aging of people or the onset of dementia, severe illness, or a changing living situation. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: has your department developed a new funding approval process for PDD applicants, and if so, what criteria is being applied, and will you share that criteria with Albertans?

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member opposite for that question. Mr. Speaker, it was part of our platform commitment that we were going to review the PDD program, and certainly we are taking steps right now to go through that program in depth and to determine what the next steps are going to be.

Ms Renaud: Actually, the review is already under way.

Given that approximately 200 youth transition from FSCD, family support for children with disabilities, funding to PDD funding for adults with developmental disabilities each year, can the Minister of Community and Social Services confirm that the intake and approval process has not been altered with the addition of bureaucratic layers to lengthen the approval and appeal timeline?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, while that program has been reviewed, it hasn't been reviewed sufficiently at this point. That transition period from FSCD to the PDD program is very problematic. Certainly, the previous government had four years to fix that issue, and they didn't.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Okay. Given the fact that the average wait time for someone approved for PDD funding is approximately 377 days and given the fact that wait-lists range in number from 60 to 300, can the Minister of Community and Social Services assure Albertans whose lives and well-being rely on essential supports that eligible applicants will not be deferred because there is no funding or the funding is too stretched to be available?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, the wait-list issue was already in existence during the previous government's tenure. It continues to be a problem, and we're looking at that problem right now to try to see how we can address it efficiently.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Red Tape Reduction Strategy

Mrs. Allard: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When red tape comes up, the focus seems to be more on business, in particular on reducing the regulatory burden for businesses, investment, and industry. However, I hear from many constituents in my riding who are not necessarily businesspeople, and they, too, have red tape concerns. Along with these concerns many have creative solutions to bring to the table. To the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction: we know that you're easing the regulatory burden on job creators, but how can other Albertans participate as well?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. All Albertans are encouraged to submit their red tape concerns to make life better for Albertans. Red tape reduction ideas can be submitted to our newly launched website, cutredtape.alberta.ca, or sent by e-mail to cutredtape@gov.ab.ca. To show how excited Albertans are about this initiative, in less than 24 hours we've already received 800 submissions. If you see red tape, we're all ears.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that as an MLA I frequently hear of processes that can be sped up, inefficiencies to be fixed, and redundancies plaguing job creators, how can the businesses in my riding let you know what the actual key challenges and holdups are on the ground?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, for far too long our job creators have been told that they're greedy and that they don't care about their employees. This has been especially true over the past four years under the NDP. What's ironic is that after treating them this way, the NDP would ask them to create jobs and grow the economy. We're going to do things differently. We're going to reduce the layers of red tape heaped upon their backs, allowing them to do what they do best, create jobs. We are going to provide them multiple vehicles to submit their ideas through panels and an open-door policy with this government.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that your ministry is an associate ministry, which results in fewer resources and limited manpower, to the same minister: how will you extend your red tape reduction efforts to ensure that you accomplish your mandate for the people of Alberta?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, we have made sure that our associate ministry is lean yet effective. We have reallocated resources from the Ministry of Finance in order to deliver a competent team in order to meet our goal of reducing red tape by one-third. We'll also have MLAs supporting us as they move individual submissions through to completion. One final point: we have complete support from the Premier and all ministers to be able to accomplish this great work.

Rural Crime Strategy

Mr. Loewen: Rural crime remains an important issue for my constituents in Central Peace-Notley, and I know it is for many of the MLAs on this side of the Chamber. The safety of all Albertans should be a priority for any government. Unfortunately, very few of the NDP MLAs were from rural constituencies in the previous government. Therefore, they allocated insufficient resources and didn't devote any real energy to the issue of rural crime. My question is for the Minister of Justice: can the minister please tell us here today what this government's strategy is regarding the important issue of rural crime?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for his continued advocacy on this important issue facing so many of our rural communities and his advocacy for the Peace Country. Our government is committed to implementing our rural crime strategy, that we outlined in our campaign. On a regular basis I'm talking with our police, our chief judges, to make sure that we're on top of the challenges in our court system as well as on the ground in our communities. I can also let the Assembly know that last week I sent a letter in support of Conservative member Blaine Calkins' proposed amendment to the Criminal Code to strengthen provisions relating to rural crime.

Mr. Loewen: Given that rural crime was not a priority for the previous government even though rural crime affects so many Albertans and given that this government's platform included robust rural crime policies because the issue of rural crime is such a serious safety and property issue and given that Albertans' priorities are this government's priorities, can the minister tell this Chamber if continuing and further consultations have been carried out with Albertans about a rural crime policy?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend all of the members of our rural caucus that on a regular basis come to me, meet with me, bring issues forward. We're in the process right now of engaging with our MLAs, engaging with our ministry, to go out across Alberta over the summer and into the fall to consult and hear directly from communities regarding the challenges that they face. We want to listen. We want to make sure that we address these issues and make sure that all communities know about the resources that are going to be made available to them.

Mr. Loewen: Given that crime is a pressing issue for Alberta's rural constituencies because of the great distances from law enforcement that residents find themselves in, resulting in longer response times, and given that in my constituency new crime watch groups have started to fight rural crime and given that having safe rural communities benefits all Albertans, can the minister please inform this House what resources will be allocated to help fight rural crime for the benefit of all Albertans?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans deserve to feel safe in their communities and their homes. Our government has been clear that we're going to make sure that we provide our law enforcement officials with the resources that they need, from hiring 50 new prosecutors to providing ALERT with $50 million to combat the opioid crisis facing our province as well as making sure that they have the resources to tackle gang violence. Our priorities are clear. We're going to make sure we provide our police and prosecutors with the resources that they need. Our priorities are not providing free light bulbs and shower heads.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will return to tabling of returns and reports.

Tabling Returns and Reports (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies from the Peace River Bible Institute website that were downloaded today indicating that the Minister of Finance forms the corporation of the Peace River Bible Institute.

I also have, Mr. Speaker, a letter from a constituent of Lethbridge-West who is a teacher, from both her and her husband, who is also a teacher, thanking the opposition for their work on Bill 9 and registering their firm opposition to getting in the way of collective bargaining.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition a document that she referenced as far as school districts normally getting their budgets in March/April.

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen to table a document.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today, with the requisite number of copies. First, at the disbelieving urging from the Member for Morinville-St. Albert, an article, which I believe I saw through a tweet, which is titled Brazil President: I'd Rather Have a Dead Son than a Gay Son. Imagine that, an elected official.

I also have an article about a dad accused of murder, who, once he found out his son had a boyfriend, grabbed a gun and shot him.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Minister LaGrange, Minister of Education, pursuant to the Teaching Profession Act the Alberta Teachers' Association 2018 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order.

The first point of order was raised by the Official Opposition House Leader. However, I am not in need of his interjections. What I am in need of is not the continuation of debate. The Government House Leader knows what he did, and he will withdraw and apologize.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw and apologize.

The Speaker: Point of order 2, I believe, was raised by the Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In question period today I think we all heard this because it was shouted out so clearly and audibly. The Member for St. Albert shouted out: your arrogance is appalling. Now, of course, I think that would fall under 23(h), (i), and (j), probably all three of them. You know, we put up with a lot of abuse in this House from the members from the opposition side shouting out different things throughout question period, and I would suggest that that member should apologize and withdraw her remarks.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, what I will say is that it's pretty rich coming from the member who sat as opposition when we were government and hurled insults every day during question period for the full 35 seconds while ministers were responding. You know what? If the member said that – I mean, the government is acting very arrogantly, but it's not a point of order. It's a difference of opinion. It was a heckle that clearly was an effective heckle if it bothered the member. But I can tell you that it's not a point of order; it's a difference of opinion. I will not be apologizing or withdrawing that comment.

The Speaker: Well, you may have to, depending on the ruling of the chair, so I would perhaps suggest that you take a different tack when finishing your points of order.

Having said that, as all members of the Assembly will know, it would be impossible for a chair to rule on comments that they may or may not have heard that are not on the record. While it is quite possible that the Member for St. Albert did in fact say that, I myself at that time was intently trying to listen to the question and the answer, the cut and thrust of debate, and everyone will know that in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 624, it is well accepted that "the Chair cannot be expected to rule in the absence of a reliable record." So in this case I would consider it not to be a point of order. Of course, all members are responsible for decorum inside this Chamber.

Having said that, the chair is prepared to rule on the point of privilege.

Privilege Misleading the House

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am prepared to rule on the question of privilege raised yesterday, June 24, 2019, by the Official Opposition House Leader relating to comments made by the Government House Leader and Minister of Environment and Parks on June 20, 2019.

2:50

The Official Opposition House Leader provided notice to my office at 11:25 yesterday morning of this question of privilege, with a copy to the Government House Leader, and therefore met the requirements under Standing Order 15(2). I might provide some guidance to the Official Opposition House Leader that it is customary to outline in some detail what the purpose of the point of privilege shall be. In this particular case, the letter was vague at best.

As stated in his arguments yesterday afternoon at pages 1113 and 1114 of Hansard, the Official Opposition House Leader alleges that the Government House Leader made – and this is the important part – deliberately misleading statements to the Assembly on June 20, 2019, and that these statements constitute a contempt of the Assembly. The statements in question are found on pages 1079 and 1080 of Hansard from June 20 and were made during Oral Question Period by the Government House Leader in response to questions from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. The primary issue raised by the House leader for the Official Opposition was with respect to the Government House Leader's answer to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora's second supplemental question, which can be found on page 1080 of Hansard. The Government House Leader said, "Mr. Speaker, nobody from the government plugged their ears during debate."

The test for deliberately misleading the House can be found in the fourth edition of Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, pages 775 and 776. The test has three elements. "The statement must, in fact, have been misleading; the member must have known that the statement was inaccurate at the time [in which] the statement was made; and the member must have intended to mislead the House." As Speaker Wanner, my predecessor, noted on March 22, 2018, at page 313 of Hansard for that day, this test "is very difficult to meet."

I must accept an explanation provided by the Government House Leader, as I must accept any explanation by any member of this Assembly, for I am duty bound. Yesterday afternoon at page 1115 of Hansard the Government House Leader said that his remarks were intended to refer to members of the Executive Council and not entirely to the government caucus. On that basis, I cannot find that the elements of the test have been met. As is noted in paragraph 494 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, "statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted."

I understand that members of the opposition have rightly taken offence at certain activities that occurred during the evening of June 19, 2019. Perhaps unsurprisingly, it has not been my experience that there is a positive correlation between sitting late into the night and decorum inside this Assembly. While it is the opposition's right to raise concerns regarding incidents that occur within the Chamber that may affect decorum, I want to emphasize that a question of privilege and, in particular, the assertion that a member has misled this Assembly is a very serious matter. I would also like to remind members that we all must work together, no matter what time of the day or night, to ensure that order and decorum are maintained in this Assembly.

There is no prima facie question of privilege with respect to intentionally misleading this House. The matter is now closed.

We are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Federal Carbon Tax

21. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly express its support for the government in its efforts to challenge the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on Alberta, which this Assembly views as a clear violation of provincial jurisdiction, including the launching of a constitutional challenge if necessary; acknowledge the negative impacts that a carbon tax has upon the people of Alberta, including the increased cost to heat homes and run businesses in the midst of an economic downturn; and recognize that Alberta's oil and gas industries continue to be global leaders in emissions reduction.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion according to Standing Order 18(1)(a). Are there those wishing to speak? The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise in support of Motion 21. Let me begin with some context. In the spring of 2015 the NDP ran on a platform which did not include a single reference nor even an intimation of the imposition of a carbon tax. Indeed, if you consult the fiscal annex of the 2015 NDP platform, there is a detailed iteration of tax changes under a prospective NDP government – increases in personal income taxes, increases in taxes on job creators, various other tax increases – but strangely you will note, Mr. Speaker, the complete omission of any reference to a carbon tax, a carbon levy, a climate leadership plan levy, or any other euphemism that could be used to describe the carbon tax.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

Yet immediately upon forming government, the previous NDP administration commissioned a panel which recommended the imposition of a carbon tax, which the NDP promptly did in the fall of that year, just scarce months after having received a mandate without a carbon tax commitment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that constituted the single largest tax increase in Alberta history. It took $1.8 billion out of the pockets of Albertans. It made everything more expensive. It made it more expensive for ordinary working families to fill up their gas tanks, for seniors to heat their homes, for charities and nonprofits simply to operate. It punished people, Albertans, for living ordinary lives in this cold northern climate. And it did all of that with no measurable environmental benefit. In fact, it was very simply and obviously a cash grab. In fact, in the NDP's 2018 budget they hid in the numbers their ultimate intention, to which they confessed under questioning from the media and the opposition, to raise the carbon tax from the initial $20 to $30 a tonne and then to $50 a tonne. Their plan was to raise it by that additional 67 per cent without any offsetting increase in low-income rebates and without any offsetting increase in, ostensibly, environmental spending.

As the tax grew and became a bigger and bigger burden on people, it increasingly was designed by the NDP to become a regressive tax, a tax on the poor, a tax that would make it – I always thought, Mr. Speaker, to put one's mind, if one can, to think about this from the NDP perspective, that this must have been a bitter pill to swallow. I don't know how the former Finance minister and the Premier got away with persuading a party that used to pretend to be a voice of economic progress, of redistribution of wealth. How did they get away with persuading their caucus and party to impose the most punishingly regressive tax conceivable, a tax on the consumption of energy, with no offsetting rebates, one hundred per cent of which incremental revenues were to be directed – where, Mr. Speaker? – to the general budget slush fund, the general revenue fund, to pay for the NDP's fiscal mismanagement?

3:00

And so they were forced, in the spring of 2018, to admit what Albertans suspected all along, that their secret carbon tax agenda was little more than a regressive cash grab that would punish the poor for heating their homes. That's one of the reasons why, Mr. Speaker, two-thirds of Albertans consistently in public opinion polls indicated their opposition to the NDP's carbon tax cash grab.

That's notwithstanding the previous government having added insult to injury by taking tens of millions of dollars generated by the punitive carbon tax to then pay for advertising telling Albertans why they should be grateful to pay the carbon tax. I'll never forget being at a movie theatre in Calgary, and they had the chutzpah to run a trailer ad before the movie began telling people how lucky they were to give the NDP government a cash grab, which elicited a chorus of boos through the movie theatre. When I heard that, I thought: you know, maybe the NDP is actually not listening to Albertans on this.

But we did. I'm proud to say that we did, Mr. Speaker. We did, and that is why we ran on a commitment to introduce as Bill 1 in this Legislature the carbon tax repeal act. It was announced in the Speech from the Throne of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, and I was proud to stand in this place that afternoon and introduce for first reading the carbon tax repeal act. I would like to thank the majority of members in this place, all of them in the government, the United Conservative caucus, for having voted to repeal the carbon tax. I was immensely proud to join the hon. the Minister of Finance and President of the Treasury Board in Her Honour's office opposite our Chamber as I witnessed her granting royal assent to make the carbon tax repeal law.

Do you know what happened immediately, Mr. Speaker? Gas prices went down by about 6 or 7 cents a litre all across the province, and everywhere you looked, gas prices were typically under a buck. Everywhere I go, people come up to me and say: thank you for what you're doing, especially for saving me money on filling up my car. So the people are benefiting already from a government that listens to Albertans in eliminating that punitive tax.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House, however, that the NDP, if I'm not mistaken – I want to consult here with the hon. the Government House Leader. Am I correct in asserting that the NDP voted against Bill 1?

Mr. Jason Nixon: That's correct. Shameful. But yeah.

Mr. Kenney: The NDP, Mr. Speaker: shockingly, they had a chance – they had a good month or a few weeks after the election – to go into a period of reflection and soul-searching. Now, I've been through that before. I've been in a party that lost an election. Normally what you do is that you take a step back and you ask yourselves: "What did we do wrong? How did we lose people's confidence?" Now, I would think that impulse towards introspection might be particularly urgent for the first political party in Alberta history to have lost government after just one term. I can tell you that if I had been in such a party, I would say to my colleagues, "You know, we need to take a step back and think about: how did we get so profoundly offside public opinion that we just suffered one of the worst trouncings in Alberta electoral history after just one term?"

I would have thought that the NDP caucus, perhaps in a spirit of humility, might have gathered and said to each other: “You know, maybe that carbon tax that we hid from voters and then imposed on them and then raised by 50 per cent and then planned on raising by another 67 per cent, that carbon tax that we had planned to make a regressive tax on the poor and a transparent cash grab – maybe that was one of the big mistakes. Maybe we should pull back a half step and just rethink this. Maybe there’s some other way. Maybe we can actually have an effective environmental policy that reduces emissions without punishing seniors for heating their homes and nonprofits for turning on the lights.”

I guess that was too much to expect of the NDP because as we can see through their comportment in question period and elsewhere, Mr. Speaker, they’re angry. Instead of moving into a moment of introspection and analysis about this and other issues, they’re angry with Albertans for disagreeing with their ideological cash grab called the carbon tax.

That is why, shockingly, they voted against Bill 1, which was the centrepiece of the largest democratic mandate granted to a party in Alberta political history. And in that vote against Bill 1, you know what the NDP was telling Albertans? “You were wrong, Albertans. You were wrong to elect a government with a mandate to repeal the carbon tax.” The NDP said, frankly, in its arrogance that not only were you wrong, but implicit in that vote was a commitment by the NDP to reintroduce the carbon tax should they ever get the chance to do so. Well, thankfully, they won’t.

That’s one of the reasons that we have brought forward Motion 21 before the Assembly today, because we want to give the NDP a chance to redeem themselves, to redeem their vote in favour of the carbon tax and their original imposition of it. I just plead with them, Mr. Speaker, to think about listening to Albertans on the carbon tax. If they vote in favour of Motion 21, what they will be doing is voting to endorse our government’s defence of Alberta taxpayers against the encroachment on our jurisdiction with a punitive federal carbon tax, which is slated for introduction in this province on January 1 of next year.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Before I get to that, Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Assembly that the United Conservative Party, even while in opposition, joined with a growing number of provincial allies across the federation to defend our taxpayers and taxpayers from coast to coast. Let me single out for recognition and commendation the government of Saskatchewan, which led a valiant fight against the overwhelming pro carbon tax forces in Canadian politics for two years until being joined by allies in other provinces. Let me thank former Premier Brad Wall and current Premier Scott Moe for their leadership in this respect, which leadership ultimately was reflected in a judicial reference to the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal on the federal carbon tax.

I’m pleased to inform the Assembly that the United Conservative Party, at its own expense, applied for and obtained intervenor status at the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal to support the reference of the government of Saskatchewan. We regret the decision of the court, a 3 to 2 split decision, to decide in favour of the federal imposition.

But, Mr. Speaker, I hasten to add – and I’m sure my friend the hon. and learned the Attorney General and Solicitor General will be able to provide a more detailed explication of the quite technical grounds upon which the 3 to 2 majority ruled in favour of the federal Crown in that dispute. Let me say as a layman in this respect – and I’m sure the Attorney General will correct me if I violate any sub judice rule here – that it’s interesting to note that almost all of the federal claims in their initial pleadings were dismissed by the majority. The decision was made on fairly narrow grounds with respect to the peace, order, and good government power.

Mr. Speaker, the important thing is that the government of Saskatchewan is now appealing that decision to the Supreme Court of Canada. We understand that it will be heard in December, and Her Majesty’s Alberta government has applied or will be applying to support our friends in Saskatchewan at the Supreme Court in this case.

Secondly, we sought and obtained intervenor status before the Ontario superior court with an analogous judicial reference on the federal imposition of a carbon tax in that province. I understand we are expecting a decision from that court any day or week at this time.

Thirdly, we’ve indicated to the provinces of Manitoba and New Brunswick that we will also support their prospective judicial references defending their taxpayers. I, Mr. Speaker, am proud to stand on behalf of Albertans with the governments of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and New Brunswick in defending Canadian taxpayers.

3:10

Let me add, Mr. Speaker, just a quick review of how this issue is playing out in other provinces. This is very interesting. In Atlantic Canada the federal government cut a special side deal, which allowed – let’s be polite and call it a creative workaround of the carbon tax in the Atlantic region. For example, in P.E.I. and Newfoundland and Labrador the federal government has imposed a carbon tax which, they agree, could be immediately offset by proportionate reduction in the provincial excise tax on gasoline. Effectively, it’s a shell game, with no net increase in the tax on consumers.

The federal government has allowed their partisan allies in Atlantic Canada to live with a deal that takes no more money out of people’s pockets, essentially, yet they’re threatening to punish Albertans, Ontarians, Manitobans, New Brunswickers, and Saskatchewan for not complying.

Let me shift, then, to Quebec. This is very interesting. Quebec is allowed to engage in a different kind of a workaround. It’s called a cap and trade system.

The truth is this. I refer to an op-ed dated May 9, 2019, in the Financial Post, written by Jean Michaud and Germain Belzile of the Montreal Economic Institute, in which they estimate that the effective cost on the Quebec economy of that province’s cap and trade substitute is 50 per cent of the cost of the carbon tax being imposed on Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and the other provinces. Let me cite from this article.

One province should not pay an effective rate that’s higher than another. Even worse, in those provinces where the federal carbon tax “backstop” is imposed – Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick and likely soon Alberta – the tax will be twice as high, if it reaches $50 [a] tonne in 2022 as scheduled, than the de facto rate in Quebec, which is expected [at that point] to reach around $25. This is because the price of Quebec’s cap-and-trade plan is linked to the price of permits sold on a market it shares with California, and where the California government deliberately oversupplies permits to keep prices low. Projections for prices on that market show permit prices rising to remain below $25 by 2022. Still, the federal government approved Quebec’s cheaper plan as sufficient to avoid the more expensive federal “backstop” carbon tax. We are therefore punishing certain producers more than others, which will certainly hurt an industry already faced with many problems.

Indeed, the Canadian oil and gas sector is dealing with several challenges; a higher carbon tax just adds insult to injury.

That is not from an Alberta Conservative source. These are from Quebec economists pointing out that the federal government is seeking to impose a carbon tax on us that is effectively twice the level of the one that they are accepting in Quebec. How is that fair in the federation, Mr. Speaker? It's not. It's one of the many grounds upon which we will file our judicial reference, that was announced by the hon. the Attorney General five days ago.

I'll close my tour of the federation on carbon taxes by pointing out that British Columbia, often referred to as a great model by the NDP opposite – well, guess what? In part thanks to their carbon tax, folks are paying a buck 70 to fill up their gas tanks. We all have friends and relatives in the Lower Mainland. What's the number one issue down there right now? A buck 70 gas. Part of that is because they're not getting enough product, oil, shipped to B.C. – and we hope to correct that with the Trans Mountain expansion – but a big part of it is the B.C. carbon tax. By the way, Mr. Speaker, here's an inconvenient truth for you: emissions in British Columbia, CO<sub>2</sub> and GHG emissions, are higher today than when they introduced the carbon tax several years ago. All economic pain, no environmental gain.

On that point, let me point out that here in Alberta, we had the same experience. Last December the CBC interviewed the former Premier, asking her if she could identify by how much – and I'll quote this: "We've had two years with a provincial carbon tax. What kind of decline in fuel consumption have we seen in Alberta in those two years?" The then Premier, now opposition leader, answered: "I would have to get back to you on that. Because, of course, it's related to economic activity . . . So you've got a lot of different things going on at the same time." A follow-up question from CBC: "Do you know if [you've] had a decrease in car emissions during that time" [from that carbon tax]? Answer from the opposition leader: "I honestly can't tell you right now because I wasn't prepped for that."

Mr. Speaker, this was the keynote, singular, centrepiece policy of the former NDP government, that they were saving the planet. In fact, a bunch of them implied that if we hadn't repealed the carbon tax, we wouldn't have forest fires in northern Alberta this summer. Somehow we were saving the planet by punishing seniors for heating their homes in the winter with a tax whose emissions reduction could not even be quantified by the head of that government. Now, maybe the Premier had a bad day, and maybe she just wasn't prepped or whatever.

So let's go to another source, then. Mark Jaccard is an economics professor at Simon Fraser University, a very highly regarded academic. I have tremendous respect for him and his research, and I do respect the fact that he is a strong proponent of carbon taxation. I disagree with him, but he is a proponent. In December of last year, interestingly enough, around the same time the Premier said that she could not articulate the carbon reductions from her tax, Professor Jaccard wrote a very interesting op-ed in the Globe and Mail. In it he said – we're always doing this, House leader; I've got some quotes right here on this – that the provincial carbon tax in Alberta had, quote, no discernible impact on emissions, and that the effect of the Alberta NDP carbon tax in reducing emissions was, quote, at most responsible for 5 per cent of the reductions target. Five per cent. Five per cent. So 95 per cent of the purported emissions reduction under the previous government's plan had nothing to do with the carbon tax.

No wonder Albertans threw them out on April 16. No wonder they were fired for punishing – I've told this story before, but I think it bears repeating. Mr. Speaker, my friend the hon. the Government House Leader and the Minister of Environment and Parks had me visit Sundre, which is, I think, known as the beating heart of the Cowboy Trail. It's a great town. He took me to the West Country seniors' centre, and we visited. You know what drew me to that place? I saw a story on the CBC which I could hardly believe. Occasionally that happens when I see CBC stories. So I decided to go and check it out myself. You know, I followed Ronald Reagan's advice to Mikhail Gorbachev: "Trust, but verify." So I went on a recon mission to the West Country seniors' lodge and met the wonderful volunteer leaders and . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Ray Sharp.

Mr. Kenney: . . . Ray Sharp, the vice-president, because at the time the president was away and couldn't greet me. Mr. Sharp and some of the members of the executive toured me around that wonderful place that keeps seniors in our rural communities out there active. They were playing shuffleboard and darts, and they've got, you know, dances for the seniors and some exercise classes. They only have a budget of $18,000. Almost all of it is a $20-a-year membership fee, and the rest is hall rentals. They actually rent out the hall to a Sunday church service. I hope that doesn't offend anybody here, Mr. Speaker. It's a wonderful community initiative.

The thing is this, Mr. Speaker. When the carbon tax came in, at first it was a $700 charge, and then it was going to go up to a $1,400 and then a $2,100 charge out of an $18,000 budget. They said: we don't know where to go for the money; we're dealing with a lot of low-income seniors on fixed incomes out here in Sundre.

3:20

Ray Sharp told me that they were seriously looking at closing the joint down because they couldn't pay their heating bills. I mean, I was shocked. Then Mr. Sharp called the former Premier's office and said: do you have any assistance for us? They said: we suggest that you raise your membership fees. That was the NDP's answer to a bunch of low-income seniors trying to – you know, politicians are always lecturing people about wellness. The Minister of Health will agree with me about the importance of wellness. I know the Minister of Health wants to encourage seniors to maintain active lives. It's good for both their physical and their mental health. But the NDP was just about to put out of business the one thing in Sundre that keeps seniors most active. That's just one little microcosm.

I remember that with some of my colleagues we went and visited the Calgary Food Bank, Mr. Speaker, just before Christmastime. We pitched in with a volunteer shift for a couple or three hours and packed some boxes. The staff there told me that the effect of the carbon tax on the Calgary Food Bank, if I'm not mistaken, was in the range of $40,000 to $50,000. They could have hired a whole new full-time employee to move things faster, to serve more customers. They could have bought a whole lot more supplies for the poor, but they couldn't because of the NDP. I remember – boy, we hear a lot from them about schools, Mr. Speaker. They're not giving us any credit, though, for reducing the carbon tax on schools. The Calgary public board had to spend I think it was up to $3 million on the carbon tax. They had to take a bunch of buses out of service and cut back on the full-day kindergarten services in their school board jurisdiction as a result. Here's my point. For a tax that was supposed to save the planet, it had no meaningful impact on emissions but had a very real impact on how all of those organizations operated.

Let me continue quoting Professor Jaccard. He said, "I'll bet [the former Alberta Premier] wishes an economist had told her she didn't need the tax, and that it does almost nothing anyway." He goes on further: "Carbon pricing," also known as carbon taxes, "is doing little to decarbonize the economy." Professor Jaccard further went on to say that Ottawa's carbon tax will, quote, only account for 15 per cent of their emissions targets. So not only was it ineffective in Alberta; it is ineffective federally when it comes to the actual environmental goals that we all share to reduce emissions.

Let me hasten to add, Mr. Speaker, in that respect that our government, first of all, will be launching consultations this summer, led by the hon. the Minister of Environment and Parks, on the development of our technology and innovation emissions reduction levy and fund. That will ensure that major industrial emitters do pay a levy to disincentivize carbon intensity and greenhouse gas emissions. That levy will be designed in a way that provides a lower tax or lower levy on companies that are best-in-class performers with lower than average emissions for similar companies, but it will have a higher price point for companies that have higher than average emissions for their industry sector. This will be an intelligently designed plan that incentivizes constant environmental improvement. It is estimated that the levy will impact 60 to 65 per cent of the emissions produced by the entire Alberta economy and that it will reduce CO<sub>2</sub> emissions by 40 to 45 megatonnes as against the baseline year. So this is a very significant contribution to the imperative of reducing emissions.

I hasten to add this, Mr. Speaker, because one difference, I submit, between the policy setting of our government and that of our friends in Saskatchewan is that we will have a more robust, wide-ranging levy on industrial emissions, which, I believe, will demonstrate to the courts that we as a province have decided to occupy the regulatory space of carbon pricing, to use the language of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal. We hope that we'll be in a position to announce the details on the technology innovation and emissions reduction levy and fund in the autumn, in time for consideration by the Alberta Court of Appeal in our judicial reference.

I hasten to add that most of the revenues generated by the TIER fund will be directed to a technology fund to support much of the ongoing work that's existed since the time of Premier Stelmach's government to develop technology that reduces carbon output, technology which can then be commercialized and exported to the developing world.

I want to underscore that this is one of the problems with the NDP's approach, Mr. Speaker. They never understood that their carbon tax policy seemed to imply that Alberta was some sort of hermetically sealed jurisdiction with respect to greenhouse gas emissions, like there was some kind of a biodome over the province, and that's why we had people from the left saying that the Alberta carbon tax was somehow linked to the forest fires in Alberta. That comes from people who don't understand the science. They don't accept the science. We accept the science. The science says that this is a global challenge, not an Alberta challenge. We are responsible for 1.6 per cent approximately of global greenhouse gas emissions; that's as a country. Alberta has about .4 per cent of global greenhouse gas emissions.

We could shut down the entire Alberta economy tomorrow – and Lord knows that the NDP tried – and we would have, Mr. Speaker, an immeasurable impact on global greenhouse gas emissions. In fact, in the same time next year China's incremental growth in emissions would entirely make up for the elimination of the Alberta economy from global emissions.

I urge the NDP to stop denying the science, Mr. Speaker, to stop being science deniers and to start accepting the scientific data, which are clear that this is a global challenge, and if we want to have a real impact on greenhouse gas emissions, it must be a global impact. One way through which we could do so is by investing in technology that can be exported to India, to China, to Africa, to Asia, to these countries that rightfully want to increase energy production to help lift their people from poverty.

I'm pleased – let me go on the record in this debate – to commend my friend the Hon. Andrew Scheer, the federal Leader of the Opposition, for having outlined a very detailed plan centred around this idea of technology as the core solution to the environmental challenge that we together face and the commercialization and exportation of that technology to other jurisdictions. We can be real global leaders on that. That's what the TIER fund will enable us to do.

Mr. Speaker, on this point, though, about the global nature of emissions, this also applies to carbon taxes, as none other than Professor Andrew Leach of the University of Alberta admitted in 2015. Now, he was the principal author of the Alberta NDP carbon tax, but Professor Leach in a moment of commendable honesty said, quote: until the rest of the world has policies that impose similar costs, you're not actually reducing emissions to the extent you think; you're just displacing the emissions and the economic activity to other jurisdictions. This is such an important point that I'm going to read it back into the record a second time. Quote: until the rest of the world has policies that impose similar costs to the carbon tax, you're not actually reducing emissions to the extent you think; you're just displacing the emissions and the economic activity to other jurisdictions, unquote. That's not coming from some Conservative partisan. That's coming from the author of the NDP carbon tax.

3:30

Really, what Professor Leach is talking about there is the problem of carbon leakage. Now, this clearly applied in the case of the Alberta NDP carbon tax, right? Lord knows, we saw a massive displacement of economic activity to other jurisdictions, tens and tens of billions of dollars of investment that fled Alberta under the NDP to other jurisdictions, and most of that fled our energy-producing sector to be reinvested in the energy-producing sector in other jurisdictions that do not have carbon taxes.

I look to my friend the hon. the Minister of Infrastructure, who has spent his life as a professional engineer in the oil and gas sector. In fact, he helped to plan the building of the largest refinery on Earth in Jamnagar, Gujarat, India. He knows the industry in intimate detail. I invite the hon. minister to correct me if I'm wrong, but we've seen a massive relocation of capital from Alberta oil and gas to Texas, Colorado, and North Dakota, in particular.

Mr. Panda: Azerbaijan and Kazakhstan.

Mr. Kenney: And Azerbaijan and Kazakhstan and Iran and elsewhere.

Could the minister tell me: do any of those jurisdictions have a carbon tax? No. I didn't think so, Mr. Speaker. I just needed to confirm that. None of them have carbon taxes, but you know what they have now? They have billions of dollars and tens of thousands of jobs that we used to have in Alberta. That is what Professor Leach calls the displacement of economic activity. Let me put that in regular language: that's jobs. That's jobs that fled this province. And guess what? Those engineers, those rig hands, those rig operators, all of them: Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, on Sunday I joined my friend the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville at the Ukrainian Catholic vidpust for Saints Peter and Paul church in Mundare, a historic centre of the Canadian-Ukrainian community. At the luncheon that followed the Divine Liturgy, I met a lovely mom with three young boys, ages I think one through five. I was asking about the kids, and she broke down in tears in front of me. She got very emotional. She asked for pictures. She said: "Mr. Kenney, I want to send this to my husband. He's working in Cuba in the oil and gas sector because he lost a job under the NDP here in Alberta. He just wants to come back and see his boys.” How many colleagues have heard stories like that? Well, I’ve heard them every darn day. You know what? That lady’s husband: that was the displacement of economic activity under the NDP.

Oh, by the way, I know my friends from the NDP, a lot of them, are big fans of the Cuban Communist regime, Mr. Speaker, and Venezuela’s socialist dictatorship. Let me ask a question. Does Communist Cuba have a carbon tax? No. That’s a rhetorical question. The answer is no. There is no carbon tax in the Communist regime of Cuba, but that Mundare lady’s husband is there because of carbon leakage. He’s helping produce energy in Cuba that is emitting carbon without a carbon tax. Does that help the global planet, to have displaced that unit of economic activity, that worker from here to there? All it does is move it to a jurisdiction with not only lower environmental standards but no human rights. In that socialist utopia – guess what? – they don’t allow unions either. You can’t make this up.

Mr. Speaker, these are some of the reasons why we have sought leave at the Alberta Court of Appeal for judicial reference on the imposition of a federal carbon tax, on which let me say this. We believe the federal carbon tax is a prima facie violation of provincial constitutional environmental jurisdiction, and we will make that case very persuasively. We will demonstrate to the court that Alberta is occupying the relevant regulatory space through our TIER fund and other activities that constitute part of our forthcoming climate strategy as a government.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that as bad as the federal carbon tax is – and we’ll fight it every step of the way – it is actually less bad than the NDP carbon tax. Now, why would I say that? Well, I’ll give you a couple of reasons. First of all, 90 per cent of the revenues generated by the federal carbon tax will be recycled back in the form of rebates to one hundred per cent of households whereas only 40 per cent of the revenues generated by the Alberta NDP carbon tax were recycled back as rebates to 60 per cent of households. Right there, from a just pocketbook point of view, it is much less bad.

Now, that, of course, begs the question that Premier Brad Wall raised: what’s the point of taxing people just to run it through an expensive federal bureaucracy, punish them for heating their homes, and then tell them to wait for a government cheque? Could it be, Mr. Speaker, that the real point is to make them grateful to the government for the cheque that they get? I don’t know. I’m just going to go out on a limb here. I think that perhaps – perhaps – the ability to send people another cheque from the government will in the minds of Ottawa render that government more popular with Canadians. I don’t think that Canadians are gullible like that, though. I know that Albertans certainly aren’t. They didn’t buy it.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, all the polling indicated – and I’m proud to say this – that the United Conservative Party trounced the NDP on April 16 amongst low-income Albertans, and those are the people who were getting the rebate cheques from the NDP. You know what? I used to have people say to me: aren’t you concerned that all those rebate cheques are going to, you know, like the previous government intended, buy voters’ support? Here’s the good news. This is a province filled with a surplus of common sense. People weren’t going to be bought with their own money, and they sent that lot packing after trying to buy votes with their own tax dollars. Today we heard it in question period. My friend the Minister of Environment and Parks got a question from across the way about how they had a subsidy program for solar panels that wasn’t costing taxpayers. Only in the voodoo economics world of the NDP can you have a subsidy that doesn’t cost taxpayers anything. Albertans are too smart; they saw through it. They understood that there was a very heavy cost, the biggest tax hike in Alberta history, the carbon tax.

Let me say, parenthetically, that I’ll endorse the comments of my hon. colleague during question period. Sure, we encourage people if they want to invest in solar panels as companies, as individuals – bully for them – but we’re not going to force their neighbours to pay for their solar panels. We’re not going to punish the Sundre seniors’ centre to subsidize solar panels for people living in million-dollar homes in Calgary and Edmonton, Mr. Speaker. We’re not going to do that. We’re not going to transfer wealth through a regressive tax from low-income people who could never afford solar panels in a regressive upward transfer of income to upper middle class and wealthy people to have subsidized solar panels. No. We’re not going to pursue regressive and punitive policies like that. That, again, is one of the reasons why we are making this application.

Let me finally say, on the TIER approach, the technology innovation and emissions reduction fund, that we have indicated – I said to the Rt. Hon. the Prime Minister on April 18, when we spoke by phone, and reconfirmed this with him six weeks ago in Ottawa – that we are prepared to work with the federal government on the details of the application of the TIER levy, and we seek to find common ground. I would plead with the federal government not to make this legal dispute necessary.

Instead, they could seek the path of compromise. They could seek the path of collaboration with the provincial governments. We all share the goal of real, practical reduction in emissions. In our case we also have as a goal reducing a tax burden on ordinary people and growing our economy. Surely, we could sit down in good faith and try to find some way of working together, at least on the major emitters portion. It is, however, regrettable to see the sort of take-no-prisoners, Ottawa-always-knows-best attitude of the hon. federal environment minister McKenna and the federal Liberal government.

3:40

You know, let me give you an example. Manitoba was prepared, in the spirit of compromise within the federation, to impose its own carbon tax, but guess what? They weren’t willing to punish Manitobans enough to satisfy the federal Liberal government. Instead of sitting down with Manitoba, as Premier Pallister offered to do with his federal counterparts, instead of sitting down and working out a compromise situation, perhaps at the price point and the technical rules around its application, the feds said: no; it’s Ottawa’s way or the highway. They had a potential ally on this issue, Premier Pallister, pull out and instead join us and the growing majority of provinces defending taxpayers against carbon taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I would just make one last appeal to the federal government. Stop the Ottawa’s-way-or-the-highway approach. The Prime Minister was elected on a promise to establish an open and balanced federalism. Threatening our taxpayers with a massive new burden on January 1 that will initially raise gas prices by seven cents a litre and then raising it by another 67 per cent to $50 a tonne: that’s not the way of compromise. That’s not open federalism.

I hasten to add, Mr. Speaker, that raising the federal rate to $50 a tonne is just the beginning. Two weeks ago the Parliamentary Budget Officer calculated that the federal Liberal carbon tax will have to rise at least five times higher than it is today in order for Canada to reach its Paris targets. That’s over $100 a tonne. That’s a very modest estimate, because there was in 2017, I believe, a document leaked from Environment Canada that had been prepared for Minister McKenna which said that the carbon tax would have to rise to $300 a tonne by 2050 to make the targets. That’s 10 times the current rate.

The IPCC, the International Panel on Climate Change, in a report released last year estimated that carbon taxes would have to be between $500 and $5,500 a tonne. I've described this frog-in-the-pot syndrome before. Mr. Speaker, when we go to court this fall in this reference to defend Albertans, please understand that it's not just on a $20-, $30-a-tonne carbon tax; it's to defend us from their ultimate hidden agenda.

Let's face it. What is that agenda at the end of the day, Mr. Speaker? It's more control over people's lives. That's really where I just can't agree with this agenda. It's politicians who have the arrogance to try to control people's lives and the choices they make in just living ordinary lives.

You know, I talked about those low-income folks who voted overwhelmingly for the United Conservative Party recently, the same people who were getting the rebate cheques but weren't going to take that as an electoral inducement, the same people the NDP wanted to punish with the increasingly regressive NDP carbon tax. You know what, Mr. Speaker? Not only are those the people who can't afford to put solar panels on their houses even with the government subsidy; they can't afford to go and buy a $90,000 Tesla even if it's subsidized. All those subsidy programs: they tend to work out really well for the upper middle class and really badly for working people. That's why it's so shocking that the NDP pretends to be a party representing working people, but it wants them, through a regressive carbon tax, to pay for subsidies for the choices that well-off people with discretionary income want to make.

Mr. Schow: Champagne socialists.

Mr. Kenney: Oh, I think my friend from Cardston-Siksika just coined a phrase. I think he said, "Champagne socialists." Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not our style. Those are not our values. Our values are to defend ordinary working people who live ordinary lives from unnecessary interference from government and allow them to have a little bit of relief from the constant cost of higher taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I will just close by reiterating that the motion before the House, Motion 21, is I think a magnanimous opportunity on the part of the government to the NDP opposition to demonstrate to Albertans that they've learned their lesson. They obviously made a mistake by voting against the carbon tax repeal. Maybe that was just because they were so emotional after the election, so angry, that they hadn't had a chance to really think about it yet. It's now two, three weeks later. I hope they've had a chance to reflect introspectively on the message that Albertans sent them on April 16. I note with curiosity that the NDP is very excited, febrile with excitement, that some union presidents with whom they are formally affiliated are suing Alberta taxpayers right now. The NDP just are thrilled about that, to see their allies suing Alberta taxpayers.

Here's the weird thing, Mr. Speaker. They were never prepared as a government to stand up for Albertans and sue the federal government over its threatened carbon tax, to sue the federal government over its intrusion into our exclusive provincial jurisdiction to control our own resources, contra bills C-48 and C-69. They're happy to sue Alberta taxpayers, but maybe they'll change their minds. So far their record is that they're opposed to using every legal tool available to us to defend Alberta taxpayers. But they can change that record by voting in favour of Motion 21, by endorsing Alberta's reference to the appeal court on the constitutionality of the carbon tax. In so doing, they can join the growing majority of Canadian provinces.

I plead with the NDP: please don't put yourself in a position where the governments of New Brunswick, Ontario, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan are joining us in court to defend Alberta taxpayers when the NDP won't even do so. What a strange world that would be to see the government of Ontario doing more, and I suspect they will probably intervene in our case to support us. Wouldn't it be peculiar, passing strange, to see central and eastern Canadian governments more concerned about the welfare of Alberta taxpayers than Alberta's Official Opposition that just weeks ago formed government.

Mr. Speaker, I offer this opportunity to the NDP, an opportunity to stand up and vote for Alberta taxpayers by opposing the threatened imposition of a federal carbon tax. We certainly will. We invite them to join with us.

I move that we adjourn debate on Motion 21. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 8

Education Amendment Act, 2019

Mr. Nielsen moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 8, Education Amendment Act, 2019, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 8, Education Amendment Act, 2019, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment June 24: Mr. Jason Nixon]

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone wishing to join the debate this afternoon on Bill 8? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak today on Bill 8 and the amendment. As discussed in this House before – and I was pleased to speak to this bill just the other night, last night actually, to speak about my concerns with respect to the Education Act and what is being proposed by this government. In particular, I highlighted last night and I began to talk about a number of the changes that were brought in . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, it is regrettable to inform you; however, it appears that you have already spoken to the amendment. My apologies for recognizing you.

However, I believe that the Leader of the Official Opposition would like to be recognized.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

3:50

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing me to rise to speak to what we have all commenced to refer to as Bill Hate, this government's plan to take away the rights of young LGBTQ kids in our schools. You know, it's interesting. Yesterday it was quite fascinating, really, to listen to the Premier in question period where he had the temerity, really, to frame himself and others in his caucus as being victims, victims of bullying, he claimed, actually. I have to say that it really struck me as being quite something. This is a government that in its very, very short period of time has actually done more in three months than many governments have in three terms on the matter of bullying.

For instance, Madam Speaker, we have a government that has set aside $30 million not to advertise to Canadians to promote the good sense and the smart economic policies around supporting our oil and gas industry and ensuring that we have responsible, sustainable means of moving an ever increasingly environmentally sustainable product to market – not that kind of thing – but rather to demonize any person, including any Albertan, who would actually have the temerity to stand up and speak in support of taking action to protect our climate or to protect our environment. In fact, one of the first things this government did was that they set aside $30 million so that they could then start demonizing people who are concerned about the environment. Interestingly, polling will tell you that that group of people tends to be a younger group of people, and we'll get back to that theme in a moment.

Now, of course, they've also set aside or embarked upon some committee work to study whether or not they should take the $15 an hour minimum wage – of course, a minimum wage that is received by often the most vulnerable in society and those who have access to the least because it is a minimum wage – and consider whether or not we should take that away and rip that away from people who serve alcohol. Of course, we know that that is primarily women, so they're thinking about taking stuff away from women, thinking about going after people who are concerned about the climate and the environment.

They also, as we know, through Bill 9 decided to strip away the hard-won constitutional rights of people who belong to unions. Who are those people? Particularly public-sector workers who belong to unions. I'm sure it will come as no surprise to you, Madam Speaker, that the majority of those people are women, and those people actually often work protecting vulnerable Albertans. But according to this government things like the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: well, if you're a public-sector worker you don't deserve them, and you must, in fact, submit yourself to the bullying of a government that wants to rip up legal contracts that they have with you and potentially pay you less. So there's a bit of bullying there.

Then, of course, we have, I think, the bullying that is inherent in the demonstration we saw last week, where the members opposite gleefully plugged in earplugs so that they wouldn't have to hear about the consequences of ripping away the constitutional and Charter rights of hard-working public servants. I mean, it was a very sort of schoolyard version of bullying, I will say. It was only designed to be funny as the schoolyard version of bullying usually is, but I think, as we all know, it often becomes a thing.

Then on top of it, of course, these folks are also geared towards and focused on definitely taking the minimum wage away from workers under the age of 18 and enforcing a 14 per cent wage cut to workers who are under the age of 18. Again, the most vulnerable workers in Alberta. Absolutely, those are the ones that should be paying the price for the drop in the price of oil. You betcha. Let's make the most vulnerable among us, those who didn't even have a right to vote, pay the cost of that by shouldering a 14 per cent pay cut. But we're the bullies, Madam Speaker. You betcha.

Anyway, the most heinous example of this, though, Madam Speaker, of course, is what these folks are proposing to do with respect to Bill Hate. We know incontrovertibly that LGBTQ kids in our schools are far more likely to be bullied. They are far more likely to commit suicide. They are far more likely to end up on the streets. They are vulnerable. What is the answer of this UCP government to their condition? To strip away their rights to engage in a club which would provide them the emotional and psychological support to help combat what is otherwise a very likely path for many of those vulnerable kids. Well, if you spent the next three months trying to paint a more overt picture of bullying, I don't think you could possibly – possibly – come up with one which is more precise than what we see demonstrated by this UCP government towards LGBTQ kids in our province.

Let's be very clear, Madam Speaker. That is exactly what these folks are doing. It is exactly what they are intending to do. It is exactly the opposite of what their leader said in the election. Their leader said: we will not legislate on divisive social issues. Yet we know that Bill Hate is absolutely and entirely dedicated to legislating on what they believe are divisive, but which are not actually divisive, social issues. They are doing that by taking away these rights. We know that.

I mean, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud did a very good job last week outlining what was in the previous Education Act. What one would do if one were actually interested in bringing into force the previous Education Act, which was introduced in about 2012 and remained unproclaimed by the predecessor government to the UCP for three years and then, of course, was not proclaimed by our government because there were sound reasons not to proclaim it and we didn't agree with much of it. Then they brought it forward again after the election, and they stripped out almost anything in it that would change what's currently policy except that it allowed them to legislate on divisive – their words; not ours – social issues in complete violation, contradiction, and in a profound demonstration of dishonesty to the people of Alberta, because what they always wanted to do was to go after young LGBTQ people in our schools.

4:00

Let me talk a little bit about the history of this issue, Madam Speaker. It actually started in the fall of 2014. Many, many members of this Assembly were not here at that time. Actually, let me correct. It goes back to I think it might have been the spring of 2014 and maybe even the fall of 2013. It started because the then Member for Calgary-Buffalo, Kent Hehr – I believe I call him by his name now that he's no longer in the House – won one of those draws that those of us in our tiny little opposition back in the day never won. Certainly, we never won it when we were the fourth party. But Kent Hehr did win a draw. He got to put forward a motion to this House, just to be clear, much like the motion that the Premier just put forward about when you're a private member, you never got to do what the Premier just did.

Just to be clear, I did listen briefly to much of what the Premier was just saying, and I look forward to countering the many, many inaccuracies embedded in the long list of inaccuracies, that some poor people who were in here were subjected to and forced to listen to. Anyway, that will be later. I digress.

When in opposition it's very rare that you get a chance to put forward a motion. But Kent Hehr did. He put forward a motion calling on the government to establish a right to GSAs, and the government promptly voted him down. We then suddenly realized that this was an issue. A lot of people at that point stood up and said: "Wait a minute. Why would you do this?" A lot of kids were hurt and disappointed and saddened by it. We started to hear more and more of the stories about why this was such a bad thing. At that point the Edmonton public school board actually did encourage GSAs, in part because of the, frankly, continent-leading policies that were established under the leadership of the now Member for Edmonton-Glenora and former Minister of Health when she was the chair of the Edmonton public school board.

So that happened. Then flash forward to the fall of 2014. Once again, the Liberal opposition won a lottery and got a chance to introduce a private member's bill, a very rare thing. My whole time in opposition, Madam Speaker, I never got to do a motion, never got to do a private member's bill. But the Liberals were very lucky that year. So the then Member for Edmonton-Centre, Laurie Blakeman, introduced a bill to guarantee GSAs and to guarantee the right to GSAs on request of students in the school.

Now, as a result of the debate that occurred around the motion, you know, six months or 12 months previously, the new Premier, Mr. Prentice, understood that this was a divisive issue in his caucus and that lots of folks were not onside with this and really did not want this bill to be debated on the floor of the House. He understood that it would create a great deal of conflict and it would be very embarrassing for Albertans to learn how many members of their caucus at that time had very retrograde views of LGBTQ people and the rights of LGBTQ kids. So they rushed to create a replacement bill by the government to use that procedurally to push that private member's bill off the agenda so that nobody could debate it, and they succeeded. Laurie Blakeman's bill was pushed to the side, and it was never debated, and she couldn't vote on it.

The problem was that in their fury to play that little legislative game and knock that political bombshell off the front page, they replaced it with a bill which, unfortunately for them, really did reveal much of the homophobia that they'd been trying to hide from the rest of Albertans. That bill, if possible, actually rolled back the rights, what little there were, that existed for those students at the time. I remember that as we started going through it and we read through the bill, we were appalled. We referred to it as the Jim Crow bill. They were setting up a separate but equal situation where LGBTQ kids could request a GSA, and if the principal rejected it – the principal retained the right to reject that request – then the student could ask the Department of Education to provide them with a facilitator, and they could meet somewhere off school grounds.

Lucky them. They could have their own school club that didn't involve a school administrator, nor did it involve happening anywhere near the school. We used to joke around about how: "Oh, that's just great. You know, they're just going to go across the street and meet in the 7-Eleven in the parking lot. Isn't that a lovely demonstration of how much this Conservative, now UCP, group believes in equality?" It was shocking.

Then the other idiotic element of that particular piece of legislation was that if the school would not facilitate helping them find a place to meet offsite, well, then the student could take an application directly to a Court of Queen's Bench judge. Oh, how lovely for them. You know, we could just picture the flurry of vulnerable 15-year-old kids rushing into the courthouse to submit their arguments to a Court of Queen's Bench judge because every 15-year-old feels that empowered. You betcha.

Anyway, it was an outrageous piece of legislation, and the government of the time, the predecessor to this UCP, was laughed out of the press gallery, laughed out of this Assembly. They looked ridiculous. Their homophobia was showing. It was a profound embarrassment, and they had to withdraw the bill.

Now, three months later we came back in the spring, and because this was still an issue, it was still burgeoning – they had made a huge mess of it, and Albertans saw what they saw – they introduced round 2 when they introduced Bill 10. Now, I will acknowledge, as many others on the other side have argued, that our caucus did vote in favour of Bill 10 because at the time it seemed to fix many of the problems of that outrageous insult of the predecessor bill and it essentially replicated the bill that had been put forward by the Liberals. We ultimately thought: "Okay. They've finally come around. Here we go. They must be prepared to do stuff. You know, they finally realized they were wrong. In principle the right things were included in that bill, so we will vote for it." That, of course, is the bill that Bill Hate is now putting back into place.

Here's the thing, Madam Speaker. Just a few short months later the predecessor party to this UCP was voted out of office, and we set about doing the job in government. Soon we started receiving complaints from students and from families, and we started learning that students' rights were still being regularly rejected, regularly subverted, regularly trod upon. They were regularly being victims of bullying. We said to the public service: oh, this is outrageous; we have to finish this. Then we started digging into things, and we discovered, lo and behold, that Bill 10 actually was rife – rife – with loopholes that were designed to ensure that a school that did not want to have a GSA could very, very effectively prohibit having a GSA. That is the situation that we are dealing with now.

How did that happen, and how does that work? I mean, I think people have talked about it already, but let me just review it again. Bill 10 and/or Bill Hate now does not require schools, any schools, to have an LGBTQ policy. It requires public schools to say yes to a GSA if a GSA is requested. It does not, however, require those schools to have an LGBTQ2S-plus-positive policy.

4:10

What we discovered was happening in many public schools was that the teachers and the guidance counsellors and the principals and others who came into the school would teach classes or articulate to students in a number of different settings that homosexuality was wrong, that marriage is only truly between a man and a woman, that girls must dress like girls and boys must dress like boys and those are the only two things that there are. They were told that anything else was wrong, and that permeated throughout the school. There was no policy to prohibit that.

Then, lo and behold, these schools would come to us all innocent and say: oh, well, no, we don't have a GSA, but that's because no student ever requested one. Well, for heaven's sake, Madam Speaker, why would a student in that setting ever request a GSA when each and every day that they were in school, they were told by the teachers and the guidance counsellors and the leaders of that school that to request a GSA would be to put themselves out of the norm of what was acceptable within that publicly funded school? We very clearly realized that what was happening and what the UCP predecessor party had put in place was a clear system to allow schools to actively discourage kids from making that request for a GSA.

That was the first thing, so what we decided in Bill 24 and what we did, which this group is trying very hard now through Bill Hate to reverse, is we said: there must be a policy that prohibits a school from doing that kind of stuff. It's not acceptable for there to be an institutionalized form of bullying within our schools, and we actually knew that it existed. So that's the first thing that we did, and that's exactly what these guys want to undo. They want to permit an institutionalized form of bullying. That is what Bill Hate does, Madam Speaker.

Now, the next thing that we discovered was that there were great swaths of schools that received public funding throughout the province of Alberta that had outrageous policies that discriminated overtly against LGBTQ kids. They had written policies, written practices, written doctrines that discriminate against the LGBTQ community, doctrines that were very similar to the kind of thing we saw replicated at the private university institution that the Finance minister was recently a board member for, outright discriminatory policies. Yet, we discovered, Bill 10 or what now would be, if this passes, Bill Hate included nothing to protect kids in those private schools. It had no application to those private schools, so there could be institutionalized, written in black and white, discriminatory bullying in schools that received 70 per cent of their funding from Albertans, in stark violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, more importantly, in stark violation of what I believe is the Alberta consensus against discrimination and bullying in any setting that is a public space, and by "public space" I mean a space that receives taxpayer dollars.

So, Madam Speaker, we said: no; that's got to change, too. That is not acceptable. We said: we are going to extend the application of the former Bill 10, the current Bill Hate, and we are going to make sure that all schools that receive public funding from the people of Alberta will be compelled to refrain from institutionalized discrimination and bullying.

The next thing we discovered was that even where we were in a situation where we had a public school and a child had requested a GSA, they could make the request for the GSA, but the administration of the school could think about it for eight, nine, 10 months until the school year was over or until that child had graduated or until they dropped out because they felt so isolated and bullied by the administration or until they moved on to something else and just gave up. The school had succeeded in teaching that child that giving up on protecting their own psychological, emotional, mental health, not to mention their own right to be free from discrimination, was the right way to go. That's what the school was teaching them.

So we said: that's got to change. We cannot have principals or other leaders in these schools ragging the puck on this, imposing significant psychological and emotional damage on these kids at the same time. We can't have that because that's not what Albertans believe. That's not what we agree on. It's also wrong. It's actually just a really crappy thing to do. So we said: we'll change that.

Then the final thing that we learned was that even where we had a publicly funded school and even where the child had managed to push through the institutionalized resistance or discrimination within that public school and even where they requested the GSA, instead of ragging the puck, the principal or whoever said: nope; you cannot have a GSA because it makes people feel uncomfortable. Where that had happened, we then discovered that even there we couldn't do anything about it because there were actually no enforcement provisions within the legislation that had been sneakily put in place by the predecessor to this UCP government, so there was no way to actually force the schools to do the thing that the legislation told them they should do. Once again we said: "Okay. Well, that's not cool. We're going to have to make sure that these schools do that."

I hope that by walking through that you can see how the disingenuous assertions by the members of the UCP government that they are somehow putting in place the most progressive or fulsome protection for GSAs in the country are deeply offensive to anybody who has spent any time reviewing the legislation and the practice and the policy on this issue ever. It is disrespectful to anybody in this House for members opposite to ever utter that phrase again because what I just described is what is real, and members opposite have either intentionally refused to learn the issue or are intentionally misleading the House when they make those kinds of statements.

I will tell you this. When we were working to enforce this legislation, we had school officials come to us and say: "You can't enforce this legislation. We were promised by the previous government that they would never make us do it." That is exactly what the members opposite are going back to, because in contrast to the stated commitments that their leader made during the last provincial election, they are legislating on social issues. They are legislating to ensure that institutionalized discrimination against LGBTQ kids can be maintained and preserved in the province of Alberta, and that is shameful, Madam Speaker, absolutely shameful.

The last thing that came up while we were looking through why we needed to change the legislation was the issue of whether or not children who requested a GSA would be outed to their parents. Now, we have so much independent evidence about why this is an important issue. Look to the reports that have been made by the child advocate. Look to the countless declarations of their own history, the stories that have been told by real kids who outline what happened to them. One hopes that in most cases parents will love and accept and support their kids for who they are, but it doesn't happen every time.

4:20

As I said previously in this Legislature just two and a half weeks ago, I ran into a complete stranger who offered up to me his story, that if he had come out to his parents when he was in high school, he would have been beaten. He knew that. I have very dear friends who hid their sexuality from their parents for decades because they believed that they would be ejected from the family. This is a true thing. It is real. It is the reality of these kids. So protecting their privacy is fundamental.

When we were going through the legislation and the change to Bill 24, we realized that we were still in a position where this issue of telling the parents about a kid asking for a GSA would likely prevent many kids from pursuing this, so we set about to fix that as well. That is what we did through Bill 24.

I want to digress for just a little bit here on the issue of outing kids. In a strange turn of events we saw the Privacy Commissioner weigh in on this issue, not normally a thing that you see. As much as I have, on many different issues, great respect for the work that the Privacy Commissioner has done and continues to do to ensure transparency in the province of Alberta, I will say that on this her intervention was not helpful, nor was it terribly accurate. In essence, she tried to argue that kids would be prevented from being outed under the legislation or the language in Bill Hate, and I would argue that Bill Hate essentially says that kids can be outed only if the information that they are entitled to keep private somehow could put them at risk.

The problem is that there is no clear understanding of how that is to be interpreted, and in a school that is run by people who believe that being a member of the LGBTQ2S-plus community is wrong, is a violation of their religion, is a violation of what traditional marriage should look like, is a violation of how you should be your best self, that person could easily decide that telling the parents that the child made that request is in their best interests and good for their safety. Indeed, these schools often are connected to these same organizations that practise this outrageously assaultive approach of conversion therapy. The fact of the matter is that that standard is unclear. There's no clear test. It has to be litigated over and over.

Right there, on the very front end, I disagree with what the Privacy Commissioner suggested because putting in that kind of uncertainty opens the door to anybody's interpretation, and back we are to where kids are being told: "Oh, I think, you know, I'm a little worried about you, that you've decided you want this. I think I'm a little worried about how you're feeling right now. I think we might have to talk to your parents because we're a little worried about your mental health." That's the way it would unfold. Then – boom – we are off to tell the parents, and then suddenly the very risk that the kids are worried about and, more importantly, the privacy to which they should be entitled have been breached.

The privacy officer says: well, if that's the case, come to me, and I'll litigate, and I'll consider this, and I'll make a ruling. Well, with the greatest of respect, it's one thing for the Privacy Commissioner to make rulings about whether the bureaucracy does or does not disclose information in a timely fashion in response to requests from various public interest organizations looking for specific reports on specific commissions, yada, yada, yada, and when it takes two and a half years for the Privacy Commissioner to do that, that's one thing. It's not great, but it's one thing. But to suggest that the Privacy Commissioner is somehow equipped to immediately respond to the request by a student for protection from being outed is ridiculous. That is not something that the Privacy Commissioner's office is equipped to do.

Moreover, going to the Privacy Commissioner's office is not something that that 15-year-old kid who's just been outed and may well be living on the street is equipped to do. Quite honestly, the suggestion that that is the way to go is one of the most tone-deaf things I've ever seen come out of the mouth of the Privacy Commissioner. We shall leave it at that in terms of that particular issue. What kids need is certainty and clarity on what their rights are, and the people who are working with them need to have certainty and clarity around what the rights of those students are.

What exactly are the kinds of policies that we were fighting? I gave you a little bit of an example, but I have to tell you, Madam Speaker, that when we looked through the policies of the many schools as we slowly tried to sort of educate schools and bring them along, I mean, many did great jobs. They set to work – the school boards, that is – and they came up with some wonderfully inclusive policies. They hadn't really turned their minds to it, but once they did, it was a good process, and I think they felt better about it. Sometimes they included the kids, and the kids felt better about it, and the families felt better about it, you know, in terms of creating the policies. It was a good thing.

But some of the policies that came forward were, on their face, breaches of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, particularly if they might have applied to a child of a certain age, and they were definitely discriminatory and bullying in nature. So anyone who thinks that this isn't an issue is wrong, absolutely, completely, and utterly wrong. We know very clearly that there were many schools out there that wanted to perpetuate divisive, bullying, institutionalized versions of discrimination against the kids in their schools that were members of the LGBTQ2S-plus community.

We also know this because, of course, one of the schools that decided to challenge our legislation is a big supporter of the UCP and the Premier. Their lawyer, a member of the UCP and a huge supporter of the Premier, well known for many, many extreme views and positions taken in the courts, too, has said things which were outrageous, comparing the pride flag to the swastika. Could you imagine a 15-year-old kid who, we'll say, is struggling – we'll call him a "him" – with coming to terms with his sexual orientation, who lives in a small community, maybe in northern Alberta, is struggling with how to come to terms with what he believes is his reality and his truth and his orientation, going into school and being told by somebody that being proud of being gay is akin to being proud of being a Nazi? Can you actually imagine that? Yet the guy who said that is a member of the party that now is in government. The guy who said that has not been asked to leave that party. The guy who said that I think probably still has the ear of the Premier because certainly his colleagues are working in the Premier's office, and then suddenly we have Bill Hate.

I know the members opposite will say, "You know, you guys litigated this in the election, and Albertans were more concerned about our fake claims to know how to create jobs," which, to be clear, are fake claims, and sooner or later Albertans are going to realize that, if anything, these guys are going to kill jobs, not create jobs. They're going to certainly suppress wages. That we know already. That's a thing. I think they're likely going to kill jobs as well and also, you know, undermine schools and hospitals and all of those things. Nonetheless, that's me. It's going to take a bit of time for folks to see the stats on that one.

4:30

Nonetheless, they'll say: well, they only cared about our fake plans to create jobs, and they didn't care about all this whining that you guys in the NDP are doing about GSAs. I will grant you that, obviously, people are very worried about job creation, and there is no question that we did not win the election. You know, the members opposite, today was a particularly arrogant day where it seemed to have been worked into the answer to every question. You know, do what you want. Carry on if you want. A piece of advice: that's going to get really old really fast. But please keep it in your talking points for the next four years. I think it's awesome. I beg of you, in fact. The more you say that, the better.

[Mr. Loewen in the chair]

What I will say is this: I believe absolutely, completely, and without qualifications that Albertans did not believe or expect that these folks would come in and act to introduce a piece of legislation that is almost exclusively designed to perpetrate institutionalized discrimination in the schools in this province. I don't believe that that's what Albertans voted for. I believe they were misled by the leader of the UCP during the course of the election.

I also believe that they care about this issue and that while the front-and-centre issue for Albertans is jobs and the health of the economy – I get that. It should be. It's an important issue. People's overall sense of economic security is critical, so I get that. But I also believe that Albertans are fair-minded people who care about other people who are struggling, who are not drawn into rigid, extreme views of hate against minority groups simply because they don't understand them or because they are different than them. That is not the Alberta I know. The Alberta I know is young, well-educated, inclusive, entrepreneurial, optimistic, forward-looking.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Bill Hate is not that. Bill Hate is divisive. It is ugly, it is exclusive, it is hurtful, and it is an example of bullying in its finest form. This is why we will not support this bill, and this is why members in this House should support our amendment, in order to ensure that this bill goes no further, because it is a historic declaration of hate and division against a community in this province that has been here for as long as this province has been here, that will be here for as long as this province will be here, and that deserves to take its rightful place as equal citizens with equal rights, without fear of discrimination or hateful views or bullying by anybody in the UCP or by their lawyers or by the Premier's political staff or by the Premier. They deserve better, and Albertans expect them to get better, and that is why this legislation is wrong.

There is not a single thing that I said today that I would not be happy, Madam Speaker, to swear an affidavit about and go in front of a judge and be penalized if there was a single thing that I said that was untrue. What I say in this House must be true because I respect this House. I will not say things that I know to be not true because I respect this House, because it is an extension of the democracy of this province. I want you to know that.

I would urge members opposite to change their approach on this issue and join us in adopting this approach and at least acknowledge what they are doing. Have the courage of your convictions. If you want to promote division, if you want to treat LGBTQ kids differently, if you want to take away their rights because you believe in your heart that that's the thing that needs to be done – the member opposite is shaking his head. I don't know. Maybe that's what you want to do. If that's what you want to do, tell Albertans. Have the courage of your convictions, respect this Legislature, tell the truth, stop saying things that are not true, and come clean with Albertans on what your vision is for inclusion, for justice, for equality for all Albertans regardless of where they came from, what they look like, or who they love.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any comments or questions?

Seeing none, are there any more speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I suppose someone always has the misfortune of going after the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I will attempt to be as articulate as she was. I think there are a couple of things I'd like to discuss with respect to this bill and with respect to this amendment. Obviously, the amendment would not see it read, and I think that that is the right thing to do in this instance.

The first thing to talk about is the concept of a right, because it gets bandied about a lot. The second thing I'd like to talk about is the concept of bullying and, in particular, my concern that if we begin to call everything bullying, every legitimate question bullying, we lose the ability to make any progress on it. Finally, I would like to touch on the comment of the Privacy Commissioner. I believe that the test that she has presented actually illustrates what the problem with this bill is as opposed to the solution.

The thing that I would like to say is that this is legislating on social issues. There's no question about it. This is a bill that does nothing substantive except to roll back protections on GSAs. It does nothing else of substance. To call it anything but legislating against social issues would be entirely misleading.

I think the first piece that I'd like to discuss is the concept of what a right is. It's important to recognize that if someone in fact has a right, that right imposes obligations on the people around you. In law school they talk about differentiating between a liberty and a right. They do this in ethics as well. The point here is that in the absence of an obligation imposed on someone else, if your right doesn't force someone else to have to respect it, it isn't really a right. In this case that's exactly what the problem is.

We're saying: oh, students have a right to form a GSA, but no one has the obligation to allow them to do that. Well, that's not really a right. In order for it to be a right, when a student stands up and says, "I want to form a GSA," they have to be allowed to do that, and they have to be allowed to do it immediately. If the school is allowed to wait, if the school is allowed to delay, if the school is allowed to deny, if the school is allowed to question the student multiple times on whether that's really what they intend to do, or if they're allowed to force the student to make a different sort of club, that's not really a right. What this bill does is that it takes what would have been a right to form a GSA, and it transforms it into a liberty to form a GSA, that folks can have if they happen to want one.

I think another thing to acknowledge here is that the intention of these clubs is to prevent bullying. They are there so that students can seek the support of their peers so that at a time in their life when they're potentially very vulnerable, when they're struggling with their identity in the most fundamental sense, they have people they can turn to that make them feel safe and protected and heard. In that time when they are vulnerable, if other people are less than charitable and less than accepting about that vulnerability, they have people they can turn to to rely on for support. That's critical. We know that that's critical at any moment in your life when you're struggling with something.

The idea that when legitimate questions are asked about a government that is removing the right of a student, students who are afraid of bullying – that that itself is labelled as bullying I just think is absurd on a level that's almost impossible to comprehend. The idea that calling a legitimate question or a legitimate policy debate bullying and trying to put it into that category is just so deeply offensive to anyone who has ever actually been bullied.

4:40

I think, again, that the idea that standing up for someone else's rights is bullying – I mean, there's a lot of misunderstanding out there in the world about what constitutes bullying. But I think it's pretty clear that if you're talking about a group of people who have all the power – and in this case we're talking about the government. The government has a significant amount of power. They can legislate. They can regulate. They can do a lot of things to affect people around them. Saying that asking the government a question is bullying and that it's somehow on par with what happens to a youth who is in a school who is potentially being pushed into a locker, who is being called names, who is being told horrible things by their peers just boggles the mind. The fact that ministers would be so insensitive as to equate them being questioned with what happens to those youth is shocking to me.

I will say this again. This is legislating on social issues. That's exactly what it is. The government can't get its ducks in a row on a series of fronts. They can't figure out a budget, but they can legislate on social issues, and it has to happen immediately.

I think another thing worth commenting on is the recent ruling of the Privacy Commissioner, because I think it was unhelpful in the deepest sense. Essentially what the Privacy Commissioner has said is: here's a long list of choose-your-own-adventure tests that a student can use to enforce their rights. Well, Madam Speaker, that's absurd. I think probably the most obvious problem with that is when a parent comes forward to a teacher and asks them directly, "Has my child joined a GSA?" and the teacher says, "Pardon me while I get a legal opinion." That's probably going to out the student right there. I think the idea that it's anything but that is absurd. What this needs is a simple rule. The simple rule should be: don't out the student. If you need to perform some sort of analysis after that, fine. But the idea that if a parent comes forward, they're told, "Oh, hang on while I get a legal opinion," or "Hang on while I engage in this long and complicated analysis" – the outing has occurred. This is incredibly unhelpful.

In addition, the test relies on a reasonableness test. Probably close to half of the volume of civil court cases is actually people arguing over whether things are reasonable because most things in law have a reasonableness test. Reasonableness is defined over and over and over again. It's in all sorts of different tests. The ink that has been spilled describing what reasonableness is is incredibly extensive. This is not helpful to students because the problem is that you can always have a valid argument that it was reasonable. It doesn't even require that someone at the school be intentionally trying to be difficult. Someone doesn't have to be trying to fit their view into a definition of reasonableness. They could simply be confused.

That's very, very problematic because we're then leaving ourselves in a position where we're litigating after the fact something that's already – I mean, if that student really is in an unsafe situation, they're long since kicked out of their house. They're long since living on the street. They're long since a young person fighting for their very survival. We're ruling for the Privacy Commissioner two and a half years later? I mean, it's just not going to help. Basically, I think my problem with this is that it implies that there is a clear test when, in fact, there isn't. All one needs to do is look at what the Privacy – it's two pages long. It's got multiple components, none of which are clearly defined. It's not a test that's going to be helpful to a young person.

I think the other thing worth noting on this file is that there's no reason to do this. That's what troubles me the most about it. This sort of weak justification has been advanced about the Education Act, except that the actual legislation doesn't do anything. I think my colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud has laid that out in excruciating detail.

The truth is that all this does substantively is impact GSAs. It's nothing but an attempt to remove rights from individuals who are young and therefore less able to stand up for themselves, who are potentially in vulnerable situations and therefore less able to stand up for themselves. It is, in my view, the very definition of bullying. It takes advantage of someone who has lesser power in society. I think the fact that in its very first legislative session this government that promised Albertans that they would not legislate on social issues has done exactly that is deeply troubling to me.

I think with that, Madam Speaker, I will move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 12 Royalty Guarantee Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 12, the Royalty Guarantee Act.

This legislation is an important step in strengthening investment stability in Alberta. There have been several royalty reviews in recent years, Madam Speaker, and these reviews have reaffirmed that royalty rates in Alberta are competitive with other energy jurisdictions. But the reviews themselves have also had negative impacts on investor confidence and our province's ability to compete with other jurisdictions. Industry needs certainty and stability, and without this guarantee, Alberta remains at a competitive disadvantage. Through this bill we are recommending an approach that would guarantee no major changes to the oil and gas royalty structure for at least 10 years.

We will also be guaranteeing that once a well starts producing, it won't be subject to a royalty change for the majority of its lifespan. This guarantee would apply to oil sands oil along with hydrocarbon natural gas. The bill would ensure that the basic structures of our royalty system would remain in place while preserving the ability for regular adjustments, like setting monthly par prices. The existing structure rules and processes would provide industry and government with the ability to address significant market and technology changes while providing stability for investors. To implement this guarantee, we recommend amending the Mines and Minerals Act, which will allow for the use of existing regulatory powers, eliminating the need for new legislation and more red tape.

Madam Speaker, we know that investors can lose faith in a jurisdiction if there is uncertainty surrounding regulations and royalties, which is exactly what happened in Alberta in recent years under the NDP government. Investment literally fled the province, leaving us with nearly 200,000 unemployed oil and gas workers. This legislation is part of a suite of measures designed to let the world know that Alberta is open for business and designed to attract investment back to this province.

I hope that all members will support me in moving forward with Bill 12. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

With that, I would also move to adjourn debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, before we deal with the motion, just to clarify, you moved second reading in the opening of your speech?

Mrs. Savage: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

4:50

Bill 11 Fair Registration Practices Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act.

This bill will ensure that regulated professions and individuals applying for registration by regulated professions are governed by practices that are transparent, objective, impartial, and fair. This legislation will, first, remove unfair barriers to the full economic inclusion of new Albertans and foreign-trained Albertans while maintaining the high professional standards that Albertans have come to know and expect; second, ensure fairness in the registration process of foreign-trained individuals who wish to work in the regulated professions and designated trades; and, finally, it will contribute to the outcomes of Alberta's foreign qualification recognition plan, help to build on the existing FQR initiatives, and allow Alberta to benefit from the skills that newcomers bring to the province. This legislation will also apply to trades designated under the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act. The proposed legislation is part of our plan to bring jobs and economic growth back to Alberta.

Newcomers are important to our province, and they should be able to fully contribute to the economy. Underemployment causes unnecessary stress for immigrant families when their education and skills are not being used to their full potential, and this problem also represents a significant loss of productivity for the Albertan economy. By removing unfair barriers and maintaining Alberta's high professional standards, the economy will benefit from maximizing productivity and innovation from newcomers.

Now I will make some comments concerning the scope and application of the act. This act will apply to regulated designated trades, regulated nonhealth professions, and regulated health professions. The scope and application of the legislation is to all regulatory bodies outlined in schedules 1 and 2 of Bill 11. In schedule 1 we have included the regulatory bodies that provide registration and licensing for individuals entering the occupation. This is an extensive list to ensure that everyone who applies for registration and licensing in a regulated occupation is treated fairly and equitably. Schedule 2 covers all the government of Alberta ministries that provide registration and licensing, and you will notice that this goes beyond the Department of Advanced Education and the Department of Education. This comprehensive list will ensure transparency and reassure the public that occupations regulated by our government are subject to the same expectations as external regulatory bodies.

It will also include a paramountcy clause stating that where this act and subsequent regulations conflict with the provisions of another act or regulation, this act or the regulation made under this act will prevail. This is similar to legislation in Ontario and Manitoba.

I will now speak to roles and responsibilities as outlined in the act. Through this act we will create a fair registration practices office with oversight from the Minister of Labour and Immigration. The minister will be responsible for all matters under the act, including issuing fines and compliance orders. The minister can delegate specific responsibilities under the act to a Public Service Act employee through regulation, but the legislation will refer to the minister.

Now on to the legislation structure. A fair registration practices code is included in the act. It outlines the general and specific duties that constitute fair registration. These specific duties include:

information provision; timely decisions, responses, and reasons; internal review processes; documentation on qualifications and assessment of qualifications; training; and access to records. For reference, legislation in Ontario, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia also have fair registration practices codes.

This legislation will include specific provisions in the act to allow regulatory organizations to accept alternative information when making registration decisions where circumstances warrant. We have heard from foreign-trained professionals that circumstances have arisen where they were not able to provide documentation such as a university transcript due to civil unrest in the country where they were educated. Examples of alternative information can include letters of reference or an extensive resumé that can be challenged and evaluated via competency-based examinations.

Under the act a regulated profession shall, first, ensure that it makes an interim registration decision within six months from the time all the required information is received from an applicant – and I note that final registration decisions must be made within a reasonable time frame from the time all the necessary information is provided – second, provide written responses to applicants within a reasonable time; and, third, provide written reasons to applicants within a reasonable time in respect of all registration decisions and internal review or appeal decisions.

In addition, a regulatory body shall make information publicly available on what documentation of qualifications must accompany an application, and where documentation cannot be obtained by an applicant for reasons beyond the applicant's control, advise the applicant what alternative information may be supplied by the applicant that may be acceptable to the regulating body where possible.

There will also be provisions requiring a regulated profession to provide an internal review of or appeal concerning its registration decisions within a reasonable time frame. The act specifies that applicants should have an opportunity to make submissions orally, in writing, or by electronic means. In addition, the internal review or appeal process should not be conducted by persons who made the original decision.

The minister will have the authority to create different classes of regulated professions to impose different requirements, conditions, or restrictions related to this act. If needed, classes would be created by operational policy. The legislation in Ontario and Manitoba also allows this authority and provides greater flexibility.

In addition, it is designated in the act that regulatory bodies are required to provide a report to the minister in the form and with the content prescribed by the minister, provide any additional information requested, and conduct any audits as directed by the minister related to the compliance with the act and regulations. Existing annual reports can be modified to address these requirements.

The minister will also be able to issue compliance orders following consultations with the regulatory body to compel the body to provide the minister with the information deemed necessary to administer the act. Before issuing a compliance order, the minister must provide a detailed notice to the regulatory body and an opportunity for the body to make written submissions.

This act would prescribe a fine for an individual or a body who provides misleading or false information, fails to comply with orders made by the minister, obstructs the minister from performing their duties, or fails to co-operate with a required audit. Persons guilty of the offence are subject to a fine of not more than $25,000 or in the case of a corporation or regulatory body a fine of not more than $50,000.

The act will designate that the minister and any employee of the fair registration practices office may not be involved with influencing individual registration decisions or providing advice or representation to individuals related to individual registration decisions, including internal review and appeal processes. The timing of the review of the act will be subject to the discretion of the minister.

This legislation is similar to that in Ontario, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia as it includes the ability of the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations pertaining to the execution and administration of the act, including the delegation of specific responsibilities that are housed with the minister. While we have studied legislation in other provinces and included similar aspects in this act, Bill 11, please note that the legislation is very much designed for Alberta's specific needs.

The last section I will speak to is the fair registration practices office. This office will reduce the red tape associated with the assessment of foreign credentials and ensure that registration practices are transparent, objective, impartial, and fair. The office, under the minister's oversight, will be responsible for providing information and advice to regulated professions to help them understand requirements under the act. It will also be responsible for reviewing registration practices of regulated professions to make recommendations to regulated professions about how to improve their own compliance and be responsible for advising regulated professions, government agencies, community organizations, postsecondary educational institutions, and third parties about matters under the act.

Advising government departments about matters under this act that may affect the department or a regulated profession for which the minister of that department is responsible will also include reporting to the minister on registration practices related to internationally educated individuals and their registration by regulated professions, advising the minister on matters related to the administration of the act, and, finally, performing any other functions provided for in the regulations.

Instead of creating an access centre, we will establish quality electronic information sources to assist internationally trained individuals seeking licensure.

The Fair Registration Practices Act will come into force upon proclamation.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, our goal is to get all Albertans back to work, including newcomers. I recognize that some newcomer professionals do not yet have the education or skills to meet Alberta's high professional standards. However, the experience of many highly trained immigrant professionals suggests that some professional and trades regulators have unnecessarily complex procedures for licensure, which can sometimes cause professionals to spend years jumping through regulatory hoops while their skills atrophy. This legislation will remedy that problem. Bill 11 is an important part of our efforts to restore the Alberta advantage and ensure fairness for newcomers. It exemplifies our government's commitment to economic growth, job creation, and cutting red tape.

Thank you.

5:00

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to provide some comments and analysis on Bill 11 here this afternoon, the Fair Registration Practices Act. You know, I'm very pleased to see this direction happening here in the province of Alberta, and I just wanted to provide, perhaps, a little bit of background for members and for the general public to know the evolution of this idea and how our caucus together with the government will work hard to try to ensure that people with credentials from outside of the province of Alberta and outside of Canada can have a fair assessment of their credentials so that they can work to the full potential to which they are trained.

You know, the basic concept, I think, is around fairness. We know that there are quite strict criteria, say, to immigrate to Canada from other countries. The criterion by which people can enter Canada is a points system, and a lot of that points system is oriented towards a person's education backgrounds and their credentials and what they can offer to their new home, in this case in Alberta. It's the height of irony that, really, the way by which an individual is admitted into Canada as a permanent resident and then as a citizen is through education, yet when that person does get into our province and into the country, those same credentials that allowed them to immigrate to Canada are not being recognized on a professional level. Thus, that person is not working to their full potential.

I know that this is not an easy process, but it's really encouraging to see that beginning of engagement to look for fair registration practices here in the province of Alberta, that we're starting down that path. Of course, what I think precipitated this – I mean, this is a discussion that we've all had in our constituencies and with the people that live in each of our constituencies because this has been an ongoing problem for a long time, right? Everyone knows the stories of the medical doctor who's driving a taxi or the petroleum engineer that's working at Tim Hortons and so forth. This has been an ongoing challenge that I think needs more formal sort of action by governments across the country.

About three years ago we started the process of taking action against racism, and I was charged to build a plan for the province of Alberta by which we could tackle racism, foster acceptance, and promote inclusion. One of the issues that came up in my travels around the province of Alberta consulting on what actions we should take to promote acceptance and foster inclusion was foreign credentials and fair registration of those credentials that people bring into our province. We heard it over and over again.

You know, I did form a taskforce, a group to work on these same issues just before the last election. Again, this was one of the issues that rose to the top – right? – in terms of taking action against racism with the antiracism group that we had. I think that during the election we saw how things move very quickly and people make sure that they are at least meeting or trying to exceed some good ideas so that they can have them as part of their platform.

I saw, lo and behold, this same concept pop up onto the UCP platform. You know, I was actually very pleased to see that because, of course, we have it covered both ways then, with the government and the opposition both pushing for fair registration and the recognition of foreign credentials, using our combined forces for good, and that's kind of where we're at today.

I guess my observations from the antiracism work that we were doing as the government of Alberta and now looking at this bill is that I think that the biggest focus is to make sure that you're building good relations with each of the professional organizations that exist here in the province of Alberta, that we want to allow some more latitude or discussion of the recognition of foreign credentials. You have a list of organizations that would be covered and it's extensive. It's quite ambitious. My experience, quite frankly, trying to introduce this idea of the recognition of foreign credentials is that sometimes you can run into some resistance with professional organizations that want to maintain a certain number of their professionals in any given field, and they try to set up a quota or they want to protect their lists of their membership.

You know, you have to be very diplomatic around those things because, of course, when any given group – like, you have the paramedics here, pharmacy, social workers, architects, landscape architects, Boilers Safety Association, the Insurance Council, veterinarians. There's got to be probably about 50 or 60 different groups on this list. You want them to be working together with you to ensure that we are maintaining the highest standards for any of those professional organizations so that Albertans cannot be somehow compromised with the delivery of the Professional Outfitters Society or the Alberta Securities Commission or the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association.

We want to maintain or exceed the standards that are set currently by each of these organizations, and we want to make sure that we maintain an open-door dialogue with those professional organizations every step of the way because, of course, you're introducing – there are people that might have the credentials to be a medical diagnostic and therapeutic technologist from another jurisdiction. You want to make sure that that person is being recognized and being respected for that training that they might have received in a different province or a different country, but you also want to make sure you're respecting the standard by which we expect those professionals in agrology or biology and assessors, forest management professionals – I mean the list goes on – to maintain the standard which we expect here in the province of Alberta in regard to those professions as well.

We know that, Madam Speaker, to ensure diversity and a strong economy, you want to make sure that people are trained and are working to the fullest potential of their ability, of their professional training, and of their capacity to contribute to the economy to help themselves and their family and to help to pay taxes and be part of the larger provincial community. We have to be careful as well because there will be naysayers around this saying: "Well, you know, we have high unemployment already. Why should we be introducing more of these biologists or dental technologists or speech language pathologists or what have you?" But the point is that when you build the pie, just like an economy, you make it larger and you build the economy, too. It's not like just a finite amount of jobs that people are competing for. That's a reductive view of things. But by using the full potential of your population and the workforce that they represent, you will build the economy.

People immigrate to Alberta. Alberta is a very strong place for people to move from other parts of the country and other parts of the world as well. Even during an economic downturn our economy is much more highly functional with higher wages and so forth than most parts of Canada, and vastly more than most parts of the world as well. People want to come here and we want to recognize them for the potential and the training and the expertise that they bring with them. Having those credentials recognized helps to build the economy, helps to diversify the economy. I think those are all things that we value, hopefully, on both sides of the House here.

5:10

We know that if, you know, people are moving here and they're not working to their full potential, then that's not just an economic loss; that's a loss of human dignity – right? – and a loss of feeling confident about oneself and for themselves and for their families as well. I think that we owe it to Albertans. We have the youngest population in the country. We have the highest level of training, I think, in the country, arguably, and we can see it reflected in our schools, which are growing quickly. We have a very fast enrolment growth, I would say the highest in the country. People are having families here. There's a sense of hope and optimism that carried through even during the economic downturn. People have moved here from all over the place and brought with them tremendous training and experience that we should be recognizing and using and contributing to to help to build a stronger province.

Yeah. We can talk about this. There's lots of regulation, I think, that's going to be a challenge, let's say. You know, it's a problem, but it's a challenge that we can overcome. It's a complicated introduction, but setting down the path for setting up a fair registration practice here in the province of Alberta is an awesome start. I certainly was there to do this in the last government. We put in the foreign qualification recognition fund with our government. We put this as a keystone part of our taking action against racism, and I'm glad to see this concept moving into this 30th Legislature, where hopefully we can achieve some positive good.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and offer my thoughts on Bill 11. I certainly want to thank the minister of labour for bringing this forward and, of course, the Member for Edmonton-North West for his comments. In particular I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-North West for the good work that he did while Minister of Education overseeing the work of the antiracism council and the work that he did jointly with the minister of labour at the time, now the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, for the work they did in creating the foreign qualifications recognition innovation fund that he mentioned.

There are a couple of things that concern me about this bill, and, you know, this is a common theme in this session, Madam Speaker, that the bill is making an appearance of doing something while not actually achieving much in relation to what they want to say. You know, the Member for Calgary-Varsity introduced an open for business act that actually just picked workers' pockets. The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti is talking about creating businesses by offering corporate tax cuts. Well, that's just going to make shareholders wealthier and do nothing to create jobs, Madam Speaker.

I think we have something similar here with this Fair Registration Practices Act. We are creating another government office that will busy itself poking its nose into places that it doesn't really have any business poking its nose and probably won't streamline the process of recognizing foreign credentials in any significant way.

You know, Madam Speaker, there are a couple of different specific tacks I want to take in my comments. I want to make some comments with respect to recognition of trades because in my time as Advanced Education minister, of course, I oversaw the Alberta apprenticeship system, so I have some familiarity with that system, and I have to say that in all of my years in that position I never once had skilled tradespeople come to me and tell me that we needed to make it easier for skilled tradespeople to come and practice here in Alberta. In fact, there were thousands of unemployed electricians, unemployed carpenters, unemployed welders who were concerned that maybe the value of their trade ticket that they got here in Alberta was being diluted by people who were holding themselves out to be qualified in those trades when, in fact, they weren't and were practising those trades illegally.

In my time as Advanced Education minister I directed the department to crack down on the illegal use of people who were holding themselves out to be members of the trades but who didn't actually have tickets. I have to say that we met with some success. In the skilled trades, Madam Speaker, we found a lot of people who were practising trades when they, in fact, had no qualifications to do so. Certainly, the skilled tradespeople that I interacted with were thankful for that. It gave the people who had recognized qualifications the ability to go back to work. Of course, when people who aren't qualified to practise that work are not allowed to do that work, then people who are allowed to do that work will have an easier time finding a job.

I have to say that in my discussions with tradespeople from all across Alberta, they certainly had some questions around whether or not qualifications that were granted in other jurisdictions, even within Canada, were equivalent to our own. Alberta leads the country when it comes to the training of people in the certified trades and occupations. Our trades training system is recognized as one of the best in the world, Madam Speaker, and we want to be able to uphold that standard by making sure that everybody who is practising those trades meets our own standards. So when people come from other jurisdictions in the country or from other countries who don't meet those standards, they shouldn't be allowed to work until they can demonstrate that they meet those standards.

I think that if I heard any criticisms of the apprenticeship system, it was that maybe we didn't do a good enough job of assessing the qualifications of people from outside of the province. Certainly, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board is engaged in that process, Madam Speaker. The ministry is engaged in that process. We don't need a fair registration practices office poking its nose into the Ministry of Advanced Education, telling welders how they should evaluate other welders or telling electricians how they should evaluate other electricians or telling carpenters how to evaluate other carpenters. The people in the Ministry of Advanced Education and on the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board are more than qualified to do that work already.

I don't think there's any additional value to be found in creating a fair registration practices office with people whose qualifications are unknown at this point. We don't know whether or not they can add any value to the registration processes that already exist. I would urge the members opposite to maybe reconsider using this as a way to improve the registration of people who want to work in the trades in Alberta and to perhaps just review the existing ministry procedures and the work of the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board to see if there are some internal efficiencies that could be found.

Now, it is without question, Madam Speaker, that there are times when people with foreign credentials in the trades are needed in Alberta, and the ministry has worked quite hard to identify those. In fact, every so often Alberta goes to Ireland to recruit welders, in particular, to come and work on short-term projects that require welders. We've had a long-standing relationship with the trades system in Ireland. It has worked very well. It has served the needs of the people of Alberta for a long time.

If we are looking to expand the reach of those programs, then it's not the creation of a fair registration practices office that will do that. It's actually the Minister of Advanced Education's office that will seek to identify other countries around the world where we could come up with agreements on equivalent trades qualifications, and we could have similar situations, where we could go to other countries and import for the short term people to come and work in the skilled trades whenever we have a skilled labour shortage in the future.

5:20

Now, I would recommend to the members opposite that that would probably be a better way, if we identify skilled trade shortages, to do that work: send people from the Ministry of Advanced Education to identify trades training systems around the world that are equivalent to our own and prequalify them so that they can come to work in Alberta on a short-term basis on relatively quick notice. That would meet the needs of industry much better than a fair registration practices office and would certainly be a much more efficient system than the one that's created here.

The other concern that I have is government poking its nose into areas where it doesn't belong, and that's into the self-regulating professions. It's shocking to me, Madam Speaker, that a party that is supposedly the party of small government is creating an office to extend government's reach into areas it has no business reaching into, and that is the self-regulating professions.

I am not familiar with all of the organizations in schedule 1, but I am certainly very familiar with the Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists of Alberta. I am a nonpractising member of that association. I practised as a geoscientist for a number of years prior to my election, and I actually had to go through the process of having my foreign credentials certified by that association because I was trained in Germany.

Now, it was not an easy process, Madam Speaker. It did take a long time. However, I was able to work as a geoscientist while I was waiting for my credentials to be assessed. They assessed me on a number of exams that I had to write to prove the equivalency of my qualifications. At the end of it all, I was able to satisfy the association that I had the qualifications to practise as a geoscientist here in Alberta. I was able to get my stamp and be able to hold myself out as a professional geoscientist here in the province of Alberta.

I understand that it's a frustrating process for a lot of people to go through. However, you know, in the case of the Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists it's up to them and it's up to their peers to decide what the fair registration process is and what qualifications an engineer or a geoscientist needs to be able to practise engineering or geoscience here in the province of Alberta. That's the whole premise upon which self-regulation of professions is built.

I am very concerned about a couple of sections of this act, and hopefully somebody from the opposite side can speak to these concerns if I have misplaced them. I'm looking at the bill here. Under Powers and Duties of the Minister, section 10(1):

- (b) for the purposes of determining compliance with this Act and the regulations, review the registration and assessment practices of regulatory bodies, including the use of third parties to assess the qualifications of applicants.

Madam Speaker, on the face of it, it certainly looks like this bill gives the power to the minister to go into the Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists of Alberta and tell them what their registration practices should be and tell them what qualifies a person to become an engineer or a geoscientist in the province of Alberta. Now, if that's not the intent of the bill, then perhaps we can amend it so that it makes it clear that we're only monitoring the activities of the associations and that we're not actually going to dictate to them the qualifications that the associations must have in order to qualify somebody to be a member of that association.

I am also very concerned, Madam Speaker, about the regulations. Under section 23(1) the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations . . .

- (c) respecting additional powers, duties and functions of the Minister.

Now, this kind of clause comes up quite frequently in legislation. I can recall a number of occasions when we introduced legislation with this very clause or something similar. Of course, the members opposite would express their concerns that this clause gives the minister quite significant powers. I must echo those concerns and wonder openly about the kinds of additional powers, duties, and functions that the minister is seeking for himself in this case. Again, we're opening the door to the Member for Calgary-Varsity, or whoever the minister of the day will be, poking their nose into the regulation of self-regulating professions when that's not the case, Madam Speaker.

You know, I understand that the registration procedures for self-regulating professions are not easy to go through, that there are a number of hoops that people have to go through, but we also have to understand that these professions have decided among a group of their peers what the qualifications are that a person needs to meet to become a member of that association, to work in that profession, and it's agreed upon by all of those people in that profession that those are the minimum qualifications.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Who are we as the government to tell members of that profession what qualifications their members need to have in order to become a member of that association? I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that government is not the proper authority for deciding what the qualifications of a member of that association are, that it is up to the members of those bodies themselves.

I hope that we can have those concerns addressed.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see that the Minister of Labour and Immigration has risen.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to just provide a few comments concerning the comments made by the members for Edmonton-North West and Edmonton-Gold Bar.

First of all, I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-North West for, you know, recognizing that this is an issue. He heard about it, in terms of his consultation, as a serious issue that we actually need to address, and this is our first step in addressing it as part of our plan for newcomers to Alberta and part of our Alberta immigration strategy. So I want to thank him for that.

There were a number of questions raised by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I'd like to address just a couple of them for clarification and better understanding concerning the intent behind the bill. One comment, you know, made by the hon. member was that the bill doesn't do much, that there are not a lot of specific or actual details in regard to what is required. The intent of this bill, quite frankly, is as enabling legislation. As both members pointed out, there are well over 60 different professional regulatory bodies we're addressing here. This is not prescriptive legislation. Rather, it's enabling legislation to allow us to work with the regulatory bodies to ensure that their processes are fair, transparent, flexible, and efficient. Right?

One of the issues that we've heard from a number of immigrants is that they come to this country, and quite rightly we invite them in through the federal program. We nominate them because there's a skill shortage in Alberta. We need these skills to grow our economy. They're here because they have that skill set. They make an application to these regulatory bodies, and in certain cases there is no clear path forward. So one thing that this bill does with a great deal of clarity is that at least within the first six months, once they've provided the information and made the application to the regulatory body, they need a path forward, and that regulatory body will provide that path forward. And we do that.

Secondly, they have to have a response once they get the path forward. It's going to be different for every profession and for every individual because every individual will have a different set of experiences. They may have to go write different sets of exams or get more education in a particular area, which is fine and good. The legislation also says that the final decision needs to be rendered within a reasonable time frame. The act sets that out and also the code that all regulatory bodies must follow, and that deals with good governance issues.

I would submit to the hon. member opposite that this legislation, by necessity, isn't prescriptive because of the complexity of all the various different regulatory bodies but actually allows the minister to work with these regulatory bodies to ensure that processes are in place which are fair and transparent, and it requires them to actually have those processes in place.

5:30

The second point I want to deal with is that the hon. member suggests that, you know, government is poking its nose where it doesn't belong, Mr. Speaker. I would like to point out again and to emphasize that these regulatory bodies are creatures of the province. They are established because it's of critical importance that these professions which provide services to all Albertans have the high-level certification and will get it right. We're talking about doctors. We're talking about veterinarians. We're talking about engineers. You don't want bridges falling down. You don't want people getting hurt in the services. They're of critical importance. So these professional regulatory bodies are actually established by the province to ensure the safety of Albertans and that they get the services that they deserve and they expect. So they are creatures of the province.

But we also need to ensure that there's good governance. The intent of this legislation is not to tell these regulatory bodies what the standards are. It is still up to the regulatory body to do that. We're not going to interfere. Actually, there are a number of provisions in the act which say: this is your choice. We don't want to get involved in this as government because, quite frankly, we can't; we don't have the expertise. What we can do and what this bill intends to do is to provide a high-level, overarching framework to ensure that the processes that all these different organizations have are fair and transparent; in essence, follow good governance principles.

We're not new to this game, right? There are other provinces who have done this before – Ontario, Manitoba, Nova Scotia – and we are actually using this as our first step. Our intent is not to tell the regulatory bodies – and we're not doing that – and the regulatory powers that are in the act are not intended to tell them what the standards are but, rather, to ensure that their processes follow good governance principles.

The last thing that I'd like to just comment on and that the hon. member mentioned is section 10(1)(b). Again, the intent is to make sure that the processes are fair, not to tell the organizations what to do, and section 23(1)(c), again, is a standard clause to be able to do that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to speak to Bill 11 at second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity today to rise and speak to Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act. I was very pleased to hear the comments from my colleague the Member for Edmonton-North West, you know, that we do support common-sense legislation. I think we can all agree with that.

My parents were immigrants to this country. They were not covered in the fields of work that are covered under this legislation, but certainly they came at a time when a lot of people immigrated to this country, in 1968, with various skill sets and faced challenges, absolutely, finding work. My mother was actually a teacher in Tanzania before she came. I don't know to what extent she made efforts to teach here in Canada, but she ended up doing completely different work. I know she often regretted that she didn't choose to pursue teaching further in Canada.

Certainly, my life experience: my family is all formed from immigrants. We're all actually immigrants to this country. They've had this experience. This is not an unusual experience, where we've heard about people coming from other countries who have incredible skill sets and that we would all benefit from them being able to contribute to our economy and our workforce in their area of skill and training and education. Actually, I really appreciated the comment that the Member for Edmonton-North West made, which was that it's not just about contributing to the economy but also about self-dignity because I think that's very important, really. I think that's one of the reasons why we've all heard those stories, because it is frustrating for those individuals who have incredible education and have invested a lot of their time in life training and having the skills to not be able to contribute. It's a loss for them as well. I certainly think that this is a good concept in this legislation.

I'm actually willing to indicate that I support this legislation that the government is bringing forward. I was pleased to hear that it is a carry-over or perhaps an extension of work that was begun under the previous government with taking action against racism. The Member for Edmonton-North West spoke very strongly about the work that was done as part of that consultation with many, many Albertans. I note that as part of that process, taking action against racism, the issue of valuing skills and recognizing expertise in the workplace was very much a key part of that consultation. There was definitely messaging that came out of that about how important it is. It is part of an antiracism strategy, that people who come from other countries should be able to have their work valued and their education valued.

I'm pleased to see this legislation come forward. I think it's something that I can support myself. I was actually pleased to see the professional organization that I'm a member of, which is the Law Society of Alberta, and I am still currently an active member of that organization. The law societies – and I'm not going to single out Alberta's – across Canada have historically imposed significant barriers on people being able to practise. Actually, they imposed those barriers even within Canada. It was very difficult for somebody to go from one province to the next and practise law, and we know that there were reasons for that.

The Member for Edmonton-North West spoke about that, about protecting their membership very tightly. In fact, the year that I graduated law school, which was 2004, just prior to that the national mobility agreement was signed between provinces in Canada to allow for even lawyers to go between provinces to practise, and I benefited from that because I was trained in Ontario and was called to the bar in Ontario, but then I was able to come home to Alberta and practise here without significant barriers whereas probably just a year or two prior there would have been significant barriers to my doing that. I would have had to article again. I would have had to do my bar exams all over again. That's just within Canada. That's just my experience there, but I can certainly say that it's a great thing to hear that the Law Society of Alberta would be encouraged – now, I know that there would probably be a lot of people who would say that the last thing we need is more lawyers in the world. Who doesn't love a good lawyer joke? I think it is a good thing for professional bodies to have a process and to have some criteria to consider when approached for qualification by members from outside of Alberta, outside of Canada.

I do take the heed and the caution that I think my colleagues on this side of the House mentioned, which is that it can be very challenging to work with professional organizations. I respect the comments from the Minister of Labour, which is that the intent of this bill is not to interfere in the professional regulatory responsibilities of those bodies, but it is going to a bit, as I'm sure the minister is anticipating. He's sort of saying that this is a first step. I think that is going to be where the challenge is going to lie, between respecting the autonomy and the authority of these professional regulatory bodies to determine their own standards and criteria to make sure that they are fair.

We all have an interest, of course, as well in making sure that the people who are certified and qualified meet certain standards. We all expect that from all of the services that are provided by the individuals who are authorized under these bodies. We all have a value in that, and of course it is the obligation of those professional organizations to make sure that that is upheld. We do need to respect their autonomy and authority to do that; however, in order to make this work, there has to be some kind of oversight, and I think that's what the minister has recognized, that there is a role.

I do actually take the comment from my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. I did think about this, which is that, you know, this is government. If it's not interference, it is certainly oversight into what has traditionally been something that government has stayed hands off of, but I think we can all see that this is an example of a situation where it is appropriate for government to play a role. I think we can agree that there are circumstances where government plays an appropriate role, and I look forward to seeing how this is implemented.

On of the questions that I had when I was reviewing the bill is that I note, of course, that there is certainly no mechanism within this for individuals to complain. I certainly don't see that this legislation is establishing in any way that the minister or – and I'm going to say the name wrong – the fair registration practices office will hear individual complaints from people stating that the professional body did not assess their qualifications in a timely manner.

Meanwhile, I defer to the Minister of Labour to perhaps correct me if I'm wrong, but it does not appear that there is an obligation on the professional bodies to report to the minister. To me a bit of the question lies with: how do we determine whether or not the professional organizations are complying? I mean, really, whenever we're talking about legislation – and, you know, not all legislation, not all areas that are covered by legislation require strict enforcement provisions. But a question that arose for me as I was reviewing the bill was: how do we determine whether or not the requirements for these professional organizations to assess qualifications for individuals within a timely manner and to have an appeal process – how do we confirm that that's actually being carried out? There are 60 organizations here. There is no duty to report on behalf of the professional – I do not see one – to the minister or to the office. There's no individual complaint process to the minister or to the fair registration practices office. I guess my question is going to be: how will we know how effective this process and this legislation will be?

5:40

Certainly, we see that part of the platform – and I think that's perhaps one of the reasons for the establishment of the associate ministry of red tape reduction. The government is intent on making sure that where we have legislation, where we have regulations, it is being enforced, it is useful, it is effective, and it is not simply red tape. The question I have about this one is: how will we know that that is happening? I'm not saying, by any means, that I think there should be individual complaint processes. I'm posing the question more than anything else. I do see that the minister has the authority to review the registration and assessment practices of regulatory bodies. That provision I think is in section 10 of the act. But I'm wondering what would trigger that review. How would the minister know that there is a review if there's no acceptance of individual complaints or there's no duty to report, which would raise an alarm or raise question marks for the minister? That's a question I have.

Of course, it is not the job of this House. Unfortunately, we do not review regulations in this body. But as I mentioned in my comments on another government bill, Bill 8, quite often the meat and bones and the devil are in the details. Details are not always bad. Regulations are not always bad. But, you know, I think we're venturing into uncharted waters a little bit here.

The substance of those regulations will be important to how this is actually executed. I think we'd all be interested in knowing what those regulations are and how they're developed and who's been consulted on that. Again, the reference has been made to the delicate dance that's sometimes done between professional bodies and government. I imagine that those professional organizations will want an opportunity to weigh in on the regulations in particular. Of course, with so many bodies, you know, some of them more sophisticated than others in terms of their organization and advocacy – just a fair opportunity for them to raise their questions and comments.

I'm not sure yet whether the minister has indicated – and my apologies, Minister, if you had mentioned this. I'm not sure if you've received feedback from professional bodies in response to the introduction of this legislation, if your sense is that they are supportive or at least understanding of the purposes and intent and are, you know, onboard with compliance. I mean, I understand that when legislation is established, they will be expected to comply no matter what, but certainly their feedback with respect to the impact on their organization – maybe for some of them it will not be difficult to comply with this. For some of them it might be that it is or that maybe they simply don't even get a lot of applications from individuals who need their certification assessed.

For some of them I can imagine this will be a substantial amount of work. I'm not familiar with, say, as an example, what the timeline for the College of Physicians & Surgeons right now would be and the timeline that's now in the legislation. How significant of a difference is that? You know, is this going to significantly impact what they're currently doing? I'd be interested to know what the feedback has been from some of these organizations on this. Going back to that comment of the right balance, the more resistant organizations might be, the more challenging it will be to enforce this.

I mean, overall I think I can say that I look forward to seeing what the regulations will look like on this legislation. As a child of immigrants myself and somebody who has a lot of people in my family and circle of friends who are highly qualified and have come to this country – and I think that's the case for a lot of my constituents as well. I can say that. I think that any opportunities that we have to value and recognize the skills of the people who have come to this country, who have often worked very hard to come to this country and to this province to work, to value those skills and education and put them to work not only for the value it brings to our economy but to their human dignity, that is incredibly important.

I'm optimistic, and I'm hopeful that this legislation will be effective. These are just some questions I have. I'd like to say thank you for the opportunity to speak to this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The Minister of Labour and Immigration has risen to make a brief question or comment.

Mr. Copping: I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for her comments. Also, she raised a number of questions, and I'd like to try to address that as part of this right now.

I agree that, you know, there is a huge range, looking at the number of regulatory bodies. Some are highly sophisticated, and quite frankly they are doing this already. So this will be no change. There are others who tend to be, actually, a lot smaller, who don't have the resources and may require some work for this.

In terms of the timing the intent behind the proclamation is that we're not going to proclaim this until we've had an opportunity to have detailed conversations with all the regulatory bodies. The intent is that by the end of this year we have the conversation, but we fully expect – the key requirement is that they have their processes in place or at least they're en route to get the processes in place that are fair and impartial – that they actually hit that, you know, six-month interim deadline or at least a minimum of six months. That six months is actually common in other codes, and our understanding is that most are hitting that right now because there are certain organizations already that provide in their annual reports reporting on these types of issues, right?

I just want to go to a couple of other issues that you asked for concerning feedback from regulatory bodies. The feedback in the main has generally been very positive. When we announced this, we had a town hall. All the regulatory bodies were invited. I don't know the exact number, but there were, like, 40 to 50 that were on the call. They indicated their support with this, that this is the right direction and that they want to actually work with us to do that. That's what this enabling legislation does. It provides an opportunity for the fair registration practices office to work with all the organizations to make sure that these processes are in place.

You asked the question in regard to: well, where is it in the act that gives us the power to do a couple of things, like, for example, with appeals? Now, you're right; the fair registration practices office is not a complaint office. However, the act does, in item 7, require that each organization, regulatory body, has an internal review or appeal process and that it must be a third party, it must be a clear process. But it's not the fair registration practices office making the decision; it's still the body because they are the ones who actually have to apply it. But they need to have a clear process that's fair. If you don't like the decision that they made, you can actually appeal that.

Then if you actually go to item 17, the report to the minister, regulatory bodies are required to report. I'll be tabling – actually, I will not be. On my behalf Mr. Speaker will be tabling a number of annual reports over the next few weeks, and you'll actually see in them that they'll actually say: these are the number of applications made, these were what was rejected, these are the appeals that were done, and here's what the outcome of the appeals was. Not all of them have it, but a number of them have it in their reports. We will require that through the act they actually report on this so we can actually understand that.

Then, well, how do you make sure? The next question, which is a good question, which I'm sure you would ask if you had the mic right now, is: okay; how do we make sure that they were actually reporting this stuff, right? Well, then you go back to item 16, which is audit powers for the fair registration practices office to actually go in and audit and do this.

But, again, you're right. There is a dance here. My expectation and the expectation of the office is that the regulatory bodies are largely in support of this, and they actually see the benefit not only for themselves but for the entire economy. They want to work with us to do that. Then our first step will be a conversation with them: what's working, what's not working, try to put that in place. Then we proclaim it. Ongoing reporting: some will be perfectly fine and doing it very well, and others we may have to use more extensive involvement orders, hopefully not fines. We may have to go down that road, but our sense is, you know, that we're not going to start there. We're going to start at the very front, which is, "Where are you at? Let's do the reporting. Let's work together to make this happen for the benefit of the society, for the immigrants," which, you noted, is critically important, "and for all Albertans and the economy."

Thanks very much for your questions.

The Speaker: We are still on 29(2)(a). If anyone would like to make a question or comment on 29(2)(a), there's about a minute left.

Ms Pancholi: I would just like to thank the minister of labour for the feedback. It's a breath of fresh air to be able to actually engage constructively on some of the legislation. It has not been the case so far, so I'd like to thank the minister of labour for his forthcoming responses.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? We're on 29(2)(a) still. There are approximately 30 seconds left.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has risen to speak to the main bill.

5:50

Member Ceci: Thank you for the opportunity to address Bill 11, and thank you to the members for Edmonton-Gold Bar and Edmonton-North West and, indeed, Edmonton-Whitemud for their review of this bill and discussion with you, Mr. Minister. I can see the benefit of the Fair Registration Practices Act, especially with regard to many new Canadians that come to Canada looking for an opportunity to participate in their chosen professions and find it challenging from time to time to wind their way through the myriad of regulations, that sometimes they have to when they go to one of the colleges.

I guess I would have a couple questions that hopefully the minister will have an opportunity to address. What does he anticipate from the feedback from listening and sharing with the 40 or 50 colleges and regulatory bodies with regard to their dues or fees? Have they given him any indication that those might be going up as a result of the additional requirements that are identified in the fair registration practices code? For instance, right now I think the last time I paid social work dues to the Alberta College of Social Workers, it was about $500, and I'm not sure exactly how they go through and evaluate the qualifications of social workers from other provinces and other countries to essentially allow those social workers to challenge registration and become professionally accredited in this province. But I wonder if there would be a concern that was brought forward with regard to the colleges and regulatory bodies across the province with regard to their dues going up as a result of this and if the province is addressing that in any fashion.

Also, I can wonder if this is the full extent of colleges and regulatory bodies in the province. I think the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud said that there were 60 here. I didn't count them all, but I wonder if there are any that are currently in Alberta and self-regulating that have been left out. It doesn't look like it in the main, but I may be wrong.

With regard to something like Horse Racing Alberta I just wonder why that's here as well. I'm not sure who's being regulated in that regard.

Those would be some questions that I could see needing to be answered in advance of voting on this, but as I heard my colleagues and from your explanation, I think it is beneficial for there to be clear processes for newcomers and others who want to work in their profession. I think there is a great amount of capacity that's underutilized as a result of people not being able to work in their profession.

I do know that if it's clearer and people approach their regulatory body, it may address some of the perhaps unrealistic expectations some individuals have when they have approached me and others saying that, you know, they could do this job, but clearly they may not have the qualifications that are identified in these regulatory bodies to do the job. So they could get that feedback sooner instead of holding on to that hope when it is possible they may need additional education, additional time to upgrade their skills before they actually practise. But many people hold on to the hope of working in their professions, and I think anything that clears that avenue up for them to get that feedback in a clear way is not a bad thing to do.

Maybe I'll just stop there. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Copping: I'd like thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for his comments. Just in terms of feedback there have been no concerns raised at this point in time from a fee standpoint. As indicated before in my earlier remarks, a lot of the organizations are doing this already. Some may need some assistance in terms of the proper management, in terms of what processes are put in place, and that's what the purpose of the office will do.

On your couple of other questions I'll have to get back to you. Thank you.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else on Standing Order 29(2)(a) that would like to make a brief question or comment?

Seeing none, is there anyone wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Opposition House Leader has risen.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act. It's no surprise, I'm sure, to members of the Assembly that I have a similar opinion to many of my colleagues that have preceded me today. I want to start off by thanking the hon. minister for jumping up and addressing questions. I know that often it doesn't happen in second reading. It's easier to do in Committee of the Whole, but I appreciate him taking the time to give some thoughtful responses to the questions that my colleagues are proposing.

I, too, you know, recognize the fact that immigrants have made incredible contributions to our province. They make incredible sacrifices, and quite frankly I don't think our province would function without the support of immigrants that come to Alberta. We know that we're, I believe, one of the youngest provinces in the country, one of the fastest growing provinces, and that's been the case for a number of years. So I appreciate that I often hear, from constituents who have come from all over, talk about the frustration with trying to get their credentials recognized and to get to work in areas that, one, are needed, that there's a shortage of skilled workers in a number of different professions and fields.

I find it a tragedy that you have many that have been practising a profession in their original countries or country, that they've come from, and they come here and hit roadblock after roadblock. In fact, I engage in conversations with people regularly to discover that. So I appreciate the intention, what this bill is trying to do.

I know that colleagues of mine have had a number of questions. I appreciate the fact that with this piece of legislation the minister is working with organizations, in fact, many, many different organizations, that will be affected by this to ensure that these entities – and again there are lots of the different colleges and different associations – will be able to do their part in helping to expedite this process.

I do know that quite a lot of detail will be coming in the regulations, which some of my colleagues, especially from Edmonton-North West and Edmonton-Whitemud, identified as some of their questions as far as the details of how the legislation will actually work . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt, but according to Standing Order 4(4) the House stands adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1163
Introduction of Visitors .....	1163
Introduction of Guests .....	1163, 1165
Members' Statements
Camrose Purple Martin Festival .....	1163
Government and Official Opposition Policies .....	1163
Vegreville Economic Development .....	1163
Alberta Prosperity .....	1164
EPCOR Gold Bar Waste-water Treatment Plant .....	1164
Health Care System .....	1164
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1165, 1173
Oral Question Period
Oil Transportation by Rail .....	1165
Education Funding .....	1166
Holiday Pay and the Minimum Wage for Youth .....	1166
Medical Laboratory Services in Edmonton .....	1167
Electricity Market Review .....	1168
Solar Energy Use .....	1168
Technology and Entrepreneurship Educational Curricula .....	1169
Driver's Licence Road Tests .....	1169
Minister of Finance .....	1170
Conversion Therapy Use in Alberta .....	1170
Agricultural Education .....	1171
Payday Loan Consumer Protection .....	1171
PDD Program Applications .....	1172
Red Tape Reduction Strategy .....	1172
Rural Crime Strategy .....	1173
Tablings to the Clerk .....	1173
Orders of the Day .....	1175
Government Motions
Federal Carbon Tax .....	1175
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading .....	1180
Bill 8     Education Amendment Act, 2019 .....	1180
Bill 12   Royalty Guarantee Act .....	1186
Bill 11   Fair Registration Practices Act .....	1186

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday evening, June 25, 2019

Day 19

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henday (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreeshen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretaries

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, June 25, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 5

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader is rising on behalf of the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is correct. I rise today on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move third reading of Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides the funding to meet the obligations of the province from the 2018-19 fiscal year, which ended on March 31, 2019. I would remind the House that that's prior to the last election on April 16, 2019, and prior to the current government coming into its place in this Assembly. The amounts specified in this bill reflect the picture that was presented in the third-quarter fiscal update and includes spending beyond what was budgeted for the previous fiscal year.

The bill is backwards looking, where government is asking the Legislative Assembly to approve spending brought forward by the previous government. Due to our commitment to the parliamentary process, Mr. Speaker, we are here today to ask for approval to ensure the obligations of the province are met. As has been stated before, we understand that unplanned expenses come up, like natural disasters, and we recognize that our key commitment as a government is to provide support for Albertans in times of emergency. I believe that in these cases it's appropriate to ask for supplementary funding, funding that ensures people are evacuated safely, their communities are re-established in a timely manner, and their return is managed as smoothly, effectively, and efficiently as possible.

However, where I differ from the opposition on this idea is on requesting supplementary funding to pay for poorly thought out and negotiated projects that do not add value for all Albertans. This is not a prudent use of Alberta taxpayer dollars, and our government will not be continuing this practice of the former government. Moving forward, we plan to do things differently to bring prudence and predictability to Alberta's budget planning, and through these careful actions we will bring Alberta's budget to balance by 2022-23 and begin reversing the course of the previous government's path towards almost $100 billion in debt, Mr. Speaker. A hundred billion dollars in debt.

But before we can start our work on Alberta's finances for the future, we must clear up the outstanding issues from the NDP's past. Our intention with Bill 5 is to clear previous obligations from the table so our government can approach Budget 2019 with a clean slate. I'd like to thank the House for its support of Bill 5 even though I'm sure it's hard in some cases, Mr. Speaker, to vote for such a bill, and I encourage my colleagues on both sides to do just that so we can start with a clean slate and move past the NDP's past.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader is rising on behalf of the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You are correct. I am rising today on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance to now move third reading of Bill 6, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019.

This interim supply bill allows the normal course of government business to be carried out for the first eight months of the 2019-20 fiscal year. By passing this bill, we are ensuring that government operations can continue as a new fiscal year begins on April 1. This also allows the work of the MacKinnon panel to be completed and considered by our government. The eight-month time frame will give our government time to develop and debate a budget through the Committee of Supply process. We are asking for this time so we can take time to be prudent and carefully approach the next budget, making sure that our priorities represent those of Albertans. We know that action must be taken to bring Alberta's budget back to balance, and we are dedicated to taking the time to ensure we are making the right decisions without sacrificing front-line services that Albertans are counting on.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans can be confident that our government is making thoughtful, prudent decisions to ensure there is funding both now and for future generations. If we do not balance the budget now, we'll end up spending billions on interest payments to bankers instead of funding Albertans' priorities. This is about looking to the long term, making responsible choices, and eliminating reliance on debt financing that steals from future Albertans. These are the decisions we can't make without first taking the time to understand the problem. We will be gathering input, including the report from the MacKinnon panel and discussions that are happening in each ministry as we speak, Mr. Speaker. We look forward to incorporating this feedback into our government's first budget.

In the meantime I'd like to thank my colleagues for their thoughtful comments on this bill, and now I must ask for the support to allow us the time we need to create the best plan for Albertans. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 6, interim supply? The hon. the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to interim supply. We'll have some specific questions as well, but before I do that, I just want to begin by saying that, essentially, through this bill government is asking for almost $28 billion just in expenses. There are very few details that have been provided. These amounts will be for eight months, for most part of the year.

Every time when we ask any question in this House, the answer is: there will be a budget, and details will be provided therein. However, when we were in government, I do still remember the Government House Leader's comments on interim supply, every time they got up: the government is asking for a blank cheque; government is asking for a carte blanche. I think the same applies here, too. Government is asking for a blank cheque for eight months, they are asking for a carte blanche for eight months, and they're not willing to provide any details whatsoever. The only thing we hear is that it's the normal course of government business. Certainly, when we are in question period, we do hear that they have cancelled this and they will not pursue that plan, this plan, but when we ask where it's reflected in these numbers, we do not get any answers whatsoever. I think it's a huge sum of money that government wants through this bill, and Albertans deserve to know that how this money will be spent.

It's not that government doesn't know what these expenses are, what these departments will do. They have a platform. They have their priorities, which they talk about all the time in question period. Certainly, these sums will go to fulfilling those commitments, and Albertans do deserve to know how their money is spent since it's a huge sum of money and it's for eight months, for most part of the year. There are questions that we will want to know before we can vote. Otherwise, I think government is just asking us blindly to vote for these billions of dollars and wants us and wants Albertans to believe that somehow this money will be spent in their best interest.

7:40

Since the Minister of Energy is here, if I look at those numbers, there is an increase in expense from $262 million dollars they are seeking. They are asking for $309 million. Certainly, some priorities factored in. There certainly are some plans that they have to increase the expense from $262 million to $309 million. Similarly, with capital investment there was none before in the previous Budget '18-19, but now they're adding $300,000. Similarly, in financial transactions there is also a huge difference because previously it was $378 million. Now they are asking for $95 million.

These are not just the numbers that are pro-rated based on the previous numbers. Certainly, there is a huge difference in this number, in the 2018 numbers, and Albertans deserve to know. I think we as opposition need to know before we can decide to vote on this, how these monies will be spent. Especially in this Energy estimates supply amount, there is a huge difference, so I would really appreciate if the Minister of Energy will help us understand where these increases or decreases will go because that's important information.

Also, we have heard before that they're not planning on moving ahead with oil-by-rail contracts, which, based on the advice we received, would have seen oil moving by next week and would have helped us create a 120,000-barrel takeaway capacity and also generated $2.2 billion in revenues. Since they are not pursuing those contracts, following through on those contracts, I think it will be helpful if the Minister of Energy could tell us whether there was some amount that will be going towards cancelling those contracts.

Similarly, in other areas, other ministries: same thing. There are many ministries where expenses are higher or lower than the previous years, so I would encourage the respective ministers to at least help us understand those differences. Otherwise, it's just a blank cheque of 27-plus billion dollars, and we would not be in a position to sign off without knowing anything whatsoever.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to hearing from the Minister of Energy and other ministers with respect to the fluctuation in their presented estimates from the previous 2018-19 estimates. Thank you.

The Speaker: Would anyone else like to speak to Bill 6, the interim supply – oh. Correction: Bill 5. Bill 6? Bill 6. We are on Bill 6, the interim supply bill. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen to join the debate.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak to the interim supply bill no matter what number it has. I think it's important that we have this opportunity to discuss some of the significant issues that I see, and I'm going to speak primarily about the Education budget given that I know there has been a considerable amount of messaging, but there has been very little clarity provided to school boards and to parents.

You've heard me talk about the Calgary Board of Education earlier today. They were debating their budget, of course, making assumptions based on provincial funding. Consistent with what they heard during the election campaign they're assuming flat funding year over year, so that means a $40 million shortfall, they're saying, based on growth and other pressures. When I asked how that'll be split up, they said that $18 million will be absorbed within central units – absorbed means cut from central units – and $22 million will be passed on to schools. Of course, Mr. Speaker, $22 million being passed onto schools is a considerable amount, especially when the biggest cost for any school district and, arguably, for the government is its human cost, the fact that we employ a significant number of people working in the public sector as well as in schools on the front lines.

So $22 million coming out of schools and the front lines. Teacher unit costs in Alberta for the last more than five years, probably six years, has been $100,000, when you factor in benefits, when you factor in other types of incentives that teachers receive, not salary but the total unit cost. Of course, the Calgary board of education, ATA local 38, has said that that is the equivalent of 220 teachers.

Now, not all schools, of course, will see strictly teacher reductions. They have said that on average it'll be net reduction of three teachers in a Calgary high school and a net reduction of half a teacher in an elementary school. Many elementary schools have seven classrooms, kindergarten through grade 6, straight classes. How do you take half a teacher away from seven? You can't, really, unless you have lots of complicated combined grades, basically split grades at all levels, causing a lot of misconfiguration through the school. What many of the elementary schools are doing is reducing their educational assistants.

Well, Mr. Speaker, those educational assistants provide valuable service for the children they work with and, of course, for all children in the classroom. I know that when I had the opportunity to spend time in a classroom, if it wasn't for the educational assistants that were paired up with me, I would have had significantly more issues with overall classroom environment. I think we spend a lot of time training students who are aspiring teachers how to develop IPPs, how to work on these individual programs, but how do we actually support them in having the time to be able to deliver them? That's what these educational assistants often do. They actually implement the strategies, that we've invested in in giving those skills through postsecondary and through further education, to make sure that there are these individual program plans. Of course, if you don't have the actual people there to deliver them, not only do those children who have those IPPs suffer, but the entire class does. It certainly creates a greater sense of disorder and lack of opportunity for all students to be able to focus and achieve their full potential.

The CBE, I know, was debating their budget just a few hours ago. Members of the government will say: well, they'll get their actual budget in the fall. But you know what, Mr. Speaker? Kids show up to school in September. They don't wait until October, November, when this government chooses to bring in a budget. They certainly won't wait to show up to school until after this government has passed a budget, which could be well into December. Unless something has changed. Maybe the government has decided they're just not going to have kids come back to school in September. They can wait until a budget gets passed. Well, that certainly would be irresponsible. And I assert that it's irresponsible to have kids go back to school without actually giving those targets.

Now, I know that when we formed government around a similar timeline, slightly later, we did interim supply as well, but we actually gave that clarity around: we will be funding enrolment; we will be ensuring that it's the same formulas that's been in the past. We haven't gotten that clarity from the government benches. They say, "Enrolment will be funded," and when people say, "well, does that mean that there's going to be a tinkering to the formula?" you know, it's radio silence. Essentially, what's being told back is: well, when the budget comes out, then you'll have more details. Well, when the budget comes out and then later when the budget is passed, kids are almost halfway through the school year, Mr. Speaker. That certainly isn't fair to those kids or to the staff.

Edmonton public had their board meeting earlier today as well, probably just wrapping up, I'm going to guess. They are assuming, from what they've heard in this Chamber and what they haven't heard through direct correspondence from the Ministry of Education, that the classroom improvement fund is being cut. Well, that classroom improvement fund was used specifically to support students with severe special needs and other students.

Again, with the lack of clarity through this interim supply and subsequent lack of correspondence with two boards from government we have of course come to the assumption that these types of programs, that the minister herself said in interim supply were set to expire this summer – we will have to wait until after there's a budget, well into the fall, to know whether or not they're back. Well, it's really unfair for boards to either have to try to reconfigure classroom configuration well into December, once students have already formed those relationships, or lay off teachers, which will be probably even more problematic if they did that well into the fall, after this government brings in a budget, and then had to do reconfiguration but into even larger class sizes.

Those are the two largest boards.

7:50

I wanted to touch on one of the smaller boards but still with a significant number of schools and a number of students, and that's the Battle River school division. I imagine the Member for Camrose will take an interest in this as well as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I know she taught in Bawlf, which is, of course, one of the schools in the Battle River school division. Some other schools include Forestburg, Hay Lakes, Killam, Ryley. None of these schools next year will have learning coaches. None of them. What's a learning coach, you ask? That formerly used to be referred to as a special education teacher. Speaking directly with the ATA there, they have told us that every single one of what were formerly referred to as special education teachers, now learning coaches – every single one – from the district will be gone. That's what they've told us.

These teachers are on the front lines. Many of them have worked in this area and have developed tremendous expertise over the years and relationships with the children that they work with, the students that they work with. Many of them, fortunately, if they have worked for many years, have continuous contracts, so they won't actually be getting a pink slip, but they will absolutely be moved into a different position, often positions that they've never taught before or have the expertise to teach, which, of course, is difficult for those teachers. It's also incredibly difficult for those students who rely on these special education teachers or learning coaches to give them that direct mentorship skill building to ensure that they're set up for success.

So, Mr. Speaker, when the government says that, you know, they'll just have to wait until the fall, hopefully most kids in Alberta will only experience grade 3 once, right? Most kids will only get this opportunity once. If we say to them, "Wait until you're halfway through your grade 3 year, and then we may find money; we may not," I would say that that is incredibly irresponsible. I know that there are many parents of young children in this very Chamber, and I can't help but express the frustration that I imagine even they are feeling even though they're being told to vote for this interim supply bill. When you think about how these impacts are going to affect your child, I think it's very problematic.

I also have met with some parents who choose to home-school, and they said: "Well, what is it going to mean to me if I have another child I'm planning on home-schooling – I have one now, and I have a second one I'm planning on home-schooling next year – how is that formula going to change? What is our allocation going to be? Are we going to get the same kinds of supports times two that we had last year, or are we going to see a chipping away at the formula that we get and the supports that our schools that support us like Argyll and others get to provide us with enrichment opportunities for those who choose to home-school?"

These are very fair questions. People have been asking these since the election in April, and they have yet to get clarity. The little bit of clarity that has been received in interim supply was that the classroom improvement fund is gone, which, again, primarily focused on making better learning conditions, especially for students with special needs, and that, you know, after the budget is passed, then we'll have more to say about the school nutrition program. Well, that won't put food in the stomachs of the 33,000 students who get it today and whose families need that support in September, Mr. Speaker.

These are a few of the things that I think frustrate me deeply about the lack of clarity and the lack of detail with regard to this interim supply. And it's not just me. It's the other boards that are making decisions based on assumptions. I know that the hon. the Premier will say: you know, they don't need to make these decisions; we've said that we're going to fund enrolment. Well, then questions come in about: well, is enrolment going to be funded in the same formula in the same way it has been in the past? And then, again, nothing but talking points. No clarity. Well, okay: are we going to fund the classroom improvement fund? Silence: we'll have more to say after the budget gets passed. Okay: is the school nutrition fund going to be provided? Again, nothing but silence.

This is why there have been so many days – and I know probably hon. members are sick of me asking about these things in question period. Trust me; I don't want to ask about them either. I want our teachers, our students, and our families to have clarity and certainty and sufficient – I would say more than sufficient. When you do a report card and you write, "has sufficiently met the learner outcomes," that's kind of a C. That kind of means that you passed; not great, but you passed. That's what we're asking for right now. We're asking the government to at least give a pass to the Education budget. Give a sufficient amount of funding and a sufficient amount of detail, and we can't even get that. We're getting: we'll wait in due course.

Well, you know, if I was asked to hand in an assignment on time and I was a student and I said: "You know, I'll get back to you in due course. I need a few more months. I'll get back to you in December, but – guess what? – the course I'm in ends right now" – because it does. This is the week. This is the last couple days of school. This is a week where staffing is being slotted. If I said, "I'll get back to you at Christmas," I can tell you what my teacher would say if I was a student. My teacher would say: "Not good enough. Not good enough. You get a fail. Or get your butt in here over the summer. Make sure you get the job done. Give us that clarity. Finish your assignment." And that's what I have to say to the government about Education funding.

That's probably the bulk of my comments. The other one I want to mention is just around assumptions in the Health budget, and I do wish the Health minister the best of luck in achieving what I was very proud we achieved over the last two years, which was no requirement for supplementary supply. It's not an easy feat in Health because different from Education, in Education you can say: we're freezing your funding, and you're going to cram more kids into the classroom. I'm not saying that's good, but you can do that.

In hospitals when more patients show up, you don't say: sorry; we're full; we've already hit our targets. When more patients come in, physicians see them, staff might have to work overtime, and most of the physicians in Alberta are on a fee-for-service arrangement, which means more patients, more fees. Again, yeah, very difficult to constrain that budget when there's something like a difficult flu season or other outbreaks and same with a necessity to have overtime for nursing staff and other allied health and supports within acute care in particular. I do certainly wish him all the best, but I fear that with some of the pressures that are being put on him at this time, it will be a significant challenge.

The last thing I want to say is that if these interim supply numbers are based off projections that were created by our government, which has become my understanding, then there should be a continuation with important projects like ensuring that we have a state-of-the-art lab for folks who live in Edmonton and the north zone. Having fragmented lab services in a facility that is past its best-before-date does not say that you've got the best. I have been proud when I had my time as Health minister to say that I believe that we have the best health care system, not only in Canada but in the world, here in Alberta. I worry that if the Premier and his cabinet keep pushing ideological choices over patient-centred choices, we won't be able to say that for much longer.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

Federal Carbon Tax

21. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly express its support for the government in its efforts to challenge the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on Alberta, which this Assembly views as a clear violation of provincial jurisdiction, including the launching of a constitutional challenge if necessary; acknowledge the negative impacts that a carbon tax has upon the people of Alberta, including the increased cost to heat homes and run businesses in the midst of an economic downturn; and recognize that Alberta's oil and gas industries continue to be global leaders in emissions reduction.

[Adjourned debate June 25: Mr. Kenney]

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone wishing to join the debate on Government Motion 21? The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal carbon tax being imposed on Alberta is unconstitutional. Alberta has constitutional power to manage our own local undertakings, natural resources, economy, and greenhouse gas emissions plan. It is a clear violation of provincial jurisdiction, and our government will challenge the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on Alberta.

The federal carbon tax is an imposition. This is because it is all economic pain for no environmental gain. This federal cash grab will only punish Albertans for heating their homes and driving to work. A $50-a-tonne carbon tax would sacrifice over 6,000 new jobs and take almost $2 billion out of Albertans' pockets. The Trudeau carbon tax would also increase the cost of food and other goods for Alberta families at the cash till and make us less competitive in Canada and around the world.

We all saw our soaring gas prices when the NDP government imposed their carbon tax cash grab. Albertans elected this government to create jobs, growth, and economic diversification, to help get Albertans back to work and make life easier for families who need to pay their bills. We did this by having our first piece of legislation to repeal the carbon tax. Promise made; promise kept. The government of Alberta delivered on its promise to repeal the NDP carbon tax and will explore all available avenues, including legal challenges, to protect our province's economy from the federal carbon tax that causes economic pain with no environmental gain.

Our government recognizes that climate change is a real and important issue in our province and is committed to working on a climate change plan that strikes a balance between economic growth and environmental protection and achieves real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. A carbon tax imposed on Albertans doesn't solve the climate change issue but, rather, contributes to less economic growth that could be invested into real solutions.

8:00

Albertans are frustrated. They do not get a say in the matter. Either we have our own carbon tax that we saw destroy jobs and our economy, or we have a federal carbon tax imposed on us that will destroy jobs and the economy. It is a no-win situation for Albertans. They elected a government that will fight for them. They elected a government that would put their best interests in mind. Having a federal carbon tax imposed on Albertans without our consent is not in Albertans' best interests. That is why we will challenge the unconstitutional federal carbon tax.

The federal carbon tax would disrupt the balance of Canada's federation by undermining Alberta's exclusive constitutional power to manage its own local undertakings, natural resources, economy, and greenhouse gas emissions plans. Alberta has the constitutional authority to make policy choices within our own jurisdiction. Our government is going to take action to keep jobs and the economy secure in Alberta. We were elected on this platform and are determined to keep our promise we made to Albertans. The job-killing carbon tax the Trudeau government is putting on hard-working Albertans is unfair and unconstitutional. We cannot lay back and let them destroy our economy. It is unjust to let the federal cash grab punish Albertans for heating their homes and driving to work. Imposing this job-killing carbon tax is not constitutionally viable, and it infringes on our province's authority to make policy choices within our own jurisdiction.

We do not believe that punishing Albertans to heat their homes and gas up to go to work is an effective way to reduce carbon emissions. As our members across the floor know, it is an effective way to lose an election. We can't have an effective climate change action plan without having a strong economy. It is impossible to fund innovative projects without money to invest. We can't be running enormous budgets to leave our children and grandchildren to pay for because we wanted to impose failed ideological experiments such as a carbon tax that does not produce effective results to combat climate change. Our government is going to fight for Albertans. We are going to make sure our voice is heard and challenge this unconstitutional job-killing carbon tax.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Anyone wishing to ask a brief question or comment?

Seeing none, I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is very excited to join the debate.

Mr. Bilous: Oh, I'm very excited, Mr. Speaker, to rise and speak to this. I will probably end up taking much of my time only because I need to clarify some of the comments or misconceptions that were laid out earlier today by a couple of speakers as far as the reality of a price on carbon and a number of other messages. I have the benefit of having the Premier's words printed in front of me and will actually address many of his comments.

I want to say, first of all, Mr. Speaker, that it's clear that this government struggles with the science of climate change. I know their previous iteration of a party, the Wildrose Party, denied the science of climate change or that climate change was human caused or that we impacted the planet. I think, you know, quite frankly, what our government tried to do was to demonstrate that the environment and the economy can go hand in hand. They are not opposites. You don't need to sacrifice one for the other. The day that our government introduced our climate leadership plan was really a historic day in Alberta. Quite frankly, it made news around the world because onstage there not only was the Premier and the former Minister of Environment and Parks; there also were CEOs of large oil sands companies standing shoulder to shoulder with indigenous leaders as well as with environmental NGOs, all recognizing that there is a part to play in improving our environmental standards and reducing our greenhouse gases, reducing our environmental footprint.

I will talk about some of the tools that our government introduced, which is quite humorous to the extent that the current Premier now talks about an innovation fund. Well, you know, I think he's about three and a half years behind the times, Mr. Speaker, because I recall standing onstage with the former Minister of Environment and Parks announcing a $1.4 billion innovation fund to, similar to how the government currently describes, work with some of the largest industrial polluters, looking at investing dollars for them to find real-world solutions to reduce their environmental footprint, to enhance efficiency and reduce their bottom line. It had a significant benefit of meaning that companies were reducing their bottom line, so becoming more profitable at the same time as taking significant action.

You know, there are a number of companies that have used some new technology, some that was codetrieved from the Alberta Innovates Corporation, which does incredible work. You know, I'll highlight the fact that I really encourage this government and hope that as they are looking to stand up their fund, again, similar to the $1.4 billion fund that we introduced, they talk to and consult with Alberta Innovates. There are some folks that are incredible experts who know who to talk to. I would encourage them to talk to the former Emissions Reduction Alberta as well, who helped design some of the programs but also deliver these programs, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure I'll find it later on in my notes.

The other thing I want to highlight, Mr. Speaker, is that the climate leadership plan that our government put forward is part of the reason that the TMX was approved in the first place. Again, I think what this current government fails to understand and grasp is that there is an interest around the planet in every nation in stepping up their efforts to do more to protect our climate, which – you know, I appreciate the fact of how important the economy is, but there can be and are ways to take meaningful action to address climate change while also supporting the economy. I can tell you that doing nothing is not a solution. I can tell you I can't wait for the government members to go into their schools and talk to especially school-aged kids, who understand that the time for action is now and are extremely disappointed that this government is going down the path that they're currently going down.

Now, the other thing that's interesting about this motion, Mr. Speaker, is to challenge the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on Alberta. I can't support a motion to waste taxpayers' dollars to fight the federal government and lose because, I think, it's going to be very clear that the federal government does in fact have jurisdiction. But what's fascinating is that just earlier today the Premier talked about how, through unions that are now filing court challenges to the unconstitutional Bill 9, our party was opposed to Bill 9; therefore, we are in favour of unions suing taxpayers.

Well, if that logic is correct, this current government is about to sue the federal government, who are the same taxpayers that they accused us of trying to sue doing the exact same thing. By taking the federal government to court, they're actually taking Canadians to court and trying to sue them. I think, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, they're going to be unsuccessful. This is where, when the government repealed the carbon tax, my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar affectionately named it the Act to Impose Justin Trudeau's Federal Carbon Tax on Alberta, which I think we will see.

8:10

I do have a question for the government. In the whole dialogue of a carbon tax and its impact on the economy and on people the government loves to say "the job-killing carbon tax," to which I'd like them to table documents that show exactly how many jobs were lost because of the imposition of a carbon tax. I appreciate that it did impact costs. We tried to mitigate that. I appreciate that not all of those costs were mitigated. But I'd like to see the government table documents on how many jobs were killed by the carbon tax, and if not, then maybe they can stand up and admit that the government is actually spreading mistruths in this place. Prove how many jobs were lost from an imposition of a carbon tax.

I'm going to continue to move along, Mr. Speaker. Looking at the hon. Premier's speech from earlier today, you know, he was talking about how Albertans elected this government and accused us of being arrogant, which I find ironic coming from the members from that side. What the Premier needs to recognize is that not every Albertan is opposed to paying a price on carbon. I recognize that, again, there are some Albertans, absolutely, who disliked the carbon tax, but not every Albertan was opposed to it. Again, there are Albertans, especially in the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, who saw some of the benefit of where those dollars were going both in Edmonton and Calgary, in the green line. I'll be curious to see how the current government plans to fund those projects.

As well, I think it's naive to try to frame or deny the fact that humans have and do impact climate change. I think what we are seeing is an increase in the frequency and intensity of natural disasters, whether it be forest fires or floods, depending on where you are in the world, and that there is a responsibility for governments to take around the planet. I can't stand that argument of, like: you know, country X pollutes more than we do, so therefore we should do nothing. Well, that's great. That's how you drop the bar to the ground as opposed to trying to raise the bar.

Again, I mean, you know, the hon. Premier, who I know loves globe-trotting, will also know that China is investing tens if not hundreds of billions of dollars into innovation, especially around wanting to make significant reductions in how much they pollute. Now, if we compared them to Alberta today, of course, Alberta would be not even a pin drop compared to the country of China. My point, Mr. Speaker, is that they are taking meaningful action and recognizing that just denying it and pretending that it doesn't exist and doing nothing is not the solution.

I finally found that part, Mr. Speaker, where the Premier talked about the development of their technology and innovations emission reduction levy and fund. I encourage the Premier and the government to look at that $1.4 billion fund that we made available. That wasn't just to the oil and gas sector. Primarily they benefited from accessing those funds. It was also available to manufacturers. It was available to the agriculture sector, the forestry sector, and then broad-scale manufacturing as well. I encourage them to look at the strides and progress that we made.

What's interesting is that earlier the Premier talked about how the Minister of Environment and Parks got a question today about a subsidy program for solar panels, and the Premier referred to it as "voodoo economics." I find it fascinating. A significant reduction in corporate taxes: is that not an indirect way of providing a subsidy to industry? I think, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, we know that there isn't any significant or substantial proof that dropping the corporate tax rate will result in job growth. We have a number of examples to point to around the globe. Now, again, some companies, sure, will use it to hire more people, invest it back into their company. Will all of them? No, Mr. Speaker. Will they result in the numbers that the Minister of Finance has put out or anticipated? Not necessarily. So we're really, you know, going on this whole: well, trust us that this will create the growth and economic activity that this government wants it to.

I find it interesting as well when the Premier talks about the carbon tax and talks about the debt and deficit that increased under our government, but, you know, I'll remind Albertans, quite frankly, that when the Premier was a senior cabinet minister in the Harper government, they ran tens of billions of dollars of deficit every year. In fact, I think the Premier's greatest accomplishment – maybe he should have a little badge and a star – was that one year he ran a $150 billion deficit in the federal government.

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. How much?

Mr. Bilous: A hundred and fifty billion.

That's fascinating. I mean, for someone who is supposed to be anti debt and deficit, that's quite an accomplishment, quite frankly. You know, it's a little rich to run up massive deficits federally, come back to Alberta, and then talk about how we're bad for doing that.

What I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that because of the investments that we made when the economy was in a recession, we got incredible prices on much-needed infrastructure builds around this province, whether it's schools, roads, bridges, hospitals, rather than competing with the private sector when the economy is red hot. At the same time, it obviously resulted in tens of thousands of construction jobs that were much-needed when the price of oil went from $127 a barrel at its peak down to $27 a barrel at its trough. Again, I appreciate that the UCP's talking points are about the job-killing carbon tax. Again, I'd love to see evidence of how many jobs were lost from the price on carbon that we put on.

The other thing that's fascinating is that members from the other side, the whole time we introduced our climate leadership plan, talked about the slush fund that would be created from the collection of the carbon taxes. We reinvested every single dollar back into the economy through subsidies, through programs. What I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that this current government, with their Bill 1, repealed the carbon tax. Guess what they've done with the significant amount of money that was collected from the carbon tax? It's gone into a slush fund. Well, isn't that interesting? Again, how quickly things change when a party moves from opposition to government.

Mr. Speaker, for those reasons, I will not be supporting this motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, and I believe that the hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction was first on his feet.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, through you, I would like to rise to the occasion to address the concern or the question that was asked by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. He asked for evidence of the job-killing carbon tax, and I would like to submit that he is sitting with the remnants of those who survived the job-killing carbon tax. According to the last election their caucus moved from 52 MLAs down to 24 MLAs, which lost 28 NDP jobs as MLAs. This was a direct result of Albertans casting their vote saying: enough is enough; we are not going to accept the carbon tax and their iteration of being able to save Alberta. The member is looking for evidence. I submit to him that their party is the evidence.

8:20

There was an election document, that either has been tabled or will be tabled, called – the Election Act provides for that evidence, to show that Albertans rejected that carbon tax and rejected the fact that it was killing jobs, to the tune of over a million people who voted in favour of our approach to being able to have the heavy emitters price on carbon rather than the job-killing carbon tax the NDP had introduced.

Mr. Speaker, from my riding I had the opportunity of being able to speak with a company, Lantic Sugar, better known as Rogers Sugar. When I sat down with the general manager there, he told me that they're price takers, not price makers. They're an international market. They cannot pass the price on to consumers. This is what really happened with the carbon tax. It was just an inflationary measure when you think about it. Anybody who could pass the price of that carbon tax on did. So this was just an inflation on our regular, everyday Albertans. People who were affected most by this were senior citizens on fixed incomes, charities. Schools, who cannot pass that price on, had to eat that, just the same as Rogers Sugar had to eat that price increase. They told me that if this was to continue to where the NDP wanted to go, which was $50 per tonne, that would actually drive their business south to a jurisdiction that did not have a price on carbon, a carbon tax, and we would lose one of the largest employers in my community of Taber.

Mr. Speaker, they had to make changes to be able to deal with the $10 million that they had to deal with for the extra cost. They had to make changes. This was not something where they could just say: "Well, you know what? We're rich. We make so much money. We can just eat that cost." They had to make some changes, and there was a cost to the labour in that community. The cost, if they had had to carry on with an NDP carbon tax, would have been substantial to that community and to that business. They would have left. They would have gone down to the United States, where there was no carbon tax.

The assertion that provides us with evidence: I actually think that it's the hard-work ethic, the get 'er done attitude of Albertans that actually helped us survive these last four years. This is what actually helped us survive the carbon tax and all the other poor legislation that this NDP added to our job creators and to our innovators, to regular Albertans. It was their can-do attitude, their "we will survive this, we've been survivors, and we will always be survivors" that got it done. It wasn't the fact that this was not egregious legislation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to speak to Government Motion 21? I see the hon. Member for Sherwood Park has risen to speak to the motion.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is extremely hard for Albertans who don't have the luxury of having a public transportation system in their community to be able to get to work every day without emitting carbon. Because of where they live, they are being punished by the Trudeau carbon tax. This is a reality for many rural Albertans. Many Albertans have to travel across the province in order to visit their family on their days off from work or travel to larger communities because their community doesn't have the facilities for their children to actively participate in sports. We heard from all Albertans that those who live in rural areas were being punished for going to work; that is, if they already had not gotten laid off due to the actions of the former government. Many jobs were lost due to the NDP carbon tax, and we are certain that this is going to happen again if the Trudeau cash-grab carbon tax happens again from the Laurentian elite.

If the federal government wants to invest in LRT systems across our entire province, be our guest, but we don't see much investment into Alberta happening with the Trudeau government planning on killing pipelines and banning all transport of our critical resources. The federal government doesn't care about the everyday problems Albertans have. They don't care that a parent has to take off time from work to take their kids to hockey practice, let alone pay extra at the pump, and can't afford the carbon taxes imposed on them. The carbon tax is a one-size-fits-all solution that doesn't work for every province, let alone all communities in one province, Mr. Speaker. No one in this nation, let alone this province, should confuse climate action with the carbon tax. Imposing a carbon tax on Albertans is not constitutionally viable and infringes on our province's authority to make policy choices within our own jurisdiction.

Our government is aware of these issues that rural Albertans have, also that climate change is a real and important issue, but we believe that we should have a climate change plan that doesn't halt economic growth and take money from hard-working Albertans. Our platform makes it clear that we are committed to a practical approach that achieves real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. We need a solution that can strike a balance between economic growth and environmental protection. Again, one more time for the members opposite: an approach that will strike a balance between economic growth and environmental protection.

Our government was elected on a mandate to create jobs, growth, and economic diversification. This federal carbon tax being imposed on Albertans inhibits our ability to keep that promise. Our 6,000 new jobs and almost $2.4 billion out of Albertans' pockets would be sacrificed if a $50-a-tonne carbon tax was imposed on Albertans. The federal carbon tax would also increase the cost of food and other goods for Alberta families at the cash till and make us less competitive in Canada and around the world. The federal carbon tax would disrupt the balance of Canada's federation by undermining Alberta's exclusive constitutional power to manage its local undertakings, natural resources, economy, and greenhouse gas emission plans. Alberta has the constitutional authority to make policy choices within our own jurisdiction.

But we will not go down without a fight, Mr. Speaker. The federal carbon tax is a clear invasion of Alberta's jurisdiction of having the exclusive constitutional power to manage its own natural resources, economy, local undertakings, and greenhouse gas emission plans.

Albertans made the decision to scrap the job-killing carbon tax this last election, when they voted in this government. It is unfair and unconstitutional for the federal government to impose a carbon tax after clearly seeing that this isn't what the people want. Imposing a carbon tax on Albertans is not constitutionally viable and infringes on our province's authority to make policy choices, again, within our own jurisdiction. We should have the authority to be able to make alternative environmental plans rather than a carbon tax that kills economic growth in our province. We delivered on a promise to repeal the NDP carbon tax and will explore all available avenues, including legal challenges – you betcha – to protect our province's economy from the federal carbon tax, that causes economic pain with absolutely zero environmental gain.

Our government made a promise to fight for Albertans against the economy-killing carbon tax. We are going to challenge the unjust carbon tax. Promise made, promise kept, Mr. Speaker.

Then, briefly, Mr. Speaker, I just want to talk a bit on other reasons why I strongly support Government Motion 21, where we acknowledge the negative impacts that a carbon tax has had upon the people of Alberta. It has been great. I want to give just quickly an international perspective on how these job-killing carbon tax policies, be it from the Laurentian elite in Ottawa or here from our colleagues across the way, the former government, have hurt Albertans.

Foreign direct investment is so important to generating prosperity in any jurisdiction, including here in Alberta, and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the last four years have been a period of darkness, with incredible capital flight from foreign jurisdictions and foreign companies as they've been turned off by the high-regulation, carbon-tax-imposing policies of the former NDP government.

8:30

Let's just look at a couple of examples. The big Asian economies of China, India, and Japan, Mr. Speaker, are carbon hungry, and they will be for at least 30 or 40 years to come. But they have been greatly turned off by carbon tax policies that make us uncompetitive when competing for critical international investment. China is the world's second-largest economy, Japan the third-largest, and India now the sixth.

Again, in man's long climb from the swamp to the stars there has never been a resource or a mechanism, if you will, Mr. Speaker, to allow people upward social mobility, which is their God-given right, like fossil fuels. We have the greatest record in the world, when it comes to environmental standards and human rights, of any other jurisdiction, so we need to really support and promote a global Alberta product for our fossil fuels. The carbon tax that is seeking to be imposed by the Trudeau Liberals will make us less internationally competitive, as did the carbon tax imposed by the members across the way. Thankfully, we have scrapped that.

You know, in the big Asian economies right now, Mr. Speaker, you have strong, in two cases democratic governments that, again, are desperate and really want to seek Alberta's energy products and fossil fuels, but they've been turned off by the antibusiness practices, including the carbon tax, imposed by the former government. You have Prime Minister Narendra Modi in India, who's just been re-elected with a second thumping majority government. He has a majority through his own BJP ruling party. He won 303 seats in the Lok Sabha, or what is the lower House of the Indian Parliament. And then you have Prime Minister Shinzo Abe of Japan, where he's won his third straight majority government. Quite incredible. For the last two government mandates he's had supermajorities. Prime Minister Narendra Modi and Prime Minister Shinzo Abe desperately want Alberta energy products.

For a second, Mr. Speaker, while I still have time, let's take a look at Japan just quickly. Japan is the world's third-largest economy. It is the most energy-dependent developed nation on earth. Let's take a look. Coal: 96 per cent they import. Oil: 99 per cent they import. And 99 per cent of their liquid natural gas is also imported. There are just such great opportunities here with India, China, Japan, for example, to do really big things. And the carbon tax being imposed by the Laurentian elite in Ottawa through Prime Minister Trudeau or the former NDP government really took away from great opportunities over the last four years, and that undermined Albertan prosperity and greatly hurt Albertans' ability to prosper: incredible negative impacts.

Continuing on, Mr. Speaker, just speaking about the incredible foreign direct investment opportunities from the world's, for example, third-largest economy. You know, Japan is an FDI superpower. It holds more than $9.5 trillion in financial assets, including $2 trillion in cash. Japanese households possess a record $8 trillion in cash savings. The Japanese people are the greatest people when it comes to savings. Furthermore, the Japanese public pension plan is the world's largest publicly funded pension plan, being valued at over $1.2 trillion. From Indian companies to Japanese companies, which have been involved in the oil sands since 1978, there are such incredible opportunities.

Going back to this motion, Mr. Speaker, again, one of the reasons I strongly support it as the proud Member for Sherwood Park, if I'm allowed to speak in the third person – I don't know, but hopefully – is it acknowledges the negative impacts that the carbon tax has upon the people of Alberta. We have missed out on tens of billions of dollars in foreign direct investment. You know, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview: I deeply appreciate his passion for international relations, which is one I share, but I would say: what the heck was the former government doing over the previous four years, losing tens of billions of dollars of investment when you have these incredible opportunities, real strong leaders like Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and Prime Minister Narendra Modi, who were ready to do big deals with us? But they see our jurisdiction as not competitive, so they'll go to Malaysia, they'll go to the south or they'll go to the Middle East.

You know, we have to sell our energy to allow Albertans to prosper once we fight against the Trudeau Liberals with their job-killing, imposed carbon tax. We have to sell our fossil fuels not only as the most environmentally and ethically top-notch, but also, frankly, Mr. Speaker, we have to sell our security premium. There's always great conflict and tension going on and happening in the Middle East, and here in Alberta and Canada we are an oasis of stability. We need to tell that story once we become economically competitive again, fixing the disastrous mess left by the former government.

You know, Alberta greatly prospered under the golden tenure of Premier Peter Lougheed, a very wise man, a person I greatly admire. A key reason, in part, why Alberta prospered so greatly then was because of great tensions in the Middle East during the 1970s and '80s, which allowed oil prices to spike and Alberta to greatly prosper. You had the 1973 Arab-Israeli war as well as the 1979 Iranian Revolution and the 1980-88 Iran-Iraq War. At that time Alberta was incredibly competitive internationally, attracting lots of foreign direct investment, but we've lost that, Mr. Speaker, or we did under the former NDP government, but we can get it back.

I would just conclude, Mr. Speaker, after going around the world to some major economies in Japan, China, and India, that I strongly support this motion. Again, a key reason is that there have just been incredible negative impacts that the carbon tax has had upon the people of Alberta, especially in the realm of international relations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, and I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for . . .

Member Ceci: His enthusiasm.

Ms Hoffman: . . . his enthusiasm. Thank you, Member for Calgary-Buffalo. He was certainly enthusiastic.

I have to say that during parts of his speech I stopped to reflect on the remarks that you share with us every day, Mr. Speaker: may they never lead our province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or untrustworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind the responsibility to seek improvement for the condition of all. Wise, wise words. What that means to me in the context of this debate: certainly I'm thinking about the fact that I think the member for Medicine Hat – and I forget the other half of the name of the riding . . .

An Hon. Member: Brooks.

Ms Hoffman: Brooks-Medicine Hat. Thank you.

. . . talked in her main speech about going camping with her parents and them telling her to leave the campsite better than the way you found it. Mine did the same. When I was little it meant that I gathered kindling. When I was older it meant that I chopped some extra wood. Now it means that I pick up all the trash in the area and make all the littles who go camping with me do the same.

There are different ways that you leave the condition better for all. I would say that one of the main ways – and I brought Sadie in, the young woman, a grade 6 student, who wrote to me with her fears about climate change and a desire for her to be able to do something to combat it and make sure that we have a better condition for all.

Certainly, I would say that the science is in. Climate change is real. It's man-made, but the good news is that we can do something about it. I appreciate that the member did at one point say something about – I think the remarks were around: our plan was only punishment, and it didn't fix things. Well, at least we had a plan, Mr. Speaker. I'd argue that we did many things to fix conditions. You only need to visit – I'm sure that probably every riding that each of us represents has at least one school that's engaging in renewable energy in some way. I know that the First Nations who took advantage of the opportunities to do energy retrofits or renewable energy certainly embarked on that, and it definitely is more sustainable in the long term for the areas that they were using it. I know that it led to many jobs still in the energy industry and in other areas of renewables and energy efficiency.

So when I think about that "leave the campsite better than the way you found it," I can't help but think that irresponsible blinders when it comes to climate change – and the man-made responsibility we have to act in a way that takes care of our energy interests, takes care of jobs, and protects our environment, I would say, is the minimum in leaving the campsite at least not worse than we found it. I think we do owe it to leave it better than we did.

"Never lead our province wrongly through love of power." Well, certainly, we keep hearing about: well, the best way to lose elections is to act on climate change. Well, Mr. Speaker, the best way to lead is through vision and through leadership. Certainly, fighting against something is one way to run a campaign, and it certainly was successful in winning this last election campaign, but now that's done. Now it's time to lead, and it's time to show what the Alberta government will do to actually act on this. Sure, show us another path, but don't stand still and pretend that the reality is not here.

8:40

The reality is that when we see the devastating impacts that we've had even in this most recent wildfire season – you know, the hon. the Premier will say: well, the number of fires is the same. Sure, approximately the same, but the land mass of these fires, I believe I've heard scientists say, is about double what it is in a typical fire season. These consequences are real, and they have lasting impacts for all of us.

I think it is important that we reflect on when you say “desire to please” – I’ve touched on that – “or unworthy ideas”: well, I would say that it’s certainly unworthy to only act in opposition to something without proposing what you’re going to do to address it moving forward. Then, of course, “laying aside all private interests”: well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is in the public interest of all Albertans as well as our nation to make sure that we are acting in a responsible way for our planet.

By doing this previously – I know that we got the approvals on Trans Mountain. Part of why the Trans Mountain did get approved is because the marker for public support across the nation moved from 4 in 10 Canadians four years ago to 7 in 10 Canadians at the time of the last provincial election supporting the change in moving forward with a pipeline to tidewater. I’d say those are certainly important accomplishments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has been trying to rise, and I’ll recognize him now.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Government Motion 21 this evening. I’ll start by sort of taking note of some of the debate that’s been taking place so far in this Chamber this evening around this issue of action on climate change. I wanted to pay particular attention to the Conservative movement’s continuous momentum to keep kicking this can down the road on the climate change issue and other issues, which ends up costing the Albertan taxpayer, in this case, more down the road because the problem is not addressed.

Basically, there’s a false premise underlying much of Alberta government policy about the global warming issue. They’re very sensitive to accusations that they don’t understand or they don’t accept the science of climate change and that global warming is a real thing. They vehemently claim, you know, that the opposition is vilifying them incorrectly when we accuse them of not really enveloping the problem and creating solutions that are really, actually existing to endorse the fact that it is a problem. They never ever really seem to grasp that it’s necessary to, first of all, give more than lip service to the fact that global warming is a problem and climate change is affecting us all even now. The reason that they do this is because they create the false premise that it’s a problem. They’ll admit repeatedly: “Yes, it’s a problem. We know it, just like the opposition, the NDP. Yup. We agree with you that it’s a problem. Global warming exists. But, guess what, Mr. and Mrs. Taxpayer? You don’t have to pay to fix it.”

That was the underlying false premise that they used repeatedly in the last election and has become government policy and is further reflected in Government Motion 21 here. Too clever by half, perhaps, but indeed they used it effectively in the election and now are trying to foist the same argument on Albertans and the rest of the country by claiming to the general public that a price on carbon is not the most efficient way to attack climate change. What they did was to offer Albertans a climate change coupon, if I may, to finance the solution, saying that heavy emitters will be capable of financing the solution to climate change: “You won’t have to pay for it, Mr. and Mrs. Taxpayer. They will. Those other guys will. Therefore, you know, rest easy. Don’t worry about it. It exists. It’s a problem, but those other guys are going to pay for it.” It was an effective argument. A lot of people bought that argument. But, in fact, it’s poor leadership. It’s poor government. It’s irresponsible government; that is what it is.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

We’re seeing in this country the effects of climate change in every province and territory. We see the northern Arctic Ocean practically being ice free, and it very soon will be ice free year-round. The Russians certainly know that because they’re rapidly making investments in their northern seaports so that their passage through the Arctic waters will be open year-round, and they’re going to become leaders in that northern cap of the world because of the fact that climate change is changing the sea-ice patterns and there won’t be sea ice in the Arctic.

Our Arctic tundra is melting. We’re having methane gases released that will really exacerbate the problem caused by global warming and multiply the effects of it. We’re going to see the effects of it in our country, in the northern part of the country in particular, more than any other part of the world and more quickly.

I’ve been to Antarctica. I’ve been to the ice shelf on the coast of Antarctica and seen with my own eyes the melting ice and how, in fact, those ice patterns are shifting. It’s a reality that the government says that they accept and says that they realize and boast that they are on top of a plan to fix our reaction to climate change, but in fact it’s really an ineffective one at best. To say that heavy emitters will finance the solution is gratuitous at best. The platform, the arguments that helped get them an election win will not prepare the people of this province to adapt to the certain, huge challenges that we as a people are facing now and will face in the future due to climate change.

It’s been established very clearly that a price on carbon, paid by everyone who uses carbon, is the most efficient way to attack the issue of global warming and climate change. But perhaps there’s another way. I know that the Member for Sherwood Park was suggesting that upward social mobility is a God-given right. Maybe we should tell that to the 1 per cent of the population who have that upward mobility at the pinnacle. Therefore, it must be that those who are in poverty are the work of the devil, I imagine.

In any case, my point on that is that leaving it to the wind is not an option, Mr. Speaker. As a government we have to take responsible measures, not only recognizing and paying lip service to the fact that there is a problem, a global problem, a global warming issue that’s causing us to look at possible consequences that include social breakdown. You know, today on CBC Radio there was a commentator talking about the social consequences, the governmental consequences globally of failing to take action on climate change and what we’re going to be seeing when whole coastlines start disappearing, when major coastal cities start to really, really see the effects of climate change, sooner than one might think possible.

I know that we’ve seen some pretty devastating flooding in New York City not too long ago; Vanuatu, a Polynesian island, disappearing. Our projections about our own west coastline and east coastline are pretty alarming as well, the fact that we have the permafrost melting and causing large difficulties in many of our northern communities. The highway newly constructed to Tuktoyaktuk from Inuvik: I was speaking with an Inuk from that area who was in town to celebrate indigenous days on June 21. He indicated to me that, yeah, they were having significant problems with that highway because of the fact that global warming was melting the permafrost. Notwithstanding the fact that they had new technologies to build that piece of highway versus what was used to build the Alaska portion of the highway during the 1940s, they are still facing significant challenges in maintaining that roadbed because the permafrost is giving way underneath it, melting, and the road is under threat.

8:50

This government struggles with the science of climate change, and really there's no need for it. In fact, it's irresponsible to not tackle this problem head on. They're trying to create enemies within our own society. They want to pit the environment and the economy against one another and, by virtue of that, Albertans against one another, and that is a very, very sad commentary on how this government governs. They choose to seek adversaries within our own society and pit one against the other and try to create – they talk about us as an NDP government trying to pick winners and losers. Well, that's what they're trying to do with our society. They're looking at winners and losers in society. It's a zero-sum game. Some people win, some people lose, and those that end up on the short end of the stick, Mr. Speaker, are those that this government doesn't agree with, and that turns out to be usually individuals who are the most vulnerable in our society. It's really sad to see.

I know that the economy and the environment must be shown to work together. The government pays lip service to this, but – you know what? – in our past government it was proven to be the case that you could do that. You could have the environment and the economy working together, and the proof was our climate leadership plan and the approval of TMX. Now, you know, in the short time after this current government took office, TMX was approved. I don't think that they can take any credit for that. I think that the approval is proof of the effectiveness of what we had in place, the climate leadership plan. By not committing to some pieces of the climate leadership plan, as this government is showing it's going to do, we risk our economic future.

You know, the creation of a war chest, a war room, to vilify people will not work. I know that part of the reason the pipeline got approved is because we were able to move support for TMX from 4 in 10 Canadians to 7 in 10 Canadians. That's what I mean, Mr. Speaker, when I talk about leadership. True strength and quality leadership is about bringing people together. It's not about creating opponents within your own society and bashing them together and cobbling together a winning majority out of the remnants. That's not leadership. That's a way of splitting and dividing a society for your own benefit, and that's a cheap way of governing. The hardest way to govern is to look for ways to bring disparate views together and to have people act in a collaborative way, in a more harmonious way. That's really the government that ends up with a society that, in the long term, looks out for each other rather than attacking each other. This is what we're ending up with in this province, a polarity that need not exist, but this government thrives on that polarity.

They showed that during the election, and that's what they intend to keep on doing based on the type of actions that they argue in Government Motion 21. The resolution is something that I cannot in good conscience support. I don't understand why this government struggles with the science of climate change. As I mentioned, contrary to what they would have us believe, pitting the environment and the economy against each other will not move this province ahead. It will not lead to increased investment. They conveniently forget, of course, what happened to the price of oil shortly after we took office and the fact that we had a huge hole in our budget as a result, and that resulted in the necessity to take some very different actions in order to bridge the gap that we found ourselves in as a government. As has been said before, we made a choice. We did our best to protect Albertans from the job losses that would have resulted had we not invested in public services and in infrastructure to keep people working instead of adding to the unemployment rolls when we faced such a downturn in the economy because of the drop in the price of oil. We understood that we had to take those steps because Albertans would have suffered even more.

Certainly, we're very much aware of the job losses that occurred in the oil patch and the many that have still not recovered as yet. But the things that we did were always geared towards taking steps to mitigate those things and the concrete steps for the long term that had to be done in order to create value in our resource sector and in the long term make sure that we gained market access and world price for our oil products by such things as the TMX pipeline, by doing things in recognition of the global warming that we faced to have the credibility to gain the approval of the rest of the country.

Once again, bringing people together, Mr. Speaker, is what leadership is all about. Dividing people, as this Premier and this government seem intent on doing, is not going to ingratiate ourselves to long-term success. I know that there are many people in this province who reacted with a rah-rah when the Premier took a stance to argue vehemently and loudly against other people in the country who had a differing view on the pipeline. In fact, it didn't have to be that way. Our former Premier, when we were government, engaged people with cogent arguments.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I believe I saw the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise under 29(2)(a) and question the member. You know, what we hear from the other side when it comes to carbon and the carbon tax – the Member for Edmonton-McClung mentioned that he had actually been to Antarctica. I just wonder how much carbon it takes to get a gentleman from Edmonton all the way down to Antarctica just to visit. [interjection] Yeah. Actually, the hypocrisy is thick, thick, thick in this House. Absolutely.

You know, we heard the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview justifying the carbon tax by saying that Edmonton residents and Calgary residents were happy because they saw the benefit of the green line and valley line LRT. Well, that falls right into one of my favourite arguments, that the brunt of the carbon tax was felt by rural Albertans, who have absolutely no choice on their mode of transportation. The valley line LRT, the new one that's going over to the west side of Edmonton from downtown: right now if I'm an Edmontonian or a visitor, I have a choice; I can take a cab, I can take a Uber, I can ride my bike, all on bitumen-supplied pavement roads, by the way. I've pointed out a number of times in the House that every tonne of pavement takes six barrels of bitumen, which is very interesting. That includes bike paths, Mr. Speaker. So if you want your bike paths through the river valley, you'd better be a bitumen supporter because, otherwise, you're going to be riding on gravel.

Another thing, through the chair . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt. I think that we've already come to the decision that we were looking for, at least the idea that we were going to present to the House, so please continue.

Mr. Hanson: Oh, thank you very much, and through the chair, sir.

One of the other things I'd like to point out is that when we were debating the carbon tax when we were in opposition, we put multiple, multiple amendments forward trying to get exemptions for food banks, trying to get exemptions for schools, for school boards, for charitable organizations, hospitals, and each time we requested a standing vote so that we could make sure that we got the government standing up and being counted. One time I commented on them being like lemmings jumping off the political cliffs, so to speak, every time that they stood up and were recognized by Albertans as opposing the exemption of carbon taxes on schools and school boards and food banks.

9:00

Another thing. When we talk about job losses due to the carbon tax, I'd like to point out that one of my school boards spent $300,000 in 2018 just on the carbon tax. That's a lot of teachers. That's a lot of teacher support staff. That's a lot of school books. So when we talk about job losses due to the carbon tax, I think we should maybe look at some of their big supporters, which are, you know, the Alberta Teachers' Association; hospitals, that had to pay carbon tax; all of these organizations that hire and have staff that are public-sector employees, that couldn't afford to hire more people or give them raises because of the carbon tax. I think that's something that we need to look at.

I would be really interested in listening to comments from the member, especially about his trip to Antarctica and how many boats it took him to get there, how many airplane trips, nights in hotels, you know, all those things that are very interesting, and how he feels about his contribution to the carbon footprint and the carbon attack on the Antarctic icefield that he is so concerned about.

You know, just going back to the carbon tax and the effects on the green line and valley line LRTs, like I said, I questioned the Minister of Transportation last week on highway 28. For three years in the NDP's strategic plan highway 28 didn't even show up. That's a single road that goes up into my area. That's their only road of choice other than gravel side roads that are supported by the municipalities. So my argument would be that rural Albertans bore the brunt of the NDP's carbon tax and saw absolutely no benefit from it. They voted very resoundingly, I think, in numbers in April to send a very, very clear message.

You know, I look at something I think I've tabled a number of times in the House. It's called the Leap Manifesto, Mr. Speaker. I'll read you a section of it, and I'll be happy to table it again. I think I've tabled it three times in the House, and I'll be very happy to table it again. It says here:

There is no longer an excuse for building new infrastructure projects that lock us into increased extraction decades into the future. The new iron law of energy development must be: if you wouldn't want it in your backyard, then it doesn't belong in anyone's backyard. That applies equally to oil and gas pipelines . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I believe that the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain has been up a few times, and I see him now ready to speak.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have seen the unfair and unjust treatment that the federal government has imposed on our province, first with delaying pipeline development, creating bills that target Alberta oil, and now imposing a federal carbon tax. The province of Alberta has a constitutional right to make policy choices within our own jurisdiction. The federal carbon tax would disrupt the balance of Canada's federation by undermining Alberta's exclusive constitutional power to manage its own local affairs, natural resources, economy, and greenhouse gas emission plans. We have seen the negative impacts that a carbon tax has upon the people of Alberta, including the increased costs to heat homes and run businesses. We have seen how many jobs were lost because of the NDP job-killing carbon tax imposed on Albertans in the midst of the greatest economic downturn we have ever gone through.

Our platform makes it clear that we're committed to a practical approach that achieves real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. We saw the soaring gas prices, the number of jobs lost, and the number of homeless people rising. The carbon tax doesn't help anyone but those imposing it. We want to fight for Albertans. This money-grabbing carbon tax is unconstitutional and unjust. We listened to Albertans all across this province. We saw how they voted in this past election. The majority of Albertans do not want a carbon tax imposed on them. Albertans care about the environment, but they also want effective solutions. They don't want to be taxed on ineffective methods of fighting climate change.

This carbon tax is only a tax grab by the Trudeau government, and we shouldn't confuse climate action with a carbon tax. Our government recognizes that climate change is a real and important issue in our province and is committed to working on a climate change plan that strikes a balance between economic growth and environmental protection and achieves real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. Our government knows that there is a better way to reduce emissions than this impractical and unconstitutional tax grab. We know we can't have our cake and eat it, too. We know that we cannot impose a carbon tax that kills jobs and destroys our economy and creates a huge deficit, then promise to invest into a project that will combat climate change. We believe that we should talk with stakeholders to discuss a practical and more effective plan of action to reduce emissions instead of rushing into failed ideological experiments that hurt ordinary Albertans.

If the Trudeau carbon tax goes through, Albertans will lose out on 6,000 jobs, $2.4 billion, see increased food costs and other goods rise, see prices rise to heat their homes and get to work, and less investment will be made in our province, making us less competitive in Canada and around the world. This job-killing carbon tax is a one-size-fits-all solution that doesn't work for every province. The federal government fails to recognize that Alberta's oil and gas industries continue to be global leaders in emissions reductions. But, again, they don't care about Albertans and would rather buy foreign oil that isn't up to the same environmental standards that Albertan producers produce right here at home.

We were elected with a mandate to create jobs, growth, and economic diversification, to help Albertans get back to work and make life easier for families who need to pay their bills, and our first piece of legislation repealed was the carbon tax. Now we face this federal carbon tax. Our government will challenge the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on Alberta. If the Trudeau government will not listen to Albertans' concerns, we will make them listen.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), I see no one.

Therefore, going back to the main motion, I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo standing.

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just rise to speak to the motion before us and make three short points. A part of this motion says, "the government in its efforts to challenge the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on Alberta, which this Assembly views as a clear violation of provincial jurisdiction, including the launching of a constitutional challenge if necessary." I don't agree with that. That's one of the points that I want to make. The other is the positive impacts of the former climate leadership plan. And the last is the need to take meaningful action on climate change.

With regard to the first point, the constitutional challenge, the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal has already ruled on this, and Premier Moe has lost in the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal with regard to that challenge. The Court of Appeal underlined the fact that the federal government does have the constitutional jurisdiction to impose a carbon tax. As my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview talked about earlier, it is something that we already know the outcome of, Mr. Speaker, and it is something that we'll lose at when we challenge.

We know that Ontario is in the same place of challenging the constitutionality of the carbon tax, and I anticipate that a similar decision will be the outcome of that challenge. We will be wasting taxpayers' money in that challenge, Mr. Speaker. The constitutionality is clear. Though this government may want to challenge, it likely will turn out the same result as the previous challenge in Saskatchewan and subsequent ones that are coming up. That's the first point.

The positive impacts of the carbon levy that was in place in Alberta are many, Mr. Speaker. They include the greening of the energy grid, including solar panels and wind energy, and those transitions to a greener energy electricity grid are positive, of course, for this province for the reduction of emissions that occurs.

Another important area, Mr. Speaker, that the carbon levy was helping to fuel is to work on the capture of methane, so working with organizations, companies who were looking to capture methane because that gas is highly problematic, even more so than CO<sub>2</sub>. It would leak from well sites and wells, and it would accumulate in our atmosphere and cause the degradation of our atmosphere faster than CO<sub>2</sub> but was happening at a pretty high rate. Anything that works to capture methane is a positive thing.

9:10

Making innovations happen across our economy in the oil and gas sector industries. The carbon levy was funding those kinds of innovations happening as well, Mr. Speaker. Those were positive in terms of our world-leading oil and gas sector and making sure that even more carbon is taken out of the barrel.

The rebating of a portion of the levy back to low- and middle-income Albertans. In the case of low-income Albertans fully offsetting their carbon price cost was something that mitigated the cost for those individuals, whether they were in rural Alberta or they were in urban Alberta.

We know, of course, that energy efficiencies occurred in many public buildings and other institutions across this province as a result of the investment in those institutions and public buildings and other places. Municipalities were working with Energy Efficiency Alberta as well as the government of Alberta to do more, Mr. Speaker. We heard about the town of Raymond earlier today, that is going to be net zero in terms of its electrical energy use, and that's not something that wasn't supported in part by the carbon levy that was previously in place. It was supported in part. The whole movement towards reducing the carbon footprint, whether you're a town, whether you're an individual like myself or any of us, is positive action towards our climate and climate change.

Mr. Speaker, that's the second thing I wanted to talk about. The third thing, of course, is a need to take meaningful action. Taking meaningful action on climate change is something we do for ourselves, of course, in this province and people currently, but we do it for future generations. Many leading experts in the oil and gas sector, economists, and others have endorsed a price on carbon. The TIER approach that the government has taken will capture less of the economy's emissions in Alberta than the previous government's climate leadership plan. The TIER approach is really a step down. It's not as broad based in terms of the emissions that it addresses.

I just want to, of course, go back to the leading experts in the oil and gas sector and economists who believe that the action of a price on carbon is the right way to go, Mr. Speaker. I know the government would say: well, we're putting a price on carbon. Again, I would argue that it's less of a job and fewer emissions are being captured as a result of the work that the government is doing.

A couple of years ago people like the president and CEO of Cenovus said, "We fully support Alberta taking a leadership role in addressing climate change and we believe one of the best ways to do that is through an economy-wide carbon levy as well as by supporting the development of carbon-reducing technologies." How I would interpret what the government today is doing and what Mr. Ferguson was talking about is – of course, I can't put words in his mouth, but we had more of an economy-wide carbon levy, and the government is taking a lesser approach to all of that.

Mr. Hornby, vice-president of government affairs and policy of GE Canada said, "GE supports carbon pricing and continued investment in researching new technologies and digital tools to reduce greenhouse gas emissions." They have a 10-year ecostrategy.

Mr. Speaker, going on here to someone we all know, Mr. Steve Williams, CEO of Suncor. I think he's just in the final days of his tenure at Suncor, and he'll be stepping down. We all, of course, wish him the best of luck in his retirement if that's what he chooses to do. It probably won't be. Mr. Williams said:

We think climate change is happening. We believe a broad-based carbon price is the right answer and we're pleased to see the Alberta government . . .

The previous Alberta government, not this one.

. . . is taking steps to implement [a] climate leadership [plan].

Those aren't words I hear from the other side, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Williams was talking about the previous NDP government, that was here from 2015 to 2019.

Somebody we all know, of course, is Professor Bev Dahlby. He's a distinguished fellow in tax and economic growth at the School of Public Policy and a professor of economics at the University of Calgary. Mr. Dahlby says:

Smart carbon policy means pricing carbon broadly . . .

Again I'd argue that the government is not doing that.

. . . and this is exactly what Alberta's new carbon levy does.

Our carbon levy.

Carbon pricing is the most cost-effective way to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and Alberta's strengthened policy will help the province support a strong economy and environment into the future.

He goes on and on and on, and of course talks about some of the things I talked about.

By investing in rebates for affected families, tax cuts for small business . . .

I omitted saying that and the positive impacts. It's still happening, Mr. Speaker, at $185 million a year, from 3 to 2 per cent.

. . . green infrastructure and clean technology the Government of Alberta has done just that.

I won't belabour the fact except to say that I think that the meaningful action that we were taking was in the right direction.

I will make one final comment. You know, I probably spend too much time online looking at social media, but – there it is – I think many people here do the same thing. I saw something. I'm smiling because it's so silly, but it upsets a lot of people. I think it's a new bumper sticker, and I'll just say what it says. It says: let it idle; support the patch. Mr. Speaker, that seems like a really wasteful thing to do. You're wasting gas when you do that, you're creating emissions, including CO<sub>2</sub>, NO<sub>x</sub>, and SO<sub>x</sub>. You're not doing anything positive for the environment, all in the view that you're helping out the oil patch, the oil and gas sector.

Well, I think, reading from some of the leaders in the oil and gas sector, some of the CEOs and presidents, that they don't see things like that. They don't see that we need to support the oil and gas sector by wasting fuel and creating emissions needlessly. I think what we need to do, Mr. Speaker, is to act smarter, take deliberate action today, work across our economy, and continue to think about future generations and those people who will take over after us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I believe I saw the hon. Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women standing.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond. I don't know where to start, actually. There have been so many things that have been said, but in response to what the hon. member said and especially with regard to solar panels, wind, and all of these kinds of things, the thing that the opposition keeps forgetting is that when the wind doesn't blow and the sun doesn't shine, we still need to make sure that we keep the lights on. More than that, there's an entire double build that happens behind all of these projects that's not taken into consideration when all of these statistics are put forward about how much the REPs cost, what we came in on for wind. None of that is incorporated into any of the amounts of money that we understand are being put forward to taxpayers and what comes off their bill and why it's costing this much.

9:20

Another thing I'd like to bring up, too, is that if you consider, in the previous government, when the previous minister of environment would go overseas to talk about Canada and Canadian energy, it was interesting to me that all of the feedback that came back was about the tar sands and dirty oil and how it was that we produced here instead of standing up for an industry that actually promotes the entire country, about unity, about making sure that we are talking about an incredible energy. Not only to mention that, but on top of that, if we want to talk about leadership or what is responsible, do you know what's responsible? The human rights of other countries that don't have access to our oil and gas as a result of ideological choices from governments that have shut down our prosperity in this country.

Let's look at that for just a minute. I was in India last year, and I'll be going back this year. The air index quality in Hyderabad on any given day is probably well over 195. That's particulates in the air. Part of that has to do with a couple of different things. One of them is that they rely on solid energy – coal, heating fuel, kerosene – but also they use cow dung, the impoverished people of the world. If you ever get a chance, you pick it up, you make a patty out of it, you put it on the wall, you dry it, and then you burn it to feed your family. Do you want to understand what's polluting the world? That's part of it. You want to know why that's happening? Because we can't get our energy to those countries to take women and children out of poverty. That's called energy poverty. Then on top of that, we have carbon leakage from other industries around the world that don't even have close to the human rights that we have here, promoted by the government, by antipipeline activists.

Let's take a look at what actually is going on. You want to talk about responsible energy? That's our province. We are the leaders of that. You want to talk about a few other things? One of the members had mentioned about arrogance. Let's talk about that for a minute. What about when the Premier told rural families to take the bus?

Mr. Kenney: Former Premier.

Mrs. Aheer: Sorry. Pardon me. When the former Premier told Albertans to take the bus.

What about when the former Premier talked about – I can talk about, in my old riding of Chestermere-Rocky View, the Bears Den.

Because of the cumulative actions of this government of carbon tax, minimum wage increases, all of a sudden the people that ate at the Bears Den were spending $80 on their meal, but the people who worked there had to go to the food bank. It was absolutely disrespectful and didn't even take into consideration that the carbon tax and all of the policies that the previous government had put on had impacted restaurants, small businesses. You want to talk about businesses and the job-killing carbon tax? I can tell you of several small businesses in Chestermere that were not able to continue on because of the cumulative number of policy decisions that actually shut down small business, which is one of the fabrics of this province. So let's talk about that.

You want to talk about pulling people out of poverty? I'd really like India to be a winner. The Member for Sherwood Park was talking about Prime Minister Modi. Prime Minister Modi has a big problem on his hands with actual pollution in that country. When there's an inversion, people can't walk outside. They cannot function. Yet we can't get our incredible, responsible resource development to those countries because we have governments that would rather use ideological statements like social licence. Because suddenly somehow that's going to make our product better, when, actually, the promotion should have been there.

Where was the former Premier when C-69 was in Parliament in Ottawa or, for that matter, C-48? Both of them are dependent on each other. If the shippers can't get their quantities, it doesn't matter how many pipelines you have if you don't have people who are able to accept the amount of product that is going to go overseas.

The Acting Speaker: I believe I saw the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat standing for the call.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government knows that taking job-killing policies and taxes imposed on us from another government that is hypocritical with their own ecological footprint is wrong. The Trudeau government imposes unjust taxes and overreaching policies that he himself does not even follow. The Prime Minister should know that the most effective way to make a point, especially regarding a very important and controversial topic such as the environment, is by leading by example. The Trudeau government is all over the place with their environmental policies and impositions.

First, they want to pass bills C-48 and C-69, both of which are bills that hinder Alberta's ability to transport our natural resources. As we know, Justin Trudeau's government approved TMX, and then they delayed for over a year. Next, to gain votes from the environmentalists, he announced that Canada will ban single-use plastics by 2021. In his bumbling he stated, and I will quote: uh, we, uh, have recently switched to drinking, uh, plastic bottles out of, uh, water out of, uh, when we have water bottles, uh, out of plastic, uh, sorry, away from plastic, uh, towards paper, uh, like, drink boxed water bottle sorts of things. Wow. He could not answer a simple question, Mr. Speaker, about how he will cut down on his plastic water bottle use. [interjection] I'm getting there, Premier; don't you worry.

For his information, drinking tap water or using a reusable water bottle would suffice. Then, after his announcement, a report came out that the Prime Minister's family spends over $300 on plastic bottles. That's a month.

But wait; there's more. While taking a personal vacation out of the country, we know that the Prime Minister flies back and forth on his fancy government plane to take press release photos and the occasional selfie. As I recall, the plane is not environmentally friendly. It actually pumps about as much carbon dioxide into the atmosphere as the average Canadian in a whole year. But remember: the carbon tax is all about emissions.

In all seriousness, we understand that the Prime Minister needs to meet with Canadians. That is part of his job. But what, then, do you say to Canadians who have a carbon-intensive reality? How do we just expect that someone else will make the needed reductions? We need our leaders to take responsibility and not to be hypocrites when it comes to our environment. How can Canadians expect to take the Prime Minister's policies seriously if he himself is not doing anything, if he still is drinking boxed water bottle sorts of things to the tune of $300 a month?

Canadians are so sick and tired of hearing about hypocritical actions from the federal and the past NDP government. They voted for a government that is going to produce effective environmental solutions that won't kill jobs and the economy. Trudeau's cash-grab carbon tax is a one-size-fits-all solution that, frankly, does not work for Alberta. We have already seen the negative impacts that the NDP carbon tax did to the economy and jobs.

Not only is this a bad economic plan; it's unconstitutional. The federal government tax is a clear invasion of Alberta's jurisdiction. It is all economic pain for no environmental gain. This federal tax grab will only punish Albertans for heating their homes and driving to work. We are keeping our commitment to defend Alberta taxpayers. A $50-a-tonne carbon tax would sacrifice over 6,000 new jobs and take almost $2.4 billion out of Albertans' pockets. The federal government's carbon tax would also increase the cost of food and other goods for Alberta families at the checkout and make us less competitive in Canada and around the world.

Our government has worked hard and kept our commitment to scrap the previous government's carbon tax. Now we have to work even harder to challenge the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on Alberta. Albertans do not get a say in the matter. According to the opposition and their close friend and personal ally Justin Trudeau the carbon tax will not destroy jobs or hurt our economy, but they would rather have a federal carbon tax imposed on us that would do the exact same thing. It's a no-win for Alberta.

Our government recognizes that we need to strike a balance between economic growth and environmental protection while achieving real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. Our election platform, that received a massive and historic mandate, made it clear to all Albertans that we're committed to a practical approach that achieves real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. There's a better way for us to reduce these emissions than an impractical and unconstitutional tax grab. No one in this nation or in this Assembly should make the mistake of equating climate action with the carbon tax ever again.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I believe I saw the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora standing.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks. I definitely don't plan on taking all five minutes, so I imagine there will be time for other members. I want to say, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat that when other Conservative women attacked the Prime Minister – and I'm not a defender of the Prime Minister; I think many people probably know that I am likely one of the last people to defend him – when people attacked him for his stutter and speech impediment, it reflected poorly upon those Conservative women, who were set up to do that. To the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat: I think she had many really valuable things to say in her comments. I think that attacking any individual for a speech impediment or a stutter is unbecoming of them. Certainly, when you're switching languages, I imagine that it's even more difficult.

9:30

What I wanted to say is that I think the member had many things of note to say. I think that sometimes when people are pushing members to say things, attacking individuals and potentially impediments, it makes it problematic for hearing the message. I know that some people are having a hard time hearing my message now. Certainly, I cede the floor to others. But I just wanted to say that to the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, there are still four minutes under 29(2)(a). I see the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat standing.

Ms Glasgo: Yeah. I think I still have a little bit of time. While I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, I will not take lessons from a member who referred to Albertans such as my dad and the people who work in the oil and gas industry as sewer rats. I'm sorry.

Quite frankly, I'm actually really glad that she mentioned Conservative women. We are strong, and what this government seems to have a problem with is strong Conservative women. We see that now, right now in this House, and we see that every day with the Minister of Education. I would just like to say for the record, Mr. Speaker, that I would never make fun of someone for a speech impediment.

This government and this Prime Minister have shown over and over again that he is unable to represent the views of Albertans, and that is why we are challenging him on this federal carbon tax. It is nothing more than a tax grab. I will stand up on the record every single day of the week, and that's repealing the carbon tax and giving Albertans what they asked for in the last election.

The Acting Speaker: Two and a half minutes remaining under 29(2)(a).

Not seeing anyone, are there any other hon. members who would like to speak to the bill? I believe I see that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition and Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has the floor.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to spend a great deal of time speaking on this motion. I did have a chance to put a lot of my thoughts about the government's resistance to taking meaningful action on climate change on the record when we discussed Bill 1. So I won't do that.

However, as I've said before, there is a growing pattern that we have seen with the Premier and his frequency of saying things which independent opportunities to verify the facts would suggest simply aren't true. So having reviewed his comments from the Blues, I felt the need to get up and just respond to a few things that the Premier said, which were utterly false, and simply to correct the record there. Of course, I'm sure we have to allow – because it's the Blues. Perhaps the Blues inadvertently got it wrong. Nonetheless, going with what we saw there, I think it's important to make a couple of points, about eight or nine. But I'll try to be brief.

First of all, of course, the Premier began with his constant sort of note that somehow we ran in the election in 2015 without talking about what we would do with respect to climate change or without saying to Albertans that we had a very full plan and every intention to combat climate change seriously, and that's exactly what we did. We went off to get a significant amount of expert advice, and we consulted with many, many Albertans. We ultimately were in a position to have key leaders in the oil industry who were definitely not NDP supporters, environmental leaders, community leaders, aboriginal leaders, indigenous leaders all come together to support the plan that we finally developed after the election but with the advice of a large amount of expertise that we didn't have available to us beforehand.

But make no mistake, Mr. Speaker; we were very clear in the last election that we did intend to take climate change seriously. We did believe that climate change was a real and a pressing threat to everybody in the world, let alone Albertans, and that we had a responsibility to do our part. So when the Premier makes statements like that there was not even a hint that we would be doing something like that, that is simply not correct.

Now, the second thing that I found particularly striking in terms of its disconnect with reality was the ridiculous assertions made by the Premier that the carbon levy and our system of pricing carbon was somewhat regressive. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker. The decision of this government to cancel carbon pricing is itself a regressive decision as far as who benefits and who loses.

The reality is that the way the carbon pricing system works – any economist, anybody who studies these things will tell you that wealthy people pay more. That's the way it works because things that burn carbon, on average, are things that wealthy people are more likely to use more. So if you're in a 3,000-square-foot house, you will pay more of a carbon price than you would if you were in a 700-square-foot apartment. As a result, people with more money paid more.

By cancelling the carbon levy, what we are doing is giving a regressive tax break, one that the rich get a bigger benefit from not only as a percentage but in terms of a global amount. This is further enhanced, of course, by the fact that we did in fact, contrary to statements that I saw the Premier make earlier today, put in place rebates which were very much designed to support low-income Albertans. As a result, low-income Albertans in many cases actually came out ahead with our carbon pricing scheme. We were very intentional about putting it in place that way because we were very concerned about making sure that we adopted a progressive approach. So it is absolutely mathematically incorrect what the Premier suggested, and it's really important that the people of Alberta hear the facts.

Now, the third thing that I'd like to point out is that the Premier has taken to repeating another falsehood, which is this notion that we had decided that should we have ever raised the price of carbon to $40 or $50 a tonne, which was a very conditional position on our part all along, we had decided that there would be no rebates going along with that. In fact, that was not true, Mr. Speaker. That decision was never made, so I know we didn't say it because we hadn't made the decision. Yet the Premier insists on carrying on and making this claim, knowing that it's not correct. It's really a thing that I wish he would stop doing because it is not correct. It is a false statement. It is really becoming quite overwhelmingly the comfort level of this Premier with respect to that particular strategy of debate.

Now, another thing that the Premier spoke about was a couple of examples that he suggested where the carbon levy caused huge bills for certain organizations, and he talked about those in his comments today. He talked about suggestions that the Calgary Food Bank had a $50,000 bill one year because of the carbon levy. Interestingly, during the election some rigorous folks in the media – there weren't a lot of them; there were not very many folks in the media with enough resources to do this kind of thing – set about to do fact checks both in relation to things that those of us in our party said as well as things that people in the UCP said. With respect to the $50,000 bill at the Calgary Food Bank they subsequently spoke to the executive director at the Calgary Food Bank, who said, well, no; actually, the UCP is completely wrong; that was not true; we never had a bill like that. It was about less than 25 per cent of the number that the UCP likes to use in its talking points.

Maybe it was an innocent mistake by the UCP, but I would think, Mr. Speaker, that when you have the executive director of the very organization that you are referring to coming out and saying, "No; actually, you are inflating this number by over 400 per cent," that at the very least, I mean, you might actually apologize and say: "Oops; my bad. Sorry. I guess I shouldn't have said that." But even if you don't do that, you wouldn't then get up in the House and speak on Hansard and get it on the record again. You know full well that it was wrong. You know that you just inflated the number by over 400 per cent. But there's the Premier happily marching in, saying things that he knows are not true. It just is quite overwhelming, Mr. Speaker, because I honestly have never seen this in politics before. I truly haven't.

9:40

I know I'm getting a little animated here, but I just, in my many years of watching politics – you may or may not know, but I actually was forced to start watching politics at the age of four, when my dad got involved. I was six when he got elected. Honestly, I literally had to watch it on TV once it started, played on TV. I mean, it was really a very tough childhood, Mr. Speaker. But what I will say is that through all that time, going back that far, I never saw anybody so loose with the facts, so willing to come into this building and put on the record things that they know not to be true. It's really disappointing.

Anyway, the next thing the Premier talked about was the bill paid by the CBE. Now, in that case, I think it was more or less accurate. But I think it's really important to put it in context. He talks about, "Oh, there was, you know, two or three million dollars that the CBE might have had to pay in carbon levy." And then he said, "Oh, well, you know, the school buses had to stop, and people were no longer getting to school, and kids would probably" – he didn't actually say, but the implication was that kids were walking 20 miles in the snow because they couldn't afford to run buses anymore.

Let's just be clear. The CBE has a $1.4 billion budget. Even if the number is correct and their carbon levy cost came to $3 million, that amounts to .2 per cent of their budget. More importantly, over the four years that our government was in power, we increased their budget by $100 million, Mr. Speaker. So when we hear them say that because of the NDP buses suddenly screeched to a halt in Calgary, through the Calgary board of education, at the same time that we gave them $100 million extra, well, that in itself is a little extra. I would say that the member needs to put his comments in context if he wants to be taken seriously.

Another thing the Premier talked about is the matter of carbon leakage. I want to say that that is actually a legitimate policy issue and one with which our government was very, very seized. I'm hopeful that some people over there, probably not the Premier but someone, did actually dig in a little bit to the many elements and complexities of the carbon leadership plan to know that, of course, we had extremely complex and dedicated efforts, consultation with industry, a great deal of economic analysis, more consultation, more analysis, all that kind of stuff, all of which was designed to come up with a very precise and sophisticated set of levers to ensure that we were able to protect trade-exposed industries from the consequences of the phenomena of carbon leakage. There was a lot of work done on that with a number of different trade-exposed industries.

It's just frustrating to see the Premier talk about carbon leakage and then not acknowledge the complexity and the depth of the work that was done to account for carbon leakage and to support industry to ensure that they did not suffer from the matter of the carbon leakage in a way that would have made them unprofitable or unable to carry on business. There was a highly complex, sophisticated set of deliberations that went into ensuring that that was the case.

Another thing, as it relates – well, let me back up just a little bit. Another thing that I noted that the Premier talked about with respect to the climate leadership plan as a whole and the issue of the carbon tax is this whole argument that: well, other parts of the world create more emissions than we do; therefore, we don't have to do anything. Of course, you know, that form of analysis is a recipe for doing nothing, and heaven forbid that everybody did that. Then, presumably, only the single-biggest emitter would ever have any obligation to do anything, and the second-biggest emitter would never have an obligation to do anything, and the third-biggest emitter and so on, and so on, and so on.

The notion that we have no obligation because everybody else does so much more and we are such a small part of the world is an incredibly destructive, insular, parochial approach to things, and it is something that is better left a century ago. For those of us who are concerned about global issues and the increasing globalization of many, many issues in our world, we need to take this matter very, very seriously. I would go beyond sort of the morality of it all and just even talk about the economics of it. We cannot remove ourselves from a global economy. To approach it this way is just very selfish and negative and, ultimately, illogical. So I won't spend too much more time on that issue.

Of course, the Premier also loves to talk about the fact that, you know, on my eighth interview around Christmas I was unable to remember the exact amount of emissions that had been reduced by our climate leadership plan. Well, good on him. It was not my best interview, for sure. By all means, dine out on that if you like. But I would suggest that it's a bit disingenuous because, of course, the next day we made a point of actually providing that information. Indeed, the information is that we had already in that one year alone reduced emissions by about seven megatonnes, which, just to put that in context, is about one-third of the annual emissions of the whole province of Manitoba. So it's not nothing, Mr. Speaker. It's really quite a bit, actually. So that was there.

Now, was that entirely attributable to the tax as opposed to other elements in our climate leadership plan? It's hard to say. The Premier tries to suggest: oh, it's because you shut down the economy. Well, not really. I think that probably a good part of it had to do with the acceleration of the coal phase-out. But even that, Mr. Speaker, was enabled by the funds that went into the carbon levy, because we were able to ensure a just transition and also a transition that provided a minimum level of investor certainty. So that's what was done with the proceeds of the carbon pricing system, that's what enabled the acceleration of the coal phase-out, and that is probably the single biggest contributor to the seven megatonne reduction in that particular year.

The other thing that I would like to talk about just a little bit goes back to this issue of sort of intellectual honesty when we talk about things in this House. I note that it was referenced in the Premier's conversation about the climate leadership plan. Also, though, it's something that they certainly like to say a lot, a lot, a lot, which is where they make the suggestion that the carbon levy is somehow the cause of the significant job losses that were experienced in Alberta. That, of course, is ridiculous.

What we do know is that the price of oil went from about $140 a barrel down to $29. We know that the energy industry itself went into a massive amount of restructuring, which it would have done anyway, to increase efficiency and further shed jobs and probably not bring them back ever. We also know that the U.S. oil and gas market changed dramatically. We also know that our ability to move our product also became significantly constricted. All of these things – actually, I've described them in the past as like a slow car crash that we could see coming for about the last 10 years, mostly while those guys were at the wheel, and that is the primary reason why we saw these significant job losses and restructuring. It's a little bit like, going back to the CBE example, suggesting that a $3 million carbon price on a $1.4 billion budget is why the CBE suddenly can't find enough buses to move people around the city.

9:50

It's ridiculous, Mr. Speaker – certainly, that's exactly what that assertion is – and it's illogical. It's not based on the facts, and there's not an economist in the world that would ever suggest that our carbon levy is the reason why the jobs that the Premier constantly refers to being lost were lost because it's simply not, and he knows it. I think he's sufficiently well read to know that he is, once again, playing fast and loose with the facts. What he doesn't, of course, like to talk about is that for two years during our government's tenure we actually had the fastest growing economy in the country. From the depths of the recession in 2016 to now we've actually created over 100,000 jobs. I know that the facts are, as they used to say, inconvenient. I think they're more than inconvenient. I think they are kind of hostile to them. I think we've moved beyond inconvenience.

The other thing that I would like to talk about just a little bit, though, is that the motion itself refers to many things. There are actually some things in the motion that I don't disagree with, but what makes it difficult for me to support the motion is that it says that we all have to link arms and say that the carbon tax was absolutely bad for all Albertans. I'm afraid that I just can't quite get there, Mr. Speaker. Unlike what the member opposite suggests, that somehow we don't accept what Albertans said in the last election, that's not actually true. I've actually said very clearly on the record that I get that Albertans weren't big fans of the carbon tax, but I also believe that they are actually big fans of doing something to address the hazards and the risks of climate change. I don't think that they're in anywhere near the level of denial that the members of the UCP are.

Either way, though, what I will say is that there has been a tremendous amount of misrepresentation by the government at every opportunity in every setting in every community all the time about what was going on with the climate leadership plan. Indeed, I saw that, unfortunately, extend into the remarks by the Premier tonight. This was not going into a slush fund. That's the most ridiculous thing I've ever heard. The climate leadership plan was constrained by legislation, and the funds associated with the climate leadership plan were very much dedicated to certain projects. One was funding the 33 per cent drop in the small-business tax. Another was the rebates to low- and middle-income families. Another was for investing and incenting renewable energy, primarily renewable energy in the production of electricity for all Albertans on a commercial and utility-based scale, something that has of course generated tremendous levels of economic activity and investment interest in the province of Alberta.

Now, as an interesting side note, Mr. Speaker, I note that the Premier made that comment: well, I don't have any problems if my neighbour wants to put a solar panel on his roof. To be clear, the whole solar panels on people's roofs thing was a very small element, a very small component, of what the climate leadership plan was paying for. Just to back up a little bit, you know, what he said was: bully for my neighbour if he wants to put a solar panel on his roof, but I don't want my dollars to go to it. Well, you know what? A couple of hundred years ago that's what people used to say: bully for my neighbour if he wants to pay for his own fire services, but I don't want my taxpayer dollars to go for that. You know what ended up happening? If you didn't pay for your own fire services and then your house caught on fire – guess what? – your neighbour's did, too. It turns out that some things actually require people to pool their resources to do the best job on it. That's actually sort of the genesis of good governance.

Now, I know that for these folks over here, at the end of the day, it's not about creating jobs. It's not about supporting entrepreneurs. It's not about any of that. It's about making all the arguments they can, most of which are economically flawed and have been proven to be so over and over and over again. It's really just about shrinking government so that they can pull it back from those who need it most in order to give money back to those who need it least. That is ultimately the fundamental basis of right-wing politics. That's what they're here to do, and that's what they are doing here. But I will say that climate change is actually something that we need to pull together on. If we all live in our little bubbles, there's going to be a problem in the long term.

Let me just go back to the other things that the levy paid for. We have incenting renewable energy on a commercial-wide basis, we have the small-business tax cut, we have a progressive rebate, we have the coal phase-out, and we have a significant investment in innovation funding. The members opposite keep talking as though they are the only ones that ever thought of investing in technology and innovation funding. Quite honestly, the level of resources that were dedicated to our energy industry, to support their bump in innovation funding and reducing the amount of carbon in a barrel, was significant. It was $1.4 billion over five years. That is a huge bump from what was being directed to the energy industry before.

When the Premier says ridiculous things like he did in question period today, that we have never done anything to support the energy industry and that we hate the energy industry, which is actually something he said, which was, again, another one of those "Why be bothered with the facts?" kinds of statements, in fact, what we did and what the carbon levy was going towards was significantly supporting industry's work that they were already doing but needed more work to do in order to stay ahead of what was happening in the rest of the world and ensure that our product remained the best in terms of taking carbon out of the barrel.

Another thing, of course, that the carbon levy was funding was the LRT. We've had lots of talks about the green line, the LRT here in Edmonton, something that we know takes tens of thousands of cars off the road and, of course, reduces emissions significantly.

The final thing that the climate levy was designed to fund was adaptation efforts. There is a plethora of adaptation efforts that need to be going on across our province which are not happening right now, Mr. Speaker, because we have a shortage of funds. Whether it's accelerating significantly the FireSmart initiatives around rural communities throughout the province, particularly smaller indigenous communities but also other fairly large communities that haven't been able to fully fund the costs of FireSmart, whether we're talking about flood mitigation – and I know the current Minister of Transportation likes to confound the questions of flood mitigation on the Elbow River versus flood mitigation on the Bow, but in fact those are two different projects, and they both need to happen.

Work is, as he's correctly identified, because of the regulatory hurdles – and I'll be the first to admit that that's a very frustrating process – slowly moving ahead with the Springbank, which is focused on the Elbow. There is a whole bunch of work that has to go on with the Bow. It's a whole other financial commitment, and there is no plan afoot. You might have been able to pay for it through the climate leadership plan, but that's been cancelled. Quite frankly, the people of Calgary need that to go ahead, and all we have from the minister responsible for it are sneaky little efforts to confound the issue and pretend he's talking about one effort when, in fact, he's talking about an entirely different one. Frankly, the people of Calgary deserve far better.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The point I make about describing these programs, Mr. Speaker, is simply this, that the carbon levy was not ever dedicated to an alleged slush fund. It was entirely dedicated to matters that were geared towards reducing emissions or supporting adaptation as required because of the risks associated with climate change. That's all it ever was, and when he calls it a slush fund, once again he is playing fast and loose with the facts, which, again, is something he really needs to stop doing. We know, because they have now cancelled the carbon levy and they've paired that with a 4 and a half billion dollar tax giveaway – read subsidy – to large, profitable corporations asking not a single solitary thing in return except maybe an invite to Brett Wilson's parties. I don't know. The reality is that what we have here, then, is a situation where we don't have an answer to the problems and the questions that are facing Albertans as a result of the threats that are presented by climate change, whether they're the economic threat of losing market access, whether they are the air, land, and water threat just in terms of the degradation of our environment, or whether they are the extreme weather threats that require significant adaptations.

10:00

All those things are things we must address, that we now don't have the tools to address because the government has eliminated both the carbon levy as well as 4 and a half billion dollars in the form of subsidies to wealthy, profitable corporations in return for – wait for it – nothing. Because of that, that part of the motion that is put before us is not something that we can support. That's the difficulty that we have.

Now, on the flip side, the concerns around whether we may or may not end up with inappropriate strolls into provincial jurisdiction, those are issues that, honestly, we could potentially consider supporting. But I think quite clearly we know that this motion was not actually constructed to generate or to secure our support; quite the opposite. It was structured to play a little political game so they could, you know, make it impossible for us to support it and then play games of running around and telling everybody: "Oh, look. The NDP didn't support this thing."

In summary, what I will say is this: there were a number of factual inaccuracies in the comments made by the Premier today.

Two, there are a number of things that are – or there were until very recently – paid for by the proceeds of the carbon levy for which there is now no source of income, and therefore we are not entirely sure how they will be paid unless these folks want to, you know, actually get somewhere close to the alleged $100 billion in debt they also talk about even though we all know that's not true either. Or, conversely, just not do those things. Because there are important things that are paid for, we need to outline what they were. They are not there anymore, therefore we have difficulty with that element of the motion.

Thirdly, I will say that we, too, share concerns around a little bit of overreach on the part of the federal government, so that is worthy of a measured and balanced discussion. Now, obviously, that's not what's going on here because all of this is really about, you know, the Premier's desire to relitigate the 2015 federal election. I find it very ironic that he refers to us as being angry about losing the 2019 legislation when in fact all of Alberta has been forced to suffer through his anger about the 2015 federal election, but anyhow.

Because of that, I suspect it is likely the case – and as much as we've enjoyed participating in this conversation given the brand new opportunity provided by the standing orders that were forced through this House by the UCP – that we may consider availing ourselves of the ability to abstain from this particular motion. We shall see what we ultimately do.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this motion, and I look forward to hearing what others might have to say. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions has risen to ask a brief question or make a comment.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, listening to all the debates, really I want to have a chance to share my first-hand experience not only going through the campaigns here but also to reflect lots of life experience that I lived from being born in Communist China. I lived the first half of my adult life there and experienced how the system, the policies, impact people's lives. Then in the latter part of my life coming to Canada to witness the beauty of democracy, the freedom, and so forth. I want to tie it to my question of how the NDP's carbon tax is so out of touch with reality, based on ideological differences but causing all kinds of harm.

Let me begin by saying that some of you have probably heard about the Cultural Revolution back in China. It's a period of time when people lived on high ideals. It all sounds wonderful. I was born and raised in a time that we were told we were the richest nation, because we don't have anything, but we have everything. Everything the country has belongs to you. I vividly remember my first 20-some years of experience. I worked hard, you know, I studied hard. I was picked by the country as one of the model citizens to visit Japan when the country finally had a chance to open the door.

I remember that first trip to Tokyo. I kept looking for the 80 per cent of people – according to what we were told, the capitalist society is only good because a small handful of people are living off the large majority. There's only a handful of people who are rich, and the large majority is supposed to be poor. So I was vividly looking for: where are the large majority? Everybody I encountered, I felt like they were all 10 times, 50 times more prosperous than I was, and I came representing the new generation of China, supposed to be the higher end of the class there. I really struggled to the deep core with that, but within months I realized that lots of the stuff that we were led to believe was not true. What happened is that we were so out of touch. Within the circle when you close your eyes, when you don't interact with the world, you think you're the best, but when you have a chance to compare – I went out and I realized that as a nation, as a society we'd been falling behind so terribly because we were so out of touch.

Now, let me talk about the carbon tax and my sort of experience on this. When I campaigned, people said: "Jason, you're a social worker. You're supposed to be more on the left side. Why are you in the Conservative government?" So I told them my personal story. I said, "I reject it when people have sort of stereotypical kinds of thinking like that." I told them about my story.

I also said, "I drive a hybrid Toyota." I said: "You see, it's right here in front of me. I reject people who say that Conservatives are not caring about the environment. I care about the environment." But I said: "Ten years ago I looked at the same car. It's a Toyota Camry. They had two choices; you had the hybrid one, you had the normal one. I chose the normal one because the technology at that time was not mature enough. My calculations and my estimate was that I would spend more time fixing this technology rather than save anything. But 10 years later when I revisited it, when I traded in my old car, getting this new one, my calculation was that for $3,000 more, I will save. Within three years the $3,000 will be back. For the rest of the 15 years that I drive: not only good for me, good for the environment.

I show people now, and I say: "You know, you talk about carbon tax. When we live in an environment like Alberta, Canada, you have no choice; you're going to have to heat your house and drive your car." There is no impact to the behaviour of how the tax will influence how you consume the energy here, but there is a difference. I said, "For Conservatives we have very practical proposals of how we address this." I hear the Premier in this House talk about LNGs, if we supply those to China . . . [A timer sounded] Did I run out of time?

The Speaker: You're out of time, yes. My apologies. Your time for debate has expired on 29(2)(a).

I believe the Government House Leader, perhaps, is rising to make a motion.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I am, Mr. Speaker. Man, you have, like, Speaker senses. I would like to move pursuant to Standing Order 3(1.2), I wish to advise the Assembly – actually, I don't want to move a motion. Sorry. I just want to advise the Assembly that there shall be no morning sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, June 26, 2019.

And, Mr. Speaker, while I'm on my feet, if you will allow me, I will move one-minute bells for the remainder of the evening.

The Speaker: Well, the Government House Leader will know that unanimous consent would be required for that, so I will ask only one question.

[Unanimous consent granted]

10:10

Government Motions

Federal Carbon Tax (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very privileged and pleased to rise today to speak to Government Motion 21. The motion starts by saying, "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly express its support for the government in its efforts to challenge the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on Alberta." I rise today to say that I am very pleased to speak to this motion and to speak in support of it.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that $2.4 billion will be lost if the Trudeau government's carbon tax goes forward, and that much money could go to investments to create a whole lot of infrastructure in this province and to create jobs and investment into effective climate change solutions. Without a strong economy it's impossible to invest in alternative energy projects.

We saw from the previous government, Mr. Speaker, that imposing carbon taxes actually creates job losses. It produces a weak economy for Alberta, which, in turn, is going to halt many of the innovative projects that could be pursued. Projects such as solar or thermal power plants are not economically feasible without having a strong economy to support them. The job-killing carbon tax that the NDP government imposed: well, we know that it created a downturn that made it impossible for projects like Capital Power to be able to run.

We need, Mr. Speaker, to take proactive measures to be able to ensure that our economy is strong enough to fund and to run these types of projects. We need a responsible government that understands economics and that will create economic and environmentally friendly plans to combat climate change. Now, much like the past NDP government, we know that the Trudeau government doesn't really understand economics and how the carbon tax is actually killing jobs in Alberta. They do not really understand that creating deficits and making Albertans pay out of their pockets is not going to solve the climate problem.

Mr. Speaker, we know that Albertans actually do care about the environment, but many of them don't want to be paying a carbon tax that is not effective. We should have a practical and an effective approach when combatting climate change, not a job-killing tax grab that simply punishes ordinary Albertans. Now, our government made a platform commitment to scrap the provincial carbon tax, and Albertans resoundingly supported this move during last April's election. Now that we've scrapped the provincial carbon tax, we have to challenge the federal one. Both will be ineffective ways to combat climate change.

We saw how our previous government drove our economy down and lost many jobs for Albertans. Homeless rates went up, so did crime. The carbon tax is not an effective way to combat climate change. It is just another way to punish Albertans. We punish Albertans for heating their homes, punish Albertans for taking their kids to hockey practice. It is not an efficient way of combatting climate change.

Our government was elected to fight for Albertans and to fight for their best interests. The Trudeau carbon tax . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt, but the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon will have approximately 11 minutes remaining for his remarks after we vote on the appropriation bills.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

(continued)

The Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 64(5) the chair is required to put the question to the House on appropriation bills on the Order Paper for third reading.

Bill 5

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Bill 6

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Government Motions

Federal Carbon Tax

(continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon if he has any additional remarks to make.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to know that the government is going to have the money that it needs to continue serving the people of Alberta.

Thank you for letting me get back to my remarks. You know, our government was elected very clearly. It was elected to fight for Albertans' best interests. The Trudeau carbon tax is not in Alberta's best interests. It is just another way to impose the money-grabbing taxes that obviously have and will continue to kill our economy. Now, having a $50-a-tonne tax would actually mean, Mr. Speaker, losing about 6,000 new jobs. It would take $2.4 billion out of Albertans' pockets. It's going to raise, as we can all see, all of us living in the real world that we live in, the costs of goods, it's going to raise the cost of food, it's going to increase the prices at the pumps, and it's going to make Alberta less competitive.

Our government will not allow the Trudeau government to impose their economy-killing carbon tax without a fight. We are not alone in our fight. We are not alone in our fight against this unjust carbon tax. We are not the only province fighting the federal government on this unconstitutional carbon tax. Alberta, as with the other provinces challenging the federal government, has the constitutional authority to make policy choices within our own jurisdiction. The federal government's carbon tax disrupts the balance of Canada's federation by undermining Alberta's exclusive constitutional powers to manage our own local undertakings, our own natural resources, the economy, and the greenhouse gas emission plans that we choose to put forward.

Our government is determined, Mr. Speaker, to be working on a climate change plan that strikes a balance between economic growth and environmental protection and actually achieves real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. We should not have to sacrifice jobs or economic development and growth in order to reduce emissions and to combat climate change. We know that there are better solutions.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take the time tonight to talk just a little bit about some of the things that are going on in my constituency that do exactly that, that actually create jobs, that promote economic development while at the same time reducing emissions and combating climate change. In the Drayton Valley-Devon constituency it looks very likely that by this new year we will have the first deep-well geothermal project in the history of the world, of anywhere on Planet Earth. We will have the first deep-well geothermal project that will produce electricity and heat from a geothermal loop. It will produce electricity without any carbon emissions while using abandoned and orphaned wells and while producing jobs for the drillers, for all of the people that are a part of my community that have traditionally been drilling for energy in oil and gas. They will now be drilling for geothermal electric energy. This is an example of working towards creating jobs, creating wealth, reducing carbon while working in the best interests of Albertans. I'm very excited, should all of the things come together, that this project will begin in the new year.

10:20

Mr. Speaker, I was talking today with a gentleman that works with Capital Power. He phoned me up – and we had a conversation – to tell me that they are now as a part of the Genesee power plant going to be mixing natural gas with coal and that they will be able to keep many of the jobs, almost all of the jobs, at the Westmoreland Coal plant that has traditionally supported the Genesee power plant. Rather than getting rid of all of those jobs because of some ideological greenhouse initiative, they are going to be using technology and they're going to be using Alberta common sense so that when natural gas is the best alternative for producing electricity, they'll use natural gas. When in the winter natural gas is really expensive, they'll be able to use coal, and when they decide to use both, they'll use both. What a practical, Alberta way of ensuring that we are – and at the same time they'll be reducing their emissions by about 30 per cent. This is how you address climate change. This is how you address being environmentally responsible, where you produce jobs, you produce wealth, you use the technology that's available, and you support the environment at the same time.

Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that I was contacted by the very people that came to the previous NDP government and were asked to help them put forward the PACE program. They sat down with me and they suggested to me that when they were talking with the previous government about implementing the PACE program, which would allow house owners to be able to put in solar panels and windows that would be more thermally capable of reducing carbon emissions and keeping houses warmer, they would be able to produce that same program not through government subsidies and dependent upon the carbon tax incentives, but, rather, they could produce that same PACE program completely privately, without government incentives, so that we get the same environmental gain without the pain to the Alberta taxpayer's wallet. What a unique idea.

Mr. Speaker, the point of our speech here tonight is that we believe that a carbon tax provides a whole lot of pain without any environmental gain, that the Trudeau carbon tax is no better and no different than the carbon tax that the NDP put forward on us, and that we can move forward in a way that we know provides better solutions. Our platform makes it clear that we're committed to a practical approach that achieves real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. But we want to make it clear to Albertans that our government does not believe that climate action equals a carbon tax. Our government is going to ensure that we fight for Alberta's best interests and that we find a better way to reduce emissions than this impractical and unconstitutional tax grab.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for those wishing to bring a brief question or comment.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the main motion.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing today, of course, against Government Motion 21. Certainly, the current UCP government is talking about wanting to challenge the federal government regarding the carbon tax, possibly as far as a constitutional challenge in the courts. We know that the government of Saskatchewan has already made this constitutional challenge and that they have lost. The UCP government following through on this court challenge is a waste of time and resources. Certainly, for financial reasons it doesn't make sense to move forward on Government Motion 21.

It also makes no sense to move forward on Government Motion 21 for environmental reasons. We all know that climate change is real, Mr. Speaker. We know that through many reports. One is the UN report, that was recently released, that says that we've got 12 years to do something or else it's too late. We've heard recently about the Canadian Arctic permafrost, that it's melting 70 years sooner than was anticipated previously. Each year we know more species are becoming extinct. Each year natural disasters caused by human-made climate change are increasing, from fires to floods. We know that first-hand here in Alberta, from the Fort McMurray wildfire to flooding in southern Alberta. These are just a few examples.

We also hear repeatedly from the UCP government that there are no results from the NDP's climate leadership plan. Certainly, the Leader of the Official Opposition spoke about this and did identify, of course, that that is not true. We know that it has made and continues to make an impact, a positive one. Edmonton, which is where my riding of Edmonton-Riverview is situated, actually just released a report about the decrease in air pollution in our city.

I might just take this moment, Mr. Speaker, to talk about some of the positive movements forward that Edmonton is doing in terms of greening our capital city. Certainly, they have been working very hard to make Edmonton a walkable city. We know that the more people can live and work and go to stores in their communities by walking there, maybe biking there, then we know that they are using their vehicles less. We know that vehicles cause a lot of emissions that, of course, hurt our environment.

Other kinds of alternate transportation – certainly the increase in bike lanes, increasing public transit, and the expansion of the LRT – all have very positive outcomes for reducing climate change. Edmonton is a leader in doing this. Certainly, in my riding of Edmonton-Riverview, because it does sort of hug both sides of the river, there are many beautiful, walkable trails. People in the mature neighbourhoods in Edmonton-Riverview do bike, cycle, take transit, and that's really being responsible citizens themselves to reduce climate change.

Besides the environmental improvements, certainly, that our climate leadership plan did present, it also provided millions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, to Albertans to go green, to support the shift to a green economy. As the previous Minister of Seniors and Housing, we had a significant investment in affordable housing in our province that supported our infrastructure to be more energy efficient. The first step in that process was doing energy audits on some of the facilities that were government owned and that provided affordable housing for citizens in our province. We know that many of those housing management bodies that do provide affordable housing to citizens are very aged. You know, a lot of the structures may have been built 30 years ago. They're not very energy efficient.

Our climate leadership plan did afford us the opportunity to be able to put in energy-efficient furnaces, to replace the windows that created a draft or those doors that weren't sealed appropriately so that the elements – of course, we all know that here in Alberta it can get pretty cold and windy and rainy. These funds made a significant difference in terms of how much energy was being wasted or even in terms of the roofs when you had to have that roof replaced on a building so that the heat wasn't leaving through that. These funds were used in a very responsible manner, making a big difference for the housing management bodies across Alberta. We have over a hundred housing management bodies in small communities, in rural Alberta, and also in our larger centres. This fund went back into supporting green infrastructure, making a significant difference for people living in affordable housing and certainly reducing the cost for the housing operators.

10:30

A second piece I did want to speak about. Certainly, it has been held up that somehow the NDP government was derelict in our duties to support seniors. I, too, similar to the Leader of the Official Opposition, want to articulate how mistaken the UCP government actually are. The energy rebates: we know that two-thirds of seniors in Alberta received funding from our climate leadership plan. They were better off at the end of the day because of that. They actually came away with more funds than they had previously. This sort of characterization of these vulnerable seniors who were on fixed incomes, that we had no regard for them: of course we did. We made sure that they had rebates. Honestly, they were better off at the end of the day, so how they're being characterized is completely wrong.

You know, even beyond that, there are so many things our government did to support seniors that seem to be forgotten or not understood by the UCP government, and I'm just going to articulate a few of those here. We indexed the Alberta seniors' benefit to the cost of living. It's an income support program for seniors in our province. That's a significant move, Mr. Speaker, because that means that each year when the cost of living goes up – and it generally does – those seniors, those vulnerable seniors on fixed incomes, actually have their Alberta seniors' benefit go up, too, so that they can better pay for those services that they need. I was very proud as minister of seniors and housing that we did that. That is a significant way that we did help vulnerable seniors.

Besides that, we also substantially increased funding to affordable housing for seniors. You know, when we were comparing sort of the investment that we made with the previous Conservative government's investment – this would have been in the last budget of Premier Prentice – our budget was four times more than the previous Conservative government's. Our investment was significant. Just so members realize, a significant portion of that went to rural Alberta, to a lot of the lodges that are quite aged. We supported Albertans all across our province in areas that had really been extremely neglected by the previous Conservative governments. Mr. Speaker, we inherited a $1.2 billion hole in maintenance and renewal for these facilities, so we really stepped up and made sure that people had the facilities they need and made sure that they were taken care of.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker, that I want to talk about. You know, as a minister you learn things and you think: what can I do to better serve the population I'm being asked to serve? One of the things that was not sort of on the books and where nothing had really been done, as far as I could tell, for the decades that the Conservatives were in power in our province: there was no sort of support to seniors' centres. There was no decision to support seniors' centres in any way.

Seniors' centres are actually a very preventative resource. Sometimes communities would use the funding from family and community social services to invest in them, but sometimes communities didn't do that. There was no sort of targeted funding for seniors' centres, and I always thought that was a bit strange. I thought that these centres oftentimes are gathering places in small communities. They create a social connection. We know that there are issues around seniors and social isolation. We need to support them to be connected to their communities. We know that the outcomes for that in terms of health, both mental health and physical health, are significant. I talked with my department staff, and we tried to devise a plan to support seniors' centres.

Even in very tough economic times we prioritized seniors, and we made sure that they were supported in Alberta. We did not cut programs to them. We created the aging well in community grant program, which supports seniors' centres so that they can receive support for some of the amazing programs that they provide to seniors locally. I've talked in this House already previously many times about the seniors' home adaptation and repair program, where seniors can receive funds.

You know, having travelled the province, seniors say: first of all, I want to age in my own community, in my own home for as long as I can. That's what they want. Sometimes there are barriers to them being able to do that. You know, maybe now they have a walker, and it's hard for them to get around, or they have a rug that, if they move their walker, will trip them up. So they actually need to get rid of that carpet, maybe put in a hardwood floor or linoleum, something that's easier to do. Oftentimes it's not a very large cost, but sometimes it's too big for them. This program helps seniors to be able to make those home renovations, whatever they may be, and to stay longer in that community, in that home that they love, close to family and friends. So, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of that investment also.

You know, I think there's been significant support that the NDP government did provide to seniors. Certainly, we took considerable effort and consideration and supported seniors in many ways and in many ways that I'm very proud of.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, certainly, I am standing against Motion 21. You know, it's clear. We all know that the Supreme Court of Canada did already reject Saskatchewan's Court of Appeal constitutional challenge, so really Alberta is just throwing good money after bad, making a mistake, and wasting the time and resources of Albertans to pursue this further. Of course, there are also the environmental reasons that I've already articulated, that our climate leadership plan did make a significant difference and continues to.

I'm certainly, as the previous minister, concerned: what's going to happen to that support for housing management bodies who are in the process of trying to green their facilities and, you know, putting in those energy-efficient furnaces and replacing the windows so that they are more air tight, and just in general caring for their facilities so that we aren't wasting energy and we're being much more energy efficient? I wonder what's going to happen with those programs seeing as now the program won't have the funding for that. I think that this well-thought-out plan that the NDP government put forward made a significant difference in the lives of many people, certainly seniors and those experiencing low income and living in the affordable housing system.

I certainly don't support this motion at all, Mr. Speaker, and will conclude my remarks now.

The Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available to those wishing to make a brief question or comment.

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to stand before you today to speak out against the federal government's attempts to impose a carbon tax on Alberta. During the historic provincial election this past April the largest number of Albertans in history stood together and forced the world to recognize our needs. By electing this government, we Albertans took back the right to decide the destiny of our province, and we will relentlessly continue to pursue this vision we shared until we restore our Alberta advantage.

On April 16 the hard-working Albertans that once drove the growth of our provincial and federal economies voted for a provincial government that would ensure that our demands won't be ignored in our time of greatest need. As the government officials that were elected by the people of this province, it is now our responsibility to act as the voice of our constituents. It is also our responsibility to act accountably and in the best interests of Alberta's needs.

For us to properly repay the faith that our fellow Albertans have entrusted in us, our government has resolved in Motion 21 to firmly oppose the imposition of any federal carbon tax grab on our province. Any brief review of the NDP's carbon tax will clearly show the massive negative impact it had on Alberta taxpayers, on families, businesses, and even a greenhouse near my riding, that can no longer afford to grow trees after paying the cost of the NDP carbon tax and, as such, had to burn more fuel to transport trees in from B.C. to meet their demands. Even those trying to help the environment were hindered from doing so by this devastating policy. How ironic. Instead of reducing Alberta's emissions, the NDP's failed ideological carbon tax only increased the financial burden on Albertans, who were already feeling the effects of the worst financial crisis in the recent history of our province.

10:40

In the interest of properly keeping the promises that we made to voters, our government will forever oppose any actions that threaten the ability of our province to responsibly determine our own affairs. Although it may be difficult for our Prime Minister to appreciate, many normal Albertans aren't afforded access to extravagant trust funds. Instead of building their lives by riding the coattails of their family's reputation, most of us Albertans need to spend our hard-earned money to feed and supply the families that we built from the ground up. The carbon tax that the federal government plans to impose on our province directly harms the financial well-being of these diligent Alberta taxpayers. In fact, this carbon tax grab by our federal government effectively takes food right off the tables of Alberta families.

When Alberta voters elected our party, they did so because they envisioned a province with affordable access to groceries, energy, transportation, and other necessities of a happy life. Albertans envisioned a province where our senior citizens would not be punished for heating their homes in the brutal Canadian winter. They envisioned a province where the hard-working workers who were hardest hit by the recent oil crisis would not be punished for simply driving themselves to the jobs that feed their families. The simple fact of the matter is that Albertans need to use oil and gas products to live long, healthy, and prosperous lives, and they should not be punished for the heinous crime of using our God-given resources to sustain themselves.

The proposed federal carbon tax is clearly an affront to Alberta's sovereignty, and it is a slap in the face to every single Albertan that voted against the NDP's failed carbon tax just last April. And let me tell you that that's a lot of Albertans. Meanwhile the establishment, that seems to show such distaste and disregard for everyday working Albertans and our oil and gas industry, allows the Prime Minister to nibble caviar with his silver spoon while he jet-sets around the world in the comfort of his private jet, that he fuels using our taxpayers' money. Simply put, despite the Prime Minister's superficial posturing as an environmentalist, amongst many other things like a feminist and a Bollywood dancer, he appears completely incapable of actually leading by example.

As a result, the proposed federal carbon tax on our province clearly illustrates the federal government's complete failure to hold themselves to the same standards they expect from Albertans. Not only is it hypocritical, but it is a gross overreach by the Canadian federal government into affairs that have been previously settled by our provincial government. This is why our government will finish the job that we started, when we repealed the NDP's failed carbon tax, by continuing to oppose the imposition of any federal carbon tax on our province. Albertans don't deserve to be punished for heating our homes in the winter or charged unreasonable prices for buying our groceries and other necessities. That is why our government is committed to fighting this battle all the way to the courts so that in four years we can proudly announce to all Albertans: promises made, promises kept.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, anyone else wishing to speak to Government Motion 21? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to provide some thoughts on Motion 21. Certainly, this motion is designed in a way for the opposition side to oppose it because it does allow the province a free pass to continue to do nothing about climate change.

There are indeed some things in this motion that we don't have a quarrel with, particularly the last phrase, where we "recognize that Alberta's oil and gas industries continue to be global leaders in emissions reduction." That is, in fact, a true fact. I think we ought to recognize when the government engages in facts. I do support that part of it. In fact, you know, our climate leadership plan was strategically designed to keep the federal government from colouring too far into the lines of a shared jurisdiction. It is a fact that the environment is not unlike some other areas of the Constitution that are, in fact, a shared jurisdiction.

It is difficult for me to support this motion. Here's why. First, the Premier has indicated that he believes that climate change is real though he says that there is a diversity of opinion tolerated within Conservative ranks. Certainly, so that Conservatives no longer embarrass themselves as philistines, they now just pretend that they think that climate change is real. All right. We'll allow that, but if one doesn't want to do anything about it, then those statements ring fairly hollow.

Second, we have heard it asserted from the government benches and the Premier himself that a price on carbon does not reduce emissions. Mr. Speaker, I think that in a small way I will allow a sliver of sunshine to shine upon this argument. A poorly designed or outdated price on carbon such as we had prior to 2015 will not reduce emissions. That's why industry asked us to update those policies to the specified gas emitters regulation and to ensure that those same companies would be able to raise capital with something approaching a substantive answer on climate policy in the markets with which they do business. They also wanted climate policy predictability. That's why they asked for it, and that's why we delivered it.

I think that overall the statement that the Premier and others are making around this issue of price on carbon not reducing emissions is, in fact, false. The way we know this is that the Premier should have instructed his lawyers to argue the position he takes that carbon prices don't reduce emissions. If he actually believes that position, then the high-priced lawyers the party hired – they didn't use Albertans' money for this; they used UCP donor money for those lawyers that lost the Saskatchewan case – would have contested the evidence before the court, that carbon pricing reduces emissions. But both the majority and the minority wrote that no party before the court contested the evidence that pricing carbon reduces emissions. No one contested that evidence, nor did the minority opinion, that I have heard the Premier now hang his hat on.

Now, I know that the Premier and others on the government benches have been told by lawyers seeking more billable hours that the Saskatchewan decision was actually quite narrow and that if we just put more money into the slot machine, maybe we'll win next time in Ontario or the next time in Manitoba or the next time in Alberta. Well, this is as ill advised as going back to the cashier to get more toonies for the VLTs, Mr. Speaker. Except it's not the Premier's money; it's our money. It's not rolls of toonies; it's wads of hundreds of dollars per hour for expensive lawyers.

Here is why that is ill advised, Mr. Speaker. Both the majority and the minority in the Saskatchewan reference found that carbon pricing reduces emissions. Both the majority and the minority found that the federal government has the constitutional authority to price carbon. Where they disagreed was around the head of federal power, where that authority comes from. The minority found that it didn't meet the national concern test as the majority did find. They did find that if it was designed as a tax rather than a levy to address an issue of national concern, it would be constitutional. Both the majority and the minority wrote that addressing climate change is one of the most pressing issues of our time. They simply disagreed as to where the federal authority arises from. So when we have statements in this House that people are going to fight the federal government in their efforts to impose a price on carbon, what the Saskatchewan court actually found is that the federal government has the power to set minimum national standards.

The provinces have latitude in tailoring these policies. That's what the court actually wrote. I still believe in facts, Mr. Speaker. I know that's naive on my part, but when it's written down right in front of my face, I tend to agree. For example, provinces do have latitude. One might develop a methane-offset protocol as a carrot to voluntary compliance, with a regulatory backstop taking effect some years later, incenting early action on one of the most potent greenhouse gases in the atmosphere, some seven times more potent than CO<sub>2</sub>. In exchange, there might be an upstream processing exemption for that period of time. There might be investments in technology around methane abatement. One might do that as a provincial policy, for example.

Now, next, certainly the Premier likes to lean on a selective reading of the Leach report. At least, he isn't picking fights with a private citizen on Twitter anymore although that is not a hard-and-fast rule. But every other economic analysis of carbon pricing does take into account this question of competitiveness, and so, too, did the majority and minority positions in recognizing part 2 of the federal act.

It's easy. I have heard the government side many, many times, both when they were in opposition and now, bring a number of unrelated anecdotes into that conversation around international pressures and international competitiveness, but let's absolutely talk about international efforts to price carbon as part of meeting Canada's Paris agreement targets. The Premier, for example, in his remarks indicated that oil and gas investment is going to places like Kazakhstan. Well, they have had a carbon pricing system since 2013, and other jurisdictions have, too. Forty-six national jurisdictions have brought in carbon pricing and 28 subnational jurisdictions, Mr. Speaker.

Around jobs claims, the fact of the matter is that Alberta led the country in economic growth in 2017 and 2018. We're among the leaders in job growth as well. Again, Mr. Speaker, I know that facts don't matter, but I still do care about them. I still think reason is real.

10:50

Let's talk a little bit about what the future looks like, Mr. Speaker, without climate policy. I think it looks like ecological scarcity. It looks like dividing us from one another. It looks like a world that is more chaotic, where our ambient sense of uncertainty rises, reactionary ideas gain more appeal, our ability to solve problems in a collective way, to get together and solve something so important, is then torn apart. That's why conservatives oppose climate action. We have an opportunity, a very unique one now, to address climate change through very peaceful, co-operative, efficient means. We can only do that if we actually care about this issue.

I was unable during Bill 1 to read into the record what I said on election night directed to my children, so I'm going to read it now, Mr. Speaker.

To my kids, Finn and Hudson: you were four and six when I was elected. You don't remember the first two campaigns, but I know you understand this one. I know you have made sacrifices of your time and some of your childhood to mom's job. I want you to know that your mom knows that, and I want you to have learned at least this: hard things are hard, but the harder it is, the more it is worth doing, like taking action on climate change. I want you to learn this as a lesson. Making the world a better place is always worth it. You will have to live with the consequences of climate change, so I want you to know one more thing: mom did her best.

I won't be supporting this motion because it is a way for this government to direct resources into interfering in an election outside our borders. It is a way to direct Albertans' money into a federal election campaign. It is a way to make excuses for inaction.

It is a way to continue to say things that aren't true on the grounds that they win elections and just continue to build a conservative movement on this tissue of mistruths. It is a way to revisit spurious arguments in front of a court that is likely, on a balance of probabilities, to strike them down.

For those reasons, I will not be supporting this motion, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak to Government Motion 21?

Seeing none, Hon. Government House Leader, would you like to close debate?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Waive.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 21 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:53 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Aheer	Long	Sawhney
Allard	Lovely	Schow
Armstrong-Homeniuk	Luan	Schweitzer
Barnes	Madu	Sigurdson, R.J.
Copping	McIver	Singh
Ellis	Milliken	Smith
Getson	Neudorf	Stephan
Glasgo	Nicolaides	Toews
Glubish	Nixon, Jason	Toor
Guthrie	Nixon, Jeremy	Turton
Hanson	Orr	van Dijken
Horner	Pon	Walker
Hunter	Rehn	Williams
Issik	Rosin	Wilson
Jones	Rowswell	Yao
Kenney	Rutherford	Yaseen
LaGrange	Savage

Against the motion:

Bilous	Gray	Phillips
Carson	Hoffman	Renaud
Ceci	Irwin	Sabir
Dach	Notley	Sigurdson, L.

Totals:	For – 50	Against – 12
---------	----------	--------------

[Government Motion 21 carried]

[some applause]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to seek unanimous consent to move to one-minute bells also in committee for the duration of the evening.

[Unanimous consent granted]

11:00 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 2 An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

The Deputy Chair: We are currently on amendment A1. Are there any comments or questions?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back on Bill 2, are there any hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West standing.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Chair, I'd like to rise to move an amendment, if I could, that amends the title by striking out "An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business" and substitutes "Employment Standards and Labour Relations Statutes Amendment Act, 2019," and in the following provisions "An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business" is struck out wherever it occurs and "Employment Standards and Labour Relations Statutes Amendment Act, 2019," is substituted.

I will now table that amendment and just provide some brief remarks to it if I might. Essentially, Mr. Chair, this amendment is designed to help. We know that we have heard many times from the government side . . .

The Deputy Chair: I apologize for interrupting.

Ms Phillips: Am I allowed to do that?

The Deputy Chair: We have to just wait until we've got it at the table so that we can take a look at it, and then we may want to take a minute just to allow members to take a look at it as well. I do appreciate the fact that you did already read it in. We'll just give a minute for it to go around.

We will be referring to this amendment as amendment A2.

Seeing that it looks like we have distribution of the amendment, please continue.

Ms Phillips: Great. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you for indulging my relative rookie status on moving amendments.

This amendment is designed to help, as indicated. We have heard from the government side that they prefer that bill titles not be used for communications or other public relations purposes, so we have helpfully provided our input on that in order to simply have the bill do what it says that it's going to do as part of existing statutes, Mr. Chair. Certainly, it is not a universally held sentiment that chasing teenagers around to take toonies out of their pockets or taking people's overtime is in fact a recipe for making anyone really open for business. These are employment standards amendments and ought to be treated as such.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Any other hon. members looking to speak to A2? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung standing.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to the amendment, which I think is a reasonable proposal and indeed really reflects more accurately what this Bill 2 is actually proposing to do. I would tell you that taking $2 an hour out of a young person's pocket isn't a way to encourage further activity in our economy because what it does is takes money out of the pockets of people who actually spend it in the local economy. Indeed, I think it's counterproductive to do that if you're hoping to create economic activity. Just on that element alone it's certainly counterintuitive to the initial title of the bill that the government gave this Bill 2. I think the amendment more accurately reflects the matter at hand.

I know that this legislation is something that the government is proud of. I'd be, let's say, less proud to be standing on the other side trying to argue and defend this piece of legislation, which goes ahead and takes money out of the pockets of, in particular, young, hard-working people who are either looking to pay for their education or perhaps even to help their families out. For those individuals who are in the workforce who are under 18 years of age and are standing beside somebody who is a couple of years older than them and they're earning $2 less an hour, it must be something pretty hard to take. When the minister of labour stands up and argues, as other members of the government will do and as the Premier, in fact, himself argues, that this wage reduction is better than no wage at all, it is an empty argument. It disregards the fact that a person in this society deserves to earn the same money for the same work regardless of one's age.

I can only wonder what individuals who are in the position of taking a $2 cut if this bill passes tomorrow, a $2 cut to their wages – I know that I've suffered a similar fate, as I've mentioned in this House before, where my wages were cut by about $4 an hour because of a contract that changed from one contractor to another. The workers who drove DATS buses at the time, of which I was one, suffered an overnight reduction of $4 an hour, and it was a tremendous slap in the face. It was pretty degrading.

The best that the government can offer is a sorry explanation that indeed they think this is going to be allowing businesses and tempting businesses to reinvest and create more jobs, more low-paying jobs, for young people. In fact, that's not going to happen. They know full well that's not going to happen. All this is a sop to those businesses that believe that paying a wage differential, a lower wage to young people, is an appropriate thing to do. But as far as them turning around and reinvesting that two bucks an hour that they're saving back into creating more positions for young workers, that's not something that's going to come to fruition, and that will be seen and be very evident over the course of the next few weeks if indeed this bill does pass and see the light of day.

There will be an incentive, all right. There will be an incentive for people who are affected by this $2 drop in wages to become politically motivated and three years from now let the government know in fact just how strongly they feel about the measures that the government is taking against them. I mean, to turn your back on young people and to cynically suggest that this $2 reduction in your wages is good for you, just to pat them on the back and paternalistically say, "Don't worry; it's good for you; take this medicine; it may taste like cod-liver oil, but it will make you feel better." I don't get that. I don't think anybody who is subjected to this wage cut is going to feel better.

11:10

You know what? There are a lot of businesses in this province who don't feel good about it either. There's a website out there right now that is being joined by an increasing number of businesses who publicly are demonstrating their disdain and their lack of taste to participate in this government's decision to roll back wages on young people by saying: "Look, we're going to maintain the $15 an hour minimum wage. We're not going to cut the wages as the government has proposed we do because we don't think it's the right thing to do. We're embarrassed to know that other businesses are doing it. In fact, we're not playing that game. We're going to publicly demonstrate our disdain for this action of the government by saying that we're a business that will not go forward and put in place a reduction of the minimum wage that we're paying. We're going to maintain the $15 an hour because we respect our employees. We want to maintain our employees. We think it's a shameful thing for the government to go ahead and try to claim that businesses are going to create more jobs by taking the money, $2 an hour, out of the pockets of young people.”

As I indicated before, if you do the calculation, it's approaching $4,000 a year that this government is taking out of the pockets of young people who are saving to go to university, to help their families out, for whatever purpose they're using it for. It's money that's going to be going into the economy right away again, to circulate again.

It's money that the government, who are supposedly the champions of small businesses and who are the economic gurus of free enterprise, who claim that we across the aisle in the opposition are the ones who have a lesson to learn – those are the individuals who are unwilling to acknowledge that they're countering their own business philosophy when they think that this $2 an hour savings is going to be reinvested by businesses in creating more jobs. By keeping that money in the economy, by making sure that the $15 an hour wage is at least approaching a living wage – it's not there. It would be closer to $17 or $18 an hour to actually pay these people a living wage as a minimum wage. But to keep that wage at $15 an hour means that that money, that $4,000 per worker, approximately, is actually being spent and reinvested in the economy.

The members across the way know full well that the largest percentage of our economy is the consumer economy, that 70 to 75 per cent of your economic activity is consumer spending. This government is trying to convince us that taking that money out of the economy is a good thing and that businesses are going to thrive as a result. It is a confounding argument for members of a government, who purport to understand business, to make.

I've been a small-business man for all of my business career, since I was in my mid-20s, in the real estate industry. I never ever paid anybody minimum wage or, really, close to it. It was a significant amount over because I fully intended to have those people continue working for me for a long while, not just to have them see it as a stepping stone to something better. I wanted them to stay with me and to retain them as workers. So the wages that I paid to the people who worked for me were at a level that I hoped would attract them to stay.

The people that did work for me did stay for extended periods of time. I was proud to know that they were able to go to university in the fall, after the summer employment season was over, if they were working for me on a seasonal basis. I went around my office with my head held high knowing that anybody who worked for me made a wage that they could live on, that they could save for university on. I knew that they would probably tell a friend that, yeah, working for Dach was a respected thing to do and you could expect to be paid a fair wage.

I mean, another thing, too, is overtime. I remember working in the oil patch on a service rig and being paid straight time for all the hours that I worked. It was just the way of the world. There was labour legislation that allowed these employers to get away with it in the '80s. We were working 17 hours a day in some rather rigorous and unsafe conditions on service rigs, but if you didn't like it, you left it. We ended up working long hours at straight pay and basically were being robbed of thousands and thousands of dollars of overtime pay, that otherwise would have been in my pocket and then also into the economy.

Let me tell you, Mr. Chair, that the employer there, in that case, didn't hire another three or four rig hands just to have them sitting around or to get another rig working. They put the money in their pockets as profits, as corporate profits. I can tell you for a fact that they weren't investing in extra safety for their workers either. We were an input cost at best, as a consideration, to those companies that were doing the well servicing in the '80s. It's a wonder that many of us actually lived through the experience. There were lots of people that I saw in that industry who had injuries that were disfiguring: missing fingers, broken bones. I nearly lost my life more than once in the summer that I worked in that industry. It wasn't a situation where the company was looking to invest in their workers.

Now, there are many, many companies in the province, of course, who obviously do care for their workers. That was a situation where I didn't feel valued in any way, shape, or form. I don't accept the argument the government is making that companies will automatically invest their savings into hiring new employees.

We know that the pick-your-pockets bill, the overtime element of it, will impact roughly 400,000 Albertans working overtime to care for themselves and their families. If you're working overtime, you're getting paid time and a half. If you go ahead and you decide to work that overtime and you wish to take time off in lieu, you should be getting the same rate. The same ratio of time and a half should apply. You shouldn't give that up even though your employer is giving you the quote, unquote, choice to do so. There's no real choice involved, Mr. Chair. The difference between banking that pay at time and a half pay versus straight time is a lot.

Now, if you're an oil and gas worker making average pay, putting in 10 overtime hours every week on a 12-week project, that's 120 hours in paid time off. The difference between banking that pay at time and a half versus straight time is 2,500 bucks. That's a whole lot of cash, and it's being taken right out of the pockets of working people, who don't have the empowerment to oppose this so-called negotiated agreement with their employer. It's a huge difference for working people. We're talking about hundreds to thousands of dollars for people going above and beyond in the workplace day in and day out.

I'm frankly ashamed to know that in this day and age, in 2019, the government in the province of Alberta would see their way clear to going backwards in time, but that's precisely the modus operandi of this government. They think that they have a winning formula in turning back the clock no matter whether it's labour legislation, whether it's gay-straight alliances, whether it's any ministry that you care to think of. Turning back the clock is what they prefer to do.

Liquor server wage differentials: I mean, you're going to end up with a similar situation here. We believe the minimum wage needs to be guaranteed for anyone, for hard-working Albertans regardless of what place of business they work in. We should not be creating different tiers of workers. As I mentioned in the House earlier today, that's exactly what the government is hoping to do, to create divisions amongst Albertans and exploit those divisions for their own political benefit. They don't really care about that. The Premier is certainly using this as a tactic or a strategy regularly. It doesn't really matter what legislation you're talking about; you're certainly looking to exploit divisions, whether it be social policy or economic policy. If there's a political benefit for the government, they think that the damage they do in passing this type of legislation is worth the price because, in fact, the only thing that counts with this government is a political win.

11:20

But, in my humble opinion, Mr. Chair, the Premier doesn't care. He doesn't care two hoots about the collateral damage that he leaves behind because, in fact, in my view, I don't think the Premier plans to be here much beyond the next federal election. I think that he's got his eyes on a prize that's further east of this province, and I think that as soon as the federal election is over, should the Trudeau Liberals win, which I think the Premier is counting on, the siren call will be out for our current Premier to go lead the federal Conservatives. I think that's what he's really up to. So we'll see the collateral damage pile up.

Thank you.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Chair, I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j). I know that the hon. Leader of the Opposition continues to do an incredible discredit to the role of the Leader of the Opposition in this place . . . [interjection]. She continues to heckle during a point of order, but what else can you expect?

The hon. member just said that the Premier does not care.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: You can't have a point of order during a point of order, Mr. Opposition House Leader.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. members, but it is my understanding that you can't call a point of order in the middle of a point of order, so we will continue with this point of order, and should it be completed today or once we have decided upon it, then there will be an opportunity to continue with another point of order should that be the choice.

Mr. Jason Nixon: That certainly is correct, Mr. Chair. Thank you very much.

The hon. member in his comments just said that the Premier does not care. That imputes false and unavowed motives against him.

In addition to that, though, Mr. Chair, the hon. member then indicated that the Premier is intending to run for Prime Minister and somehow did this bizarre conspiracy process to work his way to become the Prime Minister by going through – let's be clear what that would have taken. That would have taken leaving Ottawa and what was guaranteed, if the Premier so chose, to become the leader of the CPC party and therefore the Leader of the Opposition.

An Hon. Member: Guaranteed?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Absolutely, Mr. Chair, almost certainly.

And he then came all the way back – let's just think about this, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Bilous: How is this a point of order?

Mr. Jason Nixon: This is a point of order because this is what we're talking about, Mr. Chair.

He came all the way back to Alberta . . .

Ms Notley: Just because you're talking, doesn't make it right.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, I get that the Leader of the Opposition struggles with her role in this place, which is why she continues to be so rude to the office.

Anyways, Mr. Chair, I'll just stick with this. "The Premier doesn't care": it imputes false or unavowed motives. It doesn't even begin to talk about the ridiculous arguments that are being brought forward by the opposition.

Again, Mr. Chair, I would ask of you to instruct the opposition to actually try to do their job. It's absolutely embarrassing how the Leader of the Opposition continues to allow her members to behave in this place. It's shameful.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

I will hear now from the Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Chair, I think that the Government House Leader is making a joke out of usage of points of order. He must be very sensitive at this hour of the day.

Mr. Chair, this is not a point of order. This is a difference of opinion. It's the opinion of the hon. member that the Premier feels a certain way. I appreciate the Government House Leader saying: no; the Premier doesn't feel that way; he feels a different way. Well, that's great. That's a difference of opinion and debate. It is not a point of order. For all we know, the Premier could be in Alberta as a stomping ground on his way back to Ottawa. We don't know.

The point is that this is not a point of order, but in the midst of arguing a point of order, what I think is disrespectful is trying to drag the Leader of the Official Opposition through the mud in an argument that this is a point of order, which has nothing to do with the point of order.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. I am prepared to rule.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: In committee we often allow a wide berth with regard to the debate that is brought up in committee. As such, I think I also allowed a wide berth with regard to the debate on the point of order.

In this case, I do not find that there is a point of order. I think that the circumstances of the comments would not rise to the level of a point of order, so at this point I will consider that matter closed.

I will also take an opportunity to remind hon. members that when we are discussing an amendment, we should probably stick to the amendment. As we move back to the actual bill, then the breadth of debate will continue.

Please, hon. member, with four minutes on this.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for your considered ruling on my discourse earlier on the amendment. I certainly am of the opinion that the theory that I am speaking about is plausible, and we'll see how it pans out. But we'll leave that for another day.

Debate Continued

Mr. Dach: When I speak to Bill 2 and the proposals in the member's amendment, I am brought to the conclusion that the government was hoping to create an impression that this bill, Bill 2, was actually going to create employment and help the business environment. The title of that is indicative of that intent, but the amendment that we speak to, that was brought forward by the Member for Lethbridge-West, more accurately portrays the true intent of the legislation. It's a bill that changes a number of things in the work environment, particularly for low-wage workers, and is really an attack on young people and people in the entry-level workforce. Whether you're a person under the age of 18 or whether you're working in the liquor service industry, it's a direct attack on you.

Yet the argument the government is trying to make is saying: "Well, yes, we know we're taking money right out of your pocket, but it's good for you. Take it with a grain of salt. It'll get better over time. At some point you will know that that $4,000 or so that you don't have in your pocket was an investment in the betterment of Alberta, that Alberta is going to be better off, and thank you very much for that contribution to the province of Alberta and our well-being as a society."

That $4,000 that you would have had: "Well, you didn't really need it anyway because you were simply just going to spend it on frivolous things if you're a person under 18." Maybe you're working in the liquor service industry: “Well, heck, the children you’re trying to support as a single mom working as a liquor server really didn’t need that extra couple of bucks an hour. You can have a different wage than a person working beside you who’s not actually serving liquor because you’re getting tips. You rely on the charity of others. If you really work your tail off or if you somehow impress your customer, well, then, you deserve to get a little bit more money. Tell you what: we’re not going to insist that employers actually pay you the same as other workers working in the same establishment. You can rely on tips, and you can just go after those tips by hustling your butt and seeing if you can earn something a bit more than your neighbour next door, who’s competing for the same dollar from customers that might come back time after time.”

Once again, pitting people against each other is exactly what this government is becoming famous for, dividing individuals and exploiting those who are least able to stand up to the measures that the government wishes to impose upon them, particularly in the workforce and upon wage labourers in the province.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we are on A2. I see the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m excited to rise, particularly given the leeway that we have during Committee of the Whole. I’m excited that you were able to bring that up, and I’m looking forward to having a little bit of a conversation about what the hon. member presented today.

It’s quite shocking, again, to continue to watch the bizarre behaviour of the Official Opposition inside the Legislature as they continue to take the level of ridiculousness down to a different level at every moment. I find it humorous to watch the Leader of the Opposition and her caucus continue to heckle during the process there and to say things to people, and then they look. They look over – people at home probably can’t see this – to see if everybody looked at it, just like my kids do when they’re playing ridiculous games and trying to get attention. It’s so disappointing. [interjections] Again, you see the former Health minister – I can’t remember her constituency – going on and on, heckling away, taking the decorum to the lowest level.

11:30

Mr. Chair, what I found most interesting about the hon. member’s comments is comparing records of leaders. I’d be happy to talk about the record of our leader at any time and specifically how it relates to this legislation and his intentions compared to the Leader of the Official Opposition, who, by the way, oversaw a government that saw the largest job losses in the history of this province, who sat here in Edmonton and ignored the people of this province over and over despite the fact that they were having trouble, who called them Chicken Little because they brought up concerns, who told them to take the bus because they brought up concerns about the carbon tax, who sat there without saying anything as their Deputy Premier at the time called them sewer rats. I’m happy to talk about the record of the Leader of the Official Opposition if that’s what the hon. member wants.

I know that the Leader of the Official Opposition, Mr. Chair, was just recently in Ottawa. Is she planning to run for the NDP leadership? Was this her great plan, to get elected as Premier, then become the only one-term Premier in the history of the province, or oversee the only one-term government in the history of the province, lose that after absolutely decimating the province that she lives in and hurting the citizens that she was supposed to govern with her policies, and then go some secret way all the way up to the federal leadership? That seems bizarre. But if you take what the Official Opposition is saying at face value in regard to the now Premier of Alberta, that would quite frankly make more sense than what they’re presenting.

They’re trying to indicate that the now Premier of Alberta, the hon. the Premier of Alberta, left a high-ranking position within the opposition caucus federally and then came all the way to Alberta and, under tremendous risk, travelled across the province in a blue truck to help unite both the Progressive Conservative Party and the Wildrose Party – I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that all of us that are here in the room that know the process that took place: everybody said that he couldn’t do it. In fact, I can tell you that at the beginning of that he probably wondered if he could. But then he brought those parties together, which ultimately became the demise of the NDP inside the province of Alberta, the end of the Leader of the Official Opposition’s reign of tax increases and decimation of jobs and the way of life in this province.

He then had a leadership race, was able to successfully win that leadership race, and then ran in a provincial campaign and went on to win the second-highest vote percentage in the history of the province and the highest vote total in the history of the province, defeating the now Leader of the Official Opposition, absolutely decimating her and her party in the election, and then made it to here, where he could become the hon. Premier. Now, magically, he’s going to head back to Ottawa. That’s such a ridiculous argument, Mr. Chair. I don’t believe that probably about the Leader of the Opposition Leader either. I certainly know that it’s not true about the Premier. But that’s all the NDP have.

Now, why this is important, Mr. Chair, is because as they rise to talk about Bill 2 and the legislation inside this House – and they continue to do it with Bill 8 as well – they continue to misrepresent the facts, something the Leader of the Opposition and her party are well known for: misrepresent the facts inside this Legislature and then act like they have some sort of credibility. But then when you see the arguments that they’re making, for example, with the Premier, you know, about him taking this bizarre side trip all the way through Alberta, through multiple elections just to make his way back to the election that he should have ran in the first place if that’s what he wanted – it wasn’t what he wanted. He came back to help save Alberta from the Leader of the Opposition and her party, who were destroying this province when she was then the Premier.

Albertans have to look at that and look at the facts that are presented in this House. No wonder the majority of Albertans have rejected the NDP Party. They don’t trust the NDP Party. They, frankly, don’t believe the NDP Party, Mr. Chair. They don’t believe them because they prove it time and time again that they cannot be trusted. They cannot be trusted. The Leader of the Official Opposition and her party cannot be trusted. They misrepresent facts, and they cannot be trusted to be able to do things for Albertans. Again, the Leader of the Opposition, who still continues to smile and laugh about the fact that she told my constituents to fund raise to pay for her carbon tax; smiles and laughs at communities like Drayton Valley that were decimated because of her decisions when she was the Premier of Alberta; probably smiles and laughs, for all I know, Mr. Chair, when she looks at the electoral map and watched how her party was completely wiped out, solid blue across every corner of the province, most of our constituencies rejecting, my constituency rejecting the NDP by something like 86 per cent – rejected the NDP and said: we won’t put up with that anymore because of the ridiculous behaviour of the then Premier and her party. Those are the facts.

Then they find themselves in opposition, and rather than showing some humility on how they ended up in that spot, they continue to stand up here day in, night out and say ridiculous things to the Chamber. That's all they say, Mr. Chair, ridiculous things to the Chamber. Over and over, one ridiculous argument after another because they can't put together any argument. They can't. They're completely stuck on the fact that they're mad at Albertans. They're mad at us for winning the election. They're mad at Albertans for making a decision to fire them and to make them the only one-term government in the history of this province. They're just mad, maybe mad at themselves, for all I know. So they should go and deal with that, take some time to examine how they ended up in this situation, maybe learn from their situation instead of coming here and continuing to laugh and smirk at the people of Alberta.

But what else would you expect, again, from the party that called them sewer rats, that told them they were Chicken Little for raising concerns, that told them to take the bus, that told fixed-income seniors to fund raise to pay for their carbon tax, that brought in the largest tax increase in the history of the province that increased the prices of everything, that ignored all of Alberta, that went out of their way to start a fight with farmers and ranchers across this province as one of their first bills inside this Chamber by refusing to consult with them at all, jamming through legislation and ultimately causing the NDP – who, by the way, was born in rural Alberta, or in this province anyway, who has now been for many generations wiped out in rural Alberta. All of us from rural Alberta know there's no coming back for the NDP because of what the former Premier, now Leader of the Opposition did with her time in leadership of the NDP when she was in government. That's what the real situation is here, Mr. Chair.

So to stand up each and every day and say such bizarre things about other people – you saw it today in question period, the bizarre attack on the hon. Finance minister, going back to the politics of fear and smear. That's all they could do during the election, that's all they could do before the election, and that's all they can do now. That's why they're on their way from being government to a 27-some seat opposition and ultimately back down to probably a three- or four-seat third or fourth party inside the Legislature, because Albertans are not going to put up with this behaviour. Use your time in opposition to actually do something constructive and help the people of Alberta. If not, shame on them. Shame on them for using their time in this way inside this Chamber.

Oh, I understand that the Leader of the Opposition is angry. I understand that she is frustrated that Albertans fired her and rejected her behaviour and her policies, but that is what happened. If she truly cares about her party or her role inside this Chamber, she will instruct her caucus to actually take it seriously, to stop playing the politics of fear and smear and personal attacks on people and spend time actually doing something constructive. But you know what? I doubt they will, because you know what? For the entire time that I've seen the NDP in public life, they can't do it. They're not capable of doing it. They're only capable of insulting people, making up ridiculous arguments, and acting the way that they have.

With that said, Mr. Chair, I think we've all had enough of listening to it for tonight, so I will move to adjourn debate.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, just to confirm, as there's no other bill to debate as far as I understand, then, are you looking to rise and report progress?

Mr. Jason Nixon: That would be a fair point, Mr. Chair. Yes. I move that we rise and report progress.

The Deputy Chair: Yup. Just to confirm, rise and report progress on Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business?

11:40

Mr. Jason Nixon: That's correct.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

[Motion carried]

The Deputy Chair: The committee shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed, say no. Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn the Assembly till tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:42 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 5 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019 ..... 1195, 1213

Bill 6 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019 ..... 1195, 1213

Committee of the Whole

Bill 2 An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business ..... 1218

Government Motions

Federal Carbon Tax ..... 1198, 1212, 1213

Division ..... 1217

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Wednesday afternoon, June 26, 2019

Day 20

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henda (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreeschen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretaries

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, June 26, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to all Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of power and responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, joining us this afternoon in the Speaker's gallery is another familiar face to the Chamber, the former Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, Mr. Oneil Carlier.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, this afternoon we have a group of hard-working public service employees in our galleries from the Ministry of Service Alberta. Thank you for all you do. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members, in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon: the father of the Member for Banff-Kananaskis, Mr. Murray Rosin.

A special guest of mine – you can feel free to rise if you'd like – in the gallery is a member who's very keen on the parliamentary process, a young member, Seth Bourke.

Guests of the Minister of Health: Andrew Neuner and Jessica Gish.

Also joining us today are guests of the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women: Zahra Somani, Sameer Thawer, Mohib Samnani, Moe Rahemtulla, Amin Poonja, Shafin Kanji, Arif Karmali, Farah Jivraj, and Naz Hasham.

I'd invite you to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs would like to make a statement.

Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Awareness Day

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Awareness Day, June 27, which the teal ribbon represents. In 2016 I was honoured to bring forward a private member's bill that would acknowledge PTSD Awareness Day annually. It was introduced and passed, all in the span of 18 days. It was incredible to be a part of that moment, when all of my colleagues sitting in 2016 made this a nonpartisan issue and allowed the bill to become a reality.

Mr. Speaker, posttraumatic stress disorder, PTSD, is a mental health condition that's triggered by a terrifying event, either experiencing it or witnessing it. Symptoms may include flashbacks, nightmares, and severe anxiety as well as uncontrollable thoughts about the event.

The consultation process was a monumental opportunity to hear from Albertans on the impacts of PTSD. I heard repeatedly that more supports were needed within the mental health system. I advocated for this with my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora. The recent opening of the Addiction & Mental Health Access 24/7 clinic at the Royal Alexandra hospital is just one example of how our previous government made a commitment to prioritizing and funding Albertans' mental health care.

The subject of conversion therapy also came up during these consultations. We know that conversion therapy can cause PTSD, yet the current Minister of Health, the very person in charge of protecting patients from harmful practices in Alberta, not only disbanded but also stated that he will not support the working group going forward.

Despite how this government has responded to that situation, I want to be very clear with my message. To all who are impacted by PTSD: you are not alone. We will continue to fight for your mental health services and continue to put action behind our words.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Cross has a statement.

Imamat Day

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise before you today to speak about Imamat Day. On July 11 Ismaili Muslims from across the world and, in fact, in our province come together to mark the anniversary of the ascension of His Highness Prince Karim Aga Khan IV to the throne of the Imamat. This day of celebration is dedicated to strengthening one's spirituality and reaffirming one's commitment to the Ismaili doctrine of the Shia Islamic faith.

It has been 62 years since His Highness Aga Khan became the 49th imam and the spiritual leader of the Shia Imami Ismaili Muslims. Throughout this time the Aga Khan and the Canadian government have been steadfast allies in the promotion of important causes such as international development, human rights, and pluralism. Likewise, the Aga Khan has devoted his personal efforts to addressing important humanitarian causes such as the eradication of poverty, increasing accessibility to education, and providing the basic necessities of life, including health care and water, to the people in his care and to those all across the globe.

This vital partnership was memorialized in 2010 by Prime Minister Stephen Harper, who rewarded the Aga Khan with an honorary Canadian citizenship. It is important to note that after receiving this honour from our Prime Minister, the Aga Khan became the first spiritual leader to address both Houses of our Canadian Parliament.

Today we offer our warmest congratulations to His Highness Prince Karim Aga Khan IV on the 62nd anniversary of his ascension as imam. On behalf of our province and the United Conservative Party of Alberta we wish to extend our best thoughts and wishes to Ismaili Muslims across the province on this holiest of days. It is our honour to wish Ismaili Albertans that are practising Imamat Day our sincerest Khushiali Mubarak.

Lethbridge Pride Fest

Ms Phillips: This past weekend I attended Lethbridge pride along with about 3,000 or 4,000 other people. The weather held up for the indigenous hoop dancer, for the drag shows from kings and queens alike, for the local food vendors and, importantly, the beer gardens. It was the biggest Pride Fest yet. Lethbridge pride has grown from a potluck in a park to one of the biggest summer festivals in Galt

Gardens, and Lethbridge has inspired pride events in Cardston, Taber, and Fort Macleod. This year almost a thousand people signed my petition to protect LGBTQ youth from being outed for joining a GSA. People lined up to sign the petition.

On Friday I also attended the pride awards. This year Levi Cox got the legacy award for his 20 years of service in building Pride Fest into what it is today. Deonie Hudson and Jo-Anne Finch both received awards that recognized their respective and distinct records of service and support. Kari Tanaka received the award on behalf of the University of Lethbridge Bookstore. Jordan Payne was recognized for his contributions to Theatre Outré and Club Didi. ARCHES received an award for community health and well-being, and Cyndi Starzyk-Frey won for her work in counselling. Tate Montgomery and Indira Brower were recognized as emerging leaders. Pride wouldn't happen without a volunteer board, and they are Glen Herbst, Levi Cox, Tyler Gschaider, Katherine Culley, Jesse Harsanyi, Elisabeth Hegerat, Austin Walsh, Dave Fritz, Carter Cannady, Linda McFalls, and Mac Miles.

Pride is about more than events. It's about politics. You don't just show up once a year for a pretty picture with rainbows. Substantive support to the community is what's required. I was honoured to help enact equality rights whenever I had the chance in government, and the community can continue to count on my voice in this Legislature and wherever else they need it. I take my promise and my responsibility to the queer community in southern Alberta very seriously.

Happy pride, Lethbridge. You will always count on my support, my love, and my solidarity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane.

1:40 Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Project

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The pipeline is not intended to grow production, just diversify markets: those were the words spoken by the Prime Minister in French, then reiterated by both his Finance and environment ministers when the federal government approved the TMX project for the second time. The pipeline file has been mismanaged by the Trudeau government since they took office, in the fall of 2015.

Last week we got confirmation of what many of us feared: this isn't a pipeline being approved to grow a provincial economy; this was a political attempt to placate Alberta until after the federal election in October. While I appreciate the federal government approval of TMX, again, neither I nor Albertans will be tricked into believing that the Trudeau government is doing anything special for our province. After four years of attacks, with bills C-48, C-69, the cancellation of Northern Gateway, and the stifling of Energy East, it is clear that he is no friend to Alberta. When asked if they would approve additional pipelines, the Prime Minister snickered and passed off to Minister Morneau, who stated that this was the only one they were focused on. With bills C-48 and C-69 passing through the House of Commons only two days after the TMX approval, the foreshadowing from the federal government seems clear.

Alberta is in a precarious position. Our economy is showing signs of optimism since the UCP election win, but our province must continue to be vigilant against Ottawa and their interference in our economy. This pipeline must be built. The fight is not over. We cannot celebrate until barrels are flowing through that pipeline and bills C-48 and C-69 are repealed. Brian Mulroney once said: Trudeau's contribution was not to build Canada but to destroy it. Mr. Speaker, it appears that Justin Trudeau is following in the footsteps of his father.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Constables Ezio Faraone and Daniel Woodall

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On June 25, 1990, Edmonton Police Service member Constable Ezio Faraone was killed in the line of duty while responding to an armed robbery. Constable Faraone's sacrifice that day should stand as a reminder to us all of the risk our front-line responders take every day. It is important to recognize also that some of the members of the Legislature security staff worked with Constable Faraone and were members of the Edmonton Police Service when he was killed.

The Legislature security service is comprised of retired members of the Edmonton Police Service and the RCMP. Several of those members were Constable Faraone's friends and colleagues. Three of them were working with Constable Faraone in the tactical unit the day he was killed. Constable Faraone is described as a man of honour, a great friend and family man, and a colleague.

On June 8, 2015, Constable Dan Woodall was shot and killed while executing a search warrant. I worked with Constable Woodall. He was my partner on numerous shifts, and I had the privilege of getting to know a dedicated police officer, father, and husband.

Constable Faraone and Constable Woodall were responding to calls that I, the Member for Calgary-West, many members of the Legislature security staff, and police officers across Alberta have responded to. When Constable Woodall and Constable Faraone died, the outpouring of support from the community was amazing to see and feel. It was a reminder to us all in law enforcement of how much the community cares and appreciates the work we do. We should take time to reflect on their sacrifices and the sacrifice their families made that day.

To the Edmonton Police Service family and to all law enforcement across Alberta and around the country: thank you for the risk you take, the dedication you have to your communities, your towns and cities, and your province. In the face of such tragedy and loss the least we can do is keep them in our memory, to not forget to honour the lives they lived and the positive effects they had on all the lives they touched and the sacrifice they made for us all.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-East has a statement to make.

Airdrie Pro Rodeo

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the honour of rising in this House to highlight an amazing event in my constituency, the Airdrie Pro Rodeo. This great event starts this Friday, June 28, and goes until Canada Day. Every year thousands gather to watch the rodeo, participate in family events, and just enjoy the festivities. At the grounds there will be something for everyone: kids' activities, food trucks, beer gardens, and even live entertainment.

The Airdrie Pro Rodeo is one of the 10 largest rodeos in all of Canada and is Airdrie's longest standing athletic event, dating back to 1967. The junior rodeo aspects provide an opportunity for future cowboys and cowgirls to test out their skills in activities like mutton busting, wild pony race, and the sheep scramble while the pro rodeo attracts some of the best athletes in the nation to compete in bull riding, steer wrestling, barrel racing, and many other events.

The five-day rodeo is organized by the Airdrie Rodeo Ranch Association, a not-for-profit, 100 per cent volunteer-driven group. They are committed to preserving our rural connection and promoting our great community. They believe that while Airdrie grows in size, it is important that we don't lose our rural roots. This growing event is a pillar for community achievement and wouldn't be possible without all the dedicated volunteers. This event offers our city a unique tradition to celebrate and be proud of.

I want to encourage everyone across the province to come on out and support this fantastic event. I couldn't think of a better place to spend this long weekend. Canada Day in Airdrie will kick off with an awesome parade at 10 a.m., followed by the bull-riding bonanza at 2:30. It's sure to be an amazing event, and I hope to see y'all there.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Bill 13 Alberta Senate Election Act

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move first reading of Bill 13, Alberta Senate Election Act.

Last week's passage of Bill C-48, a prejudicial attack on Alberta, and Bill C-69, the no-more-pipelines bill, made it clear to us that elected Senators who are accountable to Alberta voters are more likely to defend our province's interests. This bill is based on the version of the Senate election law that expired in 2016, and passing it would restore Albertans' opportunity to directly participate in choosing Senate nominees.

The Alberta Senate Election Act will continue Alberta's push for the democratization of the Canadian Senate so that Alberta's Senators have a mandate from Albertans to be effective voices for our province in the federal Parliament. I look forward to sharing the details of the bill with the Legislature during second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: It's my first day, hon. members.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South is rising to make a tabling.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and table a letter I received that was addressed to myself, the hon. Premier, and yourself, Mr. Speaker. It's in regard to the lack of decorum in the Alberta Legislature. It refers to Earpluggate, and it says that she is "disgusted by this disgraceful degradation of our Legislative Assembly."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul, just to correct the record here.

Last night during my speech I mentioned the NDP's Leap Manifesto, where it mentions tanker bans and no more pipelines. It could have been penned by Justin Trudeau himself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table the appropriate number of copies of a document entitled Zurich Signs up to UN Business Pledge to Limit Global Temperature Rise and Announces It Will Use Only Renewable Energy by 2022. This document states that Zurich insurance will no longer underwrite oil sands operations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has risen.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of correspondence that I received in my constituency office regarding the distribution of earplugs in this Chamber.

The Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] It's okay. We're moving on, and we'll return to tablings.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, here we go again. It seems we really can't go for long without another member of this cabinet being questioned by the RCMP about voter fraud in the 2017 UCP leadership contest. Yesterday we learned from the media – from the media – that the Infrastructure minister was interviewed by the RCMP about this scandal. Last time it was the Attorney General questioned. We also found that out from the media. To the Premier: will he please advise or direct his Minister of Infrastructure to come clean with Albertans about his role in this issue?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, regrettable but entirely predictable to see the NDP's smear tactics continue on a daily basis. My understanding is that the minister was asked for an interview, was told that he is not subject to any investigation, and co-operated, as we've always indicated any member of this government will do.

Mr. Speaker, the real issue that the NDP doesn't want to talk about is how last night they voted to defend the Trudeau carbon tax on Alberta by voting against our motion to seek support from this Assembly, to stand up for Alberta taxpayers. While this government is defending Alberta taxpayers, they're defending their close ally Justin Trudeau.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the RCMP are investigating. Now, this Premier may want to diminish the importance of law and order by distraction or name-calling, but the fact is that these are serious issues, and Albertans deserve to have their government take them seriously. In that vein, it is wrong that Albertans keep discovering the growing web of UCP cabinet ministers being questioned as part of this fraud investigation through the media. To the leader: will he rise today and assure the House that no other members of Executive Council have been questioned about this fraud investigation?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge. It was always said that ministers will co-operate if they've been asked for information. I understand in this case that the minister had, really, no relevant information to offer. It was a brief interview. He's not subject to any investigation. It's unfortunate that the opposition leader is trying to drag this honourable man's name through the mud, but we can expect nothing less from an NDP leader who still cannot identify a single mistake made by her government that rendered her the first-ever one-term Premier defeated by voters in the next election.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is precisely because we get answers like that from the Premier that it is so important that this government appoint a special prosecutor to objectively and independently guide the investigation and ultimate decision around charges and, of course, the fact that the Attorney General was also a witness and a participant in the event under investigation. But it's been four weeks, and we haven't heard a peep. To the Attorney General: why haven't you publicly announced the name and appointment of the special prosecutor yet?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I'd refer the hon. member to the RCMP for a commentary regarding their investigation. It's my understanding, through the department, that they've reached out to folks in Ontario to handle legal advice that the RCMP may need with respect to this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, reaching out for advice is not the same as appointing a special prosecutor, and that is what the people of this province were promised. If what we are doing now is backpedalling on that commitment, will the Attorney General please rise and clarify for the people of Alberta: who is the special prosecutor? Why won't you announce their name?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I'll reiterate and clarify for the hon. member. Ontario has been asked to provide legal advice. The title of that could be special prosecutor. It's external legal advice to the RCMP. I'd refer them again to the RCMP if they have further questions with respect to their independent investigation. Again, we respect the police and their independence in this matter.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, Ontario is not a person. I mean, I hate to break it to the Attorney General. A special prosecutor is a person. They are a person who is held accountable. They are a person who Albertans can know is separate and objective and independent from this government. Why won't the Attorney General announce the name? And will he assure us that it's not the Premier of Ontario, heaven forbid?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, the assistant deputy minister for our department had made a public statement regarding how they were handling this matter in referring it to the province of Ontario for legal advice, to the RCMP regarding this. Again, this is just another instance where they simply do not want to be held accountable for their record in 2015. They're just continuing to bring up things from the past. We're focused on the priorities of Albertans, which is jobs, the economy, and pipelines.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government's record is that they said that they would appoint a special prosecutor, and, God knows, it is necessary because far too many members of Executive Council have been drawn into this investigation into allegations of conspiracy to commit fraud. As a result, it is critically important that the name of the special prosecutor be provided to the people of Alberta. Why won't the Attorney General do his job?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, as I've mentioned many other times here today, I'd refer them again to the statement that was made by our department regarding providing for the service of a special prosecutor from the province of Ontario. If they're looking for further details regarding this investigation, I'd refer them again – again, numerous times – to talk to the RCMP regarding their independent investigation regarding this. We respect that independence of the RCMP. I would hope that this hon. member would respect that as well.

Mr. Dach: Name the prosecutor.

The Speaker: Oh. The Member for Edmonton-McClung will come to order.

The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, school boards are being forced to make cuts because this Education minister is failing to do her job. The reality is that with the loss of things like the classroom improvement fund there will be fewer dollars, and it will have an impact on our schools: that's a superintendent, Darrel Robertson, from Edmonton public schools, speaking yesterday when they voted on their budget. In his words, quote: there's no sugar-coating that. So I'll make this short. Will the government provide certainty to school boards so they don't have to guess where you're planning to cut?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education is rising.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. People need to stop with their scare tactics and stop playing politics with our children. Our government has committed to funding education and supports for our students, and enrolment growth will be accounted for and funded. As a standard procedure funding information will be communicated to school boards following the approval by the Legislature. We know that. They know that.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: It's totally irresponsible for the Minister of Education, a former school board chair, to stand in this place and say that they'll just have to wait, Mr. Speaker. School is out this week. Staff are being terminated across this province because of this government's dithering. Is this minister sleeping well at night knowing that there'll be more students and fewer teachers? As I can tell you, trustees with Edmonton public aren't. They're talking about staying up all night because they're stressed out by what you're inflicting on their board.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. People need to stop with the scare tactics. I just said it; I'll say it again. They need to stop playing politics with our children. This is about improving outcomes for Alberta students. We spend among the most per capita on education, but the outcomes just aren't there. So we are continuing to keep the system whole.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: To manage the massive degree of uncertainty facing the Edmonton public school board, they've pulled millions of dollars out of reserves to balance the 2019-20 budget. To the Premier: if school boards are forced to go into reserves to fund your government's incompetence here, how will they make up the difference next year? Will they (a) get more funding, (b) get a new minister, or (c) both?

Member LaGrange: Again with the scare tactics. Our government has committed to funding education and supports for our students. Funding enrolment growth will be accounted for. We will be building schools. We are working on improving these outcomes for students, something the NDP failed to do. We are going to get it right.

Thank you.

LGBTQ Teacher and Educational Staff Employment Protection

Member Irwin: A school that is not a safe and welcoming space for gender minority teachers cannot be a safe and welcoming space for gender minority students: that was the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association today, calling on this government to include employment protections for LGBTQ teachers and staff, and I hope that it would be a message that everyone in this House can embrace. Our government took it seriously and included employment protections in Bill 24. Sadly, those protections do not appear in Bill 8. To the Minister of Education: why did you remove employment protections for LGBTQ teachers and staff in the hateful Bill 8?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We are all about protecting our children and our staff. Our government will have the most comprehensive statutory protections for our LGBTQ students in Canada. We continue to say it; we will always say it.

Thank you.

Member Irwin: Listen carefully: we strongly urge this government to adopt amendments to Bill 8 that would see these protections continue. That again was the president of the ATA voicing his concern about the removal of employment protections for LGBTQ teachers and staff in Bill 8. To the Minister of Education again. Let's hope that this was an oversight rather than another attack on the LGBTQ community from this government. I ask you: will you commit in the next 35 seconds to restoring the employment protections that you removed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. All our staff are protected under the human bill of rights and under the labour code. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we heard the question; we'll hear the answer.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We protect all our staff under the human bill of rights and also under the labour code. All of our staff are protected.

Thank you.

Member Irwin: We know that this government has a bad track record when it comes to protecting LGBTQ teachers. The Premier was a vocal opponent of the Vriend decision, going as far as to call that landmark case a virus of judicial activism. The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon even wrote a policy paper suggesting that schools should be allowed to fire LGBTQ teachers. To the Minister of Education: why won't you commit to standing up for LGBTQ teachers? Is it because you think that people like me don't belong in classrooms?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Education minister answered that question not once but twice already inside this Assembly.

Ms Hoffman: No, she didn't.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I know that the deputy Leader of the Opposition continues to heckle and act inappropriate in the House during question period. That's unfortunate, but the Education minister already answered that.

What's interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that this is an attempt by the opposition to distract from the fact that last night they stood in this House and voted with Justin Trudeau, voted yet again against the people of Alberta.

Ms Notley: That is so disrespectful to those kids and those teachers.

Mr. Jason Nixon: That's the history. That's the history of the Leader of the Opposition, who's now heckling and using inappropriate language inside this place, Mr. Speaker, standing with Justin Trudeau against Albertans. That's the NDP way. [interjections]

The Speaker: We will have order.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Domestic Violence Prevention

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans deserve to feel safe. Unfortunately, not everyone does, particularly in my riding of Airdrie-East, where many are affected by domestic violence and have been left behind by the justice system. Victims need protection from those who have victimized them. They need a government that stands up for victims' rights and protects this vulnerable group in society, many of whom are women and children. Minister, can you please tell my constituents what this government is doing to protect victims of domestic violence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of status of women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, and thank you very much for the question. We were elected on a platform commitment to protect vulnerable women and girls, people generally. We know that call crises are up by 10 per cent across the last few years in Alberta, and those at risk of being murdered by an intimate partner – I along with my colleague from Community and Social Services as well as other members in this Assembly were proud to have opened the provincial One Line number, the 24-hour call tech service. It's in over 200 languages.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a United Conservative promise during the campaign was to provide $2 million in funding to expand the use of electronic monitoring or ankle bracelets for those convicted of domestic assault and given that this has been a successful pilot program running in Red Deer, can the minister tell us how this promise will protect victims of domestic violence and when we can see this program expanded right across the province?

The Speaker: The minister of status of women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much. I don't have a timeline for you as of this point in time. We are reviewing the pilot program. It was a very successful pilot program. Thank you so much for the question. The more important piece about this is that the ankle bracelets actually create a virtual fence. What ends up happening is that any victim that has had this particular situation happen to them doesn't have to look over their shoulder every day when they're going to work, when they're doing their jobs, taking their children to school, or any of those other things. These protections are highly necessary to make sure that victims have a high quality of life.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much, Minister, for that answer. Given that research shows that homicides against women are often preceded by domestic violence by an intimate partner and given that we know that information sharing saves lives and that a United Conservative campaign promise was to enact a version of Clare's law in order to protect future victims, can the minister provide us more details on how our government plans to fulfill this commitment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services has risen.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the hon. member for that question. Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to taking meaningful action to end the cycle of abuse and violence in Alberta. In addition to maintaining funding for women's shelters, we will also be introducing an Alberta version of Clare's law, which will allow those at risk of domestic violence to receive information about an intimate partner's history of violence. This information will provide individuals with a better understanding of the potential risks of remaining in a potentially abusive relationship.

Agricultural Exports to China

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, this week the government of China took the shocking step of banning all Canadian meat exports, putting the livelihoods of thousands of Alberta farmers at risk. We know that Alberta has world-class farmers and the most rigorous food safety standards in the world. Producers are rightfully demanding that this government take action and fight this ban. To the minister: why have you not committed to more concrete action to ensure that our producers are not penalized by China's moratorium on our products?

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can inform the member opposite in this House that I have talked to the federal agriculture minister yesterday. It is unfortunate, it is actually very disappointing, and farmers are quite concerned with the export certificates for beef and for pork that have been cancelled to China. All ongoing shipments to China that are en route right now will actually be honoured. However, any existing ones going forward are something that – we're working with CBSA and the RCMP and the Canadian Food Inspection Agency to make sure that if there's anything we as a province can do to help in this investigation, we'll offer those services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that multiple media outlets have suggested that this is a politically motivated attack as a result of the detainment of the CFO of Chinese company Huawei and given that this is an important issue that must be dealt with immediately, to the same minister: what will you personally do today to ensure that these unfair bans on our products are lifted? Are you looking for other markets? Surely you're doing something and have ideas that you can bring forward today.

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to opening up global markets for our farmers. We export a tremendous amount here in Alberta. We produce high-quality foodstuffs that the world needs and wants. With a growing population, we need to find more markets around the world so we can get our high-quality products to feed the world – the minister of trade, actually, a couple of weeks ago was in Korea and Japan trying to open up markets and gain more market access for our farmers there – and it's something that this government has committed to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I note that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry wasn't at that trade conference.

Given that this government has been so focused on earplugs and unconstitutional attacks on public-sector workers that they are forgetting to do the actual work of protecting and advocating for our key industries, to the same minister: given that China may soon target other critical agricultural industries in Alberta, what specific supports will you provide farmers to protect them from these international trade disputes on a proactive basis?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, we will look at if there are any damages done from this trade issue, but right now it's too early to tell. The farmers, their crops, and everything: we haven't actually seen any impacts on them, but it is something that we'll closely monitor. We'll work with farmers to see if there is any economic harm.

It's a little rich coming from that side of the House, about economic trade, because it's something where you had a former economic trade and development minister who in this very House said that if farmers and businesses were having trouble paying the carbon tax, they need to look at their own management.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is rising.

2:10

Public Health Care

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve to have fair access to health care regardless of the depth of their pockets. That's why I was so dismayed to see Bill 203, which would ban block billing for insurance services in the province of Alberta, be killed by government members in committee. The practice of block billing for health services represents an affront to public health care and seems to fly directly in the face of this Premier's so-called public health guarantee. To the Premier: won't you come clean and admit that you have no plan to keep public health care in this province and that credit card medicine is on the horizon?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Premier and our government have been clear that we stand for public health care. We'll continue to protect public health care.

The hon. member is referring to a standing committee that the Premier is not a member of. I do look forward to hearing the recommendations from that private members' committee when they send those recommendations to the House for a decision by all of this Assembly. I guess, from what the hon. member is saying, there may be a recommendation not to proceed with this bill. I'll be interested to see why the committee thought that it was the right decision, and then we'll see if the House agrees with the committee's decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that government members limited debate on Bill 203 to 30 minutes at most in committee yesterday and given that those members would not even let the bill proceed to this House for normal, regular debate, to the Premier: won't you admit that this new process of taking private members' bills through committee is really just a way to kill all legislation offered by the Official Opposition?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, that committee is designed to be able to expedite lots of private members' motions.

But, again, when it comes to the member, Albertans have got to ask if they can really trust what he's saying. He just said there that the government members of that standing committee went out of their way to limit debate for 30 minutes when, in fact, I'm informed that it was all members of the committee . . .

Ms Hoffman: You just said that they weren't government yesterday.

Mr. Jason Nixon: . . . all members of the committee – despite the fact that the deputy leader of the NDP wants to heckle and say rude things even during that, those are the facts of what took place during the committee. Again, Albertans should ask: can they really trust that member?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this Premier has insulted health care workers and given that my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre pointed out yesterday that the Minister of Health has tried to claim just this week that front-line health care workers aren't putting patient care first, to the Premier: you're really just setting up our public health care system, aren't you, for cuts and privatization? Why won't you just admit it?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Again, the Premier and our government have been clear. We stand for public health care. We're going to work hard to make sure that our system can continue to provide the services that Albertans expect. I'm very proud of our Minister of Health, who's working very hard despite the fact that he inherited an absolute mess from the NDP, again, who destroyed our province's economy and our financial situation. Despite that, he's still working forward on our health care guarantee, fighting to protect front-line workers in our health care system, fighting to protect our public health care system so that Albertans can enjoy and utilize that system. Again, I appreciate all his hard work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane.

Water Licensing and Cochrane's Water Supply

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cochrane's consumptive water licence can accommodate approximately 40,000 residents. The town's current population is 30,000, and with Cochrane being one of Canada's fastest growing communities, our town could run out its water licence in just seven to eight years. Can the minister of the environment tell this House if the government will consider changes to the water licence transfer process to allow nonconsumptive licences to be changed to consumptive licences when municipalities can demonstrate they will have no impact on withdrawal from the river?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question. We are aware of Cochrane's water needs and continue to work with the town on its development of long-term solutions to that problem and getting a steady supply of safe drinking water to the community. Changing a nonconsumptive licence for a consumptive licence sometimes comes with consequences. It's important that we make sure that we go through that process properly with the community of Cochrane. We'll continue to do that. We will work, of course, with the hon. member as well as with this community to make sure that we can solve the problems for the town of Cochrane.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that there are various ways by which water consumption can be reduced and given that stormwater and treated waste water can be used to support irrigation of recreational green spaces, would the government be willing to consider policy amendments to current legislation to allow municipalities to reuse stormwater for use in irrigation of these green spaces?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for bringing it up, a valuable opportunity to streamline our processes around waste water and stormwater use. Waste water and stormwater are already being used in many communities across the province for irrigation and other purposes. It's a great idea. I appreciate the hon. member raising it in this House. Of course, we're always looking for ways to eliminate red tape and streamline processes to be able to help our communities. We'd love to hear more of his ideas on that important issue. We'll continue to work towards that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the town of Cochrane has negotiated a potential transfer with a local organization that possesses a nonconsumptive water licence in exchange for the town providing that group with water and sewer services and given that this mutually beneficial deal will give the town access to a much-needed water resource, can the minister inform the Chamber whether his ministry has given consideration to approving such a transfer?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have not seen that particular file across my desk yet. Innovative solutions like that are things that we are interested in. We look forward to hearing more from the hon. member on this issue, and we are happy to work with both him and his community to try to find a way forward on that.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Minimum Wage for Youth

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a sad day in Alberta history when a government with no idea on how to actually boost youth employment rates desperately reintroduced age-based wage discrimination, a discredited policy that was rightly removed 20 years ago. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what do you plan to tell postsecondary students who find their employment cut in favour of the now cheaper underage workers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday the member opposite asked me to listen to the words of a former MLA for Calgary-Varsity and minister of labour, words that he said over 20 years ago. Instead of listening to what he had to say 20 years ago, I spoke to him yesterday, and I asked him about our current process. He shared with me that this is a very different time and very different circumstances. He is supportive of our policy to get our youth back to work and all Albertans, and that is exactly what the student job-creation wage will do. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the only other province that has this policy has higher than average youth unemployment, proving it a failure, and given that today's new wage policy unfairly targets only those who are both underage and in school and given that the government has now created a strong financial incentive for underage workers to shed their status as students so that they'll be paid more, to the Education minister: do you support this flawed policy, that will obviously increase high school dropout rates?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you Mr. Speaker. We have a youth job crisis in this province. According to Stats Canada in the first quarter of this year, 2019, youth unemployment rate for under 18 was 21.5 per cent. This is three times higher than the average unemployment rate. We need to get our students back to work. They need to get their first job so they get on the job ladder, get the experience and skills they need so that when they actually finish school, they can enter the workforce and have a great career.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have access to Hansard, that shows us that the Conservative government of the late '90s found that age-based wage discrimination was a flawed policy, prone to confusion and abuse, and given that I hope the minister asked about employers abusing young workers when he spoke to the former minister, to the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction: will you fulfill the mandate of your office and immediately take steps to remove this new age-based wage discrimination policy, which was identified as being onerous for employers in the '90s?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, again, I spoke to the minister previously, who is now a constituent of Calgary-Varsity, who indicated that he is supportive of these measures to get our youth back to work. I'd like to point out that this is a student job-creation wage. This is not discrimination. In fact, they have a similar wage structure in Ontario.

I'd like to also point out that the member opposite also helped prove the point that by reducing the wages, we can actually get Albertans back to work. An employer who was supporting her yesterday came forward and said that they actually pay students lower wages until they get employed.

Thank you.

2:20

Minister of Finance

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, we continue to learn new details about this Minister of Finance and his links to groups that promote discrimination against LGBT Albertans. In a news article last year the minister said that in general he supports parental notification of GSA membership. To the minister, who shouldn't need a guard dog, so the House leader can stay on his leash: does the Minister of Finance support GSAs, support them being called gay-straight alliances, and should all public, Catholic, and private schools be required to allow GSAs?

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order is noted at 2:20.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This government and I personally support GSAs in school. I think our Education minister has been clear that this government and this province will have the strongest statutory protections for GSAs across the country. I'm supportive of that, and I appreciate the opportunity to express it.

Ms Phillips: Well, given that the Minister of Finance's answer is not factual, given that yesterday on social media Devyn Rorem, who grew up in the minister's constituency, reminded Albertans about the Minister of Finance's connections to a school that bans same-sex relationships and compared those relationships to demonic activity, given that Devyn wrote, "How are LGBT+ youth supposed to feel when their MLA is part of institutions that do not welcome them?" will the Minister of Finance confirm for this House that he does not think being gay makes one a demon, and will he answer Devyn Rorem's question?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've made my position clear on GSAs, and I will say this. Constituents in Grande Prairie-Wapiti overwhelmingly elected me to serve them; in fact, by 75 per cent. The opposition continues to distract this government from the reason that Albertans sent us here to form a government, that is to deal with the economy, that is ensure that we're creating jobs and opportunities for all Albertans.

Ms Phillips: Given that also yesterday Albertans learned that the Minister of Finance is tied to an organization that promoted an event about helping people deal with, quote, unwanted same-sex attractions and given that this minister won't even answer questions about his links to conversion therapy, to the Minister of Finance, not the House leader: will the Minister of Finance stand in this House and disavow conversion therapy once and for all? It's easy to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has disavowed conversion therapy. I absolutely support that position. Again, I think we have an example of the opposition just seeking distraction from their record. Albertans overwhelmingly fired them on April 16 to elect a government with Albertans' priorities. That is this government. We will keep our eye on the ball.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Affordable Housing in Lethbridge

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lethbridge social housing has nearly 400 senior's units, 300 family units, and 100 affordable housing units but nearly 400 households on the wait-list at any given time. These wait-lists leave our valuable community members out in the dark or keep them relying on the kindness of friends and family for a place to call home. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what are this government's plans to meet the housing needs of these seniors and make sure that these seniors have a reliable home?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to hon. member for the question. Affordable housing is a critical issue for some Albertans, particularly those with low income and some seniors on fixed incomes. Our government will ensure more affordable housing is available for those who need it. We pledged to expand the use of mixed-income housing to help all Albertans, including seniors, to continue to stay in their home community. We will honour that pledge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that affordable housing needs to be exactly that and given that an individual living in homelessness costs the system an average of $114,850 a year, meaning that there could be a more fiscally responsible solution to getting folks without homes into reliable housing situations, to the same minister: how will this ministry affordably and responsibly build housing to meet the needs of Lethbridge seniors requiring safe homes?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuing a private and public partnership option to bring private-sector capital into helping build much-needed public infrastructure will mean that our taxpayer dollars will go much further. This partnership will mean that this government will be able to support the building of more affordable housing for the same monetary investment, giving our community members the chance to lead enjoyable lives.

Mr. Neudorf: Given that current affordable housing legislation bogs down our management bodies, delays processing times, perpetuates the wait-list problem for those who need to find homes, surely costing taxpayers additional money through backlogging the system, and fails to serve on an annual basis as many as 2,550 Albertans in Lethbridge, a city of 101,482 inhabitants, to the same minister: how will your department work to help seniors and low-income Albertans secure a dependable and affordable home?

The Speaker: The minister.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Seniors and Housing in partnership with the associate ministry of red tape reduction has just started reviewing red tape reduction opportunities. Once efficiencies that we are implementing are automatically – then assured income for the severely handicapped clients transition to the Alberta seniors' benefits program. We will continue to have discussions with our department staff and stakeholders to identify and reduce the burden of red tape by . . .

School Nutrition Program at Normandeau School

Mr. Dang: Mr. Speaker, 452 students at Normandeau school in Red Deer will go hungry this school year. A number of these kids come from homes that are struggling to make ends meet. While this government moves full steam ahead with their plan to give billions away to wealthy corporations, kids will lose steam without food in their bellies. Premier: why is it more important to fatten the coffers of your wealthy friends and donors while children go hungry?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it never ceases to amaze me how low the Official Opposition will go. What a thing to say about the hon. Premier of this province. It is so ridiculous what the opposition continues to do inside this House. Do you know why that is? It's because last night the opposition stood in this House and one by one voted with Justin Trudeau, voted to not defend this province against his attack on our province with a carbon tax. They're trying to distract Albertans from that. But I can tell you that back home where you and I come from, Olds and Sundre, for example, they haven't forgotten.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the hungry kids will be glad to hear that they're a distraction.

Normandeau school is so worried about losing their school nutrition funding that they are asking businesses to donate a hundred dollars per month . . .

Some Hon. Members: Preamble.

Mr. Dang: . . . or a thousand dollars for a school year to keep the program going.

Some Hon. Members: Preamble.

Mr. Dang: For many of these kids, getting breakfast and lunch at school are the only meals they'll get in a day.

Some Hon. Members: Preamble.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is one person in this room who decides what a preamble is, and none of them are on that side of the dais.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South can start his question again.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm excited to hear that those hungry kids will hear that their cause is a distraction.

Given that Normandeau school is so worried about losing their school nutrition funding that they are asking businesses to donate a hundred dollars per month or a thousand dollars for the school year to keep it going and that for many of these kids breakfast and lunch at school are the only meals they'll get in a day, Premier: I know your path to balance is a bit meandering, but is this really the plan, to make up for lost revenues in corporate tax giveaways by soliciting donations from small businesses . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, the question is ludicrous, not because of what it's about; it's the way it's being asked. Again, to imply that the hon. Premier would not care about children in any way is completely inappropriate. [interjections] But here are the facts, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition destroyed . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we heard the question very well this time. We will hear the answer very well this time.

Mr. Jason Nixon: The Official Opposition destroyed this province when they were in government, particularly the finances, had us on track for a hundred billion dollars in debt. We will work with our province. We will make sure that we keep the front-line services that Albertans need, but we will also get us on a path to balance because that's what Albertans voted for on April 16, and that's what this government is going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that we know the school is crowdfunding because the minister and Premier refuse to give them clarity and yesterday the Premier complained that the minister just hadn't had enough time since the election to do her job – when we were elected we had even less time and school boards were not forced to make panicked cuts in the absence of the information they needed – given this, there is no excuse. To the Minister of Education: why won't somebody over there make sure the minister's job is done? Hungry kids are waiting.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a ludicrous statement. We understand, I understand about feeding children and how important it is. As we saw with enrolment growth, the NDP is using speculation and scare tactics to create undue stress in our education system. Our government has been consistent. We're committed to funding education and supporting our students. We're going to do it. We did it yesterday. We're going to do it tomorrow. We're going to do it next week.

Thank you.

Film and Television Industry Support

Ms Goehring: It was good to see the minister of culture speak about Alberta's screen industry in question period recently. Alberta's movie and television industries are an important part of building and diversifying our economy. The minister said in her response to a question about the industry that she had met with well over 30 stakeholders. To the minister of culture: can you inform the Assembly as to who some of those stakeholders were?

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you for the question. We were really, really honoured to be able to attend the Banff media festival. At the festival we had everyone from smaller media groups that work with the Canadian media fund and the Alberta media fund all the way to Netflix, HBO, the Oprah Winfrey group as well as other media groups.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the UCP's platform stated it would remove the screen industry's current system of grants in lieu of a tax credit and given that the minister stated in QP that a tax credit actually gives an incredible ability, forward predictability, and stable funding, again to the minister of culture: will the tax credit be just another grant program under a different name, or will it be a labour-based tax credit, or both?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of culture.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Those are actually all things that we're working on right now. It's a really good question. We will be going to a tax credit. It's significantly different from a fund because there's an opportunity to really, really build and diversify the business within the province, everything from screen-based production to postproduction to bricks and mortar. We're really, really excited to get this rolling.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that attracting new screen productions to Alberta provides many economic benefits such as jobs, full hotels and restaurants, and helps to promote tourism, to the minister of culture: will the screen industry be addressed in this fall's budget, and will the cap be raised for the Alberta media fund?

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you again for the great question. We're just working towards that right now. As you know, we're just finishing off with some of our interim supply, moving towards what is going to be happening with the panel coming forward. We're extremely excited about working with the industry even more. There's a lot more consultation that still has to be done in order to figure out what the best system is moving forward. Very excited to be able to share that with you in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Agricultural Exports to China (continued)

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. China is considering halting all pork and beef imports from Canada over unwarranted food safety concerns, concerns that from an Alberta perspective are political rather than health related. Alberta's farmers are already under pressure to maintain secure access to export markets for agrifood products, all while our federal government exacerbates the issue. Can the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry update this House on the status of Albertan agriculture exports?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the member for that very important question as we do share a border and a lot of farmers, and I'm sure you're hearing the same that I am about how important this issue is. As I mentioned earlier, the Alberta government has been notified of a temporary suspension placed on Canadian export certificates for beef and pork. Something that even the Canadian Cattlemen's Association said today is that in the first quarter of 2019 exports to mainland China were $48 million, and the temporary loss of beef access to the Chinese market is unfortunate and may have financial impacts for both the live animals and processing sectors. So it is something that we take very seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for the answer. Given that the ruling Chinese government has halted imports for canola, pork, and now beef as a political tool and given that western Canada is disproportionately affected by market access concerns for agriproducts and given that China is one of the largest importers of our agricultural exports, what is this government doing to ensure that the situation for Alberta farmers doesn't get any worse?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I spoke with Minister Bibeau, the federal agriculture minister, and we're doing everything we can from a provincial standpoint to work with our partners in the federal government to ensure that we do anything that we can to help in this, the investigation that's going on between the Canadian Border Services Agency as well as the Canadian Food Inspection Agency and the RCMP to try to get to the bottom of the fraudulent export certificates that have been found. We're trying to make sure that we can normalize trade with China but, as well, to ensure that global market access around the world is available to our farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that this block on Canadian meat is the second step taken by Chinese authorities after blocking imports on canola in March and given that my constituents are dramatically affected by concerns with market access, what is the minister doing to ensure that more countries don't follow China's lead and block Canadian exports?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, it's working through other countries around the world to make sure that we can expand our market access, whether it's Korea or Japan, other Asian countries, every corner around the world to make sure that we do a good job of selling our high-quality food products that we produce here in Alberta. About 40 per cent of our canola exports go to China. If we are to find other markets around the world, we have to do a good job of selling the good Canadian story that we have here, that we produce a great, high-quality food that can feed the growing population around the world.

Skilled Trades Labour Supply

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, as a red seal tradesman and owner of a construction company it's become more and more apparent that over the past 20 years we continue to see an ongoing trend of qualified tradespeople retiring at a rate far greater than what is graduating. It is obvious that if not addressed now, this will continue to hinder our economy and the sustainability of our province. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what steps are you taking to increase enrolment in our trades programs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. It's something that we do indeed recognize and is a top priority for us. Working towards making sure that we have more people pursuing vocational educational opportunities and entering the skilled trades is a high priority. To help us achieve that, we'll be working with a number of different organizations to help strengthen the great work that they're doing, including organizations like Skills Canada Alberta, Careers: the Next Generation, and Women Building Futures.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is more than apparent that a principal cause of this shortage is a lack of youth interest and engagement in the trades. Given that a main key to solving this problem now and in the future will be to try to find a way to improve youth enrolment in the skilled trades, to the Minister of Advanced Education: what specific steps are you taking to encourage youth involvement in the skilled trades?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you as well to the hon. member for the question. He is indeed correct. Apart from the high unemployment that we're seeing, particularly affecting our youth, we are seeing that translate, of course, into less inclination to pursue skilled trades. We recognize it as a problem, so we have some very specific action that we're going to take to help encourage younger people to pursue vocational educational opportunities, including some additional scholarships for high school students to help them pursue the skilled trades.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you to the minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. After working and mentoring hundreds of apprentices, it has become apparent that technology and equipment are advancing faster than the trades curriculum. It is time that we make sure to prepare our tradespeople to be successful in the workforce. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what is your plan to help modernize our trades program and continue to make sure that our trades education leads Canada and the world?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the hon. member for the question. He's correct with respect to the advancement of technological change and technological initiatives. I was reading recently a report by the Conference Board of Canada that indicated that over a third of Alberta's workers are in jobs that are susceptible to automation. So we will be proactive in making sure that the skilled trades are changing in a way to meet that growing change in technological innovation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Seniors' Drug Coverage

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government made seniors a priority. We ensured they received the care they needed. We built more than 2,000 new long-term care and dementia beds while increasing funding for home care. In fact, our 2019 platform committed to full drug coverage for all low- and middle-income seniors. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing. You have told this House that seniors will receive all the funding that seniors need and want. Will the UCP commit to providing full drug coverage for seniors, or are seniors living on fixed income not a priority for this government?

2:40

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question, hon. member. This government cares about seniors so much, and we are working every day to plan for service and programs and to serve seniors. We want to make sure that Alberta seniors live the way they need.

Thank you.

Ms Sigurdson: Given, Mr. Speaker, that approximately 10 per cent of seniors with multiple prescriptions spend as much as $500 a year on copayments and given that this means there are seniors in Alberta who are forced to choose between filling their prescriptions or filling the fridge, to the Minister of Seniors and Housing. Under our plan 4 out of 5 seniors in Alberta would no longer have to make copayments. Will your government commit to improving drug access, or does the UCP government just consider these services as waste?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government will work closely with stakeholders to make certain the seniors' concerns are heard and that they have supports to age safely and independently in their own community. This government will also support the societies and organizations that provide service and care to seniors. We will continue to work diligently and tirelessly to provide financial benefits to help seniors with low incomes to meet their basic needs and to make sure that they get care in their homes and affordable personal and health supports.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's unacceptable that seniors are still struggling to pay for day-to-day necessities like prescription drugs. Under our plan the average eligible senior would have saved $200 per year. Again to the Minister of Seniors and Housing: how will your government support some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens, or will they suffer from the government's impending cuts to pay for its massive tax giveaway to wealthy corporations?

The Speaker: The minister.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government has repeatedly failed our seniors. The NDP has had four years to adjust to the needs of the growing senior population. Our government will ensure that our most cherished residents have the support that they need.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will return to the tablings.

Tabling Returns and Reports (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. First, a CBC article that I referenced in my question to the Minister of Health yesterday, in which CBC spoke with the Health Quality Council CEO, Andrew Neuner, who we have welcomed in the House today, and stated that the council believes “the evidence supporting the need for a superlab in Edmonton still stands.”

I also have an opinion piece from today’s Edmonton Journal by Sara Chow, a front-line lab technologist, who states, “The cancellation of the Edmonton Hub Lab . . . will impact patient care” and that “DynaLife does not have the expertise or technology to perform the specialized testing . . . that Albertans need.”

Lastly, I have a letter from Sandra Simard, a front-line medical lab tech – I will table this after.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite five copies of a letter on the topic of Bill 9 from a correctional worker, in fact two of them, very concerned about the unconstitutionality of Bill 9 and the safety of their pension.

I also have another five copies of a very lengthy letter from a fellow from Coaldale, Alberta, who’s a corrections worker and who goes into some detail on how he does not support Bill 9’s challenge to his livelihood. Again, a corrections worker, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the requisite five copies of three letters from three different constituents who were, in their view, to paraphrase quickly, frankly very deplored at the Premier’s behaviour in handing out earplugs in the Chamber, encouraging his members to ignore the opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Glenora, followed by St. Albert.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from the Deputy Minister of Alberta Education, Curtis Clarke, directing Alberta educators to be well aware that the government is moving forward on bringing back provincial achievement tests for eight-year-olds with grade 3 provincial achievement tests.

The second is a letter from Karin Brusse-Paterson, president of Battle River local 32, who expresses her deep concern with this. “Imposing standardized testing of 8-year olds is wrong,” she says. She also goes on to infer that when it comes to outing LGBTQ kids, the government trusts their judgment on that, but the government doesn’t trust their judgment on assessment, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter from one of my constituents. Her name is Brandi Potter, and she is a licensed practical nurse. She has very serious concerns about Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, or bad-faith bargaining.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For my final tabling, a letter from Sandra Simard, a front-line medical lab technologist for 37 years, as posted on the Health Sciences Association website, where she states that “the construction of a super lab is imperative” and that it would “streamline testing to effect cost savings” and that a public-private lab system would be more costly and less efficient than a fully public or private system.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others?

I have a tabling today. I have the requisite six copies of the 2018-2019 annual report from the Health Quality Council.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Copping, Minister of Labour and Immigration, pursuant to the Agrology Profession Act the Alberta Institute of Agrologists’ 73rd annual general meeting report; pursuant to the Architects Act the Alberta Association of Architects 2018 annual report; pursuant to the Workers’ Compensation Act the Workers’ Compensation Board of Alberta 2018 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order, and there was a point of order raised by the hon. Minister of Transportation. I will hear his comments now.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m sad to say – and we all witnessed it – that the NDP is sinking to new lows every day, and today was no exception to that case. It was a terrible example of behaviour. The Member for Lethbridge-West essentially called the Government House Leader a dog. Now, I will get to my recitations. I don’t have the Blues, of course, but she said something to the effect that somebody doesn’t “need a guard dog” and to keep the Government House Leader “on his leash.” There is no doubt that she was referring directly to the Government House Leader and calling him a dog. Had it been on the other foot, I would dare say that it would be on the front page of the newspaper if the hon. Government House Leader had called the Member for Lethbridge-West a dog. It would lead the news tonight at 6 o’clock.

2:50

Mr. Speaker, further, it’s disrespectful to the people of Sundre to hear their favourite son referred to as a dog. Under 23(h), (i), and (j) this certainly qualifies as “abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.” Under Beauchesne’s, sixth edition, page 142, section 484(2): “When members are entitled to the designation, they are referred to in the House as” that designation, not as a dog.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I will need no interjections from the Official Opposition. However, I expect that I will call upon you momentarily because I do in fact have the benefit of the Blues. The minister stated: “To the minister, who shouldn’t need a guard dog, so the House leader can stay on his leash.” Hon. members, we all are very aware of personal attacks, insults, or obscenities that are not in order based upon House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 63. The minister knows what she did. She was aware of what she said. She will stand, apologize, and withdraw.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I do concur in regard to both the standing orders and Beauchesne’s. I think it’s entirely appropriate that we on behalf of the Member for Lethbridge-West do withdraw those comments.

The Speaker: Correction: I called the member a minister. That is also not the case, but I appreciate the withdrawal.

We are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I’d like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 2

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

The Chair: We are on amendment A2. Are there any comments, questions to be offered with respect to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment to change the name of the act from An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business to a more appropriate name, substituting “Employment Standards and Labour Relations Statutes Amendment Act, 2019.”

I think it’s important that we speak to what’s underlying the desire to change the name of the act, and that is that it is fairly apparent that the intention of this bill is not, in fact, to make Alberta open for business. We’ve had the opportunity in this House to speak a number of times about the research that has been done on reduction of corporate taxes and the fact that they, in fact, do not lead to changes in employment and do not allow for greater access for businesses to do good things. Instead, I think the emphasis on this act simply is to suppress the well-being of the labour force and to stop the members of the community from appropriately working on their own behalf.

I’m very concerned about the nature of this bill and feel that it’s appropriate that we stop making it sound like it’s doing something that, in fact, it is not doing. I would like to see any evidence from the government, in fact, that this bill will enhance business in the province of Alberta. We’ve had a great deal of time speaking about the fact that it doesn’t enhance the well-being of people in this province and, instead, is removing the rights of workers to represent themselves and to ensure that they are full participants in the benefits of their own labour.

Given that that is what is happening here and that it is not actually opening up Alberta for business, then I think it’s appropriate that we speak about what it is. It’s a limitation on labour. It’s an attempt to stop labour from engaging in the activities that they need to in order to be appropriately represented. The reality is that labour members in this community only have one thing to offer in their employment setting, and that is their labour; that is, the things that they do. They, then, also need a right to be able to gather collectively to share the power that comes from representation in an organized union in order to be able to be appropriately represented with an appropriate amount of power.

The issue in any labour relations is the fact that employers have, ultimately, all the power. They can make the decisions about how much you get paid. They can make the decisions about when you’ll be working. They can make the decisions about what kind of safety mechanisms are brought into place. All the union members can do is that they can gather together in order to be able to suggest that should the employer begin to act in an egregious way – and we know that this happens all the time – they need to be able to be protected. That means they need to be able to have a right to form unions. One of the things that this bill does is that it makes it very difficult to form those unions without exposing themselves to intimidation by employers.

Now, I’m very clear, of course, that there are very many employers out there who are excellent employers. I’ve enjoyed really positive relationships with all of my employers, I would say, throughout my career, and I feel quite privileged as a result of that, that I happened to work with industries and business owners who were very nice and very considerate. In those cases, those business owners also were not opposed to the workers bringing forward their concerns and indeed forming unions in the workplace. In fact, some of them quite openly allowed meetings for unionization to occur in their setting because they understood that what the workers are simply asking for is an opportunity to have a voice, to be able to speak on their own behalf.

Any good employer is quite happy to have workers voice their concerns because they know that they will learn a lot about what is best for the employees, and if the employees are well represented and if they’re protected in the work site, they will be happier, and they will stay in the business much longer. I think that we have a long history of having achieved this notion of collective bargaining in western democracies, and it’s very important that we seek to protect and enhance the benefits that come out of this kind of collective action.

It’s not that people are opposed to, you know, businesses doing what it is they wish to do. They just simply wish to be part of it and not be secondary in the considerations that are made for moving forward and for seeking success in a business. The vast majority of employees that I know are quite happy to see their employers be very successful, and they wish their employers to benefit from the successes that they achieve by the creation of industry and will do things often quite extraordinary to ensure that that happens.

3:00

I mean, many business leaders that I know will tell you about how important it is that particular individuals have done the work that they’ve done, you know, the person at the front desk, the secretary that helps to keep you organized and helps to keep you focused and makes sure that you respond to correspondence in an appropriate and timely way to concerns coming from the community. Sometimes it absolutely saved businesses from great devastation, and employers are very seriously sad to see it when they leave. And we know that workers that are protected by collective bargaining tend to be more satisfied and tend to move around less in their communities and to stay in the business more.

It’s a pretty straightforward request here, that we look at what is actually happening here in this bill, that we actually take some time to not pretend that this is about creating businesses but it’s really, in this bill, an attempt to change labour legislation. You know, we could have suggested something ridiculous and ironic for the title of this bill, but we’re trying to co-operate with the government side of the House, trying to help them to be more clear in their deliberations, so we are suggesting, rather, to remove the title, which is An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, and instead replace it with a reasonable title to reflect what actually happens in the bill itself, which is Employment Standards and Labour Relations Statutes Amendment Act because that's exactly what's happening in this bill. They're intending to amend the labour relations in this province.

Now, we, of course, thought that amending the labour relations in this province was important because, in fact, many labour relations had not even been examined for over 30 years in this province. For over 30 years it was neglected by the previous PC governments, and we felt it was time to bring this forward, so we did. But all of our changes were focused on ensuring that labour relations were good in this province, that we didn't have threats of strikes, that we didn't have concerns with the employees in this province either in terms of their dissatisfaction with their work settings or, you know, issues around safety. Many of our changes were around safety in the workplace and so on. You'll see that we actually engaged in significantly more labour relations changes in the last four years than had been done in many, many more years previous to that. As I say, sometimes statutes were on the books for over 30 years without any kind of a second look, so it was important, then, that we bring this forward.

I'm very discouraged that one of the very first things that happened when this new government got elected is that they came in to undo work that had been long requested and long overdue in this province simply because they have an ideological bent that they can't seem to exercise. They come in and from their rigid 1950s ideology step in to try to suppress the ability of workers to take care of themselves and to have a voice at the table.

Now, I know that, you know, not hearing the voices of other people is a pretty consistent aspect of this particular government, having handed out earplugs to specifically not hear the voices and, of course, using committees, for example, to suppress bills that they don't like so that they don't even have to see those bills in the first place. Now here we are having bills that, really, go against the ability of workers to participate in their own well-being.

I would suggest that it's very important that we be honest in our deliberations here today and that we are clear with people that what's happening in this bill is not in fact making Alberta open for business. It's always been open for business. Businesses have done very well. Unfortunately, we went through very difficult economic times in the last four years, and I know that the government likes to blame that on our government all the time. But you notice that they don't stand up and say: oh, yeah, and the conservative government in Saskatchewan was also bad, too.

If you look at the statistics, you'll see that the things that they throw at our face, the loss of jobs, for example, which we agree on, and the reduction of our standing with credit agencies – we understand those are problems, but they are not reflective of the government of the day. Those exact same things happened to the conservative government right next door. Clearly, they are misusing statistics to be able to create a narrative which is in fact not supported by the statistics if they look at them more broadly. Look at them not simply as to how it is that things got difficult in the province of Alberta but also as that they were equally difficult in other places that had the same issue as we did; that is, a dependence on oil and gas as a major source of income in the province.

We know that they like to create a narrative, and they do that mostly by keeping the blinders on and not being willing to look at the broad truth, as is expressed by numbers and the statistics that are widely available. Simply choosing to look at one downturn without looking at the other dozens of downturns that have occurred in the country of Canada tells us that they're not really interested in the downturn at all. That is just simply a narrative that they used effectively to get themselves returned to government.

I know that the denial of research is something that's sort of endemic in this government. You know, we've demonstrated in the past that cutting corporate taxes doesn't increase jobs, that taking the rights away from workers is not going to increase jobs. For example, in the case of GSAs, the elimination of GSAs are likely to increase the number of adolescent suicides both, by the way, the research indicates, for gay students but also for nongay students in schools that have GSAs.

The point of all that is that the evidence is there. The statistics are there. You have to read statistics with an underlying understanding of what it is that you're trying to ask when you create the statistic and that helps you to make decisions about the outcome, not simply to cherry-pick small slivers of statistics in order to be able to make a narrative that isn't true if you look at the broad breadth of the statistics such as in this case, where we're able to say that Alberta did not suffer the slings and arrows of misfortune that have been visited upon us somehow differentially than other places in the country such as the province of Saskatchewan, which, in fact, has a conservative government and which actually used different mechanisms to respond to that. They were doing cutbacks in Saskatchewan, shutting down libraries, closing school programs, and other things like that at the same time that we were actually creating jobs by building bridges, building hospitals, and building the cancer centre in Calgary.

The government side of the House likes to say that jobs were lost under our tenure. We understand that many jobs were lost. But, actually, if you read the statistics properly and look at it not simply as to how many jobs have been lost in the time since the day we got elected till now but, rather, when the job loss began to occur, you see that it actually began to occur in November of 2014, while the Conservatives were in office. In fact, the vast majority of the significant downturn, more than 50 per cent of the job loss, occurred before the election actually occurred. Yes, it did continue after the election. Of course, much of that continued in the month or two before we had a chance to even begin governance in this province. So the vast majority of job loss in this province is on the Conservatives' failure to prepare for a downturn in the oil and gas economy.

You know, it's a bit of a ruse for them to say that somehow our policies had created job loss in this province. In fact, if you look at the last two years, the number of actual people employed in the province of Alberta increased, did not decrease, and to say otherwise would be to mislead this House, this Chamber. Our policies, as they came into effect, indeed did increase the number of jobs in the province of Alberta. As a result, every time they stand up with this narrative that somehow we were in office while people lost jobs, I'd suggest that this is a falsehood that they know very well is a falsehood, but because it creates a narrative, they're prepared to use it.

3:10

I think the title of this particular bill is part of that narrative, is part of this notion that somehow Alberta was not open for business. But, indeed, Alberta was open for business, always was. We experienced a downturn, and unfortunately our government paid the price, as governments often do when there is an economic downturn, even though the policies of the government itself are not particularly related to the downturn or did not cause the downturn. In fact, a careful reading of the statistics, which I'm very happy to walk through in detail if the government wishes me to do – I'm more than happy to bring in and walk through month by month when the job losses occurred. I can demonstrate to them that, in fact, under our government more people were employed in the province of Alberta than at any other time in the history of the province of Alberta.

However, subsequent to the election of this government the number of job losses has gone up. Here we have a situation where they come in and say that they're going to focus on jobs and increase jobs but, in fact, they are also suffering the slings and arrows of misfortune from across the broader economy. But should I stand here today and accuse this government of removing jobs from this province? I can do that. That's what they have done to us. That's what they have said repeatedly. Should I stand here and say that this government has lost 26,000 jobs since they came in? Has this Labour minister actually failed already? Should this Labour minister be replaced because they have lost that number of jobs? That's what they're saying about our time in. But I can actually say that during our time the number of people employed was higher than ever before. This Labour minister can't say that.

I think, then, that means that we should stop trying to mislead the public, stop trying to use bills to create a narrative which does not adequately and properly reflect the statistics that are available to us. If they choose to do that, then it tells me that they know something and they are trying to hide something and they are trying to mislead the public in the province of Alberta. That's not something that I wish to participate in. I have no desire to mislead the citizens of the province of Alberta, in spite of the fact that this government would like to drag us along on this ruse. So I would suggest that it is time that we stand up and say the truth about this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise today to offer more comment on the amendment before us and I'd like to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for his thoughtful analysis that he just offered to the Legislature on why he thought that the amendment, renaming the bill which is initially called An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business is an appropriate amendment, because the naming of the bill as An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business is one that actually deflects from what the content of the bill actually accomplishes.

What it does, Madam Chair, is something that actually changes labour relations statutes and amends labour relations law and employment standards in the province of Alberta. As such, it should be appropriately named in a way that reflects what it actually does. The amendment does that by substituting an alternate name, that being "Employment Standards and Labour Relations Statutes Amendment Act, 2019." It's an appropriate effort to properly describe this piece of legislation as an act that makes some very significant changes to employment standards and labour relations statutes in the province of Alberta.

I think we've made a very large effort and we continue to do so to explain to all those in the province who have an interest in protecting workers' rights in Alberta that this piece of legislation is an attack on working people. It's an attack on young workers in particular. It's an attack in many cases on young females in the workplace who are liquor servers. It's an attack on those who are in the oil patch, who are amongst workers who commonly work overtime and may seek to bank that wage.

It's not anything that would resemble something that would make for an atmosphere where you'd claim that we have a healthy business environment as a result. Anything that creates disharmony in your labour market and creates a distrust or a mistrust between working people and the employers that employ them is not something that creates an atmosphere that is healthy for business to operate in a way that is attractive for people to want to invest in it. You have to have contentment, let's say, on both sides of the table, where employers and employees reach fairly negotiated settlements. The underlying values that allow that to happen are embedded in labour legislation.

What we see, I think, by the government in naming the act as they initially have, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, is maybe an attempt to tell the world that this piece of legislation is actually slanted to favour the business community as opposed to having balanced labour relations in the province that respects both parties to labour negotiations. The claim that it makes Alberta open for business maybe is an unveiled advertisement that the favourite son of this government is the business community, and they would rather see labour legislation tilted in favour of the business community and against working people. The measures that are included in this Bill 2 certainly almost without exception take money away from individuals and give it corporations.

That shows the underlying values of this government. They really see people as being servants of an economy rather than seeing it as incumbent upon them as a government to help design an economy that serves people. That, I think, is the crux of the matter, that individual working people are not valued. They're seen as input costs to serve an economy, and the benefits of their labour should flow up towards business. Trickle-down economics has been discredited time and time again, yet this government seems to cling to it in the hopes that somehow this time it'll be different, that the laissez-faire Adam Smith ideology and philosophy will somehow change overnight and money will flow to working people and it will be equitable. It doesn't happen that way. I mean, there has to be legislation in place to protect those who are less powerful in the labour relations negotiation process. You have to have fair processes.

This really goes ahead and tilts the balance against working people. For example, when you look at the reduction in minimum wage, I mean, the argument made by the government to do that, that in fact that $2 reduction in minimum wage for youth workers is going to incent business owners to create more employment, that they're going to take that $2 an hour or roughly $3,500 to $4,000 a year per employee who's subjected to this wage rollback and they're automatically going to invest it in new jobs, simply hasn't borne fruit. It doesn't have a historical record in fact, but that's the argument that the government relies upon. What happens, in fact, is that the individual business owners will simply pad their profits. They don't necessarily go out and hire new people as a result of those savings.

3:20

I really try to put myself in the position of, say, a young student who's in grade 10 to 12 right now. We've seen lots of graduation ceremonies happen. In fact, I'm going to address the graduating class in Jasper Place high school later on this afternoon. Those students are people that I'm going to be facing and talking with about this piece of legislation, and I'm just imagining what they're thinking right now, where they maybe have been planning to go to work at a summer job and they're looking at what they might earn over the course of their summer earnings and they're calculating it based on the minimum wage that we've managed to raise up to $15 an hour in incremental steps. Now, with this new government in place, they've had to step back and say: "Whoa. I thought I was making $15 an hour, but I guess not. I'm down to $13 an hour."

I'm sure they're scratching their heads and wondering how the government thinks that this is going to help them, when the government makes the case to this House and to Albertans to say:

"Look. Reducing your wage, young man or young lady who's going to be in the workforce earning $13 an hour now rather than the $15 you were expecting, is going to be a good thing for the province of Alberta and the Alberta economy, so thank you very much for that significant contribution. You've given up a significant part of your earnings because we've legislated that your wages are going to get dropped. But don't worry. It's going to be good for the province as a whole, and we appreciate your sacrifice. It's something that we think we can do to better the province, and – guess what? – we're doing it to you because we think we can get away with it. We think that you have less value to us than other people, and you're not voting right now."

Guess what, Madam Chair? These young people are being mobilized and motivated, and I certainly expect to hear an earful when I go to a graduation ceremony later today about this government's policy of reducing minimum wage for young workers under 18 years of age. I think it's disgraceful. A jurisdiction that has a minimum wage that is below a living wage is one that is making a statement to its population that they don't value those who have the least amount of political power to protect themselves from a government who will side with the employers, who create false arguments saying that those dollars saved will be reinvested to create greater employment.

It's not an argument that any of those students that I'll be meeting tonight, I expect, will be quoting to me. They're going to be wondering why they were hurt on purpose by this government. I'm fully expecting to hear many of them ask how they can step in to oppose such measures, what can be done to ensure that this government gets a message from them that they are very, very unhappy. They're perplexed, they feel undervalued, and they are motivated to do something to oppose this type of legislation now and in the future from this Conservative government.

The other measures involved in this piece of legislation that the motion before us purports to amend by way of changing the title are other examples of basically picking the pockets of people who are wage earners in the province. It's shameful that this government sees that working people are a target that they should attack. It's a continuation of a theme that this government has lapsed into right from day one, where they're looking to divide Albertans against each other, pit working people against employers, saying that, you know, working people don't deserve a living wage. It's causing economic downturn when in fact people who earn living wages, people who are earning at the lower end of the spectrum actually create opportunity when they spend those dollars.

The consumer economy is 70 to 75 per cent of the economic activity in any of the western democracies, and it's pretty clear to see from that statistic alone that if an individual or government wants to stimulate spending and create employment, the thing to do is to put money in the pockets of those who are most likely to spend it, that being the lower income spectrum of your population. That's what we tried to do with a number of measures when we were government, Madam Chair: to ensure that individual families who were on the lowest end of the wage spectrum or lower income spectrum had monies to live respectably and in dignity and, in turn, stimulate the economy as well.

Families earning the subsidies that the government gave to low-income people received a generous increase, which was well deserved. That was much appreciated by many, many families through the Alberta child tax credit increases that we instituted, and it improved their lives tremendously, the living standards, the quality of life for so many families throughout this province. It cut the poverty rate in half; 44,000 people were brought out of poverty as a result. That's something that you herald as a government and can be proud of.

Yet this government seems to be proud of doing the opposite and taking money out of working families' pockets and saying that it's something that is a respectable thing to do. It's part of their value structure to do this in an effort to somehow create an economy that businesses can thrive in. It just doesn't hold water with me or with those young students that I'm going to meet tonight when they are told that cutting their wages is going to be good for them.

Other things that they wish to do are equally disturbing. The people who earn overtime, as I mentioned before, who are quite often in the oil patch, will only get to bank it at straight time if indeed they come to a so-called agreement with their employer. What it basically does is open up an option where the employer is in a greater strength of power vis-à-vis the employee. The net result is that the employee who had wages at time and a half coming to them will end up entering into agreements coercively, not voluntarily. There's coercion involved to take a significant reduction in what they're ultimately owed. Their take-home pay, their balance sheet are going to be hit hard by these measures.

As I mentioned, if you're an oil and gas worker making an average pay, putting in 10 hours of overtime every week on a 12-week project, that's 120 hours in paid time off. Now the difference between banking that pay at time and a half pay versus straight time is over $2,500, and the government is saying: "It's good for you. Don't worry. In the long term it's good for you. It's a job-creation measure. We'll see the numbers in employment go up, and thank you very much for that donation of 2,500 bucks. That'll go and join that of your son or daughter, who just donated 4,000 bucks as a university student or a student working a summer job. So your family – congratulations – just donated 6,500 bucks to the Alberta treasury."

Now, that's a huge amount of money, 6,500 bucks. How many kids in that family? Maybe it's even more. Maybe it's a family with a couple of kids, and you can add another $4,000 onto that. That's 10,000 bucks that that family has just donated to the Alberta treasury, and this government is cheering that on.

3:30

When I talk to students later on this evening about these measures and ask them: "How are you affected, Alyssa or Michael, in your take-home pay? What does it mean to your family that this government is saying that we're going to stimulate economic activity and you're going to pay for it? But it's good for you; don't worry" – look those students in the eye, slap them on the back, congratulate them and say: "Job well done; 12 years of school, you've done a fine job. You're the future of this province. We greatly value your contribution and what you're going to do in the world, and, by goodness, we're going to show that appreciation by cutting your wages by 2 bucks an hour. Hallelujah."

That's a pretty hypocritical statement, and it's an exposure of the values that really underlie the principles that this government is following in terms of the application of economic policy, where it looks to stimulate the economy to create employment to counter an economic downturn that was caused by a systemic drop in the price of oil, which really knocked the socks off the revenue stream that this provincial government had. Yet the answer to this dilemma for this government is to look towards its lowest paid citizens and say, "Look; we're taking it out of your pocket" and also to those who are in many cases hit hardest if they're working right now at all as a result of the downturn, and to the individuals who are receiving overtime in the oil and gas sector, taking about 2,500 bucks out of their pocket over the course of a week where they work 10 hours every week on a 12-week project.

It's a huge difference for working people, Madam Chair, and we don't think that this government has the interests of working people at heart at all when they can proceed gleefully with the type of legislation that Bill 2 is. We believe it should really be named appropriately as a major shift in employment standards and labour relations and call it the employment standards and . . . [Mr. Dach's speaking time expired]

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and speak to this amendment to Bill 2, which proposes to change the title. Now, I'm a student of communications. I've long had an interest in advertising, marketing, how we use words to communicate ideas. English was my favourite subject in high school. I was one of those strange kids that actually enjoyed writing essays, and that's something that has continued on in my life. I put my creative energies for a time into music and took the opportunity to do some songwriting and some other things there, but when I decided to go back to school and earn a second degree, I ended up doing a bachelor of arts in professional communication. I was fascinated with learning the history of communications but, in particular, how we use words, images, different things to convince people of ideas. Indeed, I was particularly fascinated by political communications. That's when it first came into my head that maybe someday I might like to run for office. Happened a little sooner than I anticipated; that's how, in part, I find myself here today.

That's what we are looking at here with this particular bill. I understand the reasons why the government wishes to call this An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. That is a large part of what this government ran on and what it claimed it was going to focus on doing. Now, one can certainly question a number of the actions that this government has made since coming into office and whether or not they have maintained that supposed laserlike focus, which they stated they would. That aside, I can understand why they brought forward this bill title. However, as someone who strongly believes in truth in advertising, I have to say that I think this is a very good amendment because, as my colleagues have outlined and as others have said, I do not believe that this is a bill that truly makes Alberta open for business or that, indeed, that is the message that this bill actually sends in the things that it's choosing to do and what it hopes to accomplish.

We've had a lot of discussion in this House about the various different aspects in this bill. Indeed, I suppose it's par for the course that in many ways so far this government has proven to not be quite what it advertised itself to be. We've certainly seen that in, you know, their claims that they would be coming in to protect public health care but immediately using their private committee that they forced onto the Assembly to kill a private member's bill on that very particular topic with barely any discussion. This is a government that claimed it would not legislate on social issues. It immediately brought forward Bill 8 and the changes that are being done there, cancelled the conversion therapy working group, taking other steps which show that clearly they are not as advertised.

This bill, while it does, I guess, fulfill some of their campaign promises – in this case they actually deigned to tell Albertans what they were going to do, unlike their recent Bill 9, which they did not mention in their campaign platform, in which they hid from Albertans their intent to mount that attack on Alberta's public-sector workers and to break their contracts, to set that troubling precedent right out of the gate. Unlike that bill, they did campaign on these particular things, so I can't say that the bill is not doing what they said they would do. It certainly is. I have to give them credit for that. However, I would dispute their claim that these are decisions that communicate that we are open for business or that Alberta is a great place to do business.

First of all, Madam Chair, I've talked at great length and, I'm sure to the pleasure of all members, I'm going to talk at some length again about changes to overtime provisions. What message does that send to folks across Canada, to workers who may want to come here to bolster our labour force, to folks who are looking to come here to start a business, that we would be the only province in Canada who values workers' time for less, that we feel the only way that a business can succeed in Alberta is to rob every single worker who works an hour of overtime and banks that overtime of a half-hour of their time? The only jurisdiction. I am proud to have Alberta be exceptional on many fronts. This is not one, I think, that casts us in a good light.

To me, that does not say that Alberta is open for business. That says to me that this particular government at least in Alberta is open to lobbyists. They are open to businesses that want to cut back on what they pay to their employees. They want to take away, want to pick the pockets of Albertans for the time that they have duly worked for and earned. For that reason I think it's far better to go with a nice clinical title for the bill, which states roughly what it is but doesn't aspire to claims for what the bill does not in fact do. In fact, in some ways it says precisely the opposite of the message that it claims, and that is one of the troubling aspects of this bill, Madam Chair. It's what it conveys about this government's mentality about businesses and employees and workers.

I've talked before about how we've had that problem in this province for many, many years, how previous Conservative governments chose not to act while the rest of Canada progressed on many fronts in terms of labour legislation, recognizing protections and rights for workers and improving conditions and other opportunities. Alberta remained a laggard because Conservative governments in Alberta seemed to feel that the balance needed to stay permanently tipped towards the side of business.

3:40

That in no way, Madam Chair, is casting any disparagement on employers in Alberta, but there have certainly been very particular employers or particular businesses who were great contributors to previous Conservative governments before we removed during our government's term the influence of corporate donations to political parties. In the past Conservative governments were great friends with particular businesses, who would contribute large sums of money, and for that reason they chose to keep the labour laws in Alberta tilted in that direction. I suppose there weren't enough workers that they felt were making contributions.

So we find ourselves here today where, of course, during the last election the particular party that has now formed government was not able to directly solicit corporate donations, but we certainly did see that there were a number that decided to form political action committees or to contribute to the same, looking forward to extracting favours from this party should they take government. In fact, that is what has happened, and that is, in fact, what we see happening now. So this is the first of what I'm sure will be many favours this government will look to do for particular businesses, again tilting that scale, choosing to take away some of the balance that's been enabled for workers in the province of Alberta, again the same balance that exists in every other jurisdiction in Canada.

On overtime in particular, Madam Chair, this government feels the need to take that away from Alberta workers, to tell them they are worth less because that provides an advantage for this government. That is not a statement of being open for business, at least not open for the kind of business they want to suggest. It certainly notes the kind of business that they were open for during the election campaign.

So we find ourselves here today with this bill, and that is one of the reasons why I support this amendment. It's a lot more honest, or at least it's neutral. You know, if we wanted to give this a truly honest title – well, perhaps I won't go there. I might strain the language that would not be parliamentary. We have here instead the opportunity to apply a strictly neutral and technical title to this bill, which is seeking to pick the pockets of Albertans.

I spoke about the changes in overtime, Madam Chair, for which this government has provided no justification. I have certainly had no flurry of workers coming to my door demanding that they be allowed to take half an hour less of their overtime.

Then we have, of course, what is now being put in place with the youth wage differential. Madam Chair, I'm not sure how it says that we are open for business when the changes that are happening are simply saying that we are willing to make changes that, again, are frankly inconsistent with most of the rest of Canada. We recognize, of course, that in Ontario this policy has been in place, and I think my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods has been very good in outlining just how unsuccessful that policy has been there, the additional red tape it's created, the fact that they still have a high youth unemployment rate, the fact that there is abuse and discrimination that occurs.

That is what this government wants to introduce into Alberta. They want to create red tape. They want to invite abuse. They want to encourage youth to drop out of school. Those things, to me, Madam Chair, are not suggestions that we are open for business, at least not the kind of business that they want to say that we are open for. It suggests that this government was certainly open to lobbyists during the election campaign and in the production of their policy platform and indeed now in the legislation that they are bringing forward in this House. But that is not the kind of business that is going to benefit Albertans, Madam Chair. It may benefit this particular government and that particular party, but that is not the kind of business that is going to benefit our communities.

We have here this amendment, which is a reasonable amendment, to simply add a neutral title to the bill as opposed to one that would more reflect, well, what I'm starting to think more and more of this bill, that this is an act to declare Alberta open for lobbyists. Certainly, we saw that there was an intense campaign from Restaurants Canada advocating for precisely these kinds of changes because they feel that their restaurants could not maintain their bottom line paying youth the same wage as they pay other employees.

As I've stated previously, Madam Chair, I know many business owners in downtown Edmonton who have opened successful restaurants and cafés and other service businesses who are not asking for this, who are not saying that they need this to succeed. These are forward-thinking, progressive business owners. I would also note that the majority of them are not franchises. It's good to see that locally owned and locally created businesses have the ability to thrive in the environment and pay their employees a fair wage. That's not to say that all franchises are in the same boat. Indeed, I know that there are some franchise owners who place the priorities of their employees a bit higher and want to maintain fairness in their wages and in the hiring practice. But I think, to a certain extent, there are very particular business models that are pushing for this.

Frankly, Madam Chair, I would rather see businesses thrive that treat their employees well than attempts to cut the bottom line at every opportunity, even if that means lobbying government to make these kinds of changes, changes like our government made: cutting the small-business tax from 3 per cent to 2 per cent. That is something that helps business. That was something that was not borne on the backs of workers. That was not something where we felt we had to tilt the scale.

I've spoken often on a number of bills from this government about that question of balance. This government seems to have a very skewed view of where the point of balance in this province should lie and indeed who holds the majority of power and who holds positions of privilege in this province. Certainly, there were some that were mightily offended that anyone other than a Conservative government would ever have been in place in the province of Alberta and spent much of the last four years bemoaning that fact. They feel that now that that is no longer the case, rightful balance has been restored and we can go back to the way everything was.

Well, Madam Chair, there are some things on which I think a lot of Albertans are going to disagree in regard to that. On this particular issue, when it comes to things like reducing the youth wage, taking away the same rights that people have in every other part of Canada, where when they work an hour of overtime, they are paid or they bank an hour and a half of time, that is not about balance.

I recognize, Madam Chair, that the relationship between employer and employee is a symbiotic one. You know, the two need to work together. Generally you are not going to have a business able to grow without employees. Likewise, no one is going to be able to be an employee unless there are employers. That is reasonable.

But the question of what kind of balance there needs to be between the two – the suggestion that this bill makes, that in order to be open for business, we have to reduce the rights of employees, that they should be grateful that they have a job, these kinds of changes that, again, are without justification, without any proof of being valid in any other jurisdiction in this country: that, to me, is suggesting an unfortunate view on the part of this government that employees are more of a problem, that employees must be willing to accept less for the privilege of having a job in the province of Alberta. If that is open for business, that is not any kind of business that I am interested in.

3:50

I think we can strike a fair balance in this province. I think we can declare that this province is open for business, that our employers in the province of Alberta, the people that start and operate businesses, are able to compete on the same terms as employers and business owners in every other province in Canada. We offer them many advantages, Madam Chair. Alberta remains the lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada, period. Our businesses do not pay a sales tax. They do not, like some do in other parts of Canada, have to pay any health premiums on behalf of their employees.

Now, that is not to say, Madam Chair, that I think it's easy. I recognize the challenge of operating a business. I myself in the past, in my work as a musician, had to hire employees at times. It was on a contract basis. Yeah, I had to think about: how can I make this work? How can I pay my guys fairly for doing a gig? Indeed, I was the one that went out and hustled and found a particular gig and put things together, and I wrote up the charts. I put everything together, and then we sat down and rehearsed, but I recognized that that was my job. That was my ambition. That was what I wanted to do. It was not my right to put that on the backs of the guys that I hired to help me accomplish that.

Again, it's a symbiotic relationship. We need to find ways to work together. It wouldn't have worked for me if venues were paying too little – and indeed there were those that did – or, you know, if there were costs being imposed on it that were too much for me to be able to make that work. Ultimately, these are decisions that I make when I choose to strike out on my own.

I think that there are definitely ways that government can act to try to better support businesses. I have the opportunity to speak with many business owners in my constituency of many different, various industries that they work in, and I recognize this government's intent . . .

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to speak to this amendment. I've had the opportunity over last night and for some of the debate this morning to hear some of the arguments put forward by the hon. members for Edmonton-McClung, Edmonton-Rutherford, and Edmonton-City Centre, and I'd like to actually take this opportunity to respond to them.

As I understand it, the argument being put forward by the hon. members across the aisle is that we need to change the name of Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, largely because they believe that, in their view, this bill and the youth job-creation minimum wage, which is actually not part of this bill but we've implemented at the same time, will actually not create jobs, and some would even suggest that this is actually an attack on workers. Madam Chair, I have to say that this clearly demonstrates that the members across – we have a significant difference in world view, but quite frankly they don't get it. They do not understand how to support our job creators. They do not understand the implications of the policies that they put in place during one of the worst economic downturns in our history in Alberta and what impact that had on job creators.

Madam Chair, I was listening to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who said: "Please let me show you the research. Listen to the research. We actually created jobs. Our government did a good job, and our policies had no negative impact." I disagree, and I strongly disagree, because research, quite frankly, shows the opposite.

I just want to talk about not everything that was said across. That would take me far too long, and my time is limited here. But I do want to speak to a couple of items particularly, even though it's not part of the bill. I'll speak to it because it was spoken to by a large number of the members across, the youth minimum wage. I'll speak to the general holiday changes and also speak to banked overtime.

Before I get to that, I want to talk about some of the research that actually was done. First, you know, I'd like to talk about a study done by the Conference Board of Canada. Actually, it was done while the members opposite were in government and were increasing the minimum wage by nearly 50 per cent in the face of one of the worst economic downturns in the province. What the Conference Board of Canada said – and this was done midway through the changes – was that these changes will have a negative impact on jobs. What they said, Madam Chair, is that context matters, that we were in the face of one of the greatest downturns in our history, and that this means there will be a negative impact on jobs. Did the members opposite listen to that research? No. They moved ahead and continued to increase the minimum wage, right?

The studies showed at that point in time that roughly a 10 per cent increase in the minimum wage would result in a 1 to 3 per cent decrease in jobs. Did they do 10 per cent? No. Did they do 20 per cent? No. They did nearly a 50 per cent increase in the minimum wage. Granted, that's a study. That's research. So let's take a step back and explore a little bit: what were the implications of these changes?

Studies were done by the CFIB, and they asked 1,000 Alberta businesses, you know, on the increase in minimum wage: what was the implication? Over 50 per cent said: we actually laid off staff or we reduced hours because of that. Same with the Calgary Chamber of commerce, right? They did a study. What were the actual implications of the increase to the minimum wage? Again, over half laid off staff, reduced hours.

So to hear the members opposite say, "No, no; we created jobs, and our policies didn't have a negative impact," Madam Chair, I submit to you, is totally incorrect. Their changes in policies, the minimum wage and – sorry. One other comment. I know that one of the members opposite was talking about Restaurants Canada. They did research as well: tens of thousands of jobs lost. And what we heard from them is that not only the minimum wage but the change in the general holiday rules resulted in, again, employees laid off and reduction of hours. This is the research that's shown. This is what actual employers have said in Alberta, and this is why we need to make the change to get Albertans working again.

The implications of this? We spoke to it earlier today, and I've mentioned this stat before. Our youth, the youngest and the least experienced, are those most hard hit. Those are the people who have been most severely impacted by these changes – right? – the policy changes made by the previous government: 21.5 per cent in the first quarter of this year, 1 in 5 students and young people under the age of 18, are unemployed. This doesn't even count the number of people who actually left the workforce, Madam Chair. They left the workforce because they couldn't find a job, so they can't earn money for school. They can't earn money to buy a car. They can't earn money to help and support their families because they don't have a job.

We need to make a change, and this is what the research showed. We actually made this change, again, outside of Bill 2, the youth job-creation minimum wage. We also are making changes to part of Bill 2 to return to the old rules in terms of the general holiday rules so that we can help our youth in particular get their first job, get on the job ladder, and move forward.

I'd like to point out, Madam Chair, that this is just a minimum. A minimum is just that, a minimum. It's not a maximum. Some employers choose to actually pay more than that, which is fantastic – right? – because they hire someone at a lower wage, they get experience, they actually get wage increases, and they move them up the job ladder, and they get the experience. They build their skill set, and this sets them up for life, and by getting on the job ladder, they can actually get wages. This is how business works, and clearly it appears that the members opposite just don't understand this, and they just don't get that.

4:00

I'd like to turn my comments now to talk about banked overtime. You know, we've said on this side of the House that the changes to banked overtime, first of all, are not about pay. If an individual wants to get paid time and a half, which is the minimum according to employment standards, they may do so. Other employers pay more. Collective agreements pay more. That doesn't impact that at all. If they want to get paid time and a half, they can be paid time and a half. This refers to banked overtime. So when the members opposite say that they are going to lose pay because of that, that is simply misleading. It is incorrect. They're not going to lose pay because of this.

Now, what this is about is about providing the opportunity and the flexibility for employees and employers to reach agreements to their mutual benefit. You know, we've said before that we've heard from employers and employees in developing this as part of Bill 2, our open for business act, which was in our platform, Madam Chair.

We ran on this, and Albertans expect us to deliver on this. This is in our platform. What we heard from both employers and employees is that because of the policy change by the previous government, there was a loss of opportunity.

I want to read to you a very short letter that was sent to the government because this encapsulates what employers and employees are saying. This is from a small-business cabinetmaker, and it was sent to the Premier. I quote: "Dear Premier, thank you very much for repealing the NDP's disastrous labour laws. The banked overtime at time and a half rule greatly hurt our company and our employees. In our business labour counts for 65 per cent of the price of the product. Overtime is just not possible because no customer will pay 30 per cent more for their cabinets. In such a competitive market that rule forced us to turn away business during busy times and cut our employees' hours during slow times. What a disaster for Alberta business and Alberta families. Now we can go back to making hay when the sun shines and get on with business."

It goes on to say: "Today your policy created new jobs. You gave me faith to hire. A few minutes ago I advertised four new jobs on the Canada job site. It is because of you. It's just four jobs for now, but I'm sure that those four people will be very grateful, just as I am."

Madam Chair, this bill is about us being open for business. It's about this cabinetmaker, who has faith and the ability not only to provide flexibility with other employees and hire new employees and actually go after more businesses, something that's good for the employee and the employer, but it's about the restaurant owner, retail owners to be able to say: I can now actually hire people at a lower wage and get them on the job ladder.

Again, last week I had a restaurant owner come in, who actually came from out of Canada, an immigrant. He came to Canada about four years ago, a small-business person. He invested – it was a franchise in this case – in three franchises. He indicated to me that with the policy changes made by the previous government, he no longer could actually hire anyone without experience and had no one working for him under 18 in three of his restaurants. He indicated to me that now with the change – and one other thing. I'll just back up. Because of that, he actually laid off people, and it was the younger people. But now with the change he can actually hire younger people to work in their first job as hosts and hostesses or in the kitchen, washing, just getting experience, and then moving them up the ladder – right? – because of this change.

Getting back to the change and the name being suggested by the members opposite, I simply, from my perspective, cannot agree. This bill is about creating opportunities for Albertans, this bill is about getting our young people in particular but all Albertans working, and this bill is about signalling to the community that Alberta is open for business. We need to drive investment here, create jobs. Madam Chair, that is what we ran on, that is what we promised in our platform commitment, and that is what I'm focused on delivering.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to this amendment, which is essentially asking to name this bill exactly what it does. It changes employment standards, it changes provisions in employment standards and labour relations, and it actually picks the pockets of working Albertans.

I do understand that the UCP ran a campaign on creating jobs, the economy, and pipelines, but they have not done a single thing to create jobs ever since they became the government. Instead, under their watch we have lost more jobs. I'm talking about

Calgary. When we were in government, we were told that taxes were somehow killing jobs; the carbon levy was killing jobs. What they did: they got rid of the carbon levy; they gave the biggest tax break in the history of this province to the richest few and their shareholders. But what we are seeing in Calgary in the same sector is that Repsol was laying off 30 per cent of their workers from the Calgary office and Alberta field offices. Nexen was laying off workers.

Naming an act that it's open for business, that it's doing something for business doesn't create jobs. It's a deception that this act has anything to do with business. All it does is that it attacks workers' rights, it attacks their overtime pay, it cuts the pay for youth workers, it picks the pockets of young Albertans, and it doesn't create any more jobs. Being a student of economics, I can say that I haven't read any economic theory which says that cutting somebody's wages somehow magically creates more jobs.

The minister is saying that we have 21 per cent youth unemployment. Sure, we do have youth unemployment, but for those who are employed, cutting $2 per hour from their wages doesn't create any more jobs. It won't change this number by any means. They are saying that by cutting overtime, they're opening up flexibility for workers and employers to negotiate. There is a huge power differential when you're working on minimum wage. I have personally worked on minimum wage pretty much until 2012. Before I got the law degree, I was working on minimum wage. I do understand how much flexibility you have to negotiate with your employer when you're working minimum wage, that this will be the overtime, this will be the holiday. You don't have that kind of flexibility when you're working on minimum wage.

That was the reason that this change was made under our watch, so that all Albertans who are working full-time are able to put food, and they're able to provide for their shelter. You're taking away food, taking away shelter from those who are working on minimum wages. It will not create jobs. Rather, it will push those Albertans into poverty, push those Albertans into conditions they shouldn't be living in.

The reason I am saying this is that, one, I have worked minimum wage, and also I represent a constituency which is among the constituencies that has the lowest median income. For instance, Saddle Ridge, the neighbourhood, has a population of 20,000 people, and the median income for those 15 years and older is $30,000 as compared to the $43,251 average for Calgary. And 30 per cent of the people in that neighbourhood are paying more than 30 per cent of their income on just shelter. That's why this bill is important for my constituents. Taradale: another neighbourhood with a population of almost 20,000. Their median income for the population 15 years and older is $28,000 as compared to the average of $43,251 for Calgary. Again, 31 per cent of the people living in Taradale are paying more than 30 per cent of their income just on shelter needs. Martindale, another neighbourhood, has an almost 15,000-plus population. The median income of the population 15 years and older is $29,000 compared to the $43,251 Calgary average.

4:10

These are neighbourhoods, these are my constituents, who oftentimes find themselves working more than one job and often in jobs that are minimum wage paying jobs. These things, these minimum wages, this overtime pay: those things matter to my constituents, and this bill is attacking the livelihood of the people who are living in these neighbourhoods. Those neighbourhood profiles are not any different from any other neighbourhood in the northeast.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

For instance, the Calgary-North East neighbourhoods will be in the same position. The Calgary-Falconridge neighbourhoods will be in the same position. In no way, shape, or manner is this piece of legislation helping those in my riding, in my communities. No wonder the UCP's policies were rejected, your mandate was rejected in Calgary-McCall. That was the reason, because the changes you have made so far, cutting corporate taxes, in no way, shape, or manner helps us in these communities. It's benefiting some corporation, their multinational corporation and their shareholders, who may not be in Calgary altogether. They may be investors, but this is not helping create any jobs.

Instead, for those who are working, you're reducing their employment income by $2 per hour and want us to believe that somehow there is some economic right-wing theory out there that suggests that that will create more jobs. I can tell you with absolute certainty – I have a master's in economics – that I didn't learn about any of that kind of economic theory that suggests that cutting wages somehow creates more employment. Cutting wages may improve the bottom line for businesses, but it doesn't create employment because businesses will only employ as much labour as they need. They will not create more jobs just because the wages are low. There is no such theory.

All these policies, all these ideological policies follow supply-side, trickle-down economics, which we have seen failing in the '80s, which we have seen failing in the '90s, which we have seen failing in the States, which we have seen failing in Britain, which we have seen failing in Canada under previous Conservative governments as well. Cutting taxes doesn't create jobs. Cutting taxes doesn't magically add investment to the economy.

What our economy is facing here is takeaway capacity, on which you haven't done anything. Instead, we entered into oil-by-rail contracts. You're cancelling that. That would have created, starting next week, almost 120,000 capacity. It would have created more opportunities for people to get employed, would have created more opportunities for businesses, but here we just listen to a narrative that somehow everything the UCP is doing is creating jobs, is helping businesses.

The Member for Calgary-Hays, his talking points are almost as old – I think I heard them when I came into this Legislature for the first time, that somehow the NDP is against businesses, they hurt profits, and the UCP and previous Conservative governments have a copyright on businesses. That's not the case. Similarly, the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore will say that we hate the oil sands, we are against pipelines, all those things. That's not true.

We also come from business families. My family has a small business. We have been employed by these businesses. We have worked in industry. We do come from a diverse range of expertise. We do know how economies are run. We do know how businesses are run. What the UCP is doing: I can tell you with absolute certainty that that's not how businesses are run. That's not how economies are run. That's how you can pick winners and losers. Yes, you can pick a side and try to benefit them left, right, and centre at the expense of working Albertans, everyday Albertans. You can give a $4.5 billion tax break and not tell school boards across this province when they will get funding.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

My school board, the Calgary school board, my own trustee from my ward: she appeared in a CBC interview yesterday complaining about that uncertainty. They are a school who is still waiting to hear from this government whether they will get funding.

At the same time, you will get up here and tell us that we don't know how businesses are run, that you will give $4.5 billion in tax breaks and not commit to funding the school nutrition program that was feeding 30,000 kids, 30,000 young Albertans who cannot afford to go to school and have food. Their parents have to make a choice between sending them to school, providing for their needs, and feeding them. That was the program our government was funding. So, yes, we do have different priorities. A fair society, a balanced society, a balanced economy is one that watches out for everyone.

We have heard this ideological, trickle-down economic rhetoric during your campaign and during the debate here, but nothing much has changed since April 16. Albertans are still looking for work. They are still looking for this government – actually, I should say that a lot has been changed. There is a lot more uncertainty now. School boards are not sure whether they will get funding, cities are not sure whether they will get anything on MSI, and health authorities are not sure whether they will get funding. We are seeing projects like the Edmonton lab project getting cancelled just because they have to pay for the $4.5 billion tax break.

In short, what I want to say is that this piece of legislation has nothing to do with business. It's not opening anything for business. All it is doing is attacking workers and their rights, that workers across this country enjoy in every other jurisdiction. It is changing the employment standards and labour relations changes that we made from 2015 onwards.

Every time the other side gets up, what we hear is that somehow they can blame everything on the four years that we were in government. This province, except for those four years from '15 to '19, always had Conservative governments. No reasonable Canadian, no reasonable Albertan will buy that only because of these four years Alberta is somehow facing some kinds of challenges.

There were previous Conservative governments for 43 years. They didn't do much to diversify the economy. I think the only economic policy they had was: let's get together and pray every morning that the oil price goes up to $100 and it never comes down. That was the only economic policy they were following, and that policy failed every time we witnessed fluctuations in oil prices.

That's exactly what happened in 2015. Oil prices hit bottom. They were down to $27 a barrel, and the choice was whether to cut services, cut education, cut health care or to provide for those things that Albertans rely on and need in times when they are struggling. We chose to fund education, to fund health care. I've said that before, will say it again, that from 2008 to 2013 not a single school was built in Calgary, not one school.

The Chair: Hon. member, we are on amendment A2. Just a friendly reminder.

Mr. Sabir: I'm bringing it back to the amendment.

The Chair: I knew you were. Just wanted to make sure that we were on the same page.

Mr. Sabir: Just to finish that off, not a single school was built between 2008 and '13. We invested in 244 schools.

But here what we are seeing is that instead of doing anything to attract businesses to Alberta, they're just naming their act An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. Alberta was never closed for business. What you are doing here: the changes Alberta made between 2015 and 2019 you're reversing. Those changes are contained in two pieces of legislation, the employment standards and labour relations, so we should name this legislation appropriately and say that this act is amending those two pieces of legislation and taking away workers' rights that were provided in the last four years.

That's why this amendment is important, and I fully support and I urge all members of this House to support this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

4:20

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to address this House, through you, in support of Bill 2 and against this amendment. I would like to bring a blue-collar perspective on the matter of banked overtime. There's been a lot of theoretical debate on this issue, but I spent most of the last 25 years working in the nonsalaried and seasonal field of construction, which is similar to other seasonal jobs like many of the trades, road building, and similar to oil and gas workers, amongst many others. By bringing my practical perspective to this House, I hope that I can enlighten why this bill is so crucial for our economic future.

It is important to state at the beginning that this bill does not override any workers with contractual agreements. When I worked as an hourly paid employee, when I didn't work, I didn't get paid, making bad weather, appointments, sick children, and discretionary time off a challenge to the personal budget as well as the schedule. In this realm, nearly every job is procured in a realm of fixed costs: low bid, cost-plus, project management, negotiated bid, all with preset rates of pay. We used to love being able to work overtime when we could and get regular pay to cover those days off.

When the previous government changed the overtime payout to time and a half in an effort to help us, they actually hurt us. Why, Madam Chair? Because our bosses didn't have the flexibility to let us work extra time now for regular time off later. Overtime disappeared. It just didn't happen anymore. You can imagine the amount of stress this placed on the shoulders of Albertans who relied on overtime to make sure work-life balance was still a part of their lives. Having no opportunity or flexibility to take overtime meant missed appointments, missed holidays, missed family events, and so many of the small things that make getting up and working those long hours a little bit easier.

Where overtime didn't disappear, costs went way up, 50 per cent higher in many cases, and jobs were lost. Owners weren't happy because jobs took longer and cost more. Employers weren't happy because bidding became much harder, trying to predict how much overtime may or may not be required. Employees weren't happy because overtime hours disappeared. You can see here how the question of overtime becomes a lot more complex and the equation becomes less simple than time and a half meaning greater benefit to those who banked overtime. When you consider the implications of what this means, from the perspective of a job creator to the perspective of an employee, you start to understand why Albertans have supported the Bill 2 mandate.

Flexibility to work a few extra hours on Monday or Tuesday in order to take off early on a Friday or for a vacation or a doctor's appointment now just means time off without pay. We understood the concept of fair trade and that the favour done for the company today meant a favour given to us tomorrow. The changes proposed in Bill 2 directly respond to what workers who utilize overtime to balance the demands of work and home life have been asking for. By giving employees the ability to bank overtime hours in a way that suits their needs, we are empowering both employees and employers to come to agreements that consider both of their priorities.

But empowerment granted to workers and employees doesn't stop there, Madam Chair. Bill 2 is crucial to getting Alberta's economy back on track. That's why the barriers set on job creators that limited our economic growth in the past are being undone by this bill. This bill will truly ensure that Albertans get back to work and that we ensure that Alberta remains open for business. Blue-collar workers across the province have built our industries by hand. From our skilled trade sector to our agricultural sector to our small businesses and the coming dreams of future entrepreneurs, there has never been a more crucial time to implement changes that will bring back the competitive edge to our economy, that once made our province a beacon for a brighter future anyone could access.

I know what this economic edge means first-hand, and so do my constituents. I have worked and succeeded in industries that have benefited from the Alberta advantage. My past experiences, including the stories of my friends, my neighbours, and previous co-workers, are a crucial part of why I'm standing in this House today and supporting the changes presented in this bill. We have all lived and experienced changes to legislation that have fundamentally affected our occupations and our ways of life. I know this legislation will change it for the better. That is why I support this bill and the name of this bill. I support blue-collar workers in construction and the trades and those working hard in my constituency. This bill's name represents them, what they want, and common sense. It gives them freedom.

I call upon my fellow members of this House to support this bill and support our efforts to grant workers the kinds of freedoms and opportunities of self-empowerment that they so clearly asked for. Thank you.

Madam Chair, I would like to rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. Carried.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 11 Fair Registration Practices Act

[Debate adjourned June 25: Mr. Bilous speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Pleasure to have the opportunity to rise today to speak to Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act. I think it's fair to say that it's become clear that I disagree with this government on a number of issues. Certainly, we've had some robust discussion on a number of pieces of debate, and certainly we have had some different views of the facts, shall we say. Certainly, there are many portions of the UCP election platform that I was not shy to criticize, both during the election and since, but what I can say is that on this particular bill I think indeed we have some common ground.

Over the last four years I had the opportunity to spend a lot of time talking with folks who have gone through the immigration process and have come here as newcomers to Canada, whether that was some of the individuals who came here with the group of Syrian refugees in early 2016 or people from a wide breadth of the African and Caribbean communities here in the city of Edmonton. Indeed, in talking with many of them, you know, many, many of them come to Canada with great expertise, knowledge, skills that they worked hard to earn in their home countries. But what I heard from many of them is that they face real and significant challenges in being able to find work in their field, those opportunities, when they arrive in Canada.

Now, the barriers they face can be many, Madam Speaker. Of course, a lot of them face, first of all, the challenges of language. For those who do not come from a country where English or French is a prominent language, they have the challenge of having to first learn English. It's unfortunate. Many times they are not treated with full respect and acknowledgement of the intelligence that they possess, the knowledge, the skill set because they do not yet have the ability to communicate it. That's the first challenge they face. They have to find time, then resources to be able to learn English while getting settled here in Canada.

4:30

Secondly, it can be a very challenging thing for them to learn how to navigate our systems. Of course, in many cases they're having to first of all learn how to navigate our culture, which itself can be enough of a shock. But on top of learning how our culture works and what the expectations are and then having to learn the language, they are then, thirdly, having to learn how to navigate our bureaucratic systems. Now, Madam Speaker, of course, as you are part of a government caucus that appointed an associate minister of red tape, I think you're well aware that not all government systems are clear and efficient. So they struggle with some of those things on that side.

Certainly, our government took some steps to try to clear that up, making it easier for some to access a driver's licence, to be able to get through some of the systems, clearing up some of the processes so that there were fewer obstacles in their path.

But the other challenge lies, as I'm sure you're aware, Madam Speaker, for those who have a professional designation that they wish to begin to make use of here in Canada, in that they then encounter a whole other bureaucratic system to get licensed, registered, and be able to practise. Now, it's understandable that we have a system to vet individuals that want to work in these professions because we recognize, of course, that within these professions there are great amounts of responsibility. If someone wishes to work in a medical field, they are taking on, well, frankly, the care and support of an individual's life. It's incredibly important that we be sure that the qualifications they possess, the training that they have, the experience they've gained are going to translate and that they fully understand what differences there might be between practices in their home country and how things are practised and what the expectations are here.

The same goes for law, engineering, any of these fields in which an individual might have a professional designation, indeed even something as basic as accounting, though I imagine the Member for Red Deer-South would probably contest suggesting that accounting was somehow less of a complex field than law or another field. Accounting itself also has incredibly important implications. There are a lot that can make a big difference to somebody's business, some of these things, so it makes sense that we would also want to make sure somebody coming here properly understood Canadian laws, businesses, et cetera, what the expectations and rules were, indeed, Canadian tax law, et cetera.

We recognize, however, that in some cases individuals are experiencing extensive delays, and they're having a difficult time trying to figure out how to navigate the process of working with these different independent bodies, which are rightfully set up to help safeguard the professional standards of their particular occupations. What I heard from individuals was that, yeah, in many cases they felt that they were not being given the chance to move forward at all, that they found it difficult to navigate the process, that they found it difficult to get information to understand what the next steps and expectations were, and that processes were extended for quite some time.

Our government looked to take some action on this as well. A lot of this discussion came up during the time that the then Minister of Education, now the Member for Edmonton-North West, spent many weeks going across the province speaking with individuals from multiple cultural communities as part of our consultation on how the government could help support Albertans in pushing back against racism and discrimination. Now, that is not to suggest, Madam Speaker, that professional bodies, in their work to vet candidates in the profession and to help them gain their qualifications, are engaging in discrimination. But it is something that came up in that conversation as one of many barriers that individuals who came here to Canada from other countries faced in trying to get ahead and establish themselves here.

We heard from many that they had difficulties working through this process, so our government created a fund and put some investment into that to start looking at if we could create some tools that would help these particular professional organizations be able to do a better job of vetting candidates and assess not only their actual academic qualifications and certifications but also their experience and real-world skill set gained in their time in their area of employment.

Of course, we had the election that came, so we had the change in government. I applaud this government for stepping forward with their own solution to this problem. We have here Bill 11, which is going to put in some clearer standards for professional organizations in the province – that will help provide clearer expectations for individuals that are working through those processes – creating a fair registration practices office, removing any unfair barriers to licensure, improving procedural fairness of how licences are processed, requiring that they provide an interim assessment decision within six months, having the regulatory bodies provide reports on their registration practices as requested, and allowing the minister to perform audits and issue compliance orders if necessary.

I think those are good first steps, Madam Speaker. I think those are reasonable. We are adding, I guess, some additional oversight, what some might call red tape, but frankly I'm not averse to creating such processes when it is appropriate and necessary. That is the very reason we have regulation. We recognize that there are systems that are not working or may not be working to their ideal level, so we introduce things into those systems to help steer them into a better path.

Within Bill 11 it also, then, requires that regulatory bodies assess applications and communicate their decisions within a very specific time frame. That's six months initially, which provides, I think, a good deal more certainty for individuals when they're first coming to Canada. They know that: "Okay. I've put in my paperwork. I've filled out all the applications. I've done all the things I needed to do. I will have an answer within six months. That will at least give me an indication of whether I indeed will have the opportunity to move forward in my field or not."

By requiring the organizations to provide reports to the minister, we have the opportunity then for government to better understand how these processes are working. Again, these are independent bodies, and I think for those of us in government – although we have constituents that come to us to express their concerns about what they're experiencing in the process, I have to admit, Madam Speaker, I don't personally know all of the steps that one must go through, if you're coming from another country, to be certified as an engineer or an accountant or a medical doctor in the province of Alberta. Having the opportunity for them to submit regular reports as directed by the minister, to provide more information about the process, the steps they are taking to ensure that they are all doing their due diligence: I think that is a reasonable and good step forward.

We will have the fair registration practices office. I think that's a good thing to have. They are going to work directly with the licensing bodies to see how we can streamline, simplify, and accelerate foreign credential recognition. I think that's a good step. You know, I recognize that this government has taken a similar step in other cases. They're doing a full review of Alberta Health Services to similarly look for efficiencies. I think that's reasonable. I look forward to seeing that report. In a similar way it makes sense here, I think, that we have some folks dedicated in government who will be able to sit down and work with the trade and professional licensing bodies to take a look at the processes that are in place, to talk through it and discuss it with them, to have it a bit of an arm's length from the political process.

Again, Madam Speaker, as much as I have constituents who've come to me to express concerns about how they were treated in a particular hospital or decisions that were made by a particular physician, as an MLA I don't feel that it's appropriate for me, from a political lens, to go in and question the judgment of a medical professional. In the same way, however, we do have within Alberta Health Services, within the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta avenues by which they can do that. Folks who also have medical expertise can sit down and have that discussion. We have those avenues within government and government agencies. Similarly, within the fair registration practices offices we will have folks who have the knowledge and the skill set, who are not politically motivated, who can sit down and work with these licensing bodies to make sure that they are providing the best opportunity for folks who have the skills, who have the knowledge, who could be making great contributions to our economy and to our communities to have the opportunity to do so as quickly as possible.

4:40

Part of the work also will be publicly identifying and holding accountable regulatory bodies that have unreasonable barriers to credential recognition. This is again, I think, a reasonable thing. If we are going to hold organizations to a particular standard, it makes sense that we would have folks in place to measure if they're meeting that standard and, if they are not, to have some means to hold them to account. However, I am interested to find out a bit more detail about this to get a better understanding of the suggestions of what penalties there might be or what approaches might be taken.

Again, Madam Speaker, while I certainly recognize that this is a problem that needs to be addressed, we want to be careful in how we approach things with these licensing and regulatory bodies. We want to do this in a spirit of co-operation and collaboration. We don't want to, I think, come out of the gate with an antagonistic stance. Let's save that for the pipeline war room.

I would say that what we want is to first of all be able to sit down at the table and have some good, fruitful discussion for the fair registration practices office, to be able to have those discussions, better understand the systems in place, talk about what changes can be made, look at how these organizations can best implement this initial requirement for an interim decision within six months, and from there be able to look at how we work with organizations that we may feel are not being as flexible.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I was very interested in what the Member for Edmonton-City Centre was speaking about. The last point he was making was talking about holding to account those regulatory bodies and colleges and other organizations that somehow do not meet up to the expectations that are identified in this bill, the Fair Registration Practices Act. I was just wondering what approaches he thought should be taken to ensure that there is fruitful discussion and that changes happen for the benefit of the person with the foreign qualifications that is being judged by these colleges and organizations but is not making their way through to licensure. I wonder if he could talk more about that and what the outcome might be if that organization or college doesn't address this in a fashion that's conclusive and helpful to the person who is trying to get their foreign qualifications study.

Thank you.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for that question. As I was saying, I think it's very important that we approach this in a spirit of collaboration with these organizations but, indeed, that we find ways to find them accountable. I myself am looking forward to sitting down and having some discussions. I have reached out, in my role as the opposition Health critic, to the College of Physicians & Surgeons, the College of Licensed Practical Nurses of Alberta, and some others in the medical field to have the opportunity to get their thoughts on how this legislation may affect them and get their thoughts on sort of how they see these systems working in their particular fields and what kinds of steps we might be able to take in conjunction with government to streamline the process for individuals coming from outside of Canada to work in those fields.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo was asking sort of, I guess, my thoughts on what might be appropriate steps to take. Certainly, I have read that there is the opportunity for monetary fines. I think that's a reasonable step to have in place. We see that being an effective measure in everything from parking to condominium associations and all the way up the chain. I think that's a reasonable tool to have in the tool box here.

I think that we would not want to move immediately to monetary fines. I think it would be reasonable to have the opportunity, as we do, say, within health and safety and other areas, for them to be issued a warning, for them to be issued a reprimand, for other steps to be taken first. Certainly, if an organization is found to be continually failing to support new Albertans and new Canadians in fairly gaining access to the opportunity to work in a particular field, a monetary fine of an amount significant enough that it would get their attention would be a reasonable step.

Now, I have heard that within the discussion of bringing in the legislation, there was mention of removing the ability of a regulatory body to continue to function in that purpose. That seems challenging, Madam Speaker. I'd be interested to hear a bit more of the thought process with that. I can't see how we could remove the ability of the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta to licence physicians and surgeons because we do not have a backup, and that is the case with most of these organizations. I recognize that would probably be considered a fairly extreme step, but I'm not even sure it's a step that would be capable of being carried out.

I'm looking forward to having the opportunity to learn a bit more about this bill and have some more discussion in that regard. But, ultimately, to return to where I began, Madam Speaker, this bill, I think, is an excellent opportunity for us to have some bipartisan goodwill in this House. There are some very good things in this piece of legislation. I one hundred per cent support the goals that the government has in bringing this forward. I applaud them for doing so. I think this is an important discussion to highlight. It also gives us the chance within the province to have greater recognition of the value that newcomers bring to our province at a time when, unfortunately, we are hearing many voices of prejudice.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House to speak in favour of this bill. This bill is really providing some hope to, I will say, the issues that are very real and very close to my personal experience and the issues of our communities.

Madam Speaker, speaking to this bill, I really wanted to share some of the stories that I have heard from the people I have had, you know, the privilege to meet and listen to their first-hand experience on issues related to this. When I first moved to Canada in 1993, I had a chance to meet a person. Actually, the person really actually attracted me to and provided a platform to engage in active politics in Alberta. The man happened to be one of the candidates. He was contesting for Mill Woods for MLA.

This gentleman moved to Canada in 1968. He would share his stories, like how he has worked hard in, you know, forestry in B.C., then he was working on the farms here in Alberta. He was working for an employer in his nursery somewhere in Edmonton. It was all of a sudden that the conversation broke and the employer really actually wanted to know about him and asked about his background. The member explained that he has, you know, a master's in English. He is a postgraduate. And the employer was stunned to learn that the person who was working in his nursery was a highly, highly educated person and how this was a missed opportunity that he never got to use his education, experience, and skills; not only a lost opportunity for him, but also a lost opportunity for us here in Canada, Alberta, and in Edmonton. Not only that, but the employer was so impressed and touched by his story that I think he was able to arrange the media and break this story in the media.

4:50

I remember another incident, sitting at the family socials, where a friend of ours, you know, reiterated a reference to one of his friends, that we already knew: "You know this friend. He has a PhD in this." And we were surprised. We knew him for a long time but never knew his educational background. "Oh, you have a PhD?" And he replied: "Oh, yeah. A kind of PhD." We were surprised, you know? What did he really mean by "kind of PhD"? He said, "I'm always saying, 'kind of PhD,' because this is a PhD I had, but with the time I spent and worked on that PhD, it never really worked for me."

That is the kind of experience that I really wanted to share. The reason we wanted to support this bill is in the hope that the bill provides some solution to these people going forward.

I also wanted to share stories as I had the opportunity to work in the taxi industry for a year or so where I was privileged to, you know, form the association for the taxi industry where we could just come together, share stories, and address some of the issues and challenges we were facing. I was surprised to see that the people around had degrees, they were graduates of world-class, recognized universities, but they never happened to get a chance to show their real talent and find jobs in their field because of red tape in this area.

I recently was talking to a fellow born and raised in Malaysia. He's a young fellow in his late 20s. He's a cardiologist. I was offering, if he's willing to come to Canada, if he wanted to see if this would be a good place for him. You know, he blatantly declined. "No, no, no. Not Canada. I don't even consider thinking about Canada." He said: "I have no plan to spend five, six more years in university. I have already spent enough time of my life learning, so I will not be spending another six years there. I would rather think of something else. I would rather think about the U.S.A., not Canada."

These are the kinds of challenges – I just wanted to share stories – that the ethnic communities are facing when they come from their own countries with the experience and the education that they have. They not only can choose the place where they can make their life better, but they can also probably contribute with their talent and experience to make this society better for all. By supporting this bill, this is one thing that I can go back to my constituents with and I can give them some hope that, going forward, our next generation or generations to come might not go through the same experience.

I wanted to refer to some of the stories. I know a friend of mine, my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, shared some of the, you know, problems he sees in this – I don't know – the potential problems, and how they can be hurdles to achieve the goal we are setting in this bill. But I really wanted to share the stories I heard from the people, our seniors. They migrated to Canada in the '60s. They will tell stories, you know: "When we came, we were prepared for whatever job we would get. We knew that our degrees would not probably be recognized, that we would not probably be able to find jobs in the field that we were qualified to do."

That was the time that Alberta was going through the crisis, and they were, you know, anxiously looking for the professionals who could help them in the education system. They were looking for teachers, and they were looking for professionals. That message resonated, and the people from back home with degrees in education, like a B.Ed., moved here. They were able to help our education system in the rural areas, the rural communities. They tell stories that this is not the case anymore.

Madam Speaker, I'm so humbled and honoured and feeling privileged to support this common-sense legislation that will help the skilled newcomers to find jobs in their fields. It's not only help for them; it is help for us. We can take advantage. We can use their real assets. They can use their talent to contribute to this society, contribute to this society to make it better. The diversity in the province is our strength. Ensuring that newcomers have fair access to support for credentials will strengthen our workforce.

While we are pleased to see this government is taking this action on this important issue, this work is not new. We also, you know, really wanted to bring to attention that successive Alberta governments have worked on this, and we need to get full progress in this area. It is something very, very little that we can dwell on.

My riding of Edmonton-Meadows is one of the most diverse ridings in Alberta communities. You know, even I went through this issue. Getting credentials evaluated is huge. By supporting this bill, I'm so proud. I'm feeling so proud that I had the opportunity to give my input on behalf of not only constituents but the fellow Albertans who actually were not able to use their talents and their education due to lack of, I would say, programming or law or regulation.

5:00

I will be brief on this in my closing remarks. Once again, I wanted to say this: we have lots of hope from this bill, and I will expect that we will see some outcomes, contrary to, as I mentioned, successive governments. They have touched this issue, but we did not see much help from this in the past. Many times we have seen these issues debated in the elections and similar steps proposed, but the people in our communities did not really see something moving forward. Today by supporting this bill, I have lots of hope. So when I go back to my riding and I talk to my constituents, I will say that the government is serious, this House is serious.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: There's a storm brewing outside.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Any comments or questions?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 11, Fair Registration Practices Act. I want to say at the outset that I will be speaking in principle in favour of this legislation. It's an important issue. It's personally important to me. It's important to many living in my riding and across Alberta, in particular those who chose to make Canada home. When they come with qualifications from other countries, it's a challenge to get them recognized here. That's the reason that I will be speaking in favour of it.

Personally, I can say that I came with a master's degree in economics and I've been through this process. I can say it's a difficult process; it's a long process. There is no streamlined kind of procedure or one office where you can go to, in fact, to just get the evaluation done. Oftentimes different institutions have different requirements, so there is no such overarching kind of evaluation body whose evaluation will be acceptable throughout Alberta, throughout Canada. That is one issue that I faced, and I'm sure that there are many Albertans here who will share these stories, how recognition of their qualification is a hurdle, is a barrier for them starting a new life here in Alberta, here in Canada.

I can also say that education comes with a lot of benefits. It improves your personal lives, increases your earning potential, increases your economic well-being and stability, and helps us create more fair and prosperous societies. If we want this province to be a place which offers opportunity for everyone, that's one issue that we must address by removing those barriers, removing these hurdles that newcomers face in terms of getting their credentials recognized, that essentially hinders their full participation in the economy, in society, and that hinders them from realizing their full potential. That should be and that is unacceptable in a fair and just society.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

I have heard many times before that the credentials that many newcomers rely upon to immigrate to Canada were good enough to get them that immigration, but once they land in Canada, once they get to any province, then those credentials are no longer valid. Those credentials no longer are helpful in landing them the job in their profession or the job appropriate to their training. This is not a new issue, and I'm sure the Premier, who once was the minister of immigration, must have heard about this issue before. But in our communities, newcomer communities, that's not something that he's known for. He certainly had the opportunity to make a difference, but, no, that's not something that he is known for in our communities. Rather, from his time in federal government and immigration, in my communities, in our communities people may know him from niqab citizenship ceremonies. They may remember him for cuts to refugees and newcomers' health benefits, and they may remember him for bungling the temporary foreign worker file. They may remember him from the barbaric cultural practices hotline and things like that. But I think that's not the topic today.

We are talking about the recognition of these credentials, and it's certainly a good initiative. As I said, I will be supporting it, but I will also outline some of my concerns that I have with respect to this piece of legislation.

As I mentioned, that's not a brand new initiative. Many previous governments, federal and provincial, have worked on it. It still remains an issue, and the hope is that this time around we will be able to make some progress. Back when we were in government in 2017, the Premier committed to taking action against racism after six Muslims were killed in a Quebec City mosque. There were extensive consultations led by my colleague, then Minister of Education, the Edmonton-North West MLA. He met over a hundred groups. I was part of those consultations in Calgary, in Edmonton, in Red Deer, in Lethbridge, and also in Fort Mac. I personally was part of those consultations.

Out of those consultations we heard many things. There were almost eight or nine key recommendations. Two of them were implemented right away, one creating an antiracism advisory council and then creating an antiracism grant program. Those two initiatives were implemented right after the release of the report.

5:10

There were other things that were brought forward by the groups that we consulted. One of those things was foreign worker credentials and qualifications, career mentorship programs, and there were other things as well. I think I should mention a few others: provincial hate crime unit, funding the Alberta Hate Crimes Committee, updating the provincial curriculum, and expanding a number of languages in our school system. With respect to foreign qualification recognition we established a foreign qualification recognition fund as well, and we were in the process of engaging further with the communities across this province.

As has been outlined in the legislation, there are a number of bodies that have been included in this one. As I said, it's a complex issue. It's not the first time that some government is trying to resolve it, but we didn't see any consultation with respect to this with these organizations and bodies that are listed in schedule 1. It's a long list of bodies, and as much as I want these credentials to be recognized, I'm mindful that we need to make sure that we are getting it right and we are doing it in a way that ensures that those credentials are equal to what the standards are here in Canada, that those credentials are equal to what standards have been set by these self-governing professions in order to serve the best interests of Albertans, in order to maintain the high standards of professionalism in different professions across our province. That's certainly very important.

In order to get that right, I think we need to work with these bodies across our province, these self-governing organizations, as well as those communities, those individuals who are in the process of getting these credentials recognized. There are many organizations. For instance, just in my own riding there are two or three organizations that I can name. MDI is an organization of doctors who are foreign trained, and it's basically a support group trying to help each other, members, newcomers, to get their test and get their credentials recognized. Similarly, there is another organization, the Association of Physicians of Pakistani Descent of North America, APPNA. Last week I went to the inauguration of their Alberta chapter. Essentially, that organization is, among other things, providing support to foreign-qualified doctors to get their credentials recognized. Similarly, there is ABEC, an organization of foreign-qualified engineers who are, among other things, helping newcomers to get their credentials recognized.

Those organizations, I think, will be in a position to help this government understand the viewpoints of those who are going through this process, to understand what issues and challenges they are facing, what their concerns are. Certainly, my hope is that at some point this government will consult these organizations. When we look at the legislation, it provides for an initial decision, an interim decision within six months, and after that every decision is, I guess, subject to a reasonable time. There is no clarity. There is no certainty to what reasonable time would mean. Certainly, in every case that would mean something different. Getting a medical credential recognized may be different than getting a credential in economics recognized because it's not a self-governing profession.

So there are a lot of details that are still not there. I understand that that will take some time, but there is no process outlined, as such, as to when we will see those things in place. A lot of the work has been left to regulations, but again my hope is that before drafting these regulations, the government will take the time to reach out to those individuals, reach out to these bodies like MDI, APPNA, ABEC to get the input, get the feedback about their concerns, about their issues.

There are other things that also need to be looked at that at this time are not in this draft legislation, and I'm hoping that some of those things may make it to regulations. One thing is about the evaluation body. Like, there is, for instance, IQAS, I think, an organization that provides evaluation services. But I think what we need to do, from my practical experience, from my conversations with many newcomers who are in the process of getting their credentials recognized, is that there needs to be an evaluating body whose evaluation is acceptable throughout the province, preferably throughout Canada, so that you don't have to get a new evaluation every time you apply for something. Some universities, some postsecondaries have their own evaluation system.

Again, there needs to be conversations with postsecondaries, with institutions, with these colleges, with professional bodies, with those individuals, with evaluating bodies to have that . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments, a five-minute question and comment period. I see the hon. Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women standing.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to this bill. It's been really nice to hear some of the responses coming from our colleagues in this place to help bring forward this legislation. There are a few things I just wanted to bring up. First of all, and maybe this has just been my luck and the way that things go, having had this portfolio even just for a short period of time, just over two months now, with the multiculturalism piece and with culture, the outreach into the community has been immensely – for lack of a better word, I'm overjoyed with the amount of time and energy that you get to spend with so many wonderful people and new Canadians especially.

Without a doubt, almost everywhere I go, every single time, every group that I'm with, somebody comes up to me and mentions to me that the Premier was the one who brought them into the country, that he was part of that when he had immigration, that he was the one who actually signed the papers that brought them into the country. Everywhere I go. It's actually quite unbelievable. You hear those things, that he was the best immigration minister that Canada ever had, and then you actually go out into the world, and you see these people who literally come up to you and say: did you know that your Premier actually signed my papers to come into this country? On top of that, multiculturalism is a part of his personality. He actually took it with him into every other portfolio that he held. That is how important this profile is to him.

5:20

The opposition was talking yesterday, and I think it was the former Minister of Education who was speaking about how some of the ideas that he had brought forward maybe were something that simulated this. You know, good ideas come from a lot of different places. But to his point, there has been a long-standing issue about making sure that professional designations are brought forward. I think the part that was probably the most interesting to me – and I have to quote this. I'll actually read from my notes here. In terms of why the legislation is being proposed, just to be clear, it is to ensure that newcomers and all Albertans are successfully employed and that they're able to contribute to the Alberta economy in their skill levels, and the legislation introduced measures to ensure that regulated professions and trades and registration practices are transparent, that they are objective, impartial, and fair.

Pretty straightforward. The goal is to achieve that balance between responsibility that ensures safety, especially like the member across the way was talking about with doctors and other professions that especially require that piece of it, and actually other professions as well, and the independence of the regulatory bodies, and our commitment is to ensure that that registration and practices are transparent, objective, impartial, and fair.

Interestingly enough, when I read the Hansard from yesterday of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar – and, you know, I happily would open my office doors any time for multiculturalism to explain to the member about the intersectionality of the people and, really, how important it is that we actually create an inclusive space. Maybe he might want to come and see me and talk to me about this.

We don't need a fair registration practices office poking its nose into the Ministry . . .

I think he was talking about Advanced Education at the time.

. . . telling welders how they should evaluate other welders or telling electricians how they should evaluate other electricians or telling carpenters how to evaluate other carpenters.

I think, Mr. Speaker, he missed the point. This is actually about people who have been attracted to this country, who have worked so hard. To the point of the member across the way about how difficult it is, how hard this process is: we hear heartbreaking stories every single day of how much when people come here – they were really resilient before they even entered the country of Canada. Then they have to go through the process of becoming a Canadian. Then, on top of that, they have to hopefully get their professional designations to acknowledge the work and who they were when they came to this country, the whole reason for coming here.

Yet we have a member from that side who, in so many words, basically says: no; that's not important. Poking its nose: are you kidding me? This is about transparency and making sure that people who are coming here, new Canadians, are recognized for their value, their worth, so they are able to live positive, wonderful, fulfilling lives in a province that really, really is set up to make sure that those folks can function here.

I also wanted to outline quickly that he also mentioned yesterday that he doesn't think that "there's any additional value to be found in creating a fair registration practices office with people whose qualifications are unknown at this point." That is the point, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood standing to speak to the bill.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise on Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act. You know, it's not often in my short tenure here that I've been able to rise and be supportive of things in this House, so this is new. But this is okay because we need to recognize at times that there are issues that are not about partisanship, for sure, but about doing the right thing.

My riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is a very diverse one, made up of many people from countries all around the world. I know the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore had a chance to visit it just the other day.

Mrs. Aheer: It's an awesome riding.

Member Irwin: It sounds like she enjoyed it.

You know, as I said, a lot of folks come from all over the world to our neighbourhoods. In fact, some of my friends were actually at the announcement, so it's kind of interesting to be able to speak about this.

I know that the members for Calgary-McCall and Edmonton-Meadows shared some really important personal stories. Obviously, I can't share anything from my own life, but I can share the stories of many others.

My own doctor is actually from Libya, and she's amazing. I actually went for years here without a family doctor. I just couldn't seem to get one. I know that for every doctor like mine, there are many others who haven't yet had their credentials recognized. I've heard from some of those folks in my own neighbourhood as well. You know, we're so lucky to be able to attract such incredible talent to our province and to our country.

You know, many years ago I spent a summer in Toronto, and I volunteered at something called job camp, which was put on by Youth Employment Services of Toronto. There I heard first-hand the stories of many newcomers, countless people, who just arrived in the city and who were struggling and were looking for any sort of job and employment advice. Their credentials just weren't being recognized, and in many cases they felt like they were being treated as less than human. As I said, I mean, these stories are innumerable across our province and our country.

I know that many of my constituents will be so happy to hear about this work to ensure that we are going to collaborate and to help ensure that their credentials are being recognized and that this government is continuing the work that we started, that our NDP caucus is here for them and for their families. We know how important it is that education and experience be recognized, that their credentials be considered equal to those of their counterparts.

It's about respect. It's about valuing work and labour. It's about valuing the contributions of our neighbours. It's about equality. It's about fairness. These are the values of the NDP, and these are my values. So to the newcomers out there, many of whom I'm so proud to call friends: we're going to continue to fight to ensure that you get treated equitably because you give so much to our province and to our country and you deserve that recognition.

In fact, our Premier noted just the other day that too often we hear stories about doctors-driving-cabs syndrome. So we're going to be taking action. It's not about, you know – and he's certainly not saying this either – demeaning those who drive cabs. These are very important jobs. It's about having those credentials recognized.

As I said, I've heard those stories, many of them, from folks in my own riding. Our country, our province has been able to attract incredible people, but too many of them struggle for years, sometimes even decades, when their credentials aren't being recognized. When they struggle, it's a great loss to our country because we need their skills and we need them to be realizing their full potential. We also know that this affects more than just their own families and their communities; in some cases it's their own mental health and sense of worth. We know that when Albertans are treated equitably, all of society benefits. Fairness is important to Albertans. We've seen that in a lot of cases. This bill aids in fairness.

Now, Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act, would remove barriers, would speed up the processes where possible, would hold professional bodies accountable, and, as I said, would increase fairness. It's enabling legislation that would provide the authority to create a fair registration practices office; would reduce, in theory, some of the red tape associated with this whole credentialing process; would work with regulators; and would try to maintain Alberta's high professional standards.

Someone I respect greatly is Barry Cavanaugh. He is the CEO of the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta. He noted that his own professional association has long since adopted high standards of fairness in their admission practices, and as a result they're happy to see this work moving forward. As I said, this is an important step in equality.

If the moral and the societal benefits don't sway you, well, let's look at some of the economic benefits here. According to the Conference Board of Canada Canadians would earn up to $17 billion more annually if their credentials were fully recognized, and of course immigrants are the largest group here, with an estimated 524,000 of those folks being affected by a lack of recognition. In fact, after doing a little digging, these numbers vary depending on the report that you look at.

According to 2016 stats Canada-wide this is an issue that affects nearly 1 million immigrants. A report released in January 2016 said that nearly 850,000 Canadians, over 60 per cent of whom are immigrants, end up underemployed or unemployed because their credentials are not recognized in our country. In fact, a 2012 report found in a survey of 50,000 cab drivers across Canada that 200 were doctors or had PhDs and that 20 per cent of drivers who immigrated to Canada had at least an undergrad level or a master's degree level.

We know as well that many other jurisdictions have addressed this issue and have taken these steps earlier. Provinces like Ontario, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia have this fairness legislation in place.

5:30

So I am quite hopeful, and I want to repeat that I am quite hopeful about this bill. I'm quite hopeful to see that this government is moving forward with something that affects so many Albertans and Canadians, but I think it's also important to temper my optimism a little bit. It's really critical that this bill be executed, be implemented correctly and that they get the regulations right on this.

There are a few specifics here. For instance, we know that the Labour and Immigration minister will have the authority to intervene in individual cases. He will then, in turn, be able to work with regulators to ensure that the processes are fair and issue orders if they're not complying. Of course, all of these expectations will be laid out in the legislation, but I do have some worry because some individuals may still feel that their concerns aren't being fully acknowledged and that they're not getting a timely enough response.

There are a whole number of organizations listed: the Alberta Association of Architects, for example; Alberta College of Optometrists; Alberta Insurance Council – I'm just picking a few here because these are some pretty significant bodies – the Chartered Professional Accountants of Alberta; let's see, the college of midwives of Alberta. Again, the list goes on and on. We're talking about countless organizations. We know that these organizations will have six months to provide applicants with an interim decision, which could include advice on what is needed, what additional documentation, what extra training is needed or required. But there won't be a deadline for an applicant to receive a final decision because these different professions do have different requirements, different criteria set out under each of their practices.

We do know that any organizations that are issued compliance orders may face a fine of up to $50,000. Will that be enough to deter and to ensure that organizations are following? I'm not sure. Again, I think this is where the regulations and the implementation are going to be so, so important.

We know that the minister can, under this proposed act, perform audits and can ask for those and ask for detailed reports into how any of these organizations are in fact operating. My concern will be that with the lack of a specific or standardized deadline across bodies, things could be delayed. Of course, if we're talking about the case of someone who's trying to support their family, too much of a delay could certainly be problematic. Again, I think it's incumbent upon all of us to ensure that some of these specifics are quite clear because if we're going to take this step forward, we need to get it fully right.

Now, I want to just talk a little bit as well about some of the work that the Member for Calgary-McCall talked about as well. We know that we heard loudly and clearly from Albertans through things like the antiracism consultations. I wasn't as involved as that member was, but I was tangentially involved in some of the consultations and some of the organizing of that. In reading and in hearing some of the reports from those consultations, we did hear loudly and clearly that action needs to be taken. That's exactly why we invested in a foreign qualification recognition fund and started to take steps to ensure that Albertans were treated fairly. We expect and we hope that the government will take the necessary steps to ensure that any interactions with those professional regulatory bodies and associations are done in a timely and, I guess, a standardized manner.

I think what I'll do is I'll close by just – I've praised this government for the steps that they're taking. But, yeah, I just want to ensure that we move forward with this in a way that truly will be fair and be respectful. Again, I'm here as the voice of the constituents of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, many of whom are new Canadians, many of whom have shared with me their struggles as they arrived in our country. I just urge us to really listen to each other and listen to their voices as we move forward with Bill 11.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Bill 12 Royalty Guarantee Act

[Adjourned debate June 25: Ms Savage]

The Acting Speaker: Do I see any members looking to speak to Bill 12? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to my hon. colleagues for this opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 12, the Royalty Guarantee Act. The Royalty Guarantee Act is an important step towards strengthening investor confidence in our province's oil and gas sector. This act will provide long-term certainty to investors by affirming that the current royalty structure will be maintained for at least 10 years. I'm also glad to say that this guarantee is a platform promise and demonstrates the United Conservative Party's commitment to stand up for Albertans and to create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of things I want to touch on. Our province has had a couple of royalty reviews in the last 11 or 12 years, one in 2007-2008 and another one in 2016. I want to touch on the great uncertainty that this caused to our oil and gas producers and our companies. Of course, we know that one of the things that businesses crave is certainty. In a competitive world, in a world where it's sometimes hard to control and manage and budget your costs, what a company doesn't need is surprises.

I want to talk about how I saw the royalty review in 2007-2008 and what it did to Medicine Hat and what it did to our good oil and gas companies down there. Mr. Speaker, for a start, I'd like to give you a little bit of background on Medicine Hat. Of course, we're the Gas City. We have developed a tremendous amount of oil, a tremendous amount of natural gas for all Albertans, for all Canadians. We have been leaders, like so many other people in Alberta, so many other parts of Alberta, in ensuring that natural gas was a valuable commodity produced at a good price for Albertans to use.

Just a little history, Mr. Speaker. Not a lot of people know that in 1907 Rudyard Kipling coined the phrase that Medicine Hat was an area with all hell for a basement. Interestingly, at the time the citizens of Medicine Hat were actually thinking of changing the name to Gasburg. Thank goodness that they kept the Blackfoot tradition. The words "hat" and "medicine" kind of come from the Blackfoot word "Saamis," and that continued. That shows the connection that the southeastern part of our province, that the good people of southeastern Alberta and Medicine Hat have to the oil and gas industry, have to the removal of carbon, and have to promoting that.

Mr. Speaker, it only got better. Right next door to Medicine Hat is the Suffield Block, hundreds and hundreds of square miles where the British army three or four times a year brings in approximately 2,500 soldiers to train, where the Canadian government and Canadian scientists for years have conducted first-rate research. It's been an amazing partnership between the Canadian government, the British soldiers that train, and our good oil and gas business. It's one of the areas where Alberta Energy in the '70s first developed, where Albertans and Canadians got really, really good at extracting natural gas and oil and sharing the wealth. Some years our area paid billions of dollars in royalties to the Alberta Treasury.

5:40

Mr. Speaker, here's what happened without the certainty that we're going to see Bill 12 provide in the Royalty Guarantee Act. When the first royalty was conducted in 2008, the government at the time was told by our good producers that the margins were tight, but other jurisdictions offered more certainty and more opportunity, and if they persisted, many would leave. What happened is that five or six big ones, good employers, did leave as the royalty review was happening, costing our city, costing our area tens and tens of jobs, costing the wealth and the income that that would circulate. That's one of the reasons that I am so pleased to see that the Royalty Guarantee Act – and I'll say it again – affirms that the current royalty structure will be maintained for at least 10 years, the certainty that these companies need to provide the jobs, invest the tens and tens of millions in capital to make it happen.

Mr. Speaker, the Royalty Guarantee Act will help restore Alberta's competitive advantage. It's a guarantee. It's a major step towards assuring investors that Alberta is a stable place to invest. I want to talk a little bit, too, about how important that is from my business background and my experience, the number of times I've talked to our good, hard-working job creators and small-business people, oil and gas and otherwise, that are lucky to eke out a 2, 3, or 4 per cent return at the end of the year. As a matter of fact, I had coffee this morning with an executive who's in a fairly big business, who told me that at the year-end they feel lucky if they make 4 per cent of their revenue. This is why they need certainty. A small change can wipe out investment dollars. Worse yet, it can kill jobs. That is why this certainty is crucial, and that's why I'm such a supporter of the Royalty Guarantee Act here at second reading.

Mr. Speaker, the uncertainty created by an open-end wholesale review of our royalty structure, like was done in 2008, like the past government just did in 2016, that froze investment, caused uncertainty, lost jobs, will not be done under this government because of the Royalty Guarantee Act. Investors will no longer need to worry that the rules in Alberta will change at the halfway mark, halfway through a project. We're recommending a guarantee of no major changes to the oil and gas royalty structure for at least 10 years. We're also guaranteeing that once a well starts producing, it will be under the same royalty system for the same length of time.

Mr. Speaker, I reached out and I talked to some oil and gas investors who felt that that 10 years was absolutely adequate, that felt that the 10 years was a strong guarantee, coupled with a free enterprise and a business-focused government, coupled with the good work of my colleague the hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction. That's a problem, too. Absolutely. This will restore hundreds of millions of dollars of investment in the Alberta oil and natural gas business to make sure that we can stay being a leader.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a little bit about what the last government also did to our good producers, that can't be forgotten. At the same time as they put them through another royalty review in 2016, freezing investment, scaring the creation of jobs, there was a 20 per cent provincial tax hike – a 20 per cent provincial tax hike – that made us not competitive, and a carbon tax that other competing jurisdictions didn't have that led to carbon leakage, that made it harder on rural Alberta, made it harder on our not-for-profits and on our school divisions, but also made it much, much harder on our families, with food costs, with gas costs, and made it much, much harder on our oil and gas producers because of the costs.

Then there were the signals that the last government used to show when the Leader of the Opposition, as Premier, refused to stand up to foreign interference in our oil and gas industry to land-lock our resources, never mind even acknowledge it. Many of the past government's cabinet were seen protesting our great hydrocarbon industry, never mind what the other half of their party, the federal party, said with the Leap Manifesto, never mind a 100-megatonne cap on emissions. It was a clear signal that they did not want this industry to grow, that they did not want this industry to thrive, that they did not want this industry to provide the jobs and the wealth and the billions and billions of dollars of transfer payments for all Canadians to benefit from, for all Canadians to benefit from with jobs and social programs.

Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta: a great opportunity, a great place to live, and it's about that Alberta advantage. It's about that Alberta advantage of the most opportunity, the most competitive taxes, and the best social programs. That's exactly why we need Bill 12, the Royalty Guarantee Act, to provide the confidence for those who create jobs, those who create wealth, those who invest billions of dollars, certainly tens of millions of dollars, to make it happen.

I want to come back to the royalty review in 2007-2008, which was one of the reasons I decided to enter politics. I don't know whether to call it, you know, the first of a thousand cuts. Certainly, I had the good fortune to knock on so many doors in the last campaign and see how resilient and how strong so many Albertans are. They're willing to travel to work, willing to do what it takes, willing to bear down. But it was a step back when I heard last week that for some of our natural gas companies the spot price for natural gas right now is actually negative, meaning they have to pay to take away their oil and gas, or their gas in this case. Mr. Speaker, there have been so many issues that have made it hard for this industry. This certainty is required. This certainty will not only create jobs, but it will protect what we have.

Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you a little bit more about Medicine Hat and some of the layers of burden that the past government put on them. At a time when things were a bit challenging, instead of doing something like a Royalty Guarantee Act, where we know that things aren't going to change for 10 years, the last government decided to make it tougher with that 20 per cent tax increase I talked about, with the carbon tax, with extra layers of regulation, with a 100-megatonne cap. And here are some of the effects. Knocking on doors it was absolutely alarming how many Cypress-Medicine Hatters were on their way to North Dakota, Texas, Wyoming, Oklahoma, even Argentina, even Iran because that's where the work was. It was alarming.

5:50

In the city of Medicine Hat our gas department used to return considerable profits to the good people of Medicine Hat. Unfortunately, now it's losing money, and a $24 million dividend that used to assist in providing good public services is no longer available. Mr. Speaker, the mayor and the council people in Medicine Hat are having to find $24 million of annual savings because they don't get this dividend anymore. That's comparable to Calgary or Edmonton having to find $500 million in savings.

Mr. Speaker, the problems and the reverberation of our oil and gas industry not being strong are widely felt. That is why we need Bill 12. That is why we need to have the guarantee of royalty protection so these people can invest and create jobs.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I also want to talk about some other layers that have to be addressed. The federal government, under the Species at Risk Act, has an environmental protection order to protect sage grouse in our area. Everybody wants to protect the sage grouse. Everybody wants to make sure that they thrive, that industry thrives, and everyone has a chance to do well. But here's what's happened. A company called LGX ended up going into receivership; hundreds of families that used to work there affected. The city of Medicine Hat ended up suing the federal government for $42 million because of this being placed.

People that care about the sage grouse are noticing that with the introduction of fox, with hardly any families out there, there are more coyotes. They're noticing that the sage grouse, the leks where they mate and dance, seem to be in areas where people used to live. They're hoping that this is the kind of thing, again, that rules and regulations and a government that cares about family and free enterprise in the oil and gas industry can have an opportunity to look at, to make sure that we work hand in hand better to protect our environment, to protect our species, and to make sure that all Alberta families have an opportunity to flourish, to do well, and create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to close with just simply that I very, very much support the Royalty Guarantee Act. I very much know that good, ethical, safe development of oil and gas is what Alberta has done best. I'm so pleased that southeastern Alberta and Medicine Hat has been a leader in that area since the '50s and '60s and very, very much wants to continue to do that. I know that this act will provide the long-term certainty that investors need to invest their money, take some risk but at the same time create some jobs and pay some royalties so Alberta can continue to have the best social programs in all of Canada. I'm especially glad that this guarantee is a platform promise and demonstrates our commitment to stand up for all Albertans and create jobs.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other hon. members looking to speak to the bill?

An Hon. Member: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Acting Speaker: Not on this one. He was the second speaker. On the next speaker there would be 29(2)(a). This one would be 15 minutes for the initial debate time.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore standing.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I always enjoy being able to rise in this House to speak to various pieces of legislation, especially Bill 12. You know, I have to say that it's been interesting listening to some of the speakers, especially the last one, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, and, frankly, a lot of the members over on the government side. What I found interesting is some of the spin that we hear around things. There's some spin in Bill 12 that I'll address, but I think I should clarify why I'm talking about spin.

For example, we hear the government talking at length about the biggest mandate that they've had in the history of Alberta, you know, a 56 per cent mandate, that over a million people voted for them. The problem is that there are 3.3 million people in Alberta, which is less than 25 per cent, 23.9 per cent to be exact. It's always interesting to hear the spin.

We could talk about the corporate tax rate, that it was raised by 20 per cent. The last time I looked, 12 per cent up from 10 per cent is only 2 per cent. Again, it's all around spin. [interjections] I know that members are heckling away, and I know I have the floor right now, Mr. Speaker, so perhaps they might want to listen to some of the things I have to say.

We have spin in Bill 12. I'm looking at Bill 12 right now, and one of the things I'm a little bit concerned about is red tape. Here we are creating some structure around red tape, so I'm . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt. I just want to take a moment to remind the House that there will be ample opportunity to debate this matter. At the present time I'm actually having a little bit of trouble hearing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Please continue.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

Getting back to what I was mentioning around red tape, I mean, we've seen the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction have a mandate looking to cut red tape in the province of Alberta by one-third, with a bit of a one-in, one-out type of focus. Of course, I was very, very pleased to finally see the posting of the 17 regulations that were eliminated over a 21-day period. I was very excited to be able to see that. Of course, a lot of people don't quite understand why it was eliminated, how it could affect them, you know, but we'll work on that a little bit later.

When we talk about that mandate around red tape, you know, we've seen some bills that are bringing in red tape. So if we start to look at this, is there going to be a rush to try to eliminate red tape to keep up with the red tape that we have coming into the Assembly here right now? I'm a little bit concerned about that around this bill and several others.

Again, when I was talking a little bit about spin, I could even refer a little bit to Bill Hate, where you've talked about, you know, some of the biggest protections for GSAs, yet there are some loopholes that I could probably fly the space shuttle through from the backseat.

Here we are talking about guaranteeing over the next 10 years some of the rates, but this is a little bit misleading, Mr. Speaker. When I see things around whatever actions the government considers appropriate and consistent with legislation, that tells me that, well, if it's prudent and convenient, we're going to start changing things just on a bit of a whim, so that really doesn't actually provide certainty for investors when they're looking at these royalties.

You know, here we are. We're focused on trying to look at the rates that we're using. With probably, unfortunately, a bit of limited time, hopefully, I'll be able to get back to this later. I can get through a little bit of a history of where we're at in terms of our royalties. Again, I'm a little bit concerned that there's going to be a bit of a rush to get through some of this stuff, and then we'll have to try to make up for it going forward.

So I'm really hoping that the government isn't going down yet another path where they're selling Albertans a bill of goods that really isn't going to be in their best interests. I'm really concerned that Bill 12 happens to be one of those bills of goods that really isn't going to be in their best interests. At the end of the day, royalties belong to Albertans. They should be getting a good, fair price for them, making sure that we take that money and are able to invest it back into Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member for a second time, but seeing that it is 6 p.m., the House stands adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1223
Introduction of Visitors .....	1223
Introduction of Guests .....	1223
Members' Statements
Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Awareness Day.....	1223
Imamat Day .....	1223
Lethbridge Pride Fest .....	1223
Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Project.....	1224
Constables Ezio Faraone and Daniel Woodall.....	1224
Airdrie Pro Rodeo.....	1224
Introduction of Bills
Bill 13   Alberta Senate Election Act .....	1225
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1225, 1234
Oral Question Period
2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation .....	1225
Education Funding.....	1226
LGBTQ Teacher and Educational Staff Employment Protection.....	1227
Domestic Violence Prevention .....	1227
Agricultural Exports to China.....	1228, 1232
Public Health Care.....	1228
Water Licensing and Cochrane's Water Supply .....	1229
Minimum Wage for Youth .....	1229
Minister of Finance.....	1230
Affordable Housing in Lethbridge.....	1230
School Nutrition Program at Normandeau School.....	1231
Film and Television Industry Support .....	1232
Skilled Trades Labour Supply .....	1233
Seniors' Drug Coverage .....	1233
Tablings to the Clerk .....	1234
Orders of the Day .....	1235
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole
Bill 2   An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business .....	1235
Second Reading
Bill 11   Fair Registration Practices Act .....	1244
Bill 12   Royalty Guarantee Act .....	1251

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Wednesday evening, June 26, 2019

Day 20

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henday (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreeshen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretaries

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, June 26, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening, everyone.

I'll take a moment and say hello to my daughter, Molly, who is tuned in this evening to watch our proceedings. Hi, Molly.

Now you may all take a seat.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 12

Royalty Guarantee Act

[Debate adjourned June 26: Mr. Nielsen speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and good evening to you and all the thousands of viewers that are probably watching us here intently debating Bill 12 at this time. When we had left off, I was just concluding some remarks a little bit around red tape and how I felt that there was a concern on my part around maybe a potential rush by the government to feel that they would need to reduce a lot of red tape because of some of the red tape that they have been introducing, part of which I think Bill 12 might be doing here.

I didn't want to . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, can we just keep the volume down a little bit so I can hear our speaker? Thank you.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. That's twice now that we've had to quiet down the folks here.

I wanted to quickly touch just a little bit on some of the work that was done around the royalty review by the former NDP government, with just a couple of quick quotes that I would like to go through.

When we started this process we committed to listening to Albertans and industry. Seeing our recommendations brought to life means Albertans can know their views are reflected in the Modernized Royalty Framework. This is a system that is built to last and I'm pleased to see the positive reaction to it.

Of course, that was said by Dave Mowat, the president and CEO of ATB Financial and the past chair of the royalty review advisory panel.

I'd also like to quote Tim McMillan, the president and chief executive officer of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. He said:

I commend the Alberta government for its timely approach to create a more modern royalty system through a constructive process. This has led to a royalty system that is true to the principles of the royalty advisory report. The new royalty system helps provide more clarity that investors need to plan for the future.

And one other quick one that I just wanted to touch on:

The Explorers and Producers Association of Canada is pleased that the conclusion of this royalty calibration process will allow investors and oil and gas producers to move forward with a clear understanding of the new royalty and fiscal terms. The well-run process allowed the thorough exchange of analysis and information between government and industry. The result is a modernized royalty framework, with more transparency and better suited to support investment and development of Alberta's future energy resource opportunities.

Of course, that was Gary Leach, president of the Explorers and Producers Association of Canada.

What I am essentially saying, Madam Speaker, is that the system we have in place currently works. It's providing certainty for investors within the industry. It's providing certainty for our businesses that take our resources and bring those to market, providing a fair and balanced return to Albertans. I think Bill 12 will upset that applecart, and that is doing a little bit of a disservice to Albertans.

Unfortunately, as some members are probably expecting, I won't be supporting Bill 12. I still feel that, you know, this is potentially going to create a bit of a race to reduce red tape, as we've seen. There are many bills that are coming forward that are creating a whole bunch of red tape, which is a little bit counterproductive to one of the platform commitments that the government brought forward.

With that, though, I will take my seat. I'm interested to hear the rest of the debate of this going forward, and I look forward to some of the comments that I'm sure we'll be hearing.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers?

Would the hon. Minister of Energy like to close debate?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

Bill 8

Education Amendment Act, 2019

Mr. Nielsen moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 8, Education Amendment Act, 2019, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 8, Education Amendment Act, 2019, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment June 25: Ms Ganley]

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Speaker, I would like to move the following unanimous consent motion to go to one-minute bells for the duration of the evening, including in Committee of the Whole. I will seek the table's advice if we've accomplished my objective or if I need to say it differently.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Speaker: We are now on Bill 8. Are there any speakers wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill 8 here this evening. We know that we've heard a lot of issues around Bill 8 in regard to ensuring safe and caring schools. Quite frankly, I should know because I was the Minister of Education and looking for ways by which we could build a cohesive safe and caring schools policy for students here in the province of Alberta. I was around when Bill 10 was being debated as well, so part of the evolution, the time unfolding around these issues. I was both witness to and partly the architect of these events. I can speak on good authority and give some practical history as to why it was necessary to strengthen the School Act, Bill 10, and safe and caring schools in order to make sure the integrity of GSAs and QSAs was retained and they were allowed to flourish here in the province of Alberta.

When I became minister and was watching with interest GSAs and QSAs starting up in the province of Alberta, I did notice that there was a lot of inconsistency. I was getting a lot of feedback and complaints from students, individual schools, parents, and so forth where certain things were happening that would help to slow down the timely creation of GSAs and QSAs in schools and, you know, somehow dilute the purpose of the GSA and the QSA in the first place. I mean, there are a myriad of reasons why that might have been happening. I don't want to judge or generalize about what the motives or the intentions were around those events happening, but, I mean, I can tell you that they were definitely happening.

For example, a common challenge that we ran across with building GSAs or QSAs is that an individual administrator at a school would simply drag their feet. You know, perhaps it was a grade 11 student or a grade 12 student in their school that was looking to form a GSA or a QSA and sponsor that, and we saw circumstances where an administrator would simply kind of drag their feet and wait for that student to graduate or leave the school, looking at it not as an opportunity to create something special in the school and to help vulnerable kids but treating it as a problem and maybe treating it like the individual that was advocating for the GSA was a problem. The administrator would rag the puck or not move in a timely fashion, and there would be a lot of frustration associated with that.

7:40

We were talking about kids that are, like, 15, 16, 17 years old, so when the full force of an administrator at a school comes forward and is obviously obfuscating and getting in the way, then that's really hard for a young person, and often the GSA or the QSA just didn't happen, and the kid might move schools or, like I say, would graduate and be gone in the interim.

Another common problem that I was trying to mediate and work with was that administrators would say: "Okay. You want to start a GSA or a QSA. That's fine, but you can't call it that. You know, we just don't want that kind of language around, so you can call it a culture club, or you can call it an inclusion club or a rainbow club." I had a couple of those along the way, and the kids said: "No, we want to call it . . ." – and maybe they do. Maybe some kids do want to have a different name, culture club or whatever, but not allowing students to actually use "gay-straight alliance" or "queer-straight alliance," really, was an issue quite a lot in different schools around the province. Again, I was making a list of practical things that were happening that needed to change in order to strengthen the legislation and to make it whole.

Another common issue that we ran across – again, you know, this is a sensitive one, but it's very key to the integrity of a GSA – is that students could join the GSA and retain the confidentiality of that if they chose to do so. Again, you know, it's sensitive, and I know that people opposed to GSAs and QSAs really struck on this point as being a reason to fight against gay-straight alliances and queer-straight alliances, but it's sort of the essence of what those groups are. It's a safe place for a young person who is just coming to terms with their sexuality.

Maybe it's only a temporal thing, like they're just saying: "Okay. I need to have this place, and it needs to be on the q.t. that I am joining onto this because I need to think about this." It's a very sensitive time in a person's life. I was just listening to the radio driving over here, and it was a podcast on CBC talking about LGBTQ issues and about people choosing to come out to their family and friends. It's not easy to do, by any means, and the GSA or QSA model is a place to create a safe space and a safe haven for people, and then they can make choices around that later, right?

I mean, it's important to realize and to know that the legislation as it stands now, which is very strong, very cohesive legislation, still doesn't override the law in regard to safety, imminent danger, and social services as well. It's not as though the GSA legislation would retain the confidentiality of someone even if their life was in danger or if there was something that was deemed to be so by social services and so forth, but it retains the confidentiality if a student chooses to have that confidentiality within certain parameters. Again, eminently reasonable, and any suggestion that students should be compelled to release that information to anyone in any normal circumstance is just not logical. Like I say, it undermines the whole reason and purpose of a GSA and a QSA in the first place.

By making those simple adjustments, you know, we saw the phenomenon where GSAs and QSAs were beginning to flourish across the province. It was quite obvious that there was a need and an interest in these groups in schools because they just started to proliferate at quite an astounding rate.

Another phenomenon that I saw over time, over the last three years now, I guess, is that school boards started to come onboard in regard to creating a safe and caring schools policy that was in keeping with a certain standard. I mean, I definitely had lots of foot-dragging for the first couple of years, but, you know, at the end of the day, we stood with every single public school in the province of Alberta in putting together a coherent and acceptable and often outstanding safe and caring schools policy that was completely in compliance with the law.

We had every single Catholic school board in the province of Alberta build a safe and caring schools policy that was in compliance with the law and was truly outstanding and had infused and threaded through it articles of faith – right? – because, of course, that's the prerogative and, I think, the importance of our Catholic school system, to have faith-based teaching. And they did it, every single Catholic school board. In other words, every Catholic school in Alberta was under a safe and caring schools policy that was coherent, that was sensitive, that was infused with faith. That went really well. I mean, I think we can be very proud of that, to see that work. I can tell you that it wasn't easy, by any means, but – you know what? – sometimes the very best, most important things in life are not easy to achieve. We did manage to put that together, and I was very proud of that.

Every single francophone school and school board, again, has a safe and caring schools policy that is coherent, that is sensitive, and completely in compliance with the law. As I mentioned, I think, the other night, I have to take the account of people that can translate for me because I can't read their policies, but they passed with flying colours, and I'm very proud of them as well.

Every single school in terms of charter schools, again, building a safe and caring schools policy in compliance with the law and often doing a very outstanding job and meeting the local needs as well to build in language that would meet the articles of the charter that that school happened to be under: that turned out really well, and I was very proud of the work that they did as well.

The vast majority, Madam Speaker – the vast majority – of private schools here in the province of Alberta undertook the same exercise and came up with a safe and caring schools policy that was outstanding, quite frankly. They did a great job, and I was very proud to see what was produced. You know, I think that that whole aspect of this journey that we've been on around gay-straight alliances here in the province of Alberta was extremely rewarding to see, by far the vast majority of schools, 90 some per cent or more – I can't remember what it was – going through this process in an authentic and genuine way and coming up with something that they can be proud of. I mean, it's as simple as that in terms of the history of where we are today.

You know, I know that the government is trying to sell these changes to safe and caring schools policies as just being something inconsequential and so forth, but obviously it's not because, number one, we just went through that whole process of coming up to the level that we're standing at here today. We're at a place where we literally have moved people's minds and understanding about this whole issue around inclusion and acceptance of LGBTQ people in general, not just students, in our society.

I will say, Madam Speaker, that I was a person that travelled on that journey over the last three years as well, gaining understanding of not just sort of something on paper or some basic idea around justice and equality but a true understanding of inclusivity and acceptance that, you know, I internalized in everything that I do. I feel like I'm a stronger person for it. I'm a more understanding person for it. I think as well that literally hundreds of thousands of other people had gained some useful knowledge and understanding about this issue as well. You could literally see Alberta moving from a place where we were before to a more caring and accepting and inclusive place for all of us to live, so I think that we need to look at that as part of what we have done here today and where we're going in the future as well.

7:50

I think that those who know me know that I am a reasonable person that looks for ways by which we can collaborate to create something that we can all live with and that still will demonstrate progress in terms of anything that we debate here in this Legislature. You know, with this one, this particular Bill 8, I think that we all need to take a long, hard look at what is the purpose of the legislation in the first place, go back to those first principles, make sure that every aspect of that is built in a cohesive way to ensure that we are looking after vulnerable youth, that we are instilling a sense of justice and equality into the policies that we put forward in regard to LGBTQ issues and with GSAs and QSAs specifically, and that we're retaining a sense of safety and security for people as well.

By this being on the docket, so to speak, Madam Speaker, up for debate here, it literally has shattered the level of security and confidence that we did create over this last number of years because people say: "Why are we changing this? I mean, what's the point? Why is it that we should be feeling compelled to make a change when we have gone through so much work to build coherent policy, have allowed GSAs and QSAs to flourish, and have allowed that process to start?" I just know that people are feeling insecure.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any speakers under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I would not want to put you in a spot where I was moving the same unanimous consent motion, but as you well know, I'm always here to help – it's my main goal each day when I come here – so I'm going to try this in a different way. I'm going to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 32(2) and (3) to go to one-minute bells for the remainder of the evening, which, just so you know and for those following at home, would mean both in and outside of committee.

The Deputy Speaker: That would be the House deciding on a procedural amendment, so we will seek unanimous consent to waive the standing orders.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: Anybody else on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment REF1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We're back on the main bill. Are there any other speakers to the bill?

Would the hon. minister like to close debate?

Member LaGrange: Yes, I will close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 12 Royalty Guarantee Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill?

Mrs. Savage: Madam Chair, Bill 12, Royalty Guarantee Act, is a very important step towards strengthening investor confidence in our province's oil and gas sector. This act would provide long-term certainty to those making investment decisions by affirming that the current royalty structure will be maintained for at least 10 years. This guarantee is also one of our platform promises and demonstrates our commitment to stand up for our energy sector and create more jobs for Albertans.

Madam Chair, Alberta went through two royalty reviews, in 2008 and in 2016, and those reviews told us what we already knew, that royalty rates in Alberta are competitive with other jurisdictions, including Saskatchewan and many U.S. states. However, these reviews also fundamentally altered how investors viewed Alberta. Before these reviews took place, our province was viewed as a stable place to make long-term investments, which brought prosperity and investment to Alberta, but these two royalty reviews created a climate of uncertainty and unpredictability, which impacted how investors viewed Alberta, and have had a profound negative impact on our province's ability to compete. As a result, investors started leaving our province in search of other jurisdictions with a more stable investment climate. Unfortunately, this kind of uncertainty has contributed to our province losing billions of dollars in investment opportunities, and we still have not recovered.

This trend of investors wondering what curveballs might be thrown their way has to stop. Industry needs certainty. The Royalty Guarantee Act will help restore Alberta's competitive advantage. This guarantee is a major step towards assuring investors that Alberta is once again a stable place to invest. We want to send a strong signal to investors that the uncertainty created by open-ended, wholesale reviews of our royalty structure is not going to happen again. By enshrining stability into law, it becomes crystal clear. Investors would no longer need to worry that the rules in Alberta could change halfway through the game.

Through Bill 12 we're recommending an approach that would guarantee no major changes to the oil and gas royalty structure for at least 10 years. We'll also guarantee that once a well starts producing, it will be under the same royalty system for that length of time. This time frame is intended to provide a reasonable time to recover most of the producible oil and gas from new and existing wells. This guarantee would apply to current oil, oil sands, and natural gas royalty frameworks, including crude oil, pentanes, methane, ethane, propane, and butane.

Through this legislation the basic royalty structures will remain in place, including the ability for regular required adjustments such as setting monthly par prices. The existing structure, rules, and processes will continue to enable industry and government to address significant market and technology changes. It will also allow us to reduce red tape and to simplify processes and provide much-needed clarity to industry. This legislation also confirms that the transition to the modernized royalty framework for wells drilled on or before December 31, 2016, would occur as planned in 2026.

To implement this guarantee, we can do this through amending the Mines and Minerals Act. This would allow government to use existing regulatory powers in an existing piece of legislation, eliminating the need for new legislation and avoiding new red tape.

Madam Chair, the guarantee this bill provides means that stability isn't just something we talk about in Alberta. It's the law. This legislation will help get Alberta back on track and help to restore our competitive advantage and investor confidence.

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

8:00

Bill 8

Education Amendment Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I am pleased to rise today in Committee of the Whole to discuss Bill 8, the Education Amendment Act, 2019. First, let me thank all the members who offered their support for this legislation. Of course, a few members of this Assembly have expressed some concerns and questions, and I appreciate having this opportunity to provide some clarification and further details. I will make a few general comments before diving into some of the points raised during second reading.

With the Education Amendment Act I am proud to say that we are building on our province's foundation of excellence, a foundation established by the talented teachers, principals, schools, support staff, and trustees who work day in and day out to support our students. The Education Amendment Act will help them deliver a modern education system so all Alberta children can reach their full potential.

The original Education Act was passed by the Legislature in 2012. It is an act built on years of consultation with Albertans and the education system itself. It has broad support from school boards, teachers, parents, and everyday Albertans. It went through further revision in past amendments in 2015 and was further consulted on for regulations. The Education Act strengthens local decision-making and puts school boards in the best position to determine the needs of their students. The bottom line is that we will have an education system that is more collaborative, more flexible, and more focused on student success. Our proposed amendments will maintain some aspects of the current legislation, and by maintaining the current rules in some areas, we are providing certainty and consistency for the upcoming school year.

As the world continues to change, our school system needs to change with it. I am proud to say that through the Education Amendment Act we are building the framework that puts the student first and is accountable at a local level, and we'll make sure that our students receive the excellent education that all Albertans expect and deserve.

As we all know, the most prevalent comments we heard on this bill had to do with protections for students who participate in GSAs and other inclusion groups. I feel that it's important to clarify a few important misconceptions about student protections for LGBTQ2S-plus students under the Education Act. To be absolutely clear, our government opposes mandatory parental notification of student involvement in inclusion groups. Alberta will have among the most comprehensive statutory protections for gay-straight alliances in Canada. Once requested by students, creating a GSA is not optional. In Alberta, like Manitoba and Ontario, the Education Act specifically guarantees in legislation that students are entitled to create inclusion groups, including GSAs and QSAs. Compared to legislation in Ontario and Manitoba, the Education Act provides greater direction regarding the appointment of a staff liaison for the student organization.

Consultation with the principal is not required when selecting a name for the student organization in Ontario and Manitoba. This may be interpreted as slightly stronger protection than in the Education Act. However, despite what some people have suggested, the Education Act specifically states that students may select gay-straight alliance or queer-straight alliance as the group name.

With amendments introduced through Bill 8, we are also clarifying that board obligations regarding welcoming, caring, respectful, and safe learning environments, policies, and publicly available student codes of conduct apply to all publicly funded schools, including accredited private schools.

Reference has also been made to Nova Scotia and British Columbia, which have no overarching provincial statutes protecting GSAs. Unlike the Education Act, British Columbia's ministry directive and Nova Scotia's provincial policy are not enshrined in provincial legislation.

In Alberta the privacy of students is also protected under strict privacy laws. As many of you know, the Privacy Commissioner recently brought independent, additional clarity to this point as well, for which I am grateful. Students cannot disclose a student's membership in any inclusion group as there are student privacy considerations that trump all other legislation, including the Education Act and the previous government's Bill 24. All school authorities are required to follow privacy legislation. Public schools must follow the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and private schools must adhere to the Personal Information Protection Act. School authorities may only disclose personal information if authorized under these laws. This government also recognizes that every child is unique and every circumstance is different. Legislation needs to balance protecting children and their privacy with the rights of parents so children are getting the supports that they need. This approach provides a clear balance between student privacy and parental rights, a balance and a clarity that was not found in Bill 24.

I know that timelines have been mentioned several times when it comes to creating a GSA. Let me be clear. School authorities are expected to follow the law. This means that when the Education Act comes into force, school authorities will be responsible for ensuring that schools adhere to the policies and practices under the act. If the student, parent, or guardian feels that the teachers or the principal in a school are not meeting their obligations, they can elevate their concern to the superintendent, their school board, and, if necessary, the minister, as is proper procedure. Despite what some suggest, our government believes that the safety of all students in schools is paramount.

I look forward to engaging students, parents, teachers, and administrators as we work together to build a modern education system which supports all students.

Another frequent topic raised during the debate had to do with trustees. Some of the members opposite seem to think that when the Education Act is in force, a group of trustees can gang up on another trustee at any time for any reason and fire them. That is ludicrous. Under the Education Act, boards are required to develop and implement a code of conduct for trustees, which includes definitions of breaches and sanctions up to and including disqualification of a trustee from the board. This is about professional conduct and clarity of expectations for trustees. Each board will develop a code of conduct that defines what type of trustee behaviour or breach would result in such a disqualification. Each trustee would then be expected to follow that code and could face sanctions, including disqualification, if they do not do so. This will create clarity for trustees on what exactly is a breach and what the sanctions would be for that breach. Elected or not, Albertans expect school trustees to work hard for their students in a professional manner. As a former trustee myself I think this expectation is both fair and reasonable. More than that, it is just common sense.

During the second reading debate we also heard a few comments on school charters. There seems to be an underlying fear that by supporting charter schools, we will negatively affect the public school system. This couldn't be further from the truth. Alberta has a long and successful tradition of supporting school choice, and our government is committed to ensuring parents have options that best meet the educational needs of their children. Charter schools play an important role in Alberta's education system by offering more choice for students and their parents. Charter schools are public schools that operate under a term-specific agreement with the Minister of Education. Charter schools follow provincial curriculum while also providing unique programs or learning approaches designed to improve student learning. Charter schools cannot be faith based.

Anyone wanting to start a charter school must first approach a local school board to see if the board can accommodate the alternative program. This was the case under the School Act, and it will continue under the Education Act. Charter schools are also expected to share their innovative practices and learning outcomes with others in the educational community so that all students may benefit.

One of the members opposite suggested that under the Education Act the, quote, duty to report, unquote, will not apply to charters. This is simply not true. The same member also suggested that the act removed protections for charter students to being exposed to hateful or discriminatory views. This, too, is not true as the welcoming, safe, and caring section of the act applies to charter schools.

Choice is one of the reasons Alberta has one of the best education systems in the world, and we intend to keep it that way. Choice of schools, including charters, is about meeting the needs and interests of our kids so that they can reach their full potential. Let me be as clear as possible: we believe in charter schools, and charter schools are here to stay.

8:10

The members opposite also touched upon several other points during the debate, so I'd like to take some time to clarify a few things. One of the members pointed out that the word "specialized" was removed from the bill. This is true. The term was removed in some places in an effort to recognize that supports and services need to be provided to all students, not just to students in need of special education. On the surface, this is a small administrative change, but it is a positive one. We are making this change to be more inclusive.

During the debate the topic of inclusion policies was raised. With our amendments we are clarifying that board obligations regarding welcoming, caring, respectful, and safe learning environments, policies, and student codes of conduct apply to all publicly funded schools, including accredited private schools.

We are also ensuring that a certain class of schools will continue to be exempt. For example, heritage language schools, which offer authorized language and cultural courses outside of regular school hours, usually on Saturdays, could be exempt. I would just like to clarify that these are the only class of schools that would be exempt.

Now, "director" versus "child intervention worker": one of the members highlighted that the word "director" is being taken out for "child intervention worker." Children's Services made this change some time ago. Because they made that change, we are aligning language in the Education Act with the language used by Children's Services.

Finally, the same member also raised concerns that government is talking about not having boards for private schools. This is just not the case. In the Education Act the terminology we are using is changing from "operator of a private school" to "a person responsible for the operation of a private school." However, this is just a terminology change, but it still means the same thing. The definition of "person" can refer to one person or persons or a corporation like a society. Under the Education Act, where a person or society is operating a private school and they don't have elected trustees but they have a governing board of the society, many of the rules in the Education Act still apply.

I was proud to take part in the conversation and collaboration over the many years that we'd been working on and awaiting the Education Act coming into force. It's been gratifying over the last number of weeks, on an almost daily basis, to hear from trustees, boards, administrators, parents, and, yes, even students that are pleased that Bill 8 has been introduced. Hopefully, the Education Act will finally come into force.

In conclusion, I would like to once again thank all the members who have shared their thoughts and supports for Bill 8. The original Education Act, together with the proposed amendments, will deliver a provincial framework focused on educational excellence in Alberta, one that Albertans expect and deserve and one that I am proud to be the minister of.

Thank you.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Chair, I move to adjourn debate.

The Chair: Would you like to adjourn debate and rise and report progress on Bill 8?

Mr. Jason Nixon: I move to adjourn debate on Bill 8, and I would like to go to Bill 11.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 11 Fair Registration Practices Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 11. I'm sorry I didn't have a chance to speak at second reading because, of course, second reading is the time when we get an opportunity to speak to the intent of the bill. I would have liked to have taken the time to express my support to the government for bringing forward a bill doing this kind of work and, you know, talk a little bit about the importance of the work that we are all doing to try to create a much more inclusive society and to make sure that people, no matter where you come from and what your background is, have a chance to participate in the great opportunities that the province of Alberta offers to everyone.

I can tell you that just in my personal experience – and I'll speak about some of my work experience – as an MLA in my community, every Friday I set some time aside to meet with people who require some documents that are done for purposes of submitting their credentials such as when they need a notary public or a Commissioner for Oaths. I really like doing that. It's one of the pleasant times in my day. You know, we deal with many challenging issues as MLAs, and sometimes you do feel very sad that you can't always address the issues that people bring to you because they're very complex. But in this case, when someone comes in for simple documents, it allows you to do the work quickly. It doesn't take longer than usually about five or 10 minutes. But it also, then, allows you an opportunity to speak with people a little bit about where they're coming from and what it is that brought them in to have the documents signed.

The vast majority of people that do come in are people who are immigrants to Canada and who are working very hard to create a space for themselves and their families in this country. I think that, you know, it's a real pleasure to hear from people who have worked very hard in their country of origin, where they were born, and then have made a very, I think, courageous decision to move from whatever country that is to come here. I haven't had to leave my country – opportunities have always been very positive for me here – so I have a deep respect for people who have uprooted themselves and come here. I know, as a descendant of Irish immigrants to Canada a little over 160 years ago, that my family must have gone through some very difficult times that led to them wanting to come to Canada and participate.

I think it's incredibly important that we're doing this piece of work. I would like to support the intent of the government in terms of doing this piece of work, but as we're in Committee of the Whole, I need to take some time to speak to some of the concerns I have about this bill. While I do intend to support it, my overall concern with this bill essentially is that it is just simply too weak. It has taken what I think is a very significant issue, one that we should be tackling and probably could tackle from both sides of the floor in a nonpartisan way. I haven't heard anybody fundamentally disagree with the notion that if you've been trained as a doctor or an engineer or a teacher in another land, we should be seriously looking at the credentials that you have and welcoming you into this country to help add to the good things that we have here in the province of Alberta.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

What, unfortunately, has happened here, though, is that the government has just decided to take a quick win rather than actually deal with the problem. They said: how can we get something that looks good and where we can go out and we can tout to all of the members of our community who are part of immigrant communities and are looking for their credentials to be recognized and say to them, "Look, we've done something for you"?

8:20

My underlying issue here is that this bill has no depth, and I'm concerned. A number of the bills that have come forward to us here in this House reflect the same underlying problem, that while they may have a positive intention, may be going in the right direction, the government simply hasn't done the work to sit down and look at: how can we actually tackle the problem at hand? Not: how do we create a press conference? Not: how do we create a meme or some social media post so that we can look like we're doing things? But, rather: how do we actually solve a problem that's in existence?

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

I want to speak a little bit about some work that I was involved in quite a few years ago now. I'm one of the older people in this House, so my dates sometimes sound a little askew to some of the other members. But back in 1999 I was working for the Edmonton Social Planning Council. We took the time to work very closely with a group of immigrant women from across the province of Alberta and speak to them about this exact problem. I wanted to point out the date of it because I wanted to point out that it was 20 years ago that this work was completed. We put together, I thought, a fairly reasonable report on the very slim amount of money that was available to us at the Edmonton Social Planning Council – I will table it at the appropriate time tomorrow – and that report was called Over-qualified, Underemployed: Accessibility Barriers to Accreditation for Immigrant Women with Foreign Qualifications.

I want to point out this piece of work. Partly, you know, I'm proud of the work that I did. In fact, I was trying to address this issue that you're trying to address today 20 years ago. Thanks for catching up. I would like to talk a little bit about some of the things that could have been in this bill if the government had decided to actually take the time and consult with people in the community about what it is that they need, because that's the problem with this bill, not what your intention was. I'm a hundred per cent in favour of it. I'd work with you on it.

I often offer to, you know, provide a little bit of information to the government side. So far they haven't taken me up on it, but in this case I can just offer you a report that's publicly available and has been publicly available for 20 years. I'd suggest to you that had you gone to a group like the Edmonton Social Planning Council or many of the other ones that work in this area, these incredibly great organizations that we have in Alberta – the Mennonite centre, for example, which works with people from all around; Catholic Social Services, which is probably the longest standing immigrant social agency in the city of Edmonton, well, perhaps in the province of Alberta; and also, for example, Assist Community Services Centre, which has an office in my constituency, the incredible constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford; and, of course, there are many others – if you had taken the time to actually take this bill out and speak to those people, you could have made it so much more comprehensive. You could have added to it some really important things that would only have taken a short period of time to determine.

I want to just briefly look at some of the recommendations that came out on this topic 20 years ago in a report that was freely available to this government by simply typing "immigrant women's qualifications" into a Google search. Even us old guys know about Google, you know. I think that it would have been really nice had you actually gone for a win on this one that was comprehensive and actually met the needs of the community. I know I'm sounding negative right now, but I'm going to vote for this bill because I really want people to have their qualifications properly assessed. But I've got to tell you that I would have loved to have seen more work being put into this so that I'd be happy to vote for it rather than saying: "Well, I guess that's all I'm going to get. I'll take what I can get, and then hopefully we can help push the government to do a little bit more real work as time goes on."

I noticed that under these recommendations – and there are just eight of them, so it's not that complicated. It's a fairly short report, about 40 pages. We were only given about $10,000 to do this study and to provide the report. There are a number of recommendations that I think are really important. The first one is that they recommend that we develop here in the province of Alberta a consistent accreditation policy, so the University Co-ordinating Council, IQAS ...

which, of course, is the international qualifications assessment service,

... and the professional associations agree on what is required.

Now, that one, I think, is what this bill is about, that we're actually trying to make sure that we understand what needs to happen. I congratulate you on getting one of the eight. I think it's a positive win.

But let's move on, just for a second, to the second recommendation that's here, and that is what is referred to in the report. When you go to read it – I'm sure many of you will be looking for it, certainly, after – the biggest barrier is the cost barrier for immigrant women. I assume it's also immigrant men, but we were only able, in our particular study, to speak with immigrant women. The second recommendation is to remove the cost barrier that prevents women from having their education assessed and their professional credentials accredited.

I think it would have been great in this bill if we could have put a section in that actually spoke to the costs and provided some kind of granting system or some kind of support for immigrant people to come into the province and have their foreign credentials recognized.

For many of you, I'm sure you've had a chance to speak with people in the community – or perhaps some of you even had the opportunity to go through this process; I don't know – and I'm sure you know that, in fact, in some cases it can be literally thousands of dollars to have this kind of a process completed, from beginning to end, as you apply for membership in organizations, as you apply for the opportunity to have your credentials analyzed. Of course, you have to obtain your credentials from a foreign country, and then frequently you have to have those credentials converted in terms of language, interpreted, and then, of course, you have to go to a Commissioner for Oaths or a notary public to get them approved, all stamped, and sent off. Thank goodness, MLAs can do that for you for free, but not everybody is aware of that, and that's one of the issues, I think, that's come up and that I think is addressed a little bit more going on here.

I would have really liked to have seen this government actually take a real good dig on this and find out: what are the barriers? Now, this is an old report. I recognize that maybe things have changed quite a bit, but in speaking to the people who come to my door, they're telling me that costs are still a problem. I would have really enjoyed it if there had been some kind of a mechanism addressed to reduce this or at least limit the amount of cost, suggesting to organizations that they can only charge a certain amount before someone is accredited. That would have been an addition to the bill that I would have deeply welcomed.

The third recommendation here in this report is to develop an IQAS ...

That is the international qualifications assessment service.

... marketing plan so employers and immigrants become aware of the service and its significance.

Now, it's been a while since the report was written, but I do know, from my conversations with people who come into my office, that they often do not know about everything that is available. I mean, I know that because very often they tell me how surprised they are that they can come to get the documents signed by myself as a notary public or a Commissioner for Oaths. And they only know about it because one of their friends happened to tell them about it or because I work very hard to work with the members of my own community and attend churches and synagogues and mosques and, you know, other community groups. Assist, as I mentioned, is in my community, and I try to drop by there three or four times a year and go out to their fundraising events. I am very much aware that there needs to be greater clarity on the process and some kind of a plan to make sure that people are aware of the services that are available.

This bill, again, could have spoken to that, some kind of action to actually help them. When you come into this country, there is so much that you have to contend with. Just moving into a new country is, by itself, a very significant issue, and it would be very nice if somehow the road was at least paved a little bit better, made a little bit smoother so that you could be more successful. I mean, we know from research that when immigrants come to this country, in the first couple of years that they are here, they often depend on a variety of social and public services, and I think that's great. Let me assure you that the left has worked very hard to create those services over the years in this country.

8:30

But we also know that they're absolutely worth the investment, that if you do create these kinds of services and you do smooth the road for them as they enter into the country, it does not take very long before they are absolute net contributors to the economy and they are running businesses and they're working for our institutions, whether they are private or public. They really are major contributors to why Canada is so successful, so why don't we pave the road for them a bit? Why don't we make sure that this all works very well?

Another one of the recommendations – in fact, two of the recommendations are very much the same, very close together – is that we review exams for foreign professionals to ensure that they test professional skills rather than English language skills and also review exams for foreign professionals to ensure that they test professional skills rather than English language skills with regard to each individual's profession examinations. One of the things that happens a lot, I know, when people come into my office to see me and ask for my help in terms of moving ahead on that immigrant experience is the fact that very often the barrier that stops people from moving forward is their English language skill, not their knowledge of medicine, not their knowledge of engineering, those kinds of things. What happens sometimes is that the testing does not show their knowledge of medicine or engineering because the language barriers are in the way.

To ask various organizations to make sure that they have clarity – which I think this bill does; therefore, I'm welcoming the bill. In terms of the process it would also be very important that you ask the organizations to ensure that their information is accessible to immigrants as they come into the country, and that means that things are written in plain language, that different terms or uses of knowledge that are quite appropriate to the profession involved are recognized even though they may not be the primary term that's used here in Canada. It may be a different approach in terms of how it's used in other places.

One of the other recommendations here is to allow foreign workers to work toward certification before they immigrate to Canada. Again, this bill: it would have been very nice if we could have created with these organizations an opportunity for people to begin the process long before they even come to Canada so that they aren't arriving at step zero and then moving forward but, rather, arriving much closer to the date of actually being accepted into the profession. Once they're here, they have so many other things they have to cope with. You have to put a roof over your head and food on the table. You have to get a job as a waiter or a cab driver or some other kind of activity because, obviously, the immediate needs need to be fulfilled. If you could have had most of your credentialing done when you were still back at your country of origin and you didn't have to worry in the same way about all those things because you had much greater family support and perhaps already owned a home and so on there, then you'd be much farther ahead.

The sixth recommendation here is that we need to do more to recognize foreign work experiences, and that means we need to actually ask institutions like medical associations and engineering associations to begin to work with us on – and I think the government has a very important role in all of this – how do we recognize the work that has been done somewhere else? What often people tell me is that when they arrive here, they're being told that they're starting at the very beginning all over again. They've suddenly gone from having been a doctor... [Mr. Feehan's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any others? The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Great. Thank you, Madam Chair. I wanted to rise and speak to Bill 11 and provide some commentary concerning the comments provided by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. First of all, I'd like to thank you for your support of the intent of the bill. That is greatly appreciated. It is fantastic that we work together, you know, on certain items that are of benefit to all Albertans and particularly to the immigrant community. That's greatly appreciated.

I wanted to comment on a couple of your comments that you made, concerns that Bill 11 is too weak or has no depth and just provide some opportunity for the background on this. I guess the first comment that I would make is that Bill 11 is the first step in our fairness for newcomers action plan. It's simply the first step. It is, you know, by its nature, not prescriptive legislation. It's overarching legislation, and it's very comprehensive in the number of trades and regulatory bodies that we deal with. If you refer to schedule 1, there are 64 bodies that we're dealing with. They all have different requirements and different approaches. By its very nature, because it's overarching and it's a governance document, it needs to be very general, but the intent behind it is to ensure – and we borrowed from the best of legislation in other jurisdictions, so Ontario, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia. The best elements we put here are so that we can work with the regulatory bodies to ensure that credentials can be recognized in a manner that's fair, that's transparent, efficient, and fast.

I understand your concern, actually, your first look at it, saying that it's not very prescriptive. That is by design because everyone is going to be different. But it does do some things I think that are really important. First, a six-month maximum for an interim decision. One of the things that we've heard and I'm sure you have heard from some of your constituents visiting you is that they've applied for their credentials, they get a response back, and the path forward is not clear, right? Or they get their response back, and it takes months and months and months for their response to get back, and some have even given up. This actually will impose a requirement that within six months of application, maximum, they must have a response and a clear path forward, so at least they know how they continue.

The second thing that it does is that it establishes an office, and the office will help these organizations put in a code. This code we actually pulled from the other legislations, and the code is really that you must have mechanisms that are fair and transparent, appeal mechanisms. On purpose we didn't set up this office to be the appeal mechanism because when you're talking about 64 different bodies, for us to become the arbitrator of all of these different bodies and different criteria would be incredibly difficult, and the potential to get it wrong is very high. We still believe that these regulatory bodies have the role, and this is the statutory role that we gave them to protect the interests of the public. What this does is say: you must do it in a fair way. We gave this bill teeth. This is a paramountcy clause in this, so it applies to all these regulatory bodies but also to government departments and the regulations and the legislation that applies to them. I would submit to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that we are deadly serious about this and getting it right and making it happen.

Then, as well, I would like to just point out some of the enforcement mechanisms, ability to do audits, and then our intent to work with the regulatory bodies. If we can't work with them, then the minister has the authority to issue compliance orders, fines, and then we go from there because at the end of the day, as the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford rightly points out, they are creatures of the state, and we need to control them.

I want to thank you for pulling out the report that you did in terms of other recommendations. As I indicated in my earlier remarks, the fairness for newcomers action plan: this is simply the first step. I would like to point you to our fairness for newcomers plan, which is in our platform. I'll mention a couple of things. As you were speaking in terms of recommendations, saying: where is the depth on these other issues? We actually have them in our plan. We just haven't gotten to them yet. For example:

Create an Alberta Government Mentorship for Newcomers Program to match immigrant professionals with mentors in the public service who can help to guide them through the process of credential recognition and finding employment at their skill level.

You mentioned IQAS, the international qualifications assessment service. We have a point in there to support and expand their work that assesses foreign degrees against the Canadian postsecondary standard. You mentioned concerns about – and we've recognized this – when newcomers come to Canada and their credentials aren't recognized, so they're having difficulty to pay for the exam. One point we have in here is to work with nonprofit groups like Windmill Microlending, which do this, to expand access to low-interest loans for immigrant professionals so they can actually write this exam. That was another point that you mentioned. Additionally, "support the work of immigrant settlement agencies to offer skills upgrading," so when they actually need to do some upgrading in terms of the courses that aren't recognized.

8:40

Then, lastly, one point you also made is: work with the federal government to offer prearrival orientation so they can start the credential process before they even get here. At the end of the day, what this is about is about bringing skilled workers into Canada to meet a skills shortage we have here. If we can't meet that skills shortage, our economy doesn't grow, and that's to the detriment not only of the new immigrants, but it's to the detriment of the Alberta economy as a whole.

One other thing I'd just like to point out in terms of our Alberta advantage immigration strategy is that we also made a commitment that we will do consultation on this. So recognizing that it's 20 years old, we need to update that to see what else is there – right? – and then move forward.

I would like to thank you for your support for the bill and concept, but hopefully with the bill in its context, you can be supportive of how it's written and the rest of our plan. Thank you for your comments.

The Chair: Any other comments, questions, or amendments with respect to Bill 11?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 11 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report Bill 11 and progress on 12 and 8.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 11. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 12, Bill 8.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move for a unanimous consent motion to waive Standing Order 77(1) and to move forward with third reading on Bill 11, which is the Fair Registration Practices Act.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 11 Fair Registration Practices Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to rise for the third reading of Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act.

This act builds on the good work that this government is already doing to grow Alberta's economy, get Albertans back to work, reduce red tape, and let the world know that Alberta is open for business. Once passed, Bill 11 will remove unfair barriers to professional licensure while maintaining Alberta's high professional standards.

Last week I had the opportunity to sit down and talk to a group of newcomers who experienced issues having their skills and experience recognized in Alberta. Along with the Premier, Minister Nicolaides, Parliamentary Secretary Yaseen, and representatives of professional regulatory organizations and agencies that provide assistance for new immigrants, I got to hear their stories.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, I'll just caution you on the use of names in this Assembly.

Mr. Copping: Thank you very much. My apologies.

We talked about the regulatory roadblocks that prevent skilled immigrants from achieving their full potential in their chosen professions. Mohamed Alkadi told us how Canadian institutions won't recognize his education unless he provides them with original credentials from the university he attended, but that university is back home in Syria, and Mohamed can't return to his war-ravaged country without risking being conscripted into the Syrian dictator Bashar al-Assad's army or worse.

We also heard from Jacqueline and Felix Sennyah, both natives of Malaysia, who recently became Canadian citizens. Jacqueline has a medical degree from a college in India and Felix has a law degree from the University of London. Neither is working in the professions they trained for because the accreditation process here is costly, lengthy, and uncertain. Instead, they had to take training and work in other jobs to provide income security for their young family.

We heard from Mervin Cereno, a graduate from the Philippines with over 20 years of professional experience. Mervin immigrated to Canada in 2016 as a federal skilled worker. He has been working hard ever since to get accredited in his field in Alberta, but he is still awaiting final approval.

Stories like these of frustrated dreams, wasted talent, and missed opportunities are far too common in our province. For too long too many highly trained and experienced immigrants with skills our province needs have been forced into jobs that they are overqualified for. It's one thing to take the best job available when work in your chosen field dries up; it's something else entirely when you can't get a job because of a flawed or unfair accreditation process.

In Canada it can take many months or sometimes even years for business and professional licensing bodies to recognize the credentials that newcomers earned elsewhere. In the meantime engineers are driving cabs on roads they should be designing, and doctors are cleaning floors in hospitals, where they should be saving lives. This is a tragic waste of human potential and a loss for all of us.

According to the Conference Board of Canada there are over half a million new Canadians working in low-paying jobs that they are overqualified for. The board estimates that they would earn as much as $12 billion more if their credentials were fully recognized, and they could be making a much larger contribution to our economy, including paying more taxes.

We want to work collaboratively with professional regulatory organizations to speed up the process where possible and increase fairness and transparency. Since introducing this legislation, we have heard positive feedback from many of these professional regulatory bodies, and we are confident that we can work together to reach our goals.

Turning to Bill 11, the primary emphasis for establishing regulatory requirements for a profession is public protection. However, regulatory professions must also serve the public interest by not placing unnecessary barriers for entry to a professional regulatory organization. The proposed legislation will ensure fairness and access to regulated professions for internationally trained individuals. It will achieve a balance between the mandate to ensure the safety of the public, the independence of professional regulatory organizations, and the Alberta government's commitment to ensure that registration practices are transparent, objective, impartial, and fair.

Provinces such as Ontario, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia have fairness legislation to ensure that professional regulatory organizations have fair registration practices and ways to administer this legislation.

We need to make this a priority. Work will flow through the fair registration practices office, and this office will reduce the red tape associated with the assessment of foreign credentials and remove barriers to the full economic inclusion of new Albertans. The proposed legislation makes sense for Alberta. International talent will help grow our economy and show the world that Alberta is open for business.

I thank all members of the Legislature for the comments they've made thus far, and I urge everyone in this Chamber to support this legislation. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the government and specifically the Minister of Labour and Immigration for bringing this bill forward because, of course, as has been stated time and time again, it's desperately needed. Speaking as someone from an immigrant community, I can tell you how difficult it was for my parents when they came here to Canada. Their credentials weren't recognized, and it took them a long while to get jobs in their specific field. Not only that, I remember my mother actually having to go back to postsecondary. She did design at NAIT so that she could upgrade and get the things that she needed so that she could then later on work here in the province of Alberta.

8:50

That being said, I can tell you that in the constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie it's widely diverse. You probably have people from all over the world that call Edmonton-Ellerslie home now. It's like having our own little United Nations there. There are many, many newcomers who call Edmonton-Ellerslie home, and I'm very happy to represent them.

I had the opportunity to grow up here. As I mentioned before in the House, there's a big difference between coming here as a refugee and coming as an immigrant. Of course, those who come as refugees are fleeing violence. They basically flee with the clothes that they have on their backs, maybe a few things. They're not prepared to actually leave in any concerted way. Immigrants usually have a lot longer to plan for their trip out of the country and to the new country that they're going to call home. The other big difference is the fact that refugees had to flee or they were exiled, and they're always thinking that they're going to be able to go back sometime because, of course, where they have come from is their home. There's a big difference there.

One of the things that I want to share as well is that not all refugees are able to go back home. This is the experience of the gentleman from Syria that you mentioned. It doesn't look like Syria is going to be changing any time soon, so a lot of the refugees that are coming from Syria, I suspect, are planning on staying here for quite a while and calling this their home forever.

That was the experience of many Chileans, of course. The military dictatorship ended up lasting 17 years. We never thought that it was going to last that long. We thought it was going to be maybe three, four years at the very most and that families would be able to go back. After 17 years there were a number of Chilean families that did end up going back, but there was a big difference. It was a big change. The country was not the same country that they had left, of course, not only politically speaking but economically speaking and also culturally speaking. There were a number of changes that had occurred.

That being said, the experience of many newcomers, as distinct as they may be – it's really important to consult with them. I'm glad that you had the opportunity to speak to some of them, Minister. I want to say that under the previous government, the Alberta NDP government, as has been shared a number of times, through our antiracism framework and strategy we actually went out and consulted with a number of communities. Within Edmonton-Ellerslie I took the opportunity to meet with a number of different ethnic communities. It was really interesting because all of them identified this as a major issue. All of them. Each and every ethnic community identified this as being a major problem.

I just want to be able to share with the minister a little bit of the feedback that I received while I was doing this consultation program. Now, of course, before I go into that, though, one of the things that the Alberta NDP government did was to work on establishing the mentorship program for accreditation, which seems quite similar to this. Other issues that were brought up by constituents were, specifically, the cost of having to go through the accreditation process.

Now, in the bill there are a number of associations listed, but the majority of the people that I spoke to were specifically nurses, doctors, some engineers, of course. All of them identified the cost of the accreditation process as being astronomical. There was one doctor that told me that through the process of having to go through several steps and then having to take a number of tests and things like that, it was almost $30,000 for him to get his accreditation and that, even still, he wasn't able to practise here in the province of Alberta. I think that the cost of the accreditation process is something that really desperately needs to be looked at. Perhaps that can be brought into line or made more economical or there are other ways that we can find to help specifically newcomers.

Of course, refugees, newcomers are coming with limited economic resources. For them to invest $30,000, $50,000 into an accreditation process is a significant amount of money, something that they could put towards buying a house or buying a car instead, which they also desperately need so that they can continue to function and work within the specific qualifications that they have.

Now, second was the completion of the English language requirement. There were so many of the constituents that I spoke to that highlighted this as being a major problem. It was the IELTS exam specifically that they were speaking about, that they had to reach a level of 8 in every classification. Some would go and take the exam, and they would get an 8 in all of them with the exception of one, where they would get a 7. So they would fail the exam. Then they would study, go back, and pay for the exam again – and I can't remember how much it was, off the top of my head, but it was a significant amount of money – and then they would get a 7 in another classification. What a lot of the constituents were saying to me is that if there was a way that they could perhaps amalgamate all the times that they take the exam – if they got an 8 the first time but the second time they got a 7, why couldn't they take both exams into consideration?

Of course, at the end of the day what we need are people who can speak English well, and the majority of these people can speak English very well. I mean, I would challenge each and every member within this House to go take that IELTS exam and see if they pass. I can tell you that I don't know if I would pass each level, all five of them. That's something that I'd like to share with the minister, of course, that they have to go through the process of taking several exams and it was very difficult.

The other thing that was highlighted by so many of the constituents that I spoke to was that regardless of going through the accreditation process and paying all that money, when they finally got the accreditation, the answer that they would get when they applied for jobs was: well, you don't have any Canadian work experience. Of course, other members have spoken to this already, that it's not only about foreign qualifications but also about foreign experience and if that could be taken into consideration.

When talking with constituents, we were kind of hashing out ideas, just kind of putting ideas out there. It would be really great if there was some kind of an incentive for Canadian businesses, Canadian institutions, through some kind of a subsidy, perhaps, similar to the summer temporary employment program, where if companies could be encouraged to hire newcomers, they would get the subsidy. That person could then train for six months, 12 months, whatever the case may be, at a subsidized rate and then continue to work within that institution or business, having now been accredited. They get the work experience that they need, and then they can continue either with that business or, now they have six to 12 months of Canadian work experience, they can go and apply for a job somewhere else. That was something that the constituents shared with me, of course.

Now, all this comes down to, of course, the dignity of work. I just really want to share this with all of you because so many times you hear this rhetoric, and I'm not suggesting that it's coming from anybody here in the House. So many times you tend to hear, "Oh, these immigrants are coming to take our jobs," which is something that you hear out in the public sometimes. I think that has got to be taken into consideration. There's that level of racism that exists within Alberta society. Some people have that kind of a viewpoint. Regardless, I mean, it's something that has to be taken a look at.

Then, of course, the other thing that's really important is that all of these people are coming here because they have families. The majority of them have families. Either those families are here, or they have families back home which they are desperately trying to bring here. I just want to give you the case of a Pakistani gentleman who lives in my constituency. He's lived in my constituency for over the past 10 years. His wife and his three children are still back home in Pakistan. He's desperately trying to bring them here. He's also going through this accreditation process of trying to get recognized as a doctor here in Alberta. Of course, he's working as a taxi driver, and I think he has one other job that he does during the day in order to make ends meet. At the same time, he's providing for his family back home, trying to bring them here. Of course, I just say this because newcomers to Canada are really hard-working people.

9:00

There's also the example of a recent Syrian refugee who opened up their own business. I think it was like a Nut Man kind of venue, where he roasts all of his own nuts and then goes to different businesses selling all of that, of course. This is just another example. These individuals that we're trying to help: they deserve their own dignity, and our government should be trying to do their very best to make sure that we're providing opportunities for everybody, where everybody has the opportunity to participate in this economy. We'll find that these newcomers to Canada have so much to contribute, and they're only going to enrich not only our economy but our culture and our political system.

With that, I'll say thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there anybody else wishing to speak to Bill 11? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate you recognizing me so I can just quickly stand in support of Bill 11. I know a lot of my colleagues here have spoken very, very well about this. Of course, Edmonton-Decore being as diverse as it is, this is some welcome legislation that I think builds very, very well on some of the work that the Member for Edmonton-North West did, especially around antiracism. This was one of the components that was very clearly identified as being a barrier to success for new Canadians coming to Alberta to work.

Just a couple of, I guess, brief comments that I hope will be taken well here. Going forward, as we know, there will be some regulations that are set up in terms of trying to work with the extensive list of associations and colleges and whatnot. My hope is that as these are established, they won't create a bit of a sense of urgency within government around its red tape mandate, the one in, one out. I don't want to see that rushed because they're trying to keep to a bit of a timetable here. It's, like: "Oh, my gosh. We brought in all these new regulations. We need to quickly bring out some other ones and rush around that."

My other comments, again, are just around all of the different organizations that are going to be working around this. There have been comments, of course, around working in co-operation with them and, you know, potential difficulties that may occur around that. Of course, I'm certainly no expert when it comes to some of these organizations, as maybe some of my other colleagues are with the ones that are self-regulating. Of course, I'm sure the process to get to that stage, to be able to self-regulate, wasn't a swift one, and there was probably a lot of effort that went into that.

You know, with a few of them, with just maybe some of the other legislation that's come through here, hopefully there hasn't been any significant animosity that's been created with these organizations that could create a barrier to this one being able to go through very, very smoothly. Hopefully, that will be taken into consideration as we go forward. Sometimes people can inadvertently think that their toes are being stepped on, and we certainly don't want to see that happen.

Again, you know, I'm very pleased to see this coming forward. I think it's good work that's being moved forward from what has been done previously by the former government. I look forward to hopefully seeing more of this in the future, that will allow my residents of Edmonton-Decore – as they come in with high credentials and whatnot, we can get them using that to the benefit of all Albertans going forward.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'll just remind all members to keep your conversations as low as possible. It's getting rather loud on all sides of this House when members are trying to speak.

With that, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if there are any comments or questions.

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, would the hon. minister like to close debate?

Mr. Copping: I move to close debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Very simple.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 8
Education Amendment Act, 2019
(continued)

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I move pursuant to Standing Order 3(1.2), I believe – thanks to Mr. Mason, actually, we don't have to move a motion. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 3(1.2) to give notice that there will be no morning sitting tomorrow, June 27, 2019. Do I have to do it outside of committee? We can do it after we rise and report later? Okay. That's fine.

The Chair: Okay. Are there any speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to put forward an amendment to Bill 8, the Education Amendment Act, 2019. I have the requisite copies here to distribute. I'll give it a moment.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.
Hon. member, please proceed.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. Would you like me to read the entire amendment?

The Chair: Pardon me?

Ms Pancholi: Would you prefer that I read the entire amendment?

The Chair: Yes, please.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment that we're putting forward today is an amendment to section 33 of the Education Act, 2012. It amends section 33(1)(c) by striking out "specialized," which is currently, actually, proposed in Bill 8, and by also adding the following after subsection (2) of section 33 of the Education Act.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The amended provision is subsection (2.1), and it states:

A policy established under subsection (2) must contain a distinct portion that addresses the board's responsibilities under section 35.1, and the distinct portion of the policy

- (a) must provide that a principal is responsible for ensuring that notification, if any, respecting a voluntary student organization or an activity referred to in section 35.1(1)
  - (i) is limited to the fact of the establishment of the organization or the holding of the activity, and
  - (ii) is otherwise consistent with the usual practices relating to notifications of other student organizations and activities,

and

- (b) must provide that a principal is required to
  - (i) immediately grant permission to establish a voluntary student organization or hold an activity at the school under section 35.1(1)(a), and
  - (ii) designate a staff member to serve as a staff liaison under section 35.1(1)(b) within a reasonable amount of time after receiving a request to establish a voluntary student organization or to assist in the organizing of an activity subject to section 35.1(4).

To break that down, Mr. Chair, to summarize, essentially what we are proposing here is an amendment that is consistent with what the Minister of Education has stated is her intent, which is to provide fulsome protections to LGBTQ students who are seeking to establish a GSA in their school.

9:10

This amendment would require that a principal is required to, first of all, immediately grant permission when a student makes a request for the establishment of a GSA or a QSA in their school and to designate a staff member within a reasonable amount of time after receiving the request to establish said GSA or QSA. It also requires that a principal is limited in their notification regarding the GSA or QSA. They're just simply limited to only notifying the fact of the establishment of the GSA or QSA and to otherwise treat the GSA and QSA as any other school activity or club or organization within the school.

Essentially, what we're doing here is appealing to the common sense of the Minister of Education in this Assembly. They have stated consistently in this House that they are looking to provide full protections to LGBTQ students by ensuring that they can seek the safety and security of a GSA. It is consistent with the spirit although not precisely of what's in the School Act currently, but really what it does is that it requires a principal to immediately establish that GSA and QSA when it is requested. This is really a common-sense amendment that came as a result of what we know to have been the case. I don't think anybody, even on the other side, has disputed that there are situations where we know that there were school administrators and principals which were hesitant, stalling, dragging their feet on establishing a GSA and QSA, putting it off so that the ultimate result was that a QSA or GSA was not established in a school even though a student had requested it.

This amendment would do precisely what the Minister of Education has said that she wants to do, which is to provide full protections to these students by requiring that the principal immediately establish that GSA. There should be really no, I guess, real reason why this would not proceed, because nobody here has said that they want to discourage the establishment of GSAs and QSAs. Simply providing clear direction to school administrators to do so immediately should not be anything that anybody in this House should have any issue with.

The other piece of this amendment is, again, to require that principals limit the notification to that there has been a GSA established or a QSA established in a school and to treat it as they would any other student organization or activity, just as, you know, a school administrator or teacher does not notify a parent or anybody else when their child joins the drama club or joins the chess club – you can tell what I did in high school – or joins, I guess, an athletic activity.

An Hon. Member: What?

Ms Pancholi: My fellow members are just realizing what I said.

It simply is treating the establishment of these clubs the same way as others and making sure that parents and teachers have clear direction about expectations around privacy.

Again, the Minister of Education has stood up just very recently, when she spoke to this bill on it being introduced in Committee of the Whole, and stated that she does not support the mandatory outing of kids. We're just asking, simply, that clear direction be provided to school administrators, which is exactly what they asked for a couple of years ago, which is saying: we need some assistance in dealing with, potentially, children and students fearing that they're going to be outed for joining a GSA. We know that there are instances where school administrators did advise students that if they were to join a GSA or to ever request a GSA, they may have to speak to their parents. We know that's the case. That is a factual statement. We have provided information repeatedly in this House in evidence of that. We need to give students assurances that they can seek to establish a GSA or a QSA and not fear that they will be outed.

This is going to also provide clear direction to any school administrator who is questioning the application of the FOIP Act, because the FOIP Act provides a lot of discretion. This amendment will provide direction to school administrators as to how to apply that discretion under the FOIP Act. The FOIP Act currently allows for school administrators to determine whether or not it is unreasonable to disclose membership in a GSA as a breach of privacy, whether that is a breach of privacy. There's incredible discretion allowed in the FOIP Act for them to do that.

This provision in the Education Act will provide clear direction that it is presumed that there will not be a disclosure. That is the kind of direction that members, that teachers, that principals have sought. They've sought; they've looked to it. They spoke to the previous government and said: "We need your help. We need your help to make sure our members know how to protect their students' rights, how to interpret these complicated privacy provisions, how to apply this discretion. Therefore, we need some direction." It provided clarity, which is exactly what teachers needed, and most importantly it's what students needed. These students are the most vulnerable students. We've repeatedly provided significant evidence to talk about how vulnerable they are, how much it takes for them even to come forward in a school setting to request a GSA, and they need additional assurances to know that joining a QSA or requesting the establishment of one is not going to result in the disclosure of very deeply personal, private information about their sexual orientation, which in very real circumstances has led and could lead to safety concerns, could lead to damage to their mental health, could lead to them being shunned by their family or their community. It was very important that everybody be very clear that this is meant to be a private space. This is meant to be a space for security and for safety for students.

We bring forward this amendment because we think it is true to the intentions that the Minister of Education has stated in this House, that she is seeking to protect these vulnerable students. These amendments can be brought forward with the Education Act. As the minister has stated, she would like to modernize the education system. She believes that bringing forward the Education Act and proclaiming it will do that. That may be the case, but she also has stated very repeatedly that she wants to protect these students, so we're asking, we're appealing to this House and this Assembly to please consider making these very common-sense amendments, which can provide clear direction and security to some of the most vulnerable students in our school system. It is what kids are asking for, and it is what school administrators are asking for, and it is what teachers are asking for, and it is what we owe these kids.

I really encourage the members of this House to consider this. This is a common-sense, practical change that responded to a very real need that was brought up previously. We have lots of evidence – and you've heard it in this House – to support it. We're asking, we're appealing to say: please consider these amendments; they are practical, they are reasonable, and they're the right things to do.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Going forward, this amendment will be referred to as A1. Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Northwest, indeed. Go northwest, young man. Thank you so much for this opportunity, Chair, to speak to this amendment to Bill 8. I'm really glad to see this come to the Chamber. As I have described a couple of times, the construction of Bill 24 and the changes that I made to reform what was Bill 10, the first stab at building GSA and QSA legislation here in the province of Alberta, were based on real-life experience and practical considerations from the field. I received a lot of complaints about timeliness in regard to putting together or allowing a GSA and getting a teacher sponsor for that GSA.

So I think that this amendment brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud seeks to address that in a very practical, reasonable sort of way. Mr. Chair, what I had described to you before as a scenario by which we can seek some common ground and try to, you know, demonstrate first principles, which are that we are building legislation here with Bill 8, the education act, to ensure the high quality of education and the protection and the safe and caring environment that we want to create for all children in schools so that they can learn: this amendment, I believe, adheres to those principles in all ways.

I think that what all schools are looking for is clarity, and they're looking for an acknowledgement of the work that they've already done in regard to building their own school policies, you know, going through sometimes several years of having GSAs and so forth. They're looking for an affirmation and acknowledgement that that work that they've done will remain secure and that the next generation of kids coming up next fall in school will have the opportunity for a safe and caring environment, which can include a GSA or a QSA if students choose to call it as such.

9:20

Yeah. I mean, I'm going to keep it quite succinct here, Mr. Chair, because I think that the amendment kind of speaks for itself. I think that if the government sort of thinks through it, this one is pretty acceptable.

You know, again, I don't want to be the one giving out free bits of advice, but this whole thing is very volatile. Like I said before, just the notion of opening up how GSAs are run and the whole thing that's happened here in the last few weeks has really compromised a lot of people in terms of feeling safe and secure. And we're talking about kids that are already not feeling particularly secure, right? So by perhaps reaching back and demonstrating collaborative work here in this Chamber, we can help to walk some of that back, because there are the words that are printed on the page, Mr. Chair, around the laws that we pass here, but then there's the tone that we set in general by moving in a certain direction.

I would suggest that this amendment helps to defuse some of those problems that have been created over the last few weeks. In my humble opinion, I think that this would be a reasonable amendment for all members of the House this evening to accept.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Do I see any other hon. members? I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has the call.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak on this amendment, that was thoughtfully put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. I have to say that it's really a privilege for me as leader of this party to be able to rise to speak to this amendment after, first, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who was a diligent public servant and lawyer who worked within the public service to do a tremendous amount of the drafting of the Education Act, which Bill 8 is allegedly designed to bring in, notwithstanding that she didn't work on the part with the flawed attempts to protect LGBTQ kids. Nonetheless, she comes to the table with a tremendous amount of expertise on this as well as a dedicated record of public service that is focused on actually getting the job done.

Then, of course, on the second hand, I'm honoured to be able to speak after the Member for Edmonton-North West, who I personally know spent a tremendous amount of time working on constructing Bill 24 in order to fix the plethora of problems that existed in both the School Act and Education Act as a result of the changes that were included in the previous government's Bill 10. Indeed, we spent a lot of time working together because every time we thought we'd fixed something, we would realize there was another problem and then be coming back, and we'd be trying to problem solve it. And we got a number of legal opinions to try and figure out what was the best way to genuinely protect these vulnerable kids in these schools.

You know, we talked yesterday and I talked yesterday about the very long and sordid history of the efforts of the LGBTQ community in Alberta to have rights for these kids in schools protected. We've gone through the many, many elements of what is currently in this bill and the way in which it will very actively serve to leave them unprotected.

But what this amendment does is that in that very limited application, in the public schools that this government has chosen to have covered by this sort of protection, it would apply just to them. This amendment does not extend the right to be free from discrimination to the private schools that nonetheless receive 70 per cent of their funding from the taxpayers. Rather, it would just apply to public schools. In addition, this amendment does not deal with the idea of creating a safe and caring school overall. You know, as we've said before, the current Bill 8 rolls back the provisions that our government had put in place to ensure that schools had safe and caring policies that specifically spoke to the right of LGBTQ kids and teachers to be treated with respect and equality and safety in the school environment.

Now, the members opposite, for some reason, are uncomfortable with having that kind of policy. Nonetheless, they claim that they are still interested in ensuring that kids who request a GSA will get a GSA. Now, to be clear, we have laid out that you're going to get a much lower number of kids requesting a GSA if they go to school within a school where institutionalized discrimination is permitted, as is the case now in many, many schools across this province.

Nonetheless, let us for a moment take the Education minister at her word, where she says that she wants, really, for kids who want a GSA to be able to have a GSA should they request a GSA in that smaller subset of schools where this government thinks that that is appropriate. All we are trying to do is give meaning to the words and the assertions of the Education minister, that in that smaller subset of schools in the province of Alberta that are fully publicly funded where a kid, regardless of whether or not they are operating within a school that has discriminatory practices, has the courage of their convictions and they seek out the opportunity to create their own supports in order to support both themselves and/or others, other kids in that school, to provide them support, and reach out and ask for that GSA to be established, it be established.

We have told Albertans and we have told this government over and over that we weren't just making this up. The reality was that we had a very serious problem that existed in a number of the fully publicly funded schools in this province where, when an LGBTQ child came forward or, quite frankly, a straight kid who wanted to support their friends who were members of the LGBTQ community came forward and asked to establish a GSA, in effect the administration could subvert that request by delaying it and by dragging their feet and making sure that it never happened. We heard that this happened and that this happened a lot and that sometimes they just dragged their feet and it never actually happened.

Other times they dragged their feet, and they started negotiating with the kids: "Really? You want a GSA? How about you just have an outdoor recreation club and invite those friends to it. Really? You want a GSA? What about a drama club? Really? You want a GSA? How about a social justice club?" These were the kinds of things. And slowly these kids were sort of, you know, broken down by the ongoing, very intentional delay and refusal of senior administrators within the schools to say: "Yes, of course. You have come forward, and you have asked for a GSA, and the Minister of Education has been on the record saying that kids who want a GSA should get a GSA, so of course we shall have a GSA."

All this amendment that we are putting forward today is designed to do is to ensure that where a GSA is requested, it is in fact permitted immediately. It doesn't mean that the principal has to wave a magic wand and set up a GSA that second. That's not it at all. All they have to say is: "Yes. I give permission. There will be a GSA." Then the other work has to happen within a reasonable time, the work of finding an adviser and all that kind of stuff, and reasonability is read into the amount of time that it takes to actually create that school club.

9:30

So this is a very, very, very simple amendment. It is solely designed to ensure that in that subset of Alberta schools that are fully publicly funded, this government has limited itself to paying attention, with respect to the rights of LGBTQ kids, in that in those schools, notwithstanding policies that may well overtly or subtly discriminate against LGBTQ kids, those kids can have a GSA should they push through that subtle or overt discrimination or, should there be no subtle or overt discrimination, they simply articulate their right to have a GSA. This is about making sure that they get to assert that right. This is about addressing the real problems that we know are true, that without this language they will not be able to assert the right if the principal doesn't want them to. That's the bottom line. Without this language, they will never have the right to assert their request to have a GSA. That is the meaning of the language as it exists; the amendment will fix that.

We have heard the House leader, we have heard the Premier, we have heard the Minister of Education, and I believe we might even have heard the Minister of Children's Services say: we have the best statutory protection for GSAs in the country. What we are telling you is that the way this legislation is written right now – well, on the face of it, we already know that it's not the best because we've already tabled, of course, a number of other examples which are much more fulsome. But even here, if what you really mean is that you want to give that subset of kids who attend publicly funded schools in the province of Alberta the right to have a GSA, then you must write the language to give them that right.

That is not what the language says right now. The amendment that was put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud would fix that. It's a very, very simple change, and I can't imagine why anyone would vote against this amendment if they truly believed that this was what they were trying to achieve. It really is a litmus test for whether that is what this government is trying to achieve or not. I, like my colleagues, will not take a long time talking about it other than to say that the test is there for you, and now you have to take the test. We urge you to pass the test. We urge you to act in accordance with your stated objectives.

More important than whether or not you act in accordance with your stated objectives, we also urge you to make these amendments that are necessary to protect these vulnerable kids in our schools. Over and over and over again we have outlined what you must know is true. LGBTQ kids who are forced to hide who they are, whose families don't support them, who are bullied at school, who are told by their teachers or their coaches that they're not good enough, who are told by other leaders in their communities that they are not good enough: those kids are at greater risk not only of the worst outcome, you know, hurting themselves, suicide, but also they are at greater risk of anxiety, of depression, of ill health, of homelessness, of general family disorder, and ultimately unhappiness.

I can't imagine that a person in this House would actually want to allow that to continue, understanding what they do, that this is true, that this is what happens when LGBTQ kids are not allowed access to the kinds of supports they need in order to fully explore who they are in a loving, accepting, supportive environment. That's all these are about. It is really ultimately on their behalf that we are making this request that this government move forward and ensure that this provision is put in place so that in that smaller subset of groups of schools where kids request a GSA, even where they request it in the face of other policies and actions and behaviours that are allowed to prevail within the school, they still can get that safe place in the school for them. They need to have one safe place in that school. We've eliminated the obligation for the school to provide that the whole school is a safe place. That's what we've already done through Bill 8.

What we are asking is that you give meaning to the request that they have one safe place and that that be the GSA. That is what this amendment will do. We urge members to vote for that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's always a pleasure to rise in this Assembly and to speak on this amendment here. It's always difficult to rise after the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. She speaks so eloquently on why this amendment is so important.

I think it's something that when we actually stop and read the contents of this amendment, when we actually go through it, we realize that, basically, it only adds one thing, an immediacy requirement – right? – a requirement that principals not drag their feet on allowing a gay-straight alliance or a queer-straight alliance to be established, a GSA or a QSA.

I know that hon. members of the government bench and the government backbench have spoken quite a bit at length about. I know the hon. Minister of Education has stated many times that this government unequivocally supports GSAs. I know the hon. Minister of Justice, in fact, many times during his leadership campaign and then many times thereafter spoke at length about how he supports GSAs and that homophobia should have no place in the Conservative caucus. I believe that many members of the government and the government caucus actually do believe that, Mr. Chair. They do understand how important it is for GSAs to exist and for QSAs to exist and how these actual programs and clubs do save lives. I know the hon. Minister of Finance himself, in fact, just today in question period spoke about how he unequivocally supported GSAs and supported – he referred them to as inclusion groups. I understand that sometimes it's hard to say “gay-straight alliance,” but that's the reality of what we're fighting for here.

If the reality is that these members are telling the truth and that the government bench is telling the truth, Mr. Chair, it should be a small matter to go forward and say that, well, they do believe that they want the strongest provisions and that they're trying to build the strongest provisions in the entire country around gay-straight alliances. We know it's not quite there yet, but this is a step towards that direction. Immediately granting this permission to students would allow students to then have a discussion around: who is a reasonable staffperson, when will we be able to meet, and when will we have a facility established? Those are the types of questions that are logistical concerns, but we know that we're getting towards the right step. That's something that I think all members of the Assembly can recognize is a good thing for students – right? – to give students the certainty that they will be allowed to establish the clubs they want.

Mr. Chair, I'll admit I'm quite a bit younger than most people in this Assembly, and in fact I remember that in 2014, when the original Bill 10 was being brought through this Assembly, I was a student. I was a student in high school. I recall the arrogant Conservative government, the Progressive Conservative government at the time, actually telling students: well, if your principal doesn't want to give you a GSA and drags their feet, you should take them to court, right? That was the messaging, the arrogance that the Conservatives had at the time, that the Progressive Conservatives had at the time. It was something that I thought was shocking. I mean, students thought it was shocking, and it was something that I know this government doesn't want. This government doesn't want to be wasting school board resources and education resources on fighting frivolous lawsuits around GSAs and QSAs that are legislatively protected, that we know need to be established immediately.

What this amendment does is for greater clarity. It would allow these students to know that they have that right to a GSA, to be in, as the government likes to call them, inclusion groups, to be included in their own schools. It would immediately give them that protection.

If we truly believe, which I know many members do – and I've spoken to many members who have spoken at length about how they believe that – that students deserve this right and that this will help save the lives of those students and improve their mental well-being and the mental health of those students, I think it's important that we stop and say that this isn't a time for partisanship. This isn't a time to reject an amendment because it comes from the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. This isn't a time to play games with students' lives. This is a time to realize that if we can pass a good amendment that will help kids, we should.

9:40

I really hope that members of the government will get up and speak to this sometime tonight. I mean, I know that a number of opposition members have already spoken to this tonight, spoken to why it is so important. But the stories that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and Leader of the Opposition had spoken to about how principals would say, “Well, would you rather join a drama club?” or “Would you rather join a rugby club?” or “Would you rather do X or Y?”: those were the types of stories that weren't just around as fables or as hypotheticals. Those were the things that were actually happening on the coattails of the arrogance of the Conservatives, and they knew that was going to happen in 2014 there. They knew that was going to happen, and that's why they asked students to go to court.

I don't think anybody in this Assembly believes that high school students should be wasting their time hiring lawyers and going to court. Especially not if they're making $13 an hour can they afford many lawyers, Mr. Chair. I don't believe that anybody in this Assembly thinks that students should be going to court to fight for their rights and fight for what this legislation ostensibly protects. I don't think anybody in this Assembly thinks that students should have to file appeals with the Privacy Commissioner after they've already been outed.

I think that we have the opportunity here to close a loophole that perhaps was an oversight by the Minister of Education. Perhaps it was something the government hadn't considered, that this immediacy and the relevance of moving forward with speed for these GSAs was important. I mean, we recognize that, of course, it takes time to establish these clubs, and it takes time to designate a teacher. It takes time to designate a staff liaison. That's why in section 2.1(b)(ii) there is a reasonableness clause – right? – that allows for an amount of time after receiving a request.

But those students, Mr. Chair, in that interim before that club is actually established, deserve the certainty and the peace of mind to know that they are allowed to move forward, to know that they have a government that is looking out for them, to know that they will not be blocked because of politics, to know that they will not be blocked because one teacher or one principal does not agree with their lifestyle, does not agree that they are gay, and does not think that it's something that is wholesome for them. I think that is something that this Assembly can send as a strong message to students, that they will immediately have those protections. I think that's something that is a very reasonable request of this Assembly. It's something that isn't partisan. If what the members of the government have said is true, if they truly do support GSAs, then it's something that I think we should all be able to support.

This actually aligns, I think, as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and the Member for Edmonton-North West spoke at length about, to what this government has been saying over and over and over again in this Assembly. It actually agrees with the principle that we should be protecting these students. It actually agrees with the principle that GSAs and QSAs are important to our students, and I think it's something that's very important.

I mean, I hope we're going to hear from one of the ministers here, perhaps, or even a government backbencher on what their caucus may decide tonight about this amendment. This amendment is not just a small change in one word. I mean, legislatively it's not a large document, of course – it's one page – but what it will do is that it will show students that we are putting our actions into play and that it's not just all empty talk, Mr. Chair. That's what we're showing students, that it's not just partisanship, it's not just talk, but we're actually showing them that this legislation will work.

I mean, I can't speculate, Mr. Chair, but I would be concerned about some of the things that perhaps the school that the Minister of Finance is on the board for would do without immediacy, because there are ample opportunities for a school like his, where the Minister of Finance was actually on the board, and in their actual policy book it spoke to how these were demonic practices and how they were sins. I know that many members of this Assembly don't agree with that. I know the Minister of Finance has spoken at length himself, especially in question period, about how he supports GSAs now. I really do want to believe that. I really do want to believe that students that attended that school that the minister was on the board of would have the opportunity to start a GSA if they so requested, would have the opportunity to start a QSA if they so requested. But I will actually assure the Minister of Finance. I will assure him that this amendment actually doesn't affect that because this amendment is only for public schools. It doesn't affect private institutions. It doesn't affect religious institutions like that. But, in fact, it is something that we are only keeping narrowly defined to what is already in the scope of this bill.

So I think it's a very reasonable ask. It doesn't impede the minister's rights and the minister's schools' rights. It doesn't impede his ability to tell students to be gay or not to be gay. But it does allow us to tell students in public institutions that the bill will be enacted immediately, that the protections they have will be enacted immediately.

It's something that, Mr. Chair, I feel very strongly is important because I saw first-hand, when I was in high school, how important these clubs were, how important GSAs and QSAs were. Again, I've spoken to it in the past, but these weren't anything creative or special. At the GSA at my high school they had a popcorn machine, and we'd go into the film studies room and screen a film – I believe it was every Thursday – and then after everybody would talk. I think they charged 25 cents for a little paper bag of popcorn. That was the entirety of the meetings that we had every week, and it was important because it showed students that it didn't matter whether you were lesbian, whether you were gay, whether you were bisexual, whether you were two-spirited, whether you were queer, whatever you identified as; students were able to come together and watch the latest Toy Story movie, because that's all students want to do.

They want to know that as a group they can feel safe and hang out. That's what we want principals in schools to do immediately for students. For our publicly funded and separate schools, we want them to be able to immediately know that they can go have that movie night under the name "GSA" or "QSA." That, I think, is something that students deserve.

I know, Mr. Chair, that students perhaps can't vote. They're not 18 yet in the majority of cases, but even though that's true, I think that they deserve the opportunity to live their lives the way they see fit. We know that in many cases students feel the safest at school because that's where all their friends are, that's where the teachers they trust are, and that's where they spend the vast majority of their formative years.

Because of that, we understand that having the GSA on school grounds is one of the most important things. It provides a venue, and you're not, then, asking students to have to go rent a community hall with funds they won't have. You're not asking students to go and fight in court to get something started with funds and lawyers that they don't have access to. We understand that the relevance of having that quickly implemented is important for these students because students, especially students who are in a vulnerable mental state, Mr. Chair, who may have mental health issues, who may be LGBTQ and have many things going on in their lives – we know that sometimes you just need a little bit of certainty. Sometimes you just need a space that you can go to and where you know your friends are there and you know that the people you trust and care about are going to pat you on the back.

Mr. Chair, I'm sure every single member of this Assembly can relate to that. I'm sure every single member of this Assembly can name a time that maybe they were feeling a little down and needed a friend. That's what GSAs do. We should immediately grant permission for these kids to be able to identify that way and have that space where they can pat each other on the back, where they can go watch a movie, where they can share a soda pop. It's not complicated. It's not something that is special. It's not something that is unusual. What students want to do is be students, be kids, and be allowed to be who they are while they're being kids.

I hope members of the government can understand that. I mean, I know that a lot of them have spoken at length about how they understand that. They have spoken at length about how they unilaterally support, unequivocally support gay-straight alliances, Mr. Chair, and support the formation of gay-straight alliances. If they indeed were telling the truth, if they indeed actually support GSAs, then there is no reason not to tell schools and school administrators that GSAs must immediately be granted permission.

9:50

That's all students are asking for. They're asking for permission to hang out in a space that will be safe for them. They're asking for permission to have a childhood where they feel like they are accepted, where they feel they are loved, and that is something I think every single member of this Assembly, Mr. Chair, should be proud to fight for. We should be proud to be supporting our students to have, as the government likes to call them, inclusion groups. We should be proud to be able to say that those inclusion groups would be formed immediately.

I can't think of a single reason not to accept this amendment, Mr. Chair. I hope that somebody from the government will get up tonight and explain to us what their direction will be on this, whether they support this amendment, whether they think there are flaws with this amendment and would like to amend it again, whether they will be rejecting this amendment.

Mr. Chair, these are the questions that Albertans and students deserve answered, because there are no tricks behind this amendment. There is nothing in this amendment that will attack private or charter schools. There is nothing in this amendment that will infringe on the rights of parents. There is nothing in this amendment that is a blatant partisan attack. All it is is a common-sense updating of language so that students can have timeliness to their requests. I think that's something that most members of this Assembly should understand.

In fact, Mr. Chair, the government speaks at length to how they are conservatives and they strive for efficiency and all of those things, and really all we're asking for is a little bit of efficiency in making sure these GSAs and QSAs get established – right? – making sure that these gay kids and queer kids are able to have that space immediately. I hope members of the government are listening.

I hope members of the government understand the impact this will have, because this was fought already, Mr. Chair. This exact debate happened in this Chamber basically five years ago, in 2014, when Bill 10 was first introduced and with Bill 202 as well under Laurie Blakeman. When this debate happened, Albertans and students made it clear that the right to establish a GSA shouldn't be dictated by how much your school administrator liked you, right?

Mr. Chair, I'm sure many members of this Assembly will have a story about how they got into an argument with a teacher, with a principal, or a vice-principal at some point in their lives. Perhaps they mouthed off at the wrong time. We don't believe here in the opposition that that should be a reason you're not allowed to have a GSA, that that should be a reason that that administrator can then drag their feet. That's something that I feel very strongly about. I feel very strongly that no matter who you are or what you've done, you should be able to have that safe and caring environment provided for you, especially when we are as legislators and as the education system and the Education minister in charge of so many of these students' formative years, so many of these students' lives for so much of their time.

Why would we vote against this? Why would we speak against this? I could not tell you, Mr. Chair. I'm hoping we'll hear from any member of the government on how they feel about this amendment. I hope we'll hear from any member of the government backbench on how they feel about this. Perhaps the Member for Drumheller-Stettler would like to get up and talk about how he supports GSAs and that this would be something that he would support having in one of the schools he taught at. Perhaps the Minister of Finance would like to get up and speak about how he would support a GSA in the school that he was a board member of. I think those are all very important questions.

I think it's very important that we take a good, long look at the amendment and realize that there are no tricks going on. I feel like the government looks at our legislation and amendments and they always think there's going to be a trap door. Well, Mr. Chair, the trap door is only there if you walk into it. Really, the solution is going to be to support this common-sense amendment, allow it to pass, and let students know that they are safe, they are protected, and their government cares for them.

We have the opportunity to do the right thing right here tonight. We have the opportunity to tell every single student in this province that we care about them. So I really urge all members of the government and the opposition here to support this amendment. I hope we will hear from a member from the government, whether it is the Minister of Finance or the Member for Drumheller-Stettler or anybody else, for that matter. But we will see, Mr. Chair, and I think that will be the test, and that will tell us whether they walk into that trap door.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I believe I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview standing to speak to amendment A1.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise and also speak to the amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Of course, as has been described by my colleagues, the slight adjustment to the bill in the form of the amendment is to include that a principal must immediately grant permission to create a GSA and designate a staff liaison so that students may have a GSA in a very timely manner. This, of course, gives a timeline for fulfilling this request, which, sadly, Bill 8 doesn't include at this time. We know that students don't need GSAs in due course; they need them now. This amendment will absolutely ensure that principals do act now. So although it's sort of a small step, it is a significant one.

We know that students who are grappling with their sexuality often feel isolated. They're not accepted, they feel that they don't belong, and indeed they're afraid to actually be open about who they are. It may not be safe for them to reveal their true selves. Of course, part of, you know, being a human being is that we all need to belong. It's just a fundamental aspect of being human. For young people, when they're trying to fit in, the teenage years are – I don't know; for me, for sure, they were horrific. I know that it's a very difficult time, and when you have this added challenge, when you know you're sort of, in quotes, not normal, it can be extremely painful and create a lot of challenges for young people. This fundamental need to belong can be met by the creation of a GSA in a timely manner for students so that they can be with straight, gay, queer, trans, other kids and be accepted in, you know, a safe community.

I spoke previously in the House regarding my middle son. He was bullied quite a bit when he was in sort of later elementary, grades 5 and 6, and he, of course, never ever shared this with me. He blamed himself and just kept it all quiet, to himself, instead of reaching out to his teachers or his dad or to me as his mom. He didn't actually reveal this to me until he was in his junior high years, so maybe it was grade 8 or 9. This made all the difference for him because I was able to accept and love him despite this challenge, because he kind of blamed himself. He thought that he was doing something weird and that that's why kids were giving him a hard time, and he had a lot of shame. I mean, I'm not trying to equate this at all with the things that kids who are struggling with their sexuality go through, but I think that, you know, all of us can understand just how hard it is when you're not belonging and, in fact, you're being ridiculed because you're different or people are sort of picking on some weakness that's part of you.

I know that for my son it made all the difference for him when he could be accepted and supported. He didn't have a group that would accept him in school so much, but he did find that in his home. Unfortunately, so many children don't have that. They won't be accepted, unfortunately, in their homes, and that is sad. Certainly, I think that the more, perhaps, different you are, the more likely that is.

10:00

You know, working as a social worker for the last 30 years, I certainly saw a lot of kids who were not accepted by their parents, and for various reasons a lot of times parents themselves certainly had their own challenges. They had lots of barriers to them being able to be present and supportive of their children. It could be from poverty or their own, you know, significant abuse that they'd experienced as children and that perhaps they were experiencing right now in an unhealthy domestic violence situation. These kinds of things take people out, and they cannot always be there for their kids. So why wouldn't we create a GSA in schools so that kids can have that support in an environment that is available to them already, with a timeline on that so that the principals do not put this off? As the Leader of the Official Opposition spoke about previously, unfortunately some principals had suggested different kinds of groups that might address that issue and weren't really willing to create a GSA in a timely manner.

We all say, of course, that this is what we want, you know, that people will do this or want to support kids. But we do have to have timelines. We do have to make sure that the full intent of supporting kids is implemented. As has been said before, if this sometimes isn't in place, things are not carried through on.

I think this amendment makes eminent sense, and I think that it can very much support children to have a safe place where they may not have that safe place anywhere. As I've said before, we know that having, really, just one relationship where people can reveal who they are and still be accepted for who they are, you know, could make all the difference in someone's life. That can shift their thinking from blaming themselves and getting down on themselves so much to a point where they might start having suicidal ideation. They might start thinking that that's the best way for them to resolve these issues and these challenges that they're experiencing, and then they begin to develop a plan, and they think about: "How am I going to do this? I'm going to go to my parents' cabinet maybe, and I'll get some drugs out of that." There are a million ways that kids can think of to do that. Unfortunately, we know that suicide amongst the LGBTQ community is much higher than for the straight community.

Again, Mr. Chair, it just makes a lot of sense that we would not delay, that we would make sure that principals would act on creating GSAs in a timely manner immediately, and that we would also make sure that there is staff support to help the young people who would be attending this. I did cite previously that we know that not only are LGBTQ kids supported through these gay-straight alliances, but also other kids are. The risk of actual suicide for heterosexual males was cut by 50 per cent. A study in B.C. was done. It just creates a whole inclusive environment in a school, and it, of course, builds momentum over time. If a GSA has been created that first year, maybe people are a little bit hesitant, but as time goes on, that school – it actually impacts how welcoming and supportive they are of difference, and I think that that is something that needs to be responded to. Therefore, the amendment, that says, "Yes, a principal must fulfill this request immediately," is very important.

I've also spoken previously about a younger friend of mine who is, you know, a professional. He has an undergraduate degree. He has many relationships, has been successful in his career, can provide for himself, takes care of himself financially, but he has still, at the age of 26, 27, not told his parents that he's a gay man. He's still afraid to at this age. I just want members to reflect on that, that a man who's had worldly success and achieved some significant goals is still afraid to share with his parents. So how much greater would that fear be for a younger person? I think that when we're making a decision about this, we need to really keep that in mind.

I mean, this amendment certainly ensures that a GSA is established in a timely manner. It's a small but vitally important amendment to Bill 8. I think that it's really so crucial that all members of the House support this amendment so that vulnerable kids can actually have the support of a GSA in their schools, support that they may not have at home. Even if they may have it at home, they may still not be sure about their sexuality, so they're not willing to bring that up themselves.

I mean, you know, my son is a straight male, but at that time he couldn't tell me. Like, he was at his own developmental level. He was just afraid, and he felt like he was to blame or something for that bullying. I think that that is kind of a normal thing for young people, that they often sort of think: "Well, it's my fault. I'm weird. I shouldn't be like this. It's my fault that someone is giving me a hard time." Certainly, we know that that's true oftentimes in relationships where there is abuse and things like that. Oftentimes the victim blames themselves; therefore, they don't seek out help.

Creating these safe havens for these young people in a timely manner with support from staff at the school is crucial, really, to supporting kids to feel like they belong, and then the benefit, as we've talked about previously, has a ripple effect. Not only is that LGBTQ student supported, but so is that heterosexual student, and so is maybe that newcomer to the community or maybe that kid who moved from a little, small town to the city and now are in this place that they don't feel like they belong. You know, we could go into many different constellations of characters to see who could be supported.

I just want to stress, Mr. Chair, that, you know, creating safe spaces for students is key, and it's not something that can be delayed. These students need support. We know of too many – too many – tragic stories where they're not supported, and then there sometimes are very dire consequences before that. So I urge all members of this Assembly to vote in support of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie rising to speak.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Everything okay?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Absolutely. How are you doing?

Member Loyola: I'm doing fantastic, sir. I'm doing fantastic.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair is the comment that I would like to make at this point.

Member Loyola: Through you, of course, Mr. Chair.

Through you, I stand to support the amendment that has been brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, of course, and speak briefly to it. Before actually getting into the specifics of the amendment, I just want to kind of set the stage and frame it because I think it's very important that we all have a particular understanding. I know that a lot of people have shared their particular perspectives on this issue.

10:10

I want to go back to what I talked about yesterday in terms of privilege. Unless you've actually lived the experience of someone who is LGBTQ, you don't really understand the fear, for example, that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was highlighting as she was speaking and talking about the fact that her friend, who is a man, is still not out and finds it very difficult to share his sexual orientation with the rest of the world. The reality of that is because people fear having to lose opportunities because of discrimination. It's very clear that this discrimination against people of a specific sexual orientation continues to exist. Because of this, it's very important that people who have the privilege of not being LGBTQ or not having the experience of living the reality and not knowing what that discrimination looks like are strongly aware that the lack of opportunities exist for people who are LGBTQ because of the discrimination that continues to exist.

Of course, the proper way to address this as a society is by making sure that we establish healthy relationships. We all need to learn how to be more healthy with one another. Before you can do that, you actually need to create a space where you can have dialogue. When I was at the University of Alberta as a staff member, we used to organize both in the fall semester and in the winter semester a week's worth of events called Solidarity Week. During this time it was an opportunity for people from different ethnic backgrounds to come together and actually share their experiences with one another. It was an opportunity to share our history and realize that there are common struggles. Much like between colonizer and colonized, there also exist some correlations between racial discrimination and, of course, discrimination against sexual orientation. Although it is different, there are some correlations there in terms of the outcomes suffered by people who are discriminated against.

Getting back to the point, you need to have a space where people who suffer these indignities as a result of the discrimination can actually voice what their experience is and for those who do not have the experience to actually listen. Those of us who have enough privilege in society that we don't have to face this discrimination can actually listen to someone that is actually living it and going through it. Whether you sympathize or empathize with the person, well, that's up to the individual. You may question whether that discrimination really exists, but of course, at the end of the day, it's an opportunity for you, at the bare minimum, to listen to the experiences that someone who is LGBTQ would have.

Now, underlying the reality of trying to make a change so that we can have a more healthy society is the fact – and I think that everybody in the House knows this. I don't need to specifically focus on this for too long. I think it's important for us to all have a reminder because sometimes you need to hear it from somebody else's lips before you can actually pay some mind to it. Of course, for healthy relationships to exist, there needs to be respect. The reality is that that respect does not exist.

I remember that when I was working on the University of Alberta campus, there were a number of times when there were gay, bisexual, or even trans students who were specifically beaten up on campus. Now, this is happening at a University of Alberta campus. This is where the students are much older. You can only imagine what is happening at other levels of education, be it in elementary school, junior high, or even high school. That same kind of disrespect towards individuals: it's just unfathomable that it would go so far as to go to violence, where someone thinks that the discrimination is so incredible that this individual thinks that it's okay to use violence against someone who is of a different sexual orientation. Why they would do it, I have no idea. I'm not too sure why. I wasn't brought up to be that way.

The reality is that we have to respect. If you think you can use violence to change people, well, then, we're in a very sad state of affairs if that's what we think. It's very important that we teach children, specifically students in this case, that that's not the way that we need to move forward as a society. As everybody recognizes – I believe the Member for Airdrie-East got up in the House this morning and did a member's statement on domestic violence – violence against people of a specific sexual orientation is not the only problem. This is a crisis that continues to exist in our society. There's even domestic violence. As she pointed out in her member's statement today, it's usually that of a close family member. The tendency is that it usually is a male against a female although not in all cases. But that is the tendency.

We have this overarching problem of people using violence in our society, and of course it's a fact that there is no respect there. There is no respect. For healthy relationships to exist, we also need to make sure that people feel supported. As the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was highlighting as she was sharing with the House, this is something that's really important. When we create these safe spaces as GSAs and QSAs in schools, that's indeed what is happening. It's creating a safe space where people who identify as LGBTQ-two-spirited can also go and feel like they're being supported as they continue to work through their identity and where they won't feel bullied, where they will feel supported and will feel that they have a group of students in their school that will support them and respect them.

Of course, the last part of healthy relationships that I'd like to highlight is the dignity of the human person. The sole fact that we are alive, that we are a human being demands the right that we be treated with dignity. I think that's something that everybody in this House can agree to.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Agreed.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

Member Loyola: Thank you, hon. House leader, for agreeing with me.

Dignity of the human person, regardless of how that person identifies in terms of sexual orientation or ethnicity or culture or religion or creed, as highlighted in the international agreement on human rights, will be respected. I think that this is something that we often overlook. You know, there are these great laws that we write. We write these great laws which highlight specifically what our intention is, but often the spirit of the law is not taken into account when it's actually being implemented. This is the reason why I think it's so important that we approve this amendment, and I call on all the members of this House to please give this serious consideration. I know that everybody is kind of wrapped up in their own thing, and people might be a little bit tired tonight, but please – please – read this amendment. Please read it because this will only make the bill that much better.

Of course, this is making sure that the principals in schools are responsible for actually making sure that these safe spaces, where GSAs and QSAs are going to be created and that students can actually go to, are created in a timely manner and that the principals are actually responsible not only for making sure that they go forward but also that they're basically promoted within the school so that all the students know that this is actually an opportunity for them if they want to get involved. Right? It would be promoted just like any other club – any other club – within the school, whether it be the social justice club or a sports team or whatever the case may be. Notifications would have to be sent out just like for any other activity or group within the school.

10:20

Going back, the reality is that, historically speaking, people who discriminate against people because of their sexual orientation are not going to feel responsible to actually do something about it if it's not actually written into the law no matter what the law states. This is why I'm saying that it doesn't matter what is written, actually, in the bill. If it omits this specific piece, which specifically states that a principal is the individual responsible for making sure that it happens, then nobody is going to take it seriously, and nobody will actually implement it. This is what this amendment is trying to do. It's to actually give the responsibility of making sure that it is implemented within each and every school to the principal of that school, the head administrator, to make sure that they are there not only to make sure that notifications for the GSA and QSA are actually put through as any other activity or group like the social justice group but that they will also make sure to appoint a designated staff member as a staff liaison to make sure that the group has support so that it can continue to go forward.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-South was saying, it can be as simple as students getting together to watch a movie like Toy Story, whatever it is that the students want to do, because, I mean, at the end of the day, they will be the ones determining what activities they will do together as a group under the newly formed GSA or QSA. I remind everybody that this is simply a safe space where every student will be treated with respect and will feel supported, because each and every one of them deserves to be treated with dignity. That's why it's so important that somebody actually be responsible for the implementation, and the head administrator must fulfill that role.

That being said, hon. members, I think it's very important. I mean, I would go so far as to say that we have the duty to accommodate in this situation, and I would highly encourage each and every one of you in this House to not only give this serious consideration but to actually vote in favour of this amendment this evening.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there any other members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise this evening to speak to the amendment to Bill 8, which very simply goes to the heart of the matter and insists that the implementation of a GSA be permitted immediately upon request from a student and that staff be designated in a timely manner to implement the establishment of the GSA thereafter. Really, what it does is get to the crux of the matter, that being that we wish to ensure that the establishment of a GSA is legitimized in the eyes of those it's supposed to benefit, that being the students who wish a safe place to prepare themselves to come out to family members and friends and to identify themselves as a member of the nonheterosexual community in whatever form that may take for them.

I know that hope was raised in the hearts of many young students who were contemplating and agonizing over how they were going to come out to their family. Hope was raised by the previous government's legislation, and many students – I'm just trying to picture myself, put myself in the minds of students who were perhaps preparing themselves during the tenure of the existing legislation to come out, making use of a GSA, yet had their hopes dashed with the new government's proposals to bring forward Bill

8, which will remove the safe haven in the minds of many who were hoping to perhaps use a GSA to find a way to come out to their parents.

The bottom line, Madam Chair, what our government's motivation was – and, hopefully, it's the same motivation that the current government has in its own legislation with respect to GSAs – was saving lives. Now, that's kind of a homogenized way of saying “preventing death,” but that's really what we're doing. I mean, bottom line, we're talking about death. We're talking about young people dying and not in a pretty way. Like, the death of a young person is never pretty. It's an unnatural thing. What we're talking about is death by suicide, death by some violent means because a young person has found themselves kicked out of their own home and living on the street; death by drug overdose because of a life of addiction that's caused by a young person who is ostracized by their family having no place to go and ending up trying to support themselves with the sale of drugs or ending up prostituting themselves on the streets of Alberta cities.

We're talking about those individuals dying, so when we are here to discuss such a serious matter as young people dying, we're reminded of a government's primary responsibility. Your first priority as a government is the protection of human life, of our citizens. There are many ways to do this with legislation, but here we have at its most fundamental core the government's responsibility to protect the lives of children. We're letting in many cases, I believe, religion get in the way of our thinking on this. It's not a question of what your fundamental core religious beliefs might be. It's a matter of whether or not these children's lives are at risk as a result of the legislation that we're looking at implementing in this province.

I implore members, on all sides of the House, to try tonight, as we talk about the amendment, to reimplement, basically, a major piece of what we had in our legislation – and that is the permission for a GSA to be immediately established, the requirement that it be immediately established upon request and why, indeed, that's so necessary – to be able to place themselves in the mindset, the mind, of a young person, a young boy or a young girl, say, in grade 7 or 8, a student in a junior high school in Alberta, knowing that they've identified themselves as not being heterosexual, knowing that they have a family that is not accepting of them.

I know that there are members, on both sides of the House, who have worked in social work and witnessed these situations and heard stories of that, but we have in some cases heard conflicting thoughts about the benefit of GSAs. I don't know where that comes from, because in the mind of a young person who knows for sure that their family is going to kick them out if they come out to them, who knows that they don't have the tools and they don't know how they're going to tell that story to their parents and their family in a way that's going to save that family unit and allow them to stay in that home – it's got to be a terrible black hole. I mean, to really think that there's no way that they can be who they are within their own family unit: what an absolutely depressing and very dark place to be.

10:30

I can well imagine that there are young people now who thought they were in the planning stages to use a GSA, to find the tools to come out to their family members, and who now have had their hopes dashed. If indeed you can wrap your mind around that situation, as somebody in grade 7 or 8, you know how fragile you were yourself as a grade 7 or 8 student regardless of having the potential challenge to your own thoughts about your own sexuality and then coming to terms with that yourself. And then you know: if I indeed bring forward this challenge that I have within myself to my family, I'm going to end up kicked out of the family unit. But then you think: well, gee whiz, this GSA is something where I can get some help, a place where I can talk to somebody, and I'm going to go ahead and do that.

You contemplate that for a while, you roll it around in your mind, and you're fearful and you're scared to go ahead and make that choice, and then – bang – the government changed. Guess what? Rules have changed. “You know, I may be able to go ahead and talk to the principal about setting up a GSA, but I'm no longer guaranteed that that request is going to be kept private. I mean, there's a possibility that that person is going to go right away and inform my parents.” Right away the whole legitimacy of that GSA is out the window, and that person is back at square one, back in that dark hole, that place of fear, wondering if indeed they'll ever be able to come out to their family and declare who they are.

Given that lack of opportunity and the safe space to go to, there's a risk that when they go to their family, they will be kicked out. And that happens. That happens in pristine families, religious and nonreligious families. The fact is, though – and it's been noted by members of the government here in their social work in past lives – that, yes, indeed it was a religious philosophy that prevented the family member from accepting their own child as being gay, and the result that we're talking about here, fundamentally, is the death of children.

I fail to understand why the government, in its wisdom, can't see the way a young person is seeing this situation as I'm trying so desperately to describe what the mindset, what the process is. I certainly can't imagine it any more deeply than just my own personal experience because I've not been there, but I'm doing my best to grasp what the thought process is of a young person who ends up being ostracized by their family and then contemplates how they're going to kill themselves. It's so dark and so bad that they're wondering: should I do it? How do you kill yourself? If you're a young person who is 16 or 17, do you think that maybe it's pills? Jumping off the High Level Bridge? It's tough. It's tough to think about that, but that's what we're thinking about: it's young people dying.

Madam Chair, I am really, really concerned that if we don't pass this amendment to re-establish the legitimacy of these GSAs in the minds of those young people who are contemplating the most dark and black options any human being could ever contemplate, there are going to be a growing number of young people who end up adding to the body count of individuals who've already died as a result of not having GSAs in the past in this province. That will be deeply troubling, and I don't look forward to that at all.

I hope that the members opposite see their way clear to try to put themselves in the mindset of those young people who are so terribly conflicted and facing the most tragic decisions of their life without the support of the government, whose primary responsibility is to help save lives. That lifesaver is being withdrawn from them by the GSA legislation proposed by this government. This amendment to re-establish legitimacy of the GSAs is essential not only for saving lives, as I say, but for preventing death.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment, that I absolutely will support. Thank you for the comments, actually. You know, we heard for years, when we sat on that side, when we heard from the opposition, that one of the jobs was to try to make legislation better. One of the things that I've been hearing from constituents is that the thing that we fixed previously was removing the ability of administrators or principals to delay in any way the creation of a QSA or a GSA so that there wasn't any mechanism for people in positions of power to delay these decisions, that are actually quite important.

This amendment, really, allows the government an opportunity. If indeed their goal is to create safe spaces for students and to create a mechanism for these clubs to be allowed and to be supported, then why not clarify that for our kids, for our students, for their families, and for their allies? What we're hearing is that, again, we're going to go backwards with this legislation, without an amendment like this, so that there is the ability for administrators to put in delays. Like the previous member said, there are some huge risks associated with that.

This last weekend in St. Albert we celebrated pride. It was our fourth celebration, and I think it was our biggest celebration. We had hundreds and hundreds, maybe thousands of people. I'm not sure. I didn't count. We had a lot of people come out. What was really interesting is that we didn't have just people from St. Albert. We had people come over and tell us that they were coming in from Morinville. I met some people that had come in from Westlock. They wanted to come into a place that was a safe place to celebrate with their friends and their family, to be in a place that just celebrated their uniqueness, really. It was a lot of fun.

One of the things that we did at our tent was that we actually did face painting, which is a lot of fun. It's a good way to meet families, especially to interact with kids, and what's not fun about that? I had a lot of students, probably junior high, early high school, and some of the people were coming up and asking me to paint different flags on their faces, all different flags, all different colours. I learned what all the colours were in the different flags. It was kind of fun. There was a lot of pride, actually, and it kind of reinforced to me what pride means. They were really proud to have these colours on their faces: “You know, I identify as this” and “I identify as this” and “This is my flag, and I'm quite happy to have it painted on my face.”

As I was doing that, I met four young ladies who were junior high students from a school in St. Albert called Lorne Akins. Maybe some of the members remember that I tabled some letters earlier this session. They were written, I think, on May 3, and I received them. There were 60 letters from junior high students in St. Albert. Some of them were addressed to the Premier, and some of them were addressed: to whom it may concern. They were specifically about GSAs and some of their fears around changes to legislation or changes to policy or regulations that would impede the speedy and safe creation of a GSA or a QSA.

What was really interesting about the letters was that some of the students talked about the fact that they themselves identified in that community as a member of that community. They talked about the fear that they had of being forced or having their families find out before they were ready, and they talked about some of the harm that would come to their family and to themselves and to their lives. Some of the students talked about the fact that they were just allies and that they were concerned for their friends.

These were based on conversations that friends have, that junior high students have together. They spend a lot of time together, and they talk. They were really passionate. To see these young students, junior high students, talking about how important this was – they felt that we were finally making progress, and they were really frightened that this would go backwards.

Now, you know, we've heard the government say: well, there's nothing to worry about. Well, there is something to worry about, because when you create loopholes in rules and legislation and regulations, sometimes people take advantage of that. Not everybody, but sometimes people take advantage of that. I think that if we can create legislation and regulations that close those loopholes or that create truly safe spaces or create rules so that we can know that we are doing the absolute best that we can to prevent any harm to any people, then I think we're doing a good job.

10:40

The reality of LGBTQ students: I don't know; I wasn't one of those students. When I went to school – that was a long time ago now – I know that I witnessed in the schools that I went to bullying of students that were clearly members of that community, that looked different, that spoke differently, that maybe shared who they were. They were bullied as a result. I have heard of kids getting beaten up. I've certainly heard of kids getting kicked out of their homes. I think we all probably have. If we're honest with ourselves, we know that this is a risk that these students face. Why not do everything that we can to prevent any harm coming to these students?

I said earlier this week, or last week now, when we talked about the private member's bill around ensuring that we had medication in schools for students with severe allergies, that it's important to make that investment, to ensure that even if we save one child with this legislation and with this financial investment, then we will have done our job to prevent harm to or the death of one child. It's not that different. If this amendment to this legislation has the potential to save a life or to close a loophole and eventually save a life, that doesn't seem like a bad idea. We know that suicide, ultimately, is the end, but there are all of these horrible things that happen before that. We have mental illnesses. We have students that struggle with depression and all of the results of bullying, being ostracized, not being accepted by your family, being homeless, all of those things. I think we can understand what that does to a young person.

Ultimately, the risk of suicide is a very real risk. We know that suicide is the second-leading cause of death among youth 15 to 24 and the third-leading cause of death in young people between 10 and 14. Again, I think that if you can save the life of one person, what is the harm in that? If truly your goal in this legislation is not to make changes that will be harmful to these students, then why not make this change? Why not make this amendment if you can prevent one death? Suicide is a horrific fact, and it happens all too frequently with our young people. We know that. We invest in mental health supports. We invest in prevention. We do everything we can to prevent harm from coming to our children. We vaccinate them. We teach them about safety. We use seat belts. We use car seats. We do everything that we possibly can to prevent harm from coming to our children. Why not do this? When it gets to the point of suicide, it's too late. There's nothing else you can do.

Twenty years ago my brother, who struggled with a mental illness and as far as I know didn't identify himself as being part of the LGBTQ community, for whatever reason saw that suicide was the only option for him, and that's what he did. He ended his life, and that was it. There was nothing I could do about it after that, and it's final. If there was something that could have been done along the way to have prevented that – and that's a question I've always asked myself since then – I would love to turn back time and to have done that.

So I would encourage these members to think about, beyond the legislation, just an individual child that might be a constituent of yours. If there is something that you could do that you know would save a life, that you know would close a loophole that maybe somehow somebody would use that would delay the creation of a club where a child could go to feel supported, to feel included, and to be able to navigate their lives, which are kind of complex when you're a student, if there's anything that you could do to fix that, to change that, to prevent that, why wouldn't you do this?

That is all I have to say about this. I would encourage everybody to seriously think about this, about the lives of the children in your constituency.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment, which, of course, as you can imagine, I wholly support. My comments are going to actually be quite brief because what I'm going to do is that I'm going to create the conditions such that should somebody decide to vote against this amendment, it's going to be because they're blatantly and purposely ignoring it.

In my time before being an elected official in this House, I spent many years in the labour movement. My job was to make sure that my membership was treated with dignity and respect, that they were treated fairly, that they got a fair wage, and that all revolved around language. Language is everything. When you look at a union contract, if you change one little word in that – if you will do something, that means that's going to happen, but if you may do something, well, that's up in the air.

Earlier this evening I did hear the Minister of Education talk about how schools are expected to follow the policy. Language. That tells me there is no guarantee that they will follow the language. Now, if you had said that the schools will follow the policy, that is more of a guarantee. I'm going to maybe borrow a little line that I've heard before. What this amendment will do is take weak language that we have right now and make it less weak, okay?

We have gotten caught in a little bit of a loop here, where we've been trying to compare the language around GSAs proposed in this bill to other language across the country, and we've explored this. What we haven't seemed to concentrate on is comparing this language to what we have right now. Right now the language that we have – and I thank the Member for Edmonton-North West for, in his job as the Education minister, putting together Bill 24. It was the strongest language in the country. But what we're doing with this proposed language here is making ourselves just part of the pack. Why should we settle for that? We should be settling for the best, the best language. If we're so intent to not use the best language, this amendment here will make weak language less weak. As we read this, we know this improves it. So to ignore it means we're doing that purposely.

So I encourage all members: don't ignore this. Strengthen the language. Make it less weak. And let's give our kids some certainty that their elected officials really are on their side because right now they don't think so.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak?

Shall I call the question on amendment A1?

[The voice vote indicated that motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:49 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

For the motion:

Dach	Goehring	Renaud
Dang	Loyola	Schmidt

Eggen	Nielsen	Sigurdson, L.
Feehan	Pancholi	Sweet
Against the motion:
Allard	LaGrange	Reid
Armstrong-Homeniuk	Loewen	Rutherford
Copping	Long	Schow
Ellis	Milliken	Schulz
Fir	Nally	Schweitzer
Getson	Neudorf	Shandro
Glubish	Nicolaides	Toews
Goodridge	Nixon, Jason	Toor
Gotfried	Nixon, Jeremy	van Dijken
Guthrie	Panda	Williams
Issik	Pon
Totals:	For – 12	Against – 32

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Hon. members, we are now back on the main. Are there any hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to rise in the Chamber this evening. I do have a couple of comments that I would like to express to the House this evening. I've been listening to the debate with great interest. I do appreciate all hon. members participating in the process. I still become alarmed as I listen to the opposition continue to misrepresent the facts when it comes to Bill 8, in presentation after presentation to talk about things that just aren't part of the bill, to represent things inside this place that do not fit with the legislation. They're not factual in their presentation.

Why I think that is so unfortunate, primarily, is for LGBTQ youth who are watching this or listening to this in other capacities as we watch the debate develop around Bill 8. They continue to see the Official Opposition rise in this Chamber and make implications that in the end, Madam Chair, are not found within fact. They have chosen to spend a tremendous amount of their time in their conversation with Bill 8. I don't actually have the direct copy of Bill 8 in front of me at the moment, Madam Chair, but it's a fairly decent-sized piece of legislation. I've heard no comments from the Official Opposition on that piece of legislation except for one topic, which, quite frankly, is not within that piece of legislation, and the topic that they're referring to, GSAs and the ability of youth inside schools to be able to form a GSA, does not change as a result of that legislation despite the fact that the Official Opposition continues to want to rise in this Chamber and present that as a fact.

You know, Madam Chair, I think it's important that we are clear yet again that even if Bill 8 passes in this Chamber – I would not want to presume what the Assembly will decide in the coming days, though I have to say that nothing the opposition has presented has changed my mind. At this point I still intend to vote on behalf of the people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre in support of Bill 8, the hon. the Education minister's piece of legislation. But what I want to talk about are the steps that actually happen around GSAs. I've spoken about it a few times along the way in regard to Bill 8, but I think it bears repeating for the record what will take place, still, when it comes to gay-straight alliances or queer-straight alliances or those types of student organizations within a school even after Bill 8 passes.

Again, Madam Chair, this is what would happen. Step 1, the students or a student will ask a staff member at the school to start a GSA.

Step 2, the principal permits a GSA. We're already at step 2, and the entire argument that the Official Opposition has presented in this Chamber for weeks has fallen apart just at step 2.

Step 3, the principal designates a staff liaison to support the GSA. The Official Opposition has presented a lot of commentary this evening about the need to make sure that principals would designate somebody in authority or of the staff within the school to be able to support a GSA. Again, you can see right here that by step 3 that would still continue under Bill 8.

The Official Opposition continues to struggle with the facts, Madam Chair. I know that my constituents find that frustrating, and I'm sure the constituents of Airdrie-East will probably find that frustrating as well. I know in my experience, when I visit the great constituency of Airdrie, that they do like the facts.

Step 4, the students – the students, Madam Chair – select a group name, not the government, not the teachers, not the Official Opposition; the students who are forming the gay-straight alliance select the name. Extremely different than what the Official Opposition continues to present in this place.

Step 5, if the principal cannot find a staff liaison, the principal informs both the board, so the school board, and the minister, the hon. the Education minister, and then the minister appoints a responsible adult. So it will still go as far as that if the school principal is unable to appoint a designated staff liaison for that GSA, the minister would then become responsible to have to make sure it happened. It has to happen, and she would have to deal with that. Again, step 5, right there, clear as day, and the Official Opposition continues to struggle with the facts and, instead, Madam Chair, spends their time when they're supposed to be in here speaking about issues that are relevant to the legislation, quite frankly, basically inventing things that have nothing to do with the legislation and things that are certainly not found within fact.

Step 6 is that as a student-led group the students, with support from their staff liaison, plan the next steps such as meeting dates, times, and activities. Madam Chair, the students – it's very important that we're clear on that – plan the next steps such as meeting dates, times, and activities.

So the students get to decide if there's a GSA. The principal is to accommodate that and he must get a staffperson that could help them accommodate that. The students choose the title or the name of what that group would look like. And then the students decide the next steps such as meeting dates, times, and activities.

Madam Chair, I know that you've been in the chair for much of the debate during this legislation. I would not want to speak of when you may or may not be in the House. You've heard the arguments that have been given by the Official Opposition, that contradict significantly – significantly – what they're saying with the reality that is actually inside this legislation.

Again, in six steps, Madam Chair – in six steps – a GSA is formed. Nowhere along the way do any of the things that the opposition have presented in this place take place. Their arguments are not found in facts.

I think, at its core, Madam Chair, that it comes down to, quite frankly, an inability to act as the Official Opposition in this place. What I've seen in the last few weeks, as the Official Opposition adjusts to their new role inside this Chamber, is a complete inability to be able to act as the Official Opposition on behalf of the people of Alberta, instead spending their time focusing on things that are just not factual, not spending their time on debating legislation, improving legislation, and working to do their constitutional role as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in this place. I think that's disappointing.

11:00

I know it's disappointing to many Albertans that I speak to. I spoke a few times this week about being back home this weekend. I know you made it home this weekend as well, Madam Chair. We had, of course, the Sundre rodeo, one of my favourite events of the year, where my community gets to come together. Often as I spoke to hundreds of people throughout the weekend, they brought up their concern that the NDP just could not rise to the ability of being the Official Opposition. I think you see it, time and time again, that they've lost – you know, they don't understand what their role is inside this Chamber.

But clearly, in my opinion, speaking as a former Leader of the Official Opposition inside this very Chamber, that is not what their role is. You served in the Official Opposition. You know, Madam Chair, that this is not the role of the Official Opposition, to come here and focus on facts that are not accurate, focus on spreading inaccurate facts and causing deep concern for a whole section of our society, namely LGBTQ youth, telling them that they will not have GSAs despite the fact that that's just not the reality of what this piece of legislation would do, when and if this House puts it into law.

At it's core, Madam Chair – we spoke about it often inside this Chamber – this comes down to the fact that the NDP are frustrated. They're angry. They're disappointed, and I respect that they're disappointed. It had to be hard on April 16 to be fired by the people of Alberta and to go into the Official Opposition benches as the only one-term government in the history of this province. It had to hurt. I respect that. But the reality is that they have to accept the judgment of the people of Alberta, stop focusing on being angry, stop focusing on misconceptions and misrepresenting facts inside this Chamber and instead focus on their role as the Official Opposition and help to do the important work of this Chamber to make strong legislation and make sure that the laws that we pass inside this place end up being the best for Albertans.

The Official Opposition: tonight, Madam Chair, as they go home shortly, I hope that they reflect on that and reflect on what their role is in the history of this place and what their responsibilities are to Albertans because what I have witnessed over the last few weeks is certainly not Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition doing her job. Now, I would not want to presume how Her Majesty feels about Her Loyal Opposition – that would be against the standing orders – but I've got to tell you that if I was sitting outside of this Chamber, not even being in this Chamber, I would be disappointed in the Official Opposition and questioning whether or not the Leader of the Official Opposition and her caucus are up to the task, the important task that they've been given by the people of Alberta.

Hopefully, I just want to encourage them, through you, Madam Chair, to take some time to reflect on that and to try to rise to the responsibility and the privilege that they've been given. It's a privilege for us to have been given the opportunity to form Her Majesty's government. We recognize that. It is a privilege for the United Conservative Party to have been given this responsibility. We recognize that. We intend to work very, very hard and earn that privilege. But it's also a privilege to have been given the opportunity to form Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition inside this Chamber. I think the members should take that seriously.

As such, I want to give them an opportunity to do that before we continue with any more debate on Bill 8, and as such I will move to adjourn debate on Bill 8 and rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 8. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. First off, I'm rising pursuant to Standing Order 3(1.2), the Brian Mason standing order, if I may, to advise this Assembly that there will be no morning sitting tomorrow, which is Thursday, June 27. I just want to make sure I have that right. In addition to that, there will be no morning sitting, pursuant to the same standing order, on Tuesday, July 2.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn the Legislative Assembly of Alberta until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:06 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 12	Royalty Guarantee Act .....	1255
Bill 8	Education Amendment Act, 2019.....	1255

Committee of the Whole

Bill 12	Royalty Guarantee Act .....	1257
Bill 8	Education Amendment Act, 2019.....	1258, 1266

Division .....	1276
----------------	------

Bill 11	Fair Registration Practices Act .....	1259
---------	---------------------------------------	------

Third Reading

Bill 11	Fair Registration Practices Act .....	1263
---------	---------------------------------------	------

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Thursday afternoon, June 27, 2019

Day 21

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henda (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreesen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretaries

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, June 27, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of guests or visitors joining us today. First and foremost, we have the hon. the former MLA and former member of Executive Council Dr. Lyle Oberg. Please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of guests as well joining us, guests of the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women in the galleries. If you are part of any of these groups, I encourage you to rise and we will greet you upon the introduction of all members.

Members from the Edmonton Heritage Festival Association, members from the Edmonton Intercultural Centre, members from the Somali Canadian Cultural Society of Edmonton, members of the Alberta Somali Cultural Community Centre, the Balanbalis Downtown Islamic Association, and the Al Sabah mosque.

Also joining us are guests of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, public servants throughout the government of Alberta as well as Dr. Collins Ugochukwu, Dr. Marcus Edino, Dr. Bede Eke, Dr. Clement Agboma, Mr. Joseph Otitoju, Mr. Augustine Onwuegbuzie, and Ms Bolu Idowu. Welcome to everyone.

Just a couple more for us today: very close friends of the Member for Lesser Slave Lake. Welcome here today Emily and Tom Wanyandie. There are also members of the Minister of Advanced Education: Sanjeev Kad; Dalip Cheba; Lee, Voula, Helen, and Billy Martin; Brandon, Stephanie, Josiah, and Lincoln Stutheit; Joanne Birce; Lynn Bangs; Bernie Goruk; and Kim Caves. Last but not least, guest of the Member for Calgary-McCall, Umer Farooq. Please, members, welcome all of these folks to the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Canadian Multiculturalism Day

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 the government of Canada designated June 27 of each year as Canadian Multiculturalism Day. Canada was the first country to officially become a multicultural society in 1971, and Alberta adopted multicultural legislation in 1984 with the passage of the Alberta Cultural Heritage Act. Multiculturalism Day is a day to recognize and celebrate the diverse cultures that Canadians have and to signify our unity in all aspects of life within Canadian culture.

Whether an Albertan is here by choice or by chance, we are a province built by people of many nationalities and faiths. We continue to welcome those who want to help write the next chapter of Alberta's story. People choose to come to Alberta because they know this is a place where hard work, enterprise, education, and skills are rewarded with economic opportunity and a warm welcome from our communities. Celebrating our differences helps us to understand each other and discourage hatred and violence. It is important to value the dignity of all Canadians no matter their race, ethnic group, or religion.

Although Multiculturalism Day is only on June 27, our province experiences many opportunities throughout the year to celebrate, such as heritage festivals, multicultural affairs, and many more festivities across the province. Alberta is proudly home to the world's largest multicultural festival, the UNESCO-designated Edmonton Heritage Festival, which showcases almost 100 different cultures and attracts half a million visitors every year. I encourage everyone to celebrate their culture and to go to a festival or celebration this year to learn about another culture in our diverse province.

Mr. Speaker, today I call on all Albertans to join me in celebrating the diverse roots of our province, which reach every country and every continent around the world, and all the people who continue to enrich it today. Thank you.

Government Policies and Parliamentary Debate

Member Irwin: Mr. Speaker, we're starting to see an interesting pattern in this House. Asking about outing gay kids? The government's response: fear and smear. Asking about picking the pockets of hard-working Albertans? Fear and smear. Asking about fighting climate change? Fear and smear. Asking about the harmful practice of conversion therapy? Fear and smear. Asking about racism and intolerance? Fear and smear. Asking about stripping away the constitutional rights of thousands of Alberta's workers? Yup. You guessed it. All together now.

Some Hon. Members: Fear and smear.

Member Irwin: Now, Mr. Speaker, it sounds like a bad joke, reiterating the same tired old line in hopes to deflect from their disastrous first session as government. But you know what? This is no joke. In many cases the fear is very real. I'm fearful for that queer student who's worried that they'll be outed. I'm fearful for that person who's struggling with addiction but not sure where she can go for support. I'm fearful for that worker whose overtime will now be cut. I'm fearful for that kid who's being pressured by his community to reject his sexual identity. And you know what? I'm fearful that this government will continue to dismiss the real, legitimate concerns of hundreds of thousands of Albertans who are counting on us as their Official Opposition to stand up for their rights.

Fear and smear: one of the many baseless talking points of the same government that's limited debate in the House and saw many of their members literally plugging their ears. This is a troubling pattern, laced with arrogance and a complete disdain for the very people who elected members into this House. This government is saying: we don't actually need to listen to you.

On this side of the House we stand up for our constituents. We demand answers to valid questions and concerns, and we hold this government to account when they refuse to do their job. We won't stop fighting for issues that matter to Albertans, high-quality public health care, a strong education system with safe schools for all. We will leave the arrogance at the door because Albertans deserve better.

Thank you.

Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Awareness Day

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, June 27 is Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Awareness Day. Also simply known as PTSD, it's been identified as a mental illness. Many people who suffer from PTSD often have vivid nightmares, flashbacks, or thoughts of the event that seem to come from nowhere. The trauma it causes is often unexpected, and many people say they felt powerless to stop or change the event. For millions of people around the world the most traumatic events of their lives have never ended.

One of the most at-risk groups for PTSD are our veterans and first responders. They're exposed to sights that most people rarely experience. They see people in great pain and suffering and even death and are themselves exposed to such a potential fate. I'd like to express my sincere gratitude to the paramedics, the firefighters, the military personnel, and police officers for everything they do day in and day out. While most would head in the opposite direction, these men and women are the ones who run towards the danger. These efforts can sometimes mean that they're left to deal with the haunting images, the sounds, the smells, that can stay with these responders for a lifetime.

A welding truck and a car suffer a head-on collision. That left unusual odours and bodies that, interestingly enough, weren't burned, but it had melted the skin over their faces. A SIDS call where a baby already had rigor mortis set in. A newlywed couple and their baby dead and freezing in a car on the highway in minus 40 temperatures. A woman beaten by her boyfriend, broken, bruised, and bloodied while her two young children clutched at her dress. These can be some of the experiences that stay with a responder for a lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, the best way to celebrate this day is to take the time to understand the experiences and the day-to-day realities of those around you who may be suffering from PTSD. With support people can recover from PTSD and the effects of trauma. Let's remind those with PTSD that they are never alone and that we are here to help them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

1:40

Somali Independence Day

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On July 1 we celebrate Somalia's Independence Day. Fifty-nine years ago the present-day north and south Somalia, which were under British and Italian control respectively, merged to form one nation, the Republic of Somalia, thus ushering in a new chapter in the history of the country. Since then, this day has been observed as the Independence Day of Somalia. Somali Independence Day commemorates the Somali people's struggle for freedom and their victory. It celebrates the beginning of a new nation by merging to form one nation.

Somalia is a beautiful country located in the horn of east Africa. It consists mainly of plateaus, plains, highlands, and has Africa's longest coastline. Its official languages are Somali and Arabic. Somalia is roughly the same size as Alberta but has over 10 million more people than we do. Somalia's ties to the Arab world allowed it to be accepted into the Arab League in 1974. Somalia also belongs to the African Union, the organization of Islamic conference, and the United Nations. It supported antiapartheid groups and countries in Africa wanting to gain independence. The country has maintained a free-market economy despite its instability.

Somalis have a long history in Canada. While many came as refugees following the country's civil war in the early 1990s, a number of Somalis came to Canada in the 1960s and '70s as students. Here in Alberta we have Canada's third-largest Somali population, with over 20,000 Somali people living in Edmonton alone. We are happy to have a shared day to celebrate both our countries and encourage that all Albertans join in celebrating Somali Independence Day.

Mahadsanid.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Religious Freedom and Human Rights

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Religious freedom is a fundamental right. That is why Albertans have been shocked and disturbed by Quebec's recent law that bans turbans, hijabs, and other religious symbols in public spaces. It is particularly concerning for many in my riding as it's home to people of many different cultures and faiths, many of whom actually have witnessed or experienced discrimination and violence. History has shown time and again that discrimination can lead to unrest and often violence.

There are many Sikh families who fell victim to the 1984 genocide and are still looking for justice and closure. We also remember the 2002 riots in Gujarat, where Muslims were murdered only because they were Muslims. More recently we have seen a rise in attacks on religious places such as on a church in Sri Lanka on Easter Monday and on a mosque in Christchurch, New Zealand, and ongoing violations of human rights in Kashmir, which is threatening peace in the entire Southeast Asia.

Mr. Speaker, we know we are not immune to human rights violations of religious and ethnic communities even right here in Canada. In fact, this government has had candidates with connections to white supremacists, anti-immigrant, and anti-Muslim groups. We have a Premier who has advocated for the niqab ban, the barbaric cultural practices hotline, cut refugee health care, and brags about his two-decade long friendship with the Prime Minister of India. In fact, many in my riding would want this Premier to raise the 1984 Sikh genocide, the 2002 killings in Gujarat, and human rights violations in Kashmir with his friend the Prime Minister of India. There is no question that on this side of the House we fully condemn violence, and I urge this government to do that same.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Tom Wanyandie

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2001 I purchased a sawmill and timber quota near Grande Cache. I hired some young indigenous men: Lance, Lane, Doug, and Clint Wanyandie. We needed a couple more workers, and they suggested Emily, their mother, and Tom Wanyandie, their grandpa. I asked how old Tom was, and they said that he was in his 70s. I didn't know if Tom could handle the hard physical work, but he truly amazed me.

Ten years ago this month Tom and his son James were walking in the bush when suddenly a grizzly bear came out of nowhere. James tried to take a shot, but he missed, and the grizzly grabbed onto James' arm, shaking him like a rag doll, and threw him to the ground and pounced on him. Tom bravely charged the bear, yelling curse words in Cree and hitting the bear repeatedly with a walking stick. The bear reared up on its hind legs and turned towards Tom, mouth open, ready to attack. Tom could count every tooth in that crazed animal's mouth. He plunged his walking stick into the bear's mouth. The bear quickly flipped his head sideways, dislodging the stick. Then biting Tom's arm, he broke it and jumped on top of Tom and took him to the ground. James, with a broken arm, still on the ground, poked at the bear with the barrel of his rifle. The grizzly jumped off Tom and gave James a vicious swat, knocking him about 10 feet, and pounced back on top of James. Tom got up, yelling and cursing with his fists in the air, heading straight for the grizzly bear. The grizzly looked at Tom and decided it was time to go. As Tom chased after the grizzly bear, yelling with his fists in the air, James had to say: Dad, please come back.

News headlines described Tom Wanyandie as Badass of the Week and a feisty senior who stuck it to a grizzly. Tom Wanyandie has always worked hard, stayed humble, and earned every dollar he ever made. Grandpa is 88 years old and truly an amazing inspiration to all of us.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Sounds like Tom would be a perfect fit for this job.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills I'm pleased to table the committee's final report on Bill 203, An Act to Protect Public Health Care, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. This bill was referred to the committee on June 13, 2019. The committee's final report recommends that the bill, Bill 203, An Act to Protect Public Health Care, not proceed. I request concurrence of the Assembly in the final report on Bill 203.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the motion for concurrence in the report is debatable pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(b). Are there any members who wish to speak to the motion for concurrence? Seeing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Given that members wish to speak to the motion for concurrence in the report, that consideration will take place on the next available Monday under the item of business motions for concurrence in committee reports on public bills other than government bills.

Prior to us getting to tablings today, I beg the indulgence of the House. Not to draw attention to their tardiness, but I did see the MPs Arnold Viersen and Garnett Genuis sneak into the Speaker's gallery just a few moments ago. I hope that you'll welcome them and encourage them to arrive on time next time.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has a tabling.

Member Irwin: Yes, I do. Thank you. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of an ad in an organization affiliated with the Finance minister related to conversion therapy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a document entitled Alberta Crown Prosecution Service Statement, wherein they indicate that an extraprovincial prosecutor will be responsible for advice to the police on the kamikaze scandal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a tabling.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of correspondence I received from a constituent who is deeply troubled and concerned about the behaviour of the government on June 19 at 2325 hours, approximately the time that the orange earplugs were distributed in this House, and says that it doesn't reflect the values that she expects of a government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South has risen.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of a letter that I received indicating that the opposition and I "did solid work" regarding the earplug incident and shaming the government for their actions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one is copies of the what-we-heard document from the PDD review panel, who stopped in St. Paul, Fort McMurray, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Grande Prairie, Red Deer, Edmonton, and Calgary.

The second is a local article reminding us that when the candidates laid it all on the table at the UCP forum, the Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul member told Albertans: it's going to hurt.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the integrity of our justice system is paramount. Yesterday our leader asked why it's been a month and this government still hasn't followed through on its promise to appoint a special prosecutor to oversee the UCP leadership voting scandal. But the Attorney General said his department had, quote, reached out to folks in Ontario to handle legal advice. Well, now our understanding is that a special prosecutor has been appointed. To the minister: would you just be upfront for once on this disturbing matter and just tell us who this special prosecutor is?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the minister has been very clear inside this Chamber that the process is independent from the government, that this government respects this, as does the minister. He referred the hon. members to the press release and to the appropriate officials within the department if they wanted to seek more information as well as to the RCMP. The question, then, becomes: why won't the members in the opposition take the time to actually do that process? To continue to come here day after day and question the Minister of Justice's integrity is ridiculous and fits in with the NDP's fear and smear tactics.

Ms Hoffman: I ask for the name of the prosecutor; the Government House Leader says "fear and smear". It's actually facts that we're asking for, facts that are very reasonable to be shared with the public.

Yesterday the Premier stood in this House and started to describe the RCMP's recent interview with the Minister of Infrastructure about the UCP voting fraud scandal. It is very concerning given that we know there were fraudulent votes cast for the Premier, who ultimately won the leadership contest in question. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what exactly did you tell the Premier about the RCMP interview, and do you think it was appropriate given that the voting fraud scandal ultimately may have led to the Premier becoming that himself?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, at the request of the RCMP I met with them briefly on June 23, and they assured me that I'm not the subject of any investigation.

Ms Hoffman: My question was about what the minister said to the Premier in the Premier's office about the investigation.

The investigation into the UCP voter fraud has been going on for months, Mr. Speaker. Information continues to trickle out in the media in dribs and drabs, and every time it does, this government looks less credible. It's time to be transparent and public. Will all members of this House who have been interviewed by the RCMP about the UCP voter fraud please stand up?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, to be clear, I have not been interviewed by the RCMP. I think that's probably important given the context of the question from the hon. member.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, the Premier and our government and our party have been clear that we have instructed and want everybody to fully co-operate with the RCMP investigation. We respect the independence of the RCMP. We suggest the members do the same. We let the RCMP do their work, and in the meantime, inside this Chamber, we're focused on defending Albertans on jobs, the economy, and pipelines, and that's what we'll continue to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has a question.

Oil Transportation by Rail

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about pipelines. Four times in the past two weeks I have asked the Minister of Energy to tell Albertans how many barrels of oil she has moved using private rail companies. She has dodged the question every time. Today she put out a statement that had very little detail. Certainly, there was no number of barrels being moved, so to the minister, for the last time: can you please state exactly how many barrels you are moving by private rail companies?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, we have taken the next step today in shifting the NDP crude-by-rail deal to the private sector by engaging CIBC Capital Markets to help oversee the divestment of this program to the private sector. We have always said that moving crude by rail is something that the private sector is in the best position to do. The private sector is doing it now, and they will continue to do so in the future. In fact, the private sector has increased their capacity and moved 25,000 barrels a day additional on crude by rail.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Starting Tuesday our government would be moving tens of thousands of barrels per day thanks to the rail contract we signed. Ripping up our contracts puts many jobs at risk, but this minister doesn't seem to care, and the Premier's federal Conservative friends in Ottawa botched Northern Gateway and Energy East and all the jobs that would have come with those projects. To the minister: can you tell us how many jobs would be lost by this latest failure to act on the contracts?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, that's a great, great question. Their crude by rail would have moved an additional 10,000 barrels of oil a day. I just said and told this House that the private sector has already moved an additional 25,000 barrels on their own. Every single barrel of oil that would have moved through the NDP crude-by-rail program would have done so at a loss of money, and that would be paid for by the Alberta taxpayer. No responsible government would impose that upon the Alberta taxpayers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. I was asking about the jobs that would have come with the contracts that we entered into.

I think that the Energy minister claims to be a long-time advocate for the oil industry, and she's supposed to be taking steps to move our products to market, but she has continuously dodged the questions, so I think that zero barrels have been moved so far. To the minister: if you don't want to do your job, can you at least ask somebody else to do it for you?

Mrs. Savage: Look, Mr. Speaker, the NDP's disastrous crude-by-rail program wasn't even going to start losing money for taxpayers until July 1, so, of course, even under their own crude-by-rail program there wouldn't have been any moved. The private sector is already moving 25,000 barrels a day additional on their own. Look, the NDP wouldn't even know how to run a lemonade stand. They would run a lemonade stand and think, using some of the numbers from crude by rail, that they could set up the lemonade stand at $3.70, sell the lemonade for $2 . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. [interjections]

Ms Pancholi: Is that Edmonton . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order! I'm sure you're all very excited to hear the question from the hon. member.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools and Bill 8

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm hoping that the MLAs from across the way will also be smiling, or maybe they were smiling, when last night 32 UCP MLAs stood in this House and voted against restoring a clause that would allow for the immediate establishment of GSAs when a student requests it. It was a single word with a massive meaning to our LGBTQ youth. We know that prior to Bill 24 requests to establish GSAs were being stalled and student needs were being pushed aside. The Minister of Education provided no reason for why she voted this down. To the minister. Here's your chance to explain yourself. Why would you object to the immediate establishment of GSAs if you are truly supportive of LGBTQ . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I categorically disagree with what was just said. We have been perfectly clear that we oppose mandatory notification of any student. Also, once requested by a student, creating a GSA, a QSA, or any other inclusion group will absolutely be allowed, and there is a process in place. Our government will have the most comprehensive statutory protections for LGBTQ students in the country. We've said it over and over again. They don't hear it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More tone-deaf key messages. I don't know why the Minister of Education would stand up here and say that she disagrees with facts, which is that she voted against an amendment . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Pancholi: ... which was a compassionate thing. So here's the thing. Kids are being put at risk by the hateful Bill 8. We know that, they know that, and the minister stands in this House and provides nothing of substance. Perhaps I'll have to ask her colleagues. To the Minister of Children's Services. Your job is to protect kids. How could you possibly vote against immediately establishing GSAs when kids ask for them? I really hope you answer and don't rely on the House leader, a man who fired a woman who complained about being sexually harassed. You are a strong, intelligent woman. Please let us hear your voice on this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. The NDP need to stop with their scare tactics and stop playing politics with our children. I am a strong woman, and I believe in protecting all children, and I will do that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe she is a strong woman who has continued to fail to explain why she would be opposed to the amendment to allow immediate establishment of GSAs. We brought forward a simple amendment that would signal to the LGBTQ community that this government actually cares, but they have shown that they don't. The minister of labour had a big Wednesday. He officially cut wages for youth workers. Then he sat in this House last night and voted to cut their rights.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Pancholi: To the minister of labour. Please explain to the young constituents in your Calgary-Varsity riding why you don't feel they're worth as much as others and explain why if they're gay, you don't think they should have the utmost protections they're asking for. I don't need the House leader, by the way; we're coming for you.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Point of order. Thank you.

The Speaker: Point of order is noted.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that question. I can't even thank you for that question. That was unheard of. The NDP are continuing with their fear and smear. This is totally even below them. I apologize to any student in that gallery because I feel that we should be the examples, and we are not being good examples. We're being ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will have order.

Ms Hoffman: The Minister of Education absolutely should apologize for failing to stand up for kids last night, when we brought forward a very reasonable amendment. Who else failed to? The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: He also voted against immediately establishing GSAs last night. It's on the record.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: As the minister responsible for preparing our students for their futures – this fixation seems to be on bringing in controversial Chicago principles on postsecondary campuses. To the Minister of Advanced Education. I guess our K to 12 schools won't be safe for LGBTQ youth because of your government. Is it your goal to make sure that we keep bullying and abuse going once they get to university as well?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question is just so ridiculous. Our government has been so clear on our support of GSAs and of the LGBTQ community. We're going to continue to do that. We're going to continue to stand and support them and not listen to the fear and smear coming from the other side of the aisle.

Ms Hoffman: Last night, after his flock of loyal MLAs made it clear that they really don't want to support GSAs, the Government House Leader stood and said that what we were saying wasn't factual. Well, I guess the House leader is now an expert on what protecting kids is, so let's give him a chance. I really don't think he should be turning to his key messages. I think he should stand in this House and tell people the truth, not blah, blah, blah. To the House leader: stand in this House and explain why you voted against the immediacy clause, please.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, here comes the Official Opposition with their fear and smear and their just ridiculous, absolute practices. It's bizarre to see what the opposition continues to do inside this place. Here are the facts. We'll have the strongest statutory protections for GSAs. We've been clear about that. Our government stands by that. We made that clear again last night inside the House. That's the reality. Unfortunately, the opposition continues to want to fearmonger and tell Albertans things that just are not factual. It's disappointing.

Ms Hoffman: The Government House Leader could give Donald Trump a lesson in spreading misinformation, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader knows full right that hundreds of youth have protested, have written letters, have said: bring the word "immediate" back. The Government House Leader and all of his caucus continue to vote down these kids and make it more difficult for them to form GSAs. Enough of the talking points, enough of blaming us for standing up for kids. Government should be standing up for kids. Why won't you? Why did you vote against the immediate clause, the word "immediate"? Just stand up and tell us: why is it so wrong for it to be "immediate"?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again we've got Team Angry, particularly that member. Well, actually, I'd go as far as to say her leader probably the most. But I know that member is frustrated that Albertans fired her on April 16. I understand that party is frustrated with the judgment of Albertans, but that does not mean that they should take this approach as the Official Opposition. What you're seeing here right now is an absolute embarrassment to the institution. It may be at this point the worst Official Opposition in this Chamber's history. It's ridiculous. We will not be lectured or bullied by these people. We will continue to stand up for our constituents inside this Assembly.

Ms Sweet: Point of order.

The Speaker: Well, we have a bevy of points of order from the government, that I have now acknowledged, and a point of order from the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Now we will hear from the Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Condominium Governance Regulations

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since I became the MLA for Calgary-Glenmore, in April, I've been increasingly alarmed at the growing number of condo stakeholders, including owners, management companies, and boards of directors, in my constituency expressing concern that some of the regulations set to come into force on July 1, this Monday, represent a major increase in red tape and, therefore, costs. As examples, I've heard concerns about everything from hard-copy-only documentation to changes around voting rights. To the minister: what is the status of the regulations, and what is being done to engage condo owners, boards, and other impacted stakeholders?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member has noted, there were a number of regulations set to come into effect on July 1. Since the election we have heard serious concerns from stakeholders. They don't feel that these concerns were addressed by the previous government. Considering this, we have taken decisive action by pressing pause on those regulations so that we can review them to reduce red tape. Let me quote to you what we've heard from Willis Law, specialists in condominium law, in response to this action. "I applaud the government for listening to these concerns of over-regulation and impracticality on certain regulations and taking action to correct."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that these changes are quite broad in scope and given that the feedback I've been hearing has come from multiple sources, not solely owners or boards or managers, can the Minister of Service Alberta please tell us who will benefit the most by pausing the governance regulations? Will it be owners, condo boards, condo corporations, or condo managers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell the member that removing red tape and administrative burdens benefits everyone. It benefits owners, boards, managers, and corporations. Condo owners benefit because they can avoid higher condo fees, that would have accompanied some of these regulations, and boards, managers, and corporations can do their jobs more efficiently. This is a common-sense action that will benefit everyone who lives in, operates, governs, or manages a condominium. Don Brown of Core Real Estate Group has said: "These regulations... represent additional burdens on boards and management companies, which end up increasing the costs for owners. We are happy to see the government..."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that when the order in council was issued by the previous government last December, there were two coming-into-force provisions and given that the majority of regulations were set to come into force on July 1, this Monday, of this year and given that a number of regulations related to insurance and reserve fund surveys and who's qualified to conduct them were set to come into force on January 1, 2020, to the minister: will the regulations set to come into force on January 1, 2020, be delayed as well?

Mr. Glubish: Thank you to the member for the question. We are pressing pause only on the regulations that were set to come into effect on Monday in order to review them. As a result, all of the pending regulations, including insurance requirements, will come into force on January 1, 2020. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the president of the Canadian Condominium Institute has said that in their education efforts they have "found that many people are still unaware and unprepared for the proposed changes. We are happy to support the government's pause on this." Again, this will enable us to look at the regulations with fresh eyes in preparation for all pending regulations to come into effect January 1, 2020.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Scare tactics: that's what the Minister of Education repeated over and over yesterday when asked about real cuts coming to Alberta classrooms. The Calgary board of education is cutting hundreds of teachers. Edmonton public schools is losing millions of dollars dedicated to students with complex needs. These are real situations being detailed by superintendents and school trustees. Minister, the only thing that I see that is scary is your lack of leadership and the consequences we have for Alberta students. Why won't you show an ounce of leadership and fund education properly?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we talk lots about the fear and smear unfortunately coming from the opposition. We see it in Team Angry, but also what you're seeing right now is that hon. member posturing for her future leadership race, I suspect, that's going on here inside this Chamber. As the NDP go through their internal problems, as they go through maybe their self-reflection or whatever is going on to determine their future, I suggest that they keep that internally and not bring it into this Chamber. We're here to work for the people of Alberta. We're here to return jobs to this province. We're here to get pipelines built and to get our economy going. Clearly, the opposition is just here to play games.

Ms Hoffman: Every single member of our caucus is united in standing up for the people of Alberta, Mr. Speaker. We won't be intimidated to stop asking about the ludicrous work that's being done by the government in terms of funding education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora will get to the question as there are no preambles after question 4.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the reminder, Mr. Speaker.

Ludicrous: given that that's how the minister described our proof that Normandeau school in her own backyard is being forced to crowd-source to keep its school nutrition program going and given that it's ludicrous to tell 33,000 students to go hungry, why won't the minister come clean and tell us...

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We absolutely look forward to the program, the nutrition program – we know the value that it has, how it impacts our schools – but we also have a procedure in place for funding. Information comes at certain times. We've communicated this to school boards. In fact, I've been in touch with many school boards, including Calgary public, Calgary Catholic, and I could go on and on and on. They've told me that the level of collaboration that we've been able to have, that my department and I have had, is refreshing and unprecedented.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the minister said, and I quote, that it's standard procedure – and she essentially said the same today – to communicate budget details to schools after they come to the Legislature but given that that will be months into the school year this time, Mr. Speaker, and given that her so-called standard procedure will see Battle River school division cut all of their special education teachers, to the minister. Hundreds of teachers lost, students going hungry, and boards cutting key educational supports for students with severe disabilities: is this what the minister calls standard procedure? I call it cruel.

The Speaker: The minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Our government has committed to funding education and supports for our students. We are committed to funding enrolment growth. We are committed to building schools. We are committed to providing the resources and keeping teachers in front of students. Our schools know this, and I know they're looking forward to a wonderful summer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

PDD Program Applications

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People are waiting for decisions about the status of their PDD funding, and they're hearing from staff that funding for PDD is now frozen and no new funding requests are being approved. Day after day I hear the Minister of Community and Social Services repeat empty talking points. Albertans with disabilities and their families deserve straight answers in plain language. Here's a very simple question: are new PDD applications for funding being frozen? Yes or no? Might as well be honest. We will find out.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, let me say very clearly in plain language that no operational decisions have been made in regard to the PDD program. What we have in place is very much the program that we inherited from the previous government, and certainly no changes have been made at this time.

Ms Renaud: That's not what I asked.

Given that people with disabilities who do not receive funding approvals within a reasonable time frame face increased risk of homelessness, abuse, and neglect and given that right now service providers and families are being told that there is no new funding for PDD, will this minister assure Albertans with disabilities and their families that eligible applications will be processed and funded without delay? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will reiterate that we have not made any changes to the PDD program at this time, and I'm working with stakeholders and the disability community quite diligently, actually, to determine what their needs and concerns are so that we can improve the existing program. No changes have been made yet, but the changes that will be made will be effective and efficient.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. That is not what we're asking.

Given that the community-led PDD review launched by our government is currently in limbo under this UCP government and given that I've asked questions previously and received no answer from this minister, let me try again. To the same minister: will you come clean about the PDD review and provide an exact date of when the panel's report will be shared with the public, or have you fired the PDD panel and not told us yet?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, it actually pains me that the previous government waited four years to initiate this PDD review panel. They could have done it at any time. To do a proper job, to make sure that it's done efficiently and with compassion takes time, and I will take that time to make sure that this review report is looked at thoroughly and also to demonstrate respect to the panel as well for their great work. That report will be released, and I will let everyone know when it's released.

Alberta Senators Federal Bills C-48 and C-69

Ms Glasgo: Mr. Speaker, my dad is one of the people who builds the pipelines that take our resources to market. I'm so proud of the work that men and women like him do every single day. Unfortunately, that same mindset isn't shared by the Alberta Senators that voted to support bills C-48 and C-69, that aim to shut down Alberta's energy sector. It is clear that independent Liberal appointees like Patti LaBoucane-Benson, Grant Mitchell, and Paula Simons are completely out of touch with everyday Albertans. To the Minister of Justice: what is being done to ensure that Alberta Senators are effective and represent the interests of everyday Albertans?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I am so proud of the work of our elected Senators here in Alberta. Senator Doug Black, Senator Scott Tannas: they led the charge in Ottawa fighting against Bill C-48 and Bill C-69. It's a great honour to, hopefully, you know, with the passage in this Assembly of this act, get Alberta Senate elections back here in Alberta and have the will of the Alberta people heard in Ottawa.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister. Given that the NDP failed Albertans by not renewing the Senatorial Selection Act in 2017 and given that an election and a strong mandate from the people of Alberta embolden those who are in the Senate with the legitimacy of being elected and given that those who were previously elected as Senators and appointed by Prime Minister Harper – namely, Doug Black and Scott Tannas – have been champions for our energy sector, can the Minister of Justice update this House as to what our government is doing to ensure that further Senate appointments from Alberta have been recommended by the people of Alberta, not Justin Trudeau and his anti-energy views?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we've held four Senate elections in Alberta. Half of the people that were nominated by this province were appointed to the Senate. These are some of the most effective parliamentarians that we've had here in our history. While the opposition rolled over with their best friend, Justin Trudeau, we're going to make sure we send people to Ottawa that have the best interests of Albertans at heart.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. minister. Given that bills C-69 and C-48, coupled with the imposition of a federal carbon tax, have stoked tensions across the country, fuelled by the Prime Minister's failure to recognize these policies for what they are, an assault on this province's oil and gas sector and the humble, hard-working people that work within it, and given that this bill threatens the very national unity of Canada, can the government inform the House as to what is being done to challenge these harmful bills and stand up for Alberta?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, just last week we launched the constitutional reference to challenge the carbon tax. The Premier has been clear: we're going to use every legal tool possible to make sure we fight against Bill C-48 and Bill C-69. Remember, too, about Bill C-48: two votes. If two votes had gone the other way, we could have defeated Bill C-48. I would propose that if elected Senators were there in Ottawa, we would have defeated Bill C-48.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has a question.

Justice Ministry Funding

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's refusal to provide budget certainty is creating chaos in education. I'm hoping the same won't happen in the justice system. Interim supply at the end of November represents more than two-thirds of the Justice budget. The figures the ministry is using signal over $100 million in cuts. Over half a billion of the $1.4 billion budget last year went to policing and jails. Judges decide who goes to jail, so you can't cut that. Can the minister reassure the public and confirm that there will be no cuts to public security?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, as we have clearly articulated, that was not a budget. We're going to be looking forward to bringing forward a detailed budget this fall.

As we articulated in our campaign platform, we're going to be providing our law enforcement officials with the resources that they need. Just remember here the previous record of the last government: seven out of 10 cities that had the highest increase in crime intensity were here in Alberta. We're going to make sure we reverse this trend.

Ms Ganley: But no commitment to police funding.

Given that of roughly $600 million remaining after excluding police and jails, $100 million in cuts would represent a significant portion and given that the Jordan decision puts significant pressure on the courts and prosecutors, pressure that requires additional resources each year just to keep up, to the minister. You claim to be tough on crime. Laying off court clerks would result in matters not going to trial. Can you commit that you will not cut the clerks or prosecutors?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times I've said in this House our campaign commitment to hire 50 new prosecutors.

Let's talk about the record of the previous government. These galleries were full of Albertans concerned about safety in their community. Not a day goes by that I don't get a phone call or a meeting with somebody that's worried about what's happening in rural Alberta. The previous government let rural Albertans down. We're going to make sure that we deliver on our campaign commitments, to be there for Albertans so that all Albertans – all Albertans – can feel safe in their communities.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister's colleagues voted repeatedly against funding for the RCMP and for prosecutors to support rural crime-fighting efforts and given that all the minister has committed to do so far is study the issue and that he appears to now be sliding in over a hundred million dollars in cuts and given that we know that the RCMP needs to hire constantly just to maintain staffing levels in rural areas, to the minister: if you can't commit to Albertans to maintain police funding, can you at least promise to commit to the RCMP so that they don't have to quit hiring as a result of your uncertainty?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I'll gladly rise all day to talk about the failed justice of the past government. Let's keep doing this. The fact of the matter is that crime continues to go up in rural communities. We're going to be there for these people. We're going to make sure our police officers, our prosecutors have the resources that they need. We're going to be providing $50 million to ALERT. We're going to be making sure we expand drug treatment courts. We're going to be making sure we have the priorities of Albertans at heart. We're going to deliver on our campaign promises.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Condominium Governance Regulations (continued)

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government was proud to bring in new condominium rules to protect Alberta consumers. We put caps on fees, enhanced transparency for condominium boards, and we introduced protections for first-time homebuyers. Today this government has announced that they're putting a pause on the work we did. This is concerning to me and my constituents. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why would you ever pause rules designed to protect condo owners?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, glad to have a follow-up on this very important topic. We place a great deal of value on input from condominium stakeholders, and these stakeholders have told us that the new condo regulations, scheduled to come into effect this summer, will cause an unnecessary administrative burden. We take these concerns very seriously. We have said that we want to ensure that Alberta is the best place to live, work, and raise a family. We are serious about that. Part of that means reducing red tape where we can and making sure that we are not adding unnecessary burdens to condominium owners, managers, associations. This is what our government is focused on delivering.

Mr. Carson: Well, it seems we're seeing a pattern of weakened consumer protections under this minister.

Given that 1 in 5 Albertans live in a condo and given that we know that condo owners endured outrageous fees and had no recourse and given that this government has a long track record of putting their wealthy donors first – and I fear they may be doing it here again – to the minister: can you confirm that your only goal here is to actually enhance consumer protections, not like, say, the promises you've made to your used-car dealer donors?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, I'm having trouble with this one. The member opposite is really just trying to create problems where we're trying to bring about solutions. All we are doing with this is pressing pause on these regulations so that we can review them with fresh eyes and incorporate the feedback we have received from the stakeholders in this community. Albertans elected us to take action. We are committed to delivering on their best interests. I've already heard from stakeholders that this change is good news and that the regulations that they were facing were impractical and overregulated and that they were going to increase costs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I've heard stories, too. Given that we've heard heartbreaking stories of Albertans losing their condo deposits and stories of special assessments bankrupting families and given that these victims had nowhere to turn prior to the actions taken by our NDP government, to the minister: will you please commit to involving condo owners in whatever study you're conducting, and will you be open and transparent on who else is being consulted?

Mr. Glubish: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a former apartment condo owner and also a former director on my local condo board, I can assure the member opposite that I understand the serious nature of these issues. I can tell you that we have talked to stakeholders, which includes condo owners. We are going to take the time to get this right, and we are going to include the feedback from stakeholders. I can't tell you enough how much these stakeholders have told us already in the last two months that the previous government got this wrong. We will get it right. We are standing up for Albertans' interests, and we will not apologize for that.

Support for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, approximately 444,000 Albertans are reported to be living with a disability. While not all disabled persons are unable to work, statistics show that individuals with disabilities tend to have lower incomes and higher rates of unemployment than people without disabilities. All Albertans deserve to live with dignity and support themselves in the manner that they see fit. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: what is our government doing to ensure supports for all Albertans with disabilities?

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member for that question. Mr. Speaker, as a government we are deeply committed to providing quality services to vulnerable Albertans, including those with disabilities. We have strong platform commitments around the PDD program, employment opportunities, and enhancing supports for children with disabilities. Currently we have not made any changes to any of the programs. We are very much in listening mode. I have been working in co-ordination with stakeholders, students, families, and other members of the disability community to better understand their concerns and needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Only 11,000 of these 440,000 disabled Albertans qualify for the persons with developmental disabilities program, and of these 11,000, only 16 per cent are actually employed. Given that often businesses are reluctant to take on the responsibility of employing a disabled person and given that there is often a job shortage for individuals with disabilities looking for work, to the minister: what is our government doing to help these individuals find gainful employment?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, our government recognizes the underrepresentation of persons with disabilities in the workforce, and we will change that. We want all Albertans to be able to participate in society and the economy. That is why, as part of our job-creation plan, we will provide $5 million per year to local partner organizations like Abilities at Work and the Rotary employment partnership program to help create these job opportunities. We're also committed to making the government of Alberta a leader in hiring people with disabilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you once again, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for that response. Given that the early years of a child's life are the most important for a child's development and given that certain disabilities have a direct impact on learning capabilities and given that children in Alberta deserve the best shot at life, can the Minister of Community and Social Services please outline what our government is doing for children with disabilities?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, all children deserve to be protected, nurtured, and kept safe. Our government believes that prevention should be a guiding policy principle in social services. That is why our government plans to restore the wellness resiliency partnership program to help children with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder succeed in school. We will also be updating the standards of special education to reflect modern technologies and practices. All children deserve a quality, inclusive education regardless of ability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Minimum Wage for Youth

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a recent opinion piece to the Morinville News the labour minister wrote, "With the stats showing that unemployment for those under 18 for Q1 of 2019 is almost triple the adult unemployment rate, we can see that the previous government's policy has failed." What he fails to mention is that the youth unemployment rate has been triple the adult unemployment rate for several decades. He used a statistic many Albertans may not be familiar with to try and justify his assault on the wages of hard-working Alberta students. To the minister: when will you stop hiding behind partial statistics?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member across the aisle and also to the party: what they failed to realize is the harm that their policies had on job creators and on the youth that they are trying to protect. What they failed to realize is that by increasing by nearly 50 per cent the minimum wage during the course of one of the worst economic downturns in Alberta's history, they actually created greater damage on employment and reduced opportunities for youth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister is still pretending that the ratio of youth unemployment to general unemployment shifted due to the increased minimum wage, when it didn't, and given that Saskatchewan has almost exactly the same ratio, just as in Alberta, roughly around three times, and didn't have an increase to their minimum wage, to the minister: when can the Morinville News expect your correction, and when can Alberta students expect the $2 an hour you lifted from them?

2:30

Mr. Copping: I struggle with the comments made by the hon. member on the other side mainly because there's a failure to recognize that their drive to $15 per hour in the face of one of the worst economic downturns had an impact. The Conference Board of Canada indicated that a 10 per cent – 10 per cent – increase in the minimum wage would result in a 1 to 3 per cent increase in unemployment, and they did nearly a 50 per cent increase. Mr. Speaker, 21 per cent of our youth aren't working. We need to get them back working, and this minimum wage job creation for youth will do that.

Thank you.

Ms Gray: Given that the minister is quoting studies where we can see what happened in Alberta and what happened to Saskatchewan – both saw an increase in youth unemployment not related to the increase in minimum wage – and given that squeezing working students out of a couple of bucks an hour won't alter the state of Alberta's economy but will cause great pain to the youth who rely on that money, will the minister finally admit that the UCP labour policy is not about what's good for Alberta's economy but, rather, only what's good for the UCP's friends and donors?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, the student job-creation wage is about creating jobs for Alberta's youth. Not only were there studies done while the government was actually increasing its minimum wage urging them not to do so in the context, but after the fact we had studies done by the Calgary Chamber of commerce, also by other business organizations, where businesses in Calgary and across Alberta indicated that because of the changes that they made in terms of the increase in minimum wages and changes to general holiday pay, there were layoffs and a reduction in jobs, and there was also a reduction in hours. This hurt youth the most, and we're going to correct that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is rising to ask a question.

School Infrastructure Capital Projects

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Father Michael Mireau school in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie is desperately in need of new portables in time for the start of classes in September. A letter from Edmonton Catholic schools on June 13 indicates that the modular units are ready to go, but the school board can't proceed with installation without this minister. To the Minister of Education: are you aware of this situation, and can you please confirm here and now that you will approve these modulars?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. With the interim supply just passing, we are in the process of going through with all of the capital projects, including the modular projects that were approved.

Thank you.

Member Loyola: Given that portables have become a long-time reality in Alberta after decades of Tory governments that were unwilling to build schools and given that Edmonton Catholic was due to prepare the site for the modulars at Father Michael Mireau this week and given that time is tight to get the modulars in place, will the minister commit to looking into this matter immediately after question period, and will she ensure the modular installations by the end of the day tomorrow?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I will absolutely – my door has been open. I've been receiving numerous calls to meet on various capital issues. I continue to meet, and I welcome the information to be sent to me.

Thank you.

Member Loyola: Given that our government built or renovated 240 schools in just a four-year term and given that this minister has committed to building more schools in the future and given that the Minister of Infrastructure has said that he's going to use the capital plan created by our government, to the Minister of Infrastructure: will you commit here and now that every single school project across this province that was approved by our government will go forward and do so on the same timelines that we had planned?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite knows full well that we're going through a budget process. As I've said before, we are looking at every project. We told them that we will honour their capital plan, but we'll still prioritize the projects. They also have left us in a ditch with a projected $100 billion debt, so we have to handle that, too. We're trying to balance and trying to deliver the key infrastructure projects for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain has a question.

Infrastructure Project Prioritization

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipalities need transparency from the provincial government. Without transparency from the government it becomes impossible for municipalities to properly plan limited infrastructure resources for the many needs each and every municipality faces. To the Minister of Infrastructure: when will the government uphold its campaign promises to provide transparency on prioritization criteria, establish predictable funding levels, and ensure adequate maintenance of existing infrastructure assets?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was in our government's election campaign commitment platform to provide transparency on prioritization criteria for infrastructure projects and to establish predictable funding levels and to ensure adequate maintenance of existing assets, and this will be contained in the proposed Alberta infrastructure act. My staff in my department have started the work to ensure the bill is drafted, and I hope to table the bill in the spring of 2020.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the previous government's utter contempt for transparency of the infrastructure priorities list and given that this absolute lack of transparency drives away potential P3 partnerships which could increase the quality of Alberta infrastructure and decrease the cost and given that without predictability and funding it is difficult, bordering on impossible, for municipalities to plan for growth and other challenges, how does the government intend to uphold its promises of transparency?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question and for his advocacy. It is true that the previous government derided P3s. For example, the Calgary cancer centre was supposed to be a P3, but the NDP chose the most expensive design and did not source out the building operations and maintenance. I know we could have saved millions of dollars on that project. The Alberta infrastructure act will bring more transparency on how these kinds of decisions will be made in the future.

Mr. Turton: Mr. Speaker, given the previous government's obscuring of the infrastructure priorities and the criteria for choosing them and given that previous administrations have interfered in infrastructure priorities in an attempt to buy the votes of Albertans with their own tax dollars, how will this minister ensure accountability and transparency on the prioritization criteria to Albertans?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Panda: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member. As you know, the NDP government attempted to buy votes, like the Member for Lethbridge-West trying to build backcountry huts in the Castle provincial park while the schools needed to be built and the roads needed to be paved. I want Albertans to know two things. One, I'll be publishing an annual infrastructure report to provide detailed information on the progress being made to meet the commitments of this government. There will also be a 20-year strategic capital plan that looks forward to see . . .

Seniors' Housing

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, seniors are the most valued members of any community. They have served their families, friends, and co-workers admirably and have built Alberta into what it is today. Over the past four years, though, the NDP failed Alberta's seniors. Wait times for care centres increased while their plans to build new care facilities were 10 to 15 times more expensive than previous government estimates. Minister, seniors in my riding want to know: what is this government doing to reduce wait times for more seniors' housing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question from the hon. member. We fully support seniors aging in their own communities through funding to build, operate, and maintain housing for low- to moderate-income seniors. Allowing for more creative community options such as personal care homes for seniors who need more care that can't be provided at home but less than a supportive living facility is an innovative solution for many of our seniors as the demand for seniors' housing continues to grow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many seniors' homes in my constituency of Calgary-Currie are out-of-date facilities that can't keep up with the needs of the residents and given that a United Conservative Party campaign promise was to build more affordable housing for seniors who need it, Minister: can you please let my constituents know what the government is doing to provide quality housing for seniors in Calgary-Currie and across Alberta?

2:40

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors have established Alberta's values of hard work, responsibility, and community, and they deserve our support. We are currently working with our housing partners to evaluate current housing facilities and prioritize future projects to best serve our seniors.

Mr. Milliken: Given that while Alberta was under the NDP's watch the cost to the government for seniors' housing skyrocketed without having any measurable improvement on the quality of the few residences they provided and given that as Alberta's population ages more and more seniors will need more housing, to the minister: how will this UCP government reduce the cost per bed while providing the highest quality care for our seniors?

The Speaker: The minister.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP had four years to address this issue, yet there are more than 4,800 seniors' households on the waiting list. The cost of a bed under the previous government was 10 to 15 times more than it should have been. While the NDP has failed Albertans and seniors, our government will work with private and civic society partners to provide more affordable housing units in a fiscally responsible way.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll ask you to exit quickly in just a brief moment. I invite you to travel home safely, those of you who have other commitments, and please enjoy a very, very happy Canada Day. I invite all members to join us here at the Assembly. There are programs for the public between the hours of 12 p.m. and 9 p.m.

Hon. members, we are at points of order. The first point of order was raised by the hon. Minister of Transportation and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe you received a note expressing my intention to change my point of order to a question of privilege. I reluctantly do this in regard to the threatening comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud during question period. I would appreciate it if you would allow me until the next sitting day to prepare my arguments.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Minister of Transportation has provided oral notice for a Standing Order 15, which will be debated on Tuesday.

We are still at points of order. The Government House Leader also rose on a number of points of order throughout the afternoon. For any points of order of similar topics, if you can address them in one, I think it would be reasonable.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Of course, Mr. Speaker. I completely agree. I have two different topics. The bulk of the points of order are on one issue and then one separate if that works for you. I suspect it works for the Opposition House Leader as well.

Point of Order

Reflections on a Decision of the Assembly

Mr. Jason Nixon: I am rising first under Standing Order 23 which says:

- A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .
  - (c) persists in needless repetition or raises matters that have been decided during the current session.

I would also point out a couple of other subsections of Standing Order 23:

- (d) refers at length to debates of the current session . . .

and then, lastly,

- (f) debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that Member's intention to move that it be rescinded.

Throughout question period today, Mr. Speaker, the opposition referred repeatedly to a vote that took place in the Assembly last night on an amendment, at some length. I think you could see throughout today, during question period, that there's no doubt that that was referenced repeatedly. Sadly, it was also done in such a way that certainly could be perceived as threatening to the hon. members of the government. With that said, I think that'll be addressed on Tuesday.

The reality is – we'll see how you feel about it – I think, that it's inappropriate for that to continue inside this place and that members should withdraw those comments, apologize for those comments, and return to proper decorum inside question period.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition deputy House leader.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just clarifying the point that the Government House Leader, I believe, is referring to the votes that occurred last night in his point of order. Just for point of clarity, it is public record. I mean, all of our votes are recorded. It was a matter that did occur last night.

I think that, just to remind the government side and the ministers, they are responsible as, you know, members of Executive Council to be part of this legislation and to engage in the debate around the legislation. A vote occurred last night, and it is obviously one of the ones that we've been significantly debating over the last few weeks – significantly – and the member, of course, wanted to ensure that and provide an opportunity for Executive Council to explain why they chose to vote the way that they did. Again, it's public record, so that would not, in my opinion, be a matter that is really a point of order or a matter of dispute given that it's on the record.

The Speaker: Well, thank you for the interventions.

I would highlight, just for those of you following along at home, that the Government House Leader's point of order, I believe, is specifically referring to Standing Order 23(f). "Debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that Member's intention to move that it be rescinded" is how the standing order is worded in our Standing Orders.

The Government House Leader also made some reference to prior debates that have taken place inside the Assembly in the same session. While I am not nearly as sympathetic to his position on the discussion of prior debate in a previous session, I think that there may be some validity to that.

Having said that, with respect to specifically 23(f), as Speaker Wanner also ruled with reference to the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 617, when it reflects on specifically commenting on how individuals have voted in the Assembly and therefore reflecting on a previous vote of the Assembly, in Speaker Wanner's words: "'Members may not speak against or reflect upon any decision of the House.' In other words, an allegation or question concerning how a member has voted is [in fact] offside." That is May 9, 2017, on page 924.

As such, I agree with the ruling that Speaker Wanner made on that day, and while I won't ask for an apology or a withdrawal today, I will strongly encourage members of the Official Opposition, when asking their questions, to not refer specifically to the voting record of any member of the Assembly as that would very clearly be in violation of Standing Order 23(f).

We are continuing with points of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Supplementary Questions

Mr. Jason Nixon: My last one, Mr. Speaker. It's in regard to the question that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud had today. In the interest of time I'll just refer to two previous Speaker rulings. Speaker Kowalski ruled on May 12, 2004:

Now, there's also a tradition we follow here that if an hon. member is recognized, they raise a first question and then they're allowed two supplementals. It has always been understood that supplementals must have something to do with the first question.

In addition, a second ruling I would refer you to, Mr. Speaker. On March 30, 1998, Speaker Kowalski as well ruled: "There is a consistent rule that there should be some flow with the questions and they should be in a similar type of subject." I find those, actually, in a ruling that was also made by Speaker Wanner on the same type of topic on December 6, 2016.

2:50

I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but if you listen to the hon. member's questions, she began talking about children's services and education issues on her original question and her first supplemental and then made a drastic switch well over to minimum wage, going to another minister. While I have no concern with asking multiple questions of different ministers in the Chamber, I would submit to you that it was a drastic change in topic and fits within that ruling.

The Speaker: I appreciate the hon. Government House Leader's remarks. I don't know if the Official Opposition House Leader would like to speak, but I am also prepared to rule.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just really quickly, I am sure that you have the benefit of the Blues now. I do believe that all three questions were related to the bill last night and to the previous ruling that you just made, so I won't go into that piece, but all three questions were related to Bill 8 as of last night. Although directed to different ministers, it was related to that part.

The Speaker: Thank you to both House leaders for your comments.

I unfortunately don't have the benefit of the Blues for this particular question, and my memory on a Thursday afternoon perhaps isn't as sharp as it might be. I think it's possible that a case could be made that the questions that were being asked were about the overall health and well-being of young people. As such, it's possible that they were in order. Without the benefit of the Blues I am unable to rule, but I think that we need to offer all members of the Assembly certain levels of latitude when asking questions. It is the opposition's opportunity to hold the government to account, and I would say that I'll likely be hesitant to make further comment on this particular situation after reviewing the Blues, but if I feel there's a need, I'll do so on Tuesday.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j), making allegations against another member, imputing false or unavowed motives to another member, using insulting language of a nature likely to cause disorder. I'm specifically speaking to the word "bullying" as the example that the Government House Leader used in one of his responses to the Official Opposition. However, I would like to speak to a broader context around the tone that I feel the government is using when responding to the opposition with their "fear and smear" language, and then specifically the bullying component.

I think if you would refer to Beauchesne's section 3, page 4 – I'll just read it back to you really quickly. In

The whole concept of the parliamentary Question Period depends on the tradition that the Cabinet is willing to submit its conduct of public affairs to the scrutiny of the Opposition on a regular basis. More tentative are such traditional features as respect for the rights of the minority, which precludes a Government from using to excess the [excessive] powers that it has to limit debate or to proceed in what the public and the Opposition might interpret as unorthodox ways.

I appreciate that this new government is not a big fan of question period or being held to account for, you know, some of the decisions that this Executive Council has decided to make around legislation and how that may be impacting Albertans and specifically a minority group within Alberta, but our position and our responsibility as the Official Opposition in this House is to hold this government to account. The language around we're "bullying" them, the language around using "fear and smear" in this House I deem to be trying, deliberately, to impute false motives of the Official Opposition. I also believe that it is used deliberately to create disorder in this House on a regular basis by the Executive Council. I also believe that it has allegations to members of this Official Opposition about what our motives are.

I would just like to ask the government and this Executive Council to maybe just be respectful of the parliamentary process and the role of the Official Opposition, reference Beauchesne's if you would like, and maybe take a step back and . . . [interjection] I appreciate that one of the members of the Executive Council is actually heckling me right now about this while I am trying to speak to decorum in the House, something that I believe their leader has been very clear is important to them.

So again I would ask that there be some level of respect and that we may bring down the allegations of us bullying this Executive Council and maybe just answering the questions as a government should.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, for this opposition to try to attempt to lecture anybody in decorum is an absolute joke. Anybody who's seen what's taken place in this Assembly knows that.

With that said, I don't have the benefit of the Blues specifically for the comment the hon. member refers to. But, again, the context that I recall is making it clear that this government will not be bullied by the opposition. It is disappointing to have seen what has taken place over the last few weeks inside this Chamber as over and over the opposition has bullied particularly our female members. Completely inappropriate. Now, they might disagree that they're doing that. I would submit to you, then, I guess, that that's a matter of debate and a disagreement on the facts. But the reality is, Mr. Speaker, that that's certainly how this government feels. I think anybody watching how that opposition has operated inside this House agrees. In fact, I know they do because I've heard from constituents often on how appalled they are about their behaviour on that issue. I'll be happy to start tabling those comments if that would help with the situation.

In addition to fear and smear, while I understand that the opposition doesn't like to have that pointed out, that is certainly how we feel their tactics are, not only in the House but as a party. Again, a disagreement as to the facts and a matter of debate. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, as far as this Chamber is concerned, it's something that this government thinks is taking place. We will point out the opposition's behaviour to the people of Alberta despite the fact that today they went quite out of their way to try to be able to stop the government from pointing out how they're behaving. That is our right to answer that question and to point out the concerns that we have with what is being presented by the opposition.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I do in fact have the benefit of the Blues, and I am pleased to rise to speak to this important point of order. The statement made by the Government House Leader is: "It's ridiculous. We will not be lectured or bullied by these people. We will continue to stand up for our constituents inside this Assembly."

I have some significant concern around the use of the word "bullying." In fact, I was having this conversation with members of my team earlier today. Inside this Chamber I have heard members of the government use the term, that the opposition is bullying certain members, and I, in fact, on numerous occasions have heard in questioning from the Official Opposition that this government is bullying other individuals.

As hon. members of this Assembly I understand that we are here battling for ideas, but when we start to make accusations about one member bullying another, I believe that it actually does a significant disservice to the major impact that bullying has on our young people. We need to be very cautious with both how we engage in decorum in this Assembly as well as what we communicate to others. When we make accusations about each other, bullying inside this Chamber, I believe that it minimizes the significant bullying that in fact takes place online and in schools and of our young people.

So I call upon all members to raise the level of decorum. Let's think very cautiously, both members of the opposition, to be clear, and members of the government, when we use the term "bullying," that we're not minimizing the impact that it's having on youth, children, teens in what I would say is the real world and not just here in this Chamber. I encourage all members to govern themselves accordingly as we move forward together to work to raise the level of decorum inside this Chamber.

We are at Ordres du jour.

3:00

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, under 13(2) I rise to . . .

The Speaker: We are at Orders of the Day, ordres du jour.

The Government House Leader would like to speak under 13(2)?

Mr. Jason Nixon: No. The Deputy Government House Leader would like to speak under 13(2).

Mrs. Savage: I would like to speak under 13(2).

The Speaker: Sure.

Point of Clarification

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, respectfully, I feel your remarks don't understand the effect that some on our side of the House have felt in feeling bullied during question period, and I want it on the record that I think it's real. I think the effects are real, and I believe and feel that perhaps your comments have minimized that impact to the women on this side of the House.

The Speaker: I appreciate your comments. Here's what I would say. I think that you've proven my point. We use this accusation: members of the opposition are doing certain things, and the government is bullying. The government responds with: the opposition is bullying us. We all need to raise our level of decorum. [interjection] The Government House Leader may disagree, but making accusations about bullying people, on both sides of the Chamber – I'm speaking to the opposition, and I'm speaking to the government, responding to the fact that they have, then, felt bullied.

We're talking about a very, very significant issue that widely impacts predominantly young people in our province, and as adults we need to reflect much better on those young people and on each other and govern ourselves accordingly. The opposition should not be accusing the government of bullying Albertans or bullying others, and the government shouldn't be making accusations of the opposition bullying them. We are here for a battle of ideas, not to be focused on bullying each other inside this Chamber.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 13 Alberta Senate Election Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 13, the Alberta Senate Election Act.

This bill is based on historic Senate election law here in Alberta that expired in 2016. The law was not renewed by the NDP in 2016, and pursuant to its sunset clause it expired. We've held four Senate elections here in this province, starting in 1989. The last one was in 2012.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

Through that process Alberta has nominated 10 nominees for recommendation for appointment to the Senate, five of whom were appointed to represent us in the Senate in Ottawa. Those include Stan Waters, Bert Brown, Betty Unger, Doug Black, and Scott Tannas.

I have personal knowledge, Mr. Speaker, of the Senate election campaign from 2012. I happened to run the campaign for Senator Doug Black in that process, and it was one of the most enriching political campaigns that I've ever been involved in. Now, Senator Black toured across this great province, meeting with hundreds and hundreds of Albertans in communities ranging from Grande Prairie to Sundre down to Lethbridge. It was an amazing experience for a Senator who wants to represent all Albertans to go through, the process of earning the trust of Alberta voters. In that election over a million people in Alberta cast ballots for Senators here in this great province. Senator Black received 428,000 votes. That is a democratic mandate. That is important.

This bill reflects the belief that Senators that have that mandate, Senators that go through that process, that earn the trust of voters, have the democratic authority then to go to Ottawa and represent them in our Parliament.

We currently have six Senators in Alberta pursuant to our Constitution, Mr. Speaker. Last week, with the passage of Bill C-48, a prejudicial attack on Alberta, and Bill C-69, the no-more-pipelines act, we saw it play out in our Parliament why it is so important to have elected Senators from here in Alberta. The two Senators that were leading the charge against this attack on Alberta's prosperity were elected Senator Doug Black and elected Senator Scott Tannas. From the government side we just thank them so much for fighting so hard for the future of this province.

Conversely, unelected, unaccountable Senators that were appointed to the Senate from Alberta did not all vote in Alberta's best interest, Mr. Speaker. They did not vote in Alberta's best interest. All we needed to stop Bill C-48 was to turn two votes. Now, if people had gone through an election and if the six Senators representing Alberta were elected Senators, I would contend that the voting results on Bill C-48 would have been very different. We probably would have seen that bill defeated. That would have been in Alberta's best interest.

That's why it is so important that we set the example for this country on the democratization of our Senate. When Albertans have had a say as to who represents them best, they've always chosen individuals of the highest calibre. The five Senators elected by Albertans that were appointed to the Senate have shown that they've effectively stood up for Alberta's economy, jobs, and families. When the federal government ignores our concerns, elected Senators have been our voice of reason there, fighting for Albertans. Alberta has always taken a leadership role in Confederation. We have led the discussion around Senate reform and provincial rights. Our elected Senators have set an example for other provinces of the benefits of having elected Senators.

It also sends a message to Ottawa and Justin Trudeau, who refused to appoint Senator-in-waiting Mike Shaikh, who received a democratic mandate from Albertans. I was so proud of the fact that our Premier yesterday said that if this bill passes, Mr. Speaker, he would appoint Mike Shaikh, who has the democratic mandate of Albertans, as a Senate nominee for our great province. We would highly encourage the Prime Minister to listen to the democratic mandate of Albertans and appoint Mike Shaikh when an opportunity is there for an appointment to Alberta on the Senate piece.

Again, Mr. Speaker, in 2012 over 1.3 million Albertans voted for who they believe should represent them in the Senate. We need to make sure that the Senate is accountable to the people. This is an important bill to get that done. This is the best way to make sure that our voice is heard in Ottawa to fight against other bills like C-48 and C-69, that are so damaging to our province.

Again, it is my honour and privilege to introduce this bill. We are showing Albertans once again that they have their say. This was a key election promise of ours to Albertans, Mr. Speaker. Promise made, promise kept.

I now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 12 Royalty Guarantee Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 12. I thought we were speaking to a different bill.

The Deputy Chair: We are currently debating in committee Bill 12, Royalty Guarantee Act.

Member Irwin: Okay. So we are on Bill 12?

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Member Irwin: Okay. Thank you. We know that Alberta's energy resources are owned by the people of Alberta, and our job is to steward those resources to provide the right return for Albertans and to not squander them for tomorrow. This is exactly why our government appointed an expert panel in 2015 to review royalties and ensure that we're competitive with other jurisdictions. That work is something that we should all be quite proud of. Based on that panel's recommendations, we were able to create a modernized royalty framework that is much stronger, that was much more efficient and more competitive.

3:10

But, as we're seeing, the UCP is taking a different approach. Instead of taking real action, we see that this Premier is misleading Albertans with yet another empty promise. My concern and the concern of my colleagues is that this bill does not create the certainty that our industry needs. In fact, it's full of loopholes that allow the government to change royalty rates whenever they want. We call upon this government and this Premier to stop with these empty promises, these gimmicks, and take real action.

We know that it's important that we get our oil moving. By cancelling our oil-by-rail deal, our Premier is risking jobs. You know, I've talked about this in the House before. My own father actually worked in oil and gas for decades, for nearly 40 years. I saw how hard he worked and how much he had to sacrifice to support our family, so I worry about folks like him who are employed in the oil and gas industry who are working so hard to support our province's economy.

Now, I want to talk a little bit more about the modernized framework that we introduced. I was not, obviously, a member of this government when the framework was put forward, but I saw how hard our government, the cabinet, and our former Premier worked on this issue. In August 2015 – that was pretty early into their mandate as well, I should point out – our government appointed the panel, including Calgary-based energy economist Peter Tertzakian; the mayor of Beaverlodge, Leona Hanson; the president and vice-chancellor of the University of Winnipeg, Annette Trimbee; and, of course, the chair, who was Dave Mowat.

The panel took a lot of time and put in a lot of effort to ensure that they were hearing from everybody, not just from industry experts but from labour groups, from environmental groups, from a whole number of academics working in a range of fields, from business leaders, community leaders, thousands of other Albertans who participated in person or online, and from workers as well, which is crucial. Their consultations with Albertans included more than 7,000 online responses.

What did that panel find? Well, I talked a little bit about it, but I want to share a little bit more detail. Overall, royalty rates are comparable to other jurisdictions. They recognized that there are issues with crude oil, liquids, natural gas. They recommended that all changes to that new framework should apply to new wells in 2017, that existing royalties should remain in effect for 10 years on any wells drilled before 2017, and that more transparency and more disclosure is needed about calculations and royalties per project.

What did our government do? Well, we took the advice of this expert panel and accepted that royalty review panel's recommendation. As a result, we released a modernized royalty framework in January 2017 to try to, as the panel urged, encourage industry to innovate and to reduce costs, to make those same companies competitive, and, of course, most importantly, encourage more investment in Alberta.

I'm not going to go on a lot about this one, but I wanted to get on the record here, because I haven't yet spoken to Bill 12, that we're concerned about the lack of certainty in this bill. We're concerned about the loopholes that, as I said, will allow government to change royalty rates.

What I'm going to do is that I'm going to move that we adjourn debate on this bill and move forward. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has jumped up to speak to this bill.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. While I was quite happy to speak to Bill 12, I'd also love to speak to Bill 2. All right. Look, 13 bucks an hour, that's a heck of a lot more than zero bucks an hour, and that's the option here: that was our Premier speaking after Bill 2, the open for business act, was tabled in the Legislature. I want to rise today and speak to this bill and speak to the amendment as well to propose changing the name of this Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, to make it be called the employment standards and labour relations statutes amendment act, 2019.

I want to just talk a little bit more about the words of our Premier and why I'm quite concerned about his approach to this bill. He says that we've got 30,000 young Albertans here out of work, that we want to get them their first job experience, that we're talking about part-time, teenagers, who are typically in high school. He goes on to say that this will reduce costs for businesses and allow job creators to hire more young people who are just starting out in the workforce, that they're working typically 20 hours a week or less.

Now, these statements fail to recognize that there are many young people in Alberta who are actually working more than that. I can pull in some stats from a number of places, but I've got the Alberta Federation of Labour here, who estimates that there are approximately 35,609 workers in Alberta age 15 to 17 that will be negatively impacted by lowering their wages. They point out that this minimum wage cut will make life harder for young workers who are saving for school or contributing to their household's income.

We know that this government is saying that they're trying to address these higher unemployment rates, which, our Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods pointed out earlier, is simply not true. This is a discriminatory policy that tells young Albertans that the work they do is worth less than other Albertans'. We know that there are young people who work more than one job, that there are young people who work day in and day out to support their families. It's not about working to buy fun extras but actually to put food on their family's table, to help pay the bills. Certainly, we know there are some young people out there who are fortunate enough to just be able to work because they want to, to have extra pocket money, but that's not the reality for all young people.

That's not the reality of many of my constituents who shared with me that they're concerned about what this minimum wage cut will mean for them and for their families. For these young people a $2-an-hour difference is huge. It's a big deal. It's a significant amount. We need to consider these young people as we move forward. I want to echo the words of 16-year-old Karissa Goulding, who works at a Fort Saskatchewan restaurant. She said, quite simply, that these changes don't seem ethical. She said: I think it's crazy for me to be paid less when I work just as hard as my adult colleagues.

The concept that the Premier put forward, that young people don't have to pay bills, is dead wrong. Karissa, like many young Albertans, is supporting her family. We see this a lot. There are statistics that show that, particularly in newcomer families, young people are trying to help support their families, their parents, or perhaps just one parent.

She says: the youth wage cut represents the government telling me that they know more about my situation than I do, that my work is not valued as much as my adult colleagues. Pretty strong, pretty insightful words from a 16-year-old. She said that her boss told her that her wages will be cut when the change comes into effect, which is as of yesterday.

What I found most troubling as a former teacher is that she said that as a result, she's going to have to work more hours, which will eat into her study time. So there you go, an example of a student who's quite worried about this change. It's not only cutting into the money that she worked so hard to earn; it's potentially damaging to her academic career. She needs to work more hours to make up for those lost wages, and in turn her studies are potentially compromised. Of course, the Premier says that this will, quote, get young people back to work. You're right. It'll get some people back to work, young people like Karissa, who now need to work even more hours just to make ends meet.

3:20

As I said, I was a teacher. I was a high school teacher. I worked a lot with young people in that age range, 16 years old, just like Karissa. In my role as a teacher I often had to sit with students to urge them to stay in school. I was an academic counsellor, and I was a vice-principal, so I took it seriously to really keep kids in school. I mean, a lot of those kids out in rural Alberta, where I taught, were quite drawn to some pretty high-paying jobs or at least jobs that would lead to high-paying jobs in the future, particularly, at that time, in oil and gas, other industries. As I said, I had to sit with those students to really urge them to stay in school. You've got your whole life to earn money in a full-time sort of role. Many of them wanted to get out there, and it was tempting to drop out. I worry that with this move to cut wages, kids like those ones that I used to teach will be further pushed to drop out of school.

I'm concerned about young people. I'm concerned about the students, like the ones I used to teach and the ones that are out there right now, who are now, now that this wage cut has come into effect, being impacted. Their families are being impacted in many cases.

It's not just about the students. As I said, I wanted to hammer that point home because it's an issue that's – you know, the livelihood of students is something that I take quite seriously. But it's also about workers generally. We've seen from this government a continued attack on workers.

Joel French, executive director of Public Interest Alberta, noted:

These changes will create a perverse incentive for employers to maximize profits by hiring youth instead of other workers because they can be paid less for doing the same work . . . [and it's] clear discrimination against a [group] of workers who are not even able to express their opinion at the ballot box.

As I've said before, I mean, I was a social studies teacher, so in that role – central to the Alberta social studies curriculum program of studies, kindergarten to grade 12, is the importance of active, engaged citizenship. My role as a teacher was to encourage my students to voice their concerns when they felt that they were being discriminated against. If I were a teacher in a school right now and I was hearing from my students their concerns about this, I'd sure be encouraging them to write letters, to send off e-mails. I know, at least on our side of the House, we've certainly been CCed on some of those e-mails.

Now, Joel French goes on to say that – you know what? – this is about more than just the impact on youth workers. It's about the impact on adult workers as well. He pulls in data, which I think is an important approach to take, an evidence-based approach, and says:

We can easily predict that this will cause a drop in employment for vulnerable groups of adult low wage earners, who tend to be young adults, women, and people of colour . . .

groups that we know, here in Alberta,

. . . are already struggling in our economy, and the last thing they need is an attack on their employment.

This is a deep concern.

We know that there are stats that raise concern from a global context, too. Our party, the NDP: we take this seriously. We will stand in this House and tell you that the youth minimum wage is discriminatory. Don't just take our word for it; take the words of young people who have gone on the record to say the very same thing. As information from the Alberta Federation of Labour outlines, a youth minimum wage "violates international standards on fair pay." Youth workers cannot be universally judged to have lower productivity than older workers, especially given the types of jobs that we typically find youth workers in. The International Labour Organization, the ILO, and the international community have embraced the principle, a principle that we should all embrace, of equal remuneration for work of equal value, equal pay for equal work.

Mr. Schmidt: Sounds like socialism.

Member Irwin: Right?

We'd like to take a jurisdictional approach. It's important that we look at what's been done Canada-wide and internationally as well. All Canadian provinces embraced this standard in the 1980s and the 1990s. Countries such as New Zealand have moved to a single minimum wage because they saw that it was discriminatory. They saw that, in fact, the very people it was intending to help were being hurt by the policy. By implementing a tiered minimum wage, as our province has sadly done, Alberta is arguably in contravention of international labour standards and is pushing even lower wages on some of the people who are already the lowest wage workers in our society.

I'd like to just close by reiterating my concern about this bill, my concern about the unintended consequences of some of the policies inherent in it. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other hon. members?

I will also just say – I didn't say this at the outset of the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood – that we are still on amendment A2. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore rising to speak, please.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate you recognizing me so I get the opportunity to speak, as you mentioned, specifically to the amendment to Bill 2 to change the name of the bill. Quite frankly, when I look at this bill, it's highly incorrect. We are trying to say that we are going to make Alberta open for business. We're just going to force it. It's just going to happen. That would mean to suggest that Alberta was closed for business to begin with. So I'd like to point out just a couple of little details that maybe members opposite might have missed.

Over the last few years we've seen a company called Seven Generations Energy building a natural gas processing facility to the tune of $1.2 billion, Mr. Chair. We've seen a company, which, of course, I'm very aware of in my free time, with a little bit of the gaming that I get to do – but I was very impressed when the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview as the former minister of economic development and trade brought in the digital media tax credit, which is credited for bringing the company Improbable to move their head office to Edmonton. We've seen Amazon set up a warehouse here in Alberta. That warehouse is a $120 million investment into Alberta.

CN Rail had decided to make a significant investment in its network to expand and strengthen all of its infrastructure. That's about a $370 million commitment by that company. Something tells me that someone like CN wouldn't make that kind of investment in our province if they didn't think it was open for business already. Pembina Pipeline Corporation is building a petrochemical plant. That is a $4.5 billion investment here in Alberta. Another quick one I could mention is Inter Pipeline building another petrochemical facility to the tune of $2.1 billion.

Just quickly, that is roughly over $8.2 billion of investment here in Alberta over the last three years. If Alberta wasn't open for business already, I doubt that any of these companies would have made these types of investments here in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Schmidt: They're making it opener for business.

Mr. Nielsen: I don't know if it's possible to make it opener. Is that even a word?

I think that to aptly rename this the employment standards and labour relations statutes amendment act, 2019, is more appropriate. When we look at some of the things that are being done throughout Bill 2, we've seen some regulations that, of course, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood had mentioned earlier, around lowering the youth minimum wage.

It's amazing. I came from a graduation earlier this morning. Getting the opportunity to hang out with our young emerging leaders here in the province, it's incredible how much they are paying attention and how much they know what's going on. I think I recall this story from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, speaking to some students that she happened to recognize in a mall that she was at at that time, and they said: you know, we're very confused about this youth minimum wage. They were working. If there were five people on shift at that time and two of them were 17 years old and in school, they would get $2 an hour less. The thing that they were able to very quickly realize, apparently, was that if it only requires five people on staff during that shift, it magically, because two of them are making $2 an hour less, does not mean that a sixth person is required to do the work.

Of course, I have heard the same thing from some of my business owners throughout Edmonton-Decore. It's, like: look, you know, maybe I kind of, sort of, possibly appreciate the government's attempt to save me some money, but because they're going to make $2 an hour less is not going to change my hiring practices.

3:30

Again, when I'm looking at Bill 2, calling it An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, how does taking away hard-working Albertans' overtime make Alberta open for business? I think that is highly, highly incorrect – highly incorrect – because when people have money in their pocket, they spend it in the local economy. Now, I mean, maybe some of my colleagues on this side of the House might be able to help me out. I know that in Edmonton-Decore a lot of my residents aren't taking this money and squirrelling it away in a Cayman Islands account for some rainy-day investment or something like that. They're spending it right in Edmonton-Decore, not only on the things that they need but also on the things that they want. When they have that money, businesses will flourish.

I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that things in Edmonton-Decore are hopping. I was joking both back in the 2015 election and even in the 2019 election that I found it very, very hard to try to find a campaign office because the great news was that business was booming in Edmonton-Decore. There was no room. Of course, I guess, you know, it was a bit of a struggle because there was no room. But you know what? That is a fantastic problem, I think, to have.

When we consider this amendment to change the name, it's because of language like that in this bill, Bill 2. Trying to call it An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business is highly, highly incorrect. Taking away, potentially, people's ability to get holiday pay: you know, you start adding all kinds of criteria in order for them to qualify for that.

See, Mr. Chair, the unfortunate part is that, in my experience from the labour movement, we have unfortunately seen some bad actors out there that will very, very quickly take advantage of people on this. You know, I know that the other side has talked about how: well, for the people that are under union contracts, this doesn't affect them. That is slightly correct because, unlike the government not honouring bargaining contracts, thankfully there are companies out there that are honouring these things. But once that expires, potentially all bets are off, and that is what's called a concession, and that's going to essentially be imposed on hard-working Albertans, all under the name of "I can't compete," because we've created the conditions to allow our bad actors to exploit people, and our good employers, who are really trying so hard to be good employers – to create a safe working environment, to value their employees – get put at a disadvantage because of that. I don't see at all how that makes Alberta open for business.

Like I said, even just in that one word – people have probably heard me speak a little bit ad nauseam around this, around language. Language means everything. You change one little word, and it completely alters a sentence. So to say that you're going to make Alberta open for business, that means you're going to try to force things to happen. A lot of times what we see happen when things get forced is unintended consequences. Now, this bill is already filled with all kinds of consequences that are intended, which is a problem in itself, so I think that by accepting this amendment, calling it what it is, that we are changing the employment standards and labour relations statutes, it more accurately reflects what is going on in Bill 2 right now.

This title, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, does not reflect that. I think that when Albertans see that kind of a title, they're easily confused. "Oh, well, they're going to make it open for business; that must sound pretty good." And then they start to read the details. Their overtime is getting taken away, and they're being put at a disadvantage in terms of their stat holiday pay. Again, like I said – here's my union background kicking in again – I have seen employers that will do this. Why are we creating conditions to allow the bad actors to circumvent these types of things?

I guess I could probably even tie that back to red tape, you know. Some of this red tape was put in to prevent those bad actors from taking advantage of hard-working Albertans. If you are going to take your time away from your family, your friends, or just your plain old free time, you deserve a reward for doing that, and that reward was time and a half. Overtime is overtime. It doesn't matter whether you're getting paid out for it or whether you're banking it. It is still overtime.

I find this title very, very confusing for people. I have had a few people ask me why that's happening. As I've mentioned, I've even had a couple of friends that have called me up that don't share my political views. Of course, I can't share, really, the contents of that conversation, Mr. Chair, because it would be highly, highly unparliamentary, but they were very, very disappointed with this bill, and I'm going to tell the members opposite: they voted for you. They voted for you. They are not happy. They even mentioned, you know: "How is taking away my overtime making Alberta open for business? It sounds like it's making conditions to pick my pocket." That is probably why we ended up calling it the pick-your-pockets bill.

I think that if we are to take the time to rename this, this will bring at least a little bit more clarity to what is, really, a bad bill and allow Albertans to see it for what it really is. It's not making Alberta open for business. Alberta was already open for business. I've only mentioned a very short list, like I said, to the tune of $8.2 billion worth of investment. I'm sure that there are a whole lot more that I could go on with, but, you know, I certainly don't want to take up too much time, because I know that there are other speakers that want to get up and speak to this amendment.

I would really recommend that all members of this House accept this amendment. This is a correct amendment. It more clearly reflects the language that is going on in this bill. As I said, language is everything. We need to be clear with Albertans about what's going on. We shouldn't be fooling them with fancy titles. I certainly know that there are members opposite that were part of the 29th Legislature that used to get quite up in arms about fancy titles, yet here we are – I think I've said this before, Mr. Chair – second verse, same as the first. It seems a little bit rich that a government complains about what was going on, how it should have been done properly, that we should have gone down this path, that this is how we should have handled it, and then when they get the opportunity to show Albertans how the right way to do it is, they end up just kind of repeating sort of the same things that they were apparently up in arms about. I find that just a little bit confusing, just like the title of this bill.

I'd like to see that changed, and I would highly recommend that members in this House accept this amendment so that we can more accurately reflect to Albertans what this bill is really doing.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, those looking to speak to amendment A2? I see the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rising.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment to Bill 2. First of all, I want to give credit where credit is due. I've been keenly watching the debate around Bill 11, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity for his thoughtful engagement in that debate. In my opinion, I think he has distinguished himself from his peers on the front bench as someone who has constructively engaged in debate and has been at least willing to hear some of the things that we on this side of the House have been able to say. I appreciate that. Having sat on both sides of the House, it's not easy to take the things that the members opposite say seriously and engage constructively, and I really appreciate the sincere efforts that he made on Bill 11 with respect to that effort.

3:40

Knowing that he's capable of doing that, I would really appreciate some constructive engagement on this bill as well. It's been a stark contrast between the points that he's made with respect to Bill 11 and the points that he's made with respect to Bill 2. With Bill 11, he's talked at length, very thoughtfully, about what the intent of the bill was. He's admitted its shortcomings and has at least given us a plan for moving forward and given all of us in this House, I think, some confidence that he is taking the issue of fair registration seriously and that he's intending to do more. I've been disappointed, Mr. Chair, though, that when it comes to the content of Bill 2, he hasn't been as engaged. He has relied on the talking points that I suspect have probably come from the Premier's office and were not generated out of his own office. He's been less willing to engage, and I'm a little bit disappointed to see that. I would hope that he would take the opportunity today in Committee of the Whole or at some point during the Committee of the Whole to thoughtfully engage because I do have some questions.

When you look at the bill, the bill is all about reducing wages for workers. It reduces wages for minimum wage workers. It reduces wages for people who are on banked overtime agreements that are forced upon them by their employers. It reduces wages by making it harder to form a union in your workplace, and it also reduces wages by removing eligibility for some general holiday pay. There are four different ways that this bill reduces wages for workers, Mr. Chair. Under the title of the bill we're told that that's going to make Alberta open for business, that all of a sudden because we're taking these four measures to lower workers' wages, Alberta will have a sudden influx of business investment.

Now, Mr. Chair, that flies in the face of all of the facts that we see on the ground. For a long time Alberta has had, on average, the highest wages in the country. That is one of the benefits of living in Alberta, that we have, on average, the highest wages in the country. We as New Democrats, we as social democrats believe that a successful economy is an economy where everyone has the opportunity to go to school, get a job, be able to work and provide for your family, and retire in dignity. People are more likely to be able to do that in Alberta than in any other part of the country because we've had the highest wages. We've also had the highest business investment of any province in the country. Just on the face of it, just on those two elements alone, we've had the highest wages and the highest business investment. Now, I'm not saying that one causes the other. I'm certainly not saying that high wages create an attractive business environment although there are certainly some economists who do believe that higher wages inject more money into the local economy. Certainly, nobody can argue that higher wages dissuade investment in Alberta because it hasn't been the case.

In fact, if you look at the unemployment situation right now in every other jurisdiction in the country except for our brothers and sisters in the Maritimes, who continue to struggle with high unemployment rates, we see that every other jurisdiction in the country has lower unemployment than Alberta right now even though they don't pay their students a lower minimum wage, with the exception of Ontario, which, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has repeatedly pointed out, has similar youth unemployment rates to our own.

In every other jurisdiction where somebody is eligible to bank overtime hours, they're eligible to bank them at the overtime rate, except for Alberta. That hasn't had a negative impact on employment or business investment. In every other jurisdiction, in the province people get the same general holiday pay structure that this bill is taking away, and it's easier to form a union.

I'm hoping that the Member for Calgary-Varsity can summon his powers of reasoning and skilful argument, which he's clearly demonstrated over this past week and over the six weeks we've sat here in the Legislature, and tell me what the case is. Where is the evidence that lowering workers' wages in these ways will actually spur investment and create jobs? I don't see any evidence. Unfortunately, Mr. Chair, this bill, at least when it comes to UCP talking points, has been a fact-free zone. I would encourage the Member for Calgary-Varsity to bring some more evidence to bear in supporting his arguments because we know that he's capable of doing that.

You know, I talked about some of the cases that people have made for higher wages actually improving the economic conditions in the province. I want to refer to an opinion article that was written in the Edmonton Journal on March 30, 2019, by Katy Ingraham, who is a business owner in the great constituency of Edmonton-

Gold Bar. She runs a local restaurant called Cartago, and she is a member of a collection of businesses that have banded together, formed alberta15.ca. People of Alberta can go to alberta15.ca and find a list of people who are minimum wage employers who have promised to not adopt the student minimum wage.

She quite effectively lays out the economic case for keeping minimum wages higher in this article, and I want to quote some of it.

Better income is linked to a variety of benefits, including decreased employee turnover, fewer absences due to illness, and increased loyalty and productivity from employees. Paying a fair wage demonstrates that work and skill is valued. And workers with more money have more money to spend.

That's not to downplay the fact that businesses have had to adapt . . .

She acknowledges in this article that it's been a challenging time in Alberta over the last few years. She said:

Despite having the hottest economy in the country for years, in the decade prior,

Alberta also had Canada's lowest wages.

For most businesses, minimum wage won't make the difference between opening and closing . . . But it will make those workers more vulnerable to coercion and harassment.

Paying youth . . . won't suddenly create a ton of new jobs. But it will create an incentive to ditch an 18-year-old for a newer model . . .

Despite low oil prices these past five years, Alberta [had been] inching closer to fairness . . . Our child poverty rate is decreasing. [She] can't help but feel that higher wages . . . had a positive impact.

I've had a chance to discuss that article with Katy in person. I know that it took a significant amount of bravery on her part to write that article because she was under a significant amount of pressure from many of her colleagues in the restaurant industry to not voice her opinion against lowering the student minimum wage.

In the article she also references an advertising campaign that was launched by Restaurants Canada that, she said, was nothing but "fear and intimidation." I know that we get accused of running fear and intimidation. I suspect that might be members opposite projecting their own campaign techniques onto us, but that's a matter for another day.

3:50

I would like to give the Member for Calgary-Varsity an opportunity during Committee of the Whole, during this debate, to actually provide some evidence. What evidence has he seen? I'm genuinely asking the question, Mr. Chair. I'm not trying to trap the member. I'm not trying to box the government into a corner that they can't get out of to score political points. I am genuinely interested to see what evidence he's seen that lowering wages will actually increase investment beyond what we currently expect Alberta to see and to bring some facts to bear in this case, because, like I said in my earlier comments, we know that he's fully capable of doing so, and I think this debate desperately needs it. The people of Alberta desperately want to know the reasoning behind this bill because, to them, it looks like an attack on their wages and nothing more.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for Red Deer-South has risen to speak.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to take a few minutes just to stand and speak against the suggested amendment to change the name of Bill 2, which is currently named An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. It was interesting because the member opposite just recently, just prior to the one who just spoke, said that the implication of the title suggested that prior to the change in government, Alberta was not open for business. I would suggest that the member opposite is leading with their chin a little bit.

I want to talk about some facts because we've been asked to, you know, be fact focused. Let's think about: what are the key success indicators of whether a province is open for business? Well, Mr. Chair, I think all of us in this House would agree that a key success indicator of whether a province is open for business is its private-sector employment. What happened under the NDP? Well, here are the facts. There were tens of thousands more private-sector jobs when the NDP came into government than when they got fired a few months ago. That is a profound failure. These are real individuals and families, and I met some of them. It was devastating for them.

That, to me, is a key success indicator, private-sector employment. Well, what happened under the prior government? It fell. Every year, that should actually grow. Every year, the number of people employed in the private sector should actually grow. In the four-year period that you were in government, you shrank it by tens of thousands of individuals. That is a profound failure, which suggests that maybe Alberta wasn't as open for business.

But let's go on to another key success indicator as to whether or not a province is open for business. I would suggest that corporate tax revenue would be a pretty good indicator, if a province is open for business. Every year the government of Alberta issues an annual report based on fact. The annual report contains a schedule that allows the public to compare current results with historical results, so let's consider the numbers. When the NDP came into power, corporate tax revenue, as reported in the annual report, was $5.7 billion. Then the NDP increased the corporate tax rate by 20 per cent. Did corporate tax revenue increase by 20 per cent? No. It decreased by over $1.5 billion. And here's this: the corporate tax revenue for the remaining years that they were in government never reached the 2015 levels just prior to them coming into government, despite their 20 per cent increase. Mr. Chair, does this speak to a province that was open for business? Well, if businesses are no longer succeeding and paying taxes, I would submit, it is not.

Let's talk about another key success indicator as to whether or not a province is open for business, and that is: can government walk the talk? You know, can it live within its means in a responsible, businesslike manner? Is it competent to instill confidence in the sustainability and the stability of government? March 31, 2015, was the last time that Alberta posted a surplus. It was about $1.1 billion. Then the NDP came into power. Well, what happened the next year? A $6.4 billion deficit in 2016-17, then the following year a $10.7 billion deficit, and for this upcoming year a projected deficit, based on third-quarter results, of over $6 billion.

These deficits added more than $30 billion of debt. By analogy, that would buy all the houses in Red Deer and Lethbridge. They would do that with their deficits alone, and they did that in only four years. Of course, while they were in government, their spending exceeded population and inflation growth by billions of dollars. Mr. Chair, here's a really important thing that I think the members opposite are confused about. The definition of successful government is not spending money you don't have. The definition of a successful government is not spending money you do not have, right? Living off your credit cards does not make one a responsible individual. That is why you were fired.

Now, we've kind of talked a little bit about – we've kind of listened to the NDP, and it's important that we understand their world view, okay? The world view of the NDP is not shared by the majority of Albertans. Here is the world view of the members opposite. Let's refer to their constitution. Their constitution states that its purpose is to establish and maintain a democratic socialist government in Alberta. Socialism is their world view. That world view and their record, if it was distilled into an act, would be An Act to Make Alberta Closed for Business.

4:00

This bill, Bill 2, is completely appropriate and why I will be voting against the amendment. Bill 2 repudiates NDP governments that, at their core, have an undercurrent of hostility towards businesses that made Alberta closed for business, and their record speaks for itself.

I do want to talk specifically, though. Bill 2 reinstates the concept of a secret ballot for joining a union. You're upset about that. The NDP does not like secret ballots and changed the law to take them away. They wanted to deny employees the choice to make the private decision as to whether they want to join a union. You know, that ability, that choice, that private decision is common throughout the other jurisdictions in Canada, but the NDP took it away. What are the members opposite afraid of? A secret ballot is a form of accountability, protecting against compulsion and undue pressure. They do not trust employees to make the decision they wanted. You know, socialism is not comfortable with freedom. That is the culture of the NDP, and it does not work in the real world.

In closing, Mr. Chair, I'm very happy to speak in favour of not changing the title of Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has risen to speak.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm incredibly disappointed. I made my comments asking for some thoughtful interventions, particularly from the Member for Calgary-Varsity, and I had hoped that maybe the Member for Calgary-Varsity would rise and respond to some of the questions that I had asked in my phrase. Instead, we got the Member for Red Deer-South, who issued us some talking points that they teach in UCP kindergarten. You know, it's like: oh, unemployment is up and corporate tax revenues are down; the NDP must have chased away investment because they're socialists.

Now, first of all, on the issue of socialism, the Member for Red Deer-South, the only thing that he got right in his speech was the fact that we are a democratic socialist party, and we're proud to be so. I just want to share for the Member for Red Deer-South, who is obviously ripe for education . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. I do believe that I heard desk thumping during that.

Mr. Schmidt: On behalf of whichever member did that, I apologize.

The Deputy Chair: Please continue.

Mr. Schmidt: We will refrain from thumping our desks.

I want to share with the House a quote made by President Harry Truman in 1952 when he was campaigning for Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic presidential candidate in that year's election. He said:

Socialism is a scareword they have hurled at every advance the people have made in the last 20 years. Socialism is what they called public power. Socialism is what they called social security. Socialism is what they called farm price supports. Socialism is what they called bank deposit insurance. Socialism is what they called the growth of free and independent labour organizations. Socialism is their name for almost anything that helps all the people.

You know, we've been in this game here in the NDP for 86 years. We were founded in 1933, Mr. Chair. We were founded in Calgary, actually, Calgary, Alberta. When the member opposite says that, you know, a majority of Albertans don't share our world view, he couldn't be further from the truth. People in Alberta along with other Canadians love public health care, they love public education, they love old-age pensions, and they love free roads and infrastructure, all of those things that the member opposite would call socialism unless they were being built in his riding, in which case that's just prudent governance, right? But when we provide those things for everybody in Alberta, then it's socialism.

Of course, we've seen that here in question period over the last six weeks. Everybody on the UCP side is in favour of big cuts except in their own ridings. We know that the Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock doesn't want public-sector jobs to be taken out of his riding. We know that, I don't know, Mr. Chair, all of these guys here to my right look alike. They all stand up and ask for roads and interchanges and bridges and schools to be built in their own ridings, but they don't want it to be built at any cost to taxpayers, and they certainly want it to be taken away from other people because providing those things fairly to everybody would of course be socialism.

But I want to address some of the – I don't know how to phrase it. Unemployment was up, corporate tax revenues were down, and deficits were up during our term in government. Those things are true, Mr. Chair. I will grant you that those things were true. None of those things can be linked to anything other than the lack of market access for our oil and gas and the fact that the price of oil dropped from $100 a barrel to almost giving it away at Christmas of last year. We, of course, had the choice of cutting spending to not have a deficit. That would have meant a $10 billion reduction in the spending of the province of Alberta on a $50-billion-a-year budget. Give or take, that is a 20 per cent cut. You know, applied evenly, that means 1 out of every 5 patients wouldn't get treated. You could only get to grade 10. You wouldn't be able to get grade 12. We'd have to shut down 20 per cent of the universities and colleges in this province.

We chose not to do that, Mr. Chair. We chose not to burden the people of Alberta with the fallout of low oil prices and a lack of market access. In fact, we chose, I think quite wisely, to run deficits in the short term while we were working diligently on enhancing market access for our oil and gas products, trying to add value so that we retain more of the value of the oil and gas products that were extracted here in the province of Alberta in the hopes that the economy would turn around and that economic activity would increase and we would no longer have to employ those deficits.

I am really looking forward to the budget this year to see what kinds of decisions the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti will make when it comes to tackling the deficit. It is either going to create a significant amount of pain for average Albertans, or they're going to admit that cutting the deficit is a lot harder than they thought it was when they were in opposition, and they're going to say that their plan isn't really that different from the one that we had put forward when we were in government.

4:10

Now, Mr. Chair, it's also important to remind the Member for Red Deer-South that when we raised corporate taxes, we raised corporate taxes from 10 per cent to 12 per cent, which brought them in line with corporate taxes all across the country. Every other province in the country has a corporate tax rate of approximately 11 or 12 per cent. We weren't leading the country by any means. We were certainly not taxing corporations beyond their means. It was simply the fact that they were getting 10 per cent less of the value of the resources that they were selling than they were in 2015, and they couldn't move their products as well as they could in the run-up to 2015.

Mr. Chair, again, being an optimist, I hope that we can get back to the amendment, which is simply that this is an act to amend employment standards and labour relations. It has nothing to do with creating investment, generating investment in the province of Alberta. Unless somebody shows me otherwise, there is not a positive correlation. There is no reason to think that lowering wages, picking workers' pockets, will make it more likely for businesses to invest in Alberta. It hasn't happened in any other jurisdiction, and nobody from the other side has presented a coherent case as to why that's the case. You know, I live in hope that we will abandon the stale talking points, the kindergarten Conservative communication style that we saw from the Member for Red Deer-South, and actually get to a thoughtful debate and convince us with some evidence and facts.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration standing to speak.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for asking me to speak again on this amendment. As you may recall, I spoke at length on this. I'll do a quick summary of that, but I don't want to spend a lot of time on that detail and getting into this, so my comments will be brief.

I would like to respond as well to a couple of comments that the member had made. You know, it's interesting that the hon. member had admitted that under their government, despite them actually increasing the corporate tax rate, corporate taxes went down, unemployment, particularly on the private-sector side, went up, and that debt continued to increase and was on track for a $100 billion debt, and the deficit was continuing to rise.

One thing that I found striking about the comments, and I reiterated this in my comments yesterday, is that he made the comment that none of this can be linked to the policy; it was all the economy. Mr. Chair, that cannot be further from the truth. Speaking in particular, let's talk about the increase in minimum wage that occurred under the previous government, an increase by nearly 50 per cent in a few short years during an economic recession. The Conference Board of Canada did a study while they were midway through this increase, and that study suggested that an increase by 10 per cent, an increase of 10 per cent in the minimum wage, could result in a 1 to 3 per cent increase in unemployment.

But despite that being done, that advice from the Conference Board, that caution from the Conference Board – let me also add one more thing. Part of that caution was also that context matters and that in doing that in the face of an economic recession, it could potentially be worse. Right? I recognize there are different views from different economists, but context matters, and the Conference Board came out and made this statement. But what did the previous government do? They continued to increase the minimum wage, and not by 10 per cent, not by 20 per cent, but, Mr. Chair, by 50 per cent.

So I can understand the argument, you know, from the members opposite saying: "No, no. Well, this is just an economist doing a study. That's their assessment." But, then, let's talk to the job creators, Albertan companies, Calgary companies. Studies were done, and these companies responded and said: we have laid off employees and reduced the hours because of these changes.

The chamber of commerce put out the layering effect. It was not only the changes in the minimum wage, general holiday changes, you know, the increase in taxes but all of that layered together. They said: "We are reducing employment. We are reducing opportunities. We are not hiring." Particularly, those hardest hit were the youth in our society.

So when the member opposite says, "You know, show me," there is a lack of understanding of the implications that their policies had. I go to the hon. member for Red Deer's previous comments. This is what I actually meant in my comments the other day. There is a divide. We have a different world view, right? When the members opposite can't even recognize what impact their policy changes have had, well, then, there's no way that they can recognize that decreasing the minimum wage will have any impact. They didn't even recognize that by increasing the minimum wage, it had any impact to start off with.

Mr. Chair, these changes we're making in this bill will create jobs and signal that we are open for business. As I indicated in my comments – and I'm not going to reiterate all of them that I made yesterday – you know, that is why I cannot agree to this amendment.

I'll make one further comment. You know, I'd like to thank again the member across for having great debate on Bill 11 and for the support from both sides of the House in that regard. I am happy to engage in debate, but on this particular point, Mr. Chair, we are coming from very different sides. Their philosophy appears to be that their policies made no difference on the job creators and didn't result in increased unemployment even though there's a recognition that it was all the economy. Quite frankly, the evidence shows the opposite.

We were elected – we were elected – on a platform to get Albertans working again, and very specifically we were elected on a platform in which Bill 2, that was outlined, said that we would create a youth minimum wage, that we would make changes to general holidays, that we would make changes to banked overtime, and that we would make changes to the Labour Relations Code to reinstate the private vote and put the power back in the hands of workers in that regard. That's exactly what Bill 2 does. It signals a desperate signal that we need to give to the investment community, in addition to bills 1, 3, and 4 and our whole, entire platform, that we are open for business. We want businesses to invest back into this economy and get Albertans working.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this amendment, that makes, you know, quite a modest suggestion that we change the name of Bill 2 to a statues amendment act moniker. I think that this is eminently reasonable.

Language is a funny thing, Mr. Chair. You know, it is powerful, and it, of course, conveys the meaning of the words that are on the page, but it also conveys a certain tone – right? – which is kind of the theme that I've been talking about for the last couple of days here. For this one, "Alberta Open for Business," it's pretty strong, and it sort of implies a lot. But when you start to unpack that as language around something like reducing the minimum wage for younger workers, it sort of says "open for business" as in: we're exposing our youth to an unequal and unjust differential in wages just to be open for business. Right?

You start to explore that, and you realize that it's almost like you're presenting our youth here in the province as being willing to sacrifice by 13.3 per cent their wages for the sake of the title of this bill. You know, the same with "open for business" and looking at holiday pay eligibility. We're willing to, you know, allow businesses to have a choice as to whether they pay overtime or a differential for Christmas, let's say, for example. We're willing to sacrifice those businesses that choose to not pay holiday pay for Christmas for the sake of being open for business. You could go on and on with this, Mr. Chair. It sort of exposes this notion that by compromising labour standards or money in the pockets of workers in the case of overtime, somehow that sacrifice, that compromise will suddenly open the doors of business here in the province.

4:20

We all want to see a healthy economy, we all want to see it expanding, and we all want to see prosperity for all. You know, it's been a challenging time over the last number of years. The economic downturn affected our province quite a lot. The price of energy and market access really did have a marked effect on our economy. But when you're in a tight spot like that, that's when you really have to make the tough decisions around how and who you're going to serve to ensure a level of economic stability for a household budget, economic stability for young individuals, and to ensure that services that you need for yourself and your family are there when you need them, including health care and education. That's when really difficult decisions need to be made – and the choices need to be made there, too – on: who do you serve?

I think that it's an easy job to be a whip with the Alberta New Democrats because we have guiding principles that ensure that we know what the correct decision is every step of the way to make sure you look after everyone even during an economic downturn. You don't cut the minimum wage; you look for ways to make it a living wage. You don't cut overtime pay; you look for ways by which you can have fair compensation that ensures the viability of a business, and you move forward with that. You don't negotiate through the Legislature, through the tip of a legislative pen – right? – which weaponizes the very notion of negotiating, but you sit down and you bargain in good faith even during an economic downturn.

You will find that you will end up with outcomes that will come as creative solutions from both the management side and the worker side, things like, for example, with the teachers, the classroom improvement fund, this organic, creative thing that came off the negotiating table, a negotiating table that was infused with the notion of good faith. We looked for ways by which we said: "Hey, we only have, you know, very limited funds, but we have to educate our kids. What's the best way to spend those very, very difficult funds during an economic downturn to ensure the maximum return for kids?" And – boom – in negotiating in good faith for that, you ended up with something as very effective as the classroom improvement fund, which this current government is cutting.

I bring up that point just to say, you know, Mr. Chair, that semantics and language are powerful and meaningful. An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business is really just a statutes amendment act that is fraught with peril. But we're always so helpful over here on the opposition side. We want to make life better for Albertans, and we want to make language clearer for Albertans, too, so we're offering this amendment as a way by which to make this modest change. You know what? I mean, I can't speak for everybody here today, because we haven't talked about it yet, but I'm willing to say that if you change this name to a statutes amendment act, I personally will consider not calling Bill 2 the pick-your-pockets bill. You know what I mean?

Ms Pancholi: Yeah.

Mr. Eggen: I've got one there.

Member Irwin: Yeah.

Mr. Eggen: And I've got another one there. There you go. I mean, this is the way we work. Let's make a deal. We will use language. We will, you know, have a language détente, so to speak, at 4:25 on a Thursday afternoon. If you guys change this to a statutes amendment act, I will stand down on the pick-your-pockets bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora rising.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. That was how I was planning on proposing my opening remarks, hon. Member for Edmonton-North West. But I'm happy to say that that was exactly when the member for Lethbridge . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but under Standing Order 4(3), seeing the time, the committee shall now rise and report progress without question put. For clarity, we will be rising and reporting progress on Bill 12, Royalty Guarantee Act, and we will rise and report progress on Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. The committee shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 12 and Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed, say no. Carried. So ordered.

I see the hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: I move to adjourn until Tuesday, July 2, at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:27 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 1st Session (2019)

Activity to Thursday, June 27, 2019

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

Bill 1 — An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax ($) (Kenney)

First Reading — 8 (May 22, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 44 (May 23, 2019 aft.), 79-92 (May 27, 2019 eve.), 95-107 (May 28, 2019 morn.), 121-43 (May 28, 2019 aft.), 166-70 (May 28, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 215-24 (May 29, 2019 aft.), 239-41 (May 29, 2019 eve.), (May 30, 2019 morn., passed)

Third Reading — 246-51 (May 30, 2019 morn.), 327-339 (Jun. 3, 2019 eve., passed)

Royal Assent — (Jun. 4, 2019 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on various dates; SA 2019 c1 ]

Bill 2 — An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business (Copping)

First Reading — 58 (May 27, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 145-52 (May 28, 2019 eve.), 189-90 (May 29, 2019 morn.), 236-39 (May 29, 2019 eve.), 375-79 (Jun. 4, 2019 aft.), 416-17 (Jun. 4, 2019 eve.), 448 (Jun. 5, 2019 aft.), (Jun. 5, 2019 eve.), (Jun. 5, 2019 eve., passed on division)

Committee of the Whole — 986-1002 (Jun. 19, 2019 aft.), 1090-99 (Jun. 20, 2019 aft.), 1218-22 (Jun. 25, 2019 eve.), 1235-44 (Jun. 26, 2019 aft.), 1293-1300 (Jun. 27, 2019 aft., adjourned, amendment introduced)

Bill 3 — Job Creation Tax Cut (Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment) Act (Toews)

First Reading — 111 (May 28, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 236 (May 29, 2019 eve.), 341-53 (Jun. 4, 2019 morn.), 408-16 (Jun. 4, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — (Jun. 5, 2019 eve.), (Jun. 11, 2019 morn.), 685-700 (Jun. 11, 2019 aft.), 738-45 (Jun. 12, 2019 morn., passed)

Third Reading — (Jun. 12, 2019 aft., passed)

Bill 4 — Red Tape Reduction Act (Hunter)

First Reading — 202 (May 29, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 277-78 (May 30, 2019 aft.), 365-75 (Jun. 4, 2019 aft.), 432-48 (Jun. 5, 2019 aft., passed on division)

Committee of the Whole — 633-44 (Jun. 10, 2019 eve., passed)

Third Reading — 644-46 (Jun. 10, 2019 eve., passed)

Bill 5 — Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019 ($) (Toews)

First Reading — 779 (Jun. 12, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 986 (Jun. 19, 2019 aft.), (Jun. 25, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 1135-36 (Jun. 24, 2019 eve.), 1153 (Jun. 24, 2019 eve., passed)

Third Reading — 1195 (Jun. 25, 2019 eve., adjourned), 1213 (Jun. 25, 2019 eve., passed)

Bill 6 — Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019 ($) (Toews)

First Reading — 931 (Jun. 18, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 984-86 (Jun. 19, 2019 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 1136-38 (Jun. 24, 2019 eve.), 1153 (Jun. 24, 2019 eve., passed)

Third Reading — 1195-98 (Jun. 25, 2019 eve.), 1213 (Jun. 25, 2019 eve., passed)

Bill 7 — Municipal Government (Property Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019 (Madu)

First Reading — 356-57 (Jun. 4, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 625-31 (Jun. 10, 2019 aft.), 653-60 (Jun. 11, 2019 morn.), 701-07 (Jun. 11, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 811-13 (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., passed)

Third Reading — 1138-45 (Jun. 24, 2019 eve., passed)

Bill 8 — Education Amendment Act, 2019 (LaGrange)

First Reading — 421 (Jun. 5, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 648-49 (Jun. 10, 2019 eve.), 707-25 (Jun. 11, 2019 eve.), 781-95 (Jun. 12, 2019 eve.), 848-74 (Jun. 17, 2019 eve.), 1145-53 (Jun. 24, 2019 eve.), 1153-62 (Jun. 24, 2019 eve.), 1180-86 (Jun. 25, 2019 aft.), 1255-57 (Jun. 26, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 1258-59 (Jun. 26, 2019 eve., adjourned), 1266-78 (Jun. 26, 2019 eve., adjourned)

Bill 9 — Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act (Toews)

First Reading — (Jun. 13, 2019, passed on division)

Second Reading — 874-84 (Jun. 17, 2019 eve.), (Jun. 17, 2019 eve.), 933-71 (Jun. 18, 2019 eve., passed on division)

Committee of the Whole — 971 (Jun. 18, 2019 eve.), 1004-76 (Jun. 19, 2019 eve., passed on division)

Third Reading — (Jun. 19, 2019 eve., passed on division)

Bill 10 — Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2019 (Toews)

First Reading — (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 847-48 (Jun. 17, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 971 (Jun. 18, 2019 eve., passed)

Third Reading — 1138 (Jun. 24, 2019 eve., passed)

Bill 11 — Fair Registration Practices Act (Copping)

First Reading — 975 (Jun. 19, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 1186-94 (Jun. 25, 2019 aft.), 1244-51 (Jun. 26, 2019 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 1259-63 (Jun. 26, 2019 eve., passed)

Third Reading — 1263-65 (Jun. 26, 2019 eve., passed)

Bill 12 — Royalty Guarantee Act (Savage)

First Reading — 1088 (Jun. 20, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 1186 (Jun. 25, 2019 aft.), 1251-53 (Jun. 26, 2019 aft.), 1255 (Jun. 26, 2019 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 1257-58 (Jun. 26, 2019 eve., adjourned), 1292-1293 (Jun. 27, 2019 aft., adjourned)

Bill 13 — Alberta Senate Election Act (Schweitzer)

First Reading — 1225 (Jun. 26, 2019 aft., passed)

Second Reading — 1292 (Jun. 27, 2019 aft., adjourned)

Bill 201* — Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act (Armstrong-Homeniuk)

First Reading — 277 (May 30, 2019 aft., passed; referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills), (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., reported to Assembly)

Second Reading — 825-38 (Jun. 17, 2019 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole — 1122-24 (Jun. 24, 2019 aft., passed with amendments)

Third Reading — 1124-26 (Jun. 24, 2019 aft., passed)

Bill 202 — Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019 (Ellis)

First Reading — 277 (May 30, 2019 aft., passed; referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills), (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., reported to Assembly)

Second Reading — 838-40 (Jun. 17, 2019 aft.), 1115-22 (Jun. 24, 2019 aft., passed on division)

Committee of the Whole — 1126 (Jun. 24, 2019 aft., adjourned)

Bill 203 — An Act to Protect Public Health Care (Feehan)

First Reading — (Jun. 13, 2019 aft., passed; referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills), (Jun. 27, 2019 aft., reported to Assembly)

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1279
Introduction of Visitors .....	1279
Introduction of Guests .....	1279
Members' Statements
Canadian Multiculturalism Day .....	1279
Government Policies and Parliamentary Debate .....	1279
Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Awareness Day .....	1280
Somali Independence Day .....	1280
Religious Freedom and Human Rights .....	1280
Tom Wanyandie .....	1280
Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees .....	1281
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1281
Oral Question Period
2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigation .....	1281
Oil Transportation by Rail .....	1282
Gay-straight Alliances in Schools and Bill 8 .....	1282
Condominium Governance Regulations .....	1284, 1286
Education Funding .....	1284
PDD Program Applications .....	1285
Alberta Senators, Federal Bills C-48 and C-69 .....	1285
Justice Ministry Funding .....	1286
Support for Persons with Disabilities .....	1287
Minimum Wage for Youth .....	1287
School Infrastructure Capital Projects .....	1288
Infrastructure Project Prioritization .....	1288
Seniors' Housing .....	1289
Orders of the Day .....	1292
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading .....	1292
Bill 13    Alberta Senate Election Act .....	1292
Committee of the Whole .....	1292
Bill 12    Royalty Guarantee Act .....	1292
Bill 2     An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business .....	1293

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday afternoon, July 2, 2019

Day 22

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henday (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreeschen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretaries

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, July 2, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Ms Jinting Zhao. I invite you all to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a stirring rendition. Perhaps you were practising yesterday. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon we are joined by former Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar Mr. David Dorward and Mr. Ian Murray. Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, today in the gallery are seated guests of the MLA from Calgary-Falconridge: Komalpreet Sandhu and Gobinder Singh Khara. I invite you to rise, if you are present, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Also joining us in the Speaker's gallery today are some folks who are very near and dear to my heart. I see my son Porter, my daughter Paxton, my daughter Peyton, and they are accompanied by their nana and papa, Mr. Harold and Mary Cooper.

Statement by the Speaker

Page Recognition

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed to the Routine today, I have a very important presentation to make this afternoon. Before we continue the usual business, I'd like to call forward all of the pages who are here. If they could join me at the dais.

Go ahead, members, be seated. We'll all have a quick seat while the pages join us.

Awesome. Thank you. Some of the pages were unable to join us today, but it is a pleasure. As some of you who've been around the House will know, the retiring pages have the opportunity to address the House, if you will, through the Speaker. It comes to you unedited, I might add. It always makes the Speaker a little uncomfortable, but I'm sure they've done a fine job. Here it is.

Dear Mr. Speaker:

What can be said about an experience as enriching and unique as that of being a Page of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta? Pages often struggle to explain the intricacies of their work to those who've never seen us in action [before], so it seems only natural now that when we seek words to commemorate our time here, we find ourselves speechless. For many this session, the Chamber is a new and exciting place, full of the promise of things to come. For the retiring Pages, however, coming to work each day is a warming and familiar experience – a building filled with memories of new and old friends, happy moments, and the conquering of all sorts of challenges. Simply put, coming in to work each day is much like coming home.

While we may rejoice in our successes we understand that they are not ours alone, instead, stemming from a complex web of our supportive colleagues. You, Mr. Speaker, have demonstrated for us determination and tenacity, complemented by your impartiality that represents a steady source of justice in an ever-changing world. The Sergeant-At-Arms has many a time offered us his wisdom and helped us learn from our mistakes, allowing each of us to flourish. The Clerk and Table Officers have always been ready to offer an encouraging remark or assistance should we ever need it. And who better to keep us company as we hold the doors for divisions than the L.A.S.S., upon whose protection and service we are all dependent. Finally, we would like to extend our biggest thank you to the staff of the Office of the Sergeant-At-Arms, who have supported each one of us with an unrivalled level of care. Without these dedicated, gracious employees, the Page Programme would be unable to function as efficiently and effectively as it does.

It has truly been an honour to serve the Members of this Assembly and the staff of the LAO in our Page role and as members of the greater LAO community. With heavy hearts we will hand in our cravats and our cufflinks, holding dear our memories of this building and the wonderful people in it. We will be forever appreciative of the lessons we learned while employed by the LAO, the friendships we made, and the growth we experienced. We, the retiring Pages of 2019, extend our biggest "hear, hear" to all who have supported and encouraged us during our time walking these marbled halls.

Yours Truly,

Mary Frank (Speaker's Page), Rebecca Hicks (Page Peer Mentor), Angel Choga, Carolyn Huang, Jessica Hermary, Jordan Cowan, Kiki Reed, Kyra Larison, Nicolas Makarian... and Summer Smyth.

29th and 30th Legislatures.

I would like to ask the Deputy Speaker if she might come forward and congratulate our page peer mentor Rebecca Hicks and Angel Choga and Jessica Hermary.

Hon. members, please join me in expressing our deepest gratitude to this exemplary group of young Albertans for their patience, determination, and incredibly hard work they offer us each and every day. [Standing ovation]

Thank you so much, guys. We so, so much appreciate it. We do have a token of our appreciation for all the retiring pages, which will be presented at a later date.

Thank you so much.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has a statement to make.

Lethbridge

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm always proud to stand in this House and speak to my colleagues about my home, the city of Lethbridge, but what I'm prouder of still is my privilege to stand in the House today and address the over 100,000 fellow Lethbridgeans who have chosen to call my city and my riding home. The 2019 census results have been released, and Lethbridge is officially 101,482 residents strong. We like a bit of healthy competition on this side of the House, so I hope the hon. Member for Red Deer-South and the hon. minister from Red Deer-North don't mind that Lethbridge has reclaimed the title of Alberta's third-largest city from their community.

1:40

In all fairness, I am humbled to represent this community, that has grown to become a vibrant city of amazing diversity and market stability. That number, 101,482, represents neighbours, family, friends, business owners, university and college students, and so many others who have chosen to believe in our community and make it their home. The slow and steady growth Lethbridge has experienced over the recent past demonstrates the hopes, dreams, and leaps of faith Albertans and families from around the world are taking in making Lethbridge their home. Their belief in our community and their willingness to take a chance and hope for the best is the story of many who moved from across our province and our country to the city of Lethbridge, and that tenacity, that pioneering spirit, which leads to the work ethic that makes us proud to be Albertan, Mr. Speaker, is what brings us all closer together. I believe that our government's common-sense policies will strengthen the spirit and will only continue to aid our community's successful growth.

If you'll lend me a little indulgence today as I share the spotlight with the hon. member across the aisle the MLA for Lethbridge-West, the pride we have in our community and our gratitude for being able to represent the people who make our city a great place to call home: here's to a community with a rich history, a strong foundation, and a bright future, Lethbridge, Alberta's third-largest city, at least until next year's census.

Provincial Fiscal Position

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about the responsibility we have to ensure that all Albertans have a clear sense of the economic stability of this province. Ever since the Premier waded back into provincial politics, he has held strong to his talking points that the NDP has been a poor fiscal steward. In reality, under the leadership of the Leader of the Official Opposition and the NDP, Alberta now has the largest GDP per capita in the country.

The Premier waxes on about how the NDP causes investment to flee the province, yet in reality Alberta continues to lead the country in per capita business investment.

The Premier confidently tells Albertans that the NDP spending was out of control. However, during the worst recession in a generation the NDP refused to make it worse by cutting and instead made sure that spending was increased to cover inflation and population growth, and that's it, certainly not the spending spree this government likes to talk about.

Similarly, when the Premier gets on his soapbox, he routinely fails to mention that under the NDP leadership Alberta now has the lowest per capita debt in the country. Even the annual report that was released late last week shows that under the Leader of the Official Opposition, Alberta saw a $2.1 billion reduction in the deficit. Our path to balance was working faster than expected.

It is clear from this side of the House that the Premier is presenting this fiscal fairy tale to Albertans in order to justify cuts to education and health care to pay for a $4.5 billion corporate tax giveaway.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that they don't have a path to balance, and they don't have a plan for our economy. Albertans deserve the truth, and the UCP needs to be held accountable for the cuts they will impose on Albertans in order to pay off their wealthy friends and donors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Southern Alberta Summer Games

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon to recognize the 50th anniversary of the Southern Alberta Summer Games. The Southern Alberta Summer Games is an annual sporting and cultural event held yearly in the south of the province. It was launched in 1970. The games rotate through communities each year, and I'm happy to say that this year they will be hosted in Pincher Creek, a town in Livingstone-Macleod.

Beginning tomorrow, through July 6 over 2,000 athletes will compete in Alberta's longest running annual sporting event. The events are open to all ages, with competitions like minisoccer being open to young kids and sports like archery having dedicated age groups for all participants.

I mentioned earlier that there are cultural events that are highlighted by the games. This year Pincher Creek is proud to showcase its artistic community, its pioneer history, its agricultural background, and even its local microbrewery.

I'm proud to see the summer games being hosted in Livingstone-Macleod this year. This is a special event for southern Albertans as it brings us together for fun, some healthy competition, and time in the great outdoors of our province's most beautiful region.

I know that the 50th games will be as successful as the previous 49 and would like to thank all the counties and MDs that form the backbone of the games, from the Crowsnest Pass and Pincher Creek in the west, Warner and Cardston in the south, Newell and Vulcan in the north, to Cypress county and Medicine Hat in the east, and of course I would be remiss if I did not mention the multitude of volunteers that make the games a great success.

Finally, I would like to wish all competitors good luck, and to those who will be watching, have fun. I know I will. Enjoy your time in Pincher Creek and enjoy the games.

Minister of Education

Ms Hoffman: I can't help but notice that the Education minister has taken to wearing the Children First pin, and who could argue with that? Surely, the best interests of children should come first for everyone in this place.

This minister could have acted to fund students with special needs and hire new teachers for students. Instead, last week our largest school districts passed budgets based on guesswork because this minister wasn't competent enough to write her own budget before kids return to school in September. She sat idle while children across Alberta lost their teachers and educational assistants and even tried to deny that it was happening. For this minister those children don't come first.

When a certain kind of student steals lunch money from other children, there's a name for that, Mr. Speaker. We tell kids to ask an adult to intervene, and when someone threatens to take lunch money from 33,000 students, you bet I'll intervene and stand up for those kids. Here's the clincher: it's being done to pay for a $4.5 billion gift to the Premier's donors.

Did the minister speak up in cabinet and say: "Hey. How about we only give them $4.47 billion instead and keep $30 million for the school nutrition program?” Obviously not, because for this minister those children don’t come first. I honestly don’t know why feeding hungry children is a partisan issue, Mr. Speaker. Surely, if there was ever a single thing we could all agree on, it’s that feeding hungry children is a good thing. But apparently not.

I think all of the members opposite should be reminded that they will have to answer for this decision, too. To the minister those children don’t come first. So she can wear her golden pin on her lapel, Mr. Speaker, but I hope in the moments of contemplation as she pins it on, she thinks about the harm that she’s actually causing children in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Women in the Skilled Trades

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to acknowledge the important contributions that women can and do make with the trade industries. Women make valuable contributions to our economy every day as tradespeople. As I have previously mentioned while speaking in this House, there are many trades that are often overlooked when the word “trades” is mentioned. Some of these trades that are less often thought of are driving professionals, glaziers, bakers, locksmiths, cooks, communication technicians, beauticians, to name a few. Women have worked in many of these professions for years. Today I recognize these women and say thank you for your hard work.

I’m sure there are many in this room that remember a time where it seemed inappropriate for women to be in the more commonly acknowledged construction trades. In recent years women have been encouraged to train in and join these honourable professions. Women Building Futures has done amazing work in advocating for women who work in trades and for those looking to begin their careers.

Amazing work has been done to encourage women to participate in construction trades. In 2017 it was reported that only 4.5 per cent of skilled workers in Canada were women. However, in Alberta in 2017 that number was 15 per cent, with up to 30 per cent of those women working in on-site construction occupations.

As the chair of the newly formed skilled trades caucus, I will work with my colleagues to continue to find ways to further increase the participation of women in these important professions. We must ensure that not only do women have the opportunities to become tradespeople, but we must ensure that women feel comfortable in joining an industry of which they have not historically been part of but of which they are most welcome.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Inclusion

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Inclusion Alberta is a family-based nonprofit that has a long and proud history of advocating for people with developmental disabilities and their families. Their work has made a huge and lasting impact in our province and has helped thousands of people achieve their goals and be fully included in their communities.

Unfortunately, Inclusion Alberta’s vision of a better life for people with disabilities is not supported by this UCP government. Health care for persons with disabilities has been called a giveaway by a UCP minister. Individuals with disabilities and families have been told there is no money in the PDD budget for critical services.

Young people with disabilities have been turned away from school due to looming budget cuts, and now this UCP government is backtracking on its promise to continue our government’s investment in inclusive postsecondary education. Advocates in the disability community are hearing that the money they were promised for inclusive postsecondary in the UCP platform – I’m not sure if it was platform 1 or 2 – will now be redirected to segregated employment programs. Many of these segregated employment programs come with an expectation of unpaid work at a local business or institution, which is in keeping with the world view of members opposite, who served under the Progressive Conservatives and allowed people with disabilities to be paid less than a minimum wage.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very concerning move by this government as many people with disabilities want to attend postsecondary studies and pursue their passions. Eighty per cent of students with disabilities that go on to postsecondary education enter into the workforce and begin to contribute not only to our economy but in all aspects of life, enriching Alberta’s diversity.

1:50

Our government understood that and was proud to make strong investments in inclusive postsecondary, increasing funding for PDD by $150 million and launching a PDD review to find further improvements. Mr. Speaker, we believe that Albertans with disabilities deserve respect, dignity, and most of all, inclusion, and they deserve a government that will keep their promises.

I call on this government to do what is right and ensure every dollar of the $2 million that was promised goes to inclusive postsecondary to make life better for people with disabilities in our province.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty’s Official Opposition.

Provincial Debt and Fiscal Policy

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They lied to Albertans about the economy and the revenues: that was this Premier on April 30 running his own fear-and-smear campaign to his favourite scribe about Alberta’s finances. Fast forward to last Friday, and the Q4 update shows we cut the deficit by $2 billion more than projected, ever so slightly better than what we reported to Albertans on the eve of the election. To the Premier: will he now abandon his pre-election fear and smear and admit that the numbers we reported to Albertans were the truth?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, they didn’t shrink the deficit. They created the deficit. The NDP ran on a 2015 platform to add just a few billion dollars to the provincial debt then to start running surpluses. Instead, they took a $13 billion debt; they drove it up to $60 billion on a track to $100 billion dollar debt. They ran the largest per capita deficit in Canada for four straight years. They presided over five major credit downgrades. One of the reasons they were fired by Albertans in April is because they had one of the worst fiscal records in Alberta history.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, about 90 per cent of that was not true.

Nonetheless, our fiscal plan preserved important front-line services for Albertans. We incented economic growth with strategic capital investment. We led the country in economic growth two years in a row. Now, first the Premier panned that, claiming our finances were false. Now that he’s been proven wrong, he wants to claim that our future plans are off. But here’s the thing. That’s under his watch, Mr. Speaker. Why won't the Premier admit that it's his $4.5 billion corporate tax giveaway to friends and insiders that is actually unsustainable and irresponsible?

Mr. Kenney: Because it's simply untrue, Mr. Speaker. Now, here I have the 2015 NDP platform in which they committed to Albertans to run a surplus last year of $600 million. Instead of a $600 million surplus they gave us nearly a $7 billion deficit. They broke their promises, and that was on top of the hidden agenda of the carbon tax, the largest tax increase in Alberta history, and the higher corporate taxes that reduced revenues from corporations.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can read platform promises from the Conservative Party when oil was at a hundred dollars a barrel, too, but that is not the answer. It's no wonder the Premier is searching for a scapegoat. Going forward, the projections will be off because you've given away $4.5 billion in corporate tax cuts, cancelled the carbon levy but still claim to be funding several of the projects – that's another $7 billion hole – and cancelled crude by rail for another $2 billion loss. So, yeah, the Premier has got a fiscal problem, but why won't he admit it? It's his.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP committed to run a $600 million surplus last year, when they made that commitment, we'd already been through nine months of lower oil prices. They made a commitment that they had no intention of keeping. It's true; the Leader of the Opposition is correct in saying that this government has a huge fiscal challenge, one that we inherited from the NDP, with orders from Albertans to clean up the huge fiscal disaster, the fiscal train wreck created by the NDP.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Corporate Taxation and Job Creation

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that we have seen that all this government has to offer this spring is billions handed over to wealthy corporations, possible wage rollbacks for 180,000 public servants, definite wage rollbacks for young workers, significant cuts to overtime pay, layoffs in schools, cancelled private-sector investment in renewables, and in May we saw the loss of 3,000 jobs. To the Premier: where are all the jobs that you promised in the last campaign?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Leader of the Opposition is categorically wrong in her assessment of the purported revenue loss through the job-creation tax cut. Professor Bev Dahlby, one of the most highly recognized tax economists in the country, estimates that over four years, through additional economic growth of some $13 billion, it will actually raise the per capita GDP by 6 per cent and increase government revenues by $1.2 billion. Professor Mintz estimates it will create 55,000 jobs. But the NDP, by trying to sock it to job creators, ended up reducing revenues from Alberta businesses.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Actually, corporate tax revenues are higher in the last year than they ever have been. How did that happen, I wonder?

Anyway, we already learned last month that Spanish oil giant Repsol plans to cut its staff by 30 per cent, and figures from Petroleum Labour Market Information report that nearly 3,000 oil and gas workers left this province just in May. To the Premier. Now, I can list the jobs that have been lost since you've come into power, excluding the lawyers who've been given a new lease on life by your government. Can you provide us with a list of the jobs that have been created?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Leader of the Opposition is categorically false when she said that corporate income tax revenues increased under the NDP. Corporate tax revenues for the year just ended were below where they were in 2014. After the NDP raised the rates by 20 per cent, they chased away investment, they killed jobs, and the revenues went down for four years. That's socialist economics. Oddly enough, the same thing happened with personal income taxes. They raised the highest marginal rates by 50 per cent and generated less revenue. We, instead, have a plan to actually create revenues and jobs in this province.

Ms Notley: This Premier's insistence on trying to ignore that the price of oil went from $120 a barrel to $25 a barrel makes him look silly when he makes these kinds of statements, Mr. Speaker.

Nonetheless, the fact is that his predictions are that oil and gas jobs are going to go down in part due to the impact of curtailment, you know, the plan this Premier just extended by backing out of the crude-by-rail plan. You're jeopardizing good jobs by cancelling crude by rail, renewables investment, high-tech support, and new education seats. Now the Premier is forcing Albertans to bankroll the risky tax giveaway and wait somewhere between years and forever for the . . .

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, while the NDP created a jobs crisis, while they presided over and helped to deepen one of the longest and deepest recessions in our history, while the NDP drove our debt from $13 billion to $60 billion, while the NDP shrunk personal and corporate tax revenues by raising the rates, while they did all of that, I am pleased to announce that effective yesterday, as a result of our job-creation tax cut, Alberta has begun to regain the Alberta advantage, with the lowest taxes for job creators in Canada, and we're going to create tens of thousands of jobs as a result.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Technology Industry Programs

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is stalling on programs that would have created jobs and diversified the economy. It appears that he is doing this for petty political reasons. The media reports today that the government hasn't committed to 3,000 high-tech jobs that our NDP government was creating through our artificial intelligence strategy. That commitment had attracted interest from 200 companies, including some major multinationals. Will the Premier confirm that he is going to cancel the artificial intelligence strategy?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there was no intelligence behind the NDP's economic policy. That's why we ended up with nearly 200,000 unemployed Albertans. [interjections]

The worst Finance minister in Alberta history is heckling me right now, and I understand why. It's because he presided over five credit downgrades, a jobs crisis, one of the longest recessions in our history. We are going to make investments, where they make sense for taxpayers, that will help to continue diversifying our economy. [interjections] But the main thing is to get the economic fundamentals right, and that's why we've delivered the job-creation tax cut.

2:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would love to hear the answers. Whether or not we all like them is for every member to determine, but I would like to hear them.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears that you won't confirm that our artificial intelligence strategy will be funded.

The jobs funded by the AI strategy were to work in lockstep with our creation of 3,000 more high-tech postsecondary seats in Alberta postsecondary institutions. This was about setting us up for the future. This Premier has shown that he's determined to drag us back in time. Once again I will ask the Premier to confirm: if he's cancelling the AI strategy, can we also assume that the postsecondary technology seats are gone, too?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing the NDP election commitments that were made. We are going to make investments that help to create the right environment for Alberta to once again become the job-creation engine of Canada after the worst jobs record of any major modern Alberta administration, but that starts with getting the fundamentals right. That's why we've delivered the job-creation tax cut, that will, once fully implemented, give us the lowest taxes on job creators in Canada. By an order of magnitude it will be the lowest in North America, with the exception of four U.S. states. Alberta will once again have the advantage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans now know that this Premier will cut artificial intelligence and other technology investments because they weren't his idea. That is how arrogant he is.

Will the Premier now commit that he is also cancelling the value-added petrochemical diversification initiatives, slamming the door on $75 billion worth of new oil and gas upgrading investments and 70,000 new jobs because he just doesn't care about jobs for ordinary people?

Mr. Kenney: Not caring about jobs for ordinary people: you know, Mr. Speaker, I can't think of a better description of the NDP's four-year economic and fiscal train wreck, a government that in the midst of an historic recession poured fuel on the flames by raising taxes on everything that moves – on heating homes, on filling up gas tanks, on hiring employees, on working – higher income taxes, higher business taxes, higher property taxes. They supported their ally Mr. Trudeau's higher payroll taxes. [interjections] We're going to do just the opposite by creating jobs in this province.

Ms Notley: We're waiting.

The Speaker: Hon. members, including the Leader of the Opposition, we will have order.

I might just provide some commentary. It might be parliamentary to say "That's how arrogant a member is," but to say "That's how arrogant he is" certainly would not be considered parliamentary, and I would consider you – choose your words wisely.

Renewable Energy Procurement

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, it came as zero surprise to any electricity executive I spoke to last week that this Minister of Energy doesn't actually understand contract for difference, competitive procurement. They were not surprised that the minister waved her hand during a puffball last week and cancelled the fourth round of the renewable energy procurement, likely subsequent rounds of procurement, sending $7 billion of new private-sector investment and power that reduces overall prices for consumers looking for a home elsewhere. Minister, it does not appear that you consulted with anyone prior to issuing this decision. Why not?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, one would have thought that after their historic election trouncing the NDP might take a step back and reflect on why Albertans repudiated their entire record. Instead, all that we get is heckling and personal insults. Let me tell you that it's time for the NDP to stand up and apologize for the 200,000 unemployed Albertans, to those people who lost their homes, to those who lost their businesses, to those who had to pay more for everything in this province. It's time to hear a bit of humility from the NDP.

Ms Phillips: It also came as zero surprise to indigenous people with whom I spoke last week that this minister didn't acknowledge the tremendous loss of equity participation opportunities that she caused by cancelling the competitive option for renewables procurement. Unlike a backbench puffball, indigenous people won't be mollified with a stale talking point. When will the minister meet with indigenous leaders, look them in the eye, and level with them that she just cancelled hundreds of millions of new dollars of economic opportunities for them? Face the music, Minister.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the NDP faced the music on April 16, and it didn't turn out so well for them. I can tell you that at the cabinet meeting with our 46 treaty chiefs, a meeting that the NDP refused to have for four years, we discussed exactly this issue. I explained to our partners in the indigenous leadership that we've eliminated the carbon tax to reduce costs on all Albertans, including indigenous Albertans. I didn't get any rebuttal. I'll tell you what we did get: tremendous interest in being partners in major projects, in part through the indigenous opportunities corporation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This minister doesn't answer her own questions. She appears to have a loose grasp of her files and is as articulate on electricity policy as she is respectful of companies who want to do business here, which is to say, not very. Why won't the minister commit to engaging relevant stakeholders on the phase-in of new renewables and natural gas generation to replace the coal that is being phased out by decisions taken by her own Premier and Prime Minister Harper?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this is going from the sublime to the ridiculous, to have a former NDP minister stand up and actually raise electricity policy. That minister was in part responsible for one of the biggest boondoggles and fiscal scandals in Alberta history. She and her government cost Alberta taxpayers and ratepayers at least $2 billion through their complete mismanagement of the power purchasing agreements, but she has an opportunity to stand up right now and apologize for the $2 billion that she cost us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West is rising with a question.

Fair Registration Practices Act

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Member for Calgary-West I am proud to represent many hard-working immigrants who chose this province as their home. Their stories of courage and resilience are a true embodiment of the Alberta spirit. Now, sadly, many of our highly trained immigrants, professionals, have faced an uphill battle to get their skills recognized. Can the Minister of Labour and Immigration please update this House on the feedback he received on this issue at his recent panel with newcomers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-West for the question. The Premier and I were very fortunate to sit down with a group of newcomers and hear their stories, their personal struggles trying to get their credentials recognized here in Alberta. We heard about the unnecessary stress it caused them and their families. We heard about the barriers they faced and their time spent in survival jobs. We also heard about newcomers giving up their pursuit to get their credentials recognized, and that is why this government is proud of Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act, and what it will do for newcomers in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the vast majority of immigrants enter Canada through a point system which encourages highly skilled and highly educated individuals to apply and given that many of these professionals are then underemployed and unable to use those very skills because of complex and ambiguous processes, can the minister please tell this Assembly the impact that Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act, will make?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member. Bill 11, which was passed in this House last week, introduces measures to ensure that the regulated professions and individuals applying for registration by regulated professions are governed by practices that are transparent, objective, impartial, and fair. It includes a fair practices code, fair registration practices office, and a requirement that an interim decision be made within six months. Our goal is to maintain high professional standards while speeding up and improving foreign credential recognition so that newcomers can fully integrate and support their families and contribute to the Alberta economy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many newcomers have to make a difficult choice between feeding their families and pursuing reaccreditation and given that the full and fair integration of highly qualified immigrants into the workforce is both a moral imperative and an unequivocal benefit for the Alberta economy, can the minister please inform this Assembly and Albertans just how much we stand to gain from this new legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. Newcomers are so important to our province. Underemployment can cause unnecessary stress for immigrant families whose education and skills are not being used to their full potential. Not only is this a moral issue – we need to help these families fully integrate – but it also represents a significant loss of economic productivity for the Alberta economy. All Albertans will benefit from maximizing the productivity and innovation that newcomers have to offer. Remember that Bill 11 applies to all Albertans applying for licensure and accreditation, not just newcomers.

2:10

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, another day, another headline that makes it clear that the Education minister isn't doing her job. Parents of children with severe learning disabilities are rightfully stressed about the $40 million in cuts that the Calgary board of education is bringing forward. This means less educational assistance to ensure that students with severe special needs thrive. All it would take to make these problems go away is for the minister to fund enrolment, the classroom improvement fund, at the current formula. To the minister: will you please just tell us what you're funding this fall? It is your job.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education is rising.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Again, I stand to say that we are continuing to fund education. We will continue to build schools. Also, it's standard procedure that funding information is communicated to school boards following approval by the Legislature. All of these things I've said numerous times, over and over again. The hon. opposition needs to stop with their scare tactics. It's not working. People know that we are funding education for all students.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the minister herself claimed on Thursday to have "refreshing and unprecedented" collaboration with boards and given that apparently that collaboration doesn't involve telling them how much money they'll have this fall and given that parents quoted in today's Calgary Herald worry that no budget will make the situation worse for their children with severe learning disabilities, to the minister: will you at least pick up the phone and make sure these parents who came forward have their concerns addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. My office is always open. I'm hearing from numerous parents on various issues. I can assure you that in Alberta we spend amongst the most per capita on education, but the outcomes just aren't there, so we're going to continue to make improvements and work towards doing the best for each and every child. My heart is with children, and I will spend my time focused on doing the absolute best for every single child that is under our care.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the parents at the Calgary board of education are far from alone in their concerns and given that we are expecting 15,000 new students this fall yet the minister has not committed a single new dollar formally to assist those students, to the minister. School is out for the summer. Are you going to make anxious parents wait until October, November, or December to find out how terrible classroom conditions will be under your leadership?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I believe I've answered this numerous times over. Again, we are working on improving those outcomes, and we're going to do what the NDP failed to do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is rising.

2017 UCP Leadership Campaign Investigation

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A member of the government caucus is the focus of a criminal investigation. Two cabinet ministers have been questioned by the police in relation to this matter, including the Attorney General, yet it remains unclear if Alberta Justice has appointed a special prosecutor to oversee the investigation. Let's put aside the evasive "the matter has been referred to Ontario" language and ask a very simple question: has Alberta appointed a special prosecutor? Yes or no?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, as the member has been aware since early May of the process on this, the ADM of the Alberta Crown prosecution service made the decision to appoint a special prosecutor. They've gone and retained Ontario justice to provide legal advice that may be required by the RCMP. This is done independent of elected officials. I'd refer the hon. member to the RCMP for further questions about this matter. That is all I know. I don't know what questions the RCMP may be asking, who they are going to be asking, if they are asking. Refer them to the RCMP.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we took the Attorney General's advice and called the RCMP, who were not aware of any special prosecutor and referred us to the Crown prosecution service, who in turn referred us to the Attorney General's office, who had no answer either, can the minister quit this embarrassing runaround and say if there's a special prosecutor? Yes or no?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, public servants have made a clear statement regarding the fact that they are retaining special prosecutors to handle this matter. I'm advised that they have prosecutors from Ontario justice handling this matter should the RCMP require further advice regarding this.

Thank you.

Ms Ganley: Given, Mr. Speaker, that we continue to wait for the Attorney General to actually name the human being who will perform this work and given that he continues to pass the buck to the police, who cannot name this person, will the Attorney General tell this House if there's a special prosecutor, a secret prosecutor, or no prosecutor at all?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, this line of questioning is ridiculous. The public servants have made a clear statement, the same public servants that were representing when that person was the Minister of Justice. They've made a clear statement that they've retained a special prosecutor to provide legal advice regarding this from Ontario justice. This is independent of elected officials. This is the proper protocol for handling matters like this. They just don't like the answer. We keep providing it. I'll keep providing it again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Rural Crime Prevention

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock constituency is a vast rural constituency, covering an area of 24,000 square kilometres. Over the last four years I continually heard from constituents concerned about their safety and the increased hostility and combative nature of rural crime. To the Minister of Justice: with many of the rural crimes being committed by repeat offenders travelling from one jurisdiction to another, what steps are being taken to improve the communication and information sharing of policing departments?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, on a regular basis I'm talking to officials with ALERT, the RCMP, the Calgary Police Service, the Edmonton Police Service, and stakeholders in other provinces regarding ways that we can make sure that information flows in an efficient way. We've had successes with project elder, which led to many arrests and taking drugs off the street. In addition to that, I plan on listening to Albertans. This is something that the previous government did not do. We're going to be making sure that we go out to rural communities, listen to people that are on the ground to make sure that we can help facilitate this and make sure we respond to Albertans.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that the province of Alberta has seen an increase in rural crime under the previous NDP government and given that many of these crimes are being committed by repeat offenders and given that my constituents as well as local law enforcement agencies are becoming increasingly frustrated with a system that appears to be failing them, to the minister: what is this government doing to address the repeat offender problem within our justice system?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, we're going to be making sure that we provide our law enforcement officials with the tools and resources that they need, making sure that prosecutors are focusing on making sure they prosecute the important cases that are before the court. In addition to that, we're going to be providing funding for electronic monitoring technology. We're going to be making sure we listen to, basically, the concerns of Albertans. All Albertans deserve to feel safe in their community. Not a day goes by when I don't talk to one of our members here bringing me a new story about how people are concerned in rural Alberta. We're going to make sure we listen to Albertans and fulfill our campaign commitments.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that many rural Albertans continue to feel unsafe in their homes even though they deserve to feel safe and given that law enforcement response times to help protect many of my constituents in remote locations can be over an hour, to the minister: what are you doing to help rural Albertans feel like the justice system is there to protect them, their loved ones, and their property?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, one of our campaign commitments was to make sure that we advocated for Criminal Code amendments, to make sure that they reflected the reality of the challenges facing so many Albertans in rural Alberta. Just recently I wrote a letter of support for Blaine Calkins' amendment to the Criminal Code that did just that. He tried to amend the Criminal Code. I hope that amendment gets the support it needs in our House of Commons and that changes happen through our Criminal Code. We won't stop fighting to make sure the Criminal Code reflects the reality so many Albertans are facing in rural Alberta. In addition to that, we're going to make sure that police and prosecutors have the resources they need to do their jobs well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has a question.

Opioid-related Deaths and Supervised Drug Consumption Sites

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A report released last week shows a decline in the number of opioid-related deaths although there is still more work to do. The associate minister hasn't said a word about this since the report came out on Friday. In fact, advocates are now calling him out for downplaying the report and accusing him of doing so because it doesn't fit this UC government's plan to defund safe consumption sites. To the associate minister: will you admit that these sites may be playing a role in the decline in opioid-related deaths?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're aware of the update of the current stats. Let me tell you that when the number goes down, we're very pleased to see that. But we've been given the very cautious notion that because it's early in the day of having the data, we cannot be in any way less sort of conscious about the crisis that's still here. We're working diligently to address that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister's press secretary told the CBC that he expects the numbers in the quarterly report to rise and given that a drug policy researcher with the University of Calgary said that the lack of positive communication by this associate minister about the decline in deaths was because, quote, it's going against this current government's mandate to stall and review services, to the associate minister: were you really trying to downplay these figures because they run counter to the government philosophy around harm reduction and you know that by cancelling these sites, the rates will increase?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government happens to believe that the solution for this community crisis requires all communities working together. We're not here to judge whether one contribution is bigger than the other. We're working very hard to do a comprehensive mental health and addictions strategy. We hope, through that, that we'll find multiple ways to work with all Albertans to make a difference.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that this government is only reviewing safe consumption sites and I'm curious as to how that answer makes any sense and given that after the quarterly report was released, Dr. Virani said that there's no excuse for not continuing to support and expand harm reduction and given that we have barely heard a word from this associate minister about the progress of his so-called review, to the minister. It's time to be open and transparent. Who's involved in the review, what is the status of the review, and will Albertans know what you really plan to do about the safe consumption sites that you've frozen funding for?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Luan: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to challenge my colleague on the other side. I understand that she's a social worker, too. When we talk about complex issues like this one, it requires comprehensive services. A system of care is what we're promoting here. We're not going to be just talking about one way of intervention as if that's the only way to solve the problem. We'll continue to work on this side of the House to develop the continuum of care with the recovery covered system of care to serve Albertans when they are ready to get help.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is rising.

Affordable Daycare in Rural Communities

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This side of the House understands that it's integral for new mothers to gain access back into the workforce when they see fit. However, access to affordable child care proves to be a continual barrier for working moms, especially in rural Alberta. In our platform we committed to expanding $25-per-day child care all across Alberta, including family day homes, making it easier for rural parents to get back to work, yet we continue to hear nothing from this government on any plans for affordable child care options. To the Premier: why is your government neglecting this important issue and ignoring the needs of rural working Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services has risen.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, we heard over the last four years that Albertans were struggling. Opportunity to find work and provide for their families is something that Albertans were looking for. We also know that a strong economy is what allows us to take care of those who need it the most. The $25-a-day care program is a pilot. We are reviewing the results of the pilot, and I'm happy to see what that brings forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I received an e-mail from a farmer in Fairview whose wife is a public health nurse who is now debating whether they can afford to have another child because it is just too expensive to find reliable child care in rural Alberta and given that this family is contemplating that the mother drop out of the workforce, letting her skills atrophy and losing a valued public health nurse from the community, can the Minister of Children's Services outline how she will be addressing the lack of child care options in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a working parent myself, I do understand first-hand the challenges that parents face when trying to find child care that works for their children. I also want to recognize that what works for one family may not work for another and that what works for one child may not work for another. What we do have is a number of resources that can help parents to make the best decisions as they find child care for their families.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think Albertans are needing some more concrete answers than that.

Given that this family from Fairview has gone to their local Economic Development Committee and discovered there are many other families in the same situation and given that this family raised this issue with the Member for Central Peace-Notley during the campaign but did not feel that the UCP had any plans to address the problem and given that this family appropriately sees this issue as critical to the economic health of this province, to the minister of economic development and trade: how will you be helping these families, or do you believe that ensuring women's participation in the workforce and the economy is just not your problem?

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our party ran on 375 commitments that focus on getting Albertans back to work and growing our economy so that we can provide the supports needed for families. I understand that finding child care can be a difficult decision for many families, but what we want to make sure is that parents have the resources they need to make informed decisions that suit the needs and circumstances of each individual child and their family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Agricultural Concerns

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the previous administration our family farms in Alberta were put through tough times dealing with skyrocketing costs just simply trying to make a living. Alberta's agricultural payrolls have plummeted in unacceptable ways. Agricultural employment has dropped 19 per cent in four years. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how will this government maintain this important driver of Alberta's employment and economy?

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first, I'd like to congratulate the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on a very successful Ponoka Stampede.

But on that very important question, the past four years have been very difficult for Alberta farmers. First, Alberta farmers had increased input costs through the retail carbon tax from the NDP. Second, Alberta farmers had increased regulatory burden through unnecessary red tape and impractical compliance rules such as the disastrous NDP Bill 6. But this summer I will be touring around Alberta, actually, consulting with and talking to farmers on how we can make improvements.

Mr. Orr: Given that employment insurance premiums are rising, costing more money annually for employers, and given that the previous government made it mandatory for farmers to have WCB coverage for their employees, to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how will this government address the safety concerns of employees and employers' obligation to provide safe workplaces while balancing these with the costs of mandatory insurance coverage farmers now must pay?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I consulted with over 30 commodity groups, over a hundred farmers and industry people, and one of the biggest things that did come up was the mandatory WCB insurance. From that consultation that we had, over 142 recommendations came to correct the NDP's failed Bill 6, and a survey after that consultation found that 97 per cent of the participants felt that the questions that we were asking were on the right track. Although 97 per cent isn't perfect, we're striving for it.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, given that small farms especially do not have the same capabilities in terms of manpower or monetary funds as other businesses and given that farms have long been the backbone of our province's economy, to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how will this government ensure that small farms are able to survive and be viable participants in Alberta's economy going forward?

Mr. Dreeshen: I'd like to thank the member again for that very important question. Our consultations that we'll be doing this summer are going to have all different types of farms and all different sizes of farms because Albertans know that Alberta farmers grow high-quality food that feeds a global population. Mr.

Speaker, I would like to extend an invitation to you personally and to government members and also to members of the opposition to a barbecue tomorrow that we're having to show solidarity for our farmers that are having difficulty through market access and some trade issues. It's something where we'll be able to show the solidarity of this House to our farmers here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has a question.

Métis Harvesting Policy

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March our government signed historic agreements with the Metis Settlements General Council and the Métis Nation of Alberta that expanded Métis harvesting areas and recognized the rights of Métis people to hunt for subsistence, as is their time-honoured tradition. Has the Minister of Indigenous Relations reviewed these new agreements, and will he honour and protect them against outside pressures from nonindigenous hunters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. The Métis people of Alberta have shaped Alberta's rich cultural history, society, and economy even before Alberta became a province, and we will continue to work with the Métis communities in ways that respect both their culture and the conservation of wildlife. To that end, under our stewardship this government commits itself to the path of reconciliation with the Métis people's right to hunt, fish, and trap for food where their ancestors have harvested game, and we support Environment and Parks in their Métis harvesting policy.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Métis harvesters told us that these new agreements were a good step forward, and given that fish and wildlife officers do their job to the best of their ability according to the existing laws and given that under the previous policy Métis harvesters were routinely being charged and the old harvesting regions did not recognize the historic harvesting patterns of Métis people and given that the new policy ensures provisions for conservation and population management for fish and game, to the same minister: do you agree that these new agreements signed by our government strike the right balance between conservation and the rights of Métis harvesters?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government will take the necessary steps to monitor and implement the Métis harvesting in Alberta policy and evaluate opportunities for improvement. The updated policy will take effect in September of this year. We look forward to hearing how the policy is working, and we continue to engage with the Métis people of this province to ensure the traditional way of life.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that under these new agreements Métis harvesters are expecting to apply for the harvesting identification stickers in September and given that the Métis harvesters who hunt for subsistence contribute to the culture and identity of the communities and given that limiting those rights would represent a substantial step backwards in reconciliation, will the minister ensure that Métis harvesters will be able to enjoy their rights to practise traditional subsistence hunting this September, as planned, with stickers on their Métis cards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The revised policy embodies a change to identify new and expanded harvesting areas and supports the preferred means of fishing for Métis harvesters. These new regional areas are more reflective of traditional territories and use areas. This government is open to any feedback and changes that will need to be made in the spirit of open and honest dialogue, reflecting our commitment to reconciliation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Edmonton Courthouse

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recent rain forced staff upholding justice in Edmonton law courts to work their way through a maze of two dozen or more buckets to collect water leaking from the ceiling to get to work. Given that this Minister of Infrastructure's response left much to be desired – his spokesperson said they had, quote, mitigated the major sources of water – we need a longer term solution. To the Minister of Infrastructure: have you fixed the roof permanently, or should the law courts staff keep their buckets at the ready?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, yes, there was a leak, and that particular facility required some repair. The source of the leak has been located and permanently sealed. The general contractor, Bird Construction, confirmed it was a test hole that was drilled at some point during the construction exploration for the new galleria, and the problem has been rectified.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's good to hear, but given that the presence of buckets in the lobby is still a common one and given that the building is in need of major repairs due to the presence of asbestos, cramped conditions, and inadequate insulation and air circulation and given that this ongoing water damage will only make the situation worse, to the same minister: will you commit to a plan for a major overhaul or replacement of the building? Clearly, the weather shouldn't dictate whether justice can be served in this province.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the problem has been addressed, and the room has thoroughly dried and has been cleared of any mould or environmental concerns. The department is finishing cleaning and will be putting the area back into service in the coming days.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That doesn't address the inadequate insulation, the asbestos, or any of the cramped conditions that were asked about in that second question.

Given that they want a robust justice system to address rural crime, I can't figure out what the priorities of this government are. The members on this side know that investing in justice is important, unlike the members opposite, who voted against the funding. Now, to the Minister of Justice: are you aware that while your Premier gives a 4 and a half billion dollar tax giveaway on one hand to wealthy donors, your colleague the Infrastructure minister is letting your justice system literally fall apart?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South will ask his questions without a preamble following question 4.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I really wonder. I mean, if this member, when he was in government, had put that much energy into asking his Finance minister, his Justice minister to fix the financial issues we got into the fiscal mess, $100 billion debt, if they had fixed that, today we wouldn't need the buckets to collect the water remaining.

Investment in Alberta and Fiscal Policies

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, under the previous NDP government we saw a mass exodus of capital and investment out of Alberta. While Albertans were stuck dealing with the recession and tough economic times, the NDP's policies only made matters worse. The carbon tax, unnecessary red tape, and other ideological bills made it even harder for everyday Albertans simply to just get by. Minister, can you please tell this House: what is the government doing to right the wrongs of the previous NDP government and help get Albertans back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has risen.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. The previous NDP government left this province in a fiscal mess. It left this province with a very uncompetitive business environment. We saw the flight of capital by the billions from this province and with it jobs and opportunities. Our government has taken very quick action to materially improve the business environment by repealing the carbon tax, introducing the job-creation corporate tax cut, working on reducing red tape, and modernizing our regulatory regime.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that under the previous government we saw investment decrease in almost every industry – a 61 per cent decrease in the mining, quarrying, and oil and gas extraction sector, a 27 per cent decrease in the finance, insurance, and real estate sector, and a 21 per cent decrease in investment in the construction sector – can the minister please update us all on what the government's plan is to bring investment back to Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member lays out the challenge, I think, very well this afternoon. Again, our government has moved very quickly to create a much more competitive, in fact the most competitive, business environment in all of Canada and one of the most competitive business environments in North America by introducing the job-creation tax cut, which will move our corporate tax rate from 12 per cent to 8 per cent. We've repealed the carbon tax, which will provide relief to not only every business but every Albertan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you to the minister for the answer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that during this economic downturn everyday Albertans were tightening their belts and trying desperately to spend within their means and given that the NDP's spending addiction put Alberta on a path for 100 or more billion dollars in debt in just a few short years, will the minister please let this House know: how is the government dealing with the financial mess left behind by the NDP, and what is the path forward to finally ensure that Alberta's books are balanced?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans elected our government to bring fiscal balance to this province, to make decisions that are in the best interests of Albertans. The MacKinnon panel will be providing a report to this government ahead of our budget deliberations. We look forward to that report. The annual report, which was just released, demonstrated a $40 billion loss in equity in this province's balance sheet over the last five years. This government will do better.

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon has the call.

Tourism Promotion

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a beautiful province that offers so much to see and do. People come from all over the province, all over the country, and indeed all over the world to experience the many sights and attractions we have to offer. The beauty of the west country is one such example in my constituency, that I am proud to represent. A strong tourism sector will create jobs and growth in Alberta, and our government supports innovative approaches to sustaining funding for tourism, promotion, and marketing through partnerships with the private sector. Will the minister explain how Travel Alberta's mandate will be reoriented to support this endeavour?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The tourism sector contributes more than $8.5 billion towards our economy each year and employs more than 130,000 full-time employees. We are currently working on developing a 10-year tourism strategy that will reorient Travel Alberta's mandate to more effectively work with the private sector and the creation of public-private partnerships.

2:40

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in the last two months I've had many conversations with the towns of Breton, Thorsby, and Drayton Valley, among other centres, about increasing tourism in my constituency and given that cutting red tape is an important objective of this government and given that we have heard from many in the tourism industry of the intrusive laws, rules, and regulations, will the minister please advise what our government is planning to do to remove unnecessary hurdles for our tourism operators?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. We have already taken action to remove unnecessary red tape for our tourism operators. My colleague the Minister of Environment and Parks has increased the lease lengths on public lands from 25 to 60 years. This move came at the request of the tourism sector and will allow operators to secure long-term financing, attract investment, and expand to showcase Alberta in new and innovative ways.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the private sector delivers the services that support the tourism industry in Alberta and given that the private sector has a role to play in assisting government in promoting Alberta as a tourism destination and given that tourism cannot grow in Alberta if government and the private sector do not work together and given that our platform calls for a reprofile of existing government funding for tourism into a tourism partnership incentive fund, will the minister please advise how it will manage this fund to attract and identify sources of private sector support within my constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The tourism partnership investment fund will be a combination of several existing funds and programs and will be a formative part of our 10-year tourism strategy, which will engage tourism stakeholders from across our province to grow the sector. Travel Alberta will use this fund to identify effective private-sector operators that can be partners with our government in growing the tourism sector, particularly in the wake of our changes to public land leases.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will move to the rest of the daily Routine. If you have other commitments outside of the Chamber, please get to those quickly and move expediently.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to provide oral notice of Government Motion 27.

Be it resolved that the 2017 annual report of the Alberta Property Rights Advocate office be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future for review. The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued. In accordance with section 5(5) of the Property Rights Advocate Act the committee shall report back to the Assembly within 60 days of the report being referred to it if the Assembly is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has a tabling.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the copies of an article in The Guardian by Mark Rice-Oxley, and it's titled Austerity and Inequality Fuelling Mental Illness, Says Top UN Envoy.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? Well done.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act the government of Alberta 2018-19 annual report. On behalf of hon.

Mr. Madu, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Municipal Government Act Edmonton Metropolitan Region Board 2018-2019 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order, points of privilege. The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Privilege Threatening a Member

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, Standing Order 15(5) says that a Member may always raise a question of privilege in the Assembly immediately after the words are uttered or the events occur that give rise to the question, in which case the written notice required under suborder (2) is not required.

As you are aware, a question of privilege was raised by the Minister of Transportation on Thursday, June 27, during the course of debate regarding threatening comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. In the course of an exchange in question period last Thursday the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud clearly stated, on page 1283 of Hansard, "I don't need the House leader, by the way; we're coming for you."

Now, Mr. Speaker, as an experienced law enforcement officer I can tell you that outside of this Assembly this is a clear investigation if a complaint was made to the police. Then we would be investigating the complaint under section 264.1(1)(a) of the Criminal Code. The mens rea in the case can only lead a reasonable person to conclude that the words uttered by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud were meant to convey a threat and even imply violence. In other words, they were meant to intimidate.

In Parliamentary Privilege in Canada by Maingot it states that:

Members are entitled to go about their parliamentary business undisturbed. The assaulting, menacing, or insulting of any Member on the floor of the House or while he is coming or going to or from the House, or on account of his behaviour during a proceeding in Parliament, is a violation of the rights of Parliament.

Now, Mr. Speaker, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the third edition, states on page 107 and 108:

In order to fulfill their parliamentary duties, Members should be able to go about their parliamentary business undisturbed. Assaulting, threatening, or insulting a Member during a proceeding of Parliament, or while the Member is circulating within the Parliamentary Precinct, is a violation of the rights of Parliament. Any form of intimidation of a Member with respect to the Member's actions during a proceeding in Parliament could amount to contempt.

Now, Erskine May Parliamentary Practice discusses intimidation on page 146, and it states:

To attempt to intimidate a Member in his parliamentary conduct by threats is also a contempt, cognate to those mentioned above. Actions of this character which have been proceeded against include impugning the conduct of Members and threatening them with further exposure if they took part in debates.

There are also a few examples, Mr. Speaker:

threatening to communicate with Members' constituents to the effect that, if they did not reply to a questionnaire, they should be considered as not objecting to certain sports; publishing posters containing a threat regarding the voting of Members in a forthcoming debate; informing Members that to vote for a particular bill would be regarded as treasonable by a future administration; summoning a Member to a disciplinary hearing of his trade union in consequence of a vote given in the House; and threatening to end investment by a public corporation in a Member's constituency, if the Member persisted in making speeches along the lines of those in a preceding debate.

Mr. Speaker, which one of these examples that I previously mentioned was the member talking about, or is there another example that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud meant when she said "by the way; we're coming for you"? If these actions or comments were made outside of this Chamber and a complaint was made by the Government House Leader, then the police would have reasonable suspicion to begin an investigation for uttering threats. With video evidence, with witness testimony I would argue that the evidence is sufficient on reasonable and probable grounds to possibly lay a charge of uttering threats. However, these comments were made inside this Chamber, and therefore the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud enjoys freedom of speech and therefore immunity from criminal or civil action, but that doesn't mean that there aren't some limits on that freedom inside the Chamber.

2:50

House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 97 states under the heading Misuse of Freedom of Speech:

The privilege of freedom of speech is an extremely powerful immunity and on occasion Speakers have had to caution Members about its misuse.

It goes on to say:

Speaker Parent also emphasized the need for Members to use great care in exercising their right to speak freely in the House:

... paramount to our political and parliamentary systems is the principle of freedom of speech, a member's right to stand in this House unhindered to speak his or her mind. However when debate in the House centres on sensitive issues, as it often does, I would expect that members would always bear in mind the possible effects of their statements and hence be prudent in their tone and choice of words.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would further argue that the words of the member were directed at the Government House Leader and were done in a way that was meant to silence him and therefore deny both his right to freedom of speech in this Assembly and the rights of his constituents to be represented. In fact, this wasn't the first time that the NDP Official Opposition have tried to silence the Government House Leader. You may remember the distasteful remarks made on June 26, 2019, by the Member for Lethbridge-West when she said, "To the minister, who shouldn't need a guard dog, so the House leader can stay on his leash."

I would also draw your attention to a similar situation on December 5, 2017, Mr. Speaker, made by the Government House Leader of the day, Mr. Brian Mason, when there was an alleged threatening gesture. He felt that there was a prima facie breach of privilege due to how the government viewed the threatening gesture made by a member of the opposition.

Now, I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a matter of debate, that this is not a matter of opinion or a difference as to the facts. This was clearly meant by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud to threaten and attempt to intimidate the Government House Leader in the performance and execution of his parliamentary duties. Therefore, this is a prima facie question of privilege.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning is rising.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to rise and respond to the government. I just would like to start off by saying that this is not a point of privilege, however would have been better suited through the point of order at the time. If we reference Beauchesne, section 26, page 12:

A question of order concerns the interpretation to be put upon the rules of procedure and is a matter for the Speaker or, in a committee, for the Chairman to determine.

(2) A question of privilege, on the other hand, is a question partly of fact and partly of law – the law of contempt of Parliament.

While the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud could have been more careful in her choice of phrasing, in context she clearly intended to communicate that the minister would be called on to answer a question later in the day if we refer to Hansard of 1281 and 1289 for that day. Using unparliamentary language does not constitute a prima facie breach of privilege. While the language may have been unparliamentary, it does not rise to level of breaching the member's privileges.

Our member, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, is prepared to apologize and withdraw her remarks, but this is not a breach of privilege. I hardly think that calling on a minister to wait his turn and let his colleagues answer a question directed at them constitutes a breach.

In Beauchesne, section 420, on page 123, “the Chair will allow a question to be put to a certain Minister; but it cannot insist that that Minister rather than another should answer it.”

Also in section 31 of Beauchesne on page 13, “A dispute arising between two Members, as to the allegation of facts, does not fulfill the conditions of parliamentary privilege.” The minister was not in fact obstructed. He continued to participate robustly in question period. He rose three times to address questions after the alleged incident occurred.

If you refer to Hansard on 1283 to 1289, the House of Commons on page 109,

In order to find a prima facie breach of privilege, the Speaker must be satisfied that there is evidence to support the Member's claim that he or she has been impeded in the performance of his or her parliamentary functions and that the matter is directly related to a proceeding [of this House].

Again, I think it's important to acknowledge that the Government House Leader did rise again repeatedly after that incident, responding to the questions at hand, which directly demonstrates that he at that time did not feel like he was being intimidated, nor did it impede his ability to continue to do his job. Again I would point out that this is not a point of privilege in concerning the rights of members, and it did not impede the work of the member in his capacity.

Again, if we look at the precedents on page 18, March 6, 2017, Speaker Wanner ruled that the language used was unparliamentary and that it did cause disorder, which would have been the subject of a point of order, but uttering words that are unparliamentary does not constitute a question of privilege.

The Speaker: Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to offer my apologies for the statement I made last week. It was a misstatement. I misspoke. I meant to say: we are coming to you next. I said: coming for you next. I acknowledge that that was an inappropriate comment and it was a misstatement. I retract the statement if you permit, and through you to the Government House Leader I offer my apologies for any fear or intimidation he might have felt. Certainly, it was a misstatement on my part. I accept your judgment on this, and I apologize for it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am uncertain as to what the best path forward is.

As many will know, it is customary for this Assembly and many Assemblies that with respect to a question of privilege if a member withdraws their comments and apologizes, that would traditionally conclude the matter. However, the Deputy Government House Leader for the Official Opposition chose to spend a good portion of time speaking directly to how this, in fact, wasn't a point of privilege. As such, I am inclined to take some time to consider whether or not she, in fact, was correct. The difficult position that we are all in is that I must take the member at her word when she apologizes and withdraws.

What I will do is that I will say this. I will accept the withdrawal and apology of this very serious matter with respect to uttering threats and a point of privilege inside the Assembly. However, I wish to make some additional comments considering the remarks from last week. I'd like to remind members of the Official Opposition that they alone are responsible for the tone of the words that they use and that they should ensure that these remarks do not inflame the debate or lead to disorder or a lack of decorum inside the Assembly.

Now, I recognize that we are all moving into the seventh consecutive week of sitting, but we bear the responsibility of ensuring that the words that we use are chosen carefully and that the words we use are in accordance with the parliamentary traditions that this Assembly and the Westminster parliamentary system deserves. I implore upon this hon. member that they do a much better job in the future when a question of privilege could arise with respect to uttering threats directed at the government.

As such, I will accept the apology. This matter is concluded, and I consider it dealt with.

We are at ordres du jour.

3:00

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 2 An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

The Deputy Chair: Are there any questions or comments? As a reminder, we are on amendment A2, where the substance had to do with possibly changing the title. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods standing.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to Bill 2 during this Committee of the Whole debate. I hope that everyone had a really happy Canada Day long weekend. I hope that all members had the opportunity to visit their constituents in their ridings, take in the many celebrations as Canadians came together to celebrate living in the greatest country in this world, and I hope that members of the government caucus had the opportunity to talk to their constituents about what Bill 2 would mean, which is that this past Canada Day was the last statutory holiday, should Bill 2 pass with no amendments, where all Albertans would receive maybe some time off, maybe a day's wage so that they can spend time with their family and celebrate something that we all hold very dear.

With Canada Day in mind, I would like to raise my concerns with Bill 2, the pick-your-pockets bill, because it is going to roll back protections for statutory holiday pay, essentially taking money away from workers who depend on it. Now, often when I speak to Bill 2, Mr. Chair, I like to remind this Assembly that the changes we are making are to the minimum employment standards. Those who rely on the minimum employment standards are often our more vulnerable workers, perhaps our newest entrants into the workforce, perhaps those who are working in precarious jobs. That tends to be where minimum employment standards are truly relied upon.

The people who will be deprived through the changes in Bill 2 of general holiday pay on important holidays like Canada Day are going to be those who likely need that money the most, where that little bit of a day's wage means more time spent with family. So in honour of Canada Day, which just happened to fall on a Monday this year but is one of those holidays that lands on different days of the week any given year – when Canada Day falls on a Saturday, office workers and those who tend to work Monday to Friday, 9 to 5, could be the ones who receive no benefit for that statutory holiday.

I appreciate the opportunity to stand to speak once again on Bill 2 but to really put that very recent memory of a joyous Canada Day celebration into the minds of the members. It is the workers who were there celebrating on Canada Day that would not receive general holiday pay if it was a nonstandard workday for them, reintroducing a rule that will be unique to Alberta. No other jurisdiction has this rule, Mr. Chair. Alberta was the outlier before we came along and updated it for the first time in 30 years – employment standards hadn't been updated in that long – to review all other jurisdictions and make changes to put Alberta on a similar playing field, to make sure that Canadian citizens no matter which province they live in all get to celebrate Canada Day and all get that statutory holiday benefit of maybe another day off, maybe a little bit of pay. This change in Bill 2 is going to put us out of step again with every other province because Alberta will become the only place where, perhaps, someone would not receive any benefit.

As an example, in 2022, Mr. Chair, Christmas will fall on a weekend, and New Year's Day will fall on a weekend. That means many families may not receive any additional time off, may not receive wages for those statutory holidays. I object strongly to this change because I believe that Albertans, just like every other Canadian, deserve to have the same basic protections that are the Canadian standard and that we brought into the employment standards changes in what I would call the Canadian mainstream.

Bill 2 rolls back the general holidays, could impact and will impact workers when it comes to Canada Day, and adds back in eligibility requirements such that someone needs to have worked 30 days in the last 12 months in order to apply, which can be difficult sometimes when someone starts as part-time, when somebody works irregular hours. Reintroducing that eligibility period, I would suggest, doesn't put us wildly out of line. There are other provinces with eligibility periods, but I do think it's a little bit of, to use a Christmas analogy, a Grinch move.

I would like to see changes to employment standards work to address the challenges that we currently have in the system, the fact that so many of our precarious workers are not necessarily covered by those minimum employment standards. When somebody works in a contractlike position, if somebody is driving for Uber, minimum wages and hours of work and such can be very, very difficultly applied to them. So a lot of our precarious workers are lacking basic protections.

Bill 2 doesn't address some of those more complicated issues. It simply rolls back the rights of workers when it comes to holiday pay, when it comes to making sure that our workers get what is owed to them when they do, for example, overtime. That's another aspect of this act that I have spoken about, but it bears a little bit of repeating. Under these changes banked overtime in Alberta only, no other jurisdiction in Canada, will be banked at straight time rather than time and a half, essentially ignoring the fact that overtime, time spent away from family, time spent beyond eight hours per day or 44 hours per week, should be done at a premium that recognizes the extra work that that employee is doing.

I even heard on a CBC radio interview, Mr. Chair, an employer talking about when the previous government first implemented the time-and-a-half change. Their concern was that it was going to be too onerous a cost. But on this CBC lunch-hour call-in show this business owner said that as soon as they began paying time and a half for overtime, they actually saw the efficiency of their workers. The workers' interest in making sure they were hitting their deadlines, by giving those few extra hours of overtime, went way up, and it increased profitability for the company because when you pay workers that fair wage, when you treat workers with respect, that is good for business.

This bill, which is predicated on removing the banking of overtime at time and a half, moving it down to straight time, which is predicated on taking away stat holidays when every other Canadian worker – I will say that this government has done a very poor job of communicating on this bill, first, around the overtime piece with misleading information, confusing banked overtime and paid overtime. To be clear to you, Mr. Chair, I understand that paid overtime is not changing. I still have strong concerns around the banked overtime rate being paid at straight time rather than time and a half specifically because it still is less money for those workers, it is less time with family, and it is less value for those workers.

3:10

Also, when it comes to the stat holiday piece, the true impact of this change to workers is that in 2022 a worker working Monday to Friday from 9 to 5, unlike every other Canadian, would not receive any benefit. Where this government, I think, could do a better job of communicating this is: why? Why do Albertans deserve less when it comes to a stat holiday than every other Canadian? Why does Alberta deserve to have lower minimum standards than every other jurisdiction in Canada?

These are very important questions and strong concerns that I have regarding this piece of legislation. The general holiday pay change and the banked overtime change put us completely out of line with the rest of our country. We've just all spent Canada Day celebrating how great our country is, celebrating all of the things that we value about the country of Canada, our diversity and the opportunity for people to work hard, to make something of themselves. These changes, which change the minimum standards, impact the most vulnerable among us. That is who will lose out on the wages. That is who is going to lose out on stat holiday pay, who is going to lose out on banked overtime.

We know because of the Alberta government's past experiences, because of the consultation that I had the honour of doing when we were introducing Bill 17, those first changes to employment standards. There were many, many workers in our province who felt intimidated by employers, who felt powerless when it came to banked overtime agreements. When you're talking about an employer-employee relationship, especially when you're dealing with our most vulnerable workers, it is not always as easy as just walking into your boss's office and negotiating a better salary or asking for a better overtime banking agreement. That's not realistic. It ignores the reality of hundreds of thousands of our workers. When they are working to put food on the table and are dependent on that job, they're not always in a position of power where they're able to go in and demand changes.

While I was out talking to people throughout Canada Day – I ended up at eight different events, Mr. Chair; it was a really busy day – throughout the day it really struck me that there were people at Canada Day celebrations yesterday who would be getting stat holiday pay, as they should, but it would maybe be the last time that that would happen if Canada Day should ever fall on a Monday again. That's done deliberately on the part of this government to bow to the lobbyists who have asked for these changes, putting Alberta out of line with the rest of Canada.

I'm going to go back to the comment I had earlier, Mr. Chair, which is simply that this government has not explained why Alberta workers deserve less than every other Canadian worker in our country, why they would not all deserve statutory holiday pay, why Alberta would be the only place where someone could receive no benefit for Christmas Day or Canada Day, why in Alberta banked overtime would be at straight time rather than time and a half. They've titled this bill An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, but I do not believe that there is a company that will move here and start their business because they won't have to pay for Christmas anymore. I don't think that's what we want for our citizens, and I'm very concerned about the changes in this bill.

Having just come from Canada Day celebrations, having had the opportunity to enjoy barbecue and cake, the fact that that was a stat holiday that some workers were receiving a benefit for but may not receive that benefit again really struck me. I was certainly curious whether members of the government caucus were having similar thoughts as they talked to joyous people on Canada Day or whether the connection between Bill 2, the legislation they're passing in this House, and the people they represent, the voters that they were talking to at those barbecues, has been drawn clearly enough, because that is who we're talking about. We're talking about the people who keep this province running, the workers, hard-working Albertans, and they deserve to have modern workplace laws. They deserve to be treated fairly, as other Canadians, across this province.

Making sure that Albertans have the same rights and benefits as other Canadians was something that I was most proud of that came from the work that I was able to do as minister of labour in my time in that office. To see that immediately attacked, and in a way that puts us out of line with the rest of Canada, strikes me as very disappointing. I think that working towards more family-friendly workplaces, making sure that there are adequate protections for vulnerable workers and that we're tackling some of the modern challenges in our workplaces, like precarious work, is very important work, that I would encourage the government to turn their attention to.

But picking the pockets, stealing holiday pay, and cutting banked overtime: these are rolling back things for Alberta workers. I just don't believe that the government is getting it right with these changes to Bill 2. I really appreciate the opportunity to stand and to speak to these concerns once more, Mr. Chair, especially given Canada Day having just finished.

It was quite the celebration. I want to say thank you to all the volunteers who put on the amazing events all around the province. I saw lots of photos from different corners of the province and amazing, amazing celebrations taking place. I would wish everyone: I hope you had a great Canada Day.

I hope you will not accept what's currently drafted in Bill 2 to take away stat holiday pay for our most vulnerable workers. It's not something that we need. We haven't clearly articulated why Albertans deserve less than other Canadians. I strongly object to this part of Bill 2; as well, of course, the changing to banked overtime.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I will also take this opportunity to just remind the House that we are discussing amendment A2. I took the opportunity at the very start to say that, but that's okay. Obviously, members have as many opportunities to speak in Committee of the Whole as they would like, so I didn't think that there was any issue with that at the time.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West rising.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You're most telepathic in your ability to see that I wanted to speak even before. I was just thinking about speaking, and you read that. That's a skill. Well, thank you. I take the opportunity to speak on amendment A2 with some interest, and I certainly think that we are trying to be very reasonable here as the Official Opposition, looking for practical ways by which we can collaborate to make this sort of raw clay of Bill 2 into something positive.

I was thinking about Bill 2 over the weekend, actually, not in a dissimilar way to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, because, of course, we did have one of our big statutory holidays yesterday. You can see that people were anxious, after the pretty rough weather during the day, to get out and enjoy themselves with the fireworks and families and tens of thousands of people, really, out and about. Again, it makes you think about the importance of statutory holidays but the importance of enshrining them with coherent legislation and regulation that allows the time off for people to enjoy events like that and to be compensated properly, too.

You know, when we start to send messages that would compromise the integrity of our labour laws in regard to regulation and overtime pay and so forth, then things start to break apart. I just got a message from a constituent on Saturday talking about an overtime issue – yesterday, actually; it would have been yesterday, yeah, on the actual holiday – where their employer was taking some liberty around working on the statutory holiday and kind of changed the rules on the fly, which was, of course, against the law, and this employer will have to retract and pay compensation properly. But I thought to myself: you know, once you start opening up fissures or cracks or weak points here at the legislative level, the message trickles down to employers: hey, things are on the change, or things are loose, and I can perhaps make changes myself – right? – around overtime pay. That just further causes confusion, and we don't need that, I think, Mr. Chair.

3:20

Another thing I was thinking about on the weekend as well is that it's important for this Chamber to look across the country to make sure that the laws we make generally are in keeping with the standard that is set across Canada and specifically that we have labour law that's coherent and matches or is some facsimile of laws and regulations in other jurisdictions and provinces across the country. If we are doing these things in regard to holiday pay, for example, we will be out of sync, synchronization, with places like British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec – right? – all of the big populations, the big provinces. You know, when you are out of step with your provincial cousins, then you start to create some asymmetrical behaviour across the country.

I know from our experience in making the laws and regulations over the last four years that this is a very important consideration, that we'd always take into account: what are the other jurisdictions doing? It was funny, almost, in a way because it became this pattern where we were, like, the 10th province to put in some regulation that would make things safer or more streamlined or more efficient. It was so often that Alberta's regulations and laws were so out of keeping, out of step, with the rest of the provinces. It's like we missed the boat on so many things.

That is just a useful way to remind yourself – right? – that if we make these holiday pay changes, we will be out of sync with most of the other provinces in the country. In regard to the banked overtime changes we would be out of sync with all of the other provinces and territories in the country of Canada. You know, again, that's really not the best message to send, right? It clearly demonstrates that this is a regressive law that we are debating here and that it needs and deserves careful, second consideration at the very least.

Yeah, Mr. Chair, I just wanted to kind of bring up those things that I was thinking about on the weekend in regard to labour law generally and Bill 2 specifically. I think it's eminently reasonable that we do move forward on amendment A2, and I encourage all members to vote with us here as soon as we can.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, anyone to speak to A2? I saw the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud standing.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to amendment A2, which I, again, think is a very reasonable amendment with respect to the title of this bill. As you know, the members on this side of the House had been suggesting that a more appropriate title for the bill might be the pick-your-pockets bill, and we still maintain that. However, I think that we wouldn't anticipate that the government would necessarily agree with such a change in the name of the title of the bill. But what's being put forward here in amendment A2, I think, is actually an accurate reflection, at least, that the government can get behind.

You know, we've been standing up on this side of the House on every bill that the government has brought forward. Of course, our responsibility as the Official Opposition is to do just that and to make sure that all bills that are brought forward by government do get proper debate and discussion in this Assembly. Sometimes it appears as though the members on the other side are shocked or quite disappointed that we continue to debate this legislation, but of course – and many of the members on the other side will recall that – that is the job of the Official Opposition. More importantly, I would just point out that with respect to many of these bills, if we were not to stand up here and give them a fulsome discussion and fulsome debate, I think we would find that these bills would not be discussed at all because there's very little coming from the members on the government side to actually explain their rationale and their thinking around this bill, around many of the bills. Therefore, we are going to keep standing up.

One of the reasons why we continue to debate Bill 2 and to propose amendments to that bill is because we believe, on this side of the House, that this is not what Albertans voted for. Now, we know that the members on the other side continually stand up and say that they won the election and they won 63 seats in the election. That is accurate, of course. But not everything that was part of their platform was fully endorsed by Albertans. I think we're going to find that those will peter out as this government's term continues on.

With respect to what's being proposed in Bill 2 and with respect to overtime, that was certainly not part of what was put forward by the government as part of their mandate. No. In fact, I see that the hon. minister of labour is nodding his head. However, with respect to overtime, unfortunately, I've got, actually, a tweet here from the Premier from April 3, 2019, in which he actually says, if I may:

The latest NDP lie is a ridiculous claim that the UCP is going to somehow jeopardize or weaken overtime pay for Alberta workers.

That is complete rubbish. Of course we will continue with the legal obligation for overtime. Period. That's not up for debate.

That was during the election campaign. That was the Premier standing up and saying that, no, overtime pay was not going to be messed with, was not going to be altered by the government.

Then we see, a couple of weeks into their legislative session, that, yes, in fact, they are bringing forward legislation to change overtime. At the very least I think the minister of labour and I can agree that there is some room for dispute, given the Premier's comments. It is not straightforward to say that it was very clear to all workers in Alberta that their overtime pay would be reduced. Certainly, the Premier gave some assurances during the campaign that that would not take place, yet here we are.

On that matter, we do believe it is our obligation as the Official Opposition to stand up on behalf of our constituents, particularly those workers who were affected by the drop in oil prices. For particularly the oil and gas workers to then be told that their overtime pay is also going to be cut: I'm quite shocked by that. I think it is our obligation to stand up in this House and speak to that because I don't believe that voters voted to have their pay cut. That's not what they agreed to. So we will stand up and continue to debate that.

My colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West did an excellent job talking about how we should be considering what other provinces do in the country. One of the things I've mentioned before in this House; I'll continue to mention it: as just a citizen watching what was going on and somebody who practises in labour and employment, I saw the previous government, the NDP government, do a lot of work just to bring our labour and employment code up to the national standards. A lot of the changes that were made were not going above and beyond what was happening in other provinces. It was simply time in this province to have the legislation brought up to the standards that workers all across this country get to enjoy. That's significant.

There was significant work that was done around compassionate leave and sick leave and all those kinds of things, but some of those included bringing up our overtime pay, our banked overtime pay requirements, to just simply match what other provinces were doing. The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West went through and talked about what happened in other provinces. You know, I'll list them, the other provinces that provide overtime banked pay at time and a half. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Labrador, Yukon, Northwest Territories, Nunavut all do that. They all provide overtime pay at time and a half, not at straight time.

3:30

It's one thing, I think, for a government to say: we've got a different agenda; we're going to implement a different ideology, a different principle. Of course, that's what happens when you have a change in government. However, what is being proposed by the government right now is actually just regressive. It's actually moving us backwards in time to a time when Alberta was the black sheep of the legislative labour and employment codes. We were so far behind on so many things. I don't see how this government sees that it serves Alberta workers to continue to do that again.

I think there were a lot of oil and gas workers, construction workers – a lot of those people live in my riding – that were very concerned about this. I heard that at the doors. They couldn't actually believe that a government that claimed that their platform is based on, you know, economy, jobs, pipeline would actually cut the pay of those workers, who had worked so hard and had fought to maintain their employment in many situations over the last four years, during the recession, with the drop in oil prices. Now they're being hurt and punished. I don't think that that was what they were expecting. They couldn't believe that this government was doing it. We continue to not believe that they're doing it, and that's why we're here today.

The same is true with respect to the crossjurisdictional comparison of what's happened with the general holiday pay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West did a great job talking about, again, what we're talking about doing here, maintaining Alberta at the same level as other provinces in this country. Again, I believe that this approach of rolling back general holiday pay eligibility for people who do not work on that day is really just going to simply hurt workers.

The government has made a lot of promises as to how they're going to bring back jobs in this province. They're gambling on a lot of big things like the 4.5 billion dollar tax cut to corporations, and they're gambling on some little things. At the end of the day, those little things to them, cutting general holiday pay, are actually making an impact on average families. I simply don't know why in this province, when it comes to basic protections for employees and for workers, we want to be the furthest behind. When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods was the minister of labour, what she was doing was not taking Alberta so far ahead of all the other provinces that it was outrageous for employers. I worked on behalf of employers, and certainly a lot of them did take some time to adjust to the new changes, but it was not going to be so hurtful to them to simply maintain what was going on across the country. It was maintaining a minimum national standard, and it was simply Alberta catching up – catching up – with what was going on across this country.

Now, this government seems dead set on rolling back on the pockets, on the backs of average workers. I think that in this House we've already gone through the numbers about the impact that this has on the average worker: oil and gas workers, $350 a week; construction workers, $200 a week. I know that the government and the minister of labour will speak about how these are averaging agreements that the employees enter into. But let's be honest. We sit here and we talk a lot about how tough it has been economically in this province since the drop in oil prices. Those employees are not in a great bargaining position to talk about what they want and don't want in those averaging agreements.

If they've got a job, a steady job, with an employer or are starting a new job with an employer who says, "I want to enter into an agreement," there's not a lot of bargaining power. It's not accurate or fair to describe the relationship between employees and employers when it comes to negotiating these agreements as balanced; it's not. For any employee who's being approached by an employer saying, "I want to enter into a flexible averaging agreement; you don't have to do it, but, you know, I'm sure there'll be an employee who would," they're going to do it. I don't think it's a fair assessment of the situation to simply say, "Well, employees, it's an agreement; it's a mutual agreement between the parties," because, really, as is often the case, the bargaining power is off, particularly at a time when workers are feeling most vulnerable.

In that situation I think we have to be honest about what we're doing here, which is that we're really rolling back the employment and labour standards in this province to be, again, the weakest across the country. I simply don't know and I don't think that it's going to have the impact that this government or the minister of labour would suggest it's going to have on the economy, on building jobs. This, to me, seems like a petty way to put a little bit more money back into employers' pockets, taking it away from workers. I simply don't think that that's something we should be proud of in this province, to say that we've got the weakest labour and employment standards for workers. I'm not proud of that.

I think we want to at least meet the national standard, and then can't we see if we can be even better? Employees, workers, once again, are Albertans. They are the people who we want to be spending their money in the economy, investing. They've got mortgages to pay; they've got rent to pay. It benefits us all as well. There seems to be a focus from this government of focusing on making sure there's money in the pockets of employers and corporations to invest, but we also need to make sure that there's money in the pockets of workers and employees so that they can spend that money, so that they can pay their mortgages, so that they can take their kids on vacation, so that they can buy their kids the things they need, basic supplies often.

I do believe that if we're not going to be amending the name of the bill to the pick-your-pockets bill, I think what's being proposed in amendment A2 is a reasonable amendment, and I hope that the members will support that. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Any other members looking to speak? I see the hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to this item. I just want to correct a couple of issues raised by the other side. I've spoken twice already to this, so I will be short and brief. You know, just a couple of items. Again, you know, thank you to all hon. members.

As indicated in my previous remarks, we will probably agree to disagree on this because we have a very different view of what the impacts will be, but the question being asked by the other side in terms of the changes is: why are we doing this? This is about creating jobs. This is what we ran on, and this is what we put in our platform. In particular, I'd like to comment. You know, one of the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud: this wasn't in your platform. I would like to refer you to page 21 of the platform in terms of both banked overtime and general holidays. This was very clearly in our platform, that we would reverse the change in 2018 that eliminated the option for workers and employers to develop a straight-time banked hours arrangement, and this has no impact on overtime pay.

This is exactly what we're doing. The legislative change that we're making in Bill 2 is going back to banked overtime. It does not impact payment of overtime. If individuals are going to get paid overtime, it will still be done at time and a half. I just want to point out to the hon. member across the way that we did run on this and, in fact, got elected on this item.

The other point I'd like to make is on general holidays, changing the rules about general holidays. We ran on this. Again, it's clearly stated on page 21 as part of Bill 2:

- Return to a regular/irregular workday distinction for calculating holiday pay
- Return to a holiday pay qualifying period of 30 ... days in the 12 months preceding a general holiday.

The reason for actually making these changes, Mr. Chair, is about creating jobs. We heard from employers that the increase in the minimum wage and the change to general holiday rules resulted, particularly in the restaurant industry but in other industries as well, in these higher costs, resulting in reduction of hours and fewer staff. So this is about creating jobs. Now, the members opposite don't believe that, but they also don't believe that their increase in the minimum wage impacted jobs in spite of the evidence. That is what we're doing here. We're addressing an issue, created by the previous government policies, to get Albertans back to work, and that's what we're doing here with Bill 2.

The last item I just want to point out – and I find it interesting. There are arguments on the other side, you know, to look at general holiday and banked overtime and that we are different than everybody else – right? – and that we shouldn't be doing that. Well, we're doing that to actually provide more flexibility, Mr. Chair, and to create jobs. But I note that that argument wasn't part of their lexicon when they raced to a $15-an-hour minimum wage in this country, the highest in this country and still far above the average in this country. They didn't actually talk about what the average is when they actually made those changes.

Again, as I indicated previously, you know, these changes are about getting Albertans back to work and providing greater flexibility. It is about signalling that we're open for business, Mr. Chair. That's why I urge everyone to vote against this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there others? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore standing to speak.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate it. I know there has been a flood of members from the government caucus side jumping up to try to speak, but you managed to somehow pick me out. I'm very appreciative of that opportunity to get my two cents in, I guess, as they say.

An Hon. Member: He's got a keen eye.

Mr. Nielsen: It's a very keen eye, yes, and I'm appreciative of that.

Obviously, we're speaking to Bill 2 right now and, more directly, to the amendment to the bill to change the title. What we're looking at here is that we're talking about changes to labour standards, to the way things are done, and it really isn't about making Alberta open for business. That would indicate to me that we're trying to force something here. We're trying to just make it happen.

3:40

You know, that isn't always necessarily the case. I know, in speaking to another bill previously, that in my experience playing basketball over the years at the college level and whatnot, every time a player wants to force a play, it usually doesn't end up working out so well. You end up throwing the ball away to the other team and probably letting them score.

Obviously, the reason I think we should be changing the name of the bill, hence the amendment that was brought forward, is because of some of the changes that are occurring. First, I'd like to talk a little bit about the youth minimum wage here that's coming in, where we're going to have somebody who because of their age is now going to get paid $2 an hour less, all under the guise of creating more jobs. The funny thing is that the more students that I get a chance to speak to – of course, I have 26 schools in Edmonton-Decore. The kids have certainly figured this out.

I did have a chance to speak with some of my employers. As I've said before, if you have five people on a shift at a time and two or even three of them happen to be 17 years old, because you pay them each $2 an hour less does not mean you magically need a sixth person on that shift to do the job. You still only require the five people on shift. Employers know this. I've heard them say: just because I'm going to pay them a few dollars less isn't going to prompt me to go hire another person that I know I don't need to get the job done during that period of time.

In my opinion, this is targeting youth that did not get to vote for you in the election. They weren't able to vote. Maybe you should bring forward some legislation around letting the youth vote. Let's see what happens then.

I think what this also is creating is some red tape, Mr. Chair. I think we're going to create a whole lot of extra work now for the associate minister of red tape, trying to find other things to eliminate. There has been this rush of red tape being brought forward here by the government. We need to start eliminating it to balance it because, you know, we committed to eliminating red tape by one-third, a one in, one out kind of thing. There have been a whole lot of one-ins, but I'm concerned about the one-outs that will be coming up trying to catch up to some of this.

For employers to have to try to keep track of what birthday that youth worker has at the time or if they are in school, quite frankly, I think this potentially sets up kids to start actually making a choice of, "Well, I could be making more money if I – I don't know – say that I'm not in school" or, even worse, maybe just outright drop out. Because of family needs, they need to try to help support their families. We have cultures here in Canada, Mr. Chair, where family is absolutely everything. Youngsters go out – bless their hearts – and help the family, and here we are, you know, taking away their means to be able to do that effectively. Of course, we do have students that have found that conditions at home just aren't the best and end up moving out. Sometimes it's mostly our LGBTQ2S-plus youth that move out. This will very disproportionately hurt them in terms of being able to allow them to be able to pay their bills.

I think that with this youth minimum wage, which, quite frankly, doesn't exist pretty much anywhere – they've all determined that it's a bad idea – why we want to force the play here to try to think, "Oh, well, we'll just put this in, and we'll just make it work" – it's not going to happen. We're going to be back in here, we're going to be undoing this, and we'll have created a whole bunch of problems and red tape that we didn't need to create.

Obviously, I think we need to change the name of the bill because now we're also talking about things around holiday pay. You know, Mr. Chair, in my experience in the labour world, I have seen unionized employers play games around scheduling. You start setting up all kinds of criteria around: well, if you've only worked this before and this after, then you might get paid.

I'm telling you that there will be bad actors out there that will take advantage of this. I've even seen this in my very own workplace where I used to work. I remember the language, Mr. Chair, where if an employee worked 13 consecutive weeks at full-time hours, a full-time position was deemed to have existed, but it was funny that every time it was, "Well, I'm sorry; we had this person away sick" or, "I'm sorry; this person was away on leave" or, "Oh, wait. Well, no. This person was on disability, so that didn't quite count there." Of course, the very simplest one that they used to do, Madam Chair, was cut their hours in that 13th week so that they just didn't quite make it to the finish line, and then they'd say: "Well, see? There's no full-time position here."

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

What this is inadvertently going to start to create, Madam Chair, is conditions where the bad actors that will take advantage of this end up putting pressure on the good employers, the ones that are really trying hard to do it right, to create good work environments, because they have to somehow figure out how to compete with these bad actors. It starts to tempt them, possibly, to start going down this route just simply to compete.

I don't think that's quite the message that we want to be sending to our employers here in Alberta, who are working so very hard and so very diligently to create good working environments, to pay their workers fairly, to give them some benefits so that they, you know, reduce the amount of turnover because you have employees that are sticking around. I've always said that Costco is a fantastic example of that; their turnover rate of staff is less than 2 per cent. I mean, that is just incredibly, incredibly low. But when you look at it, they're paying them decently, they're getting benefits, they've got good working conditions. Surprise, surprise: they don't have much employee turnaround because they're sticking around.

You know, I've probably said this with a lot of others things: history can teach us a lot. What I've seen is that when you start doing these kinds of changes, you get a race to the bottom. I don't understand why we're constantly trying to think that racing to the bottom is the best solution. You want to race to the top. You want everybody to flourish because when everybody is prosperous, they're spending their money in the local economy.

I've always said that a very significant portion of the residents of Edmonton-Decore aren't squirreling their money away in a Cayman Islands account to go invest one day in something. They spend it in the local economy not only on the things that they need but also on the things that they want. Maybe they want to buy that big-screen TV. Maybe they want to upgrade that vehicle. Maybe they want to go on that nice vacation that one year and book it through one of their local travel agents. Maybe they just don't feel like cooking dinner for the family this evening, so they head out to the local restaurant, and rather than just going somewhere that's the cheapest that they could possibly afford, sometimes they'll even go to the really nice restaurant because they want to treat themselves and have a really nice night out with the family. Picking their pockets is just not the way to do that, and you're potentially setting that up with the rules around the paid holidays.

That segues me right into the overtime issue here. What this, again, is setting up is that employers who are bad actors will start imposing these types of conditions on their employees: "You have to bank your overtime hours at straight time if you want to work here. You don't want that? Well, that's okay. I'm sure you can find a job down the street, maybe, somewhere that might do that." Again, what we've seen is that it'll start to create the conditions which may pressure the good employers, in order to compete, to start having to bring in these same sorts of things, okay?

Again, I've seen these situations where, you know, they bank their overtime even at time and a half, and then hopefully they get to take the time off when it's mutually agreeable. But that mutually agreeable time never seems to happen. It's always: "Well, it's busy right now" or "So-and-so has been hurt and is off" or "Well, somebody is on vacation this week, so we just can't let you go. Tell you what. If you really want, we can pay out that money, but we'll pay it out at straight time."

3:50

The bottom line is that when you work overtime, the reward for working overtime is time and a half. That's the reward for taking your time away from your family, from your friends, or like I say, just plain old free time. This, again, is another component that's going to create a race to the bottom, but it's not going to make Alberta open for business.

You know, I can't help but circle back around here a little bit with the title itself, which is probably why we think on this side that there needs to be a change. It suggests that Alberta was closed for business to begin with. I know that we heard even just today in question period some interesting stats about all this money that fled.

You know, I can't help but look back at Seven Generations Energy getting ready to put in $1.2 billion in a processing facility and probably moving their head office here. I know that the Member for Edmonton-West Henday, both of us, are very familiar with that company and what they do. Amazon is investing $120 million in a warehouse here in the province, and CN Rail is looking to strengthen and expand its network to the tune of $370 million. I have a feeling that companies don't plan to invest $370 million if they think that Alberta is closed for business. They think it's already open and that things are moving, and they want to be a part of it and capture some of that. Pembina petrochemical plant: $4.5 billion investment. I'm sure that companies around here don't invest that kind of change thinking that the province is closed for business. Inter Pipeline: 2.1 billion. I mean, just in that short list, Madam Chair, there's $8.2 billion worth of investment in the province. That would suggest to me that it was never closed to begin with.

I think we need to appropriately change this name. I guess that, at the end of the day, like I said, Madam Chair, history teaches us a lot. We've seen that the race to the bottom doesn't work. Disadvantaging our youth simply because of their age is not a way to promote open business because youth spend their money in the economy, too. Trying to claim that it's going to create jobs – as I said, five people on shift: just because you pay two or three of them less, heck, if you pay all five of them less, it doesn't magically create a sixth position when only five are needed to get the job done.

Again, I'm also concerned about the red tape that's being created throughout this bill. I'm a little concerned that the associate minister of red tape is going to feel pressured and rushed to need to start catching up. I mean, I was grateful to finally see the list of 17 that have been promoted. I've already heard of a whole bunch of others that have been added. I haven't seen those come out yet. My hopes are that those will get posted, too, but maybe again it could be because the minister is very rushed and pressed to get things done here to catch up.

As I said, Madam Chair, I was thankful that I got a chance to speak here. I know that there's been a rush from the government members' side to get up and speak to this bill. Thankfully, I managed to get my two cents in. I'm hoping that members throughout this House will accept this amendment for what it is because that's what we're doing. We are changing the labour relations laws and how they work and providing regulations for that. That does not indicate that it makes Alberta open for business; it makes labour law changes.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise today and speak to this amendment put forward by the Member for Lethbridge-West, which I'm very happy to stand in support of. Of course, the piece of legislation that we have before us in Bill 2, titled An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, is very concerning to me. For one, I think that the last speaker, my colleague from Edmonton-Decore, put it quite well in the fact that Alberta was never closed for business.

Of course, over the last four or five years, even before the NDP was elected in 2015, we saw a recession hit our province and the price of oil fall by 50 per cent in some cases, so that put a lot of strain on local businesses. People, workers in our province had less spending power, which meant that less money was being spent. People were putting it away where they could to ensure that if they found themselves looking for work over the next four years of the recession, they would be able to pay as good as they could pay for the things that were important to them.

You know, we've heard a few good names that I would support over An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. We saw the pick-your-pockets bill. I think An Act to Weaken Workers' Rights in Alberta would also have been a better name and even maybe, to the point, Make Alberta Open for Exploitation because, really, that's what we're seeing here.

When we were elected, we were elected on a platform of raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour, and we were elected on strengthening labour and employment standards. Here we are four years later with a government who's looking for any excuse to take away the rights of workers in our province. Once again I would ask this government – they're very concerned for large multinational corporations, not so concerned about the workers who make their living here, who keep their taxes in the province. That's very concerning for me.

Just to touch on the $15 minimum wage piece once more here, you know, I raised the story of my own family and my own living situation. My mother was 14 years old when I was born, and she made the decision to stay in school, which this government is now actually discouraging people like her from doing. This government is telling people like my mother that if they are to have a child under the age of 18, they can actually drop out of school and get a raise. That's very concerning for me, considering that she finished high school without missing a beat. She was lucky enough to be able to get a student loan and go off to university without missing a beat.

This government is saying: "Ah, don't worry about postsecondary. You know, we'll give you a raise if you just drop out when you're 15, 16 years old." That's very concerning for me, especially when we look at high school completion rates and the responsibility of the Minister of Education and the minister of postsecondary education in some cases. It's their responsibility to encourage people to continue their studies, yet here we are with a bill in front of us that actually weakens their ability to do so. That's very concerning for me.

Now, when we look at the name, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business – again, I mean, we've seen the direction of this government when they're giving away $4.5 billion of hard-earned taxpayer dollars to large multinational corporations, and I wonder what the conversations were like when they made these decisions.

When we look at programs that the NDP had brought in like subsidized child care and tax credits for local businesses, which had very strong criteria about how the money can be spent, what it's invested in, and in some instances the type of people that are being hired, there was a 5 per cent tax credit labour piece within one of our bills that we brought forward, where it would actually offer a 5 per cent, I believe, higher tax credit if you were to hire somebody that had a disability or from other minority sectors. I think that's an important piece that we need to look at when we talk about the intersectionality of things.

What we have here is a government that's just willing to give all of this money away, with really little research that shows that this is the best way to actually invest taxpayer dollars to get a good return on investment, yet here we are. I would be very interested to see how those conversations came about because I doubt that they really had deep consultations with the companies that are actually benefiting from these tax credits that we brought forward. It sounds like we're going to see those tax credits disappear, which is very concerning for many of the companies and workers of those companies that were able to receive employment and create employment because of those tax credits.

Now, we continue to hear the minister of labour talk about this legislation not affecting overtime pay, but I really beg to differ, Madam Chair. I'm very concerned. Once again, I shared my own story about working for a company, one of those bad actors – of course, maybe it was an outlier – a corporation that was willing to really hold not only overtime pay but general holiday pay, really hold it hostage above my head. We've heard several stories from members on this side where corporations and constituents of theirs came and told them about corporations that were doing this, you know, changing the rules mid-game to take away their holiday pay, changing the rules around overtime pay as well.

4:00

I worked at a corporation, and I would work my, you know, eight hours a day or 44 hours a week depending on how they were feeling, and they would come to me and they would say, "Thank you for working overtime. We'll give you a day off to cover that time that you just worked," where it would have been considered straight-time banked overtime, which is what this minister is proposing.

I'm very concerned with that because if I'm working overtime, I should be fairly compensated for that. This minister is saying: "Well, you're not losing any money. You're just not getting the same amount of time off. We're taking away the amount of time off you're getting." But that is compensation, Madam Chair. You are taking away the amount of time I'm getting for working above and beyond what my regular scheduled routine would have been. The minister keeps dancing around this point. I'm very concerned because it's really not doing justice to the point. If they are moving these pieces of legislation forward, then they should be proud to stand up and say: "Yes. You know, we think it's too burdensome for businesses. We're taking away overtime compensation." That is what is happening in this bill. Once again, this isn't about opening Alberta for business. That has always been the case. Once again, the Member for Edmonton-Decore shared some very important investments that have been made over the last three years or are being made currently without these changes that are being proposed by this government.

Now, I really want to know why this Premier and this labour minister are so intent on putting Alberta at the back of the pack when it comes to labour and employment standards across Canada. We saw the discussions about us becoming an outlier when we talked about general holiday pay and even the minimum wage piece as well, moving towards lowering the minimum wage for youth, very concerning, and even further about lowering the minimum wage for people that are servers. I mean, there are people in small towns who are compensated quite differently than, say, somebody that works in downtown Edmonton or on Whyte Avenue on a Saturday night. Yes, they often will be fairly compensated above and beyond what their regular minimum wage is. But somebody working in Vegreville or somebody working in a smaller municipality is not going to get the same amount of tip out that somebody in downtown Edmonton makes. Now we are taking money out of the pockets of regular workers and trying to say that it will create more jobs, which truly has not been laid out very well by this government. I don't tend to believe their talking points on that piece.

Once again, there were many opportunities to look at things like subsidized child care, grants, tax credits, all much better than just handing away our money without any kind of stipulation about whether that money stays here or not.

You know, I think this government should go back to the drawing board. I don't think An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business makes sense for this piece of legislation at all. We continue to have no PST. Our province has no payroll taxes. We have wonderful public health care, something that American corporations, of course, do not have the opportunity to offer their workers.

When we look at the direction of this government in terms of looking at renewable investments, well, we surely aren't open for business for renewable companies and for renewable investments. We see this government doing a drastic one-eighty in their willingness to support renewable energy in our province and renewable business owners. It's surely not open for business when we talk about artificial intelligence. Of course, the University of Alberta is world renowned for their artificial intelligence, but once again we have a government that's playing, you know, fast and loose – I messed that term up. Anyway, they're really not willing to come forward with any details about what their plans are for artificial intelligence investments in the future, so that's also very concerning. We actually have a government that is closing doors on certain industries, industries that are going to lead us into the next generation and going back to the same old ways. Unfortunately, Madam Chair, the world is changing, whether this government likes it or not. The things, the products, and the industries that will be invested in are going to change whether this government likes it or not, and I think that they should start paying attention to those trends before we get disrupted out of business.

Madam Chair, once again, I am supporting this amendment to change the name of this legislation. I think it's much better suited to talk about the fact that we're changing employment standards and labour relations statutes, makes much more sense than what the government has put forward for the name of this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to this amendment to the name of Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. While I was going through the act, the only time in this entire act that the word "business" comes up is only in its name. I guess that goes to show as well that it has nothing to do with what this name suggests, an act to open businesses. Rather, we know that it's changing workplaces, the rules and regulations around workplaces. It changes job-protected leaves, it changes compassionate care leaves, and it changes the minimum wage for youth and all those things that are contained in the Employment Standards Code or the Labour Relations Code. The amendment proposed by my colleague essentially names the bill exactly what it does, employment standards and labour relations statutes amendment act, 2019. That's exactly what this piece of legislation is doing.

While every one of us was in our constituency over the weekend, I had the opportunity to meet many of my constituents. When they ask about the session, government's legislative agenda, a few bills come up. Bill 2 and the other one dealing with credentials certainly come up time and again. When I was talking to them, I think that they were concerned because many in my riding do work in minimum wage jobs. Actually, my riding consists of three neighbourhoods, which are among those neighbourhoods that have lower than average median income in Calgary.

For instance, the individual median income for 15-year-olds and older is $43,251 to be exact. In Saddle Ridge that median income is $30,493, so there's a huge income gap there. You can also say that clearly people in these neighbourhoods, those 15 years and older, are not working in the highest paying jobs. That's the reason why their income is well, well below, almost 33 per cent below, the average compared to $43,000 for Calgary and $30,000 for the neighbourhood. Another concerning thing is that in these neighbourhoods 30 per cent of the people are using more than 30 per cent of their income just on their shelter. Similarly in Taradale, that median income is even lower. It's $28,800 for those who are working, 15 years and up. Again, compared to Calgary's average, it's a huge difference. On average they are making $17,000 less than what everybody else makes in Calgary. In Martindale it's also lower, $29,500, compared to $43,000 for Calgary.

4:10

The reason I am giving these numbers is that clearly this data shows that people, my constituents, are in jobs that are not as high paying, and they are already making less than what the average person 15 years and older makes in Calgary. This bill is particularly concerning to my constituents and to all those who are working on minimum wage, who are working at low-paying jobs, and who often work more than one job or who often work overtime to make ends meet. Clearly, this bill is attacking the livelihoods of those who are living in my riding and working in those low-paying jobs, minimum wage jobs and all those across this province who are working at low-paying and minimum wage jobs. Clearly, this act has nothing to do with what it's suggesting, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. It is, clearly, changing the rules and regulations. It's attacking the rights and privileges of those who are in minimum wage jobs, and it tinkers with the Employment Standards Code and the Labour Relations Code.

That's why this amendment is important. It exactly names what this bill is doing. But the government just wants us to believe that by naming their pieces of legislation something "business," somehow jobs will be created. But what we are seeing, practically, in our province: the latest reports were that 3,000 jobs were lost in May alone. There were many other companies like Repsol and Nexen who are also laying off workers, so it's not opening Alberta for business. Their policy, their legislative agenda, is not in the right direction. Rather, it's just attacking workers' rights based on their ideological belief that trickle-down economics, the supply-side economics, that never worked before in Canada, U.S., and United Kingdom, somehow this time will yield some different results and magically create the jobs they promised during the campaign.

Also, earlier my colleague was talking about how they're saying it's about job creation. I completely fail to understand how cutting the youth wage by $2 per hour will create more jobs. As I have said before here, businesses only employ the labour that they need. If you need two people and if you somehow cut wages by $2, you won't have another person working there; you will only employ as many people as you need. There is no link between these claims that somehow cutting youth wages will impact the youth unemployment, which is somewhere at 21 per cent, which certainly is concerning. If we really want to create youth employment, we need to start a program that can help us create that.

For instance, when we became government, we brought back the STEP program that was cut by the previous Conservative government. There is clear evidence that by investing around $10 million in that program, there were many youth across this province who benefited from that program, and there was youth employment created in the economy. But cutting their wages will not create any employment, and clearly we are seeing the job numbers from the private sector forecasters that actually Alberta is losing jobs. That should serve as a caution for this government that their policies are not helping us create more jobs. Their policies are not helping us attract businesses. Their tax breaks are not helping us with anything.

Before Albertans were told that somehow they were in a fiscal mess, and we didn't get them the number right. But their year-end report for 2018-19 clearly shows that our path to balance was intact, our economy was improving, and there was considerable, I guess, progress made under our watch. But they are taking this opportunity, they are taking this made-up fiscal story to attack workers' rights, to attack the labour standards and things that everywhere else in Canada Canadians enjoy. The changes we made were nothing so radical. They were only there to help us catch up with the rest of the jurisdictions in Canada. There are other jurisdictions that do pay overtime by 1.5. Alberta will be the only province that will pay it in straight time if we pass this piece of legislation. That's just taking us backward. We shouldn't be supporting, we will not be supporting, and I urge all members to not support this piece of legislation.

To bring it back to the amendment, I will ask all members of this House. Since this piece of legislation is changing things in employment standards, it's making changes to labour relations, this amendment properly captures the essence of changes contained in this legislation, and all members should be supporting this amendment.

A couple of other things that I also want to highlight. As I said earlier, the only time the word “business” appears in this bill is in its name. There’s nowhere else, as far as I can tell, that the word “business” is even mentioned. The reason for that is that it’s primarily dealing with workers’ rights. It’s picking their pockets, it’s taking money from youth, and it’s taking the rights that in every other jurisdiction Canadians enjoy. It’s reversing the changes that we made to catch up to other jurisdictions in Canada.

So the name given by the government is not the appropriate name for it. Instead, what we are suggesting is very common sense. It will clearly tell what this piece of legislation is doing, and it will help Albertans understand what this piece of legislation is about. Again, it’s about making changes to employment standards. It’s, again, making changes to the Labour Relations Code. It’s changing their banked overtime. It’s changing the criteria around banked overtime. It’s changing the youth minimum wage and all those things that are contained in the pieces of legislation that I mentioned.

Alberta was never closed for business, and this bill in no way, shape, or manner is helping us attract investment, create more jobs, or build pipelines that this government was promising. This amendment will clearly reflect what this piece of legislation is doing, so I urge all my colleagues to support this amendment.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of the amendment, a very reasonable amendment, in my view, that simply proposes that the name of the bill be drained of its political statements and simply reflect the reality that it is amending certain portions of existing statutes, employment standards and the labour code. Certainly, we proposed this amendment because, you know, the term “misnomer” means misnamed. And we certainly believe that these proposals within these amendments to employment standards and the labour code will not in fact accomplish the stated goal, which is why we have proposed this amendment, but instead, in many cases, work against this notion of being open for business, a term that has been borrowed, I suppose, copied and pasted from our friends in Ontario.

4:20

We’re seeing how well rhetorical flourishes and other similar policies to what we’re seeing proposed in this province – it doesn’t matter what they’re named; open for business – they are rendering that particular government in Ontario deeply unpopular. Certainly, some of these approaches are being borrowed from the quote, unquote, open-for-business approach of Doug Ford and his various friends and family members that are running the government in Ontario, and family members of friends, and so on, and so forth. It seems that the trail of friends and insiders never ends in Ontario.

Anyway, you know, this government has already, despite their affection for renaming bills, in 2015, during the 29th Legislature, if you will, had great affection for renaming bills, whatever they were, while in opposition. Our view is that in this case we ought to revert to the standard convention in parliamentary democracies of simply calling something what it is. In this case we are making certain amendments to employment standards, in particular, and that’s probably where I will focus my comments, Madam Chair.

I think it’s reasonable to point out ways in which this act is not – in fact, it closes business depending on which businesses and which people’s business we are discussing. For example, if you are a person who works in a restaurant that is normally closed on Mondays, and many are – like, hairstylists and others oftentimes will close on Mondays and Tuesdays and kind of take the weekend then or, at least, Mondays as downtime for staff or owners or others. If one normally does not work Mondays, but Canada Day, for example, falls on a Monday, as it did yesterday, and the business chooses to be open, obviously, because there are more people in the streets, more people out and about – it’s a holiday for people so, obviously, they are going to be bringing their dollars to various eating and drinking establishments, as is conventional in Canada – what ends up happening, then, is that a person who is a server in an establishment such as that will not benefit from statutory pay for working that statutory holiday.

That makes things confusing oftentimes for people who have not worked so many Mondays in the last month. Those kinds of calculations which are sometimes quite difficult, particularly for young people – obviously, people do get paid the overtime if they normally work a Monday, but not if they don’t. Certainly, when it comes time to be open for the business of expanding consumer opportunities and ability to pay one’s bills, for people working in the service industry this act is not appropriately named. It doesn’t open up service industry people in such a situation as to be able to get ahead when they are working away at jobs like that.

Similarly, a proposed liquor server differential does nothing for people working in that industry to be able to get ahead. Certainly, there are some other provisions here – hourly workers in the oil and gas sector, for example, not being able to benefit from time and a half, being paid out on their banked overtime is certainly not something that is going to allow them to get ahead or potentially open their own business eventually, to have the capital to be able to do so through savings, which a lot of people do with their overtime pay, use it to further other initiatives that they might be undertaking, whether that’s fixing their own roof or starting their own business or meeting the needs of their families.

You know, this bill is a gift for certain people but not others. Certainly, in using that catchphrase, in Ontario we’re seeing that a year and a half on now or about a year on. It would be regrettable, indeed, if this government was going down that same road of sloganeering at the expense of ordinary, working-class people.

Other ways that this bill is not particularly open for business, so therefore it would be wise to rename it, is that a number of other things remain untouched; for example, the question of paid or unpaid internships, tips, mandatory fees for things like uniforms. Those are the kinds of things, when you talk to ordinary people about employment standards, that they’re really, actually, quite concerned about. And that’s where, if we wanted to actually take some action on fairness, there would’ve been some opportunities, I think, for this government to really engage with the service industry, if they wanted to actually put their mark on this and stand up for some of our lowest paid workers, minimum wage workers, who are often disadvantaged by these types of policies.

You know, I think what’s interesting here is the overall context of calling something open for business when you actually talk to people. I know that when I talk to small-business owners and medium-sized enterprises as well, certainly in southern Alberta, and when we talk to larger enterprises, we’re looking at large investments of private capital in Alberta. What do we see that actually makes us open for business, and what do we hear? Well, we hear things like investors of various kinds, from small and up to big, are looking for a highly educated population, which indeed Alberta has. We are still, as far as I know – I’d be happy to correct the record on this – the youngest and best educated population in Canada, or at least it was the case. I haven’t seen any policies in Ontario recently that would cause them to overtake us, but who knows if there are updated numbers on that matter. Employers and large investors look for a good health care system. It's a tremendous expense for those doing business south of the border when they have to cover those costs on their own. That's what makes Alberta open for business.

A well-functioning, integrated postsecondary education system that values both the research side, commercialization of intellectual property on the higher education side, as well as appropriate investments in skilled trades and playing to where the puck is going and not where it is: that's what makes Alberta open for business. So when we have a labour market development and training approach that turns a blind eye to emerging industries such as artificial intelligence, we have to wonder just how open for business we really are, Madam Chair.

Certainly, one of the things that one hears from large investors is the question of infrastructure. Given that so much of our foreign direct investment, in particular, is focused in heavy industry, investors are looking for jurisdictions where the bridges, the roads are in good shape and can handle some of the larger investments and transportation of heavy equipment and so on that define a large part of our economic activity here in Alberta. So, you know, simply taking a pass on investing in infrastructure because of some debt-aversion ideology that doesn't recognize that that's how you pay for capital investments doesn't make us open for business. That's, again, another way in which the government's approach and sort of desire to build a certain story or narrative is incorrect and off the mark given that they are now, with every available opportunity, engaging in a number of different stories around Alberta's relative debt position and the need to invest in infrastructure, tilling the soil and softening up the electorate for a large rethink on our infrastructure investments, which, I'm sure, will come as a great surprise to municipalities and others who were just starting to catch up on their infrastructure needs. Certainly, that is coming. Those are the sorts of things, Madam Chair, that make a jurisdiction open for business, if you will, on the business side.

4:30

Another point I want to make in discussing this bill as being quote, unquote, open for business is to look at what happened. It is reversing a number of changes that were made in Bill 17. The act itself was brought in in 2017 and came into force January 1, 2018, so let's have a look at what happened in 2018. Was Alberta all of a sudden closed for business and that necessitated some of the changes that we see in this bill? The answer is no.

If one is interested in an evidence-based analysis of what happened in the Alberta economy in 2018, if one is interested in looking at the facts of the economic record in 2018, we had the fastest growing economy in Canada at that point. We led the country in a number of different important indicators, including manufacturing, exports, some indicators of employment growth, and continued to lead the country in average weekly earnings and, I believe, in private capital investment per capita as well. Generally speaking, Alberta is far and away a leader this year. Even with the slowing of the economy in April and May, we still tend to lead the country in per capita business investment simply given, first of all, the size of our economy and the kinds of investments that the private sector is making in this province.

Certainly, the evidence doesn't show at all that the reasonable changes that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods brought in, the changes that indeed placed Alberta squarely within the mainstream of employment standards statutory guidance to employers – no doors were closed. In fact, in the context of these changes Alberta was a leader, an economic leader in the country, and 2018 was really when we saw the recovery that was built to last begin to take shape and actually have a material impact for ordinary people in this province.

If the changes that were focused on ordinary people and making life just that little bit better in terms of minimum wage standards, leaves, you know, holiday pay distinctions – those kinds of changes certainly reduced red tape as well for small employers. There's no question about that. If those changes were accompanied by relatively positive economic indicators across the board and didn't close anyone to business – in fact, the biggest drops in our economic activity came prior to this act coming into force, that is to say between about August 2014 and about January 2016, when we saw a precipitous slide in the price of oil, both of WTI and WCS, and then the recovery began in 2017. New employment standards and so on came into effect in 2018. The province continued to lead the country in a number of indicators.

If it wasn't this bill that closed us for business, then what is this bill for? It is to amend sections of the labour code and the employment standards by taking things away from ordinary people whose lives were made just that little bit better, just that little bit easier. Now we're just giving those gifts back to employers. Certainly, we are not open for business for all segments of Alberta's society and are, in fact, closing off opportunities for many people.

You know, one of the other things that makes us open for business, I believe, and is not in this act is that back when employment standards were reviewed in '07 and certainly in 2014, there were a number of submissions at that time – I was involved in some of this in my previous life – around people with disabilities and better integration into the workforce. One of the things that we did in 2018 was that we abolished the differential wage, or the minimum wage exemption, if you will, for people with disabilities. You know, again, if the minister and others in the government wanted to amend employment standards to beef some of that up, they had the opportunity to do so, to make sure that we had broadly inclusive workplaces, that we had appropriate work, and all of those kinds of things. Some of that could have been captured within the Employment Standards Code, for sure. I mean, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods is a superhero, in my view, on her reconsideration of employment standards and the labour code, but I'm sure that upon consultation there was probably more to do there around inclusive workplaces and so on.

What really alarmed me today was in learning that some of the redirection of inclusive postsecondary education funds would be redirected into trades or other training away from postsecondaries. Now, I'm going to double-check whether, in fact, that is the case. I certainly heard that today during I think it was a member's statement. You know, that would be unfortunate indeed because, actually, what makes us open for business is that we have opportunities for everyone. The slogan of the city of Lethbridge is opportunity for all, not opportunity for some people who have certain abilities and find themselves differently abled in other ways.

You know, certainly, there's work to be done there around inclusion because that's actually what makes us stronger. That's actually what makes the business climate in better shape in this province, to be broadly inclusive and to ensure that all work is valued by all people. So I think there was a missed opportunity there, and there may even be more to say on this matter if we are reprofiling funds out of inclusive postsecondary education into other trades or vocational initiatives. We wouldn't want to see instances where employment standards directors were finding ways to somehow circumvent the minimum wage requirements or other requirements for people with disabilities. That would be very alarming and certainly, I think, contrary to the intent of how this government and how this minister wants to proceed relative to people with disabilities. I believe them when they say that they want broadly inclusive workplaces in societies. I think we share those values on both sides of the House, and I certainly wouldn't want to see any backslide on that.

I think I have mostly covered here, Madam Chair, why I support this amendment. You know, this amendment is pretty common sense. It's pretty simple. Let's just call this bill what it is. You know, with the trajectory of the government of Doug Ford, I'm not sure anybody is going to want to name anything after any slogan that he's been using given how deeply unpopular he is and how he just can't seem to help himself in terms of hiring his buddies and his buddies' family members and using the government of Ontario in ways that are maybe not consistent with . . .

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

4:40

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I, too, am going to be supporting the amendment before us. Of course, I believe it to be a more strategic and clear name than An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business.

You know, you might say that, well, the NDP government, Edmonton-Mill Woods and the NDP government at the time, of course, named ours the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act in 2017. We did that particularly because the prior Employment Standards Code and the Labour Relations Code had not been significantly improved, updated for almost 30 years. There needed to be a massive communication effort for workers in this province that the kinds of things that were being done would make our employment standards and labour relations far more friendly to the people in those workplaces, and it was far more fair.

A number of important changes took place under the Employment Standards Code changes, namely minimum wage changes, which this government has chosen to roll back for young people. Leaves were also significantly improved after being far too long out of the mainstream with regard to changes to leaves across the country, leaving Alberta far less desirable from a perspective of a worker's point of view on their family lives in particular.

The other kinds of important changes under the Employment Standards Code changes that took place were with regard to rest periods and overtime, termination and temporary layoffs, and vacation pay deductions, general holiday and general holiday pay. Those were all under the Employment Standards Code changes for what we thought was a fair title for Bill 17, the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act, at the time. Madam Chair, that was something that was received well by workers across this province.

The other part of the work that we did was with regard to the Labour Relations Code changes. Again, you've heard where those hadn't changed for a significant period of time, leaving our workers out of step with the rest of the country.

You know, the government probably believes that An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business is not a bad title as well, but I can tell you that, as my colleague from Lethbridge-West was just talking about with regard to the annual report that was just tabled, I believe, on Friday of last week, business in Alberta, as reported in this annual report, was doing better – well, the amount of corporate income tax was $4.9 billion, Madam Chair, $1.4 billion more than 2017-18 and $320 million greater than budget. So if we just look at that, we can understand that businesses were doing better coming out of the recession, and they had posted greater corporate income tax revenue, greater profits, and then greater revenue to the government of Alberta. The forecast in that Budget 2018 was based on the corporate profits continuing to improve, and early in 2018-19 this was supported by elevated oil prices.

I was just taking a look back at the history provided on the back of this executive summary. I can tell you, Madam Chair, that the only two years in the last 10 that corporate income tax revenue was higher was when – I was just trying to identify the price of WTI and WCS in those years, and I can tell you that they were significant. I think it was '08. No. It was '13-14, '14-15. In '13-14 the oil price per WTI barrel on average was $99.05; call it a hundred dollars. In '14-15 it was $80.48; call it $81. A hundred dollars per WTI barrel on average in that fiscal year and the corporate income tax revenue was $5.488 billion. In '14-15, when it was $81 a barrel, it was $5.796 billion.

If we look at what this NDP government had to deal with in regard to the oil barrel, when we came in, it was $45 a barrel. The next year it was $48 a barrel, call it. The next year, in '17-18, it was $54 a barrel, call it. Then in the '18-19 year, which this annual report is based on, it was $63 a barrel. WCS basically followed that as well.

The previous PC government had the benefit of $100 a barrel in '13-14 and $81 a barrel in '14-15. We had significantly less at $45. I think our leader: that was her first question off the top earlier today. She was talking about the previous PC government: you couldn't balance the budget. You can see that where there are deficits in all of those years when the PC government was in power. You couldn't balance the budget at $100 a barrel: that's what she was talking about.

Madam Chair, I think the point that you can see that I'm making is that Alberta was open for business. The work we were doing was seeing more corporate income tax come in in 2018-19 than was anticipated in our budget, and that was because businesses were coming out of the recession. We had a corporate tax amount that was in the middle of all of the provinces, and we were not giving up corporate income tax, as this government wishes to do, which will cause a significant hole going forward in the revenues of this province. That's the first point I wanted to make.

I also wanted to say that the amendment that we're talking about here makes a great deal more sense in terms of what is actually being identified. Though we called ours something different when we were in power and had the opportunity to label it, we did it because there was a great need to communicate the fact that the workplaces were more family friendly as a result of introducing job-protected leaves and improving maternity leave and compassionate care standards for Albertans, something that hadn't been significantly updated in 30 years in this province, which is an abrogation of responsibility of a government, Madam Chair. To throw trial balloons up and then to quash them because portions of the business community or electorate don't like them is really not a way to govern and more of a way to go sideways for about 30 years than should have happened.

Madam Chair, the other thing that we need to recognize is that the work we were doing was to ensure that, as I said, the workplaces were more friendly for workers, but we were also looking to support low-wage working people in this province. If we could have kept that in place with the new government, that would have been a kind of a stellar thing in Alberta, where it is more expensive to live, we know, because the private sector, being so successful for so many years here, has driven up the hourly wages across our province. We were behind significantly in terms of vulnerable low-wage workers, who are more vulnerable to switches, changes in the economy: they would be the first out the door. What we did was put those low-wage workers on a step where they could use those monies to reinvest into the economy significantly and to improve the quality of life for them and their children. That has now been taken away.

4:50

I know the government says that, you know, this is a minimum in terms of what youth can be paid, but we know that people from the western Canada Restaurants Canada actually believe that paying young workers less will cause many more of them to get first-time job opportunities. I think what it'll actually cause – and this has been identified by many of my colleagues previously – is those young workers to be not exploited but hired over people with greater experience, who will be put out as a result of the $13 minimum wage being put forward by this government.

Madam Chair, we in Alberta hold many things to be truths about this province. One of them in particular is that we're self-starters. We've always kind of worked hard, we don't look for any kind of handouts from any people or any other individuals, and we care deeply about each other and family. I would submit that those same sorts of beliefs are held by every elected official in every province and territory in this country, so we're not that different. We're not that different from people on the east coast or west coast or, indeed, northern Canada. We all just want to make sure that we take care of our families, we support good communities, and we all live by the rule of law.

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, as I've said previously, Madam Chair, is too far balanced on the side of business interests only, and we're not just businesses. For sure, there are job creators who do a great yeoman service for this province. I can tell you, by looking at the annual report, that those same job creators paid more in corporate income tax last year than they did the year before and the year before, and the only times when they paid more corporate income tax is when oil was out of this world in terms of stratospheric prices for an oil barrel. Those times, as we all know, are not coming back any time soon.

The right thing to do is to continue to support the incredible improvements that were made in 2017. The right thing to do would be to support the amendment that's before us, that gives greater clarity to what this bill is actually about. The right thing to do is to continue to support young workers with a $15-an-hour minimum wage in this province. The right thing to do is to get back to balance in a way that is measured, a way that doesn't unduly harm or burden segments of our society; namely, low-wage workers, who are in jobs that can change at any moment as a result of the economy.

Madam Chair, we were going down that road, and I think that if you look at the executive summary or the full report, you can see that there were significant improvements made by the previous government in terms of the reductions in the deficit. We would have got to where we said we were going to get, which is balancing by 2023-2024, taking this measured approach and ensuring that we continue to support those at the lower end of society, fairly deal with those who are job creators, like every other province is dealing with them, and that we continue to invest in capital infrastructure and keep Albertans working. Now, that's what our Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act endeavoured to do.

The struggle I'm having is that this Bill 2, which we have from time to time called the pick-your-pockets bill, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, is speaking only to one segment of our population, and that's those in the corporate world. I guess it relies on the great work that the NDP government did in the past around the fair and family workplaces act, but it takes out too many of the improvements that for too long had been significantly not addressed by the previous PC governments in this province.

Madam Chair, I do think the amendment makes a great deal of sense. I believe that it's clear in An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, and I do think we need to make things clear for not only the electorate but Albertans in general. One of the things we can clear up is that corporate profits were going up and corporate income taxes were going up in this province far more than we had anticipated with Budget 2018 in the first place.

With that, Madam Chair, I'm going to sit down and give way. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for his thoughtful interventions on this matter. Of course, he has a long track record of working on behalf of poor and vulnerable people in the city of Calgary throughout his life, and I think he has a lot of valuable things to say in this debate.

I want to build on some of the comments that were made by my colleague and friend from Lethbridge-West, who was talking about the impact of a lot of these employment standards and Labour Relations Code changes on postsecondary education. Of course, this is all in the context of the amendment which we're speaking to, which suggests that we should stop talking about the measures in this bill making this province open for business but, in fact, be a little bit more forthcoming with the actual reality of what the bill does and just call it the Changes to the Employment Standards and Labour Relations Act.

One of the things that concerned me about the exchange that we had in question period, with relation to potential clawbacks of funding to the Alberta machine-learning institute and the refusal of the UCP members to commit to continuing to fund tech education programs in the advanced education sector, is the fact that in order for Alberta to be open for business, we need to be open to all businesses and that by removing government support in these nascent industries, we really threaten to make Alberta closed to businesses that haven't traditionally made their homes here. Certainly, in my time as Minister of Advanced Education we heard from a number of tech employers who were interested in coming to Alberta but refused to do so because they simply couldn't hire the skilled professionals to fill the jobs that would become available if those companies set up shop here. One of the reasons that our government undertook a $50 million, five-year initiative to expand the number of tech-related education seats in postsecondary institutions all across the province was to meet that demand.

It's interesting, Madam Chair, that even today, when I go to look at the Alberta provincial government Economic Dashboard website, though we have an unemployment rate of just under 7 per cent, there are more than 37,000 vacant jobs available today in the province of Alberta. A lot of those job vacancies exist because we don't have people with the education that's required to fill those jobs.

5:00

Now, my friend from Lethbridge-West in her comments remarked that Alberta has the youngest and most educated professional workforce in the country, and that's true, but we really have a tale of two provinces when it comes to advanced education. We have a significant number of people who move to Alberta because of the opportunities that exist here, and they are very highly educated and motivated to go to work in their sector of choice. They bring with them their skills and their education, and that's what inflates our education statistics here in the province of Alberta.

If a student, though, is born and raised and completes their education here in Alberta, they're less likely to move on to advanced education than students in any other part of the country except for Manitoba, Madam Chair, and I would humbly suggest that perhaps

Manitoba is not the measure of success when it comes to educating our workforce.

You know, if we were truly open for business, we would be looking to fill those job vacancies that tech employers are telling us they need to fill and continue to invest in the education of the workforce here in Alberta. I certainly hope that the members opposite take their own aspirations to heart and implement some concrete action that will actually increase Alberta's business activity in sectors that we haven't traditionally been focused on developing and spend that money developing a high-tech workforce.

With that, Madam Chair, I know that my friends here on this side have a number of things that we'd like to contribute to debate, but I think that at this time I would move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Schmidt: Would we rise and report progress, Madam Chair?

The Chair: Yes.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. Carried.

Government Motions

Voting Rights of Members

9. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly recognize the right of members to vote freely on all matters of conscience.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in support of Motion 9, which is before the Assembly. This should not be a motion of the slightest contention but, rather, a reaffirmation of an ancient parliamentary and democratic principle and one that is, nevertheless, important to restate, I believe, in our time and in this place.

Madam Deputy Speaker, when the members of the government caucus were sworn into this place, I quoted at length from one of the great statesmen of Parliament, the great Edmund Burke, who helped, really, to define the modern concept of parliamentary government, particularly the responsibility of parliamentarians to their constituents.

Edmund Burke, in one of the most famous political speeches of the modern era, said to his electors in Bristol:

Certainly... it ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion, high respect; their business, unremitted attention. It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfactions, to theirs [to his constituents]; and above all, ever, and in all cases, to prefer their interest to his own.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The only caveat that Burke placed on this duty in his famous speech was on matters of conscience, on which he said:

But his unbiassed opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living.

Mr. Speaker, this is the principle that we seek to reaffirm in Motion 9.

Now, I note with pleasure that the House earlier adopted Motion 11, which changed the standing orders to deliver on another of our platform commitments, which was to more narrowly define matters of confidence in order to allow more free votes on all matters in the Legislature, not just matters of conscience. Allow me, therefore, to quote at length from Alberta Strong & Free, the blueprint for government offered by members of the government caucus in the recent election, which was, I believe, the most detailed and comprehensive election platform ever published, with 375 specific commitments, over 117 pages, including a very robust section on democratic reform, including reform of the practices in this place.

Albertans want to know that their MLAs are truly representing them in the Legislature. While party cohesion is an important element of our Parliamentary democracy – especially on budget matters and election platform commitments – there is a widespread view that MLAs do not have enough flexibility to vote according to their best judgement, or to represent a clear local consensus.

The 1985 Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons...

It was known as the McGrath committee.

... noted that "strict party discipline had developed into an article of faith, despite the fact that very few votes actually involve true questions of confidence," and recommended that "only explicit motions of confidence, or matters central to the government's platform, be treated as such," with the expectation that this would lead to more free votes.

By the way, all parties were represented on this committee. My good friend the former federal and long-standing House leader of the New Democrats in the House of Commons, Bill Blaikie, was, I know, in strong concurrence with these recommendations.

While this proposed reform has never been fully [and formally] adopted in Canadian legislatures, it has become both the convention and [indeed] the law in [our Mother Parliament] Westminster... where a government must lose an explicit confidence motion to cause a potential election. This gives much greater latitude to MPs to vote freely, as not every vote is automatically considered a potential matter of confidence.

I carry on quoting from our platform:

A United Conservative Government would make it clear on the first day of the next legislative session that only explicit matters of confidence, or matters central to its platform, will be treated as confidence measures. This will give government MLAs much greater scope to vote freely. All matters of conscience will be subject to free votes, consistent with centuries of Parliamentary convention.

It was upon that basis that my friend the hon. Government House Leader introduced Motion 11, which passed through this place last month. Motion 11 constituted an amendment to the standing orders, now to read:

31.1 The confidence of the Assembly in the Government may be raised by means of a vote on

- (a) a motion explicitly worded to declare that the Assembly has, or has not, confidence in the Government,

- (b) a motion by the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, "That the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the Government,"
- (c) a motion for the passage of an Appropriation Bill as defined in Standing Order 64,
- (d) a motion for an address in reply to the Lieutenant Governor's speech, or
- (e) any other motion that the Government has expressly declared a question of confidence.

Mr. Speaker, that was, I'm pleased to say, adopted by this place.

5:10

I should also emphasize that this is not only now the convention but indeed the law in our Mother Parliament at Westminster. In fact, the U.K. House of Commons has enumerated criteria very similar to those I just cited as the basis for confidence votes in the Mother Parliament. The reason they have done so is because over time there was sort of a broadening of the confidence convention to include votes on virtually everything, which circumscribed the prerogative of members to apply their own judgment and to represent their constituents and in some cases perhaps to vote in accordance with their duly formed conscience.

I know that not only my New Democrat friend Bill Blaikie, not only the nonpartisan McGrath commission but also Preston Manning, the son of Alberta's longest ever serving Premier – Preston himself was a very close student of this place. I mean, he did his homework in a room off the side of the Premier's office all through school and university and followed the debates of this place very closely. Mr. Manning has long been a critic of this problem with misinterpretation of the confidence convention in the Canadian Legislatures and has long argued that if the House of Commons, for example, or other Legislatures were to more clearly circumscribe what constitutes a confidence convention, it would expand the ambit for regular parliamentarians to vote freely when the confidence of the House is not at question.

In adopting Standing Order 31.1, we have essentially adopted the relatively new convention of the Westminster Parliament in this respect, but we thought it was meritorious for this Assembly to focus specifically on the prerogative of members to vote freely on matters of conscience. That should apply broadly, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, even when it might touch on, for example, a major platform commitment, because there is nothing more important than conscience.

It is no coincidence that the first fundamental freedom enumerated in the Canadian 1960 Bill of Rights and the 1982 Charter of Rights is the freedom of conscience and religion, freedoms that are also enumerated in the universal declaration of human rights and, I believe, in every major human rights instrument around the world, freedoms that are deeply ingrained in our own tradition of parliamentary government.

I quoted earlier from Edmund Burke, and I could also quote, as I did on the day of our swearing in as MLAs, from William Pitt the Younger, one of the great Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and who was also head of government for the Canadian colonies at the end of the 18th and beginning of the 19th centuries. Pitt was a conservative reformer who was distressed with the abuse of the so-called rotten boroughs, which allowed for a growing disconnection between parliamentarians and their constituents. In response to this, in his great Reform Act Pitt said the following:

That beautiful frame of government, which has made us the envy and admiration of mankind, in which the people were entitled to hold so distinguished a share, was so far dwindled and departed from its original purity, as that the representatives ceased, in a great degree, to be connected with the people. It was the essence of the constitution, that the people had a share in the government by the means of representation; and its excellence and permanency was calculated to consist in this representation, having been designed to be equal, easy, practicable, and complete. When it ceased to be so; when the representative ceased to have connection with the constituent . . . there was a defect in the frame of representation, and it was not innovation, but recovery of constitution, to repair it.

That, again, I think, is the sentiment, the constitutional sentiment, which informed the government motion which adopted 31.1 of the standing orders.

Mr. Speaker, essentially what we are saying through this very modest motion is a recommitment of this place to not just the freedom but, I believe, the responsibility of legislators to vote in accordance with their conscience.

Let me go one step further and say, Mr. Speaker, that in acknowledging the freedom of conscience, we also touch on one of the principles which parliamentary government is dependent upon, and that is the principle of civility. I would in this context define civility as a basic posture of mutual respect, respect for the views and the most deeply held convictions of others. In a lack of civility, in an incivil political culture, which arguably is what we see in many parts of the democratic world today – where there is a lack of civility, there is a deep lack for the basic views or convictions of others, even the most deeply felt convictions. With that lack of mutual respect, with that lack of civility can come the tendency to demonize one's opponents, and that demonization I believe can coarsen public discourse to a point where working together across partisan, philosophical, ideological lines can become very difficult indeed. I believe this is what we see, tragically, in some political systems around the world. We may even see it in this place from time to time. I hope that does not become a habit.

I believe it is incumbent upon all of us – none of us are perfect in this respect, Mr. Speaker – as custodians of this parliamentary institution to be as mindful as we can about the need for that civility which is predicated on mutual respect for one another, for the views of those that we do not share.

Now, thank goodness that in our parliamentary democracy we resolve those differences peacefully through elections – we've just been through such an election – and then we come to this place and continue to debate those differences. But the whole premise of this institution is that the foundation of that never-ending organic or democratic debate is, at the core, some degree of mutual respect of civility so that we can clash, disagree with each other strongly, passionately, pointedly from time to time, but hopefully that clash does not descend into a kind of coarse and sometimes even vulgar demonization of one's political adversaries.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Really, at the heart of that mutual respect must lie the freedom of conscience, I submit, Madam Deputy Speaker, the responsibility to acknowledge that people come to their own most deeply held convictions on matters of moral conscience, for example, through introspection, through different lived experiences, operating from different first principles. I believe that freedom of conscience is particularly important in a pluralistic society such as ours.

I look around this Assembly, and I see colleagues of mine, either here or who may not be present but who are members, from many different faiths and philosophical traditions. I see a friend of mine, the Minister of Infrastructure, who grew up in India, who was raised in the Hindu tradition and is an observant practitioner of that ancient religious tradition. I see my friend the Member for Calgary-North, who was raised in Pakistan, who is devoted to his Islamic faith and who holds the values of that faith dearly. I see members of this place who have no explicit religious conviction but nevertheless come into this Assembly with their own first principles, with a kind of natural faith in how the world works, in what matters most in life. I see friends of the Christian tradition, of, I know, many different – the Buddhist tradition in this caucus as well.

5:20

All of them, each and every one of them, Madam Deputy Speaker, arrive with the responsibility, in this place, to exercise their very best judgment. Often that judgment is formed in part by their conscience, which is informed by their most deeply held values. I submit that at this sometimes tense and difficult time in our public discourse it is important for us to reinforce the mutual respect amongst one another for those convictions rooted in conscience.

Madam Speaker, I believe it's very important for us to reaffirm that principle, which we seek to do in this motion, and I commend it to all members of the Assembly.

I adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Caucus Affiliation

10. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly express its opposition to the practice of members changing their caucus affiliation unless that member is to sit as an independent or has resigned and been returned to the Assembly after being re-elected in a by-election under the new affiliation.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in support of Government Motion 10, as just quoted by my colleague the hon. Government House Leader. I quoted moments ago from the United Conservative platform with respect to democratic reform and free votes, confidence votes on matters of conscience. To clarify, I'm actually quoting from the backgrounders that were issued in support of the UCP platform. Believe it or not, the 117 pages. If we were to actually include all of the background materials, which include many of the more specific and detailed commitments, it would run in the hundreds of pages.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Now, that's a mandate.

Mr. Kenney: It's a very deep mandate.

I'd like to quote from some of the background material that was published in support of Alberta Strong & Free, our election platform. Under the headline Ban Floor Crossing it reads:

Albertans are frustrated with MLAs who disregard their electoral mandate by "crossing the floor," i.e. joining a political party other than the one for which they were elected. In particular, the notorious mass floor crossing of 2014 damaged the confidence that Albertans have in the value of their vote.

There is now a strong convention in the Westminster . . . Parliament that any MP seeking to join another party must first resign, and run under that new party's banner in a byelection.

A United Conservative Government would introduce a motion at the beginning of the next legislative session calling for this practice to be observed by any Member before they can cross the floor to join another party.

The United Conservative Caucus will not accept an MLA from another party seeking to join its caucus, unless that MLA first resigns and is elected under the UCP banner in a byelection.

Madam Speaker, I would allude back to some of the most important historic citations of the nature of parliament by Burke and Pitt in my earlier speech to reinforce the importance of the connection of trust between parliamentarians and their constituents. In the way that the Westminster system has evolved, the vast majority of parliamentarians – in fact, in this instance, in this Assembly, all of us – were elected as representatives, as members, as candidates for a particular political party. As we know, political parties are essentially coalitions of people with common values and interests who express those values and interests in platforms for which they seek a mandate. When a member is elected according to such a platform, there is, I believe, an implicit expectation on the part of that MLA's constituents that they will, during the subsequent term, conduct themselves in supporting that platform, in supporting those specific policy commitments and the values that undergird them.

At the same time, this is a bit of a complex issue because I certainly recognize, as would Burke, that a parliamentarian owes his or her constituents their best judgment and that there must be in this place a great latitude for members to act in accordance with that judgment. Madam Deputy Speaker, I for one can certainly conceive of legitimate circumstances where an MLA would conclude that they are no longer able to keep trust with their voters by sitting in a particular party caucus. Often when people leave a party caucus, they say, "My party left me," and sometimes that's true. We can certainly think of times in Canadian parliamentary history where there have been significant changes in the makeup, the leadership, the policy direction of a party, where an MLA, an MP could, I think, legitimately conclude that they are best served outside of that caucus.

Sometimes major issues arise where an MLA might be on the losing side of an internal caucus debate on a really centrally important issue for themselves or their constituents and they feel that they can no longer support the direction of that caucus or its leadership. I respect that, and that is why I believe that it is both undesirable and impracticable for the Assembly to seek to prevent a member from leaving their caucus. I understand that there could be reasons why a member decides to go and sit as an independent, for example.

However – however, Madam Deputy Speaker – if a member chooses to not just leave their caucus but to, in the parlance of the parliamentary tradition, cross the floor and join another party whose values and policy commitments are substantially different from the one for which they were elected, then that, I think, raises a deep concern about violating the trust between the representative and their electors. We've seen many cases of that. Well, in the last Legislature we saw a member elected for the Progressive Conservative party on a particular mandate cross the floor to the NDP party. There were very few issues on which those two parties agreed.

I can think of another case back in the 1990s, when I think it was Stan Woloshyn left. He was elected as a New Democrat MLA for Stony Plain, left that party and joined the Progressive Conservative caucus of Ralph Klein. In fact, I think a couple of Liberal MLAs did as well at that time. Those are parties who in that context had substantially different policy visions, Madam Speaker, which means that these MLAs were elected to pursue one set of policies – that was their de facto contract with their electors – and then they decided midstream to completely jettison the program which they were elected to implement and represent to cross the floor for various reasons and pursue an entirely different policy agenda.

You know, this reached kind of an apogee in December of 2014, with the notorious mass floor crossings that occurred in this place. I think one could argue, Madam Speaker, that there were not profound policy differences between the then Wildrose and Progressive Conservative parties, but certainly the public concluded – overwhelmingly, the public concluded – that there was no defensible rationale for that mass floor crossing, that it represented a kind of cynical backroom deal-making done without any degree of transparency or consultation or democratic consent. I would argue, I think without much contention, that that decision led in part to the downfall of the Progressive Conservative government after some four and a half decades. Voters sent that party and, I believe, all of us a very strong message, which was a rejection of the cynicism of that kind of large-scale backroom deal-making and floor crossing.

That is one of the reasons why we committed in our platform to address the problem of unprincipled floor crossings, and that is why we are proposing this motion, Madam Deputy Speaker. I'll read from it again:

... that the Legislative Assembly express its opposition to the practice of members changing their caucus affiliation unless that member is to sit as an independent or has resigned and been returned to the Assembly after being re-elected in a by-election under the new affiliation.

5:30

Now, let me say, Madam Deputy Speaker, that this is not an amendment to the standing orders. It is not a bill. It is merely what I would characterize as a sense-of-the-House motion. The former New Democrat government of former Premier Gary Doer in Manitoba, in fact, did bring forward a bill, which is now an act of the Manitoba Legislature which makes it ostensibly illegal for a member to cross the floor. Now, I have my doubts about the enforceability of that statute or, for that matter, its constitutionality, but no one has challenged it.

We are not proposing to go as far as the New Democrat government of Manitoba did a decade ago in creating a legal prohibition against the practice of floor crossing. Instead, what we seek to do in this motion is to put members on the record, because we're all going to have to vote on this. We're asking members to go on the record in voting for or against this principle.

And then should some member subsequent to that decide that they're going to up and cross the floor – I think in this Legislature there's a fairly low probability of that happening, but you can never discount it. I'm sure my NDP friends couldn't imagine, even begin to conceive the possibility of this happening. They should refer to – there were CCF MPs who became Tory MPs back in the day, like, for example, the great Douglas Fisher. Oh, my goodness, we're missing that the – I'm sorry. I shouldn't comment on anybody's absence. I'm sorry, Madam Speaker. I'll take that back.

We have in this Assembly the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, whose uncle, I believe, crossed the floor from being a Conservative to a member of the Trudeau Liberal cabinet, and I think that there are still people – unfortunately, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler still lost votes on that 35 years later.

Mr. Jason Nixon: It stopped him from breaking even.

Mr. Kenney: That stopped him at 78 per cent.

As I mentioned, there was Stan Woloshyn, who crossed the floor from the NDP caucus to the Progressive Conservative caucus of Ralph Klein, the man whose memory is much derided by the NDP. So anything is possible.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Karen McPherson, in the last Legislature, to the Alberta Party.

Mr. Kenney: Indeed.

For those reasons, Madam Deputy Speaker, I submit that it's valuable for us to put ourselves on the record so if one of us suddenly decides that we're no longer comfortable in a particular party and decides to adopt midstream another political agenda without consulting with our voters, at least the voters can then say: "Just a minute. You voted on this. You said that you wouldn't do this without resigning and calling a by-election."

Now, some people might say: oh, this is some weird innovation, and there's no justifiable expense for a by-election. Madam Deputy Speaker, I would point those skeptics to the new convention that has developed in our Mother Parliament in Westminster. I don't know when exactly it began, but certainly in the last – I mean, this is something that would have happened back in the 18th century, the 19th century but is now once again the strong convention in the Mother Parliament. For example, in the last parliament, two Conservative members of the British House of Commons left their caucus to go and sit as members of the United Kingdom Independence Party, UKIP. They both resigned their seats and ran an immediate by-election. They both regained their mandates to serve with fresh, renewed mandates as UKIP members. This has happened in a number of cases of members coming and going between parties in the House of Commons at Westminster in the past 15 years or so. That has become – I think that is an entirely reasonable expectation, I submit, Madam Deputy Speaker.

All we're trying to do here is offer a sense-of-the-House motion, an expectation that if members leave their caucus to join another caucus, they should refresh their mandate from their voters in a by-election. Now, I note that in this motion we are not proposing that members should be required to do so in order to sit as an independent because, again, I don't think that's the same as adopting an entirely different political agenda.

Finally, as I quoted from our platform, the United Conservative Party will give this more practical expression by adopting voluntarily as an internal policy that we will not accept an MLA from another party seeking to join our caucus unless that MLA first resigns and is elected under the UCP banner in a by-election. I believe that's a position supported by the vast majority of Albertans. I believe that this more strongly reinforces our individual accountability to our voters to respect the electoral mandates that we have received.

With that, I encourage members to vote in favour of Motion 10, and I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 2 An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business (continued)

The Chair: Again, we are on amendment A2. Are there any comments, questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate you recognizing me. Like I said, I know there have been members from the opposite side just jumping up in droves, but somehow you managed to pick me out of the crowd, so I appreciate that very much. We're back talking about the amendment to change the title of Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, which I think should be more appropriately renamed the Employment Standards and Labour Relations Statutes Amendment Act, 2019.

Of course, I have gone on at a little bit of length about why we need to rename this because what's been proposed in Bill 2, which has fondly become known as the Act to Pick Albertans' Pockets, really is not setting up Alberta to be open for business. Of course, it would be suggested that it would have to be closed to begin with, which it wasn't, because as I've mentioned before, you know, we have seen billions of dollars being invested in this province. We have seen billions of dollars setting up to invest in this province, including in places like the renewable energy market, the digital media market.

I had mentioned a fantastic company called Improbable, that had moved their head office here. I have to admit, Madam Chair, that I was quite surprised. I did at the time lobby the former minister of economic development and trade on trying to balance out what was going on between British Columbia and Quebec in that industry, which eventually came out as the digital media tax credit. Wow. The response? Boom: Improbable was here the next day practically, so that was very, very encouraging to see. I've always believed that the digital media industry is something that Alberta was missing the boat on, quite honestly. We have postsecondary institutions of very high calibre training potential employees, and whereas these industries would have to recruit these people from Alberta, to have them be able to set up right here – because we've levelled the playing field between two industries that are very robust both in B.C. and Quebec, we've now been able to attract that business and that industry.

I think there's a lot more to be had in that industry, but it means that we need to invest more in it. That was growing. Again, since it was growing, to suggest that Bill 2 will make Alberta open for business – I would surmise that it's already been open for business. Otherwise, none of these companies would have been investing this money or have planned to invest this money.

The renewable energy market: we saw a lot of companies out in Ontario that were eyeing Alberta very, very seriously because Ontario had made moves to close business in that sector there. They thought: "Wow. Alberta is the place. It's going to be happening, so maybe it might be time to pull up stakes and move to Alberta. There's a lot more business going on there."

Certainly, when I look in my own riding of Edmonton-Decore, I mentioned that in 2015 I had a very, very difficult time just trying to find a campaign office and ultimately didn't. In 2019 I was lucky to find one almost at the last minute, so the great news was that business was booming in Edmonton-Decore, and there was no room.

5:40

Again, to suggest that we're going to make Alberta open for business I think is a little bit misleading, and this amendment will correct that. What we're talking about here are more amendments to the labour relations statutes, where these changes are actually being made.

You know, again, when I look at some of these changes being proposed, I cannot really figure out how lowering the youth rate from $15 an hour to $13 an hour simply because you're not 18 – I'm not too sure how that opens Alberta for business. What I think it does do is take our youth and put them at a great disadvantage, quite honestly.

I was speaking a bit earlier around our youth, for instance, from our LGBTQ2S-plus community who find themselves in situations where they can no longer stay at home. So they strike out on their own, which means they have bills to pay, rent, food, maybe car payments, things like that. This may very disproportionately affect them. Of course, in talking to some of these kids and, more broadly, with the three high schools that I have in Edmonton-Decore – I have all three of the high schools in north Edmonton – the students there have figured it out. They even said to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora when she was visiting and ran into some of her students at Westmount mall: look, if we've got five people on shift, just because you pay a couple of us or even all five of us $2 an hour less, our employer will not hire a sixth person because it only takes five to do the job. So to try to claim that lowering youth by $2 an hour because they happen to be one year younger certainly doesn't create jobs.

My concerns around the holiday pay, again, are in my own experience through the labour movement, you know, not only seeing bad actors that take advantage of workers – and my colleague from Edmonton-West Henday described his own personal experience over that and being taken advantage of in terms of his holiday pay, his overtime pay. I've seen this even within union contracts, where employers will start to play games. Unfortunately, I even saw those games in my own workplace, where it was unionized. We had great contract language in there that said that after 13 consecutive weeks of working full time, a full-time position was deemed to exist. There was always an excuse, whether it was that somebody was sick, somebody was on vacation, somebody was on disability, and they would say: "Well, sorry. You know, they were actually replacing them." Then, when we would actually get a period where there wasn't anybody off or sick or on vacation, which did actually happen from time to time, it was a case of: well, we're just going to cut your hours in that 13th week. Then you didn't qualify for that full-time position.

I'm very, very concerned that the language in here around the holiday pay may be abused as well. It just seems like it's too easy for those bad actors to start playing around, to create the situations where employees won't get their holiday pay that, you know, they've worked so hard for their employer to do.

The overtime issue I've been very, very clear about. Again, I've seen this in my own experience, where bad actors will set the conditions up so that employers are: if you want to get a job here, well, you're going to have to agree to banking your overtime at straight time, okay? But if you're going to take away your time from your family, from your friends, your plain old free time, that is taking money out of your pocket. I've heard plenty of times from members opposite, you know: well, time is money. Well, time is money here, folks. You've got to stay consistent around this.

So by changing the name, I think it more accurately reflects what Bill 2 is trying to achieve, which – I must be very clear – I don't agree with. I think this is a bad bill. It goes after hard-working Albertans right in their pocketbook.

Of course, you know, if we want to actually make Alberta open for business, we have to make sure that Albertans have the ability to participate in the marketplace and make that business go around because, as I've stated time and time again, a good portion of my constituents in Edmonton-Decore do not squirrel their money away in a Cayman Islands account waiting for that next big stock tip to come by so they can invest thousands of dollars into that; they're buying their food, their shelter, their clothing, their transportation. But wouldn't it be nice if they could also go out and get the things that they want, not only the things they need to survive, be it that big-screen TV, an upgraded vehicle that's more fuel efficient, or booking a nice vacation with their local travel agent, and spend that money locally in the economy?

With that, I find myself just having to really ask members of the government side to really reconsider this because we're not making

Alberta open for business. We're changing labour relations, we're changing standards, and I think the title of this is a little bit misleading and not really true.

I heard members opposite in the 29th Legislature. They used to always chastise the government for its creative names. Here I am again saying: well, if you're going to claim to do this a better way, then you actually have to step up and do this. I think this amendment would achieve that. So I'm urging all members to support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to ask that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So carried.

Mrs. Savage: Looking at the clock and seeing it is approaching 6 o'clock, not quite 6, I move to adjourn the proceedings till 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:49 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1301
Introduction of Visitors .....	1301
Introduction of Guests .....	1301
Statement by the Speaker
Page Recognition .....	1301
Members' Statements
Lethbridge .....	1301
Provincial Fiscal Position .....	1302
Southern Alberta Summer Games .....	1302
Minister of Education .....	1302
Women in the Skilled Trades .....	1303
Inclusion .....	1303
Oral Question Period
Provincial Debt and Fiscal Policy .....	1303
Corporate Taxation and Job Creation .....	1304
Technology Industry Programs .....	1304
Renewable Energy Procurement .....	1305
Fair Registration Practices Act .....	1305
Education Funding .....	1306
2017 UCP Leadership Campaign Investigation .....	1307
Rural Crime Prevention .....	1307
Opioid-related Deaths and Supervised Drug Consumption Sites .....	1307
Affordable Daycare in Rural Communities .....	1308
Agricultural Concerns .....	1309
Métis Harvesting Policy .....	1309
Edmonton Courthouse .....	1310
Investment in Alberta and Fiscal Policies .....	1310
Tourism Promotion .....	1311
Notices of Motions .....	1311
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1311
Tablings to the Clerk .....	1311
Orders of the Day .....	1313
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole
Bill 2     An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business .....	1313, 1329
Government Motions
Voting Rights of Members .....	1326
Caucus Affiliation .....	1328

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday evening, July 2, 2019

Day 22

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henda (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreeshen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretaries

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, July 2, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Motions

Adjournment of Spring Session

26. Mr. Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2019 spring sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Great to see you this evening. The motion is fairly self-explanatory.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a nondebatable motion according to Standing Order 3(9).

[Government Motion 26 carried]

Committee Referral for Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act

25. Mr. Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that:

1. The Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and the Committee shall be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review pursuant to section 14 of that act;
2. The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
3. In accordance with section 14 of the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act the committee must submit its report to the Assembly within six months after beginning its review, and that report is to include any amendments recommended by the committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This motion is also self-explanatory.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion according to Standing Order 18. Is there anyone wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Waive.

[Government Motion 25 carried]

Voting Rights of Members

9. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly recognize the right of members to vote freely on all matters of conscience.

[Adjourned debate July 2: Mr. Kenney]

The Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Government Motion 9. I'm just double-checking with you and the table that we are on Motion 9 and not Motion 10. Excellent.

This is the government motion on matters of conscience. Now, I know the Premier spoke at length earlier today. I don't plan to go on at length on this motion. I know for a fact that this was part of the UCP's platform. This motion obviously relies on standing order changes. What's interesting, Mr. Speaker, is free votes on matters of conscience and the definitions of that. What I find fascinating is that I think that, really, what this is is a way for the government to be addressing very controversial topics. We saw, when we were government, our proposed piece of legislation – actually, that passed – on safe zones, bubble zones for women. I have never in my time in this place, a short seven years, seen the opposition scurry out of this place 13 times, 14 times . . .

Ms Hoffman: About that, yeah.

Mr. Bilous: Okay.

. . . at least a dozen times, Mr. Speaker, running away from a vote. Now, with this new government motion, I'm not sure if that would change things. I don't know if this is the Premier and the government trying to appease their base wanting some kind of ability within his government.

Now, what's interesting are a couple of things. This is a government motion, which means that it has no enforcement mechanism whatsoever. There is no way to enforce this, nor are any members having to follow this or not follow this. I don't know if this is in part doing the job of the whip on the other side in that maybe then, you know, certain matters need to be whipped or less whipped. I think one way that this could be interpreted is: is this a way as far as providing clarity on matters of conscience as opposed to matters of confidence? That's an interesting conversation.

You know, I think that with this motion – I won't belabour the point, Mr. Speaker – our time is better spent debating bills rather than motions that have no enforcement whatsoever and, really, are either to appease a base or to talk to its own membership rather than actually getting on to more productive matters in this place.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there others wishing to speak to Government Motion 9? I see that the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat has risen.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Canada celebrated its 152nd birthday. At 152 our country can boldly claim to be one of the world's longest lasting democracies, something to be truly proud of, I think. We have seen our democracy evolve over time, changing with public opinion and new political realities. In addition, we have seen our political culture change and adapt. As a nation we should be making a concerted effort to improve our democracy and create a more free and fair system for Canadians and Albertans, specifically, to contribute, share their ideas, and have their voices represented in this Chamber.

In February I was honoured to be on the stage alongside a dynamic and bright group of candidates for our United Conservative Election Readiness convention. There was much applause, cheering, and many exciting promises announced, but the commitment to reaffirming the conscience rights of elected representatives got a resounding applause. I heard from many at the convention and in my travels during the campaign about just how important this protection is for them. I believe that Government Motion 9, affirming free votes on matters of conscience, is an important step to advancing the freedom of our democracy and its elected officials to represent their constituents ardently and with conviction.

The constituents of Brooks-Medicine Hat represent a broad range of ideas, viewpoints, values, and personal convictions. If as their representative I cannot represent them on matters of personal moral conviction, then I believe that I am failing them.

So much of our political discourse is presently polarized. We have pundits saying one thing, our friends in the media reporting what they see, and in the Twittersphere, well, they're providing their own commentary. There are issues that have been deemed to be politically sensitive or difficult or downright untouchable. I, for one, think that it is a sad state of affairs to see this occurring.

Through the cut and thrust of debate and by allowing MLAs to vote in line with their personally held moral values, we become stronger legislators and are able to serve as a true reflection of the discourse that exists, albeit not on Twitter but across the province.

One thing that I have noticed, Mr. Speaker, is that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms gets referred to a lot in this place. Regardless of partisanship we all look to the Charter as a guide and guarantor for the freedoms that we all hold deeply and as part of our intrinsic understanding of what defines true freedom and democracy more fully. Section 2(a) expressly articulates that all Canadians regardless of religion or background have conscience rights. Any infringement upon conscience rights has, writ large, been deemed to be contrary to our Canadian values.

Historically the same holds true. Some of western civilization's earlier political thought refers to the importance of the conscience rights of individuals. As early as St. Thomas Aquinas, thinkers were saying that conscience was the rational application of knowledge to activity. John Locke, on whose work a number of our democratic principles are based, taught that liberty of conscience is every man's natural right and was ultimately governed by reason.

As for more contemporary examples, Dr. Kimberley Brownlee, a legal philosopher at the University of Warwick, wrote in 2012 that by living by our conscience, it offers us a greater capacity to live much of our life in a range of wholesomeness, including kindness, compassion, generosity, forgiveness, and love.

The first President of the Czech Republic after the collapse of the Soviet Union, who was, by the way, not in any way ideologically aligned with the conservative movement, stated that we must trust the voice of our conscience to be guided by reason and support the truth. The ability to present and debate views that may be outside of the mainstream is the very cornerstone of democracy. Every single voice matters.

If we take a small dive into the history books, we can see examples of where conscience votes were limited. I can assure all members of this House that they do not want to be on the wrong side of history. Take, for example, the gag rule passed in the American House of Representatives in the mid-1830s. As a refresher, the gag rule prevented the presentation of petitions in the House of Representatives denouncing slavery in an attempt to stop the growing abolitionist movement. It was, in the end, pro-abolition politicians that led to the 13th and later the 15th amendments.

7:40

Some may ask why this motion is necessary. After all, conscience rights are protected as a constitutional right, as I've already mentioned. However, we saw within as recently as the last federal Parliament that conscience rights are not guaranteed for all, especially when it comes to receiving summer grants and faith groups and summer camps who wished to receive funding for their summer jobs program from the Trudeau Liberals. This attack on religious, moral, and conscience rights had organizations choosing whether or not to sign away their convictions in hopes of receiving grant funding for students. Mr. Speaker, this is shameful. This included organizations within my own riding of Brooks-Medicine Hat who are actually taking them to court.

In an example more close to home, here in this House, while not dealing expressly with conscience rights but no doubt dealing with the spirit of the idea that MLAs' responsibilities are first to their constituents, just last session the former Member for Calgary-East was actually kicked out of caucus after writing a letter that stated that there was "a culture of fear and intimidation that leads to MLA's being unable to properly represent their constituents in the legislature."

In sum, this motion reaffirms our government's commitment to the grassroots and to a promise that Charter rights are upheld in the day-to-day proceedings of this Assembly. Unlike the last government, this government is committed to allowing MLAs to represent their constituents. The protection of MLAs' rights to vote to their conscience should be seen as critical to ensuring the continued health of our democracy.

I understand if the Official Opposition is pressured by the party brass to oppose this motion. After all, one of their former MLAs said that she couldn't represent her own constituents as a result of bullying from NDP Party leadership.

Ultimately, the power in our democracy lies within the good faith of those who elected us that we will effectively represent their interests and maintain our own integrity. This motion is a critical step to ensuring that we can do that. I want to thank the hon. House leader for bringing this motion forward. I look forward to supporting it, and I hope the rest of the House will as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Anyone wishing to ask a brief question or to comment?

Seeing none, anyone wishing to speak to Government Motion 9? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to stand up and speak to this motion tonight. I want to thank the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat for her comments on this.

"Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly recognize the right of members to vote freely on all matters of conscience." Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a little bit of time tonight talking about this because I believe it's a really important issue, one that has been discussed throughout the history of our British Westminster parliamentary tradition. It's important because it deals with the issues of voting along party lines, voting for our constituents, and voting by the conscience of the member that has been elected to this House.

I want to start today by talking about two Albertans and an Englishman sandwiched in between them. I want to talk about Frederick Haultain, I want to talk a little bit about Edmund Burke, and I want to talk a little bit about Preston Manning in my remarks today.

For those of you that know the history of Alberta, you'll know that Sir Frederick William Alpin Gordon Haultain had a huge influence on this province, that Haultain was elected to the bar in the Northwest Territories in 1884, and that he settled in Fort Macleod in southern Alberta. He was elected to the Northwest Territories Legislative Assembly in 1887, and from 1888 to 1905 he spent his time in the Northwest Territories Legislative Assembly.

Now, from 1897 through 1905 he had the position of executive council, which was, in effect, the Premier of the Northwest Territories, and he more than any other westerner, I believe, helped to shape the provincial landscape that we have in western Canada today as he helped to transition us from being a territory in the North-West Territories to being the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Now, Haultain challenged the conventional wisdom of his day by advocating for at least two major ideas. The first was that there should be the creation of only one province, not two. Rather than having an Alberta and a Saskatchewan, he wanted one province, because as he saw Saskatchewan and Alberta at the time, their resource base was there, the people made their living from the same land, they had the same culture and outlook on life, and he thought Canada would be best served by having one province.

His second belief that he was known for was a belief with regard to a political system that he wanted to see modelled, where there would be the abolition of party lines within the Legislative Assembly. He believed that the people of the Northwest Territories and the new provinces would be best served by an abolition of party lines. Now, as you can see, Haultain was very much an independent thinker for his time, and I believe that today's motion points us toward the political balance that he was trying to move towards and necessary, I believe, for a successful MLA and for a successful government. There's always this balance between party lines, your conscience as an MLA and the will and the wishes of your constituents. I believe that he perhaps most famously in the early 1900s shaped that and had that conversation. So this motion is not a motion that's being brought forward without some history behind it.

Governments have dealt with these kinds of issues of how to try to balance these equally important issues for a long time. I would draw you to Edmund Burke, the famous British parliamentarian, who spoke to this balancing of political decision-making. It's a little bit of a long quote, but I think it's a really important one. We've probably all heard portions of it, but I don't know if we've heard significant portions of this. He said:

It ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion, high respect; their business, unremitted attention.

He called us as MLAs to our first calling. It should be to represent the people who have taken their trust and placed it in us as their representative.

It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfactions, to theirs; and above all, ever, and in all cases, to prefer their interest to his own.

I think that's a really important thing for us as MLAs to remember. Whatever the issue of the day that we are debating in this House, we should always remember that we should be placing and voting and making decisions and speaking to not just simply our interests but primarily to the interests of the people that have placed their trust in us.

But his unbiassed opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living. These he does not derive from your pleasure; no, nor from the law and the constitution. They are a trust from Providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply answerable. Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

I believe that Edmund Burke, when he spoke those words, was trying to bring some balance, trying to explain to a young and an emerging democracy in England that it's important for us to listen to our constituents but that as MLAs, as representatives who do this 24 hours a day, 365 and a quarter days – I'm not sure we ever take a day off sometimes – we have to apply judgment. There are times when we have to ensure that we help our constituents to understand the issues and why we believe that we should move forward. There is a place for conscience, for good conscience for an MLA, and they should never sacrifice that or should rarely sacrifice it.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this motion addresses that delicate debate, that delicate balance that this House and that we as MLAs must maintain: the freedom to represent our constituents, their wishes, their political direction while maintaining both our personal conscience and moving together as members of a larger political party towards a goal that we have, in this case, just recently campaigned on. So I am very happy to see this motion brought before the House.

7:50

Finally, I'd like to bring forward another great Albertan, I believe, one of my heroes, a man that I have worked with, worked for, volunteered with and helped to run his first federal election campaign in 1987, Mr. Preston Manning. I know that in the 1980s when I became involved with the Reform Party, we were faced with an eastern government that was not listening to the will of the people, was not listening to western Canada. For those of you that were around at that time, you heard the slogan of the early Reform Party, The West Wants In.

It was, I believe, an incredibly important political movement that occurred, one that I believe actually helped to save this country. We know that this was during the days of that national energy program, when the federal government was moving in on Alberta's resources, was ignoring the constitutional rights, I would argue, of the province of Alberta, and was creating serious damage to this country. I believe that the Reform Party and that slogan, The West Wants In, blunted this movement of separation in this country because it allowed the people of western Canada to have a voice.

One of the early ideas in the movement of the Reform Party was this idea of a triple-E Senate, free votes, and recall. Each of these things speaks to allowing the people to have a voice in government through their MLA, through their Member of Parliament. I believe that it allows us the people to hold government to account and to reflect the will of the people. It spoke to a need for balance within the federal and, I believe, the provincial scene.

It is for that reason that I can and I will support this motion for it helps to point us in a direction of a political balance that I believe is necessary to ensure a principled and balanced democracy in the tradition of Burke and Haultain and Manning. That tradition, in my opinion, is in the best interests of all Albertans, so this motion will have my support.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Anyone wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

We are on Government Motion 9. I see the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika perhaps rising to make a request of the Assembly.

Mr. Schow: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ask for unanimous consent for this Chamber to go to one-minute bells for all motions this evening.

The Speaker: Just seeking some clarification from the hon. member, are you speaking specifically to motions or all votes this evening? What are we asking for here?

Mr. Schow: Speaking specifically to motions, Mr. Speaker.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: We are on Government Motion 9. Anyone wishing to speak to the motion? I see the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of this motion, Motion 9, and I'm very grateful to speak on it because there are some misconceptions in our public discourse today. The popular misconception that's been circulating for quite some time is that public duties are more important than privately held convictions. As with all good misconceptions and lies, there is some truth in this. Public duty often demands that we forgo our own private opinions and preferences in order to serve the common good. Giving up one's own private interests in order to further the common good has long been heralded as civic virtue in action in our democracies. Cicero stated: not for us alone are we born; our country, our friends have a share in us.

However, deeply held conviction, or what some call conscience, is not simply a private opinion. In fact, enormous harm is done when public duty is used as an excuse to violate one's own conscience. It is for this reason I was greatly pleased to hear, as I'm sure all my colleagues were in this House, the Premier rise earlier today to speak with such force and vigour compellingly in defence of free votes in this House in conscience. Here we have the Queen's first minister of Alberta advocating for the rights and free expression of conscience in our democracy for all members and citizens. We should be well pleased with that.

It has not always been the case that the will of the Crown is aligned so much with the interest of the members of a parliament. The parliamentary drama which I'm thinking of and first comes to mind is that great division under King Henry VIII and Sir Thomas More, which was immortalized by the playwright for our generation, Robert Bolt, in A Man for all Seasons. Sir Thomas More in opposition to the King and Crown, defending his belief from a place of conscience, says, "When statesmen forsake their own private conscience for the sake of their public duties . . . they lead their country by a short route to chaos." It is for this reason that we must take such pride and cling so closely to conscience in this House.

What, then, is conscience? As I stated, it is not just personal preference or private opinion. Conscience is a precursor to all moral decision-making. As noted again in the speech from the Premier and again by the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, it is the first right enumerated in our Charter, and by no coincidence freedom of conscience has primacy over all other freedoms because it is a prerequisite for all subsequent freedoms. The freedom of religion is listed afterwards. Freedom of thought, belief, opinion, expression, including freedom of the press and other media, of communication, freedom of peaceful assembly, and freedom of association: every one of these is not possible without, first, the freedom of conscience.

Even the activist and progressive jurist Justice Bertha Wilson wrote from the Supreme Court that "conscientious beliefs which are not religiously motivated are equally protected by freedom of conscience." It is a precursor to all moral belief, and we ought not check our morality and ethics as we enter into the public space. Rather, conscience is a moral awareness whereby we judge right from wrong in concrete situations. This moral awareness is not just a matter of opinion. If we look at the word "conscience," we can see that it has two parts from its Latin, "com," with, and "scientia," knowledge, the root word of "science" as well. Therefore, conscience means to act with knowledge. It is not devoid of input from edification and education. We must take what we know and use it to properly exercise our conscience. Conscience requires knowledge and is not subject to simple emotion. The base point I want to get across is that freedom without conscience is no freedom at all. It hollows all of these freedoms out.

What, then, is conscience? It is the judgment of reason by which the human person recognizes the morality and quality of acts in a concrete way. In other words, it is our ability to judge between right and wrong in concrete, everyday situations. Why must it be free? Without freedom of conscience, without freedom to refuse to do wrong, all other freedoms end up empty. What good is my freedom of expression if I'm not free to speak according to my beliefs and conscience? What good is my freedom of religion if I am not able to believe according to my conscience? What good is my life, liberty, and security of person if I cannot act according to my conscience? These freedoms are all empty tombs filled with dead corpses unless they are first animated by the life-giving spirit of conscience. That is why conscience must be free, so we are advocating for it even in this Chamber.

How do free votes support the freedom of conscience? Free votes ensure that conscience is empowered. They ensure that conscience is not trampled under the boot of government nor obliged to bow before the whip of party discipline. That being said, free votes do not grant freedom of conscience. They merely recognize the pre-existing right for which conscience has always been there. Nothing can oblige anyone anywhere at any time to act contrary to his or her conscience. We might forget we have a conscience. We may act contrary to that conscience. We can never say that we have none. Every individual, no matter walk of life, has a line they wish to not cross. It is not a matter of religion; it is not a matter of one world view. It is a matter of being human that we have consciences. In all offices and public vocations that ought to be respected.

There were a number of our predecessors in Parliament throughout its history who thought that it was a small price to pay to trade their life for their conscience. The pain of death was a pittance and a trifle compared to the grievous harm of betraying their consciences. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that we give them thought, that we ponder how men and women might trade their lives for conscience. We will further examine that as we quote a final quote that I have from the minister of employment and social development of Canada in 2014, where he said:

The spirit of the age can be a powerful juggernaut that is wont to run roughshod over the consciences of those who would resist it. We remember Thomas More because he was strong enough to stand against the spirit of the age. No neck is strong enough to resist the executioner's axe, but a few courageous souls are strong enough to resist the demands of the one who commands the executioner. A healthy political culture – the kind with which we have been blessed since Canada's founding – seeks to prevent a conflict between the rights and duties of conscience, and the demands of the sovereign and the sovereign's government.

8:00

Here we have the first minister of the Crown advocating for our conscience, advocating that we use these free votes. So my plea to this Assembly, to my colleagues, is not just that we vote in support of this motion but that we use it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone else wishing to ask a brief question or make a comment?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and colleagues, for the opportunity to engage in this discussion. I think I'm of two minds, and I'm going to touch base on a couple of things. This one is with regard to matters of conscience and how I feel that that's quite an open-ended category. When I think of matters of conscience, I think about – I’ve heard Joe Biden say it recently; I’m sure many others have throughout history – “Don’t tell me what you value. Show me your budget, and I’ll tell you what you value.” Certainly, I would assume that budget votes would be matters of conscience, matters of value decisions.

We saw members of the then Wildrose and PC caucuses – actually, I think it was even after they were one caucus – vote against things like increased funding for rural crime prevention initiatives and then come back into this place and say over and over again that they needed to do more on rural crime. Indeed, when that line item had been broken out, they continued to vote against it. Was that a conscience vote, or was that a matter that was not seen as a matter of conscience? I would say that making sure that we have enough folks on the front lines to protect us is certainly something that I would consider a conscience vote. So that’s one side of this situation for me.

The other side: I went down memory lane. I’m sure many members were there. It was back in May 2018, after a UCP convention, where there was a motion brought forward around requiring minors to get permission from their parents for health procedures. Wilberforce was of course whipping up a lot of votes at that convention. I believe that motion passed with 74 per cent, and the then aspiring Premier, now Premier, said: not to worry. Quote: I’ve been clear that I won’t be bringing forward any legislative measures on abortion. End quote. I would assume that many would argue that abortion is probably a matter of conscience.

Is this creating an opportunity for a private member to bring forward a resolution and for the more than 24 members of Conservative caucuses – I guess it was the UCP at the time who either walked out of the Legislature or have a very active track record, including the Member for Peace River, of opposing women’s bodily autonomy and the right to make our own decisions around our own bodies – creating an opportunity for somebody other than the Premier to bring forward a bill or a resolution and to say: “This is a matter of conscience; therefore, there will be free votes. Therefore, I’m not breaking my promise that I made in 2018, when I was seeking the opportunity to become Premier, because I didn’t bring forward this motion. Somebody else brought forward this motion or this bill?”

I’m of two minds on this. One, I assume that every matter we discuss in this place is a matter of conscience. When I come here every day, I have to consider what my values are and how they have determined which party I sit with, which party I campaign with, and how I carry myself in this place and in my community. That is the one side: show me your budget, and I’ll tell you what your values are.

Does that mean that every money bill we have in here is a matter of conscience? I think it is. I think that we have an opportunity – and I imagine many of us have very thorough discussions. I would hope that the government caucus does as well although I know that the Government House Leader has taken to not calling members of the caucus who aren’t in cabinet members of government but, rather, private members. I would hope that all members who ran for the UCP have an opportunity to express their views and opinions and that when the government brings forward something, that thing that they’re bringing forward represents the opinion of that party and the folks who have chosen to be members of that party, not just the vision of Executive Council or the Premier or the minister who is moving it. I would hope that there is an opportunity for all of us in our respective caucuses to have these discussions and bring forward ideas that we’re proud of collectively.

This is why I am of clearly two minds on this. One, I think that everything we do is a conscience decision. Two, I think the Premier made it very clear that he won’t be moving on matters like abortion.

I think he’s talked about other social issues that he called divisive, that I call standing up for human rights. I think that it is concerning to me that, on one hand, we’ll have somebody say, “Well, it’s important to vote for matters of conscience,” and have, on the other hand, somebody who was running to be Premier, running to govern this place, say, “I won’t legislate on these issues” but then, of course, creating a separate opportunity for people to do exactly that.

We know that there are many people in this place who feel that they are beholden to what I would call extreme sections, feel that they helped them get nominations, feel that they helped them win elections and that they owe them action on certain issues that may or may not be of their individual conscience or the conscience of the folks that they represent, all the folks that they represent in their riding.

That is why I’m of two minds on this matter. Mr. Speaker, I’m happy to listen to further debate on this, but at this point I am of two opinions. One, every decision we make is a matter of conscience, and two, is this just a way for the Premier to legislate on social issues that we should be well past? My right to make decisions about my body should not be revisited in this place. Is that what we’re creating an opportunity for people to do through this motion and for the Premier to not have to own the effect that that’s what is indeed happening? That’s troubling for me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a brief question or comment for the hon. member. I see the Premier has risen.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d just like to respond to the unfortunate implication of the hon. the Member for Edmonton-Glenora in which she characterized views of government members as being, quote, extreme. In particular, I think she was referring to those who just offered speeches in favour of the what I thought was universally accepted principle of freedom of conscience, what is certainly the first fundamental freedom enumerated in both the Bill of Rights and the Charter of Rights, a freedom which is enumerated in every major human rights instrument ratified around the world, at least by democracies.

In particular, the member opposite was seeking yet again to slur members of the party which I have the privilege of leading. She has a regrettable tendency to do just that, Mr. Speaker. I would remind members that this was the former Deputy Premier who rose in this seat in a prepared remark to accuse Conservatives in Alberta of being, quote, sewer rats, unquote. I repeat: the member opposite showed her regard for democracy, for civility, for decorum, for the views of the majority of Albertans, as expressed in the most recent election, as being those of, quote, sewer rats, unquote. I can barely think of a metaphor nor a simile which is more degrading, more dehumanizing, more humiliating, more, frankly, disgusting than to characterize people as being, quote, sewer rats.

Earlier today, in speaking in favour of this reaffirmation by this Assembly of a primordial and universally recognized human right, I called for civility. I submitted that respect for freedom of conscience is predicated upon and reinforces our best democratic tradition of civility, which I defined as constituting in part a mutual respect for the views of others with which we disagree. We just heard from that member once again her regrettable habit of insulting the convictions of other people, including those who are democratically elected. She alleged that they were extreme.

If I’m not mistaken, the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat won what percentage of the popular vote?

Ms Glasgo: Sixty-five per cent.

Mr. Kenney: Sixty-five per cent.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon won . . .

Mr. Smith: Seventy-two per cent.

Mr. Kenney: Seventy-two per cent.

The Member for Peace River?

Mr. Williams: Seventy per cent.

8:10

Mr. Kenney: Seventy per cent.

Extreme views of sewer rats according to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Speaker, I disagree with that member on many matters, but I've not alleged that her views are extreme. I've not alleged that those who support her are subhuman vermin, sewer rats. You know, that metaphor, interestingly, is a metaphor that was frequently used in the 1930s in Germany to dehumanize certain people, to condition the public discourse for the full dehumanization of an entire category of people. It is a kind of metaphor which should be completely beneath our public discourse in this liberal democracy or in any parliamentary government.

Mr. Speaker, to stand in this place and to characterize or I should say mischaracterize the views of recently elected members who have been sent to this place by supermajorities of their fellow citizens is, frankly, offensive. As I did less pointedly this afternoon, I rise in this place yet again to appeal to the members opposite to begin to demonstrate a modicum of civility that I think is expected by not just the voters, the 55 per cent of Albertans who elected this government in the single largest democratic mandate in Alberta electoral history, over a million voters. I would ask that the members opposite demonstrate a modicum of respect for those voters, for the supermajority, the 60 and 70 per cent who elected those three members who just spoke. Instead, what do we get from the opposition? A nonstop diatribe of disrespect and incivility. Albertans deserve better.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Government Motion 9. I see the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has risen.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to have an opportunity to speak to Motion 9. Of course, I feel a need to respond to the comments of the Premier just given . . .

Mr. Kenney: Just another sewer rat over here.

Mr. Feehan: Well, I'm glad that he's, you know, heckling me with sewer rat comments because it really points out the point of what it is I'd like to speak about here today.

I think it's important that, you know, in this House we do speak to issues of conscience and we have opportunity to address things that are important to us. Of course, each one of us decides when we get elected which party we're going to run for. Hopefully, we've done our work and spent time researching the values of the various parties and make a decision to run on the basis of that.

Of course, you know, I and members of this party made choices to run for the NDP because we firmly believe in the value of the common good and believe in sharing the good things of this world with the rest of society. As a result, we've worked very hard to try to ensure that everyone benefits, not just the people who have money and have power, as opposed to the nature of the work that's been brought forward by the government today, in which there is a very strong attempt to coalesce both power and financial well-being in very few pockets and to try to ensure that some people are in a better position in society than others.

In fact, there seems to be a regular pattern and habit on the government side of seeking out people who are in vulnerable places and acting to diminish their rights, whether that be through reducing the minimum wage of people who aren't even able to vote and therefore are vulnerable to this kind of attack or whether it be to undermine the collective bargaining rights of public service workers or to undermine the rights of gay and lesbian people to gather together and collect in a safe space where they can come to terms with some of the realities that they are frequently coping with, including issues such as bullying and so on. I think it's very important that we note that on this side of the House our reaction to all of those things has been governed by our conscience, and I think it's very important that we do that.

I do want to take a moment to speak to some of the comments the Premier has just made. I know he has taken great delight in taking a statement made some years ago by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, a statement for which she apologized but which I feel has largely been taken out of context and again tonight was taken out of context and has been described as, somehow, a statement referring to all Albertans and so on.

You know, sometimes in this House statements come out of your mouth. In this case it was just sort of a rhyming couplet that I think was intended to be mildly amusing. Of course, because it crossed the line, she stood up and apologized for having done that. It gets used over and over again. I think that that's an example of lack of civility: when someone apologizes for something, not taking an apology and refusing to respond.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I might just remind all members of the Assembly to keep their comments to themselves. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has the call. I think it's best if we allow him to continue the debate, but I would encourage members to stay focused on the issue at hand, which is Government Motion 9.

Mr. Feehan: I understand that, Mr. Speaker, and I understand that you also gave five minutes of time to the Premier to speak about an issue that was three years old. I would appreciate the same.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: I'm back on my feet, sir. You have now approximately spoken for five minutes as well. Let's not be making tit-for-tat on what the Speaker is ruling or what the Speaker isn't ruling. I'm merely suggesting that we stay on the topic at hand, which is Government Motion 9. If we continue down this trail, we will wind up in a significant level of negative decorum. I get it. [interjections]

There's no need to stand under 13(2) because I have not made a ruling. I merely asked all members of the Assembly to keep their comments to themselves, from both benches. Then I reminded the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to speak to the issue and for us to stay on task. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford then chose to challenge the rule of the chair based upon the amount of time that the Premier spent speaking about this particular issue. The good news is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has also spent about five minutes speaking specifically to the same issue, and I'm encouraging all members, both from the government side and from the opposition side, to stay focused on the task at hand this evening, which is Government Motion 9.

Debate Continued

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take your words to heart. I think I've already made my point about the fact that not accepting an apology is an example of doing something that we're being asked to do, but it's not being done by the other side.

I'd also like to speak to the fact that speeches in this House from the government side often begin with some kind of a diminishment of the comments being made from the opposition side of the House. It's a rare day when the Government House Leader doesn't stand up and use a word such as "hysterical" or "ridiculous" to describe comments on this side of the House. The fact that those kinds of words are used as a way of diminishing the conversation that goes on in this House tells me that there is a problem of what's good for the goose is not good for the gander with this government, one that I'm going to seek to challenge on a regular basis because, speaking of Government Motion 9, I think that we need to stand up and speak our conscience. As a result, I will stand up and speak to my conscience when I hear that kind of hypocrisy coming across the floor, as it does on a regular basis.

I think that if people do err – and sometimes we do; it gets late here at night sometimes. Your mind moves along and sometimes you say bits of things when you actually mean something much more complex, and it comes across much worse than you intended. That's just the nature of humanity. I think that sometimes we have to, you know, have a little flexibility and let that go, but holding people to that kind of thing for many years after the fact, particularly after they've apologized, seems to me like not an example of the conduct that the Premier has been asking us to engage in.

8:20

Therefore, I am standing today speaking my conscience on the fact that I think there's hypocrisy in that. I do appreciate that everyone here in this House wants to, you know, make sure that we're actually debating things that are serious and important, but the reality is that many times when we stand in the House, we're not able to get across the point that we want in the most easy and articulate way because we just are people that sometimes fail. If that happens, we have to have a little bit of flexibility.

I think it really behooves the government to actually act in the way that they are asking the opposition to act. I'll pay attention over the next number of weeks to see if, in fact, the Government House Leader and other people stand up and routinely describe the language being used across the House with words such as "ridiculous" and "hysterical" because then I'll know whether or not they actually are prepared to live the behaviour that they're requesting of other people on this side of the House. So far I haven't seen it. So far I've seen exactly the opposite. I can tell you that, you know, the worst possible take on everything that's being said is always taken by members of the government side of the House, and as a result we don't actually end up with serious debate a lot of the time.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called. The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Schow: Yeah. I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, 23(b)(i). We are debating Motion 9 here, not necessarily the decorum of the House but, rather, this motion in particular. I would ask that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford actually discuss the motion as opposed to his opinions on decorum in the House, which we are trying to raise on a daily basis.

The Speaker: I appreciate the interjections; however, there's no point of order here. The hon. member has on numerous occasions talked about how this applies to his conscience and how he's risen to his feet to make the point that he comes here to speak his conscience around these issues. He's well and truly in his right to do so. There's no point of order.

Debate Continued

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do take the words of the government deputy whip seriously. I will speak more specifically about the issue of conscience voting rights, and that is that, I mean, I guess I fundamentally agree with the notion. I think that that's what you should be doing all the time. As one of our Auditors General once said, you shouldn't need a corset of rules if you have a backbone in terms of your decision-making. I think that that's true.

I think that each one of us should be speaking to the issues that are important to us. In my case, for example, that means I will be defending the vulnerable people in our society, that I will be looking for rules and laws that do wonderful things like reduce child poverty in half, which we did in our term; that do things like raise the minimum wage for the most vulnerable members of society, which we did in our term; that build hospitals for people across the province, including cancer hospitals in Calgary, which we did in our term; that build schools for families and children, like we did 244 times in our term.

These are the kinds of things that speak to my conscience and that speak to the fact that I think we should be doing work in this House to ensure that the things that come out of this House are beneficial not just for individuals but, of course, for all society. That means that you can't just treat all society equally. You have to have a preferential option for those people who are most vulnerable. You have to articulate good social structures that will enable and allow those people who are most vulnerable to have a chance whereas through other circumstances in their life they may not have a chance.

We all like to think that we are here because we succeed on our own efforts. That may be true, and I hope it is true. I expect it is, but I can assure you that anybody in this House did not arrive here because you yourself worked very hard. You also arrived here because many other people worked very hard. You are here on the backs of and on the benefits of other people.

Now, they of course have chosen to do that because they share your values, and they hope that you will vote your conscience in the way that they have come to know you. That's what I think we should all be doing in this House. I will continue to do that. I will continue to have that preferential option for the poor, based on the values that have been honed by myself over my almost 60 years here, and I will expect to see members opposite do that as well. I would hope that that does not mean that they will use opportunities like running away from the House to avoid doing that kind of thing, leaving just because they don't like to hear what other people are saying, putting things in their ears so that they don't have to hear it, refusing to even debate a private member's bill in this House so that they don't have to see it.

It disturbs me that over the last week or so we've had the government literally plug their ears and close their eyes. One more monkey, and they've got the full set. You know, I really think that we have to make sure that when we say that we want to have this House debate things fully and in conscience, then we have to act in a way that allows that to happen. For example, if someone brings a private member's bill, let's say on health care, we would not shut it down in committee. Rather, we would bring it into the House and actually have a discussion about it. The government has a majority. They can defeat it. There's no reason why something like that should not be here so that we can vote our conscience on it. Yet here we have a situation, a conflict, a hypocrisy, as I've mentioned earlier, where the government is saying that we want people to have a free vote on conscience and then putting in some kind of a corset of rules that prevents an actual free vote on a matter of conscience.

In this case, it's my conscience that I believe that health care is a universal good and that health care needs to be universally available and free and publicly provided and that it meets all five conditions of the Canada Health Act. All I was asking in that case was to have a personal conscience vote here in the House, yet the government has denied that. So I'm left wondering what they really believe.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone else wishing to ask a brief question or comment of the member?

Seeing none, are there others wishing to speak to Government Motion 9? The hon. the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise briefly – briefly – on this motion.

Perhaps I'll begin by saying that the reason I want to try and be brief on it is because, you know, the members opposite spend a good deal of time talking about the wise use of taxpayers' money, and I would suggest that this particular motion amounts to an unwise use of that as it relates to our time here in this Legislature. Members opposite understand that these motions are nonbinding. If they were binding, it would be profoundly out of order because, of course, in our parliamentary system the majority of the House does not have the right to dictate the way in which the minority, any minority, within the House operates. Were this meaningful and actually able to bind us, it would be out of order. It is not out of order because it is nonbinding, which raises the question: why are we having this conversation anyway? It's really about the conduct of individual caucuses and the rules that they make for themselves, so not a particularly good use of our time.

So then the question becomes: why are we doing it? I think the members opposite, or members certainly in our caucus, have probably at this point raised the theory that we are doing this because the leader opposite and people leading the government caucus are struggling somewhat with the fact that they have created a bit of a Franken-party. Within that, they have managed to attract a few folks with very closely held views. You know, that's great. Everyone is entitled to their closely held views, and they are entitled to speak them, providing that they don't, you know, run afoul of hate laws and the Criminal Code as it relates to hate laws. But that isn't always very convenient for people in politics, to have members of their caucus speaking about things which tend to be offside with the majority view of the electorate.

8:30

Of course, we've identified already some of those issues that would fall under that category. The majority of Albertans believe that a woman should be able to exercise her basic human right to choose what to do with her body, whether to maintain a pregnancy or end a pregnancy. That is something that the majority of Albertans believe. And the majority of Albertans believe that members of the government should not be weighing in on the right of a woman to make decisions about her body. Yet members opposite have a growing number of members within that caucus who do not agree with the majority of Albertans on that, so much so that in the last session we, of course, saw the unprecedented example of the opposition walking out of the Legislature 13 times in a clear demonstration of a profound desire to not do their job. That was awkward. Perhaps this is an effort to sort of pander to the same kinds of groups that pushed them into that ridiculous demonstration of parliamentary behaviour.

The other issue, of course, is the matter that we've been already discussing at great length in this House in this first session, which is the hostility that many members opposite feel around the equality rights of members of the LGBTQ community – for example, as evidenced by the only three- or four-year-old statements made by the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon – where we see them saying things like, "Gay love is not real love" and sayings like that and, you know, codes of conduct where students have to promise to refrain from homosexual behaviour, things like that, which clearly demonstrate a belief by some members on the other side that members of the LGBTQ community are somehow less than the majority. Those are very, I would say if I were in charge of that particular group of folks over there, awkward opinions for members of the government caucus to have because they're very much out of line with what most Albertans believe.

Now, I'll be the first to admit that Albertans did not make their voting decisions on the basis of those issues. They chose to vote for the members opposite notwithstanding that many members of the government caucus hold the views which are so incongruent and discordant with the opinions of most Albertans. Fair enough. But it doesn't mean that it isn't a liability for the members opposite and for the government caucus or that it won't become a liability once again. They are offside, Mr. Speaker, with the majority view of most Albertans on these fundamental issues of human rights, rights that should be enjoyed by women, rights that should be enjoyed by members of the LGBTQ community, rights which some members of the government caucus would like to undermine.

Obviously, this is an effort to pander to those folks, to allow them to walk away or to vote a different way as long as the government majority is maintained on whatever vote is under way at that time. I guess that's why this is going on, although, again, to be clear, it's nonbinding, so who knows, really.

Now, the Premier took the time to argue that somehow this and the need for people to acknowledge the right to vote on their conscience were somehow linked to decorum. I'm not going to spend a lot of time talking about that, but I will say just a couple of things. I would urge all members opposite to understand that one of the single biggest threats to decorum is the decision to abandon the need for us to have a common understanding of the facts. I've mentioned this previously in the last couple of weeks, that this is unprecedented, you know, the degree to which members opposite are prepared to operate from a different set of facts. They don't feel at all bound to actually identify a common set of facts, and then we can debate till the cows come home, or maybe not that long. Maybe we'll let the cows stay out a bit later and stop debating at a certain point. But the point is that we'll do that on the application of the facts or the interpretation of the facts or what the solution would be arising from the combination of the facts, but we shouldn't actually be debating what is true and what is not true. There's an unprecedented departure from this idea that we respect a common set of facts with the debate that I've seen in this House since the election, as led by the government caucus.

I will say that I'm certainly not the only person to notice it, and it is the unfortunate development, I believe, of some folks here, particularly those in government caucus, spending a bit too much time learning at the feet of American politicians, particularly American right-wing politicians, and believing that that means of political discourse or that form of political discourse will somehow improve the political discourse here. If we just, you know, start from disagreeing on whether the sun rises in the east or the west, well, then we can do a very good job of never discussing how to deal with the consequences of the sun coming up earlier than people plan. We never have to talk about a solution if we can't even agree on whether the sun rises in the east or the west. For people who are fundamentally opposed to government, who are fundamentally opposed to collective action, I suppose that it's a legitimate strategy: just debate whether the sun rises in the east or the west forever, and we can avoid doing anything useful. Ultimately, from an ideological perspective, I guess their job is done. Fortunately, I don't really think that that's what people expect of their governments anymore.

As a result, this sort of profound willingness to begin by debating fundamental facts or rejecting fundamental facts like whether the sun rises in the east or the west, for example, creates a tremendous amount of discord. I would suggest that focusing on trying to get back to that world where we have good, healthy debates on a common set of facts, around their application and their interpretation and how they come together, would be a better tool to improve decorum than the motion which we are currently discussing.

The final thing that I will say on the matter of decorum is that, I'd say, in the last five or six days I've seen repeatedly members opposite use as a fundamental tenet to their argument: what you are saying is wrong because we got more votes than you; what you are saying has less value because we got more votes than you; and in fact you don't even have a right to stand and say what you are saying because we got more votes than you. Then at the end of that we are lectured on how we need to develop humility, which is, as you can imagine, probably the kind of thing that starts to undermine decorum.

But I would suggest that members opposite might want to consider learning tools to bring more grace to their victory. They could do so not by – certainly, they would not look to us. Why should they? You know, we are very much at loggerheads all the time, and very few people would ever be able to do that. But look to their predecessors. Back in the day, a very, very, very long time ago, there was an opposition of two Official Opposition members and two independent members. The rest were Conservatives, as led by former Premier Peter Lougheed. I can tell you without a word or a moment or a millisecond of hesitation that never, when my father rose to raise concerns, legitimate concerns, in his role as the Leader of the Opposition, would he have ever been faced with the spectre of Premier Peter Lougheed saying: what you are saying isn't valuable; what you are saying is wrong; in fact, you don't have a right to say what you are saying because we got more votes than you. I know that would never have been done.

8:40

You know why, Mr. Speaker? Because each and every person that got elected here got elected by their constituents, and each and every member of this Assembly is here as a result of those votes. Each of us here has a role to play, and in opposition we have a particular role to play. We were not elected to clap every time the members opposite stand up and announce an initiative. That's not what people elected us to do. They elected us to engage in critical analysis, to ask pointed questions, to ensure accountability, to ask for transparency. These are fundamental things that opposition members who know how to do their job, who are committed to doing their job, who do what the voters ask them to do, do.

That is something that members opposite on the front bench and particularly the Premier need to remember. If they remember that and if they take their roles seriously – just as they take their role to lead the government and to make decisions about the budget and about the future of this province over the next four years seriously, we too have an obligation to take our role seriously. Walking in and being told that, no, apparently 55 per cent means 100 per cent and we're going to operate as though we got 100 per cent and when you complain that we are operating as though we got 100 per cent, we are then going to accuse you of not having decorum: well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure you can understand why decorum would start to be jeopardized in those settings.

Again, I would suggest that there are better strategies that the members opposite could use to ensure decorum rather than bringing a motion like this forward to pander to the uncomfortable views held by, I suspect, the minority of their caucus and bringing forward a motion which is nonbinding and/or out of order. We could rather be spending our time here debating the bills which fundamentally undermine basic human rights of a significant portion of the province, of the population or debating a bill that would potentially undermine the rights of elected school board trustees or debating a bill that will undermine the right to the same level of compensation received by employees prior to the bill's introduction. These things matter to Albertans.

Whether or not the government caucus can agree amongst themselves about who gets to vote their conscience and who has to be the one to make sure that the caucus still wins the vote – because, of course, we all know that's the other thing about this that's so ironic. You know, you're always going to do the numbers. You're always going to do the math before you figure out how many people get to vote their conscience, right? There'll be so many, and then after that, nobody else does because, of course, you've still got to win the vote. I mean, that's another thing about this that's so silly.

Nonetheless, that being said, I would suggest that there are many better things that we could debate in this House right now that are more meaningful to the day-to-day lives of people than the political problem solving and issue management that are required by those who are managing this government caucus. I also believe that there are much more productive ways in which we could pursue the matter of decorum than that suggested by the Premier or others in their comments on this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Anyway, with that, I will take my seat. Hopefully, soon we can vote on this.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for a brief question or comment. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel like the person who was asked to step forward to volunteer and everybody else took a step back. Anyway, I would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for her thoughtful comments on this government motion and for indulging me in a hypothetical question, if she would, because it's been very interesting to me to listen to the members opposite argue in favour of the rights of MLAs to vote according to their conscience. Of course, we've dived deeply into the history of the British parliamentary system, which is something that we all enjoy tremendously. It's odd, the strain of Catholic thought that has influenced the British parliamentary system, which is strange because, of course, it developed in a very strongly Protestant framework. Anyway, I'm getting sidetracked.

One of the questions that hasn't been addressed by the members opposite in this debate is whether or not members of cabinet would be allowed to vote their conscience on government bills and motions that are being brought forward to the House. So if I can engage the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in a hypothetical, how would she have dealt with the issue of allowing free votes on matters of conscience and what expectations she would have placed on cabinet members in her government if those things had come up, and what does she think perhaps the members opposite would do if confronted with those issues?

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition if she wishes to respond.

Ms Notley: Well, that's a very interesting hypothetical question, and I believe that the member opposite is heading to a hypothetical destination. I'm just not sure what it is. I'm trying to think back. What particular axe does he have to grind right now? Anyway, I'm sure there is none.

But, I mean, I think you raise a very important question because there is a difference. Obviously, members of Executive Council have additional obligations that go above and beyond the obligations that exist within a caucus or within the Assembly, certainly, as they relate to confidentiality and also in some respects with respect to the execution of the functions of Executive Council. It does, of course, raise an interesting question if you have Executive Council moving forward on, let's say, a wise decision to fund additional access to abortion services in order to support the basic human rights of half of the population, and what would happen if members of Executive Council, potentially the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Health, were opposed to that? That would be very difficult.

Another matter, of course, we know already is that we have an Education minister who has previously stated things that are less than supportive of the LGBTQ community. Of course, we have a Minister of Finance who is a board member of an institution which has stated, clear, black-and-white written policies which are very hostile to the LGBTQ community. Interestingly, both are in a position right now to consider whether or not funding should be provided to private schools which are continuing to operate with exceptionally discriminatory policies in place in relation, in particular, to LGBTQ students. Of course, the potential is there, the authority right now is there to withdraw public funding from those schools because why would we give that kind of public money, those taxpayer dollars, which are so, so valuable, to schools that are actually promoting a breach of the Charter and the Constitution and the subversion of basic human rights? Why would we do that?

But then if you as a member of Executive Council have your own ideas around these and you're allowed to vote your conscience, then suddenly there's a conflict.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any others wishing to speak to Government Motion 9?

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 9 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:50 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Aheer	Lovely	Sawhney
Amery	Luan	Schow
Barnes	Madu	Schulz
Dreeshen	Neudorf	Schweitzer
Fir	Nixon, Jason	Sigurdson, R.J.
Glasgo	Orr	Singh
Hanson	Pitt	Smith
Horner	Rehn	Stephan

Hunter	Rosin	Walker
Kenney	Rowswell	Wilson
Loewen

Against the motion:

Bilous	Gray	Phillips
Ceci	Hoffman	Renaud
Dach	Irwin	Schmidt
Feehan	Notley	Shepherd

Totals:	For – 31	Against – 12
---------	----------	--------------

[Government Motion 9 carried]

Caucus Affiliation

10. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly express its opposition to the practice of members changing their caucus affiliation unless that member is to sit as an independent or has resigned and been returned to the Assembly after being re-elected in a by-election under the new affiliation.

[Adjourned debate July 2: Mr. Kenney]

The Speaker: Is there anyone else wishing to speak to the motion?

Ms Lovely: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Government Motion 10. In the previous two provincial elections I was a Wildrose candidate. I'm against floor crossing. The past four years have taught us that a United Conservative government is what Albertans want and need in order to clean up the mess left behind by this previous NDP government.

The Wildrose floor crossing caused much anguish for my supporters. Many of them contacted me to express their disbelief with what happened and shared a sense of collective anger for not being consulted. What bothered my supporters more than anything was the disconnect in the communication which happened. There was no consultation conducted with voters to see if this floor crossing was something that they supported. The Wildrose caucus was not united in their decision to cross the floor. How then could they assume that Albertans would be united behind their decision?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Another issue which caused considerable upset was the money donated to the Wildrose cause. Those supporters described the sense of sting they felt with the action taken without member consultation. Those donors felt that their money had been wasted as they had intended it to be used for the Wildrose cause.

When the floor crossing happened, it changed the dynamic. The Wildrose opposition failed to continue in the way they had supported. Although many floor-crossers benefited government at that time, voters sent a clear message in the next election. Not one floor-crosser was re-elected.

Floor crossing has been a major issue in politics. It is a selfish, undemocratic process that leaves voters unsatisfied with their chosen representative, who left the party they voted for. Voters want a certain party in, and if their representative doesn't follow those party lines, then they should go back to the voters to determine if they are best to represent them.

It is our jobs as MLAs of our constituents to represent them in the best and most effective way possible. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. I'll just take a moment.

Hon. members, it's rather loud in here. I am very close to the speaker, and I cannot hear her. So all sides of the House, please just quiet down. Thank you.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Ms Lovely: Thank you.

It is our jobs as MLAs of our constituencies to represent them in the best and most effective way possible. We are the voice of our constituents so that they may be heard at all times. Our government will not accept any floor-crossers without a by-election. This is to determine if that is what their constituents want them to do. It is important to the democratic process that our constituents have a member that will appropriately represent them. It is ridiculous for a member to cross the floor to a very different party without consulting their voters first. They should be able to hold their representatives accountable and ensure that they are representing the voices of their constituents. It is important for the democratic right of our constituents that they have an MLA that follows their beliefs.

However, Madam Speaker, it is undemocratic to have an MLA cross the floor without first consulting their constituents, and if they must do so, they should have an immediate by-election. In the case that MLAs do choose to continue to cross the floor, we ask they resign and then run under their new party's banner in a by-election. If constituents are not happy with the party their MLA is in and want them to leave their current party, they can sit as an independent. However, we want to express how important this is to the democratic system that members should have a by-election to ensure that voters have the final say on who represents them.

Our government wants to ensure that constituents know that they are our bosses and that they have the final say on who represents them. We need to represent our citizens accordingly and reaffirm the role of citizens as the boss. Our government wants to ensure that Albertans have a voice in the House through their representatives and that they can hold their representatives accountable. They should be heard every day, not just on election day. This isn't about party loyalty or party-line politics; it's about democracy. We represent the people who elected us. The people trust us to represent them according to how they voted, and we should honour their decision. If an MLA can't stay with their elected party, they should have a by-election. It is only democratic. Every member here who wants to do right by their constituents and support their democratic rights should support this motion, Madam Speaker.

9:00

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much. Again, I'm not going to take a lot of time to speak to this although I will again be rising in opposition to this motion. The first reason is very similar to the reason that I gave to the last motion, which is that, in fact, it is nonbinding, absolutely nonbinding, and were it binding, it would be out of order.

Again, it's one of those things that the members opposite seem inclined to do, which is to announce that they are doing something and then do something else which is sort of designed to look like the thing that they promised they would do, but they actually all know that it doesn't do that. That's what's going on here again. There are pieces of legislation that they've introduced in this session already: "You know, here we are. We've introduced a piece of legislation. This was in our platform. Look at us. We're doing the thing we promised we would do." Then you read through the legislation, and it's, like: "No. Actually, no, you're not. This is window dressing, and the legislation does not actually do what you say it does." This motion is much like that.

This motion is absolutely nonbinding. Within our parliamentary system it is not possible to tell individual elected members of this Assembly that they cannot cross the floor should they choose to, so this is meaningless, yet here we are debating it. Now, it's particularly ironic that we are here debating it because when the UCP was in the Official Opposition, it was, of course, at that time entirely made up of people who had crossed the floor.

That is deeply ironic – and I'll get back to that in a moment – but it's also a little bit interesting coming from the Premier and the leader of this party because certainly, as much as they were all very inclined back in the day when they were in the Reform and they were all about democracy and they would say, "oh, no floor crossing" and "everyone should resign" and all these great sort of democratic principles, once they got into government, their story changed. In I believe it was 2006 there was a well-known Liberal MP who was elected as a Liberal, and two weeks after the election he crossed the floor to the Harper Conservatives, directly into cabinet. So strange, all those years . . .

Member Ceci: Vancouver.

Ms Notley: Was he from Vancouver? Yes. I think he was from Vancouver, David Emerson.

. . . that the former Prime Minister Stephen Harper claimed to be running from the right, from that populist base, talking about a triple-E Senate and all these different kinds of democratic reforms like the one that we are now talking about today and, you know, two weeks into it, suddenly we've got a Liberal crossing the floor into his cabinet. I'm sure that many of the members of his caucus who actually ran under the Conservative banner were not terribly pleased to see that happen, but that is hypocrisy, I guess, in action.

Now, another example, going back to the federal Conservatives, that I think maybe members here should think about a little bit because it's quite instructive: there was another Conservative MP who was under investigation for election fraud.

Ms Hoffman: Really?

Ms Notley: Yes, he was.

Now, back over there, they were a little bit more concerned about the seriousness of being under RCMP investigation than the members opposite. While he was under investigation for election fraud, the then Prime Minister Harper said: "You know what? You're under RCMP investigation. This is a little dicey. We're not really keen on that in our caucus, so you need to sit as an independent." So he left the caucus, and he sat as an independent.

Now, eventually he was convicted, or he was charged. Maybe it was when he was charged that he had to sit. Either way, eventually, when he was convicted, he had to step down, but he had that little sort of purgatory place, sort of crossing the floor to sit with the independents while he was under investigation or awaiting the outcome of his charges. Just a cautionary tale to the members opposite since we do seem to have an ongoing RCMP investigation into the whole process by which your leader was chosen. I'm just saying that you might want to hold onto that little strategy for some of yourselves in case that becomes something that is necessary and there might be an occasion where potentially crossing the floor to sit as an independent will be a helpful safety net for some of the folks.

Now, going back sort of slightly more seriously, though, I do think that this is deeply ironic that the amount of floor crossing, back and forth, that begat the UCP is unprecedented in Canadian parliamentary history. I mean, I was elected in 2008, and by about – I'm going to go with '10 – 2010 we had then Conservative MLAs: one was kicked out, and two others crossed the floor to join with a fourth one who had actually been elected as a Wildrose. Maybe they elected them afterwards.

Anyway, they crossed, and then they created the Wildrose, and then the Wildrose did their thing, and then leading up to the 2015 election, a big bunch of them crossed back to the Conservatives, and then the election happened and the Conservatives came third, so then there was this whole backing and forth. Some of them wanted to cross, and some of them didn't, and then they created the new party, and some of them crossed to become part of the new party, and some of them held onto their original seats in accordance with the spirit of this motion, actually, and then, of course, lost those seats. Anyway, there were a couple of them that hung onto the original spirit of the motion, that they would finish out their term in the role that they were elected in, but they were by far the minority. The majority went on to essentially create the UCP, so it is deeply ironic that this is coming from this particular group.

Now, that being said, this whole issue would stop with: well, this is meaningless because it's not binding, but, oh, isn't it funny to talk about how this is actually emanating from this group given that nobody has crossed the floor as much as UCPers and the people that are now in the UCP but were previously in other parties. But the other thing that's going on here, which I think is a little bit troublesome, is that this is an effort on the part of the Premier to persuade members within his caucus to not cross the floor again, because, you know, once you do it that many times, it's just sort of like getting up in the morning and putting on a new pair of socks, I guess.

When you forcefully draw together two parties which had clearly divided over a number of issues and force them together in the pursuit of power – what we know is that over four years we will learn that a very small minority of members opposite in that caucus will have any access to any form or any version of power. The rest will be expected to hopefully represent their constituents and hopefully not have to spend too much time explaining to them why it was their school was closed or their hospital was cancelled or their roads were not being paved or their municipal taxes just went up and actually be able to talk about good things that are going on within their riding. Nonetheless, that will be a big part of the work that many of those who are not in Executive Council will be doing.

Given that this party is the product of two parties that had split on their own for, in my observation, relatively significant reasons – you know, there were those who were pro life and those who were pro choice. There were those who were not hostile to the LGBTQ community; there were those who were. There were those who think that funding education appropriately is a good thing; there are others who would prefer to see more private education and just starve public education altogether. There are actually significant differences that, at least at one time, lived within this conglomerate of the UCP. As a result, it would make sense to me that there is a risk that people might want to cross the floor at a certain point.

9:10

So it's ironic that the party whose genesis is nothing but floor crossing is now attempting to bring in a motion to ban floor crossing, a motion that actually is technically and legally incapable of banning floor crossing. Again, it is both ironic and an incredible waste of the time of the people in this Assembly because, again, this motion cannot do what it purports to do. It would be unconstitutional were it to be able to do that. As I said before, I think there are much more important issues that we can discuss other than spending time listening to members of the UCP caucus try to convince their voters that they did a thing that they promised in their platform even when most of them fully understood that they had no ability to make that promise and that right now this motion does nothing to actually fulfill the promise which they actually don't have the ability to make.

With that, I will take my seat and reinforce that we will not be voting in favour of this nonbinding and deeply ineffectual motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I believe, got up maybe 30 minutes ago and talked about the hypocrisy of what we on this side of the House have been saying, yet I just heard the Leader of the Official Opposition stand up twice now, talk about how we don't need to be discussing this or debating this, and then she went on to speak for 15 minutes on why we shouldn't be debating this. I would say that that is the meaning of hypocrisy. Hopefully, we can get on with business, and hopefully we can vote on this and see the views of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to take a few moments on 29(2)(a) to speak to this issue. I think it's important, what the Leader of the Opposition is saying here, because of the fact that the party who is putting forward this motion has its whole existence dependent on doing exactly what they're trying to stop other people from doing now. The party as it exists would not exist if a hundred per cent of the people sitting in the House at the time that this party came together, the governing party came together, hadn't crossed the floor from whatever party they were in into this brand new party called the UCP. A hundred per cent.

I think that says something about them, that they would choose to deny other people the powers that they used in order to create advantage for themselves. This is something I've spoken to in this House before, that for some reason this party, this government party, likes to coalesce power around themselves and then deny power to other people. I find that, you know, quite disturbing. They talk about decorum. They talk about all kinds of things. They present motions that they know are trivial because they cannot be enforced. In fact, they may even be violations of the Constitution. They do all of this so that they can centre the power around themselves and deny other people rights that they have, and then members stand up and say that it's a violation of democracy if somebody crosses the floor.

It makes me question whether or not they've actually spent time looking at the historical democracy of the Westminster parliamentary system. You do not vote for a party; you vote for an individual in your constituency. At no point do you say: I vote for this party, and I will take whatever representative comes from that party. If they want a proportional representation system, they should vote for one, a perfectly legitimate debate to bring into the House. To say that it's a violation of democracy to do what democracy is actually designed to do, and that is to vote for an individual who will go and represent you in the House, is to completely misunderstand the nature of the Westminster parliamentary system.

I find myself a bit flabbergasted that they would sit here and do this at this particular time, that they would actually come forward and propose to do something that they themselves took advantage of and somehow make it sound like anybody else who does that thing is bad, that they're against democracy and bad human beings. What do you say about a person who says that it's good for me, but it's not good for anybody else? What language do we have to describe somebody who says, you know, "I get to do things and take advantage of them, but nobody else should be allowed to do that"?

Well, I've found myself using the word "hypocrisy" a number of times this evening and have been challenged on that now, yet that's exactly what's happening here: the hypocrisy of actually taking advantage of a rule and then stopping somebody else from taking advantage of it. You climb the ladder and then pull up the ladder after you so nobody else can benefit, so nobody else can actually succeed. What kind of thinking is that? Now I'm back to being worried about allowing them to vote with their conscience because it seems to me that somebody who climbs the ladder and then pulls the ladder . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Would the government like to close debate? The hon. chief deputy whip.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, we'd like to close debate.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 10 carried]-+

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:17 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Aheer	Lovely	Schow
Amery	Luan	Schulz
Barnes	Madu	Schweitzer
Dreeshen	Neudorf	Sigurdson, R.J.
Fir	Nixon, Jason	Singh
Glasgo	Orr	Smith
Hanson	Rehn	Stephan
Horner	Rosin	Walker
Hunter	Rowswell	Wilson
Loewen	Sawhney

9:20

Against the motion:

Bilous	Gray	Phillips
Ceci	Hoffman	Renaud
Dach	Irwin	Schmidt
Feehan	Notley	Shepherd
Totals:	For – 29	Against – 12

[Government Motion 10 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 13 Alberta Senate Election Act

[Adjourned debate June 27: Mr. Schweitzer]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill? The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is again a pleasure to rise to speak on this bill and once again to speak against this bill. Let me start by saying that it is interesting that it's worked out this way, that I'm speaking about this bill right after speaking about the two government motions. This follows right along the lines of those motions in that it's one of those things that people tend to point to as an opportunity to enhance democracy, yet as soon as you dig into it a little bit, you realize that it's meaningless. It can't do what it purports to do. It doesn't work within the overall system that we have. It's an empty promise. That is exactly – exactly – what this piece of legislation delivers, yet another empty promise.

This is a piece of legislation that is designed to convince people that somehow we will get Ottawa to listen more effectively to us if we have the Senators, who are elected for life. I need to be very clear: that won't happen. It is, I think, disingenuous for people to advocate this particular strategy as a means to getting better representation for the people of Alberta or other provinces in the west, quite frankly. It doesn't work that way. You know, it's just really, as a result, disingenuous.

You know, we go back to the origins of the Senate. We know that it was originally put in place to establish greater levels of equality between certain regions in the country. The problem is that the regions, as they were defined at the time, were a heck of a lot different than they are now. In fact, the Senate now is an incredibly discriminatory body as far as regional representation goes. Here in the west, where we should have far more Senators than we do in order to actually have the Senate fulfill that purpose of being sort of a more regionalized mechanism of sober second thought, instead what we have is a Senate that is a more discriminatory version of a regionalized opportunity for sober second thought, where we are bound to have the interests of other parts of Canada take precedence over the interests of the west any time that the Senate actually flexes its muscle to do anything of substance.

You know, the Maritimes have more Senators than we do. Even though we're growing much faster and we've long since overtaken them in population and all that kind of stuff, there is an incredibly unequal distribution of Senators. That is part of the Constitution. Until such time as we change the Constitution, that will be the law. As a result, because that is the law, what you then have to do is make sure that the Senate – because it is so unequal, those of us in the west need to not give the Senate more credibility or give it more opportunity to flex its muscles because if we do that, it will ultimately be used against us by the other parts of the country, which actually have way more Senators than we do because the Senate is fundamentally unfair.

Right there, I'm not sure why it is we are embarking upon this particular strategy because it does not deliver what the members opposite suggest that it delivers, yet again another piece in this unfolding pattern of governance by this UCP government. Promise something, put something in the window, say: hey; this product here is going to fix your problem, this thing that we promised to fix, even though it doesn't. It's a strange way of governing.

Now, there is no question that in the last six months or eight months or 12 months we have seen the Senate flex its muscles to some degree and almost succeed in ensuring an outcome that would have been better for Albertans and for the west and, perhaps, even for the people in the Maritimes. Ultimately, it didn't quite happen, but it almost did.

There is a saying out there, for those of us in the legal world, which is: good facts make bad law. What we've done here is that we've got this one little sort of glimpse into an occasion where the Senate almost was an advocate for the interests of the west, and coincidentally one or two of the Senators that were part of that, certainly not the only part but one part of it, were elected and then appointed as a result of the election. But that is really, Madam Speaker, more of a coincidence than a map for change because it is a function of the particular political dynamics at this moment and the particular issue. You cannot expect it to work that way on other issues. Really, what we saw was a very short-term political situation, political gamesmanship, very much related to the, I would say, at most 48-month political narrative that we are dealing with right now. The problem is that the Senate does not operate in 48-month cycles; the Senate operates for life.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So whether we elect them or don't elect them, once someone is appointed, they are appointed for life. Lots of things can happen over the duration of a Senator's appointment. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms can come into effect, for instance. Governments can change completely. Laws can change completely. Societal norms can change completely. The Internet can be invented, for instance, over a Senator's term. So this idea that we can look to the last six, 12 months as a guidepost for what we can expect over the next 24 years of the Senate is profoundly unwise.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Let's just go back to the fundamentals of the Senate. The fundamentals are that it is regionally unfair to the west, and it is based on appointments for life. What this purports to do is to have an opportunity for people to elect their Senators, who may then be appointed. Now, quite honestly, Madam Speaker, some people might argue: well, at least if they're elected, then they know who elected them, and they'll function that way. You know, I think the reality is that one of the things that makes politicians accountable to their electorate is the possibility of the next election, Madam Speaker. One election and then, woo-hoo, you're in for life and you've got your pension guaranteed and you've got your 27 houses in your different provinces, depending on all that kind of stuff: all that happens, and you never have to face the voters again.

9:30

You know what? That does not achieve what this bill is telling people who are worried about the Senate it will achieve. Anyone who knows anything about electoral politics understands that it will not achieve it. You get elected once; you get elected for life. The accountability piece is gone and with it, I would argue, the effectiveness piece as well, probably, because most politicians' effectiveness is linked to their accountability. It's linked to the fact that ultimately they're going to have to face the voters again. As a result, this simply won't work, but it will for a brief window in time give more credibility to an institution which is profoundly unfair to the west because we don't have anywhere near the representation that we should.

In addition to this, there are a couple of other things that are happening in this bill which are also troubling. One is that it appears to open up a darn big great old hole in our Election Act in terms of raising the spending limits of certain political parties. Depending on the timing of the election and what else is going on in the election, you can actually end up almost doubling the spending limits for political parties. That is a problem, a very significant problem. One, I don't think there's a soul in Alberta, if you were to ask the question – maybe I'm wrong. Maybe it's only 90 per cent of people who would answer it the way I think they would. Maybe I'm wrong overall, but I think if you went to Albertans and said, "Hey, do you think we need more big money in politics? Is that the answer to our democratic woes?" I'm pretty sure most Albertans would not say, "Yup, we need more money. That's what we need to make our politics better, more money." Yet that's what this does.

A creative trip through the loopholes which are built into this act could actually allow for a significant elevation of the spending ceiling, depending on the timing of the elections.

Now, perhaps when we get to committee, members opposite will consider amendments that will allow us to close that loophole such that we won't perceive this bill to be an end run around the fair elections act and the object that we certainly have, which is to get big money out of politics, and indeed the object that one of the UCP's predecessor parties, the Wildrose, actually agreed with us on. We shall see.

The other thing that I think is very troubling about this act is that, because it allows political parties to come in and spend money on senatorial candidates, it essentially demands that senatorial candidates be partisan. When this idea of having a Senator who is representing Alberta and ensuring that they must be partisan is paired, then, with this fact that they are elected for life, I think it is wrong. If you're going to create a system that encourages or almost demands partisan alignment in order to compete within the senatorial election milieu, then you had better find a way to make sure that that person is not there for life because the two don't work together properly and you're going to end up with a great deal of dysfunction. Frankly, I don't think that we should be injecting the requirement to be partisan into the notion of senatorial politics if we are going to have the notion of senatorial politics. Again, I'm not entirely sure why we're so interested in giving power and influence to a body that is so discriminatory to the west, to western Canada.

Finally, the last thing that this act does, which again should go against the basic bread and butter of the UCP, so I'm surprised again at why we are playing in this pond, is that, of course, it's expensive. It's expensive. We are having a faux election to elect someone, who may or may not actually then have a right to end up in the Senate, to a body that is discriminatory to the west so that a person can be elected for life even if they outlive the partisan group that originally worked to get them elected. I know the UCP thinks that they're going to govern for the next 45 years. You know, I wouldn't bank on that quite yet. Quite frankly, most Albertans would not think that that was a reasonable plan, just as I don't think anyone would be very comfortable with electing somebody for life. But in any event, I don't think they're going to be comfortable with electing somebody for life to a dysfunctional body that discriminates against the west and spending taxpayers' dollars on it.

[The Speaker in the chair]

This will be expensive. You know, for a government that claims to be worried about the bottom line, that is putting thousands of families across this province under great stress because the Minister of Education can't be bothered to tell school boards whether special-needs students will have aides with them when school starts in September because she can't be bothered to actually tell them how much money they're going to get – and I don't know why because they've certainly had more time than our government did in the same situation and we were able to tell them, but for some reason the Minister of Education can't because she has to wait for the blue-ribbon panel to tell her what she can do. But somehow we can still go ahead and create a whole new expense item which is the cost of electing somebody for life to a dysfunctional body which discriminates against the west. Why?

I know you love to tell the story of good Senator Black and what's happened over the course of the last six to 18 months around two pieces of legislation, but that is not the way this works. The Senate is built into the Constitution. It will outlast this legislation. The partisanship around the senatorial appointment will not outlast this legislation. The Senate will outlast all of that. We will be left with, again, the remnants of trying to breathe life into a body that discriminates against the west, because for one political moment in time there is a thought that there are more Conservatives there than not. You know what? It's not going to work that way. It's going to work against the west. When people wonder why the Senate is not a place that is speaking up for us, they will be looking to this government and why it is that this government chose to try to give the Senate more credibility.

I will say that it's amusing because, of course, I suppose, in one sense it's good that this particular government doesn't get to appoint or recommend appointments because their record almost blew up the Senate. We thought that you needed to change the Constitution to blow up the Senate, but frankly the Harper Conservatives almost blew up the Senate with the outrageously poor selections that they made in their appointments and some of the scandal that ensued. You almost did manage to blow up the Senate. Now it's coming back into more repute, slightly, but, again, waxes and wanes.

Even as these things change, the fact that the west is disproportionately represented and that these people are appointed for life: nobody can change those things without changing the Constitution. Both those elements, to me, render the Senate a fundamentally flawed institution which we should not be spending good hard-earned taxpayers' dollars on propping up for political gamesmanship, which is really what this is about. I would urge members to vote against this because we have better things to spend our money on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak to the bill as I don't believe that Standing Order 29(2)(a) is yet available? Anyone else wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has risen. And by risen, I mean I don't see that he has risen. Is there anyone else wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 13?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:40 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Aheer	Lovely	Sawhney
Amery	Luan	Schow
Barnes	Madu	Schulz
Dreeschen	Neudorf	Schweitzer
Fir	Nixon, Jason	Sigurdson, R.J.
Glasgo	Orr	Singh
Hanson	Pitt	Smith
Horner	Rehn	Stephan
Hunter	Rosin	Walker
Loewen	Rowswell	Wilson

Against the motion:

Bilous	Gray	Phillips
Ceci	Hoffman	Renaud
Dach	Irwin	Schmidt
Feehan	Notley

Totals: For – 30 Against – 11

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 2

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

The Chair: We are on amendment A2. Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and offer a few additional comments on this amendment that's before us. Of course, in this amendment we're proposing to change the name to more accurately reflect the intent of the legislation, and that is, of course, to make changes to the employment standards and labour relations acts.

In comments made by my colleague from Lethbridge-West earlier this afternoon, she had indicated in debate that it was really inaccurate to call this act An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business because, of course, there is nothing about lowering workers' wages that will make Alberta open for business.

10:00

We already have, of course, the lowest tax jurisdiction in the country. That's even prior to this UCP government enacting a 4 and a half billion dollar corporate tax giveaway. That became effective yesterday.

Of course, we already led the country in growth in 2017. We were among the leaders in 2018. Even though the economic outlooks that have been issued – well, let me say that the economic outlooks that have been issued for the province of Alberta for 2019 and 2020 put Alberta at the back of the pack when it comes to comparing us to other jurisdictions with respect to expectations for economic growth, and that's in spite of and not because of what the members opposite have enacted as far as legislation goes.

You know, the economic forecasters are well aware of the government's intent to lower corporate taxes. They're well aware of the government's intent to lower workers' wages. They're well aware of the government's intent to stop promoting the renewable energy sector in this province. And in spite of those things or because of those things the economic forecasts for the province of Alberta are not good for the year 2019. In fact, a lot of economic forecasters show that Alberta will lag most of the country in terms of economic growth for 2019, which is unfortunate.

It's unfortunate because at a time when economic growth is stagnating, of course people turn to governments to provide the services that they need, and government is moving quickly to make sure that it doesn't have the financial resources that it needs to provide services to the people of Alberta in their time of need. On top of that, they're piling on by lowering workers' wages, so when Albertans aren't able to get the services that they need from the government, they're not able to draw on their own resources because their wages have been lowered in a number of cases. Who will they turn to? I'm not sure, Madam Chair. It certainly seems that if people are falling upon hard times, they won't be able to turn to their governments, and they won't be able to turn to their own resources because the UCP has worked very hard and very quickly to make sure that neither government nor individuals working in these jobs have the resources that they need to look after themselves and look after the people of the province.

My friend from Lethbridge-West was correct in saying that it is inaccurate to call this act An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. In her comments she touched upon some of the things that the government could do to actually indicate that we are open for business. One of the things that she highlighted was investments in postsecondary education. I want to reiterate the importance of those investments. That's certainly something that we saw as important to diversifying the economy and helping Alberta recover from one of the worst recessions in generations. That's why we increased funding for universities and colleges across the province. It's why we froze tuition, to make sure that people who wanted to go back to school faced lower financial barriers to do so. It's why we increased the number of scholarships and grants that were available to students, so that they had more financial resources to do that.

That's also why we proposed to invest $50 million over five years in tech-related education programs. We had heard clearly from the high-tech sector, who were working in Alberta or wanted to set up shop in Alberta, that access to skilled employees able to go to work in jobs that were available in the high-tech sector was not adequate and that we needed to train more Albertans to be able to go to work in that sector. It's really unfortunate that today in question period the government didn't commit to that education funding that we had committed to, that would lead to a lot of economic diversification in the high-tech sector, lead the high-tech sector to be able to hire people with the skills they need to be able to go to work in that sector. That's something that would truly make Alberta open for business.

Now, Madam Chair, with respect to postsecondary education there are some concerns, of course, that I have with what this legislation does in terms of restricting access to postsecondary education. Now, I knew many students in my time at university who worked construction jobs and worked significant hours of overtime, put in significant overtime hours in the summer while they were going to university, to pay for their schooling. For a very brief period of time students in those situations were able to bank their overtime hours at time and a half, and now the government has taken that time and a half banking away from them. As we've clearly established here during the debate, time is money, and when you're taking time out of students' pockets, you're taking money out of students' pockets, money that could be used, that would be used to further their education in university. By taking away the overtime, it's making it harder for Alberta students to pay for their advanced education, which, of course, will mean that the skills shortage that already exists will not be addressed and will continue to be a problem that plagues a number of sectors, including the high-tech sector.

I did want to raise an issue with respect to the minimum wage, of course, which is related to this legislation. The discriminatory student minimum wage came into effect last week, so now students under the age of 18 are only paid $13 an hour, which means two things, Madam Chair, that students under the age of 18 who are trying to work a job to save up and pay for postsecondary education have to work that many more hours to be able to save for their education, and of course those who are 18 will have to now compete with people who are 17 years old who are making $13 an hour, making it less likely for them to be able to get a job in the first place. That will create a lot of financial stress on young people who are seeking higher education in the province of Alberta or anywhere else, for that matter, because, of course, Albertans go across the country and around the world to pursue higher education when the opportunities present themselves.

Whenever a student's personal financial circumstances fall short of being able to meet the costs of pursuing higher education, the province of Alberta has historically stepped in and provided access to student loans, and now I think the government has unintentionally increased the future demand for student loans in the province of Alberta by making sure that students under the age of 18 can't adequately save up enough money for higher education and those over the age of 18 have to compete that much harder for jobs that would allow them to be able to fund their higher education. That means that that shortfall will fall to the student loan program administered by the province of Alberta.

It was interesting, Madam Chair, to read the annual report for the province of Alberta, that was released last week. One of the items that was listed was the growing student loan portfolio administered by the Department of Advanced Education. In 2018, I believe it was, 2017-2018, the student loan portfolio accounted for approximately 2 and a half billion dollars. In 2018-2019 that grew significantly, to almost $2.9 billion. That's a 13 per cent increase in the student loan portfolio in one year. Of course, related to the growth in student loans is the growth in the cost of covering the interest rates, the growth in the costs of covering defaults, all of those costs associated with providing the student loans to the students of Alberta.

10:10

Now, in addition to that noted increase in the student loan portfolio in the Ministry of Advanced Education, one of the increased expenses unanticipated during the year was the growth in the cost of student loans. There was an additional $25 million that was unaccounted for when the budget was created in 2018 because the student loan portfolio was growing so quickly that we were unable to account for the growth in the costs of carrying all of those student loans. That, Madam Chair, can only be anticipated to grow if the government continues to make it harder for students to be able to earn enough money from their work during school and during the summer breaks to be able to finance the costs of their higher education.

So it's curious to me what tack the members opposite will take in trying to tackle the deficit, trying to get the economy going again, all while making it harder for students to earn a living sufficient enough for them to be able to pay for their higher education and cap the student loan increases in costs. I would encourage the members opposite to maybe give their minimum wage plan a rethink not necessarily with the lens of job creation, since we couldn't convince them that minimum wages don't have a significant effect on job creation for young people, but if only to see it through the lens of what lower wages for youth mean to the bottom line of the province of Alberta because the government has been quite explicit in its intent to eliminate the deficit and reduce the debt, and they won't be able to do that if the student loan portfolio continues to grow at the significant rates that it grew over the last couple of years, Madam Chair.

The other option is probably the one that I expect the government to go down, and that is to both limit the availability of student loans to students and limit their financial ability to earn enough money to pay for themselves and to continue to leave Alberta students in the lurch when it comes to being able to afford a higher education of any kind. Of course, that was the situation that Albertans were in for a number of years under previous Conservative governments. That's why we lagged the entire country in terms of participation in advanced education, and that's one of the reasons that we continue to struggle with this issue of economic diversification, because when we don't have people pursuing higher education at levels high enough, at levels comparable to other jurisdictions in the country, we will continue to be left behind when it comes to developing new industrial sectors, new commercial sectors in the province. We'll continue to be left behind when it comes to innovation and economic diversification outside of the traditional strengths of the Alberta economy.

In relation to that, additional costs that the government is imposing upon itself by cutting the minimum wage and, you know, the knock-on effect of having to increase student loans is, of course, the knock-on effect of accessibility of the Alberta heritage scholarships. Now, many people here in this House are likely familiar with some of the Alberta heritage scholarships. The Alexander Rutherford scholarship is, of course, available to all students who achieve a minimum grade point average in high school, and it's commonly seen as a birthright of Alberta students, that if they achieve that given level of ability in school, they qualify for the Alexander Rutherford scholarship, that they can take and use to pay for higher education at any institution in the world.

Of course, the costs of administering the Alexander Rutherford scholarship are also growing very quickly, Madam Chair. The government hasn't given us any indication of how it plans to maintain scholarships and grants for students who can't otherwise afford to pay for higher education, and it's, as I've said before, taking away, through a number of measures in this bill before us, the ability of students to pay for their own higher education. I hope that the government doesn't decide to cap accessibility of scholarships as well to control its own costs, because, again, we'll be left in the same situation as with the student loan program. If we cap access to those programs, then students won't be able to earn enough money from their minimum wage jobs to be able to pay for their higher education, and they won't be able to access the financial resources through the student loan program or the grant program to be able to pay for it either.

So it's for these reasons, Madam Chair, that I really think it's inappropriate for this bill to be named An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. As my hon. friend from Lethbridge-West indicated, a province that's truly open for business is one that invests in its students and makes sure that its students have ready access to affordable higher education. We can see from this legislation, of course, that we're making it harder for students to be able to earn sufficient wages to be able to pay for their education. We've seen it from other movements that the government has made with respect to corporate tax giveaways and a commitment to eliminating the deficit over three years. I fear that we're also going to see significant reductions in the student loan programs and student scholarships and grants. That means that Alberta will be less open for business than it was four years ago, when we were elected. We'll be cutting off access to students' abilities to receive higher education in this province, which is truly a shame.

With that, Madam Chair, I urge all members to truly consider what a province that can realistically call itself open for business would look like. I hope that members reflect upon the hardships that we're foisting upon the young people of this province in terms of them being able to reach their dreams of pursuing higher education. At least be honest with the people of Alberta and call this An Act to Amend the Employment Standards Act and the Labour Relations Act, and do away with this charade of saying that Alberta is open for business when, in fact, we're not.

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to amendment A2, which is the amendment to change the name of the act from An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business to a more appropriate and descriptive title, which is the employment standards and labour relations statutes amendment act, 2019.

10:20

Given that we've been hearing a lot of instruction about the desire in this House to be more focused on the debate that should be occurring in this House and less on some of the partisan attacks, I would think that the government would want to lead that by actually being more transparent about their act and not using this as an opportunity just to cloud the conversation with a descriptor which is, in fact, not a very accurate descriptor and one that implies things about the previous government that aren't true. Therefore, it leads to conversation in the House which is considered unparliamentary and should not be instigated by the government. Yet, you know, they stand up at one time and ask us to not go down that road, and then they stand up at another time and begin to instigate difficulties, again back to the "do what I say and not what I do" that the government seems to be pretty consistently engaging in over the last little while in this House.

I have a couple of major issues I need to talk about, and I probably will not be able to finish them both in the time that I have available to me right now, so I will stick around the House and stand again to speak to some more later. I would like to take this particular segment of time to talk about one issue which I think is very important, one that, you know, has always been very important to me as previously having had the privilege of serving as the Minister of Indigenous Relations in this province and still being committed to the issues that were addressed to me as Minister of Indigenous Relations by members of the community and the things that they'd like to see happen.

I think that it's important that we look at the name of this bill, which is An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. We then immediately have to look at the question of: is it in fact making Alberta open for business for indigenous people? It's an excellent question for us to be asking. We should always be making decisions in this House that are reflective of the needs of the indigenous community in the province of Alberta. In fact, any act that we do engage in that doesn't seek to understand and address the concerns and the needs of the indigenous population would on some level actually be an undermining of the declaration of the rights of indigenous people, the United Nations declaration, commonly referred to as UNDRIP, in which one of the articles refers to "free, prior and informed consent." In this case, we clearly don't have free, prior, and informed consent in terms of how it may affect indigenous people.

I'm very concerned that this government has not yet, by the way, stood up and declared their support for the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. It concerns me that they're this far into their term without having taken a very clear stance on that, and clearly through their behaviour they are also not engaged in behaviour consistent with that declaration.

The issue at hand for us is whether or not this particular bill, which is apparently to encourage business in the province of Alberta, does so for indigenous people. I can tell you that I'm very concerned about some of the choices this government has made. I think it tells me that while they want to speak out of one side of their mouth on the nature of business, they in fact act more closely for the other side, which is not to support business. In this case, I'm particularly concerned about indigenous businesses.

I noticed, for example, that when this government said, "Oh, we are doing things for indigenous people; we've created this indigenous opportunities corporation and have created this possibility that indigenous people can borrow some billions of dollars, with government backstops, in order to invest in the energy sector," they did not say to the indigenous people, "We would like to support your businesses" and say, "We are going to provide you with the resources that are necessary for those businesses to exist," which they could have done.

This could have been open for indigenous businesses, for example, by talking about resource revenue sharing with the indigenous communities, allowing them the opportunity to benefit from the royalties that are coming off the lands that have been their lands since time immemorial, and they chose not to do that. They didn't create an opportunity for indigenous businesses to avail themselves of the profits from resource revenues, which they could have done. But they chose not to do that, so it isn't supporting businesses in the indigenous community in that way. It's not open for business in that way.

They did announce this indigenous opportunities corporation, but I notice that even in the APTN report on the meeting in which this corporation was announced, Chief Roy Fox of the Kainai First Nation, often referred to as the Blood Tribe, was quoted as saying: we have a 200-megawatt wind farm, and we are proposing another one, another 200 megawatts. End of quote. I think it's very interesting that at that very meeting Chief Fox was saying: we want to be invested in green energies; we have already invested much of our own business energy into green energy, and we'd like to continue to do that. Yet this government, within a few weeks of having had that meeting and promising to participate with the First Nations in creating businesses, without notice, without consultation just cancelled the REP program, that was coming up in the next number of months, that would allow Chief Fox to build his other 200-megawatt wind farm.

It's a big concern for me that he came and said, "The very thing that I'm supporting this for, the thing that I want to do with this, is to build a wind farm," and then two weeks later the government, who says that they're open for business, cancelled the very opportunity to create that business and cancelled the funding on which that was based, through the carbon levy. You can't say that you're open for business and then immediately attack an existing proposal for business because it is a business that you don't happen to support or share.

I notice that in this work that is going on, there's no comment about the fact that one of the most significant and important businesses for the indigenous community had been green businesses. I'm sure that many people in the House have heard me speak about the incredible solar projects that are going on throughout the province. I'm very proud of the fact there are over 30 indigenous communities that have put solar panels up through the money in the indigenous climate leadership program, which, of course, came from the carbon levy, and that many of those communities not only have put up the solar panels, but they have actually begun the process of teaching and training citizens, members of their nations, to become installers and to even start businesses that do this kind of work throughout the province.

I have remarked previously, in the past, how on my early trip in my tenure as Minister of Indigenous Relations I had an opportunity to go to the Montana band, just south of Edmonton, and meet with them about their solar installation project, which, in fact, inspired much of the program that we ultimately put together, and I learned that they had put together an incredible business called Green Arrow. The whole point of the Green Arrow program was to teach people in their community about the installation of solar programs and to build on those programs so that they can not only have jobs in the installation, but they can actually run a business that would derive income from putting installations up in other places throughout the province of Alberta.

This bill does nothing for that. It's wholly inconsistent that the monies that went into that climate leadership program, the indigenous climate leadership program, have been taken away by the cancellation of the carbon levy, and no monies have been put in through this bill to help replace that. Nothing in this bill is going to help small First Nations put together solar programs and businesses like they would like to do.

10:30

I know, for example, that in Maskwacis they continue to wish to build more solar programs. Fortunately, they did receive some monies through the previous government to put together not only solar panels onto the buildings but a one-megawatt solar field, which is going to be opening very soon. I will be very proud to be at that opening and to talk about how the indigenous climate leadership program contributed to that kind of business, which has employed a number of people from the Maskwacis community and will continue to provide income for the Maskwacis community so that they can expand and grow the rest of their businesses.

My concern is that it seems to be that the government has a desire to be open for business but then is acting against it, particularly if it's a business they don't like, if it's a business they don't understand, if it's about saving the planet, if it's about passing the Earth on to our children and grandchildren in a good way. They don't seem to be interested in that, so how can they say that they're open for business? I mean, perhaps if they had labelled it, "Open for the businesses we'd like to pick and choose, that are consistent with our personal value system or the friends that have supported us in the election's value systems," then it might make more sense, but it doesn't even do that, in fact.

What it speaks about instead in this bill is the diminishment of rights of others, the diminishment of the salaries for people who are under the age of 18, the diminishment of people who wish to bank overtime consistent with the rules and regulations across the country, the diminishment of unions to create unions to represent members in terms of their contract negotiations with industry. That's all it talks about. It talks about labour legislation. It talks about those employment conditions, so why not call it a bill about that? Why not call it a bill about employment standards and labour relations? Because you're trying to say something that you're not doing. In fact, you're consistently acting against this with all the other bills that you're putting together.

Now, I look at this, and I think about: what are some of the other businesses that have been started in the province of Alberta by the indigenous community? I look at places like Fort Chip, where the ACFN have put together a business selling groceries because, of course, we know that in northern communities groceries are extremely expensive. I know that a four-litre jug of milk often costs more than $20. So they decided that they would actually create a business that did two things: that not only created for them a business which they could run, and that business would employ their own members, thereby increasing employment in their community, but derive some income so that they could start other businesses in the community. Those are all good things. Fortunately, our indigenous climate leadership program was around to help them with that project because they were able to bring in sophisticated high-tech refrigerators that require much less energy, based on the support that we provided them through the indigenous climate leadership program.

I look at this bill and say: will this bill help the ACFN sell more groceries or run more businesses in Fort Chip? The answer is no. I don't see that. They may be supporting some business, but so far they're not supporting green businesses, and they're not supporting grocery stores. Also a grocery store in Kainai that, again, Chief Fox is very proud of. But I don't see this bill speaking to the issues that are necessary in order for them to build businesses such as grocery stores or perhaps the other businesses that are built in many other communities. Grocery stores, of course, are becoming more common because food is a big issue for communities and being able to sell products at a good cost is something that's fundamentally important to the community. But clearly nobody went to talk to the indigenous community and ask them: would you like to continue these kinds of supports that are available now to ensure that food becomes more available at a reasonable cost in these far afield communities?

I also know, in talking to some of the northern First Nations, that they're interested in other forms of advancement. For example, in the Beaver First Nation in northern Alberta they are very interested in construction and very interested in doing things like building fire roads and doing paving and working closely with the forest industry and so on. But again, I don't see this bill providing them any enhancement. They last received a large Caterpillar machine through the aboriginal business investment fund. I see no addition to the aboriginal investment fund in this bill. I don't see any enhancement to that program, which has demonstrated itself to be extremely effective and has helped to start many First Nations businesses across this province and has really led to some great employment levels. That's all taken away.

What I see is us reducing the number of jobs that are available in industries that are extremely important to First Nations communities, jobs that are about local development, jobs that are about the grocery store, jobs that are about reducing their costs by putting up solar panels, jobs that are about taking care of the forest, which is a huge part of their land, their culture, and their relationship to the Earth. I don't see any of that supported by this particular bill, which apparently is about making Alberta open for business. I can tell you, though, that all of that was available under the previous government. Under the previous government we were open to all those businesses. We worked regularly with the communities to ensure that those businesses got developed. How can you say you're now open for business, implying that you weren't open for business before, when, in fact, the opposite is true, that we did indeed have programs that were effective with one of the populations that has not always had the chance to be successful in our Alberta society?

Here we are actually working with the community that most needs that benefit, that is willing to take advantage of new opportunities in the world's transition toward a greener economy, and instead of supporting those jobs and enhancing those jobs, you're taking those jobs away. I can't imagine, I can't support your calling this bill a bill about making Alberta open for business when, in fact, you're not doing that at all. I would really like this government to take some time to stop this bill and to go and to consult with the indigenous community and to ask them about the types of things that would really work in the indigenous community. What is going to help indigenous businesses to thrive? What kinds of mechanisms are available that would provide job opportunities for individual First Nations members and Métis people?

The Chair: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for — where are you from? — Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Dach: McClung.

The Chair: Edmonton-McClung. What time is it? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. It is your turn to speak.

10:40

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll start now that I've been duly named and identified. I appreciate the opportunity to rise in the House once again to speak to Bill 2 and the amendment to rename the piece of legislation more appropriately, something other than the open for business act. In fact, calling it an open for business act is a misnomer. It is something that even my 84-year-old mother doesn't agree with.

She gets it. In conversations I've had with her, actually, when I visit, she asks what legislation the House is considering, and of course Bill 2 has been debated for a while in this House. It's a very contentious and divisive piece of legislation, and now the name amendment is on the table for debate. You know, I go and review with her what the legislation is all about, and even at her advanced age she reacts almost immediately to some of the things that I tell her it's about. She says: well, what does it do? I say: well, if you're under 18 years of age, it means that you're going to have your wages cut by two bucks an hour. She says: well, son of a — I won't finish her sentence because it would be unparliamentary. But she wasn't tickled with that at all. She didn't think that was very fair. It was instantaneous. There was no second-guessing what her response was. At 84 years old she knew there was an injustice right off the bat.

She said: "Well, how much is that? I mean, if you're looking at an hourly cut of two bucks an hour, how much is that over the course of a year?" I said: "Well, you know, if you're looking to save for university education, Mom, for your grandson, that's going to be about four thousand bucks that somehow his family is going to have to pick up. That $4,000 isn't growing on trees. It means that, you know, Uncle Lorne and Grandma Dach will have to fork over for that." Family members of these individuals, these young people who are having their wages cut by two bucks an hour, are going to have to pick up the slack.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

So open for business has a second side to the coin. By the behaviour of this government it appears that it's a zero-sum game because opening for business means open season on workers, and it's not only the student workers under 18 who are targeted by this legislation, which is so inaptly named. It's pretty much every worker in the province. The government does not seem to view working people and their role as working people as worthy of rights that are afforded working people in many jurisdictions in the world where labour laws are a little more respectful.

I know I've mentioned in this House before how I've experienced a number of the setbacks that this piece of legislation proposes to impose upon workers in Alberta, whether it be in a unionized workforce or a nonunionized labour force. In all these things even an 84-year-old woman at first glance knows the injustice that's inherently involved. When I talked about the wage differential, she really just couldn't fathom that just because her grandson happened to be under 18, he or she would earn less than the person they were working beside who happened to be over the age of 18 doing the same work.

In the same vein, when I told her that if you were going to be serving liquor as part of your occupation, your wage would be lower because it was expected you'd be making up the difference in tips and hustling for tips rather than being able to rely on a wage that paid you fairly, pitting you against your other employees in a competition for tips that didn't respect the fact that you went to work and should be paid by an employer and shouldn't be relying upon the charity of your customers to determine what you ended up earning at the end of the day.

We often say that the government is an arbiter between competing interests, but with the naming of the original bill, the open for business act, I'm wondering if the government wasn't very plainly showing their bias and indicating to Albertans quite clearly that they're really not that arbiter. They're not that go-between for competing interests who will look at reacting fairly to what's necessary and just and coming down at some middle ground. What they're doing in this particular case is very clearly stating that workers are less valued by them. They definitely side with businesses owners, seeing that as the Holy Grail for government arbitration, that businesses come out on top and working people are merely pawns in the game.

It's a sad state of affairs when a government doesn't value the humanity that elects them. It's a really sad day when you see the progress that had been made in the previous government, where the government finally, after decades of labour legislation that stagnated, stood up for hard-working Albertans. We made sure that Albertans had modern workplace laws that respected working people and set modern standards and ensured fair treatment, and there was a breath of fresh air in labour circles and throughout the workplace, knowing that there was actual balance coming back to the arbitration between competing interests that government was supposed to play a leading role in.

It wasn't that we were tilting the balance in favour of working people. It was that we were rebalancing the whole scope of labour relations in the province, meaning that both sides had to be respected, meaning that individuals who worked for a living and provided their labour to an employer would be treated fairly. After decades of inaction hard-working Albertans finally had the same rights and benefits as other Canadians. We followed through on our promise to phase in a minimum $15 wage so people didn't have to go from their jobs to the food bank. Even that is not a true living wage in our major cities of Edmonton and Calgary, which would be closer to $17 to $18 an hour. However, we set the minimum wage at $15 an hour to get as close as possible to a living wage in the economic times that we're in even though we'd hoped to do even more.

That sent a message to the rest of the province, the people working in this province, to young people who were joining the workforce that they were valued, that they meant something to the government that represented them. To now look at the situation where it's reversed and those people who were looking forward to being able to put together maybe in the course of a working summer $6,000 of savings, they're going to end up with maybe a thousand dollars less over the summer for their university tuition, living expenses. That is something that is a hard reality to take. I'll never forget my mom's jaw dropping and her eyes gaping open wide when she heard that the two bucks an hour was going to cost the average student about $4,000 a year. Knowing how hard it is to save that kind of money for the average family to put somebody through school, you don't want to end up with, if you can avoid it, huge student loans or family debt.

10:50

Here we have the government talking about how they support Alberta families, how individual families are the bottom line, and how they value people, but this is a direct attack on those people that they claim to value so highly. Believe me, those people, particularly those who are 16, 17 years old right now and in high school, will express themselves within the next two years if they're not already doing so now. I've had calls, and I've talked with students in high schools who are pretty angry about being disrespected in this way after finally having a government that brought to light the holes in the labour legislation and did something to rectify them, including raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour. To have their knees chopped off from underneath them is something that these young people are not going to easily forget.

Then to further disrespect students by calling it the employment creation wage, it's, like, thank you very much for your contribution to the Alberta balanced budget effort that we're undertaking, but guess what? You're going to pay for it. You can't vote right now, but this is your introduction to politics 101 in Alberta. We're going to cut your wages by two bucks an hour, and it's going to cost you 4,000 bucks over the course of a year. You're going to end up having to come up with the shortfall to pay for your university. You're going to have a huge debt or bigger debt than you otherwise would have. You're either going to pay that off yourself, or somehow your family member is going to end up paying for it. We don't value you, and we think that we're going to incentivize businesses to hire more people because of the fact that they have a lower wage rate when, in fact, we know that that's not going to happen.

It's a cynical effort on the part of the government to buy favour with the business community, but, Mr. Chair, the business community isn't along for the ride in its entirety. The new $13 an hour job-creation wage for students isn't something that's being universally adopted by employers. There are over 110 employers who've registered and pledged that they're not going to be adopting the new wage rate policy. They're going to be maintaining and pledging to maintain the $15 an hour wage. There's a growing count of businesses that are joining this pledge to stand firm in their belief that this was an unfair and unjust attack on labour and youth labour in particular.

The very individuals, the very people that this government purports to be responding to, small businesses in particular, a growing number of them are saying: "Uh-uh. Not on the backs of our young people. This is not the way we want to go. This is not something we feel proud to endorse, and we're not going to participate in it." It'll be interesting to watch and see how many more businesses decide to make that pledge and join and put their name on that website to say: "No. We're not sharing the sentiment of this government. We don't believe that we have to go backwards in labour legislation. We've made strides forward. Going back in time on this particular issue is not something that we're comfortable doing. We're in fact ashamed to pass along the government's reduction in wages, and we're not going to participate."

Overtime is another big issue that my mother quickly grasped when she asked what this bill did. Over a cup of tea I explained to her that if you're earning overtime at time and a half, now the employer has the right to enter into an agreement, let's say, and pay you straight time only for the hours that you've worked. Once again she scratched her head and wondered: "What in the world? Why would they want to do that? It's not fair. Like, what did those people do to deserve this type of legislation from a government that's supposed to be serving them?" At 84 years old her reaction was swift and immediate, total disgust. I was actually pretty impressed with how astute and how quick to argue against these changes she was when I mentioned them one by one as I went through them. She's shared reasonable political interest with me over the years. I'm not always on the same track, but when it comes to justice and fairness, we're pretty much on the same side.

I was pretty proud of her reactions. Like I said, we don't always see eye to eye, but this struck her as patently unfair, whereby – you know, she remembered the days when I worked as a rig worker on a service rig. There was no choice in the matter back then. Labour laws were even weaker in the '80s, and if indeed the toolpush said that you're working 17 hours a day, you work 17 hours until the pipe stand was empty and the job was done or the rig was moved. If you didn't like it, somebody else was standing in line for the job. But those straight time hours cost everybody on that rig tens of thousands of dollars even at seven bucks an hour back then. I know how angry I was that this could happen in my Alberta, in the place that I grew up in and called home, and thought: "These guys on these rigs, they're making a pretty good dollar. They're very profitable, yet they see fit to dig into our pockets."

It seems as though some sentiments haven't changed. Philosophically this Conservative Party is still in the same mindset to pick the pockets of working people. They think they can do so with impunity, but I believe very firmly that they are misjudging Albertans. When these individuals who were affected by this legislation have the opportunity to express themselves at the ballot box next time, this government will find out just how much they disagree with being treated as less than first-class citizens, that hundreds of thousands of dollars for people going above and beyond in the workplace is out of their pockets. If you're an oil and gas worker making average pay putting in 10 overtime hours every week on a 12-week project, that's 120 hours in paid time. The difference between banking that pay at time and a half pay versus straight time is over $2,500. That's not small potatoes. That's significant money. You will see that reaction from individuals who are having that money picked from their pocket at the ballot box.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

That's not necessarily the reason we're so determined to make our voices heard against this piece of legislation, against the name of the bill as well as the bill itself. It's because we absolutely are committed to supporting those Albertans who every day go out and work honestly for a living serving an employer, whether it be in the service industry or the oil patch. Whatever type of work they're doing, the expectation is in this day and age in Alberta that you're going to be treated fairly, with dignity, with respect. You're not going to be told that you're a second-class citizen and have your wages rolled back as a job-creation project that's going to help you in the end. A patronizing pat on the back.

11:00

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to my colleagues for their thoughtful debate this evening as we consider what I think is a very reasonable and not political title at all. If we wanted to give it a political title, we would have said: the pick-your-pockets bill. That's the title we've used to frame this and the response to the government saying that this is about being open for business.

We do know, Madam Chair, that no other province in Canada has the rules that are being proposed in this legislation, particularly the rules around overtime. Just before we came back this evening, I snuck out for a little bit. I was at a grocery store, and I said to the cashier, "How long have you been here?" She said, "A long time, but, hey, I'm getting overtime." Right? We all know people for whom that little extra incentive of getting that time and a half instead of getting straight time makes the long shift a little bit less long when it comes to your overall compensation, giving you a better outlook on the work conditions or the potential length of your day.

This is what one of the main attacks in this bill is on working people. By simply proposing that we name it about amending the act that it actually amends rather than putting a spin on it one way or the other, I think that that is a fair and reasonable middle ground, that I often hear members opposite say that they aspire for us to find.

What does that pick-your-pockets bill with regard to forcing straight time on workers instead of time and a half equate to? Well, just in the oil and gas sector alone, 27 per cent of oil and gas workers in our province, in Alberta, according to the last statistics that we were able to gather, earned overtime, and on average it was about $320 a week. So when members talk about a desire to, you know, embolden the free market and create more opportunities for people to achieve the fullness that is possible through our natural resources, I would say that taking away the overtime premium from workers does not do that. I would say that it does the opposite.

Then what other members will often say is: well, this will create an advantage for us, you know, over other jurisdictions. Because we're going to be paying everyone here less on their overtime, employers will pick up their capital, and they'll come here and set up shop. Well, if that were the case, before we brought Alberta in line with every other province in the country a year and a half ago, Alberta would have had every business, every employer, every opportunity in Canada, and there would have been nobody setting up shop in Ontario or Saskatchewan or B.C. or Manitoba or Quebec or Newfoundland or Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia or New Brunswick because we had this, quote, advantage of paying straight time instead of paying time and a half.

We've only very recently caught up to the rest of the country by bringing in through legislation the obligation to do this. Many work sites will have negotiated contracts. I know that with the bad-faith bargaining bill, that spoke specifically to public-sector workers and breaking their collective agreements and their right to either sit down at the table again or to enter into arbitration. So this isn't about them. They have collective agreements that presumably give them time and a half, unless that's something else that could be imposed, I guess, through that bill. I hadn't thought about that. Let's hope that that isn't the intention of that bill, attacking overtime on those collective agreements as well.

This is about nonorganized labour, I'd say, primarily, the move from time and a half, that premium, to simply straight time, which, again, is about $320 a week, not an inconsequential amount for the average oil and gas worker in the industry, the 27 per cent who are earning overtime on a regular basis. Certainly, I would say that in no way does the current bill create a climate that makes us more open for business or slightly more open. I think that it is simply an attack on the work that we achieved in recent years to bring us in line with the rest of the country.

Other areas that it attacks: changing pay for general holiday pay and overtime pay, returning to previous rules where general holiday and banked overtime have been in place for a few years here and bringing in requirements like that employees must work 30 days in the last 12 months before a general holiday in order to qualify for general holiday pay. Well, we know that there are workers who are only hired during those peak times. We know that there are workers in greenhouses all across our province who probably worked on Canada Day and that they themselves wouldn't be entitled to this should this change go through. That requirement of having to work 30 days in the last 12 months when you're a seasonal worker essentially eliminates the ability for seasonal workers to be recognized for working on stat holidays.

Certainly, I believe that stat holidays are there for a reason, not just for long-term employees or permanent employees. I think they're there because we all believe in the concept of celebrating our nation for Canada Day, for example. We all believe that people should have the opportunity to embrace the democracy that we have here and the work that we've achieved over the last 152 years with regard to that democracy and that we are on a path to being able to celebrate with one another. For those who are working on those days – there are some people who work, absolutely. I can think of many businesses in the riding I represent that are open on those days. For them not being with their families and for them not participating in celebrating this general holiday, they deserve a premium, in my opinion, to be paid a little bit extra for the hard work that they do.

I know there were people working on these Leg. Grounds. Even though it was raining yesterday, there were a lot of people down here at the Legislature. That's their tradition. They come here every year. They participate in the activities on the grounds. Many of them were indoors yesterday, which means that there were even more people probably working on keeping this building in tip-top shape, and I think they deserve a premium when it comes to the work that they do on that holiday.

I don't think the requirement to have worked 30 days in the 12 months before and that, well, maybe they want to work the extra overtime for straight time – I don't think that that's a fair request to put on workers. I think most of the time workers will say yes when the boss asks them to do something. I think that's generally the attitude that a lot of folks have. I think it's up to government to make sure that we set up fair conditions so that bosses ask them to do fair things. I think that that's fair and reasonable.

The other piece that I want to mention is that if a holiday falls on a day that's not normally worked, a day when the employee would not normally have worked on that holiday, then they're not entitled to that pay either. For employees, again, general holiday pay and banked overtime changes would take effect on September 1, 2019, so not long from now. This is something that could, I think, have significant impacts on a lot of families. I know a lot of people who were paying attention during the campaign heard the now government talk a lot about job creation, and we still haven't seen the fruits of those promises made during the election.

I also want to talk a little bit about labour relations and changes to the code. Again, people will talk about restoring that mandatory secret ballot. I know of some work sites that are very small, some work sites where there is even one employee who wanted to form or wanted to be affiliated with a union. To say that you need a 90-day period for the union to provide evidence of the employees' support for certification I think is disrespectful to that one worker or maybe three or four workers, who can have a simple conversation, decide they want to organize, sign their cards, and be part of a union, which is their democratic right. I think that requiring this mandatory 90-day period is not beneficial to respecting people's choice. If there isn't a substantial majority – I believe it was about two-thirds that was set forward in the legislation that's now being proposed to be amended – then there would still be a period to have a secret ballot and the requirement for such, but slowing down the process for employees who have clearly made their voice and their position known I think is not useful for those workers or for the employer either, to be frank.

Also, strengthening the rules for corporate workplace complaints when these complaints involve multiple bodies such as the Human Rights Commission and the Labour Relations Board: okay. Labour relations changes would come into effect upon receiving royal assent: okay. These are all amendments to the act, which is why I think it's very reasonable to have the act actually named as such rather than named as something that it isn't. Even according to their own projections from their platform, I don't think these are considered as being significant in terms of driving up the numbers that are being proposed.

11:10

The other thing that we've talked about considerably and which I know has already actually been enacted on June 26 was the rollback for youth workers, those under the age of 18 for whom the new minimum wage became automatically $13. I know there are a lot of questions in the community from young workers about what that's going to mean on their next paycheque, and I've talked to some who've said: "I'm not going to ask my boss because I don't want to raise their awareness, but I'd like to know if I'm going to be making $15 or if I'm going to be making $13. They haven't told me. I know that the law has just changed, but I'm not going to bring it up because I don't want to cost myself a toonie every hour for asking and wanting to be able to plan."

This brings me back to the point raised by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I remember being at a few conventions with him where we were discussing party policy around postsecondary, tuition fees precisely. As you know, members, we brought in – and it was supported, I think, unanimously at the time by the Official Opposition and our government – a bill to index tuition to inflation, a fair and reasonable policy.

It was members of the NDYA, our youth caucus, who said: "Rather than just indexing it to inflation and because people might earn a lot more money in sectors that we aren't able to work in, wouldn't it be more fair and more reasonable to have it tied to the minimum wage? Most university students, college students, technical institute students can get a minimum wage job in the summer, and under the presumption that you're working 40 hours a week, shouldn't there be some sort of formula that assumes that while maybe you'll have to borrow for your cost of living or borrow for accommodations and those types of things, you'd be able to earn enough money in the summer to cover off your tuition?" I thought: fair and reasonable point.

I don't think that we made that policy change, but I think it brings about a very good question about affordability and the relationship between the minimum wage and the things that we all aspire for our families to achieve. Some of you may have spent some time listening to the Democrat nominees for President over the last week. I know that I have, and when I hear them talking about the attainability of the American dream, I think that language speaks to a lot of people in North America. I think it speaks to my family, who definitely wanted me, when growing up, to have the opportunity to achieve the fullest in postsecondary.

I know that my parents both went to university. I said to my mom, "How did you decide to become a teacher?" She said: "I didn't like blood, so I wasn't going to be a nurse, so that meant I was going to be a teacher." My dad said that he needed to go to a program where he could start making money within one year. Fortunately, there was one-year teachers' college at the time, and over many, many years he was able to achieve a degree and then a postgraduate certificate as well in leadership. But that was only possible because he got in and got out quickly. I am glad that both of them had careers that they loved and that they, I would say, created a lot of positive change in our world because of their ending up in those professions. But I think that it would be a more just answer for all if they had said: because I really wanted to be a teacher, because I woke up and knew that this was a calling that I could make a difference in. But it was really about that one-year in and out to start making money.

I worry that with attacks on youth, whether it be attacking their minimum wage or attacking their rights to form support groups and other initiatives or bringing in opportunities for extreme groups to be spreading hate on campus, we're limiting opportunities for our youth to choose careers that they feel inspired by. Again, I'm really glad that it worked out for them, and I think that it worked out for me, but that's probably why they put so much support behind me going to postsecondary when I was young. Even though I grew up in a rural community and it would mean I'd have to move away, it was a priority for them that I go to school and I be in school until I was able to choose a career that I was really excited about.

I think that putting these increased pressures on youth by cutting their wages, particularly the wages for youth who are in school, because, again, there's that escape clause, that if you're not in school or if you say that you're not in school, you can get paid $2 more an hour, is going to be counter to what I know the goals of our government were and what I believe were the goals of Premier Hancock when he was Education minister and many others who did the work behind Inspiring Ed in the first place, which was around, as I recall the consultations, going out and talking to those who the school system hadn't well served and finding ways that the system could be changed to meet the needs of learners. Anywhere, anyplace, any time? Any pace, anyplace, any time? I forget the specific mantra. But it really was around taking the opportunity to learn and taking away the barriers that existed for it. Again, through this legislation and through its subsequent regulations, what we're doing is putting more barriers in place to make it harder for people to achieve the postsecondary that they aspire to.

Those are things that I think are counter to the important role of government in terms of creating an opportunity for – again, what the Democratic nominees for President have been talking about is that opportunity to live the full American dream, whatever that looks like for those families. I'd say that those are the values that I think many of us are here to help achieve as well. I think there are some bills where we start to try to chip away at that, right?

I think of the bill that was brought forward around trying to streamline and make more efficient the registration process with regulatory colleges. When I think about the motivation that I hope is behind that bill, I think it's about creating opportunities for people to achieve their potential and work in the career path of their choosing, especially ones that they've already been working in in other jurisdictions, which gave them the points to come here in the first place. Now, those points, of course, don't necessarily mean that they work in that field that they were recruited to come to Canada for, because they had earned those points through the immigration process. So this bill really is counter, I think, to some of the initiatives that are being raised in other bills.

The other one that I want to highlight again is the bill around red tape and the fact that there's a website being created to say, "Hey, send in your great ideas on how to cut red tape," and at the same time there are bills coming forward like this that are going to create more red tape. How do we make sure that we aren't just creating work on one side of the desk to shove over to the new associate minister on the other side of the desk?

Back to that oil and gas worker who is putting in overtime: I think we said 320 bucks a week on average. If you're an oil and gas worker making average pay, putting in about 10 hours every week in overtime on a 12-week project, that's 120 hours of paid overtime or paid time off. The difference between banking that pay at time and a half and straight pay is over $2,500. I know that for a lot of people that might be the cost to register your kids in summer camps for the whole summer or the cost to pay for hockey or the cost of, you know, making sure that your family gets to go on a vacation to one of our great provincial or national parks right here within the province, or it could actually be the difference in you making your mortgage payment or not.

These are significant differences for people's lives, and I think that we shouldn't be trying to pad or sugar-coat the legislative change. I think that if people want to call it what it is, an amendment act to an existing piece of legislation, that is at least more forthright and less political, to be frank. If this is straight up about public policy and making public policy amendments to existing legislation, let's call it that.

There's also the piece around discussions – and I don't believe it's in this bill, but we know that it's been discussed before by this government, probably before they were government. That was around: if we already have two minimum wages – now we're going to have a minimum wage for people over 18 and a minimum wage for people under 18 – where do we stop? Do we bring in other ...

11:20

The Chair: Are there any other members to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to address this amendment to rename An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, to strike that out and talk about it as the Employment Standards and Labour Relations Statutes Amendment Act, 2019. The reason why it's important to do that – and I articulated this earlier this evening, and I'm certainly prepared to do it again when I get another opportunity to speak to this act, Bill 2 – is because it's more clear and it's more germane to call it by what is actually located within the act than to come up with some kind of selling point for, I guess, the greater population of Alberta to say: oh, we're open for business.

You know, I had the opportunity, while I was listening to many of my colleagues here make their points, that were helpful for me to think about and, I'm sure, all members of the House, to look at the Measuring Up document, that's in our consolidated annual financial report of 2018-19, that the government of Alberta has just put out and that really reflects on the work of the previous NDP government and its efforts to return to balance and to achieve the outcomes that we set out. There are a number of measures in this, Madam Chair, that I think bear some talking about, especially when we're talking about a new act to make Alberta open for business and just some of strategic priority 1, which was talking about diversifying the economy. I think any review of – and I'd urge all members of the House to review the Measuring Up document. The various ministries put a lot of time into identifying the outcomes they want to measure to see if government is achieving the goals it set out.

There are various programs talked about here. For instance, the petrochemicals diversification program, round 2, was identified in the Measuring Up document, which talked about its outcomes relative to the two companies that have taken up $150 million in royalty credits to develop an industry that, frankly, had not happened in this province because of the previous PC government's reliance on one industry for the most part, and that's the oil and gas industry and sector in this province. While we know that agriculture and tourism are also very important, I would argue that the PC governments past really just hung their hat on the oil and gas sector. When it did well, Albertans did well and government did well, and when it didn't, when there were the usual downturns as a result of external criteria going on in the world, then of course the oil and gas sector did badly. The petrochemicals diversification program, round 2, is a way to get more value out of the oil and gas sector and to have a steady revenue return rate.

Other parts that we worked on to diversify the economy as a government. The Alberta investor tax credit: that achieved 150 Alberta-based small and medium-sized enterprises being invested in by the venture capital corporation, and 1,850 investors and seven VCCs took part in that. That's really a way for Albertans to show their commitment to business in this province and to give it a leg-up with capital to do better. The capital investment tax credit is another program that was getting off the ground. We had seen that get promoted, and it was supported as well. The interactive digital media tax credit: that was another one where we worked to show that Alberta was diversifying businesses. Of course, there were other programs like that. Then if you flip and look at the outcomes of those different measures, I can tell you that the previous government achieved their targets in all of those areas, when you scan the work on pages 84 and 85 of the Measuring Up document.

That's, I think, a better way to go, Madam Chair, than to look at the various ways that what we call the pick-your-pockets bill will impact Albertans. Of course, we know that it'll impact the youth and student wage differential. A liquor service differential wage was put on hold, but there are studies to probably bring that in at some point in time. We don't think that those are the ways to go. That's why we want to make sure that Employment Standards and Labour Relations Statutes Amendment Act actually is put on this bill, so that people know what's in it.

You know, the reason for doing all these things to diversify the economy, to bring more steady revenues in is to address the programs and services Albertans require. That's the second aspect or second part of priority 2 of the Measuring Up document, which looks at performance measures and indicators around the ability of government to deliver the services that it commits to deliver.

I'll get into those in a second, but I just wanted to say that under the previous government gross domestic product in this province went up after two years of recession – of course, we know that '15 and '16 were that – but it bounced back at 3.4 per cent in 2017 and stayed at 1.8 per cent in 2018. Of course, 2019 is not finished yet, but we know that it's a challenging one for this province. It looks like it's going to be around zero or just below zero GDP. That's not on this side, Madam Chair. It's on the other side in terms of their activities that will take $4.5 billion out of the government revenues in the very near future.

I just want to focus a little bit on performance measures that I think, if you relate them back to the bill that the government has before us and our amendment to change that name, would be harmed if the government followed through with this bill. That's around, for instance, access to continuing care spaces, and I'm proud to say that 58 per cent of people who wanted to access continuing care did so within 30 days, so just about 6 in 10 people got into their space within 30 days. That's an improvement, Madam Chair, and likely an improvement over where the Conservative governments were in the past. I see it is.

You know, I don't want to leave off without talking about returning to balance and that strategic priority. Obviously, this whole bill is predicated on bringing in more government revenues as a result of more business being generated, more workers paying personal income tax, more businesses being located here and spending money, and corporate income tax going up. I just want to mention that our priorities under returning to balance, including sustainable operating spending growth – this is something I'm incredibly proud of with the previous Notley government. We were able to bring spending growth down from – and I've said it many times here in the past, and members of previous government, opposition will remember me talking about the sawtooth, jagged operational increases to operating spending growth and then the drops when the revenue dropped in this province, Madam Chair. We were able to flatten that out, as you can see on page 92, and bring that down to 3.4 per cent in our final year of operational spending growth.

We did that because of lower than expected spending in the Ministry of Health. I'm so proud of the former Minister of Health, who was able to constrain health spending to 3.3 per cent from the previous year, growth of 3.3 per cent, where previous PC governments were at 6 per cent spending growth, year over year over year, every year. We were able to constrain that with new pricing agreements, with generic drugs, with a new pharmacy agreement, and work to recover more money.

11:30

The really great thing I want to talk about is the provincial financial wealth ranking, which is number one for Alberta and has been the whole of our term. I think the Premier kind of talked about it, but he talked about it differently than it's talked about here. I think he talked about Alberta's debt per capita, and that's a kind of fast and dirty way of getting away with something that really should have been talked about as: Alberta's net debt was $6,450 per capita, the lowest among provinces and about one-third of the 10-province average of $18,000 per capita.

So what we're hearing from the Premier is different than what we're reading in the Measuring Up document, namely that Alberta's net debt per capita was the lowest amongst all provinces. But regularly we hear from the other side that it's unsustainable and we need to – and I think they're softening Albertans up for austerity measures that are coming as a result of the Blue Ribbon Panel, as a result of their giving away money to corporations. That doesn't have to happen because when we look at the interprovincial tax comparisons, Madam Chair, we can see that Alberta has the lowest overall taxes amongst provinces in Canada, with no sales tax, no health premium, and no payroll tax.

I would argue that our amended title for Bill 2 is a lot more accurate than what we're seeing here because what we'll see with An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business is that our provincial financial wealth ranking will drop. We'll see our interprovincial tax comparisons, well, probably stay number one, but they're number one right now, Madam Chair. We will see our operating spending growth – well, that's debatable about where that's going to go. I don't think the austerity will make very many Albertans happy, and if we had a performance measure that talked about the satisfaction of Albertans with regard to austerity measures, like we're finding in Ontario as a result of the Ford government changes there, many, many, many – personal popularity aside for Premier Ford. Just the satisfaction of Ontarians with that government, if that were a performance measure here, as I'm suggesting perhaps it should be in the future, we'll see that drop significantly.

Madam Chair, the performance measures that are in the Measuring Up document really speak to the good work that was done by the previous government and perhaps the challenges that are going to be here as a result of this government's bill, that rightly should be renamed the Employment Standards and Labour Relations Statutes Amendment Act, 2019. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Madam Chair, fascinating progress so far. I'd like to move to rise and report progress on Bill 2. I believe that's the only bill we've talked about in committee today, but I could stand to be corrected.

The Chair: I believe you are correct, Mr. Government House Leader.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: All those opposed, please say no. Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. First, I would like to rise and say that pursuant to Standing Order 3(1.2) I would like to advise the Assembly that there will be no morning sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, July 3, 2019.

Then I would like to move for unanimous consent to go to one-minute bells for the remainder of the evening, both in and out of committee.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I will call the committee to order.

Bill 2 An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business (continued)

The Chair: We are on amendment A2. Are there any comments or questions?

All right. I'll call the question on amendment A2 as proposed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:37 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

For the motion:

Bilous	Gray	Phillips
Ceci	Hoffman	Renaud
Dach	Irwin	Schmidt
Feehan	Notley	Shepherd

11:40

Against the motion:

Aheer	Lovely	Sawhney
Amery	Luan	Schow
Barnes	Madu	Schulz
Dreeshen	Neudorf	Schweitzer
Fir	Nixon, Jason	Sigurdson, R.J.
Glasgo	Nixon, Jeremy	Singh
Hanson	Orr	Smith
Horner	Rehn	Stephan
Hunter	Rosin	Walker
Loewen	Rowswell	Wilson

Totals:	For – 12	Against – 30
---------	----------	--------------

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We are now back on the main bill. Are there any comments or questions or amendments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm disappointed that the government members were not convinced by our arguments to retitle the bill. But I am certain that I have an amendment that you will all feel compelled to support, so I would like to propose this amendment. I have the original and the copies, and I will give that a moment.

The Chair: Wonderful. Thank you, hon. member.

This will be known as amendment A3. Hon. member, please continue.

Ms Gray: Thank you. Madam Chair, fellow members of the Legislature, as we have titled many other things, this amendment has its own title. This is the Save Christmas Amendment.

I have spoken at length about the changes in Bill 2 to statutory holiday pay, about the fact that yesterday we were all at Canada Day barbecues talking to people, some of whom were getting maybe some time off later or a little bit of extra pay because it was a stat holiday. But after Bill 2 that will not happen for them. That is part of the changes here.

The reason that it was in your platform and that as a government you moved that forward was because of very strong voices from the restaurant lobbyists, particularly because so many stat holidays fall on Mondays, days that restaurants are typically closed. But nobody has asked you to not pay people on Christmas. Christmas will only fall on a Monday once out of seven years. Christmas will only fall on a weekend twice out of seven years. There are leap years in there. That may not be entirely accurate, but roughly Christmas is usually a working day, and when it is not, all Albertans, just like all Canadians, deserve to get the value of that statutory holiday, either in a little bit of time off or a little bit of extra pay.

In this amendment I am asking you to vote for Christmas. Every Albertan deserves Christmas and deserves stat holiday recognition for Christmas. This will not upset those restaurateurs because none of them were asking you to take away Christmas from their employees. They were asking for a particular Monday problem, which remains solved with the changes in Bill 2. What this amendment does is that it makes sure that in that 2022 year, which I've talked about, when Christmas falls on a weekend, there aren't numbers of Albertans who did not get time off with family or a little bit of that holiday pay, which every other Canadian is getting.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

Please let me remind everyone, Mr. Chair, that Alberta, with the changes in Bill 2, will be the only jurisdiction where working people may not get a benefit from stat holiday pay. It's something, in my mind, we had fixed when we brought Alberta's employment standards up to that kind of mainstream Canadian standard. Bill 2 rolls that back.

What this amendment does is that it saves Christmas, and it makes sure that Christmas will always be considered a stat holiday. Whether it falls on a weekend or a weekday, whether it falls on a Thursday or a Monday, Christmas will be protected. Just a few question periods ago I was quoting the old Christmas fable, A Christmas Carol: it is sometimes good to be children but always at Christmas. That is the amendment that I have before you because the idea that some Albertans will not get stat holidays hurts my heart. The idea that some Albertans won't get Christmas hurts my heart. This is why I'm asking you to vote for this amendment. Very clearly it's an easy-to-read amendment. It simply says:

For the purposes of this Division, and notwithstanding section 27, Christmas Day shall be deemed to be a day that would normally have been a work day for an employee.

All this does is that it treats a single day, Christmas Day, as always being considered a workday no matter which day of the week it falls on. I'll remind you again that it's only going to fall on a weekend 2 out of every 7 years. This is not a big hardship on companies.

This is making sure that stat holiday pay that every other jurisdiction provides is given to workers in Alberta on Christmas. I can tell you from talking to workers – and I believe I've mentioned this during our Bill 2 debates at various phases – the workers who rely on something like stat holiday pay for Christmas are some of our lowest paid, some of our most vulnerable workers, and as your minister has pointed out, the changes in Bill 2 change the minimum standard. Lots of employers can, will, and do better than the minimum, but the minimum is there as a floor to catch the people who need it most.

That is why I've proposed this amendment here today: to save Christmas, to make sure that we always have that statutory holiday. We know that in 2022 Christmas and New Year's Day are both going to fall on weekends and there will be people who work office-type jobs Monday to Friday, 9 to 5, who will get no benefit for statutory holidays happening in that year. We know this because it's happened in the past. It's how the rules used to be. I know from first-hand experience that that happened to Albertans, and I don't want to see that happen again.

I certainly hope that all members will genuinely consider this save-Christmas amendment because it is put forward with our constituents in mind. I don't believe that there is a good reason to not support this amendment given the other changes in Bill 2 are responding to the concerns we've heard from restaurateurs, where stat holidays falling on Mondays and restaurants being closed on Mondays caused consternation and an additional discussion. Here we are simply making sure that Christmas Day will always be deemed a day that would normally have been worked. What that means is that even if somebody wasn't scheduled to work, it's still considered a stat holiday for them, and I would remind this House again: this is how it works in every other province. This is my save-Christmas amendment that I hope all members of the government caucus will give due consideration to, and I appreciate you listening to my arguments. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Members, any other speakers to amendment A3? Recognizing the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Irwin: Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

The Acting Chair: Highlands. That's okay.

Member Irwin: Perfect. No problem.

I'm pleased to stand in favour of this amendment, and I very much appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for her strong, impactful, impassioned defence of Christmas.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

You know, I'm proud to be able to stand in support of saving Christmas. My own father actually worked in oil and gas in rural Alberta for many, many years. Actually, for nearly 40 years he worked up in the Swan Hills area of northern Alberta, and in his work he missed a lot of family holidays. He missed a lot of Christmases, and growing up that had an impact for sure. Like many Albertans, he worked and continues to work very hard and had to make a lot of sacrifices. I think about people like him, and I think about all the other hard-working Albertans that do the same. You know, it made a huge difference for our family, particularly when my mom wasn't working, like, we needed that extra pay from Christmas. Every holiday made a difference.

11:50

You know, this is, I think, one of those issues about fairness and about equality and what our values are here, and I really think, to echo the member, this is sort of a no-brainer, and I'd urge the members opposite to think about this, to think about the fairness side of things, and to think as well about what other provinces do. We know that by moving forward with this component of Bill 2, we will not be in step with other provinces, other jurisdictions, and I think it's important we consider that because, again, if you think about somebody working in Lloydminster, for instance, gosh, they'd be hoping they're on the Saskatchewan side, that's for sure.

I'm not going to speak about this too much, but I do urge you to think about the personal impact. Think about those hard-working Albertans like my own father and like many others who sacrifice a lot to keep our economy going. I just think this is one where the members opposite can give a little because this will be a win for you; this will be a win for Albertans. It makes sense. I will end on that, and I just will urge the members opposite to not be Scrooges and to please save Christmas.

The Chair: Any other speakers on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to speak to this amendment. I think it's a good one. I think it's an important one. I think my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has raised some good points here.

We've had the chance to talk quite a bit on this bill about the kinds of effects this is going to have on Albertans, different aspects. We've talked a lot about the challenges that some individuals in this province face, particularly lower income families. You know, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was just sharing about her own experience and, indeed, I know for myself, this is something that I have thought about a fair amount.

I've had the honour of being part of the stewardship round-table with an organization called EndPovertyEdmonton, an initiative started by the city of Edmonton that's now sort of become its own independent entity but working to end poverty within our city within a generation, and on that stewardship round-table having the opportunity to talk with a number of people who have been focused on the area of poverty reduction.

You know, one of the things, Madam Chair, is that we recognize that folks who are living in poverty, folks who have been struggling in lower income face a number of barriers, a number of stresses that make it very difficult for them to find their way out. With that, we know, comes severe emotional and mental stress. I know from my own experience having gone through some periods in my life where I was very low income as I struggled with my health and as I was going back to school and other things, and I remember the incredible stress there could be from one month to the next, when I wasn't sure if I was going to have enough to cover those bills. That's something that can eat away at you, that can tire you out.

To top that off, for many of these families and these individuals, then, they're working multiple jobs; they're trying to look after their kids; they've got all these other things going on. That means that for them having a day off, having a true holiday is an incredibly rare thing, in part because often they can't afford to take that day off. They can't afford to go a day without pay. Of course, for many of these individuals, they're going to be working in precisely the kinds of jobs that we're talking about and in some cases the kinds of businesses that were lobbying this government for the changes that they're bringing forward in this bill, individuals that are working in the restaurant industry or in retail or other aspects of the service industry.

Now, we have seen that this government is intent on moving forward with these changes. We've stood and we've made our arguments. We've tried to convince them to make some changes, but so far they've been resistant. They insist they're going to go full steam ahead. Fair enough, but this is one small thing that we could do to make life a little bit easier and a little bit better for these individuals, to give them one day a year, that one day that all of us set aside to be with our families, to truly take that day of rest, and to allow these families, these individuals who so often cannot afford to take that time, to be paid for that day.

As my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods noted, this is a small thing. Its impact to the businesses and the folks who have told this government that this is a necessary change in order for them to be able to continue to have their businesses be viable: this would have a very minimal impact on them. Indeed, I'll be honest, Madam Chair, I did have some folks who operate restaurants that did reach out to me and express some concerns around the changes in holiday pay at the time that we brought these changes in. As the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods mentioned, that was being around the fact that many of them had chosen to keep their restaurant closed on Mondays to get around and take advantage of that provision that was there in the law, and it had helped them save a little bit. But as the member noted, it's going to be rare that Christmas will fall on that Monday. It'd have an impact once every seven years, so that's a small thing. I can't think that there are many restaurant owners that would begrudge that, that once every seven years they would pay their employees for a Christmas day on a Monday.

Here's an opportunity that we're presenting to this government to make one small change that could make a difference in the lives of many people on a day that is traditionally known for being a day of giving, a day when we are more generous with our fellow man, a day when we look to go above and beyond in recognizing the value of each other as human beings and seek to spread peace and goodwill. This is an opportunity for the government to make a bad bill a little bit better. This is the opportunity for the government to show that they have a little bit less of the Grinch and Scrooge, all those wonderful Christmas villains we have. I was thinking earlier of the Heat Miser and the Snow Miser. I don't know how many people remember that one. You know, Christmas specials from the 1970s, indeed.

This is the opportunity for us to show a little bit of Christmas cheer here today while we are still six months out or so from Christmas. I know that the amendment, indeed, was dated June 25, precisely six months before Christmas. This could be a bit of an early Christmas gift to the working people of Alberta. While this government is choosing with this bill to take so much away, to pick the pockets of working Albertans, here is an opportunity to put a little bit of something back, a small stocking stuffer, as it were, to balance out the lump of coal.

It's my hope that members of government would take this opportunity to do one small bit of good on an evening when they have just voted strongly in support that each of them should have a free vote in this Assembly, that they would exercise those conscience rights to do a little bit of good for a lot of people, indeed. I can't think of a single Christmas tradition in any culture around the world that does not include trying to do something good for your fellow man. That is the very meaning of Christmas, isn't it? Here in this amendment we have a chance to exercise that today, and I would encourage all members of this House to support this amendment and do so.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

12:00

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Chair: I will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A3 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:01 a.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

For the motion:

Bilous	Hoffman	Renaud
Ceci	Irwin	Schmidt
Dach	Phillips	Shepherd
Gray

Against the motion:

Aheer	Lovely	Schow
Amery	Luan	Schulz
Barnes	Madu	Schweitzer
Dreeshen	Neudorf	Sigurdson, R.J.
Fir	Nixon, Jason	Singh
Glasgo	Nixon, Jeremy	Smith
Hanson	Rehn	Stephan
Horner	Rosin	Walker
Hunter	Rowswell	Wilson
Loewen	Sawhney

Totals:	For – 10	Against – 29
---------	----------	--------------

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Are there any more members to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to try to amend the pick-your-pockets bill, the bill that I know a number of our caucus have spoken to, that is flawed for a number of reasons. I think, you know, I'm going to channel the Government House Leader and Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for all of the times that he stood up trying to amend bills when we were in government, saying: I need to amend this awful bill to make it a little less awful. That's really what I'm attempting to do. I will send the original to you and wait for them to be distributed.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

This will be known as amendment A4.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll read this into the record. I am moving this on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Decore. He moves that Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, be amended by striking out section 1(2).

Now, Madam Chair, I'm sure you're thinking: "Wow. This is a very tiny amendment. What could it possibly do?" But it has a significant impact. What this does is to ensure that employees and workers who have banked overtime will get that banked overtime paid out at time and a half. It doesn't allow employers to retroactively pay out straight time.

Now, I can tell you, Madam Chair, this is a significant amendment. I know that the government tries to deny that this is a pick-your-pockets bill, but really we've demonstrated through debate on this bill the amount of money that different workers would lose depending on what industry they're in; of course, our oil and gas sector being one of the hardest hit from this change. I know that the government is saying: well, this saves employers money. But I hope that the government recognizes that it is the workers that are the reason that we have a flourishing oil and gas sector. They are the ones that are constructing or improving our province and building Alberta.

We recognize that this government is adamant about moving this bill through, but what this does is ensure that it protects those that have already worked under the impression or under the notion or under the contract, even, that they would be paid time and a half for their overtime hours. It is one thing for the government to say: we are clawing that back moving forward. It is a whole other story for the government to say: "You know the hours that you agreed to work in overtime and you thought you were getting time and a half? You know the paycheques that you're counting on to pay the bills or for special occasions or for summer holidays?" With this amendment now, at least, we have secured or ensured that they will get their time and a half.

I honestly think this amendment is a reasonable amendment. It makes sense, and I think, quite frankly, Madam Chair, if the government votes down this amendment, shame on them. It says that you do not respect the contracts that were agreed to between employers and employees. Don't pull the line that it gives them the option. Well, you know, for those that have been employers, if you had the option of paying out straight time or time and a half, I'd love to see an honest show of hands of how many are jumping up and down to pay the time and a half.

Now, I do know that there are employers who have committed to do this. I recognize that. There are some incredible employers in this province who have said: "You know what? If they have worked and banked those hours already, we promised them time and a half. We're going to deliver." What this does is it ensures that all employers do that for the already banked time. Going forward we recognize, once this bill is proclaimed, that workers will be paid out straight time. I get that it's up to the employer to negotiate with the employee. We've already gone over this. There are some employers that are writing this into contracts so the employee has a choice. They can either take the job and straight time or look somewhere else for a job. I think it's a little bit of a misnomer to say that this is a complete choice and it'll be decided on between the employer and employee. In some cases it will. In all cases, no, it won't, and anybody who thinks otherwise is, quite honestly, deluding themselves.

12:10

But what this does is it at least protects those that have counted on that money to pay the bills, to make ends meet. They've worked the overtime. They've banked it. They were under the impression – and they probably wouldn't have agreed to it if they knew that employers can retroactively now refuse to pay them out their time and a half.

So I urge all members of the Assembly, and especially the government and the Government House Leader, to respect the hours worked and banked by workers, the hard-working men and women of Alberta, many of whom live in the riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, who have worked hard and deserve to be paid for their overtime that they've already worked.

Again, this is a small amendment with a significant impact on many families around this province, and I urge all members to support this.

The Chair: Are there any other speakers wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Not to belabour the point, but I want to thank the member for bringing forward this very reasonable amendment. I think that this is fair. I think it says that there won't be retroactive changes to a contract that was entered into or an agreement that was entered into when the rules were one set, which were the rules of the day and the rules that were amended about a year and a half ago, when overtime was paid at a premium. I think it's reasonable to say that if the government wants to change the rules moving forward, they will do that but that we're not going to take pay away from folks that had earned it under one set of rules. This is essentially ensuring that it isn't retroactive legislation on overtime that was earned.

I see the House leader ripping up the amendment. I assume that's because he's got it memorized. He knows how great it is, and he's ready to vote on it, because certainly I think we made the attempt to save Christmas. We made the attempt to name the bill what it actually is. This is an amending act. I think the amendment that's being proposed now is fair and reasonable, saying that time that's been earned before this bill is proclaimed, essentially, not be retroactively taken away. That's, as we said, about $320 for the average oil and gas worker, 27 per cent of which are earning overtime. So I think it's fair and reasonable at least to make the bill a little bit less bad.

Thank you to the member for the motion to amend.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you for the quick opportunity to speak on this amendment. I do thank the opposition for participating in debate and providing some amendments and some discussion about this legislation. It's a pleasant change. Sometimes they spend a tremendous amount of time on amendments, and tonight they seem excited to be able to talk about them, which is exciting. Specifically to this one, I do appreciate all the members recognizing the great constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. They're right. People sure do work hard in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

They also know that this bill, in regard to overtime, would go back to the same rules as before the NDP came into power and started to destroy the province, and it requires employees and employers to enter into overtime agreements before anything can be done with overtime. It has to be a mutual agreement, so employees would have to agree to that. The people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, of course, understand that. This amendment, quite frankly, is not needed because, again, Madam Chair, this is something that employees and employers can enter into willingly.

I do know that the NDP has been clear in this House that they don't trust any employer or job creators in general and are generally working against them. The Opposition House Leader even told them that if they struggled to pay the carbon tax, they should check their business plan and that it was somehow their fault that they'd be struggling, but the NDP had, you know, destroyed the economy while they were here. But people understand that it will go to exactly how it was before the NDP came into power and wrecked things. I know that all my constituents and yours – I was in Airdrie the other day, Madam Chair – were pretty excited to see us moving forward past the NDP's mess.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I just want to get one point of clarification from the Government House Leader. Is it his assertion, through you, Madam Chair, that no worker will see their already earned overtime clawed back? He's saying that that's not the case. I just want it to be clear and on the record that if any worker sees their overtime clawed back – the hon. member says that the bill can't do that. So if we find even one worker that says that they earned overtime and that it was paid out at straight time instead of time and a half – I don't know what I'm asking you to do but, I guess, attest that it will not be the case, no matter what. What I think I heard the member say is that no matter what, there will be no workers forced to take straight time instead of time and a half. I'm just wondering: will he confirm that that is indeed the case moving forward and that if we find any workers who say otherwise, he'd be happy to meet with them and provide that clarity to them in person?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Madam Chair, that is the point, that it would be an optional thing between employees and employers. Employees would have to agree to that. That's how it was before the NDP started messing with the system and causing all sorts of troubles, not just in this area but in general. Again, it's optional. It's something that employers and employees would have to work through together. Yes, an employee would have to agree to do this. Nobody can be forced to do anything.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:17 a.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

For the motion:

Bilous	Hoffman	Renaud
Ceci	Irwin	Schmidt
Dach	Phillips	Shepherd
Gray

12:20

Against the motion:

Aheer	Lovely	Sawhney
Amery	Luan	Schow
Barnes	Madu	Schulz
Dreeshen	Neudorf	Schweitzer
Fir	Nixon, Jason	Sigurdson, R.J.
Glasgo	Nixon, Jeremy	Singh
Hanson	Orr	Smith
Horner	Rehn	Stephan
Hunter	Rosin	Walker
Loewen	Rowswell	Wilson

Totals:	For – 10	Against – 30
---------	----------	--------------

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Any comments, questions, or amendments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I am a little disappointed that the amendments up to this point have not been accepted by the government caucus, particularly the one to save Christmas, which was near and dear to my heart. That being said, onward and upward. I believe after the hours and hours and hours of debate that we have had on Bill 2, the number of issues that we have raised on how out of step the changes to overtime and overtime banking as well as stat holidays put Alberta, we'd be the only province with systems, employment standards minimums, to do time banking at straight time and the only province in all of Canada that would not give statutory holiday benefit of some kind to all employees. The concerns with the changes to collective bargaining and union certification that have been raised – and, of course, throughout this all we've also been talking about the decision to roll back minimum wage for Alberta's youth in a misguided effort to create jobs when the solution is going to further create problems, add complications. We've talked about a lot of this at length.

I would like to propose an amendment at this point, Madam Chair, that will give us an opportunity to consider all of these things.

The Chair: This is amendment A5.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, please proceed.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. This amendment – and I realize that not everyone has the benefit of having a copy of it yet. Thank you to the pages who are here at this hour supporting us. Really appreciate you. [some applause] Yes. Make sure you bank that overtime now.

This amendment reads:

On or before October 1, 2021, a committee of the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of the amendments made by this Act and must submit to the Assembly, within one year after beginning the review, a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee.

This amendment does quite a few things. First off, it allows a committee of the Legislature the opportunity to review the amendments made by this act, and it allows that committee the opportunity to talk to stakeholders and to discuss it. It gives the government an opportunity to not only implement its changes but to be able to come back and responsibly discuss them roughly two years after they've been put in place. What impact has the change to statutory holidays had not just on our business environment but on the working people that it impacts? What change do we see, maybe through Stats Canada labour force statistics, when we make the change from having banked overtime at time and a half to straight time? What impact is that having on our major industries, oil and gas and construction, where predominantly these hours are done? It gives an opportunity to consider the impact of the changes on union certification as well. Not only to have a review but also to send that report through to a committee, where we can work in a collaborative way together to review the impacts of Bill 2.

Bill 2 is titled An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, and as the argument was made numerous times, this side of the House does not believe that this act fulfills its intended purpose. By committing to a review of the amendments of this act, by committing to take a look at the actual impacts, it gives us an opportunity to further evaluate and adjust if a course adjustment is necessary. I consider this to be a very reasonable amendment, one that supports the government's current intent, which is to pass Bill 2, but gives us that opportunity to circle back around, review what's happened, look at it through a committee, and make a determination from that point.

So I hope that all members of the Assembly will be able to support this amendment A5 this evening, Madam Chair. Thank you, all, very much for your consideration.

The Chair: Hon. member, just to confirm, you're moving this on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View?

Ms Gray: I absolutely am.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A5? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: I'll just briefly add a small comment. This very reasonable amendment reminds me of a former member of this Legislature who would get up to speak in the long hours of the night and be a real good soldier on many, many amendments. That was the former Member for West Yellowhead. His comment quite often, after reading an amendment such as this, knowing how reasonable and good it was, was to say quite loudly in the House: well, what's wrong with that? That's what I'm reminded of tonight, and I ask the same question. What's wrong with that? Hail, West Yellowhead and Mr. Rosendahl.

The Chair: Oh, this hour of the night.

Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A5 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:28 a.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

For the motion:

Bilous	Hoffman	Renaud
Ceci	Irwin	Schmidt
Dach	Phillips	Shepherd
Gray

Against the motion:

Aheer	Lovely	Sawhney
Amery	Luan	Schow
Barnes	Madu	Schulz
Dreeshen	Neudorf	Schweitzer
Fir	Nixon, Jason	Sigurdson, R.J.
Glasgo	Nixon, Jeremy	Singh
Hanson	Orr	Smith
Horner	Rehn	Stephan
Hunter	Rosin	Walker
Loewen	Rowswell	Wilson

Totals:	For – 10	Against – 30
---------	----------	--------------

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Are there any more speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, shall I call the question on Bill 2?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

[The voice vote indicated that the request to report Bill 2 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:34 a.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

For the motion:

Aheer	Lovely	Sawhney
Amery	Luan	Schow
Barnes	Madu	Schulz
Dreeshen	Neudorf	Schweitzer
Fir	Nixon, Jason	Sigurdson, R.J.
Glasgo	Nixon, Jeremy	Singh
Hanson	Orr	Smith
Horner	Rehn	Stephan
Hunter	Rosin	Walker
Kenney	Rowswell	Wilson
Loewen

Against the motion:

Bilous	Hoffman	Renaud
Ceci	Irwin	Schmidt
Dach	Phillips	Shepherd
Gray

Totals:	For – 31	Against – 10
---------	----------	--------------

[Request to report Bill 2 carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Chair, I move that we rise and report Bill 2.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: So carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to the opposition for all the progress today. We're moving through at lightning speed, and as such I think it'd be time to move to adjourn the House till tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:40 a.m. on Wednesday]

Table of Contents

Government Motions
Adjournment of Spring Session.....	1333
Committee Referral for Public Sector     Compensation Transparency Act.....	1333
Voting Rights of Members .....	1333
Division .....	1342
Caucus Affiliation .....	1342
Division .....	1345
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 13     Alberta Senate Election Act .....	1345
Division .....	1347
Committee of the Whole
Bill 2     An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business .....	1347, 1357
Division .....	1357
Division .....	1359
Division .....	1361
Division .....	1362
Division .....	1362

Alberta Hansard is available online at www.assembly.ab.ca

For inquiries contact:

Managing Editor

Alberta Hansard

3rd Floor, 9820 – 107 St

EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E7

Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 30th Legislature
First Session

Alberta Hansard

Wednesday afternoon, July 3, 2019

Day 23

The Honourable Nathan M. Cooper, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 30th Legislature

First Session

Cooper, Hon. Nathan M., Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (UCP), Speaker
Pitt, Angela D., Airdrie-East (UCP), Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Milliken, Nicholas, Calgary-Currie (UCP), Deputy Chair of Committees

Aheer, Hon. Leela Sharon, Chestermere-Strathmore (UCP)
Allard, Tracy L., Grande Prairie (UCP)
Amery, Mickey K., Calgary-Cross (UCP)
Armstrong-Homeniuk, Jackie,
Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (UCP)
Barnes, Drew, Cypress-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Bilous, Deron, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (NDP),
Official Opposition House Leader
Carson, Jonathon, Edmonton-West Henday (NDP)
Ceci, Joe, Calgary-Buffalo (NDP)
Copping, Hon. Jason C., Calgary-Varsity (UCP)
Dach, Lorne, Edmonton-McClung (NDP)
Dang, Thomas, Edmonton-South (NDP)
Deol, Jasvir, Edmonton-Meadows (NDP)
Dreeshen, Hon. Devin, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (UCP)
Eggen, David, Edmonton-North West (NDP),
Official Opposition Whip
Ellis, Mike, Calgary-West (UCP),
Government Whip
Feehan, Richard, Edmonton-Rutherford (NDP)
Fir, Hon. Tanya, Calgary-Peigan (UCP)
Ganley, Kathleen T., Calgary-Mountain View (NDP)
Getson, Shane C., Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland (UCP)
Glasgo, Michaela L., Brooks-Medicine Hat (UCP)
Glubish, Hon. Nate, Strathcona-Sherwood Park (UCP)
Goehring, Nicole, Edmonton-Castle Downs (NDP)
Goodridge, Laila, Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche (UCP)
Gottfried, Richard, Calgary-Fish Creek (UCP)
Gray, Christina, Edmonton-Mill Woods (NDP)
Guthrie, Peter F., Airdrie-Cochrane (UCP)
Hanson, David B., Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul (UCP)
Hoffman, Sarah, Edmonton-Glenora (NDP)
Horner, Nate S., Drumheller-Stettler (UCP)
Hunter, Hon. Grant R., Taber-Warner (UCP)
Irwin, Janis, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Issik, Whitney, Calgary-Glenmore (UCP)
Jones, Matt, Calgary-South East (UCP)
Kenney, Hon. Jason, PC, Calgary-Lougheed (UCP),
Premier
LaGrange, Hon. Adriana, Red Deer-North (UCP)
Loewen, Todd, Central Peace-Notley (UCP)
Long, Martin M., West Yellowhead (UCP)
Lovely, Jacqueline, Camrose (UCP)
Loyola, Rod, Edmonton-Ellerslie (NDP)
Luan, Hon. Jason, Calgary-Foothills (UCP)
Madu, Hon. Kaycee, Edmonton-South West (UCP)
McIver, Hon. Ric, Calgary-Hays (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader

Nally, Hon. Dale, Morinville-St. Albert (UCP)
Neudorf, Nathan T., Lethbridge-East (UCP)
Nicolaidis, Hon. Demetrios, Calgary-Bow (UCP)
Nielsen, Christian E., Edmonton-Decore (NDP)
Nixon, Hon. Jason, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre
(UCP), Government House Leader
Nixon, Jeremy P., Calgary-Klein (UCP)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (NDP),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Orr, Ronald, Lacombe-Ponoka (UCP)
Pancholi, Rakhi, Edmonton-Whitemud (NDP)
Panda, Hon. Prasad, Calgary-Edgemont (UCP)
Phillips, Shannon, Lethbridge-West (NDP)
Pon, Hon. Josephine, Calgary-Beddington (UCP)
Rehn, Pat, Lesser Slave Lake (UCP)
Reid, Roger W., Livingstone-Macleod (UCP)
Renaud, Marie F., St. Albert (NDP)
Rosin, Miranda D., Banff-Kananaskis (UCP)
Rowswell, Garth, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright (UCP)
Rutherford, Brad, Leduc-Beaumont (UCP)
Sabir, Irfan, Calgary-McCall (NDP)
Savage, Hon. Sonya, Calgary-North West (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Sawhney, Hon. Rajan, Calgary-North East (UCP)
Schmidt, Marlin, Edmonton-Gold Bar (NDP)
Schow, Joseph R., Cardston-Siksika (UCP),
Deputy Government Whip
Schulz, Hon. Rebecca, Calgary-Shaw (UCP)
Schweitzer, Hon. Doug, Calgary-Elbow (UCP),
Deputy Government House Leader
Shandro, Hon. Tyler, Calgary-Acadia (UCP)
Shepherd, David, Edmonton-City Centre (NDP)
Sigurdson, Lori, Edmonton-Riverview (NDP)
Sigurdson, R.J., Highwood (UCP)
Singh, Peter, Calgary-East (UCP)
Smith, Mark W., Drayton Valley-Devon (UCP)
Stephan, Jason, Red Deer-South (UCP)
Sweet, Heather, Edmonton-Manning (NDP),
Official Opposition Deputy House Leader
Toews, Hon. Travis, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (UCP)
Toor, Devinder, Calgary-Falconridge (UCP)
Turton, Searle, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain (UCP)
van Dijken, Glenn, Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock (UCP)
Walker, Jordan, Sherwood Park (UCP)
Williams, Dan D.A., Peace River (UCP)
Wilson, Hon. Rick D., Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin (UCP)
Yao, Tany, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (UCP)
Yaseen, Muhammad, Calgary-North (UCP)

Party standings:

United Conservative: 63

New Democrat: 24

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Shannon Dean, Clerk
Stephanie LeBlanc, Acting Law Clerk
and Senior Parliamentary Counsel
Trafton Koenig, Parliamentary Counsel

Philip Massolin, Manager of Research and
Committee Services
Nancy Robert, Research Officer
Janet Schwegel, Managing Editor of
Alberta Hansard

Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms
Chris Caughell, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms
Tom Bell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Paul Link, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Jason Kenney	Premier, President of Executive Council, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations
Leela Aheer	Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women
Jason Copping	Minister of Labour and Immigration
Devin Dreesen	Minister of Agriculture and Forestry
Tanya Fir	Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism
Nate Glubish	Minister of Service Alberta
Grant Hunter	Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction
Adriana LaGrange	Minister of Education
Jason Luan	Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions
Kaycee Madu	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Ric McIver	Minister of Transportation
Dale Nally	Associate Minister of Natural Gas
Demetrios Nicolaides	Minister of Advanced Education
Jason Nixon	Minister of Environment and Parks
Prasad Panda	Minister of Infrastructure
Josephine Pon	Minister of Seniors and Housing
Sonya Savage	Minister of Energy
Rajan Sawhney	Minister of Community and Social Services
Rebecca Schulz	Minister of Children's Services
Doug Schweitzer	Minister of Justice and Solicitor General
Tyler Shandro	Minister of Health
Travis Toews	President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance
Rick Wilson	Minister of Indigenous Relations

Parliamentary Secretaries

Laila Goodridge	Parliamentary Secretary Responsible for Alberta's Francophonie
Muhammad Yaseen	Parliamentary Secretary of Immigration

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Mr. Gotfried
Deputy Chair: Mr. Orr

Allard
Eggen
Getson
Glasgo
Irwin
Jones
Nielsen

Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future

Chair: Mr. van Dijken
Deputy Chair: Ms Goehring

Allard
Barnes
Bilous
Dach
Dang
Gray
Horner
Issik
Jones
Reid
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor

Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Chair: Ms Goodridge
Deputy Chair: Ms Sigurdson

Amery
Carson
Ganley
Glasgo
Guthrie
Irwin
Long
Neudorf
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Rutherford
Walker
Yao

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Goodridge
Gray
Lovely
Nixon, Jeremy
Rutherford
Schmidt
Shepherd
Sigurdson, R.J.
Sweet

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Cooper
Deputy Chair: Mr. Ellis

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Dang
Deol
Goehring
Goodridge
Gotfried
Long
Sweet
Williams

Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills

Chair: Mr. Ellis
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Gotfried
Horner
Irwin
Neudorf
Nielsen
Nixon, Jeremy
Pancholi
Sigurdson, L.
Sigurdson, R.J.

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Smith
Deputy Chair: Mr. Schow

Carson
Deol
Ganley
Horner
Issik
Jones
Loyola
Neudorf
Rehn
Reid
Renaud
Turton
Yao

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Ms Phillips
Deputy Chair: Mr. Gotfried

Amery
Barnes
Dach
Feehan
Guthrie
Hoffman
Renaud
Rosin
Rowswell
Stephan
Toor
Turton
Walker

Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Chair: Mr. Hanson
Deputy Chair: Member Ceci

Armstrong-Homeniuk
Feehan
Getson
Loyola
Rehn
Rosin
Sabir
Schmidt
Sigurdson, R.J.
Singh
Smith
Turton
Yaseen

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, July 3, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of guests joining us today in the galleries. Guests of the Member for Calgary-West and members of the Sudanese community, please feel free to rise when I call your name if you can recognize it: Gar Gar, Angelo Wol Mawien Dut, Garang Kuot, and Chol Gar.

Guest of the Member for Calgary-Falconridge: Gobinder Khaira.

Also in the gallery today a guest of the Member for Grande Prairie: Alex Dorscheid.

Guests from Lacombe-Ponoka: Sean Stroud and Martin Zuidhof.

In the gallery as a guest of the Minister of Labour and Immigration: Donovan Makus.

Hon. members, please welcome our guests to the Assembly today.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo would like to make a statement.

Calgary Stampede

Member Ceci: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. All year long Calgarians look forward to the Calgary Stampede. In only a few short days it will be here again. Cowpokes and city slickers alike will put on their cowboy hats and boots to enjoy the parade, pancake breakfast, and chuckwagon races, and our NDP caucus will be there to join in the fun.

Mr. Speaker, our government was proud to invest in the Stampede to make sure it can continue for years to come. We approved a 20-year extension to the CRL program to fund the BMO Centre expansion on Stampede grounds. This will make the BMO Centre the second-largest convention centre in Canada, support the creation of 2,250 jobs, and contribute $223 million annually to the Alberta economy. Last year we saw our investments working. This year's chuckwagon canvas auction came in $50,000 higher than last year, for a total of $3.29 million. Things are looking up because of our investments in Calgary. We fought for pipelines, invested in the Calgary cancer centre and the LRT green line, and we refused to turn our backs on Calgarians when times were tough.

Mr. Speaker, as a Calgarian the Stampede is one of my favourite times of year. I'm so proud we get to showcase this incredible city and celebrate what it means to be an Albertan. I look forward to welcoming all members of this House to Calgary for 10 days of festivities at the greatest outdoor show on Earth. Yahoo!

The Speaker: Apparently, the great debate, whether it's yee-haw or yahoo, has been settled.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

South Sudanese Community

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and address this Chamber. I want to take this opportunity to recognize Alberta's South Sudanese community and the contributions they make to our great province. The Republic of South Sudan is located in east-central Africa. The country gained independence on July 9, 2011, making it the most recent state to join the international system.

Now, I recently connected with a member of this community who is a guest of mine here today. As you know, Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to celebrating the diverse cultural groups in Alberta, and the South Sudanese community is a key thread in the rich cultural fabric of our province. There are many values that United Conservatives share with this wonderful community. We want to make life better for our families. We are resilient in times of hardship. We are devoted in service to our communities. We are not afraid of hard work. We want to ensure that our future generations are prosperous. As well, we value democracy, and we value freedom. These are the values that guide my work and the work of my colleagues on this side of the House every day. I believe that these same values are shared with my guests and our United Conservative movement.

I want to close by quoting our Premier when he said, quote: Alberta isn't just a place on a map, and it's not just random collection of people; Alberta is an idea. Unquote. Mr. Speaker, today I want to thank the South Sudanese community, especially those joining us here today, for helping us to build this idea through their ongoing civic engagement and for contributing to the vibrancy of our democracy and enriching the culture of our province. I am sure that I speak for all of my colleagues when I say that we look forward to working alongside them in our efforts to renew the Alberta advantage and to make Alberta strong and free.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Abortion Rights

Ms Renaud: Controlling when and if you reproduce is a basic human right. Women in Canada have the right to access reproductive health procedures; however, we've seen a deliberate erosion of access to these medical services in provinces where socially conservative governments backed by antichoice organizations use whatever means available to them to impose barriers to those services. These groups are powerful lobbyists.

While abortion remains legal and somewhat accessible, there are plenty of ways these rights have been limited and suppressed. Antichoice groups like Campaign Life Coalition, Wilberforce, RightNow, and the Association for Reformed Political Action boast about their work nominating and electing antiabortion politicians. By my count, there are at least 28 antiabortion MLAs here.

In 2004 at a March for Life rally on Parliament Hill the crowd assembled was challenged by this Premier to ask politicians how they stand on abortion. He said, quote: if they say they're personally opposed to abortion but they don't want to impose their opposition on society, ask them if they're personally opposed to child abuse and ask them if they're personally opposed to slavery. He equated abortion, a medical procedure, to child abuse and slavery. Make no mistake, antiabortion politicians make antiabortion laws.

For many girls and women, particularly those who are poor, live in rural areas, are young, disabled, indigenous, are in a racial minority, or are immigrants, access to abortion is limited. Access to reproductive health care is essential to women's health, and not all women in Alberta have adequate or, in some cases, any access to abortion.

Later this session I will be tabling Motion 506, that will focus on reviewing access to abortion services with the goal of removing barriers and creating equitable access in all communities across this province. I hope this new government won't run away and hide their votes from the women of this province.

Thank you.

